IN GOSPEL BONDS

(Sermon by Elbert A. Smith, Lamoni, Iowa, May, 1918. Reported by Mrs. G. N. Briggs.)

There came down from Judea a certain prophet, named Agabus. And when he was come unto us, he took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands and feet, and said, Thus saith the Holy Ghost, So shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind the man that owneth this girdle, and shall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles. And when we heard these things, both we, and they of that place, besought him not to go up to Jerusalem. Then Paul answered, What mean ye to weep and to break mine heart? for I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus. And when he would not be persuaded, we ceased, saying, The will of the Lord be done.—Acts 21: 10-14.

There used to be an old custom among Latter Day Saints, when closing a letter, to subscribe themselves, "Yours in gospel bonds." I do not know that other people ever have used that expression, and unfortunately, perhaps, we do not use it so often as of old. It is full of significance. In our Scripture reading we have a picture of Paul in gospel bonds. Bound in spirit. He it is also who assures us that we are "not our own, for we have been bought with a price."

IS YOUR SOUL YOUR OWN?

I once heard the statement made concerning a certain man, "He is afraid to say his soul is his own." This man, by the way, was a married man, and that fact was supposed to contain the germ of a joke. But I wish to approach it from a serious side this morning. Do you dare to say that your soul is your own? Do I dare say that my soul is my own?

You all know that at the present time the Government reaches forth its hand and touches certain young men on the shoulder, and Uncle Sam says to them, "Come with me." They are not asked if they wish to come. They are told to come. These young men are taken across the waters to France, and if necessary they are expected to die in the muddy trenches in defense of the cause they are called upon to serve.

If the statement is true that the body and the spirit are the soul of man, then the Government takes hold of the souls of men and says to them, you are not your own. There is a higher will here that asserts itself, and that is the will of the state.

THE MAN AND THE STATE

We used to have a good brother out West who sometimes would take a five-dollar bill from his pocket and say, "This is mine. I earned it. I do not have to pay tithing on it. It is absolutely nobody's business what I do with it."

Every sort of immorality, every kind of excess hides itself under this statement, "It is nobody's business." All such try to march under the banner of personal liberty; that is the plea of the saloon and the drunkard—the plea of personal liberty. But here is an institution known as the state, that comes in and says, "It is my business."

As a people, in facing this issue, we have a certain rock that some people do not have. It is true that we recognize that the state is purely and wholly a human institution, and yet it exerts a will that is superior to the will of the individual. And God has told us in the Book of Covenants that we should be obedient to that law of the land which is constitutional. An unconstitutional law might not have any claim on us, but this conscription law has been passed by our duly elected representatives, and upheld by the Supreme Court, whose function it is to determine whether law is constitutional or otherwise. So we may say in this case at least, that God is back of the constitution and the state, and takes the responsibility for every act we perform in obedience to constitutional law. Our conscience may rest free.

THE MAN AND THE FAMILY

Now I come to another division of the subject, that which pertains to the family; and that brings up the old idea of the joke in the matter. When a man is married, it is presumed that he gives up his liberty, and this germ of humor is expanded fully in all the funny papers. I do not think to look at it from that side, but to present it seriously.

Not long ago I was called upon to perform a marriage ceremony, and as the hour drew near, I went up to the chamber of the bridegroom to see how he was bearing up and to give him a few last words of advice as to his deportment. Just before the wedding march began, the bride entered, adorned for her wedding. She was a lovely girl, and as she came she threw her arms about the neck of the young man, as he sat there, and bending over, kissed him. She managed some way to put so much consecration, devotion, and love into that caress that it became almost a sacrament, and I turned away. It was not for me to see. He just sat there and took it all in. I thought, My friend, you are getting more than is your due. I suppose that was a reflex of the feeling that is deep down in the heart of every man, that no man is entirely worthy of the love and devotion of a good woman.

No man who has received the pledge of love that this young man received, and afterwards made the pledge contained in the marriage covenant, to keep himself for her and from all others, can ever again say, "It is nobody's business what I do." There is some one else to reckon with. He may forget. God does not.

THE BATTLE OF PARIS

I read a letter from one of our soldiers in France, speaking about the city of Paris. He says it is a very immoral city, as is known by reputation, and I believe the Kaiser made that his excuse for trying to destroy it. He says the French are a decadent people, and are suffering the judgments of God. But he forgets that in that city, besides this immoral element, there are many excellent and moral families whom he would subject to destruction. But this soldier said that many soldiers on furlough to Paris for ten days had suffered more injury than they had suffered in the trenches for months. So the soldiers have coined a phrase, "The Battle of Paris"; and the soldier suffering from such disablement, is said to have been wounded in the battle of Paris.

Well the battle of Paris is a very old battle, as old as history. There is the battle of Chicago, the battle of London, the battle of Sodom and Gomorrah—it is the same battle under different names. There has been war waged upon human virtue, and upon family integrity almost since the beginning of time.

In this connection I wish to read an extract from the writings of a celebrated physician and author. I just happened to open his book and found this paragraph, the thought of which is exactly in line with the thoughts I had in preparation for this discourse. I quote from What Men Live By, by Doctor Richard Cabot, of Boston:

A plausible attack may be made on monogamy by picturing it as slavery. If monogamy is inviolate, one person seems to some extent to own another. In this twentieth century and in a land of freedom are we to admit property in persons? Certainly. All loyalty is binding as well as enfranchising. It is voluntary surrender of one's freedom in the service of a cause. Our country owns us enough to punish us for treason if we are unfaithful to our citizenship. Anyone who binds himself legally or morally to a business, a college, or a science is in some respect owned. Nothing is less free than art, or thought, or love. Each undertakes to construct something which needs time, perhaps eternity, to complete it. Each is going somewhere and is bound, therefore, upon its journey. That journey, that desire, which is the kernal of individuality, certainly limits freedom, but it does not in any proper sense enslave. It is not slavery to bind one's self to fidelity because one wants something supremely.

Notice now, the first points he brings out. He says an attack might be made upon the system of monogamy from the standpoint that one party seems to own the other. The very thought that I had in mind. Shall we admit property in persons? Why, certainly. When you pledge your loyalty to any individual or any institution and receive the benefits therefrom, you become bound to render service to that person or institution. No man lives to himself alone. But he says this does not in any sense deprive us of our liberty. Certainly not, because we make the free choice voluntarily that we will abide by the conditions of the contract that claims our loyalty. This thought will be developed as we proceed along the next line of argument, that of the church.

THE MAN AND THE CHURCH

We accept the benefits Christ bestows upon us. He has purchased us by his life and sacrifice. We accept these voluntarily, and so we become bound to abide the conditions and laws he lays down as part of that covenant. The church defines the attitude of humanity toward God, and of good will toward our fellow men, and particularly in the last phase it is most important. As the Apostle Paul says, "No man liveth unto himself alone."

Men of a religious turn of mind have tried to live to themselves alone. They have gone and buried themselves in monasteries, but it is a question if any man ever absolutely escaped the consequences of other lives upon his own and his life upon others. Philosophers sometimes have tried the same experience. I was reading an interesting sketch of Thoreau of New England fame. He did not like the ordinary customs of civilization, so went to the shores of Walden Pond and built himself a hut; where he thought to be alone and live to himself alone, but it was visited by a great many curious people; and finally, to cap the climax, he was arrested by the city authorities of Concord and put in jail because he refused to pay his taxes. His friend Emerson came to him in great distress and said, "My dear Thoreau, why are you in jail?" With a smile Thoreau replied, "My dear Emerson, why are you not in jail?" Thoreau discovered that he could not live to himself alone. Society would not permit it. We talk about getting into society, but in fact we are born into society.

OUR OBLIGATIONS

Sometimes we meet men who say they do not like to be under obligations to any man. The individual who does not like to be under obligations to other men will have a hard time in this life. He is obligated to some one who makes him a cradle before he is born, and to some one who digs him a grave after he is dead. You do not know who will dig your grave, but it is almost certain you cannot return the favor in kind. But for every service received from one man, you can pay some other man in some form of service; and God has laid this obligation upon his children.

As members of the church we are not free, as some claim, to do absolutely what we would wish to do, unless we wish to do that which is right. We are not free to do as the world does. I want to give a little exhortation to the sons and daughters of the ministers of the church, to the sons and daughters of the elders, if there are such present. They cannot do as other boys and girls of the world do; because not only has the church erected a standard, but their parents have by a life of devotion erected a standard, and these young people must say to themselves, "What will be the consequences to the work of my father and my mother if I do thus and so?" And back of that of course, and higher, we must all ask ourselves what will be the results to the church and to the cause we have espoused, if we pursue certain courses.

Even Jesus in the Garden of Gethsemane, hedged himself about with this defense, "Not my will, but thine be done." Not only was that his wish, he knew it was his safety as well. He dare not order his life along his own will, but rather he defended himself by saying, "Not my will, but thine be done."

BOUND IN SPIRIT

And so we find Paul on a certain occasion saying: "I am going to Jerusalem bound in spirit," and in the Scriptural text of our lesson this morning he answered those who remonstrated by saying, "I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die for the name of the Lord Jesus." Are we under similar obligations? The result was that no man ever did really bind Paul. In Jerusalem they put fetters on his limbs, but he did not feel them because he was bound in spirit with a greater bondage, a sublime bondage. They took him to Rome, but he wanted to go to Rome. That was his last and greatest opportunity; and though he went as a prisoner, he went as a missionary. When kings arraigned him it was not the kings who brought in the verdict, it was Paul. It was not the prisoner who trembled, but rather the kings who trembled when he preached to them the word of God.

DUTY TO THREE INSTITUTIONS

So in conclusion, you will notice I have tried to outline our duty to these three great and venerable institutions; the state, and the family, and the church. And if they are old, it is certainly true that they are no less important to-day than they have ever been in the history of the past. The state is reaching into our lives and regulating our affairs in a way never attempted in the history of America before. It is demanding men. It needs men because its peril is great. Millions of women are taken from their normal and legitimate work of rearing families and caring for them, and set to work in fields and munition factories. Family life can hardly be exactly the same again. Millions of young men, the husbands and fathers of the future, are being slaughtered; so it seems almost certain that after the war is over, free love and polygamy will make a renewed assault upon the foundations of the home and family. Certainly the church is not less important, because we are living in the closing scenes of time. The culmination of all things makes the work of the church become increasingly important as it draws to a close.

POTENTIAL ZION

Some one said that in my remarks here on sacrament Sunday I said that Independence is Zion. That is not what I said. I said Independence is destined to be the city of Zion. I do not know how much territory Zion includes. I do not know how far it may reach; but there is no uncertainty about the location of the future city of Zion. I did not say Zion is. I did not contend that in its fully organized and completely redeemed condition Zion is in existence. But I do claim that we have potential Zion.

Some of us had occasion to take a little trip into the country north of Lamoni some days ago, and as we were coming home by automobile, we were admiring the beauties of the landscape, the rolling hills and valleys and the beautiful green of the spring. As we had Brother Paul Craig with us he pointed out the sunset, which he said was a perfect

Turner sunset. After all of us had exclaimed about this or that, Brother Garver said, "These black, plowed fields never looked so beautiful to me as they do this spring." And that started a train of thought in my mind. At the present time the world is facing famine, and certainly those black, plowed fields have an appeal that they never had before. Ordinarily we would not call them beautiful; just the color of black dirt, that was all. Yet they were all ready to receive the seed, and as I looked I could see a new beauty in the potential harvest that was to feed thousands of men and women. There was the blade, and then the ear, then the full corn in the ear, seen in mental vision in those black fields.

So as I look out upon the church to-day and the conditions that prevail in the hearts of the people, I can see potential Zion. Human hearts are torn and harrowed ready to receive the seed. They are eager for the fundamental principles of Zionism, gathering, consecration, stewardships, as they never before have been, and they contain in them the Zion that I trust we are destined to behold and admire in years to come.

May God bless and direct us that our vision in these matters shall be ultimately fulfilled, is my prayer.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

NEW YEAR GREETINGS FROM OUR BISHOP

The stirring events of 1918 have passed into history—our record for 1919 is future. A prospective peace presents many religious, social, and economic problems. The correct solution of these problems by the church depends upon the manner in which we, as officers and members, each perform our respective duties.

Besides carrying on church and auxiliary department activities as presently constituted, the customary missionary propaganda, institutional work of college, Sanitarium, old folks' and children's homes, and providing for the poor and afflicted, there is presented the duty and privilege of assisting in the work of reconstruction, not only in Zion and the regions round about, but wherever man dwells upon this earth.

The officers upon whom devolves the duty of outlining the religious program will give consideration, not only to local church or home missionary questions, but also to the task of bringing the knowledge of the gospel to those nations where heretofore our representatives have not been privileged to proclaim the word of truth. This will require men, by experience and training qualified to meet the demand, literature printed in several foreign languages and means to sustain their efforts.

At home and abroad we should in increasing measure be serving mankind, helping the unemployed to secure positions, the disabled soldier and sailor to adjust themselves to the changed conditions, and otherwise give a practical interpretation of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Through a consecrated performance of this work we shall gain the clearer vision and greater skill necessary to establish Zion. As we have opportunity, let us render service, be anxiously engaged in a good work.

The General Bishopric shall strive to arrange the work of this department so as to meet every requirement. The earnest devotion of the Saints to our Master's cause as displayed in the more general observance of the temporal law during the past year is indeed encouraging. With stouter hearts we undertake the work of the New Year, satisfied that the necessary means will be supplied to meet every legitimate call. Each branch should be a well-disciplined camp, an officers' training school, so that when the work shall come to advance, ready to answer, "Here am I, take me, my means, my talents, my service," the Saints shall be prepared to move out to meet their Lord and the heavenly host.

Your fellow servant,
B. R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

THE JEWISH CONGRESS

We are in receipt of several clippings concerning the recent congress of Jews of America held in Philadelphia the middle of December and are publishing in our General Interest department extracts from the New York Times, kindly sent us by Elder A. N. Hoxie.

The Public Ledger of Philadelphia of December 18, also declares that the scene was truly dramatic when the resolution to provide a Jewish state under the trusteeship of Great Britain was proposed and unanimously adopted.

This meeting represents the four million Jews of this country and would appear to represent all of the different Jewish interests including the national socialists, the orthodox members (Mizrachim, Rabbis, etc.) Zionists, the American Jewish Commission, and the fraternal organization. Yet the congress of four hundred unanimously adopted these resolutions, and also a resolution looking towards an international congress of Jews.

It is indeed a remarkable feature that all of the various elements of Jews are able to agree unanimously upon the resolution adopted. Judge Julian W. Mack considers this the achieving of "virtually the impossible—the absolute unification of the Jewry of America for harmonious action in solving the problems of the Jews of the world."

IS IT GOD'S WAY?

It is the purpose of the writer in this paper to examine our system or method of caring for the ministry of the church in a financial way, with special reference to those who devote all their time to church work, and at the same time endeavor to present what is found in God's word, as his plan is one of the vital questions that will always be before us for our consideration. Where emphasis is placed on words and sentences it is done to call the reader's attention to the thought in a special manner, it may not appear in the original from which the quotation is made. The word salary is so offensive to most of our people that it is seldom used, and like the word education it is often grossly misused and great harm done where only good was intended.

From the dictionary I quote the following definitions:

Salary: Recompense for service; wages.

Wages: That for which one labors, compensation. Reward for service.

Reward: That which is given in return for good or evil; recompense; fruit of labor.

Allowance: Limit to a certain amount of money, food, or the like.

Were it not for the fact that many believe that the Lord's ministry should be limited to less than the bare necessities of food and clothing it would seem to be superfluous to write about it, but such being the truth it is best to appeal to the word of God for light. When the children of Israel went into the land of Canaan the land was divided among the people, except for the Levites, "but unto the Levites he gave none inheritance among them." (Joshua 14:3.) They had their homes in the cities and were to be provided for in another way. "And, behold, I have given the children of Levi all the tenth in Israel for an inheritance, for their service which they serve, even the service of the tabernacle of the congregation." (Numbers 18:21.) From the above it is very evident that the priests received tithes from the people, and they received them because they had rendered service in the tabernacle. It was their wages, their compensation, their salary. In Chronicles 31 and 32 there is an account of a revival among the children of Israel during the reign of Hezekiah king of Judah, and one of the things that was in evidence was that they began to bring in their tithes of what was produced on the land, and verse 10 of the 31st chapter shows that it was for the priests, and the Lord blessed the people because of what they had done. It is very plain and positive that under the law of God given through Moses to the children of Israel that ample provision was made for the temporal needs of the ministry.

An appeal to the New Testament will bring the same results. The teachings of Christ and the apostles will be found in accord with the Old Testament. When Jesus sent out the missionaries he told them that the laborer was worthy of his hire. (Luke 10:7.) Hire: Wages, reward. (Dictionary.) In Corinthians 9:7-14, Paul is trying to teach the lesson that the ministry deserved the kindly consideration of those for whom they ministered, and concludes by saying, "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel."

"Behold, I say unto you, that it is the duty of the church to assist in supporting the families of those, and also to support the families of those who are called and must needs be sent unto the world to proclaim the gospel unto the world."—Doctrine and Covenants 75:4.

"And the bishop also, shall receive his support, or a just remuneration for all his services, in the church."—Doctrine and Covenants 42:19.

From the above quotations from revelations given in our own generation we learn that provision is made for the care of the ministry and their families and it matters not by what name we may call it, a salary or an allowance, it results in the same thing. What is meant is the important thing, not the mere words, for "the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." It is very important that we properly represent the Lord and the church in such an important matter, our own personal views may be out of harmony with the Lord's plan, and to teach them will misrepresent him and injure his work and cause suffering among the families of the missionaries. The Lord's way is a beautiful one; it will bring peace and comfort to his people; none will be in want; none will suffer.

In the revelation given concerning the Order of Enoch (Doctrine and Covenants 81:4) a righteous principle is set forth, "every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just." In that law there is no distinction made because of social or official position or because of age. To call what we eat and wear our just wants and needs is a perversion of the intent of the law as it places us on a level with the dumb animals for their wants and needs are food and shelter. A part of our just wants and needs are a home, an opportunity for an education and training to follow some useful trade or profession. The children of the ministry are entitled to the same opportunities to prepare themselves for lives of usefulness as the children of men engaged in other occupations or professions. To teach and put in practice the theory that the families of the ministry are not entitled to the same consideration and have the same opportunities as others cannot be justified by law or good morals. It is a departure from the Golden Rule, the highest and purest law that was ever given to man.

All who are acquainted with the history of the Reorganization know that the allowances for the families of the ministry have been very meager compared with their needs, seldom sufficient to provide for the common necessities of daily life, and none for a home. The hearts of most of our people are right and anxious to honor the law of the Lord and it is a serious matter that we have so long overlooked this very important part of God's law, and we might well inquire who is to blame and what was the cause of our overlooking a part of the law that is so essential to our spiritual and temporal welfare. We are all to blame, the church cannot rise higher than its membership. Upon the ministry rests the greatest responsibility: they should teach and practice the law, they are the ones who should see that the law is kept. One of the causes is that we have followed traditions passed on from parents to children, and did not look into the perfect law of liberty; another reason is that we have remained in a state of childhood and continued in our pioneer condition when we should have become men of understanding and changed our methods to harmonize with the advancement we were making. Pioneers endure a great many hardships and are deprived of a great many of the comforts and necessities of home life, but they do not intend to remain in that condition; they are looking ahead to have what belongs to a more highly developed and civilized community. In the early days of the Reorganization the ministry and membership endured many privations and suffered many hardships that the gospel might be preached and the church properly presented to the world, and all honor is due them for the noble work that they have done. Their names are worthy to be enshrined among the martyrs of the past because it took men and women of heroic mold to face the calumny of the world while it was looking on the filth and wickedness of those who have departed from the faith, and while wearing the livery of heaven was serving the Devil. And as the pioneer looks for the time to come when he can lay aside pioneer conditions so should the church pass from pioneer conditions and come under the law as given to us by our heavenly Father. He does not want us to be children and pioneers always.

The church is greatly hindered in its work today because we have not come up to the high standard that our Lord requires of us. It is well worth our time to spend some of it in reflection on some of the effects of our present methods, and while we will discover that we have made some advancement we have not yet got to the place marked out by our heavenly Father.

As a church and as individuals we are losers spiritually, because the Lord has said: "Nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld." (Doctrine and Covenants 70:3.)

Paul says, "But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel." (1 Timothy 5:8.)

It causes the church to be evilly spoken of, for men of higher ideals, pure motives, and unselfish lives cannot have a good opinion of a church that is so selfish that it will neglect the women and children of its ministry.

It robs the women of the joy and happiness that should be found in a well-regulated home; it adds burdens that are hard to be borne; it wears out the body and wearies the mind, and makes them feel that they are objects of perverted charity instead of companions of men engaged in a noble work.

The children become estranged from the church and sometimes embittered towards it; their awakened intelligences soon reveal to them that they battle, and what should be their first love becomes are handicapped in their preparation for life's great to them a thing of indifference.

Our young men avoid the ministry. The divine instinct to have a home and enjoy the association of a wife and children in a well-ordered home must be largely sacrificed. Their sense of justice and right is so keenly developed that they cannot consent to live an unnatural life, which must be where membership and ministry do not stand on a platform of equality.

For the concluding paragraph let me appeal to the sense of justice that dwells in the hearts of most of our people that we study to improve conditions and in doing so it is not necessary to reflect on the motives and acts of others but rather let each one bear his own share of responsibility, whatever that may be, and patiently work for the end in view with malice toward none and love for all.

EDWARD RANNIE.

THE VALUE OF PRAYER

Men ought always to pray and not to faint.—Luke 18: 1.
Pray without ceasing, and in everything give thanks.—1
Thessalonians 5: 17, 18.

Doing all things with prayer and thanksgiving, that ye be not seduced by evil spirits, or doctrines of devils, or commandments of men.—Doctrine and Covenants 46: 3.

Of all the spiritual duties enjoined upon the Saints, prayer—with all that goes to make it true and sincere—is the most needful and beneficial, and yet of all duties the most neglected. Against no other duty does Satan exercise greater opposition, knowing well, as he does, the source from whence, and the channel through which, the power and strength of God's children must come, he makes his greatest effort against the vital part of our religion.

Professed Saints, by yielding to his cunning persuasions, find many excuses for failure to pray, and thus unawares, gradually little by little, step by step are they drawn away from the great means of strength and support.

When we enter the homes of members who attend strictly, reverently, and earnestly to the holding of family prayer in which all the family are trained to bear their part, it is easy to understand where they stand spiritually in the church, and we have no fears of their getting very far away from the "narrow way."

At the present time when, in addition to the woes and horrors resulting from war, the terrible plague of influenza is sweeping over the world, exacting such frightful toll, we can certainly see now the need of keeping in close touch with our God by continual prayer. The power of man is inadequate to stay the plague, and if we fail to obtain God's help, we are left helpless and hopeless indeed.

At no time has the beauty and benefits of the law of the church, which enjoins upon its membership the duty of praying always, been more apparent than now. There are many places where no meetings have been held for a number of weeks. What a sweet consolation is secret prayer and prayer in the home under these conditions! Truly God had in view the good and welfare of his children when he commanded them to pray always, and set the priest in the church to visit the house of each member, exhorting them to attend to all these family duties.

Those who attend to this devotional duty at home, will keep up their spirituality though deprived of attending the public prayer services, while those who have depended wholly upon public services alone for their opportunity of devotion will suffer loss.

Our Father desires us to call upon him often, and will bless us according to his good will and our real needs. The promise: "Ask and ye shall receive," however, does not mean that in every case we shall receive what we ask for; but if we ask in faith and in trust continually, we will receive that which a loving heavenly Father sees is for our best good.

Why not trust him and call upon him continually when there is such security by confiding in him, and so much danger and risk when we do not?

H. E. MOLER.

THE BOY MOVEMENT

[During the past few months there has been an increasing demand for information on the so-called boy movement in the church. To meet this need as well as to suggest an outline for institute speakers the following outline has been prepared. It is hoped that through the HERALD this information will be brought to the attention of many who have not as yet learned of this new endeavor.—THE AUTHOR.]

WHY SHOULD WE DO SOMETHING FOR OUR BOYS?

The church as an institution exists not for itself, but for the good that it can do for its members both old and young. It must ever have at heart the welfare of these members. Christ did not organize a church merely to have a church. He organized it to provide a means to save mankind. The church as an institution becomes dead unless it is constantly endeavoring to do all within its power to realize this end.

The salvation of the individual must be complete. He must be regenerated spiritually, morally, physically, and intellectually. He must become more and more perfect even as our Father in heaven is perfect. This is the great mission work of the gospel of Christ.

Wise educators and religious workers the world over are now recognizing the value of childhood. The time to reach and to train the individual is during the period of plasticity; the period of infancy. The chief difference between the animal and the human lies in the length of this period. The longer the period, the greater the opportunities for training, and hence the greater the development that results.

The church must do something for our young because:

1. It is the duty of the church to save mankind, and this work of salvation can best be begun in youth.

2. The highest development of the individual can only be attained by guiding his early development.

3. Believing our cause to be right it becomes our religious and moral duty to guide our youth in the right way.

4. There is no greater source of strength to the church than that which can come from holding the young to the church from the very earliest years of life.

5. The characteristics of the child place great responsibilities upon the home, the school, and the church.

a. The child is instinctively active. He will do in spite of all our don'ts. We cannot suppress this activity, try as hard as we may. We can only guide it. Remember this: The wide-awake, normal child will always be doing something!

b. The child is not by nature either good or bad. He is only active by nature. It is what he does that makes him good or bad. Which shall we let it be?

c. The child is naturally dependent. His activity must be guided, directed, and controlled. The great principle here is: "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." Suggest the good to the child. Stop saying don't.

d. The child is by nature social and playful. These tendencies are given for a purpose. The home, school, and church must provide plenty of wholesome, social, and recreational activities if the child is to develop normally.

As a church we have not provided enough of the social and recreational activities, especially for our boys.

1. The girls are now being well provided for in a number of branches.

2. There has existed no special organization for the boys.

3. There comes a call from the various parts of the church that something be done.

4. There is a growing feeling that we must save the boys for themselves, for the church, and for the Nation.

5. Other churches and institutions are far ahead of us in this work. No one has yet shown a reason why we should lag behind.

WHY DID WE CHOOSE TO MAKE USE OF THE BOY SCOUT ORGANIZATION?

1. The scout movement is sound in principle and simple in practice.

2. The principles of this organization are not contrary to the teachings of the church.

3. Eighty per cent of the scout troops in the country are connected with churches.

4. Scouting leads to the moral uplift of the boy.

5. Scouting is educational in the truest sense.

6. The expense to the church will be practically nothing.

7. In short the scout movement is an excellent beginning.

WHAT IS THE PLAN OF ORGANIZATION FOR THE CHURCH?

1. A general director of the boy movement for the church who occupies as second vice president of the Religio.

2. A director of the movement for each district of the church. This individual is nominated by the district Religio and the nomination is ratified by the general director for the church.

3. A local "Boy leader" who will organize the boys of his branch and direct their activities.

4. Local troops of Boy Scouts organized according to the plan of the National Boy Scout Organization, but under the immediate charge of the local boy leader who will in all cases be a member of the church in good standing.

RELATION OF THE NATIONAL BOY SCOUT ORGANIZATION TO OUR OWN BOY ORGANIZATION

1. Our own local troops will be organized according to the regulations of the National Boy Scout organization, but the leaders will be members of the church whose appointment will have been ratified by the general director of the work for the church.

2. The general director of the movement for the church (F. M. McDowell, Lamoni, Iowa) has received from the National Boy Scout Organization a special commission which makes him a national representative for that organization for the church. This insures the closest cooperation between the two movements.

3. There is absolutely nothing to prevent our omission of any features from the Boy Scout plan that are objectionable to our faith and belief. (None have been found to my knowledge.)

4. There is every opportunity for us to add such features as we think necessary to insure the spiritual development of the boys according to the ideals of the church. Suggestions will be appreciated.

STEPS NECESSARY TO COMPLETE OUR ORGANIZATION

1. Each district Religio organization should, if it has not already done so, nominate a district boy leader. This nomination should be referred to the general director for approval.

2. The district boy leader upon receiving final approval of his appointment should proceed at once to make a survey of the branches of his district in order to locate the qualified leaders for the local troops of boys in these branches. He should also do everything within his power to keep himself informed on the boy movement and to encourage the work in the district.

3. Final approval of each leader will rest with the district leader. He may or may not confer with the general director in regard to this appointment.

4. Each local leader should take steps at once to organize the boys of his branch. If possible and desirable a troop of Boy Scouts should be organized at once.

MATERIAL IMMEDIATELY AVAILABLE TO HELP DISTRICT AND LOCAL LEADERS

1. The Boy Scout's Handbook and the Scout Master's Handbook. These may be secured through any bookstore, from the national Headquarters of the Boy Scouts, 200 Fifth Avenue, New York, or from the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. The total cost of securing these two books is less than a dollar. You cannot afford to be without them.

2. A bulletin on the "Boy Scouts and the Church" prepared by the general director of the boy movement. These may be secured free of charge from either the district or general leader.

3. Numerous publications of the National Boy Scout Organization. Write them for particulars.

FIRST STEPS IN ORGANIZING A TROOP OF SCOUTS

Secure a Boy Scout's Handbook or the bulletin on the Boy Scouts and the Church" above mentioned. In either of these you will find detailed information on this point. Write to the National Organization of Boy Scouts for further particulars.

ESSENTIAL FEATURES OF THE BOY SCOUT ORGANIZATION

Write for a copy of the bulletin on the "Boy Scouts and the Church" which outlines these features in detail. Secure and read the Boy Scout's Handbook.

WHAT WE HOPE TO ACCOMPLISH

1. We want a live boy leader in every district of the church.

2. We want the boys organized in every branch of the church under a qualified member of the church who is thoroughly interested in boys and willing to spend some time with them.

3. We want to be able to suggest to the boys of the church.

a. Various games and recreational activities.

b. Various kinds of profitable work for vacation and out of school hours.

c. Suitable books for reading and study.

d. Various ways in which they may help the church, such as in advertising meetings, thrift campaigns, etc.

4. We want, in a word, to harness the energy of the boys of the church in such a way that they shall develop normally and symmetrically and also that the church may be directly benefited by their development and efforts.

EXTENT TO WHICH THE ORGANIZATION HAS BEEN PERFECTED

The following district boy leaders have been appointed:

Lloyd Gregory, Ribstone, Alberta, Alberta.

A. E. Bullard, Denver, Colorado, 538 West Fifth Street, Eastern Colorado.

Claude Garnet, Grand Rapids, Northern Indiana and Southern Michigan.

J. W. Petterson, Chicago, 4712 West Harrison, Northeastern Illinois.

V. G. Lentz, Rhodes, Iowa, Des Moines.

Carl Mann, Cherokee, Iowa, Gallands Grove.

A. G. Hougas, Henderson, Iowa, Fremont.

Amos Berve, Logan, Iowa, Little Sioux.

Cecil Schmid, Atchison, Kansas, Northeastern Kansas.

Vernon Lundeen, Minneapolis, Minnesota, Fifth Avenue North and Knox Streets, Minnesota.

W. H. Hubbard, Marion, Michigan, Western Michigan.

Walter R. Curtiss, Port Huron, Michigan, 1101 Eighth Street, Eastern Michigan.

R. S. Budd, Cameron, Missouri, Far West Stake.

W. W. Kearney, Clinton, Missouri, Clinton.

George A. Gould, Independence, Missouri, Independence Stake.

W. O. Hands, Kansas City, Missouri, 4717 Harrison, Kansas City Stake.

Robert E. Burgess, Knobnoster, Missouri, Holden Stake.

Orma Kniffen, Hamilton, Ontario, 200 Grosvenor Street North, Toronto.

F. F. Wipper, Independence, Missouri, 429 Eubank Avenue, Central Oklahoma.

Louis Gintz, Akron, Ohio, Kirtland.

George Clark, Maiden Rock, Wisconsin, Northern Wisconsin.

WHAT CAN YOU DO TO HELP?

1. Take up the movement in your branch and district.

2. See to it that there are local and district leaders for the boys.

3. Write to us offering suggestions and criticisms.

4. Tell us of your needs and difficulties.

5. Be on the lookout for new ideas. Make a study of this work.

DON'T BE DISCOURAGED

This has been a hard year for all of us and for every undertaking. More than half of the teachers of Graceland were sick at one time and the rest worked double time. Don't get cross if your correspondence is neglected. I shall reply the best I can. Simply try to make the best of your opportunities. Boost the boy movement whenever and wherever you can.

LATTER DAY SAINTS DEFENDED AT MEETING OF LONDON PRESBYTERY

During the London Presbytery conference yesterday on the "Forward Movement" of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, which was held in the First Presbyterian Sunday school hall, Reverend W. R. McIntosh took exception to the name "Latter Day Saints," which appeared on a chart referred to by one of the speakers as synonymous with the term "Mormon" and standing for a menace to the moral and spiritual welfare of the country, associated as Mormonism is, in the minds of the public, with bigamy. Copies of the charts used yesterday are to be sent out to all the churches for educational purposes.

Mr. McIntosh stated that the sect in this city, known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is made up of earnest, evangelical people, who love the Lord Jesus Christ, ally themselves will all moral reform and welfare movements, and who repudiate Brigham Young, polygamy and the branch of the church of which Joseph N. [F.] Smith, who died the other day, was the head.

"We have fine people in this city who belong to the Reorganized Church communion," he said, "and it seems unfair to class them with the Mormons of Raymond, Alberta, and other sections of the West, or the Utah Mormons referred to by the speaker as carrying on propaganda in Toronto."

Reverend J. G. Stewart of this city and Reverend Mr. Galbraith of Thamesford supported the statements of Mr. McIntosh in his suggestion that the name "Latter Day Saint" be changed on the chart to "Mormons" before the charts are sent out. Reference was made by these speakers to the fact that the Latter Day Saints' congregation in this city was the first to offer its church and the service of members as nurses to combat the epidemic some weeks ago.—London Advertiser, November 28, 1918.

WHERE THE PEACE CONFERENCE MEETS

"The Hall of Mirrors, where the peace conference will hold its sessions, is 242 feet long and 33 feet wide and measures 43 feet from floor to ceiling. On one side of it seventeen large mirrors look out upon the stilted artificial gardens which were designed by Lenôtre under the personal supervision of Louis XIV. On the other side of the gallery seventeen large mirrors reflect the splendors of the stately room. Paintings representing scenes in the life of Louis the Magnificent ornament the ceiling sides and every available vacancy not filled by a mirror. . . .

"Voltaire estimated that Versailles cost Louis XIV $100,000,000, Mirabeau said it cost $240,000,000, Volney put the figure at $280,000,000. You can take your choice or believe the more popular tale that the Great Monarch was himself frightened when he saw the bills and tore them up, so that no one would ever know what it cost.

"During the reign of the Magnificent's predecessor, a simple gentleman, whose greatest extravagance was falconry and who put rings on the claws of his favorite falcons instead of reserving them for human birds of prey. Versailles was just a hunting preserve through which ran a road communicat-path along which cattle were brought to Paris to be butchered. Once, while hunting Louis XIII was caught in a rainstorm and took refuge in a windmill, so he decided to build himself a modest hunting-lodge. His advisers protested at the project and the mild king was about to give it up when one of the friendlier notables exclaimed: 'Shall we prevent the king from building as simply as the most modest gentleman of his court?'

"And so Versailles began."

Not till 1651, when Louis the Magnificent visited Versailles on a hunting trip, did the real splendors of the place begin:

"The king had ideas that would have made him talked about on Broadway as a regular fellow. Twenty thousand workmen and 6,000 horses were put to work creating the great park and building the château where the delegates of democracy are to assemble. The task took a long time. In 1685 a courtier wrote in his diary: 'There are more than 36,000 peasants now at work for the king in or about Versailles. These half-clad and half-starved wretches die by the dozens under the strain of the cruel tasks imposed upon them.'

"And when one of these workmen died in the king's service his family received $2.50!

"When the palace was finally finished, Louis the Magnificent pronounced it too small, and the great southern wing was added. Toward the close of this Louis's reign Versailles was practically a great gambling hall. The old king was always at his devotions, and the courtiers sought to palliate their utter boredom by high play. Sometimes hundreds of thousands of dollars changed hands in a single evening, and outside the magnificent palace the people were starving.

"'Here and there through the fields,' wrote La Bruyère in 1689, 'one sees certain ferocious animals, male and female, black, livid, and sunburnt, attached to the soil in which they dig and toil with invincible obstinacy. They have a kind of articulate speech, and when they rise up from their work they show human faces, and they belong, in fact, to mankind. At night they crawl away into hovels, where they live on black bread, water, and roots. They relieve other men of the toil of plowing, sowing, and harvesting, and thus seem to merit a little of the bread which they have produced.

"These words were little short of treason in the days of the Great King. Reading them now, one cannot help wondering if among the ghosts of gallant gentlemen in high red heels and powdered ladies simpering behind painted fans who will gather during the peace conference the specters of these black, livid, sunburnt creatures may not stalk triumphant. At any rate, we know that they are not triumphant."

Referring to the peculiar character of this room at Versailles, an Evening Sun writer quotes certain "cynics who set little faith to the permanence of treaties" to the effect that "statesmen who sit in a glass house should not be surprised if nations threw stones." Yet the world, he thinks, is "perennially hopeful," and goes on to fill up the picture begun by his confrère of The Evening World:

"Just opposite the center of this Gallery of Mirrors, toward the inner court, is the historic bedchamber of Louis XIV, in which his richly adorned bedstead is still preserved. Flanking the bedchamber to the right and left are two antechambers, the bull's-eye (so called from one of its windows, an oval), and the Council Hall, in which the king's courtiers used to await him. The Hall of Mirrors, the king's various apartments, and indeed all of the one hundred and fifty rooms and halls of the palace are filled with priceless tapestries. To them cling the whispers of countless days and nights of royal folly that came to an end, with Louis XVIII. The value of the art treasures in the palace may be estimated at $5,000,000, but the millions that have been squandered in those rooms can never be added up. . . .

"The section of the Gardens of Versailles known as 'The Trianons' is occupied by two small but exquisitely designed and furnished villas, known respectively as the 'Grand Trianon' and the 'Petit Trianon.' The former, of only one story, was built 230 years ago by Louis XIV for the famous Mme. de Maintenon. . . .

"The park of Versailles is perhaps a mile square, an enormous basin in the shape of a cross quartering it at its center. On its eastern edge, nearest Paris, stands the Palace of Versailles, the houses of the town huddled around it and the palace chapel rising above it. . . .

"The Palace of Versailles was used not only by Louis XIV, but also as a permanent residence for his court. It consists of two wings, each 400 feet long, separated by a central court, which is about 200 feet square. The two wings are linked by a square building, which juts out into the green gardens and overlooks the fountains in the center of the park.

"The corridor along the western face of this central building, 240 feet in length, 35 feet in width, and 42 feet in height from its tessellated floor to its arched ceiling, is known as the Hall of Mirrors. It is in this stately room that the peace conferences probably will be held."—Literary Digest, December 14, 1918.

ADOPTS PALESTINE AS JEWS' HOMELAND

Amid great enthusiasm the first American Jewish Congress affirmed its desire for the establishment of Palestine as a Jewish commonwealth under the trusteeship of Great Britain, it being understood that nothing would be done to prejudice the civil and religious rights of non-Jewish communities in Palestine. . . . It took perhaps two minutes to read the resolution, but when the import of the words was realized by the gathering the one thousand delegates and visitors in the Masonic Building jumped to their feet with shouts of joy in the feeling that their age-long dream of a homeland for their people was soon to be an accomplished fact.

The members of the Congress joined in singing the official Zionist song, "Hatik Voh," while a delegate jumped on the stage and waved the Stars and Stripes and the blue and white Jewish flag. The delegates embraced each other, and with tears of joy. . . .

The resolution, as read by Doctor Friedenwald, chairman of the committee on Palestine, is as follows:

Resolved, That the American Jewish Congress instruct their delegation to Europe to cooperate with other representatives of other Jewish organizations and specifically with the World Zionist organization, to the end that the peace conference may recognize the aspirations and historic claims of the Jewish people in regard to Palestine, and declare that in accordance with the British Government's declaration of November 2, 1917, indorsed by the allied Governments and the President of the United States, there shall be established such political administrative and economic conditions in Palestine as will assure under the trusteeship of the Great Britain, acting on behalf of such a league of nations as may be formed, the development of Palestine into a Jewish commonwealth, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which shall prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine or the rights and political status, enjoyed by Jews in any other country.

Summing up the significance of the adoption of the resolution, Judge Julian W. Mack, of Chicago, permanent chairman of the congress, made this statement:

"The resolutions adopted in reference to Palestine are in acceptance on behalf of American Jewry of the opportunities for the Jewish people that have been offered by the Government of Great Britain in the Balfour declaration of November 2, 1917, indorsed by France, Italy, and Serbia, and which will undoubtedly be affirmed by the peace congress. . . ."

Judge Mack, the permanent chairman, stated:

"Great Britain has been specified as the trustee in the firm belief that the United States desires no trusteeship or protectorate over any of the peoples in Asia Minor and in recognition not only of Great Britain's leadership in redeeming Palestine from the rule of the Turk, and in declaring for its dedication as a national homeland for the Jewish people, but also because of her peculiar fitness to act in this territory on behalf of the league of nations. . . ."

There was unanimously adopted a resolution that seven delegates be elected to go to Europe at the earliest possible moment in order to use their best endeavors to realize at the peace congress the aims of the First American Jewish Congress. The resolution reads:

Be it resolved, That the American Jewish Congress shall elect a delegation of not more than seven members, which shall leave as soon as possible for Europe, where, in cooperation with representatives of the Jews of other lands, it shall use its best endeavors to realize the objects for which this congress was established, in accordance with instructions formulated by this congress;

Be it further resolved, That the delegation shall render a report to the congress after its labors in Europe are completed, and the president of the congress is hereby required to summon the congress to receive the report of the delegation not later than one year after the treaty of peace shall have been signed, and to transact such other business as may come before it;

Be it further resolved, That in the event that the delegation requires further instruction, or new conditions arise, the delegation by a majority vote may direct the president of the congress to summon a special session of congress to act on such propositions. . . .

The resolution that on the formal declaration of peace, the American Jewish Congress inform its European delegates to take the necessary steps to convene a World Jewish Congress, had a stormy career both before and after its passage. Introduced by Abraham C. Schomer, of New York, the resolution was quickly passed with great enthusiasm. . . .

Resolved, That the American Jewish Congress shall, as soon as peace is declared among the warring nations, instruct its European delegation to take the necessary and effective steps in cooperation with the representative Jewish bodies in other countries for the convening of a World Jewish Congress.

Judge Mack attempted to add to the resolution the following words: "for the purpose of securing to the Jews of the world the rights for which this congress is aiming." But the delegates refused to put any limit on the purpose of the world congress and the amendment was defeated.—New York Times, December 18, 1918.

Trust God

"Little HERALD, stop a moment
Ere you journey on your way,
I have something of importance
That I wish that you would say."
Say it not in tones obtrusive
Nor with poignancy of thrust,
Neither with desire abusive
But in manner all may trust.

To all readers of your pages
I would lift a warning voice,
With desire that e'en the sages
With all others may rejoice.
For I feel assured and certain
That aroused from sleep's embrace,
By thus lifting of the curtain
They will gladly change the pace.

I have seen a disposition
Lurking with God's people long,
To succumb to imposition
Finding lodgment midst the throng.
It is this vain adoration
For the ones who priesthood hold,
To in time bring execration
It were better left untold.

Cursed is the man who trusteth
In the arm of flesh, we're told,
For 'tis certain many lusteth
After place and pow'r and gold.
Trust then not in priesthood power
Only as 'tis used for God
By the ones who hold such dower
Walking where the Master trod.

Far too many have mistaken
Priesthood right and power divine,
And their faith been badly shaken
By a worship at such a shrine.

Let such then be up and doing,
Have their worship stayed on God,
Christ's example full pursuing
In the righteous path he trod.

Then their anch'rage will be lasting,
Armored with the truth divine,
Lend themselves to prayer and fasting,
Worship at the holy shrine.
Follow no man one step other
Than himself pursues aright,
As a humble-living brother
Armored with the Spirit's light.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

A Mother's Letter

Here is a letter—a wonderful letter from a mother to her soldier boy in France. Every mother in America should read it and when she has the spirit of it write to her own boy across the ocean. If she hasn't a boy of her own "over there" then she can write to some other mother's boy.

There was never a time when the boys were so greatly in need of letters from home as now. When the battle was on the soldier had little time or opportunity to let his mind wander to things unwholesome—he was too busy with what was then the gravest problem of the hour, winning the war.

But now it is different and the woman who wrote this beautiful letter is not the only one who realizes that the real danger to our boys is greater to-day than when the battle was raging. Then there was only the danger of being killed.

Now—but read this mother's letter. She tells it more beautifully than we can. Then read the appeal from Raymond B. Fosdick, chairman of the commission on training camp activities, who wants the overseas forces to be bound to home with that strongest tie of all—love.

HER SOLDIER BOY

"Son of Mine: They're sending you home to me at last. Through all these months of waiting and longing I've been wearing a star for you and holding my head high and thinking wonderful thoughts about you. I've watched you through ocean mists and dreamed anxious dreams. Yes, and cried a little, too, but not when people could see.

"And now you're coming home. Oh, it seems too good to be true. I've just read your letters again. They say so much more than you ever thought when you were writing them. Just happenings—that's all most of the things you wrote about were to you. But to me they said you were facing the biggest thing in life, facing it bravely, as I should want my son to face it. You were offering your body and your soul for a thing bigger than you or me or America.

"Don't think me silly or sentimental because I say these things. Just remember that while you were going through that fire and terror I had to sit here and smile. I had to try to be as brave as you, so that you shouldn't be ashamed of me. When I wrote to you I tried to write cheerful, encouraging letters, because I did not want you to go into battle feeling that I was holding you back from the big sacrifice. It's only now, when the fighting is over, that I can let down a little and be just your mother, just the woman who loves you better than anything else in the world and is so glad to know you're coming back to her that she doesn't care who sees her cry.

FIGHT NOT OVER

"Perhaps for some of the boys who have stood with you so finely through these trials the fighting is not yet all over. The fighting I mean is that between a man and himself, and for many of them this will be the hardest battle of all. During the long days and evenings of waiting, before they can start for home, thoughts will creep into their minds which will be hard to resist. There will be times after all these months of action when the longing for change and for the companionship of women may lead them into associations which will spoil their homecoming and cause them shame and humiliation and even perhaps make them unfit to receive the love that awaits them here.

"You, dearest boy, are just as human as your comrades, and feelings like these may come to you, too. I don't ask you to crush them. They are natural, and they only prove that war has failed to dry up the well spring of your emotions. I ask you only to recognize them when they come and to control them with the fine strength you have gained while fighting for the ideals and principles of America. Just remember that many joyous years of life are ahead of you and that the risk of spoiling them and the love that will fill them is too tremendous to run for a short hour of seeming pleasure.

"SOMEBODY CARED"

"Many of the boys who will come home with you have no mothers to write to them. Some of them may think that no one cares what they do. But somebody does care. America cares. And the girls they will marry some day care. And, oh, the difference it makes in their lives if they will just remember that there is always somebody, always!

"Help them to remember. Help them to come home clean and fine. Don't let them spoil everything now. They have been so splendid. If you think this letter will help them give it to them. If they have no mothers let me be their mother until they have come back and taken the high places that await them here. Tell them to write to me. How I should treasure their letters!

"And, of course, you will write to me. Just say that you understand—that you know why I have written this letter. Then I can wait months—yes, even years—knowing that you will come home to me as fine and clean as you were when I sent you away to camp so long ago.

"MOTHER."

—Exchange.

Keep the Boys' Thoughts Centered Around Home

Just before leaving for France to superintend the demobilization activities of those organizations which recently took part in the united war work campaign, Raymond B. Fosdick, chairman of the commission on training camp activities, was interviewed with regard to the present situation of our overseas forces.

"The problem presented by the gradual demobilization of more than 2,000,000 men 3,000 miles from home is one which will tax all our social resources," said Mr. Fosdick. "It is above all a morale problem, and it must be faced as such, with the full cooperation of families and friends here in this country, if it is to be solved successfully. Everyone who has a son, a brother, or a sweetheart over there must help.

"While the war was on our boys were fully occupied; they were still filled with the spirit of adventure, looking forward rather than back. Now, however, the fighting is at an end. They are going to remain, most of them, many months doing work which will be neither exciting nor particularly interesting. They will get lonesome, bored, and terribly homesick.

"The $170,000,000 raised in the recent united war-work drive is to be used precisely to bridge over this period by providing recreation and amusement. But no amount of mere money expended in such a way will be enough. What these boys really want is not diversion, but human interest and sympathy. These things expressed in letters from home will warm their hearts and create a home atmosphere around them, even while they are absent from the family circle.

"Such letters may be a very necessary sheet anchor to windward in the case of some boys. The thought of some one waiting for them, counting on them, will, more than anything else, make them hold back and think twice before plunging into situations which might mean harm and unhappiness for them."

Four Little Studies in Character Building

IV. HOME FOUNDATIONS

Character has been formed and developed in many schools of life. The most important of these is the home, where every human being receives his best, or his worst, moral training. It is there that he imbibes those principles of conduct which endure through life, and cease to influence only when that life is laid down. If the foundations are true, squared up with the Authorized Rule, we may expect the superstructure to be a worthy one. If hay and stubble are used as foundation materials, we cannot expect the building to stand the test of time and experience.

An old saying has it that "manners make the man." Another insists that "mind makes the man." A truer one than either, perhaps, is that the "home makes the man." For home training not only includes the manners and the mind, but also determines the nature of the materials used in building the character of the man. Spurgeon says the home is the grandest of all institutions, and another writer says, "A hundred men make an encampment, but it takes just one woman to make a home!" "Home is the resort of love, of joy, of peace and plenty where, supporting and supported, polished friends and dear relations mingle unto bliss."

Another writer has said the strength of a nation, especially of a republican nation, is in the intelligent and well-ordered homes of its people. The purpose of the home is to maintain the efficiency of body, mind, and soul of the man and woman of to-day, that they may live happy, useful lives in the service of God and man, and to prepare for similar efficiency the man and woman of to-morrow. Notice, I say, "body, mind, and soul." Yes, it takes the development of all three of these to make a well-rounded Christlike character. The home must care for the body, providing for it proper food, clothing, and exercise that it may come to its highest physical efficiency. It must supply the mind with its proper food and exercise, that it may have opportunity to develop into the highest culture attainable to man; and it must train the soul to right and noble aspirations, habits of uplifting thought and impulse, strength of will and purpose, self-control and love expressed in consecrated service and an elimination of self and self-interest, to the glory of God. A home is not a real home unless it seeks to provide all these. Parents and guardians should pray earnestly for wisdom to properly perceive and measure their responsibility to the young, and strength to discharge it in a manner acceptable to the God who gave.

We may mold the character foundations as we will, while the plastic nature of the child is within our reach. We may form habits for good or evil. No one else can ever exert as much influence as we do in the impressionable years when children are in our homes and under our guiding. We make the child's environments, so that suggestions of good—physical, mental, and moral—may be sowed in the fertile soil, from which it may, in after years, reap rich harvests. By example and story we may establish noble ideals, give direction to will and energy, and determine the quality of the material used in its character structure. We may give strength to its will, train its moral sense to right decision, and inspire with an unswerving faith in God. We can cultivate the spirit of humility, and guide every latent power of heart and mind to a glorious expression in righteousness.

Sometimes our experiences show us that it is easier to talk of molding correctly the characters of the children than it is to build our own in a manner satisfactory to ourselves. But after all, it is ideal to struggle. The very struggle will tend to success. It is the giving up which precedes failure. Could we but keep before our minds the real meanings of life, and pursue them steadily, we would realize that many apparent failures are but stepping-stones to achievements of a higher nature than we had grasped before. We should try ever to suppress all that is of a nature to turn aside our purposes, lower our standards, or lure us into paths attractive because of their ease or glitter. By doing this, and by keeping our ideals in view, we may confidently expect to grow, gradually, into a likeness nearer our divine Example.

We have each to do our best, perform our known duties to the very best of our ability, in the sphere of life in which we are placed. If we do this, we shall be building for ourselves good Christian characters—of a nature to make an acceptable gift or offering to the Master. When that work is done, the necessity for earthly struggle over, our fidelity to love and duty will bring us into the wide fields of an eternal sphere of endeavor, where we may still grow, still develop, still build, under the kindly tutelage of the Christ, who shall be all in all.—Mrs. Joseph Skelton.

Training Little Children

ENTER INTO THE PLAY SPIRIT OF YOUR CHILDREN

The play instinct is inborn in all children the world over; it is nature's own method for developing the senses, the muscles, and all bodily growth. Play is even more than this; it is the outlet of expression of the child's inner life. Many faults as well as virtues may be discovered while watching children at play. Perhaps a mother will find that her child is selfish or rude, and it is easy to discover a generous disposition and a good temper in the course of a play hour.

Games are the expression of the play spirit, and toys are the instruments necessary for the expression of this activity of child life. As a farmer needs garden tools to do his work, so a child needs toys for his play—or work, which play really is to him. And if toys are not provided ready-made, he will invent them, in order to be able to express his play spirit and put it into action.

All play depends upon the physical condition of the child. A normal, healthy child plays all the time, is easily interested in his toys, and as he grows older invents games with them. If a child plays but little, cannot easily be interested in his toys, will not play alone and is cross, look first to his physical condition, then begin a course of training, or directed play. Start with the suggestion, "Why not build a high steeple?" or, "Make mother a train of cars with your blocks." Often, especially in the case of an only child, if mother can enter into the play spirit, and play hide-and-seek, or march and sing, or even build with the blocks, it is such a treat and often a real help in promoting a readiness to play alone when mother must go back to her work.

Almost every child wants to help mother sweep, dust, make beds, wipe the silver, or run errands. Make play out of the work and yet let the little one feel he is really doing something. With tiny babes, too little even to walk, a mother can make play out of work. Have the high chair or the bassinette or carriage in the room where you are working and keep baby busy with toys. For instance, if you are working in the kitchen, let the baby have a big spoon, clothespins, tin covers, or anything new and safe, but always keep those things for the kitchen. If he is allowed to have them all the time they soon lose their interest and he becomes restless and unhappy.

A sense of newness even with old toys makes them desirable to a child. Children need change and variety because their power of concentration is not fully developed. This is the plan I use with success with my own little girl. Her box of dominoes, her nest of blocks, and her box of building blocks (composed of sixteen cubes), I keep on a shelf in a closet out of sight. I also keep some picture books and toys out of sight. Then when the time comes, as it does so many times a day, when Little Girl says, "What I do now, muvver?" I go to the closet for a surprise. If I give her the blocks, it is always with a suggestion for making something with them. She now comes to me and asks for "A s'prise, muvver." When she tires of the blocks, I have her pick them all up, ready to put away, before she can have another "surprise." Sometimes, for days at a time, she does not ask for a surprise, and then when I do bring out the dominoes, for instance, she is as delighted as if they were brand-new. Her dolls I separate in groups. If she has four, I put away two, and at the end of a week I bring out these two and put away the two she has been playing with. If you follow this plan with all toys, grouping them and keeping one set put away, you will always keep the little ones interested and happy.—Mrs. Lenore R. Ranus, in bulletin from Bureau of Education.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

We Can Bring Forth Zion

This beautiful Lord's Day morning I thank God that I ever obeyed the restored gospel, and in memory I take a retrospective view of the past. I sense very vividly the momentous times in which we are living. The words of the Palmyra Seer are being fulfilled. The curse of the Almighty is on land and sea. "The nations are angry and thy wrath is come," and who shall be able to stand? Who shall dwell amidst the everlasting burnings? He that hath clean hands and walketh uprightly. Kings are being dethroned and kingdoms destroyed. Royal families and nobilities have no distinction. The people are tired of kingly rule and prefer a "government of the people, by the people, and for the people, that shall never perish from the earth," with the consent of the governed. I am glad that the government of Joseph's land stands out as the foremost nation of the world, a land that God raised up wise men to redeem by the shedding of blood—a land of liberty—a choice land, a beacon light to the world, and whose subjects are the standard bearers of liberty. Our forefathers left all that was dear to them, their homes and loved ones and their blood prints on the frozen ground to bequeath to us our liberties—a legacy, the value of which cannot be measured by dollars and cents, that our liberties and the pursuit of happiness might remain intact and unsullied.

In our struggle for liberty in the incipency of this great commonwealth, God gave us a George Washington, who has been styled "the Joshua of America," and the father of our country. He gave us an Abraham Lincoln, called the savior of our country, who so distinguished himself as to be immortal by the following: "That government of the people, by the people, for the people shall never perish from the earth." In the quiet hours of the night, in our late struggle for world-wide democracy, we could almost hear the voice of a Joan of Arc calling to the sons of liberty to liberate bleeding France from bondage. An American song writer recently wrote: "Lafayette, we hear you calling." America heard the call when Belgium was invaded, when bleeding France was almost overcome and the enemy near her door. Ah, somehow it still rings in our hearts. We heard the call when our boys tramped, tramped here and there and made the supreme sacrifice of their lives. I recall the statement of one of our Iowa boys. In writing home to his mother he said: "I want to say in closing, if anything happens to me, let's have no mourning in spirit, nor in dress; for it is like a Liberty Bond, an investment, not a loss, when a man gives his life for his country."

Dear Saints, the hastening time is upon us. Shall we be able to abide the day of his coming? "The day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night," then may the gospel promises, the magnitude of which we are not able to fathom, be a part of our lives in our everyday warfare. Will the army of the Lord become very great, or will we allow ourselves to become so incapacitated for service that inefficiency will cause us to take a back seat? Despite these turbulent times and unsettled conditions we can bring forth Zion. Zion, saith God, could have already been redeemed, but my people were not ready. Listen to one of the minor prophets of Israel: "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge," because they rejected the avenues that were open to them for learning—to be taught. Arise, and shine, O Zion, put on thy beautiful garments, for "out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined." Potential Zion, or the possibilities of Zion, are absolutely certain if we will move forward like a mighty army in the work of the Lord. We have been loyal to the Red Cross, to the Government, and the demands that have been made upon us, then loyalty unto Christ the Lord. "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, but unto God the things that are God's." May our souls hunger and thirst after God till they shall be filled with the Holy Ghost, yea more, till we shall be willing to consecrate our all to His service and glory, is my prayer.

JAMES D. SCHOFIELD.

A Letter of Appreciation

[The following extract is from a personal letter, but with permission to publish. Sister Rogerson expresses her appreciation of the articles which have appeared in the HERALD the past year and which she states "alone are worth the price of the HERALD ten times over."—EDITORS.]

I think, when I read them, surely the power of God is with these brethren or they could never give us such food for thought so deep as to inspire us to action. They are noticeable in that they are free from that which is harsh or coarse, hence they thrill our souls with joy. May these brethren be spared to continue their labor of love for the church and humanity regardless of the discouraging things that may be said by those who should be helpers.

I read with much interest the sermon by Elbert A. Smith, "Creation in travail," in the HERALD of December 4, and note the question asked by some one: "Why is nobody doing anything?" My observations have been both inside and out of the church that the faultfinders are not as a rule practical people. They usually expect other people to do more than they are willing to do themselves. I can see where there is much being done by the church and feel to sympathize with those who have the care and burden of the work resting upon their shoulders. If we think the church is not making the progress we would like to see it make, let us ask ourselves the question, How much am I doing to help its progress?

If we have been negligent in the past, let us resolve to start the new year with a desire in our hearts to be helpers, casting in our mite both in a spiritual and a temporal way, for in so doing we shall be blessing others and ourselves also.

Yours in gospel bonds,

ALICE ROGERSON.

Letter to the Soldiers

Dear Soldiers: It is with pleasure we thank you for the part you have taken in this great war drama, to bring Christian freedom to all peoples. Especially is it momentous, coming at the near hour of the birth of the Prince of Peace. Your sacrifices have made the world a safer place, and hastened new movements toward the goal of perfection. We are keeping the camp fire burning for you, and with its rising silvery smoke ascend our prayers for your safety physically and spiritually, for the future generation is depending upon it. And while there will be thousands of empty chairs at the Christmas table, don't forget to thank your Creator that the absent ones died for the freedom of the world, and will soon arise again in the first resurrection of the just. An inspiring sight, bringing to mind the wonderful prowess and bravery and ingenuity of man, was the sight of over two hundred airplanes doing their wonderful stunts in celebration of peace.

Your friend,

REGINA ROHRER MORTON.

CORONADO, CALIFORNIA.

SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE, October 31, 1918.

President Smith: I will take the privilege of occupying a few minutes of your valuable time, using as an excuse, if one be needed, our relationship in the gospel. You possibly won't recognize my name, but my father is Elder W. S. Macrae.

Thinking you might be interested in our boys over here, I will endeavor to give you a little insight into our daily life. We are surrounded on all sides by dangers continually, and our protection is a source of great comfort and a feeling of security that no earthly power could possibly give us. We will all of us have some of the most wonderful testimonies when we return.

I have already been granted the most vivid example that I care to experience that God will protect his children if they only continue faithful. Two days ago a corporal and I went into a town to get a few things, and on stepping out of the door to return I was struck very forcibly in the back and close to my right shoulder blade. Our anti-aircraft guns were shooting at some Boche planes. A piece of the projectile fell, and that is what struck me. It hit me in such a manner that I was unhurt and I can thank God only for my good fortune.

My work associates me with Brethren Gold and Rall, both of Independence, and a few others of our boys. Owing to the untiring efforts of Brother Gold, we have been able to enjoy the privilege of prayer and testimony meetings in the open. He would gather a few of the boys, as many as wanted to go, and we would go out for an hour of worship. We have all been helped and strengthened and we are better acquainted.

We are all in fairly good health and spirits looking forward to the time when we will be able to return again to our native land, and hoping that that time will speedily arrive. We will be better men and better citizens after this great trial of faith and character, this great melting pot of the nations, and the world will be a more pleasant place in which to live after experiencing the uncertainty and turmoil of war.

Wishing you God-speed in the carrying out of his great work, and his greatest blessings, I remain,

Yours in bonds,

PRIVATE GOMER R. MACRAE.

Headquarters Company, 356th Infantry, Am. Forces, A. P. O. 761.

SAULT SAINTE MARIE, ONTARIO, December 4, 1918.

Editors Herald: As we have had no news from this part in your paper for some time, thought I had better send in a few items of interest for all those who read the HERALD. Those who don't, if any, are missing a great deal of knowledge by not subscribing to the valuable church paper. We feel almost lost having our church closed for almost two months on account of the epidemic, but we hope soon to be able to meet again. We were glad to have a brief visit from our district president, Elder D. B. Perkins. Our church being closed, he couldn't hold a series of meetings. We are sorry to report the death of two of our members, Brother E. W. Miller and Sister A. Tomlinson, who will be greatly missed from our branch.

Our president, Elder M. K. Brown, has been kept busy calling upon the sick by whom his kindness will always be remembered. We realize that we are living in perilous times when we should all be standing in holy places. Our earnest prayers are for the welfare of all, that we may all have our lamps trimmed and burning when the Bridegroom comes.

Yours for the advancement of the cause,

VINA CAMPBELL.

GROTON, CONNECTICUT, December 4, 1918.

Editors Herald: Twenty-six years ago I was taken from my people by the Spirit of God and grafted into the true vine, Christ Jesus, and was promised by Brother George Robley after he had baptized me, God would heal my body of appendicitis. By giving me his Holy Spirit he recognized his restored priesthood.

I see in the HERALD once in awhile that which seems to me to be misleading and which seems to countenance spiritualism. There is much in the writings of Buddha and Confucius that express noble sentiments, but must we go to them or to the modern free-thought scientists to prove our claims of life immortal or to prove this church to be true? My daughter, a member, has just been reading in The Cosmopolitan magazine a sketch by Ella Wheeler Wilcox wherein she tells of wonderful spiritual experiences, and to the casual reader it would seem that she was a very beautiful woman led by the true spirit. Mrs. Wilcox tells of her husband, what a noble and spiritual man he was, and yet she tells how he played poker at his club and would give the proceeds of the fortunate gambling to her and they would send the money to poor friends. She also said that he had a number of visions, so real that he thought some of them were real persons. But she said that he was an inveterate smoker, wasn't a member of any church, didn't attend church even, but they both attended theosophy together, read the Bible, attended Hindu lectures, etc.

Now here is the point: The world is full of people who make claim to spiritual power and apparently are really nice people, but they do not have the spirit of truth which is to guide into all truth and show them the true church.

Some of them claim a belief in Christ, but that belief does not lead them to accept the gospel. Now if we quote from such people it tends to lead away from the truth.

I have a cousin that is one of those spiritual leaders. I read a letter written to him by a lady that had lost a number of babies shortly after birth, and he met her and she told him her trials. He told her that it was the Father's will for her children to live and hereafter they would live. She had a number since and they lived. In her letter to him she wrote: "I am sick from overwork, but I know that as soon as you get this letter I shall be better."

About one year ago he took a lady from Connecticut State Hospital that was pronounced hopelessly insane after thirteen years, and under his treatment she, after a short time, was apparently well. I know the woman, have sung with her and conversed with her, and she acts like anyone—is perhaps a little more quiet than some.

Now this man does not believe in water baptism. He seems to believe that Joseph Smith was a prophet or good man. Says he himself has been on this earth three different times, and I understand he claims to have at one time been Jeremiah the prophet.

I attended a Holiness meeting where a man spoke in tongues and an interpretation came telling them that the Spirit they had was just the same as the Latter Day Saints had. They were anxious to receive me into full fellowship. Beloved, believe no spirit that allows you to stay out of the church restored.

I am lying in bed with a broken thigh. My first doctor said nothing was broken. I suffered terribly and sent to Providence after the elders, and Brother Ralph Farrell came to administer to me. He is a trained nurse and seemed to think no bones were broken. I have had the elders four times, with no relief.

Brother Dan Joy, of Providence, Rhode Island, came once with Brother Gates and spoke of having been treated with violet rays. I heard of a specialist who treated with rays of light of different colors who had effected some wonderful cures. He came and proposed to take me to his home and treat me three times a day. After a short conversation I found he was a spirit doctor, used hypnotism, didn't believe in Christ only as a good medium; said that the East Indian priests were ahead of us, etc. He said he was trying to do all the good he could, would take no pay for his visit, saying he was trying to lay up treasures up there; believed in spiritualism, had seen and conversed with departed spirits, etc.

Now I believe he could have helped my physical body but at the expense of my spiritual life, and I durst not put myself into his hands. And now after two months I got a new doctor who had an X ray taken and tells me that the ball is broken off from the thigh bone where it enters the socket, and that I should go to the hospital, be cut open, and have the bones scraped and pegged together with a metal pin, and lay five weeks more on my side or back, bound to a board, etc. I can get around with crutches and bear my weight on the leg without its hurting much but it snaps or grinds some. If I had only gone to the hospital in the first place, but now I am so nervous I don't feel able to stand an operation, as I fear I would lose my mind before recovering from the operation. Brethren, my trust in God and his church are unshaken and I expect to live to do a work for him. I have always meant to do right but have fallen far short of my own ideals. I need your prayers that God may help me to be more faithful, and please ask God to heal me.

Just one word in closing. Brethren, come out of the worldly institutions and put the moneys that you are paying into the world into the Lord's storehouse. I know Bishop McGuire won't let a worthy Saint suffer if he knows about your case. But if you don't pay into the Lord's storehouse but spend your means in going around for pleasure, how can you expect to be helped by the church?

I have paid many dollars into the church and am glad. All that I have belongs to God. I am simply his steward and if I give one tenth into his storehouse it is simply doing my duty. I still feel that I am an unprofitable servant. For God wants us as well as our money, and when Jesus said we should love our God with all our might, mind, soul, and strength he meant it. Hoping I may measure up to God's standard, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

THOMAS G. WHIPPLE.

CHANUTE, KANSAS, December 12, 1918.

Editors Herald: About two years ago when living at Glasgow, Montana, I began to get dissatisfied with my religion as I could see that the churches are changing. I thought that a church that was in harmony with God's word would remain the same. So I began a search for the truth, and being a true seeker, God came to my rescue as he always does when one is sincere.

I heard that a Latter Day Saint was preaching at the courthouse, so out of curiosity I went, not thinking I would unite with that faith, but the more I went to hear the sermons, the more I was convinced that he was preaching the truth. I began a deeper study of my Bible and asked God to show me the truth; the more I read the better I could see that this church had the truth and that there was nothing in my former church for me. So I was baptized by Brother J. C. Page, April 15, 1917, as he was the elder that was preaching in the courthouse.

I am living happily in my new faith and enjoying the blessing of God every day, but my path has not been an easy one as I have been snubbed and persecuted by friends and relatives. Yet I am glad I can suffer for Christ as he suffered so much for me. Dear Saints, let us put on the whole armor of faith and consecrate our lives to Him who doeth all things well, so our lives will be such that God can use us and then his kingdom will reach all nations of the world, and we will always have peace instead of war.

A loyal sister,

MRS. J. W. RICHARDSON.

[Excerpt from a letter to the Presidency from Elder E. C. Shelley, Lake City, Florida, December 13, 1918]:

I have been preaching here for the past two weeks with indifferent interest. A few have manifested interest and are investigating the work. There is the greatest change in the attitude of the people here toward religion in the past six years that I have ever observed. At that time, they would go to church and Sunday schools that were going among them. They would go to hear most anyone preach that came along. I was not ordained at the time, but delivered two or three lectures on gospel subjects that were received with interest. Now they have no Sunday school at all, and no preaching that ever draws a crowd. The people that I met when here before seem glad to meet me. They invite me to their homes, and if I go treat me very nicely, but they will not come to hear me preach. I am welcome to the use of their church. I suppose this is because they have no more use for it. They will talk with me about their automobiles, bird dogs, guns, hogs, and cattle. They get enthused over trips to bathing resorts, hunting trips, fishing, theaters, and joy rides; but religion is a painful subject. Six years ago they went to church and talked in glowing terms of the way of the Lord.

SHELLBROOK, SASKATCHEWAN, December 15, 1918.

Editors Herald: It does me much good to read the different articles contained in the HERALD and to learn that the Saints throughout the world are striving to do their bit in this great and glorious gospel.

We are in somewhat of an isolated condition in this part of God's vineyard, but hope that the Master will see fit to organize a branch here in the near future. We are looking forward to the time when Brother J. C. Page will return to encourage us again. The Saints certainly enjoyed his discourses while here last summer, and hope that when he comes again it will be to stay awhile.

We have an organized Sunday school, and up to this time have been able to keep up Sunday school work; also midweek prayer service which is the most spiritual meeting we have.

I often wonder how we could live without meeting together to renew our faith from time to time. We have not been able to meet for two weeks. The influenza has broken out in our neighborhood, and some of the Saints are down with it, but not seriously ill. However we were made sad by the death of my brother's little girl, Mildred Christian-son, who died from pneumonia following influenza. She is greatly missed by us all.

My brother is not a member of the church, but is always willing to do anything for the elders or any of the church people, and I pray that he will obey this gospel, for we know it is the only way unto salvation.

Ever praying for God's people,

MRS. ORBEN SIMS.

TULSA, OKLAHOMA, December 20, 1918.

Editors Herald: I am writing this morning to let you know how thankful the children of God, living down here, are for the many blessings they have received from the hands of the Lord.

We have had many cases of influenza, but so far as we know there have not been any deaths among the Saints, although many people have died.

We were permitted to listen to a sermon Sunday, December 15, by Brother Rannie, our district president. He cited us to Doctrine and Covenants 45:4, where the Lord speaks of this very scourge.

While reading the Doctrine and Covenants and studying my Sunday school lesson the thought came to me, if we as Saints truly are as thankful to our Creator as we ought to be, why do we murmur and complain when we look back and see how the Lord has blessed his children from the very beginning of his work in these the latter days? We never have to suffer only through disobedience, yet at times we will step aside and have to meet chastisement to bring us back into line.

I hope that my work may be changed soon, so I can get out and visit more with the Saints and find out their needs and become better acquainted with them. Then we can work more harmoniously together.

I was ordained a teacher a year ago last October and have been studying hard to try to make as much headway as possible. I surely appreciate the good fellowship shown among the priesthood, and for the timely advice I received from the brethren from time to time on things I did not understand very well.

Ever hoping for the advancement of the one cause that is truth, peace, and good will toward all men,

Yours in gospel bonds,

B. M. BOWERS.

STAFFORD, ENGLAND.

Editors Herald: After reading the letters sent by Saints in other parts of God's vineyard, I thought I would like to write a few lines to testify how much joy and strength I derive from reading the same. My wife and I are quite young in this work, having been baptized as recently as June 2 of this year.

I understand the Birmingham District conference decided that as the Stafford Branch membership had been depleted by emigration and death, and just a few old-time believers were struggling to maintain the faith, it was their duty to give what help they could. Accordingly Brother John Schofield set to work, assisted by the officers of the district and the local Saints, and my house was visited in the course of his house to house tracting. At first I did not give much heed to their pleadings, but gradually I began to investigate and at length found out that what was brought to my home by the tract was the truth as taught by the Savior and his apostles. In course of time I became convinced that I ought to embrace those divine principles as laid down in the gospel.

My wife was of the same mind as myself, and ultimately we gave in our names for baptism.

We went to Birmingham and were inducted into the kingdom by Brother John Schofield, and were confirmed by Brethren J. Schofield, A. Kendrick, and F. H. Edwards, sr.; and now we look back on that day as the red-letter day of our lives.

With the knowledge of the gospel and the joys that it brought came the desire to spread it, and I enlisted myself with Brother Schofield to help in that direction. Accordingly the old stalwarts, Brethren G. S. Greenwood and G. Ecclestone, and Sister Bates and her family, and we two united in holding a Sunday evening service in our home, in addition to the afternoon service.

Our tracting is continued. We go right on from our door using the Angel Message tracts, or HERALDS, or Ensigns, as seems best to fit the occasion. When opportunity offers we talk to whoever answers the door, and Brother Schofield's genial persistence has won us many friends. On first seeing us many appear indifferent, but we are determined to let them know what they are refusing and in time several have become interested.

As a result of this tracting we frequently get in visitors, and the addition to our numbers is quite appreciable and our meetings are blessed by the presence of the Spirit.

So far no one has joined us but we are living in hopes before long to see some honest soul inducted into the kingdom for which we are earnestly praying and fasting periodically.

In connection with our branch an Hurlbut teacher-training class has been organized which meets every Wednesday evening at our home.

So the good work continues.

Yours in the gospel,

30 Lovatt Street.

JOHN H. COGGAN.

"It's a good thing that poverty is no crime or half the world would be in jail."

The man who waits to be given a chance has a life job as a waiter.

SARNIA, ONTARIO, December 3, 1918.

Editors Herald: Owing to the prevalence of the influenza the church has been closed, but now the ban has been lifted as the epidemic has abated. Our prayer meeting on last Sabbath was wonderfully spiritual and uplifting. We have commenced a series of nightly meetings. There are two missionaries with us, Brother C. M. Clifford, of Wallaceburg, Ontario, and Brother R. D. Weaver, of Brown City, Michigan, missionaries to Chatham District. Herculean efforts are being made in getting the gospel before the people. Our two brothers are sparing no pains in presenting the truth. They got a notice on the front page of the daily, inviting the public to our meetings and telling of the death of Joseph Fielding Smith, and as the paper is taken in hundreds of homes it will do good and disabuse the minds of many of the idea that we are in any way connected with the Utah people. The editor is a fair-minded, honorable man and gave it prominence.

Sarnia Branch went "over the top" in the collection for advertising purposes. The branch is not large but showed its sincerity by giving liberally for the object, and the work is being well advertised. The Sunday school and Religio sent for tracts, and 1,500 cards were printed inviting the people out to the services, also showing our belief. A house to house canvas is being made and Sarnia is being "warned." One reverend tore his card and threw it on the ground, but honest souls come out to hear and say, "We are coming again; we want to hear more."

Brother Clifford took for his text, Sunday afternoon, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." It will stand to the everlasting condemnation of those who heard it, if they do not obey. In the evening Brother R. D. Weaver spoke on being organized after the pattern. He had great liberty. A strong impression was made. The truth is very searching, and those who heard the plea will not soon forget.

MRS. A. MCKENZIE.

SAINT JOSEPH, MISSOURI, December 3, 1918.

Editors Herald: I desire to bear my testimony, through the pages of the HERALD, of my gratefulness for the goodness of God to me and my family in the last three weeks.

That dreadful scourge of sickness, influenza, entered my family, taking us all down at once. My son and his wife and baby were also attacked. But what I want to say is, that I want to express my gratefulness of heart to the First Saint Joseph Branch for the prayers offered in our behalf. I truly feel the Lord has been with us in our affliction; our health having been restored to us. The Lord saw fit to take my son from this life, but while he is greatly missed by his loved ones, yet I feel that his life work here must have been sufficient, and that there is more for him to do in the great beyond.

I ask that the Saints remember me in their prayers, and I will always remember them.

EMMA RADKE.

HAMILTON, MISSOURI, December 10, 1918.

Editors Herald: I feel it my duty to write a few lines because I have many brothers and sisters that like to hear from Zion's land. I can truthfully say that we feel thankful to the good Lord for all that he has done for us. He has kept us and blessed us in many ways, and I know his promises are to be depended upon if we do our part.

This is a beautiful country, dotted here and there with timber, and small streams running through the land. But the most beautiful of all is a fine congregation of Saints, whose only desire is to try to live worthy of God's Spirit, and if we do, we have the promise that we will be satisfied.

What more do we want? We have many faithful members here in Oak Dale Branch that take God at his word and try to live by every word God has spoken. I prize highly the privilege of living among a people who are serving the Lord in spirit and in truth.

Saints, do not write to me as I am not in authority to locate people, but correspond with Brother B. J. Scott, of Saint Joseph, or Brother J. T. Ford, Route 5, Hamilton, Missouri.

Hoping this will not go in the waste basket, I am,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

O. A. ERICKSON.

[Excerpt from a letter to the Presidency dated London, Ontario, December 10, 1918]:

I have mailed you a few copies of articles recently published in the interest of our church in London. We have established a good name by trying to present to the people the gospel of Jesus Christ in a practical way. Our emergency hospital proved to London that Latter Day Saints were real Christians in word, thought, and actions. We have led the way in demonstrating to the world that the spirit of Christ is still made manifest through his people. The story of the Good Samaritan is just as true to-day as ever, and we can truly point to the Christian church and say, "Go thou and do likewise." We have been commented upon by all classes and hope that it may be the means of opening the way to greater opportunities of establishing the church among men. The Canadian Journal sent you is for you to accept of offer to publish an article on our church as per request published on page of Mormons and Mormonism. The two dailies answer for themselves. We wrote to counteract, at the time of death of Joseph F. Smith of Utah, in order that the public mind would not be confused.

The Reverend McIntosh, who took the magnificent stand for our faith, came to visit one of the members of his congregation who was sick in our church hospital, and while I sat and watched the life of my brother-in-law ebbing away, he came and prayed at a near bed for his adherent. The reverend gentleman saw the actual work we were performing and he had enough good Christian spirit to be able to appreciate it and convey its sacredness to the world. While attending the Disciple church recently, I was asked to pronounce the benediction, so we are able to hold up our heads and rejoice for a new dawn is breaking, and I truly believe that if the Saints will only live the gospel that the time will come when all honorable men will recognize the marvelous work and a wonder, although they might never obey it.

FRANK GRAY.

Dear Brethren:—The events of this week are the arrival of ——— family of ———, a baptism, a confirmation, an infant blessed, the return of the "flu," the arrival of a big rain storm, and the departure of our church plumber with the surplus funds of the Woman's Auxiliary Society and a side issue from the district bishop. Said plumber did not belong to the church. Instead of missionary work in that direction, a due amount of energy was expended in preventing the church from belonging to him before the "improvements" were finished.

We seem to sense a greater nearness to the city by which we are surrounded. Heretofore we were attached by legal documents, electric wires, water system, and real estate only. Now we revel in all the joys and physical delectability of a bona fide sewer pipe and all the appurtenances thereunto belonging, much to the gratification of Sunday school, janitors, and sympathetic back yards. The world do move—even the Latter Day Saint world.

Our next dash for ecclesiastical civilization will be a home manufactured Jordan. Hitherto it has been an importuned spare minute from the public baths, sometimes with environments not especially conducive to religious solemnity. Tomorrow we don the mask again, and the fresh air will be left to be wafted to Reno, where it is not particularly needed.

MURRAY, UTAH, December 10, 1918.

Dear Herald: As I sit this evening in deep meditation on past and present conditions of the world at large, the thought forces itself in upon me, What are we, who have escaped the sorrows of lost loved ones, through the war and through the universal epidemic, the "flu," doing toward making some poor child, father, or mother, who have not been so fortunate, happy the coming Christmas?

Can we not afford, just for one Christmas, to pass by our loved ones, who have escaped sorrow and a life of penury, and lend a loving hand to those who have been sorrow stricken, and to those who need material aid? Think of them as our own brothers and sisters, and we will be more in a condition to feel their need of our sympathy, not only in words, but in works, which are far more beneficial toward eliminating some of their sorrows and physical needs, even for a short time, during this blessed Christmas Day. We oftentimes say, with our blessed Master, that it is more blessed to give than to receive, without truly having the spirit of a free and loving giver.

This Christmas I am passing by my nearest relatives who are and have been fortunate in escaping sorrow and physical needs in many ways. In thanks to God for these great blessings, I am trying to return at least a little of the favor to some worthy children or aged ones of the faith.

I inclose ten dollars toward making some of the above-mentioned hearts glad on that day we all love to commemorate for the greatest gift God could give us—hoping others will do likewise, according to their means.

Your brother in bonds,
C. O. A. PETERSON.

Conventions and Conference of the Detroit District

The conventions and conference of the new Detroit District, held November 22-24, has passed into history and was one long to be remembered. Not only because it was the first, but because of the spirit of unity and peace which prevailed throughout.

The prayer services were feasts to the soul, not because of any marked outward demonstration, but because of the spirit of wisdom and intelligence manifested in testimony and prayer which gave assurance of the final triumph of the work of God. The business sessions bore evidence of the same spirit prevailing; while discussions were had in all earnestness, there appeared to be no selfish motive, but that that which would be best for the work should obtain.

The Friday morning session, commencing at 10 o'clock, was under the direction of the Woman's Auxiliary work, principally institute in character, and was highly appreciated, showing development along several lines.

The afternoon was spent in Religio and Sunday school business and institute work, continuing for a time in the evening, after which a pleasing program was rendered by the local Religio and Sunday school of Branch No. 1.

Saturday, prayer service was held from 8.30 to 9.30, conference convening at ten o'clock with District President James D. Gault in the chair. Organization was effected, and Brother Paul M. Hanson associated with the presidency. The presidency consists of the before-mentioned Brother Gault, Matthew Liston, of Flint, and Raymond D. Bennett, of Detroit. We must say, that while these men are young and inexperienced in this kind of work, they show ability unsurpassed by few of long years' experience, showing what humility and a desire to become efficient, can do.

The district president's report was one of the kind you read about but seldom hear; explicit, but not too lengthy, covering the work of the entire district, with all its departments in detail, and interesting to the last word. It was made, by motion and vote, a matter of record for future years.

The usual reports showed activity, and marked advancement along some lines.

The matter touching a reunion was left with the district officers to decide, both as to advisability, time, and place, also the appointing of necessary committee.

The musical, held Saturday evening, was a decided success, in spite of the "flu," which had hindered the various branches in their practices. Earnest, prayerful effort always yields pleasant fruit. The district is fortunate in having the services of Sister Emeline Belleisle as chorister; she is talented, spiritual, and will labor to the end that success may obtain.

Sunday, from 7.30 in the morning to 9.30 in the evening, was filled with good things. Young people's meeting 7.30 to 8.45; priesthood meeting, in lower auditorium, in charge of Apostle Paul M. Hanson, 8.00 to 9.00; general prayer meeting, 9.00 to 10.30; Sunday school, 11.00 to 12. In the afternoon was preaching at two, by James W. Davis, of Hamilton, Ontario, and at four by Matthew Liston, of Flint, and at 7.30 by Paul M. Hanson.

We are starting off this week with 66 stars and fourteen letters for this report—this means we will have 80 stars next week, and we hope to have at least 100 stars for the week following—we must have the reports from schools who have thus far failed to send in their report if we are going to reach the 100 mark—yet we feel that there is not a good reason why we should not have a report from every one of our schools.

As we sit in our study writing this letter we hear the joyous laughter from the adjoining rooms where our friends are laughing and chatting over their Christmas presents—gifts that have made them happy and contented—gifts that have made them rejoice. We cannot but ask ourselves—have we given to God a gift that will cause him to rejoice as we are rejoicing? Have we studied to give to him that which will cause rejoicing in his kingdom as we are rejoicing in our homes—have our hearts gone to him in tender thought and devoted consecration with the gifts we have given to release our church from the debt that has been hanging over it? Let us think deeply and ponder well over this matter for ere we can hope to carry out God's commands here we must clear our good church from debt and secure funds necessary to advance the work and accomplish results he desires at our hands. Shall we give more to advance ourselves in our worldly pleasures than to carry out the desires of God and prepare a way to a higher and better life? Think this over—seriously—ponder well—decide—act according to your best judgment—seek God's help and direction.

Though this is being written on Christmas Day—evening—it will be 1919 ere the report is published, hence we take space to ask and to earnestly solicit your immediate consideration for the coming year. We cannot tell at this date what our offering will be for this year—just how seriously the influenza has hindered the good workers—but whatever the result we pray that you will immediately materialize plans for your year's work for 1919. We hope to have definite plans to announce for our efforts this year—plans that will secure the concerted and unified efforts of all our schools—these plans will not only be published, but will be mailed to you with full details, and we sincerely hope and pray for your entire support.

Minden City, Michigan. Brother C. K. Green reports: Owing to the influenza ban being on, our church has been closed for the past two months and we have not done as well as we hoped. Our school has an enrollment of 47 and to date we have $138. May the good work go on."

Lock No. 4, Pennsylvania. Sister Nellie Coven reports: "We have over $2 per member and are 'over the top,' but we do not expect to stop until the end of the year. We have several organized classes that have been doing some good work for the offering. I hope we make this the winning year."

Alliston, Ontario. Sister A. E. Hooper reports: "While you have not heard from us we have not forgotten to do our best towards the Christmas offering. We read with interest the good reports of the other schools, and we hope to better our standing next year. Our little Earl and Mary have saved their pennies and Earl has raised some chickens and now they have over $20 for the offering. We do not tell you of this to brag, but only to let you know that we are not idle and we ask the interest in your prayers that we may always try to be faithful and that our Sunday school may grow and improve." (This little school of twenty-five members was not organized until last April and is known as the Beeton Sunday School.)

Alton, Illinois. Brother John D. Hull reports: "We have gone 'over the top' and have about $3 per member. We hope to do as well or better than last year but have been hindered terribly in our efforts because of conditions."

Sault Sainte Marie, Ontario, Canada. Brother T. B. Campbell, superintendent reports: "We set our aim at $100. Our enrollment is 27 and all are doing their best to keep the good work moving. We already have $90.20 and had it not been for the influenza we would, no doubt, have our mark realized now, but here goes for our $100, come what may, and we feel sure that we will realize a nice sum over and above our aim. We were closed for eight long weeks but glad to say we have the blessed privilege of meeting again and although two of our number have been called away, and this has caused much sadness in our branch, we still desire to press onward and we pray that our efforts may be crowned with success."

Scottville, Michigan. Sister John Randall, secretary, reports: "Elm Flats Sunday School should have reported some time ago. We have 21 members and now have over $2 per member, with more coming in."

Here follows a report from the good school of Vinal Haven, winners of the highest average per member last year. We shall ever be grateful for the good example of this school—they gave by consecration and were blessed.

Vinal Haven, Maine. Brother J. E. Barton, superintendent, reports: "Although we have been silent, we have still been alive. We have an enrollment of 12 and have set our mark at $200. So far we have $178.42 and the school has voted to consecrate the amount in the treasury at the end of the year. We think we will reach our mark by the end of the year. We probably would have been 'over the top' before but our school was closed five weeks on account of the influenza. We have raised our offering entirely by consecration. Yours for the $100,000."

East Pharsalia, New York, Bright Star Sunday School. Sister F. H. Rathburn reports: "We, the members of the Bright Star Sunday School have agreed to send in at least $2 per member and desire to be on the Roll of Honor."

Hilo, Hawaii. Brother M. A. McConley reports: "Hilo Sunday School went 'over the top' yesterday. Here is hoping we will make the $100,000."

Pike Lake, Saskatchewan. Minnesota Prairie Sunday School, Sister Eva Land, secretary, reports: "Our school is greatly interested in the offering movement and has more than $2 per member. Our aim is $200 and we are going to try hard to reach it. We have been hindered so much on account of having to close our meetings, but we have been permitted to open up again and all are working hard for the offering."

Ukiah, California. Sister Julia Franklin Mockler reports: "Our little school has but six members enrolled. We set our mark at $100 and now have $86.05. Of the six members in our local three are children. I should have written sooner but have recently passed through the bitterest trial of my life and could not do so. My husband, who has been sick for many weeks, passed to his reward November 27. God is good and has shown his matchless love, tenderness, and watchful care in many ways during this dark hour. I am now trying to take up the work again and pray for strength to carry it on. My great desire is to consecrate my life and what few talents I possess to his great cause."

Detroit, Michigan. Second Detroit Sunday School. Brother C. V. Blair, superintendent, reports: "Here I come again. The Second Detroit Sunday School has sent the bishop $360. Our total enrollment is 60, this makes $6 per member." (This good school reached and passed the $2-per-member mark May 12 and so far as we know was the first Sunday school to pass the $2 mark. We reported in a brief way regarding this school some time ago, and expected to make fuller report before this, but owing to a misunderstanding we have been unable to report until now. This good school is alive to this good work and always alert to the opportunities offered them for doing good. They desire to know whether or not they were the first school to reach the $2-per-member mark.)

Emmet, Arkansas. Sister Elva Andrews writes: (to Brother McGuire) Please find enclosed a $3 check as Christmas offering. Am sorry it is so little. We have been here in Arkansas for two years and have not heard a sermon preached or met a Latter Day Saint since coming here, but the dear little Ensign keeps us posted on church matters. I really do not know how we could get along without it. The little amount I am sending in is mostly Sunday egg money sold in the last few weeks. Am<sup>s</sup> sorry I did not begin sooner to save my Sunday eggs, but had not thought of it until I read the good sister's letter of a few weeks back. We ask the prayers of God's Saints as we feel the need of God's loving care here in our isolated condition." (We hope we may hear from other isolated Saints, and those who do not belong to the Sunday school.)

Pensacola, Florida. Sister L. Farinas, secretary, reported to Brother McGuire as follows: "We have better than $2 per member now and hope to have more by the time we have to send in the offering."

Arma, Kansas. Brother R. I. Budworth, secretary, reports: "Arma Sunday School is 'over the top' strong. We were closed twelve Sundays. We distributed Sunday School papers over the city each Sunday and took up the offering and other collections."

Chilliwack, British Columbia. Brother George H. Welsh, superintendent, reports: "I am pleased to advise that we went over our aim of $125. We raised it Sunday from $120 to $150. Don't you think, Brother Smith, that for our little school of twenty members that attend—half of them children—that we have done pretty good? Oh, how I wish that every Sunday school in the land would do as well or better and that we could go 'over the top' with a total offering as far as we went over our aim of $125, so that God's good church will be free from debt so Zion can be redeemed. At the commencement of the year we agreed to have one rally day each quarter, and last Sunday was our last rally and you ought to have been with us to see the money come in. One little girl who has no mother, and whose father is not blessed with much of this world's good's, and who lives with an elder in the church, made over six dollars by picking berries through the summer months. Wish all our little boys and girls could do as well as this little girl has done." (This little sister deserves much of God's love for her good work and we are sure that she has been wonderfully blessed.)

Let every Sunday school start the very first Sunday of the new year to do their best for the offering in 1919, and may God bless and direct all efforts, is the prayer of

Your sincere coworker,

ARTHUR W. SMITH.

THE JEWISH CONGRESS

In the final session nine delegates were appointed to present the aim of the world Jewry at the present conference at Versailles; and to set in action the plan of organizing a Jewish world congress. The delegates were chosen so as to represent all of the different interests among that people.

The American Hebrew for December 20 contains a more detailed account, session by session, and states that Judge Julian W. Mack pronounced a program on which all shades of Jewish opinion in the country can and will unite.

It states further that had the various organizations issued some such statements months ago it would have been acceptable, even to those who have most openly opposed the Zionist program.

Judge Mack said:

The misconceptions that have clung about the Zionists' aims have been cleared away. No one believes any longer that the renaissance of the Jewish people and the reestablishment of the Jewish commonwealth is a movement to drive all Jews into Palestine, or in the slightest degree to impinge upon their exclusive loyalty to the country of their birth or naturalization. No one expects or desires that all Jewry shall be gathered together in that small land. . . .

President Wilson is at the peace conference. He stands for all that the Jewish people desire. His voice will be potent in the realization of their hopes. When this gathering of the world powers shall have eventuated into a league of nations, the reestablishment of the Jewish nationality will be accomplished. An independent statehood at this time is an impracticable and impossible dream. Palestine must be placed under the trusteeship of one of the great powers, a power that stands for fundamental liberty and democracy. And if it shall be determined that Great Britain, whose armed forces have led in the liberation of the Holy Land from the oppressive rule of the Turk, shall exercise on behalf of the league of nations the trusteeship in Palestine, then surely the aspirations of the Jewish people will find full and complete recognition.

Among the resolutions passed at the second session was the following:

The American Jewish Congress, speaking on behalf of the Jews of America, express their joy in the great victory of the forces of the United States and our coreligionists of the entente countries.

We greet the President of the United States and desire to convey to him and to the American Government the profound gratification felt by the Jewish people in his exalted leadership during the course of the war which has resulted in the recognition of the principle of self-determination of small nationalities and of the right of all men to live in freedom and to enjoy equal opportunities in the pursuit of happiness. We extend to him the best wishes of the Jewish people in his high aims and purposes and in his efforts to secure a just and lasting peace through the instrumentality of a league of nations in order that righteousness and justice may be established and may prevail among nations.

Then on December 25 there was opened a conference in New York City of the American Jewish Orthodox Ministers, in other words the rabbis, who in their own special conference again approved of this plan of a Jewish state under the trusteeship of Great Britain.

Thus step by step we find unfolding one of the great historic events of the world, and one for which careful Bible students have long looked.

PEACE ON EARTH, GOOD WILL TO MEN

[The following is part of a letter from Bishop B. R. McGuire. It may fairly be considered Christmas greetings to the church and for that reason, we are extending it to our readers. Unfortunately it reached us too late for last week's issue but is still timely in its goodly wishes for the New Year.—THE EDITORS.]

This Christmastide these words have a broader and deeper significance than ever before. Wars, pestilences, lo here! lo there! through it all, by the grace of a loving Father, we are permitted a clearer vision of the divine plan. A finer sympathy obtains for us a better appreciation of the words of the angelic chorus, a more perfect response to the love of God.

In reviewing the work of the past year we are able to discern a deeper Christ consciousness among the children of God. Without this, as a church, we would not have been in position promptly to supply every need and also make substantial progress in material achievement.

The approaching New Year brings new problems, the solution of which challenges the best we have to offer. The past has verified our trust and confidence in God. We therefore participate in the festivities of these holy days with a pureness of mind, a gladness of heart, and a richness of spirit; assured that our joyous celebration of the advent of our blessed Lord will be a song of praise, a glad hosannah to the Most High God.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

The Bishopric

To the Saints of the Owen Sound District; Greeting: As we near the close of the year 1918, we are wont to take a retrospective glance over the past year to see what we have been able to accomplish. In going over our books, preparatory to making out our annual report to the Presiding Bishop, we find in almost every branch in this large district, a great number who do not contribute towards God's cause. In fact, the returns from the different branches show that it is the same faithful Saints who have in the past so nobly stood by the cause whose names appear regularly on the books. While it is true some have said, "We have our tithing all paid," yet is it not our duty to give unto the Lord a thank offering? He who has cared for us and blessed us. Our homes and loved ones have been protected, our country has not been devastated by shot and shell, and we have had plenty to eat, even if it did cost a little more than formerly. When we consider these many blessings should we not remember Him who gave us these blessings? For in nothing doth man offend God save wherein he doth not acknowledge his hand in all things. Out of a membership ranging from 35 to 100 in the various branches in this district, less than one fourth are paying tithing. Can you wonder that we hear complaints somewhat like this? "Our meetings are not as spiritual as they used to be. Can't see what is the matter." God has said, "This is the day of sacrifice, a day for the tithing of my people until the Son of Man shall appear," and if we withhold our substance, or give grudgingly, the manifestations of the Spirit will be withheld. May this not be at least one reason why our meetings are not as spiritual as formerly? In reading the statement made by the Presiding Bishop in which he stated that by the next conference the church debt would be paid, we asked ourselves the question, "What part did we play in the paying of that debt? Did we do our fair share?" I fear not. While I have not been able to visit as many of the branches as I would like to owing to circumstances over which I had no control, we hope and pray that each Saint may feel it his duty to do his part in the redemption of Zion. There are solicitors in nearly every branch who will issue receipts for funds, great or small. Those not residing near branches, send to undersigned who will promptly issue receipt.

Thanking the Saints for their assistance and cooperation in the past, and trusting that we shall continue to merit it in the future, I am,

Your servant in the Master's cause,

Book Reviews

GENERAL CROOK AND THE FIGHTING APACHES.—By Edwin L. Sabin, illustrated, net $1.25, decorated cloth, J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia. Jimmie Dunn, after a year of captivity among the Apache Indians, escaped and joined the American troops who were fighting the Indians, under General Crook. It is a wonderfully fascinating story; especially so in that in all essentials it is absolutely true. This is a great advantage to the average boy who enjoys history only as it is portrayed in this manner. We are pleased to recommend this latest addition to the Lippincott Trail Blazers series. Send orders to this office.

THE WATERBOYS AND THEIR COUSINS.—By Charles Dickens Lewis, cloth, 75 cents net, J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia. A fascinating book that explains the mysteries of the field, garden, and plant. Profusely illustrated, and invaluable as a text on the great outdoors. The book is in story form and tells its message in a most pleasing manner. Order of this office.

THE RECKONING.—James M. Beck; $1.50; Putnam's Sons, 1918; 225 pages. This book is the third of a series. The Evidence in the Case considered the responsibility for the great world war. The War and Humanity considered the conduct of the war and what could fairly be expected. The Reckoning is the reckoning that must be made with Germany. The book considers first the higher law, then the violation of the higher law by the house of Hohenzollern from Frederick the Great to date; the reconstruction of Germany and its possibilities; for the reparation of the German people. Also urges that all of the German states except Prussia should be encouraged to form a separate republic and given more favorable terms; but that Prussia, and especially her ruling class, should be punished. The final chapter is concerned with the terms of peace and a discussion of Wilson's fourteen points. It is well written and completes the work begun in The Evidence in the Case.

Our Departed Ones

TERRY.—Elizabeth Ann Terry, wife of George T. Terry, died at her home in Ogden, Utah, November 5, 1918. Born July 19, 1846, at Chicago, Illinois, baptized by James Burgess, November 15, 1863, at Nauvoo, Illinois. Remained steadfast to this faith to her death. Besides her husband she is survived by 6 children. Services held at Clinton Cemetery, in charge of A. W. Bogue, sermon by B. L. McKim.

FETTY.—Esther Judge was born at Sheffield, England, April 17, 1854. United with the church in 1866. Married John Perrin in Kendall County, Illinois. To this union were born 3 children. He died in 1873, and in 1876 she married George Fetty. Eight children were born to them. Her husband and 5 children survive her. Buried from her home December 11, 1918. Sermon by Heman C. Smith, interment in the old cemetery at Andover, Missouri.

MOORE.—Frederick Moore, beloved husband of Edith Moore, died December 23, 1918, at his home, 168 Bruce Avenue, Windsor, Ontario, from paralysis. Leaves besides his wife, 3 little sons, his father, mother, and a host of relatives and friends. Was born at Chatham, Ontario, June 23, 1888, baptized at Detroit, Michigan, July 5, 1902, by George Shippy. Funeral services at the family residence in charge of the Masons, Leslie Brown officiating. Interment in Windsor Grove Cemetery.

BELL.—Helen Blanche Bell, daughter of Henry and Ida Bell, was born in Dow City, Iowa, September 1, 1888, and died of pneumonia at the parental home near Dow City, December 2, 1918. Baptized August 23, 1918, by Charles E. Harp, and became a member of the Dow City Branch. She manifested faith in Christ and his power to save to the last, and died in hope of a glorious resurrection. Owing to the nature of the disease there was only a short service at the grave, conducted by Charles E. Butterworth.

COY.—Sarah Coy, wife of Robert Coy, died of influenza at her home in Ogden, Utah, December 9, 1918. Born September 1, 1846, at Hull, England. Baptized October 23, 1888, at Plain City, Utah, by R. J. Anthony. She was among the emigrants that came to Utah in an early day, and later united with the Reorganized Church. To this faith she remained steadfast to her death. Leaves to mourn, a husband, 5 brothers, one sister, and 7 children. Services at Plain City Cemetery, in charge of C. E. Bogue, sermon by A. W. Bogue.

BAKER.—Nora Sarah Whitman was born October 13, 1868, at Grafton, West Virginia. Died at her home in Holden, Missouri, November 11, 1918. Baptized June 4, 1905, by Joseph Biggs, at Adamston, West Virginia. Married to George F. Baker, December 21, 1890. To this union were born eight children, one dying in infancy. She leaves to mourn, husband, seven children, an aged mother, 3 brothers, and 3 sisters. Sister Baker was highly regarded by the Saints and neighbors. Funeral at the residence, November 12, sermon by D. J. Krahl. The remains were taken to Grafton, West Virginia, for interment, according to her request.

HUDSON.—Sarah Ellen Hudson, born January 15, 1833, at Portland, Maine. When 14 years of age she moved with her parents to Boston, Massachusetts. Married Thomas N. Hudson at Charlestown, Massachusetts, in 1880. Joined the Utah Church in 1857 and came to Utah in the spring of 1861. Dissatisfied with Utah Mormonism, received with gladness the gospel as taught by the Reorganized Church, and was baptized June 14, 1870, by E. C. Brand at Salt Lake City. Her husband, T. N. Hudson, died September, 1885. There were 8 children, 6 of whom survive her; 28 grandchildren, and 13 great-grandchildren. Died December 19, 1918. She was an active, staunch, and faithful member of the Reorganization, having spent a long life of usefulness, kindness, and charity. Funeral in charge of B. L. McKim, C. A. Smurthwaite being the speaker.

FROM HERE AND THERE

Graceland College is taking a week's vacation during Christmas week but will resume work with almost normal conditions on the 30th. By keeping up their classes under great handicaps, they expect now to be able to continue under more favorable conditions and complete their year's work as usual. A baby son has recently arrived at the home of President Briggs.

The editors and other employees about the office here are all back on duty now after the most of them took a turn each at the sickness from influenza epidemic. They hope to soon be able to assume all their normal duties, blessed with vigorous health and clear minds. That such may be the lot of all our readers at the beginning of the New Year is our united prayer.

BAN LIFTED IN LAMONI

As we go to press (a day early on account of New Year holiday) preparations are being made for church services in Lamoni on the 29th, the first since the first Sunday in October. The sacrifice has been a real one, in addition to the suffering and mourning incident to the plague of influenza suffered here as well as in practically every other part of the world. The Saints are thankful that the toll levied on them has been light, and will no doubt take up their responsibilities incident to church services with renewed vigor and determination.

We have this letter on our desk, which we pass on to our readers: "A lonesome young 'leatherneck' (marine) who has scarcely seen or heard from a Latter Day Saint, except relatives, for nearly a year, would appreciate a letter from some of the younger members of the church, either sex. Harry W. Ellison, U. S. Marine Corps, Box 60A, Charleston, Washington."

LOCATING LOST MEMBERS

Arrangements are rapidly being perfected to inaugurate an extensive campaign throughout the church to list and classify the information available concerning members whose whereabouts are unknown. Headquarters are being established at Independence, Missouri, where access may be had to the Church Recorder's books, and under the direct supervision of Presiding Patriarch Frederick A. Smith the information will be secured, collected, and made available as early as possible. Detailed announcements will be made later, which are bound to be of great interest to many branches whose list of scattered members has been the source of much worry in the past.

CHARACTERISTICS OF JESUS

(Sermon by Elbert A. Smith, delivered at the Stone Church, Sunday, December 21, 1918. Mrs. M. Morgan reporter.)

I desire this morning to talk of some of the characteristics of Jesus. This is a subject of perennial interest, and should be appropriate at this season of the year, when all of the civilized nations are preparing to celebrate the reputed day of his birth. We might consider Jesus first as a man. In Hosea 11th chapter and 4th verse, there is a very significant text which says: "I drew them with the cords of a man, with bands of love."

JESUS AS A CHILD

There are three periods in the life of our Lord and Savior which are filled with human interest. The first, of course, was when he appeared among us as the babe of Bethlehem. He had all the appeal of helpless innocency. Yes, Jesus was once a child. The wise men came and bowed at his feet and brought their gifts. The angels sang, and the star of Bethlehem shone over his cradle.

Jesus, becoming a child, consecrated all childhood. He took all children into his fellowship. One of the greatest cartoons, drawn by the celebrated cartoonist Raemaekers, represents the Kaiser as standing on the fields of Belgium, and behind him are the bodies of thousands of little children that have been slain. Jesus appears and touches him on the shoulder and says to him, "Where are my children?" All children belong to Jesus. Of such, he says, is the kingdom of heaven.

Jesus as a little babe reposed on the breast of his mother Mary, and by so doing he also consecrated womanhood. There was a significant statement that Simeon made to Mary concerning Jesus. He said that because of him a sword should pierce her own soul also. If it is true, as the old proverb says, that a babe in the house is a wellspring of pleasure, it is equally true that every child is to its mother a potential crucifixion. One of the greatest paintings of the Master in his childhood represents him as standing facing the morning sun, with his arms outstretched on either side, and his mother is startled to see that his shadow, falling across her pathway, forms a perfect cross—a prophecy of that which was to come to him and to her.

JESUS AS A MAN

Later in the life of Jesus there came a time when he was the triumphant God, resurrected and ascended upon high, and he was able to say, "all power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." But between the cradle and glory there was a period when he was a man; simply a man, the man of Galilee, and thus he consecrated all manhood. It is said of him that he was tempted in all things as we are, yet was without sin. With no more help than you and I may receive, he met the temptations that came, and overcame them. Also he suffered the various trials that come to us; the pains of the body, the sorrows of the spirit, and the depressions of the mind. He passed through all of them, and yet retained his faith and his consecrated purpose.

I do not think that it was necessary for God to come here and take the form of a man and pass through all of those things in order to understand what we have to pass through, because God knows all things. But perhaps it was necessary for him to come here and pass through those things before we could understand that he understands. We sometimes think that God himself cannot appreciate or understand what we have to meet in times of sorrow, but when we read the history of Jesus it is a standing testimony to us that God understands. And to my mind, while we are discussing the question of atonement, we will find that the whole plan was designed with a view to the effect it would have upon men, and not to its effect upon God. In other words, I agree with Paul, who says that Christ came to reconcile man to God; and I disagree with the old Methodist discipline which says that Christ came to reconcile God to man.

JESUS DREW ALL CLASSES

As a man, passing through these trials, Jesus drew men and women to him. All classes—particularly the common people, we are told—received him gladly. He drew to him the pious and virtuous Mary, the sister of Lazarus, but equally he drew to him Magdalene, who at one time harbored seven devils. He drew the mild and loving John, also the impetuous and sometimes profane Peter—and he said that if he should be lifted up he would draw all men to him. But perhaps, this morning, I am especially interested in noticing that he drew to him the common people.

Once in a while one of the ministry gets into his head the mistaken idea that he has developed so wonderfully along intellectual lines that he is above the common people. They cannot reach him. He cannot reach them. I believe that nine times out of ten the individual who cannot reach the common people cannot reach anybody. He may soar around at a great altitude, interested in impressing a few very intellectual people; but while he is doing that, they are interested in impressing him, so nobody is reached. How wonderfully in the character of Jesus were mingled and blended the cords of a man and the bands of love; as Hosea says, "I draw them with the cords of a man, with bands of love."

HIS CONSECRATED PURPOSE

Let us consider for a moment the great purpose of Jesus. Do you believe that Jesus was poor from necessity? No. Jesus was poor from choice. It was a part of his program. He was in a way like Saint Francis, of whom it was said he was born of wealthy parentage, but as he reached young manhood he became imbued with the idea of ministering to the poor, and because of that his father took him to the bishop and disinherited him. Saint Francis threw off his robes and cast them at the feet of his father, and stood forth naked, declaring, "Now I can say, 'My Father who art in heaven.'" He borrowed robes from the bishop and went forth to minister to the poor, and so founded the order of Franciscans—men who did not claim to own even the clothing they wore.

Jesus, when he gave up his potential wealth, made as great a sacrifice as a man who gives up the actual wealth he possesses. If there are in the congregation men who have come into the church and made money, and now find it hard to make their consecration, let them recognize that their sacrifice is no greater than that of the young missionary who gives up hope of home and wealth and borrowing a suit of clothes, perhaps, from the Bishop, goes out to preach the gospel.

Don't you suppose Jesus would have appreciated a home? If you do not, read his homesick lament, "The foxes have holes, the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man has not where to lay his head." His life was one long sacrifice, and he did not permit anything to come between him and his Father and his duty. The Devil showed him the cities of this world, the kingdom, honor, glory, and power. Don't you think it tempted Jesus? If it did, he put it to one side and went on with his mission.

HIS COURAGE AND DEVOTION TO PRINCIPLE

I want you to consider the personal courage of Jesus; his devotion to principle. He was kind and charitable, but that did not prevent him from being fearless in his denunciation of that which was wrong. He had an intense love of right, and he had an intense hatred for wrong.

The Scripture lesson I have read, declares, "Thou hast loved righteousness and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows." We believe in exaltation, but the only exaltation we believe in is won by those who love righteousness and hate iniquity, and not merely by those who yield obedience to mystic forms in a temple. It is the fruit of a love of righteousness and devotion.

Jesus made no compromise. Too often we compromise. One man compromises with this, and the other man with that, and another man with another thing, until in many places the church is compromised and the work is defeated.

Personally, I have an admiration for the Puritanical spirit, with certain qualifications that I will state immediately. I admire the man who applies the Puritan spirit to himself, and according to the light that he has received, says, I will walk the straight and narrow path without deviation, with an eye single to the glory of God. I will not compromise with the world, the flesh, or the Devil in any way. That man may be wrong in his judgment on some questions; he may be a crank and a fanatic, but still I have an admiration for his spirit. When he is right, and also has the common sense to balance his devotion, then you have a Christian, and that is what we have in the person of Jesus Christ. But I do not admire the Puritanical spirit when the person seeks to apply it to the life of others, putting all into his own strait-jacket, and tries to cast out of the church every individual who makes a mistake, or is not walking according to his idea of the straight and narrow path.

Thus Jesus was loved by those who loved righteousness and hated iniquity, and was destined to draw after him an ever-increasing multitude of kindred spirits who love righteousness. There is the dividing line; there is the distinction.

HIS HUMAN SYMPATHY

Consider next the human sympathy of the Master. One of the first incidents in his missionary life is that when we find him at the wedding feast at Cana. We imagine him smiling with the happy bride and groom, and possibly there he perceived the simile he used later, and said to himself, I am the bridegroom and the church is the bride. He rejoiced with those who rejoiced, and wept with those who wept.

A little later we find him coming into the city of Nain; and as he approached it a shadow fell across his path—a thing that so often darkens our view as we go out to walk, a funeral procession; and when he came to inquire about it he was told that the man who had died was a young man, and that he was “the only son of his mother, and she was a widow.” The heart of Jesus was touched. He would not have been Jesus if his heart had not been touched, and with this widow who had lost her only son he shed the sympathizing tear. Exercising his power, he restored this son to his mother, and the light of heaven broke through on that little hamlet, and not only that, but upon all hamlets all over the broad earth, because we realize that Jesus can weep with those who weep, and that he had sympathy and compassion upon them.

Do you remember the answer that Jesus gave to John when John sent a messenger to him asking, “Art thou he for whom we look?” Jesus said, “Go tell John that the sick are healed, the lame walk, the blind see, and the poor have the gospel preached unto them.” (I quote freely.) There was a wonderful philosophy in that answer; and we are told also that when Jesus saw the multitude, and perceived that they fainted and were as sheep without a shepherd, he had compassion on them. When we see the multitude, the submerged multitude, the blind, voiceless, leaderless multitude—you will see them in Kansas City and Chicago and London—the multitude without shepherds that is turning Russia inside out, we say, “The poor fools.” Where the world has contempt, Jesus had compassion. He had compassion on them and sooner or later he will reach every one of them with the message of his life and give them a chance, because Paul tells us that neither life nor death can separate us from the love of Jesus. He is going to search out every one of that multitude, and find them either in this world or in the world to come.

THE MANTLE OF CHARITY

Out of all these experiences, and born of this sympathy, there came his great invitation, “Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest.” I believe that we ought to learn a lesson from him and make broad the mantle of our charity. Too often we cut the mantle of our charity after the prevailing style: scant, narrow, cramped, circumscribed—but we ought to cut it after the pattern Jesus set. Make it so broad that we can throw it around the brother who may be in error, bear with him until he has time to correct his error, because we pray every night, or if we do not we ought to, “Father, forgive us our sins as we forgive those who sin against us.”

Jesus Christ left the immaculate courts of glory and the presence of just men made perfect, and came down here to consort with imperfect men and women like you and me, and if he could bear with those who are in error, sojourning here, separated from his natural element, cannot we, who are imperfect, also bear with those who are imperfect?

JESUS AS A FRIEND

Last of all, I want to call your attention to Jesus as a friend, and this, to my mind, is one of the finest ideas among all those that I have endeavored to bring to your attention this morning.

Jesus as a friend. In that hour when the angels waited for the revelation of the Son of glory, they condensed the wisdom and poetry of the ages into a song, and it was a song of friendship, “Glory to God in the highest; and on earth, peace and good will toward men.” That was a splendid message to accompany the birth of our Lord and Master, who was the personification of good will toward man. He was the embodiment of the good will of God, who loved the world to the extent that he gave his only begotten Son. He came with good will towards all men. He was willing to become the friend of man. While Jesus often denounced sin, he seldom denounced the sinner. He stood between the woman taken in adultery and her accusers, and while he denounces her sin he shielded the woman, and it happened that there was not a man in that congregation without sin who could cast the first stone, or if there was one, he did not care to cast it. Those who are sinful are forbidden to cast stones, and those without sin, as a rule, do not care to cast them.

So Jesus came as the friend of man. We sometimes rebuke the world because they seem to neglect the doctrines Jesus brought, and say that they should not slight doctrinal principles, that they give all their attention to Jesus himself and do not include these principles; but I sometimes think that we make the mistake of giving our attention to doctrine too exclusively and do not think enough about Jesus as a personal friend.

You know what it is to have a personal friend. If you have a friend, you can talk with him or you may remain silent as you feel disposed, because he is your friend. There is no constraint. He is your other self. You do not have to parade your virtues; he knows all about them. You do not have to hide your faults, because he knows all about them, too, and loves you in spite of your faults. He is your friend. You trust him, depend on his sympathy and assistance.

Friendship is about all that makes this earth tolerable. It outlives passion, even in the family. Passion dies with the passing years, but the husband and wife who are friends will remain happy together until death shall part them. But back of every friend that we trust and admire we must look to Jesus, because other friends fail us. They grow old. They pass away. Their judgment fails. But Jesus is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. All power is in his hands, and the sweetest words that ever greeted mortal ears were those that were uttered when he said, "Henceforth I will call you no more servants, I will call you friends." So if we are included in that circle of his friends, we may indeed count ourselves fortunate. He said, "Father, I pray not for the world, but for those whom thou hast given me." That is wonderful—to be the friend of Jesus, and have him as our friend. So I am an admirer of the old hymn that the Salvation Army people sing so much:

I've found a friend in Jesus,
He's everything to me,
He's the fairest of ten thousand to my soul;
The Lily of the Valley,
In him alone I see
All I need to cleanse and make me fully whole.

So Jesus in his life as the babe of Bethlehem consecrated childhood. When he was born of the Virgin Mary he consecrated womanhood. When he walked along the shores of Galilee as the man of Galilee he consecrated manhood. And his life has the greatest message in the world for every man, every woman, and every child.

"NO EMPTY STOCKING"

On account of the war and high prices many poor families have suffered severely. It is quite a common thing at this season of the year in the large cities that a collection is taken up to provide for poor children. In the Ottawa Evening Citizen of December 19, we note such an item under the heading "No empty stocking," and also the following letter from our Sunday school in that place helping this worthy cause.

Dear Citizens: It is a real pleasure and we count it a great privilege to assist you in your most worthy undertaking—the no empty stocking fund—to supply many of the poor of the city with Christmas presents, and Yuletide cheer.

How many little palpitating hearts will not your kindness set in motion with the real emotion of divine pleasure? He knows.

You will bring into their lives and experiences the joy which at this season above all others is looked forward to with such great expectancy, but to them with such little hope were it not for your thoughtfulness. We want to share our little mite with you in the more blessed experience of giving than receiving and pray God to bless you in all such efforts.—Latter Day Saint Sunday school, 1091 Wellington Street.

GAMBLING

The following letter has just been received from C. L. Hobart editor of the Holden, Missouri, Progress:

Editor Saints' Herald; Dear Sir: I was greatly interested in Charles Fry's article on gambling in the December 18 issue, but pained to read the closing sentence of the paragraph headed "buying chances": "To keep within the bounds of the law which prohibits gambling devices, a trifling article is given in return for each 'purchase.'"

In a journal of such commanding influence as the HERALD, this is a most unfortunate utterance. This "giving of a trifling article" does not keep within the bounds of the law. It is only a flimsy subterfuge that cowardly prosecutors seize upon to justify their failure to attack this form of gambling which has such an iron grip because the so-called best people sanction it.

I would respectfully call to your attention and serious study a "Memorandum of the Assistant Attorney General for the post office department concerning the elements of a lottery," issued by the Government printing office in 1912. Based on that, I have for years been conducting a fight against this insidious form of gambling. My last "broadside" was fired on June 6, 1918, a clipping of which is herewith inclosed. For my part, I am violently opposed to prosecuting the poor, ignorant lowbrow for shooting craps in the alley and then letting go scot free the highbrows, who provide drawings for diamond rings, automobiles, and other things of value, for their "respectable" customers.

Respectfully yours,

C. L. HOBART.

We have read Elder Fry's article and note there is a possibility of ambiguity. He evidently was referring to the way in which these things are sometimes urged, but as we read his article he condemns such procedure.

In fact the giving of a trifle in return for each "purchase" does not keep it within the bounds of the law. Mr. Hobart is right in this. Church raffles, grab bags, fish ponds, and lotteries are also within the prohibition of the law.

The giving of an article of full value for the sum paid does not take it out of the prohibition of the law, when there is attached to it the possibility of securing something more than you have paid for. Slot machines, punching boards, or any other device does not change this. It is true that prosecuting officers do not always prosecute. But all of these games of chance in which there is a possibility of getting something more than you have paid for are prohibited.

If any of our readers have been misled by this sentence we are more than pleased to correct it. Mr. Hobart gives a number of cases in an editorial printed June 16, 1918, from the Missouri supreme court decision. But such is the law elsewhere. These slot machines, punch balls, and the like are within the prohibition of the law. Their principle is clearly stated as given by Mr. Hobart in the

IN THE PULPIT--AND OUT OF IT

(This paper was written and read before the Saint Louis District Quorum of Elders at their regular meeting held on January 20, 1918, by Elder J. M. Hampson.)

First. As to mannerisms in the pulpit, I will mention that most reprehensible habit, to which, I regret to say, our men are almost universally addicted, that of putting their hands in their pockets while preaching. A most useless and unbecoming practice, detracting as it does from the dignity, the sacredness of the office or priest, and partaking, to a very great extent, of the boldness, effrontery, and undesirable familiarity of the political stump orator. It is a most slovenly habitude, and should by all means be eliminated.

Second. Slang should be absolutely avoided in the pulpit. The employment of slang phrases very much impairs the effect of a sermon, however good the sermon may otherwise be. It is a very undesirable accomplishment in which some, however, seem to take great pride, and is often resorted to with the object of bolstering up a defective vocabulary or a very weak thought. It quite materially lessens the confidence in and respect for the minister, on the part of the congregation. Its habitual use tends to decrease a man's self-respect, causing him to become flippant, careless, and inaccurate in his statements. The use of slang has its defenders, I admit, but their arguments are defective and without weight. Slang tends to lower, not to elevate, and, linguistically speaking, the constant user is on the down grade.

The minister should endeavor to use as good language as he is capable of upon all occasions, in private as well as in public. It will very much increase the respect had for him by the people.

Third. A very undesirable mannerism is that of unnecessarily loud and boisterous speaking. Some work themselves up to a state of undue excitement, growing louder and still louder, until as Shakespeare had it, they actually "tear a passion to tatters," as they apparently become more and more angry. This is much to be regretted.

It is, of course, a conceded fact that the emptier the vessel the louder the noise that can be extracted from it. The power is not in the deafening peal of thunder, nor in the roar of the huge cannon; nor yet in the mighty wind, but in the still small voice.

The wonderful forces of nature are irresistible but noiseless. I am well aware that many of our best and most eloquent preachers are addicted to this fault; but we men of lesser ability should acquire their virtues, not their defects. Of course, it is quite necessary to speak sufficiently loud so as to be plainly heard by all; but this does not imply that one must rant and roar, and then suddenly drop the voice into a whisper; this seems insincere and stagy.

Paul's defense before Agrippa is considered by all capable of giving an intelligent opinion, to be a masterpiece of special pleading full of power, forceful and eloquent; and although he was arguing against the accusations of his enemies and pleading for his liberty, aye, for his very life, yet we cannot imagine him as being noisy, turbulent, tumultuous, and making wild and ungainly gestures; but rather as using the proper tone of voice suitable to his surroundings, and with gestures subdued and graceful to give added emphasis to the point he was making. We see him, in imagination, speaking earnestly, positively, yet persuasively, so as almost to persuade Agrippa to be a Christian.

Fourth. One other very disagreeable fault to be shunned is that of telling stories, some of them rather coarse, with the obvious purpose of creating a laugh. It borders on the theatrical, and has a tendency to lessen respect for the minister and for the sanctity of the church. These stories are not intended to "adorn a tale or point a moral," but merely to cause mirth, and enable the servant of God to acquire a reputation as a "funny man," please the young and find favor with the thoughtless.

In Doctrine and Covenants 119, the admonition is to "lay aside all lightness of speech and all lightness or manner." Now, it is quite proper and sometimes necessary to relate a circumstance, or an anecdote to illustrate a point; that is always permissible, and when judiciously used is a splendid adjunct to a sermon. It rests the mind of auditor and frequently awakens new interest in the sermon.

Fifth. Another failing of many of our men is that they give so little heed towards acquiring the art of graceful gesturing. Some men employ none whatever, and others shake their fists, and swing their arms as though they were taking a course of "setting up exercises" with a view of going into the trenches; and again they will race up and down the rostrum like a caged lion, glaring fiercely and ever and anon, shaking their fists at the people as though to intimidate them, and give them an idea what to expect if they do not obey the gospel.

Again Shakespeare says: "Do not saw the air too much with your hands, but use all gently"; for in the very torrent, tempest, and, as I may say, the very whirlwind of passion, you must acquire and beget a temperance that may give it smoothness.

Sixth. I am pleased to say that it is seldom that our men offend in the matter of dress; but it is done occasionally, and so I think it well to say a few words upon that subject.

Doctrine and Covenants says: "Men of God let your garments be of a sober character, and free from all excess of ornamentation." The man in the pulpit should always dress so as not to attract attention to his attire, which should be clean, neat and preferably of a dark color. Jewelry, if any, should be very inconspicuous.

"He was so well dressed," said a person to Beau Brummel, "that everybody turned to look at him." "Then," said Beau Brummel, "He was not well dressed."

Seventh. I think it well to call attention to the fallacy of preaching long sermons, which tire and weary a congregation, who, by trying in a dull heavy way to grasp the latter half of the sermon, forget entirely what the first half contained, and so lose the good of the entire sermon.

Bulwer Lytton, the great student and novelist, maintained that a man could not advantageously study more than three hours a day; because the mind cannot retain more, and what he learns after the three hours will drive out of his mind that which he acquired in the first hour; the sum total remaining the same. So on this theory, what a congregation hears in the first half of a long sermon, is driven out in the effort to retain the latter half. Now it requires much more effort, and the brain fag is much greater, to listen to some one else talk, than to the dulcet tones of one's own voice, and so the preacher has the advantage. Sharp, brisk, quick sermons, full of life and vitality, lasting about a half hour, are far better, and the people will rise up and bless you.

Eighth. What has been said with reference to long sermons applies with equal force to long prayers. The minister should remember that not many are trained, nor have they acquired the power of great concentration, and, beyond a certain point they cannot go, and so are not benefited by long prayers.

An unusually lengthy prayer always brings to mind the soliloquy of Cardinal Wolsey on his prayer in which he says: "My words ascend, but my thoughts remain below"; for I always imagine the individual praying is thinking, not of the Father to whom he is praying, but of what to say next, and how to phrase it. So there is frequent repetition and a long drawn out prayer, in which little interest is taken. The too frequent use of the name of the Diety should also be avoided; for it seems almost sacrilegious the way the name is used by some of the ministers.

Ninth. A rather disagreeable mannerism into which some of our men have fallen is that of using some favorite phrase or word so often in the same sermon as to attract the attention of the congregation, who, forgetting the sermon, will concentrate on that one word or phrase. In one instance, a young girl became interested in keeping account of the number of times such a word was used by one of our men in a forty-five minute sermon and found he had used it fifty-five times.

Now, this is absurd; yet it does not necessarily imply poverty of language, but rather carelessness, sheer heedlessness.

Tenth. Above all else the one thing from which a minister should refrain is that of sarcasm, because it springs from that which is the opposite of love. The broad, liberal, charitable man will not speak unkindly, or sarcastically of other denominations, or systems of religion.

Sarcasm is of evil origin, and no man of our church can possibly afford to indulge in it.

The church of Jesus Christ is a church of love, and it is our bounden duty, as ministers of that church, to cultivate, to the very best of our ability, that most wonderful attribute—love.

This can only be done by constant practice or effort, and the total elimination of all that is contrary to it.

Eternal watchfulness is required to avoid mannerisms.

Check the growth of mannerisms, yet preserve individuality.

Briefly stated the points to be observed are:

First. To keep the hands out of the pockets.

Second. To eliminate slang entirely.

Third. To avoid speaking too loudly.

Fourth. To refuse to tell stories merely to cause a laugh.

Fifth. To acquire a few graceful gestures.

Sixth. To give particular attention to dress.

Seventh. To preach short sermons.

Eighth. Short prayers.

Ninth. Avoid repetition of word or phrase.

Tenth. To eliminate sarcasm.

DECORUM

Decorum in the pulpit is attained when a minister attracts attention not to his personal appearance, or idiosyncracies, but rather to the subject matter of his discourse, for then the minds of the people are concentrated on the message he has to deliver to them, and not upon his eccentricities of dress or manner; for they to a degree will have been eliminated and a quiet, graceful, yet forceful delivery will have been acquired. In the matter of emphasis, a whisper is frequently more emphatic than a yell.

Proper deportment in the pulpit is of the utmost importance and should be assiduously cultivated; for a good sermon is often marred, and its effect lost upon a congregation through the lack of decorum on the part of the minister.

Appropriate demeanor in the pulpit is indicative of a man's education, general culture, and refinement, and its effect upon his hearers is of a most salutary character.

The honest, sincere man cannot pose; he cannot be one man in the pulpit and another out in the world; and that being the case how necessary it is that his daily life should be clean, pure, free from the contaminating influences of the world; for otherwise the careless and evil habits that he may acquire, will surely follow him into the pulpit, and to an extent, diminish the good he might have done; for they will warp his judgment, cloud his God-given attribute of wisdom, and so undesirable mannerisms will be his in the pulpit.

I sometimes think that many of our men fail to realize and appreciate the wonderful honor and great privilege that became theirs when they were ordained into the Melchisedec priesthood. I fancy they do not see that, consciously or unconsciously, they are influencing the lives of those about them for weal or woe; that upon them rests a great responsibility. Their conduct is being closely observed, especially by the young who will in many instances shape their lives after the pattern set them by the elders of their church.

It is well for the elder to remember that he is set apart for a special work of a truly spiritual character, to which his life must conform; that his life must be clean, pure, and, like Cæsar's wife, above the faintest taint of suspicion. He should pray often, and live close, very close to God, so that like Saint Assisi of old, his very presence will radiate sunshine and happiness, and his life be an eloquent sermon to all who know him.

Saint Assisi on one occasion approached a young priest who was always anxious to preach and said: "My son, let us go out into the city to-day and preach to the people." "Very well, father," replied the young man. And so they went out into the busy marts of trade, alleys, and slums; and again into the byways and highways, counseling here and advising there, praying elsewhere, and shedding tears of sympathy with those suffering from some great sorrow, and always manifesting love, kindness, gentleness, compassion upon all.

And all the people loved him and revered him; and some of the simpler ones desired to walk in his shadow that haply they might be healed of their afflictions. So the day wore on, and as the shades of evening approached, the young priest said: "When do we preach, father?" "My son," said the old Saint, "we have been preaching all day."

And so it is with the elders of our church; their sermons need not, and, in fact, should not be confined to talks from the pulpit, but by their lives, they should be constantly preaching to the people.

They should, on all occasions, conduct themselves with a kind and gentle dignity in the presence of others, manifesting love and forbearance, not critical and fault-finding, and when necessary to chide others, or even those of their own loved ones, they should do it with a gentle firmness which is not incompatible with a Christian character. The elder should ever keep in mind the life of our dear Lord, who is our pattern, our ensample, and endeavor with all his power to emulate it. Let him ask himself frequently when tempted: "What would Jesus do under similar conditions?" and then try with all his strength to do that which he feels that Jesus would do.

In the business meetings, the elder, the man of God, should be the restraining influence, when others become overwrought and show much heat and anger, setting them a good example by his patience and forbearance. God has called him to a great work and he must not fall short by giving way to the weakness of the flesh; but should so live as to endear himself to the people who will love him and speak of him affectionately as "our beloved elder," He should pray much.

Unless a man is prepared to strive with all his might and main to live the Christ life, it were better by far that he had not accepted the eldership.

RECONSTRUCTION

To beat to submission the proud and cruel power that has threatened the world, and establish at least a temporary peace has been an achievement of epoch-making significance. This stupendous task has brought into action the mental material and scientific forces, and their work was so complete that the enemy is pleading for mercy and begging for a morsel of food from our hand.

This being the state of affairs, it is good statesmanship and good Christianity for us to avoid the sentimentalism of the advocates of revenge and the sentimentalism of the pro-Germans, and seek to establish a peace in righteousness and justice. Germany should be fed. It is good business, and if it were not, she should be fed anyway—we must live in the same world with Germans, and we should be sincere in seeking to promote peace and good will in our relations with all mankind.

Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? When thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh? Then shall thy light break forth as the morning, and thine health shall spring forth speedily; and thy righteousness shall go before thee; the glory of the Lord shall be thy reward.—Isaiah 58: 6-8.

Man's chief end is to glorify God. This is the spirit of our Lord and Savior. It was his mission on earth to glorify God, through the redemption of man. General Foch was right when he said, "We cannot maintain the ideals of liberty and justice, whether in war or in peace, without faith in Christ."

The word reconstruction is in lavish use at the present time. The world is holding high carnival with it. Lightly it is made to span everything that a distorted imagination can conjure. I am reminded of the small boy who said, "Daddy, if I dist had that big bass drum, I would beat it till it busted." A few men are talking and working practically on reconstruction as it applies to the readjustment of commerce and industry. Such men know they are up against a tremendous problem that cannot be solved by neat-fitting generalities nor theories of cloistered economists. They know that the problem is not of the future, that it is here now.

Just so with us as a church—the problems that confront us assume gigantic proportions, but not too great to be solved, if we all work coordinately for the consummation of the great work that God has called us to do, viz: the preaching of the restored gospel to all nations, and the establishing of his Saints securely in his appointed place.

Let us look at reconstruction from the standpoint of people who have prayed for many years that God would open the way for the preaching of the gospel to the nations of the earth. Largely, those prayers have been answered. God has used the powers of the earth to tear the gates from many nations, and cast them aside, we hope, never to be barred again. How many of us have prepared ourselves by becoming conversant with some one of the many languages, and a godly life, to move forward now and carry the joyful news of true salvation to the people of those nations? Sad to say, many of our lives have not been consistent with our belief and prayers.

Thanks to our worthy leaders, the work of reconstruction has not been delayed to this juncture, but was begun some time ago in the readjustment of the working forces of the church, with very gratifying results. Before we undertake to reconstruct the religion of foreign lands, let us see that our own ranks are in proper order. How many of us as officers and privates can pass inspection?

Our plans for action are God-given, even to finances and equipment—how could they be wrong?

Our officers are commissioned of God to serve us in this greatest work that was ever done by man. Then shall we not give to them our unfailing, unhesitating support?

Our commands (the commandments incorporated in the gospel) are as old as the gospel, yes, as old as creation, and we should all of us be familiar with them, and know just how to give attention where it is needed.

We see then that reconstruction is not necessary in our organization nor principles, but will apply very fittingly to individuals. I think I am safe in the statement that every individual life has the capacity for reconstruction. It is my duty to see that I am ready to "pass muster." Just so with everyone in the church—not that we are to go out on dress parade with blaring trumpets, but that everyone adorn himself with righteousness, and shall have proven the instruments that God has given us for this warfare. Then shall we be able to establish that peace that passeth all understanding.

SONS OF GOD

And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father.—Galatians 4: 6.

Who can grasp in thought the true dignity and nobility of such relationship? Surely none of us may, without careful attention, to say the very least. Can it be that this royal heritage of kinsmanship with God is merely some fanciful story or is it a profound reality?

What are the evidences? If by the most remote possibly of unlikely and improbable chance, the representation that men are the sons of God should be merely a figurative story, suited to the imagination and admiration of men, it would still be effective for good wherever given place in the thought; for men unconsciously seek to become like that which they greatly admire. But the facts and the evidence that may be drawn together by observation and meditation, together with the testimony of the Holy Spirit, all witness, in a oneness of unity, that men are in very reality the offspring of God.

We are informed by the written word, very clearly, that God is the Father of spirits. All men possess certain well-defined qualities of Godlikeness, or characteristics which distinguish them as sustaining a kindred relationship with the divine. These characteristics and qualities are ours by right of the royal inheritance. The nature of these God-like qualities are such that they may beget of their kind within the soul, and be multiplied, strengthened, and increased many times over, under the proper nurture, culture, and care. Upon the other hand, they may be dwarfed, stultified, and deformed, by the improper care, and vicious treatment of a sinful life, to that extent that the relationship with the divine is scarcely discernible at all. These become, in a sense, the children of the Devil, because they yield themselves to be fashioned over again in their spiritual life and interest, according to the desires of carnality and wickedness, which things are the distinguishing qualities and traits of the wicked one.

Also, those having received their individual endowment of God quality within the soul (which quality is distributed to all, according to the divine wisdom and justice, severally as he wills), and who improve upon those talents through the proper exercise of them, become sons of God in a fuller, and more special sense, because by obedience to the good and wholesome rules of life which are set to govern the royal household of God, they are not alienated at all, but become more and more in the likeness of the heavenly Father. They are therefore qualified, not only to be called his sons, but what is more, to deport themselves upon all occasions as such.

The written word which declares that man was created in the image of God, cannot with reason be taken to mean that the physical only was formed in the image of his Creator, for having received a revelation of the character and attributes of God, we may see that man possesses, even though in an infinitely much less degree, yet sufficient of the divine attributes to render him decidedly in the spiritual likeness of his heavenly Father.

In the matter of free moral agency, having the privilege to choose between doing that which is good and that which is evil, men are like their Creator. They are sons of God. In the exercise of the passions of love for the good, and the true, and the beautiful, and of hatred for the evil and the ignoble, men may become like God. Why? Because in very truth they are his sons. In matters of justice, mercy, long-suffering, compassion, and kindness, men may become like God to the extent that these virtues are exercised. A character which is strong and beautiful in such virtues, is an active witness of the fatherhood of God, and that they of such character are sons of God.

Going one step farther, let it be observed that God is essentially a creator; so also we, as his sons, are; though in this matter, as in all else, we are under certain limitations. But by using such material as the Creator has supplied, man is privileged to act as a creator in his own right, and by the diction of his own individual genius.

Thus an almost limitless world of mechanical things have been created by man for his own use. When the divine sonship of man thrust him forward as the superior above all the beasts, and of every other living creature upon the earth, and he, by reason of his royal heritage began to discover his needs and the infinite possibilities within his reach, he began at once to act his legitimate part as a creator, in supplying these needs.

So, when he wished to convey his thoughts by other means than the word of mouth, he created an alphabet writing system. Later, when he desired to preserve his history and certain acquired knowledge to his posterity, he created a printing press and published books.

When he needed an accurate register of the passing of the moments and hours, he created clocks and watches. In order to explore the extent of the face of the earth he created ships. At a later date, when he wished to ride rapidly, and to convey goods from place to place within his domain, he created railroads and mighty engines of traffic.

When he grew envious of the majestic flight of the eagles, he created engines of the air which easily outdid every bird of feather.

When he yearned for the services of a power which would in some small degree approach to the luxury of service which he may have formerly known in his Father's kingdom in the spirit world, he harnessed the lightning; and with his inherent qualities of Godlikeness he sits in his royal palaces and bids this fiery servant bear his messages around the world, and in a flash so marvelous that none but God can understand, it is done.

The wonders of material things which prove man to be a mighty creator under God, have increased in the world to that extent that the most rapid writer could not describe the thousandth part of them if he should devote all his days to the task. Before the creations of God, the mind stands transfixed in awe, mingled with reverence and boundless admiration; but the under-creators, the sons of God, have also wrought marvelously.

But, wonderful as all these inventions of men are, the things created are, in themselves, not nearly so great as that which they represent, or that which they give evidence of, namely: the living genius that created them.

The grandeur of the whole created universe is best signified, in that it speaks with a mighty voice of one whose matchless might and splendor is, by this very creation, proven to be the one eclipsing all, namely: God the Father, by whose power all things subsist.

The creations which man produces also, wonderful as they are, signify by their very existence, that which by far supersedes the works, and that is the workman. This is one feature of the distinguishing ego of the sons of God. The ships, the engines, the wires, the "wireless," the air craft, and all the marvels of industrial machinery are all, the creations of men as the sons of God, in their own right and initiative.

Yet, if it were possible to describe all of the far-reaching variations of man's achievement in the use of his inventive genius, the half of what he has brought into being as a creator would still remain untold. For men are privileged to create, in a very definite way in matters that pertain to spiritual welfare also. Ministers of the gospel, lecturers, writers, and others, are said to create, or help to create public opinion. And that is evidently true. All persons may exert a certain influence, great or small, upon the thought and activities of domestic, social, or community processes, and these influences introduced by individual men and women, soon are translated into terms of actual life, and thus become very definite creations, even in spiritual values, to the credit, or discredit, of the participants, as the spiritual complexion of the activities being either good or bad may determine. These creations that vitally concern individual, political, and spiritual life are at the command of men, sons of God.

What a vivid contrast may be drawn between the general conditions of life in a civil and Christian community, and that of the slum districts of sin and degradation! Can it be possible that this wide difference between those who regard moral and civil law and those who regard it not, is due to physical conditions alone? Evidently not. The life of the slummer, and of the criminal and the sinner, is a spiritual creation of his, or her, own making.

Others may assist, it is true; but they weave with the same evil fabric, and the unsightly result is a created product which is a stench in the nostrils of good people, and a perpetual grievance in the sight of God.

If any would challenge the idea that men do really create spiritual conditions and effects that are good or ill, let them answer whether they have ever known anyone to create a "fuss." Do not men have power to make a disturbance? The Kaiser of Germany created one. It does not seem to have terminated to his credit, however, but all the world charges him with having created a most hideous thing. Who may measure the extent that such creations as the late disturbance of the world, may wield, for time and eternity upon the very souls of men?

When Jesus said "blessed are the peacemakers" he pronounced a blessing upon those who were to make, or create something. What was that something?

It was a spiritual condition, evidently. As men by constant practice in creating material things acquire an art in producing them, so it is with things spiritual; and there are men and women in private and in public life whose ability to create a disturbance, or a discord, or an embroilment of evil in every matter in which they have a part, proclaims them professionals, or experts in producing an article of such quality. Other people create an atmosphere that belongs with Godliness wherever they are. They are of a good spirit themselves. They carry a good spirit with them as an accompanying guardian angel. They draw out the best there is in all whom they meet, and the union of such holy forces literally creates a condition where holiness may thrive the more. These are sons of God who are exalted to a blessed association with the Lord.

The disposition to create evil dominates the life of the ungodly. The genius to create good is hidden in the life that becomes free from sin.

These creative powers witness that men as sons of God may be alienated from him, or exalted to more intimate and glorious association with him.

Keeping this great truth in mind will enable man to refrain from underestimating his own possibilities and powers. It will also guard him against the assumption born of flattery, that his own importance is so much greater than that of other men; for he will be constrained to the view that one man is as good in the sight of God as another, if he does as well.

Some corrective, for the victim of the flatterer is quite in place, too, when treating upon the needed correctives contained in the gospel; for there is a common folly among men, wherein, because of the flattery of others, and the self-flattery of their own wits, they overestimate their own importance as compared with other men. Others underestimate their own powers, and this also is an impediment. But with the consciousness that all men are sons of God in a sense, and more acceptably so when they work righteousness, a fairer estimation of oneself is possible.

A limited knowledge of the truth permits one to exalt himself in his own ignorance and littleness of opinion, insomuch that all possibilities for his mental and spiritual progress are effectively blocked by his own towering conceit, and even his best qualities shrivel and die the while he, under the hallucination that he has arrived at the standards of wisdom and excellence, is merely an object of pity in the sight of God and in the view of persons of right understanding. But the knowledge of the simple truth concerning our relationship with God the heavenly Father, and with Jesus Christ our "Elder Brother" retards our notions of over self-importance, and at the same time gives a clear view of the limitless possibilities lying open to all the sons of God; and also furnishes the stimulus to press forward in pursuit of the same.

Charity for the failures and follies of one's fellow laborers is also born of the knowledge of our common origin with God, our besetting impediments, our kinsmanship of desires, and the common destiny of all those who do good or ill. Praise God who hath sent forth his Spirit into the hearts of his sons upon earth, by which they may look up to him and cry, Abba, Father, in the Spirit and with the understanding thereof.

The river's songs are of our God,
The mountains speak his praise;
The ocean's ceaseless ebb and flow
Proclaim his endless days.

The heavens declare thy handiwork
O Lord, our God and King,
Time's onward swinging pendulum
Strokes but thy grace to sing.

With majesty thy throne is graced
While Eon's river runs,
And thou hast favored men on earth
To be thy very sons.

Arise, my soul, on wings of joy,
And let my heart proclaim!
Our Father is the King of kings,
His power a living flame.

Though earthly be the bivouac
We have on earthly sod,
Yet praises be to God on high,
We are the sons of God!

MUSIC

"Let the young men and the maidens cultivate the gifts of music and of song; let not the middle-aged and the old forget the gladness of their youth and let them aid and assist so far as their cares will permit; and remember that Saints should be cheerful in their warfare that they may be joyous in their triumph."

Music is a wonderful art. The impression made through this medium, if wisely used, will unlock the hearts of the people of God to assist in bringing about the salvation of Zion. Life needs to be toned up musically, for music enlarges the growth of the soul, and nourishes the finer and nobler feeling. It makes the daily work easier of accomplishment; it inspires and arouses patriotic sentiment, as well as affords relaxation to the people who have been strenuously engaged in their various lines of work.

Music is nature's necessity, an active force. It is more than a pleasing pastime. It keys up the wornout to another effort, and after toil, rests and refreshes. It puts resolution into a man's heart and fires his soul. Music is nearly a universal passion. Announce a fine band concert in any of our towns, and how the people do stream in to hear it!

OF GENERAL INTEREST

SOCIETY ISLANDS SCOURGED

Influenza has turned the island of Tahati into a charnel place. At the crest of Papeete burn great pyres, with the stark, sheet-covered bodies of many natives waiting to be thrown into the glowing ashes of those who have been consumed by the flames.

The Associated Press correspondent has learned that fully one seventh of the population of Papeete are dead. In almost every native home families are with no medicine and little attention, while the fever consumes their lives. They beg in vain for food.

Those Europeans and Americans who escaped the disease formed a volunteer corps to carry food and medicine to the sick and to take measures for the disposal of the dead. But the situation grew enormously, and soon got out of hand. The deaths became so numerous in the last week that to bury the victims was impossible. Only the pyre was left.

The start of the epidemic has been traced to the arrival of a steamer here on November 17, with many cases on board.

Attempts to keep the epidemic from spreading have failed. It has reached the island of Moorea, where there are no doctors, and is exacting enormous toll there.

In Papeete the victims of the plague are everywhere surrounded by the dying. Day and night trucks rumble through the streets filled with bodies for the constantly burning pyres, which seem never to want for their human fuel. The three doctors, authorities, and volunteer workers have been unable to control the epidemic. Two public meetings and other gatherings were held after the arrival of the steamer.

Quarantine regulations proved unavailing.

Medical authorities here stated it was the most widespread destructive epidemic in the history of the islands. As Papeete is the only port of call and departure in the islands, the epidemic naturally started here. The spread of the disease to the other islands is looked upon with alarm because of the lack of medical attendants or any other combative agency.

The disease has practically wiped out the elder generation of the Tahitians, noted for their hospitality and charm. Reports from other points say that the mortality is appalling.—Rocky Mountain News, Denver, Colorado, December 25, 1918.

INFLUENZA---DESTROYER AND TEACHER

A GENERAL CONFESSION BY THE PUBLIC HEALTH AUTHORITIES OF A CONTINENT

It is but natural that influenza should have been foremost in the thoughts and in the discussion of the more than one thousand health commissioners, administrators, officers, and workers of the country who gathered last week in Chicago for the meeting of the American Public Health Association. These health workers, "The greatest life-saving crew in the civilized world," as President Hastings of Toronto designated them, had gone to Chicago for light on the subject of utmost interest to their communities, which include not only the great cities, but the villages of the whole United States. They were all eager to find out "if the influenza epidemic should be repeated next year, shall we be able to face our people and say we are ready?" They came to organize themselves against the invisible foe—the plague that has within less than twelve weeks carried off over four hundred thousand persons in death in this country, has caused a national loss of ten million years of life, and an economic waste of more than three billions of dollars. Nor is the danger over. The epidemic has not entirely passed, and recrudescence may be expected at any time in many communities and in different parts of the country. The opinion was current that we may surely expect next year a repetition in a form more or less severe; there were some who predicted that next year will be much worse than this and may cause three quarters of a million deaths in this country from influenza and the ailments which it induces. . . .

In discussing the causes of influenza, the doctors one and all have, with becoming humility, recognized and freely expressed the fact that the cause is unknown, that we are in the dark as to the invisible germ causing the disease, and that we may as well admit it and call it the "x" germ for want of a better name. The Pfeiffer bacillus of influenza has repeatedly been found in the respiratory secretions, but it cannot be said to be the sole cause as it is frequently absent; and there have been found, according to Park, seven distinct strains of microorganisms, each of which may or may not have been the causative factor of the disease. "The saddest part of my life," said Colonel V. C. Vaughan, of Ann Arbor, "was when I witnessed the hundreds of deaths of the soldiers in the army camps and did not know what to do. At that moment I decided never again to prate about the great achievements of medical science and to humbly admit our dense ignorance in this case."

What are the known methods of transmission? How is the disease carried from person to person? What are the vehicles by which it travels and affects one community after another? More positive data were presented in answer to these questions and a definite stand was taken by those present as to the mode of transmission. The consensus of opinion was that, whatever the cause of the disease, it is to be found in the respiratory secretions of the nose, mouth, and throat of those who are sick; that the infection is spread by droplets diffused by sneezing and coughing, and that it is a hand-to-mouth infection which travels by direct contact from person to person. So sure was Doctor Maloney, of Fall River, Massachusetts, that we have to deal with a purely hand-to-mouth infection, that he announced to the convention what he considered as the only solution of the problem of the prevention of future epidemic, viz, "put each diseased person in a diver's suit and provide him with a pair of handcuffs."

It was likewise agreed that the disease confers a certain immunity upon those who recover from it, and that the reason why so many persons over forty years of age escaped the infection was because they must have passed through the epidemic of 1889. A valuable proof of this contention was given to me by Vilhjalmur Stefansson, the well-known Arctic explorer, whom I met on the train coming from Chicago. He informed me that influenza was especially fatal among the Eskimos in Alaska; that according to his own knowledge, out of 300 Eskimos at Nome, Alaska, not less than 176 had died up to two weeks ago and that in all probability an additional number have succumbed since then. Of the eight Eskimos whom he brought with him from the Arctic region to Alaska, seven died of the disease. He ascribes the susceptibility of the Eskimos and the fatal results of their infection to the fact that this is the first time that they have made the acquaintance of influenza.

"WHEN DOCTORS DISAGREE"

The most heated discussions were of course devoted to the paramount questions of how to control the disease, how to treat it and what steps to take for the prevention of its spread and recurrence. It was in the discussion of these questions that the total bankruptcy of the present health administrations in the country appeared in full light and was admitted over and over again. In a general way it was freely confessed by all that we are at sea as to the proper methods of treatment, cure, and prevention; that we do not know as yet how to prevent and control the spread of the disease, and that most of the methods employed in fighting it, though pronounced efficacious by some of their adherents, have been held of little value by others.

Again and again was it admitted that the epidemic seemed to care little for authorities, showed no respect for its human opponents, that it spread in spite of all methods used to prevent it, that it increased in spite of the precautions undertaken and the means employed to combat it, and declined seemingly without any regard to measures used against it. Listening to the testimony of many health officers that their efforts to combat the disease seemed of no avail, no matter what they did do—one almost came to the conclusion that our struggle against the epidemic is futile.

The methods employed against influenza may be roughly divided into two groups: methods of individual care and prophylaxis, and community health control.

Of the measures of individual care and prophylaxis, the following were mentioned as important: isolation, medical treatment, the wearing of masks, and vaccine therapy.

The isolation of every person suffering from influenza was regarded as one of the best methods of guarding the patient against the subsequent infection by the pneumococcus germs and a means of controlling the spread of the disease to a large number of persons with whom he would have come in contact were he not isolated.

The best method of treatment is to keep the patient in bed for several weeks—indeed for a number of weeks after apparent recovery. This was considered essential for the prevention of the most frequent complication of influenza—pneumonia. It was pointed out by many that they have yet to know of a death of an individual who, as soon as he felt the symptoms of influenza, took to his bed and stayed there. On the other hand, the ordinary medical methods of treatment and therapeutic agents employed were admitted to be without much value, and, as President Hastings expressed himself, he felt like saying with Shakespeare, "throw physic to the dogs," as the most approved art of healing, at least in the cure of influenza. The best thing that the physician can do for the patient is to leave the patient alone.

The value of masks was the subject of heated debates but no conclusions were arrived at. "If the mask was a preventive," said Colonel Cummings of the army, "it was more as a barrier between the hand and the mouth than a protection against direct contact." The ordinary gauze mask was characterized by many as a snare and delusion and as giving a false sense of security. As worn in the epidemic, the ordinary mask could not prevent the spread of the droplets and was totally inadequate for the purpose. However, the value of the mask as a protection against fear was repeatedly admitted and, as Doctor Robertson, health commissioner of Chicago, expressed it: "It is our duty to keep the people from fear. Worry kills more people than the epidemic. For my part, let them wear a rabbit's foot on a watch chain if they want it and if it will help them to get rid of the physiological action of fear." A number of cases were cited where physicians and nurses were infected in spite of their wearing masks. Doctor Kellogg of San Francisco said that he had started out with a great confidence in the mask, but, to his chagrin, he found that the death rate increased after the adoption of the mask; in Los Angeles, where no masks were used, the death rate from influenza was 3.3, while in San Francisco, where masks were used, it was 4.7. Doctor Woods Hutchinson, however, claimed that the mask did some good in San Francisco.

As we have to deal with a disease germ which is unknown and, in all probability, with a string of germs of various characteristics, there does not seem to be any scientific basis for proper vaccine therapy for the disease. As Doctor Park, of New York, expressed it, "One cannot fight an unknown germ by means of known germs." On the other hand, many of the health officers testified that the use of vaccine had an appreciable effect upon the disease, not as a curative agent but as a prophylactic measure. Doctor Lipman, of Swift & Company, said that out of 4,000 employees whom he vaccinated, not one contracted the disease, while among a smaller number who were not vaccinated, several cases occurred. All the various and conflicting testimony, however, was declared to be unreliable by no less an authority than Frederick L. Hoffman, who remarked that statistics were never so much abused as by the doctors and health officers in the epidemic and that most of the statistics were worthless. Most of the experiences with vaccine therapy was with the vaccine made by Doctor Rosenow of the Mayo Foundation, at Rochester, Minnesota. The greatest value of vaccine therapy was in the fact it reduced fluophobia, as it has been clearly demonstrated that worry and fear had to be controlled during the epidemic. . . .

Prevention of overcrowding was regarded as the most important measure in the jurisdiction of health officers. It seems reasonable to think that if the disease is spread by contact and by coughing and sneezing, the surest method of control is by the prevention of overcrowding and community congestion. The testimony of various health officers as to this measure of control seemed to vary greatly. No decision was arrived at as to the value or lack of value of the methods adopted by the various health commissioners. One after another of them testified that the effect upon the epidemic was negligent whether the theaters, stores, or schools were closed, or not; that some communities, for instance Detroit, had suffered less without a closing ordinance than others, like Buffalo, where everything was closed tight. It was also cited that in Philadelphia the explosions of the disease increased by leaps and bounds right after the closing ordinances and orders, and that in many other communities the closing of schools, recreation centers, and other places was followed by a great increase in the number of cases. . . .

Professor C. E. A. Winslow of Yale presented a resolution to the effect that school closing should depend on the size and educational standards of the community; that in large cities, with a dense tenement-house population and where effective measures for school inspection exist and the schools could be used for health propaganda, they should be left open, while in rural communities and wherever there is a lack of proper inspection and educational facilities, the schools should be closed.

There is, of course, no question as to the value of proper provision of medical facilities and of a thorough organization of general relief. The need of hospital facilities, the organization of the medical profession, the mobilization of nursing resources and a concerted, intelligent, unified attempt to furnish medical aid to each individual in the community during the epidemic, were declared to be essential. The same applies to provisions for general and special relief which are so needed and were so lacking during the past epidemic.

The greatest method of prevention and control of the influenza epidemic is in public health education in its broadest sense. The most important measures, however, in the control of influenza as well as of other diseases is the reorganization of the health activities of communities, the placing of health control under unified command, a better coordination of public health agencies, a cooperation of private and community institutions and a thorough accord of municipal, state, and federal health authorities. In other words, perfect team play in public health work.—George M. Price, M. D., in The Survey, December 21, 1918.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5820 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

The Senior Woman: Her Field of Usefulness Outside Her Home

The time has long passed when a woman must consider herself "shelved," or unfit for active participation in the affairs of her world, when she shall have passed her fortieth or fiftieth birthday. A glance about to-day will convince anyone that much, very much, of the most worth-while work of the world is being carried on by women whose hands and brains are no longer occupied altogether with the usual routine tasks of their homes and families.

Once upon a time, when my own hands were most bewilderingly full of home duties, and there was impressed upon my mind the crying need of great activity in some other directions, I expressed, to an older and much more experienced woman, my impatient desire to help in these matters. I shall never forget the counsel contained in her reply, "My dear child, this care of home and children which you now have, is the most important in the world! Do it with all your heart, and find the great joy in it! The time will come when your children will need you no longer—when your hands will be empty of these loved tasks. Then you can turn your attention and energy to those things outside your home!"

Let us add, if possible, further emphasis to the fact that no work given to woman in this life is more important than that found in her home. To make it all it should be before God—to rightly care for the bodies, the intellects, and the spiritual life of its inmates, is indeed a task which will tax all the higher powers and possibilities of any intelligent and conscientious woman, and blessed is she who sees this, and who bends all her forces to its righteous accomplishment.

All must have observed, however, that many women in the world find themselves without these natural and much-desired ties. Death has perhaps taken from them the loved ones for whom they would gladly have labored. Or perhaps the family has grown up, and become happily situated elsewhere. What place has such a woman in the useful work of this work-a-day world? A few decades ago, the answer would have been: "Let her find a home in some charitably-inclined family, and help to do the housework, darn the stockings, or nurse the sick." To-day, however, even the most casual observer will reply: "Her opportunity for service is unlimited, and embraces practically every avenue of human activity."

Reducing the statement to practical issues, we must take the stand that a woman's natural gifts must determine, largely, the trend her contributions to the world's work shall take. Is she musical? In every neighborhood there is a great demand for women who can lead singing, conduct a children's orchestra or chorus, teach the rudiments of music, conduct harmony classes, accompany soloists, compose hymns, Sunday school songs, or anthems for choirs, outline programs for Christmas entertainments, or write memorials for honored people.

Is she literary? Daily papers pay well for articles alert and bright in commentary or observation. Magazines await those who can write well of that which interests the public; church circles need stimulation by way of the "written word"; clubs feed upon papers calculated to put valuable information in condensed form before its members. Sunday school papers are eager for stories which will entertain and instruct at the same time; many heart-stories lie all about, waiting the gifted pen to be immortalized into books which shall live to bless.

Is she interested in public improvement? Civic clubs need her activity. There are unsightly spots in every town and city which need eradication, whether they be of a physical nature or otherwise. A dump heap and a polished saloon equally need woman's purifying housekeeping. Improper sewerage as well as improper morals in her environment will benefit by the interested activity of the woman of mature mind and experience. She is ideal upon a welfare board, where the safety of young girls and boys is of primal importance. To make her town a good place to live in, is an aim worthy of any woman, whether she have children of her own to profit by its cleanliness or whether her efforts but reflect uplift for the mass. So many are blind, plodding along in daily toil routine, unheeding the conditions which might so easily be improved by concerted action and thought. Laws which imperil the health and entire life of childhood and womanhood, are still upon our statute books, but even the improvement which has been made in this direction can largely be traced to woman's efforts and influence. A woman was responsible for a general clean-up in the stock-yard district of one of the large cities, where many people had been living under conditions almost unspeakable, through inadequate sewerage system.

A woman who has the gift to nurse the sick, has a wonderfully beautiful field of service before her. Not alone in the past year or two, when war and its attendant conditions have placed nursing in a high place, but always, in the home, and the neighborhood, have people been called upon to bless some sympathetic woman who has come at the call of sickness, stayed through the night, comforted by her presence and courage, ministered in countless ways to the sick and the well of a stricken home, and has seemed, by just such ministry, to represent in very deed the sacred person of the Christ! No work is more fitted for a woman's hand, and none in which her natural endowments find higher expression. The need is ever-present. Hardly a week passes but what such a woman finds an outlet in this way to her Godlike instinct to relieve suffering and want.

Akin, and closely allied to the care of the sick, is the beautiful work which women may do among the soul-sick. In the poorer walks of life many are to be found who need gentle ministration and comfort, a clear pointing to better and safer ways. When we consider that most sin is the result of ignorance, we realize that whoever carries the light of knowledge into the soul of another, is lifting by just so much, the dreadful weight of the world's sin. Just now a great work is being attempted by the Government in educating the foreign-born people who have found in our country a refuge from the oppression of the old. They are not evil-minded, but they are handicapped in making an intelligent race by their ignorance of our country, its speech, customs, and standards of various kinds. Through this ignorance their children, being reared according to perverted ideas of freedom, may become, and in many instances do become lawless—the "sin-sick" of our Nation. In this effort to educate the foreign-born, to acquaint them with our standards, our ideals, we put into their hands the weapons with which they can more successfully fight the unequal battle. This is a work peculiarly adapted, again, to the natural gifts and acquirements of the matured woman, the one who has measured life through years of contact and experience, and who is able to clearly see the path humanity should take in its upward progress towards divinity.

Then there are the study classes. Who is more naturally chosen to lead such groups than the senior woman? No matter what her tastes or in what direction her studies have turned, she may always find those who need her in just that line, and whom she can greatly benefit and stimulate. Added to this, there are the numerous ways in which the older women can help the younger. In our church, particularly, we have great need for older women who are willing to take upon themselves the truly wonderful and inspirational work of leading the Oriole girls, or acting as sponser or guide to the older ones called Temple Builders. One reason this work suffers in some of our locals is because so few of our senior women have seen the vision of the beautiful and enduring nature of the work with girls. Girls are so enthusiastic—so invigorating! They respond with such avidity and zest to suggestion, and go at things with such spontaneity and undaunted courage, that it is indeed a real treat to work with them. Then, too, they idealize everything so, and their leader becomes to them a pattern of all that's most worth-while and womanly. Is not that something to covet? I once heard a primary schoolteacher say, "One wonderful thing about teaching primary children is that they have no former teacher to compare you with, and therefore they set you up on a pedestal! It is pleasant, but it also makes you try pretty hard not to disappoint them! Likewise a leader of girls has a great but pleasant task—to strive herself to embody and illustrate all the beauty and nobility she would set before her girls.

In connection with this subject I must not forget to mention the very great demand there is in every city for mature women to act as leaders of the industrial groups of girls. Employees of most large business concerns form clubs among themselves, and these groups are recognized as being important units in the welfare efforts of the city. They meet once or twice weekly, and combine work, recreation, and social activity, in healthful and stimulating manner, under the direction of an older woman, who can thus mold as she chooses, perhaps unconsciously to the girls themselves, their tastes and habits along lines most beneficial to them. The Young Woman's Christian Association provides instruction of an expert nature, for leaders of such groups, and no work is more worth while for a woman to seriously undertake.

The activities heretofore mentioned have partaken more or less of the nature of recreational work, work that a woman could undertake and still be discharging most of her home duties. Professionally, for women who want to enter the commercial world, the field is, as all must see, practically unrestricted in any direction, and her choice must be made in accordance with her previous education and opportunity. But, whether professionally employed, or whether she interests herself in things outside her home from purely altruistic motives, a woman must always allow some time each day for her own development, a quiet communion with divine forces, and a conscious "squaring up" with them as she recognizes them. Only a life so ordered can be truly happy; in no other way can real poise be obtained. Pity it is that the tendency of modern times, with its helter-skelter rush and roar, crowds out the desire and opportunity for such introspection and discrimination. It is only by quiet, firm determination that we are able to get these few moments alone with ourselves and God, but the results will pay well for the effort. Out of this communion will grow the desire, most likely, to identify oneself with one's church life in an active way. Service to others results in development for self; likewise, an effort to explain or demonstrate to others that which we believe, often helps us to see it more clearly. Thus the mature woman finds great recompense in sharing the work of Sunday school or Religio, not only because it enlivens her intellectually and spiritually, but because she widens her sphere of influence by coming in such contact with others.

We realize we have only touched upon the outskirts of the topic assigned to us, but we hope what we have offered may, by way of suggestion, start the "thought-buds" growing in other brains, and thereby some real good may follow.

The Woman's Auxiliary Work in Canada

Mrs. Frederick M. Smith, honorary president, has just returned from over three weeks of educational work for the Woman's Auxiliary in Canada. She consented to accompany President Smith at his request and as is the custom when a member of the general executive does field work, arrangements were made with the organizers of the districts which Sister Smith planned to visit. Sister Inez Davis of the Toronto District was unable to meet with Sister Smith owing to the prevailing sickness, but Sister Rosa Tier of the London District and Sister Rose Glazier of Chatham District were associated with her.

Sister Smith met with many of the women both in public places and in their homes, and was much pleased with the earnestness with which they discussed with her the plans and purposes of the Auxiliary work. She was loyally received, the Oriole girls and Temple Builders assisting the women of the auxiliary in their entertainment. Their appreciation of both President and Sister Smith's visit was expressed at the receptions given and in gifts.

Arrangements were made by the women and girls for special meetings and several public addresses were given, followed by brief talks by President Smith and Bishop McGuire. Sister Smith, with President Smith, visited Toronto, Niagara Falls, Saint Thomas, London, Bothwell, Chatham, and Detroit.

The Woman's Auxiliary work has received an encouraging stimulus through the work done by Sister Smith, and we congratulate the sisters in these districts that they have had this opportunity for closer association with one who is so vitally interested in the women of the church.

MRS. J. A. GARDNER,
Secretary.

To All Organizations of Women in the Church

Report blanks are being mailed now to the district organizers for their report to the general association. The following suggestive form is given to assist the local organizations in making their report to the organizers that they may have this information upon which to base their report. Please fill out a blank of this kind or a similar one and mail to your organizer at once unless you have already heard from her. If you are in a district which is unorganized or where there has been no organizer appointed please answer the questions given below and mail to the general secretary without delay. A report in this form or a similar one is required of every club, circle, society, or class in the Woman's Auxiliary. We have no printed form.

REPORT OF LOCAL ORGANIZATIONS

Name of organization .....
Town and State .....

State which of the following lines of work your organization is carrying on.

|                    |       |            |       |         |

Young Woman's .....

(The Home and Child Welfare and the Relief and Service are concerned with the active work done and every class organized for educational purposes should report under Educational Bureau.)

Explain in detail what line of study is being followed, what books are used or what actual work is being done in your organization .....

Have you a local council consisting of the officers of each organization of women within the branch?.....

Has your branch president been invited to meet with this local council? .....

Do you hold an open meeting once a month? .....

If so, do you confine your programs to one subject, or do you vary them to meet the needs of different women? .....

Have you paid your annual assessment to the general treasurer, Mrs. E. H. Esgar, 700 South Crysler, Independence, Missouri? .....

Do you report to the branch regularly (quarterly) either through your local council or, if you have no local council, as an organization? .....

Date of organization .....
..... Pres.
..... Secy.

You will greatly assist in making a complete and accurate report to the general association if you will:

1. Send in the report requested at once.
2. If you encourage other Women's organizations to do so.
3. Send your annual dues to the general treasurer.

If you do not have a Supplement to the Year Book you should send 15 cents to the general treasurer, secure one and study it. You will have a more definite idea of the methods of carrying on the work and the purpose of it.

Sincerely,
MRS. J. A. GARDNER,
General Secretary.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Course in Public Speaking

I have been receiving letters from different parts of the country making inquiries in regard to the correspondence course in public speaking. To all such inquiries let me say:

This course of lessons in public speaking is the result of an insistent and increasing demand within the church and is adapted to the varying needs of the membership. It will prove specially helpful to the ministry of the church.

An attempt was made last year by the executive of the Woman's Auxiliary to provide a department for public speaking. Following some preliminary work and the testing out of a suggested course, I was asked to prepare an outline of study. The course of lessons now in use and preparation is the outcome. We had hoped to complete the preparation of the course months ago, but pressing demands along other lines have delayed. We will now go right ahead until the entire course of forty lessons is completed.

Under this course we discuss public speaking, oratory, art of conversation, common errors of speech, increasing the vocabulary, the choice of words, memory training, breathing, use of the voice, articulation, gesture, delivery, style, mannerisms, construction of a speech, in fact, we cover the entire range of public speaking.

We do not claim originality. Our purpose has been to gather material from the best authors. This is supplemented by personal experience and observation. Reference texts are supplied with each lesson. An outline for supplemental reading is also supplied.

The course covers one lesson each week. A list of questions accompany each lesson together with the series of suggested exercises. A mastery of the course will benefit anyone. This is indispensable to the man or woman who desires to appear to the best advantage before the public. There is no tuition fee. Students will be expected to meet the expense of postage only. We ask the cooperation and support of the traveling ministry, the local officers of the various churches and the general membership.

Write to Mrs. J. A. Gardner, secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, Independence, Missouri, and make application for enrollment as a student. You will then be furnished with the first lesson, together with necessary instructions. Enroll now.

Where there are several students in one place it will be well to form a class and study and work together. This gives opportunity for class drill and discipline.

Yours very truly,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

TORONTO, ONTARIO, 109 Fermanagh Avenue.

The Bishop's Prayer

O God, our father and our friend, thou hast greatly blessed us as thy people, sending forth the sunshine and the rain by which we have reaped an abundant harvest. Thou hast stayed the destroyer's hand as thou didst promise, and many have marveled at our prosperity. Our flocks have yielded their increase and none have cast their young before their season. Thou hast taught us how to live by which we have enjoyed unusual health, and while many have been idle because of sickness we have lost but little time at our daily toil. Through the ideals of thrift, honesty, sobriety, cheerfulness, and truthfulness, which have been made a part of us by contact with the teaching of thy Son, our services have been in constant demand.

Our employers know not, O Lord, why we are as we are, but we know, and to thy great name be praise and honor, for to thee do we trace all our earthly blessings. And now, O God, having been thus so richly blessed may we not forget our solemn obligations to thee and to our fellow men. May we not look upon these earthly possessions as the miser looks upon his hoarded gold, nor with souls cankered with a greed for more, but may we consider them as God-given tools placed within our hands with which to shape our destinies. May we strive diligently to earn much and study carefully to spend but little, that we may give plenteously to build up thy kingdom and aid in establishing Zion wherein is equality. So help us Lord to dedicate our lives and all that we accumulate beyond our just needs to the accomplishment of righteousness.

We ask in the name of our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Passing of Prejudice

An evidence of the passing of prejudice was recently manifested in the Methodist Episcopal Church at Plainville, Massachusetts. The Saints residing in the town have borne in a forgiving spirit some of the deep-rooted prejudices that have now and then cropped out. Their Christlike spirit in patient endurance has made them victorious. There is not a citizen in the town of Plainville to-day more highly respected than Elder C. C. Coombs.

To train prejudiced minds to a right understanding of the restored gospel is a task more formidable than converting the toughest of the publicans and the trickiest of the sinners. If Elder Coombs conquered the prejudice against the Saints in Plainville, he conquered by the way of love, which is the only true way to conquer. He did not set out to malign those who differed from him, and in defending the precious restored gospel; he did not trample the "new commandment"—"that ye love one another"—under his feet. How explicit Jesus is on this point: Worship must wait on reconciliation. Get right with your brother, says the Lord of love, before you set up your own altar.

That will be a great day in our church when the Saints begin to realize the power of the social apostolate. The church of Rome has used it with marvelous results. It is her one great attraction in winning converts to-day. There is nothing in it that conflicts with the methods of Jesus. Indeed, it is one of his methods. Social intercourse is a means of grace as truly as prayer is, and is of equal rank with it.

The finest and deepest powers of the soul are called into play only by special contact. Every point of contact, or as Paul puts it, "every joint" is a channel of divine grace. The gospel can flow freely through social bonds. We save one another. It would bring about wonderful results and many conversions if our Saints in every branch, in the workshop, in the home, in business relations, should strive to win outsiders in a social way, and prepare them for a reception of the gospel. In the town of Plainville to-day some of its people have a reverential awe for the beauty of the restored gospel as they have seen it exemplified in the lives of some of the Saints.

During one whole week the influence of the Saints became ascendant in the town by the lectures given in the Methodist Church by Brother Augustine Dwyer. Brother Dwyer was introduced to the community as a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, a fact of which he is not ashamed.

The lecture course opened on a Sunday night with a crowded house. The interest held out the entire week. The church is a beautiful structure, with golden pipe organ, and a fresh, new, green carpet covering the entire floor of the auditorium.

On the third night the chaplain of the United States Base Hospital of Wrentham, with three officers, attended the lecture, in their dress uniforms. After the lecture, Brother Dwyer introduced the chaplain to the large audience. The chaplain responded to the introduction by describing the work done in the base hospital for our boys. The closest attention was given the chaplain during his remarks. During the day Brother Dwyer was entertained at the hospital by the chaplain and officers.

On the last night of the course Brother Dwyer prefaced his lecture by a sacred talk on the message of the hour. He said in part: "There is a feeling in the very air about us at this season which makes us realize that Christmas of 1918 will be a different Christmas from any we have known. The joy and peace of Christmas will be felt more deeply than ever before. The prophecy of Christmas will seem less distant. As I stand here before you, I cannot help thinking of the fresh meanings with which the prophecy of the Psalmist is fraught as we approach the Christmas festival, not forgetting the terrible events which have transpired the past year: 'He hath showed strength with his arms: he hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts. He hath put down the princes from their thrones. He hath exalted them of low degree. The hungry he hath filled with good things and the rich he hath sent empty away.' Never perhaps in human history have the words of this psalm been given the dramatic illustration 1918 has given it. We can look back over the past twelve months and behold the spectacle of the gigantic overturn of world empires, the falling of thrones and crowns in bewildering confusion. We saw the great dynasty of Russia, and the imperial dynasty of Germany, both of which seemed as impregnable as Gibraltar, crumble into dust. Who can contemplate all this without believing that the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth, and that he shall reign forever and ever? Who can contemplate the surrender of Palestine into Christian hands without feeling the Lord is mindful of his own?

"What rapid changes have come over the world! Only six months ago the enemy long range guns were bombarding Paris! Going back farther in time, who of us can ever forget the feelings of dread and foreboding with which we looked into the future after the sinking of the Lusitania? Who can forget the fear with which we opened our morning papers to read with dismay of some fresh objective that had been reached by the adversary? And now victory has come to us from our enemies so swift, so sudden, so overwhelming, that our minds are still dazed by the wonder of it all. Nicholas of Russia, Charles of Austria, William of Germany, have gone the way of Nebuchadnezzar, Nero, and Napoleon. Surely, the eyes of all peoples have seen the coming of the glory of the Lord as no eyes in past ages have seen it. It thrills me when I think of how thousands of Saints, apostles, prophets, and martyrs, have lived and died in darkness; of how the heroes and heroines of whom the world is not worthy, longed and yearned to Palestine wrested from the heathen, but did not see it.

"This dreadful war has made us realize the value of a soul in the eyes of God. For four years now our eyes have been blinded by the brightness and the glory of the souls in khaki, which have shone forth from the dirt of the trenches, the blood-stained battlefields, the waves of the sea, and the terrifying heights of the air. When I think of what I have seen of our boys in cantonments and in base hospitals, I cannot feel it any wonder that the Lord of glory came down to seek and save such as these. No wonder that he sold all that he had that he might purchase to himself these, his pearls of greatest price.

"We are all watching now the great doors of the peace conference as they swing open to let the Prince of Peace enter in. It will be the first time in the history of the world that the nations will ever have seriously tried the Master's way of friendship and good will. God grant that it may mean forevermore: 'On earth, peace, good will toward men.'

"And now, my dear Methodist friends and citizens of Plainville, I want to thank you for the welcome you accorded me and the generous support you have given my lectures. I owe much, indeed, to the Methodist Church. By the generosity of one of your members, Mr. John S. Huyler, I was privileged to tour all Europe, with your Bishop Burt, now of Buffalo. I can never forget my association with that noble man. We traveled over Russia together, and went as far within the Netherlands as Helsingfors. I had the privilege of delivering several lectures in the beautiful Methodist church in Rome. It is pleasant upon such an occasion to recall these things. From my heart I thank you!"

At the close of his remarks the pastor of the church arose, asked Brother Dwyer to keep his place in the sanctuary. He then turned to the audience and paid a glowing tribute to the great good accomplished in the town by the lectures. The Saints in the community are rejoicing over a victory for the restored gospel, by the crumbling of long existing prejudice.

CORRESPONDENT.

An Instance of God's Blessing

There are a great many very heartening letters that come to the Presiding Bishop's desk, indicating the splendid spirit of consecration which is constantly growing throughout the church, and indicating also the favor and blessings of our heavenly Father. It is our privilege to here print an excerpt from a letter which to-day reached us.

Sincerely and respectfully,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

"The first of this year my wife was taken sick and was sick for several months before she died, so that left me with about $200 doctor bill to pay, besides the extra expense of boarding myself and children. But I never lost faith in God; I prayed faithfully to him to help me. In my mind and heart I am confident that God has blessed me most wonderfully. I went to him in prayer, and asked him to give unto me life, health, strength, and wisdom that I might be able to perform my duties to my fellow men in my everyday work, thereby making means to pay off all of my debts. I feel that he has more than answered my prayers, as I have paid off all of my debts and bought Liberty Bonds and War Savings Stamps liberally. I am inclosing $100 which I want to give to the church."

Graceland and the Soldiers

The United States Government is making special effort to interest all soldiers who are now or soon will be discharged to enter college and better equip themselves for the great problems of reconstruction. College education has so thoroughly justified itself during the period of the war that the Government regards its duty only partly performed if it does not call to the attention of its discharged soldiers the great opportunity that lies before them.

Many of the soldiers will return to the college from which they entered the Government service. Already several have returned to Graceland, and the President is in receipt of letters from others indicating their expectation to return as soon as released by the Government. There are, however, many men not regularly or formally prepared for college who are of exceptional intelligence and who now, as a result of their army contacts, aspire to a more advanced training. Some have had valuable trade or business experience. Some will have had foreign travel and the tremendous mental and moral experiences of active service at the front. In any event, all have had the intensive training of the camps. In maturity of mind as well as natural capacity many of them are excellent college material.

In view of the above facts the Government is urging, and Graceland College is responding to the call to meet the needs of these men. Graceland is especially fortunate in being able to meet their needs in a larger way than many other institutions of learning, due to the fact that besides the college proper, which is a fully standardized and officially accredited institution, its other departments: the academy, the school of commerce, the studio, the radio institute, are all fully equipped and able to meet the various requirements of the soldiers.

Graceland is prepared to admit all soldiers, honorably discharged from the Government service, on a special basis, whether their academic training fully prepares them for college entrance or not. This will in no wise entail a lowering of standards; on the contrary it will bring into the college a class of young men of maturity with mental equipment of the highest order, due to the training they have received in army camps and through travel and contact with other peoples.

These men will be enrolled as "war specialists" or some other convenient designation and will be admitted to and permitted to continue such college courses as they can follow with profit. Those who do not attain regular standing will be furnished, upon leaving, a certificate indicating the work actually accomplished.

It is believed that there should be a considerable number of our church young men who will desire to avail themselves of this rare opportunity. The church and the auxiliaries have provided scholarship and loan funds for all worthy young men who desire to take advantage of this plan.

It is requested that all discharged men interested, their parents, or friends, write for catalogue and full information, and that anyone knowing of young men who should be interested and who should know of this exceptional opportunity, advise the president, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

Independence Items

We are having Christmas weather with snow, good and plenty. Sunday, December 22, was somewhat cloudy and chilly; but at the early prayer meeting about the usual number of both old and young flocked to the church, and at the morning service the upper room and the balconies were filled with an appreciative audience.

Brother E. A. Smith preached to the Saints in his usually forceful way. At night, W. W. Smith preached.

On account of the influenza the number of those who generally attend church is somewhat lessened, some having been victims of the dread disease, a few not having recovered.

The afternoon prayer meeting and the priesthood assembly in the upper auditorium were attended by a goodly number, and very earnest words by way of exhortation from Brother Joseph Luff at the prayer service served to arouse the hearers to greater diligence of work for the Master.

From time to time the Saints continue to bear strong testimonies to the divinity of the work and quite a number from other branches are gathering in. Also baptisms are solemnized occasionally, which give zest and cheer to the spirits of all.

That which also lends encouragement is the witness that our young brothers returning home from the service of their country are upright and clean, and still faithful in the discharge of their duties due to home and the church they love. They offered their sacred lives for honor's sake and we now desire to pay tribute to their loyalty, not only of our loved brethren, but of our fair young sisters, who have shown their willingness and desire to enter into a service of self-sacrifice, and in so noble a cause.

Much has been said and written about the sacrifices made both at home and over the seas, and, as one has said, one of the greatest services we yet can render is the saving of untold amounts of food for the starving people of the world.

Many have heard the call. There are great and serious crises yet before us and let us meet them, before God, with hearts devoted to prayer and works of love.

Forevermore let us as the chosen people among the nations vindicate the principles of righteousness and may we live to see them established in our day as the principles of the world.

Brother John W. Rushton's excellent letter of "Peace and good-will" in the Ensign of December 12, on the ideals of the church, expresses very uplifting thoughts: in it he tells the Saints they are engaged in the "passionate work of building up the highway of the Lord."

His service series, number four, also the Thanksgiving discourse by Brother W. W. Smith, are both well worth a careful, critical reading over again.

Our elders, both on this side and the other side of the big waters are doing a glorious work for the Master and the honest seekers after the truth throughout the land.

They are scattering the seeds of truth through the gospel and we hear through the church papers of how much good they are doing. Brother Hanson tells us "the world is suffering from a lack of the knowledge of God, and with this one can see marvelous movements directed by his hand."

Wishing the Saints every blessing and among them a happy New Year,

Your sister in bonds,

ABBIE A. HORTON.

FRANCE, October 16, 1918.

Editors Herald: Will you please grant me a little space for a few lines in your weekly messenger? What a great amount of comfort and help I have derived from its pages, especially during the last nineteen months spent in this war-stricken country!

By the way, those of the Saints who do not take the HERALD, I should advise them to get it. You have no idea what blessing you are allowing to pass you by.

Those of my brethren who have had army experiences know how hard it is to maintain a good degree of spirituality. Quite a number of the men are altogether indifferent on the question of religion. The sickening sights of war and the hardships one has to put up with no doubt has a tendency to harden the hearts of men. However, they watch very keenly those who are endeavoring to lead a good life, and show respect for them.

I have frequently heard it said that Christianity has failed. We have always tried to point out where the failing has been and that Christianity can never produce an opposite effect now to what it did in the first place. I believe one outcome of this great war will be that many will be seeking for something more satisfying to the soul. There is a great future for us as a church and much to be accomplished.

I hardly know how to express my thanks for all the blessings received since I have been out here. My health has never been better in spite of a little roughing now and then. It is surprising what flesh and blood can stand.

The promise of protection has been more than once realized in my case. On one occasion I was standing near to two men when both were killed. Those who witnessed the incident admit it was a miracle that I escaped. No matter what has been my particular duty and the circumstances prevailing I have always felt that confidence and assurance which is born of the Spirit. I miss very much the church privileges. When Sunday comes I think of the Saints assembling and offer up a prayer that I too may share in the blessings. Truly the Saints' prayers in my behalf have been answered.

Back in July I spent thirteen days of the happiest days in my experience at home with my dear wife and our bonnie girl; during that period I was enabled to attend several meetings of the Gloucester Branch of which I am a member.

Only those who have been denied the fellowship of Saints for any length of time can realize my feelings then. I had been away sixteen months to that time. Since I left in the first place the hand of death had taken away Brother Mac-Ray, one of our branch teachers. We missed his cheery countenance in the meetings and that rich testimony which he was always ready to bear. Brother E. J. Trapp, together with Brother P. R. Sims, J. Smith, P. Miles, E. Meadows, and J. R. Harris, were doing their best under the trying circumstances to keep the flag flying.

I trust soon the time will come when we shall all be reunited and peace shall reign again. I am hoping yet to meet some of the brethren in Uncle Sam's Army. Nothing would give me greater pleasure; my address is Twentieth Light Railway Train (Crews) Company, Royal Engineers, British Expeditionary Force.

My desire is still to go on in the conflict against sin and do all that lies in my power to uphold the banner of Jesus Christ. Pray for me that I might remain steadfast in the faith.

Your brother,

A. T. TRAPP.

SHAMROCK, OKLAHOMA, December 22, 1918.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I wrote a line to your columns, but you are the only preacher we have now, and we are very lonesome since we are away from the Saints, and this awful disease has taken my dear husband, also. He died October 29.

He was a true Saint and a loving husband and father. Our little three-year-old girl cries for Jesus to let papa come back. It is very sad, and I wish we lived near some of the Saints in the West while we are passing through this great trial. But still I know that the Lord is good and merciful and I try to live humbly and do my duty in bringing my little girls up in the true faith.

The Saints in Tulsa are good and kind to us as they always are everywhere. We surely would like to see an elder come this way. It has been some time since we heard a sermon. Elder J. C. Christiansen came to visit us in Sand Springs and preached and baptized seven while he was with us. But we are the only Saints in this little town, but I think there could be some good done, as I find people anxious to talk about the gospel. We would be glad to see an elder at any time, for we are so hungry to hear a good sermon once more.

To live where we can meet with the Saints for so long, and then to be where we cannot so much as see one, and when one has sickness and death in the home, it surely makes one long for the Saints, for our only hope is in the gospel.

I ask the Saints to remember us that we may always remain faithful until the end.

STELLA PHILLIPS.

MOUNT VERNON, ILLINOIS, December, 22, 1918.

Editors Herald: The scourge of influenza is on the wane here sufficiently to enable us to go ahead with our meetings, while in other places the disease is still raging. It has been very terrible in some places and many have gone down in death from it. We are thankful that our people as a rule have escaped, but while the ban was on I felt the handicap keenly in not being permitted to hold public meetings. However, I kept as busy as possible under the circumstances, visiting from house to house as I had opportunity, encouraging the Saints and doing what I could to advance the work.

During these times of great distress of nations and while this great scourge is slaying the people by the thousands and so much perplexity in the world; when even the great men of the world seem to be embarrassed or puzzled over the conditions with which they are confronted, the Saints should not be discouraged or feel cast down in the least, but observe the word of wisdom and keep all the commandments of God to the church in order that they may not suffer or lose faith in the gospel. I know of nothing that would be of greater harm or loss than to lose faith in this great work.

The Saints everywhere should earnestly pray for those who are called of God to lead the church, and for all the ministry that they and all the members may be one according to the prayer of Jesus as stated in the seventeenth chapter of John in order that the work may not be hindered. I hope to be one of that number who will endure faithfully to the end, but it will require great faith to endure. The Lord will have a tried people. We are told, "The fire shall try every man's work, of what sort it is." I am earnestly praying and working to be fully prepared to stand firm at the post of duty all along the way, while everything will be shaken that can be shaken.

We are told in the sixteenth chapter of the book of Alma that he that truly humbleth himself and endureth to the end the same shall be blessed, yea, much more blessed than they who are compelled to be humble."

Those who truly humble themselves because of the work and the great love they have for it, and to serve God, will be blessed more than those who are compelled to be humble by reason of great chastisement. We read in the one hundred and forty-eighth verse of the above chapter as follows:

"There are some among you who would humble themselves, let them be in whatsoever circumstances they might."

This is the class of people that we can depend on from first to last and they will carry this work on to success.

There is a little band of Saints here who are trying to keep the work moving and the outlook for the work is encouraging. The daily papers have given our meetings free advertisement right along and the people are deeply interested in the preaching of the word. We are grateful for the Lord's help and his protection over his Saints in these perilous times. I wish all the HERALD readers a merry Christmas and happy New Year, and that they may be given greater power in spreading the angel's message the coming year than ever before. I lately baptized four excellent people here.

In gospel bonds,

F. M. SLOVER.

STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA, December 22, 1918.

Editors Herald: In spite of being deprived of church services for five weeks and having many sick, the Sunday school has sailed majestically over the per capita required for a place upon the roll of honor and only lacking a dollar or two of the amount we placed as our goal for this year, with Boys' Day to hear from yet.

Stockton shed the "mask" for a week or more, and donned it again. We are allowed to hold church services however. We were wonderfully blessed in the matter of deaths because of the epidemic. None of our regular membership were taken.

We have been making some much-needed improvements upon our church which left us a little in debt, but the sisters are having a lovely time in unanimously working to pay off that debt, which will no doubt soon be accomplished.

I was much interested in R. W. Farrell's late article on "Passing the plate," as well as in the later comment. While everybody may not agree in every particular with the brother's position, yet upon the whole it was too good not to be read by the entire church membership. Unfortunately, the ones who might profit by it are those who may not see it at all.

Here is a pointer for gospel literature officials to work on: It always did keep me guessing to see church members who enjoy all the blessings of church privileges and expect to be saved by their religion, sit complacently by and let perhaps poorer people than they pay for the upkeep of the church and running expenses generally. As a rule we are not affected that way in our branch. [Just why the brother turns this over to the literature workers is not clear.—EDITORS.]

"The crucial test of prophecy," in the Signs of the Times will strike some Latter Day Saints as a strange thing. Strange that the one plain, straight, obvious line of national prophecy that runs through the Old and New Testaments cannot be seen by that people. One of them once said to the writer: "You cannot find in Scripture one beast symbol, or symbol of any kind, representing the Jewish nation in the closing up events of the world."

"No," was the reply, "nor can you find one nation spoken of in plain, direct language, clear from any symbol in the closing up events of the world, as is the Jewish nation. For instance, Ezekiel 37: 21-28: 'And say unto them, thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land: and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all; and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all. . . . And they shall dwell in the land that I have given to Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt. . . . And will set my sanctuary in the midst of them forevermore. . . . And the heathen [also our good friends of the Crisis.—AUTHOR] shall know that I the Lord do sanctify Israel, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them forevermore.'"

By reading the entire chapter it is still plainer if possible. A score or more equally plain passages could be cited. The Bible is a Hebrew book primarily and we should not look for symbols representing that nation as with other nations.

Some seem to think that because symbolic language must be translated into plain English that plain English must be translated into symbolic, hence all these plain, prophetic statements are "spiritualized" or symbolized.

National Israel means spiritual Israel, etc. The writer once heard a representative man of a certain church challenge one of our elders upon this very question. The challenge was accepted, giving the challenger double time, well knowing that the longer he talked the weaker his position would appear, and the easier it would be to overthrow his whole argument. The elder being familiar with the opponent's standard books the debate came off. The "Gibraltar" of the whole argument produced was that symbol of the broken bottle found in Jeremiah 19. In the 11th verse it says: "And thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Even so will I break this people, and this city, as one breaketh a potter's vessel, that cannot be made whole again." So he staked his all upon that utterance. The elder smiled.

Afterward when his turn came to speak, he simply read the third verse of the chapter, showing that "this" people referred to Judah only. Then he said the Bible does not contend that Judah will ever become a nation alone but Judah and Israel shall become one nation, then went on for an hour reading passages to prove it.

About a year afterward the challenging gentleman was asked if he were still preaching for that people. He replied: "No; I have left it. I cannot stay with a faith that I cannot defend." We are wondering what his brethren will do when they meet similar conditions.

Of course we as a church have never said that this is the time in which it will be done, although it looks as though it were near at hand. There is no doubt but Bible prophecy will stand the crucial test all right, although many man-made interpretations will have to go by the board.

following extract from a decision of the Supreme Court of Missouri:

The chief element of gambling is the chance or uncertainty of hazard. It is not essential that one of the parties to the wager stands to lose. The chance taken by the player may be in winning at all on the throw or in the amount to be won or lost, and the transaction should be denounced as gambling whenever the player hazards his money on the chance that he may receive in return money or property of greater value than he hazards. If he is offered the uncertain chance of getting something for nothing, the offer is a wager since the operator offers to bet that the player will lose and in accepting the chance the player bets he will win.—Moberly versus Deskin, 169 Mo., p. 672.

Another decision holds that it makes no difference if tickets were sold or were given to subscribers.

In other cases it has been held, that even if all of the articles are equal in value and are fair value for the amount paid and no one receives more than that for which he has paid, but there is a chance whether he will get a plow, gold watch, or a sewing machine, this constitutes gambling or a lottery and so is within the prohibition of the law.

There are cases that carry the prohibition to exactly that extent that where it is uncertain in any extent what one will receive in return for his money, it constitutes either a lottery or a form of gambling and is prohibited.

Conference Minutes

AUSTRALIA.—At Saints' Church, Richmond, commencing Saturday, November 2, at 2 p. m., and continuing over the following day. Delegates and visitors were present from all the Victorian branches, and Adelaide, South Australia. The statistical report of the year showed a steady increase of membership now totaling 501 inclusive of Adelaide Branch. (The latter has since been separated from the Victoria District.) The number of Saints and visitors at this conference exceeded the number at any previous conference gathering in Victoria. Some were even obliged to stand in the porch during preaching and sacrament services. The discourses throughout were animated and inspired and all felt amply rewarded for their sacrifices and efforts to be present.

THREE TRACTS

BY APOSTLE JOHN W. RUSHTON

Apostle Rushton has written three short tracts which have been published by the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and are on sale at 75 cents per hundred. They are printed on the best quality of white paper, in attractive form, and they are a credit to the publishers and to the church because of their neat and substantial appearance.

THEIR SUBJECT MATTER

A Nineteenth-Century Prophet and His Work is the title of the first, and is a splendid piece of literature with which to introduce the latter-day restoration. It sets out the demand for the existence of the church as founded by Joseph Smith; his claim that God had spoken to him; the reason for the revival of the Bible idea of Zion and a literal kingdom of God on the earth. This little piece of literature is a pleasing introduction of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and its ideals, and any Saint with a missionary spirit should possess a good supply. It and the other two of the series are the right size for use in a number 10 envelope.

The Latter Day Saints—A Question of Identity, another of the trio, makes clear the contention of the Reorganization that it is in fact the original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and brands the Utah apostasy out of evidence contained in its own standard works. A good tract for use where the issue as to which is the true church in succession from Joseph Smith the Prophet has been raised. This work is especially clear on the secession or apostasy of Brigham Young; on the law of marriage and the history of polygamy; and on the law of tithing—contrasting the views of the two churches on these subjects.

The President of the Church is an eight-page treatise on the law of succession in the presidency, designed to be used in meeting the Utah people and others who have heard their fallacious theory. It quotes the law of the Doctrine and Covenants, shows the Utah faction to be out of harmony therewith, and also quotes declarations by Brigham Young, B. H. Roberts, and Joseph F. Smith, and other testimony in the establishment of the true succession in the presidency of the church. The Utah 1906 edition of Doctrine and Covenants is used for reference and makes the case against the apostate church strong in that they are shown to be condemned out of their own mouths.

For the subjects treated we know of no superior literature to these three tracts, for they are fair, concise, and full of history and evidence. Invest $2.25 and have 100 of three good tracts on hand for emergencies; then use them freely in your work. You may be surprised and gratified at the results.

The Sunday afternoon sacrament service was one which will be long remembered by those who were present. The Spirit of God rested upon his people in calm assurance and power while many spiritual messages were given through his servants and handmaidens. We were forcibly reminded that God is still the same unchangeable Being, who is pleased to bestow the same gifts and blessings upon his people now as in former days. Our next conference will be held in Richmond during Melbourne show week of next year. With every good wish for the advancement of this great work. H. I. Velt.

ALBERTA.—At Calgary, December 13 to 15. Owing to the prevalence of influenza the attendance was small, but a good spirit prevailed. We had three visiting missionaries with us, William Osler, Daniel Macgregor, and J. D. Stead, who supplied us with a goodly amount of spiritual food. The district business was transacted with a good spirit, a committee being elected to arrange with the other Western Canadian districts for a district monthly publication. One was baptized, and was gladly welcomed into our midst. Elder Daniel McGregor preached a powerful sermon on "The second coming of Christ," taking his text from Doctrine and Covenants 45, warning the Saints against the coming famine and pestilence that would precede Christ's second coming. On Sunday Elder Stead preached with great power, pointing out the necessity of keeping ourselves apart from the snares of the world. W. H. Chandler, secretary.

SHUMARD-ROURKE.—On December 25, 1918, at the home of the bride's parents, Brother and Sister S. A. Rourke, of Biggar, Saskatchewan, the youngest daughter, Isadora Emily, was united in marriage to Brother James Leroy Shumard, by Elder A. James Cornish, of Senlac, Saskatchewan. The bride, charmingly attired in a white silk dress trimmed with pearls, and a veil, was attended by Mrs. O. L. Newcomb. The groom was attended by S. J. Rourke. The home was decorated in Christmas style, and a fine supper was enjoyed by a few relatives and friends. The groom is highly esteemed as a new church worker, as well as a loyal citizen. The bride is equally honored, and they have a bright-looking future. They reside on the farm of the groom, near Rutland, Saskatchewan.

Our Departed Ones

KECK.—Merrill B. Keck, eldest son of Adam J., and Agnes E. White Keck, was born in Plano, Illinois, June 26, 1896. Baptized by Myron A. McConley, April 19, 1908, at Denver, Colorado. Entered his Country's service August 4, 1918. Died at Camp MacArthur, Texas, October 15, 1918, of pneumonia. Funeral service at Crown Hill Cemetery, conducted by E. J. Williams. Merrill was a young man of sterling qualities, true to his God as well as to his country. He left an unswerving testimony of faith in his Creator and devotion to the gospel, the principles of which he applied in his daily life.

1874. Of seven children, four survive her. After the death of Mr. Conkey, married Charles Charleton, December 1, 1895. One son was born, who is now with the American Expeditionary Forces in France as a volunteer. She was baptized in 1889, at Rich Hill, Missouri, where she resided until her death. Died December 12, 1918, of influenza-pneumonia, aged 63 years, 17 days. A loving husband, three sons, and two daughters mourn her. Funeral by H. E. Moler; burial at Rich Hill. She was a true, devoted, consecrated Saint.

PERCHIE.—Frederick Perchie was born November 15, 1844, at Denemosh, Cantonargon, Switzerland; baptized July 5, 1894; ordained an elder July 19, 1903. Died October 3, 1918. He gave of his best service to the church. Members and non-members speak the same of his influence for good. Sermon by Wilfred Gordoff. Buried at Ambrose Cemetery, Swanson, Saskatchewan, in the presence of a large number of friends and relatives.

BALL.—Cynthia A., daughter of Thaddeus and Catherine Ball; born February 7, 1845, in Quincy Township, Branch County, Michigan, where she spent her girlhood days. Married Francis Granger April 4, 1869. Their one son, Ralph, preceded her, November 4, 1892, at the age of 8 years. Baptized November 13, 1881, by William H. Kelley. She lived a consistent life, believing she would come forth in the great resurrection of the just. She departed this life December 19, 1918. She leaves to mourn her, a faithful husband, one brother, many relatives and friends. Funeral at house, sermon by G. A. Smith.

YOUNG.—Jennie P., second daughter of Mrs. Charles Young, was born February 12, 1898, at Owendale, Michigan. Baptized June 22, 1913, by O. J. Hawn at Port Huron, Michigan. Passed from this life December 11, 1918, at Detroit, after a brief illness of influenza and pneumonia. The remains were brought to Owendale to rest in the Grant Cemetery. She leaves to mourn, her mother, one sister, one brother. Her father and infant brother and sister preceded her. Service in charge of Myron A. Carr. A place is vacant in her home which cannot be quickly filled.

BRADT.—John R. Bradt was born in West Glenville, New York, July 30, 1843. Died December 9, 1918. Baptized in Boston about 32 years ago, remaining with Boston Branch until September, 1918, when he came to East Syracuse to make his home with a married daughter, uniting with Sherrill Branch. He was a veteran of the Civil War, and a member of the G. A. R. Services conducted by Frank Mesle at the home of his daughter. The G. A. R. held their services at the conclusion of the church services. He leaves wife, 2 daughters, and many friends to mourn.

NEVILLE.—Thomas George Neville, jr., the third son of Thomas George and Bessie Neville, was born June 28, 1913, at Akron, Ohio; died at Akron, Ohio, December 6, 1918. Had been sick with influenza about a week when called home. Besides his father and mother, he leaves 3 brothers to mourn his loss. Sermon by A. R. Manchester. Interment in Mount Hope Cemetery.

LOGAN.—Sarah Ellen Logan, daughter of Mary Ann Quick, deceased, born at London, Ontario, July 26, 1874; died of pneumonia in Detroit, Michigan, December 5, 1918. Leaves to mourn, her husband, John W. Logan, 2 sisters, Mrs. T. F. Turcott, of Rochelle, New York, and Sister William Fligg, of London, Ontario. Baptized April 24, 1884. Funeral services conducted by William Grice. Interment in Woodland Cemetery, London, Ontario.

GRIFFITH.—James Griffith was born November 22, 1885, at Renick, Randolph County, Missouri. Baptized July 4, 1897, at Higbee, Missouri, by M. M. Turpen. Died at Taylorville, Illinois, November 12, 1918, from injuries received in the mine. Married Miss Fay Hodson about 9 years ago, who, with 4 small children, father, mother, brothers, and sisters, survives him. Funeral at Saints' church by Luther Simpson.

CHRISTIANSON.—Mildred Christianson, born September 6, 1914, at Marchant Grove, Saskatchewan, Canada, died December 12, 1918, of pneumonia. Though her life was short, she will long be remembered. Leaves to mourn, father, mother, and baby brother, grandparents, aunts, and uncles. Funeral in charge of Reverend Khandall.

JENKINS.—Lulu Claire Jenkins, of Thamesford, Ontario, was baptized at the age of seventeen. Last fall she started a normal course in London, where she took ill on December 3, and died December 5, in Saint Joseph's Hospital. She was considered an exceptionally bright student, and was progressing well when the summons came. She leaves to mourn, mother, father, a sister, and one brother. Funeral services on Sunday, December 8, from her home in Thamesford, Frank Gray, of London, in charge. Discourse by William Grice.

ROBERTS.—Henry Roberts was born at Dowlais, Wales, January, 1847. Baptized April 4, 1864, at Blue Ridge, Saint Louis, Missouri. Ordained an elder August 30, 1891. Married Margaret Lewis in 1867, who still survives him, together with one son, 2 daughters, and 8 grandchildren, who mourn his loss. He gave long and faithful service to the church and passed peacefully to rest at Saint Louis, Missouri, October 16, 1918. Funeral services conducted by George Barraclough. Interment in the O'Fallon Cemetery at O'Fallon, Illinois.

SAMPSON.—Martha Elizabeth Sampson was born in Rochester, New York, August 31, 1854. Married Matthew Williams Sampson at Green River, Wyoming, January 29, 1873. She became identified with the church in 1879, having been baptized by Mark Forscutt at a semiannual General Conference at Gallands Grove, Iowa. Since the death of her husband over two years ago, she has gradually failed in health, and passed away October 23, 1918, at Denver, Colorado. She leaves 3 daughters, all faithful gospel workers. Funeral service in charge of E. J. Williams, interment at Crown Hill.

HOLMES.—At Clay Cross, Derbyshire, England, Lillie Holmes died at the home of her parents, Simon and Rachel Holmes, November 20, 1918. Born July 25, 1899; baptized January 7, 1914. Died from pneumonia, preceded by influenza. Was bright and intelligent and loved by all. Was an earnest church and Sunday school worker. Interred at Clay Cross Cemetery, November 24, Abel Hall officiating. Funeral services December 1, at Clay Cross church, sermon by Abel Hall.

KEARNS.—William H. Kearns, born July 28, 1900, at Neola, Iowa, died December 16, 1918, of influenza and pneumonia. Baptized by W. E. Haden. Leaves to mourn, his parents, 2 brothers, and one sister. Brief services at the home and at the cemetery by H. N. Hansen, assisted by Joshua Carlile.

CLARK.—Clara Lovina Lane was born at Neola, Iowa, December 19, 1882. Died near Geneseo, Illinois, December 25, 1918. Married William Clark, October 11, 1902. Was baptized near Lamoni when quite young. Sister Clark leaves many relatives and friends to mourn, among whom are a devoted husband, 3 sons, one daughter, mother, sister, and brothers. Services at the home near Geneseo, Illinois, December 27, 1918, by Columbus Scott.

FROM HERE AND THERE

Beginning with the issue of January 7, Stepping Stones, the most popular Sunday school paper, begins a series of "Missionary storiottes," to continue throughout the year, one in each number. The first one is by Elder T. W. Williams, and the second by Elder R. V. Hopkins. A short biographical note accompanies each and we are confident that it will be one of the most appreciated features of the year. Those who do not receive the paper in the Sunday school would do well to subscribe for a year at fifty cents, for in each number there is much of value, and during the year will be some especially valuable stories and articles.

In a personal letter to one of the brethren, J. A. Matthews, of Columbus, Ohio, says: "Influenza was quite prevalent in our city, and there were many deaths. I administered to twenty-eight in one week. All the Saints got along fine, thanks to the abundant mercy of God."

A letter from C. L. Crow, of Logan, Iowa, tells of a successful fathers' day program in our church at that place. An appropriate program was rendered, including an appropriate poem written for the occasion by Frank Hill, as captain of the soliciting committee for the "fathers." These special days are planned as a climax to special efforts to increase the Christmas offering fund. In this instance $210 was contributed to the fund, making $434.10. The girls' day program on the previous Sunday (December 22) raised $224.10. These occasions are given considerable time and special preparation and as a result they draw big crowds and are a rousing success from every standpoint. Mrs. Rose Adams, Mrs. Frank Hill, and Miss Ollie Derry were the recipients of many compliments for the work incident to the girls' day program, we are informed by our correspondent. Logan's successful special days might well be an incentive to many other communities.

Each year we receive special Christmas contributions for publication and are compelled to forego the pleasure of printing them because they reach us too late for the current season. While we are not so limited as to time as monthly publications, yet we cannot do as the daily does. Then during the holiday season we usually go to press a day earlier in order to send out the papers on time and still observe the customary holiday. This little explanation will be helpful to those who have favored us this year and failed to see their contributions in print, and should be a hint of value to others who would similarly contribute in the future. Let us have as much time as possible to make our plans and arrange our space.

The choir at the First Detroit Branch is making ready to provide a musical program for Sunday evening, January 22. They have been commended of late by men of the church who are in a position to judge the value of their work. The Sunday school and Religio of the First Branch have gladly accepted the pastor's nominations for the presiding officers of their respective departments, falling in with the movement to coordinate in harmony with the action of the branch last July. Brother Gillen complimented them on the splendid organization throughout the branch. Coordinated effort brings success.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

FORGIVENESS

Matthew informs us that when Peter asked how often should one forgive a brother, "till seven times?" the Master answered, "I say not unto thee, until seven times; but until seventy times seven." (Matthew 18:21.)

This theme is discussed at some length in Doctrine and Covenants 95, covering not only the case of a brother, but of one not a brother, cases of repentance and cases of no repentance; the case of a people as well as that of an individual.

The theme of forgiveness by us is emphasized many times in the gospel. In Luke 17:3, 4, we are commanded to forgive our brother, seven times in one day, if he turns and repents.

To many, as a commandment, it is sufficient, however hard, however little it appears at times to appeal to humanity. There is a natural tendency to retaliate, to wish to give hurt for hurt; or to wish by ostracism to continue or return injury. Those who do the latter often think themselves superior; they will not "stoop" to pay back in kind but say, "I have no use for him and never will have." They forgive not, but pass by on the other side, and by action, and often by words, continue an injury.

There is a natural tendency at times to ask, like the little boy did, who was saying his prayers, when his brother took a straw and tickled the bottom of his foot, "O Lord, please excuse me for a few minutes, while I lick Jimmy!"

But our Father cannot do that, for the reasons lie deep in our own natures. He cannot excuse us and not count it, for a wrong act leaves its impress on us.

So we read:

For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you: but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your father forgive your trespasses.—Matthew 6:14, 15.

Verily I say unto you, I, the Lord, forgiveth sins unto those who confess their sins before me, and ask forgiveness, who have not sinned unto death. My disciples, in days of old, sought occasion against one another, and forgave not one another in their hearts, and for this evil they were afflicted, and sorely chastened; wherefore I say unto you, that ye ought to forgive one another, for he that forgiveth not his brother his trespasses, standeth condemned before the Lord, for there remaineth in him the greater sin. I, the Lord, will forgive whom I will forgive, but of you it is required to forgive all men; and ye ought to say in your hearts, Let God judge between me and thee, and reward thee according to thy deeds. And he that repenteth not of his sins, and confesseth them not, then ye shall bring him before the church, and do with him as the scriptures saith unto you, either by commandment, or by revelation. And this ye shall do that God might be glorified, not because ye forgive not, having not compassion, but that ye may be justified in the eyes of the law, that ye may not offend him who is your Lawgiver.—Doctrine and Covenants 64:2.

Our sins punish us, as they leave their impress on our character and we have to live with ourselves and our own meanness.

As we all make mistakes, though not equal in degree, it is true, we should be the more ready to forgive others' mistakes. And if the wrong is deliberate, all the more is there reason we should pray, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." (Luke 23:34.)

Certainly an offense against one of us will be much less in degree than that offense against God which Jesus asked to be forgiven his persecutors. But it is doubtful if so many would sin if each one could clearly realize the consequences in self-injury.

So we are commanded to pray for those who despitefully use us. (Matthew 5:44.) Nor is the reason for their good alone, but principally for our own moral development. "That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven."

He who preserves an ancient injury, prolongs the original wrong, and so is guilty of a greater sin than he who first gave offense. He not only repeats and keeps alive the ancient wrong and injures in return and receives further injury by way of snubs, but he limits his own self-development, and is henceforth cast in smaller mold.

What I think and say of another is often only a measure of my own character, and moral and spiritual outlook.

The evil we do not only hurts others, and often still others beyond the original intent, but reacts and leaves its living mark on us.

This which is emphatically true of individuals, since light and truth forsake the evil one, has also its application when nations are under consideration.

It is for this reason the allies could not follow the violations of international law and of human rights, and retaliate in kind in like destruction and vandalism. We learn now of warships sunk by British submarines, but of no passenger ships, of no drowning children and women. Airplanes bombed military posts, but did not seek out open cities, women and children, hospitals, and doctors and nurses for wanton destruction. Nor in many other ways did the allies retaliate, and gas civilians or attack civilians, especially women.

The allied armies are now directed to show Germany, by example, the difference of conduct in an occupying army, by courtesy and right behavior. President Wilson, Premier Lloyd George, Premier Clemenceau, all urge no spirit of hate, but a just peace.

This may be taken as weakness by their opponents. It is the Christian, civilized manner of conduct.

But the allied nations cannot afford retaliation because of what it would mean, reacting on their national character. A portion of the punishment of the central powers rested in this narrowed vision and concept of ethics, and the added fact that they have to live with themselves.

This does not mean that all individuals are or should be joined in condemnation, but it is a national catastrophe to hold as ideals such concepts of frightfulness.

Nor does the plea for no retaliation, no hate, mean the whole series of crimes are eradicated. We do not have to copy the methods of a defective, nor pay back a criminal in kind; yet justly moral wrong should be, and is, punished, and the paranoic, relieved of possibility for further injury.

So should the individual and collective criminals be sought out and punished, the wanton destruction and looting of property paid for, and the power to repeat such a violation of human rights limited. It is only justice that there should be such curtailment and punishment of those guilty.

But there should be no spirit of hate, but only a spirit of helpfulness. The surgeon and psychiatrist are not actuated by hate, but by a desire to cure and correct human ills.

It should also be clearly recognized that not all individuals in any nation are actuated by like desires and motives. Many are not blameworthy. In this broader field the spirit of forgiveness should be manifest, and reconstruction for the best good of all mankind, including our former opponents, be made.

The Christian teachings of forgiveness rests on clear, logical reasons, for sin causes its own punishment. In the individual and in the Nation.

A brother writes:

Nothing out of the ordinary transpired during the week. The mid-week meetings were not so well attended, especially noticeable at the young people's prayer meeting. By taking a few observations, I found the cause to be an extra show in town. It is really remarkable the number of people (old as well as young) who attend the shows regularly. Some of the people here hurry away from prayer meetings on Wednesday evenings, hardly giving one time to shake hands with them. And I learn that they go to the show for the second act. The chorister came to me Sunday with the tale of woe that her singers would not come to the song practice until almost eight-thirty, and because of going to the show at nine did not have time to practice, neither were their minds on their practice for thinking of the show and watching the clock for fear of not getting away on time. When I attempt to discourage the thing, I am met with the defense that some of the leading men in the church indulge in such pastime. One remarked to me, "Since the big men of the church say nothing about such things, why do you try to make yourself conspicuous by doing it?"

To the foregoing letter reply was made, as follows:

Your letter of September 17 was referred to me for answer, after consultation with President Frederick M. Smith. The church has taken a very definite stand by General Conference resolution against the practice of theater going.

So far as moving picture shows are concerned, a certain amount of individual latitude and discretion must be allowed. There are picture shows which undoubtedly are educational. Members of the church ought to be free to attend such shows, within reason, under proper conditions; but such shows are probably few by comparison with the many cheap, unprofitable, and sometimes immoral exhibitions, and they ought not to be made an excuse to waste time, money, and physical and mental health and strength in constant attendance at inferior picture shows.

The practice of persistent, indiscriminate theater-going and attendance at picture shows is to be discouraged. Observation indicates that those who attend picture shows habitually as a rule lose their interest in the church. There may not be complete backsliding, but spirituality is reduced to a low ebb. Your own observation, contained in your letter, as to conditions in your branch confirms that opinion.

It may be true, as these individuals urge, that some of the so-called "big men" of the church attend these exhibitions and say nothing against them. If so, then there are two very important lessons to be learned from that matter. If these men only occasionally attend educational shows of a high character, the members ought not to seize upon their example as an excuse to run constantly to shows of an inferior grade, more especially when that makes them neglect their church duties and services to do so. If, on the other hand, these "big men" themselves are guilty of indiscretion and excess in such matters, they may very well learn a lesson from the condition obtaining in your branch as a result of following their example in such things.

Very sincerely yours,
ELBERT A. SMITH.

THEY PREFER ONE ANOTHER

It is interesting to note, not only now but during the past few years, the effect in Europe especially, along with all the devastation and horror of war, of a religious revival. This is especially notable in the countries close to the battle front. In western Europe there is a devoted purpose, as of a crusader, with the French and the English, as well as with the American soldier; and that for the accomplishment of a right purpose, and the ending of the horrors.

We have noted with interest several stories in The Literary Digest, and elsewhere, concerning the attitude of the soldiers at the front who have been wounded, how they regularly prefer one another. One who is slightly wounded insists that he be passed for the time being, and that they give attention to those who are seriously wounded; that he can stand it all right and will pull through, and that they go to those poor fellows who need their help right away.

Then there is the man very gravely wounded who insists that there is no hope for him, so "please give attention to some fellow who can be helped and restored."

There is this spirit in addition to the heroism and courage—something more than has ordinarily been understood by the word "charity." Yet it is a preferring of one another. Such instances, we are assured, are by no means uncommon.

THREE NEW TRACTS

Last General Conference Elder John W. Rushton of the Quorum of Twelve submitted three tracts to the First Presidency and Joint Council. They were all approved and have recently been printed and are now on sale by the Herald Publishing House and Ensign Publishing House, at seventy-five cents per hundred. They are printed on a good quality of white paper in an attractive form, and are short and to the point, being six and eight pages each, and folded so as to be easily read. They are the right size to mail in a number 10 envelope without folding.

A Nineteenth Century Prophet and His Work, is a splendid tract for introductory purposes. It sets out the need of such a work as that which was done by Joseph Smith; his claim that God spoke to him and the reason for the revival of the Biblical ideas of Zion—a kingdom of God on earth. It is a good tract for a missionary, and this means for young people, men and women, as well as the Quorums of Seventy, to use in introducing our work.

The President of the Church—The Law of Succession, is an eight-page discussion useful in calling the salient points to the attention of the people of Utah. It quotes the Doctrine and Covenants showing the Utah faction to be entirely out of harmony therewith. It also refers to the statements of Joseph F. Smith, Brigham Young, B. H. Roberts, and others in pointing out the difference between the human plan and that which God laid down.

The Utah edition of Doctrine and Covenants, 1906 edition, is used for references, and makes the case against that church strong in that they are condemned by their own written record.

The Latter Day Saints—A Question of Identity. This tract proves the Utah apostasy by the evidence in their own standard works. It shows that the Reorganization is in fact the original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. It is a good tract for use wherever the question is raised of the true church, that which continues the teaching of Joseph Smith the Prophet. This tract is especially clear on the apostasy of Brigham Young, the law of marriage, and the history of polygamy, and the law of tithing—contrasting the positions taken by the two churches on each of these topics.

These tracts are fair, even lenient, concise, yet full of historical evidence. They are three good tracts to have on hand to be used freely for general distribution for the difference between the two churches and the reasons therefore are needed not only in Utah, but practically everywhere, as those who are ignorant of the facts are prone to confuse them wrongfully.

They may be ordered from either of our publishing houses.

We desire to call your attention to the article appearing in last week's HERALD and Ensign from President George N. Briggs of Graceland College. We desire officially and personally to urge the boys of the church who have been with the colors to take every advantage of the educational opportunities offered. Surely the experience of the men with the colors and the Government in seeking trained men for officers has emphasized the necessity and value of college training, and the boys of the church who are contemplating taking up educational work will do well to look into the equipment of Graceland and consider the advantages it has for those of our faith.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President of the Church.

JOSEPH SMITH DID NOT SANCTION POLYGAMY

In The Outlook of December 4, there appeared an item concerning the death of Joseph F. Smith. It contains inaccurate statements about Joseph Smith, the seer.

Another statement in many papers is decidedly incorrect, as they state that Joseph and Hyrum Smith were taken to Carthage jail shortly after presenting the doctrine of polygamy.

We have received a number of papers from all over the United States and Canada containing this misstatement. At first we thought that they were possibly copied from some one original, but if so, credit has not been thus given, while similarity of form and language would lead one to believe that they were prepared and issued from Salt Lake City. In fact, many of these clippings so credit the item. They have been sent broadcast and simultaneously to many newspapers all over the country.

Some of them contain also a statement that the claim of Joseph F. Smith to be the head of the church was, "disputed by several apostate organizations, including the Missouri Branch."

It seems strange after all these years, that so many will continue to make these unjustifiable assertions. It has been distinctly before the courts on two occasions when property was involved—before Judge Sherman in the Common Pleas Court for Lake County, Ohio, concerning the title to the Kirtland Temple, and before Judge John F. Philips, in the United States District Court for the Western District of Missouri, affecting the Temple Lot. In both cases the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was found to be the true successor, identical in doctrine with the original church, and the church in Utah to be apostate. In two other cases the distinction of the two churches has been recognized. Also in the Reed Smoot case the distinction was recognized, and Senator Burroughs in particular referred to the fact that the Reorganized Church has been recognized repeatedly by the courts as the legitimate successor.

To this we may add the fact, unknown perhaps to some of our readers, that every person belonging to the church in Utah was rebaptized and reconfirmed in Utah; and those claiming the priesthood, before being permitted to exercise in their office were reordained. They were already members of the church founded by Joseph Smith. Pray into what church were they then baptized?

The Reorganized Church, upon the other hand, has received many of the old timers on their original baptism, and in fact, have taken over whole branches that have never been disorganized.

If those who have noted this article and have not had it corrected will call it to our attention, we shall be glad to see that proper steps are taken.

While we do not attempt to reply in these columns to every attack, we are glad to have copies for our file, and for us to take such action as may appear advisable in the interest of the work.

Judge Philips also found as a matter of evidence that polygamy was introduced by Brigham Young, and that the evidence is altogether insufficient to show Joseph Smith ever taught any such doctrine.

At this time when efforts are being made to confuse the public mind we are pleased to notice so clear-cut a statement as the following from the Free Press, London, Ontario, November 20.

The local Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, of Latter Day Saints, whose beautiful new edifice on Maitland Street was recently used for an emergency hospital, wish the city of London to distinctly understand that it has no affiliation or any connection whatever with the Utah Mormon Church, who call themselves Latter Day Saints, the death of whose leader was announced yesterday.

The original church which the local body represents was organized in 1830 and remained intact until 1844, when its leaders were shot in Carthage gaol for proclaiming to the world that an angel had appealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith, commanding him to organize a church according to the divine pattern as founded by Jesus Christ in former days. This is the real cause which precipitated the death of the Martyrs Joseph and Hyrum Smith and not for preaching plurality of wives, as stated in a recent account, Elder Gray states.

The Utah Mormon Church was organized by Brigham Young in Salt Lake City, Utah, in 1852, eight years after the assassination of Mr. Smith, there introducing for the first time a doctrine of plurality of wives, Adam God worship, blood atonement, thus apostatizing from the original church.

The original church remained unorganized owing to the death of its leaders until 1860, when a son of the prophet who had been previously ordained prior to his father's death, reorganized the church known at the present day the world over as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, by the apostasy of Brigham Young and the Utah Church the prophecy of Jeremiah, chapter 17, verse 5, was fulfilled.

"Thus saith the Lord, cursed be the man that trusteth in man and maketh flesh his arm and whose heart departeth from the Lord, for he shall be like the heath in the desert and shall not see when good cometh, but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land and not inhabited."

Did you ever think that while the preacher's mind is filled with the Spirit of God, and he sees in the countenances of some of his hearers that they rejoice in that light, that he would be excusable for preaching long? Did you ever hear of a real, genuine kicker, grumbler, and faultfinder, that could not find fault with most anything under the sun?—S. K. Sorensen.

THE REDEMPTION OF ZION

I am pleased to have this opportunity to address the Saints of these latter days in the closing day of service of this year. About sixty hours more and the year 1918 will slip down the ways of time into the vast ocean of history. Volumes have been written and still more volumes will be written of the ravages of a war such as this world has never before known, of the suffering endured, of the achievements wrought, of the wreck of nations, of the work of the agencies of mercy. They will tell how, out of this awful holocaust, there was revealed, unveiled, or discovered the Spirit of him who came to give his life that men might be saved. They will tell that while thrones tottered and nations were dissolved, while all the force and might that men could gather together were assembled in battle array, still that which prevailed through it all was that which the apostles of him who gave his life that we might have life and have it more abundantly thought was lost when they witnessed him nailed to the cross of Calvary.

While we this morning may speak of what is great to the world at large, the momentous events that have transpired, as those who have seen a vision—and where there is no vision the people perish—we are engaged in devoting our best that the suffering and the pain and the grief that has been undergone by the people of the earth these past four years shall not be without avail. We are interested in seeing that the ideal that is set before us as a people shall mean to the peoples of the earth what it means to us.

ESTABLISHING ZION

There has been a great deal written and there has been much spoken from behind the sacred desk regarding the hope of the Saints of latter days in the establishment of Zion. In the 36th section of the Doctrine and Covenants is the statement, "And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them." By the statement that they were of one heart, your speaker understands that the people experienced that impulse of their souls which our Savior referred to when asked the question, "Which is the greatest commandment?" and he answered, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, might, mind, and strength. And the second is like unto the first, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." He understands that the people of Zion, the Zion of God, will respond to the love of God, such love as was exemplified when he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him shall not perish but have everlasting life.

Last Sunday evening we listened to a sermon delivered here in elaboration of the thought that the mind that was in Christ Jesus should be in us; and when the Lord here speaks of the people being of one mind, my conception is that this people will have the mind that will give them the understanding and will give them the judgment which was exercised by our Lord and Master. "And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness." The Apostle Paul says, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation; from faith to faith, and therein is the righteousness of God revealed." And therein is the righteousness of God revealed.

The gospel of Jesus Christ is the "glad tidings of great joy" that he brought to the world; and while oftentimes we restrict the meaning of the gospel to those fundamental principles of it—of faith in God, of repentance of past sins, of baptism for the remission of sins, of laying on of hands—I understand the gospel as here used to be that which our Savior referred to when he said, "My father gave me a commandment what I should say and what I should speak, and I know that his commandment is life everlasting." And on another occasion, when Satan would have him use his power to appease his hunger, he said, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

NO POOR AMONG THEM

"And there was no poor among them." From what we hear from time to time, and from the letters received, one might get the impression that the Saints of God were particularly interested in the accumulation and possession of this world's goods, the material things. And it appears from the statements we hear and the letters we read that some are of the opinion that poverty will be overcome by a distribution of material things. I do not understand that the gospel of Jesus Christ teaches that Zion conditions will be brought about through following any such method; but if I understand the text which I have selected this morning, "And they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness," and "there was no poor among them," the condition of poverty was removed, not because of a distribution of wealth only, but as a consequence of the manner in which the people lived.

We can be poor, not only in our lack of this world's goods, but we can be poor in physical strength, in physical vitality; we can be poor in mental strength, in mental vitality; we can also be poor in spirituality; poor in the response of our soul to the soul of Him who gave himself that we might be saved. And if we would remove poverty, we must—and I feel this morning to emphasize that word just as strongly and in the same way that our Savior emphasized the word when he told Nicodemus that he must be born again—we must perceive, we must understand and make application of the principles of life in every condition and in every phase and situation of life. Unless we do this, we cannot hope ever to evolve that condition which we refer to as Zion, which we hope will be of such power and force in this world as not only to bring blessings to us, but to alleviate the pain and suffering of our fellow men the world around.

SOON DEBT-FREE IF WE DO NOT SLACKEN

During the past year, during the past two years, the Saints have made wonderful strides in relieving this church from the bondage of debt. As I said a few weeks ago in Kansas City, and I believe I reiterated it from this stand, the indications are that by the time we convene again in General Conference, if our efforts are not slackened, we will be free from the shackles of debt and be in position to devote our time and attention to some real constructive work looking toward the accomplishment of the purposes and designs of God through his church.

While the Saints should rejoice, while they should feel glad because they have achieved so much in this regard, I am becoming more satisfied—if it is possible for one who is satisfied to be more so—that Zion cannot be redeemed by dollars and cents. I believe as I have before stated here, at least I have stated it somewhere in the past month, that the gospel will be reduced to the language of those who speak other than English, and will be carried by our missionaries to those nations who have before prevented the preaching of the gospel within their borders; but I want to say that I believe, and I think that the brethren of the ministry in general feel the burden of this thought, that no matter how eloquently the gospel is preached, no matter in how many languages it is spoken, unless it is spoken in that way, unless it is taught in that manner, impelled by that spirit which prompted our Savior to give himself as a ransom for us, we shall not be able in this day of opportunity to find that point of contact with the people of the earth who are so much in need of the gospel and what it means as to carry these "glad tidings of great joy" to them.

REVELATION OF GOD

We hear from time to time and we read from time to time that the people of the church in places other than Independence are looking this way for a revelation of the gospel of Jesus Christ. I was talking yesterday with a brother who thought—and he holds this thought in common with many others I know—that we should have something in the nature of a revelation to tell us how to organize Zion. If the scales have not been taken off our eyes, if we have not been able to read with understanding hearts the revelations of God that have already been written and handed down to us and from time to time explained to us, can we hope that if the Lord again speaks we will have any clearer conception of his truth? The Lord desires that we may obtain the understanding by the application of the gospel, so far as we know it.

We say to those who are not of the church, he that will do God's will shall know of the doctrine. That is very wholesome teaching. That is truth. We may ask ourselves this morning, To what extent have we made application of the doctrine so far as we understand it? And if we have not made application of the doctrine as we understand it, could we hope, if the Lord through his prophet spoke to us again, that it would do us any more good than that which has already been spoken to us through the prophet? I believe, Saints, that there is given to us an opportunity such as man never before had. There is given to us an opportunity such as those who have lived in the past have longed to see; and I am satisfied that there has been prepared and is being prepared a people who will give expression in their lives to the principles of truth as enunciated by our Savior, that through their individual effort and collective effort that shall be reflected to the world that power, that force, that means which will bring to the peoples of the earth the knowledge of the fact that Jesus was the Christ.

If we are anything, and if we are what we claim to be, we ought to be the living expression in our several situations and positions in life, exemplification of the life and work of our Lord and Master.

WE HAVE PROGRESSED WONDERFULLY

We have made wonderful, wonderful progress. There lies before us opportunity to make still further progress. The general officers of the church are concerned about what will be done during the coming year, but no matter how many plans may be formulated, how many measures may be adopted, how many resolutions may be passed, unless these measures adopted and resolutions passed and these programs outlined find a response in the hearts and minds and lives of the people, they will be of no avail.

As a department of the church, the Bishopric are initiating measures that will better provide for the collection of the offerings of the people. They have under consideration, measures that they believe, if put into operation, will bring about a more equitable distribution of the revenues of the church; they hope that there will be adopted measures that the means received will be utilized in a manner which will bring the greatest degree of good in all our various activities in and through the church.

What of gathering and the organizing of ourselves so as to more clearly and better express our views upon the economic question about industrial and business enterprises? We have undertaken in the past year and put into operation processes being carried on at the present time, the consequences of which we believe will be to give opportunities to the Saints as individual and as collective units, to manifest the principles of the doctrine of Christ in their business affairs. But the question comes back to us, What will be the use of evolving plans and methods of procedure if those that engage in these several activities have not the heart and the mind and do not conform their lives to those righteous principles through which these measures can be the means of giving expression to the power of God unto salvation? While we may say a great deal about gathering and establishment of Zion in a temporal way, back of it all and upon which it must rest in order to be a success is the fact that the people of God must be of one heart and one mind and dwell in righteousness or the result that there were no poor among them cannot follow. I am glad to say that, while from time to time we hear and read about those who seem to lack an understanding of what is necessary to bring about the conditions we are seeking to bring about, there are hundreds, yea thousands of members of this church who are willing to give as Christ gave, not only of their very lives as measured in dollars and cents, but they are willing to lay the best they have in the way of sacrifice on the altar, that the designs and the purposes of God may be accomplished. And all of these are not outside of the borders of Zion. I have found in Independence men and women and children—you have mingled with them and know them—who are like Nathaniel of old, without guile.

JUDGMENT AND SKILL ESSENTIAL

But right here let me say something: While I may be honest, while I may be charitably disposed, while I may be kind, that will not redeem Zion. As I remarked just to-day to a brother, while kindness and love and integrity of soul are necessary and fundamental, if we do not have a mind, an understanding, a judgment, if we do not have the skill to carry into effect the means or the measures or the resolutions that may be adopted, the result will not be what we would have it to be.

So this morning, Saints, there is this lesson I would like to leave with you, there is this thought that I wish you would meditate upon: That the Zion of God must be of one heart and one mind and dwell in righteousness; if so, there will be no poor among them. I would like to leave this thought, too, in explanation of it, or to further emphasize it, that poverty will not be overcome by the distribution of wealth, the distribution of material wealth; we cannot have Zion by constant almsgiving; we cannot have Zion by forever and a day distributing to the needy, but we will have Zion—and we will have it—as an evolution, a development, a working through the people of the principles of the doctrine of Christ, the gospel of Jesus Christ as I have explained it, “every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.”

MAKE A NEW RESOLUTION

At the close of this year, then, let us as we are wont to do make a new resolution. “New resolution,” some say, “what is the use of making resolutions?” Well, suppose you do break them. It is better to keep on making them than never to make them. Every good resolution counts for just that much, even if it is afterwards broken. So let us before the new year opens resolve that no matter what somebody else does, no matter how this individual or that individual performs the task that has been assigned to him, responding to the love of God, having a clear vision of what our duty is, let each of us say, “I will do my part.” And if each of us will so resolve, there will be enough so that the Lord may be able to operate through them as a body for the accomplishment of his purposes. If, on the other hand, I become downhearted and discouraged, disappointed and depressed because of what I think somebody else does, or because of what I think somebody says somebody else does, and I do not do my part and others likewise do not do their part, we will not be able to accomplish the designs and purposes of God.

God is with his people to-day. You know it, and I know it. We have felt the promptings of his Spirit as we have conversed with those who have come to us for counsel and advice. We have felt the influence of his Spirit as we have read the letters that have reached our desk. We have felt his Spirit as we have visited among his people, not only in this city, but also in other cities. The Spirit of God is to-day striving with his people, and I am satisfied that God will make bare his arm of power though we can but see as through a glass darkly at the present time.

He will make bare his arm of power to accomplish his purposes and establish Zion of the latter days, which shall be an ensign to the people of the earth.

May we who are here this morning see to it that we do our part to help raise that ensign, that it may be a banner of liberty, a banner of love, a banner to alleviate the suffering and distress of the peoples of the earth; that it may be more than a dream; that it may be something lived out in the terms of everyday human conduct, that we may be able to make our teaching effective by our example. May this be our resolve and prayer for the year 1919.

ON TO VICTORY

(Memorial sermon of Lieutenant Lyman E. Case, September 29, 1918, at Lamoni, Iowa, by John F. Garver. Reported by Winsome Smith-McDonald. Brother Case was a pilot in the aviation department. On August 14, 1918, he was killed in action "Somewhere in France.")

It seems fitting that we meet to-day to commemorate the sacrifices we are making in the present great struggle for humanity. And we come not only to commemorate these things, but to gather courage for other like occasions which are before us in connection with this colossal, international struggle.

In the young life we have just given as a community, together with others given in the supreme sacrifice, we have reached the very acme of our devotion to the cause of right, the very zenith of our activity under service. And while we deeply deplore this situation, and regret the necessity for this occasion, yet it seems fitting that for a time we meditate upon the things which have brought us to this unhappy hour; and that from this scene we take new inspiration for the work yet to be performed in the world's liberation.

The passing of our young brother then is emblematic of the further efforts necessary on our part to wage successfully this war to its proper end. So we can hardly hope to enter upon the occasion without some brief consideration, at least, of the further task before us. And we may also review the fundamentals over which we are at war.

THE LOVE OF GOD

We turn to the sacred Scriptures as the man of our counsel. At such a time, with our hearts laid bare, we come for our bearings for the eternal truth of Almighty God:

Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples. As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you: continue ye in my love. If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love. These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full. This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you.—John 15: 8-14.

So reading we are enabled to comprehend that the children of light are only to receive for themselves the love and deliverance of God, but that they are also to become willing to minister that other men may be brought out of the conditions of darkness which have fallen upon the earth, and have laid before them the opportunities of redemption through the great light of eternal truth.

In this connection we remember the statement of our Savior as to the purpose of his own coming into the world, when he said, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

There is for us solace in this great theme: God so loved the world that he gave his Son, to the end that men in darkness, that even we, might come to light.

And as men hearken to the counsels of his Son, so is there developed in their hearts the willingness to go forth if need be, and to die for their friends, to the end that the great truth, the purpose of heaven, may be carried to all mankind upon the earth.

A SIN-CURSED WORLD

Now, if we are to vision to any degree the love of God as expressed for us in the suffering and through the death of his Son, we must if we can, vision first the state of that world concerning which Christ spoke. He was speaking of a world of dire distress, crushed beneath the weight of sin, fallen away in darkness, and in evil. It was this fallen world, mankind lost, that God so loved that he was willing to yield even his only begotten Son to the end that through his ministering and sacrifice and example of life and of service, men might be won back to the Father. This was the world that God loved.

So Christ came as a mediator between heaven and earth, spending all that he had, not only his life upon the cross, but before that great sacrifice, all things he possessed he gave in sacred service. So he came that out of the terrible condition into which it had fallen the earth might be redeemed.

Now mankind is in bondage to this day because the purposes of God have not been carried forward as they should have been. Men and women are held in the shackles of darkness and of evil because other men and women as well as they themselves have sinned, rather than because God made the earth to be so. And it is out of this state God has purposes that—through Jesus Christ, by following the laws he enunciated, by observing the principles he laid down —the earth may everywhere be delivered from bondage, receiving that degree of light and intelligence which he designed for men who would follow his counsels.

GOD'S PURPOSE EVER CONSTANT

We understand then that God's purposes are ever constant. They are with us, not only in the church, but in the world; and in his own due time it shall please him to rule and overrule, to the end that conditions shall not always continue evil upon the earth.

We note the operation of this God's immutable law in the history men have written. When a people has forgotten the ways of uprightness, when a people has left its first love and come to iniquity, that people has been cut off from its inheritances, swept from the face of the earth. On the other hand, to the degree that a people has observed the laws of righteousness, the laws of God, so has that people with its institutions continued upon the earth.

God's purposes then are one eternal round.

As we meditate upon this fact in connection with the occasion which brings us together, we are we think justified in the conclusion that those who align themselves on the side of righteousness, align themselves on the side of God; and that those who align themselves on the opposite side, align themselves with the forces of evil, forces which from the beginning have been exerted for the downfall of mankind upon the earth, and which to the end of time shall continue to make for the downfall of nations as well as of men. And we feel justified in the further conclusion that inasmuch as righteousness and evil are in this great international struggle arrayed the one against the other, surely it must be God's purpose that eventually righteousness shall prevail; and we believe it shall be so if those directing the allied cause direct it to the end of the ultimate deliverance of the oppressed of earth's children.

SERVING TO THE UTTERMOST

We serve God then if we serve righteousness; and we serve him not only that we ourselves may be liberated, but to the end that through our ministrations other men may be likewise liberated.

It is a goodly motive which actuates a man, and under which he comes before God in seeking the redemption of his own soul. But if that be the end of his devotion, he is a selfish man indeed. If his ear be open to the truth, if his vision be turned toward the light, that man may eventually perceive in fuller degree the redemptive grace of Christ. As he serves God under this divine inspiration, learning the eternal purpose of our heavenly Father, that man learns to love his fellow men. Loving his fellow men, he becomes willing to serve his fellow men. And eventually there may come to him that degree of conception which enables him to love his fellow men even to the extent that he stands ready if need be to lay his life down for them, for those who are struggling toward the light, for these are also his friends.

It is a matter of comfort that our late friend and brother measured up to this standard. His life among us was as an open book. We knew him as a boy and as a young man. We knew his devotion to the truth; we knew his ready help in the family; we knew his clean life; we knew his every purpose, his every effort to better qualify himself for the battle of life. And we knew him to willingly offer his service that this great Nation might continue upon the earth, not only as it now exists, but as a light bearer and liberator, a peace advocate before all men and nations as it has never done before.

From whatever angle we may approach his life, we are glad to know that he measures up, and measures up to the uttermost. So, in his devotion to his country, in his reverence for the flag, and for the institutions for which that flag stands, he was willing to go out and to spend himself, even to the giving of his life, that these institutions might forever live among men. And so he loved and served his fellow men.

While he was with us, after his departure from us, and to the last moment of his life upon the earth, he served. I do not know of a greater tribute that could be brought to this young man than this: Having learned the ways of righteousness, having developed within his life a goodly degree of love for God and mankind, he followed the colors, spending his life in the interests of humanity. As thousands and thousands of other young men have done, he spent his life to the end that the world might be made free, and a fit place in which men may live.

A GOODLY CAUSE

I think we may be permitted to mention specifically some of the things for which this young man died. And it ought to be a comfort to his mother, to his sisters, and to his brother that he spent his life to this end. I speak dispassionately in this connection. I want only to vision for this community the significance of the things for which this man died. And then if there has been on our part the withholding of anything, let us take the example of this young man, together with like examples which have gone before, and which shall follow after, and let us from this moment never again hold a single thing too sacred to put into this titanic struggle for right and righteousness, for the oppressed of the earth.

For what did this young man die? He died that henceforth and forever this world might be free from the bondage, the terrible chains of autocracy and of militarism and their attendant evils. He gave his life that never again shall a land be despoiled as was Belgium, and France, and Serbia; that never again shall a people arbitrarily rule the citizens of another country, outraging every international law, even to the murdering in cold blood of innocent men, women, and children; that never again shall a nation through organized effort maim the male children of another nation, severing the right hand from the body, so that these maimed sons of liberty may not in time strike back for freedom through a righteous self-deliverance. This young man spent his life to the end that never again shall a nation rape by wholesale the women of another country, as was done in France and in Belgium; that never again shall the fair young daughters of freemen be sold into Turkish harems, as have been the daughters of Serbia and Armenia. I say, this young man spent his life that never again shall this terrible thing dare lift its head among and against the sacred institutions of a peace-loving and law-abiding people.

He gave all he had, and he gave in a day when all was dear to him: in the day of youth, in the day of dreams, in the day of aspirations, with his life before him as an open book, upon the pages of which he had hoped to write, as other men have written, a record of usefulness and of service, a record of which posterity might be justly proud.

He gave all this to the end that his friends might be liberated. And as I verily believe—and as a minister for Christ I do not hesitate to raise my hand between this audience and high heaven and say—as I verily believe, as your minister and as his, he gave these things under God! in a righteous cause upon which God shall eventually smile. For as he has purposed and directed to the good and deliverance of mankind from the beginning, so shall he do now and to the end of all time. And surely our cause is good.

A VICTORIOUS PEACE

Let then our young friend's mother and his sisters and his brother and his friends be comforted in this, that he spent his all freely to the end that the world might be made a better place for other men.

And to the end that this better world may soon come, let us venture this suggestion: lend not your ear to the cunning seductions which come to you from time to time, with their slimy suggestions of an early cessation of war and of a generous and negotiated peace.

With the accursed institutions that have imposed this devastating war upon an unsuspecting and an unprepared world; with the fiendish conceptions which have perpetrated in the midst of the lawful of these times this attempted reign of intimidation and of terror, to the sooner reach their ends; with these institutions and conceptions and all other like unto them, we shall never make peace! It is for us with other sons of liberty the world over to fight on, whatever the cost, until autocracy, militarism, greed for conquest, and all things else sinful, which are their sure accompaniments, are dashed to the earth, never to rise again.

Then may we, with peoples free, with peoples of restored vision, with peoples ready for the vocations of peace, I say, with such may we consider terms of peace. And with such may we hope for the better world.

Shall we make peace with this monster raging in fervid fury for power? Whose horny hands are yet hot and crimson with the blood of its victims? Whose ponderous feet are to this very moment crushing the life out of innocent women and children? Whose hellish passions have not even spared the sainted virtue of the aged and tottering grandmothers of Belgium and of France? No! A thousand times no!

Remembering the things we and especially these outraged ones have already suffered, let us make sure that we have not suffered in vain. Let us make sure that the life of the young man whose memory we now honor shall not have been given in vain; that the lives of his fellows already spent shall not have been given in vain; that the lives which must hereafter be spent shall not have been given in vain. Let us this day renew again the covenant of our pledged service. Having put our hands to the plow, let us here highly resolve that we will not turn back. Let us spend and be spent. Let us stand ready, each of us, if need be to die, to the end that our friends after us may realize the goal toward which mankind has worked. Let us—I say, let us press on to the final end of our great, our noble effort, to the victorious peace, to mankind's redemption.

WHERE HONOR IS DUE

So resolving and so executing our purpose, may we best honor the young man in whose memory we are coming together to-day. And we may honor him the more since his was a goodly sacrifice.

The sacrifice of Christ, the sacrifice of all sacrifices, was without blemish, divine in the spirit actuating it, and in the scope of its purpose—this for all time and for all men is the true type. True to this type, the offering of our friend was in its sphere a perfect sacrifice. His life's blood was poured out not only in a noble, and as we believe, in a divine cause; it was poured out clean and wholesome, charged with the vigor of youth, full of hope and of promise. So was his a goodly sacrifice.

We honor him as the son of one of our noble townswomen. We honor him as a good boy, as an exemplary lad, as a leader among our young men and women. We honor him for what he might have been had he remained with us. We honor him in his death.

We think of him not in the last struggle of death, shrinking from the pain of his passing. We think of him rather as calling before him a good life well spent; the example of a noble mother; the service of an enlightened community. We think of him as recalling the good cause in which his life was being given. I dare say he met the end without hesitation, without faltering, courageously and prayerfully. And had he distress at all, I dare say his only concern was that he did not have another life to give in the same way, and for the same cause.

Thus offered he represents the best we as a community have to give. And thus freely offering himself, his death inspires us to the giving of the best within us.

Let his family be glad in this: He lived a clean life, he died a noble death. He gave himself in an imperishable cause. And as we commend those who love him to the love of God, it is with the assurance that under the ministrations of the Holy Spirit they shall find comfort and consolation.

ON TO VICTORY

In conclusion then, the occasion which brings us together is not only in honor of this young man. For we are here to commemorate also other sacrifices we have made. To gather strength for further sacrifices necessary on the part of each of us. To pledge ourselves anew that we will see to a righteous end our just cause.

Having done all this, may it be the happy privilege of each of us to witness as we verily believe we shall witness, the cause of liberty, of justice, and of virtue among nations, the cause of self-determination, extending itself in the earth. For as it shall repulse every other force, so shall this divine cause fix its banners in lands now autocratically ruled. And so shall it plant these banners more firmly in liberty's lands.

To this end may God accept of our devotion and sacrifice and service.

WILL OUR CHURCH BECOME PREDOMINANTLY JEWISH?

In using the term our church I mean the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

The Jews are of the tribe of Judah, and it was that tribe that inhabited Palestine, except Samaria, when Jesus was living in that country, and the ones that were scattered after Jerusalem was destroyed by the Roman army A. D. 70. In Matthew 10:5, 6, is found the following instructions given by Jesus, "Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel."

In John 1:11 is found the following: "He came unto his own, and his own received him not." It is a matter so well known to Bible students that the Jews as a people, as a nation, did not receive Jesus Christ as their Savior that it is not necessary to go into historic detail in regard to it. A few did receive him and rendered a great service as missionaries of his gospel. In the year 45, A. D., Paul and Barnabas were preaching in the city of Antioch, and the Jews took offense and manifested a spirit of persecution (Acts 13), and in Acts 13:46 is found the following words: "Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles."

From that time on the missionary work was vigorously prosecuted in the Gentile nations and the church became predominantly Gentile. The great preachers and writers in the early Christian church after the death of the first apostles were Gentiles. After the early Christian church had gone into apostasy there was a long period of spiritual darkness, and with the Protestant Reformation came light to bring men back to God and a fuller knowledge of his gospel. A preparation was going on to make ready for the complete restoration of the gospel.

In 1 Nephi 3:199, 200 is found the following words: "And after he has manifested himself unto the Jews, and also unto the Gentiles; then he shall manifest himself unto the Gentiles, and also unto the Jews, and the last shall be first, and the first shall be last." Which means that in the time of Christ and the apostles the Jews would hear the gospel first, and then it would be taken to the Gentiles, and in the time of the restoration in the latter days the Gentiles would hear it first and then the Jews.

To learn what would happen when it was taken to them we will go to Doctrine and Covenants 45:4: "And when the time of the Gentiles is come in, a light shall break forth among them that sit in darkness, and it shall be the fullness of my gospel; But they receive it not, for they perceive not the light, and they turn their hearts from me because of the precepts of men."

In 1830 the times of the Gentiles came in, from that day to this our missionaries have been preaching to them the fullness of the gospel, but they have turned their hearts from it and prefer the precepts of men. By decree of God the time is set when it is to be taken to the Jews. Paul says the deliverer of Israel is to come out of Zion. (Romans 11: 26.)

The Lord says the Twelve are to take the gospel to the Jews. (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 12.)

Joseph Smith said the Twelve would take the gospel to the Jews when the Lord commanded them. (Church History volume 1, page 549.)

For what will happen when the gospel is taken to the Jews we will turn to the word of the Lord, in Doctrine and Covenants 87: 3, where he says that when the gospel is taken to the Jews the arm of the Lord will be revealed in power, and Jesus when talking to the Nephites (3 Nephi 9: 69), said, "And it shall come to pass that the time cometh, when the fulness of the gospel shall be preached among them, and they shall believe on me, that I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and shall pray unto the Father in my name."

"We have emphasized two things in the above quotations, first that the Gentiles would not receive the gospel, and that the Jews would receive it. It would be foolishness to think that Jesus Christ would have two churches on the earth at the same time, one of Gentiles and one of Jews. The Gentiles that accept the gospel and the Jews that accept will all be in the same church. In the time of Christ and the apostles the Jews as a people rejected the gospel and the Gentiles accepted it, and so the church became predominantly Gentile, and in the latter days the Gentiles as a class of people do not receive it, and the Jews accepting it, the church will become predominantly Jewish.

In the latter part of the ninth chapter of 3 Nephi, Jesus is talking about the Gentiles, and in the first part of the tenth verse he says they shall assist Israel in building up the city New Jerusalem, which will be built in Zion. (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 2.) There are a great many prophetic statements in the three books showing that the Jew is to be a prominent personage in the Lord's work in the latter days. It is a mistake to assume that the most that the Jew is interested in is making money. He is interested in everything that is good; in educational and benevolent work he takes special delight to encourage and assist.

In hospitals and for the poor his money is spent with a lavish hand. As doctors, lawyers, and educators they are found in the front ranks. Many of the great military men and statesmen in this country and Europe to-day are Jews.

EDWARD RANNIE.

THE DARK SIDE

To be sure it is the dark side that brings out the high lights. We can't always look at the sun nor the stars, though it may be good policy to "hitch our wagon" to a star. We deal with facts, be they pleasant or disagreeable. The few words taken from the morning paper are but the history of other places besides the one described:

Boston's fight on vice warranted by alarming facts. Appalling conditions of young girls around in the streets of Boston and on the Common and Public Garden, and the consequent danger of the young men in the uniform of the United States, has caused District Attorney Pelletier to issue a statement urging all citizens to assist him and Major Wright in the vice crusade. Of 170 girls found on the Common alone, 108 were afflicted. Although an armistice has been signed, the war is still on. The extent of disease among women of the street is appalling. Mr. Wright urges that fathers and mothers who value the lives and virtues of their daughters should keep them off the streets at night.

And this on Boston Common! The place where Whitfield preached to 40,000 people, and where R. W. Farrell preached to 40 when the temperature was 105 degrees above zero in the shade! However, the situation is too awful to afford even a smile. For after all is said, we get to the common cause of the trouble—lack of self-control, unwillingness to live the temperate life. And the old question of sex discipline stares us in the face; and will continue to do so till the proper answer has been given.

We need to-day not only "light" but willingness to "walk in the light," that the blood of Jesus Christ the Son may cleanse us from all sin. The prophet said, "Find the old path," and added with common sense, "walk therein." The rich man cries, "What must I do to be saved?" And the answer comes, "Impart of your portion to the needy." The debauchee cries out, and is answered, "Clean up." The fallen woman is told to "Go, and sin no more." Each cry may require a different answer, just as different diseases require different remedies, the Christian Scientist to the contrary notwithstanding.

The soldier (as well as any other man) must not only possess knowledge of danger but also have sufficient strength of character to resist the evil. It seems likely, however, that a full knowledge of the consequence of falling into the clutches of a scarlet woman would strengthen a man's power of resistance. It is true that "fools rush in where angels fear to tread"; but the fool is a hopeless case anyway and only the reasonable can be reasoned with.

Let us look at the figures again. "Of 170 girls found on the Common, 108 were afflicted." Unclean! Reeking with disease and death! Setting traps for young men who may be ignorant of the fate which awaits them if they follow after the way of Core.

There is safety only in being virtuous. "The wages of sin is death." Because you and I know of these dangers, and because we may feel that others should be in a similar state of enlightenment, in nowise argues that such is the case. In fact the old false notions are as prevalent to-day as in the past. So many persons are willing to "take a chance," thinking they will escape the consequences of immorality. As a rule escape is impossible. God will sting with a hidden bee the foot that tramples on the flowers of virtue.

A man met me on the street and asked for money. He had just ended a prison term, having of his own free will and accord stolen that he might enter jail in order to receive treatment for a disease contracted as a result of immorality. He told me that his case was hopeless; that his tongue was rotting away and that his leg was a mass of sores. A young man and married. A type of countless hundreds. "As it was in the days of Lot so shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of man."

I saw two little boys grow to manhood, receiving the superficial instruction that is generally given in our Sunday schools. In process of time they went to a large city and took separate rooms in the ever-present lodging house. Alone in the city: no stronger temptation can be pressed on them than that afforded by loneliness in a city. It was years ago, but one boy met the bad girl on Boston Common. He contracted that disease which is the result of sexual impurity and died a few years later in California. The other fellow "took a chance" and received his baptism of fire in the form of pain and unnecessary suffering; and his trouble is not over, because he knows not what the future may bring forth. Does it pay?

The logical conclusion of this must be the facing of our duty to properly instruct our young especially, giving them a clear understanding of what is on both sides of the picture. To be forewarned is to be forearmed. And this warning or, better be it said, plain teaching must be given before the "day of evil" cometh. It is too late to lock the door after the burglar has entered it.

Teach the child to be a Christian—a follower of Christ, and the hour of temptation will find him prepared. As it has been said: "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation."

R. W. FARRELL.

I am heir to all that is passed, it is true. I glory in it. But I am myself the starting point of a new generation, and it is my duty, my privilege, and my religion to see to it that I shall commence rightly and continue properly in order that I may be crowned.—John W. Rushton.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Do You Tell Stories?

Our general president, Sister Krahl, compiled for reunion workers last fall, a list of stories she thought suitable for telling to the groups of children gathered at such places. These were selected from the National Daily Vacation Program, and mothers will find, in perusing the list, that it contains material most suggestive and useful to them in teaching and training their children.

The value of the story in education is universally recognized. It is a great pity that more mothers do not definitely plan to include stories in their daily home-training. Too many plain, fretful "don'ts" abound in our homes, where often the child would be more impressed, and the lesson in behavior, courtesy, truthfulness, etc., more quickly and permanently conveyed, by means of a well-chosen and gently-told story.

Mothers may with profit obtain some of the many valuable books available, which will help them to make themselves proficient in this beautiful art—an art which the Savior used almost exclusively in his teaching in Palestine so long ago. At any public library may be obtained the titles of the best books of this character, and the time spent in mastering their contents, or carrying out their good suggestions, will never be regretted by the true, wide-awake mother.

Perhaps

Some day, when on exultant feet you come
Back through the streets that blossom at your tread,
My soul will thrill to hear the throbbing drum,
And yet, perhaps, I'll stand with drooping head;
Not caring, quite, to let you meet my gaze,
Not daring, quite, to look into your eyes—
Afraid, because a weary stretch of days,
Each one a million years, between us lies.

My heart? My heart is ever yours to hold,
And yet, while I have waited here for you—
You have seen faith betrayed, and brave youth sold,
You have seen meadows drenched in bloody dew.
It may have changed you, and your eyes may be
A little harder, when they look at me!

Training Little Children

DIRECTED PLAY

Everyone knows that a normal child has an active mind, but many parents do nothing to strengthen or train this vital part of their child's life, leaving all mental development to the teachers in the schools. Those parents are indeed fortunate who have kindergartens in their town or city, for the kindergarten gives systematic mental training to children as early as the fourth year.

The easiest way to teach a child to think is through play. The mother can begin to sing Mother Goose rhymes to the mere infant-in-arms. As the child grows, he recognizes the words and often the tunes. Later, he will ask for his favorite songs or rhymes, and then begin to sing and recite, himself. Up to this point the mother has accomplished three things: Strengthened the memory, cultivated an ear for music and the ability to carry a simple tune, and enlarged the child's vocabulary.

Be sure to use only the best grammar when talking with a child. Baby-talk is funny for the grown-ups for a while, but the difficulty the child faces in overcoming this is tremendous.

As the child grows older, a story-hour should become a part of each day. This is really a lesson in language. The mother should begin with the finger plays when the child is eight or nine months old, such as, "This is the church and this is the steeple," "Pat-a-cake," and the counting lesson, "The thumb is one; the pointer, two; the middle finger, three; ring finger, four; little finger, five, and that is all you see." "What the child imitates he begins to understand." That is the great purpose of the finger plays.

As the child grows, other stories can be added to the story-hour. A normal child, from about two years of age on, loves the stories of "The three bears," "The three pigs," "Little half chick," "Little red hen," and other similar simple tales, a list of which will be found at the conclusion of this article.

In telling stories to children, especially to very young children, avoid the element of fear.

Children love best the stories they have heard before. A good rule is to let the child choose his own story. Mother can introduce a new story when she deems best. Another good plan is to have the child tell mother a story sometimes, as this will aid self-expression and be a lesson in language.

To teach counting, make use of the play spirit again. In bouncing a ball, repeat the old-time jingle, "One, two, buckle my shoe." You will be surprised at how quickly the little ones will begin to count. Again, in building blocks, make a game of counting by saying "Give mother one block," then, "Give mother one, two, three blocks," etc. It is unwise to teach a child under three, numbers higher than ten. They are well started if they are able to count as high as this correctly.

To develop the power of concentration, without which no human being can be successful in life, there must be a certain amount of directed play each day. Children are given this in kindergarten, and the mother can also give it to them in the home. When mother sews, the opportunity to direct play is at once afforded, by having the child sit close by and sew a piece of loose-woven cloth, such as canvas or scrim. A big, blunt-pointed needle should be chosen for the purpose and tied securely to a heavy thread. When the child shows evidences of fatigue, the work should be laid aside for another day.

Large, colored, wooden, kindergarten cubes and spheres, one inch in size, with a hole through the center to string on shoe-laces, are also fine for a lesson in concentration. This occupation should be permitted only when mother is close by to watch and help. (Kindergarten materials can be secured either from Milton Bradley Company, Springfield, Massachusetts, or from E. Steiger and Company, 49 Murray Street, New York.)

For a child of three or older, kindergarten sewing-cards which are perforated and to be worked in colored worsteds, are interesting and instructive. An economical way to procure such cards is for mother or father to cut squares or oblongs out of cardboard, lightly trace an apple, ball, or some other object on one of the pieces and then perforate the outlines every half inch, making the holes as large as the head of a pin. These outlines can then be sewed by the child in bright colors, working up and down in the holes. Be sure the outlines of the objects to be sewed are large, as small objects are too trying for young hands and eyes.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Christmas Offering Roll of Honor

Correction. In a recent issue we credited a report to Bald Knob, Missouri. This was an error, and should have read Bald Knob, Arkansas.

We are starting this week with 117 already listed on the Roll of Honor, and we hope that we can start next week off with 150. We can if all the schools will only report to us. You may not be interested in seeing your school enrolled—but think of the encouragement it lends other schools—it will enthuse them to greater effort. Send in your report.

Have you started your offering for 1919? If not, why not get started to-day? If we had all started early in 1918 the influenza would not have hindered so much. Let us start early.

Brooklyn, New York. Brother Ephraim Squire, superintendent, reports: "We have gone 'over the top' with our offering. Our school numbers 130 and have something over $300, so while we have not got ourselves into print our folks have kept your constant appeals in view and feel to share the pride which we may justly feel with the army of Sunday school workers who have so gallantly gone forth and made this the banner Christmas offering in the history of the Sunday school. Assuring you of the continued support of our school in whatever matters may be planned for this year."

Pasco, Washington. Sister S. George reports: "Our school was organized one year ago, and with our children we have six Latter Day Saint members. We are over the $2 mark. Our school closed October 1 on account of influenza and we will not open until January 5. Trust we will reach the $100,000."

Midland City, Illinois. Sister Mary Whiteside writes: "We are sending our offering. There are five in our family."

This good family is isolated from the branches but they have formed themselves into a home department, and are doing their "bit."

Lamar, Colorado (Wiley Sunday School). Brother I. N. DeLong reports: "I could not report sooner because we have been closed since October 1, on account of influenza, and we have lost the last quarter, but when we met to-day (December 29) we were able to put ourselves 'over the top,' and now have more than $200. We are sure that we will be able to see $100,000 offering this year."

The following list has been secured from reports sent to Brother McGuire, hence we have not letters to publish with them; these schools are all "over the top":

- Shellbrook, Saskatchewan.
- Marshall, Missouri.
- Edgerton Junction, Missouri.
- Scranton, Kansas.
- Cameron, Missouri.
- Riverton, Iowa.
- Nova Scotia Home Department.
- Moore's Junction Sunday School, Sterling, Michigan.
- Bellaire, Michigan.
- Evergreen Sunday School, Iuka, Illinois.
- Janesville, Wisconsin.
- Evergreen Sunday School, near Lamoni, Iowa.
- Blue Bell Sunday School (Artland Branch), Senlac, Saskatchewan.
- Beeton and Tottenham Sunday schools, Colgan, Saskatchewan.
- Spokane District Home Department.
- Sunset Branch, Findlater, Saskatchewan.
- Caldwell, Texas, Shady Grove Sunday School.
- Vanceave, Mississippi.
- West Branch, Michigan.
- Bartlett, Iowa.
- Purcell, Missouri.
- Hatfield, Missouri. (Lone Rock Sunday School.)
- Harriston, Ontario. (Drew and Harriston Sunday Schools.)
- Otter Lake, Michigan.
- Taberville, Missouri.
- Taberville Home Department.
- Ihlen, Minnesota.
- Myrtle Point, Oregon.
- Auburn, Iowa.
- Dow City, Iowa.
- Sedalia, Missouri.
- Gaylord, Michigan.
- Lowell, Arkansas. (Pine Creek Sunday School.)
- Corinth, Ontario.
- Chase, Michigan.
- DuBois, Pennsylvania.
- Evansville, Wisconsin.
- Evansville, Wisconsin, Home Department.
- Fisher, Arkansas.
- The Plains, Ohio.
- Scammon, Kansas.
- Deer Lodge, Montana.
- Middletown, Ohio.
- Belding, Michigan.
- Belding, Michigan, Home Department.
- Pine Rive, Colorado. (Bayfield Sunday School.)
- Levering, Michigan.
- South Tryon, Nebraska.
- Trout Brook, Ontario.
- Race Track, Montana. (Evergreen Sunday School.)
- Amherstburg, Ontario.
- Wellsburg, West Virginia.
- Delta, Colorado.

Delta, Colorado, Home Department.
 Mount Pleasant, Missouri, Home Department.
 Bay Port, Michigan.
 Dennisport, Massachusetts.
 Creola, Ohio.
 San Antonio, Texas. (Zion's Hope Sunday School, First Branch.)
 Columbus, Ohio. (Second Branch.)
 Hazel Dell, Iowa.
 Pryor Creek, Missouri, Home Class.
 DeKalb, Illinois.

We are sorry not to have letters from the above-listed schools, but they evidence their loyalty in their acts as they are all "over the top" with their offering.

Maryland Heights Sunday School, near Saint Louis, Missouri. Brother A. H. Daly, superintendent for 1919, writes: "Our Sunday school is glad indeed to send in their offering to help with the church work and to pay off the debt. We have only 31 enrolled and send in $68 for 1918. We hope to double this amount for 1919, for we know the money will be used for a good cause."

Oakland, California. Sister Julia E. Christensen reports: "Our Sunday school has gone way beyond its quota as we now have over four dollars per member, and the end is not yet."

Rich Hill, Missouri. Brother Merle M. Quick reports: "We want a diploma. We are a small school of about 25 regular attendants. We reached our $2-per-member mark in June. We lost 8 weeks on account of influenza, but we are 'over the top,' for we have raised our offering to about $4.50 per member. We are with you for $100,000 and no less."

Lamoni, Iowa, Thompson Sunday School. Brother E. Green writes: "We have an enrollment of 25 composed of three families of Saints and two families of nonmembers; our offering is $152.82. We feel sure that we will pass the $100,000. We have started our offering for 1919." Note that this is over $6 per member.

Freedom, Oklahoma. Brother Warren Dixon reports: "On account of influenza we have not been able to do as much as we would have liked. There are seven families in our school with an enrollment of 41. We now have $97.76, with more coming in all the time."

Blythedale, Missouri. Brother Grover C. Sharp, superintendent, reports: "The Oland Sunday School has gone 'over the top.' It is pleasing to note the way so many of the schools are working on their offering."

Chariton, Iowa. Brother Ernest Watts, Christmas offering superintendent, reports: "The Chariton Sunday School has gone 'over the top.' Our enrollment is 100, and to date we have $249.08. Regardless of influenza and the fact that we are building a church, our aim is $300, and we expect to get it. We have gone through the year with a spirit of determination and we shall start the new year to 'go over the top' again." That is the way we like to hear our good workers talk, for it shows the right spirit—the spirit of willingness and a desire to do.

Far West Sunday School, Far West Stake. Brother S. H. Simmons reports: "Our offering to date is $158.41 with an enrollment of 75, and we still expect more."

Sharon, Pennsylvania. M. Ahlstrom reports: "We have mailed our offering of $230 to-day. We have 43 members. Our 1918 offering is more than 50 cents per member greater than in 1917. We start our 1919 offering the first Sunday in 1919, and are looking forward hopefully to do still better this year."

We have taken a great big jump this week, for we have 79 to list in the Roll of Honor; and next week 79 new stars will be added to the list of 117, which will make a total of 196. We hope every school will be enrolled on this honor list before we find it necessary to close for the year.

We will soon send out our blanks asking for full information that will enable us to give the pro rata of each school, and we trust that all schools will fill in this blank and return immediately so that we may close our records. We are wondering what school will head the list this year.

We are so very grateful for the splendid support we have received and for the excellent spirit that has been manifest in all the schools.

Remember, we are going to help you this year, and we want the name and location of every school, also the name and address of every Sunday school superintendent. Blank cards will be sent to your school asking for this information, these will go forward from the Bishop's office within the next ten days—if you do not get one of these cards please advise us immediately after the first of February.

Remember the aim for 1919 is $150,000. Let us know what your aim will be. This will be asked for on the cards above referred to.

Most gratefully yours,

ARTHUR W. SMITH.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, 2903 Sullivan Avenue.

We feel just like calling for three cheers for the Sunday schools to-night, for we are starting this report with 80 schools already reporting and we have about forty to add to this for this week's report which will make us about 120 stars for next week.

Judging from the reports we now have on hand we are going way over the $100,000, though we cannot, of course, be sure of this until reports are in. If we do go "over the top" with $100,000 we surely have a right to be proud of the good Sunday schools who have worked so diligently for the success of the offering.

We will continue to publish the Roll of Honor for some little while so as to give all the schools a chance to get their report to us.

Please note the following:

Do not send money to A. W. Smith. Send all money, with proper report and explanation, to Benjamin R. McGuire, Independence, Missouri.

All reports for Roll of Honor should be mailed to A. W. Smith, 2903 Sullivan Avenue, Saint Louis, Missouri.

The following list of Sunday schools have reported to Brother McGuire on regular report blanks, but they have not reported to this office for Roll of Honor—however, we shall add their names to the roll as they are all "over the top."

Vera, Oklahoma, over $3 per member.

Grandview, Missouri, almost $3 per member.

Ellice, Ontario, $2 per member.

Roslyn, Washington, almost $6 per member.

Vida, Montana, over $2 per member.

Mitchell, Ontario, over $2 per member.

Mitchell, Ontario, Home Department, $5 per member.

Vancouver, Washington, "over the top."

Walker, Missouri, over $6 per member.

West Helena, Arkansas, Home Department, $5 per member.

Dayton, Ohio, $4 per member.

Mansfield, Washington, over $2.50 per member.

Piper City, Illinois, over $4 per member.

Dallas, Texas, over $4 per member.

Stockton, California, almost $3 per member.

Bethuna, Saskatchewan, over $2 per member.

We are very grateful for the support of these schools and would have been pleased to have had letters from all of them to publish in the Roll of Honor, but the fact that they have gone "over the top" is very pleasing and gratifying indeed.

Dunn Center, North Dakota. Master Elm Anderson, superintendent of Christmas offering, reports: "We have 39 members enrolled and we are past the $2-per-member mark. We expect to have more offering this year than last."

West Branch, Michigan. Mrs. L. McDonald reports: "West Branch No. 1 School has reached the $2 mark and will be pleased to be entered on the Roll of Honor."

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Sister Lucie A. Lockard, secretary, reports: "Here is another star to add to the Roll of Honor. The Pioneer Sunday School has proved itself in the running once more. With a membership of 39 we have on hand now over $100, and more coming in every day. Here's hoping we make it $4 per member instead of $2."

DuBois, Pennsylvania. Sister Viola Raisbeck, secretary, writes: "We have a membership of 34 and we have gone 'over the top' with our offering. We have totaled $80.35 and expect to have more before the report is sent in."

Quincy, Illinois. Sister E. Brown, secretary, reports: "Our average attendance is but 12 and our offering is now $50.69. We want to see our school (Bright Herald Sunday School) on the Roll of Honor."

Stewartsville, Missouri. Brother E. J. Armstrong reports: "You have not heard from us for some time and I expect you think we have fallen by the wayside, but such is not the case. We have had our share of difficulties to overcome and things were beginning to look rather doubtful for us reaching our goal in the local Stewartsville school of $400. Our school was put under influenza ban during the greater part of October and we had to postpone our Girls' Day until in November. It was a decided success and we were making arrangements for Boys' Day when we were again put under the ban, and to-day is the first session we have held in six weeks. This morning we lacked $130 of reaching our goal, and only about one half of our members were present owing to bad roads. When the offering for to-day was taken up we still lacked $66, and then the good Spirit began to work. One good brother offered to give one half of the balance if the school would put up the remainder. This was agreed to, and when we counted up we found we had a total of $404. All the other schools in this stake are working hard."

South Rawdon, Nova Scotia. Brother Wilfred Wood writes: "Would like to report our home department for Honor Roll. We have membership of 9 and have $46."

Independence, Missouri. Zion's Hope Sunday School, of the Second Branch. C. E. Mather, secretary, reports: "We have raised $2 per member and over. We have an enrollment of 160 and our offering to date is $524.26. We would have notified you before now but I sent my letter to Brother McGuire by mistake and we hope this will not be too late for Honor Roll."

Crescent, Iowa. Sister J. R. Lapworth, superintendent, reports: "We are glad to report to you that we, too, have gone 'over the top' with our offering. When the quarantine was placed on public meetings October 6, we did not have quite $50, and the first session after the ban was lifted, November 22, we felt somewhat discouraged, but we went to work with a will. A contest was started, our aim $400. The enrollment of the school is 74. Great was our surprise and rejoicing to-day when our treasurer told us that we were 'over the top' with a total of $500. Our school is hoping to receive the diploma promised to all schools who reach the $2-per-member mark."

New Liskeard, Ontario. Sister Velma Shepherdson reported to the HERALD as follows: "Our school has a total enrollment of 38 and our offering up to December 22, was $115.46, therefore we wish to be placed on the Roll of Honor."

Kansas City, Missouri, Second Branch. Sister Margaret Robertson, superintendent, reports: "Our enrollment is 53 and we have an offering of $126.12, with perhaps more coming in. Our school is composed mostly of children of non-members. We trust we will reach the $100,000."

Roslyn, Washington. Brother Frank Holmes, secretary, reports: "We are sending in $100, and our membership is 17. We have been unable to meet for some two months on account of influenza, but we hope to be able to meet after the New Year."

Valley Center, Michigan. Sister C. E. Pearson, superintendent, reports: "Our school has passed the $2 mark, and we are still moving. We were badly hindered on account of influenza, as our church was closed for nearly two months. Am quite sure the $100,000 mark will be reached and passed."

Cameron, Missouri. Brother Archie Constance, superintendent, reports: "The Mount Pleasant Sunday School, near Cameron, has $153.71 offering. Our membership is 47, including home department."

Jay, Florida. Sister Hazel McArthur, secretary, reports: "The Santa Rosa Sunday School has gone 'over the top.' We have 35 members, have $100, and hope to have more."

Grand Valley, Ontario. Brother J. M. Clark, secretary, writes: "Our Sunday school has gone over the $2-per-member mark. We have an enrollment of 49 and have $122. We hope to do better in 1919."

Providence, Rhode Island. Sister Minerva R. Gates, treasurer, reports: "Our membership is 127 and our aim was for $700. We are confident of reaching that amount and hope when all offering is received that we will go somewhat 'over the top.' This will mean over $5.50 per member, which is doubling our offering for last year. We credit our success in reaching our goal to the fact that we set our aim on the first Sunday of 1918, and have worked steadily toward this goal all through the year."

Rhodes, Iowa. Sister Mattie Hughes reports: "Conditions have forced us to wait until almost the last day of the old year to send in our report, but the Rhodes, Iowa, school is 'over the top.' We have an enrollment in the main school of 50 and have $114, including all we have something over $130."

Waterford, Ontario. Sister Lucy Yerks, secretary, reports: "We have gone 'over the top.' Our enrollment including three home class members is 41, and our offering is $141.02. The London District Home Class has given $22. These are members not connected with any of the locals but directly under superintendent of district."

Dimondale, Michigan. Sister Malinda A. White writes: "I am too late to send my offering to the Branch Sunday school so am sending it in direct. I am among the scattered members."

Cedar Rapids, Iowa. "We have only 9 members in our Sunday school and our offering is $45.75. We received some help from Saints who are not members of the Sunday school and have averaged about $5 per member. It was a real sacrifice on the part of the members. We only have a private home in which to meet." God surely has blessed this little school because of their efforts.

Guelph, Ontario. Sister Eileen Cooper, secretary, reports: "We are sending $34 offering from our school."

From the Lamoni Branch

After almost three months of quarantine restrictions, with no public meetings allowed, from the first Sunday in October, the Lamoni Saints are rejoicing in the restored privileges of social and religious intercourse.

Many an earnest testimony is heard from the voices of those not accustomed to making public statements, but impelled by hearts overflowing with gratitude for the mercies shown in the recent epidemic which assumed very general and serious aspects for a time. Some have been miraculously healed by the administration of elders. One sister was so affected by the presence of the Spirit remaining where such healing had been manifested that she was greatly invigorated and evidently spared from the ravages of the disease. Others are rejoicing that they have so far been spared; while the universal testimony is that in this hour of tribulation God has been visioned more clearly and his nearness more appreciated. We believe there is a general tendency to express in terms of definite action the gratitude so universally felt. A number of individuals are offering their services and the consecration of their abilities to the service of God.

It may be that this season of the year is naturally fraught with optimism and that such feelings do not mean as much now as they might some other time, but we are convinced that the faithful are more faithful and the indifferent more self-condemned and becoming more interested than for some months. The field for service among the Saints in branches like this is remarkably fertile and is worthy the intensive efforts of a large number of intelligent and consecrated workers.

Under the order prevailing the past year by the division of the town and surrounding territory into districts of convenient size with an elder in charge, and associated with him a priest, teacher, and deacon, the priesthood have made their work a strong factor in the development of the Saints. It bridges the gap bound to exist between the executives of such a large organization and the units making it up. As this is further established and more greatly appreciated, we are confident it will do what no other system and division of effort could.

At the annual election of officers of the Religio the branch presidency was asked to nominate the presidency of the local Religio society. This was voluntary on the part of the society. The president has been Brother Allen Breakie, one of Lamoni's fine young men, but whom the pale reaper took from us in the recent epidemic.

Taking into consideration the broader scope the Religio should occupy under the new ideal expressed in the co-ordination movement, which says the society should devote its energies primarily to social and recreational features, they nominated Elder Floyd M. McDowell, head of the boy movement in the church, second vice president of the General Religio Society, and instructor at Graceland College. They suggested that there be associated with him Elder Paul N. Craig and Forest Roberts. These officers were empowered by the society to nominate the other officers. It is well to note here that in all cases, nominations from the members are in order and receive due consideration and vote.

With this nomination came the pledge from the branch presidency that in its efforts to properly extend and magnify the opportunities and responsibilities of the society the church officials would be constantly back of and with the young people. They hoped that there might be a happy fusion of the ideas becoming more and more definite, that definite provisions would be made by the church to provide for the natural social and recreational needs of the young people of the community.

The situation thus existing is a most promising one, and should bring to its aid the entire community, for, as expressed frequently by those who think deeply on the problems of the church, there is no greater problem ahead of us than the one presented to us by our children and young people. We are glad to see this unison of the forces of the community to solve it.

In the report of the presidency of the branch—made by Brother J. F. Garver, who resumed his place as president after his disability from nervous exhaustion, covering a period of over a year—a number of interesting subjects were treated on. It was suggested that the branch might extend the operation of the district plan of labor by organizing for the coming year without the selection of a presiding priest, presiding teacher, and presiding deacon, in accord with the suspension of that provision in the Book of Rules by the 1918 General Conference. This was concurred in and will result in a division of labor among these branches of the priesthood, based on special qualifications of individuals and various demands of the work, the presidency, with due consultation, making the appointments.

Two priests were recommended for ordination to office of elder and their names referred to the coming stake conference: C. E. Wight and W. B. Paul. A previous meeting had taken similar action on the names of W. E. Prall and H. L. Barto, deacons, recommended for ordination to office of priest.

The Christmas offering has totaled $2,034.11, just $71.89 less than last year, but a good record considering the handicaps of the past three months especially. The enrollment is about 700.

The present writing finds us much inconvenienced from water shortage, the supply in the artificial pond from which the community is supplied in the water system being almost exhausted from increasing demands on it and unusually dry seasons the past two years. Various expedients for increasing the supply are being considered. All residences and business houses are without water service, only the electric plant which supplies this place and three surrounding towns being allowed to use it. A good rain would be a most welcome visitor just now.

Just an occasional case of influenza now prevails and we all entertain hopes that another wave may not sweep over and distress us.

E. D. MOORE.

Christmas Offering Testimonial

Sister G. E. Wolfe, of Ihlen, Minnesota, a school of ten in number, of which only four are members of the church, raised their quota in the 1918 Christmas offering effort, and we quote from her letter to show that as we become interested in the Christmas offering, we also think of our tithing, and the Lord opens the way for us to pay this obligation to him.

"I want to say that the Christmas offering has helped me to pay my tithing instead of hindered. This is the way it came about. I figured if I wanted to do my share in the Christmas offering, I must first make out my inventory and pay it in full, and after that I would feel right in doing all I could for the Christmas offering. I did this last year and paid it all and over $5 toward the Christmas offering. I earned it every cent myself and, oh, how God has blessed my efforts! My companion not being a member of the church, I have not always understood how I would pay my tithing, or make out an inventory. I talked it over with Brother Keir a year ago when you and he were at my father's home in Minneapolis. He told me one half of all was considered my portion, providing my companion was willing. I have tried to be faithful in paying my tithing. I am not telling you this to boast. No, indeed. It is just bearing my testimony how wonderfully God has blessed me because I have tried to abide by his law."

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

STILL IN FRANCE, November 23, 1918.

Dear Fanny and Ben: Received Ben's letter, with one from Earl inclosed, a few days ago and enjoyed both very much and of course thank both writers.

'Tis Saturday night, I've got money, but no place to go unless I want to walk through dilapidated towns in the pitch dark. I'm writing under very trying circumstances, very loud talking and arguing at this end of the table and a very noisy and peaceless card game at the other end, so please don't expect much of a letter this time. "Boche" mail just came in, another interruption, but none is from ma so I'm going to finish this letter first, then read. I had to stop, however, and read one from Hoxie for I knew it would be good, and it was. He mentions the fact that Charles H., now a second lieutenant, had paid him a visit. I'm glad to know that Charles has recovered from the attack of the influenza and also that he was successful at the R. O. T. Camp. I am also glad that the war ended before he was called "over here," for it sure was h—— in France, and when I heard of any friends of mine keeping out I figured, "Well, I'll have some old friends if I get back."

Just after the armistice took effect, there was a call in our battery for volunteers to go to a training camp to study to be infantry officers, but nary a volunteer stepped out, for we figured that we'd be home sooner if we stayed with the battery.

Well, Ben, the ban on letters containing news of our location and experiences has been lifted according to the Mail (published in Paris), so I can relate to you some of my narrow escapes. Last August 21, the day before we lost our dear friend and leader, Lieutenant Reid, I was sent out to guide three truck loads of shells through the pitch dark to our gun position. If the Lord was ever with me, he was at my side that night, for I was seated on the seat with the driver and we'd only gone two hundred yards from the ammunition dump when a star shell was dropped within ten or fifteen feet of us from an airplane, and it made the road appear as light as though it were noon instead of 10 p. m. on a cloudy night. Well, the drivers stopped the motors and jumped, after ramming the brakes on. They fell in the ditch, lost helmets, and were quite excited. I would have been just as bad, I guess, had I realized I was on a truck load of gas shells. I had been informed, however, but hadn't given it a second thought. I yelled to the drivers that we ought to go on, but their orders were to abandon the trucks if a light dropped near them, and this was near. Well, anyway, I jumped off and when I caught up with the rest of the men they were in an awful mess, all tangled up in a barb-wire entanglement. It took us about ten or fifteen minutes to get loose and then we ran on further for we expected a bomb to drop soon, and we found a trench which led us back to the road. We jumped on the trucks again, for the star shell was about extinguished, and put on full speed. We had gone but two hundred feet further when we saw the work of an aviator—a bomb hole with a truck lying in it, on its side. We didn't stop but learned later four men had been killed. The Huns gave us a grand reception as we passed through the little town of Chery Chatram, near Ba-zoches, by giving us Bochy (much) gas in shell form. We donned our masks and went like the Old Harry, and it is a wonder we didn't hit something for no auto horns or klaxons were allowed, they only being used "over here" as gas alarms. Well, we finally reached the gun position, and after telling Lieutenant Reid my experience I was ready for a quiet, peaceful dugout and a sleep. Lieutenant Reid was feeling pretty bad himself, having been slightly gassed while at the observation post that day, but the poor man was killed the following day.

I will end here and continue my experiences in my next. I've not told ma anything to date of the dangers over here for you know how she worries. I am positive the war is over now, so I guess I will write her the truth, the whole truth, etc. (You're a lawyer, so can guess the rest of this oath.) I must admit I made ma believe the war was like a harvest home, but it was "justifiable." "Ask Day, he knows" about the arguments pro and con on the question, "Is a lie ever justifiable?" Remember that hot debate in the little church on the corner of Park Place and Schenectady Avenue?

At present, we are billeted in the little town of Marq near Grand Pre, on the Aire River. But a few weeks ago we shelled the Germans out of here, and they left hurriedly, for many things were left behind which no soldier would want to part with. I'll never forget that morning of November, for I was yanked out of my bunk at 3.45, which is not a very respectable hour for a young man to be out, but the Huns paid for it dearly, and we've never heard from them since except that they asked us to let up. Last week our battery commander took all of the sergeants out for a horse-back ride to see the damage we'd done, and oh, boy! No Iowa nor Jersey farmer could have done more upturning with a plow than we did with that 6-inch howitzer of ours. We made the towns, in which the Huns were living, like so much punk. An awful mess, I'll say. In this town of Grand Pre, there is hardly a brick or stone left unturned except those in the big church whose steeple still stands up boldly as if defying the German shells.

Lovingly your brother,

JACK.

[Excerpt from a letter to the Presidency, from Elder John R. Grice, Detroit, Michigan, December 19, 1918.]

The year is fast drawing to a close and soon will dawn a new one with its possibilities all ahead, and as we contemplate the things we may be able to accomplish we hope for good health and strength that we may be able to give our best.

The last week I have laid five persons to rest, besides attending to the numerous other duties devolving upon me so I need not say I have been busy. While others are suffering I am pleased to say that we have been spared thus far and sincerely hope God's protecting hand may continue over us. It is certainly a great blessing for which we are trying to show our appreciation.

Last Wednesday evening, before prayer meeting, I was permitted to induct two more souls into the kingdom. I expect to have baptism again Sunday morning. They keep coming in and I believe we have a good home for them to enter into, which is not to be found everywhere. Many branches are in such a condition, spiritually, that it is almost better that new members be not gathered in, on account of the lack of pleasant home surroundings. Spiritual death has resulted in the past, because the local arm has failed to function, and the missionary has been blamed because the members did not remain firm and retain their first love. This, however, is getting to be a condition which is not as prevalent as it used to be, and the past two years work, under the new regime, is bearing fruit. When the local arm is brought up to the standard the missionary work will be carried on to better advantage and the church move ahead more rapidly. I am very optimistic concerning the future, not forgetting, however, that we will have to work and work harder than ever before.

All are busy here with the Christmas work and trying to make things pleasant for all concerned. Many a home will be saddened, not alone because the war has taken some from their midst, but that the deadly germ of influenza has entered in and removed loved ones. I have been made to exclaim, "How long, oh Lord, will this continue to prevail ere thy Son shall come?" And I remember it is but the beginning of sorrows. May God help his people to remain faithful is my prayer.

WINDSOR, ONTARIO, December 26, 1918.

Editors Herald: The Windsor Branch is progressing nicely, dedicating their beautiful brick church to the Lord, November 17, 1918. The church which was erected in 1913, Elder Arthur Allen being the architect, is at the corner of Pierre Avenue and Assumption Street. It was opened November 16, 1913, and while the branch was new, being organized in February of the same year the church was built, it has progressed nicely and a good number have been added. The debt is paid off and they have been wonderfully blessed at times in a spiritual way.

Elder Leslie Brown is the pastor, and is alive to the interests of all. Apostle Paul M. Hanson had charge of the dedication services. He was assisted at the 8.30 prayer meeting by Eders J. C. Dent and D. Snobelen. At 10.30 Elder Weaver preached, assisted by Cornelius Clifford. Apostle Paul M. Hanson and Elder Leslie Brown were in charge of the dedication of a service flag in honor of the boys who are serving their country, and those who have done their bit and returned. There are sixteen maple leaves and one star on the flag.

At 2.30 Apostle Paul M. Hanson preached the dedicatory sermon, using Ezra 1:1-7 as a basis for his address. He was assisted in this service by Elder J. C. Dent, district president, and Elder Samuel Brown of Stevenson offered the dedicatory prayer. Elder Leslie Brown represented the branch, and Bishop's Agent J. H. Tyrrell represented the Bishop, presenting the key of the church to the deacon, H. E. Bennett.

At 7.33 Brother Hanson again occupied, assisted by Elder Joseph Yeager. There were a number of visiting elders, and members from the surrounding branches. Regardless of the pouring rain on Monday evening, a supper was served in the basement, followed by a good program. Tuesday evening Brother Hanson gave his "Trip to the Holy Land," in a very interesting manner. Preaching on Wednesday and Thursday evenings.

Sincerely,

E. DEPEW.

ANDES, MONTANA, December 29, 1918.

Editors Herald: We have had a very open winter this year for northern Montana. Only slight snows and cars running everywhere until the last Sunday in the old year, when a heavy snow fell, which will probably give us good sleighing the rest of the winter.

There was the usual Christmas tree and entertainment at the church Christmas Eve; it was well attended and the children tried to tell the old, old story in songs, recitations, etc.

The influenza paid us a visit and almost every family had one or more cases of it, but no deaths except the baby daughter of Brother Charles Lampier, an infant of fourteen days. The power of the Lord was made manifest in behalf of several of those who were sick.

Brother Eli Bronson is preparing to enter into missionary work and has moved his family into the former home of Brother J. M. Higgins so they will be close to the church, store, etc., while he is away.

There were no services at the church the last Sunday in December on account of the heavy snowstorm. We are trying to raise our part of two dollars per capita (or more), for Christmas offering, and without doubt we will succeed as we have nearly the amount promised.

Three soldier boys went to war from this branch in the late war: William Pfarr, who was killed in action, Maynard Minthorn, who is still in France, and Eber Minthorn, who is in Camp Kearney, California. We also have one sailor boy, Marion Bronson, who is in the navy yard at Seattle, Washington, and who was home on a furlough at Christmas time.

Our Religio is taking a new interest under the leadership of Ethyl Bronson, and the Sunday school and branch are alive and in good condition.

MRS. S. M. ANDES.

CENTRALIA, WASHINGTON, December 15, 1918.

Editors Herald: In my humble judgment we should have one or more books by our best and most talented authors, on the subjects of biology, evolution, geology, and Bible archaeology, as they relate to our work and teachings.

Very likely there are many good works on these subjects by students and scholars not of our faith, but they are not written with special reference to our belief, nor are they read as broadly by our people as our own books would be.

There are many questions which must puzzle others besides myself, such as, How far shall we take Genesis literally such as the six creative days? Is there scientific evidence that man was the "first flesh" on the earth, as per Inspired Version? Does the Inspired Version give an exact chronology of man, and if so, can it be made to harmonize with historical and archaeological discoveries? Are there geological and other evidences of "Noah's flood"? Are there evidences of the great ages attained by men before the flood? Are the proofs that history extends back nearly 7,000 years B. C. reliable, and if so, does the Inspired Version harmonize therewith? Which way does the preponderance of scientific evidence and opinion lean, favorably or unfavorably to our position? To what extent has the evolution theory been proven or discredited, and to what extent are these theories accepted or rejected? Is spiritual testimony scientific?

In my experience there are so many people skeptical because of questions along the above lines, and to them Scriptural proof of the correctness of our position is absolutely meaningless. It always seemed to me rank folly to do as the great majority of religious enthusiasts do, quote Scripture and solemnly warn of the judgment, to people of this class and expect to convert them. Rather give them logical and scientific reasons for accepting the Bible and God's word first.

Elbert Smith's tract on "Is faith in God scientific?" is a start in the right direction; but we prefer to know why certain scientists believe in God, rather than that they believe it to be scientific. We are glad scientists say faith in God is scientific, but why it is scientific is of greater importance.

Brother Stebbins has written some excellent articles for the HERALD on some of these subjects in the last year or so.

but I am sure they can be improved upon, and certainly they are far from being extensive enough. A book of three hundred pages would by no means exhaust the subject. If I only had the knowledge and ability—as I hope to have some day—I would have the temerity to attempt it.

I believe we ought to have more books on the pastor's work and problems. To-day I was looking through our catalogue for what I could find in that line, and I was impressed with how extensive were the books to arm and prepare the missionary for his work, and even the Sunday school, Religio, and Home Departments had leaflets of instruction, but all I could find for the pastor was Cruden's Concordance, Rules of Order, and duties of Branch Officers. Of course much has been written of late years in the HERALD on pastors' duties, but this is not handy for study or reference. Certainly the vast majority of our pastors are far from efficient. I am a pastor of limited experience and extensive ambition, and I feel keenly the need of the benefit of the experience of others who are experienced and successful.

LEONARD S. RHODES.

Church Secretary

The United States Railway Administration has provided to issue clergy credentials to pastors and missionaries devoting their entire time to religious work, having no other occupation or business whatever, at one half the regular railroad fares. To secure such rates applicants should obtain application blanks headed, "Application for Clergy Fare Certificate," with which will be found full printed instructions. Please notice all rules and regulations carefully and fill out all inquiries in harmony therewith. The usual remittance of $1 must accompany each application and such application must be indorsed by local railroad agent, according to conditions stated. The rates apply from coast to coast, the territory being divided as follows:

Eastern Bureau: C. L. Hunter, Manager, Eastern Clergy Bureau, New York City, including the following States: Connecticut, Delaware, District of Columbia, Indiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan (Southern Peninsula), New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, West Virginia.

Southern: W. H. Howard, Manager, Southern Clergy Bureau, Atlanta, Georgia: Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana (East of Mississippi River), Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia.

Western: Eben E. MacLeod, Manager, Western Clergy Bureau, Transportation Building, Chicago, Illinois: Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana (West of Mississippi River), Michigan (Northern Peninsula), Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, Washington, Wisconsin, Wyoming.

General Conference Minutes of 1918 with lists of appointments contained therein have been filed with the bureaus named. Applicants should apply for credentials to the bureau in which they are located. One credential entitles the holder to tickets at reduced fare covering the territory named in all the bureaus.

Changes in or additions to appointment lists, to date, have been furnished the managers named.

No notice, yet, of any reduction granted by roads operating in Canada.

Further information, if needed, will be furnished on application.

R. S. SALYARDS,
Church Secretary.

Book Reviews

THE WAR AND THE BIBLE.—H. G. Enelow, New York, 1918, The Macmillan Company. One hundred and fifteen pages, price 60 cents. The scope and purpose is shown by the title and chapter headings. First, The Spiritual Problems of the War. Second, The Attitude of the Bible Toward War. Third, The Ethics of War in the Bible. Fourth, Some Great Wars of the Bible. Fifth, Heroes of War in the Bible. Sixth, The War Poetry of the Bible. Seventh, War Prayers in the Bible. Eighth, Parallels to the War in the Bible. Ninth, The Peace Ideals of the Bible. It is a book for students of the subject, and is in defense of war under some circumstances, stating that some kinds of war are not only sanctioned but even commanded; yet, that the great underlying theme of the Bible is peace.

CHRISTIAN INTERNATIONALISM.—William Pierson Merrill, New York, 1919. The Macmillan Company, 193 pages. $1.50. The purpose of this book is to establish international ideals as vital to Christianity. Barbarism has been entrenched in our international relation; Christianity has been thus held back, thwarted and imperiled, so that internationalism becomes a vital part of Christianity. Considered with relation to Christianity in the world, the Old and New Testament, democracy and America, internationalism is discussed in a scholarly way. Constructive proposals are set forth for international order to solve the problem confronting us. The latter part of the book considers Christian principles, the war, and the church in their relation to international problems. The writer evidently not only favors a league of nations, but considers a real, active league of nations with just principles of conciliation and international relation, essential, not only for peace but for the maintenance of Christianity.

INDIAN HEROES AND GREAT CHIEFTAINS.—By Charles A. Eastman, Little, Brown, and Company, Boston, price, net $1.25. Since Doctor Eastman is a full-blooded Sioux, he can interpret, better than most anyone else, the Indian character and traits. In this volume he tells the stories of fifteen Indian chiefs, many of whom, like Sitting Bull and Rain-in-the-face, are well known to Americans. All of them were strong, brave men, many of them were famous scouts and fighters, and all were also mighty hunters, for that is the first ambition of any Indian lad, and usually the first fame he attains. Their lives, even as little children, were full of adventures, always thrilling, and frequently humorous. Sometimes they met enemy bands and only escaped by native wit and ingenuity; they had frequent encounters with wild animals, such as a buffalo or grizzly bear or mountain lion; they endured what to us seems extreme hardship in order to attain those qualities which are most admirable in the race: fearlessness, courage, energy, and physical strength and vigor. The Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts to-day go back to these Indian tribes for many of the crafts they practice, and will appreciate thoroughly these stories of real Indians who were masters and leaders among their own people.

THE TRAIL BOOK.—By Mary Austin, Houghton Mifflin Company, 4 Park Place, Boston, Price, net $2. Two children, whose father runs the boilers of a great museum, discover that at night the stuffed animals and the wax Indian "come alive." The boy and girl go to see them every evening and hear their conversation and their stories of the times when the world was younger than now. A mastodon tells how a boy of pre-glacial times made friends with him and through his help triumphed over his enemy and gained the chieftainship left vacant by his father, whom the mastodon had killed. Other tales are told by a coyote, a puma, a moundbuilder, an Indian woman, and others. The stories are original and absorbing, and are told in an engaging style of their own that will make them interesting to older readers as well as to children. There is an atmosphere of reality, too, about these pictures of the past, and young readers cannot fail to get from them convincing impressions of what life must have been in those old times.

HAPPY JACK.—By Thornton W. Burgess, Little, Brown, and Company, Boston. Cloth $1.25. One of Mother Nature's thriftiest little people is Happy Jack Squirrel. He is a long-headed little chap who plays with might and main and has just the best time in the world, but he also works with might and main, especially when he is storing up his winter supplies and getting ready for the cold, bleak days when food is scarce and hard to find. Mr. Burgess is well acquainted with Happy Jack's thrifty habits, and tells all about them in his new book. Also he tells of the adventures that befell Happy Jack during one winter of his busy little life when his enemy the Weasel and his friends Tommy Tit, the Chickadee, Sammy Jay, and Farmer Brown's boy all had a hand in Happy Jack's affairs.

Our Departed Ones

ELLIS.—Clara Louise Kellogg Ellis, wife of Elder Clyde F. Ellis, and younger daughter of O. G. Kellogg and wife, of Coldwater, Michigan, was born April 28, 1891, near Coldwater, Michigan. Was baptized by I. M. Smith in her youth. Married Clyde F. Ellis, July 22, 1914, and in August following left with her companion for the South Sea Islands for missionary labor, reaching Papeete, September 1 of the same year. She entered at once with her companion into the study of the Tahitian language, and during the four years and more which followed gave unreservedly of her time and talents, for the teaching of the native women and children. She had a large class of native girls to whom she was teaching instrumental music, and through those efforts the native girls are now playing for all our services. It was also through her instrumentality the first Woman's Auxiliary was organized in this mission, and it was with unexcelled interest and care that she worked with the native women and girls in that branch of the Lord's work. In connection with that work she edited a department in the mission paper, Te Oremetua, since the year 1915. Her work stands as a living monument to these scattered ones of the house of Israel, and well may it be said, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." Her work was that of consecrated service, and we believe her rest and reward stand sure. She passed from this earthly condition on December 3, 1918, at the age of 27 years, 7 months, and 5 days, of complications following an attack of influenza. She leaves to mourn, her companion, of Papeete, father and mother, of Coldwater, Michigan, and sister. Prayer by Robert T. Brown at the mission house. Interment in the quiet little cemetery of Papeete.

HALL.—Isabella Jane Hall was born April 11, 1853, at Woodbridge, Ontario. Many years a member of the church. Died October 15, 1918, at her home, after a short illness. She was a faithful and earnest Saint, and leaves many relatives and friends to mourn. Sermon by G. E. Harrington, October 17, 1918.

WINSLOW.—Fred E. Winslow was born March 6, 1889, at Neola, Iowa. Baptized at Ravenwood, Missouri, September 8, 1901, by D. C. White. Married Helen D. Toel in 1912, at Conception, Missouri. Died at Des Moines, Iowa, December 21, 1918. Leaves to mourn, wife, son, parents, one sister, and 3 brothers. Funeral from the Methodist Church at Ravenwood, Missouri. Sermon by O. W. Okerlind.

WETHERUP.—Laura Wetherup was born July 17, 1893, at Low Banks, Ontario. United with the church when young. Married Roswell Wetherup, December 27, 1912. Died December 29, 1918, at the home of her parents, leaving husband, 4 children, father, and mother to mourn. She was a loving wife and mother; had great faith and tried to live a saintly life. Sermon by G. E. Harrington, at Low Banks, Ontario.

SHELDON.—Zenas Blair Sheldon was born May 15, 1891, near Cherokee, Iowa. Baptized August 2, 1903. Married Eleanor Carmichael October 8, 1913, at Mallard, Iowa. Died December 9, 1918, at his home near Sutherland, Iowa, of influenza. He leaves wife, one little boy, father, mother, and many relatives and friends to mourn. Prayer at the home and undertaking parlors at Cherokee, Iowa, by A. R. Crippen. Interment in Oak Hill Cemetery.

GRIGSBY.—Charles T. Grigsby was born in Kent, England, April 5, 1874. Died October 12, 1918. Funeral service October 17, at the home in Toronto, Ontario. Sermon by G. E. Harrington. Military honors were shown him at the service and grave. He was highly esteemed by his associates in arms. A loyal and faithful servant of his country and his God has gone to rest. His wife and several children, together with other relatives survive him. Burial in Toronto, Ontario.

THOMPSON.—Wave Victoria Thompson was born August 4, 1880, at Lawrence, Michigan. Baptized at the age of 16 years at Lamoni, Iowa, by H. A. Stebbins. Married August 8, 1900, to Marion C. Thompson. Died December 25, 1918, at New Borgess Hospital, Kalamazoo, Michigan, of bronchial pneumonia following influenza. Leaves to mourn, husband, 5 children, father, mother, 4 brothers, and 2 sisters. Sermon by Ira I. Benham, assisted by L. L. Hendrick, at Van Halst Chapel. Interment at Lawrence Cemetery.

THOMPSON.—Jessie Smith, daughter of Brother and Sister Joseph W. Smith, of Independence, Missouri, was born

A NINETEENTH-CENTURY PROPHET

This subject is treated by John W. Rushton of the Quorum of Apostles in a six-page tract, and is a splendid and dignified piece of literature and printing by which you may introduce the latter-day work to your neighbor. You may discharge the obligation to warn your neighbor by the use of this and other tracts, and thus keep the commandments. It is published by the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and sells for 75 cents per hundred. Order a hundred and try it out.

Became a member of the church in 1873, and passed away in the faith of the gospel, December 7, 1918, after a long and severe sickness. Funeral in charge of E. E. Long, with sermon by John Smith, burial in Rose Hill Cemetery, Lamoni.

GRAYBILL.—Grace Bea, infant daughter of Arnold and Lulu Graybill, was born October 2, 1917; died December 16, 1918, from pneumonia the result of influenza. Besides the parents she leaves 2 brothers, 2 sisters, and other relatives to mourn her early departure. Funeral at the home in Carson, Iowa, December 17, conducted by T. A. Hougas.

GRUTSCH.—William Grutsch, born January 26, 1858, at New Orleans, Louisiana, died October 16, 1918, at Denver, Colorado, of Bright's disease. On September 12, 1881, he married Alice Swan at Leadville, Colorado. Later they moved to Denver, where they resided for many years. His wife and five children remain to mourn his departure. Services in charge of E. J. Williams. Interment at Fairmount.

NELSON.—Mona Helena Nelson, born January 11, 1902, at Eagle Grove, Iowa, died December 2, 1918, at Denver, Colorado. Her death was caused by pneumonia following influenza. Mona possessed a kind and affectionate disposition, and is mourned by a host of friends. Funeral service at Horan's undertaking parlors, in charge of E. J. Williams, Sister Myrtle Bennett, soloist. The floral offerings were many and beautiful. Interment at Crown Hill.

CRAMER.—Hortense C. Cramer, daughter of Sister Hortense Sellon Cramer, was born at Wilmette, Cook County, Illinois, November 15, 1895. Died July 21, 1918, at Denver, Colorado, of heart failure superinduced by acute indigestion. Services in charge of E. J. Williams, assisted by Ammon White. Sister Floye Giffin sang the beautiful hymn, "Where wilt thou put thy trust?" also, "Oh, dry those tears." Interment at Crown Hill.

YOUNG.—Jennie P. Young, daughter of Charles E. and Lottie Young, was born February 12, 1898, at Owendale, Michigan. Died December 11, 1918, at the city's receiving hospital, Detroit, Michigan, a victim of pneumonia following influenza. She was baptized June 22, 1913, by O. J. Hawn, at Port Huron, Michigan. She leaves mother, one sister, one brother, together with a host of relatives and friends to mourn. Funeral at the home in charge of Myron A. Carr. Interment in the West Grant Cemetery.

COCHRAN.—Anna Moore Rhea was born at Des Moines, Iowa, August 4, 1893. She married Zane Cochran, January 21, 1908, at Albia, Iowa. Baptized December 16, 1917, by John J. Jenkins at Hiteman, Iowa, and remained a faithful member to the end. Died of influenza November 19, 1918. Funeral services in charge of William Wilson and Thomas Williams. Interment at Oak View Cemetery, Albia, Iowa. She leaves husband, 3 sons, father, mother, 2 sisters, one brother, and other relatives.

COCHRAN.—Zane Cochran was born in Oklahoma, September, 1879. Married Anna Moore Rhea, at Albia, Iowa, January 21, 1908. Baptized December 16, 1917, by John J. Jenkins at Hiteman, Iowa, and remained faithful to the end. Died of influenza and pneumonia, November 24, 1918. He leaves to mourn him, three sons (his wife having died five days before him), father, three sisters, one brother, and other relatives. Funeral services in charge of Thomas Williams and John Kephart. Interment at Oak View Cemetery, Albia, Iowa.

CHRISTENSON.—Beryl Christenson, oldest son of Brother and Sister Charles Christenson, was born June 21, 1898, at Crescent, Iowa. Died of pneumonia at his home in Holden, Missouri, December 4, 1918. Baptized when 9 years of age. He was a promising young man with many friends, and lived a worthy life. Services at Saints' church in Holden, in charge of D. J. Krahl. Sermon by I. M. Smith, of Warrensburg, Missouri. Interment in the Fairview Cemetery, at Holden, beside his younger brother who passed away 2 days before his death.

WILLOUGHBY.—Mary Finley was born in Henry County, Tennessee, February 14, 1842. Married William A. Willoughby, September 11, 1859. Thirteen children were born to them, 9 of whom are still living. Baptized by John C. Foss, January 24, 1881, and remained faithful to the end. Died at Bonesteel, South Dakota, December 14, 1908.

THOMAS.—Martha Elnora Bullard, born November 12, 1890, near Laird, Colorado; died at her home in Wray, Colorado, December 9, 1918, of influenza. Married James Thomas November 30, 1911. To this union were born 2 children, Mildred, aged 5, and Mary Helen, aged 3. Besides these, she leaves to mourn, a devoted husband, loving father and mother, 6 brothers, 3 sisters, and a host of relatives and friends. Baptized August 7, 1900, and has since lived a faithful follower of the meek and lowly Master. Funeral services conducted at the home by Patriarch James Davis.

ADAIR.—Flora Sherard was born August 22, 1868, near Fairport, Dekalb County, Missouri. Married D. Adair, February 24, 1886. Eight children were born to this union; four yet living: Orion and Walter with the American Expeditionary Forces in France, Mrs. Fayette Cole, and Lester. Resided the past six years in Lamoni, enjoying the love and esteem of all. Died December 8, from complications of influenza with paralysis, which latter had affected her twice of late, silencing her voice and causing much pain and inconvenience. On account of the quarantine restrictions and sickness in the home, the funeral was from the house, with prayer only by E. D. Moore. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

RANDALL.—Isabella Griffiths was born in Liverpool, England, July 30, 1844. Died at her home in Sandwich, Illinois, December 21, 1918, after a brief illness from pneumonia. Married Luke M. Shrewsbury, August, 1868, who died December 16, 1884. Some years later married Allan Randall, who died in May, 1893. Funeral services at the old home, Sandwich, Illinois, December 23, 1918, address by Elder F. M. Cooper, of Plano, Illinois, who also delivered the funeral address of Luke M. Shrewsbury 34 years before. She was a devoted member of the church, as were her parents before her. She was a typical Saint, both in intelligence and in the practice of saintly virtues. The influence of the gospel was paramount in her life and dominated every phase of service which she faithfully rendered here. Her pure mind and exalted ideals proved that she lived in close touch with the Author of her hope. She served with unselfish devotion the interests of the orphan children reared under her motherly care. For years she was superintendent of the Saints' Sunday school at Sandwich. The results of her faithful services in every department of her life work are not only seen and felt here, but will be fully known when the "book of life" is opened beyond death's turbid river.

FROM HERE AND THERE

A meeting is being held in Independence this week, beginning on the 14th, made up of the First Presidency, Presiding Bishopric, members of the Twelve within reach, and presidents and bishops from the various stakes. Matters of special importance to properly coordinate the efforts of all these departments are usually discussed at these meetings.

Memorial services in honor of the untimely departure from this life of Sister Clyde F. Ellis were held at the Saints' chapel in Coldwater, Michigan, December 22, with a sermon by Elder S. W. L. Scott. The pulpit was flanked with stately palms and flowers, and the choir was made up largely of those for whom she had played the organ. She was an active worker in the church and for over four years has been zealously engaged in the Society Island Mission with her husband. Details are contained in the obituary notice in this issue.

We have a letter from Mrs. Garnett Spring, of 532 Stevens Street, Missoula, Montana, asking if there are Saints at that place or near enough to get in touch with them. Will some one call on or write to this sister?

The experiences of the missionary life are so varied they become a great school of self-reliance. A case in point is being demonstrated at the Children's Home here of late. Brother and Sister Amos Chase are in charge and the cook took sick. New cooks are not obtainable on call, so something had to be done. Brother Chase did it. He literally rolled up his sleeves and took over the task and is doing it successfully. On the 5th he baked 220 biscuits for the breakfast, with 108 the next Sunday. On the 11th he baked 39 loaves of bread, with 30 the day previous. He has some help with peeling of potatoes, etc., but otherwise has the sole responsibility, with Sister Chase constantly busy mothering the big family of over forty. Incidentally he looks after the furnaces and such details, and found time on Sunday to preach a sermonet in a series he had been announced for at the junior meetings at the church.

A recent annual meeting of the Lamoni Order of Enoch reelected H. C. Burgess, C. E. Blair, and A. J. Yarrington to succeed themselves, with C. F. Church to succeed John Smith of the board of twelve directors. The order has been rather successful during the first half of the year in several enterprises, but on the advice of the Presiding Bishopric it was thought advisable to transfer control to the storehouse managers till such time as a more definite interpretation of the laws of stewardship and similar phases were decided upon. There is a growing conviction among those who go deeply into the financial law that as it is put more thoroughly into operation the Order of Enoch will have a very important place to fill. We are glad to see the organizations remain intact till that time.

The press informs us that Melvin J. Ballard, of Logan, Utah, was ordained on the 7th as an apostle in the Utah church to succeed Heber J. Grant, recently chosen president. Ballard has been acting as president of the Northwestern States Mission, with headquarters at Portland, Oregon.

MODERN USE OF NARCOTICS

In order to increase the efficiency of the leaflet on harmful effects of narcotics, J. W. Gunsolley, in charge of the temperance department of the Religio, is offering it for sale at $1 a hundred copies. The information contained in this work is gleaned from a large number of books, many of which are not available to students of the subject.

JANUARY AUTUMN LEAVES

One of the leading articles in Autumn Leaves for January is one of vital importance and special interest by Augustine Dwyer on "The art of clothing the heavenly message." It is on a par with his lectures and will be inspirational and directly helpful to a great many people throughout the church. The entire number is replete with good things, and some interested literary people have pronounced it the best of a series of good numbers. "A visit to the tombs of the patriarchs" is an excellent personal narrative by Sister Edna Howland Koehler concerning her visit to one of the few authenticated locations in the Holy Land. It is not too late to begin the reading of "A call at evening," one of the best stories of the many ever published in Autumn Leaves. A synopsis accompanies the installment in this number. "Book of Mormon evidences" is the title of a series of plainly written articles on this important subject, of special value to our rising generation who have not sounded the depths of this subject. The Religio's Arena contains an important address by President Frederick M. Smith at Independence at a Religio function. With this is an important message from G. S. Trowbridge, president of the Religio Society. The Sunday School Department and The Parthenon are teeming with interesting and valuable suggestions. Autumn Leaves is only $1.25 a year, with many single numbers worth more than that to its readers.

THEATER MEETINGS

A card used by Elder T. W. Williams to advertise his meetings at Allan Theater are made out very much like a ticket and are rather striking. Across one end is written, "Do U want to know? Ask Tom Williams." The main body reads, "Allen Theater. Tom Williams of California will lecture every Sunday evening at 7.30. Special music. Live topics. Questions answered." As something new it seems to be meeting with a goodly measure of success. This is principally due to the fact that Brother Williams is able to meet the issue when the crowd is secured.

THE FIFTH LIBERTY LOAN

Repeated notices have been sent out concerning the fifth Liberty Loan to be floated in the spring, which will probably be the last one, and which will be necessary in order to bring our boys home from France, and meet the necessary expenses in the interim. We have already urged the most essential feature which is that economy and thrift should still be practiced, because this winter and coming spring and even into the summer it will be necessary that we do much toward helping to feed Europe. In fact, it is quite probable as some have pointed out, that the effort in this connection will be quite as important as what has already been done towards bringing about a lasting peace. Words are not enough but the sympathy and practical help that will come from this country in a practical way will be of great importance towards bringing about a league of nations. Our only just procedure is reasonable economy and thrift.

We are pleased to note in the San Bernardino Daily Sun a sermon by Elder George H. Wixom, president of the Southern California District. He presented the teaching of the church in the temporal law under the heading the "Cause of the poor."

COURT PROCEDURE

In the Journal of the American Judicature Society for December, 1918, there appears an article, "The principles of a modern procedure," by Adolph J. Rodenbeck, Justice of the Supreme Court and former chairman of Statutory Consolidation of the State of New York. Since this article concerns itself with the fundamental principles of law it should be of interest to all those who sit upon church courts. It should be quite evident in the procedure of our church courts that we should not attempt to copy exactly the procedure of the State courts in all of its technical details; and especially is it true that we should not copy slavishly criminal procedure. But we should take the essence or spirit of the law and apply it to our particular problems.

Justice Rodenbeck discusses the subject under clearly-defined heads or principles which he first lays down.

First, there should be a complete separation of substantive and adjective matter. This applies particularly to the acts of the legislature and does not immediately apply to church court procedure. Substantive law is that which defines rights and wrongs. The adjective is that which defines the remedy. The first described defines rights; the latter, remedies for the violation of those rights.

COMPLETE DISPOSITION

Second, There should be afforded an opportunity for a complete disposition of the entire controversy between the parties. This is a cardinal principle that is not always observed. Procedure sometimes places limits both on the number of causes of action and of parties. The better rule is to let all the parties come in or be brought in who have any interest in the controversy, and let all causes of action or cross-claims be joined, subject only to a separate trial of any issue if deemed necessary or expedient by the court. This is the English rule and is an advance on the practice of limiting the causes of action and parties that may be joined.

Many of our church courts, deceived by the similarity of some of our church procedure to criminal practice, are unwilling to consider the whole of a case, but want to try each individual separately. This is not proper equitable procedure and makes for the continuation of litigation rather than its limitation. The case should be considered as a whole in all its aspects, and settled as speedily as possible. All parties interested should be included. We recall a case in which there was trouble between a man and his wife and the mother-in-law who was living with them, but the church court, in considering the question of un-Christianlike conduct, insisted upon trying it as three separate cases. This is not in accordance with the best principles and essentials of the law.

TRANSFERENCE OF CAUSES

The transfer of a cause to another forum or place of trial should be permitted where jurisdiction exists.

For an exemplification of the practical application of this and other principles states, see Report of Board of Statutory Consolidation presented to the legislature of New York, 1915.

A case should not be thrown out because brought in equity when it should have been brought at law or because the wrong place of trial has been designated, but, if jurisdiction exists, the case should be transferred to the proper forum or place of trial. The practice of throwing out cases for an erroneous forum or place of trial is sometimes permitted by fixed statutory rules prescribing definite places of trial and sometimes by the decisions of the courts, laying too much stress on the distinction between actions in equity and at law.

This does not appear to apply directly to church courts, but the spirit of it does. If the action is fairly set forth, so the other party is advised, the case should not be dismissed but should be proceeded with before the proper court.

SINGLE TRIAL

Rules should be adopted which will enable the parties and the courts to try out the issues of fact once for all. Liberal rules relating to preparations for trial and rules permitting the court to reserve questions of law and submit questions to the jury in the alternative will assist in this direction. Special verdicts should be resorted to whenever practicable to avoid a retrial.

This principle and the others are founded upon equity procedure. The courts of equity have the right to call in parties and make such amendments as may be necessary and to decide the case on the facts before them and to make such special findings as will dispose of the case. Very many of the ministry are misled in this particular, and insist upon extremely formalistic procedure. The court should make no finding upon which the parties have not been fairly advised and given an opportunity to present their evidence. But if the case is fairly before the court and the parties have had fair opportunity to present their evidence, the court should be and is able to find the complainant to be the guilty party even though there be no formal charge lodged against the complainant. He who comes into equity must come with clean hands.

It is true that criminal procedure is very strict, and follows rigid forms. Much of it is archaic and belongs to a previous age when the defendant was allowed neither counsel nor witnesses, and was not permitted to be heard himself, though this harshness was later modified. Our church procedure should not be founded upon criminal procedure at all, as a man is never before the church court as a criminal. It is the purpose of the court to save him if possible, and to secure his reformation. Even an exclusion from membership is not a capital sentence. In the first place the latter finds a condition that exists. It does not cut off spiritual life, but finds that spiritual life no longer exists. In the second place an individual by repenting may renew his spiritual life, and where real repentance is truly shown, may in an ordinary case be again received. There are a few cases in which this is not possible, but that is because continued sinning has left its permanent mark.

SINGLE APPEAL

A single appeal should be encouraged by rules designated to obviate a second trial.

One of the most wasteful features of our present appeal system is to send a case back to be retried in toto when the reversal is as to some fact only which might be retried with a reservation as to the rest of the case. Another is to reverse cases upon technical errors. A third is the restriction, which does not exist in the English practice, against taking evidence on appeal where it can constitutionally be done. These defects can be obviated by suitable provisions. They grow out of the contentious origin of our practice and should be eliminated. The appeal should be treated as a motion for a new trial which should not be granted except for an error affecting a substantial right.

We are already closely approaching this in our court procedure and we believe it is now becoming well recognized. Certainly with us the bishops' court and High Council should hear a case de novo and permit new evidence.

UNIFORMITY OF PROCEDURE

There should be uniformity in the rules of procedure as far as practicable. The procedure should be flexible so as to bring a distinction when necessary so as to bring justice. In this connection the writer continues that no one would argue before a body of laymen that a mere ruling of procedure should stand in the way of justice, yet legislative practice may require the court to subordinate justice to procedure.

It should be clear that in our church courts justice is far more important than following set rules. If there is an error below it can be corrected by appeal.

PROCEDURE SHOULD BE AS SIMPLE AS PRACTICABLE

The pleadings should be short and should be treated as notices of the claims and cross-claims and not as something to be made the center of a subordinate controversy. Denials should be specific and not vague, general, or evasive. A case once noticed for trial should be treated as noticed for all time. Under a general notice of motion the court should be permitted to grant any relief that the parties are prepared to meet on the argument. After a motion on the complaint and answer, a general motion should take in all the relief necessary for any party to prepare for trial. The calendar should be under the control of the court and not regulated by statute. An early trial should be permitted where necessary. This principle involves conciseness and condensation of expression.

The time for taking the various steps in an action should be as short as practicable, in order to give only reasonable notice. A case should be tried as soon as is practicable. A common fault is to try to make all cases fit the same mold.

The principle of this rule is that a fair opportunity should be given to plead and then the issue made as soon as can be. As a rule church courts have proceeded upon this principle. Cases are not delayed, as occurs in the courts of the land, for one or more years before they are heard upon their merit. We have known of cases in the civil courts held up for five years and then dismissed. The court should certainly take sufficient time to see that all proper details are carried out and suitable notice given. Sickness of parties may also be a reason for delay, but not too long continued.

SUBSTANTIVE JUSTICE

The substantive right of the parties should be the primary consideration.

From the commencement of an action until its final determination on appeal every step should have regard to justice and not to procedure. This purpose suggested the rule of disregarding mistakes, irregularities, and errors at any stage which do not affect a substantial right. The legislative codes grew up at a time when procedure was given undue prominence. The idea was that there were certain fixed rules according to which justice must be arrived at and that the courts must have no control over these rules. That idea is gradually dying out and those who do not appreciate that we have advanced beyond that stage in this country are behind the times. The sole aim should be justice and everything should be subordinated to that end.

The whole tendency at present is towards simplicity, shorter forms, and substantial justice, all of which tend in the direction of equity. Our church courts should not drag behind. In plain fact equitable procedure historically is derived from the unwritten law of natural justice. It was continued in Roman jurisprudence by a special officer (the prætor) and was carried over into the canon law. In Great Britain the common law has become very much stilted and set in form. Hence there was established the court of chancery or of the king's conscience. The lord chancellor was a churchman. In chancery an effort was made to secure substantive justice or equity in those cases in which no suitable remedy was given in the common law. It was originally very flexible. In recent years equity procedure has become more set in form, but is still more flexible than the common law branch.

In principle the church courts should also seek to administer equity, to secure substantial justice and bring about reconciliation.

We again respectfully submit that there should be no place in our church court procedure for the rules peculiar to criminal practice, but our procedure should be founded entirely upon the principles of equity.

Recent legal literature shows a strongly marked tendency in the civil courts to secure substantial justice rather than formal procedure. This may be noted in the juvenile courts, in probation for adult offenders, and other reforms in the criminal department. In this same department, in some places, there is the growing recognition of the relation between mental deficiency and crime, and psychiatrist is more closely associated with the court.

This same tendency is indicated in the effort to do away with justice of peace courts and to establish municipal courts with abler men as judges, and then arrange for separate departments so that the judges become specialists in their own department of jurisprudence. Thus the department of domestic relations is concerned less with divorce than it is with bringing about reconciliation between the parties and just treatment from one to the other. Again, there has already been noted the conciliation courts and informal trial, all of which tend towards equity, as does the oral opinion promptly rendered.

In these and other ways a decided effort is being made to make the State courts, both civil and criminal, to be instrumentalities for the correction of wrong conditions rather than simply an empirical forum for debate in which a game is played between two or more lawyers.

The real purpose of the church procedure has always been to accomplish reconciliation and cure evil. This is far more important than the ability of the court to make a finding of fact of guilt or innocence. We should not lag in the effort to secure justice.

AMERICANIZATION

In The American Hebrew for January 3, we note the editorial statement that owing to the pogroms in Galicia and Poland, and because of other conditions in Europe, it is probable that there will be a large emigration of Jews from Europe to America. They raise a serious question concerning the Americanization of the immigrants, and the argument would apply also to immigrants other than those of the Jewish people. They urge that those who come from Russia and Austria will be coming from countries infested with Bolshevism and that it will require not only night schools and settlements for social intercourse, but definite work, to see that they are properly adopted.

They suggest an organization of suitable committee to discuss plans and see that they are carried out.

BETTER HOMES

The State legislature of Iowa which convened the second Monday in January, 1919, will have before it a state housing law. As the HERALD is not a local paper, but reaches throughout the world, we can only discuss this question in part.

The crowded condition of the cities of our country is really a disgrace. Especially is this true in what are called the "slums," where many people live in a cellar, or in an attic. We know of instances where four families have lived in one room; where regular "rookeries" were maintained. Other instances where a single lot, twenty-five by one hundred feet, would house from six to twelve families of a better class, there being a three-story brick building on the front of the lot; another on the rear end of the lot, and not a bit of grass anywhere, but a brick yard with common outhouse in the middle of the yard.

Even seventy years ago, when the Middle West was the West, and was still quite wild, houses were built together in this crowded fashion, with the result that repeated epidemics were suffered, such as that of about 1850 of cholera in the Mississippi Valley.

We have seen cities built among the rocks, where there seemed but little reason for such crowding, and even the better class of houses were allowed very little of yard or breathing space.

In the smaller towns, quite frequently unnecessary crowding is to be observed—with unsanitary conditions of water supply and buildings.

The law proposed for Iowa concerns itself with regulating the light, ventilation, sanitation, fire protection, and the alteration and improvements of dwellings, in the interest of health, safety, and general welfare. They state that they are not out for cut and dried methods, nor do they contemplate radical and sudden economic revolution. They do desire to prevent an increase of such conditions, and a correction of those already existing. This has been found necessary in other States, and whole blocks of buildings, in some instances, being destroyed, with marked improvement in the health of the whole city.

In Iowa evidently nothing so radical is intended at present. Some of those interested are urging the advisability of erecting homes as a cure for social unrest. And a home in these times means more than simply a place to sleep. It means a place which in ventilation and sanitary conditions make for better health.

As we have pointed out before, this is another illustration of social tendency recognizing that all of us must consider the just needs of each one, and that our best interests are thus secured. Some are urging that a commission be appointed to assist the worthy poor in securing homes.

But this does not appear to be part of the present legislative program. The present purpose is only to provide conservative improvements of housing conditions.

Every such step is a step in advance and making for sanity and the safety of the people. It is a hardship, often, for the property owners, but this, in the end, is more than compensated to the community in better health conditions. It seems that very few recognize that many contagious diseases cannot be kept out of the homes of the well to do so long as the poor are crowded in slums.

A reasonable, conservative program should not only prevent conditions becoming worse, but should soon secure much better conditions throughout the country.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

The Bishopric

Dear Saints of the Northwestern Kansas District: I wish to speak to you through the HERALD, concerning the financial part of our work. I want to urge every one of you to get your name on our record this year.

I hope you will look over the report of the district as published in a late HERALD, in the report of the Bishop, and note how few have responded to this part of the law. If all will bring in their tithes we will be under no necessity of continually crying: "Give, give," as we are now doing to pay the church debt. Neither is it meet that we should withhold God's part and look to the children and members of the Sunday school to pay the debt we thus cause.

If our district is a fair example of the church as a whole it is no wonder we have debt. We have a membership of something like 350, and for the year just past I have received about fifteen names for tithing. Fifteen Saints out of 350 have paid tithing. What a showing! Nothing to be proud of, is it? Let us do better this year. Only about four per cent paying tithing to help God (we are laborers together with him) keep this glorious gospel moving!

If we have earthly creditors we look well to it that they are paid, but with God we seem to think he is longsuffering. Well, he must be, to wait so long on some of us.

We may neglect this principle if we wish, but we do it at our own risk, the same as though we should neglect baptism, etc. He has given exceeding precious promises to those who keep his whole law. He says: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." We believe it. He says: "He that is tithed shall not be burned." Do we believe it? He also says: "If any man shall take of the abundance which I have made and impart not his portion according to the law of my gospel . . . he shall with the wicked lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment." Do we believe and fear that? Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith. Don't say: "I don't like the way the law is administered." Bishop McGuire is the one man in the church whom God has found to fill this place. Give him your confidence and support. Read Doctrine and Covenants 126:10. The Lord has spoken. Let us heed. Let us get in line, bring in our tithes and move the church ahead, and give it a chance to put its missionaries where this great conflict of war shall have opened places for them.

If you keep your tithes it handicaps the church that much and keeps that much force from the missionary field and other departments as well. Oh, may we awake and recognize wherein we are hindering God's work. If you have never paid tithing before, begin now. God will bless you.

Just one instance. A brother living in this district began to pay his tithing when he first came into the church. Last year this district had a crop failure. This brother writes me that he raised ten hundred and fifty bushels of wheat, and one of his near neighbors had sixty bushels, another forty, both of them nonmembers. If there was another bushel threshed within forty miles he did not know it, with the possible exception of one man about thirty-five miles away who was said to have had a few bushels, perhaps forty or fifty.

Away with unbelief, which has hindered the work and the development of individuals in all ages. Let us show our faith by our works. "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts. And all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightful land, saith the Lord of hosts."—Malachi 3:10-12.

Wishing you a happy and prosperous year and working for the complete fulfillment of the law.

JOHN A. TEETERS, Bishop's Agent.

ALEXANDER, KANSAS.

Church Secretary

CREDENTIAL INFORMATION

Delegate credential blanks, provided for by action of General Conference, have been sent to secretaries of districts, stakes, and branches not in districts, addressed to secretaries when possible to obtain addresses. Such officers are requested to forward credentials of delegates appointed to represent their organizations at the General Conference of 1919 to President Frederick M. Smith, Box 255, Independence, Missouri, as soon as practicable, that the report of the committee on credentials may be made up and printed before the opening of the conference, as required by conference action. Credentials of delegates appointed by conferences held in the fall or winter should be forwarded without delay, and of those yet to be appointed, immediately after appointment. All credentials should be in hand as early in the month of March as possible.

One certificate for each delegation, with number of members in stake, district, or branch, and names of its delegates, signed by the president and secretary of the body appointing, with name of such organization, place and date of conference or business meeting, is sufficient; separate, individual credentials to delegates are unnecessary. Please insert "total membership" in all cases; scattered and absent members may be included in the number; also report if delegates are authorized to cast majority and minority vote in case of division and the full delegation not present.

THE RATIONAL ELEMENT OF RELIGION

Recent developments within the church have precipitated and crystalized some conclusions which before had been held in suspension. The circumstances referred to acted in a manner similar to a chemical process in which some agent introduced into a compound set up an ebullition and precipitates one or more of the elements composing the mixture, at the bottom of the test tube. To disturb the placid unity may seem unkind, but it is one of the essential methods of analysis, which is a most necessary part of all educational processes.

It has been noticed so many times that the prevailing tendency in religion is to cultivate the emotional element, and give it primary place in the individual and collective activities. As in our natural birth so in the spiritual, our personality develops first the function of "feeling." This is natural. Then, accepting the analogy of our Lord which he used to Nicodemus, we conclude that a matured spiritual experience is not possible if we allow ourselves to become the constant victims of our "feelings." There must come a time when intelligence and will shall play their part in the struggle towards maturity. In and of themselves neither the function of "feeling," called the "affective," nor the "cognitive," the intellectual, or knowing function can produce character. The normal personality, which is the sum of character, waits for the development of the "conative" or "striving" function. Psychology justifies the maxim. "Where there is no will there is no character."

Clearly, the end of the regenerative processes is the creation of a new character, a new personality—"the new man in Christ Jesus"—is the Pauline description. Then, the will in the spiritual life must hold relatively as important a place as it does in the natural life. Besides spiritual emotionalism and spiritual intelligence, there must be spiritual willing. As one of our modern philosophers insists, "moral goodness cannot be yours unless your will itself is good." (Josiah Royce.) Jesus also emphasized this in a well-known passage: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine," etc. In the definition of religion by Professor Pringle Patterson this voluntary willing is made the essence of religion: "Religion is the self-surrender of the human will to the divine. 'Our wills are ours to make them thine.' But this is a self-surrender which only self, only will can make."

All movements have their beginning, their infancy and childhood, but there must come a time when it can be said: "I became a man and put away childish things." Men "feel" or experience first and explain afterwards. In religious movements especially is this true and for nearly a century our experience as a church has been all but limited to "feeling" and now there is a growing demand for explanations. Reason is calling for "intellectual foundations." One of the most urgent needs of the church to-day is a philosophic statement of our position. It is not enough to announce our presence, but the questions asked are: "how," and "for what purpose." We owe to the world a careful and analytical statement of our "raison d'être."

In spite of the persistent wailing in which we have the cries for more "spirituality" on one hand, and petulant, sometimes peevish, complaints of waning "power" on the other, I make bold to say that neither one nor the other of these implied defects is responsible for the conditions developing within the church of which this year's events are but typical. It is urged earnestly, and with due appreciation and reverence of and for the "spiritual" aspects of the work, the striking demand of the moment is the establishment of our faith upon the ground of reason, so that we have not only a justification for our faith which will stand the test of analysis and convince our intelligence, but also provide a program of activities to the achievement of which we may with resolute call command our will. In the growth of the church as an organization we have passed the state of infancy and the limitations of nurseries and kindergarten. We need the school and provinces of education and labor worthy of our adolescence, if not young manhood.

It is not improbable that the very complaints referred to, of declining "spirituality" and waning "power," are witnessing that the time is here when we have lost our "milk teeth" and want to exercise on the "strong meat." The infantile menu is not supplying the nutriment which the growing body requires and we are in danger of degenerating into an anæmic condition producing the very symptoms which justify the use of this word—neuroticism.

Are we not justified in expecting under normal conditions of growth that the church will show increased capacity for spiritual life and power which in the nature of things, the supplies of the past are not able to adequately satisfy? Not of quantities of kind do we speak, but of differences in qualities.

We say here, however, that it is not necessarily true that spirituality and power in the church are declining simply because those who complain are not seeing what they think they saw so frequently in the palmy days of their youth. We all recognize the peculiar romance which gilds the past, and how natural it is for age to become reminiscent, and unfortunately in ratio to the exalted opinions of that past set it in all the glamor of an enriched imagination, to underestimate and even belittle the splendor of the present. Age lives in the past, while youth with fleet step rushes into the future, and both are likely to miss the real evaluation of the now.

Then again, it must be admitted that times are bringing remarkable changes, and the conditions surrounding the church to-day are vastly different from those of a century, or even twenty-five years ago.

As a matter of fact our annual conferences are in themselves an index of the swiftness with which legislation may become obsolete and the persistent need of readjustment. If it is true (and who can deny it?) that continuity of life depends upon the power of adaptation which an organism possesses, then the survival of the church depends upon her ability to perceive the new demands and her power to meet them satisfactorily.

When the church was organized under the leadership of Joseph Smith the great problems of those days were political and economic readjustment following the stormy days of the American and French revolutions and the long series of Napoleonic wars. Then came the days of the conflict between science and religion, in which the strident note of rationalism challenged everything which ventured to claim spirituality or supernaturalism, following we have had the various problems of the social order and the antagonism between class and class and particularly between capital and labor. Who shall say what the problems of to-day or the near to-morrows shall be? At least we may say that one will be the reconstruction of the whole world upon the beneficent principle of brotherhood and the correlative responsibilities, in which everything, every state and every power shall be made subservient to the increasing happiness of the race with the abolition of the tragic inequalities from out of which so much of the world's misery originates.

Shall we say that because of the changing orders and consequent changes in policies and equipment that humanity is losing its power and greatness? Shall we say that because the church is trying to interpret the demands of the times and modernize its supplies to meet those demands that she is recreant to her trust and apostate to her principles?

In a remarkable sermon preached by T. H. Green in the Balloil Chapel of Oxford in 1877, this sentiment was expressed:

You know that the air is full of the conflict between science and religion. Both sides are but exhibiting different aspects of the same human spirit. The scientific impulse on the one side, and the faith that worketh by love on the other, are both essential. A religion which would assert divine causation for natural phenomena is not exactly false but really unmeaning. On the other hand, science itself is a witness to the reality of the spiritual, as it implies a rational self-consciousness always stretching out to learn more and to attain a higher degree of spiritual being. It is this principle within him by which man projects himself into a better future; and his best is God.

Some seem to confuse belief in a "static divinity" and the unchangeability of truth with human stagnation. If because we believe that God does not change and his truth is always stationary, we remain static and unchanged, how would it be possible for us to ever reach the high plane of his presence and become intimate with the deeper mysteries of that truth which is our passport into that presence?

Again this attitude of mind seems to be associated with the unwillingness or inability to distinguish between "means" as such and "ends." We have seen sorry spectacles of humanity's declension when actions have been had on purely emotional foundations. The exercise of what we sometimes rather liberally call the "gifts," however much appreciated and enjoyed, are not in themselves "ends," but aids and helps to the end. Nor should they be accepted as conclusive evidence that those who exercise them are necessarily "right with God." There are too many people claiming considerable inflow of occult and superhuman power expressing itself through what are called "gifts," whose lives obviously are not rectilinear with God, to make it safe to stress the familiar quotations.

At least it is significant that some of those who have made the most extravagant claims to spiritual favors and almost a daring intimacy with the divine have descended to greater depths of iniquity and exceeded all others in their apostasies. We surely would not be wise to refuse to consider these experiences which try our faith in God and man. We certainly would be guilty of grievous neglect of our responsibilities if we did not try to remedy such defects, and the discovery of the remedy will of course need the accurate identification of the causes. We admit, however, that diagnostics is a very intricate and tedious process and many mistakes have been and perhaps will be made. But this unfortunate confession does not justify declining the attempt.

At this juncture, however, let it be distinctly understood we are not seeking to segregate the "emotional" and either discard it or treat it slightly. We quite appreciate the value of the emotional, but we believe that it must be the servant of the reason and will and not the master.

A satirical paragraph from the New York Mail, written by H. L. Mencken early in this year, will serve as an admirable illustration of what we mean to some extent:

There is the man whose eye inevitably exaggerates, whose ear inevitably hears what is not, whose imagination inevitably helps out his five senses. He is the hero worshiper, the enthusiast, the romantic. He is the sort of fellow who, if he were a bacteriologist, would report the bacillus typhosus to be as large as a horse, as lovely as a gazelle, as intelligent as Aristotle, and as moral as Josephus Daniels.

The character so graphically caricatured is frequently met with and presents a very interesting study in psychology. It would be too summary if not unjust to say that such persons were guilty of lying or even of pernicious misrepresentation. It is a form of egotism which, when the condition is not pathological, is foreign to the temper and spirit of the Christian ethic. Egotism may be quite harmless and even amusing as in the case of Dicken's Micawber; and, if properly controlled may be the power by which an individual is urged to success in face of all kinds of opposition as in the case of Quisante in the novel of the same name by Anthony Hope. In some degree egotism is a necessary ingredient in the power of leadership which can set itself to win against threatening odds and make the very failures stepping stones to desired ends. But the sense in which the satire speaks of egotism, it runs into "megalomania" and may produce "paranoia," of which the German Nietzsche and the ex-kaiser are fitting examples.

Doctor G. Stanley Hall has some interesting observations on what he calls "lying" of this kind, growing out of egotism, and summarizes as follows: The following are the constant factors—conceit, affected superiority, vanity, and the desire for display. This quotation is also significant in the light of the experiences through which the church has been and is passing to which reference has been made: "The greatest number of lies in our collection are prompted by some of the more familiar manifestations of selfishment." And speaking of what he calls pathological lying Doctor Hall says: "It is illustrated in the love of showing off, and seeming big, to attract attention, or win admiration, leading to the assuming of false characters and pretenses."

History supplies many instances of the careers of such people who have swung movements and left countless injuries and wrecks of institutions and causes in their wake. Not infrequently men whose academic training commands our respect have been deceived, and the records of the Psychological Researching Society have instances of further and more complete investigation exposing fraudulency and deception, of which in the pure love of truth these men have made confessions despite the humiliation entailed.

It is easy to detect these same symptoms of egotism in the sycophancy and adulation offered to many who are in public positions. The literal "gushing" of endearing terms and the exudation of cloying sweetness is nauseating to normally-minded people. Under this influence the holiest affections are vulgarized and even commercialized, at least a too common use and blatant familiarity cheapen all the tokens of love and esteem. Usually when this extravagance has run its course, then it is not uncommon to find these same people exhibiting hysterical denunciation, at times going to such extremes that the very grotesqueness and absurdity of their attacks neutralize the purpose. The same thing is seen in the attitude of some who in their conversion to a new cause, country, or institution and even the church seem to think they best demonstrate their allegiance to the new love by abusing and treating with contempt that which they have left, not appreciating evidently the fact that all which has made part of our experience becomes identified with us, indeed has become "self," and therefore is worthy of at least reverent appreciation, as a means to reaching higher and further.

LOYALTY

In these days when the word loyalty is becoming fashionable and carries a tremendous significance, we should not forget that egotism has not infrequently masqueraded in that mien. With some, loyalty does not seem to go beyond that which is exhibited by children, savages, and weak persons, and which expresses itself towards persons rather than principles. These people do not discriminate, and at times their allegiance to a person will carry them into the ranks of those who are the opponents of truth and principle which alone can justify "loyalty." The loyalty needed is suggested in the stirring call of James Russell Lowell in "The Crisis:"

Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of Truth with Falsehood, for the good or evil side;
Some great cause, God's new Messiah, offering each the bloom or blight,
Parts the goats upon the left hand, and the sheep upon the right.
And the choice goes on forever 'twixt that darkness and that light.

It is this which makes the message of our Lord stand out so conspicuously. He did not ask for loyalty to himself as a person nor an officer, but to the truth of which he was but the incarnation; and, as the vital principle of his power makes his authority so supreme. Note the following quotations:

I am the truth.
The truth shall make you free.
Sanctify them through thy truth.

While it is true that success cannot be realized in public service whether in the realm of politics, commerce, or ecclesiasticism unless founded upon friendship, yet that friendship must not be and cannot be the outgrowth of any other quality than a mutual recognition and appreciation of truth to which the "friendship" is devoted in true loyalty. The importance of "devotion to the truth" as the essential ingredient in loyalty cannot be too strongly insisted upon. "Truth is the mainspring of knowledge; it has taken mankind long enough to learn the sublimity of a kind of truth which is no respecter of persons," says Doctor G. Stanley Hall. The love of the truth of itself and for itself must characterize genuine loyalty. Further, "With most children and savages, truthfulness is greatly affected by personal likes and dislikes." And "that it is through the instinct of personal fealty that most men have grown up to a sense of fidelity to God and even the obligation of scientific truthfulness." How much has been lost and how intensely tragic the sufferings because of these defects in our nature all history witnesses.

This so-called loyalty to a person, or an institution, expressed in the notorious theatricality "my country right or wrong," blinding the eye to manifest wrong and making the voice of criticism dumb in the moment of crisis, is a very insecure foundation upon which to build. There may be prudential gains by being loyal to a person or a popular movement, but it is the kind which also regulates its course upon the maxim "honesty is the best policy," and produces the world's Cranmers, Archbishops Lauds and Lord Francis Bacons; but never the reformers whose very names are perpetual benison to the race as, Coben, Bright, Cromwell, Emerson, Theodore Parker, and Lincoln. These latter were loyal to principle and the truth when it meant the loss of persons and prestige. The others were loyal to person and that practically means self and self interest.

Discussing the question of loyalty more closely and analytically, Professor Josiah Royce includes it as one of the chief sources of religious insight, indeed the very essence of religion:

"However far you go in loyalty, you will never regard your loyalty as a mere morality, it will also be in essence a religion."—Sources of Religious Insight, page 206.

We shall take the trouble and time to quote further from this book of Professor Royce, who, as a philosopher ranks among the very highest of the American school:

The true principle of loyalty is, in fact, a union of two principles. The first is: Be loyal. The second is: So be loyal, that is, so seek, so accept, so serve your cause that thereby the loyalty of all your brethren throughout all the world, through your example, through your influence, through your own love of loyalty wherever you find it, as well as through the sort of loyalty which you exemplify in your deeds, shall be aided, furthered, increased so far as in you lies. [And]: Such people are then, in truth, not loyal merely to their private cause. They are loyal to the cause of all loyal people.—Ibid., pp. 202, 203.

Loyalty is therefore an attitude on the part of the individual which will increase social devotion to the cause which in the course of human experience is worthy of the persistent loyalty of the race. This goes beyond personal considerations and lifts all loyal people above the fret and turmoil of secondary discussions and becomes the dynamic by means of which all are fused in the "unity of spirit."

The cause may be defined differently according to temperament or training or development, but however it may be defined it is never one individual person alone. . . . The cause for any such devoted servant of a cause as we have been describing is some conceived, yet also real, spiritual unity which links many individual lives in one, and which is therefore essentially superhuman, in exactly the sense in which we found the realities of the world of the reason to be superhuman. The cause is not, on that account, any mere abstraction. It is a live something: My home, my family, my country, my service, mankind, the church, my art, my science, the cause of humanity, or, once more, God's will—such are the names for the cause. . . . The cause, then, is something based upon human needs, and inclusive of human effort, and alive with all the warmth of human consciousness and of human love and desire and effort. One also thinks of the cause as superhuman in the scope, the wealth, the unity, and the reasonableness of its purposes and its accomplishments.—Ibid., pp. 199, 200.

In practical expression this attitude of loyalty has its simplest statement of principle in the maxim, "Be loyal to your cause." More fully stated: "Devote your whole self to your cause."

Such a principle does not mean "lose yourself," or "abolish yourself," or even simply "sacrifice yourself." It means: Be as rich and full and strong a self as you can, and then, with all your heart, and your soul, and your mind, and your strength, devote yourself to this your cause, to this spiritual unity in which individuals may be, and (when they are loyal) actually are, united in a life whose meaning is above the separate meanings of any or of all natural human beings."—P. 201.

No matter what we shall claim as our cause then, it is of supreme importance that we shall see in the cause that which can and does call forth all that is the very best within us and of us, and further, that which we see in the cause shall also make for the betterment of the whole of the race, and finally, it must demonstrate its realness by its power to unify with itself all other "worths" and "reals" and make us in turn one with all men and women who are "loyal" in the same manner.

If the cause shall be our church, we must have clearly definitized the principle of which the church is but the symbol.

The church as an institution is but the organization of men and women who find unity of interests, ideals, and activities directed to the glory of God and the good of their fellows in which ends our own salvation is secured. To reverse this and make the church the instrument of personal salvation would be a contradiction of the principle of loyalty and render such a person unsalvable to that extent.

The church is the visible evidence of the unity of purpose between God and man and is the visible "point of contact" between the human and the divine; the agent through which personal religion becomes a socialized value. As an institution then the church must have as its cause to which the adherents must be loyal, the fact of religion as communion between God and man finding expression through the organized activities making for the unification of human activities with divine purposes. This impress of God's will upon the individual life expressing itself in the collective life of the body ecclesiastic is the cause to which all church people must be loyal. Everything else is secondary and of value only so far as they are efficient means to this end.

To clearly vision that will of God and develop the activities of the body in all relations in faithful obedience to that will is the obvious duty of the church, and the success attending the visioning of that will and attending the efforts to achieve God's purposes will be the irrefragable proof of the church's authority and standing. This being so, it also follows that the church must be an important agent through which "the spiritual unity of all the world of reasonable beings," shall be brought about. And, "to further the unity of whatever spiritual life you can influence, and to do this by every rational deed, precisely in so far as your powers permit." (Sources of Religious Insight, p. 208.)

Though other people and organizations do not recognize such efforts and may even be hostile to purpose and formulæ as well as ideals, we have not escaped from the duty of persistently seeking the "unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace: (harmony—that which is perfectly joined together)." The church must rise above sectarianism and seek for the principle of unification in everything which may be considered a cause commanding loyalty, it matters not where nor by whom. It is this outstanding feature which brings into spiritual relationship all reformers and reform movements; and gave point to the saying of Herbert Spencer: "No heresy is believed in for its falsities, but for the truth it contains and which its devotees see and believe." History philosophically interpreted demonstrates this remarkably, showing the identification of this principle which is the foundation of our faith that right will prevail; for, "history is the great judge and vindicator of the ways of God to man." We offer the following illustration from the Hibbert Journal, volume 16, number 4, page 579:

In 1846 Newman was received into the Roman Church. He was followed thither by the group whom Doctor Roland Williams in his "Essays and reviews" sorrowfully describes as "our lost ones." At just the same time there was in progress in the rugged land north of the Tweed a spiritual movement whose leaders would have called these Roman neophytes by the bitter name of perverts, and who in turn would have been despised by them as heretical and schismatic. No round table could have been capacious enough to bring together Chalmers and Newman, Ward and Guthrie. Yet they were united by a surer bond than any which round table conferences disclose. On that level which is deeper than discussion can reach they were at one in a great loyalty and a great antagonism. They shared, though they knew it not, in a glorious conception of the church, and in a noble indignation for the church's sake against those by whom she was being betrayed. They believed alike that she was neither a hireling of the civil power nor an auxiliary to national refinement, neither a soothing influence over public discontents nor a moral prop to government and police; that her life depended not on the funds which parliament might vote nor on the worldly allies who might be won over through prejudice; not on the tactics by which opponents might be appeased, current whims exploited, and popular enthusiasms pressed into a sham religious reinforcement. Far other convictions were in the minds of the free churchmen of 1843 and of the "Romanizers" of 1846. Far different was the call which bade them forsake their country and their kindred and their father's house. In ways they were dissimilar—so very dissimilar—they alike believed themselves the custodians of a trust from Him who had no need of any man's strategy. It was theirs to go straight forward, not disobedient to their heavenly vision, and the consequences were in higher hands. Whatever such men may say of one another, however impenetrable to their own eyes may be the partition walls which separated them, they have partaken of the same spiritual meat, and have touched their lips with the same wine of remembrance.

It is this quality in human experience and history which unifies all the parts, episodes, and persons into the real universal brotherhood and makes communion with God the real moral and spiritual force at the back of all progress. This is loyalty.

A church or ministry which loses the "heavenly vision" in the puerile struggles for personal or sectarian gains cannot be regarded as one with the "Loyal hearts and true standing ever in the light." However vaunting the claims, imposing the ritual, and attractive the message; however magnetic, eloquent, and powerful the leadership of the ministry—when questions of personal privileges, of denominational rights are allowed to take precedence over questions of truth, justice, and honor loyalty cannot exist, but egotism paralyzes the usefulness of such an institution or person and what we here call neuroticism broods over a moral and spiritual waste. The stern rebuke of Matthew Arnold is fittingly opposite:

Its frame yet stood without a breach
When blood and warmth were fled;

And still it spake its wonted speech
But every word was dead.

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

THE GREAT NEED OF THE BRANCHES

Laboring from month to month in the branches of the church offers opportunity to note what is strong and what is weak in the Saints as organized bodies. While there is much to give comfort and encouragement, there is also much to dishearten and discourage. I like to think of every branch as a human unit, and in a sense having a soul. Each member of the branch contributes something to the building up of the branch if he has the true spirit of the gospel. Our strength comes in a large measure from being together. Indeed, the growth of our spiritual life is largely dependent upon being together. Where two or three are assembled the Lord of life is present in a way in which he is not present with the isolated soul. When two or three unite in prayer, heaven is responsive to degrees never reached when men pray separately. We are therefore in this article to consider some things needed in the branches as a whole.

It seems to me a good definition of the word Saint would be: "A builder of the spiritual life in himself and in his brethren." Paul's earnest admonition to a company of Christians at Thessalonica was, "Build one another up." This is the work which the Saints in every branch should do for one another. This is the very work which the great apostle exhorted the churches in his charge to abound in. "Seek that ye may abound in the work of building up." The gist of what he said to all the churches is contained in these words: Let us follow after things which make for peace, and things whereby we may build one another up.

Careful readings of the epistles and church history reveals clearly that the early Christians did not conceive of themselves as members of a body, or as stones in a temple; and the result was a frequent discord and distressing scandal. Human nature in that day was no different from what we find it to-day. There were members in the various churches who sorely tried the heart of Paul. They followed their own bent, indulging their vanity, gave vent to their censorious tempers, and pulled to pieces the unity of the congregation. It grieves us to find the same class in some of our branches to-day.

I never lose hope for any branch when I think of the conditions Paul found in the church in Corinth. Considerateness and forbearance were virtues slightly practiced; vanity and self-seeking were vices in full bloom. To this church the apostle unfolds his idea of building. He is grieved over the condition. He shows how the destructive work began. He goes to the root of the matter. He makes them see that all their troubles lie in the fact that they are not alive to their duty as builders. They neither build themselves up nor do they build one another. They are torn by cliques. All their troubles would disappear if they would give themselves to building in a spiritual sense. His counsel is summed up in the single sentence: "Let everything be done with a view to building." It is an evil spirit which takes delight in pulling things to pieces.

Every branch should be as a family of God. And even more than that, it should be a living temple. Jesus should be its foundation stone, the stone rejected by men but chosen of God and precious, upon which living stone believers are built up a spiritual house.

The sad condition of some of our branches, because of lack of charity and forbearance deserves sustained attention. We should prayerfully turn to the great Head of the church, and hear him as he speaks to us: "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." The distinctive note of life in the gospel is proclaimed to be love for another. Without this distinctive note a branch is nothing more than "sounding brass and tinkling cymbal." It is a body without a spirit.

How tender is the admonition which Peter gives to the Christians of his day: "Be ye like minded, compassionate, loving, as brothers, tender-hearted, humble-minded." He has many bits of advice to give to his converts, but this is chief: "Above all things be fervent in your love among yourselves. Honor all men. Love the brotherhood."

I love to think of John in his old age, with trembling hand and tear-dimmed eyes, writing his conception of what a company of followers of Christ should be. It would be well for all of us, in every branch, to often recall the precious words of the beloved disciple. He makes it clear that our first duty as believers in the gospel is loving one another. There is little else that he cares to write. We can still hear his great heart beating in his words: "He that loveth his brother abideth in the light." "We ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." "This is his commandment, that we should believe in the name of his Son, Jesus Christ, and love one another." "Beloved, let us love one another." "If God so loved us we ought to love one another." "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, cannot love God whom he hath not seen." "This commandment have we from him that he who loveth God, love his brother also."

After reading these words of John, I can easily believe what Eusebius, the early church historian, tells us. He relates that when John was advanced in years, unable any longer to walk, the young men in the church in Ephesus were wont to carry him before the people, to whom he repeated again and again, "Little children, love one another." When they asked him why he said this so many times, his reply was: "Because it is the Lord's precept, and if only it be done it is enough."

What a blessed thing it would be if the members of every branch in the church would realize to its fullness the fact that it is only as they are rooted and grounded in love that they are strong to apprehend with all the Saints what is the breadth and length and height and depth, and to know the love of Christ which "passeth all knowledge."

It thrills my heart every time I read the first letter of Paul to the Corinthians. In that letter his conception of love breaks into the language of unsurpassed and unforgettable splendor. He declares what love is, how it acts, feels, thinks, and what victories it wins. Without it, no matter what else we possess, we have nothing.

Looking at our branches in the light of the writings of Peter, John, and Paul, we must conclude that unless a branch is a brotherhood it is not a branch. A company of men and women whose sympathies and purposes are not intertwined and whose lives are not interlaced and blended may be called a branch, but it does not bear in the body of its life the marks of the Lord Jesus.

I love to think of that habit Jesus had of reminding his disciples that he was their Master and that all they were brethren. The great burden that lay upon his heart is seen in his behavior and words in the upper chamber. All along the way that day, there had been outbreaks of temper on the part of the twelve, and the old spirit of ill will crops out again as they take their places around the table. The feast cannot go on. Christ can hold no festival except where hearts are sweet. He takes a basin and a towel and proceeds to bathe the feet of the disciples, not because he cares for the dust on their feet, but because he is pained by the estrangement of their hearts. This done, he announces a commandment which is to take precedence over all the instructions which he has hitherto given them: "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another."

We prove ourselves to be believers in the gospel not by loving men in general, but by loving our brethren in the church. I think our Lord makes this truth very clear. I have noticed that a man generally expresses in his prayers what is uppermost in his mind. I have noticed this during the time I was a pastor in the sectarian ministry. The things uppermost in the mind emerge in the prayers which men offer, especially in the presence of death. Listen to the last prayer of Jesus. He prays that his disciples may be one. He prays for it again and again. It is the one longing thought which throbs through his whole prayer. The outside world passes for a season out of his thought. The nations and their needs sink below the horizon. He thinks only of his church, of the men who are there in his presence, and of the multitudes who will believe on him through their words. He can conceive of no higher blessing for them than communion of spirit, comradeship in heart, union in love. "That they may all be one, even as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou didst send me.

This is amazing doctrine. The world is not to be converted by reasoning or philosophy or eloquence, but by the love we bear one another. I do not hesitate to say here that it is by the brotherliness among us, in our branches, that the hard heart of the world is to be softened and the truth of the restored gospel established. We are to bring the world to a knowledge of the gospel by loving one another.

Let us never depart from the blessed custom of addressing one another as sister and brother. The early church in Jerusalem and at Ephesus was known as the household of faith, the family of God. Christians called one another not "Christians," but "brethren." High in the list of graces stood the grace of hospitality. The early Christians when they traveled never found themselves away from home. A favorite name for the church immediately after Pentecost was "Brotherhood." Alas, that it was ever lost!

Every Saint in a branch owes something to every other Saint in the branch which he owes to no other human being. His first duty is to his fellow believers in the restored gospel; his first obligation is to his brethren; his first concern is with his comrades in faith. Love is the badge of unity, and without unity no branch can prosper. Love is the power which overcomes. The secret of the progress of the early church lies revealed in the exclamation of the pagan crowd: "Behold how these Christians love one another!"

I pray God to hasten the day when all divisions and hard feelings will die out in our branches and the onlooking world will be drawn to us and be won to the gospel by the love they see abounding among us. Our branches should be a fellowship of souls based upon the fellowship with God's only begotten Son. Without fellowship faith is empty, hope is darkened, love is starved. Love when once kindled travels far, but it must be kindled. Our branches should be furnaces of the love of Christ, thawing the cold selfishness of the world wherever they are established. Some of our branches are rich in many things but poor in love. What love is expressed in that precious hymn: "There's an old, old path." How blessed it would be if the love expressed in that hymn lived in the hearts of all the Saints who sing it! If the truth of this hymn were lived out in the hearts of every Saint, all sorts of reviving streams would flow from it. In these sad and trying days through which the church is passing I think it would be well for all of us to ponder the meaning of the new commandment and see if we measure up to it. I sometimes think this is what the Spirit of God is saying to our branches:

Let us cease our complaining and fault-finding, our picking of flaws in others, and let us, like sincere believers in the gospel set to work with both hands to strengthen our branches where the branches today are weakest. Let it be the ambition of every member to make his branch the warmest and most effective brotherhood in the community. Let no stranger at our services depart ungreeted. Let no unfortunate member go unbefriended; no invalid unvisited. Let no erring member go unadvised and unadmonished in love. Let no home of mourning go uncomforted. Let no act of needed mercy be neglected. One of God's choice words is fellowship, and unless a branch offers fellowship it is doomed. Men cannot love a church if all the privileges it offers are paying tithing and paying the church debt.

One of the greatest utterances that fell from the lips of Jesus was this: "I will build my church." We become cooperators with him when we have in us the same mind as was in him. "Except the Lord build the house [branch], they labor in vain that build it."

Dear Saints, let us rise from our petty envies, our feelings of resentment toward one another, and let us look for Christ in the upper chamber, girding himself with a towel. He is ever by our side. The gates of death shall not prevail against the church of the restored gospel. Our enemies rage and imagine a vain thing. He that sitteth in the heavens laughs. The Lord holds them in derision. The church, bounded by the ties of love, in her branches, will pursue its onward way. Its noon is not behind it. Its triumphal career has only begun. We are toiling amid the mists of the early morning. It is the rising sun which smites our foreheads, and we cannot even dream of the glory which is to be. We have an enduring institution. Dynasties will fall and crumble and decay, yet the church shall live on. After the flags of republics and empires have been flown to tatters, and the earth itself has tasted death, the church of the restored gospel shall stand forth glorious, free from blemish or mark of decay; the gates of hades shall not prevail against it. Therefore, beloved Saints, in these confused and confusing days, be steadfast and give ear to what the Spirit is saying to our branches: "Love ye one another, as I have loved you."

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Glimpses of Our Executive Officers

Mrs. Frederick M. Smith, the honorary president of the Woman's Auxiliary, has been associated with the woman's organization of the church since the earliest stages of its development. It has always been her aim to study and observe the progress of women and the woman's club movement in general, and to apply the principles and ideas gained thereby to the best advantage in the teaching and helping of the women of the church. Through her association with people of every sort and in every condition of living, she has become broad in her viewpoint, charitable in her judgments, and unusually sympathetic. Her personality is such that she inspires the confidence of those with whom she comes in contact, and understands and sympathizes with all who speak with her. In all her outside experience, her heart is with the church and its people, and her mind is constantly concerned with the problems of raising the women of the church to higher planes of efficiency and service. Hers is the vision by which many of the younger and less experienced workers are enabled to sense the enormity of the possibilities and the ultimate aims of a purely woman's organization within the church. Her heart and the best that is in her has been given to the church. No sacrifice has been too great, no obstacle too difficult, but that she has persistently continued in her chosen work, that of teaching by education and example the true religion, the text of which is the greatest commandment, "Thou shalt love the Lord, thy God, . . . and thy neighbor as thyself."

The president, Mrs. D. J. Krahl, is also a woman of experience both within and without the church. She is constantly grasping at the good in whatever she meets, that she may be better fitted to serve the women in any capacity which may present itself. As an executive, she exhibits admirable judgment, considering every side of a question fairly and without prejudice, asking constant counsel and advice from her associates, and in every way exercising conservatism, without being, on the other hand, too cautious of advocating improvements and progressive ideas. She has besides executive ability, those qualities of faith, humility, and consecration which characterize a spiritual leader. This, with a certain personal charm, makes of her a successful president, and one enabled to direct the Auxiliary through this trying time when the storm and stress of society at large might shake the organizations of the church to their very foundations, but for the wisdom of their gifted leaders.

Sunday evening in the home of Mrs. Fred Koehler, first vice president, is the hour for study, but it is a time looked forward to and thoroughly enjoyed by the little people of the neighborhood as well as of the house. In the late afternoon they begin to gather, from the little playmates of the five-year-old son to the fifteen-year-old chums of the older girls; and with as much order as possible arrange themselves for the quiet hour. The lessons for the next Sunday are read and explained. Bible stories are told and listened to, and plans for the week discussed. But quite as important as this hour with the children is the work Mrs. Koehler has done with the women, especially the mothers. Under her direction the women of the neighborhood meet for study and mutual help. This Auxiliary has been fortunate this year in obtaining for general work this woman whose enthusiasm and organizing ability have been for so long a stimulus and an example to those with whom she has been immediately in contact.

Mrs. William Madison is the second vice president. She is naturally an enthusiast, her experience has given her a knowledge of the necessity of team work, and she is a thorough student both by nature and by training. There is something stimulating about a woman who is in love with her work, who thinks and speaks and acts in terms of the subject to which she is at that time devoting her attention. As such, Mrs. Madison is a valuable member of the executive committee. The committee may agree that such and such a thing is perfectly proper, quite appropriate, and really should be done; but it sometimes takes a positive character like Mrs. Madison to impress on the committee the fact that this thing must be done at once, that there is no other course possible. And then it is such a pleasure to be associated with her. She thinks quickly, is sufficiently assertive to cause no embarrassment, but quick to acknowledge an error—and she is delightfully frank. The church needs many such strong positive characters, women with cultivated minds, the ability to attack and master a problem, and the assertiveness to carry the conviction of right.

Mrs. J. A. Gardner, the secretary, is a young woman who has proven herself a warm ally of young folks in every capacity from that of the originator of the Oriole movement for the girls of the church to that of companion and teacher to her own little sons, and as ideal hostess to their friends. As long as the memory of the Oriole movement remains and its influences are felt Mrs. Gardner's name will be inseparably associated with that department of the Woman's Auxiliary. That the Oriole work has extended to all parts of the world where the church is known is due to her personal interest. Her unusual understanding of the young together with her sympathy and love is the secret of her success. Although much of her work in the Auxiliary has been in the interests of the Young Woman's Bureau, she is an able secretary, and is rapidly becoming a well-informed and ardent worker in the woman's cause. She is a woman of action and has the faculty of carrying her point, but unlike many energetic persons she is endeavoring to found her enthusiasm with the wisdom both of study and experience that may give direction to her zeal and whereby she may become a power among the women.

Another member of the executive committee who is for the first time acting as an officer in the General Auxiliary is Mrs. Frank H. Esgar, the treasurer. She is perhaps best known among the women as the niece of the late Sister B. C. Smith, who for so many years was associated with the progress of the women of the church. Mrs. Esgar has many of the traits which caused her aunt to be so well loved and so powerful for good. She has that peculiar combination of humility and pride—the humility which is content to completely submerge "self" in a Higher Power, and the just and honest pride in virtue and honesty—that is the mark of a true Christian character. She comes of a family which is noted for its loyalty to the church and its leaders; and in her is the promise of a faithful, straightforward, and judicious servant of the women of the church.

Mrs. Mark Siegfried, the historian, comes of a family that is conspicuous for its artistic talent. She writes well, and in spite of her growing family, she keeps herself informed and in touch with the progress of the Auxiliary. She is, besides, sufficiently acute in her judgment to record the doings of a society fairly and without the personal prejudices which are so apt to creep in with writers of contemporaneous history. The nearness of events is inclined to color them with the personality of those whose history is recorded as reflected by the personality of the historian, but Mrs. Siegfried has the artistic ability to assume the viewpoint of a complete outsider, from which she is enabled to record the history of the Auxiliary to meet the consideration of those who are without the organization and for the instruction of those who may come after.

Mrs. B. M. Anderson, the editor in chief, is a woman of considerable natural ability, both for the actual writing and for the infinitely more difficult art of knowing what to write. Her personality is forceful and carrying. She has the power to dominate and the perseverance to maintain her leadership. Such is a character capable of influencing by precept and example. Besides editing the columns of the Auxiliary in the HERALD, she is active in local work, particularly war work. She knits beautifully and with astonishing rapidity, and has been "mothering" a dozen or more soldiers and sailors during the war. She is quite famous for her letters to the boys in the service. Mrs. Anderson deserves credit for fulfilling so successfully for the Auxiliary a duty for which few other women in the church are so capable—and for fulfilling it conscientiously and admirably.

ALICE M. SMITH.

[Note. Some time ago Sister Louise Evans asked us for a short sketch of each of the General Auxiliary officers. We rather enjoyed the prospect of being introduced to the women of the church but hesitated to introduce ourselves. At our request Sister Alice M. Smith consented to introduce us and the preceding personal sketches result. Sister Alice is acquainted with each member of the executive committee. She gives this contribution willingly as she has done in other instances because of her interest in the Woman's Auxiliary. You will be interested in knowing that she has recently been appointed editor in chief of the Tech Collegian, the official newspaper of the Junior College in Kansas City, Missouri. This paper has an official staff of eight.—MRS. J. A. GARDNER.]

Home and Child Welfare Work

The Home and Child Welfare Bureau has as its aim this year the outlining and presenting of plans whereby organized women may work to secure for their community conditions which make for the physical, mental, and religious health of their children.

The general outline to be followed, in so far as it is practicable, is presented here. Besides the work suggested in it, we desire to assist mothers and teachers in making practical application of the principles and laws which operate in the development of child life in the home; the principles and laws should be learned by study in the mothers' and teachers' problems classes.

OUTLINE FOR HOME AND CHILD WELFARE WORK

Health and Physical Welfare

1. Foods and their care. The correct care of foods is the work of both the individual and the community. The community, not the individual, can secure cleanliness in the care of food by the grocer, the dairyman, the butcher, etc., but the individual is responsible for its condition after it gets into the home. Below are a few of the lines for both individual and concerted action.

- a. The sanitary kitchen. Care of ice box, dishtowels, sinks.
  - b. Milk inspection. The real saving in paying a higher price for certified milk, how to secure it, how it prevents infant mortality.
  - c. Screened provisions. Comparison of bacteria in screened and unscreened foods, how to get merchants to screen their provisions.
2. Sanitary Surroundings. How they are conducive to health.
- a. Proper disposal of garbage. The danger of garbage piles or cans, especially in hot weather; the value of clean-up week in the community.
  - b. The fly pest. Its significance and how to get rid of it.
  - c. Ventilation. Improper ventilation at public meetings and what to do about it. Home ventilation.
3. Exercise. How much and what kind should a growing child have. Work and its value, dangers of too little or too much.
- a. The value of play. What and how to play, organized and directed play, supervised play at school and how to secure it, public playgrounds and how to use them.
4. Sleep. Do you know how many hours of sleep children of various ages should have? Are social affairs for the young and over-worked in your community? Supervision of social hours possible by organized efforts.
5. Public health nurse. Need for a community nurse, and how to make one possible and practicable for your community.
6. Medical inspection in schools. Detection of adenoids, enlarged tonsils, defective eyesight and hearing, malnutrition. Adjustable seats, proper lighting, proper placing of blackboards are shown to be helps in retrieving eye trouble and bad posture.
7. School feeding. Malnutrition in childhood, its symptoms, causes, and results. Warm lunches practicable even in rural schools.
- Mental and Moral Welfare
1. In the home. Necessity for attractive homes. Simplicity and comforts in home furnishings and decorating. Correct pictures, books, music, and their value in developing mental and moral natures.
    - a. Story-telling. How to tell a story, what stories are best to tell at various ages.
    - b. Habit training. Courtesy in the home, cleanliness, neatness, speed and accuracy in work, self-control, development of individuality.
  2. In the community.
    - a. Morals in the schools. Does your system encourage cramming, cheating, lazy thinking, truancy? How can mothers work with teachers to offset these troubles? Parent teachers' associations and their value.
    - b. Standards of school dress. How they affect the children of the community.
    - c. The motion picture. Value as a public recreation, necessity for censorship. It is possible for every community to have clean pictures. How shall we secure them?
    - d. The development of boy life. Utilizing the gang spirit. How to develop in them a sense of good citizenship. How to help the boy discover his possibilities. Keeping the confidence of the boy. Hygiene and the boy.

3. Religious education. The danger of the over-sentimental idea in religious teaching. The value of making religion an everyday religion, of making it a "play the game square" idea for boys. The mother's place in religious training.

This outline is not absolute nor final. As our wisdom increases, changes will appear. We expect to present articles in the HERALD column on these subjects. Sincerity of purpose and determination to do will win us success.

Choir Tactics

No, we are not going to write anything about the activities of those bellicose, temperamental individuals who constitute the disturbing elements of our choirs; nor are we going to in any way touch upon the "wars and rumors of wars" that are so frequently the distressing accompaniment of our choir work. We reserve this disagreeable task for a time when we feel more like tackling it, for our mission in this article is a peaceful one in which we desire to treat upon those things that conduce to order and efficiency in our choir service.

In pedagogy there is a term used known as "schoolroom tactics." It relates to the systematic, orderly handling of pupils in such a manner that their movements conduce to more careful and efficient work. A carefully-planned, well-thought-out program is outlined in detail, by which the pupils know exactly what each day's work is and how, when, and where that work shall be done. The pupils are placed in orderly arrangement whereby like classes and tasks are grouped together for the better conduct of their work. Their movements in the schoolroom are conducted after an orderly system. In going to or from classes, at recess or dismissal, they rise on signal and march uniformly to their places in an orderly, decorous manner. All their activities are so planned and managed that the tactics of each classroom as a unit and the school as a whole shall conduce to the discipline of the pupil and the efficiency of his work.

It is needless to say that such tactics—embracing both system, order, and organization—do result in better work and more efficient work. So thoroughly has the doctrine of schoolroom tactics demonstrated its value that school directors are demanding it, and no teacher who persists in neglecting it is allowed to retain his standing very long.

Why cannot such methods be employed in our choirs? Echo answers why; and the fickle maid gives the only true response to the question. Yet we cannot help but imagine we hear the protests of a number of self-constituted guardians of the church's well being, fearful that it may go too fast and land in the "demnition bow wows."

We maintain that system, order, organization, and management will conduce more to real results in a choir's work than anything else and that a lack of these things will frequently spell failure. To illustrate let us use two pictures—pictures that, because of the writer's acquaintance with a number of the choirs of the church, cannot be said to be wholly imaginary or fictitious.

Picture number one: This choir may be found "somewhere in the church" (we trust too many may not hurry forward to claim the distinction). The time is Sunday morning; the Sunday school has dismissed and in the interval between that and the church services various activities and preparations are under way. The congregation is assembling, visiting and greeting one another as they take their seats or cluster in groups in the aisles. The chorister is in the choir section, hastily looking over anthem books, searching for a suitable number for the service. Last choir practice was not productive of results in the way of perfected anthems and the Sabbath day services are at hand with nothing ready. The organist is lolling over the front of the organ, chewing gum; also she is masticating another article of woven texture with one of the tenors. The choir members are dawdling in the body of the church, "visiting" among the gathering audience. Occasionally one will saunter up into the choir section and interrupt the chorister with the question, "What anthem are we going to sing to-day?" The chorister, driven to desperation by the interruptions that reach him from all sides, pursues his frenzied search, determined to "get something" anyway. By this time the choir seats are being gradually filled with the dilatory members, who while away the waiting time with gossip and noisy chatter. Other members are loitering in the aisles, and occasionally a member will leave the choir seats to impart a choice bit of conversation to some one in the audience. The chorister finally makes a selection and announces it to the members in the choir seats, whereupon a hue and cry arises, "We can't sing that anthem." "Let's sing something pretty." "Why don't you sing that swell anthem we practiced a couple of weeks ago?" The soprano, who has a solo in the anthem selected, and who happens not to be in the humor for singing that morning, hastily exclaims that she "just can't sing that solo," making it necessary for the chorister to make another selection or coax and cajole her into singing it anyway, which is probably what she wanted. And so it goes. Meanwhile the ministry are waiting in the pulpit for the opening time of the service, which comes amid the confusion in which everything is surrounded; the dawdling choir members still in the audience make a hurried rush to their places and the service begins. But what an atmosphere with which this service is preceded and what inspiration can be gained from it for speaker or hearer? "Order is heaven's first law," but how much of heavenly influence is found in such a scene? Can the members of either choir or congregation step immediately from the atmosphere of confusion into one of devotion?

Picture number two: this is also of a choir "somewhere in the church." The background is largely the same as in the other picture; the time being the interval between the Sunday school and the morning service. The choir members have been gathering quietly in an anteroom or in the basement, where all the necessary preparations for their portion of the morning service are conducted. If there is any visiting among them it need not be at the expense of the audience; if any confusion, it need not result in disturbing the spiritual atmosphere of the assembling congregation, who are coming for the purpose of worship. All preparations completed, the choir quietly and reverently file into their places before the waiting congregation and the service begins in order and with a devotional spirit.

What a difference in these two pictures! Yet the situation in the first one is found in a greater or lesser degree in many of the choirs of the church. Our choirs are departments of the church and their work should be done in order and diligence; yet in many of them it is done in disorder and slothfulness.

The foregoing are merely instances of where proper tactics may be employed in the visible work of our choirs; yet there is a far greater field where tactics may have a proper work, and it is in the quiet, hidden avenues of choir work and management that such results are best seen.

The chorister is virtually the manager of the choir in most of its functions and upon him rests the responsibility of planning and executing a wise system of choir tactics. Much, very much, lies in the way of preparation. A chorister should so plan his work that he knows in advance each step that may be taken and he should be in a position to indicate that step to the choir members clearly and decisively. When he goes to the choir practice, the evening's work should be mapped out in detail and emergencies provided for. Then the practice should commence promptly. It should be conducted with firmness and decision and the choir members made to know exactly what they are expected to do. Indecision will ruin any choir, for uncertainty always results in chilling all enthusiasm. The choir should be so seated that accessibility to their work may be had by the chorister, so that effective direction may be given at any time. Once started the practice should be conducted continuously and energetically, until the work of the evening is concluded. Proper order and decorum on the part of everyone should be insisted upon. Too many choir members regard the weekly practice as a gala occasion, in which a good sociable time may be had, often degenerating into a real romp. While the spirit of kindly sociability should never be absent at the practices, it should be remembered by everyone that the object of the practice is the perfection of the work in hand and not social gayety. Therefore, the practice should be pushed energetically, allowing proper "breathing spells" in which the choir members may rest from the strain of continued work, and enjoy a brief relaxation in social enjoyment. But never should the choir be allowed to lose sight of the real object of their practice, which is to prepare themselves for their service before God.

There are other tactics that choristers may employ that cannot be enumerated in this brief article. It should always be borne in mind that, as in the school, a definite, well-planned system will work greatly for efficiency. The work for Sunday's services should be all arranged and planned so that when the day comes no confusion or indecision may result because things are misunderstood and uncertain.

A slight word of caution may well be given here. No system should be enforced or tactics employed that tend to make the work burdensome or reduce it to the mechanical. The "ease of grace" should be ever present. Choir members, like all other human beings, resent being made mere cogs in a machine, the automatic units of a system. Hence, the spirit of the work should ever be felt and real comradeship maintained.

Orchestration of Hymnal and Zion's Praises

We have received quite a number of queries as to whether these two books have ever been arranged for our orchestras. To all such we have replied that no such arrangements have yet been made. Frankly, we do not see how such orchestration is at present practicable, for two reasons.

A brief glance at some of our orchestras and their composition may perhaps enable us to understand the situation better. These orchestras are composed of amateur talent, the material found available in the branches. One branch will have a small group of two, or three, or four instrumentalists while another branch may have an orchestra of eight or ten performers. One orchestra may have as its instrumentation two or three violins, a cornet, and a piano; another orchestra, no larger, may have but one violin, a cornet, clarinet, and piano. A third orchestra may have a still different set of instruments, either running heavily to brass (as so many of our small orchestras do) or deficient in those instruments that "fill in," or complete the harmonic balance. It will be probably found that in all the church there are no two orchestras exactly alike.

Orchestration is a definite branch of musical knowledge and as such follows the well-defined rules of its system. In this system two things are necessary; first, harmonic balance, wherein the four parts of true harmony preserve their relative places; second, arrangement of instruments, so that each gives its due proportion to this harmonic balance. All publishers of orchestral music adhere to the well-defined system of orchestration, now in universally accepted use, and issue their wares accordingly.

The smallest orchestral arrangement published, designed for the small orchestra of a few instruments, is for ten pieces, as follows: first violin, second violin, viola, cello, bass, first cornet, second cornet, flute, trombone, drums. The next larger scheme brings in the alto horn, clarinet, oboe, and tuba, and so on clear through the scheme of larger orchestras. It must be remembered that these schemes are arranged to at all times preserve the harmonic balance of the whole.

Now, bearing in mind the desirability of preserving the harmonic balance it will be seen that it will be a matter of considerable difficulty to adapt this regular scheme to our various small orchestras. For example, in nearly every one of the small orchestras described in the early part of this article, all the instruments would be heard in the soprano voice, if they followed the regular arrangements of orchestrated work. Hence an orchestration of our church books according to the accepted scheme of orchestral arrangement would not be adapted to many of our small orchestras. We know of no plan whereby any general method of orchestrating these books could be had in such a way that all our various orchestras would be properly cared for. Perhaps it may be found in the future; who can tell. If all our orchestras were formed after the generally accepted plan now in universal use, the task would be a simple one. It is better that our players, for the present, arrange their work and the songs they play as best they can, to preserve the harmonic balance, until such time as development may enable us to take this farther step.

Another thing that perhaps more than any other militates against the project of orchestrating our song books, and that is the ever potent one of cost and probable sale. It would involve a very considerable initial cost to produce such orchestration of these books, and the visible sale for them would be small, at present.

Logan, Iowa, Musical Forces Distinguish Themselves

We have just received a very enjoyable and encouraging letter from Sister Ollie Derry, of Logan, Iowa, giving an account of the rendition of a Christmas cantata, "The gift of God," by E. S. Lorenz (published by Lorenz Publishing Company, Dayton, Ohio), said rendition being by the Glee Club, an organization connected with the church's musical activities at Logan, and under the direction and management of Sister Derry and Sister Rose Adams. With the letter is inclosed a "libretto," or copy of the words of the cantata, showing that it was of a very high devotional order, replete with the spirit of Christmastide and of adoration for the gift of God as embodied in the Savior of the world.

Sister Derry writes that eighteen voices were in the chorus (some were incapacitated on account of influenza) and that the cantata was rendered with spirit and hearty response. The whole church was filled with the spirit of song, evidencing that the greater spiritual presence was there with its approbation. Congratulations and expressions of enjoyment and approval were many, and the impetus given to the cause of music in the Logan Branch has been consequently great.

We call the attention of Staff readers to this work of the Logan Saints that others may take notice. Logan is not a large branch nor is it more fortunately situated than most of the other branches of its size. Yet the Logan musical people got together, and in the spirit of work together they accomplished that which is both creditable and of real profit to themselves and the work of the church.

What Logan has done and is able to do may be done and is fully as possible with many of our branches. All that is needed is effort, and that effort made by all in the hearty spirit of cooperation.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

We have 179 stars for this week and some excellent reports coming in will add to this list about sixty stars for next week, possibly more, but let us not stop until we have the name of every school listed. You know we all want to be together. Many of the schools are not reporting to us, but by cooperating with Brother McGuire's office we have been able to secure the names of many schools who have reached their $2-per-member mark—but who have failed to write us about it. This permits us to use only the name of the school and is not quite so impressive and helpful as when we have a good letter from the school.

In a recent issue we published the statement that so "far as we had been advised, Detroit (Second Detroit) Sunday School was the first to reach the $2-per-member mark." Huntsville, Missouri, tells us that we will have to change this, for on March 10 they had $2.80 per member. So far as we have been advised Huntsville is in the lead in this respect, and we are sure that Detroit Second Sunday School will join with us in congratulating Huntsville. This year, having raised the total aim, we shall also raise the individual aim and will ask all schools to raise an offering equal to, or over, $2.50 per member—this is less than 5 cents per week, and we shall be pleased to have our good schools report to us just as soon as they have reached or passed this amount.

Read over these good letters, for it will help you in your efforts this year.

Huntsville, Missouri. Brother V. D. Ruch reports: "We have sent the Bishop an average of $25.01 per member, this amount being raised entirely by consecration. We are proud of the mark we have reached but we do not report it boastfully, nor do we claim the honor and praise for the accomplishment, for we realize that if God had not blessed us temporarily we would not have been able to give it." You all remember the good challenge of Huntsville in one of the issues of the Stepping Stones—wonder if they have made good—let us watch the percentage reports, which will be published later, to see who will lead this year.

Merlin, Ontario. Sister Olive M. Sales reports: "We have exceeded the $2 mark. We also sent in offering for the Oriole girls—they are few in number but are trying to do their bit in this great work."

Kellogg, Idaho. Sister A. B. Crum reports: "36.54 Christmas offering is being sent in by the Kellogg Sunday School for 1918." It is not stated that this good school is "over the top," so we are publishing their name for fear we would be in error if we did not publish it.

Bellair, Illinois. Sister Effie B. Kisner writes that Bellair Home Class is entitled to a diploma.

Alma, Hardin, Richmond, and Wakenda, Missouri. Brother L. F. Ferguson reports: "We have connected with this branch four missions, three of which have Sunday schools, making a total of four schools. All of these have passed the $2 mark except Richmond, and we are holding off until Sunday so that they will have their full amount also. This will be a very good record for the Alma Branch but we hope to do better next time."

Dayton, Ohio. We have already reported the name only of this good school, but now having received a letter from them we are glad to give second report—school will be counted but once. Brother Franklin Reiske, superintendent, reports: "We have a desire to do more this coming year than in 1918. Last year we did not get started until in July but we got $116 for 29 members."

Rupert, Idaho. Brother J. L. Benson reports: "Just a word in behalf of the Minidoka and Big Bend Sunday Schools. You have already received a report from the latter through Brother Arthur Condit. I want to call your attention to the fact that both of these schools belong to the Minidoka Branch, which, all told, has a membership of only 36, but owing to the scattered condition we have two very much alive Sunday schools. We are sending a total of $220.25 from these two schools—this is 60 per cent more than we sent in last year—let the good work go on."

Clayton, New Mexico. Sister Siddle Shanley writes: "We have no Sunday school here, but we hope we get the $100,000. We plan to double our offering in 1919."

Conception Junction, Missouri. Brother Edward E. Jensen, superintendent, writes: "Long Branch Sunday School has gone 'over the top.' We hope to do even better next year."

Nevada, Missouri. Brother John W. Noyes, superintendent, reports: "We want our name placed on the Honor Roll as we have gone 'over the top.' We did not do as well this year as we expected to, but hope to do better this coming year."

Phoenix, Arizona. Sister C. E. Sturges, secretary, reports: "The Olive Sunday School has labored under a severe handicap this year, yet we find in the end that we have done just a little better than in 1917. Our attendance is 26 and our offering is $84.10. Since Brother Yates and family left us in July we have held but three sessions. We hope for better things, but influenza quarantine is upon us again. We are thankful to have done our bit."

Seattle, Washington. Brother Charles Powers reports: "We reached the $500 mark and over."

Andes, Montana. C. B. Freeman, treasurer, reports: "We are sending in $143.30 offering and have a membership of 67. We are glad we went 'over the top.' Our offering is late owing to bad weather. We are hoping for $100,000."

Kansas City, Kansas, Grandview Sunday School. Sister E. R. Lewis, superintendent, reports: "We have about 40 enrolled and have $183.42 offering with more promised."

Beardstown, Illinois. Brother Harvey E. Mose, superintendent, reports: "We have sent in our offering of $114.95; we have 45 members in the main school, 18 home department members. We hope the 1919 offering will greatly exceed this year's."

Lamoni, Iowa. Brother G. W. Blair, superintendent, reports: "Our total this year is $2,034.11, last year $2,106. A little short this year. We missed eleven sessions on account of quarantine, otherwise our offering would have exceeded last year's. We are on the way for 1919."

The following Sunday schools have reported through Brother McGuire's office and are over the $2-per-member mark:

Glasgow, Montana, "Glow Sunday School."
 Brumley, Missouri, "12 Corner Sunday School."
 Fairland, Oklahoma.
 Saint Joseph, Missouri, "Zion's Hope Sunday School."
 Maitland, Missouri, "Pleasant Hope Sunday School."
 Spanish, Ontario.
 Chicago, Illinois, "First Chicago."
 Bellingham, Washington.
 Battle Creek, Michigan.
 Savannah, Illinois, "Chestnut Park Sunday School."
 Pueblo, Colorado.
 Lair, Colorado, "Liberty Sunday School."
 Pittsburg, Kansas.
 Independence, Missouri, "East Independence Sunday School."
 Spearfish, North Dakota.
 Webb City, Missouri.
 Webb City, Missouri, Home Department.
 Youngstown, Ohio.
 Stratford, Ontario.
 Stratford, Ontario, Cradle Roll.
 Greenwood, New York.
 South Boardman, Michigan.
 Anaconda, Montana.
 Rose City, Michigan.
 Hoquiam, Washington.
 Fort Madison, Iowa, "Zion's Star Sunday School."
 New Canton, Illinois.
 Owendale, Michigan, "Pigeon River Sunday School."
 Wallville, New York, "Proctor Sunday School."
 Attleboro, Massachusetts.
 Pontiac, Michigan.
 Houston, Texas, "Houston Heights Sunday School."
 Bendon, Michigan, "Inland Sunday School."
 Bay City, Michigan.

Don't forget our aim for 1919 is $150,000. Let us make this a banner year. Start early, keep the offering before your school all the time. What school will be first with $2.50 per member?

May God bless and guide you in your efforts,

ARTHUR W. SMITH.

SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE, November 28, 1918.

Editors Herald: On this Thanksgiving Day I wish to express my gratefulness for the blessings I have received, including the good health I enjoy. While I recognize my shortcomings I ask the Saints to pray with me that I may return and carry on the work that God has indicated I should do.

I received an Ensign yesterday and read an article by G. T. Griffiths on "God's mysterious ways." And it revealed many things for which we should be thankful. It is the first church literature I have received since coming here and it is much enjoyed. I don't know who sent it, but it brought an interesting message and I would appreciate it very much if it came regularly. I have never met any of the boys of the church and it makes me feel lonely. Were it not for the faith one has from the long instilled truths of the gospel it would be easy for anyone to fail. Yet I am thankful to God for the disposition to serve him and appreciate his blessings.

It will be a blessed time when I can return and be where I can meet with the Saints. The strife has been won in behalf of democracy, giving a degree of equality to mankind and opening the way for the restoration of Israel.

When we see so many young widows in the streets of every city, town, and hamlet, with little children everywhere with hardly sufficient clothes to cover their little bodies, it makes our spirits groan within us. I am glad the long struggle is over. We have lost all too much of our noble blood, while these countries have suffered even more severely.

Recently I received a letter from a sister in Illinois and it made me feel that the church still cared for the brothers and sisters in the service. I know every Latter Day Saint boy overseas cares a great deal for the letters he gets from home and elsewhere. Being a soldier is a lonesome job, even though there are many of us together. We hope the home folks will help us keep in touch with the home land by their letters. Pray for me.

TUAKAU, NEW ZEALAND, November 29, 1918.

Dear Brother: The influenza epidemic has raged for about three weeks and ministers of all religions have been requested not to hold services except of shortest duration in morning. This request came from the New Zealand health department, and at the same time all schools were closed and many places of business where people congregate, such as barber shops, all liquor bars, etc., also many milk vendors, ice cream factories, fruit shops, fish shops, and like places where there was thought to be danger of the germ being carried and the plague spread.

The qualified medical and nursing forces of the country found themselves absolutely unable to cope with the situation, and the whole of the people were enlisted under citizens' committees for the purpose of rendering first aid and nursing the sick.

Thousands of people have been swept off in a fortnight. It will not be known till later how many have succumbed to the ravages of the disease, but one doctor told us that on a certain day when the account of eight deaths for Auckland was published, he saw 26 deaths that day. He thinks that Auckland has at least a total of 2,000 deaths. The paper says 1,000.

We have responded to the urgent call for help, and Brother Robinson and I have given all of our time to it. Owing to the above-mentioned request regarding religious services, we have only one Sunday school meeting during that time; no preaching at all. Day and night we have been going from house to house giving aid and comfort to the suffering ones, feeding and bathing, or packing them in ice, etc., as their needs required.

Thousands of these had no doctor or qualified nurse to see them during severe illness, but were left absolutely alone in many cases for days in their bed till death took them off or some of the Red Cross people came to help them. And hundreds passed away with no helper at their side. Men and women have fought for the lives of their loved ones and then gone mad when they stood alone over their dead.

The rich and poor alike have fallen and the doctors and nurses have given their toll in deaths.

Thanks to kind Providence we all at our house had a very slight touch of influenza which seemed nothing more than inoculation against the plague that followed. Hence I have been able to go on every day helping others. . . .

Things are looking better now and I will be back at the office in Auckland in a few days. But the natives here will never forget this. They were sick, weak, and starving.

Sincerely,

H. W. SAVAGE.

[Personal letter to President Smith]:

PAPEETE, TAHITI, December 18, 1918.

Dear Sir and Brother: You no doubt will be anxious to hear from this mission and more especially because of the extraordinary conditions that have existed.

Firstly I will try to give you a brief account of our late trouble. Before we were aware of it the Spanish influenza reached Tahiti, and some of our people were taken down and we were called to administer and do what we could otherwise. On Monday, November 25, Sister Ellis came down; on Tuesday Sister Brown, Wednesday Brother Ellis, Thursday Brother Christensen, Friday myself, Saturday our little girl, and Sunday Sister Christensen and her little boy, so we were all on our backs at one time.

I waited on the sick until Friday evening when it was impossible for me to go longer. I had also been taking care of our native brethren as best I could, and we all were kept going night and day administering until we ourselves went down. Well, Sunday evening we hadn't a soul to bring us a drink of warm water, and all were sorely in need of care. I tried to muster all the strength as well as faith that I possessed so that I might be able to get around the house and attend to our needs; so about nine p. m. after three efforts I succeeded in getting my clothes on, and Brother Ellis was in much the same condition, but between us we managed to take turns at getting up from then on during the night and Monday.

On Monday it was quite evident that Sister Ellis had taken a turn for the worse. We tried to get a doctor, but that was impossible, as neither of us could go outdoors; but we sent a native brother who reported that it would be impossible for the doctor to come. On Tuesday something had to be done, so I managed to get outdoors and I started the same native brother off good and early in the morning, and as a result the doctor came about 8 a. m., and upon examination he said that Mrs. Ellis was very near her end. We did all that was possible for her, but about 2.30 p. m. Tuesday she passed peacefully to her well-earned reward.

The rest of the foreign missionary force are around again and will soon be fully recovered from the disease.

Brother Ellis takes his loss very hard, and of course everywhere he goes it is all brought fresh to his mind again. We are trying to do all in our power to make it as pleasant as we can, but still it is hard at the best.

We are not sure as to the exact number we have lost on this island and Makatea, but we think it will reach about fifty of our best members and will weaken if not cripple two of our branches here and the one in Makatea.

So far as we are aware, the disease has not reached the Tuamotuan group as yet, and the traders seem to be taking every precaution to keep it out.

We have no way of telling the number of dead on this island as most of the chiefs of the several districts have died, and the people have been buried any way and any place; a number of houses have been burned because of decomposed bodies. We heard the other day that more than twenty per cent of the population of this island have died.

We have had to call our mission conference off for the present and we are considering doing away with it until next December, so that it may not disturb the natives' mind relative to the change in time which was decided upon at our last conference.

We haven't held a service for a month, but we will likely commence next Sunday with a memorial service for the departed ones.

I don't wish to dictate in any way the affairs of the mission but I think that it would be well for Brother Ellis to return to America as soon as we can arrange to part with him, also do something towards permanently fixing Sister Ellis's grave. We surely will miss him and Sister Ellis for they have tried to do the very best they could, and though Sister Ellis be dead and Brother Ellis leave the mission, their work will live on through the ages. I think that it might properly be said that Sister Ellis died a martyr for the cause in this mission. I think that she stayed too long in this warm climate, and when this influenza came in its worst form her weakened body was not able to withstand it.

We were very much strengthened when we received the cable from Brother McGuire as to financial assistance; we are all right as to that, but we are grateful to you and him for your thoughtfulness of us in this far-away mission where the land of "sunshine is not all sunshine."

Trusting that God's blessings may be with his people and especially those in charge,

I remain your colaborer for the cause of truth,

ROBERT T. BROWN.

[Excerpt from Clyde F. Ellis's letter of December 18, 1918]:

We have postponed our mission conference until next December, as it is not wise to hold it now because of the raging of the influenza. It has played havoc with Tahiti. About twenty per cent of the population is dead, and possibly more have died, as the death lists are not yet complete. We lost about forty Saints here in Tahiti, and seventeen in Makatea.

Editors Herald: Not having contributed to your columns for some time, we thought we would pen a few lines with reference to conditions in this part of the gospel field.

On account of the epidemic, we haven't been having Sunday services except sacrament and cottage prayer meetings for some time, but expect to commence again as soon as conditions will permit. Practically all the Saints except my own family have had the influenza and two cases of double pneumonia, but we have had no deaths, for which we are surely thankful, as there have been many deaths here from the plague. We have been kept busy administering in different ways to the Saints, but feel thankful for health to be able to do our whole duty along that line.

We were called on to defend our faith just after the death of Joseph F. Smith, on account of one Reverend O. O. Smith, of the Congregational Church (a newcomer in Fremont) who thought to inform the public through the press about the lives of the Martyrs and why they met death.

His statements in part are: "The facts are that the Mormons had settled at Nauvoo, Illinois, in Hancock County, of which Carthage is the county seat. Joseph Smith commenced to teach polygamy and it so enraged the people that they arrested him and he was placed in jail at Carthage where a threatening crowd gathered and when Smith undertook to escape through a window he was shot by some one on the outside, his body falling in the window, his blood running down on the outside of the building. His death was not due to mob violence, but rather to his efforts to escape from a just punishment for his crimes against decent society in teaching and practicing polygamy."

He made mention of their camp at Council Bluffs for two years and stated that their influence was still felt at that place.

Well, we went into the records and got dates and facts and answered his statements. He never came back.

We were privileged to lead five more precious souls into the water earlier in the season and there are several more who will be ready in the near future.

We ask the Saints to remember us in their prayers.

OTIS GARDNER.

SKIATOOK, OKLAHOMA, December 28, 1918.

Editors Herald: Forty-one years ago to-day, I was baptized by James Caffall, a member of the Quorum of Twelve, near Fremont, Nebraska. Two days later I was ordained a priest, and a branch of eight members was organized.

The church was very small then, hardly exceeding twelve thousand, and the missionaries were not many as compared with now. It was a harder struggle against the world than now and we did not have so many friends. Many thousands were yet living and scattered over the prairie States who had been to Utah and saw the polluting work of Mormonism as taught by Brigham Young and his friends. And that combined with sectarian opposition made a big fight for all to be engaged in. It had its compensation, however, for knowing we had but few friends in the world, we found more pleasure in the companionship of our own people.

In looking back over that period of time, I discover that many changes in our methods have taken place, and that applies to all kinds of church work. Marked improvement is shown and we are able to accomplish more work in the same length of time. It was quite a common thing then for the secretary of the General Conference to spend one or two sessions in reading the reports of the missionaries, and some were quite lengthy. It seemed to be an unwritten law that a preacher must talk one and a half hours, regardless of the fact that he was not always edifying.

It is gratifying to know that there has been no change in the fundamental principles of the gospel. The same message is going forth that was preached in earlier times. Some of the ministry to-day seem to have a clearer vision of the beautiful and sublime things of the gospel—those things that make for a purer and cleaner life physically and morally. There is a greater effort being made to lead our people to higher conditions.

In private and public, discussions went on as now, in reference to financial matters. On some things, especially tithing, we have come to a greater unity. In others we differ as much now as then. I will mention only one thing—that of passing the collection basket.

Several of the brethren have recently written on the subject, and it will not exhaust the theme if the writer expresses a few thoughts. There are two things connected with the subject, and if we can get a clear vision of them it will help us to come to correct conclusions.

First: Is the purpose for which the money is desired a proper one? Is it an honest one? To pay for fuel, light, care of the church, and other things are legitimate expenses. It is assumed without argument that dishonest acts are not to be given consideration.

Second: It resolves itself into a matter of convenience. What method can be used that will be convenient and orderly? In a branch of fifteen or twenty members, representing about five families, there are practically five persons to pay all the expenses. A very convenient way for them to do would be to sit down and talk over the bill of expense and then open their pocketbooks and pay it. In a large branch such a method would be very inconvenient. It could be done more orderly and with less confusion by passing the collection basket. With that method many would give small coins, such as nickels and dimes, who would be reluctant and embarrassed to give to a collector personally, and love is kind and will not do those things that will hurt the feelings of the tender and sensitive.

Another method that may be satisfactory is to have members agree to pay a stipulated amount per week or month. The success of this will depend on the honesty of the members and how faithful they are in keeping promises. The Lord's people have not yet reached that state of development that all will keep their promises.

One branch has a table in front of the pulpit on which is a basket, and the members are told to go forward and deposit their offerings. Another has a box at the door, and the money can be dropped into that. In some branches there are collectors, and the president will give the audience a short lecture and tell them that money is needed to meet current expenses, and that the collector will be at the door and receive their offerings and give receipts for the same. Naturally this means a jam at the door, more like a theater crowd than what ought to be an orderly church audience.

People who go to public places where expense is incurred, unless they are selfish, stingy, and have a shriveled up little soul will want to help bear that expense. Inviting people to our homes and inviting them to a public place are not parallel cases. People have a right to go to a public meeting whether they have an invitation or not, and the civil law will protect them in that right. But it is not so in our homes. There people come by invitation.

Raising money is largely a local matter and all congregations should be left to determine their own method. The congregation in Maine has no right to seek to impose its methods on the people of Oregon. Unless God speaks and gives us a method it is not fair to say, "Our method is his will."

Hoping for a prosperous New Year in the Lord's work,
EDWARD RANNIE.

[Excerpt from a letter to the Presidency]:

BURLINGTON, IOWA, January 2, 1919.

The new year has been given to us with its pages clean and white, and while the power is given to us to direct the recording of individual experiences, we trust there will be no blot and the record such that we shall not be ashamed as we recount its pages.

As I review my experience during the year that is just closed, I can see much opportunity for improvement and greater results in my work. This will be realized to greater satisfaction as we add faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, etc., to that which we may have in beginning the new year. Without wisdom in the cultivation of these, our mistakes will be more numerous and our efforts largely wasted. We pray therefore that our heavenly Father will give his ministers this great gift for the performing of labors during the coming year.

As we think of some experiences through which the world has passed during the last four years, and now see men looking into the future with larger visions of sympathy, long-suffering, and respect for their fellow men, and some contemplating an entirely new order of things, I wonder if the church as a whole is thinking seriously of the place it should occupy in order to be the light of the world.

My sincere prayer is that the fruits of the Spirit may be developed in the church until those who are looking for better things may come eat and be filled, and the leaves of the mighty tree be carried by the messengers of God to the healing of the nations.

Ever praying God's best gifts to be with you in your arduous duties, I am sincerely,

Your brother,

D. J. WILLIAMS.

Editors Herald: I am truly thankful for the blessings which come from the gospel, yet I sometimes think I am unappreciative. We should put more trust in the Lord and spend more time in prayer.

I recently had an experience in a financial way which was most comforting. In my effort to pay into the Christmas offering I was greatly blessed. God's hand was in it. In raising the three children intrusted to me I want to be more dutiful. Pray for me.

MRS. AGNES THOMAS.

Editors Herald: This will be the last letter that I will be able to write this year, however I hope there will never come a worse year for the church than what this has been. I have often read with interest the travels of Paul and others of the apostles, as they returned and visited the churches that they had assisted in establishing, and have felt in a measure the throbbings of joy that seemed to fill their souls when they found them still strong in the faith!

Some nine years ago in company with Brother McDowell we opened the work near Black River Falls, Wisconsin, and it proved to be a good opening. Later on, Brother Flint and I returned and did more work. Several were baptized from time to time, and several of the brethren followed, as Davis, Fike, Houghton, and Whiteaker, and perhaps others. I had the pleasure of returning there December 13, in company with Patriarch McDowell, and attended the conference of the Northern Wisconsin District at that place, after an absence of six years.

What a change! Now they have a nice new church, built from the old church that was at Necedah, which they wrecked (ask Leonard Houghton about the wrecking), and worked into the new church, which is 24 by 40 feet, with a full cement block basement. To say the least, we feel proud of the success that has attended the efforts of the Saints there.

One object in my attending was to take some blessings for the Saints there who had not attended the Chetek reunion, and who desired their blessings. The Spirit that attended the giving of them bore record of the sort of material we were working with, and there are several of the brethren there who will be called to the priesthood in coming time if they remain faithful. I well remember when Sister Dora Tucker, then living near Sparta, told me she had a sister living near Black River Falls, with her husband, Archer Bowen, and that she felt sure they would give a listening ear if they had a chance, so we went, and now there are many rejoicing in the knowledge of the truth. No wonder the apostles of old rejoiced as they returned and found the Saints faithful to their calling! And no wonder they felt sad in some cases when they returned and found the Saints quarreling and backbiting as some did. The Saints at Black River Falls are all farmers, and really in some ways they seem to be approaching a Zionie condition that we read about and long so much to see. I hope that the blessing of God may continue with them because they remain true to the cause of the restored gospel.

We are hopeful that the "flu" will fly away, so that we will be able to return to our field of labor in good old north-eastern Illinois, as it has hindered the missionary work to quite an extent there. I want to remind the Saints of the Northeastern Illinois District not to forget that we are to have a reunion at Plano, August 22 to 31 inclusive. Now is the time to begin to get ready and especially those who have to plan their vacations ahead. The uptown location will be used, and all who were there two years ago know how nice the location was. So let us now lay our plans that success may follow, even greater than in previous years.

Your servant in Christ,

J. O. DUTTON.

EN ROUTE TO MICHIGAN, January 1, 1919.

Editors Herald: It has been many a long day since I wrote for your columns, and this silence has not been because of disinterestedness, nor yet that we have not found plenty to say, but just simply a growing indisposition to prattle over our efforts; a tendency ever apparent among the boys who have been on the firing line for many years.

But this is New Year's Day, and you will permit this little abandon upon closing up my Iowa mission where during the summer and autumn I labored in Hiteman, Chariton, Far West Stake, Omaha, Des Moines, and several of the leading reunions, I returned north to my Alberta home for Christmas holidays. I was only there two or three days when a letter from W. J. Cornish, president of the North Saskatchewan District, begged for my instantaneous service in the Battleford country. A couple of sky terriers up there were tearing into the work, vaunting their ability to "meet anything in shoe leather." After convincing myself that I was one of those thus soled and heeled, I advised the brother by phone that I would be on the job the next day.

Well, after a long train ride in this country of magnificent distances, and supplementing that ride by another behind team and wagon for fourteen miles in the dark and cold of midnight hours, we at length reached the battle ground.

On arrival the sad news was conveyed to me that one of the parsons had contracted an incurable case of the flew and had flown. The other, a local man, and tied down with wife and newborn babe, could not conveniently leave, and did not.

He was a representative of the Plymouth Brethren and of course the whole thing in religious life was believe and blood. What a bloody life!

Brother Cornish and I attended his meeting and the fight was on. We locked horns on baptism, and signed up for the following proposition:

"Resolved, that water baptism is essential to salvation.

"D. Macgregor affirms.

"W. Hopkins denies."

Well, it only takes a few hours to notify and electrify a whole township when a fight is on, hence on the evening of the debate everybody turned out, both believers and unbelievers, the bloody and the bloodless.

I will not weary you with the usual recital of stale arguments against the truth; suffice it to say that at the close of the investigation my opponent arose and confessed that he was beaten, attributing it to his inability to meet the "more experienced man." This, of course, is the frequent excuse of those who are unwilling to acknowledge the invincibility of the truth, but rather the cleverness of the man.

Had only ten days to spare in that country, much as I would have liked to remain, but during that time and following the discussion, six adults were baptized, five of them being heads of families.

There are many more to unite with us in that country and it is to be regretted that it was impossible to tarry longer, since my appointments in Michigan urged my going.

We had a rich experience during the confirmation, one of the number being called to the office of teacher.

I must not fail to acknowledge the congenial assistance of Brother "Cornie." He is a little fellow, just like his father, that worthy old veteran "J. J." We tried hard to get him to do some of the baptizing. You see it was twenty-six below zero, and I am glad to share the honor of this congenial task, particularly when we have to drive over a hilly trail for a mile and a half to the lake. But "Connie," out of feelings of deference, of course, would not accept.

Well, things were jingling joyfully when I left. What a happy experience it is to be among a settlement of newborn Saints where the things of the kingdom of God engage the conversation of all from morn till night!

Fraternally,

DANIEL MACGREGOR.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Any failing to receive blanks will be supplied on application to the Presidency's office. Credentials should be made upon the official blank, for proper filing and ready reference.

The rules governing "representation" and the "restrictions of delegates voting" will be found in chapter 17 of the Rules of Order, with the exception that such rules have been amended to provide that the basis of representation shall be one delegate for every one hundred members.

Districts should take notice that fractional numbers—less than one hundred—do not entitle them to another delegate.

Branches having a membership of less than one hundred, when not included in districts, are entitled to one delegate.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, January 18, 1919.

To the Quorum of Twelve

I herewith summon all the apostles within the United States and Canada to assemble in their place of meeting at 2.30 p. m. Tuesday, February 11, 1919, at Independence, Missouri. Matters of great importance pertaining to the Quorum of Twelve to be considered. Let all come fasting and praying.

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS,

President of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles.

Pastoral

To the Ministers and Members, Southern California District; Greeting: The new year, 1919, is upon us, and my prayer to our heavenly Father is that it will come to you freighted with choicest blessings, and at its close your efforts will be crowned with victory and success.

I take this occasion to call your attention to the big task before us, and to remind you of the importance of the message we bear. With the conclusion of the great war which has been absorbing the energy and resources of the whole world for over four years, we may now turn our attention to the important work of reconstruction.

As a church making the claim that God is directly responsible for our existence, we owe it both to God and man to make this claim good.

First. God's honor is at stake in us, if our claim is true. Second. Mankind is in most urgent need of our message, our ideals, our power, and our influence in whatever place or position we are permitted to fill.

As the president of the district, I am convinced that we are not measuring up to the standard involved in our claim, nor are we making sincere and adequate efforts to meet the demands imposed upon us.

If we are sincere in our belief that this work comes forth as the special witness of the nearness of the second advent of Christ, and that the "hastening time" is upon us, then we surely must be manifesting a more intense anxiety and eager interest in our work. It is certainly to be expected that with the opening up of new fields of service with the coming of peace, we shall find greater demands being made upon us in every way, and we must carefully consider these needs and demands, and prepare ourselves to meet them in the most effective way possible.

We should like to see a decided increasing of spirituality among our own membership, in order that the men and women of the world will have a positive demonstration of the real benefits which the gospel of Jesus Christ brings to the individual life. To bring this about, it is necessary that there shall be a cultivation of personal and family piety, the more careful disciplining of ourselves by prayer, and the study of the word of God.

When we reflect upon the fact that in the late war just closed, the leading generals of the victorious allied troops are profoundly religious men, and believers in the effect of prayer, and in all their great achievements relied upon the strong arm of God, how can we hope to succeed in the sterner warfare between the spiritual forces of good and evil with which we are concerned, unless the spirit of true devotion shall characterize our work?

We must organize our forces in the several cities or towns where our church may have an organized congregation, so that all who are able and willing to work shall have opportunity to do the work they feel themselves capable of doing.

We advise, therefore, that in each branch there be a good gospel literature board, which should be the local bureau of publicity, whose business shall be to give out a number of tracts each week. Let this be done systematically and regularly, so that at each business meeting a report may be presented, showing how many tracts have been purchased and distributed, how many homes have been visited, how many repeated visits have been made, and how many visitors have attended church as a result of such tracting.

We also wish that the branch presidents arrange for visiting by the priests, so that every household is visited by these ministers periodically. Should any member be residing away from the branch so they cannot attend, they should be written to, and made to feel that they are a part of us, and not forgotten although they are isolated.

We should like to see the auxiliary work, as represented by the Sunday school, Religio, and the various departments of the women's work, encouraged and built up. To do this we here call attention to the fact that the balopticon machine has been purchased, and is ready for lectures and entertainments. Kindly correspond with the undersigned for dates.

We also would be pleased to see efforts made to open up the work in different parts of these cities. Weekly prayer meetings should be conducted, the friends and neighbors invited to attend, and whenever possible to have a preacher who can interest a congregation, have a short sermon, and let such services be thoroughly advertised by tracting the neighborhood.

We would like to impress upon your mind the great need of making our church services attractive and inviting, by having our buildings comfortable, sanitary, and clean. This should be the deacon's special business. There should also be a more earnest attention paid to the music, and encouragement given to all to cooperate with the district chorister, Elder Arthur H. Mills, of San Bernardino, so as to make our choir work throughout the district worth while.

We must not forget the New Testament admonition, that through the foolishness of preaching it pleased God to save the world, therefore each branch president should make it his business to fill his pulpit with those who are best qualified to function in this most sacred work. To assist in this we have developed the "rota plan," and provided for the best qualified and available to visit all the branches at regular intervals.

Your attention is called to the code of rules which our district composed and authorized some time ago. Copies may be had by writing to the district secretary. It will be seen that these rules require that all ministers report their work at stated intervals, in order that the president of the district can send his report to the First Presidency. I am sorry to say that it seems almost impossible to get the men of the district to perform this simple little task. May we ask you to make among your New Year resolutions this one, that you will purchase a ten-cent diary and keep a record of your ministerial work. Get the habit.

We call your attention to rule 9, which provides that each branch shall take up a collection on the last Sunday of each quarter. We do hope that this year, instead of this rule being observed by its breach, we shall have it observed by a compliance therewith, for the district cannot conduct its policies without money.

Elder N. T. Chapman and myself are willing at any time to respond to calls for preaching or special services, and would like to suggest the advisability of considering the best time to hold a series of revival services for the purpose of advertising our work and stimulating our people. We shall be glad to cooperate with you in this important work.

With a prayer for the success of the work intrusted to our care, and that we shall all prove faithful and worthy, I remain,

Your colaborer,
G. H. WIXOM,
District President.

Correction

In the HERALD for October 3, 1918, there appeared a poem entitled, "Nay, speak no ill," credited to David H. Smith. We learn that this credit was an error, as the poem is an old one, its authorship not known to us. The manuscript of this poem was handed in by an old friend of David H. Smith's with the statement that he was the author. The editors regret this error.

Book Reviews

FOR THE FREEDOM OF THE SEAS.—By Ralph Henry Barbour, D. Appleton, New York, 300 pages, $1.35. This is a book for boys and is a story of the American Navy in the present war. Several of the details are taken from apparently actual happenings in the war. The hero of the story is serving on a destroyer but spends several days on a submarine. It is a fair story concerning recent events, and can be secured through the Herald Publishing House.

MORE RELIGIO STORIES FOR THE LITTLE FOLKS

The Religio Society announces that the second edition of the stories for the little folks, which are prepared by Sister S. H. Forties, of Independence, to interest such little folks as come to the Religio sessions with their elders, are ready for distribution. The price of this issue will be three cents each, and every local ought to order a few of these booklets for the use of their teachers in keeping these little folks interested. They would also be very fine for mothers to have in the home to read to their little children, giving them much information about the gospel and those who were instrumental in bringing it forth in these latter days. They should be ordered from the Herald Publishing House. Get several copies and give them to your friends.

Miss Viola Eliason, of Race Track, Montana, would like to get in touch with those in Montana and Idaho interested in the courses of teacher-training offered by the normal department of the Sunday school and Religio. She would like to add materially to the goodly number already taking the courses. The demand for trained men and women is insistent.

A letter from Sister Clara Fleeharty, address Fairfield, Illinois, R. F. D. 6, says they live two miles southwest of Geff, have a large house, and will be glad to entertain any of the elders and provide room for preaching services. Anyone in the town will direct how to find the place if the call is made unannounced.

A brother at Whittemore, Michigan, desires that the Saints fast and pray for him in the operation he is required to undergo. He desires to accomplish all that God has for him to do.

POTEAU, OKLAHOMA, November 29, 1918.

Editor Poteau Sun; Dear Sir: Please give space to the following in your much esteemed paper, the Poteau Sun, and greatly oblige, for truth and humanity's sake.

To Whom This May Concern: In the Missionary Baptist, a paper printed in Wister, Oklahoma, and dated November 10, is found an article headed, "Some facts about Mormonism," signed by A. J. Holt, in which he makes the statement, that Joseph Smith the Prophet was arrested, tried, and convicted of theft in Palmyra, New York, together with other reflections on his character, and to forever put an end to that kind of slander against a dead man, we will give one hundred dollars, or any stipulated amount to said A. J. Holt, or any other person that will or can prove that said Smith was ever convicted of theft or any other crime in the courts of our land, and we will give an additional one hundred dollars for the proof that said Smith ever taught, practiced, or said one word in favor of polygamy, or any other vile crime.

A NINETEENTH-CENTURY PROPHET

This subject is treated by John W. Rushton of the Quorum of Apostles in a six-page tract, and is a splendid and dignified piece of literature and printing by which you may introduce the latter-day work to your neighbor. You may discharge the obligation to warn your neighbor by the use of this and other tracts, and thus keep the commandments. It is published by the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and sells for 75 cents per hundred. Order a hundred and try it out.

A MINISTER'S FAMILY AND YOU

We have noticed with regret the unfair criticism at times, of missionary families. A missionary finally secures a good home. The comment is very adverse. We do not take the trouble to inform ourselves of the fact that he has worked before entering the mission field and so had a small home; that added to this some near relative has died, leaving him property, so that he, at last, is able to secure suitable quarters without calling upon the church. It should not be necessary that that last clause be included.

Some good sister, a missionary's wife, is criticized because of the style of her dress, and yet she has sat up nights trying to make suitable clothes for herself and children, and has turned and returned. She may not have a single garment that anyone else would think of wearing, no, not even her critics. We have known of such a remark being made; of a sister being so well dressed, when she did not have a single dress without a patch in it—not a single whole garment, though her clothing was built on the plan of durability and not of beauty or comfort; buying often very heavy, coarse cloth, nothing that was really suitable, and yet she herself was a woman of pronounced refinement. Her family never knew what she endured and what she sacrificed for the sake of the church.

Nor is the objection concerning this self-sacrifice which should be made willingly. It is not for the sake of the individual. But the objection is that the church so often suffers loss because of our short-sighted policy.

We have suggested this before. But some will say that our ministers should not preach for money. That is true. One should do no work in Zion for money. From the frequent repetition of this statement, there has arisen a confusion of terms and of facts. It does not mean that our ministers need not to be fed and clothed; nor does it mean that their families do not need care. If better conditions are ever to be secured it must be because of better understanding by the members of the church. We submit:

First. Our missionaries do not preach for money; if the time ever comes that they preach for money they will be an utter failure.

Second. It is plainly stated that only he can assist in this work who is humble and full of love. (Doctrine and Covenants 11:4.) It is also plainly set forth that "the laborer in Zion shall labor for Zion; for if they labor for money, they shall perish." (2 Nephi 11:109.) It would thus seem that the rule against working for money does not apply to the missionary alone, but it applies also to the farmer, the banker, the storekeeper, the manufacturer, in fact, to everyone of us.

Third. It is quite true that we should look to the priesthood to set an example; but when the example is set, we should strive to follow it. If we require a fuller consecration from the priesthood, a greater devotion, a closer keeping of the law, if the priesthood live up to that idealism, and we require that they do so, but we are unwilling to keep ourselves on the same high plane, we must then logically expect that they are to receive a better glory and a better reward in the future.

The work is intrusted to all. (Doctrine and Covenants 119:7.) The responsibility is upon all to see that the law of God is kept by keeping it ourselves. The rule you would apply to the missionary, try it first at home on yourself and your own family.

Fourth. Among the orientals, a religious teacher often became a beggar, and begged his living from day to day. In a warm climate this is easier done than in a cold region. It was rather expected. We raise the question, Is this what we expect and desire from our missionaries? We have seen them sometime forced to do it—to stand up and beg for their support. Is that the law? Is it right?

Fifth. If a missionary has debts he cannot pay, or is in debt, it has happened many times that he has been released from the mission field in order that he might go home and earn the money to pay his debts; and this release has not been for months either, but many times a good missionary has had to retire for a year or more on this account.

Men who have had property when they started out have had such lack of support that they have gradually had to use up everything they had, and then go in debt, in order simply to live. This is a matter reaching farther than to the administration of the law by the Bishop. It depends upon us, the membership of the church. What support do we think our missionaries should have? Certainly the allowance made them would not tempt a competent man, from a money standpoint, to turn to the work of the missionary.

We do not even plead that they should be paid what they are worth. We should have efficient men for this work. The church is rather insisting upon that. Do we want our missionaries to have to leave the field part of the year in order to make up the deficit, so that they and their families can simply live?

When they have to go in debt, the joint council will release them so that they are no longer under appointment; and yet it should not be considered, in any sense, a reflection upon the man or his splendid work.

Sixth. But the missionary does not get the worst of it. He is often entertained, meets new people, and is well fed, as compared with his family. We know of many cases of this kind in the past. Of one, where the family had no flour whatever in the house. In order to save fuel, they cooked a big dishpan full of beans, and had nothing but beans, morning, noon, and night. This was before the war, and before the price of beans went up. We have known of other cases, where they had nothing but dry bread and a little grease with which to make gravy, for over a month at a time. We could repeat similar instances. But the sad part is that the church thereby has lost, many times, the interest of the young people. A young man who has seen his mother suffer and then die a premature death because of lack of proper food is hardly to be blamed if his interest in the work of the church has grown less. Who is to blame? The Bishop cannot provide without means, nor even with means, unless he has your moral support.

It is not the question of the interest of the individual. The vital question is, the best interest of the church. The church does not receive the best that it should receive if the missionary's children are not properly cared for. It is not simply a matter of food, but also of clothing and other necessities.

Now we are satisfied that the missionary counts all loss gain, for Christ's sake; and it is doubtless true that in the majority of cases, at least, his wife is fully with him in this sacrifice.

Some of them have managed to secure work and have paid tithing, and returned part of the family allowance, because they were able to do so. They are whole-heartedly in the work. That is not the question. The question is, are you? Are you working for money?

Seventh. Another vital feature is effective work. Does it pay to have men specially trained for work and have them do that work for which they are trained, or should we expect every man to do every kind of work? This question is not raised on behalf of the missionaries, or of the priesthood, but on behalf of the church. It seems to us that the vital question is not, How much credit can I get? or What are my rights? But it is a vital question, How much good can we as a body do, and how can the greatest possible amount of good be achieved by us working together? It seems logical that this can best be done by specialized work, instead of continued diversified effort.

Eighth. We have noted before that when some of the missionaries went abroad forty and fifty years ago, that they spent the least possible amount for transportation and traveled in the steerage. And the result was that for six months they were sick after they reached the other side. What is the gain? We have seen missionaries living on a minimum, but not able to be very accurate or accomplish very much in the course of a day. Is that prayer wrong, "Father, give me sufficient financial support that my hands may be free for thy service. Not for the sake of money, nor for the sake of wealth, but that those whom thou hast given me may have reasonable provision, and that my hands may be free, that our hands may be free, that we may work together for thy glory and for thy work's sake"?

Ninth. The Master expressed it: "Seek first the kingdom of God and its righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." The man who has wealth is not, therefore, a bad man. He may have the talent for making money, but he can use it for the upbuilding of the work of God. The man who preaches does not preach for money, but for the sake of helping his brother and sister. He works by day and by night to carry the gospel of the kingdom to the nations of the world, but we ought not to permit him to bear, or ask him to bear, all of the burden. We should be willing to do our part, that we may be workers together with God.

The man whose aim is money and whose desire is, What can I get out of it? will soon find himself outside of the church, and outside of Zion, however fictitious a reason he may give, and however erroneous may be his excuses for leaving. The man, however, who is seeking to find, What can I do? What can I give? How can I help? will be founded upon the rock.

We do not look for the time to come that the church will hold all of the wealth. We want men to hold their own property as stewards, and use it wisely. But the man who seeks to spend it solely on his own pleasure and sensual enjoyment, is not working in accordance with the divine plan. Our preachers do not preach for money, but unless they have reasonable food, clothing, and shelter for themselves and family, the time during which they can continue to preach will be shortened.

Our men of business should not work for money. That is, their first and primary consideration should not be the gaining of personal wealth. This does not mean that the man who possesses business ability and who makes great wealth is therefore evil. The question is, For what does he use it? What is his ideal? Is he working for the sake of securing wealth as an end in itself, or is it only a means to an end, that he also may assist in the work of the kingdom, and help those who are not so fortunate in this world's goods? Is he devoting his time and talent, so that the result is the greatest possible amount of good for the church as a whole?

Our men do not preach for money. They do not go from one church to another; from one call to another, and try to find where they can get the most money. If a man does so, he is failing in his duty and is actuated by a wrong spirit. But the church, on its own account, should feel free and ready to give these men reasonable moral, spiritual, and financial support, not grudgingly or as one bestows upon those who must beg for what they receive.

"Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." S. A. B.

The same twenty-four hours has brought to our desk two accounts of the debate between Elder A. M. Baker of our church and W. G. Roberts of the Campbellite or Christian Church, sometimes calling themselves the Church of Christ. One account is from the Apostolic Review of January 21; the other is from Elder Guthrie, of Nebo, Illinois. It is interesting to notice how many of the points made in the Apostolic Review are met and answered by Elder Guthrie without his knowing that these assertions had been made by them. We would call particular attention to the assertion that Elder Baker would not debate the question whether Joseph Smith was a prophet or not. The truth appears to be that Elder Baker merely asked for fair propositions, which means that each man should affirm something.

This his opponent did not want. It is his custom to evade that issue. A reading will show other points of difference, which Brother Guthrie, without knowing the differences existing, has explained.

LEST WE FORGET

The death of Sister Elizabeth P. Anderson on December 10, 1918, brings to mind some of the conditions existing in the West in the fifties and around 1860. There are very few now remaining with us who went through the suffering of those days.

Sister Anderson was baptized with her sister in England, but the rest of the family did not approve of the step she was taking so they, with others, left home for the land of Zion about 1852 or 1853, when she was twenty years of age, and her sister, who was later Mrs. William Smith, of Sandy, Utah, about seven years older. The trip across was a trying one in those days, taking several weeks instead of days, and then there was the trip either up the Mississippi or across the continent from New York through Iowa, to about where Council Bluffs is today. From there they made up a caravan to cross the plains.

While they had paid their way and transportation clear to Utah they found that when once they were out in the plains that this did not avail, but that they had to get out and walk and help push. Then when they were in the middle of the plains they began to hear the first time about polygamy. When they arrived in Utah, they heard a great deal more about it. And in fact, a good many of the party were pressed so energetically that many of them were forced to marry the first young men they could find in self-defense. That was very near the case with her. She went to work in a certain family but the man urged her so very energetically that she married within a few months.

She has related many times what Brigham Young used to say, that Utah was a greased bowl. Anyone could slide in, but he defied anyone to slide out without his permission. Still about 1860 a concession was given to her companion to take another wife. They managed with great care to escape by moving slowly north, taking many months to do so, and with much suffering and leaving much of their property behind. Finally, in eastern Montana they were able to turn eastward—back to the States. Thus he avoided accepting the dispensation for a second wife. As long as she lived she spoke with horror of those days.

During the past year we have received several letters and clippings in relation to plural marriage. Some say plural marriage was only possible for a few great souls who were so superior that they became a sort of demi-god and ruled over many families, and so were exalted and their families exalted. Such an effort has been made by some to attach a seeming glory and halo to this condition as it existed in those early days. But there are so few living who know the real facts by personal experience and how utterly false this assertion is.

Again we have a letter that would probably have been published by now had it not been that assiduously in several ways was the thought worked in of there being a different kind of polygamy, a divine and glorified polygamy.

And again from still another source there has been the past few months a persistent argument trying to establish such a doctrine.

It is worth while that we should turn to some of these record of the past, as disclosed in the Journal of Discourses, and that we should remind ourselves of the awful experiences of those who passed through these days, and learn once for all that polygamy or plural marriage comes from but one source and that is from beneath.

There is not an instance on record where it has meant anything else than suffering in the family. The Book of Mormon in Jacob the second chapter expresses it clearly and well. It is an abomination in the sight of the Lord. It always has been; it always will be. And it means suffering, and ever suffering, for the tender daughters of his people.

Not one single prophetic passage has been found where it is shown that God sanctioned such a practice. Whoever did so made a great mistake. That does not prove that the conditions into which they went were sanctioned from on high.

In the case of Abraham we note the suffering and dissension it brought, but we note also that there is only the one instance and that was at Sarah's instigation, which she afterwards admits and declares was her wrong. And rightfully places the wrong upon Abraham for he should not have yielded to her wrongdoing and wrongful suggestion. There is no evidence that Abraham ever entered in and made that same mistake a second time. Plural marriage has in every age brought departure from God. It has never been marked with divine approval. It has never been brought a near approach to that which is good and is from on high.

This is an old and disagreeable page. But it is well that we should not forget its lesson. When there is a secret wish and the mind is made up, it is possible for one to seek out and convince himself that he has found a text which can be twisted to support the theory. The idea being firmly set in the mind and anchored to the secret wish, an attempt is made by argument to establish his preconception. When one seeks that way for evidence he often manages to satisfy himself. But in such points as these the truth does not depend for its efficacy upon our ability to convince those who do not want to see.

Both of these sisters joined the Reorganized Church at their earliest opportunity and remained true to it to the end. Of the two of them, Sister Sarah Smith was well known to all of our missionaries of the earlier years, and even more recent years, who went to Utah. Sister Anderson has been equally active in Saint Louis, Kansas City, and Decatur County, Iowa.

JOHN RUSHTON ADDRESSES ROTARIANS

A letter from Elder George H. Wixom, together with a clipping, calls our attention to the address delivered by Elder Rushton at the memorial services of James Harold Gimblett. This service was attended by soldiers from Camp Arcadia, Los Angeles, the G. A. R., and elsewhere. On Tuesday, the 14th, Elder Rushton addressed the high school in San Bernardino for the fifth time. He then addressed the Saints in the evening.

But this service, according to the San Bernardino Daily Sun of January 15, was evidently cut short so that he could attend a meeting of the Rotary Club of San Bernardino.

This paper speaks very highly of his efforts; especially as he was called in at the eleventh hour. It mentions both of his previous meetings for that day and states that his subject to the Rotarians was "Commercial ethics."

His address proved to be a gem of large ideas that can be grasped and made a part of every large business concern and molded into what may be termed the Soul of Business.

The speaker commended Rotary as a movement looking toward the betterment of business men and business principles, of educating the commercial interests to regard their endeavors as directed toward service to mankind, rather than for the monetary value of actual revenue that is produced.

"Education is the preparation for life, and life is service," he declared to be the inscription written over the entrance to Hampden Institute, a negro institution in the South, and he pointed out that movements such as Rotary are for the ultimate goal of equipping business and professional men, through education, with the character and purpose of compounding their benefits to society at large.

It matters not what our occupation may be, it is necessary to possess a certain amount of knowledge, or we cannot mingle, socially, with our fellow man, and we will be placed at a great disadvantage in our business relations; without it we would feel strange, as though we were in a foreign land, unable to converse intelligently with our fellows.—Edward Rannie.

OUR HOPE IN JESUS

(Memorial sermon by S. W. L. Scott for Sister Clara Louise Kellogg Ellis, delivered at Coldwater, Michigan, December 22, 1918.)

We are called together in the kindly providence of God that we may accord a tribute of honor to the memory of one of the Lord's children whose sacrifice in representing principle has challenged the admiration of all. While it is a pleasant reflection, and a solemn duty, to reembrace the memory of the pure and good, we would not seek to assess the value of such a character. We meet in the golden moments of the holy Sabbath to speak of qualities of heart and mind from whence was born power, but the record is with God to whom we must all turn to give account of our stewardship.

We read a few verses from the divine revelation as a central point around which our thoughts may rally:

The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance.—Psalm 112: 6.

Again:

Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.—Psalm 116: 15.

Yet again, to lend emphasis to this occasion, I read:

So I returned, and considered all the oppressions that are done under the sun; and behold the tears of such as were oppressed, and they had no comforter; and on the side of their oppressors there was power; but they had no comforter. Wherefore I praised the dead which are already dead, more than the living which are yet alive.—Ecclesiastes 4: 1, 2.

As a concluding text:

The memory of the just is blessed: but the name of the wicked shall rot.—Proverbs 10: 7.

You will note that memorial services are not a modern innovation, but an honored custom and esteemed as a sacred duty from time immemorial, among and by those nations who revere heroism, virtue, courage, and righteousness. The Bible sets forth that Israel made periodical visits to the site of Abraham's tomb and "burned perfumes" with ceremony.

The remnant of the "Grand Army of the Republic" will march to the cemetery every memorial day to resurrect the memory of their fallen comrades and drop the flower upon the grass-covered mound.

We do not wish to open afresh the fountains of grief, yet my conviction is, it will benefit us to attune the spirit-harp to the plaintive occasionally.

When the radio message arrived announcing the (to us) untimely death of Sister Ellis, a cloud of gloom settled over the community, and with it an element of doubt that it could be true; but confirmation came, and we all realized that:

Now the laborer's task is o'er,
Now the battle day is past,
Now upon the farther shore,
Lands the voyager at last.

Our sister accepted the reasonable message of Jesus known as the gospel, and while we omit the knotty problems of theology this afternoon, yet a brief exegesis of a few statements found in Ecclesiastes 12 will somewhat enlarge our conception of the author of the Christian philosophy. I quote:

Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them. . . . In the day when the keepers of the house [limbs and arms tottering and helpless] shall tremble, . . . and the grinders [teeth] cease, because they are few, and those that look out of the windows [the eyes—physical vision] be darkened, . . . the pitcher broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the cistern. Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it.

In this, the philosophical distinction between the flesh and spirit is recognized, and both revelation and modern science uniformly represent death as a separation of the body and the spirit; that death is that state of being of an animal in which there is a permanent cessation of the vital functions in connection with the physical organization. The intelligent "spirit returns to God." Notice, these terms of "returning" are couched in generic propositions. The "dust" of all, righteous or wicked, "return to the earth." The spirits of all men, righteous or wicked, "return to God."

I do not say the spirit of wicked and unregenerate men stay with God, for that would antagonize both philosophy and revelation.

There is a somewhat antiquated adage running through the world, as follows: "Birds of a feather flock together." There is a principle in that saying after all; a weighty consideration. It is, when translated, a negative aspect: If you are not congenial in spirit with the society or person here, or there, you will not abide that society.

"Can two walk together except they be agreed?"—Amos 3: 3.

So, if I form not a character adapted to the society of the redeemed, how can I walk with such society? If I am not rendered congenial to the character and divine companionship of Jesus, how can I dwell with him? Hence the wicked will be "banished from the presence of God," as the Apostle Paul declares.

Note again, "the dust returns to the earth as it was." How was it? Science and revelation affirm that it was "element." Something that cannot be annihilated although the "house" be dissolved. You can change the form of element, but cannot annihilate.

A beautiful mansion may be destroyed—reduced to ashes. As a building, organic, it is gone. But the element is there as before. The materials grown in the forest are converted into lumber. Our word "element" is the same as the Latin word "elementum," and means the first rudiments, principles, or constituent parts of things. Thus the letters of the alphabet are the elements of words, and the nine digits are the elements of numbers.

The chemist can resolve or separate a body into two or more substances, and he calls the process analysis. If he experiments with water he can resolve it into two gasses, oxygen and hydrogen. Water is a compound body. He cannot separate its elements—oxygen and hydrogen. He concludes they are "elementary substances," of which there are upward of fifty, out of which all things were made. So the physical body came from the earth, was element, and at death "returns as it was" — element, furnishing the foundation of the glorious immortal body in the resurrection.

You can take water, freeze it into a block of ice, but it is the same element. Submit the block of ice to another temperature and it will pass off in steam or vapor, but it is the same element. Now if Almighty power, by the beautiful law of evaporation, can take a few drops of water from Lake Michigan, a few drops from the Mississippi River, a few drops from the murky stream by the roadside, a few measures from the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and construct the fantastic cloud rocks in yonder heaven, kindled up so resplendently by the rays of the sun, and still cause them to carry millions of tons of water over our heads in space, who will doubt the power to gather up the indestructible elements of our bodies, and creative wisdom use such as the foundation of the resurrected body?

Jesus said, "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth," and this was the faith and hope of Sister Ellis.

Ah, we expect that "some sweet day, by and by," our Father, as when in the beginning he reached out and grasped higher laws and said, "Let there be light," and there was, there will be light. So when the earth is dressed in springtime robes, and restored to pristine excellency, by the aid of higher and more richly spiritual power, will the dead be called forth to life again. And e'en though Sister Ellis sleeps far away in her island home, yet shall, "the sea give up its dead."

We remember in the Greek classics the beautiful and impressive drama of Ion, when about to yield his young existence a sacrifice to his fate, his beloved Clemantha asks if they shall meet again, to which he replies: "I asked that dreadful question of the hills that seem eternal—of the clear streams that flow forever, of the stars among whose fields of azure my spirit has walked, but no response; yet as I look upon thy face, and measure the love which dwells in thy bosom with that which abides in mine, I say it cannot perish, we shall meet again, Clemantha."

Ah, I have thought that the Apostle Paul touched this chord when he mentions something that establishes a connection with eternity, and upon which death lays no limiting band. He was writing to the Roman Saints:

For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.—Romans 8: 38, 39.

These mighty forces battle against us, but do not prevail. There is a glory following the struggle, and Paul continues: "I reckon," just like an expert in spiritual mathematics, and after a due estimate of spiritual values, "I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed." No wonder Paul desired to depart and be with Christ. He seemed at times impatient to recover celestial vision and perpetuate even a momentary taste of "the glory to be revealed."

This "hope of glory" implanted by the gospel was the "star of the sea" to our sister, I am persuaded. Placing herself at the behest of the church, she sailed far over the sea to the isles of the Pacific, with her husband, to tell the natives that the message of Jesus teaches the proposition—that while life is a struggle, the essential doctrine is, that the struggle is for others as well as self; and in this struggle everyone owes a duty to his neighbor; and the stronger he is, and the greater the need of his neighbor, the more imperative is his duty.

Clothed with the spiritual vestments of this divine principle, her labors have extended to nearly five years. She was true to her convictions and her devotion was proverbial. Even the strenuous obligations of secular profession laid no embargo on religious duties and responsibilities.

I remember an instance in her teaching days in this city, which to me brought out the nobility of character to a large degree. She was a teacher in the Lincoln High School building, and one midweek prayer service evening I passed her home and said, "Are you going to the prayer service?" She replied, "Yes, but I am very, very tired." I said, "Don't you think we should plan and not lay out so much work on the day of the church service?" "Yes," she responded, "but I cannot bear to see my parents dragging their feet, or groaning with aching back."

"Paint me as I am," said Cromwell to his limner. "When you shall these deeds relate, speak of me as I am," said Orthello: "Nothing extenuate nor set down aught in malice."

So we speak of our departed sister through her life work. Not many sessions of Religio, Sunday school, prayer service, or sermonizing, was she absent; and in choir rehearsal always at the keyboard; perception acute, courage rising with danger, quick and efficient to defend the cause and correct press misrepresentations emanating through ignorance or prejudice aforethought. An influence emerged from this attitude like "the pebble" which "dropped in the water." A series of concentric circles follow to the farther shore. Influence is never lost for weal or woe. 'Tis a difficult task to occupy any position and fail to wield an influence. It will arise in its potency from whence least expected.

Longfellow sets "apples of gold in pictures of silver," thus:

I shot an arrow into the air,
It fell to earth, I knew not where;

I breathed a song into the air,
It fell to earth, I knew not where;

Long, long afterwards, in an oak,
I found the arrow, still unbroke;
And the song, from beginning to end,
I found again in the heart of a friend.

Jesus would say, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

Sister Ellis did not believe that the accumulation of wisdom and learning in this life perished in the tomb; but recognized these as the developing of the spiritual organization which God took from the heavens and blended with the physical, and sent on an eternal mission in this world; and beyond the deathline, in uprisen radiance, will utilize accumulations to better advantage. Her influence is now with the people who love examples of purity, courage, diligence, and sacrifice.

I read a story once like this: "I wrote my name upon the sands. When I returned the flood and ebbing tides had wiped out every trace that I had made. I then carved it upon the enduring granite. Years thereafter I returned to find that a lightning bolt had destroyed the granite shaft. Then I traced it upon enduring bronze. Years afterwards I returned. An earthquake had rent the base of that bronze, and it lay buried under drifting dust and sand. I learned the lesson that if I write my name where it would endure, I would write it upon the hearts of humanity."

Good works engraved upon the heart, survive the dissolutions of the enemy, and react, yea, beyond the crash of worlds, to the abolition of evil. This is the bond which cements and holds together "the family on earth," with "the family in heaven," when persecution and opposition embroil to separate like waves in a vengeful sea.

Many events of thrilling character have transpired in the world's history during the absence of our brother and sister. Swirling clouds of war flashed with flame of fire, and midnight burning red, portions of the earth "ripped apart." Kings have tumbled from thrones, monarchs been crushed, and dynasties have passed into the aftermath, to be remembered with disdain, or to be mourned.

These events were confirming to their faith inasmuch as the cause they represented was accompanied by a sweeping searchlight of inspiration, forecasting that as the days and years go by bringing closer the coming of Christ, the nations of the world would grow more and more democratic; that governments, hitherto intrenched behind the double walls of politico-ecclesiastical despotisms should trend toward freedom and popular license until finally uncrowned; that the chaff growing up and around the national grain should be "blown away," in this the "harvest time,"—yes, the threshing time, when the "threshing floor" is to be cleansed, and the grain "garnered."

The unparalleled conflict now passing into the current of universal history, with hurtling shells, hand grenades, gigantic mortars severing limb from torso, and disemboweling bayonets dripping with hot blood, has hurled multiplied millions of brave young lads over the battlements of time, into the twilight zone, who were never privileged to hear the mild message of the Prince of Peace, or make preparation for the society of the redeemed.

This tragic consideration brings to the forefront a doctrine accepted by Sister Ellis and taught in Bible parlance as "preaching to spirits in prison" the "glad tidings of great joy which shall be to all people."

The world war forced the question of the destiny of their sons from the pale lips of the New England mothers. "What chance for our sons who now are falling in conflict, who never were favored with the chance here?"

From this huge alembic of war emerges the perception that God's justice, like the moon's pale beams, will pierce the fogs, not only of time, but of eternity, to wrap his children in the mantle of benediction.

"Out of apparent evil he brings good." "The wrath of man will praise him," and the opportunity will be given the sons of earth to "lay hold" on "the ministry of reconciliation," who were deprived of that opportunity here.

Is "Our Father who art in heaven," the essence of infinite love here, and an implacable monster at the death line? Is he another Jove or Olympus, compelling the tender Christ to plead at the bar of infinite injustice? Paul declares with Isaiah, that "Every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall confess to the glory of God."

There is only one way to "bow." The gospel way. That would be to the glory of God. Only one way to "confess"—the gospel way. That would be to the glory of God. Other ways would be to the glory of the arch enemy.

So the apostle could affirm: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation." (Romans 1:16.) And if God does not give them the opportunity of "bowing" and "confessing" "over there," who have had no opportunity here, then the divine revelation is marred by contradiction, and the Deity of our God, by inconsistency and injustice. "All the ends of the world shall remember and turn to the Lord." (Psalm 22:27.) Jesus gave "himself a ransom for all," and "as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

When all come back "alive" death shall have been destroyed, and "all," including those who have had no opportunity here, will be restored to organic existence.

Now, will Paul's gospel have been eliminated then? Will its potential forces to "save" have been exhausted? If so, how can Paul affirm it to be the "power of God"? Can infinite power exhaust itself? No, "the tender mercies of the Lord are over all his works," and the adoption of this administration of our heavenly Father, as an item of faith, as a star of hope, greatly broadens our finite conceptions of God, and increases our devotions to his cause.

These broad planks in the divine platform, added to the doctrines of "reward according to works," and Paul's three "kingdoms of glory," is the "pillar of the people's hope," and the "center of the world's desire," or will be. Upon these stood the feet of the one whose sad "taking away" we memorialize today. In this impregnable structure we see the rock around which the vine entwines in beauty and remains unshaken in strength.

"He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet shall receive a prophet's reward." Here is one class of rewards. "He that receiveth a righteous man in the name of a righteous man shall receive a righteous man's reward." Here is another class of rewards. He that giveth a cup of cold water to a disciple, because he is a disciple, shall not lose his reward. Here is the third class of rewards. (Matthew 10:41, 42.) This involves eternal principles as old as the government of God, and once in awhile alien potentates have sought to copy during the weary march of nations, and the copy seems like a firefly across the pagan horizon of darkness.

For be it remembered that nearly twenty-five centuries before the cross cast its shadow on Calvary's hill, Hamarabi enacted a code which, however cold and cruel (as a whole the laws of Chaldea were) yet some statutes were remarkable for their justice in their application.

But the commitment of the law of God preceded all these. These nations permitted ambitions—overvaulting ambitions, to intoxicate, until justice was crushed under the ponderous feet of autocracy.

The message Jesus gave the world still moves on, even to the isles of the sea, bearing upon its bosom, in contrast, the lessons of righteousness, justice, and joy.

The services and sacrifices of Sister Ellis under this banner will surely entitle her to "the greater reward."

Our sympathy goes out to those upon whom the burden of grief has fallen most heavily. We commend them to God, and the hope of again clasping glad hands under more perfected conditions.

WHAT SHALL WE DO ABOUT OUR LACK OF EDUCATION?

I have read with deep interest the article in January Autumn Leaves from the pen of Brother Augustine Dwyer entitled, "The art of clothing the heavenly message." I want to express a few thoughts from the minister's side of the question, and as it would be necessary to wait a long time before it could be published in that journal and it would be so long between their publication that it would lose the value of close association I concluded it would be best to try and find space in your columns.

The writer, as well as most of his brethren, believes in an educated and well-trained ministry; we cannot be otherwise and be true to our Lord who has called us into his service, and his word very plainly teaches us that we ought to be the best educated people in the world. (Doctrine and Covenants 87:5; 85:36; 90:12.)

Nephi taught that to be learned was good "if we hearkened unto the Lord." The Old and New Testaments teach us to increase our knowledge by study. The Lord will assist by his Holy Spirit the patient, studious and pure-minded person who seeks to enlighten his mind by study.

It is hardly fair to the great mass of our missionary force to judge them by a few men that appear to be cranks or may have been unfortunate in not getting a proper vision of one of the beautiful things of the gospel. Most of our men desire to be learned in the things of the gospel and what may be learned from good books, but we are so fearful that if we obtain it after the manner of men in the world that there will be something sacrilegious about it, that we neglect the opportunity and so in the end are great losers.

There are two things that greatly hinder our men in obtaining an education, and a well-trained mind.

First, tradition. Within the memory of many now living it was common to hear men in the ministry boast that they were ignorant and teach the young men, both in public and in private, that it was wrong to seek to make themselves useful and intelligent ministers by obtaining an education, that God did not want that kind, that it was the ignorant and unlearned who were to do his work. It was a great misfortune for the church that such things were taught. It caused many of our young men to be poorly prepared for the great work the Lord had for them to do. There were a few strong and brave men at that time who showed by their example the value of an educated and well-trained ministry.

Second, an opportunity. We are the only religious society of any note that does not give educational assistance to her young men that want to enter the ministry, and then complain because of their ignorance. The Government of the United States gives young men who want to enter the military or naval service a four-year college course and pay all the expenses connected therewith. The several States of the union have universities and normal schools where our young men and women can get an education preparing them for teachers in the public schools, almost free. We have the greatest message in the world to deliver to our fellow men and we are required to go out without the church offering us an opportunity for preparation.

It is quite common to hear the remark that if the minister is not too lazy he can acquire a good education, master the English language and learn to pronounce words correctly. The statement is not true. If it were, then it would be a waste of money to build schools and colleges, and folly for anyone to go to school. The fact that nations which do not encourage public education are backward and non-progressive is proof that self-teaching is a failure.

Several years ago the department of education at Washington, District of Columbia, issued a pamphlet containing the information of the amount of education that had been received by ten thousand men who in the various avenues of human effort had been successful. The number of self-educated men was twenty-four. That was one out of four hundred and sixteen. The ministry of our church have done better than that. We can obtain a great fund of useful knowledge by reading history, biography, books on all questions of interest affecting the welfare of mankind, but we cannot make much progress in mastering the English language and learning to pronounce properly the words without a teacher.

The student is almost as helpless as if he were taking music lessons and voice culture from an absent teacher, the work being done by correspondence. Another great difficulty that hinders is that we are constantly on the move, seldom staying in one place more than two weeks at a time. It is not very often that we can have a quiet place for study and meditation. It is a common occurrence for the missionary to go to several places in a town in one day in order that he might equalize the burdens of those who are caring for him.

Another difficulty we must face is that we do not have equal opportunity. One man is sent to a city where he has a comfortable room. It is quiet and he has ample money to supply all his needs. He may have the opportunity to attend night school or avail himself of the benefits of a university. While another is banished to rural isolation where the environment is not conducive to mental activity or an interest for the things that make for the finer things of life.

We have the cart before the horse. The period of preparation should be before entering the ministry, and not after. Then it should be an application of the preparatory principles to make them useful in our great work. If a good education, a correct knowledge of the English language, correct pronunciation of words, and a well-trained voice are essential, with other qualifications, to make the ministry fit to present the gospel of Jesus Christ to the world, then the church is not true to its great mission, it is not true to its ministry, if it fails to give the men who want to enter that field an opportunity to prepare for the great work intrusted to us.

Well did Jesus say that "the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." They are wise because they give those who are going to serve them an opportunity to prepare for that service. If the church believes that I can better serve her interests by having a better understanding of the English language I am willing to be one of a class to take up such a course of study. It matters not to me whether it be in Graceland College, Kirtland Temple, the pineries of Alabama, or in a canyon of Colorado, just so I have a competent teacher and an interesting class to be a member of. If one year would accomplish the task I could still give the church twenty years of service and yet be too young to die of old age.

It is a heavy burden the ministry of this church and their families are bearing because of the sacrifices they must make in being absent from their homes for three fourths of the year, and those who have stayed at home and have had the good opportunities that the public schools and colleges afford, should not be harsh and unkind in their conduct toward them, but rather seek to do their part so that the ministry and their families could have the same opportunities that they are having.

It matters not how great our intellectual qualifications may be, if we lack an essential that is pointed out by Jesus we will fail in our work. "And no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be entrusted to his care." (Doctrine and Covenants 11:4.)

OF GENERAL INTEREST

NEWSPAPER COMMENT ON TORONTO WORK

[Recently it seems that Elder T. W. Williams, in charge of the work in Toronto, was interviewed by the Toronto Star. One reason for it was an article which had appeared a week or two before and which did not present the status of the church in Toronto and Canada quite accurately. The interview in the Toronto Star Weekly follows.—EDITORS.]

LATTER DAY SAINTS NOT MORMONS

HAVE NEVER TAUGHT OR PRACTICED POLYGAMY —LEADER TOM WILLIAMS APPRECIATIVE OF
"STAR WEEKLY'S" ATTITUDE

Mr. Tom Williams, who is conducting a series of meetings in Toronto on behalf of the Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints saw The Star Weekly this week with reference to the article on Mormonism in last week's issue.

"I take exception," he said, "to your use of the term 'Mormon,' as applied to members of the Reorganized Church. They have always steadfastly maintain that they are not 'Mormons' at all.

"Then as to what you say about our strength. No doubt in Toronto it is the case that the defection of Mr. R. C. Evans has—at any rate, temporarily—adversely affected our numbers. But elsewhere the facts show a healthy increase in our membership throughout Canada.

"You speak of me as a 'Socialist orator.' I don't know whether I ought to mind being called this or not. But there are Socialists and Socialists. Let me say that I am absolutely opposed to the Socialist party in the United States and in Canada on the question of the war. I have been a hearty supporter of the allied cause.

"Further, I must demur to Mr. Evans's statement as to the relation of Joseph Smith to polygamy. Mr. Evans has no evidence as to this at the present time which was not available to him at the time of his controversy last year with the Reverend J. A. McKenzie, of this city, when he stoutly denied that Joseph Smith either taught or practiced polygamy.

"Then there is no foundation for the sinister interpretation which Mr. Evans puts upon the order of Enoch questionnaire. It is simply directed to ascertaining the financial and general social situation of members of the church who are contemplating a change of residence, with a view to assisting them in locating and securing employment. Answers to it are not obligatory.

"I want to point out, further, that the reasons given by Mr. Evans, at the time of his resignation, for leaving the church, did not include those now adduced by him in his interview in The Star Weekly.

"With regard to Mr. Evans's challenge to President F. M. Smith, he has asked Mr. Smith to defend certain propositions which the latter does not believe in and could not support. Moreover, Mr. Smith cannot afford to give the time to meeting him in a debate. But if Mr. Evans is still desirous of a debate I hold an accredited authorization on behalf of the church to act as its representative in the matter."

Mr. Williams expressed himself as very appreciative of The Star Weekly's printing in the news section a correction of certain misstatements of fact in the article on Mormonism. He said it indicated an intention to deal fairly with the subject and that our willingness to give publicity to the present criticisms was another indication of that sense of fairness.

A number of letters have been received based on the assumption that polygamy was imputed to the members of the Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints. This interpretation is due to a careless reading of the article in question, which distinctly pointed out that polygamy is a doctrine of the Utah Mormons alone although it is not practiced openly.

The following paragraph is reprinted from last week's article:

"The other section, known as the Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints, has never countenanced polygamy, and, in fact, has always stoutly maintained that Joseph Smith the first was a monogamist and enjoined monogamy on his followers, and that those who are known as 'the Utah Mormons' are apostates. Brigham Young is said by them to have been the institutor of polygamy."

[He was also interviewed by a reporter for the Toronto Sunday World for December 15, 1918]:

LATTER DAY SAINTS FULLY ORTHODOX

MINISTER TOM WILLIAMS DECLARES COMMITMENT TO CHRISTIAN MORAL CODE

"We are unreservedly committed to the moral and ethical code of Jesus Christ," said Tom Williams, minister of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, to a reporter of The Toronto World. "Our church is distinctively orthodox. The Old and New Testaments are our standard of evidence in church polity and doctrine. Jesus Christ is our ideal."

In response to a query as to the origin and history of the Reorganized Church, Mr. Williams said:

"Our church has no connection with the Mormon church in Utah. We do not recognize the term 'Mormon' as applied to our organization. We have vigorously and persistently opposed those tenets recognized the world over as applicable to the Utah church. I refer to polygamy, Adam-god worship, and blood atonement.

NOT POLYGAMOUS

"The Federal courts of the United States have ruled that we have no connection either in doctrine or organization, or any other way with the Mormon church. The one dominant teaching of the church from its inception to the present has been that 'all men are bound to sustain and uphold the respective governments in which they reside, while protected in their inherent and inalienable rights by the laws of such governments.' Also, 'He that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land.' Again, 'Marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife. . . . Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else: and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her shall deny the faith.'" These quotations are from the organic laws of the church.

In response to a question as to why Mr. Evans left the Reorganized Church, Mr. Williams said: "A committee of the general officers of the church was sent to Toronto to investigate certain irregularities in Bishop Evans's procedure. Before the investigation had hardly commenced, Mr. Evans resigned, since which time the whole matter has been transferred to the civil courts in an action wherein the general church is plaintiff, and Mr. Evans defendant. In view of this fact we are content to permit the courts of the land to settle the differences growing out of Mr. Evans's relation with the church."

RESPECT FOR OPINIONS

Mr. Williams continued: "We have no fight with any of our coreligionists. We have no desire to belittle the religious purpose of our fellows. Every honest man's religion is sacred to me. The dishonest man has no religion worth while. There is some good in every man, and in nearly every church. It is our purpose to discover and cultivate the good and seek, so far as possible, to effect union and harmony.

"The Mormon church was organized by Brigham Young in 1846, after his apostasy from the original church, which was organized by Joseph Smith in 1830. The Joseph F. Smith who recently died in Utah was president of the Mormon church. He had no connection with the Reorganized Church."

[This will help to clear up the misunderstanding in the minds of some. The fairness of the Toronto newspapers is greatly appreciated.]

A Daughter's Tribute

'Tis the Christmas season, when the earth is singing its joy songs, and yet in my heart lies a deep, new grief. For me the year opened with the greatest loss of my life—the passing of my dear husband, and now, near its close, we have laid our dear little mother away to rest. I know she longed to be taken "home," but we miss her so much—she was such a good mother!

Sitting here in her little home, I recall so many beautiful things about her life and character. For nearly fifty years her home was open to her friends and those who needed her—such a hospitable place! No matter whether she had much or little, the chance guest was asked to stay. "What is good enough for us all the time, is good enough for others once in a while, and a hearty welcome is more than food," she would reply to any protest from other members of the family, who might urge that there had been no proper preparation for "company." And there always was that welcome, without hurry or worry, or the strain which often accompanies the preparing of "company" meals.

She was such an untiring church and Sunday school member. Even in those busy earlier years she told mothers: "Don't send your children to Sunday school—take them there! Set the example yourself!" When Sunday morning came at our home there was a simple breakfast and the gentle counsel, "Come, let's get to Sunday school on time!" Never did you hear, "Now, hurry and go to Sunday school!" I believe the last time she was able to attend Sunday school here in Lamoni was just on or just after her eight-third birthday. She had always been such a careful little mother, and would never spend money on herself, so, not knowing any particular thing she wanted, I had sent her five dollars for her birthday gift with the message that she "must get something she wanted but would not spare the money to buy." When she wrote me later about her birthday she said: "I got the doctor to take me to Sunday school; it was Children's Day, and when they took up the collection, I just put the five dollars in there, and told them it was a donation from a great-grandmother!" That was only a sample of how she loved the Sunday school work, and also of her unselfishness.

She was ever more of a companion to us girls than a parent aloof. We were always so glad to have her go with us to parties or amusements for she was the very best "chum" three girls ever had. Her sympathy was so broad, and her judgments so clear and kind, we could always go to her with every difficulty and feel sure of wise and loving counsel.

Some of the mottoes with which she used to express her faith and trust were: "Hope on—hope ever"; "Don't cross the bridge before you, until the bridge you reach"; "There is hope shining brightly before us"; "Hope, blessed hope! What would the world be without it!" "The darkest cloud has ever a silver lining."

And this dark cloud of separation to me has a "silver lining" in remembering the great blessing which has been mine—that of having had my life linked to two such great and noble souls as those of my husband and my mother!

Fathers of Men

(After reading the little poem entitled "Mothers of men" in these columns for November 13, I could not refrain from writing something on the other side of the question. I have not such good language as that used in the article referred to—it just isn't in me; however, I feel deeply upon the question, and ask you to be kind to my shortcomings.—E. L. A.)

I read in your pages, that "mothers of men"
Were wholly to blame for this war that has been!
'Tis sad, very sad, I am sure—if it's true.
Enough to make all of the universe blue!
Fathers of men, "that the world was aflame,
War-swept, and passion-ment, take you no blame!
You who were destined to 'rule' and to sway—
Answer me: how have you modeled your clay?"

The mothers gave birth to the babes, it is true,
And if they lived through it, took care of them, too.
An "if" well put in, for each year, we are told,
Statistical truth this fact does unfold,
That thousands do perish from this cause alone,
An army unnoticed, and almost unknown!
But were we any more to blame for the plan
You term "recreated," pray tell, than the man?
Were either sex sent here to worship the other—
Oh, what a frail god—for father or mother!
We care for the children, their infancy through,
The tasks disagreeable alone ours to do.
We teach them to walk, and to say a few words,
But never the art to use guns, spears, or swords!

We teach that tobacco and whisky are wrong,
But the "lord of the household" oft swaggers along,
And teaches, by example, the contrary way!
And, since father's their idol, the evil holds sway!
That boys should not fight, is taught by the mothers,
But the power to rule is given to others;
And rulers of nations—men—holding sway,
Command them to war—what can "mere women" say?
As mothers we'll take our just share of blame;
We haven't been perfect, we confess it with shame;
But just ask the soldiers who taught them to chew,
Who taught them to smoke, curse, and drink, too?
Who taught them to murder their brother in war,
Or that women and fools were all on a par?
Who taught them that women's word shouldn't be heeded,
That women were just to help men-folks when needed?
When this war was started, were we given the right
To say if the children we'd nourished should fight?

Ah, had it been left to the boy and his mother,
Arbitration would have settled it—one way or another!
So you'll have to look deeper, and farther, and then
Place a part of the blame on the "fathers of men"!

Training Little Children

---

CHILDREN NEED TO PLAY WITH OTHER CHILDREN

Allow your child to have company and playmates as often as you can. When possible, have playmates near his own age. Naturally out of this social intercourse will spring valuable lessons in courtesy, generosity, and patience. Always be fair in settling disputes among children. Do not favor your own child's story entirely, for though he may never have told an untruth there is always the possibility of a sliding from grace. Sometimes it is very difficult to get a correct account from excited children. If the quarrel is over a doll or a train of cars and you cannot discover who is in the right, take away the toy, remarking quietly that if they can't play nicely with it they will have to do without it.

I do not think that there is a better opportunity than in play to teach lessons in honesty; play is so vital a part of child life and the child takes his play so seriously. In teaching a child to be honest in word and action the parents first must be honest in all their dealings with the child. Never make a promise that you cannot keep, or that you do not intend to keep. For the same reason never threaten, "Son, if you do that again, I'll spank you," for if he does it again you will have to spank him or in a short time he will come to laugh at your authority.

Do not confuse the workings of an imaginative brain as evidences of untruthfulness, but enter into the spirit of the "make-believe." In the case of the little tot who says, "Muy-ver, I went out in the garden and I saw some Indians," enter into the spirit of the play and say, "Just make-believe Indians, dear, you mean?"

My little two-year-old daughter quite startled me one day by insisting she saw lions and tigers and great big elephants out in the yard. She was kneeling on a chair looking out, so I came at once to the window, not expecting to see a zoo in the yard, but wondering what there was there to make her imagine such things. There was nothing at all in sight but grass and flowers, so after thinking it over for a second I said in reply, "Oh, yes, I see some monkeys, too—just make-believe, like yours." She looked up at me and laughed delightedly, and at once we were entered upon a new game.

Cheerful obedience is another lesson to be learned from play. A child should not cry or fuss when mother says, "Time to put up your toys," or "Come to me, dear, I want to dress you." The average parents demand obedience, but usually exercise their authority only at such times as disobedience means inconvenience to the parents themselves. It is the teaching of constant obedience which requires the greatest patience and tact in all child-training. You cannot let your vigilance flag for one moment, nor can you allow an offense to pass unnoticed.

This brings up the question of punishments. I have said that children are naturally sociable. An effective form of punishment for most offenses, therefore, is isolation from the rest of the family, and no reinstating to favor until pardon has been asked and given. Make your punishment fit the offense. Children are so active that to make them sit still on a chair alone is a sufficient punishment for rudeness, whining, and the like. The child who persists in touching things which are not his to touch can be punished by having his hands tied behind his back. I used this form of punishment or "cure" successfully in breaking the nail-biting habit also.—Mrs. Lenore R. Ranus, in bulletin of the United States Bureau of Education.

Service Notes

SERIES FIVE

To-day our minds are with the renowned men who are gathered around the tables in Versailles and engaged in considering the conditions upon which the terms of peace may be constructed. The issues of these meetings are filled with tremendous import to the world of to-day and also of the future. Surely all Christian people will make special prayers both privately and in public that God will graciously guide and direct these men in their colossal tasks and bring from out of their deliberations better and happier conditions for this sorely stricken world.

Since the signing of the armistice, Bolshevism has reared its ugly and sinister power throughout the central European countries, and the news of Germany's dreadful condition is only matched by the continued reports of Russia's bloody misery. Indeed, it would seem that the whole world is in a state of restlessness and only the foolish or unthinking would allow fatuous thoughts of immediate peace and prosperity to allure them away from a consideration of the grave menace under which we still suffer as a result of the four years' debauchery in war. More than ever the steadying influence of religion is needed to give vision and faith and hope, so that the chaos with which the word's statesmen are now grappling shall not fill them with despair, and also enable them properly to administer justice, without prejudice, and punishment without revenge, so that victims and wrongdoers alike may have their just deserts. We shall stand in eager expectation until the news of the results of the peace congress is made public. In spite of the usual rumors and sensational stories with which some newspapers regale their too credulous readers as to the existing differences between the allied powers over details and items of the general plan, we may take President Wilson's wonderful reception in France, Britain, and Italy as being a very favorable augury. There can be little doubt but what the leaders of thought and action in all of these countries are agreed as to the main lines of progress and when they meet in intimate association for the arrangement of details, the spirit of conciliation will move all to seek the common basis of agreement in each item. At least it is encouraging to remind ourselves that the "Big Four," as the leading countries have been called, are truly democratic and have an abiding appreciation of the principles upon which democracy alone can stand. Finally, God is interested in this matter, and the evolutionary course of the racial progress has developed in a philosophic study of history the assurance "that the ways of God with men are right."

Among various rumors we hear of the discontentment of the soldiers who, now that the war is over, are anxious to go back into civilian life, and the slowness with which demobilization and reabsorption are being accomplished is causing serious complications in some places. There can be no doubt but what this problem is very serious. To maintain great armies of jobless soldiery would indeed be a menace, the like of which has been seen in Europe before, but we cannot think that such a spectacle will be repeated, and while every precaution will no doubt be taken to assure the return to civilian life of the soldiers, it must not be forgotten that Germany has still a great army and the peace for which all are earnestly hoping is not yet secured. Mr. Lloyd-George advises that at least the British soldiers exercise patience and not risk losing by any unwise impatience in a few weeks now, what has taken these long and cruel years to gain.

However, our hearts are gladdened by the knowledge that many thousands of our American troops are being returned and only those absolutely necessary for policing purposes are being retained abroad. The return of the navy was a great event, and the welcome given was well-deserved.

From out of the turmoil of the swiftly moving events of the past few weeks we have collected several scraps of information concerning the boys and girls in the service, from which we present the following items:

From overseas we have the news that Lieutenant Chester Young is with the 3d Division, and is in Germany.

Doctor A. W. Teel, ranking captain, is also with the American Expeditionary Force in France.

Vere Rogers, of Salt Lake City, Utah, a grandson of Sister Hudson whose death we noted recently, and a brother of Keith Rogers at present stationed at Fort Lyons, Colorado, has been in several engagements and come through safely without any damage. He has been promoted to second lieutenant.

Joseph B. Tordoff, of Berkeley, California, of the 143d Field Artillery, is home from France and is now at the Presidio.

Roy Hardy, of Stockton, was with the same battery, and is also home.

Orlo Backer, of Los Angeles, who is with the Naval Hospital Corps, stationed at Mare Island, was home on furlough for Christmas and has returned to duty hoping to be discharged soon.

Sister Ethel Hanson, of Independence, Missouri, who is in France as a nurse, is in hospital with scarlet fever, so we learned from her brother, Paul M. Hanson. We wish her speedy recovery.

We received a very interesting letter from Miss Mary Wise from Rouen, France, dated November 18, in which she gives some interesting sidelights on the excitement which followed the signing of the armistice. Rouen was filled with "Tommys, Aussies, Canadians, and Yanks" who went through the narrow, winding streets of the famous old city cheering and yelling in their wild enthusiasm. She is hoping that the camp she is with will be one of the first to be evacuated. She mentions having heard from George Green, of Independence, Missouri, who said that he had not seen anyone from home, and adds Sister Wise: "Neither have I." Sister Wise will be remembered as the superintendent of nurses at the Sanitarium some three or four years ago.

We also had a letter from Frank Ballantyne who writes following the signing of the armistice: "It seems to be very comfortable to lie down at night and not have shells whizzing over." He is now in Belgium and has witnessed some of the great destruction caused by the heavy shelling. He was feeling fine and in good health.

In a letter from Keith Rogers, of Salt Lake City, Utah, following the armistice, he says: "Although as men we rejoice and are thankful because peace has been made possible, I believe that we cannot sense the inexpressible joy and thankfulness of the mothers of the world brought to them by these glad tidings. This was the first thought which came to me—of mother, because I know that although she has ever been brave and cheerful, always writing her boys cheerful and encouraging letters, the heavy burden and worry and fear of what might happen has weighed upon her heart constantly." This mother is a widow and her two boys are both in the service, one in France.

Brother Rogers also adds: "Now that the war is over I am anxious to get out of the service and get back home, where I can be of more help to the church and prepare myself for some department of the church work." His experiences of the past year have strengthened his faith in the divinity of the latter-day message.

From Brother T. J. Elliott, of the Kansas City Central, I had the following item: "We had our service flag dedication last Sunday night. There were 38 stars represented on the Central Branch service flag; two gold stars signifying that two members had paid the supreme sacrifice, two silver indicating that number wounded in battle. The dead are Clarence Becker and Stephen Yancy."

In a recent letter from G. W. Leggott, of Manchester, England, he says: "From the Northeast Manchester Branch they have had more than twenty young men who have been on the battle front; not one lost his life, though some have lost limbs and others have been severely wounded and others have been sick. An effort was being made to raise enough for presents for these soldiers for Christmas and we were hoping to raise twenty pounds ($100) for this purpose."

In a recent letter from R. C. Russell, who responded to a request to write to some of the boys, he says: "I assure you it is a pleasure to be able to do some little thing along this line of encouraging the boys, and I would gladly have worked on the job all summer had I known of services being required. However, as it was I had three boys on my list before getting your list." He rejoices that the terrible struggle is over, but is fearful of the dangers of Bolshevism and the I. W. W's.

Last week we received news of the serious illness of Warren Best, of the Navy, who was in the hospital at Mare Island. Brother G. J. Waller and myself went up there last Thursday and got on the island to administer to him. While there we also administered to another sailor who was not a member of any church but had recently become a Christian and was suffering severely with empyemia. He requested administration also.

On the honor list of this series will be found the name of George Daley, of Exeter, California, who died in Siberia. His body was shipped to his home town where he was buried. Hortense Wind, who was chief dietitian at the naval station, Norfolk, Virginia, and was promoted to the rank of first lieutenant, died December 11, of influenza and pneumonia. She was given an officer's burial at her home in Council Bluffs, Iowa. This young girl gave her life as heroically for her country as though she had died upon the battlefield, for she wore herself completely out by caring for the boys who came down with the awful epidemic by hundreds.

Glenn Dahlem, who was a grandson of Elder E. J. Good-enough, was killed in action August 3. This young man who was a corporal had won the esteem of all who knew him, and on the news of his death being received, the Governor of Illinois sent the following letter to Mrs. Harry Miller, of Morris, Illinois: "I have learned with deep regret that Corporal Glenn G. Dahlem was recently killed in action and I want to extend to you and other members of his family my heartfelt sympathy in the loss you have sustained. It must be some consolation to you, however, to know that he died as a brave soldier should die and that he gave his life in as sacred a cause as the world has ever known. Illinois feels a great pride in the supreme sacrifice he has made for humanity." This boy's death fulfilled the wish he had expressed: that by doing so "a comrade may return to his mother's outstretched arms and behold his own mother's tear-dried face."

On Tuesday last we were called to Tulare to officiate at the funeral of Roy True Bedford who had returned from overseas December 16, and had written to his mother that while he was not feeling well he hoped to be with them at home in a few days. Death, however, claimed him on Christmas Day, as a result of pneumonia. At the funeral a large crowd of people paid the last tribute of respect, and many soldiers were also present, besides the high school cadets. At the grave side the final rites, including the several rounds of firing and the subdued bugling of the "last post," were observed.

On Sunday, January 12, in Los Angeles, the morning service was devoted to a memorial of James Harold Gimblett, who had enlisted with the 91st Division of the American Expeditionary Forces, and had been wounded in the sanguinary battle of Argonne Forest. His death occurred on October 6, and he was buried "Somewhere in France." The service was in charge of Brethren D. E. Dowker and G. H. Wixom, the sermon being preached by J. W. Rushton. Appropriate music, instrumental and vocal, was rendered by the choir, Sister Viola Bogue, and Dorothy Rushton. The service was graced by the presence of a number of soldiers from Camp Arcadia, Lieutenant Johnson of the Royal Flying Corps, Canada, and James Bleuett, representing the Marines, and four of the Civil War Veterans in charge of Captain C. A. Phelps of the Stanton Post. Will Swain, of Ontario, recently from overseas, attached the star of gold upon the service flag. A detachment of fourteen employees of Ralph's Grocery Company also paid tribute to the memory of Brother Gimblett, who had been employed by this firm prior to his enlistment.

I am in receipt of a letter from Professor George N. Briggs, of Graceland College, who advises me of the special effort being made by the college to interest discharged soldiers in the higher education. The universities and colleges of the country are going to offer special inducements to them in the way of matriculation and he believes that a number of our church boys who have served the country in this time of crisis will be glad to take advantage of this opportunity. We call special attention to the article which has appeared in the SAINTS' HERALD and Zion's Ensign from his pen. Personally, we shall be glad to hear from any of the boys who have been in service upon this matter, and will do all we can to assist them in securing the facilities offered.

ROLL OF HONOR

Two Reports of the Baker-Roberts Debate

[The following account was sent us by Brother Guthrie, and by way of contrast we append a reprint from the Apostolic Review, of January 21, concerning the same event. Allusion is made in our editorial department to the differences.—EDITORS.]

During the late winter of last year Brethren W. A. Smith and A. M. Baker held two very interesting meetings, one in the town of Nebo, Illinois, and the other at a schoolhouse about five miles east. The success of the meetings seemed to arouse the ire of some of the divines of the so-called Church of Christ, whereupon they challenged our brethren for a debate.

After considerable discussion as to propositions, four were agreed upon: The two respective church propositions, one on the Book of Mormon, and another on the sixty-six books of the Bible being the complete will of God to man, or will God reveal any more to man than there is revealed in the King James translation?

Fourteen sessions were held, beginning on the evening of December 31 and ending January 6. Our cause suffered no loss, but on the contrary, gained. I acted as moderator for Brother Baker, with the exception of the first night, when, being unable to go, my brother Robert, a Baptist minister, acted for me.

The Roberts' stock in trade was the same old rehash of threadbare anti-Mormon epithets and foul, malicious phraseology. The following remarks were heard from nonmembers: "Baker sure put it to him," "Baker took the hide off Roberts." One of the Campbellite preachers said to me that he didn't approve at all of the methods of Roberts, that the main thing was "Old Joe," "polygamy," etc. "The facts are, we cannot prove he was a polygamist," he said. One Baptist minister said to me that every Baptist he had heard said our man had bested Roberts.

The abuse of the man when pretending to affirm his propositions was as great as when he was supposed to be answering arguments. We wondered if it were possible for the average listener to be sure when the propositions were changed from affirmative to negative. When Brother Baker would show up his methods, Roberts would whine and say Baker was attacking him personally. In one of his speeches on the so-called Church of Christ propositions I kept account of such words as the following: "Old Joe, impostor, 'you (Baker) don't know,' liar, thief, Mormons, Mormonism, ignorant, reverend from hell, skunk, immorality, cry baby, tramps, drunkard, murderer, impostor, infidel, false Brighamism, dishonest trickery." These words were used as nouns and adjectives concerning Joseph Smith and our church interchangeably forty-nine times in one speech. Multiply this number by the twenty-eight speeches he had and you have the approximate number of epithets used by the man in the name of "true" religion.

Roberts predicted we would never establish a church at Nebo, that people would not even honor us by their presence, etc.

The main points of the opposition were well met by Brother Baker. He is a student and well-informed as to our books and the books of the opposing church as well. Some amusing things happened. Once Brother Baker aroused such a laugh that Roberts commented: "Baker, these people are my friends and are merely making fun of you and not laughing at anything smart you said." But the people of Nebo still think for themselves.

Mr. Roberts persisted in challenging Baker to prove that Joseph Smith was a prophet. Brother Baker would answer that if Roberts would affirm that Alexander Campbell was a true servant of God, and (as Roberts himself had already said in the Octographic Review) organized the first local congregation this side of the Dark Ages and cleansed the sanctuary, he would affirm Joseph Smith a prophet. Roberts would storm and call Baker a coward. Brother Baker would continue to come back strongly, and finally told Roberts that he (Brother Baker) never did run from a proposition, but that Roberts did run from F. M. Slover at Bel-lair, and dared him to deny it.

"I deny it," said Roberts.

Brother Baker then produced sworn statements signed by several outsiders, that Roberts did quit a debate with F. M. Slover before it was half out. It was as a bomb in the camp, and immediately there went up a shower of "Mormon lies," "forged," and many, many bad things.

The confusion became so great and the disorder so rampant that I suggested to the Campbellite moderator that if he had any respect for his own house he quell the rabble and place Brother Baker and I under arrest, as we were anxious to meet it in court. A dozen voices rang out: "That's fair," "that's what I say," etc. However, we have not been arrested yet.

Roberts and his moderator offered Brother Baker ten dollars if he would affirm for three days that Joseph Smith was a prophet. Brother Baker and I then offered him twenty dollars if he would affirm Alexander Campbell as a servant of God and cleanser of the tabernacle.

One member of the Church of Christ said the only way he could explain the situation was that they were beaten and found the only thing they could do was to get angry.

I recently visited Mount Vernon on business. Through the letters in the HERALD and Ensign I learned that there were Saints in the city. We looked them up and stayed over Sunday, preaching for them at 11 a. m. and 7.30 p. m. at the request of Brother F. S. Sawley, who is located there at present as a missionary. They hold services at South Fourth and Tabor Streets. I found them a lively, energetic little band of respected Saints and willing with their means and otherwise to open the work in Mount Vernon. It is a place of near seventeen thousand people and quite an important little city. Brother Sawley thinks, and I agree with him, that the time is opportune for a good work there. It is worthy of consideration in the appointments, for it is a fine objective point.

REPORT OF PUBLIC DEBATE WITH MORMON

HAMBURG, ILLINOIS, January 8.—The debate between Brother W. G. Roberts and A. M. Baker (Mormon) came to a close Monday afternoon after continuing for six days with two sessions each day. It was held in the Church of Christ meetinghouse at Nebo. During the first part of the debate our crowds were small on the account of extremely bad weather, but before it came to a close the house was not large enough to accommodate all that came. Mr. Baker is a good speaker, and his people consider him among their best debaters. He spends a good part of his time talking about his opponent, does everything he can to prejudice the people's minds against him. But it did not profit him any at Nebo; every argument he presented was answered by Brother Roberts, though he (Baker) spent very little of his time in answering the arguments presented by Brother Roberts. I enjoyed this debate as well as any I ever attended. I am sure it did a great deal of good. Brother Roberts did his work well; his arguments were plain enough for all to understand and too strong for anyone to destroy. That is why Baker gave them such a good letting alone. Most of the Mormons say the reason they don't like to debate Brother Roberts is because he is "too abusive," but that is just an excuse they hide behind. I have never heard any debater treat his opponent with any more fairness than Brother Roberts did Mr. Baker. We did all we could to get Mr. Baker to affirm that Joe Smith was a true prophet of God, but he refused to do so! And he just the same as said he never expected to meet Brother Roberts in another debate.

The Mormons have tried for some time to establish their work in Nebo, but I think they will waste their time in trying it from now on. Many said they never knew what the Mormons believed until they heard the debate, and now, understanding it, they will never encourage it again.

People from the following congregations attended: Farmers Ridge, Rock Hill, Strout, Bee Creek, Old Pearl, Pearl, Panther Creek, Hamburg, Green Pond, and Kane. Brother Roberts and I made our home with Sister Johnson, and she did all she could to make it comfortable for us. After the debate closed we went to Farmers Ridge where Brother Roberts preached a good discourse to almost a full house.—J. C. Roady.

Independence Items

On January 12 the Sunday school assembled after the usual early prayer meeting, and following this there hustled a large crowd to all the available seats in the upper room and galleries for the morning church service was to be an exceptionally important one.

Service flags decorated the rostrum and there had been announced a memorial service in honor of our three noble soldier boys, Harvey E. Gold, Myron W. Morgan, and Lewis Calvin Cook, who had made the supreme sacrifice for freedom, liberty, and humanity in the world war in France.

Sergeant Roberts, who is now in America, was present, having returned severely wounded from the battlefield. In the absence of Brother W. W. Smith, who was quite ill, J. August Koehler delivered the address, and a large congregation together with the home guard were attentive listeners.

This was more than a patriotic speech, for many eyes were suffused with tears while tender, yet earnest and forceful words were spoken in honor of the dead.

"There is even now," said the brother, "a call to a great missionary and economic work, and our Prophet has said, 'Let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.'"

Brother Koehler, adding weight to his appeal, said: "Are we ready to put behind us our past traditions, customs, and inequalities while we enter into the new field of righteousness and reconstruction? In the final call of the redemption of mankind, there must be no lack. These boys have begun the work and more sacrifices must yet be made as the issues of life and death are before us."

A noted churchman has lately expressed the same thought in these words: "America can only be safe when humanity is safe. The Monroe Doctrine must give place to the Sermon on the Mount: a serious problem is before the churches of America."

It takes only a glance at the columns of our church papers to see the intense interest that is taken by our brothers and sisters in the problem of reconstruction, and we may mention the late articles written by Sister Anderson, Brother Yates, and Brother James E. Smith.

We do indeed feel thankful to see on every hand evidences of a clearer vision by the Saints.

Our soldier boys are prayerful and in all their conflicts have looked to our heavenly Father for help in the time of trouble: soldiers and civilians alike are seeing the need of consecration of men and women in the great work of showing the bleeding world the truth, and telling the thrilling story of the angel's message.

The feeling of peace within, and our good will to men without the fold, prompts us to often seek the Lord in prayer; and we believe our Father is pleased to view the written prayers of his children.

There is very little sickness in our midst; the study classes are moving forward; the children continue at school, the Saints do not fail to assemble for worship.

Let us rejoice in the word of the Lord for he has truly said: "Zion shall flourish, and the glory of the Lord shall be upon her, and she shall be an ensign unto the people, and there shall come unto her out of every nation under heaven."

ABBIE A. HORTON.

From the Lamoni Branch

One of the interesting developments from the division of labor decided on at the recent branch business meeting is the apportionment of the work of the deacons. While it is largely a new arrangement, the following has been decided on for the present: Four general departments of branch work, in charge of four deacons most adapted to that class of work. The outline includes:

Financial (collecting and disbursing of all branch funds), in charge of A. Otis White.

Custody (of church buildings), Charles F. Church.

Ushering and decorum, Leslie S. Wight.

Relief, C. E. Blair.

Some of these men will act in a dual capacity, being the deacon in one of the districts of the town as well as responsible for a department of work. A shortage of men holding this office necessitates this at the present time.

An enthusiastic meeting of the men of the priesthood appointed to work in the districts for the ensuing six months was held recently, and seemed to be indicative of an excellent year's work for the branch.

The Religio is getting nicely into action now and promises very much. While it has usually conformed to custom and flourished for a period under a new administration, we are all hopeful that we may see a continuance of the good work and a wide extension of its influence.

Ward prayer meetings are being held in the four wards of the town each Wednesday evening, in addition to a young people's meeting at the high school building and a college meeting the same evening. The attendance is not quite all that could be desired, but the total of all six is always very much more than the highest number found at the meetings formerly held in the church on Wednesday evenings.

A memorial service in honor of Brother Tru W. Myers, killed in action in France September 26, was held at the church at 2.30 p. m. the 12th. The sermon was by Elder R. V. Hopkins. There are now five gold stars on our big church service flag.

The College Day service, postponed for a long time on account of the influenza ban, was held at 11 a. m. on the 19th. It was a most successful service, the speakers being three young people and a member of the board of trustees. There was appropriate music by the College Glee Club. The value of Graceland College to the young men and young women, the practical and cultural value of an education such as this school gives one, was vividly set forth by Brother Leonard Lea, of California, and Miss Coral Hatcher, of Cooper, Iowa. Brother Frank B. Almond, of Lamoni, spoke ably from the standpoint of an ex-student, while Elder J. F. Garver presented in his inimitable manner some phases of the growth and influence of the institution and its faculty. The offering for college expenses, including all pledges, was $261.25.

The Sunday school class of Elder J. W. Wight recently surprised him with a nocturnal visit, leaving him a large basketful of seasonable bounties as a slight token of their esteem.

Brother W. O. Hands of Kansas City, was here for several days recently, making a survey of the water conditions in behalf of the church. His findings have not been officially announced as yet, though there are hopeful prospects of sufficiently increasing the supply to meet the greatly augmented demands of the town. The laundry is digging a large surface well to supply its needs. E. D. MOORE.

Christmas Offering Roll of Honor

Table with asterisks representing names in the Christmas Offering Roll of Honor.

We now have 234 reports—not including those received this week—and in almost every instance the schools have shown a good gain over last year.

We are getting letters every day asking, "Are we going to get the $100,000?" We cannot definitely say at this time whether we will reach the amount asked for, but indications are that we will "go over the top" and that we will have more than the $100,000.

It seems wonderful, the way God has blessed our good schools and the manner in which he has guided and directed their efforts.

We have some splendid reports for this week and we hope all our good workers will read them—every one. We also have a great many schools to report as being "over the top" who have failed to send us a report, but we have been able, through the kindly cooperation of Brother McGuire's office, to report these schools. Reporting only the name of the school is not so enthralling as when we have a good letter from them telling us of their efforts, but we have the evidence that they are working with us just the same.

Tusla, Oklahoma. Brother A. Z. Rudd reports: "Our school has gone 'over the top.' I think we were 'over the top' in August. Our offering is $604.07, with an average attendance of 46. Our district has gone 'over the top' also, and we hope the goal will be doubled at least for the general church in 1919."

Orange, California. Sister N. Carmichael, superintendent, reports: "Garden Grove Sunday School has gone 'over the top,' even though our school is small and over half our members are not church members."

Sandusky, Michigan. Sister Mary Fetting, secretary, reports: "Although we have been silent and somewhat handicapped with influenza, we are still alive. Our offering for 1918 is $348.49, our membership being 52. With an average of $6.70 per member we feel that we have gone 'over the top.' We still desire to press onward, and pray that our efforts may be crowned with success."

Manteno, Illinois, Deselm Sunday School: "We have reached the $2 mark both in the main school and in the home department. We shall be pleased to receive the diploma for both the main school and the home department. We are glad to say that in this year's offering we have more than doubled that of last year."

Harlan, Iowa. Thomas N. Franklin, superintendent, reports: "We have for some time had enough raised to entitle us to a place on the Honor Roll but have been waiting until we reached our goal before reporting. Last year we raised $100 with an enrollment of 11, which, I believe, gave us third place on the Roll of Honor. This year with a total enrollment of 14 we set our goal for $150. We have succeeded in reaching our goal and have to-day sent draft for $150.03. Trusting that the aggregate of all our offerings may far exceed our most sanguine expectations."

Chatham, Ontario. Verna Moffat, secretary, reports Chatham main school 'way "over the top."

Des Moines, Iowa. Corporal Frank Mussell, secretary, reports: "Our school has passed the $2 mark. Though we have not reached the goal set we are glad to report that we have nearly $500."

Logan, Iowa. Sister Rose Adams, superintendent, although this good school reported early in the campaign we shall report again some of the good enthusiasm that comes from them. "Here we come again with good news. We have gone 'over the top' and all are very happy. We are sending $730.87 to help pay off our church debt. It is really wonderful what we can do when we get into the spirit of this work. I feel that we have been richly blessed here and hope and pray God will continue to remember us with grace and power to do his will."

San Antonio, Texas, Zion's Hope Sunday School. E. L. Henson, superintendent, reports: "We passed the $2 mark in late summer. We have enrollment of 75 and have an offering of $209.25."

Elk Mills, Maryland. Harry Carter, superintendent, reports: "We have a total membership of 60 in main school and 12 in home department, and an offering of $145.53. We hope to reach the $200 mark this year."

Cherokee, Iowa. W. W. Reeder reports: "We set out this year to beat last year's offering, which was $300. We were closed for six weeks on account of influenza, but went 'over the top' with $407 for 1918. Fathers' Day netted $115. The last Sunday we lacked $65 of having $400, and when one of our good brothers told us that he would give $25 of this amount if we would raise the balance, we soon had the money. We hope to see the mark of $100,000 doubled so the work can be pushed in new openings as well as the debt paid. Cherokee is with you in the good work."

Personal Offering. Sister E. M. Blumenschein sends in the following: "We are sending $6 for myself and small son for offering. We do not live near a branch but enjoy the HERALD and Sunday school Quarterlies very much. Hoping we go 'over the top' in the Christmas offering."

Stockport, England. Brother William Worth reports: "Our little Sunday school has contributed £7, 3s, 2d during the year towards the Christmas offering. 22 persons have contributed which makes an average of 6 shilling and 6 pence per member. Of course like every other fund, some have paid much more than others, for all do not get the offering fever to the same degree. I trust the 1918 effort has achieved the amount you are aspiring to." Note: This good school did not quite reach the $2-per-member mark, but the buying power of a dollar is far greater over there, hence we feel they are entitled to be listed on Roll of Honor. They had to close their offering for this year on November 25, so as to get report in.

Akron, Ohio. Ira Kelsey reports: "I am glad to report our Sunday school in Akron went 'over the top' for 1918 offering. Our total offering is $243.17. We pray for the advancement of this good work."

Fairland, Oklahoma. Elmer Hart, secretary: "Our offering is $125.75 which puts us 'over the top.' We are hoping to do much better next year and are already laying our plans to that effect. We will all be disappointed if we do not reach the $100,000."

Grandview, Missouri. In a recent issue this school was reported as having "almost $3 per member." An error crept in here, as the report showed 39 members. We are just advised that this should read 29 members, which will make their offering $3.83 plus. We are glad to make this correction.

Dallas, Texas. D. A. Fuller, superintendent of the district, writes: "I am going to try to make this district a banner district this year, including all the home class members and cradle rolls." (Note: This is what we would like every district superintendent to do, and we earnestly hope and pray for the entire support of all district officers in this good work.)

Detroit, Michigan, Third Detroit Sunday School. R. Fredericks reports: "Our school has 64 members enrolled and we have gone 'over the top' with $136.26. We want to be on the Roll of Honor. We started the offering for 1919 the first Sunday of the year and are looking forward hopefully to do better this year than last."

Onaway, Michigan. Doris Lou Gagie reports: "There are 35 members in our Sunday school and 4 in the cradle roll department. We are sending check for $78."

Deloit, Iowa. Nora Jordan reports: "We had a rally day the first of June and received over $2 per member. We now have over $5 per member. Our enrollment is 50, offering $288.61."

Vancouver, British Columbia. Mamie Pugsley, secretary, reports: "We have a membership of 43 and are sending $104.41 offering."

Warrensburg, Missouri. Mrs. James E. Hall, jr., reports: "We have worked hard, but all seem to have enjoyed it, and we are anxious to see another star added to the Honor Roll. We are sending in a total of $308.51."

Independence, Missouri, Mount Zion Sunday School. Louise Giesch, offering secretary, reports: "Our main school has a per capita of $2.07, our grand total being $2,462.26. A great many classes have worked hard to make a good showing, and we hope to be on the Roll of Honor."

There has been much doubt in the minds of some as to whether we would come near the $100,000 mark this year. Many thought the influenza and the various demands made upon the people of the United States during the past year would interfere with the progress of the offering to such an extent as to cause us to fail to reach the goal, but these people reckoned without considering the good earnest worker's ability to overcome all these hindrances. As we are about ready to mail this report we find that up to date—January 21—we have about $75,000 already in hand, with more coming in every day. Surely this is a rather strong hint that we will pass the $100,000 mark, and surely it is a strong testimony of the faithfulness and resourcefulness of our many enthusiastic workers, and that God in all his wisdom has directed our efforts.

In all the good letters we are receiving there is abundant evidence of the good Spirit, and there seems little doubt but what we will reach the $150,000 goal this year, for all the schools seem to be entering right into this year's service with a vim and will that is bound to put us over the goal we have set.

We have promised you some very definite help this year and we are hopeful that we can send this help to all the schools within the next two weeks.

We are indeed grateful to God for his wonderful blessings and to the good Sunday school workers for their support and cooperation.

Let us continue in the good work with all speed, and always seek God's guidance and blessings.

We would like to receive the good support of all members of the church this year, whether you belong to the Sunday school or not; whether you are isolated, or wherever you may be. Will you not join us in this good work? Let us all help that the debt may be paid and that we may assist the church in its work to better humanity.

Sincerely yours,

ARTHUR W. SMITH,

Second Assistant Superintendent.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, 2903 Sullivan Avenue.

ELK MILLS, MARYLAND, December 16, 1918.

Editors Herald: Last week we had with us Brother Edmund Gleazer of Archibald, Pennsylvania. Those who heard his sermons were indeed edified and strengthened. Some of his texts were: "What lack I yet?" "Where will I spend eternity?" "The gospel and what it consists of," "Authority, or who has the right to officiate," "Seek first the kingdom of God," and "God's last call to the nations." We will be glad to have Brother Gleazer visit us again.

We are pleased that our pastor, Brother Henry Carr, who lives some miles from town, has an auto which is of great assistance to him in his work, as he preaches every Sabbath afternoon in the Jones Methodist Episcopal chapel, several miles from home. It will also give him the opportunity to meet with the Saints here oftener.

We were made sad by the death of little Dorothy Atkinson, who departed this life November 23. The family have the sympathy of the Saints. While it is hard to part from those we love, yet we feel that our loss is her gain.

CORRESPONDENT.

RIVERSIDE, CALIFORNIA, December 24, 1918.

Editors Herald: Many months have elapsed since you have heard from me, but now, might I unburden some of the overweight of my heart's great joys upon your lenient pages? Pages that have brought thrill after thrill of joy to me as I have read them o'er, hearing from those I love from here and there.

I am deeply thankful to be associated with such a company of noble men and women as God has called into this church which is going to stand when all fails.

This beautiful California day, the day before Christmas, my heart meditates and dwells upon God and his good gift of the Christ that we so lovingly commemorate, just now, in verse and praise and gift-giving. And oh! we feel that this Christmastide finds the world and us just a little nearer to Jesus. The world is as ever, slow to come and sit at the Master's feet, and yet "no place in this world so holy, no place in this world so sweet."

We are seeking to do something in this most beautiful and noted city of Riverside, having distributed literature from house to house and meeting with the various peoples at these places of worship in the evenings. Brother Arthur Mills, with a few faithful Saints, came over from San Bernardino a couple of times to prayer service, held at our home. We must say that we feel God had us in mind when he sent our dear pastor to us in San Bernardino, for he is faithfully adorning his profession in the Christ. Those who know Brother and Sister Mills love them.

We have lots of time to work here. The California sun shines much and surely embellishes every growing thing. Being a daughter of the Golden West, I can't help but admire and insert this sweet tribute to California:

"O! California, kind mother of the West,
Enfold upon your golden-flowered breast
A pilgrim wanderer who comes to thee for rest.
I come from where the snow and sleet fall fast,
I come upon the westward breezes cast
To thee, to find a home at last."

I feel too that I must speak in appreciation of T. W. William's and Augustine Dwyer's letters to the HERALD, and which I deem incomparable. And where is R. T. Cooper? We old California friends would like to know something of him. Our district is making good and we entertain highest hopes for the year ahead of us in this part of our Lord's vineyard.

With deep gratitude to God for every past blessing, and with great love for all his workers and a best New Year's greeting to HERALD staff.

BERTIE WISE.

BEAVERTON, MICHIGAN, January 2, 1919.

Editors Herald: It has been made plain to all us Latter Day Saints that the wars and plagues we have read about and wondered in what form they would come, are here; we have just viewed the war that has sent over six million men to their graves from combat as well as thousands of innocent women and children and old men and boys and girls.

Now we see a plague, which is spreading all over the world, claiming its victims by the thousands, with no respect of persons. So we can see that the time is not far off when the Lord will mete out his vengeance on all the wicked and the persecutors of the Saints.

We can see the same condition here in the United States that preceded the destruction of the Nephites. If all of us Saints would closely read the history of the Nephites and Jaredites, we could readily see that it was because of the Lord's blessing them so wonderfully that made them forget who allowed grass to grow to feed their cattle, and the sunshine and rain to ripen their fruit and grain. We see, too, the same secret organizations growing stronger every day, and holding sway and control over almost all of our county and state officers and they themselves, as a rule, belong to some one or more of these organizations.

So we as Saints should not think our lot so hard in life if we do not happen to have all we want, because we can see how much the carnal mind can stand, sometimes from our own experiences and the lessons we learn, and better by reading of the development and passing away of the Nephite generations.

Neither must we look for the Lord to build up Zion in great haste before long, because it may be forty years before the Lord comes to redeem Zion and only the faithful and pure in heart will be able to discern the signs of the times and see that all God does is in perfect order and harmony. We will have plenty of time to do all the good we can, and help make our church shine like it should shine and be what it should be, here on the land of Joseph and blessed above all other lands and churches.

We should remember that our religion is loving and helping each other, having no respect of persons. Moroni, the great general of the Nephites, said that we should cleanse the inner vessel first; when his men were threatened with defeat on account of the contention at home among his own church people. So it is with us, if we are not humble and do what we say we believe, six days in the week and Sunday too, we will not be supporting the men who are sacrificing for the spread of the gospel and many of them have been defeated by the Devil on account of nonsupport of the good lives of the Saints. If our homes were only what they all should be, namely, small churches in good standing, each member loving the other, the world would know then whether we were the true disciples of Christ or not. Let us all try and cleanse the inner vessel first, as Moroni said, so we will not be hypocrites when we go to church.

We are experiencing the happy return of our country and people to pursuits of peace, let us hold our minds firm and true to stand by that helper that has given our country such a victory and repay him for the mercy he has shown our Nation by keeping his commandments better and then our church and country will be what it ought to be.

GLEN INGLERIGHT.

WINNEPEG, MANITOBA, January 3, 1919.

Editors Herald: With the ban lifted regarding holding of meetings we are enjoying the church privileges very much. Yet the disease is far from dead in this place. Very few of the Saints here have had it so far. My husband and myself had it quite severely, Mr. Darcy especially, he developing pleuro-pneumonia. The physicians did not expect him to live. It was impossible to get a nurse, so we were both taken to a hospital where we stayed till well enough to return home.

Sister Ila Ringland died suddenly with heart disease after an illness of six weeks. We miss her much, as she was one of our faithful attendants at the services.

A few of our soldiers have returned from the front and we expect most of them home this year.

It has been hard to get along without a missionary here this year, but many of the Saints have been faithful and have given the local elders their hearty support, for which we enjoy the spirit of peace and good will.

Our Christmas offering is still going up, and the Winnipeg Saints are giving very liberally, being anxious to see that $100,000 realized.

ELIZABETH DARCY.

HONOLULU, TERRITORY OF HAWAII, January 7, 1919.

Editors Herald: It is almost a year since you have heard from me, and this evening after coming home from work, I said to Brother Miller: "I think it would be a good thing to write to the HERALD." He said: "Yes, Brother Clancy, you write. They will be glad to hear from you."

I do enjoy reading the letters of the other Saints and wonder if I should continue to absorb the good things without an effort to contribute.

Brother Miller and I have been keeping bachelor's hall. He is the housekeeper, does all the washing, ironing, house cleaning, and cooking. He is the busiest man I know of in these islands. He is at work from before daylight, often, till late at night. While I write, he is pounding away on his typewriter, and he just asked me what time it was. I told him eight-thirty. "My, eight-thirty and nothing done. I must work late to-night to get caught up," said he.

You know how many things there are to do with prayer meetings, preaching services, visits to the sick, administrations, and other calls. All the time he is working I know he is planning on what he will do to-morrow.

Our branch is in better condition now than I have ever seen it, and also the different auxiliaries. We expect to raise our two dollars per member for the Christmas offering, and as we do not believe in skimping on tithing, this month our tithes have gone over one hundred dollars. On the first Sunday of the month there were one hundred and eighteen at our sacrament service. We are not turning things upside down, but there is a steady, quiet pressure in the work that has been done, that is being felt in this central branch as well as in the missionary work in the suburbs. We are holding twenty meetings a week.

There have been quite a number come into the church through baptism. Our services are all good and spiritual, and let me tell you people over on the mainland that we have the finest and best lot of men in the priesthood of this branch I have ever seen in all my travels around the world for about forty years. They are good, faithful men, diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. And of our sisters, oh, if you sisters over there could only meet these Hawaiian sisters I know you would be pleased with them. I also know they would be pleased to meet you. You would enjoy their hospitality, for they are the most hospitable people I have ever met.

On New Year's Day Elder Miller and myself were invited to a mau at Sister Thompson's house. A mau is a New Year's dinner. There were eighteen at the table, and it was a sight to behold. It was literally loaded with all the good things these dear people know how to provide and eat. There was baked pig, baked on hot stones in the ground and covered with leaves and bagging, with dirt over all. It was surely delicious. Perhaps Brother Miller will describe it more fully later on, for he can use the typewriter and I cannot. When we left in the evening they loaded us down with good things to take home with us.

We think Brother Miller a splendid man who has the interests of the work at heart. He is doing all he can in every way to help them. He is an organizer who knows how to get things done, and the work that is done will not be fully known here till eternity reveal it.

Aloha, from your brother in Christ,
THOMAS CLANCY.

CANAL DOVER, OHIO, January 9, 1919.

Editors Herald: I am daily trying to be of service, and find I cannot be happy unless I make some one else happy first. We as Saints of God above all other people should learn the valuable lesson that in order to be successful we must be constructive rather than destructive. Let us learn to see the good in each other. Too many of us only do this when our friends have passed away.

I am trying to put on the whole armor of God. I want to make a good fight. I want to cling to the rod of iron till death calls me from this life. I have often remarked that a man is not whipped till he quits fighting. I am desirous of being a good fighter till the end. This great latter-day work has it all; there is nothing better. I cannot number all my blessings. I want the church to get out of debt and establish Zion. I want to help spread the gospel throughout the whole world. I feel that I am living in the greatest age of the world. Every Saint should improve each golden moment. I am trying to learn more about my heavenly Father and learn how little I know of myself.

We are the light of the world, but with ignorance we can reflect very little light. It surely is true in latter-day revelation where the statement is made: "The glory of God is intelligence." I so often think of my school days and how little we understood our lessons. I used to repeat these words: "There is no excellence without great labor." Now, after forty years of study and work, I am getting a faint idea of what that meant.

I hope to be able to deliver a series of lectures to the Saints on the "Simplicity of health." I would be glad to correspond with any branch in this State or Pennsylvania.
Yours, a servant,
DOCTOR A. B. KLAR.

NEW LISKEARD, ONTARIO, January 11, 1919.

Editors Herald: The Saints here have been handicapped on account of the recent epidemic about as other branches have. A ban was on all public meetings for six weeks, but lifted the last Sunday in December. A large number of deaths were suffered here. A number of the Saints had it and we are indeed sorry to lose dear Sister Alfred Wallace, who leaves to mourn a husband and five children. Sister Stanley Shields was at the point of death at the same time, but we are thankful the Lord has seen fit to spare her.

Elder John Shields was with us and we are pleased to have the Lord speak to us through him by an unknown tongue. I desire the prayers of the Saints in behalf of my afflicted husband, who has been promised healing if faithful. We have started another year's Christmas offering. This year we sent in $155.20.

In gospel bonds,
NETTIE C. RIBBEL.

SAGINAW, MICHIGAN, January 13, 1919.

Editors Herald: In common with many other places, we have been handicapped by influenza, only holding fifteen branch services in three months. Now everything is in working order and we have been blessed the past week with a visit from Brethren J. A. Gillen and R. C. Russell. The services held seemed to create a new desire in all to press onward. We also enjoyed the fireside talks.

Everything looks favorable for this branch. Brother Thomas Forbes was recently chosen president.

Brother F. S. Brackenbury has been here for a week and has given some valuable aid.

Your sister,
ELIZABETH LOOMIS.

BROCKTON, MASSACHUSETTS, January 13, 1919.

Editors Herald: We are still in the fight. The war is over and the guns have been silenced on the battlefields of France, but in the kingdom of God we must fight on and on, till our course is run, the victory assured, and crown obtained.

We have had the privilege of having with us recently Elder George Robley, holding a series of meetings at the home of Brother and Sister Reynolds. Very good interest was shown. Brother Robley is an able expounder of the Scriptures, and has interested both the atheist and those who are honest in heart and seeking for more light. From this short series of meetings we have noticed good results. For some are taking it seriously, investigating, and coming out to our services. Sister Reynolds needs to be commended for her excellent work in warning her neighbors.

Our Sunday school and Religio are active and doing their bit as auxiliaries of the church.

Our priesthood are all active and keenly alive to their responsibilities, and the Lord is blessing their efforts. The Woman's Auxiliary, presided over by Sister Thayer, has made great progress in helping financially. During the past year the epidemic struck Brockton very hard, but the Saints escaped with few cases and no deaths. Those that called for administration received great relief. So we have great cause to rejoice in that we are serving a God that is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, and believing in a gospel that brings results in the present and now, as well as in eternity.

Editors Herald: A few lines from the southland. Another year has passed away and one of the most eventful years that has gone into the pages of history since our Savior was on earth. The nations of the earth are wondering what will happen this year. The Lord only knows, but we can safely say that the judgments of God will continue to come on the wicked nations of the earth until they bow on their knees and ask the Lord to pardon their sins.

The world is now crying peace, but where is the peace? There is none. Yes, the Lord said thousands of years ago that they would cry peace in the last days and sudden destruction would come on them. That time is here. The angel has come with the gospel; we are in the hour of God's judgments, and let me say to all that may read these few lines, it has only begun.

Then the nations will begin to realize that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and unless this generation repents of its sins and accepts the counsel of God they will go the way all the generations of the past went who rejected his counsel.

We have been visited this year by one of the worst epidemics ever known to this Nation. Indeed, it was a plague on the earth! In my little town we have about three thousand people. We had about six hundred cases of influenza, and about one hundred and twenty deaths. I administered to one hundred and twenty cases. Two out of that number died. I saw some wonderful cases of healing. I administered to Elder Powell's little boy, of Hartshorne, Oklahoma, who had the influenza. There seemed but little hope for life. A few minutes after the administration the fever left him, and the next day the sweet little boy sat up and ate a hearty dinner at the table. Brother Powell is a fine young elder and indeed has a bright future. Yes, the Lord will be with his people if they will only serve him and do all of his commands. If we will all live faithful, with a pure heart and clean hands, the Lord will soon build up Zion, and we will have a place of refuge and a city of safety.

We are nearing a bright day in the last gospel dispensation. Saints, let us live for that day. Yes, that glorious day that all of God's Saints looked for thousands of years ago, will soon be here.

About two years ago I was visited by Brother John A. Roberson, in a vision. I was happy to meet him. We talked about many things pertaining to the gospel. He asked me several questions about his son Wallace. When he bade me good-by, he said he must return to paradise, but the time was near at hand when God's Saints would meet; when there would be no good-bys. So may God bless his work everywhere this year.

Your brother,

E. A. ERWIN.

Editors Herald: For some time I have been suffering from severe mental affliction resulting from physical disorders. At family prayer last evening my husband asked the Lord to direct in my behalf and in our temporal needs. The Spirit of the Lord was poured out upon us to a very great degree and this morning I think I am better. The mental strain is almost removed and I am very thankful. It is my desire to be more faithful and worthy in the future. The following poem is a slight tribute to God for his goodness. My prayers and hopes are for the good of the church.

A SONG OF THANKSGIVING

To the Father of infinite mercy
My spirit in gratitude flies;
For blessings of love and compassion,
For pardon as wide as the skies,
For the message of sweet consolation
Thou bestowest in hours of deep pain.
Dear Lord, in thy great exaltation,
Accept thou my thanks once again.

In the hours of darkness and trouble,
My soul faint with pain and distress,
I turned to my Father's sweet promise
To those who with sorrow are pressed:
Come to me all who are weary with striving
With the sins and temptations of life.
I take pleasure in bearing your burdens
And in giving you rest from the strife.

So my soul in a song of thanksgiving
Shall rise on the wings of the night,
To a morning made bright by his blessing
And my promise to strive to do right;
And the life he has lifted in sorrow
Shall be his to command and control
Till its work on the earth is complete
And he says, "Enter into my fold."

MRS. FRED BALLANTYNE.

[Excerpt from letter to the Presidency]:

JONESPORT, MAINE, January 11, 1919.

On December 28 the board of health notified me that there would be no services held in any public places on Sunday or weekdays until further notice, for they had had reported to them during the week one hundred cases of influenza. I was not much surprised, for I had been called out to several cases to administer and realized that it was spreading.

There have been sixteen deaths in the last two weeks and many cases of influenza. Most of the deaths were caused by pneumonia. I have been called upon to nurse the sick night and day. Somehow, I have been wonderfully blessed, and as a result have been able to help the families that were all stricken at once. The town had to send out an appeal for help and the Red Cross immediately sent us two doctors and four trained nurses.

So it has been exciting times here for a while. I have been nurse night and day, preacher at the funerals, and to-day the undertaker was so busy that he asked me to take charge of a funeral. So to-day I was the undertaker on Beals Island. It has been a hard blow to this little town.

We are still under quarantine and expect to be for another week, at least.

The other four ministers in town, instead of rolling up their sleeves and getting busy, dug themselves in and once in a while came around tapping on the windows inquiring about the sick. And the big joke in town just now is one — minister, who had a sign printed and pasted up on his door that read: "All persons exposed to the flu please keep out." Well, we all stayed out and he stayed in. No faith in God and taking no chances with Mr. Flu. There are thus far seven children who have been left motherless and eight who have been left fatherless. So I have not preached any the last two weeks, except at funerals, but have been very busy administering, nursing, and acting as undertaker pro tem.

Sincerely your brother,

JOHN F. SHEEHY.

The Winter Institutes

For the benefit of those who did not see former notices and for those who do not quite understand this movement, let us again say briefly that the general officers of Religio, Sunday school, Woman's Auxiliary, and Graceland College. the First Presidency approving, have planned to have special institutes conducted by teams of three in every district asking for it in the United States and Canada, provided there are sufficient workers who can and will prepare to take their parts in the engagements booked for their district.

Outlines have been prepared and instruction will be given in all the main activities and departments of the above-mentioned auxiliaries by prepared team workers in three-day institutes at each place, with afternoon classes for ladies, and night classes for everyone who is interested, member or nonmember.

If certain convenient centers can be selected to which workers from several branches can be sent for instruction it is very desirable, and some are so arranging it.

In certain districts the conditions are favorable for only week-end efforts and we are glad to arrange it that way. Several teams will work on that schedule.

Several districts with heavy winter weather have asked for these institutes in the summer beginning in June. Far northern districts take notice. We are able to arrange this also if you have workers who are willing to make the team. For all such workers, the time element is very much in their favor. Let us have the names of volunteers in all such territory at once.

Quite a large number of teams have been nominated and selected, and the institutes are now being held in some of the districts. The influenza epidemic has interfered some, but good L. D. S. pluck will overcome this delay and we shall catch up. Do you wish to be in the procession? With quick action, other districts and schools may yet share in this forward movement.

Write to our routing officer, G. S. Trowbridge, 5032A Devonshire Avenue, Saint Louis, Missouri, giving either nominations for team workers or applications for institute dates. The expenses will be prorated among the points having institutes. The more that apply the less the ex-

Our Departed Ones

WILLIAMS.—Cynthia A. Williams died at Lamoni, Iowa, January 5, 1919, aged 47 years. She leaves husband and all of the 8 children born to them, one son being in the navy, on duty abroad. The 2 oldest daughters live at Independence, Missouri. Services at the residence by H. A. Stebbins.

HENDERSON.—William K. Henderson, aged 61 years, died suddenly of apoplexy, near Davis City, Iowa. His wife, 2 sons, 2 daughters survive him. Was esteemed as an honest man and a worthy citizen. Funeral sermon in Saints' chapel at Davis City, by H. A. Stebbins.

MORRILL.—At the Clarinda, Iowa, hospital for the insane, January 16, 1919, John W. Morrill, aged 66 years, 2 months, and 28 days. Born in McHenry County, Illinois. Lived near Plano, Illinois, for many years. Baptized by his father, Joseph Morrill, in 1875, at Pilot Grove, Illinois. During the last two years of his life, at least, John was mentally diseased. His body was brought to Lamoni for burial. Services at Saints' Home by H. A. Stebbins and L. G. Holloway.

BENNINGTON.—Robert Raymond Bennington, aged 20 years, died December 5, 1918, at the home of his father, Henry Bennington, near Vales Mills, Ohio, from influenza and typhoid fever. A short funeral service held at Saints' church at Vales Mills, and burial in Bowen Cemetery. Many friends mourn his early death.

ARCHIBALD.—At Saint Joseph, Missouri, January 18, 1919, Charlotte Burlington Archibald, wife of Coventry Archibald. Born in Barrhead, Scotland; came to America in 1888; located in Saint Joseph, where she has continued to reside. Baptized August 3, 1890. Nine children were born: 5 sons and 4 daughters, 8 of whom survive her. Also leaves husband, mother, one sister, 2 brothers, and a host of relatives and friends. Was a patient sufferer for years; was a faithful wife and devoted mother. Services at First Branch, Saint Joseph, sermon by R. S. Salyards.

ALTON.—William Irvin Alton, born December 3, 1903, in Chickasaw County, Iowa, was drowned in the Snake River, near Minidoka, Idaho, December 22, 1918. Leaves father, mother, sister, and 3 brothers to mourn his untimely end. Sermon by R. C. Chambers, assisted by J. L. Benson.

PALFREY.—Frederick Palfrey, born of English parents near Newport, South Wales, died at Independence, Missouri, December 27, 1918. The very simple obsequies desired by the family were held at his home on West Walnut Street, Arthur Allen in charge, prayer by Clarence L. Wheaton. The speaker was Frederick M. Smith. Came to America many years ago, going to Wisconsin; thence to Saint Joseph, Missouri; thence to Macon, Missouri, where he lived till about six years ago, when he with his family moved to Independence. He early joined the church. March 23, 1873, he was ordained a teacher. February 7, 1897, ordained an elder. Survived by wife, 2 sons, 3 daughters, and one sister. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

FROM HERE AND THERE

Word from Peter M. Hinds, at Waterloo, Iowa, says that Elder William Sparling was with them for about three weeks in December and greatly helped them with his sermons and fireside talks. The Eastern Iowa conference will be at Waterloo, February 15 and 16, and they would like to have any of the Saints come and bring their hymnals.

Elder John Sheehy, who has in the past been connected with the boy movement of the church, being on the general committee one year, reports that he has recently received his commission as scoutmaster and will soon have a troop. He has twenty-two enrollments in his town of Jonesport, Maine, and would have had more except for the influenza epidemic.

Brother and Sister George Martin, of Herschel, Saskatchewan, request prayers for their son Albert Earl, who met with a serious accident at school, breaking a leg which may have to be amputated. These people are isolated and cannot receive administration.

Sister T. H. Blaylock, of Almo, Kentucky, asks the prayers of the Saints in behalf of herself and children in their isolated and unfortunate condition.

GRACELAND COLLEGE SECOND SEMESTER

Those who are interested should be advised of the fact that the second semester of Graceland College for this year will open on February 10 instead of the regular date as announced in the annual catalogue.

Due to the quarantine situation we have lost some weeks of school, but part of the time lost has already been made up by Saturday sessions and a shorter Christmas vacation, and most of the rest of it will be made up during the course of the year, so that the year's work will close one week later than previously scheduled. Those who are expecting to attend the second semester should be here ready for the opening on February 10.

Full information and catalogue can be secured by writing to the President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

PORT HURON CHURCH DEDICATED

The dedication of the Saints' church at Port Huron, Michigan, occurred on Sunday, the 19th, with appropriate services. Elder William Fligg, of London, Ontario, preached the dedicatory sermon, and the evening sermon was on "The church," by Elder H. L. MacPherson. According to the account in the Times-Herald of that place, when Elder Otto Fetting took charge of the work at that place there were about seventy members in the branch. To-day there are over three hundred members, and the present edifice crowded at each service. An addition is being planned, to cost about $5,000, and funds are being raised for that purpose. The building is at the corner of Verney and Tenth Streets. We join in congratulating the Saints of that place on their spirit of progressiveness.

Brother H. J. Davison says in regard to his recent letter that his suggestion, "Here is a pointer for gospel literature officials to work on," should be attached to the preceding paragraph, meaning it would be a good work for that body to see that the Saints who need such articles as Brother Farrell's (on "Passing the plate," etc.), are supplied with them. A good idea. It would involve the nice discrimination and judgment we like to see exemplified by these workers.

SUCCESSFUL MEETINGS AT PERRY

Brother E. E. Long is holding a series of meetings at Perry, Iowa, with excellent attendance. He gets a sermonet into the Perry Daily Chief each day, which constitutes the only advertising employed. The meetings are the talk of the town. Brother Long says: "We are not making a fight on anyone, but simply putting the truth before them in a plain, unvarnished manner from our viewpoint, with an appeal to their reason and intelligence at the close of the effort." The wholesome character of previous efforts of this kind, and the unity and interest among the local Saints brings about a fruitful situation.

THE DEATH OF THEODORE ROOSEVELT

Our attention has been called to the fact that the death of Theodore Roosevelt on January 6 has not been noted in our columns. This does not arise from any failure to appreciate the man and his work. It arises partly from repeated objection to what might appear to be political reference in our columns, and because space does not at present permit of extensive notes on world happenings. The HERALD is distinctively a religious publication and usually confines its efforts to that field. As citizens we mourn, with the Nation, the passing of our former President.

GOVERNMENT INSURANCE

We learn with much interest that four million men have been insured with the United States Government for a total of nearly thirty-seven billion dollars. This means that nearly all of the men have insured their lives for the maximum amount of ten thousand dollars. Of especial interest is the offer by the Government to continue this insurance in force. It certainly is more advantageous than can be secured in a private company of which we have been advised. But it is given partly by way of remuneration for the effort made by the young men of America, and the sacrifice made by them in the hour of our country's and humanity's need.

The church at Buffalo has issued a small periodical on heavy paper. Church Echoes is its name, and it gives information in a condensed form, how to reach the church, where it is located, the officers of church, Sunday school, and Religio, boys in service, visitors who have helped them, cradle roll, ordinations, added membership, loss by death under the heading "gone home"; with a statement of cost of church, of donations and amount paid on church debt, and a list of things they want each one to do, or to help in doing. Doctor P. L. Weaver, recently ordained an elder, is the president of the branch, and is taking hold with considerable enthusiasm.

WINTER INSTITUTES

The suggestions as to winter institutes, made by Superintendent Wells on another page should be carefully noted by all workers in the auxiliary societies. It is an important venture and should be given careful consideration.

THE CHURCH, THE YOUTH, AND THE RELIGIO

(Address of Frederick M. Smith, delivered at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, September 29, 1918, during the Religio Home Festival. Reported by Mrs. A. Morgan. A reprint from January Autumn Leaves.)

I have been asked to speak this morning on "The church, the youth, and the Religio." This subject is so broad, so far reaching in its effects, that I can journey in almost any direction in regard to the church work and still keep within the confines of the subject.

When the Lord said, I will build my church, he undoubtedly had in mind an aggregation of people that would constitute a social unit rather than a structure of brick and mortar or the church home in which these units may center. This association or institution which he termed the church, living as it did age upon age, would see a succession of members, youth and aged, pass through its portals, units of an aggregation which would be called the church; and hence our church to-day must be understood to include both the old and the young, and if any there be who feel that the work of the church and its chief or prime object is to pander to the tastes of the mind which has perhaps had its ambition chilled by the passing years, and thus is prone to think and meditate upon things which may happen hereafter, I say, if you think that the work of the church is to pander to this class of people alone, I trust you will disabuse your minds of that. For surely any church which expects to live beyond the present generation or the generation in which the church is then existent, must of necessity take into consideration the welfare and interests of the young.

I know, of course, that one of the prime objects, perhaps the prime object of the church, is to foster religion. I may add that it is the development of spirituality and in the fostering of religion that the church finds its work—in the development of spiritual culture. In using the term spiritual culture it probably grated on the ears of none of you, but had I said that its chief function was to educate, many of you might accuse me by saying, "There he goes again, riding his hobby." That is to say, if I appreciate spiritual culture in its broadest significance, that the work of the church is not only to indulge and meditate upon any ideas of how things are, or are to be, or ought to be in the other world, but that we are to take into consideration some of the things that exist here. Learning what are the conditions now, what ought as well as what ought not to be, we should endeavor to estimate most carefully all the forces to-day that are working towards the conditions that shall exist to-morrow, and recognizing them, be able to apply intelligence, inspiration, and work, to directing these forces so that the conditions which shall exist to-morrow shall be in harmony with the principles of the gospel as we recognize them, and hence be assured that they are those forces which are tending toward the ideal conditions that we are prone to dream about and to live for.

If this conception, then, is, briefly as we have put it, a correct one of the work of the church, it means, we must throughout our church organization become actively interested in the young of the church.

Our young! Some of us who recall our youth remember the activities that we were compelled to seek outside the pales of the church and under the direction of others who were not within the church, and we cannot but feel a longing for the time when the church and its representatives will stand for a careful supervision and fostering of all the activities in which the youth are likely to indulge themselves; for some of us remember, perhaps, with keen regret, that in many instances being compelled to go outside church influences to indulge ourselves in the activities that are perfectly legitimate and which youth demands, we found ourselves outside church influences to the extent that our spirituality at times suffered as a consequence. Hence, I say, we cannot but look forward with longing to the time when the youth will never have such a day of regret.

It seems to me that we ought to be interested in the youth of the church for several reasons, among which we will mention just a few. First, because the youth of the church are vitally interested in the objectives of the religion for which the church stands. It is true, the youth may not fully appreciate the importance of these objectives, and hence, perhaps, is disposed to set aside or ignore the very things that will help him to accomplish these objectives. Hence, it becomes a part of the work of the church to arouse the youth to a sense of what these objectives are, and to show the close relation of the objectives of the church as stood for by the older members, and for which the work of the church is instituted and carried on, to those in which the young are vitally interested.

The youth are not conscious of the vitality or the great importance of some of the things which the church stands for so far as it bears upon their interest or well-being, for, in the exuberance of their own vigor and their splendid bodily health they are prone to think only of the present and very near future, and to indulge, perhaps, in those things which would bring immediate pleasure. But sooner or later they become cognizant of these things which older heads are disposed to think about, and which the youth is inclined to think may be but a result of the fear that grows apace with the approach of death. Of course, as we pass the middle point of life, we begin to think more about the end, and, consciously or unconsciously, there does creep into our souls this fear of the end that has been the heritage of mankind. Hence the older people are more prone to think about religion and objectives of the church, for hope in the great beyond brings surcease from the fear of death. A part of the work of the church and the older members should be to arouse within the youth an early sense of the importance of the vital truths for which the church stands. To do so the church and its men must come in immediate contact with the lives and thoughts of the youth. It means that there shall be fostered by the church those things that will arouse within the youth an interest in the objectives of the church, and hence they will be taught, even by their own deductions, the relation and interdependence of the objectives of the church with the interests of life and the activities of their own energies.

We ought to be interested in the young for the very simple reason that they are parts of Zion, and if the institutions for which we stand are to be perpetuated, it necessarily follows that the youth must, sooner or later, be brought into an understanding of the things for which we stand, so that they shall be able to functionize in the way that we have been in carrying on our work.

Biologically it is apparent that unless the youth are interested, or have their interest stimulated in any form of society that society is sooner or later doomed to death, or doomed to an end of its activity; and hence that's a very simple, logical, and yet a very cogent reason why we, as a church, should show interest in the welfare of the youth, and arouse, as reciprocal to that, the interest of the youth of the church.

The third reason following as a natural consequence the one just stated, is that we know that our burdens must, sooner or later, be laid down because of the advance of senility, and the burdens, if carried on, must be taken up by younger persons. In other words, our future welfare as an institution is inextricably wrapped up with the future of our youth, and whether it shall die at our death, or whether it shall flourish, depends upon the interest that the young of to-day have finally developed in the church, and the ambition that there may be engendered within them to carry on the work of their fathers and forefathers; and if this, then, be true, and we cannot but grant it, the young have a tremendous responsibility of preparation for the carrying on of the burdens or taking of them up where we lay them down, and I have faith and confidence in the average youth of the church to believe that when they become cognizant of that, they will be aroused by the exigencies demanding preparations for those burdens when the time comes to assume them. But in order for us to make them realize that there must be begun and carried on a process of education, in its broadest sense. Yes, in the nearly twenty years of my church work I have continuously plead for preparation by education for greater usefulness. I have plead that the members use every energy possible to educate themselves against the coming of a day when there would be thrown upon their shoulders a burden that they cannot carry unless that education or preparation has been had. And if there ever has been a man in this church who has had his position vindicated I have had mine within the last few months. What has been the answer to that appeal, made by your leader, as he believes under the impulses of inspiration, calling upon you for earnest preparation against the coming of that day when the burdens that shall be thrown upon you will be greater than you can carry in your own strength only as you shall have qualified under the inspiration of Almighty God, and the development through your own energies of abilities that God endowed you with. Has that call been heeded as it should? Let the answer be found in the response that we gave to the call of the Government to furnish young men of high school education to enter the Students' Army Training Corps, and let me say that it is with a great degree of sadness that I realize that the failure of all our young men to have reached that standard demanded by the Government not only handicaps us in our response as citizens of the Government, but is bound to handicap us in our response as citizens of the kingdom of God. And what is the remedy? The Government has learned that college-bred men because of their mental training are the ones quickest to solve the new problems that confront them in any undertaking. That's why they are asking these young men to prepare themselves, and assume responsibility as officers in the Army.

We can see it now because it has come home to us. Mothers and fathers who have been indifferent to this matter of education, or have been the first to say "hobby-rider" when I have pleaded for education, are now keenly sensing their error, for the matter has been brought close home.

How much longer are we going to be dilatory? I stated to you some months ago, I don't know whether you all felt it as keenly as I did when I said it, but I want to repeat it, that we have for many years been calling your attention to the repeated instructions given of the Lord, that every individual, especially the young, should make preparation for the coming of greater responsibility. I have been calling, I said, and what's the result? Because of an indifferent response to that call there is now made apparent the necessity to speed up and energize to a degree that we have never energized in the past. One of two things is going to happen to us as far as the church is concerned. You individuals that sooner or later must have to carry responsibilities that the men of the church must sooner or later lay down, either you are going to make preparation for that tremendous activity that will drive you to the very limit of your possibilities, or you will fail, to a large extent, in accomplishing this work. It seems to me that the time has been reached to-day, when every young person ought to feel the importance of that and realize that it is absolutely necessary, by reason of the impress of the principle of inspiration upon us and the voice of God through the leaders of the church to-day, and by reason of the very array of facts in everyday affairs, that there is a need for haste and a greater speeding up than has ever been indulged in in the past.

The chief message that I would like to convey to the young themselves is that every young person particularly must be aroused to the tremendous demands of the hour. The Government, through its officials, has been calling upon the young men of college training and high school training between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one to utilize every opportunity that comes to them to acquire a better education than they have, because, as men of the Government know, as you must know if you will meditate upon the situation, every boy between eighteen and twenty-one who is physically fit must, within a few short months, enter the American Army. It is inevitable. They will be obliged to do it, and you may as well face the facts, and as the Government said, utilize every opportunity that comes to you now between this moment and the hour when you may have to enter the Army, to enter some school and educate yourself at a pace you never have indulged in in the past, because we know that even in such work as war the educated and trained man is the most efficient, and so the Government is calling for that kind of work as a preparation for war. If the Government needs educated men in such works as war, cannot you see how much more important that other call is, and how much more far-reaching? It will demand trained and tried men for the work that will be begun the moment the war ends, the reconstructive work. And that is why we are calling on the young men to prepare, to educate themselves, for we realize that, strenuous as is the activity that must be indulged in by the young man that goes into the trenches, it is not to be compared with the work that must be done when these young men come home again and are mustered out. And the same thing is true of us, we have a great work to do if the church work is to be carried on. It must be carried on, let me repeat, under the disadvantages that come to us by reason of the fact that not only are our young men being drafted into the Army but the Government is calling on others to assist in the various activities of the Government, and it is our duty as citizens to give all the help we can to the Government in which we find ourselves in this very period of stress and trouble. And with it all, the work of the church must be carried on, and after the war, let me repeat what I have said to you before, after the war, comes the opportunity that this church has been looking forward to since its inception, the time when they can demonstrate to a needy world what its philosophy is, and what its social ideals can be made to do in the reformation and the remodeling, if you please, of our social condition. Hence there comes to every young man and every young woman of this church a double call. First the call of the Government to give to that Government all the powers of their being; and the opportunity for still greater work after the war is over, the call of the church to educate themselves and prepare themselves for the day of reconstruction when the objectives of this church will go on at such a rate that the limitations and the strength, mentally and physically, of every individual in the church will be reached, not only because of the activities, but because of the conditions that may be brought upon the world. God will have a tried people, and just as true as God is, so true will it be that the members of this church will be tried as they never have been in the past. And when you see men and women falling out of the church, going down morally and spiritually, then you will know that you have got to pay the more concern as to where your own feet are planted, and where your eyes are directed that your spiritual safety may be assured.

Let me stop here long enough to say that so important is the work of education considered to be by the Government, that they have within the last few months created all through the land what are known as Boards of Instruction, whose duty it is to instruct the registrants and draftees, so they may go into the Army knowing fully what the war purpose of the Government is; what are the activities to perform, what the Government is paying them for. This is only one of the ways in which the Government is trying to educate the youth of this land so they will know what are the responsibilities of the war. I have been asked to serve on the Local Board of Instruction, and this morning I ask that all boys between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one meet at my house on next Tuesday night that I may talk to them on this matter; I mean the boys of the church. I am doing this on my own initiative. The church membership owes a debt of service to the cause to help it, and whatever our ideas on the question of war may be, as citizens of this great Nation, if we are Americans, or citizens of other nations, if we be with the allied nations, we have responsibilities as citizens to perform; and never has there been a war, as it appears to me, when the issues are clearer cut or the ideals have been of a higher character than those of the present war.

Besides this, we, as church members, owe a debt of service to the church. Let me repeat. Under the disadvantages which we find ourselves now in, with our time and attention, money and resources distributed to a certain extent, and obliged to meet the demands which are made upon us by the Government and Nation, yet we cannot for a moment, with all these activities and demands, allow the work of the church to stop. It must go on. It is necessary, not only to us as a people, but to the whole world. Hence we as a people, let me repeat, must give our service to the church of which we are members, and as members we should take careful survey of what we are doing for the church, what our attitude is toward the church, and attempt to increase our activity.

It is not enough to say that we are members of the church. It is not enough to say that we pay our tithing. It is not enough to say that we have made consecration. It is not enough to say that we even doubled this and give still more, but there is something else demanded, that God will not be satisfied with until you have given that, and that is yourself and your service. It is easy enough, I know, to sit in your homes and observe the activities of the men of the church who are active, and plan and suggest how that work could be improved, but one of the best ways to get these men to improve their service is to come to them, and to go to others that are bearing burdens and say, what can I do? I have given of my money, paid my tithing, my name is on the books, but I am not satisfied yet. I want something to do whether it be little or much. Just so it is commensurate with my ability. That is the demand of the hour of every individual member of the church. Do something for the church as well as for the Government.

We know we must prepare for greater things with a haste which is feverish because of the rapidity with which things happen to-day, and because the time is so pregnant with possibilities which will come whether we are prepared or not.

Perhaps I should say something about the Religio. I have said so, inferentially, but directly let me say, I have not attempted to outline in detail what shall be the work of the Religio; but one of its chief objects should be to search out the youth of the church and fire his ambitions with a desire for service to humanity, to the church, and to God. There never was a time in the history of our church when a demand for our consecrated service was greater or keener than now. Every individual, and that applies particularly to the young, should be sought out by the officers of the church and auxiliaries of the church, and that individual fired with this ambition to give service to the cause in which his name is written or enrolled, and to give that service to the very maximum of his ability.

I trust that every person, this morning, may feel the demands of the hour pressing upon him, and that he will go out from here with a renewed consecration, to give service to this church, and to the things that it stands for, to a degree that he never has in the past. The demands of the hour are, Consecrate; and in your consecration bring preparation for still greater service, for it will be demanded of you eventually as sure as God is and is directing activities in this church.

May his Spirit be with us all, and may his Spirit guide and direct and his blessing attend in harmony with his will, that glory and exaltation may be ours, is my prayer.

IMPORTANCE OF PUBLIC WORSHIP

(Sermon by Elder S. S. Smith, delivered at Spokane, Washington.)

Your attention is invited to the following lesson:

Behold, I will hasten my work in its time; and I give unto you who are the first laborers in this last kingdom, a commandment, that you assemble yourselves together, and organize yourselves, and prepare yourselves; and sanctify yourselves; yea, purify your hearts, and cleanse your hands and your feet before me, that I may make you clean; that I may testify unto your Father, and your God, and my God, that you are clean from the blood of this wicked generation, that I may fulfill this promise, this great and last promise which I have made unto you, when I will.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 20.

The text I have selected for this occasion is found in Hebrews 10: 25.

Not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another; and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching.

In discoursing upon the question of the importance of public worship, I am confident the lesson and text here presented furnishes an excellent basis for a sermon, and it will not be the fault of the text if I fail. To get at this matter systematically, I would like for you to notice at least three distinct divisions of the text: First we have here an excellent admonition; second, we have a specific duty stated; and third, reasons for so meeting together.

THE ADMONITION GIVEN

We shall regard the statement, "Not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together," in the light of a command, for this conclusion is amply justified in the lesson. Dear Saints, if we are to regard this in the light of a command, can we be fully acceptable when we are absent from public worship without a legitimate cause?

Public assembly and worship is very ancient. We have David of old saying, "I have gone with the multitude; I went with them to the house of God, with the voice of joy and praise, with a multitude that kept holy day." (Psalm 42: 4.) Then we have his concluding Psalm admonishing: "Praise ye the Lord. Praise God in his sanctuary; praise him in the firmament of his power." (Psalm 150: 1.) We are interested with the account of their still earlier forms of worship at their rural altars, later their tabernacle worship which we regard as a prelude to their permanent temple, the beauty and grandeur of which was the wonder of the nations.

The New Testament saints met together also, for we have the lesson of Christ assembling the multitudes (Matthew 4: 24; Luke 6: 17), and his meetings with his disciples in preaching and in sacramental service (Luke 12: 1-12; Matthew 26: 26-29); then the experience in the upper chamber where the disciples met (Acts 1: 12-26) when Peter filled with the Spirit preached to the hundred and twenty. On the memorable Day of Pentecost the disciples were assembled, and that one experience has proven one of the most historic for the display of Spirit power in the events of the early church. The disciples after this met together to hear the preached word and to break bread (Acts 20: 7, 8), and to sing praises to God (Ephesians 5: 19; Colossians 3: 16), and thus be builded up in the most holy faith delivered unto them. Of Book of Mormon times we read: "And now it came to pass that there were a great multitude gathered together, of the people of Nephi, round about the temple which was in the land Bountiful." (Book of Nephi 5: 1.) The experience of that assembly lived long in the national life of that people, for it was at that meeting Christ appeared.

The difficulties under which some of these early disciples met is something to be considered. The liberties of free worship as we enjoy them to-day was not had in the earlier times at Rome, for many times they faced even death to do so. Did you ever read the account of the catacombs of Rome, and how the early Christians to preserve their identity in worship to God met and even lived in underground caverns, that they might be unmolested in their worship? Such lessons of fortitude and perseverance should be a stimulus to us. The cold, the damps, the darkness, had no terrors for them, and the iron rule of persecution, and even death itself, did not thwart them in their public worship. Think of your own favorable surroundings, your pleasant homes, the lovely streets and walks of your own city, the neat, well-lighted, and pleasant church to worship in, and then think of these earlier pioneers of the faith who met under such great disadvantages and danger. The contrast is great, yet not without its lesson.

The importance of this matter is presented in the latter-day revelations (Here Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2, 3, and 25: 1 was read.) It is important, for it builds up and gives prestige to the church collectively, and secondarily it is important to us individually. I am confident one of the most common errors prevalent about public worship is regarding it as an end and not as a means. The generality of our people I fear, when they go to church to worship, hold it as a discharged duty which need be no more thought about. It has been said "the end of preaching is praying," so in like manner the end of public worship is not only the joy of the Spiritual devotion at the time, but the practical application afterward manifest in holy living. The enjoyment gained in public meeting is not always the highest blessing, for often at the service we may have enjoyed little at the time, yet there was brought to our remembrance things that afterward resulted in our spiritual profit. Many times we need humbling and teaching as well as cheering. Preaching is not always the principal part of divine worship, yet preaching is a blessed ordinance of God's appointment, through which, if the preacher is inspired and speaks the truth, God speaks to the hearts of men. It must not be forgotten God's house is "the house of prayer," and praise also, and as those parts of the service are entered into with devotion and sincerity we raise to the Alpine heights of true life of God.

It's a pity, some go to church expecting the preacher always to say something new and striking, and not being satisfied with it they are offended. They seem to have "itching ears," craving minds, and aesthetic tastes, and must be entertained and pleased, instead of being brought nearer God, and made humbler and holier, and a better Saint. It should be remembered the minister in sensing the high duties of his calling must bring successively before the people the principles of the Christian faith, and although we are not fastened to specific ritual, yet it would be very unwise to let the year pass without speaking of the truth of the great restoration, and the principles of the gospel, the church, the gifts, and other distinct phases of our belief. If the minister is disposed to keep these things in the background, because he has once preached upon them, or for fear of offending someone that has heard them before, that pastor is unfaithful to his calling. The instruction is, "Preach the word: be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all longsuffering and doctrine."

A SPECIFIC DUTY STATED

"Exhorting one another" is the expressed reasons given in the text for public assembly, yet it is not the only reason. The term exhort here means to incite to some good deed or course of conduct by appeal or argument, to warn, to advise, or to admonish. We might then well ask of what were they to exhort one another. Paul advises Titus to exhort to "sound doctrine," and to the Hebrews he exhorted "lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin." We might here make a classification of a few of the things upon which we are to be exhorted.

Watchfulness is one of the leading things emphasized in the Scriptures upon which we are to be advised. Paul said, "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong." It means to be careful and give diligent observation, and we may avoid danger, escape mistakes, detect evil, and be guarded against misconduct. Have we not heard the text, "Therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober"? (1 Thessalonians 5:6) We should remember a sense of danger is the first step of safety, and no man watches but to secure and defend himself. Watchfulness without prayer is presumption, and prayer without watchfulness is a mockery. We should watch as well as pray.

Resolution and constancy are becoming traits and must be reckoned with in our warfare. Some men cannot grow because they were like the tree that was being constantly transplanted. They think because they keep moving around they are gaining, yet they have but few roots. The trees that grow largest are those that are planted in proper soil and left permanent. So it is to grow spiritually we must continually abide in the truth without deviation. When we once find the true church we must not be "drifted about by every wind of doctrine." Paul's advice is clear and precise, "If you continue in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel" (Colossians 1:23), and such is fitting for us to consider also. (See Revelation 3:11.)

Zeal and diligence are loving qualities and make for edification. If we keep the fire of zeal in the fireplace, in its own proper place, it will warm, quicken and enliven us, but if it breaks out and kindles on the hearth of our corrupt nature, and set the house of our body on fire, it then ceases to be an admirable quality, but the destructive and devouring flame. Such a condition David speaks of when he said, "For the zeal of thine house hath eaten me up." (1 Thessalonians 4:1; Titus 2:1-6; and 2 Peter 1:5 was then read.)

Progress, or the going on "unto perfection" is the order of heaven. Progress is the watchword of creation, the slogan of redemption, and one of the qualities of life to be manifested by the saint. As the "little stone" that was cut out of the mountains was to progress until it fills the whole earth; as the tiny grain of mustard seed should grow until it became a great tree; and as our present day of "small things" shall be merged into the glorious day of millennial glory; so are we destined to make progress and come to the stature of a perfect man. It is our duty at the present, to "lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us," and to "press toward the mark for the prize of their high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

To these Christian virtues mentioned we might classify a number of others such as truth, justice, wisdom, benevolence, self-control, honesty, temperance, purity, virtue, gentleness, humility, and charity. All these and more, we are expected to do, and when followed will make us Godlike in our very nature. Thus the reason for meeting together was to exhort each other to do these things, and by so doing they would receive the Holy Spirit as the heavenly guest.

REASONS FOR MEETING TOGETHER

The statement, "as ye see the day approaching" here set forth in the text signifies the day of the second advent of Christ. If they saw that day from afar, how much more truly should we as the people of God see it nineteen hundred years this side of them. This should be a stimulus to us to meet together often and thus be watchful and prayerful as well as prepared for that great event. As the time of the appearing of Christ draws near, and we behold the glorious signs appearing as harbingers of the end, we will also see a concentration or gathering of God's people more and more, to the central stakes of Zion. The grand object of gathering, primarily, is that the Saints may meet together without handicap or molestation, and by kindred association develop within them those noble Christlike traits that will make them worthy of special endowment. In a general sense the whole Christian life may be called a service and a worship to God, but we should remember the gathering, with special privileges of attending regular services, is exactly suited to keep alive the consciousness of identity with God's great church. All that private devotion secures in strength and comfort, all this and more we may gain in public worship. Whatever confidence you may have that you are heard alone in your secret chamber, double assurance should you feel when you go to the house of God and there meet with the church of the Firstborn.

The day is coming back when duty is joined with piety, when the "beauty of holiness" shall consist of more than the ability to deliver long sermons and give a deluge of texts from the Old Testament. Music, as Carlyle has well said, is, "the speech of angels," in fact nothing outside of the soul of man, expresses so fully the harmonies of the infinite. We will hail the day with joy when holiness shall be written on the bells of the horses, and every employment of Zion's hosts reflects nobility, beauty, and piety. The person that is devoid of reverence may become wrapped in estatic elation, as the rich and solemn tones of the organ peal forth associated with the sweet singers of Israel whose inspiring voices delineate the words of praise to Almighty God. The heart that never felt the throb of this noble inspiration may now thrill with the ecstasy of tenderness as the soft voices, now blending in combined responsiveness, express the glories of redeeming love. When the gifts of music and of song brings us near the Infinite, when it expresses the things that have no shape in human words, and the soul looks across the cloudy elements into the glories of celestial light, it is then we recognize the value of music and of song in the house of God.

The Lord has graciously provided that his people in these last days shall assemble. (here the speaker read Doctrine and Covenants 41: 1.) In this it will be noted the Lord advises the elders to assemble that they may agree on his word, and that they might receive the law, that they may know how to govern the church, and see that the law is kept.

The parable of the ten virgins signifies that only half of the church will be wise and the possessor of light-giving oil. It seems there is need that we take warning, and that we should more fully heed this injunction, "not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together." When we do not thus meet we get discouraged. It should be remembered our worship to be acceptable must be intelligent and marked by all cautiousness, deliberation, and sobriety of thought that is due our heavenly Sovereign. When we meet to hear preaching, to pray, to sing, and thus to worship we should do so in unity of spirit and with sincerity. The old adage is a good one, "In unity there is strength."

EXCUSES FOR NOT GOING TO CHURCH

Notice, "Not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is"; so we know by this there were some even then that were neglectful of their duty. Many times I do not wonder that infidels, the profane, and the worldly, do not attend church, but I am actually amazed that Saints who have the light of the gospel in its fulness would be neglectful of this duty. Well has Paul said, "How shall we escape it if we neglect so great salvation." So many of us adopt the lines of the least resistance. We like to go with the crowd. Many a professed Saint is active, progressive, and alert in other lines of business in the world, but when it comes to the question of attending church they are dilatory and manifest a downright laziness.

We hear it often expressed, "I can worship God as well at home," which really is an excuse of self-will and rebellion, and contrary to experience, reason, and Scripture. I have often thought, do people who make such excuse, really worship God at home? It looks to me that it is the vain pretense of those who seldom worship God at all. Let me ask you, will a real Saint treat the kindly invitation to the house of God with such indifference? I tell you it is not the language of the humble and obedient heart, and we can readily see where such a course would lead the church.

Then we often hear it said, "I cannot find the time," yet it is generally the case that those who make it will let other matters, trifling pleasures, gossip, useless books, and worldly-minded company occupy their attention for hours.

How many times the votaries of heathen and false religions put to shame the baptized and professed Saints. I have met some fine-weather worshipers in my day, they will not go unless the weather is just right, and then too often they prefer a stroll in the park. Others go to see the fashions, and to be seen by others. Of course when a sister gets a fine new hat or a new dress the next desire is to go to church. The men folks you know are never guilty of such vanity! Sometimes it is, "the weather is too hot," or "too cold," "too wet," or "too dry," "the distance is too far," "the visit of a friend," "feet too cold," "the old church is drafty," "did not get up in time," "out to the show last night," "had to mow the lawn," "had to hoe the garden," "the base ball game," "the singing is bum," "the preacher speaks too loud," "too low," "too long," or "too short," and "he speaks too plain," or "too vague." Then some say, "I don't like to worship with hypocrites," but such should be answered with the well known maxim, "there is always room for one more." We hear it said, "There are plenty of people who do go to church who are no better than those who do not," and we should answer, "And if there be what is that to thee? Will that clear you in the day of judgment?" This may be true in some instances but not in all, the rule is, the best people go to church.

REVERENCE FOR THE HOUSE OF GOD

This phase of the subject needs to be emphasized it seems to me. Many times what would prove a very spiritual and profitable service is marred by a lack of proper church decorum. People who call themselves Saints, who go to God's dedicated house to stare about, to whisper, fidget, yawn, or sleep, and not to pray, praise, or listen, should be given a practical lesson in church decorum by the deacon of that branch. So many times a service is marred by people coming in late, or leaving before the benediction; then the conversation, in whispering or audibly, during the musical voluntary is positively vulgar. When one does this they do not consider that God disfavors profaneness, and carelessness in his presence. In the early days of the church an idea was prevalent that when a person went to sleep in the meeting it was an evidence he was possessed. That interpretation of it of course will not stand to-day, because occasionally some of the preachers are offenders, and I myself, strange to say, have been guilty of that very thing. We should be impressed, however, when we go to God's house that we stand in his presence, and should we there behave before God as we would not dare to behave in the presence of some earthly ruler, it would indeed be a very grave offense, and portray how disgustingly disrespectful we really were.

In order to secure the spirit of true worship we should attend to certain rules prescribed by the branch president or those in a position to give them. Rash and hasty words should here be forbidden. Our tread should be light and our demeanor reverential. It is no time for a noisy step, but with a bearing of one going into the company of his superiors, like Moses when he approached the burning bush, or Joshua before the mysterious warrior. Children should never be allowed to frolic on the floor or aisles, and the pets, such as cats, dogs, and canary birds, no matter how well groomed, should be left at home. There are many offenders to these plain duties.

Another thing I would like to speak about while I am on this part of the question. It is those who worship simply from custom, instead of being governed by deep reasons for sacred duty, and without due reflection follow what is considered to be a common obligation. Hence they go with careless feet to church treading the ruts of custom. In other words they are imitators of others. Their devotion, if you can call it such, is soulless and too often glaringly mechanical. Then we have those who worship with a preoccupied mind. They go to church with their minds filled with other matters, to see a friend, to talk business, to make a trade, and their worship is profitless. They forget the great purpose of worship is to carry away the soul of the worshiper, and that the service and worship demands the consecration of thought and feeling. Thoughts that are not winged with the soul's desire will never rise to heaven. The mind, like tread of the feet, must not wander, but go straight to the mark of our solemn purpose. In worship there is scope for the use of reason, and all the powers of the human mind, yet we should avoid excursions of thought into the regions of speculation, doubt, and unbelief. We should love the house of God, and in our worship there we should pour forth our most humble and hearty supplications, that he, remembering the calamities of his children in their earthly pilgrimage, during the weary days, might open up to us new refreshments out of his fountains of mercy. I hope we will not let human things be prejudiced to such as are divine, that we may be able always to determine between truth and error. It is to be desired that from the loosening of the gates of faith there will be the kindling of a greater light within, and that from our stupid credulity we may yet see a greater manifestation of the power of God. Let us thoroughly clean and clerify our minds from every fancy and morbid vanity, that we may clearly see and hear the divine oracles, that the things of faith may not be a long distance away.

ITS OBLIGATIONS

So many of us have felt the depressing influence of the house of God being occupied only by a scanty number of members. The building, the music, the sermon, all seem so out of keeping with the small attendance, and oftentimes we may question whether or not we may as well have stayed at home, as to have gone to that empty church. Do not forget Christ's forceful words in this connection, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." In the building thus deserted by earthly worshipers, is there a mightier presence than the great God of heaven and earth? Two or three, the smallest that constitutes a plurality, the infinite God has promised to regard, so why should we be discouraged?

I have very little faith in those whose spirituality has got up so high it can do without standing room here on earth. A person who has become so religious (?) that he does not need a place, and a time of worship, as well as the association of brethren, the help of others, the prayers of others, the ordinances of God's house, the preaching of God's truth, such a one so unreal to the true conditions of religious life need not expect the confidence of others. It is so common to judge others by themselves, and if they have been accustomed from childhood to dull forms of devotion and rude gesticulations from the choir and pulpit, they are liable to think everything shocking that is not in line with their previous experiences.

When a man begins to neglect his place of worship, he loses one of the things that keeps faith alive within him. As a rule men do not replace the loss sustained in public worship by adopting private service of their own. Then too, if men do not come in contact with the thought of God and his truth at church, as a rule they do not come in contact with God anywhere, for how shall they hear without a preacher, and it is in the church the preacher proclaims as a rule.

It is sad yet undeniable, wherever the public worship is taken from the Saints, or discontinued, reverence for God and his work deteriorates with it. Thus worship is man's highest end, for it we employ the highest faculties and affections. God designs his people to worship together, and proportionately as we neglect this duty, to that extent do we lose identity with him and his work. Let me impress your minds with this fact, if you are in the faith and love God's work, you will love the house of God, and it will be no sacrifice to go there. If you are in the faith, you will love the people of God, and it will be a joy to be with them even if they do have faults. This, "I am better than thou" policy, I know is bad, and we will do well to mix and mingle with our kind, and radiate a living personality, yet by so doing we should keep ourselves from the sins of humankind. If we are looking for a perfect man I fear we will never find one. Then again, by going to church you influence others to go, and I am sure many have been kept from the meshes of sin and downfall by the influences of the church.

PREACHERS AND PREACHING

I believe it is appropriate right here to give a little dissertation on the question of preachers and preaching, for this has much to do with the people going to church, and making a success in church work. Many times the fault for an empty pew is to be charged to the preacher. The preacher must be clean and respectably dressed. The more education he has the better, for nothing puts one to more disadvantage in trying to teach an educated audience than the fact that his rhetoric is faulty. Then, too, the preacher may lack humility, be devoid of the Spirit and be wholly unprepared in the theme of the discourse.

As an extreme, the exponent may rationalize his public efforts into a dry philosophy, and thus his pulpit becomes a tribune to lecture from; and as another extreme, his pulpit may become a stand to be pounded and snorted over, where loud hallelujahs are shouted amid a pandemonium of noises in wild-eyed delirium. The true Christian pulpit is neither of these. True preaching is neither "a wisdom" to the Greeks, a "sign" to the Jews, or a philosophy" to the unbeliever, but it is the gospel of God to dying men. A divine message to a waiting congregation, preaching by an authorized and an inspired ministry must ever be the appropriate vehicle. A divine message inspires new utterance, and creates spokesmen of its own. A preacher must be the mouthpiece, not of the congregation, but of God himself.

Strong preachers have always been Bible preachers, and as the old-time preachers of the early days of the restoration drew their weapons from the heavenly armory and spoke the word in power, let me say we have room for such men to-day. The word coming straight from the mouth of a believing man in which the Spirit's presence indites upon the minds of the people, gives us the fundamental view of our work as preachers and illustrates our unlimited possibilities. If we are expected to lift the people up upon higher ground, we must retain a higher position ourselves. The true preacher must be a live man, a real, true, and simple man, a man great in love, great in his life, and great in his work.

The minister that heralds abroad the great truth of life and salvation, of Christ and his love, must impersonate that truth in his daily life. There is power inherent in truth itself, but it is like the electricity in its Leyden jar, which needs a conductor to develop it. To thus make effectual the great truth of the gospel, which we preach to others, it is first necessary to translate that truth into living terms in our own life until our lives are full and redolent of it.

In regard to the sermon allow me to use the words of Edward P. Hood. "A sermon may be constructed after the best models; it may conform to all the rules of homiletics; the text be suitable and fruitful; the plan may be faultless; the execution may discover genius and judgment; there may be accurate analysis and strong reasoning; proof and motive; solidity and beauty; logic and passion; argument direct and indirect; perspicuity, purity, correctness, propriety, precision; description, antithesis, metaphor, allegory, comparison; motives from goodness, motives from happiness, motives from self-love; appeals to the sense of the beautiful, the sense of right, to the affections, the passions, the emotions; a sermon may be all this, and yet that very sermon, even if it fell from the lips of a prince of pulpit oratory, were as powerless in the renewal of a soul as in the raising of the dead, if unaccompanied by the omnipotent energy of the Holy Ghost."

THE POSSIBILITIES

It is not difficult for us to see how by attending to this duty it will serve us to a higher and better development. It will give us the occasion to learn more of the heinousness of sin, and keep before us inviolate the law of God. We are not graduated to a complete and safe education until we know the fundamentals of Christ's teachings, and have knowledge that we have gained at the altar of prayer. I am confident we are standing in our own light on many things, and if the gospel would have its way we would have been exalted to a plane of unexampled prosperity as yet never attained.

There is a manifest need of a radical change in some ways in the life of the church, such as that which will strip it of its dormant complacency and selfishness, and awaken the sleepy ones to a realization of the unlimited possibilities now upon us. There must come into the life of all professed Saints such an area of self-denial and a willingness to serve, that we will withhold nothing from the Lord and his work. We have hardly begun to cultivate. We must face that truly that has its bearing on life and character, and no power will be safe in Zion that is not reinforced by the power of Christ. Let us then cultivate the spirit of devotion and praise by going to the house of the Lord at every opportunity. Let us seek renewing grace and be happy. Truly should we commit all to God and be passive to every demand of his law. We must not deteriorate in gospel work, like men who wear the cloak of Christianity but do not know its spirit. The test will be in the outcome and not in the start. The opportunities are great, new demands are upon us, let us then arise and face the situation with dignity and with pleasure. Let us close with the fitting words of Adelaide A. Proctor:

Great may he be who can command
And rule with just and tender sway;
Yet is diviner wisdom taught
Better by him who can obey.

THE LITTLE PROPHETS OF SELF

When an individual begins to cherish a desire to pull Moses down from his seat in order that he may occupy the seat himself, it is not at all difficult for him to conclude that Moses is in transgression and a fallen prophet.

There are men in the church of very moderate abilities but with exaggerated ambitions, and quite lacking in a sense of humor, who have no difficulty in visualizing themselves as presiding over the church. They see the honor, but absolutely fail to sense the crushing burden of responsibility. In such cases, there are generally wandering spirits present who are quite willing to lend the sanction of revelation to these aspirations.

No matter how plausible the propaganda put forward by such men, the underlying motive is generally quite visible. We have in mind three such instances which have come to light within the past year that may serve as illustrations. We do not need to name the individuals. The Saints have been receiving their literature and it is sufficient to notice the general principle involved.

The first of these men became very much dissatisfied with the president of the church and his policies. He decided to pull away and organize a church for himself, and very quickly claimed to receive divine authority. He said the angel told him, "for thou art beloved of the Lord." He modestly confided to his congregation, "If you will go through the entire Bible, you will find this expression but twice: to Daniel and to John the Beloved." This angel knew how to please this man. The second one of these men was like unto the first, and the angel is represented as saying, "I have chosen thee as one mighty and strong in Spirit." The third individual is quite like the first two, and in his latest publication says, "God has chosen me to be the future head of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." These three are quite in accord on one thing, viz, that each one is fully persuaded he is it.

The Saints need not be seriously troubled at these revelations of human aspirations and weaknesses. The condition is not epidemic, though it may result from infection; and the Saints need not feel that these movements will develop into any organized or cooperative system strong enough to give trouble.

These men cannot cooperate for the very reason that there is not one among them possessed of that spirit which enabled John the Baptist to say, "He must increase, but I must decrease." Egotists cannot work together to a common end.

There is a story to the effect that some years ago an aggregation of erratics came together in the church, each one claiming to be some noted personage. One announced himself as the one mighty and strong; another was Baurak Ale, and so on. All went well until an individual joined the group who proclaimed himself as "the Lord's anointed, the messenger of the Covenant." That broke up the whole meeting, because he had overshot all the others and arrogated to himself the last superlative.

The "little prophets of self" toot their own horns. Each one advertises himself. They would pull others down in order to climb up. Pilate had a certain modesty. He caused Jesus to stand forth, and pointing to him, said, "Behold the man!" The little prophets of self strut forth and jerking a thumb at their own bosoms say, "Behold the man."

A STANDPATTER.

A "Special Delivery" from Our President

HOLDEN, MISSOURI, January 21, 1919.

My Dear Sisters of the Auxiliary: At the opening of another year I am thinking of you, every one. The faithful band in far-away Australia, the sisters in England, our members in Canada, and in our own United States. Greetings to all, and abundant success to your efforts.

I am sure we are not failing in gratitude when we recall the preservation of our lives through the terrible epidemic that has swept the earth. With one of our number, however, we have been called upon to part—Sister Clyde Ellis, who had charge of our work in the Society Islands Mission, having passed from this life December 3, 1918, of complications following an attack of influenza. Faithful to the last was she in teaching the native sisters. Our Auxiliary is almost entirely wiped out there, writes Brother Ellis, because of the fatalities of this disease. This was the year Brother and Sister Ellis were to return to America. It will be a sad homecoming for our brother. May the kind Father minister consolation in his bereavement.

I wish to thank the organizers for their splendid and prompt response to the call for representatives to serve in institute work this winter. While this movement has suffered a postponement for a few weeks, until localities have sufficiently recovered from the effects of the epidemic, we trust that in the meantime many more calls will come in for the institute work. The organizers will receive a personal letter from me shortly, inclosing some new outlines and helps that will greatly assist in the presentation of the various departments of our work. The special articles that were prepared by Sister C. E. Stevens of Akron, Colorado, Sister Audentia Anderson of Omaha, and Sister Alice M. Smith of Independence, were greatly appreciated. I desire also to thank the several societies who sent donations of money in response to a special request in this column a few weeks ago. An acknowledgment of these has been sent by our treasurer to each one.

The war work and the epidemic have been no small hindrances to our work this year, but now that the conflict is over and the epidemic has abated we should with redoubled effort establish and continue our work. For who can say how long we shall be able to do so?

I repeat, to "establish the work." Not long ago I heard the pastor of a large branch say he did not think a branch was complete or equipped for its work without an organization of the Woman's Auxiliary. Soon after that I received a letter from a pastor in a distant State writing after the close of a district conference, saying, "We intend to acquaint ourselves with the work of this department" (Woman's Auxiliary). They undertook to organize the work but made an error in doing so, not having the Supplement for their guide. However, the mistake can be righted. The point is, the pastor was not only supporting the movement, but urging it. You who read this column ask yourselves whether you have yet joined the ranks of the women of the church who are by study and faith trying to advance and fit themselves for the greatest possible efficiency, not only for individual benefit but to answer the call of the church for trained and qualified women in special lines of service.

If there is no organization of the Woman's Auxiliary in your branch as yet, here is the call. Come, join us, and we will do you good with a proper effort on your part. Write to our treasurer, Mrs. F. H. Esgar, 700 South Crysler Street, Independence, Missouri, for a Supplement (price 15 cents) which sets forth our aims and gives a synopsis of our study courses and activities. When you have read this carefully I feel that you will want to be a part of this forward movement.

We regret to inform you of a prolonged and serious illness of Sister Lydia Wight, supervisor of the Home and Child Welfare Bureau. By letter from her a few days ago we learn she is slowly recovering but feels it will be some time yet before she can take up the work of her bureau again. In the meantime we refer you to the activities already outlined by Sister Wight in the Supplement. There is a great deal of work planned which I fear has hardly begun. What are we doing for the men and women of to-morrow, from whence cometh the strength of Zion?

Sister Helen S. Smith, supervisor of the Relief and Service Bureau, on account of sickness in her home has felt it necessary to resign her office. We are very sorry indeed to lose from our working force this very efficient sister. We call your attention to the new ideas in relief and service work as set forth by Sister Smith in the Supplement, page 24, and which are approved by the Bishop of the church. They relate to the cooperation of our women with the officers of a branch in social visiting and intelligent investigation of the conditions of the poor. "The best way to help people," says Mary Richmond in her book, The Good Neighbor, "is to know them before they need help." "There is something more needed," says Miss Richmond, "than free spectacles for the defective vision of children whose parents are unable to procure them." A necessity for a deeper and more scientific investigation into the causes of distress and poverty is existing in the church to-day, we are advised by the authorities. Can we not enlist a membership in this department of a younger element of women who would be able to do this more active work combined with preparation and study?

I should like to have our classes and societies try the plan of the open monthly meeting. It may be held at a time best suited to your conditions, and all departments engaged should be represented on the program. A brief report should be read from each. Current events of particular interest to women should have a place. The newest thoughts in the magazines, the progress of the peace conference, etc., should be condensed and presented in an interesting manner. At some such meetings the roll is called, the character of the responses varying from time to time. A drill for a few moments on the use of some parliamentary rule would be profitable. A part of the time could be used for class work for which there is not time at your other class periods. If sociability is lacking light refreshments might be served at the close of the meeting. Music could be added and perhaps one number of a purely entertaining character.

About our column. Seldom do we read an item telling of the local work and how it is conducted, although our editor has besought us to send her some of these brief, newsy items. Now I propose that we have a social gathering in our column, which shall consist of short letters or a message from our workers all over the country, telling of their interest in the work and what they are doing or what they hope to do. Let us meet here three weeks from the date of this issue and I feel sure our editor will give the entire space of the column for our reception if we desire it. Now we want to hear from California and Massachusetts and all the States between where our work has been established—from Canada, from England, and from Australia. These latter localities will not get the word in time to send their message for the issue named, but we will await their arrival later. We shall expect to hear from them.

Now after reading this letter there are three things to remember and do, if not already done. Write for a Supplement. Interest your pastor in our work. Send your letter to the column by the date requested.

Trusting many are planning to enter diligently into the woman's department of the church and that together we may become a mighty power for good through faith, study, and activity, to finally reach the great objective, the redemption of Zion.

Extending to you this new year my heartiest good wishes for your highest good, both individually and collectively, I remain,

Very sincerely,

MRS. D. J. KRAHL,
President.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI, January 21, 1919.

Tribute

In the death of Sister Clara Ellis, wife of Elder Clyde F. Ellis, in charge of the Society Islands Mission, our Auxiliary has suffered a great loss. She will be missed sorely by the sisters of the islands, to whom she became endeared by her deep interest in their welfare; to the young, too, she was a real companion and sympathetic friend. She has been taken from a great company who loved her dearly, and with whom the influence of her unselfish ministry will long remain.

During my stay of a month in the islands in 1915, I was deeply impressed by her undeviating devotion to the work of the church. Far removed from the centers of culture of the church, she sacrificed much; unstintingly, her life was given in service to others.

It almost seems our sister should not have been thus removed, but God knows best, and though sorrow fills our hearts, the example she has set and the memory she has left encourage us to press on.

Sister Ellis was a true helpmate to her husband, a support to him in the very difficult work of the mission. May he, and all relatives be comforted!

SADIE (MRS. PAUL M.) HANSON.

Is Opportunity at Your Door?

The letter from Bishop Blair, which will be found elsewhere in this issue, will no doubt start a train of thought in the minds of our readers similar to those expressed at a recent meeting of our sisters in one of our cities.

"Why," exclaimed one, "we cannot hope to erect, buy, or manage a girls' home here, since we are so few in number, but we really ought to get busy, and keep in closer touch with all the young people who do drift in and out of our church here."

"That's right," said another. "In the last month I have met six or seven young people at different times, in the church, who come occasionally, but whom we let absolutely alone between times!"

"We surely aren't doing the right thing by them," said a third, "for I think it would take a great deal of loyalty on the part of young Saints to keep on coming to our meetings, when we so thoughtlessly just visit with each other, and do not put ourselves out enough to take these strangers home with us, or see that we acquaint ourselves with them, their work, and the conditions under which they are living in our city."

It all resulted in some very definite plans being made whereby the sisters may be able to fulfill a little better their Christian duty to such young people as may come into their midst as toilers in this work-a-day world. May we have the benefit of suggestions coming from branches in other cities? Not only cities have this problem, but also educational centers. More than one young Latter Day Saint has felt lonely and discouraged in a really good branch of Saints, just because the resident members have not clearly sensed the golden opportunities which have lingered on their thresholds! Are you one of these? How can we "right about face," and have a very different report to make next year?

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Temple Hall!

You will be interested in knowing that we have honored the Young Women's Society of the church by giving the girls' hotel, recently started here in Kansas City, the name of Temple Hall.

After a good deal of work and many delays, we opened the doors last month, and we can only accept about three more roomers when our capacity will be full. We have five sleeping rooms besides the room occupied by the matron. So far, we feel very much pleased with results and especially with the tone of appreciation of those who receive its direct benefits. We want to show that it is a very practical need; that it will be a stepping-stone to greater things. We don't intend that it shall be a mere boarding house, but we want it to be a home for the girls who live there.

We have fitted up a large living room about 14 by 28 in size, through the liberality of one of our Sunday school classes. We think that the dining room will be furnished by a friend from out of town, but as the furniture is not here yet, I am unable to announce the matter definitely. We are confident that others will be interested to the extent that they will pay for the furnishing of a room and then keep the room "up." Of course, the upkeep will be very low for a sleeping room, but there will be no small measure of satisfaction in being permitted to be a participant in so worthy an undertaking. The furnishing of a sleeping room will amount to about $70.

We have many other practical problems confronting us and the people here are becoming aroused, not to a sense of duty, but to the realization of a privilege of becoming a "colaborer with God." We cannot all preach, but we can all do a good work in one way or another.

Our young men are very anxious that we furnish a place for them; our middle-aged women are anxious that we furnish a place for them, and our widows with children are anxious for a home where they can have a couple of rooms and where we can have a day nursery that will care for their children while they are away to work. These practical problems have been very interesting to me, and I am confident that they will mean much greater success for us, both as regards to addition to our number and a greater spirituality among our present members.

Yours in bonds,

F. B. BLAIR, Bishop, Kansas City Stake.

Training Little Children

SHALL OUR CHILDREN BE MERELY HEALTHY LITTLE ANIMALS?

The other day I was reciting to my little five-year-old son the old nursery rhyme:

"Here am I, little Jumping Joan.

When nobody's with me, I'm always alone."

"What does that mean?" asked the child.

"Why, when nobody's with you, aren't you always alone?" I questioned.

"No," he replied, "because God is always with me."

How shall we measure the significance of this early realization of our Father's presence everywhere? For with the knowledge that God is present to help at all times, our children lose the sense of fear—and there is no greater lesson that we can impart to them. From earliest infancy we can begin to awaken in our children the sense of the all-presence of God.

Froebel, in his "Mother play," a series of songs and games which he devised for the mother to play with her child, always seeks to make her look from the things which are seen and temporal to the things which are unseen and eternal; the father is to manifest so much patience and love towards his little ones as to make the transition of idea from the earthly to the heavenly Father simple and natural. The child is to be trained to look upon himself as a necessary and responsible part of a great whole, and to be taught that the whole can only be as strong as the weakest link. And from his earliest infancy he is to be taught to show gratitude to all who aid in ministering to his needs.

In these days, when so much is written about sense testimony, and so much is done to meet the physical and mental needs of our children both in the home and at school, there is a tendency to forget the teachings of Froebel and to give our children only a partial education, an education which stops short of their spiritual needs.

A momentous question, and one which all parents must answer individually, is "Do we want our children to be merely healthy little animals with a certain amount of superficial learning, or do we wish to develop their deeper natures so that one day they may be able to take their place in the world, and through their spiritual insight into things, become powers for good in the community? For parents cannot turn over their own responsibilities to the teachers and expect them to lay the foundations of character. The home is the place where this must be done, and it is for us to prove to our children that it is only as we are good ourselves that we help those around us. Then, imitation being one of the earliest and strongest instincts of childhood, our little ones, taking knowledge of us, begin practicing in their own lives what they see in ours. And living in an atmosphere of love and harmony, they come early to understand that love is the greatest power in the world.—Mrs. John Henry Hammond, in bulletin of the United States Bureau of Education.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

A Best Day's Income

(It would be hardly fair for us to keep all of the good things to ourselves, and we therefore pass along the following splendid spirited letter. It is remarkable how God has blessed the various efforts of this brother and his companion. When we have an ambition to do something for the Lord's work, it is a wonderful stimulus in our business activities.—BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.)

January 23, 1919.

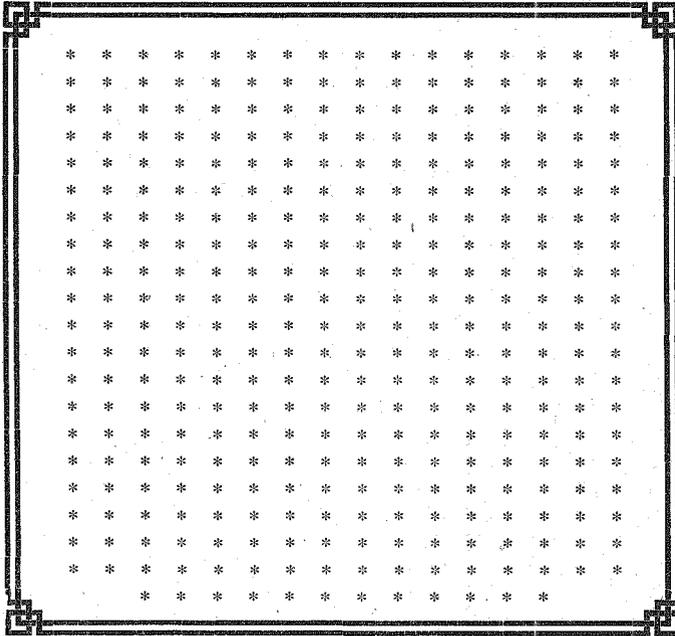

Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire,
Independence, Missouri.

Dear Brother: At the beginning of the year 1918 we (my companion and myself) made a resolve or resolution that we would give our best day's income from a general farm and stock sale during the year to the Christmas offering. The best sale to that time had paid $59.50. As the season advanced several sales exceeded that amount and finally one paid $86.83, and this amount we paid as our share of the amount for 1918. The sale season closed in March and we paid no more attention to our own offering feeling that it was paid except that we put in a few small amounts now and then until our total was $89.31. The sale season opened again in October but we seemed to forget that it was still 1918. When the end of the year came we found that our school had reached the nice sum of $375 with only 40 members and we were satisfied. But now comes to our mind the fact that on December 5 we received the nice sum of $216 as pay for that day's work. We realize that we have not as yet complied with our resolution so we are inclosing herewith a check in the amount of $126. The pleasure is ours. Only sorry it was not more. Please credit this amount to the Magnolia Sunday School, Magnolia, Iowa, if it is not too late. This makes a total for our little school of $501.69. We hope this does not give us the highest pro rata, but we are glad ours is as high as it is. We wanted so much to see the total for 1918 go over the top ($100,000) and were disappointed to see the figures given in the last Ensign. But we are not discouraged. This has been a strenuous year, and we hope the year of 1919 will be the banner year of all years. We have already started our fund. Our goal is "Still more." We want to do our part and are trying to urge others on though we meet some who object to our plan. May God bless you and give you strength to carry the responsibility that is yours.

Sincerely,
CHARLES F. PUTNAM AND WIFE.

Christmas Offering Roll of Honor
TO JANUARY 27

Still they come, and we are surely grateful for the very excellent support of our good workers—there is nothing that helps one like the feeling that all our good workers are with us, striving hard to do “their bit,” and this is the way we feel to-night. We feel that God has indeed heard and answered the prayers we have offered.

Ceres, California. Lottie B. Rose, superintendent, reports enrollment, including cradle roll and home department, is 38, and sent $90.80.

Holden, Missouri. Maree Lovell, secretary, reports enrollment of 161, total offering, $621.54.

Nebraska City, Nebraska. Ruby C. Faunce, superintendent, reports over the top in spite of influenza. Sends $262.08 and they have started on their 1919 offering.

Underwood, Iowa. H. N. Hansen reports that they have $191. Enrollment 64.

Port Elgin, Ontario. W. A. Leeder reports a membership of 57, offering $200.

Terlton, Oklahoma. Pearl Greenwood reports an enrollment of 20 and an offering of $66. School is composed mostly of small children of nonmembers. Already started for 1919.

Bayfield, Colorado. Minnie Akers reports an enrollment of 15 and offering of $63.

Niles, Ohio. Mabel Thomas Baldwin, secretary, reports 16 members and an offering of $35.70.

Chicago, Illinois. First Chicago, J. W. Petterson, superintendent, reports. “Our aim at the beginning of the year was $300 plus. We went over the $2 per member some months ago. Due to the untiring efforts of the leaders in the men and ladies contest, the ladies and girls led by Sister Grace Johnson and the men and boys by Brother Vernon Reese—the understanding being that the side raising the least funds should entertain the other. Banks were furnished—notices were stamped throughout the Quarterlies, “Bring your bank to-day.” We used a thermometer and it broke at $300 and ran over until we had a total of $462.45. Our membership is 81; only about 50 are active. We had an 80 per cent attendance last Sunday and would, no doubt, have had 100 per cent had it not been for the influenza. We want it on record that our Sunday school is ready again to back up any movement for the upbuilding of God’s work, we are at your service.” (Thanks, First Chicago.)

Amherst, Nova Scotia. Boyd Johnson reports: “My book shows 22 names including South Rawdon, and $142 offering.”

Chico, California. E. A. Opsal reports a membership of 54 and offering of $191.06.

Providence, Rhode Island. Charles I. Brown, superintendent, reports: “In 1917 our Sunday school reached the $350 mark, attaining $2 per member and over. Our enrollment then was 115. I am proud to state that we have raised $750. Our goal for 1919 is $1,000, and more. I have found that it is a great blessing to be engaged in this work.”

New Canton, Illinois. Mallie L. Brown reports: “In 1917 we sent in $27, and this year we are sending $144.95 and we hope to do better for 1919. We have 56 members.”

Ihlen, Minnesota. Sister G. E. Wolfe reports 10 members and sent in $50.

Rockville, Missouri. Clive H. Heath reports almost $3 per member.

Bears, Maine. Sister Alton Beal reports average attendance of about 30 and about $75 offering.

Willoughby, Ohio. Louis C. Martin says they have more than $2 per member.

Alpena, Michigan. Sister Mary Crandall reports $49.16 Christmas offering and birthday offering; enrollment is 18.

Kansas City, Kansas, Chelsea Sunday School. Mildred W. Goodfellow reports over $3 per member for the offering, $250 for the main school and $10 for the home department.

Stockton, California. H. J. Davison reports. “Our accomplishment does not seem as great as some other schools, but from the standpoint of sacrifice we should rate pretty high from the fact that we have no well-to-do people among us. We are glad, with you, that the schools have done so well.”

Galesburg, Illinois. Leah A. Denton writes: “Our offering is $25.50, which is very much over $2 per member, including our three little babies. Our school enrolls two families and myself.”

Eldorado Springs, Missouri. Bertha Ray Walters reports a membership of 50, including the home class, and an offering of $104.65.

Ubyly, Michigan. J. W. Bailey, secretary, reports an average attendance of seventeen and over $4.50 per member.

Saint Louis, Missouri, Zion’s Hope Sunday School. H. T. Burch reports $559.88.

The following list represents schools entitled to be on the Roll of Honor, but have not reported to us. We are glad to list these good schools and appreciate their good work.

- Eagleville, Missouri, Oland Sunday School.
- Norwalk, Connecticut, Broad River Sunday School.
- Wheeling, West Virginia.
- Council Bluffs, Iowa.
- Gallands Grove, Iowa.
- Saginaw, Michigan, Lily of the Valley Sunday School.
- Bemidji, Minnesota.
- Andover, Missouri.
- Corea, Maine.
- Ashland, Wisconsin.
- Buffalo, New York.
- Humberstone, Ontario.
- Marseilles, Illinois, Mission Sunday School.
- Wilkinsburg, Pennsylvania.

Wilksburg, Pennsylvania, Home Department.
 Wilksburg, Pennsylvania, Cradle Roll.
 Wilber, Nebraska, Union Band Sunday School.
 Garden Grove, California.
 Garden Grove, California, Home Department.
 Butler, Missouri, Morning Star Sunday School.
 Highland Park, Michigan.
 Lion's Head, Ontario, Spry Sunday School.
 Archbald, Pennsylvania.
 Niagara Falls, New York.
 Centralia, Washington.
 Pana, Illinois.
 Idaho District Sunday School.
 Saint Marys, Ontario.

 McKenzie, Alabama, Pleasant Hill Sunday School.
 Fort Collins, Colorado, Mountain View Sunday School.
 Sioux City, Iowa.
 Calgary, Alberta.
 Fresno, California.
 Appleton, Wisconsin.
 Edgerton, Alberta.
 Trinidad, Colorado.

We will continue to publish the Roll of Honor up to February 17, and any schools having failed thus far to send in their report may send it in now if they will.

Do not forget that we will be pleased to hear from all schools as soon as they reach the $2.50-per-member mark, and we shall publish a list of these about April 1. We feel sure your school will want to be on this list and we shall publish them in the order in which they are received, or rather according to date on which they have reached the $2.50 mark.

This coming week we expect to send out cards asking for name and address of all superintendents, and we hope that each superintendent will make note of this, and if you do not receive a card it will be because we do not have the name and address of any member in your branch. If you do not get this card will you send in your name and address, district in which your school is located, and name of district superintendent, also give name of your Sunday school, number of members in main school, number in home department, and number in cradle roll, and the offering each gave this year, or if you do not get this card advise us and we will send one on to you to fill out. We want to reach every superintendent this year, for we have some real interesting helps to send to all the schools this year, and we know that you will want them.

Please do not forget that we are always glad to have reports of your work and we are especially interested in learning of new or good ways to help the children—as well as the older folks to save offering. If you have some good ideas send them in as we may be able to help someone else with your suggestions.

Just as soon as all the reports are in and the offering is closed for the past year, we shall publish a per capita list showing the standing of the schools. This list will not contain all the schools but just those having the highest amount per capita. There is bound to be some very great surprises this year, and we know all the schools will be greatly pleased when they read of the very excellent records made by some of the hustling schools.

Do not let your interest relax for a single week, but keep constantly awake to every opportunity to boost your school's attendance and offering for 1919.

May God bless and guide your every effort and prosper you in the good work, is the earnest prayer of

Yours for $150,000,

ARTHUR W. SMITH.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, 2903 Sullivan Avenue.

[A letter to President Smith]:

HILO, HAWAII, January 2, 1919.

Though not able to do much along missionary lines, we have been busy. I am trying to catch up on correspondence, and Brother Puohau is finishing painting some Hawaiian charts, the outlines of which I had made while I was in Honolulu.

Our Christmas entertainment in charge of Sister McConley was a great success. We had over one hundred in attendance and a good spirit prevailed. And on Christmas Day we had a genuine dinner according to the good old traditional style, turkey, cranberry sauce, plum pudding, etc., thanks to the kindness of some of the Saints. We invited some of the young men who have been attending church, whose homes are on other parts of this island, to come and help us eat these bounties, thereby enlarging our family to the number of about twelve. But knowing the hardships others are passing through, it made me feel unworthy of so many good things at this season. May the time be hastened when the want and suffering which is so prevalent now may cease. (Christmas offering $121.48; Sunday school enrollment 56.)

As has been our custom since coming here, we held a watch meeting commencing at 10.30 o'clock and closing at midnight, watching the old year pass and greeting the new in the house of worship. The spirit of renewed consecration and a desire for a closer walk with God were the common expressions in our service, and at our prayer meeting last night the same spirit was manifest. So I feel that as a branch we are in a much more spiritual condition than we have been for months, and I hope it may continue. Personally, I never felt better in the work, and my companion has been restored to health again, so that I trust we may do more efficient work in the vineyard this year than ever before.

While in Honolulu on my former mission with Elder Barrett, we made a gospel tent with which we did some effective missionary work. The tent is stored at the mission house with Elder Miller. We are going to overhaul it and if it can be put in shape without too much expense, we are going to canvass all sections of this town with the tent, and thus more thoroughly spread our teachings. And after finishing here, we may try it elsewhere. I hope the coming year will be the best we have ever seen as far as the growth of the church is concerned.

Praying that the year may bring many blessings to all latter-day Israel,

Sincerely,

M. A. MCCONLEY.

IN THE SERVICE ABROAD, January 6, 1919.

Editors Herald: I would like to write to all the Saints in the States, but take this method of reaching them instead. Our battalion, First, of the 56th Infantry, had to take care of a part of the Saint Mihiel sector. At first our place of occupation was the Puvénall Woods, a very quiet sector. After about a week there we were changed to where real fighting was done. It was called the Bois du trou de la Haie. It was there we received our real baptism of fire. We stayed about a month and were still there when the armistice was signed. On that day at 2 p. m. we were expected to go over the top and fight till we had captured Metz. We were about eighteen hundred feet from the Hindenburg Line, the strongest fortified line of German trenches. To go near it was practically sure death. To go into those trenches we had to cross three rows of big, heavy, barbed wires, run into a line of mines, and then take each concrete dugout at the point of the bayonet in a hand-to-hand fight. Artillery was ineffective for this work. Then the Germans had a machine gun at about every yard at the advanced posts.

High explosives were coming our way with great frequency, as well as mustard gas and sneezing gas. We were strange-looking creatures with our gas masks on for as much as two hours at a time. Water was very scarce, I having to do without for as long as two days. I was forced to drink coffee, but only at such times.

Now that it is all over I am most grateful. During all that time I observed prayer at regular times as well as having a petition in my heart for divine protection. God surely heard my prayers.

What I am most interested in now is the building up of Zion. Many think it impossible because it is such a big undertaking, but nothing is impossible with the Lord. The efficiency of the army in the hands of the Lord will accomplish wonders. Of course there will be more individualism in God's army than here, but when actuated by his Spirit we will succeed. We need cooperation and not competition. With it we will see the difficulties vanish.

Editors Herald: Among my resolutions of the new year, one was to write a letter to the HERALD. Almost a year has elapsed since my name has appeared in your pages, and many things have transpired since then. Many hundreds of miles lie between here and the place you last heard from me. We came to this place from Shellbrook, Saskatchewan, almost a year ago, and I feel the Lord's hand was guiding us. Although conditions were not as we would like to see them, I feel that the time is very near when they will be. Many Saints have received misrepresentations regarding this country, but I would say that if you come in the right spirit and seek to receive divine guidance, your necessary wants will all be supplied. We feel we have much to be thankful for since coming here. While the summer was very hot and dry at times and it seemed a total failure of crops was inevitable, yet our corn averaged twenty bushels an acre.

The coming to the land of Zion is much like coming into the church. Before doing either we have doubts and misgivings. Some one tells us things that make us afraid to take the step, and after all that is over we are glad we made the choice and would not go back to the old paths for anything.

Many times since coming here, when dark shadows would come over me, when the branch seemed all but gone, I would doubt the wisdom of coming, but such feelings would be immediately followed by the calm, peaceful assurance that all would yet be well.

The influenza epidemic swept over our country as well as other places. A few of our little flock had it in a light form. We feel very thankful all lives were spared. Our church was opened on January 5, for the first time in three months. A good spirit prevailed and we received much strength for the new year.

I have received a number of letters inquiring about this country, and am very glad to receive them and will answer all who care to write, but I always refer them to the bishopric, as I have no authority to locate anyone.

Sincerely yours,

EFFIE J. DENTON.

Editors Herald: We are certainly living in a time when everything that can be shaken will be shaken. The sifting time is here, and many who have their names on the church record, but have not put their trust in God and in his word, and have not taken the Holy Spirit for their guide, but instead have put their trust in the riches and pleasures of this world, will be sifted out. When Jesus Christ comes down from heaven with ten thousand Saints, will he find faith on the earth? I fear not.

As Brother Thomas G. Whipple said in the HERALD, so say I: Come out of worldly institutions and put the money that you are paying into the world into the Lord's storehouse, so that Bishop McGuire will have plenty of money to help the poor and especially the poor ministers' families, and aged Saints. Others besides these have to pay house rent. A good many of these, if it could be done, might be provided with a little home of their own. And I believe it could be done. Where there is a will there is a way. Then the preacher could go out and preach the gospel to the world more successfully than if he had all these worries on his mind as to how the family was getting along.

We read in the HERALD and Ensign each week that those who pay under two dollars per member to Christmas offering fund will not be reported to the Roll of Honor. It came to me, and I could not help it, that if I have to buy my honor with money I don't want any of it, but I lay my honor down at the feet of Jesus Christ, my Savior, and I know it is safe there, and he will reward me some day for my work that I have done, no matter how little it may be.

Your sister in Christ,

MARY HAWKINS.

Editors Herald: Through your columns I would express my appreciation for the help given me while in the service. I served thirteen months, and during six months of that time was greatly blessed through the HERALDS and Ensigns and Autumn Leaves sent. The letters sent me by various Christlike sisters filled me with the Spirit of Christ and lifted the gloom so that I rejoiced very much. Many of them were received during trying hours.

The sacrifices thus made in my behalf enabled me to make a good record and secure an honorable discharge. Without this help I might not have been thus honored. During my service not a mark was put down against me in drill, inspection, or formations. And the hardest thing to acquire and the most valued, was that I received not a single reprimand from any noncommissioned or commissioned officer. For it all I give thanks to the Saints and praise to God.

Your brother still,

THOMAS D. PRICE.

Editors Herald: It is a long time since I last wrote to the HERALD. I think some may feel interested in what is being done in this part of the Lord's vineyard. A year ago I was lying helpless in the Independence Sanitarium, having undergone an operation. My afflictions which had caused me trouble for forty years were cured and I am deeply thankful.

It took some time to regain my strength, but now I can say this has been a year of solid comfort. Even now, after so long a time, I can hardly realize the blessing of being able to come and go without let or hindrance.

I started for my mission field early in May and labored for a time in Parkersburg, where I baptized six precious souls. All of them were adults, two having since been ordained to the office of elder and priest. From there I went to Goose Creek and held a few meetings. Then I went to Indian Creek, to the dedication of a service flag. A very impressive service was held. Judge Woods and Mr. Prouty, a lawyer, both of Harrisville, delivered patriotic addresses, also Elder Frank L. Shinn, our district president. The church was crowded to its capacity, many having to stand.

I stayed and held a series of meetings there, during which four were baptized, three young sisters and one brother, the latter having since been called and ordained to the Melchisedec priesthood and is now presiding elder of the branch.

From Indian Creek I went to Clarksburg, where my labors were mostly pastoral, visiting and encouraging the Saints, administering to the sick, etc. From this place I went to Cabin Run, where I met Brother J. M. Nunley. We held a series of meetings in our little church on Leeson Run, which, since Brother Charles Williams and family and Luther Leeson and family have left, is almost deserted. There are now only two families left: Brother Williams and Sister Cotterill, and they live quite a distance from the church. Yet our meetings there were quite successful, a goodly number attending.

From Cabin Run, Brother Nunley and myself took train for the Kirtland reunion, where we both enjoyed a spiritual feast, for surely the dear Lord was with us at that place. We both enjoyed the kind hospitality shown us. Returning to Clarksburg, we stopped en route at Wheeling with Brother Serig. We attended the district conference at Goose Creek, August 31 and September 1. The Lord was with us and a spiritual time was had. One was baptized.

Brother McConaughy visited Clarksburg where he baptized the mother of Brother Rush.

After the conference I returned to Parkersburg, where we established a mission, placing Brethren Cross and Smith in charge. We have a hall at this place where we have a nice Sunday school organized and hold sessions every Sunday when influenza does not prevent. We have had our share of this awful scourge. For two weeks I had a time battling with the disease. Eight families of the Saints were down within a radius of thirty miles of Clarksburg, and I was kept on the move from one place to another, administering to the sick, some of whom were brought to the very gates of death. I can bear testimony that not one who was administered to failed to fully recover. Surely the Lord is good and greatly to be praised.

Since this time I have been at Benson, the home of our Brother and Sister L. L. Bailey. Two years ago I held a series of meetings in the schoolhouse. After one week they locked it against us. Since this time we have had no place to meet, but Brother Bailey has a hall 20 by 30 feet. He is the only Saint in the community, but he determined to fit up this hall for preaching services. It required much work and expense, with plumbing, gas, seats, etc. I am glad to say that after much hard but enthusiastic labor the place is ready for use. I am sure God will accept the willing sacrifice of the brother, and hope and pray that many precious souls will be brought in to see the light of the gospel and obey the same. We can now proclaim the gospel here unmolested, and it will hereafter afford a place for our missionaries and elders to come and proclaim the angel message to this people.

For the truth,

THOMAS NEWTON.

LOGAN, IOWA, January 14, 1919.

Editors Herald: As we often read the many good things in the HERALD we feel to write and express our appreciation of them, and also the gratitude that we feel for the encouragement we receive by our reading them. We have found much good food for thought which has given us a new desire to struggle on.

Little do we know the good we do each other by these silent messages, and if ever we needed the good influence that we derive by reading our church papers, it has been in the past year. As we try to analyze our spiritual condition the past year we find that we have apparently made poor progress. There has been a lack there, which in summing up would say: A lack of patience, a lack of humility, a lack of kindness, a lack of unselfishness.

It is indeed a revelation to us to stop and look at ourselves squarely and fearlessly and consider just what we have been in the past year. Ofttimes we dwell upon those things in our disposition that as it were are merely surface material, and pass lightly over it, thinking our action or words merely a trifle, and we will try to do differently next time, but when we must go to the root, wherein is found the real reason for the whyfores and the wherefores of our action, it cannot help but sober us and make us wish we had been more careful and had prevented many things from entering our dispositions, because, more or less, they are bound to find lodgment unless a careful invoice is made each day and we cast out the evil and retain the good.

I fear sometimes that our carelessness is due to our attitude of discontent of our lot in life. I remember one writer said: "Do not quarrel, therefore, with your lot in life. Do not be angry that you have to go through a network of temptation, that you are haunted with it every day. That is your practice which God appoints you. That is your practice; and it is having its work in making you patient, and humble, and sincere, and unselfish, and courteous, and guileless." That being true, we hope the new year will find us more submissive to God's will.

Edward Irving went to see a dying boy once, and when he entered the room he just put his hand on the sufferer's head and said: "My boy, God loves you," and went away. It meant much to that boy and it should mean much to us. If we are called upon to suffer tribulation, it is to bring us nearer to our heavenly Parent. He has permitted those trials to come upon us, because trials make us pure. If we could only realize that we cannot expect a bed of roses and a thornless way to tread upon, that through the clouds and the sunshine his loving care is over us, it should beget in us a new desire to be patient and humble and unselfish, and to keep his love. I desire to keep his love, to be a patient follower of him, but I do not find it an easy task, therefore I need the prayer of every righteous Saint.

Will you not please remember me before the altar of prayer, and also the afflicted ones in my home.

Sincerely your sister,

OLLIE DERRY.

AURORA, IOWA, January 15, 1919.

Editors Herald: In renewing my subscription, will say that I find I cannot get along without the church papers. I take the HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves, and often think when the time expires I will discontinue one, but when the time comes I am loath to lose even a single number. I do not like to have the papers lie around unused, and besides I wish to do my part in helping get the gospel before the world, so I hand them out or mail them to those I know will read them, and at present I have none on hand but those that have come since the new year began.

I often feel that I am divinely directed in this, and sometimes when I have papers on hand with especially good articles in them and I will be wondering where they should go, an opportunity of service will present itself. At present the superintendent of the Christian Sunday school at this place is reading some of our literature. She is a good Christian character, and assures me she is not prejudiced, and will give our claims a fair trial.

I do this because I know we have the only true gospel and if we do not do our part toward the upbuilding of the kingdom, who will? I know that often the papers will be read by nonmembers when they would not attempt to read the books. An instance in my own experience: I had the Book of Mormon in my house nearly one whole summer before coming into the church, and did not read it. But one day an article in the HERALD on prayer and faith with references taken from the Book of Alma caught my attention and I began to see the good teachings in the book. I saw there was a depth of inspiration in such teachings.

Also, if we would draw people toward the truth in our intercourse with the world in general and our neighbors, our lives must be pure. We should avoid the appearance of selfishness and seek opportunity to do good to all men. As a child of God, I feel my faults and it is my desire to "come up higher." For this I strive and pray. As one of the organizers for the Woman's Auxiliary of the church will say we should take hold upon this work for it is one of the ways the Lord is using to bring the membership up to the high standard which he would have us reach. He is taking a direct route when he works through the womanhood of our church.

To the sisters of Eastern Iowa District will say we will probably hold election of officers for the Auxiliary during next district conference. I hope all those interested will be present. Notice will appear in HERALD and Ensign.

Yours for the advancement of God's kingdom,

MRS. IRVY QUITMYER.

OGDEN UTAH, January 15, 1919.

Editors Herald: Just a few lines from the Ogden Branch, which is still progressing in the land of "Zion in the valley of the mountains."

Not very long ago Brother Richard Bullard gave us a week of interesting meetings, which has shown some effect in the temporal affairs of our branch. Just a few days after his departure the influenza ban was placed on, and from October 6 to January 5 we were not allowed to hold any services at all. When the ban was lifted there was a feeling of thanksgiving in the hearts of all of the Saints. Only one of our number was taken through the epidemic, and no others were even ill with same. Oh! how good it did feel to be able to once more offer up devotions to our heavenly Parent, and to feel that he had been mindful of his people in this far-away land.

Brother Willard Parkes, who is missionary in this district, was here for the opening evening and for a whole week gave us some sermons from which we are glad to state that there has been much good derived. Friends have been made through his splendid manner of presenting the gospel. There has been in the past a little difference of opinion among the members of the branch, but through the effort put forth by Brother Parkes, a more congenial and brotherly spirit is now permeating each and everyone, causing them to be more forgiving and thoughtful to those with whom they come in contact. In one of the sermons the "Song of entreaty" was read, and seemed to strike the innermost chord in the heart of all those present, really making us all come up higher, so as to be able to enter into the eternal rest. On the eve of departure Brother Parkes was given an urgent invitation to return as soon as possible, but he said that if he bought a round trip ticket with the donations given him, it would be some time before he would be able to get back. He also said that it would do the minds of some good, especially those who think that the people in the "valley of the mountains" are not mindful of the needs of the missionaries, to see the free-hearted manner in which the Saints helped him on his way.

Conference and convention are to be held at Malad, Idaho, March 7-9, and from the impression given us by Brother Parkes of the good things in store, we members here in Ogden are surely going to try to be there for all three days. He said that all those that did not arrive on Friday would have to furnish their own board and room. This is only an incentive for everybody to get there Friday.

Trusting that our many friends in other parts of the vineyard may be glad to hear of the interest being manifested out here, and that we will some day become a factor for the advancement of the gospel, we are ever praying for the redemption of Zion.

BRANCH CORRESPONDENT.

WESTHAM CAMP, WEYMOUTH, ENGLAND, December 22, 1918.

Editors Herald: Since I wrote you last the armistice has been signed and I have been repatriated to England. On my arrival from Holland I was granted a month's furlough, and I immediately made my way to Brother May's home, where I was hospitably received by Sister May and Sister Crick, a daughter of Brother and Sister May, and later by Brother May himself.

There happened to be a little gathering there that evening and we availed ourselves of the opportunity of singing a few of the songs of Zion and holding a short prayer meeting afterward, the first I had been in for nearly three years, and which I enjoyed very much.

Brother May had occasion to visit some of the branches in the north, and I was glad of the opportunity to accompany him, as I was able to get in touch with the work of my native land. I was sorry to see there was only one missionary in addition to Brother May, who is kept busy with his official duties as bishop of the British Isles Mission, especially as there seems to be an urgent need for more laborers in this portion of the vineyard. It seems to me that not only laborers are needed in the mission field, but there is an urgent need for high priests to preside over districts who could give their whole time to the work. Not that I depreciate the work of those who are holding the office at present, but the needs are so great and pressing that men are required who could give their whole time and energy to it. Those who have their living to earn and families to provide for cannot do as much as they would like to do. I would like to see a good force of laborers put into this field. I do not know why they are not, whether it is lack of men or lack of funds, but it can hardly be the latter, for I think our leaders are wide-awake enough to see that it is a good "business proposition" to put men in the field, even if we have to go in debt to do it, because they bring far more into the church than it costs to maintain them, and there is the number of precious souls that are brought in, which cannot be valued in pounds, shillings, and pence, or dollars and cents. It must be for want of laborers. Saints, let us unitedly pray to the Lord to send more laborers into his vineyard, but while we are praying, let us see to it that we are doing our part in the work as well, for it is no use for us to ask the Lord to do for us what we should be doing for ourselves.

There is work for us all to do in this great and glorious work, from the child of eight who has just been baptized to the oldest Saint. Let us each see to it that we do not miss an opportunity of doing something for our Master who has done so much for us. Let us show by our works how much we are valuing our church. The weakest of us can attend the services ourselves and by so doing encourage God's servants who are conducting them. And the weakest of us can invite our friends and acquaintances to attend the meetings. Think of what it would soon mean if each member of a branch made up his mind to invite one person to accompany him to church every week. If only a small percentage of them were successful what an increase in the attendance there would soon be, and what an increase in spirituality would ensue!

Let us all make a special effort this coming year and I am satisfied that if we do, we shall get special results. Let us not forget that "we must fight if we would reign." We cannot wear the crown if we do not first endure the cross. The only way we can grow in spiritual life, as in natural life, is by effort. Let us all pull together this coming year and make a mighty effort to win souls for the Master, and also to keep those who have been won and then we shall be able to look back on something attempted, something done. How many of us could say with Paul: "I have fought a good fight; I have kept the faith"? May God help each one of us to so live and so act that we may be able to say it, at the end of this coming year.

I am looking forward to soon being on my way home to my loved ones. I hope to show my gratitude to God for his watchcare over my loved ones during my absence by my labors in the church. My prayer is that his name may be glorified and his kingdom extended as a result.

I have added to my list of friends as a result of this short visit to my native land. Especially have I enjoyed the travels with Brother May. I can always enjoy myself with the Saints and shall always look back with pleasure to my visits to the Saints in England. I hope that now the war is over the church will move along with ever-increasing energy in that locality and throughout the world. May the time soon come when God's will shall be done on earth as it is now done in heaven.

As ever, your brother in the gospel,
WALTER DYKE.

PORT HURON, MICHIGAN, January 15, 1919.

Editors Herald: As I read the many good things in the pages of the HERALD, especially the letter department, I am filled with gladness and inspired with a zeal which makes me feel I would devote all my time to church work. Again, there comes a feeling of sadness as I travel here and there at my vocation, beholding the manifestation of the evil as well as good spirit. Then I am tempted to wish I could be away from it all and alone with Jesus. But as I meditate on the problems I must conclude that since God is long-suffering and ever ready to bless his people, I should be willing to do my part. There are so many powers at work in the church to hinder the spiritual development of its members, including the green-eyed monster, Jealousy, that we should try hard to avoid all of them. Satan is using all these factors of distrust, malice, strife, etc., to overthrow the work. When we allow jealousy to control us it creates a situation which is beyond even the reach of the highest officers in the church. It causes many spiritual deaths and inflicts many fatal wounds. It breaks up many branches, affects adversely the priesthood, kills future prospects, and tends to destroy every tendency toward development.

Inspired by this spirit, one finds it easy to speak dis-paragingly of some brother or sister, with the result of lowering him or her and ourselves all at one time. We should rejoice in the success of others. We should rise far above these petty and means things, to be our real, noble selves.

The work in Port Huron is growing. We have a large branch here now. Some most noble Saints have moved in, and by their pure lives and godly walk and conversation have been most helpful to the branch. We have some nine or ten elders and ten or eleven priests, with four or five each of teachers and deacons. With a force like this and a good leader, much good can be done. Our work is being extended by the opening of a mission in a fine room which we hope to occupy by February 1. It is our opinion that if many of our men who become discouraged and feel that there is nothing they can do, would get out around the edges and establish appointments under the proper direction and with the spirit of helpfulness it would greatly help the situation and be blessed of God. It will help one to become effective in the service of God.

I am trying by the grace of God to overcome all that handicaps me and hope that when my life is ended it will be with the approbation of God. To that end I desire the prayers of the Saints.

Your brother,
FRED W. CADOW.

SANTA ROSA, CALIFORNIA, January 18, 1919.

Editors Herald: Perhaps the Saints of Western Oklahoma District and the Panhandle of Texas will be surprised to hear from me in California. The cause for this change may be stated as follows: During the summer I had alarming news as to the state of my wife's health, who was at the time in Australia. I placed the matter before the joint council, with the result that I was advised to return to Australia at once. I was accordingly released from my late mission and urged both by President Smith and Bishop McGuire, who were of course representing the council, to proceed to cross the sea immediately. This was in the early part of September. By the time I had prepared to start I got letters and a cablegram from Sister Barmore to the effect that she had so far recovered as to get her passport and pay for her passage and would soon be en route to this country. On the eve of her departure she became ill again, this time with the Spanish influenza. The result was she did not arrive here until November 19.

She was still in a feeble state of health, and knowing the salubrious climate of this State would help her and also prevent the fatigue of a trip across the Rocky Mountains to Kansas, I applied to the council for a change. I was accordingly transferred to the Santa Rosa Valley, with Santa Rosa itself as my objective point. My trip out here was also delayed, first by my attendance on a family of my relatives who were all down with the influenza. After this I was delayed through waiting for my clerical permit which I had requested for this trip.

I was under the common ban from the early part of October until my arrival out here. I thought I would have a chance to hold public meetings upon reaching the Far West, but not so. I had one Sunday in San Francisco and Oakland and one here, when all private and public meetings were prohibited. I do not know how long we will be tied up. Two of our people are sick at this writing but there have been no deaths.

In gospel bonds,

[From a letter to President Smith]:

WARRENSBURG, MISSOURI, January 19, 1919.

I have always considered the work of local ministry among the most important functions of the church. It occurs to me that it is infinitely more tedious and slow to bring about the spiritual development of people in its absolute sense, than it is to bring about their birth into the kingdom.

The branch work must be the basic element in the process of the perfecting of Saints. Results will be what will determine the goodness and greatness of our church. I think we should insist on very intensive work along this line. In my comparatively short career, I have discovered that it requires untiring and incessant effort in order to make any perceptible progress in building up the people.

Unfortunately, some seem to think that it requires little time or effort to accomplish this work, and that pastors should devote most of their time to "missionary" work. The lack of pastoral concentration has possibly been one of the reasons why we have been so slow in personal and communal growth.

We feel that progress is being made in our work here. We have a good class of Saints, living at peace with each other and with the world.

We recently adopted the coordinating resolution in all departments.

Very sincerely,

FRED A. COOL.

[From a letter to the Presidency]:

The article entitled, "The art of clothing the heavenly message," by Brother Augustine Dwyer, published in January Autumn Leaves, is a most excellent production. I trust it may be read carefully by a number of the brethren. In reading it myself, I gained many new ideas. For a number of years I have tried to qualify myself for the demands that were, day by day, being made upon the representative men of the church. My reasoning was something like this: "What effect will my life and my language have upon other people; and how will the church be affected by my labors? We do not hesitate to tell the world that we have the best thing in the world in the name of religion. Shall we cheapen it and make it contemptible in the eyes of our fellowmen by reason of the crudity of the language with which we express it? The church will be, to some extent at least, measured by me, and will that measurement be a just one? Am I truly representing the church, and the Christ who is its founder, or am I misrepresenting them?" These queries have rested heavily upon me, and I have therefore worked early and late that I might, in a measure at least, overcome the handicap of illiteracy.

GROESWEN, BARBERS HILL, GREAT MALVERN, ENGLAND.

Editors Herald: The past four and a quarter years have been fraught with many difficulties, trials, and perplexities. Yet in the midst of pendulum opinions and human perversities, the evidences of the Spirit of our Master have been with his children. I wish to place on record an experience of mine that may be of interest.

A letter of mine appeared in the HERALD of October 6, 1918, in which I stated that I entertained the hope that the war would be over this year. From memory I think I said will but "may be over" is the way it is in the HERALD. My reasons for stating that opinion are well known all over the British Isles Mission amongst the Saints, and a number of nonmembers. Late in the month of April of this year certain conditions arose in which I was called on to give advice on the duration of the war. However, notwithstanding many prayers for light and direction, no direct revelation came to me. But a feeling that the calculation was correct was present. Some weeks later I had the following dream:

It seemed a letter reached me from Elder A. T. Trapp, who was in France. It was just an ordinary letter, at the close of which appeared some figures and a dove flying toward the ending of those figured dates. The indication was so singular and brief that I meditated and was told by impression so strong that to me it was right to say I was told, that those figures were important. I was sure of the figures, but when I went to make sure how the first two sets were arranged, it vanished.

I wrote to this brother's wife, first telling her that the war would be over this year, but was not sure whether in June or November. I told her it was a dream, but my inclination was that the dates were 6-11-18, the dove, the emblem of peace, flying toward the 18.

This dream was told to many, and several of the Saints wrote to me as late as October, asking for it, which was written each time as above. Brother Trapp sent me a field card date 6-11-18 that selfsame day the white ensign party were on the way to General Foch, and peace was on the wing, at or about that date. Peace or peace desires, came almost in a night, and if any prayers were answered about the horrible war, in my judgment it was this kind: Lord, let thy Spirit brood once more o'er the nations desiring peace.

I have held strong opinions about our position as a church respecting its attitude toward war—this or any other war. Yet because of Mr. Censor, only one side could be presented. The Defense of the Realm Act is of course as antiquated as the time Jeremiah was put into the pit for weakening the soldiers by telling what Nebuchadnezzar would do to Israel.

I have meditated much over Doctrine and Covenants 1, and thought that as a revelation from God, what is our position relating to it? Just as sure as the references in Enoch's prophecy in the Inspired Translation and Book of Mormon are given, I believe them. I will quote concerning the submarine warfare:

"And it came to pass that Enoch saw the days of the coming of the Son of Man, [when] in the last days, to dwell on the earth in righteousness, for the space of a thousand years. But before that day he saw great tribulations among the wicked; and he also saw the sea, that it was troubled, and men's hearts failing them, looking forth with fear for the judgments of the Almighty God, which should come upon the wicked."—Doctrine and Covenants 36: 14.

Did not the angel testify to Joseph Smith of these things? See Church History, volume 1, pages 13 and 14. These are a part of the words: "Great judgments were to come upon the earth, desolations by famine," etc. The hundreds of thousands who died in Syria and Armenia, the six millions who have died in all lands from the effects of influenza, the world scourge, are all testimonies regarding this.

Are these happenings to be accepted by us as a people as being incident to political intrigues only? I would seriously suggest that our position as a people be reconsidered. Of course no sane person ought to advocate such terms as "righteous wars." They are and always have been the result of unrighteousness, aggression and other numberless causes, summed in a phrase, as a disregard of the divine call. We are all glad it is over, and trust that the conditions, religious, industrial, political, and all, may receive a cleansing. As a church we may continue to leave military projects open to our members, but we should try to be respectful to those of our own people as well as others, who choose to do differently. God has set up the kingdom which is indestructible.

THOMAS JONES.

HEARNE, TEXAS, January 22, 1919.

Editors Herald: The debate at New Baden, Texas, is now a thing of the past. I was to meet a Mr. Nichol, but he was sick so Mr. J. W. Chism came in his place. The debate lasted eight nights of three hours each. Church propositions were discussed, and four sessions were given to each proposition. The discussion was held about seven miles from the town of New Baden. Brother R. M. Maloney and Mr. Chism held a discussion in this same neighborhood some eight years ago, and Brother Maloney is spoken of very highly yet and the sentiment of the people is still in his favor.

Chism was very abusive on the start, and once when I was speaking he came up and brushed me across the face with his finger. We came near having a "rough house" for a while, but when he found out that I would not stand for that kind of work he did much better from that on and there was no more trouble.

We canvassed about the same ground as usual, but there were a few positions taken by Mr. Chism that were new. He read Acts 2:36 and from this claimed that Jesus was made Lord and Christ on Pentecost. To disprove this I read John 13:14: "If I then your Lord and Master have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet." Also the 13th verse: "Ye call me Master and Lord: and ye say well, for so I am." Thus it was proved that Jesus was called Lord before Pentecost. As to when Jesus was called Christ, I read Matthew 16:16: "And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." This was long before Pentecost.

Mr. Chism claimed that there were no sins forgiven before Pentecost. I read Luke 7:48, where Jesus said to Mary: "Thy sins are forgiven." Also John 15:3: "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you." Jesus said this to his disciples before Pentecost. I also called attention to what Jesus said to the seventy in Luke 10:20: "Rejoice because your names are written in heaven." Their names would not be written in heaven if their sins were not forgiven.

Mr. Chism claimed that Matthew who is called Levi (Luke 5:27, 29) was also called Barnabas (Acts 4:36); that his name was Joses or Barnabas and that as Christ had a brother (Matthew 13:55) named Joses; that this man in Acts 4:36, who was Joses or Barnabas or Matthew, was the brother of Christ. I showed that Joses, the brother of Christ, would have to be of the same lineage as Christ and would be of the tribe of Judah (Hebrews 7:14). That Joses who was called Barnabas in Acts 4:36 was another person, as he was of the tribe of the Levites and of the country of Cyprus. Mr. Chism reached the height of absurdity when he claimed that because of Matthew being called Levi, he was of the tribe of Levites. I also called attention to the fact that if Matthew and Barnabas were the same person, that Matthew was ordained an apostle (Mark 3:14) but that Barnabas was called and ordained an apostle (Acts 13:3). If they were the same, then Matthew was ordained twice to the same office. Mr. Chism claimed that the eleven apostles made a mistake when they selected Matthias to take the place of Judas. He said that Paul was the one to take Judas' place. In this case the issue was between the eleven apostles and Chism. As the apostles had been with Jesus three and a half years before his death and forty days after his resurrection, I preferred to accept the work of the inspired apostles to Mr. Chism. At this point Mr. Chism looked very lonely.

Mr. Chism claimed that Christ was now sitting on David's throne up in heaven. I called attention to the fact that David never had a throne in heaven, that David's throne was at Jerusalem and that when Christ came again that then (Matthew 25:31) was when Jesus would sit on the throne of his father David.

The Saints were well pleased with the discussion, and several outsiders were made friends to the cause.

Brother J. C. Clevenger is president of the branch at New Baden, and after the discussion he was ordained to the office of elder. He is a fine man and a credit to our work.

At this writing, Brother S. W. Simmons, who moderated for me in the discussion and who did his part well, and I, are holding meeting in the Saints church near Hearne. We hope to continue over Sunday or as long as wisdom directs. This is the home of Elder Sam Hay, one of the old-timers, who has preached the gospel in this part of the country for many years and is still able to tell the Master's story with good effect.

Mr. Chism and I have arranged to hold another discussion at Fort Towson, Oklahoma, beginning August 12 and have two sessions a day, one in forenoon and one in afternoon; six days for the discussion.

We left the community where the discussion was held with the people strong in our favor.

Jude says: "Earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints." This is what we have been doing and expect to continue.

In gospel bonds,

J. F. CURTIS.

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI, January 23, 1919.

Editors Herald: Saints of southern Illinois will no doubt be wondering where our missionary has gone. I am sorry to have to say that the sad condition of my companion and the prevailing scourge, influenza, has prevented me from doing very much real active work this past year. But I am trying to arrange my home affairs so that my companion can have the care she needs without my losing my ministerial work.

I surely enjoyed my little stay in my old field. Our branch has again been called upon to lose another worker, which has left us very much in need of real, live, active workers. If there is anyone who is looking for a place where his services in the church would be more useful, I know of no place better than Springfield, and I feel sure he would have no difficulty in obtaining work either as a mechanic or laborer.

I am sure there must be many who could be of great benefit to some of these smaller branches who are now almost inactively located in some larger branch.

Christ says, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and its righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Who is willing to take him at his word and make a change?

Yours for active workers,

H. SPARLING.

PRINCE ALBERT, SASKATCHEWAN, January 23, 1919.

Editors Herald: I am a constant reader of the HERALD. My sister and I wait from time to time for the Stepping Stones. The story, "Birds of a feather," is very anxiously looked for. The HERALD is very eagerly looked for by all. We are isolated Saints, and they know how dear the papers are.

I like very much to read the letters from the boys of the allies, and this time the HERALD contained an article which impressed me very much. It was the memorial sermon of Lieutenant Lyman E. Case, of Lamoni, Iowa, by John F. Garver. How many of us in this world appreciate the sacrifices which those boys have made?

How many think that the people over here will be better after their sacrifice in the war? When the influenza broke out, people thought it awful to have to give up going to shows and dances. Little did they think how many had died over there that their lives might be extended. I heard some say, "Oh, I wish the 'flu' was over so that I could dance or go to a show." They did not think how short their own lives might be.

The influenza is as bad here as ever, but they opened up the shows and dance halls while people are dying every day.

I was sorry to know that our young people attended the shows regularly. The young people in the church are the ones who influence the young outside a great deal. I have found when I speak of a wrong to the young, they will say, "Well, certain others do it, and they are members of the church. Why do you speak to me of it as wrong when I don't belong?" Or, "I live as good as that person. I will get there if he does, even if I am not in the church." Whenever we go we are watched and all our faults are remembered by people outside of the church. I had a very dear chum once. She and I used to talk religion and also write it. She attended our Sunday school for about a year and a half, till at last she moved out of the neighborhood, and I, too, was gone quite a while. But before I left her, she said: "I know that the Latter Day Saint Church is the only way and path to tread to receive eternal life."

Later I received a letter from her saying she had joined the Pentecostal people and that she thought the people of that church lived better than the Latter Day Saints. They never had any quarrels and fights, and did not talk about people. How this hurt me. I tried every way to tell her that it was not the fault of the church, but she said the church was supported by the people.

I told her that there was more good than bad in the church, but as I said, she looked at the bad of the church and not at the good.

So for a dear cause, young people, be careful where you tread, for your lives reflect on others very much.

Ever praying for the welfare of God's people,

MISS GERTIE GLOVER.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, January 23, 1919.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I wrote to you, and thinking a few lines from Uncle John would do good to some poor downcast soul, I thought I would write.

I am now in my seventy-fifth year and have belonged to the Reorganized Church fifty years the eleventh of March, 1919, and in active ministry ever since. I have baptized 583, blessed 315 children, preached 106 funeral sermons, married 52 couples, ordained 59 to the ministry. I have organized 14 branches, besides other work done. In 1880 the Lord told me if I was faithful in declaring his gospel I should enter his kingdom and behold those that I had labored hard to bring unto him. I find myself growing weaker as the days go by, and although I must soon lay this mortal body to rest, he showed me the return of our bodies by the resurrection from the dead.

While on a mission in California, at Santa Cruz, in 1904, I had the following vision:

I was in the Spirit, and at once I found myself standing near Mound Grove Cemetery, in Independence, Missouri, and to my delight I saw the dirt come up and lay on the ground beside the graves. I saw many of the Saints standing in their graves with beautiful, immortal bodies. I said: "Why don't they ascend?" The Spirit answered me: "Not yet, but by and by."

I saw the Prophet Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum, both standing in one grave. As I looked at those two men

I said: "How can the Hedrickite people believe they were fallen prophets when they have such beautiful bodies?" For I had never beheld such a grand sight before. I saw graves not opened, and it was plain to me that they had to wait until the Lord called again. There was one serious thought which struck me very forcibly, as I read by discernment: While all seemed to be well acquainted with each other, yet not one possessed a spark of carnal nature that they had when in mortality. All were aiming for the one grand object and that was to please God, and rise, and be with and like him. When I came to myself, I was two thousand miles from Mound Grove Cemetery.

To me the power of the gospel is grand; I know of three times when cancer has been removed while my hands were on the head of the suffering child of God; also of cure of spinal meningitis and appendicitis. Many other kinds of diseases that while here in mortality the human race is subject to, have been healed by the power of God. These signs, said the Master, shall follow the believer. I know that the Reorganized Church is not a rejected church with God, but she is, if faithful, the bride, the Lamb's wife, whom the Master will take to himself on his wedding day. Why then, should I leave that bride and join a man-made church that surely cannot stand in the judgment day?

I don't deny but what church builders may have revelations, but from whence did they come? Doctor Thorn, in Kansas City, told me that he had seen more angels than Joseph Smith ever saw. I said to him: "They were black angels, weren't they, doctor?" If there are members in my church who won't do as God has commanded and receive the blessings of God, it is their fault, and the Lord will look after them, and not I. For if they won't obey God, they won't obey J. C. Foss. These are the trying latter days; every plant that God has not planted, shall be rooted up.

Remember, he that carries the pruning knife will give you a call. His vials of wrath are now being poured out upon the world of mankind, for it is the hour of his judgment. And upon the ruins of the nations he will establish the fifth universal kingdom that will fill the whole earth, under the reign of King Jesus, from heaven.

Then let us be cheerful and happy in the conflict day by day and trust in the strength of our Savior, who helps us on our way.

Yours in the gospel,

J. C. FOSS.

RICH HILL, MISSOURI, January 24, 1919.

Editors Herald: Just a few lines from the Clinton District. Wish we could report a good work being done, but under conditions now existing, we think we are doing well to hold our own. The terrible scourge of influenza had well-nigh paralyzed the services in all the branches. But now meetings are being resumed, and although the plague still continues, we hope the regular meetings can be maintained. Only two of our members have been taken by the plague: Brother Bert Weeks, of Mapleton, and Sister Charlton, of Rich Hill.

But there remains a great deal of sickness, especially about Butler and Rich Hill. My principle work now is visiting the members from house to house. I came here on the 20th and expect to remain over Sunday. The Saints here are all lamenting the removal of their president, Elder Merle M. Quick, to Independence. Priest August Deller has been chosen to succeed him.

Rich Hill offers a splendid opportunity for the location of Saints who desire to obtain cheap homes in a town where there is a branch. There is a comfortable, though not very stylish, church building here, with a seating capacity of over three hundred, electric lights and piano in the building.

Many homes for sale cheaper than the bare material would cost for the buildings. Living as cheap here as anywhere. A nice town, with a nice surrounding country. Saints, if you want to locate in a town where there is a branch, don't overlook Rich Hill; town property is surprisingly cheap.

Our conference is set for February 15 and 16, at Fort Scott. We hope to be favored with a goodly representation from the branches, and hope that sickness may not again hinder us.

Let us all be very humble, prayerful, and faithful in this great gospel cause. H. E. MOLER.

EVANSVILLE, WISCONSIN, January 25, 1919.

Editors Herald: It is with mingled feelings of joy and sadness that I now endeavor to write a few lines to the readers of the HERALD, and especially the members of the Northeastern Illinois District. The dreaded "flu" passed us by till January 9, when Sister Dutton and our second girl came down with it, and in a day or so our boy, aged four years. The children were very sick for about forty-eight hours, and then developed two very bad cases of croup, and nothing we or the doctor could do would break up the disease. It lasted five nights, not being so bad in the day.

During all this Sister Dutton was very sick, and in the first part of her sickness the pain in her head was very severe, and resulted in the breaking of a blood vessel in the black of her right eye, which totally destroyed the sight for the time at least. We called Doctor Thorne, a specialist from Janesville, and he said that in time she might regain her sight, if proper absorption should take place. Of course, we called the elders and administered several times, knowing that all things are possible with God, if not with men. Elder B. C. Flint and I did our best to exercise faith in God, and later Elder W. A. McDowell arrived, and we three administered, and to some extent there came a change for the better, and she could distinguish light and large dark objects; one day could count the fingers on her hand.

She is left very weak, and it will take time for her to regain her natural strength. The children are gaining fast, and all being well, will soon be as good as ever. Now we desire the prayers of all Saints that she may fully recover according to the promises of the Lord. To quite an extent we have already made our wants known to many of the branches of the Northeastern Illinois District and some in southern Wisconsin, but take this means of asking all the Saints to unite with us that her eye may be healed.

Now some may wonder where there could be feelings of joy: let me say that as we look around us we see many homes that have suffered death, some fond mothers and fathers have been taken to the other side, and their children left to the charity of others. Some homes have been made sad by their children suffering unto death, and thus as we stop and consider we feel that we have great reason to rejoice and give praise to our God. But mingled with this comes the sadness we feel for others less fortunate than ourselves. One reason why I especially wanted to reach the members of the Northeastern Illinois District was that they might know the reason why I am absent from my field, and some of the branches not getting the meetings desired and promised. I will again be at your service at the earliest time possible. Remember us, and especially Sister Dutton, as you bow around your family altars day by day.

Thus may we be able to fulfill the teachings of Paul of old who said: "And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it." (1 Corinthians 12: 26.)

We feel that this has been the case thus far where the Saints have heard of our misfortune, and especially do we Minnesota conference on February 15 and 16, instead of 16th, as recently printed.

Holden Stake, at Holden, February 15 and 16. In consultation with those in charge of the auxiliary work, we have arranged so that the work of the auxiliary societies will be attended to in the conference session, the auxiliaries meeting at special times during the sitting of the conference to attend to the special work which relates to their departments. Heretofore the Sunday school and Religio societies have been meeting on Friday, but the conference will begin at 10 o'clock on Saturday, as per notice of the stake secretary. D. J. Krahl, stake president; F. A. Cool, superintendent Sunday school association; I. M. Ross, president Religio; Mrs. I. M. Ross, stake organizer, Woman's Auxiliary.

Quorum Notices

TO THE FIRST SEVENTY

The brethren of the First Quorum of Seventy will please send me their yearly reports, to 231 South Smith Street, Spokane, Washington, covering the period from March 1, 1918, to March 1, 1919. Use the usual report blanks for reporting. I would like to urge that each one be as prompt as possible in getting these reports into my hands, that I can compile the entire report of the quorum for the General Conference. These reports should be in my hands by March 15. If any of the brethren have acted in any office besides a seventy, such as district or branch president, etc., please so state in your report. Those who are not going to General Conference should send in their quorum dues, which is 25 cents per member per year.

Respectfully, in gospel fellowship,

S. S. SMITH,
Secretary of Quorum.

Our Departed Ones

HAGER.—Jacob Hager, was born May 7, 1835, in Germany. Came to America when 18 years old. Married Martha Thoday, of Lockport, New York, in 1861. Seven children were born to them, 3 sons and 4 daughters; 2 sons preceded him in death. Baptized by Brother Burgess in 1865 or 1866. Died at Berkeley, California, January 15, 1919. Sermon by C. A. Parkin; was interred at Ukiah.

CROSSER.—Morgan M. Crosser was born November 13, 1881, at Willow Springs, Nebraska, and died at Josie, Nebraska, January 21, 1919. Baptized May 20, 1896. Married Minnie Downey, October 9, 1900. Wife, 3 sons and 2 daughters, father, one brother, one sister remain to mourn his departure.

GRIFFEN.—George Wesley Griffen, son of William and Agnace Morgan Griffen, was born March 23, 1884, at Oshawa, Ontario. Baptized in 1908 by R. C. Evans. Married Miss Alma Perrin, of Lindsay, Ontario, February 16, 1910. Two children, Marguerite May and Harold Royden, were born to them. Died of pneumonia following influenza, December 24, 1918. Funeral from his residence in Port Dalhousie, Ontario. Sermon by J. W. Davis.

STEPHENSON.—Corporal Maurice B. Stephenson was killed in action in France, July 28, 1918. He was the son of Mrs. Jennie Stephenson, born near Red Oak, Iowa, September 12, 1895. Had been employed as pressman at Red Oak. Was a member of the church and led a clean life to the end. Besides his mother, leaves to mourn 5 brothers and one sister: Otis E. and Carl B., of North Branch, Michigan, Ora J., of Minneapolis, Clarence and Russell, of Red Oak, and Mrs. George H. Bremner, of LaGrange, Illinois. Memorial services held at Shenandoah, Iowa, September 13, by Daniel Macgregor.

FROM HERE AND THERE

Our elders or others are invited to stop in Racine, Wisconsin, and visit Brother Peter Johnson, at 1783½ Spring Street. He was formerly of Saint Louis but has been out of touch with the church for some time. He would like to have services held.

BOY SCOUT HANDBOOKS

For the convenience of those who would like to order their handbooks for the boys interested in the Scout movement, this office has stocked the official handbook in the limp cloth cover. It is a book of value to anyone, whether he be a boy or only interested in them. The information is worthy a prominent place in any library. The index is complete, and the book of convenient size for carrying in the pocket into the woods and field. The price is forty-five cents postpaid. Mention this to your scoutmasters.

CHRISTMAS OFFERING

There are just ten more days in which to get your 1918 Christmas offering into this office. On the closing day last year, we received telegraphic and long distance telephone requests to hold the account open until the offerings of certain schools could arrive. If possible, kindly send your offering in at once and avoid the closing rush and expense.

A noble effort has been put forth and the best news of all is that we are going to try again. No one could be anything but optimistic were he to read the hundreds of letters received in this office expressing the resolutions and determinations of schools and individuals relative to the 1919 Christmas offering campaign.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

We need several copies of the HERALD for May 22, 1918. Those not keeping their files complete would do us a favor by mailing us a copy of this number. Some important calls are being made for that number as well as the needs for our own files.

SOCIAL GATHERING IN THE AUXILIARY COLUMN

Note the call of the president of the Woman's Auxiliary in their department this week. It is a call that should meet with excellent response and prove most interesting to all. And the report of the opening of Temple Hall, in Kansas City, affording a real home for our girls employed there, reveals a practical demonstration of the principles of our work.

"I would like to have any of the elders who are in this part of the country stop with us. Anyone at Otto can direct them to our home. We trust some missionaries will find it possible to call on us."—Mrs. George B. Nelson, Otto, Wyoming.

A Sunday school has been organized in Washington, District of Columbia, by Brother Glaud R. Kuykendall, with W. R. Davison, of 806 E Street Southwest, as superintendent. They meet at the home of Brother Davison for the present. It is a small band, but we hope they will be able to get in touch with the other Saints finding employment in the capital city, there being a considerable number there.

A PHASE OF COORDINATION

The Zion's Hope Sunday School of Saint Louis held its installation service of officers and teachers on January 12, the morning preaching hour being used for this purpose, the pastor of the branch taking an active part throughout, as well as taking charge of the service. They had prepared neat, folded programs of the services, with names of the branch officers and Sunday school officers and teachers. It was made a consecration service of the Sunday school.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

Prayer in its simplest form is asking for something. In a little higher form it is returning thanks for something received.

It is logical for God to demand that we ask him for something that he knows that we need, and return thanks for it when he knows we are thankful. It seems to us that by our own conduct toward our children we commend him in this action. The intelligent parent knows that his child has need of many things. Some of those wants he supplies freely. But there are many other things concerning which the parent thinks that if they are worth having they are worth asking for. When they are asked for and given, it is a matter of good training that some expression of thanks shall be made.

On the other hand, the parent who anticipates every desire and lavishes gifts upon his child, even before the child realizes the need, ruins him. Such a course breeds ingratitude, one of the meanest of traits.

In like manner, God grants us many blessings daily, but there are many others we must ask for. We thus come to realize our needs, and to realize the source of supply. Having received them we must return thanks. If we do not take time to express our gratitude, soon we will not take time to be grateful.

The commandment then is just, where he says, "In everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known to God."

Prayer leads to self-examination. The man who pleads for forgiveness is confronted by the question, Have I forgiven others? The man who pleads for the poor can scarcely avoid the thought, Is there anything that I can do to help them? The man who asks that his wife and children may be protected cannot escape the thought, Am I true to them in thought and act?

Thus, whatever his petition, the man who comes to the throne of grace comes not face to face with God alone, but face to face with himself. He sees his own duty as no sermon, lecture, or printed document could explain it to him. Prayer is logical because of its effect upon the suppliant.

Prayer is the only avenue by which we establish communion with God. When the father and son talk over the needs of the son and plan together regarding them, there is close and pleasant companionship; it is the same with the heavenly Father and his children.

On these four points, then, prayer justifies itself: As a means of asking, as a means of thanksgiving, as an incentive to self-examination, and as a means of communion with the source of all wisdom and purity.

There is also a reason for our custom of assembling ourselves together in prayer meetings, or appointing days to be observed throughout the church to pray for certain things.

Two little girls were close friends. But there was something that came between them; one was white and the other was black. One day the little white girl said, "I have been praying a long time for you to turn white." "Oh, you mustn't do that," the little colored girl cried, "for I have been praying for you to turn black."

You see they were praying at cross purposes, and had God answered them they would have been no better off than before. When Saints are far scattered and each pursues his own desires, regardless of others, there is no unity of action. But when they are assembled together, or when a day is appointed to pray for certain things, there is an intelligent cooperation. There is no danger that their desires will conflict.

Prayer does not ask for the setting aside of law, and so the quarrel that scientists have essayed to pick with the prayerfully inclined is groundless. In fact, when viewed from the correct standpoint, the suppliant is found to be cooperating with law toward the desired end.

One Latter Day Saint elder was called to a hospital to administer to a patient who was very ill, and in a nervous and feverish condition. The physician in charge rather objected to the proceeding, because he anticipated some wild incantation that would excite the patient. He was invited to put the matter to a test and take the temperature and pulse of the patient both before and after administration. He did so. And after the patient had been anointed with oil and a quiet prayer had been offered, it was discovered that both pulse and temperature were much nearer normal than before.

Why not? God made no mistake in ordering the observance of that ordinance. (James 5:14, 15.) The physician in question often afterward came in contact with the elders, at the sickbed, and later made a statement, that, in his opinion, aside from any miraculous blessings coming from on high, there was a quieting and comforting influence around the one who felt that his case had been placed in the hands of God that was decidedly beneficial to the patient.

Doctor T. B. Hyslop, at one time superintendent of the Royal Hospital, London, writing on this very subject said, "As an alienist and one whose whole life has been concerned with the sufferings of the mind, I would state that of all hygienic measures to counteract disturbed sleep, depressed spirits, and all the miserable sequels of a distressed mind, I would undoubtedly give the first place to the simple habit of prayer. Let there be a habit of mighty communion, not as a mendicant or repeater of words adapted to the tongue of a sage, but as a humble individual who submerges or asserts his individuality as an integral part of a greater whole. Such a habit does more to clean the spirit and strengthen the soul and to overcome mere incidental emotionalism than any other therapeutic agent known to me."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

It is a sin when low things, however good in themselves, stand in the way of high things.—Rufus Ellis.

PURPOSE OF THE GIFTS

Do we fully appreciate and value the gifts of the Spirit? Many of those who place the most stress upon these gifts, value them, apparently, the least.

We go to church. Is there the gift of tongues and interpretation? Is there the gift of prophecy? We go home and say, "We have had a good meeting. Brother A spoke in prophecy, Brother B spoke in tongues, and Brother C gave the interpretation."

"What did they say?"

"Oh, I don't remember just what. Just told us to be better, or something like that."

And straightway we forget even that little bit, and simply go on in our old way of living. Do we really believe it is from God? If so, why do we so generally reject it and forget it, in fact?

Then many go to a General Conference and if there is a revelation given, they report a good Conference. If some one is called to office, it is easy to remember and state. If some principles and directions are laid down for the work, but few undertake to remember them and still fewer to understand.

Some are inclined to feel as one good brother expressed himself when some were talking about understanding this revelation, "Why, I don't understand it. I don't even begin to understand it. I don't understand the first word of it. I don't expect to understand it either now or a hundred years from now. I expect to grow and grow and grow up to it through all the ages yet to come."

That is a worthy ambition, that we may grow. Yet we may respectfully submit that we believe that an intelligent and divine Father has given us instruction for to-day. He is giving that which he believes we now stand in need of. He has much more for us to grow up to in the ages to come. What does it profit us what he gives now—an interpretation of tongues or the gift of prophecy—if we do not understand it? What does a revelation profit us if we do not understand it, and do not put it into effect?

As has been truly pointed out, the gifts of the Spirit are not an end, but a means to an end—better understanding and development of the Christ character within us. The gifts of wisdom and of knowledge are a means to prepare us better for the performance of our daily work before God. The gift of faith and the gift of healing are also better to fit us for our work. The discerning of spirits, the speaking in tongues, the interpretation of tongues, the voice of prophecy, are all means to the one end—better to fit us for the work before us. If they do not do this we have lost something that we should possess.

This appears to be the argument of the Apostle Paul in 1 Corinthians 12, 13, and 14. Even the three, faith, hope, and charity, are to fit us yet better for our work. They are not alone an end in themselves, but a means to an end—the development of the Christlike character within us; a closer communion with the divine.

It may be noted that there are diversities of gifts, which we often refer to as the spiritual gifts, and which are manifested in our public meetings and last but for a little while. A man may speak under the inspiration of God there, but this does not mean that all of his utterances at other times are likewise inspired. It is a temporary matter for our encouragement and instruction. So is the gift of healing for our blessing at the time. The gift of knowledge, of wisdom, of faith, and the discerning of spirits remain with us as continuing blessings. Yet these gifts, we are told by Paul, are divided, they are given to each one as the Lord wills. All have not the gift of prophecy; all have not the gift of healing; all have not the gift of interpretation; but he shows us the more excellent way, that the Spirit gives to each one to profit withal, and also that each may have faith, hope, and charity.

For charity (the pure love of God), hope, and faith as discussed in the 13th chapter, should be with us as abiding gifts, growing up unto everlasting life. The love for the brethren, for one another, for our heavenly Father, is not a matter of a passing moment, but should be increasing or growing with us as life grows richer.

And not only is this true, but also it is a gift that each and everyone of us may possess. We all should have love one for another.

These gifts under God are the better to prepare us for his service. Dreams, visions, are matters of the passing time, but their message should be to us for encouragement and for strength. But all gifts, even that of charity, which is placed as the greatest of all, are the means to the end of accomplishing the divine purpose in our lives.

We are told to covet earnestly the best gifts. It is right that we should ask of our heavenly Father, his divine instruction and direction. But if we ask and then do not obey, if we ask and then straightway forget, or remember only to say the Lord has spoken to us, yet remember not his word, let alone try to understand it, then the blessing he has given us becomes to us rather a cursing for our failure.

It is useless to ask for divine command unless we are willing to obey. Unless we are ready, not only to do the will of God, but also willing to earnestly strive to understand that which he has declared, who can do his will?

He is ready. Are we?

WHAT A LOCAL MAN CAN DO

In this week's issue we are publishing a letter from Elder George H. Wixom, president of the Southern California District. We are doing so as an illustration of what may be done through a determined effort by our local men in connection with the ability of certain men of whom we have several. We are printing herewith Elder Wixom's letter, because it gives some suggestions that it is well for us to keep in mind.

It is one unfortunate factor that all too often we send for some man, arrange for a special series of meetings, and then start him cold. Not a thing has been done to prepare for the meetings, or at the most, a few cheap handbills have been distributed. For one thing, the success of our work should depend upon a united effort. There should be advertising. This should be taken care of by the local men.

We do not think that we should copy the men of the world in all things, but it is quite a contrast to notice how when an evangelist is coming to a city the churches make special effort, by prayer, cottage meetings, and in other ways to prepare for him. Is it too much, or is it wrong that we should pray earnestly and unitedly that the Lord will bless his work and bless the efforts we are about to make? Would it be sin to support with our most devoted prayer the speaker of the hour, or the speaker of the week? Most assuredly not.

Support can well be given by the choir; it can well be given by the priesthood; it can well be given by the membership; and in prayer, as also by advertising.

Also, as Elder Wixom points out, we can well afford to use the men that we have to let the truth be known about our work and about our people—the truth and the whole truth, by meeting in a fair, frank manner and utilizing the efforts of the men that we have where it will do the most good.

Many times local men are unwilling for a meeting to be held in their neighborhood. They will go to see the mayor about their personal interests, but not in behalf of the church.

We have never been convinced that in setting forth the man and his message we thereby belittle the message and too greatly honor the man. We should feel free to use the instruments our heavenly Father has placed at our disposal, and we include within that term our brethren with their special talents and ability. Some openings a man can go out and make himself, but such openings as Elder Wixom refers to are done best with the assistance and support of the local men of standing.

I am inclosing you an account of some of our activities in this district which may be of interest to the readers of the HERALD. It is not my purpose to unduly praise the efforts of Brother Rushton, or to make it appear that I think that he is the only preacher in the church who can tell the gospel story. But I wish to emphasize the importance of making friends with our neighbors and associates in life, and by exercising wisdom in presenting our message to those who have heard only the bad, make them our friends and gain their confidence so that later we may have the opportunity to clearly state our faith to ears that are willing to hear.

I also wish to remind ourselves that our men cannot go out and make their own openings. We must assist them in this matter. Our local pastors and district officers all over the church should appreciate the ability of all such men as Brother Rushton, and should push them to the front whenever possible. I have noticed that so far as our own district is concerned, unless I am on the job and making openings for such men, they are left almost to themselves, and they are merely invited to preach, if they happen to attend the service. I think that all our local men everywhere throughout the church should inform themselves as to when such men are available and then advertise them far and wide.

When the public is once aroused to the fact that we have such men, bearing such a wonderful message, they are amazed and surprised. My statement of our experiences is a conservative statement of the facts, which can be verified. We hesitate to write this up lest it be misunderstood, and it be thought that we were trying to unduly praise the man while losing sight of the importance of the message he bears.

G. H. WIXOM.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION

Even if somewhat late, the HERALD rejoices that national prohibition has come. Just which State had the honor of completing the three fourths vote we are not aware at present writing. Thirty-seven States had ratified it before the 18th of January. Several States ratified it the preceding week. The amendment was as follows, and will be the 18th amendment to the constitution of the United States:

Section 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from, the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

Section 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Section 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided by the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

Three fourths of the States have ratified it, as required by the constitution. Only eleven have not, and several of the eleven are on the point of ratifying.

In view of this fact it is strange to note that some of the large eastern journals speak of it as enforced by a minority of the people. Some urge that it will not prevent the manufacture of liquor, nor has the law against murder and stealing prevented those crimes, but has reduced their number.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has opposed the liquor traffic from its earliest organization; opposed it in Far West, in Nauvoo, in Lamoni, and in Independence. As a beverage it has become clear that alcohol has no food value, but is a deceiver. It stimulates for a short time, but the after effect is depression.

As a medicine its use has greatly diminished both in hospitals and outside; many able physicians believe its internal use can be eliminated entirely without ill effects. In fact, it has been seriously questioned, within recent years, whether it has any value from a medicinal point of view, unless it be for bathing.

Statements heretofore have clearly shown that critical tests have been made which demonstrated that alcoholic beverages always lower efficiency. It is quite probable that the economic aspect has had a large part to do with its final rejection.

THE LOAN EVIL

In the cities, and especially the larger cities, the loan evil is a very great one. They encourage men working for wages or a salary to secure a small loan, and then charge rates of interest far beyond the legal rate, sometimes charging as much as ten per cent a month. The risk, the character of the business, the lack of security, offers an excuse in part, but not entirely.

Once one gets in debt to a loan shark, it is very difficult indeed to escape, for it takes so much to pay the interest it is difficult to get ahead so as to pay upon the principal. Once a debt is made a loan shark will follow up his victim from city to city, and State to State, assigning claims for collection.

An effort has been made in several States, as it has in Missouri, to prevent the salary being attached, but this is avoided by requiring an assignment of salary.

Many corporations will discharge a man as soon as his salary is attached. But that does not help the employee.

Legal reform bureaus to eliminate the loan shark evil have been organized. But twenty-one States have failed to enact legislation to relieve this oppression of the wage earner. Eleven States have made some attempt but have not passed adequate legislation; while only fourteen States have made adequate provision. These fourteen States, with only two exceptions are east of the Mississippi River. Four are in New England; four more are upon the eastern coast; three are the three States east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

A MISSION PAPER: THE GREAT NEED

We look into the future and see thousands of people reading a paper published by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. It is entitled The Restorer, and every page shouts out the tidings of good news to men. Many significant illustrations burn into the brain through the retina lessons that cannot escape the memory. Articles that have come from the inspired brains of missionaries will tell the facts concerning this great plan of salvation. The distinct features of our belief will be kept before the public mind. The heart of the Book of Mormon will be laid bare that people may see its purity and sense its worth. The challenge of the Doctrine and Covenants will be thundered till the "wisdom of this world" bows down before it. And hundreds of other things introduced.

May we not have such a paper? Have we not need for it? Let the HERALD and Ensign live; there is a field for both; but give us the mission advocate. Something that can be sold for not over a cent a copy. (The deficit being met by church appropriation.) Printed with bold-faced type such as used by the American Bible Company. Let printed knowledge cover the earth as the waters cover the deep. Let this standard of warning be raised—let it be placed in the hands of millions. The times cry out to us. And we must heed this cry. That there is virtue in the printed word we know. The Lord has commanded us to publish tracts and to reach the nations by means of the printing press. Such has been the history of the work since its establishment in 1830. Yet at no time has the church been equipped with a one-hundred-per cent perfect mission periodical. In the days of our lack of funds we were obliged to make our papers do work for the member of the church as well as the outsider, but to-day there is enough money held by members of the church to make possible a realization of this great blessing to the world—the enquiring world.

What is the best way to establish this new department? May we not hear from the members of the church? Will not every gospel literature worker turn the lamp of his inspiration a bit higher and create interest wherever he can?

Let us begin now this great after-war work of reconstruction. And yet not so much reconstruction with us as a church as making full use of every means we possess for the advancement of the kingdom of God.

R. W. FARRELL.

THE INNER MAN

Science and revelation speak to us of the inner man. The former of what scientists have observed, from outward results, but in the latter, God reveals to us the facts concerning the spirit which he has created. Beyond a doubt divine revelation is the safest guide. But we may not reject the conclusions of the scientists where they are not at variance with God. No harm can come to us from doubting man's improved conclusions, but, great harm may result from a disbelief in God's word. One thing must always follow: true science and true revelation must always agree.

It is not our aim to discuss this question from the viewpoint of psychology. But we shall confine our argument in this paper to a consideration of the scriptural texts on this subject.

WHERE SHALL WE BEGIN?

It is important that we get a right start, and that we reason from a proper basis. I am sure no better basis can be found than Jesus, our elder Brother, for: "Verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham. Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren." (Hebrews 2: 16, 17.)

Before arriving at that conclusion, Paul had just written, "For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one: for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren." (Verse 11.) In a certain sense, which he is yet to explain, he and we are alike. In proof of his position, Paul quotes from the Old Testament: "Behold I and the children whom God hath given me," (verse 13) thus making us all alike, both he and us. His logical conclusion then follows: "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same." (Verse 14.)

Several points appear above:

1. Jesus and we are brethren in a certain sense other than spiritual sense.
2. That certain likeness refers to a union of an intelligent spirit within, and a body without.
3. That children, either he or we, are not the flesh and blood.
4. That the children, Jesus especially, and we as surely, existed before the flesh and blood.
5. That both he and we willed to take upon us flesh and blood. Hence we were intelligent beings before taking flesh and blood in order to thus decide.
6. Therefore we could reason without the flesh and blood, i. e., without a body.
7. In this matter of previous will and reason, Jesus and we are alike.

8. Not only was he made like us in this matter but also in "all things." (Verse 17.)

9. Then he being made like us, we were made like him—spirit and body—inner man and outer man.

That which we see with our natural eyes is not the most important part of man. The spirit which dwells within is the ruling factor, as the hand controls the glove. The outer man must perish. The spirit which was intelligent before clothing itself with flesh and blood is just as intelligent when it lays that covering aside. Saint Paul has said, "Though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day." (2 Corinthians 4:16.) The spirit is not therefore dependent on the flesh, else when the outward man would perish, the spirit would perish with it.

The inward part, to be called truly a man, must not only be distinct, but doubtless also of the same size and shape of the other man without.

Our natural eyes see only natural things, and but few of them. We see only the weak and insignificant things of nature. The real powers and forces of earth we do not see, as the centripetal and centrifugal forces; or heat, cold, electricity, growth, and gravitation. Neither do we see the real life force within us. We cannot see it enter the body nor leave it any more than we can see heat enter a room and leave it. We can only judge by its effects. We shall demonstrate that the spirit exists throughout the entire body, is indeed an inner man.

If the Bible be accepted as proof, the matter is settled at once. Dives recognized Lazarus though both were disembodied. (Luke 16:24.) Moses and Elias appeared unto Christ and were recognized by Peter, James, and John as being like Christ in form (Matthew 17:3, 4) though they were both but spirits. The spirit of one of the prophets appeared to John on the Isle of Patmos. (Revelation 19:10.)

Moses wrote: "The life of the flesh is in the blood" (Leviticus 17:11) therefore, wherever the blood exists in the body, there is the life of man. The life is not the blood, neither is the blood the life, but the life is in the blood.

That the blood is not the life is proved in the death of every man. The blood remains, but the life departs. Flesh, nerve, bone, and brain all remain, but life flees away. None of these are the inner man, not even the breath, for there is more breath, i. e., more air, in a dead man than in a living one.

Blood is neither pain nor feeling. Neither can feeling be attributed to the nerves for each exist in a dead body, yet without feeling. It may be true that when we sever a nerve that destroys the sense of feeling beyond the break, but that does not destroy life, as proved in paralysis. The life still exists but its means of communication is cut off. If after paralysis the blood could not enter the paralyzed part it would at once decay, which proves that life is in the blood. Therefore, our life, or spirit, is in the exact size and form of our bodies.

The spirit is intelligent either within or without the body. Moroni visited Joseph Smith and conversed with him in a disembodied spirit. John the Baptist, ordained both Joseph and Oliver Cowdery while yet not resurrected. There are thousands of testimonies of unimpeachable saints who have seen and recognized their departed friends. Not only the law but the testimony proves our contention. Jesus himself has been seen in all ages both before and since his incarnation, and we are made like him.

While in the body, the spirit may either use the nerves to report its acts or work without them. We grow to maturity, yet no one can feel himself grow. We think and reason, yet no one can feel himself think. Our blood circulates through our entire system but we do not feel it. We digest our food but we do not sense it. There is no effort on our part to do any of these things. The inner man is attentive to that and does not make these matters known to the outer man. This indicates a superior existence. Seeing the inner man can operate parts of our being unknown to us indicates that he may even live separate from the body. That he may seize and operate the machinery of the body indicates his superiority. A superior existence indicates a possible separate existence.

SPIRITUAL FOOD

How careful many are to select and prepare the right kind of food for their bodies. How careful to house and clothe the outer man. What skill in surgery and medicine to perpetuate his physical existence. A whole life of toil and care is spent for the benefit of the mortal man. But with all the care and toil, all must lose out in the battle. For the fiat of God: "Dust thou art and to dust thou shalt return," must stand. Many seem to aim at nothing more than to evade or circumvent the purposes of God with respect to the outer man.

Why should man spend all his strength on so perishable a thing? Why pay so much attention to the outer man and neglect the more important part of our being? Where would be the wisdom in spending all our time polishing the glove to the utter neglect of the hand within? Each should have its paramount care.

All down the ages the supreme folly of man has been to care for his body and starve his spirit. It is yet the most shameful mistake of all people, even the best. Think of it: a whole life of labor, mid trial and sorrow for food and raiment and shelter. Some add a second folly; a love for gold and goods and lands, none of which can they carry out of this world. Only one thing will accompany them thence: their character. Some, it is evident, will not have much of that to their credit.

We must properly care for our bodies, but above all we must not neglect our souls. Worldly honor may be used to more greatly honor God and his people. Gold and goods and lands may also be used to praise God and extend and beautify the Lord's work. We may do all this, however, and yet lose our own souls. "What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" Soul care should be first and most constant, all things else are subsidiary.

There is meat and drink suitable for spiritual nourishment. It is not alone enough to use our worldly honor to the glory of God or our acquirements to advance his cause. "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God." "For as many as are lead by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." (Romans 8: 14.) "To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." (Romans 8: 6.) "Now if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his." (Verse 9.) "Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of Man shall give unto you." (John 6: 27.) "Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst." (Verse 35.) "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." (Verse 63.)

Faith in God and in his Son and all he taught is the water of life that enlivens the inner man. A willing and anxious obedience to God nourishes and keeps it unto eternal life. We must not only be in the work, but in the "spirit of the work." He who neglects or refuses these things starves the better half of himself.

If a man should neglect and starve a member of his household until they die, he would not only be condemned as a murderer, but as a degraded wretch. And yet is not a man's spirit a member of his household? closer than father or mother or wife or children. Dearer than all combined, so far as their outward house of clay is concerned?

Not only is a man a miserable wretch that starves his own soul, but generally he is responsible for the same condition of his wife and children.

A man is lower than a brute who would murder his wife and family and then destroy himself. But is it not more terrible to send his own spirit and those of his family into hell, though he anxiously provide for all their earthly wants? Can anything be more dreadful? It is more regrettable seeing that the spiritual food is so near at hand and so easily obtained. It may be bought without money and without price. The wells of salvation are open to all, and never run dry. Spiritual food is most satisfying and he whose spirit may drink of the waters of life need not thirst any more.

FAMISHING SPIRITS MAY BE REVIVED

Sin separates the soul from the fountain of living water and from the storehouse of eternal life. After arriving at the age of accountability and wandering out in the desert from God, a craving hunger and a burning thirst permeates the very soul, which nothing but faith and obedience to God can satisfy. Helpless and alone, the spirit seeks satisfaction elsewhere and finds it not. Weary and distracted, it seeks the dance hall or other forms of amusement, but that is like drinking sea water, it increases the craving. Others plunge into business or politics, or into high society, still there is the soul craving which those things will not down.

No longer content, children wander from home or have a desire to do so. Every conceivable device is planned to give soul satisfaction—the lodge, secular societies, churches of man; all count for little.

Parents not having properly instructed their children and having them baptized at eight years of age will have a much harder task to talk against the aching void than before. They cannot fill it. Parental love, care, or instruction will not avail. The Holy Spirit alone can satisfy. Unless the child, or others for that matter, can be made spiritual the water baptism will accomplish nothing. The best thing is to get them to open their hearts to the Spirit of God. Jesus said, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock, if any man will open unto me I will come in and sup with him."

When, however, one returns to God and bids him enter, whether young or old, a satisfaction is realized that is unexplainable, a peace that passeth understanding. One's spiritual eyes are opened and he sees as he has never seen before. His primitive nature is restored, his former friend, the Holy Ghost, returns to his former throne, and the aching void is dispelled. Henceforth two beings dwell within. The abiding Comforter to advise and counsel the man within. His mission is to "guide into all truth," and he will not fail in his appointed mission unless his advice is no longer heeded. The spirit is revived or reborn by the Comforter within. The spark of eternal life bursts into flame and the spirit is enveloped in the holy fire.

It becomes then our constant duty to keep the altars of our hearts aflame by daily crucifying all our evil thoughts and ways. A spirit thus cared for, grows into eternal life, a pleasant companion of God, a joint heir of Jesus Christ, and a brother of the angels.

While others, no matter as to gold or goods or worldly learning, no matter as to worldly fame or honor, no matter whether in the church or out, he who labors for the outer man alone, his labors perish with it.

J. W. PETERSON.

SUGGESTED NOMENCLATURE

The writer feels that a uniformity in nomenclature would be desirable.

First, as to official designations.

President: This should be used for all presidencies, however, only where there is need for official recognition. The First Presidency, the presidents of stake or district; the presidents of the general Sunday school and Religio organizations, all of which I suggest should consist of a president and two counselors.

Bishops: Bishops should be differentiated by the title bishop to show their special duties.

Elders: This should be applied to all grades alike of the Melchisedec priesthood—apostles, high priests, seventies, and elders, for these are all elders although of different functions.

Pastor: This should be used in place of branch president.

No ecclesiastical titles should be used as such, except when necessary to show the authority of an officiating person, such as in an official document like a baptism certificate, or an official utterance. In all other cases, "brother" should be used uniformly whether of the prophet of the church, apostle, high priest, elder, seventy, priest, teacher, or deacon. "All ye are brethren." How would it sound to say: "Prophet Smith"; "Teacher Jones," etc? You would not like it, would you?

Capitals: The word church should always be capitalized when used to denote the institution, but not as to church buildings. The word apostle should not be capitalized except in a caption or beginning a sentence. When you capitalize it, you use it ostentatiously instead of humbly. And I rather think that one of the greatest insults you could offer a true apostle, would be to capitalize the title, for an apostle of our Lord is, above all, humble, unostentatious, the very antithesis of display. The mob could not distinguish Jesus from the carpenter's son; and when he was charged by Pilate with being the king of the Jews, his reply was: "Thou sayest." And, besides, the real meaning of apostle is missionary, and you wouldn't dream of capitalizing "missionary." The common use of ecclesiastical titles in the church, orally or in writing, tends towards social inequality, which should not have the slightest countenance in the church.

Female members: These should be classed as Miss or Mrs. (in writing) for obvious reasons; and orally "sister." Their names should be their own, not their husbands. No woman is entitled to respect, deference, or recognition merely because she is the wife of her husband, but only by reason of her own worth. Then use her own name, and not "Sister John," for she is not "Sister John," but probably Sister Jane.

Branch: The use of branch should be discontinued. It is a misnomer. There can be a branch only where there is a trunk. The proper word is church, and correct differentiations can be shown by First Church of so and so, Second Church, etc. Jesus is the vine, and we, individually, are the branches. C. A. S.

ALBERT N. HOXIE WINS NEW DISTINCTION

[Musical America for December 21 contains a signed editorial commenting in glowing terms upon the work of our General Chorister, Brother Albert N. Hoxie, of Philadelphia. The war having ceased, Brother Hoxie has turned his attention to new fields which are very rich in promise. The article is as follows.—EDITORS.]

As an instance of the practical work which the Musical Alliance is doing, which should certainly go far to commend its usefulness not alone to those who have already enrolled themselves as members but to others, let me state that one of its most recent efforts has been directed to turning the attention of the song leaders in the military camps, whose duties and opportunities must before long cease, into a new field. That field is the industrial field.

It certainly should appeal to common sense that if music means something more than an art to be enjoyed by the educated few, or just for church service, or occasionally for the people in the way of a band which heads a parade or plays in the open somewhere, it must be brought home to the masses as well as given its proper place in any intelligent system of public school education.

Recently the president of the Alliance suggested to Albert N. Hoxie, who has been doing wonderful work among the sailors at League Island, not only as a leader of community singing but in providing the boys with all kinds of interesting entertainment almost every night of the week, that it would be a good thing if he carried his work, in view of the passing of the war period, into the industrial field. Mr. Hoxie was quick to seize upon the suggestion, and since then he has been organizing great choruses of industrial workers. Only the other day he held a "sing" in which some thousands of workers from the great Cramp shipyards and from the Stetson hat works participated.

At this meeting, when there were over five thousand present, as has been duly reported in the columns of Musical America, Mr. Hoxie proposed a competitive "sing" in which the members of these two great industrial organizations should, after adequate rehearsals, compete for a prize, and with that he stated, amid considerable enthusiasm, that this prize would consist of a silver cup which, he was authorized to state, would be presented personally by the president of the Alliance, who is also the editor of Musical America.

Thus some weeks from now something like five to six thousand people will hear two great choruses of industrial workers pitted against one another in a friendly contest for an emblem, the judges to be some of the most eminent men in the musical world in Philadelphia.

The value of such a movement cannot well be over-estimated. It does not merely lie in the fact that thousands of men who work in shipyards and factories are induced to sing, have rehearsals, strive for a prize, but that the value of music is brought home to a class, forming a large proportion of our working force, which has to date had very little acquaintance with it, except occasionally, in directions which were more or less ephemeral.

When the children in the schools are educated to what music means, especially in its community sense; when the workers in the factories and industrial plants realize what it means to them, we shall establish a sound basis upon which we can then build and evolve a really music-loving people. On this basis we can then proceed to place all kinds of musical organizations, and so in the process of evolution we shall enlarge the opportunities for all those who are engaged, whether in composing music or in playing, singing, teaching it, and thus in time we shall have a great, music-loving people, able to support not one opera house in a great city like New York but several, and desirous of having opera in their own language. And so we shall also develop the strength which will sustain one or two symphony orchestras in a city of any importance, supported by the dollars of the masses of the people, instead of by the checks of a few public-spirited citizens.

What the movement will mean to the musical industries is also evident, for the reason that once the great mass of well-paid wage-earners realize the pleasure and satisfaction, the mental relief and spiritual aid that music can give them, they will be anxious to have at least one musical instrument in their homes.

As the value of music is demonstrated to the industrial body it logically follows that the employers who run industrial plants will, in turn, see the wisdom of introducing it not alone after working hours but during working hours. This will mean the inroduction into factory life of music as an aid to sustaining the vitality of the working force, particularly during the later hours of the day, when it is apt to lag. And this is all the more important, as through the wonderful improvements in labor-saving machinery, the labor of the individual worker is naturally becoming more and more systematized and more and more monotonous. Whereas in the olden times the worker built a thing entirely himself, to-day he performs a few evolutions, which he repeats, and repeats, and repeats, till mind and body flag under the strain of the everlasting, unvaried monotony.

Now that peace is approaching and the work in the camps must before long pass, we know nothing that could contribute to the cause of musical education and musical culture, more likely to be effective, than that the song leaders everywhere should soon begin to turn their attention from the soldiers to the workers in the factories and industrial organizations.

THE NEW CRUSADE

[The following is a free translation of parts of an article in a French magazine, published in Paris, showing their viewpoint. The French also went into this war as to a crusade.—EDITORS.]

Our attention has been called to an article in Foi et Vie of September, 1918, entitled "About the war," with the subtitle "The new crusade." The author suggests that President Wilson is to be compared to Peter the Hermit, or he is like a new pope, a new Urban VI, and the entrance of America into the war is a new crusade, deeply religious in its character, as is shown by the deep religious feeling of President Wilson, and ideals founded on the Bible as much as a Puritan.

"It is not an individual alone who speaks, it is a whole people. This is why the accent is so profound; this is why that voice moves the world. . . .

"A president of the United States has said, 'That the happiness of the people of these states under the auspices of liberty and political freedom, may become complete . . . that his people may acquire the honor of recommending or extending freedom to the approval, the affection, the acceptance of all nations who are now foreign to it.' Is that Wilson? Without doubt it is Wilsonian. But it is Washington.

"A president of the United States has said, 'Rather should we die; for we here highly resolve, that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and, that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth.' It that Wilson? Certainly it is Wilsonian. But it is Lincoln. It is resuming and repeating

Washington and Lincoln that Wilson has said, 'Right is more precious than peace. To such a duty we can sacrifice our lives and our fortunes.'

"A president of the United States has said, 'Each nation ought to remain in a condition such that it can defend itself until there shall be established an organization, some form of international police, having the necessary power and the will to prevent all violence among nations. Things being as they are, the better manner is to assure such a power for imposing peace in the world as shall be secured by an agreement between the great nations, who desire sincerely peace, and who shall be strangers to all thought of committing aggression. This combination would be able in the end to assure peace within certain defined limits and under certain defined conditions. But the man in authority or the statesman who shall bring to pass a combination of that sort shall have, as a reward in history, a place which will be safe forever.' Is that faith from Wilson? Is it the society of nations? Again this one certain belief is Wilsonian. But it is Roosevelt, speaking about eight years ago at Christiania when there was delivered to him the Nobel medal—the peace prize, in recognition of the efforts which he had made to reestablish peace between Russia and Japan.

"And Roosevelt repeated the thoughts of a founder of the American states, William Penn, the Quaker, the father of American pacifism. For the United States is the land chosen for pacifism (in the exact sense of that word—the love of peace).

"Shall one demand here how pacifism has become so war-like? Precisely because we are not confronting a war. We are in the presence of a crusade. It is because true Americans are pacifists that they are the crusaders and that Wilson has said, 'force, again force, force to the limit.'

"Doctor McFarlane, the general secretary of the Federation of the Christian churches in America has always been a pacifist. To-day he preaches war. One of those pacifists who confound the love of peace with forgetfulness of right and justice; who confuse it with neutrality in the face of all their crimes and horrors, said to him ironically: 'Ah, well, I hear you have become a militarist.' 'Certainly not,' responded Doctor McFarlane. 'I have become one of those who wish to make peace'—an allusion to the beatitude, blessed are those who procure peace (or, 'Blessed are the peacemakers')."

The writer continues with this theme that the United States is the crusader for the purpose of securing peace to the world; a definite peace for the entire world.

"To wonder is to ignore and to be unable to comprehend. Does this cause another argument? How these Americans, such great collectors of money, can sacrifice by the billions and billions. Again there is no contradiction. It is logical—the logic of the crusades.

"We may speak of the millionaires as kings of finance; as kings of railroads; of the trusts; so that finally, for us the symbol of the United States is the dollar. It is true in effect there are enough dollars in America, and it is very fortunate for the allies.

"But we have forgotten to consider the flag of the United States. What is it that is to be found on that banner? There are the stars. The land of the dollars is the land of the stars. It is not the one symbol. It is the two symbols. In our ignorance we have not understood."

The writer continues with this theme that the American people, while the seekers of wealth, are the great idealists and ready to sacrifice all for a purpose. The United States has an excellent conception of wealth: that conception is double: It is necessary to gain sufficient moneys; it is necessary to dispense it well, to employ it as much as possible and the best possible.

"We ignore that it is a conception essentially religious: Man is not the possessor of the goods which God has given him, or rather with which he has blessed him. He is only the steward, always responsible under God. To gain money it is with one vocation as another. One is a banker, a business man; or engaged in industry, as one is a king by the grace of God, neither more nor less.

"One remembers that when the American soldiers disembarked in France, some of them knelt, some of them bowed to the earth. Thus did the crusaders of Godfrey de Bouillon when they arrived before the walls of Jerusalem. The Americans are the modern crusaders."

"Extreme technicality is a sign of an undeveloped system of law in which legal rights are subordinate to the procedure to enforce them and wherein the substance is secondary to the form. These forms were regarded with superstitious reverence in the early stages of society, but it is now recognized that the simpler the procedure the better it serves its purpose; this does not mean that we should substitute haste and want of consideration for deliberation and judgment, but it does mean that our judicial machinery must be so simple that justice will be literally brought home to the people, and that busy men can afford to litigate the complicated questions arising in our complex industrial life. . . . In each and every one of these methods of reform we find as an indispensable factor the enlarged discretion of an independent judiciary."—Frederick N. Judson, address to Pan-American Science Congress, 1915-1916.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

The Castaway

Strolling down the stony pathway, weary, tired, worn with care,
Comes a man, bowed with sorrow, no one seems to know he's there.
As he plods the path so lonely, seems as if I hear him say,
"Had I followed where he led me, I would be elsewhere to-day."

As he staggers, note his footsteps, how they totter, seem to shake.
Seems to me I hear him saying, "Could I not for Jesus' sake Followed on through storm and tempest, through the long and dreary day,
In the footsteps of my Master, but I'm now a castaway."

"Maddened by the deeds of others, crazed by jealousy and strife;
Sold my birthright to get honor; sacrificed eternal life.
Oh, the pain and sorrow waiting for me at the judgment day,
Just because I wanted honor, now I'm but a castaway."

"God in heaven knows how hard I tried in days that're past and gone,
But the tempter found me weak'ning, yes, he found me; then ere long,
In his hands he held me tightly, closing tighter day by day;
Soon I found myself his convert, now I'm called a castaway."

God have mercy on such mortals that in such an hour did yield.
May they ere too late remember, Christ their deadly wound can heal.
Then when Christ shall come in glory on that glorious wedding day,
May he, too, rejoice with others rescued from the per'lous way.

Lead Thou Me On

(Tune: "Lead, kindly light.")

I pray that thou, dear Lord, whilst I am here,
Will lead me on.
'Midst all the cares and toils and doubts and fears,
Lead thou me on.
With thee to lead I care not what betide;
All will be well, with Jesus at my side.

My path may be obscure to my view;
Lead thou me on.
I'm not afraid, for thou art ever true;
Lead thou me on.
When dark and thorny path I fain must heed,
I'll have no fear; thy guiding hand shall lead.

I am thine own, devoted to thy will;
Lead thou me on.
Until my work is finished, then, and still,
Lead thou me on,
Till in the realms of endless bliss I rove,
Then will I rest rejoicing in thy love.

Our Social Hour

In response to an invitation from our Auxiliary president, Sister Krahl, in last week's issue, the readers of our column are to meet for a social chat two weeks from to-day! You received your invitation, did you not? If you are in doubt, turn again to the HERALD of February 5, and read it. Sister Krahl invites you all to send your words of cheer and greeting, that the issue of February 26 may indeed be a social hour.

We learn to love that for which we labor. The things which require earnest attention, thoughtful consideration, and careful action, usually are matters which lie next to our hearts. We are sure that each sister who responds to this invitation of our president, and takes the time and thought to sit down and pen a few words of greeting to her sisters the church over, and does it in cheerful cooperation with the plan of our consecrated leader, will turn with delighted interest and enthusiasm to our columns, when the HERALD of that date is placed in her hands. She will feel that it has a new and vital meaning for her, because of the effort she has made to make our "social hour" a success.

Do not feel disappointed if your letter does not appear in the first issue! We are hoping so many will respond that we will have gems of thought and good will to pass on to our readers for many a pleasant week. No good thought is ever lost. If once you give form to a beautiful thought, please believe that it has been given wings of eternity. It may fall apparently unnoticed at the time, but since all good is of God, know that every good thought will live to bless—sometime, somewhere. In this light may we not understand how we can "lay up treasures" which will not rust or be corrupted? So we pass on the treasures of thought which have come to you. Mail them to-day to Audentia Anderson, 5020 California Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

Delinquent Children

A large percentage of delinquent children brought before the courts of our land to-day are illegitimately born. Almost the entire balance of the number are children who have, through other deplorable causes, also been deprived of the proper care and instruction God designed for them. Perhaps chief among these causes is the one growing out of the fearfully prevalent one of divorces. The children of divorced parents become the victims of conditions for which they are in no way responsible, but which deprive them of their inherited rights. Is it any wonder they almost invariably grow into ways of evil?

Parents, ask yourselves this question: "Would my child grow up fair and beautiful in character and usefulness if I and all others who love him were to be taken from him?" One's heart stands appalled at the very thought! A tender child, needing care and guidance and protection, sent adrift upon a world too selfish and too self-centered to know or care about such little waifs! Forgotten by all the "good" people, remembered only by the arch enemy of their souls, are they to blame that they fall into error and wrong?

Will this be one of the terrible sins of omission which we will have to face at the judgment bar of God? Will we be asked how much we, in our placid comfort and well-being, concerned ourselves about "the least of these"? Will we continue to sit indifferently by, lifting no hand to help those consecrated workers who are striving, against what terrible odds, to have laws enacted by which these little innocent sufferers shall have common justice dealt out to them? Do you know what is being done in your State and your community for these forsaken ones?

Forward the Light

The need of better care for Connecticut's dependent and delinquent children, of making special provision for defective children, and the necessity for changes in the probation system are all brought out strikingly in a report on Children Before the Courts in Connecticut, prepared by Professor William B. Bailey, of Yale University, for the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor.

Things have progressed a long way since the passage of the blue laws in 1750 which allowed the correction of youthful offenders by cutting off their ears, but in the opinion of the report, enough changes from the old system have not yet been made. The need of prevention rather than punishment is emphasized.

In New Haven, the largest city in the State, 692 children were brought before the courts in 1914 and 1915. Of this number 672 were boys. During that period no child under 6 was tried, though one boy of 6 was committed for burglary, an unusually serious offense for his age. One prisoner summoned to appear in court and confined overnight was so youthful that the next morning he had to have assistance in getting himself dressed before appearing in court. He was not allowed to remain in his home overnight while awaiting trial. The children's offenses varied from playing ball in the street and bathing naked to trespass and theft.

An exact connection between poverty and delinquency is difficult to establish although the report points out that the families of one fourth of the New Haven children concerned had at one time or another received aid from the associated charities.

Prior to 1917 Connecticut had no special laws governing the trial of children. They were subjected to the same legal processes as adult offenders. An act passed in 1917 provides that no child under 14 shall be committed to a jail or common lock-up while awaiting trial, although it is not obligatory to have all hearings away from the other business of the court.

In most cases before city courts in Connecticut, a child is arrested one day and tried the next. This does not allow time for the probation officer to investigate the case, and advise the court about the disposition of it. This, in the opinion of the report, is one of the weaknesses of the probation system; another is the method of selecting and paying the probation officers. They are appointed and removed at the pleasure of the judge; their salaries, within certain limits, are also fixed by him. No special qualification is required of a probation officer; in Connecticut many had no previous training for the work, and seven probation officers had had for their occupations that of liveryman, hatter, contractor, watchman, court messenger, and "dealing with peoples."

"In a large proportion of the so-called delinquents there is an accompaniment of low mentality," says the report. Mental examinations to determine the mental condition of delinquent children are given but rarely. This, in the view of the report, is a weak point in the procedure of the State in dealing with delinquent children. Many children are brought into court again and again before it is finally determined as a result of an adequate mental examination that they are feeble-minded.

The report concludes with eleven recommendations which it is hoped that Connecticut will put into effect. They include more adequate institutional care for the feeble-minded, testing and special training for mentally defective delinquents, revision of the laws for the care of dependent children, and the qualification test for probation officers.—United States Bulletin.

The Soldier's Home-coming

We've been watching, hoping, praying
For our soldier boy to come:
Long has seemed the time of waiting
Since he went away from home—
Since he in the ranks enlisted
In defense of Freedom's cause,
'Gainst a great and cruel danger
Threatening all righteous laws.

Yes, we heard the country calling,
Calling hearts both true and brave,
And we knew that hosts were falling—
Those whom Christ had died to save.
Innocent women and children
Slashed by a relentless foe!
So, with hearts wellnigh to breaking,
We consented—he might go!

Where'er he went there followed
Our petitions and our prayer;
Whether on the land or ocean,
We besought the Master's care.
"Father, guard him midst the dangers
Of the great and mighty deep;
Raise up friends among the strangers,
Those who truth and honor keep!"

When the storm winds bent the willows,
We could then but pray and weep:
"Though upon the tossing billows,
Lord, wilt thou our soldiers keep Safe from every hidden danger—
Safe from every evil snare!
Lord, have mercy on the mothers,
Sisters, wives—and hear their prayer!"

So we worked, and watched, and waited,
Hoping always for the best,
Thankful for each line, or token,
Telling he was well, and blessed.
Then we heard the welcome tidings:
"Victory is now proclaimed!"
So the boys in the battle falling,
We knew had not died in vain.

There are many weeping mothers,
Mourning o'er their soldiers slain,
Can it be that I am favored—
That my boy comes home again?
In this hour of gloom and sadness,
I am almost loath to say
That my heart is filled with gladness,
For my boy came home to-day!

Unmarried Fathers!

"The age-old problem of children born out of wedlock is again receiving the attention of the people that should have grappled with it and solved it long ago—the members of the Equal Suffrage Association," says a Chicago paper. This is apropos of Doctor Lucy Waite's proposal to make the birth of an illegitimate child the marriage bond, and thus give the mother and child a legal standing in the community.

Everybody who thinks straight must agree with Doctor Waite, but by what crookedness of thinking do we continue to make this reform peculiarly the burden of women?

Every time we make the assumption indicated above we release a few more cowards from the pricks of conscience.

It is only by placing the illegal child in the light of its economic relation to the state that we can arouse law-observing men to see that they also suffer through their present indifference and toleration of unmarried fathers.

Most illegal children must be supported by the state. Taxpayers are forced to provide for their maintenance and education.

Most married men find it hard enough to raise their own children under the present schedule of living. Sometimes they limit the number of their offspring on account of economic pressure. Meanwhile they pay for the rearing of other men's unacknowledged children without protest.

When they once discover that they are, both as taxpayers and as philanthropists, doing this all of the time, they will be less tolerant of an evil which, as between man and man, they have always winked at.

Evidently men who believe that women must wring this reform from the state are altogether blind to the tax which the unmarried fathers make on the married fathers' pocket-books.—Omaha Bee.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Southern California

The sun is shining brightly in southern California, and the Saints are rejoicing in the fact that the gospel work is beginning to shine forth in renewed power to bless the humble followers of the Master and to touch the hearts of the people of an awakened world.

This is my first year as an active missionary of the church, and the success that has attended my efforts and those who are associated with me has been very encouraging.

Representing the most wonderful message ever presented to an enlightened people, we have tried to occupy as those whom God has chosen to go forth as his standard bearers, and as men who feel the weight of this great responsibility.

We have appreciated the kindness of the general church in sending Apostle John W. Rushton to take charge of this mission field and to assist us in our efforts to build up the work.

About the first of last October I was informed that the Knights of Pythias, of Los Angeles, were arranging to hold an open meeting where all were invited to attend, at which time they were to raise their new flag. Their band was to play patriotic selections, after which there would be a patriotic address by one of the recognized orators of the city.

Being acquainted with one of the members of this order, Mr. Harold Motter, through him I was able to arrange for Brother Rushton to be the speaker on this occasion. A large crowd was in attendance; one of the noted speakers of this country came up from the audience, shook Brother Rushton's hand and congratulated him as a speaker, saying that it was the ablest address he had ever heard. This incident helped to bring our church prominently before the people.

A little later was informed that the Y. M. C. A. of Orange County was to hold its annual meeting in the Baptist church of Santa Ana, December 12, and was to give a banquet to be arranged for by the women of that church. The man to obtain speakers for this occasion was formerly the pastor of the Christian Church of San Bernardino, and, having heard of Elder Rushton, invited us both to attend this banquet and to be the principal speakers. When it became known that Elder Rushton was to be one of the speakers, there was some objection on the ground that he was a "Mormon." But Reverend Roadhouse, who had this matter in charge, was well acquainted with me, having been a resident of San Bernardino at the time I was mayor; knowing that we were not Mormons, and that we were in no way identified with the Utah Mormon church, he therefore paid no attention to the objection, and notified Brother Rushton to be on hand as arranged.

We met a large audience of Y. M. C. A. boys and workers as well as representatives of the city, the schools, and the press. Our message was well received. The reporter regretted that he was not able to get more of Elder Rushton's address, but said that he had done his best. The write-up which appeared the next day showed that this reporter had done fairly well, considering that he was not able to wield a lightning pen.

At the close of the meeting, Professor Cranston, superintendent of the city schools of Santa Ana, arose and thanked Elder Rushton for his very able address and invited him to speak at the high school in that city. This invitation was accepted, and Elder Rushton gave the school one of his addresses which was a rare treat to hear, and will long be remembered by the faculty and student body. The principal, Mr. Hammond, gave us a hearty invitation to come again.

While in Santa Ana on this trip, I was invited to speak at a mass meeting held in the Elks' Club dining hall, where a banquet was given in honor of a number of the soldier boys who were going to the front. I was also invited to speak before the Book Review Club of Santa Ana. This club meets monthly to discuss the different leading books of our time dealing with present-day problems, and various speakers are invited to give addresses from time to time.

When the sad news reached us that Brother James Harold Gimblett, of Los Angeles, (who is a nephew of Brother James Farley) had died October 6 as a result of wounds received in the battle of Argonne Forest, France, September 29, I went to Los Angeles and assisted in arranging for the memorial service of this worthy brother who had made the supreme sacrifice in the interest of democracy and the rights of mankind.

Elder Rushton, who was a close friend of Brother Gimblett, was selected to be the speaker. Through the kindness of the Red Cross Society a number of soldiers from Camp Arcadia were present, as well as Captain C. A. Phelps of Stanton Post, G. A. R., in company with a number of the "Old Guard."

Brother Will Swain, of Ontario, California, who had just returned from overseas service, was selected to pin the golden star upon the service flag.

At the close of the address, Captain Phelps arose and thanked Elder Rushton for his wonderful message; then turning to the old and young soldiers and a number of young officers who were present, commanded them to face the service flag and in unison to salute. This service was very beautiful and impressive. The soldiers were then entertained at luncheon in the homes of the Saints, which seemed much appreciated by them all.

This same evening I went to Ontario where I was announced as the speaker of the evening. An excellent crowd of Saints and friends were present, and gave us their close attention. The next morning I came home to make the final arrangements for Elder Rushton to speak at the high school of this city and to hold several meetings in the Saints' church. This makes the fifth time that Elder Rushton has appeared before the student body; and the 800 students made it very clear that he was a welcome visitor. As for Principal Beeman, he said, "Come again."

While in the city I received an invitation to be one of the speakers at a banquet given by the peace officers of the county, in honor of the newly elected sheriff, Mr. W. A. Shay, who was chief of police when I was mayor of the city.

That evening it was arranged for Elder Rushton and I to address the San Bernardino Rotary Club, which was giving a banquet at the Stewart Hotel. As we held services that evening at the church, we did not arrive at this meeting until 8.30, where we found the crowd patiently awaiting our arrival. The club was so well pleased with the address that the president of this club asked the privilege of arranging for a mass meeting to be held some time next May when Mr. Rushton could again be present and be the principal speaker of the evening. The club gave its approval, and it is hoped that nothing will interfere with this program.

The services at the church we believe were beneficial and instructive to all who attended.

The following Friday we left for Imperial Valley, stopping at El Centro and other points. At El Centro we were the guests of Brother and Sister Evan B. Davis; and at Calipatria we were entertained by Mr. and Sister Fred Mills.

On our arrival at El Centro we were informed that the Christian Endeavor was holding its convention; hence we at once decided to attend. Fortunately we met our old friend, Reverend Roadhouse, of Santa Ana, who had just recently been assigned as pastor of the Christian Church in El Centro. We were publicly introduced to the audience and were requested to respond with a short talk.

Before the close of this service Reverend Roadhouse invited us to occupy his pulpit the next Sunday morning. We both accepted and were on hand at the Sunday morning service. I was introduced to the audience and was called upon to offer the invocation. Reverend Roadhouse introduced Elder Rushton to the audience and then gave him the privilege to speak on a subject of his own choosing as long as he desired. The speaker was at his best, and as he presented his message with that force and eloquence for which he is famous, the audience sat in rapt attention with a look of wonder on their faces. Let God be praised for making such opportunities available.

Brother and Sister Evan Davis were the only members of our church in the audience, and as they sat there rejoicing they realized that this was the first sermon ever preached at this place by our elders, and were reminded that this had been shown to Brother Davis in a dream over a year ago. Now they were made to realize that God was caring for his work, and opening the way for his servants to go in and occupy that the truth should be declared in this city.

Mr. Maddux, the superintendent of the Sunday school of the Christian or Disciple Church, and a prominent man of the city, was so well pleased with the sermon that he made arrangements for us to address the high school the next morning. Our message was well received and we were invited to come again.

The Imperial Valley Press, for January 20, gave us a write-up covering over two thirds of a column on the front page, giving an account of our visit and containing a synopsis of the address. This is quite remarkable when it is understood that the newspapers of this city hardly noticed the fact that the Christian Endeavor convention was in session at this time. We were later informed that we were the first representatives of any church to be invited to speak before the high school of this city.

Through the kindness of Brother Davis, the Saints of the valley were notified of our coming, and a meeting arranged for Sunday afternoon, to be held in Brother Davis's studio. The Saints of Imperial Valley are widely scattered, and a number drove forty miles in their machines to attend the service.

Reverend Roadhouse was present and offered the opening prayer, after which he was invited to talk to our people. Mr. Roadhouse invited our members to attend his church until they could arrange to hold services of their own. He said he was pleased to have the privilege of expressing his deep appreciation for the wonderful message he had heard, and invited us to come again and visit his church and his people.

This Imperial Valley, much of which is lying below the level of the sea, was nothing but a barren desert a few years ago. By means of the big canals, water is taken from the Colorado River, and this great valley is made to blossom as the rose. El Centro is the county seat, and has a population of about seven thousand inhabitants; entered by the Southern Pacific Railway on the north and by stage line on the west. We found the Saints of this valley to be wide awake and very hospitable. The Lord is truly feeling after the people of this county, and we hope to take advantage of this splendid opening, and we have planned to return in the near future, and in the meantime I will keep informed as to developments in this place.

In my travels over the district and visits among the branches, I find the pastors working hard to build up the work and are being backed up by the "faithful few" who are always alert and ready to assist in any way possible. May the Lord bless them as they prepare to meet the new demands which will be made upon them.

Bishop Richard Bullard, of Independence, Missouri, is making a tour of the district and is doing effective work in the interests of the bishop's office. We welcome him to our midst, and invite him to come again.

Our message being absolutely true, I urge that every member should consecrate their lives anew to the promotion of this wonderful work, and in this undertaking let us become dead in earnest ourselves that we may impress our friends with the fact that we love them and it is a real pleasure to serve them, and that it is more than the sense of duty which impels us. May we become awakened to the truth, that love is the greatest dynamic in the world. Let us cultivate the habit of looking for the good in men and women. May we live the positive life by emphasizing the beautiful and the true in all we do or say. To give too much time and attention to the negative side of life will weaken our influence, and neutralize the effect of our message.

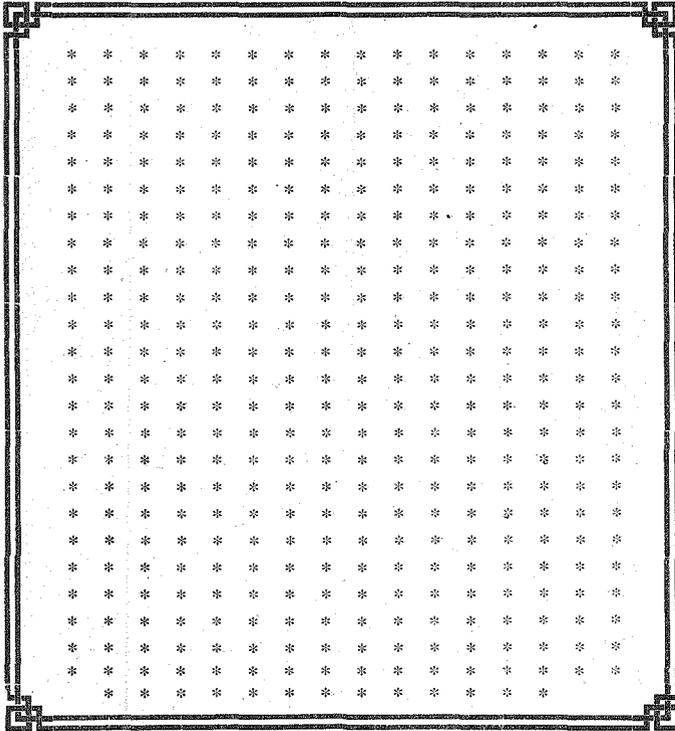

That the characteristics of Jesus Christ shall be studied and appreciated by all, and made potent in our lives, is my earnest prayer.

Your brother and fellow servant,
SAN BERNARDINO, CALIFORNIA. G. H. WIXOM.

I never listen to calumnies, because if they are untrue I run the risk of being deceived; and if true, of disliking a person not worth thinking about.—Montesquieu.

Christmas Offering Roll of Honor

Up to and including last report we had heard from a total of 397 schools, home departments, and cradle rolls that had gone "over the top," and this week we have quite a large number more to report.

With only a few more days left to report offering for 1918 we are still short several thousand dollars, and have some doubts as to whether we shall reach the $100,000 mark. If we do fall short let us not blame it on the "Flu" for the poor fellow has had enough laid at his door for one season. Let us rather charge it all up to a late start and a putting off until the last few months before we settled right down to real effort. This does not apply to all schools, as you will see from the reports, but we fear it does apply to many. Are we going to get caught again this year in a like manner? We feel sure that we shall not, but for fear we do let us all get right to work.

A correction. (Error made in reporting to the papers.) Sharon, Pennsylvania. We reported this good school as having 50 cents more per member than last year—we should have reported that their offering for 1918 was 50 per cent greater than in 1917. We are sorry for the error but glad to make the correction. Looks like we were fortunate, however, in making the error, for when Brother Ahlstrom advised me of the error he also took time to tell me of one of their plans for raising offering. It is very interesting and is as follows: "Brother Thomas Jones, our new local superintendent, has painted a nice large picture for our 1919 effort, 'The High Aim Road,' on which all our members will travel toward our high aim of $300 for our school of 42 members. Each contributor is represented by an arrow, which is moved forward on the road as the offering increases. There is already considerable competition for leadership."

Delhi, Ontario. Sister John F. Sommers reports: "The Delhi Sunday School set their aim at $50, and have 20 members. We are thankful to state that we more than doubled it. We feel as if we might have done still better had it not been for the expense of fixing over our church. We have already started our offering for 1919, which we hope will be still larger."

Corinth, Ontario. William Hoskins, superintendent, reports: "Some of our brothers and sisters made up their minds not to buy any Christmas presents, and gave their money to the Christmas offering. We have already started to pay in Christmas offering for 1919. Some of the Saints here keep the eggs that are laid on Sunday, and it seems there are more laid on Sunday than any other day. We sent in $50 for 1918, which was $3.33½ a member, but we hope and are going to try to do more for 1919."

Wellsville, New York. Nettie Potter, superintendent, reports: "We have only seven members. We are also isolated from the church and the association of the dear Saints. We gave a total of $22 in 1918, but we trust we can do better in 1919."

Houston, Texas. Nettie Fisher, treasurer, reports: "We have 50 members and sent in $114."

Bayfield, Colorado. Mary Shippy, superintendent, reports 15 enrolled members and $66. Aim for 1919 is $75.

Glasgow, Montana. Glow Sunday School. Charles F. Engle, jr., superintendent, reports: "At the time we gathered up our offering we had about twenty members on our record, and only about fifteen were active, and half of these were children. Our offering amounted to $43.88, a little over $2 per member."

Frazee, Minnesota. M. L. Jepson reported through Brother McGuire's office: "Our hat's in the ring, and anyone wishing a place near the top for 1919 please remember we have asked to have the top reserved for Frazee. By way of fair warning will add that our superintendent has red hair." A challenge and red hair seem to go pretty well together, and we rather sense some real contest if some of the other red-headed superintendents take up this challenge.

Ferris, Illinois, New Hope Sunday School. Della Alston, secretary, reports: "Our school has an enrollment of 39 and our offering was $165.02."

Independence, Missouri, Englewood Sunday School. J. W. Stobaugh reported: "We have an enrollment of 33 and our offering was $92."

Independence, Missouri, Enoch Hill Sunday School. W. H. Deam reports they are over the top.

Kansas City, Missouri, Ivanhoe Sunday School. E. M. Shimel reports an enrollment of 34 members, average attendance of 18, and offering of $75.

The following list was obtained from Brother McGuire's records and they are all well "over the top."

- Bozeman, Montana.
  - Joy, Illinois.
  - Miami, Oklahoma.
  - New Park, Pennsylvania, (Fawn Grove Sunday School).
  - Stewartsville, Missouri, (Rising Star Sunday School).
  - Joy, Illinois, (Buffalo Prairie Sunday School).
  - Hood River, Oregon.
  - Alexander, Kansas, (Star of Bethlehem Sunday School).
  - Galien, Michigan.
  - Viceroy, Saskatchewan.
  - Freesoil, Michigan.
  - Appin, Ontario, (Longwood Sunday School).
  - Brockton, Massachusetts.
  - Parsons, Kansas.
  - Vanscoy, Saskatchewan, (Minnesota Prairie Sunday School).
  - Packard, Iowa.
  - Fanning, Kansas.
  - Davis City, Iowa, (Greenville Sunday School).
  - Holdenville, Oklahoma.
- This concludes the list of "over the top" schools for this week, and there are quite a number you will agree, and more coming in all the time. We are sorry, however, that every school did not respond to this call, for it would have been fine indeed had we a report from every one of our good schools.

Do not forget that February 17 is the last day on which reports will be received for this year—the offering closes on the tenth, but we shall receive Honor Roll reports until the 17th.

We hope and pray that all the schools have already started their offering for 1919, and if they have not, we hope that they will start to-day and work hard.

May God ever bless and direct your efforts is the prayer of

Yours very sincerely,

ARTHUR W. SMITH.

Church of Christ

The Church of Christ is now on the earth with its ancient gifts and blessings. Reader, are you a member of it? If you are, then keep the commandments to the end and you shall be saved. If you are not, then begin to investigate and find out which of all the churches is Christ's. When you shall have found it, enter therein and you shall find peace and rest to your soul.

Independence Items

The numerical strength as to membership of our church units here is increasing, the branch numbering over 3,000. The Sunday school enrollment is about 950, and the Religion reports 550 at the session on January 31.

In some of the wards of the city the group prayer meetings held each week are resumed, although many remain at home on account of the influenza in the city.

According to I. N. White's statement at the prayer service on February 5, there were forty cases of it among the citizens. Some of our number are afflicted otherwise, and request the prayers of the Saints. They have been treated at the Sanitarium for several weeks, and a few are convalescent.

The Woman's Auxiliary meetings, generally held in organized group methods, are going forward under the lead of the organizer, Sister Evan Davis, and their work is divided into departments, each group having its leader and secretary. Many active and efficient young women are interested, and believe much good will ultimately be accomplished in their various lines of activity.

The young women of the Laurel Club who are quite skillful in artistic kinds of sewing and who meet at the Woman's Building, number about thirty-five; while the older, motherly sisters, constituting our aid society, of ancient fame, meet in the church annex, where they can quilt and chat to their heart's content. There are fifty or more enrolled, but at their annual dinner their attendance swells indefinitely.

So, what with the study classes, the preaching services, business and committee meetings, which include those of the Sanitarium patronesses and occasional receptions, like that one of our beloved president on January 21, when he had to grasp the hands of about five hundred of the brethren and sisters on the occasion of his forty-fifth birthday, also priesthood and elders' official assemblies—with all these the Saints may be classed among the really busy people in Zion's center place.

They have of late been favored with their usual quota of able ministerial services through the efforts of Brethren Gillen, Luff, Greene, and Lambert, and at the sacrament meeting of the 2d which was truly a pentecostal one, the Saints rejoice in the spirit of a holy brotherhood.

The late improvements on the church building are consisting of the erection of fine, roomy vestibules at the east and west entrances to the basement and auditorium.

Two excellent discourses have recently been delivered at the church on the Temple Lot by President F. M. Smith and our missionary, Brother Fulk.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

MONMOUTH, IOWA, February 4, 1919.

Editors Herald: I feel it a duty as well as a privilege to write to this good paper. It is of far more value than a meal of victuals. I enjoy reading its columns each week, especially the letters from the brothers and sisters far and near. It is the only preacher I have any more, therefore it seems of more value than heretofore.

I realize that the nearer the end, the more daring and tricky Satan becomes. He knows his time is short, therefore is making good use of what time he has left. The harder we try to overthrow the satanic power, the harder Satan tries to overthrow us. Therefore, we as Saints should be on the alert, ever ready to meet and overcome the obstacles that tend to overthrow us and thwart the purposes of God.

We as a people, if we expect to have eternal life in glory celestial, must have our lamps trimmed and burning, with oil in them, ready to meet the bridegroom when he cometh. If we are not prepared the door will be closed and we will be left without.

Why should we let the things of this world come between us and God? Why do we so often go along in a sleepy and dilatory mood, and with hands folded, say, All is well with us?

If we expect to receive blessings we must work for them; we must put forth an effort and work, watch and pray, and above all, fight, for the battle is not won until we have conquered all.

Let us each and every one put more zeal and energy into the work and come out far more advanced spiritually at the end of this year than any preceding year of our Christian life.

Yours in gospel bonds,

VELMA KETCHAM.

A word that has been said may be unsaid; it is but air. But when a deed is done it cannot be undone; nor can our thoughts reach out to all the mischiefs that may follow.—Longfellow.

HARPURHEY, MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, January 9, 1919.

Editors Herald: The many friends of the North Manchester Branch will be glad to hear that we are still progressing in the work of the Lord.

For many years we worshiped in a very poor room, in a poorer neighborhood, where one hardly liked to invite friends and strangers to attend. But early last year a move was made to a larger room situated on the main Oldham Road. Previously it had been used as a schoolroom by Saint George's Church. The dedicatory services were in charge of J. W. Taylor, district president, who was assisted by the branch president, Albert Hall, and W. H. Greenwood, James Waugh, and Henry Greenwood. Brother Taylor made the dedicatory prayer, which was one of deep feeling and made a great impression on all who heard it. Elder Henry Greenwood delivered the address, which was of a highly spiritual character, stimulating all to greater diligence in the Master's service. Elder Waugh composed two verses of a hymn to suit the occasion, and altogether a good time was had.

The quarterly conference of the district was held last Saturday and Sunday. It opened at 6 o'clock on the 4th, in the northeast meeting room. On this day we experienced the worst snowstorm for years, as a result of which nearly the whole of the telegraph and telephone wires were brought down, and traffic was very much delayed.

In spite of this we had several brethren from a distance. J. E. Meredith and Fred Schofield drove over in a motor van from Birmingham, nearly one hundred miles distant. To add to their difficulties they had a breakdown on the road and had to repair it in the snow. This made them somewhat late, and prevented Brother Meredith holding a meeting of the Seventh Quorum of Elders, of which he is the worthy and honored president. However, his heart was made glad in that he was able to hold a meeting from five to six o'clock on Sunday afternoon, and a very profitable time was had.

Bishop May traveled by train from London (nearly two hundred miles distant), but was so delayed that he got to the meeting after the adjournment had been proposed.

Elder Abel Hall was also in attendance. The conference was in charge of the district president, Joseph Dewsnup, assisted by his counselors, G. W. Leggott and John Bailey. Sunday morning Brother Henry Greenwood and Brother Meredith were the speakers. In the afternoon a good fellowship meeting was held. The district president addressed the Saints at night, Brother May presiding. The attendance at the meetings was poor, but what was lacking in numbers was compensated for by the quality of the meetings.

The conference ordered and made provision for the ordination of George Mayne, of Eccles, to the office of elder, and F. J. Lewis, of Stockport, to the office of priest.

I have been laboring in this latter branch for about the past two years, part of the time as its president, and I feel sure that Brother Lewis will make a very welcome and useful addition to the Stockport Branch. The Saints at this place have treated me very kindly indeed, and I long to see the work grow in this locality. They are a kind and devoted band and deserve to make progress.

Manchester has many claims to distinction, and has just added another one to the list by making the worthy President of the United States a "freeman." So we can now claim him as a fellow citizen. President Wilson journeyed from Carlisle, where he had been visiting the scenes of his mother's birthplace, arriving here at 5 o'clock on Sunday, December 29. In company with Elder Brian, I was passing through the city just as he arrived. We made an effort to get a glimpse of perhaps the greatest man (politically) alive to-day. We were unsuccessful; however, on Monday we fares a little better. We journeyed to town, but owing to the press we could not get anywhere near the line of route. We looked around for a point of vantage, but were unable to emulate the example of Zaccheus of old, for the reason that there are no trees about that one could climb, so we had to be content with a peep.

We wish President Wilson success in the great mission that has brought him to Europe. Just as others have been raised up to accomplish special work, so we are prepared to believe that this man has a special mission to perform. And while we know that the proposed league of nations cannot bring about the universal peace that is so much desired, it will at least prove the helplessness of man, and, let us hope, cause the nations to look to God for the establishing of his kingdom.

In accepting the freedom of the city, President Wilson delivered an address that has been described as something of a lay sermon. And indeed it was, and the advice given ought to appeal to all our church members. Among other things, he said:

"Friendship is not a mere sentiment. It is based upon principle. Upon a principle that leads a man to give more than he demands. . . . It is not based merely upon affection, but upon common service. A man is not your friend who is not willing to serve you; and you are not his friend unless you are willing to serve him."

Again:

"Interest does not bind men together. It separates them. . . . There is only one thing that can bind people together, and that is a common devotion to right. Ever since the history of liberty began, men have talked about their rights, and it has taken them several hundreds of years to make them see that the principle part of right is duty; and that unless a man performs his full duty, he is entitled to no right."

He also said that he had never had a difference with a man, even those that looked big differences, but what, when they came together and talked the matter over, he found that the difference that separated them was a very little one indeed.

I would like to commend these thoughts to the Saints, because the Lord's way which has been specially given to us, is to seek out those with whom we have a difference, or even those who we know have an offense against us, and I feel sure that if we follow the instructions given to the church, we shall experience a degree of oneness, which up to the present has been conspicuous by its absence; and should we fail, we can then have recourse of an appeal to the church.

Brethren, let us close up our ranks.

While there is much to be desired, regarding the progress of the Lord's work in this city, yet it makes a very fair show, in that we have three lively branches in existence. The North, Southeast (this is an amalgamation of the South and East Branches), and the Northeast. This latter branch worship in their own building, and as it is by far the largest place of worship, the conferences are generally held there.

We also have branches at Stockport and Eccles, which are only a few miles away from the city. We are far from satisfied. We want to see the work grow and become a greater influence for good. It is to be regretted that the work's progress is often stayed by our own folly. We often forget that this work exists to bring about regeneration in ourselves. We want to apply it to the other person and thereby fail to see the mark of our high calling which is in Jesus Christ. Satan tries to divert our attention from the Master, and sometimes we allow ourselves to become the instrument by which this is accomplished.

Don't let us sit in judgment upon some one because their actions don't suit us. Let us remember that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners. Therefore, if we would be his disciples, let us try and do the same, remembering that we ourselves require his saving grace; and it has been decreed that we shall be measured with the same standard by which we judge others.

Praying that God will give success to his work,
Your brother in gospel bonds,
45 Rochdale Road. JOHN BAILEY.

MIMICO, ONTARIO, January 24, 1919.

Editors Herald: I think a great deal of the HERALD and realize that the matter therein is very much improved. It keeps me in touch with headquarters and gives a general knowledge of the church at large.

Church papers have been very much neglected by many in this branch. Although they are hung up in the schoolroom for anyone to read, yet I spoke to one who had been in the church (Toronto Branch) for seven years and asked him if he read the conference account in the HERALD. He said no, that he never read the HERALD.

The branches should take up this matter and get the church papers in bulk—just as the Quarterlies are sent. That would encourage the Saints to come and get their papers; if not, some one could visit them.

I was told by one who has left us that he was very much surprised that a man like me, of such brain and intellect, did not follow him when he left the church. But my experience teaches me that it is not the amount of brain or intellect that will guide a man in the right way, but it is the use he makes of his brain and intellect.

Happy is he or she who can say with the Psalmist: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path."

DAHINDA, ILLINOIS, January 25, 1919.

Editors Herald: As nothing has been contributed from these parts for some time, I shall add a little. There is not much to say, as we have had our troubles with the prevalent disease, inclement weather, etc., as all have.

We are a little band struggling along to do our duty, for the most part, only a few of the membership, striving to keep the banner afloat here. We hope better attendance will come after the spring opens up and more can get out. We should truly be thankful here that God has spared all the Saints so far, and several families have not been afflicted as yet, for which we are thankful.

We hold our community "sing" with the Methodists and town friends every Sunday afternoon, holding alternately at each church, and we are all enjoying the association together. This is as it should be. We are glad to see our people coming out with a desire to mingle, such as has never been before. We must let our light shine and our lives bear a righteous testimony, and we cannot tell the good we may do.

We have not seen a missionary for a long time; one would be very welcome.

Your sister in the gospel,

SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA, January 28, 1919.

Editors Herald: The San Diego Branch is moving ahead in spite of the adverse winds that have swept over the city. Spanish influenza brought experiences in which we were forced to take part—several weeks without services; then the wearing of the gauze mask. So far not a member of our branch has been called to make the great sacrifice. Though a few have suffered from its touch in a light form, they are now back at work.

We held two prayer services while wearing the mask, and will say that they were the best I ever attended. It was a complete reliance upon God.

All around us men and women were dying, in some instances whole families were taken, and the hospitals were filled to overflowing. How weak the power of man to combat this awful foe! So at the feet of Jesus we asked for his protecting care that our circle should not be broken. It has been so. The quarantine has been lifted, and we are happy in our work. Strangers are meeting with us and we are encouraged. The outlook was never so bright.

Through the conflicts of the future may the great Spirit guide.

FLINT, MICHIGAN, January 29 1919.

Editors Herald: I just wish to say that it has recently been my happy privilege to visit one of the best branches it has ever fallen to my lot to visit, that of Saint Thomas, Ontario. En route to this place, Saint Thomas being on the line and the place of my gospel birth some twenty-seven years ago, I felt to stop off and see the Saints of other days. Was particularly interested to know just how the twenty-three new converts brought in during my campaign last winter were faring.

It was indeed a joyful greeting, and to say that I was pleased with the situation would but partially express my pleasure. The branch simply hummed with industry and happiness. Everybody seemed to have something to do, and they were doing it in the only way—with cheerfulness.

The branch is indeed fortunate in having such an able staff of officers, such as Brethren Burger, Raison, Pearson, Rielly, Else, and Skelding, who, with the genial sunshine of Elder Johnson, are doing wonders in promoting the welfare of one and all. The choir was simply superb under the talented leadership of Sister Harndon. Indeed, no word that I might say could exaggerate the excellency of the spirit prevailing amongst one and all.

Sister Pearson (wife of Samuel Pearson, the late landmark of the church in Canada), is working wonders with her band of auxiliary workers, who, during the years of the past have simply raised hundreds of dollars for sacred service.

It is indeed a blessed branch. The Sunday school, Religion, and prayer meetings are well attended, and all rejoice in the near coming hope of Israel. My short stay, which covered only four days, was filled with happy hours. It was visiting by day, preaching by night, and baptizing after every meeting. Seven were immersed beneath the liquid wave.

Nor must I forget to say a word about the press. Never in all my travels have I found such a liberal press. During my former campaign, I was permitted to publish a digest of the former evening's discourse every day. The city street cars carried a streamer all day long for several weeks. Indeed, Saint Thomas I have found to be the most generous city on the map, and I feel, Mr. Editor, that it is only ordinary courtesy for me to announce it.

But what our work at Saint Thomas needs—and they will permit this little suggestion—is a new church more centrally located. If they would but get down on Main Street, nearer the center of this picturesque city, there is no doubt that their converts would multiply by ten.

Saint Thomas has done much for the church in a general way, producing, as she did, the late Elder J. A. MacIntosh, who is probably the greatest Bible student that Canada ever had, and whose work is known and noted in many a Canadian hamlet and town. Also, Elder E. K. Evans of Glad Tidings fame, who through long years still tells the story by pen and platform.

I may say to the many friends of Brother T. A. Phillips, that I was permitted only very recently to have a much appreciated conversation with him. He is hale and hearty, although hopelessly blind. It is good to note his unswerving faith in the angel's message, and to listen to him recount his rare spiritual experiences of other years. May God bless Brother Phillips, who, through long years of suffering and isolation, still clings to the rod of iron and to the line of honor and uprightness of character.

Oh, there are dozens more of the old friends whom I would like to write about. Many of the earlier stalwarts have passed on to the other side, such as Brother and Sister Bently, Brethren Hanley, Johnston, and Burger, Brother and Sister Cornish, Brethren Isaac and Samuel Pearson, Sisters McKillop, Clayton, and Bird, but there are excellent sons of noble sires still remaining to carry on the work of God.

Am busy just now in Flint. We are having full houses, sometimes overflowing. Everybody is on the "tip toe" of interest. It is a fine branch of 500, and bids fair to become one of the most commanding branches of the church. Matthew Liston is doing yeoman service with his baton. He is another Hoxie. Indeed, we have a fine bunch of ministers under the presidency of Elder Harder, who are making good in many ways.

DANIEL MACGREGOR.

McALLEN, TEXAS, January 30, 1919.

Editors Herald: We came here on January 6, 1918, and found a location that pleased us very much. We have been here one year and like the climate fine as we are in an irrigated part of Texas, close to the Rio Grande River and about two and one fourth miles from the Mexican line.

Have had considerable rainfall this winter—five good, big rains in two months, and that is not bad for any country.

As soon as we arrived here, we commenced to search for members of the Latter Day Saint Church. We were successful in finding about thirty members and have organized a Sunday school and have preaching twice each Sunday by Elders J. S. McDonald and W. R. Adams. Also, there is a good interest manifested among the young people outside of the church, and some of the people are reading their Bibles more than ever they have done before. We feel there is a good spirit leading us. Our Sunday school numbers forty, and the number is increasing.

The influenza has visited us here but we have not lost any of the Saints. More than two hundred of the Mexican population have died of it, in and around McAllen. The Mexican people have been scourged terribly by it, and some of them say they think God has sent this scourge upon them to destroy them as a people.

We are laboring for the victory and are determined to win; and in fighting we want to fight lawfully and in accordance with the gospel.

In gospel bonds,

J. S. McDONALD.

LAMONI, IOWA, January 31, 1919.

Editors Herald: The undersigned has been a reader of the HERALD since 1879 and has noticed the changes in style and size and appearance as well as in value and price. I have enjoyed reading the many articles and letters and felt the Spirit accompanying the reading thereof, and I have been moved upon to write a few lines to bear my testimony as I have heard and seen others do.

I will say that I have been sympathizing with those who have been isolated and desire to be gathered among the Saints, and enjoy the privilege of meeting together and receiving of the blessed Spirit that is made manifest to the Saints and the power of God bestowed through obedience of the gospel. I have proven the promises of God to be true in the paying of tithes and offerings that we read about in his law, and I have received many blessings through administration, and the witness of the Spirit as to the condition of those administered to, when physicians had said there was no hope and they could do nothing for them. The Spirit has told me in administration that the individual would recover and he did so, for which I am thankful to God, because it was not the power of man but the power of the Creator that healed them.

I remember one time a brother was not expected to live until morning, and two brethren were called upon to administer, and the deacon called on me to go there and sit up during the night with him. When the brother was administered to I was asked to assist in laying on of hands, and this brother's son came there that night and said I could go home. When we went home the two brethren were saying that they thought he could not live until morning. I felt impressed to say, "Brethren, I feel that he will still be well and bear testimony in the church," and in three weeks he did so.

Another, a sister up in Canada, had been told by a doctor that there was no hope for her; we administered to her three different times, and when we went the second time we administered twice before we left. When we were ready to leave, the sister asked me what I thought of her condition. I told her to be quiet and not fret or worry because she was in God's hands and her time to depart this life had not yet come. Shortly after, about two months, she came where we were holding meetings, and when I saw her in the schoolhouse I went to shake hands with her and asked her how she felt. She said that she felt better than she ever had during her life. I have not heard of her departure yet, and this event occurred several years ago.

In other matters, as well, I have proven that God's promises are true and fail not. If we as his children will do our part we will enjoy all he has promised us. So be encouraged, Saints, and trust fully in God, keep his commandments, and help to establish Zion in righteousness. We know that we must keep all his commandments, otherwise we have not an assurance of the promise. Now we are here in a school and we have many teachers. We can draw conclusions from the disposition of man as well as beast regarding their difference of character. Some are kind and gentle and easy to handle, while others are of an opposite disposition, fretful, and therefore harder to manage.

Pardon my digression here to explain what I mean by these things. I have been fortunate enough to have a few animals myself. At one time I had a team and a cow, and I got a little kitten and a little dog. When I was feeding the dog and the cat I wanted them to eat in one dish. When I set the dish down with milk and bread for them to eat, one said sssss! and the other said brrrr! so I commenced to pet them and talk to them as I would a child: "Now be quiet and nice and eat together." So by and by I had them trained so that the dog would look up to me when I set the dish down and the cat was not there, as though to ask, "May I eat?" When I looked at him and asked, "Where is the kitty he turned around and looked, then started out toward the barn, and met the cat about halfway between the house and the barn. When they met they touched their noses together as though to kiss each other, and then came to the house and ate. So I know that animals can be trained to love each other, and why should human beings not be more willing to be taught and love each other who are brothers and sisters by creation, and especially so since they are brothers and sisters by adoption of the covenant? So I for my part have made no reservation, and desire only to keep his commandments and do those things that he desires, so that I may reap the reward he has in store for the faithful.

But there is a difference in teaching and training in childhood, therefore we have to be considerate and strive to teach those who have been unable to see as we do, because we have an example in God's dealing with Saul of Tarsus, whom he had to smite to the earth and who was struck blind with the light that he saw while he was persecuting the Saints when he was on his way to Damascus. "And he said, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest. It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks." So it is that the Lord seems to have to use force with some in order that they may be made to understand his word.

Let us pray continually for one another, that each may help in either words or means those who sit in darkness, as I am sure that one and all love the gospel, and have made a covenant with the Lord and that they will remember in their daily supplication to God, that we may all be prepared when Christ comes to reign on the earth; that if we sleep in the dust for a season we will be awakened from the rest and be worthy to be with him during the thousand years and in all eternity.

Your brother in Christ,
JOHN WAHLSTROM.

BROCKTON, MASSACHUSETTS, February 2, 1919.

Editors Herald: Many blessings have come to us as a branch, but none greater than the manifold blessings that came to us during the two weeks that Brother Dwyer spent in our midst. Among the Saints the effect was a revival of interest in the work of the branch. Among outsiders it meant the breaking away of barriers and giving the community a better understanding of our people.

When the announcement of the brother's coming among us was made it was received with prayerful interest. The good that he had accomplished in other branches was known among us, but when it is all over we can say as did the queen of Sheba, "The half was never told."

We owe much as a branch to Brother Frank Dobbins for the excellent way in which Brother Dwyer's coming was managed. Also Sister Emma Dobbins for the masterly way in which she took charge of the singing, our pastor, E. L. Baker, and the Saints who so nobly assisted.

Through the efforts of Brother Dobbins we obtained a large Baptist church on one of the principal streets of the city. Would we fill it was the next question. We prayed for success and our prayers were heard. The first night brought out a large audience—and continued increasing night after night. On Sunday night came the great climax. Gallery and auditorium were crowded, an audience that has not been seen here for many a day. At six o'clock our Baptist friends would have Brother Dwyer speak to them at their young people's meeting.

Brother Dwyer is unique on the platform. A whirlwind at times, he sweeps everything before him. He is a wizard with words, twisting them and juggling them in all manners of unaccustomed ways, playing with them upon the emotions of his hearers, now stirring them to the very depths and then counseling them with laughter, but all the while proclaiming the central truth of the message.

Space will not permit us to tell all the good things that our eyes saw, and our hearts felt, but at 10.30 a. m., January 19, our brother gave us that masterpiece of his, "Why I became a Latter Day Saint." All who have heard this lecture cannot soon forget it, also how God works in a mysterious way his wonders to perform.

In the evening the subject was, "The message of the sea," showing that each individual is a mariner sailing on the great sea of life. He told of some who sailed calmly through rough seas, while others became shipwrecked on the ocean of life. Monday night he lectured on, "President Wilson and our victory," and in a graphic way presented the great achievements of our president and the wonderful part that America played in the world conflict. Next came, "Thirty-one days in the Desert of Sahara." This is a grand lecture. How marvelously God has provided for his children in all parts of the earth. Then came, "Rome, the Eternal City." Rome both ancient and modern was thrown on the screen, with its wonderful architecture, its Colosseum, and the Christians burying their dead in the catacombs. Thursday night our brother gave us a very powerful and impressive lecture on the "Power of personality," showing that this thing we call self may be educated and trained to a remarkable degree. He presented Jesus as the highest type of personality.

On January 26 Brother Dwyer gave a lecture on his "Three years in the Land of Jesus." At the close of this lecture the pastor of the Baptist Church, who had sat spellbound under our brother's eloquence, said, "Whatever has been said of this people, I say this, these people and the man that represents them are lovers of Jesus." What a grand tribute to our brother and to the Saints.

On the evening before Brother Dwyer's departure the Saints met at their hall for the farewell address. He spoke for one hour and a half on "Church decorum and our attitude toward new conditions created by the war," causing the weakest to look up and take courage.

Brother Augustine Dwyer is a man of a very pleasing personality. To know him is to love him. His devotion and sacrifice for the work of God is elevating and inspiring. His rich experience in education, in travel, and in the training of men makes him of great worth to the church. He has made many friends in Brockton, both in and out of the church, and the name of "Latter Day Saint" has again been made honorable. His short stay with us has been a grand treat for the Saints. We have been strengthened spiritually and encouraged to fight on in the great battle of life. Even the children of the branch were sorry to see him go, for we all were made better by his coming. He returns in March to lecture in one of the largest and most prominent churches in town.

WILL ROBERTS.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, February 2, 1919.

Editors Herald: We are still alive at Enoch Hill Branch. We had the largest audience this morning at sacrament that we have ever had, and our oblation was, of course, the largest we have ever received. Brother Elbert A. Smith preached for us at the evening service, so we have had a treat all day long.

We are, and have been for some time past, anticipating the urgent need of making more room for our Sunday school at this place, and we are surely in need of the same. We expect this year to move the present building and build a basement to set it on, and thereby have more commodious quarters for our services.

Ever praying for the onward progress of the work,
Your coworker, A. A. GAYLORD.

DUMONT, IOWA, February 2, 1919.

Editors Herald: I have met but one Saint in about seven years, as I am the only member of the church in this section of the country.

It is very hard to be away from the church. Only those who have had such experience know what it is.

I regret that I have been very unfaithful toward the up-building of the gospel, but now my soul is starving for spiritual food. I thank God he has aroused me to this fact. There is a longing in my heart for the church, and I hope that this longing will not cease until I have seen my desire accomplished.

I have longed for the day when an elder would come to this place and establish a branch of the church here. I believe there are enough honest souls here, who if they heard the gospel would accept it, and a branch could be organized.

I have a family of five children and I would like to have them where they can have church privileges. My oldest daughter, seventeen years of age, is very anxious to join the church. We attend the church of the United Brethren mostly, and they want her to join with them. I explained the gospel as best I could, and told her to do as she thought best, and she is still waiting for the Latter Day Saint baptism.

If it would be possible to get an elder here, I wish some one would please let me know. As for a place to hold meetings, my house is wide open for that purpose if that would be sufficient, and I believe it would to start with, at least.

If there are any Saints living near this place, I would be pleased to learn of it. Or if there are any of the elders or any members of the church who happen to be in Dumont by way of transferring (we have two railroads here), or for any other reason, they would be most heartily welcome at my home if they would but look me up.

I ask the prayers of the Saints that God will bless my family and help me to be faithful, and continue to appeal for help until God, through his agents, has established his gospel here.

Yours in gospel bonds,
W. H. WOOD.

FERGUS FALLS, MINNESOTA, February 3, 1919.

Editors Herald: I have a son stationed at a camp near San Antonio, Texas. He has been trying to locate the church there but has not been successful. If some one could write him he will be pleased to attend church when convenient. His address is: Sergeant Glauud R. Elliott, Headquarters Motor Command No. 30, Fort Sam Houston, San Antonio, Texas.

He has been away nearly a year and has tried at each camp where he has been located to get in touch with our church people.

Your sister in the faith,
MRS. JOSEPH ELLIOTT.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, February 3, 1919.

As has been the case in the past, Burlington has been almost too busy to stop to report its activities. Attendance at services has averaged good since resuming meetings after the quarantine, and auxiliary work is prospering. The Religio has increased sufficiently to make provision for three junior classes instead of one, and the adult enrollment shows encouraging increase also.

Some interesting new features have been tried by the superintendent of the Sunday school for the "after class" period.

Our pastor, Brother D. J. Williams, has instituted the plan of a monthly joint meeting of branch priesthood, officers and teachers of both auxiliaries, a plan which promises for the building of the work.

Before the close of the year, the branch enjoyed a visit from Brother D. T. Williams, now a counselor in the Lamoni Stake presidency, also from Brother J. A. Gillen, of the Twelve, who spoke for us morning and evening, December 22.

We are still rejoicing in the return, a few weeks ago, of Brother Glen Rayer, of the S. A. T. C., at Cornell, and are looking forward to the return in the near future of others of our boys who have seen active service in France.

The influenza swept the branch during the fall quarantine, but in no case with fatal results, though one or two were quite ill with pneumonia growing from it.

There has been one baptism since last report, and we feel that there are others who are investigating, whom we trust in time will be numbered with us.

The district conference is to be held here February 15 and 16, with preliminary auxiliary program Friday evening, February 14. We hope for a good attendance and an enjoyable session.

CORRESPONDENT.

BEVIER, MISSOURI, February 4, 1919.

Editors Herald: Just a line to let you know that we are still alive, and trying to let our light so shine that it may be a beacon for others.

The Northeastern Missouri District conference met with us February 1 and 2. The conference was unique in one respect. We had more missionaries than delegates present.

Those of the missionary force present were Patriarch F. A. Smith, who dropped in unexpectedly; another surprise was that of Apostle F. M. Sheehy, who dropped off here en route to his home at Independence from Chicago and Kewanee, Illinois. Missionaries John Davis and John Ely, and two visiting brethren, Elders Hine and Hinderks, of Stewartsville, representing their respective quorums of elders and priests, were here; also Elder W. C. Chapman, of Higbee, the district clerk, and Priest P. J. Raw, of the Second Kansas City Branch.

At the Sunday school convention Brother Vernie Ruch, of Huntsville, Missouri, was elected district superintendent of the Sunday school. He is an earnest worker and a young man of bright promise. He was called to the office of priest at this conference. His wife is also an earnest worker; she has only lately united with the church at a great personal sacrifice of friends and social position, having been a leading member and worker in the Baptist Church of her community.

We enjoyed some very excellent sermons from Brethren Sheehy and Smith, and those who failed to attend the conference missed a spiritual feast.

The influenza ban on public services, and bad roads have interfered with the work the past four months.

Eight members have been added by baptism in the past year, some of whom we are led to believe will become active workers for the Master.

J. L. WILLIAMS.

THREE TRACTS

BY APOSTLE JOHN W. RUSHTON

Apostle Rushton has written three short tracts which have been published by the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and are on sale at 75 cents per hundred. They are printed on the best quality of white paper, in attractive form, and they are a credit to the publishers and to the church because of their neat and substantial appearance.

THEIR SUBJECT MATTER

A Nineteenth-Century Prophet and His Work is the title of the first, and is a splendid piece of literature with which to introduce the latter-day restoration. It sets out the demand for the existence of the church as founded by Joseph Smith; his claim that God had spoken to him; the reason for the revival of the Bible idea of Zion and a literal kingdom of God on the earth. This little piece of literature is a pleasing introduction of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and its ideals, and any Saint with a missionary spirit should possess a good supply. It and the other two of the series are the right size for use in a number 10 envelope.

The Latter Day Saints—A Question of Identity, another of the trio, makes clear the contention of the Reorganization that it is in fact the original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and brands the Utah apostasy out of evidence contained in its own standard works. A good tract for use where the issue as to which is the true church in succession from Joseph Smith the Prophet has been raised. This work is especially clear on the secession or apostasy of Brigham Young; on the law of marriage and the history of polygamy; and on the law of tithing—contrasting the views of the two churches on these subjects.

The President of the Church is an eight-page treatise on the law of succession in the presidency, designed to be used in meeting the Utah people and others who have heard their fallacious theory. It quotes the law of the Doctrine and Covenants, shows the Utah faction to be out of harmony therewith, and also quotes declarations by Brigham Young, B. H. Roberts, and Joseph F. Smith, and other testimony in the establishment of the true succession in the presidency of the church. The Utah 1906 edition of Doctrine and Covenants is used for reference and makes the case against the apostate church strong in that they are shown to be condemned out of their own mouths.

For the subjects treated we know of no superior literature to these three tracts, for they are fair, concise, and full of history and evidence. Invest $2.25 and have 100 of three good tracts on hand for emergencies; then use them freely in your work. You may be surprised and gratified at the results.

Our Departed Ones

LASLEY.—Harvey A. Lasley was born at Lamoni, Iowa, April 27, 1894. Died near Gravette, Arkansas, December 10, 1918. Leaves father and one brother, his mother having passed away when he was a child. His wife and baby died two days before he did. One son, three years of age, survives.

KING.—Lloyd D. King, born July 10, 1877, at Akron, Indiana, died January 9, 1919, at Rupert, Idaho, of pneumonia following influenza. Baptized by James T. Davis at Cooster, Missouri, August 16, 1913. Leaves mother, wife, 3 daughters, and one son to mourn. Always lived a righteous life. Short sermon at the grave by R. C. Chambers, prayer by J. L. Benson.

LASLEY.—Viola, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Durfey, was born near Thurman, Iowa, August 11, 1891. Died near Gravette, Arkansas, December 8, 1918. Married H. A. Lasley, March 12, 1913. Leaves to mourn: father, mother, 6 brothers, 4 sisters; one sister having preceded her thirteen years ago. Baptized 14 years ago. Two sons were born, one passing away a few hours before the mother did.

MCGUIRE.—Elder Alonzo M. D. McGuire was born at Lynnville, Kentucky. Moved to Woodside, Oregon County, Missouri, about thirty years ago. He and his companion were baptized among the first by Henry Sparling about 1904. Was ordained an elder and continued to hold to the rod of iron. Died at his new home near Springfield, Missouri, January 21, and buried in Maple Park Cemetery. Services in charge of E. Winegar, sermon by Henry Sparling.

WOODMAN.—Greta B. Woodman was born in Jonesport, Maine, March 1, 1892. Baptized October, 1917, by J. F. Sheehy. Died of influenza and pneumonia at Belgrade, Maine, December 27, 1918. Her short Christian career was one of devotion and active service. Leaves to mourn a devoted husband, son Harold, mother, 3 brothers, 2 sisters, relatives, and friends. Services in charge of J. D. Wilson, with sermon by J. F. Sheehy at the home. Interment in Evergreen Cemetery, Jonesport, Maine.

DILLON.—At Des Moines, Iowa, December 16, 1918, Brother Glen Francis, son of Riley and Susie Atkinson Dillon, aged 24 years, 6 months, and 4 days. He was born in Lamoni and baptized here when a boy. He loved to study the books and to talk of the gospel. He and his wife and child went to Des Moines to spend Thanksgiving time with his parents. All were taken with the influenza, but wife and child recovered. His body was brought to Lamoni for burial; sermon preached by H. C. Smith, assisted by H. A. Stebbins.

ARGALL.—Lieutenant Royal L. Argall was born at Monterey, California, October 23, 1894. Killed while with the expeditionary forces in France, October 17, 1918. Baptized August 1, 1917, by S. S. Smith. Lived most of his life in Spokane, Washington, with his parents, being educated in the schools of the city. Was a young man with many excellent qualities and bright prospects, having many friends who revere him for his congeniality and good will. Of his immediate connection he leaves a father, mother, brother, and sister, and grandmother to mourn his departure. He fearlessly discharged his duty for his country's cause, and we honor him as a good soldier who has not died in vain.

MACKENZIE.—Marion Janes, daughter of Mr. Daniel E. and Sister Cora MacKenzie, was born July 7, 1908, at Hilliard, Washington, and died at the residence of her parents, 344 North Avenue, Hilliard, Washington, January 24, 1919, dying in the same room in which she was born. Pneumonia following influenza caused her death. Was blessed when a baby. Was a happy, congenial child, one whom we know has been a blessing to her parents and associates. Funeral from Smith and Company's parlor, sermon by S. S. Smith, interment in Fairmount Cemetery, Spokane, Washington, January 27, 1919.

TIMMERMANN.—William Timmermann was born December 23, 1892, at Grand Rapids, Michigan. Baptized June 25, 1918, by Eli Bronson. Died from influenza at Camp Lewis, Washington, November 15, 1918. There are left to mourn: father, mother, 5 sisters, 2 brothers, and a host of friends. He accepted the gospel with his whole heart and was prepared for the future life. Memorial services at Golden Valley Schoolhouse, Opheim, Montana, sermon by Eli Bronson.

LASLEY.—Horace W. Lasley was born at Des Moines, Iowa, May 27. Died December 8, 1918, aged 1 year, 7 months, 11 days, at his home near Gravette, Arkansas.

BEECHAM.—Harriet Minerva Cobb was born August 3, 1848, in Elk County, Pennsylvania. Came west with her parents in her childhood. Baptized in 1860. Married James Beecham September 18, 1870. To them were born 2 daughters, both of whom were with their mother during her sickness and death. Sister Beecham was stricken with paralysis April 9, 1916, from which she never recovered. Died at her home in Little Sioux, Iowa, January 25, 1919. She was a faithful, loving wife and mother. Was much given to hospitality, and many of the Lord's servants have been greeted and cheered as she welcomed them to her home. Funeral at the Saints' church, Little Sioux, Iowa. D. A. Hutchings in charge; sermon by Sidney Pitt, sr.

FROM HERE AND THERE

Frederick A. Smith and L. G. Holloway left Lamoni on the 7th for points west, Salt Lake City objective. They will stop at Omaha and Denver en route.

Will some of the Saints of Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, or any who may live west of that place write to or call on Mrs. Lester Hadley, Duffield, Alberta?

A CORRECTION

Brother Thomas Jones writes: "Please correct a statement in the HERALD of December 18, in excerpt of letter from Thomas Jones to President Frederick M. Smith. It should have carried this thought: that the 'sanitary inspector' was the son of the late Phillip Price, of Maerdy, Glamorganshire, Wales. The person that was in the explosion is dead over twenty years, and his wife is dead, too. There are people here and in the States that are acquainted with these events."

Brother Joseph Arber writes from Dunreath, Iowa: "Last evening we closed a successful series of meetings at Runnells. We baptized two fine young men, both heads of families, and all felt that good had been done. I began meetings here to-night, February 3."

The local Red Cross organization at Independence has awarded $1,000 to the Independence Sanitarium to partially reimburse for services and expenses during the recent influenza epidemic and in recognition of its service to the community. Much noble sacrifice has been made by the nurses and physicians in charge, in caring for the unusual number of patients intrusted to their care.

A letter from S. M. Elder, Star Route, De Witt, Arkansas, says he would like to have Elder Riley come and preach for them, but does not know his address.

SUCCESSFUL LECTURES IN THE EAST

At present Brother Augustine Dwyer is lecturing in Plymouth, Massachusetts, in the Unitarian church at that place, our branch there having secured it for the purpose. The attendance is excellent. He has recently lectured at Providence and Brockton and intermediate points. He next goes to Fall River, Massachusetts. His mailing address there will be 99 Harrison Street. Brother Dwyer will deliver two lectures in Lamoni, on April 1 and 4, under the auspices of the community lyceum committee.

Elder James E. Yates writes that they are busy with a three-weeks series of meetings at Sedalia, Missouri. Interest and attention is excellent and the Lord blessing with his Spirit. The daily papers are showing pleasing courtesy and liberality in reporting the meetings. One clipping shows Elder Yates in a full length pose.

The Des Moines Dispatch includes the bishop's report for that district, showing $3,707.20 received for the year; paid out, $3,817, of which $1,400 was sent to Bishop McGuire on general account; $1,818 was paid the missionaries' families and expense. Twenty-four elders and high priests report 3,030 services attended, 26 baptized, 21 confirmed, 3 ordained, 18 children blessed, 565 administrations to sick, 461 pastoral visits. The priests made 133 family visits; the teachers, 101; deacons, 14.

We would be glad to hear from the missionaries and others as to their activities in brief items for this department, as well as fuller accounts in letters.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

The title of the "Great Physician" is accorded to our Master. He himself recognized it, in a way, as we find recorded in Matthew 9:12. He had been rebuked for mingling with publicans and sinners. He met the rebuke in his characteristic, straightforward manner, with the statement: "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick."

The character of Christ is many-sided. It is like a diamond that presents many facets, and each facet is perfect. At each new angle we catch a ray of light that seems to us to be brighter than any that we have before seen. Isaiah loved to regard him as a "leader and a commander." To John he was the "light of the world." Paul regarded him as an "elder brother." The world has loved to think of him as a martyr, and to dwell upon the scenes of the crucifixion, the virtue of the cross, and the blood that was shed upon Calvary.

A martyr is great only when he is martyred because of some great conviction or principle. In a way the witches at Salem were martyrs. But we do not love to dwell upon their martyrdom, because neither they nor their murderers stood for anything great or good. Socrates was a martyr in a high sense. When convicted by an authoritative court of his own land he refused to flee (although escape was offered him and he felt that he was innocent of the charges preferred against him), because he had always taught that a man should be subject to the laws of the land and the decisions of the courts. Therefore he drank the hemlock rather than violate his lifelong conviction. His death stood for something.

Above all martyrs stands Christ who was martyred in the interest of the salvation of all men. But we do not care to dwell on his death, or the idea of his crucifixion, but rather upon those principles for which he died, an observance of which will bring peace, happiness, and eternal life to all who are obedient. We prefer to write of him as a "Great Physician."

The physician gets close to humanity. No other man, unless it is the minister, gets closer to human nature. He knows the follies and vices of men and women. He sees the consequences of their iniquities and secret sins. He studies and observes the handiwork of the great Creator. He knows more about the anatomy of the human form than any other professional man knows, (unless perhaps it is the sculptor or the artist.) And he sees more of the abnormal than is seen by either the sculptor or the artist.

He sees the human form on the dissecting table. He sees it bloated with dropsy, and wasted with consumption. If any man in the world is in a position to become contemptuous of the "human form divine" it would seem to be the physician. But on the other hand he sees the heights to which humanity can rise. He knows the marvelously intricate construction of the human body, and the mysterious processes of life that are of such common occurrence that other men do not notice them. If he finds degenerates and cowards in his practice, he also finds brave men and noble women.

He knows, for instance, that every time a life comes into the world some woman goes down into the valley of the shadow of death. He stands by many bedsides which are surrounded by men and women who love life yet pray with most intense emotion, "Lord, take me! Let me die and let this other one recover!" From it all, if he is a man of sense, there will be born into his heart compassion and love for men and affection and reverence toward the Creator.

Christ as the "Great Physician" got close to humanity. He saw man's degradation and shame; his sins, follies, and vices; but he also saw the capabilities that were wrapped up in human nature, and he never lost faith in man. He appealed to the best in human nature, and always maintained his faith in man and in man's abilities to respond to the divine appeal. He considered man worth the supreme sacrifice.

The physician holds a peculiar place in the community, mediating as he does between life and death. Often he is loved or hated in proportion to his success or failure in the treatment of those who come under his care. When the doctor has watched all night at the bedside of some child whose life is hanging in the balance, enlisting his skill, experience, and care in the service of the forces of life, and finally the child is saved, the parents of that child naturally feel a great sense of gratitude and love for their physician. The family doctor easily becomes the confidant and adviser in spiritual as well as temporal things.

Those who have read "Under the Bonny Brier Bush" recall the fact that some of the most touching scenes in that wonderful book of human nature are connected with the work of old Doctor William MacLure who never found the day too hot or too cold or the journey too long and wearisome to respond when any of his highland brethren were in sore straits. His crowning achievement was in the case of the wife of Tammas Mitchell. Anna's sickness was beyond his skill, but he was touched by the sorrow of the husband who could not express his feelings, excepting in the dumb misery of his eyes, and so the old doctor at his own expense brought the Queen's own physician all the way from London, through storm and flood, and the life of Anna Mitchell was saved.

The next Sunday, when homely old William MacLure passed the kirkyard on his white pony, bound for some distant home where he was needed, the men assembled in the kirkyard for once forgot their Scotch reserve and removed their hats, and as he passed out of sight they gave him three cheers.

But on the other hand, when the physician has prescribed a certain course or undertaken a difficult operation and the fates are against him, it is sometimes thought that he has sacrificed the loved one—that he has bungled or been indiscreet, or has experimented, and the former affection turns to dislike, distrust, or even the most intense hatred.

Christ came to his people at a critical time. They, as well as the balance of the world, were in a serious spiritual condition. Jeremiah has cried out, "Is there no balm in Gilead; is there no physician there? Why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?"

Christ came in answer to that appeal. No people were ever granted a greater opportunity than came to his people at that time. He was a man of their own race. Jewish blood coursed in his veins. One of their own women was his mother. He came to them speaking their own tongue, yet bringing wisdom from above, and the very plan and power needed to purify, cleanse, and heal them. At first they accepted him and loved him, cast their palm branches in his path, and welcomed him to the temple; but the course he prescribed did not please them and they turned against him and heaped upon him the most bitter persecution, scourged him, spat in his face, and crucified him. Having been rejected of them he turned to the world, and Paul presents him to us as a prototype of the serpent that was lifted up in the wilderness, that whosoever would look thereon might live.

THE "RIGHT" OF APPEAL

Every once in a while the question is raised and assertions made as to a party's right to an appeal. We have heard it stated as crudely, "I am not bound to forgive him or do anything about it until the case is tried." If the case is tried by an elders' court, "Well, I have the right of an appeal to the bishop's court." Then from the bishop's court to the high council, the right of an appeal is insisted upon. In the minds of some it is looked upon as an inherent possession, and the parties may require the bishop, either the local bishopric or the general bishopric, to give a rehearing and then require a rehearing from the high council.

No matter how carefully the officers have labored to point out and right the wrong existing, no matter how carefully and prayerfully the courts have considered every feature of the case, the right to take it up from court to court regardless of the importance of the matter, the convenience or inconvenience of other persons, is insisted upon.

We have noted the same thing before the courts of the land. Sometimes the party thinks he has the right to take a matter up and then make as much of a nuisance of it as he can both inside and outside of the court. After it has been tried once he wants to try it again in some different way. When finally the court comes to a decision so sweeping and clear cut as to leave no further opportunity of creating a disturbance, the person thinks that he has been deprived of some inalienable right.

There is no such a thing as a right to do wrong, or a right to make trouble. It is true that one may use technicalities for a time to the inconvenience of others, but will finally be brought to account.

In our own court procedure the bishopric is referred to as a common judge. We do not recall any especial restriction upon a hearing by a bishop's court.

But when it comes to the high council, it is for the purpose of settling "important difficulties." (Doctrine and Covenants 99:1.) The council of high priests abroad is to be called only on the most difficult cases of church matter, and no common or ordinary case is to be sufficient to call such council. (99:12.) The appeal taken to the high council, it is left to the president, or presidents, to determine whether any such cases as may be appealed is justly entitled to a rehearing. This apparently applies to every case that may be taken up on appeal, and certainly on that taken from the high council of high priests abroad. It is the most important business of the church, and the most difficult cases that are to be heard by the high council. (104:35.)

This means that the right of an appeal is dependent upon a showing that the importance of the case, the nature of the evidence, and the grounds of appeal are such as to entitle the party to a rehearing. Joseph Smith emphasizes this in a long editorial in the SAINTS' HERALD, volume 50, page 97. Doctrine and Covenants 104:36 does not state that every person has an appeal to this court, but instead that there is not any person who belongs to the church who is exempt from this council of the church.

Now it is true that the officers of the church are usually liberal in granting a rehearing and putting forth every possible effort toward the reconciliation of the party, to save the brother or sister. This is right but that attitude of mind which is determined to insist upon every right of the law, and every right of appeal, will prevent the courts of the church and the officers of the church performing their proper function.

As President E. A. Smith pointed out in a recent editorial, when the officers of the church come and try to effect a reconciliation and the parties ignore or reject these efforts on the part of the proper officers of the church, it is the parties who have failed in the administration of the law of God.

The law of the church at the very beginning is:

Therefore, if ye shall come unto me, or shall desire to come unto me, or if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave thou thy gift before the altar, and go thy way unto thy brother, and first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift.—Matthew 5:25, 26, Inspired Translation.

"Oh," some one will say, "that means that the offender must come to me to make it right with me." It does not mean that. It means that if you are the offender it is your duty to go and try to make it right. It does not mean that if you are the offended party that you have the right to throw all the burden upon the other party, that he shall eat just as much "humble pie" as you care to hand out. If you are the offended party, it is your duty to go to him and try to make it right.

Moreover, if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone; if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established: And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church; but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto you as a heathen man and a publican.—Matthew 18:15-17, Inspired Translation.

Now we can imagine some one saying, "That's a contradiction." But it is not so. It means that it is the duty both of the person offended and of the offender to try to bring about a reconciliation. It is not laid upon one, but is laid upon both, and it means that the offender cannot be entirely exempted. How about the one whom we assume has done some wrong? Even if he has, it is the duty of the one offended to help him to get right.

We will quote just one more which bears directly upon this question. In Doctrine and Covenants 64:2, we learn of sinners.

I, the Lord, forgiveth sins unto those who confess their sins before me, and ask forgiveness, who have not sinned unto death.

We also learn:

My disciples, in days of old, sought occasion against one another, and forgave not one another in their hearts, and for this evil they were afflicted, and sorely chastened; wherefore I say unto you, that ye ought to forgive one another, for he that forgiveth not his brother his trespasses, standeth condemned before the Lord, for there remaineth in him the greater sin. I, the Lord, will forgive whom I will forgive, but of you it is required to forgive all men; and ye ought to say in your hearts, Let God judge between me and thee, and reward thee according to thy deeds. And he that repenteth not of his sins, and confesseth them not, then ye shall bring him before the church, and do with him as the Scriptures saith unto you, either by commandment, or by revelation. And this ye shall do that God might be glorified, not because ye forgive not, having not compassion, but that ye may be justified in the eyes of the law, that ye may not offend him who is your Lawgiver.

We thus see that it is our duty, if our brother has offended us, to forgive him fully from our heart, and also to try to bring about a reconciliation. But we learn if he will not hear us, then we should take an officer of the church. (Matthew 18:16; Doctrine and Covenants 42:23.) Why? As a witness? to make a case? No! But again for the same reason, that we may gain our brother. We should go in that spirit; the one who is offended should go in that spirit; the offender should receive them in that spirit, in an effort to bring about a true reconciliation and the peace of God between them. If he will not hear thee, or the officers of the church, (the teachers) then he is turned over to the church, or as it has it in the forty-second section of the Doctrine and Covenants, to the church, that is, not in a meeting, but to the elders. (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 23.)

And the duty of the church, according to the eighteenth chapter of Matthew is still the same, to bring about a reconciliation and gain the brother or sister. It is evidently the duty of the brother or sister to come in that frame of mind that reconciliation is possible. It is also evident that he should be received in that spirit. Otherwise, the fault is his. The loss also is his.

If the case is a serious one, and justice has not been done, the person has the right to ask the bishop's court to consider their grounds for a new hearing. And if those grounds are just, the bishop will grant a rehearing. The same thing is true of the high council. If the grounds are just, and the case is one of the more serious cases, the high council will give it a rehearing.

But before the elders' court, before a bishop's court, before the high council, and after the high council has decided, always the duty of the officers of the church is to try to save the individual and the duty of the individual, or of the parties in the case, is to try to bring about a settlement of the dispute, and to be reconciled. It is never too late to forgive and to be reconciled.

Many times it does seem a matter for profound regret to see fifteen men of ability and of affairs in one of the high councils of the church, sitting perhaps for one or more days, and probably into the night, searching and studying in an effort to bring about a proper adjustment and reconciliation while the parties vainly and superciliously pass on, relying upon what they consider to be their "rights," about some very trivial matter, or one so clear that the right and wrong of it can be answered practically in a very few minutes.

The courts are ready and willing to assist in adjusting difficulties, but the primary burden does and must rest upon the individual; and we should remember that he who forgives not a brother his trespasses, there remains in him the greater sin.

The world demands of a man that he shall "make good," to use its own phrase. He must succeed wherever placed, regardless of circumstances. There is a smile for the man who succeeds, and there is a smile for the man who fails; but the smile differs in the two instances.—Elbert A. Smith.

ACCURATE QUOTATIONS

Attention should be called to the excellent article in Zion's Ensign for January 9, "Quantity and quality." Elder R. J. Lambert discusses the unfortunate habit of making inaccurate quotations, and how it spoils a sermon—but is especially bad in manuscript.

Brother Lambert is well qualified to speak upon this subject as he was proof reader and copy editor for many years for the Herald Publishing House, and is now managing editor of Zion's Ensign. He has had very arduous work to do in attempting to verify these quotations.

It is a repeated source of difficulty. We have several manuscripts on hand which need verifying. One we have had for nearly a year and a half. It is on a vital topic. The editors spent a couple of days going over and correcting the quotations; wrote to the author about it. He asked for a return of the manuscript, then returned it rewritten. It was referred for verification, and the readers were unable to find the quotations. The editors have not yet had time to spend several days verifying. In fact, it would be less work to have written the article originally. The importance of the topic and its manner of treatment, makes it essential that the quotations be correct. But this has not been done.

When we go back over the records of the past it is surprising how much of the work has to be done over again, and how much remains incomplete for several decades. A work well and thoroughly done is certainly a source of rejoicing.

As Brother Lambert intimates, some men accomplish a large amount of work, but what is its quality? A little work well done is more important than a great quantity of work poorly cared for. Accuracy is not especially difficult to attain when one fully appreciate its value.

A COLLEGE RECORD

R. J. Farthing, in a recent letter, calls our attention to the fact that Oskaloosa, Iowa, is headquarters for the "Society of Friends," in this part of the country. They have Penn College there, and the Iowa yearly meeting is held there. They report 8,322 members in Iowa; 304 are in high school; 150 in college.

It is a question, How would the 11,000 members of the Reorganized Church in Iowa compare with that? To do so we should have 400 and over in high school, and over 200 in college, and that in Graceland College. These students in Graceland should not include preparatory students, but only those of collegiate rank.

It is worth thinking about.

DECORUM IN OUR SUNDAY SERVICES

During the General Conference I was asked by the First Presidency to deliver a lecture on church decorum. It was impossible in the time allotted me to say all I wanted to say on so important a subject. Among the comments made to me upon the lecture, was the regret I did not dwell upon the Sunday service. It was in my mind to do it but time did not permit me. I will endeavor to do so now through the columns of the HERALD.

SOLEMN AND HOLY SERVICES

As to our Sunday service I would say this: From the opening time of the first hymn, onward to the benediction, our Sunday service should be a high and solemn transaction with God. In order to effect this the first thing essential is a reverential mind. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, and without it a church service is empty and debilitating. To create and sustain this mood we must understand the value of silence. The Sunday service in some of our branches is like a dusty plain. There is no mount of transfiguration. It is all noise and no upper chamber. One of the aims of the service should be to construct a frame of mind. If songs and prayers are not to shrivel on the lips, there must be reverence in the heart, and recollection in the mind. Even though we have no pictured windows, no rich architecture, no gorgeous ritual, yet we can, if we will, by the spirit of reverence, create an atmosphere in which souls instinctively look Godward. No matter how we look at divine service a spiritual atmosphere is everything. If our branches lack spiritual atmosphere I don't wonder many prefer to stay at home. Our branches must give something in the Sunday service which men cannot find in their dealings with the world. No matter how plain and simple the church building, the officers of the branch, who conduct the service should see that there is something in the conducting of the service which the heart can instinctively recognize as having come from upper worlds, and which will compel it to cry out: "This is none other than the house of God. This is the gate of heaven." I had one of our Saints in a certain city tell me that he could get more good studying at home on Sunday reading a helpful book than attending service in the branch. I at once concluded that the man was either abnormal in his nature, or there was some fatal defect in the service of the branch. Man naturally feels within him a desire to worship.

SERMON A JOINT PRODUCT OF PREACHER AND PEOPLE

To make the sermon the be-all and the end-all of our Sunday worship is, it seems to me, a devastating blunder. My own experience as a pastor of a sectarian church, taught me that the worshiping instinct is more deeply seated in the human heart than the sermon-hearing instinct. I have found that many hearts and minds respond to the call to prayer which make scarcely any reply to the summons of a sermon. In some of our remote and isolated branches, and I have visited a few of them, I have found in talking to the Saints much was said about the success of the weekly prayer meeting, the attendance often larger than at the Sunday preaching service. My conclusion was that plain and unlettered folk, lacking the intellectual discipline which enables them to follow the thread of the discourse, find a relief and an uplift in pouring out their hearts to God in song and prayer.

So we must not think of the sermon as everything in the Sunday worship of our branches. If there is not a reverence in the atmosphere of the service to prepare the hearts of the people for the message it will be like the seed that fell on briery patches. I have always liked to think of the sermon as a joint product, the creation of the preacher and the people. The prosperity of the sermon depends both on the tongue that speaks and also on the ear that hears. What matters it how consecrated and able the brother who speaks, if the minds of the Saints in the pews are not prepared for his message? Our people, for the most part, are a busy, hard-working people, and after the experience of a week with the world are in no mood on Sunday to listen, without some preparation to a gospel sermon. This accounts for the inattention and the irreverence we see in so many of our branches during the sermon. Our elders have often talked with me about it, and felt pained and mortified that it was so. This can be avoided if the character of the service before the sermon be so filled with reverence and devotion that the assembled Saints will be lifted by it to heavenly altitudes. Confusion and distractions must be removed from the mind, alienations and resentments must be cleansed from the heart. Discordant feelings must be reduced to harmony, wandering thoughts must be subdued to reverent attention. It is a good sign to note the marked improvement along the lines of reverence in many of our branches. Saints are beginning to realize that reverence is the mother of attention, and consequently we find them listening gladly to the gospel truths whose home is in heavenly places. I believe the time is coming when our Saints will be the most reverent of all the religious bodies of worshipers.

AVOID CARELESSNESS IN SERVICES

I would insist upon one thing; that is, the Sunday worship in our branches must not be trampled under by the careless feet of the late comers. Ushers, nor choir members, must not flit up and down the aisles during the reading of the Scriptures or the prayer, or the singing of an anthem. All late comers should be detained at the church door, and be permitted to take their seats only at stated pauses in the service provided for their accommodation.

It is astonishing how careless some of our branches are in the conducting of the Sunday service. With a seeming indifference they allow the worship to degenerate into a slovenly and slipshod thing, devoid of all power to solemnize and elevate the heart. Our disapproval of forms of worship, in a ritual sense, must not lead us to extremes in the opposite direction. There are some of us, evidently, who seem to think that informality alone is pleasing to the Almighty. To act in the house of God as we carry ourselves at home and to speak to the high and holy One who inhabits eternity, in the familiar, unconventional phrases of every-day life, seems to some of our Saints the only safeguard against formality and superstition. I had a president of a branch use this as an argument to excuse the disorder in the church service of his branch.

FORMS AND FORMALISM

We do well indeed to be on our guard against formalism—but formalism and forms are two different things. Formalism is the use of forms run to seed, an undue emphasis on method, to the exclusion of spirituality. But forms are ordained of God. The kneeling posture in prayer, which I am glad to say is practiced among us, is form. Forms when rightly used educate and bless. We cannot conduct our sacramental service without form. We cannot lead a convert into the waters of baptism without form. Forms, I take it, are not only the conservators, but the nourishers of the life of the heart. Without forms, I cannot see how life can maintain itself at high levels. It is by forms that government renders itself majestic, and society maintains its tone. In the ordinary courtesies of every-day life we are always using forms. Take these out of society and we act like a race of boors. I don't hesitate to say that religion is wedded to form by the grace of God. Who of us, with a spark of reverence for God, can say that posture in prayer is a trifle.

Our parents should teach the children in the homes that behavior in the house of God is a factor in the molding of character. The order we observe at a baptismal service, communion service, funeral and marriage ceremonies, though simple, should be dignified and impressive. What is more fitting than that Saints, even though our houses of worship are simple and uninviting as buildings, while in them should show in their outer conduct a sense of reverence and their consciousness of standing, in a special sense, in the presence of an infinite and holy God. All public services are of necessity seen of men, and the form of them is consequently not to be despised or slighted. The eyes of the world are on us. I believe there are more "outsiders" attending our services now than ever before. When curious eyes gathered to gaze upon Paul of Tarsus, after his conversion, to see what manner of man he was, they went away saying: "Behold he prays." May the outsiders that come by chance to our church services be so impressed with us that they will go away saying the same of us, because among us they have felt the mighty power of faith in prayer.

IMPRESSIVE PUBLIC PRAYER

And now may I say a few words upon the subject of public prayer among us. I have marveled at the impressive prayer phraseology I have found among some of our Saints in out of the way places, where educational advantages are limited. How does it happen? It simply happens because they know what it is to hold daily and private communion with God. The language of heaven is natural to their lips because they use it often. As a rule they who make a practice of daily private prayer will always pray effectively in public. Among the most precious memories I hold of my two years work among the Saints, none is dearer to me, than the fervent prayers I have heard in many humble homes, and in many humble gatherings of the Saints. I have found in such praying rich food for the soul. The prayer at the Sunday service should be fervent and deeply impressive as it is intended to take the congregation to the throne of God and prepare them for the sermon. Stumbling here and there in the prayer, retracing one's steps now and then, using the wrong adjective or adverb because the right one will not come, these may be small matters to the Almighty, but they are not small to men; and as the one who conducts the Sunday service is praying especially in behalf of those who listen, he is bound to couch his supplications in verbal forms, as shall best open men's hearts for the incoming of God's Spirit. I am sorry to say that many of the men in the pulpits of our churches show narrowness in the prayer at the Sunday service. We should avoid this. The content of a public prayer is important. Note how particular the Apostle Paul was about the spirit and manner of prayer. Note the attention he gives to the petitions which should have place in the worship of God's people everywhere. He sees to it that the prayers he offers in public have reach and range. He embraces all men—men at the top and men at the bottom. Those placed in authority over us by the civil power must not be forgotten. We must not allow ourselves to be so narrow as not to pray for those who are not members of our church, and who have no sympathy with our claim to the restored gospel. Paul had to deal with unbelievers in his day among all classes of society, but he saw to it that all sorts and conditions of men were remembered in his prayers, because he believed it was God's wish that all men should know the gospel.

Let our public prayers, at the Sunday service, have reach to them, and a breadth and depth. This is really an important matter for more things are wrought by the public prayer at the Sunday service than the one who offers it dreams of.

THE POWER OF MUSIC

I cannot forego saying something about music in connection with the Sunday service. I love to look back at the Jewish church—the church of the Old Testament—seizing upon the natural love of men for music, and making use of it in the temple service, in every synagogue and in every Jewish home. I love to think, too, that on that night on which Jesus was betrayed he and his disciples, true to the tradition of their nation, sang psalms. The 118th Psalm becomes dearer to us when we remember that it was sung by Jesus and his disciples on that ever-to-be-remembered night. I love to follow our Lord as he goes into the shadows of Gethsemane singing. What the Jewish church did well, I believe we of this church are doing better. My heart rejoiced when I came a fresh convert to the church to find singing so universally practiced and lived as a form of worship by the Saints. What a power the singing of hymns has over us! It was never known how much music lies in the human soul, till the angels sang their song of peace and good will, and Jesus mellowed the hearts of men by his heavenly message.

As I write, my thoughts go back to the sacramental service I attended two years ago at our church in Lamoni. Somehow the memory of that service hovers over me like a benediction. Even the thought of it brings a blessing. There was no prepared nor elaborate program. The people just sang the hymns out of their hearts. Indeed, I felt the spiritual life of those dear Saints in Lamoni expressing itself in their singing. And in many an hour since, when the clouds hung low, and my heart was depressed over shortcomings and imperfections in some of our branches, I have taken heart by recalling that service at Lamoni, and the solemn, majestic tones of the singing were soothing to my troubled soul.

SINGING OF THE EARLY CHRISTIANS

During those wonderful days of my long residence in Rome, I would frequently go underground to visit the Catacombs, the home of the early Christians. There were convincing evidences there on tablets that the early church had singing in its worship. When Pliny, the Latin writer of that far-off day, lifts the curtain and enables us to look on a first century congregation in the act of worship, we behold it singing. Eusebius, one of the fathers of the church of the second century, tells us that when the Spirit of God moved mightily over the people they burst into singing praises to the high and holy One.

I have always felt it a serious loss in my life that I was never gifted with any talent for music. Sentimentally I am a passionate lover of music, though organically, like Charles Lamb, I am incapable of a tune. But music makes so universal an appeal that men who are not impressed by it are not considered normal. There is much truth in the oft-quoted words of Shakespeare:

The man that hath no music in himself,
Nor is not moved with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils;
The motions of his spirit are dull as night,
And his affections dark as Erebus.

Prayer in our Sunday service, if properly practiced, will awe and elevate the human heart, while music, that is, the devotional singing of hymns, will socialize and broaden it. Touched by the spell of harmonious tones, the minds and hearts of the Saints will flow together, and the gathering at the Sunday service, in our humble churches will be a people worshipping God with one heart and one soul. In sacred music there is something heavenly before which earthly moods and worldly tempers evidently give way. Music is conducive to harmony in a branch. I have noticed that wherever a branch excels in good singing, and makes a practice of it, there is a great degree of harmony. The streams of divine melody wipe out dissensions, enmities, and dividing lines, they efface the springs of bitterness, they take all resentment out of the heart and soften the feelings to forgive and to ask forgiveness; they bring the members of the branch out into a large and wealthy place where all petty differences disappear. I am strongly of the opinion that we cannot devote too much time to the cultivation of good singing in our branches, and especially in the singing at the Sunday service.

But let me not forget to say that music like all things divine, is dangerous. I recall my experience with church choirs while assistant pastor of a large and thriving church. There was always the music problem, and sometimes it was the music scandal. Heart-racking discords in the whole church originated in the choir, often dividing families, forming cliques and no end of mischief. I hope our choirs are above this, but care is required to avoid it. Singing in the choir may convert itself into a peacock and exist only for the sake of display. Display at divine worship, in the Sunday service, is an abomination, and singing, or any music, when used at such a time for display, instead of being an angel to build up the branch, becomes a devil to tear down, for bitter envy is sure to be the result. The singers should not only have consecrated hearts but consecrated voices.

I would suggest, in our Sunday service, that a large latitude be allowed in the selection of musical forms. There should be no objection, it seems to me, why a part of the music in our service should be led by one voice in a solo, or two voices in a duet, or by four voices in a quartet, or by a whole chorus of voices. In my church service experience I have often observed that one voice can do what many voices cannot do, and a quartet can do what is impossible to a soloist or a chorus. In the interpretation of the sacred music at the Sunday service there are, to use Scriptural language, diversities of ministrations, and the same Lord; and diversities of workings, but the same God who worketh all things in all. I have noticed that in nearly all our branches the Saints love to sing. We are a singing people. I would insist, therefore, that when the members of the branch assemble for the Sunday service, that all be given an opportunity to sing. Let the entire company of the redeemed utter praises unto the Lord. In some of our branches, the singing for the most part, is confined to the choir. I do not think it well that a choir in our service, no matter how good, or how well trained, should monopolize the singing. To silence the congregation is to quench the Spirit. If the Saints in the pews prefer to remain dumb, and listen to the choir, there is reason for the branch, as a whole, to search its heart, as with a lighted candle, for its dumbness is a sign that its spiritual life is at low ebb. When Paul exhorted the Christians of his day to awake from their sleep and to arise from the dead, he bids them speak to one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, making melody with their hearts to the Lord. Singing before a service is not something to be indulged in until the late comers have arrived. Indeed, the singing of the hymns should be regarded as a sort of preaching, a public proclamation welling up from the hearts, of the goodness and longsuffering kindness of God. It is a means of grace which helps every member in the branch to exclaim triumphantly, "I believe in the communion of the Saints." I firmly believe that the sad discords we find in many of our branches would disappear if we would encourage the Saints to enter more heartily into the service of song.

BIBLE READING IN THE SERVICES

I feel that this article would be sadly lacking in completeness were I to omit laying strong emphasis upon the practice of Bible reading as a part of our Sunday service. I am sorry to say that this is not generally practiced in our branches. In some of our branches it is entirely omitted. This is a serious mistake. Bible reading, when properly done, becomes a powerful agency ordained by God, to give the people the listening ear and the attentive spirit for the sermon which is to follow. Like praying and song, it is a form of preaching. At the council of Jerusalem, in those far-off days of the early church, James identified preaching and reading when he said, "Moses, from generations of old hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every Sabbath." I have often quoted this passage when addressing students in seminaries upon the practice of reading the Scriptures.

There are special reasons why we should lay stress upon the reading of the Bible in our Sunday service. We are living in a hurried age and the pressure of life is tremendous. People have little time in their homes to devote to the reading of the Bible. Our people should have it read to them from the pulpit. If the reading is prepared beforehand, the great organ tones of prophets, apostles, and evangelists will sound out, and will win attentive ears. My experience with our Saints convinces me that they are a Bible-loving people; therefore, the more of the Bible they hear well read from the pulpit, the more they will want to hear. Children who have been fed on the Scriptures from infancy are generally good listeners at sermons when they grow up men and women.

Here comes to my mind, Timothy, that lad in Lystra, who was most attracted by the traveling preacher, Paul, of whom it is said that from the time he was a babe he knew the sacred writings. I can think of no agency that so whets the spiritual appetite for the hearing of a sermon as the reading of the Bible. It chastens the temper as no other book in the world. It produces a climate in which sermons come to a luxuriant growth. During the time I was a teacher in the Lawrence School of Oratory, New York City, I tried to have the students look at the Bible as a book of voices—thrilling, piercing, mysterious voices whose accents stir powers in the human soul which are deep and sleeping and haunt the spirit with a bewitching music which will not let it go.

I would exhort them, whether they entered the ministry or some other calling, to train themselves to become Bible readers. The man who can read the Bible well aloud will generally speak well, both in conversation and in pulpit utterance. I know of no better exercise to acquire a flexible and capacious voice than the reading of the Bible aloud. It would be well to read the same passages, over and over, until the voice is capable of expressing the emotions which the prophets felt, and the visions which the apostles saw. It is simply wonderful the transforming effect the reading aloud of the Bible has upon the voice. In this, as in everything else, perfection only comes by practice. Edwin Booth rehearsed the Sermon on the Mount fifty times before he read it in public. I heard Madam Modjeska, the great Shakespearian actress tell the students of the Lawrence School, that she spent hours reading the tender and beautiful parable of the prodigal son before she was able to give the right inflection, and correct interpretation to that most beautiful of all the utterances of Jesus. We must not fail to heed the fact that the art of reading is a fine and difficult art, and no man learns in his sleep how, by modulation and by accent, by intonation and by emphasis, to interpret the sentences that have been written for the comfort of men. I sincerely hope that the day is not far distant when the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ will have some course of training for the men ordained to preach. The lack of this is, indeed, a sad delinquency in the church, and wholly out of accord with the spirit of this enlightened age.

A dear brother who presides over one of our branches writes me the marked improvement that is showing itself in the Sunday service of the branch since he made Bible reading one of the leading features. With great care he prepares the reading of the pulpit Bible reading, going over it the previous day, and dwelling upon it. If the brother to whom I am alluding reads this he will appreciate the truth of what I am saying, and will take no offense. I happened to be in the same place with him for two weeks. In my personal interviews with him I felt he was good timber. It was worth while to spend time on him. I had him read the Bible for me one half hour twice a day. I had him read the Sermon on the Mount for me ten times. It was a complete revelation to him when I pointed out to him the effect on listening ears, of inflection, accent, pause, time, and coloring of words. The improvement that brother has made in reading is marvelous. He has applied himself with zeal to the task.

A Methodist lady, who lives in the community where this brother presides over the branch, said to me one evening after one of my lectures, "I am a Methodist, but I always come here on Sundays when Brother _____ has charge of the service. To hear that man read the Scriptures is in itself a sermon. I have an agreement with his wife that she will let me know by phone whenever he will have charge of the service." How then can any man who considers himself called to the office of spiritual leader be indifferent in this important matter? Only this morning a letter brought me the good news that the Methodist lady referred to is preparing to join the church, with her husband and son.

I would say to every one of our brethren who is called to the office of preaching: Read the Bible to the people. Read it like a man of prayer. Read it like a prophet of Jehovah. Read it like a lover subdued by its message. Prepare the reading of it, prepare it carefully, prepare it prayerfully, and new light will break forth from it every time you take its words upon your lips. One of the best things that can be said about you in your sublime calling is that you are "a man mighty in the Scriptures."

THE SERMON

And may I be permitted, though I am not a preacher, to dwell upon the sermon, which is the soul of the Sunday service. Let me say in the first place, without sentiment you cannot be an effective preacher of the gospel. Jesus and the apostles were all men of sentiment, which largely accounts for the marvelous things which they did. Be full of sentiment—divine sentiment—but avoid sentimentality, for that is not of God. You cannot drive men into believing things by argumentative sermons in these days. And since this war, what does the world care for what you have to say about the errors of sectarian churches and the positive truth of your own? Such a subject might have had weight before this war, but the world to-day doesn't give sectarianism a thought. The thing it seems to me to do in this new age is to make men hospitable to the new truth of our restored gospel by the gradual transforming of their minds. I cannot believe, in these days, that it is by mental force or brilliant argument that erroneous conceptions of the gospel are gotten rid of, but by that kind of preaching which will elevate the whole plane of thinking and raise the temperature of the life of the heart. Men will believe our gospel when we bring them into the right mood to believe it—when we bring them where they will see the transfigured Christ of the restored gospel and cry out of their hearts, "Lord, it is good to hear."

VALUE OF SIMPLE WORDS

I have already, in an article published in the Autumn Leaves, pointed out the importance of the right use of words in preaching. More could be said about it. If the preacher desires to create a sympathetic and social temper, he will pay close attention to his vocabulary. He cannot err on the side of simplicity in his choice of words. The simpler they are the more impressive they are. How absurd it is for a preacher to use, in the pulpit, words that are abstract and technical; it is a good practice to avoid all words that are cold and unfamiliar and retain only those which the heart knows. If a public speaker, whether he be lecturer or preacher, would come close to men he must speak to them in the language in which they were born. As I grow older in the profession of public speaker I marvel, more and more, at the mighty power of words. Words in themselves have strange potencies to awaken desires, quicken impulses, give shape to ambitions, and direction to feelings, and kindle all these subtle flames which burn upon the soul's central altars.

During the past two weeks I have been attending, every day, the noonday services in the Westminster Episcopal Church, in the downtown district of this city. (Providence.) The church is located in the very heart of the business center. One would think meetings so well advertised and so centrally located would attract large audiences. I was sadly disappointed to find but a handful in the great edifice. I had not listened to many of the sermons before I knew why. They lacked the attracting magnetism. A few of the preachers I heard used a vocabulary cold enough to form icicles. Others preached sermons that sounded in my ears like pages torn from an almanac or textbook, or a volume of statistics. All of these preachers with one or two exceptions dwelt upon the subject of the war, and went into history. But their words made their thoughts as dry as chaff. They were sadly lacking in the art of properly clothing the heavenly message.

It is well to remember in the use of words that they have moods as people do. It is well to study and know words which carry in their hearts the dispositions which the speaker desires to communicate to his people. With this knowledge he can adapt himself, with equal power, to a country congregation as to the city congregation. In our beautiful English language we have reverent words, tender and affectionate words, open-handed, open-hearted, hospitable words, words that are so rich in human experience that if the preacher breaks them upon his listeners, they will fill with perfume, like precious alabaster boxes, all the place where he is preaching. He will by his words, unveil in the presence of the people the face of the One who is the fairest of ten thousand, the One altogether lovely. And made to see him, the souls of the listeners will pass from glory to glory, being changed into his own image. In this way the Sunday service in our branches will become a powerful agency to cement brotherhood, and make us so united as a people, we will be able to say to that world our gospel is destined to convert: "Come, and let us worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness."

AUGUSTINE DWYER.

A multiplicity of private opinions can never be anything else but private. A multiplicity of human opinions can never be anything else but human. A multiplicity of fallible opinions can never be anything else but fallible. Only God or Christ or the Holy Spirit can be infallible.—J. W. Peterson.

THE GOSPEL LITERATURE WORK

It is not new, but as old as the gospel itself. It has been carried on in different ways, and under different names. I recall three; that of the "Distribution of literature," "The good literature bureau," "The gospel literature work." The latter is preferable, as it covers all pertaining to the gospel, while the other two preceding names might include other literature, for there is a lot of good literature that could not be called gospel literature.

At General Conference at Lamoni in 1917, it was decided to organize a commission and make it a part of the general church work. R. W. Farrell, of Providence, Rhode Island, was chosen to represent the General Sunday School Association, Harvey Sandy, of Kansas City, to represent the General Religio Society, and E. D. Moore of Lamoni, by the General Conference to represent the church. Brother Farrell was chosen as chairman, and Brother Sandy was placed in charge of the stakes, and Brother Moore in charge of circulating library and tract cases. They were left unchanged by the last conference. This commission reports annually (March 15) to the three general societies appointing them. The district is organized in like manner. One from the district conference, one by the district Sunday school convention, and one by the district Religio convention. The district reports semiannually (September 1, March 1,). It is the duty of this board to see that every branch in its district has a local literature board, and to advise and encourage such boards with visits, or by correspondence when necessary to assist locals, and help in every other possible way. If you will refer to page 3, of the Helpful suggestions, you will find how to organize. It says "that in districts or branches where there may not be three societies, the two may form a committee, giving it power to select a third. It should meet immediately and appoint a chairman and a secretary; divide the work, and perfect the organization."

The locals are the working units, and as they are many, much is expected of them, although I am sorry to say that disappointments come in this as in any other undertaking.

It is true that throughout the church it is little understood, and many treat it lightly, while in reality it is second to the preaching of the word. It is the dream of our general commission, that in time, through the simple means of education this condition will be eliminated. Our heavenly Father saw the need of education when he told us to seek out of the best books, words of wisdom, "Seek wisdom even by study." What is study? To apply the mind to, or to think on! Thinking is learning. How many of our members have our publications, and read them; think and meditate on their contents? Too many, I fear, go to a meeting and listen to a sermon, and enjoy it at the time, but as they have not availed themselves of that knowledge it soon passes from them. Knowledge cannot be passed from one to another like material substance. Thoughts are not things which may be held and handled; they are the silent acts of the mind, and can only be transmitted by being rethought. It is not enough to look and listen, the learner or listener must think. The truth must first be learned before it can be taught.

We cannot all acquire what the world calls a good education, but let us be careful not to idle away our opportunities. Our success in acquiring knowledge depends on our improvement of time. We read of how President Garfield worked to earn books and schooling. We are told of Abraham Lincoln's early life, how he labored in the most adverse surroundings, but he treasured the moments.

The other day I picked up a discarded book, yellow with age, and this is what I read, "Make good use of time if thou lovest eternity, yesterday cannot be recalled, to-morrow cannot be secured, to-day only is thine, which if lost is lost forever."

Many of our home, or self-educated people have realized this and early learned that knowledge gives power to know more. The known is the key to the unknown.

There are Latter Day Saints who do not possess the standard works of the church. Again others have them, but do not make use of them. They not only fail to reap the benefit obtained by reading, but others are not given the privilege. This class of people we want to reach first. No member of this church can be up-to-date without the church publications, for the helps contained therein. We should subscribe for the church papers, tracts, and other reading matter, dealing with the plan of salvation. Study it, and live it, then pass it on to our neighbors, telling them it contains the theory of our religion, and we are trying to live it. Good will come from the effort if done in a prayerful way. Remember God gives the increase and the reward. No member is exempt, all must warn his neighbor, or friends.

There are those who are members in name only, not knowing the doctrine of the church. These are not qualified to work in any sphere. It is not because they lack brain or talent, as God has done his work well, and given to all liberally. Some sleep on their rights. In other words, they go after the easier things of life, the things which please, and require the least resistance of brain and will power, and become as the slothful servant, who buried his one talent through fear of failure. You know what the Lord did to him. He took his one talent, and gave it to him who had been diligent.

I call to mind a dream I read recently, and I will quote a part of it, as it shows how necessary it is to feed the mind and spirit, as well as care for the body. The dream portrayed a young man so well proportioned that he was called the "perfect man." A bent old cobbler remarked to him: "It must be great to have your strength and ability."

"Yes, I enjoy life, make good wages, and get all the good I can as I go along."

"Oh, I was thinking of the influence for good you could have," said the mender of shoes.

"That is the way my mother talks. She believes in that 'doing good stuff.' Now, I say, let each one take care of himself, and get all the fun he can out of life. You go to church and keep the commandments. Yet you are not as well off as I."

"Yes, if this life were all," asserted the cobbler, "but even the 'bread of life' is a great comfort and help. If such as you believed, many would listen."

"Life is full enough of good things without our worrying about the hereafter. I'm going to the ball game Sunday; you can go to church."

He was a good young man, and his mother was proud of him, still she wished she had taught him the gospel while he was young. One day the "perfect man" was taken sick, and suddenly took his trip to the unknown land.

A friend of his mother's, and the old cobbler had preceded him. They did not recognize him there. He recognized them, and spoke to them of the beauty of the place, and the improvement to them. "Why you might be called the 'perfect man,'" he said to the cobbler. But suddenly he stopped aghast at the reflection in the crystal lake near the judgment seat, where they were going. In the water was reflected his two friends, and between them was a form so shrunken and deformed that he exclaimed: "What is that?"

"That," replied his friend in pity, "is you."

"It can't be! I was called the 'perfect man'!" he exclaimed. His friend only looked the more sorrowful as he answered, "Yes, on earth you were perfect so far as growth and looks were concerned. That body was all you lived for. You clothed and fed it. You were proud of its outward appearance. That body you left on earth when you came here. The part that lives here you entirely neglected. You had no desire for the 'bread of life,' and you would not partake of the 'living water.' You know that the soul, or spirit of man was all that came here. You neglected it; never fed or nourished it, to make it equal with your perfect body. The immortal part was starved and neglected till 'that,' pointing to the image in the water, "is all that came here, from that once 'perfect man,' fed on 'bread alone.'"

We must be diligent in preparing for the life to come. Therefore, willing hands and feet should spread this gospel literature work.

MRS. J. E. NICOLL.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

"CALLS" DENOUNCED BY M. E. BISHOP

[The following extract from the Philadelphia Ledger of December 19, 1918, may prove of interest to our readers as effective procedure in the Methodist Church. Under the circumstances alleged it does indeed seem strange that a clergyman should undertake to accept a "call."—EDITORS.]

Bishop Joseph E. Berry wishes to discourage the growing practice among Methodist Episcopal churches of "calling" pastors to their pulpits. "Calls" are in order in Presbyterian and Baptist churches, which adhere to the congregational system, the bishop says, but they are "lawless" in the Methodist Episcopal Church, where bishops appoint ministers to congregations at the annual conference.

The bishop emphasizes these opinions, and administers a rebuke to a Philadelphia minister who wrote to him announcing he had received a "call" from a certain church and asking the bishop to appoint him to that church next March. Bishop Berry withholds the names of church and minister.

In his letter to the bishop the minister wrote:

"My Dear Bishop Berry: Several officials of the _____ Church were in my congregation last Sunday and to-day I am in receipt of a call from that church to become its pastor next year. There will be an advance of $300 in my salary. I have replied, pledging myself to go, and am now writing you to ask if you will make this appointment."

Bishop Berry sent the following reply to the clergyman's communication:

"My Dear Brother: I have received your letter in which you tell me of your 'call' to _____ Church and asking if I will make the appointment. In response, I must say that both the church and yourself have done an unlawful and mischievous thing. That church has a pastor at present, a thoroughly devoted and efficient man, and to send an invitation to another minister before the conference year is half gone is treating the present pastor in a shabby and unbrotherly way. It is unsettling him in the midst of his work and virtually serving notice on him to quit. That is a thing no Methodist Episcopal Church can do.

"When the conference comes it will be proper for the brethren of the church to express their wish to the appointing power. It will also be perfectly in order for you to make your judgment and preferences known. But no appointments can be made six months in advance of the conference session—no appointments can be made until the conference meets.

"In the first place, I do not know who will be assigned to preside at your next conference, and any assurance that I might give would not bind another bishop. In the second place, if I should preside, it might not appear at the time to be the best appointment either for the church or yourself, and my hands ought not to be tied.

"'Calls' to pulpits are quite right in the Presbyterian and Baptist Churches. That is part of their congregational system. But in a Methodist Episcopal Church it is wholly lawless. And a minister who accepts such a 'call,' as you have done, is equally lawless."

In conclusion, the bishop informed the minister that he is "dealing with a principle and calling your attention to an evil that has gradually grown up, and which is sure to make more and more trouble." Bishop Berry says that if he presides at the next conference session "there will be open shop," and he will gladly hear the preferences of every church and every minister.

Resumption or Reconstruction?

The most awful and sanguinary war of all history is a thing of the past, and the terrible strain of over four heart-rending years is now gradually yielding to the ordinary tension of the pursuits of peace. This ordinary tension is hard enough, God knows; for many a man has given way to the stress of our strenuous age and has gone under. But now human activities can shape themselves into their ordinary courses and men can once more hope to plod along in their proper and usual paths of development, unhindered by the awful cataclysm that threatened to engulf the world.

So with the music work of our church. We well remember the early years of the war; how Germany heartlessly assaulted a trusting and over-confident world; how nation after nation fell into the vortex until the world was aghast, and we as a nation amazed that we were enabled to escape the holocaust. Our interests were scarcely affected, our activities did not cease, our music work kept on even though our hearts trembled somewhat. But there came a time when the nation was forced into the vortex; when our interests were seriously affected; our activities began to be curtailed and our music work suffered along with our hearts.

It was not long until the grim demands of the war began to make real inroads in our music work. The conscriptive forces of the Government began taking our young men and depleting our music forces at an undreamed of rate. Our orchestras and choirs were the most seriously affected and in time some of them were badly crippled. Some of our choirs were "all shot to pieces"; so many of the male contingent being taken that four-part work was impossible. Some of our smaller choirs were put out of commission, almost, their leader as well as most of their male singers being taken. In all, in many of our choirs and orchestras the work was made to languish because so many of the men were called to the banners of another work.

In the Staff of July 24, last, was published the principal article of the series under the caption of "War emergencies in our choirs." In this article we depicted in larger measure the conditions we have but briefly described here. But the moral to which we were pointing, the lesson we strove to teach was this; no matter how discouraging the situation we should keep going; our efforts and activities in music work should not cease; we should, to use the phrase in one of our well-known war songs, "Keep the home fires burning," so that when the boys came back they would find the things they loved ready to their hand, so that they might resume their one-time activities which meant so much to them when they went away.

We sincerely hope this editorial was extensively read and that many of our musical forces have taken our advice. We hope that as a consequence many of our choirs and orchestras have kept their interests alive; have not allowed their activities to entirely lapse but have kept them going, even though sorely depleted; working faithfully as best they could until better times should be at hand.

We have said before and now say again, the war is over and, so far as the keeping of our men in the service is concerned, it will soon be no longer a hindrance to our music work, for "the boys" will soon be home. Therefore, it is for the future we shall want to build and it is for our future that we now want to write. Our activities that lie ahead are the object now of our solicitude, for there is much to be done that our music work may have within us its due fruitage.

In the caption of this article we expressed the query as to whether the work now before us is one of resumption or one of reconstruction; whether we are to resume our work or build anew, now that the new era of peace and progress is upon us. We are of the opinion that both resumption and reconstruction must be had with our music forces; that we must not only resume our normal activities where they were left off and continue them in their legitimate progress, but we must also reconstruct many of the things we have had, and we must also build many new things that are necessary to our greater development.

As to resumption, we must pick up the threads of our work where we left off and continue them, weaving them into the fabric of our best attainments. We must get our scattered forces together and again get our work into the regular channels of progress and achievement. We must once more get into the swing and stride of our work that it may again be had in us with vigor and honor.

As to reconstruction, we must build anew many things that are old and outworn. We must take these outworn things—these methods and customs that are like threadbare garments and are no longer effective—and replace them with things that are in accord with the spirit of our times and its progress. Again, we must build new structures that did not exist before; structures that, not needed in our simpler and less developed conditions, are needed now and will be needed greatly as we grow more and develop more. We must have new ideals, greater conceptions, more perfect visions and we must build "more stately mansions" than heretofore. Herein will lie the work of reconstruction; for it is from the material of the old, largely, that we shall build the structures of the future.

Do we realize that the cessation of the war ushered in a new era to this our church? And not only to the church but to its music work as well. This new era is making demands upon us; it is insisting that we accomplish the full measure of work assigned to us. But few years yet remain of "this generation," this divinely determined time when all things must be accomplished and the great glorious work be done. The time is short and there is much to be done, and it must be done if we are to answer the ends of our calling. Let us therefore as music workers of the church strive to realize the new era now upon us with its great possibilities; let us strive to grasp these opportunities and fully improve them, and let us strive to labor and accomplish so well and so much that, so far as our portion of it is concerned, the work of "this generation" may be accomplished. Let us "shake off the coals from our garments," determined that we will again take up our work with renewed courage and enthusiasm, with the great object before us that we will do more work and better work for the music of the church.

PLANNING FOR THE FUTURE

Right now our music forces should begin planning for the future. Our work will be largely constructive; building anew as well as rebuilding the materials that have been torn down. No edifice that is worthy of construction should be erected without plans and our music forces should now rise to the dignity of architects of their own endeavors. We must plan wisely: then the structures we erect will be almost assured successes. What are the plans we must lay and how must we work to carry them into successful execution?

First, we should plan to gather the scattered forces that have been disrupted by the war. These should be gotten together and the work started again where it was relinquished. They will serve as a temporary shelter until better and more fitting structures can be planned and erected. Having gotten this far let us begin planning in earnest for the more enduring structures—the better things of our music work. Our vision should be broad enough to see the possibilities of our surroundings and our own selves, and our ambitions great enough and ardent enough to strive to grasp them and attain them. The field is broad as the universe, almost, and the opportunities are innumerable.

Let us see what some of the things are that may be done; let us get down to some concrete suggestions as to what may be attempted and attained.

We will begin with our choir forces first, because they are handiest. Our chorister and choir workers should try to be mindful of some of the many possibilities that lie around them of which the following are but a few.

The good voices in the branch, capable of solo work, should be listed and a definite plan formulated for getting their services regularly and constantly. In our church service we should have more solos and duets from our individual singers. They not only give variety and enjoyment but they lend dignity and reverence to the service. Furthermore, they develop individual incentive and attainment. Also, harmonious voices should be grouped together in trios and quartets and the "men folks" of the branch should be urged to form male quartets, which are mighty good in their place.

Now, as to the choir itself. In every branch there should be a choir, if possible, and it should be more than a group of singers stationed in front merely to lead the singing of the congregation. The choir should sing at each service, whenever possible, its voluntary contribution to the enrichment of the service—the anthem. Anthems are not formidable things; there are lots of easy anthems of good quality published, and our inexperienced choirs may readily find them in their grade of ability. Our choirs should strive to branch out and get away from the tedium of mere hymn singing, for anthems impart a zest and a finish to services such as nothing else will do. Going "on unto perfection," our choirs should increase the grade of ability of anthems until they sing those "really worth while"; they should take up the study of cantatas to be rendered on special occasions, like Christmas, Thanksgiving, Easter, etc., which study will lead them naturally to the mastering of the more noble form of musical expression—the oratorio. Still further, their work might be varied to the great enjoyment of the congregation by giving at proper intervals musicals, also song services wherein the congregation might enjoy a whole evening spent in musical devotion, and experience the radiant influence of the “spirit of song.” Going still further, the choir might add to its faith in the accomplishment of sacred singing the virtue of attainment in some secular choral work, mastering some of the standard choruses of the world and using them as the basis of those legitimate entertainments that all churches should seek to employ—the concert, the lecture, the musical reading, etc. The field is broad and the ways in which our choirs may enlarge themselves and their work are many. Not every choir, it is true, can undertake all these things, but most of our choirs can do some of them and they must be regarded as reprehensible if they do not try to do so.

Now, having considered the vocal side of our activities, let us devote some consideration to the instrumental phases. Our instrumentalists have just as much part and lot in our musical functions as have our vocalists. First, we will tackle the choir accompanist, that usually patient and long-suffering but very necessary individual. This party should endeavor to embellish the service by the rendition of suitable “voluntaries” and should be encouraged to do so. Then, next comes our orchestral forces. Our branches and Sunday schools should seek to have small orchestras, or groups of instrumentalists on orchestral instruments, for the accompaniment of the singing. We must not be discouraged if only a few instruments are available. They may be made the nucleus of future musical development. Also, we should have frequent solos and duets on all the most suitable instruments, as a feature of our services, ranging from the long-suffering, overworked piano down through all the catalogue of string, reed, and brass instruments.

We have written a great deal about the development of our musical resources and possibilities in a general way and applied to groups of individuals, and we wish to therefore take up the subject as applied to the individuals themselves.

All throughout the church there are hundreds of young people with fresh sweet voices of excellent quality and possibilities. But how few of our young people are cultivating their voices and bringing them into shape for future usefulness! Every one of these voices should be under cultivation and development, so that its owner could be found of service to the church, to society, and to himself. Further, there are equally hundreds of young people endowed with talent of a positive order, who could be developing their talents on some of the many useful and beautiful instruments of music. But why do they fail to do so? This talent exists in abundance in the church of God, for he would not have enjoined its cultivation if it had been lacking. What will be our answer in that great day of accounting if we bring our God-given talents which we have buried in the napkins of slothfulness, and we are asked to produce the increase on them that will rightfully be demanded of us?

Our people must awaken to the realization of the great responsibilities upon them in this matter. We must be alert to the fact that God-given talents are entrusted to our care. Every young person so endowed must be prodded into consciousness of his priceless possession and his duty to cultivate it. Every resource we have in this direction must be energized into activity or the individual will suffer—the church will suffer.

God said, “Let the young men and the maidens cultivate the gifts of music and of song.” Did he mean it? Did he mean that other great command when he said, “let there be light”? It seems to me that the let in the one command is as binding as in the other.

“Awake, saints, awake,
No time now for reposing.”

A Little Nonsense

Our excuse for offering the following, if excuse is at all necessary or desirable, is embraced in the lines of the apt little couplet from an author, who unfortunately did not affix his name to it for the benefit of posterity:

“A little nonsense now and then
Is relished by the wisest men.”

The first will afford enjoyment and instruction (!) to our choirs.

ADMIRED HIS PLUCK

“Well,” said Uncle Si Bruggins after a solo by a fashionable church choir tenor, “if that ain’t the rudest thing I ever saw. Just as soon as that young man began to sing, every other member of the choir stopped. But he went right through with it, and I must say I admired his spunk.”—Boston Transcript.

Here is a “limerick” that will interest our orchestra and band workers, and possibly offer them an ideal to which they may strive in their efforts to attain high standards:

THE POWER OF MUSIC

“A certain young maid of La Grande
Became so entranced by a band,
While eating a bun
Forgot she was done,
And ate a big piece of her hand.”

Do We Need Education for Parenthood?

Each new generation must improve upon its parents, else the world stands still, or goes back. Thus it is necessary for parents to collect all the knowledge possible, in order to impart to their children a greater heritage than they themselves received. Acquired knowledge is education, whether it comes from books, travel, lecture, or observation.

In the home the child best develops his individuality. Let parents cease to believe that their whole duty is done when they send their children to school or Sunday school. A complete education must combine the more individual training of the home with that of school and other outside sources of knowledge. Is it not most important, then, that parents who possess such influence to mold and guide, and who have the opportunity, daily, hourly, to exert that influence, should seek to do so intelligently?

There are no little things in life. The many apparent trifles are the mighty forces which turn the material wheels of our existences. Who knows, likewise, in what moment any of us may be changing or influencing the tenor of a human career? A light word at the wrong time, a blighting criticism when tenderness was needed, mockery when honest effort should have been met with sympathy and seriousness, silence when black night of doubt or despair engulfed a soul, gloom when a mother's eye should have beamed with joy and pride—all these mistakes are as spades which dig deep graves of discouragement for those over whom our influence is strong, and for whose welfare we are responsible.

Early environment, a mother's influence, her faith and counsel, intelligently given, may make or mar, not only spiritually and morally, but practically and intellectually, as well.

Ruskin has said: "Scatter diligently in susceptible minds the germs of the good and the beautiful; they will develop there to trees, bud, bloom, and bear the golden fruits of paradise."

Wordsworth tells us "As the twig is bent, the tree is inclined." That which we dream to-day may become the deeds of to-morrow, and the toys of childhood become the tools of our maturer years.

So it is important that the work and play of early years should be such as would cause a child to think right thoughts, which in turn become right actions and decisions. The pure-minded child is most likely to become the pure-minded adult, could that child be taught to keep his ideals intact and unsullied. The seed that is sown in the mind in the springtime of life determines the character of the harvest that will be reaped in the autumn.

Think, then, ye parents! Are you sowing the right kind of seed, and giving it the proper culture, that the reaping may not be in tears?

Training Little Children

TOYS SHOULD ANSWER NEEDS

Most children have too many toys; consequently they are not stirred to make toys for themselves, and their powers of invention are retarded. There are two classes of toys; useful and useless. Those are useful which answer the needs of child life. A ball is a most useful toy because it is about the first a child can play with. All mothers know how a babe, as soon as it is old enough to use its hands, loves a soft, bright-colored ball. From infancy practically through the whole of life the ball plays an active part. Tennis, golf, baseball, football—all sports of later life center around a ball.

Next comes the building stage, with blocks. A ten-cent box of dominoes is excellent material for building and for making tables, chairs, beds and soldiers in a row.

Then comes the imitative stage of toys. Every child, boy or girl, wants to do as father or mother does. A ten-cent sweeper and a ten-cent broom are always a joy to a child's heart and enable the little one to actually help mother.

The doll also plays an important part in children's lives, for it answers the instinct for nurture which is inborn in children. Good serviceable dolls, not too many at once, are most useful. Children also need sets of dishes with which to learn to set table and to pretend to cook, and which they can also learn to wash and dry, again imitating mother. Imitating father, children can play with toys of construction, such as sets of stone blocks and trains, automobiles, and other things that go.

Toys are useless which are easily broken, such as expensive mechanical toys. These are generally more interesting to grown-ups than to children. Huge hobby-horses, large dolls, and too many toys are useless also. Every little girl longs for a big doll—which is right and good—but for babies of two years or younger such toys are not only useless but lead to the bored child, which of all things is the most piti- able—a child to whom nothing is new, nothing interesting!

Through play with toys should be taught the care of toys. A child who is taught to pick up his toys and put them away in their proper places becomes neat and orderly. Often children are careless with their toys and, unless carefulness is instilled in them, they become wantonly destructive and have no respect for the property of others. If a little boy has a stuffed dog that barks and he is found investigating the reason for the barking, he is not destructive so much as curious, and it must be remembered that through investigation the great discoveries of the world have been made. A child with a mechanical mind will often take his toys apart, "to see how they are made." But curiosity is strong in all children; therefore before punishing a child for destroying a toy, be sure that he has been guilty of something more than pure thoughtlessness.

Happy and contented—these are the two words which describe the condition of children in the kindergarten and should describe the condition in the home, too. You can accomplish so much more through love than you can through force. The busy mother in the home can have just as happy children as the kindergartner, but she must devote a part of every day to them conscientiously.

Be reasonable with a child and he will be reasonable, too. Remember that the desired results from child training depend first upon the physical condition of the child, and secondly upon the time, thought, and care which you give to him.

A dear old lady said to me once, after I had remarked with discouragement that all I seemed to accomplish in a day was to care for my baby's needs, "My dear, you are doing a woman's greatest work right now—the training of your child's mind and morals. The time spent may show no immediate results, but you are laying the foundation for a character that will stand as a monument to your work and wisdom in years to come."—Mrs. Lenora R. Ranus in Bureau of Education Bulletin.

Two Helpful Books

Brother Ralph Farrell writes: "I want to recommend to you two books we have found valuable. Laura F. Kready, the author of one, is unmarried, and because of that fact her book has particularly pleased our city librarian, who marvels that a single woman could write so truthfully and so helpfully.

"A Study of Fairy Tales, by Laura F. Kready, B. S.

"What Shall We Read to the Children? by Clara Whitehill Hunt.

"These books are both published by Houghton, Mifflin Company, Chicago, and on their last pages are given lists of good books suitable for children of different ages."

Clean Milk and Plenty of It!

The need of public action to place clean milk within the reach of every family having little children, is emphasized in the report of the New Orleans milk situation, just issued by the Children's Bureau, United States Department of Labor. This is the third study made under the bureau's auspices of the use of milk in families where there are small children. The studies all indicate that children are not getting as much milk to drink as they need for healthful development; but in New Orleans, where the most recent study was made, children are found to be getting less milk to drink than the children of Baltimore, Maryland, and Washington, District of Columbia, the other two cities studied. Seventy per cent of the children under eight who were not breast fed were getting no fresh milk at all to drink. In Baltimore sixty-six per cent, and in Washington forty-five per cent of the children under eight and not breast-fed were getting no milk to drink, although the Children's Bureau points out that a child under eight should drink at least three cups (a pint and a half) of milk a day.

In New Orleans only twenty of the 413 children from two to seven years old, included in the study, were drinking as much as three cups of fresh milk a day.

While the New Orleans figures show that the children from two to seven years old suffer most from lack of milk to drink, it is also to be noted that only sixty-three per cent of the babies under two who are not nursed by their mothers are given milk to drink, leaving more than a third of these little children without fresh milk.

The situation, says the report, gives cause for grave concern, because the children are not only being deprived of "the best and most nourishing food for normal development," but they are being given injurious substitutes in its stead. Of 338 children seven years old or younger who are not breast fed and are getting no fresh milk to drink, 245 are given tea or coffee in place of it. "Milk is not merely a pleasant drink," said a Children's Bureau expert recently, "it is a food, and really a solid food. Americans are a milk-fed race whose health will seriously deteriorate if the use of dairy products is given up."

The 211 families studied form only a small proportion of those in New Orleans having little children, but they are considered representative. Most of the parents were of native birth; in seventeen families they were foreign born, and five were negro. Although definite figures regarding income were not secured, the families are of about the same economic status as those included in the recent Washington study, where more than three fourths of the families were living on $20 a week or less.

Reports issued by the Bureau of Labor Statistics show that the price of milk in the United States generally has increased sixty-three per cent in the last five years. According to the Bureau of Markets of the Department of Agriculture, milk now retails for sixteen cents in New Orleans. In several places, notably Shreveport, Louisiana, Nashville, Tennessee, and Tampa, Florida, it is as high as twenty cents a quart. The point is made by the Children's Bureau that no matter what the price of milk it is still a cheap food, because it contains all the elements essential to growth.

Fifty-three per cent of the total milk purchased in New Orleans is neither pasteurized nor inspected, and the report emphasizes the need of inspection for the whole supply.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Some Observations on Science

It has been some years since I have contributed to the correspondent department of our valuable paper, of which I have been an interested reader for these many years, and through which I have become acquainted with many able writers. A few I have met, and many I may never meet until we come into that sphere of abundant joy; and a few for whom I have felt grieved because of their fall. How careful and watchful we should be, lest in some unguarded moment we think some evil thought and fall, for we do not stand in our own strength alone, but are dependent upon divine assistance, for which, sometimes, it becomes necessary to patiently wait.

Having noticed the letter of Brother Rhodes, of Centralia, Washington, in present volume, January 15, I thought I would try to make another visit to this department. It has been said that children and fools can ask more questions in a few minutes than wise men can answer in many months; now I do not refer to the brother. I know full well how to sympathize with him, but the class of questioners he refers to is what I mean. Now as an individual, my stakes are set; they are the three standard books of the church. Believing that God gave them, I hold them as true, and that with them there are no impossibilities. (Matthew 19:26.)

But with the questions referred to, I find some possibilities that block the channels of some of their positive statements, because of the facts which force them to admit of these possibilities. We can say that time was not measured to man in the earth until he was placed here to use it. Thus time referred to before Adam was formed out of dust, must have been reckoned by another standard, of which we have given in Psalm 90:4; 2 Peter 3:8. There is another standard given also (Numbers 14:34; Ezekiel 4:6). Now, by combining these two we can count each day of creation as either one thousand years or three hundred and sixty-five thousand years. We have God's time, one thousand years, as compared to man's literal day, twenty-four hours; then man's prophetic day, one year: three hundred and sixty-five days of twenty-four hours each, which compared to God's day makes three hundred and sixty-five thousand years of man's literal days of twenty-four hours, a position more reasonable than that taken by the opponents of truth.

We will now take notice of the words science and scientific.

Science. First, knowledge, penetrating and comprehensive information, skill. Second, a comprehension and understanding of truth, investigation of truth for its own sake; pursuit of pure knowledge. Third, truth ascertained, that which is known. Science is a complement of cognitions, having in point of form the characteristic of logical perfection, and in point of matter the character of real truth. Science is applied or pure, applied science is a knowledge of facts, events, or phenomena as explained, accounted for, or produced by means of force, causes, or laws. Pure science is the knowledge of these powers considered apart, or as pure from all application. Science is literally knowledge, but more usually denotes a systematic and orderly arrangement of knowledge.

Scientific: dependent on the rules of science.—Webster.

Thus we observe that if a man of science takes a position about anything and cannot establish the fact, because of some possibility obstructing the absolute proof, the position is not absolutely scientific. Thus, reference has been made, by those opposing the truth, to some ancient city ruins, among them one called Nippur, of which I one time heard a prominent infidel make the statement that it was somewhere about, or more than fifteen thousand years back in antiquity. In connection, I remember some few years ago the position taken concerning some of the pyramids of Egypt, that they were built some five thousand years before Christ. This would be long before the flood, and also the Egyptian chronology, taking a space of time far antedating the flood. Now there is scientific proof of the flood, and men builded cities before the flood, and built them strong, with stone and other solid material. Their works were not all destroyed during the flood, although buried deeply under water. Now, during the great storm of the flood no doubt there were, as in all great storms of history, some volcanic troubles; thus Nippur could have been buried with a great amount of earth, and because of the amount of earth covering it, some would say it was buried fifteen or twenty thousand years ago. It might not have been built earlier than one hundred years before the flood, while the pyramids of Egypt might have come through without the dirt covering them.

And also, the records of kingdoms could have been well preserved through the flood. This calls to mind the natural inclination of many to journey westward (Genesis 11:1); the soon discovery of Egypt. The same volcanic actions would have buried animals in what would become later rock formation, they thus becoming a portion of the rock in which they were buried, and men now finding these fossil remains could assume that they had been buried hundreds of thousands of years ago. The same possibilities will apply to the strata formation of river beds.

I do not know of any records giving the great age of men, aside from the Bible. The reason for the shortening of life is also given in the Bible.

We find that Shem, Heber, and Abraham lived at the same time, while Shem was born before the flood, and by the chronology we find that Heber outlived Abraham four years. We find record of men in our modern times living to great age. As to any history dating back 7,000 B. C., I do not think there is any such reliable, because of these possibilities.

God wants us to be well informed, and has for this reason instructed us to study all good books, but there are times when we, as the saying is, come up against something. But at such time, I believe the safe way is to hold on to the rod of iron, waiting the Lord's time to make the matter plain, and when he does this, those opposing cannot stand, and thus if faith in God be scientific, would not a lack of faith in his word as he has given it be unscientific?

Your brother in bonds, FRANCIS EARL.

Patriarch William Lewis is quite ill at the home of Brother D. C. Kinnaman, his son-in-law, in Saint Joseph. He has had a stroke of paralysis which has affected his left arm and otherwise disturbed his health. Prayer is requested for him.

Brother W. P. Pickering is in the Noyes Hospital, Saint Joseph, where he has undergone two operations. He is doing well considering his age, but should be remembered in the prayers of the Saints.

The Saints of Cameron are considering the question of enlarging their church building by the addition of a gallery at the west end and a basement, with platform and baptismal font, for increased facilities for regular services, Sunday school classes, etc. They are much crowded in present quarters and need additional room. Under the local pastorate of Brother R. S. Budd the branch is developing and is united in pushing the work in all departments. Brother R. S. Salyards was with them from Sunday, the 2d, over Tuesday, the 4th. Bishops B. R. McGuire and M. H. Siegfried accompanied by Sisters McGuire and Siegfried, motored over from Independence and addressed the Saints Sunday morning, going thence to Stewartsville for the evening. Their discourses were well received.

Brother J. W. Roberts was called to Fortescue on Sunday, the 2d, to preach the funeral sermon of a young brother who died suddenly of heart failure. He returned to Saint Joseph and spoke in the evening at the First Saint Joseph Branch.

The Second Saint Joseph Branch, of South Saint Joseph, dedicated its church building at 2.30 p. m. on Sunday, the 9th. Bishop M. H. Siegfried, of Independence, delivered the address; Brother Samuel Twombly offered the dedicatory prayer; Brother R. S. Salyards was in charge of the service.

Anthems by the choir, music by the local orchestra, vocal numbers, and recitations made up the program. The house was redecorated; the attendance was large and the occasion was greatly enjoyed. Brother J. L. Bear is president of the Second Branch.

Bishop Siegfried spoke at the First Branch, Saint Joseph, at 11 a. m., the 9th. From the dedication at Second Branch he went to Stewartsville, speaking there at 8 p. m. He was to take thence a belated auto left there by him and Bishop McGuire the preceding Sunday. Even a "Ford" may rebel and refuse to carry such an overweight of Christmas offering as the Bishopric is gathering up in these glad and prosperous days of financial reconstruction! May the good work go on.

Brother J. O. Worden, of the Fourth Kansas City Branch, was kind enough to speak to the Saints of the First Branch at the evening service. He was returning from Stewartsville where his mother is ill.

The spring conference of the stake will meet with the First Branch, Saint Joseph, on Friday, March 7, continuing over Sunday, the 9th. Separate auxiliary conventions have been discontinued, hence Friday will be devoted to auxiliary work. Saints of the stake are requested to observe Sunday morning, March 2, as a season of fasting, making earnest prayer in behalf of the needs of the stake. Important places are to be filled and the divine direction in general is needed.

Brother O. W. Okerlind of the missionary force informs us that there is good work for coal miners at Richmond, Missouri. About twenty Saints reside there and their force would be strengthened by the addition of good men—elders and priests—of the local ministry. A man is wanted also to run a laundry. Write Brother L. F. Ferguson, Hardin, Missouri, in local charge at Richmond and vicinity.

We note that press statements report bluebirds at Sedalia. We dislike to say anything that would indicate backwardness hereabouts, but so far have seen no robins nor other harbingers of spring. So we shall wait till we see the advance guard of General Conference delegates—the old, reliable, sure signs. They are sure, as men of many minds, to spring something upon us.

From the Attleboro, Massachusetts, Branch

We are making some progress in this locality, not so much in numbers, but in spiritual development. We have had our trials the same as other sections. Two of our members have been claimed by the universal scourge of influenza, and a number of others afflicted, but have recovered. The Lord answers our prayers when we exercise the proper faith and are in harmony with his will. Just sending for the elders and being administered to, is not all that the Lord requires of us in times of sickness.

The scourge was so bad in this section last fall that we had to close our church along with the other churches for five weeks, and at the beginning of this year it was necessary to close the primary department of our Sunday school for a few weeks. Our Sunday school went "over the top" for our Christmas offering, thanks to the efficient work of our two young superintendents, Brothers Harold Cash and Raymond Bradshaw. We expect to make a good showing this year, at least we are making a start to that end.

We were not privileged to have our Christmas exercises (the church being closed at that time) although we had spent much time preparing for the event.

The members of our church choir went around the city carol-singing Christmas Eve. This old English custom is kept up in New England.

We have had a few special things this fall and winter. Beginning December 8, Brother Augustine Dwyer gave us a series of his wonderful travel talks, and our church was well filled every night, many strangers in attendance.

January 19 was branch officers' day, each member of the priesthood occupying about ten minutes at one of the services. The variety of speakers and subjects presented was the novel feature.

January 26 was district day, our district officers in charge. Their talks were indeed helpful and edifying.

Last week while Sister Ida Power was busy about her work in her home, and singing to herself, "How gentle God's command," she found herself singing words that were new to her. Something prompted her to write, and the following lines were given:

"My people trust in me,
Though dark the way may seem,
The hand that led the prophets through,
Will surely lead thee, too.

"Be honest with my word,
Expound it to mankind,
And God will place a blessing there,
And they the truth will find.

"My sheep will hear my voice,
And they will gather in,
So be thou faithful in my work,
And thou a home shall win."

This sister did not show these lines to anyone, neither did she try to memorize the same, but the next Sunday (February 2) during the sacrament service she arose and sang the words to the tune of No. 80 of the Hymnal. Everyone realized that she was under the influence of the Spirit, and the same was soon confirmed by a tongue given by Elder Charles Coombs.

The Saints of this branch are a loyal band, although the majority of the members are living outside of the city.

Our Religio is doing good work under the care of Brethren Earle Bradshaw and Lawrence Power; Brother Earle has lately been ordained a teacher.

Our Young Men's Club is presided over by George Baldwin and Albert Bradshaw. This club is studying "Hurlbut's Old Testament course," Earle Bradshaw being the teacher. All of these brethren, as well as the Sunday school superintendents are young in years and young in the work, but they are all "making good," which accounts for the success of these departments.

We must mention our young women, who comprise the Oriole Circle, and do such splendid work in the choir, Sunday school and Religio. The work done by these sisters is always commendatory.

Our church choir is still doing good work. John P. Pilling, the leader, had to leave the city a few months ago to accept a position with the Fore River Shipbuilding Company, of Quincy, Massachusetts. Sister J. W. Hull was chosen to succeed Brother Pilling as chorister; this sister is also monitor of the Orioles.

On February 11 we celebrate our fifteenth anniversary of the organization of the branch, with a banquet in the church.

February 16 is Bishop's day. Our district bishop, M. C. Fisher, will have charge of the services.

February 23 is our annual departmental day. Each department of branch work is represented by a speaker, who occupies about ten minutes time in one of the services.

We are all trying to sow the good seed of truth, inviting people to come to Christ, as well as building up those that are in Christ.

Christmas Offering Roll of Honor

A large rectangular box containing a grid of asterisks, intended for a list of names and amounts.

We have 427 to start this report and several more to add this week, yet we fear we are not going to reach our aim, and why? Well, we shall let the schools answer this question. But here is some food for thought—some schools have given as much as five, ten, fifteen, and up as high as $25 per member, and yet we have only averaged about $2 per member for the grand total. What is the trouble? Where is the trouble? And what shall we do? Let us get right down to business and show what we can do this year. Why, do you know what I would say if some person were to stop me and tell me that our 40,000 or 50,000 members could not raise $150,000 in a year's time? I would surely give him to understand that I could pick just a few of our good schools and raise that amount if necessary—and I would be sincere about it, too—and I mean it, every word. Surely our entire membership can easily raise far more than this amount. Too many of us have not gotten into this seriously, and the results will not show as they should until we do get right down to work, everyone of us. Are you with us or not? Let's get away to a good start and keep going.

Denver, Colorado, First Denver Branch Sunday School. William L. Cowan, treasurer, reports: "Our present enrollment is 63 and our offering is $136.45."

Cleveland, Ohio. H. P. Morrison reports: "Our school has 75 members and our offering is $323, an average of more than $4 per member."

Columbus, Ohio. Carl E. Turvey, superintendent, reports for the Second Columbus Sunday School: "On December 1, 1918, we had about $20 offering, but at the finish we sent in $117 for a membership of 30."

Holstein, Ontario. Lizzie Morrison reports: "Sunday school enrollment 14, offering $32.35; home department enrollment 11, offering $22."

Pryor Creek, Missouri. Hettie McCormick who belongs to the home class writes: "I gave March, April, May, and June Sunday eggs, and it netted me $17.25. I am a member of the home class of the Pryor Creek Sunday School."

Courtright, Ontario.

Clearwater, Nebraska. Sister J. E. Flowers, superintendent, reports: "We have reached our $2 mark at last."

The following schools have gone "over the top," but have not reported to us by letter, hence we can but list the names:

Wilburton, Oklahoma.

Reeding, Oklahoma.

Deselm, Illinois, Home Department.

Olathe, Colorado, California Mesa Sunday School.

Wabash, Ontario.

Lansford, North Dakota.

Fargo, North Dakota.

Alamo, North Dakota.

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Pioneer Sunday School Cradle Roll.

Burlington, Colorado, Rising Star Sunday School.

Beloit, Wisconsin.

London, Ontario.

Bothwell, Ontario.

Coleman, Michigan.

Fall River, Massachusetts, Bethel Sunday School.

Now can we not all get right together and work hard this year? It seems settled that we cannot reach our full amount of $100,000 this year. This will make two years that we have failed in our aim. They say the "third time is the charm," and I surely hope it will prove so for us this year, but it will not if all do not get right after our work.

Yours for a successful campaign,

ARTHUR W. SMITH.

The Mothers in Israel

[The following was part of an address delivered before Mount Zion Sunday School at a Mothers' Day program, by Sister Abbie A. Horton, who also recited a poetic tribute to the memory of Emma Smith, composed by her son, our beloved ex-president, Joseph Smith.]

To-day is Mothers' Day, and we desire to call to our remembrance some of the mothers of the past, and among them are those who cradled and guided our own worn and tired feet. Let us never forget them.

But what of the mothers in Israel whom some of us have known, lo, these many years? From time to time we greet the silver-haired matrons of long service, pioneer mothers, and whose names are identified with the work in Independence. We call up the names of our beloved sisters, Emma Smith, Emma Pilgrim, Mrs. George Hilliard, Julia Braidwood, and Mary Robinson, of the Aid Society. We remember well our companions sitting in solemn conclave in the old-fashioned "Prayer Union," Margaret Winsor, Mary Eaton, Sisters Cleveland and McLellan, and a few others who are still with us.

But we have not exhausted the list of the busy matrons who have brought to the front brave sons and daughters who are able defenders of this glorious work.

As one name is prominent in the early chronicles of this church, we will speak more fully concerning her—Emma Smith, the wife of Joseph the Martyr, who as early as the year 1830 was baptized under the hands of Elder Oliver Cowdery. The Saints were being ruthlessly persecuted, and she was among those who, amid the vicissitudes of those early days, continued faithful.

Soon after joining the church, she began to feel the bitterness of estrangement shown by her own kindred, and she became as a stranger in her own father's house, sharing with her husband the reproaches and ill treatment of their enemies. But in the hour of need the Lord spoke to her consoling words, and according to the revelation given, her soul did "delight in the glory" which came upon her husband, her life was "preserved," she was named "the elect lady," her calling was "as a scribe," she was ordained to "expound, exhort, her time being given to writing and learning much." She made also a selection of sacred hymns, for the Lord delighteth in the song of the heart, and it is as a prayer unto him.

As a faithful and loved mother in Israel, she comforted her bereaved children all through their young yet saddened days, and taught them ever to put their trust in God, who was their helper and defense. In the words of our worthy historian, Heman C. Smith, it was her "unswerving integrity, fidelity and devotion, her wise counsel that assisted to make this latter-day work a success."

I have a poem written to her memory by her devoted son, Joseph Smith, which was presented to me while in Plano, Illinois, and I take pleasure in reading it to you here present.

Our beloved brother was present at an anniversary concert of the Rising Star Sunday School in Plano, which he informed me was one of the first Sunday schools of the Reorganization.

The entertainment, with your humble servant as director, took place thirty-seven years ago, and among the children who took part, beside my own daughter and two sons, were some folks you all know well. On the program, which is well worn, we read: "Centennial Song," by Miss Audie Smith, who is now Audentia Anderson, also "Recitation, 'Many Crowns,'" and Freddie was one of the three boys, now President Frederick M. Smith.

So perhaps all these young people are still doing their share, and we trust seeking, as pioneers in this glorious work, to bring about and to build up Zion. May we all emulate the example of those who have been true and faithful, be prepared to enter into the kingdom of our Lord, and be able to wear the crown of eternal life.

Here is a tribute to her memory, "My mother," composed by her son Joseph, long ago:

"I miss thee, my mother: thine image is still
The deepest impressed on my heart;
And that tablet, so faithful, in death shall be chill
E'er a line of that image depart.
Thou wert torn from my side when I treasured thee most,
When my reason could measure thy worth—
When I knew, but too well, that the idol I'd lost
Could ne'er be replaced upon earth.

"I miss thee, my mother, when young health hath fled
And I sink in the languor of pain:
Where, where is the arm that once pillowed my head
And the ear that once heard me complain?
Other hands may caress: gentle accents may fall,
For the fond and the true are yet mine,
I've a blessing for each, I am grateful to all;
But whose care can be soothing as thine?

"I miss thee, my mother, oh, when do I not?
Though I know 'twas the wisdom of heaven

That the deepest shade fell on the sunniest spot,
 And such ties of devotion were riven.
 For when thou wert with me, my soul was below;
 I was chained to the earth I then trod;
 My thoughts, my affections, were earthbound, but now
 They have followed thy spirit to God."

A Friendly Letter

I wonder if anybody cares if I wrote you a friendly letter. I want to let you know that I at least, not to say "I for one," have thought of the same thing that you spoke of in your sermon on the "Characteristics of Jesus," in the HERALD of January 8. It was this, "But I sometimes think we make the mistake in giving our attention to doctrine too exclusively, and do not think enough about Jesus as a personal friend." I sometimes get hungry to read from our people more of Jesus Christ; wish they could bring more into their writings and preaching. About two years ago I was taking the Sunday School Times, and it was refreshing even in brief items the way in which Jesus Christ was brought to the front. There would scarcely be an item that did not have Jesus held up as the great centerpiece, and yet these articles did not satisfy, they could not enter into the depths that our writers do. The lack of knowledge could be so plainly seen—spiritual knowledge. I do not think there are any writings outside of the church of Jesus Christ that satisfy those who have received the knowledge of spiritual things that is given through the restored gospel. That is my rock, or I might better say my anchor. One might be deceived in testimonies, but knowledge is something more sure. I am aware that we as a church have attained to much that others—Christian people—are blindly striving for, that keeps them clinging to Christ, yet it seems to me that we, as a people, are leaving Jesus Christ more in the background than was the case some years ago, and giving the whole attention to works, at least in some cases. However this may be, when an elder writes with the Spirit of God, the reader is brought in close association with Jesus, whether his name is mentioned or not.

I am sorry to say I was greatly disappointed in the wording of a recent article. I thought when he condemned and wanted to sweep aside the unlearned and perhaps clumsy preachers, he lost sight of the fact that they did not call themselves. If such men are called and ordained by the authorities of the church, it is undoubtedly their duty to stand before the people when appointed, and endeavor to magnify their calling. He did not reckon with the Holy Spirit as being the chief helper in preaching the gospel of Christ, but the stress was all laid on words beautifully spoken. Of course all that is very nice, and greatly to be desired, but without the Holy Spirit with it, it would never convert a soul, and if the Spirit of God was with them, their lack of a finished education would not grate upon the ears of their hearers, and their preaching would be more satisfying than a discourse of beautifully sounding words without the Spirit of God predominating. I do not say this as against education (and I believe I have the president of the church right with me), but my sympathies have been aroused many times in the past year or two by hearing the uneducated preachers cried down or spoken of in a way intended to take all the breath out of those who could have done much better with helpful words, and I ask, what is to be done with those uneducated men who have been called and ordained before education got to be such a fad. The educated ones do not want them among them. Will God release them from the terrible retribution pronounced upon them if they do not magnify their calling? Where would have been all the good work that Brother Clapp did if the people had not had patience with him in his amateur years. There is one redeeming quality with the uneducated, when they attempt to speak without the Spirit of God, they make such bad work it shames them so, they make more effort in their preparations by humility and prayer so as not to be left to themselves. But the educated speaker does not have that same need—as far as words go—and there is a chance for them to depend on themselves instead of God. But I am forgetting myself and perhaps speaking too freely.

I liked the article, "In the pulpit and out of it." There was something more than the words that went with it, a spirit of helpfulness. The elders who work hard all day, and do much about their places after coming home at night, have little time to study, their bodies are so tired the mind cannot work.

A SISTER.

UDERDORF, GERMANY, December 12, 1918.

Bishop McGuire: I will drop you a few lines, advising you about some money I am sending. Owing to prevailing conditions, I have been unable to communicate with you or to send the money either, but hope to be able to get better service all the way around from now on.

The amount is one hundred and twenty-five francs in French money. Just at present I don't know what the rate of exchange is, but at the time this money was collected it was $5.45, which made a total of $22.70 in our money. But the French money has increased in value since then.

The money was intended for Christmas money, but it will be late I know, but we have been living under conditions that are anything but normal and in a way that will partially excuse my negligence in the sending of the money. Most of it was contributed by outsider friends who, when told of our plan to send a Christmas offering in, donated the same amount, freely. We had intended to talk to a few more of our Latter Day Saint boys about it, but were prevented by going into battle almost immediately after receiving the money.

Brother H. E. Gold and myself were the only two that got a chance to contribute to the fund. I will send the money through the Y. M. C. A., and if you get it before you get this, you will be at a loss, no doubt, to understand where from and to what use it was to be put. But you will use it to the best end, no doubt.

I read the letter in October 17 Ensign that was signed by the eight Latter Day Saint boys, and I join with them in expressing my regret at the loss of the the association of Brother H. E. Gold and Brother James H. Madden, both of whom I knew very well; also Brother Gilbert Rall.

We were permitted the pleasure of a great many private evenings of prayer and song. With a few of our comrades, who so desired, we would retire to a quiet place whenever it was possible, and offer to God our thanks for his past favors and blessings, and ask for his protection in the future. And I can say that he has most wonderfully blessed us all.

Brother Gold was wounded the night of the 10th of November, but I hope he is fast on the road to recovery.

I am in the army of occupation, and we are at the present writing a short time inside the German border.

The country here is very mountainous and we are up in the clouds. I have seen the sun once since leaving Hallis, France, the 25th of November.

Editors Herald: The branch here has been strengthened of late through the visit of the old warrior, J. J. Cornish, of Saskatchewan. Powerful sermons were delivered and freedom of speech was enjoyed by him. Good seed was sown and it has stirred some Saints to a double diligence. Many have received light and understanding of the Scriptures as never before.

He was received with much hospitality at the home of Brother and Sister R. J. Muirhead, and some of the Saints were not backward in helping a missionary on his travels.

THOMAS BATES.

NUTANA, SASKATCHEWAN, February 3, 1919.

Editors Herald: Along with the rest, we have had our troubles, especially that of the world-wide epidemic of influenza. Still we feel to thank God for his great protection, as only one of our number was taken over the great divide, she being an aged lady, a dear old sister, a child of God.

About a week ago Elder W. J. Cornish and myself started out "on the trail of the lonesome pine." (You have all heard that song.) In some parts of the country they are very numerous, with now and then an old sentinel looming up far above the rest. We followed this trail to its end and there came upon a dwelling back in the forest and it was inhabited by real, live people—Latter Day Saints in very deed.

We made our business known, announcements were made, and the people gave a hearty response, for which we are truly thankful. The one thing that drew our attention more than anything else was the unity of spirit; everyone seemed to love everyone else. Yes, God says his people will be like this. Isn't it grand to find a people away back in the woods filled with the Master's Spirit?

Our little efforts were truly a success, and when we were called upon to extend the parting hand we left them rejoicing in the latter-day work.

I must not forget to tell you that these people did more than their share financially.

About seven or eight years ago, Brother and Sister Sims moved to this place. They kept the camp fire ablaze until we have some sixteen members there, looking forward to the organization of a branch this coming summer.

We look upon Brother A. Filby as one of the day-stars that should rise.

May the Lord bless this people is our earnest prayer.

Sincerely yours,

J. A. BECKMAN.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, February 4, 1919.

Editors Herald: The past year has been a very successful one for us in many ways. We have received many spiritual blessings, especially during the influenza epidemic. Although the Grim Reaper has made his presence felt in our midst, yet we have been wonderfully blessed, and never have questioned the wisdom of our heavenly Father, knowing that he never makes a mistake.

The majority of the members of the Second Detroit Branch are alive to their responsibilities, and seem to be conscious of the fact that we are living in the "hastening time." Our prayer meetings are of a high spiritual order, and our preaching services indicate that the priesthood are striving to magnify their calling.

The several departments are all active and are trying to do the work intrusted to their care.

For several weeks it was impossible for us to attend to our duties owing to the fact that my wife suffered a nervous breakdown. Although we were not permitted to associate with the Saints at the different services, yet many times we were privileged to enjoy a great degree of God's Spirit in our home and we were made to humble ourselves as never before. It is our earnest desire to see the work of God progress, and hope to be able by the assistance of God's Spirit to help to bring it to its ultimate triumph.

I sincerely request the prayers of God's people and hope to qualify myself to fill the position that God has called me to occupy.

Yours in gospel bonds,

BRUCE E. BROWN.

MAGNOLIA, IOWA, February 8, 1919.

Editors Herald: As I will be ninety-two years old this month, it may be a pleasure for my old friends to know I am alive. It is a long time since I was baptized (1857) according to the revelation of Brigham Young, for that year he sent out a revelation that every member should be re-baptized and confess him as a prophet of God, and that Zion would soon be redeemed. So I was happy, and was a missionary in my mother country, Sweden, for eleven years, up to 1868. That year I started to return to the Rocky Mountain Zion.

Omaha was a stopping place, and it happened we were detained there a long time. So, on September 17, 1871, hearing of a meeting at which President Joseph Smith would preach, my heart was made glad to see and hear the chosen seed of the martyred Joseph, and I was baptized with the Holy Spirit from heaven. On October 24, 1871, I was baptized by Brother John Chrestenson, into this church.

Now, brothers and sisters, if you will look in the Journal of History for July, 1912, you will find the autobiography of Andrew Johnson. That is mine, and I would like to have you read it.

In the HERALD for January 2, 1919, I saw a letter from Brother Glen Ingleright, which made me very happy.

Speaking of the Lord coming to redeem Zion, it may be forty years. The Lord Jesus has said, "But as the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." We understand that Noah preached 120 years. So counting from 1830, when the angel came and established the everlasting gospel, that would be eighty-nine years. It is said that at that time we should hear of wars and rumors of war, and that has been plainly fulfilled.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, February 15, 1919.

Editors Herald: Just recently concluded a four weeks' series of meetings in Grosse Pointe village, a suburb of Detroit, which resulted in the baptizing of fifteen, and the end is not yet. Have been visiting the interested ones the past week and hope to soon be able to report more baptisms. Have sold six Books of Mormon, two Doctrine and Covenants, and have sent in four subscriptions to SAINTS' HERALD, one of them to a nonmember. Three whole families were immersed. A Sunday school was recently organized with twenty-eight charter members. Hope to see a branch organized in the near future.

This mission is under the fostering care of Elder Frank Gardner.

Anyone Willing to Work

even a little in telling neighbors and friends of this marvelous work and a wonder, can accomplish most profitable results.

Get a Dollar Library, become acquainted with the 34 tracts and the price list in it. Know the contents, the style, the special aim of each. Then see that others know the message of salvation you have heard.

This is the special mission of the gospel literature workers, but anyone can help in some way. It is important work and should be done right—but it should by all means be done.

In most places the boards are organized to carry on this highly-important work. If there is no such board in your community, yet you have a branch, Sunday school, or Religion, let us know.

Where boards are organized you may help them very much by your service and moral support as well as patronage.

One important feature of such a board's activities is a campaign to secure subscriptions to the church periodicals. It is a real accommodation to the Saints to have some one call and take care of the details for them, suggesting what is available, the offers to be had, the announcements being made, etc. In places where there is a book agent, work with him in this regard. If you want information along this line, write either the Herald Office or the Ensign Office and it will be forthcoming.

You have been warned: warn your neighbor. Do you have one of our instruction leaflets, sent free?

Dobson to office of elder; Clarence Crabb, priest, and Hyrum P. Jenkins, teacher. These were approved and the brethren were ordained. Mansfield, Washington, Branch, Clarence E. Wheeler to office of priest; and from Gifford, Idaho, Branch, John R. Wilkinson to the office of deacon. Approved and ordinations provided for. Spokane Branch, George Leach to office of elder. Approved and the brother ordained. The principle of coordination in the Spokane District was approved by unanimous vote, with the request that the auxiliaries concur. Financial report of Bishop's agent, W. W. Fordham, showed receipts $1,622.02; disbursements $1,498.85. The service flag was ordered placed in the care of the district secretary after being removed. Resolutions of sympathy and condolence were provided to be sent to the families of each of the three soldiers represented by the gold stars. Delegates to General Conference: J. A. Bronson, Sister J. A. Bronson, S. S. Smith, Pearl Reed, Sister Grace Fry, W. F. Yates. Alternates: George Leach, Sister George Leach, Peter Klaus, and Venus Verhei. Sister J. A. Bronson was elected as member of library board, and Sister M. L. Young as member of the gospel literature board. The district presidency, to whom the matter had been referred, announced that the vicinity of Valley, Idaho, had been selected as the place of holding the next reunion, and Oliver Turnbull, S. A. Dobson, Clarence Crabb, H. P. Jenkins, and Patrick Kinney were named as a reunion committee. The sum of $50 was raised for the Christmas offering fund, during the conference, from the sale of meals and refreshments donated for that purpose. Preaching by J. A. Bronson, N. L. Booker, and S. S. Smith. Oliver Turnbull, secretary.

KNIGHT.—Sarah Ann Knight was born Christmas Day, 1831, at Belfast, Ireland. Married George H. Knight, New Year's Day, 1849, at Brisbane, Australia. Eleven children born of the union, ten of which survive her. Came to California in 1854. Baptized March 24, 1870. Died at San Bernardino, California, February 2, 1919. Funeral at Shaw's undertaking parlors, San Bernardino, California. Sermon by Arthur H. Mills, interment in Pioneer Cemetery.

HORN.—Elisha S. Horn was born September 30, 1884, at Eskridge, Kansas; married January 20, 1904, to Miss Lizzie Rink, at Roseland, Kansas. Died January 21, 1919, of influenza-pneumonia, leaving his wife and children: Vercil aged 13, Erma 9, Audry 2, and Opal 5 months. He was a member of the Scammon, Kansas, Branch, having been baptized five years ago by J. F. Curtis, and in 1917 was ordained a teacher, serving with diligence and faithfulness both as member and officer in Sunday school, Religio, and church. He was an upright, honorable man, commanding the respect of all. William Bath and Charles Fry conducted services at Scammon church. Interment in Hosey Hill.

SUTHERLAND.—Orson Pratt Sutherland was born in New York, October 8, 1841. When four years old his parents joined the Lyman Wight colony bound for Texas. Both died on the way, leaving him to the care of his older sister. Married Miss Amelia Bird in 1865, and removed to Galesburg, Missouri, and subsequently to Webb City, where he resided up to the time of his death. Died February 3, 1919. Brother Sutherland united with the church in 1865, and labored successively as teacher and elder, and served the church at times as pastor, district president, and at the time of his death was vice president of the Spring River District. Funeral services at the Webb City church. Sermon by Charles Fry, assisted by F. L. Freeman.

BERRY.—William John Berry was born March 30, 1887. Baptized September 9, 1897, by Daniel Macgregor. Married Martha Platt in October, 1915. Died of influenza at his home at Arthur, Ontario, January 18, 1919. Leaves to mourn a wife, daughter, father, mother, and 2 sisters. Funeral at the residence, January 19. Sermon by John H. Taylor.

SWEET.—Rebecca Sweet was born February 23, 1857, in Douglas County, Illinois. Died February 3, 1919, in Mount Vernon, Illinois. Leaves to mourn, 3 brothers, one sister, and 2 daughters. She was a member of the Seventh-day Adventist Church. Funeral at the residence in Mount Vernon, Illinois, in charge of Henry Sparling. Sermon by F. M. Slover.

Sermon by G. Orlow Coburn.

FROM HERE AND THERE

GENERAL CONFERENCE IN LAMONI

Word was received from the Joint Council at Independence, Missouri, on February 18, to the effect that the General Conference will not be changed from Lamoni under present conditions.

The Saints of the branches at Lock No. 4, and Fayette City, Pennsylvania, recently joined in a farewell reception in honor of Brother and Sister Louis Coventry, who were leaving for Denver, Colorado. He has been an appreciated branch officer at Lock No. 4, while his wife has been active in Sunday school and Religio work. A pleasant evening was spent on January 27, and the good wishes of the branches extended to the departing ones.

LAMONI STAKE COORDINATION

At the June conventions and conference of the Lamoni Stake, it was moved to refer to the heads of the departments of church activity the formulation of suggestions as to a further working out of the coordination principle. After considerable investigation and consultation, the committee brought in the following resolution, which was adopted by the conventions and conference: "Resolved, that we approve the coordination plan as adopted by the 1918 General Conference of the church, and that we by this action express our readiness to conduct the work of Lamoni Stake along such lines and under such arrangements as may be suggested by the general body." The consensus of opinion, as we heard it on the convention floor and outside, was that until such time as action was announced by the general coordination committee, no new machinery should be created; rather should there be a recognition of the existing executive in the presiding officers of the church and its auxiliaries.

Following this action the Religio and Sunday school conventions asked the stake presidency to nominate the president and superintendent respectively of the two societies. These were enthusiastically selected. There is the utmost good feeling over the new phases of coordination, and the societies represented invariably take the initiative in asking the stake presidency to nominate.

Prayers are requested for Lorena Hammon, who is very weak from influenza. She is isolated from church and all its privileges, but has much faith in the gospel ordinances.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

ASK AND YE SHALL RECEIVE

In reading over the Church History it is rather of interest to note how many times was a revelation given in return to an inquiry; that is, the Saints or the eldership were aroused to that point that they desired more light and information and presented themselves before the Lord in prayer to that end, and as a result received the direction.

It is not necessarily set forth in the case of every revelation. In the first place, Joseph Smith desired to know concerning the churches. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not." After that prayer, he was shown a vision, and made his request to know which of all the churches was right. Later when he desired to know his standing before the Lord, the angel Moroni appeared in answer to his earnest prayer.

It will be noted how many of the earlier revelations were given to various men at their request to know their duty before the Lord. This was more frequently necessary in the earlier stages of the church, as all the work was new.

Section 17 was given from time to time, in reply to the earnest prayers of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery. Section 104 was given in part in reply to the request from the Quorum of Twelve, when they presented themselves in humility before the Lord.

That has not always been the case. Yet the Master himself instructed us: "Ask, and it shall be given unto you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you."

If we present ourselves in humble prayer before our heavenly Father, we should bring about within ourselves a condition of willingness to do his will. But that faith should be an intelligent faith, and an intelligent willingness, such as wells up within us with an earnest desire to study that we may understand the word of God; understanding the word of God, we may be willing to do his will; and accepting that which has been given, we may be prepared to receive further light and direction.

Or again, "Man's extremity is God's opportunity," and when we come to recognize keenly our own weakness, our own shortcomings, when we realize the problem confronting us, and what the Lord requires, then we can intelligently approach him and ask for inspiration for an answer. This is evidently what was done in the early church; it is certainly what is being done to-day.

The true child of God is seeking him for divine direction for his own particular work; the officers of the church are seeking direction, not only for themselves individually, but for the church so far as its work is intrusted to their care. The president of the high priesthood, on whom is laid the burden of the whole church, has earnestly sought, and does seek his heavenly Father for wisdom to meet the problems which confront the church.

Read carefully the Church History, and note how many times when the early church was brought face to face with a dilemma, the words are written in the history of Joseph Smith, "I inquired of the Lord, and received the following answer."

But we have to remember that in the childhood of the church, many revelations were given which it should not be necessary to repeat to us to-day. We should be prepared to carry out that which has already been revealed, and then by humble prayer and study, fit ourselves for further light, as the problem before us grows too hard for our solving with that which has already been given.

Revelation is not a method by which the idle man, or the unthinking, may avoid the wear and tear of original thought and original research. It is rather when we have put forth our own best efforts; then we seek the throne of grace and receive divine direction to help us to solve the problems before us. This quickens our understanding, as well as gives us the written word, and supplies the solution to our problem.

If we are correct in this view, and we believe we are, "ask, and ye shall receive," does not mean simply that we fast and ask the Lord for a revelation, which amounts to us only as a "thus saith the Lord." It is not a thing to be regarded with awe, and not further considered. But to the contrary, it should be connected with the other statement, "The glory of God is intelligence," (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6) and "Come now, let us reason together."

Again, "Blessed are all they that do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled with the Holy Ghost." (Matthew 5: 8.) It is that hungering and thirsting after righteousness, it is that keen desire better to understand the word of God that we may better serve. Asking him for wisdom, for knowledge, for faith to serve him, we receive. Seeking for the Spirit of God, and for a knowledge of the Lord, we find.

Jesus says concerning some in his day, "Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts." (James 4: 3, Inspired Translation.)

Again, we note in the first chapter:

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering; for he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. For let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord.—James 1: 5-8.

In Doctrine and Covenants 85: 16 we find: " whatsoever ye ask the Father in my name it shall be given unto you, that is expedient for you."

But on the other hand we note the beautiful promise of 1 John 5: 14, 15:

And this is the confidence that we have in him, that, if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us. And if we know that he hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him.

Also 1 John 3: 18-22:

My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue only; but in deed and in truth. And hereby we know that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before him. For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things. Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then we have confidence toward God. And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight."

All of these passages make a beautiful whole and a splendid promise that he will hear us. We should ask in faith; we should also ask worthily, not that we may consume it on our lusts; not that we may be able simply to say, "We had a revelation." But studying the word of God, striving with our might and will to accomplish the work he has intrusted to us, if we have the confidence that, as we seek him in our hour of need in order that we may be better fitted for service, he will answer and direct us.

S. A. B.

He who lacks faith in himself, in his opportunity, in his enterprise is defeated in advance.—Samuel F. Halfyard.

WHO IS RIGHT?

We note on page 1210 of Liahona for December 10 the following extract which is credited to the Deseret News:

President Heber J. Grant succeeds to the position made vacant by the death of President Joseph F. Smith, becoming thus the seventh president of the church, after 36 years of valiant service as an apostle. This order of succession has been so well established in the history of the church, and by revelation on the subject that there could be at no time any dubiety about it.

This statement that it has been sustained by revelation on the subject we may well challenge. No successful attempt has been made to sustain it by revelation. And when the late President Joseph F. Smith was before the Senate Committee in the matter of Reed Smoot, he testified quite differently, as follows:

Mr. Smith. Well, yes, sir; that has been the case. And then, again, the senior apostle, through custom of the church since the death of Joseph Smith, has been recognized on the death of the president as the legitimate successor to the president.

Senator Bailey. It is a question of succession rather than of election?

Mr. Smith. Yes, sir.

Senator Bailey. Has that the force of law?

Mr. Smith. Still he is elected, just the same.

Senator Bailey. Has that the force of law or has it merely the persuasion of custom?

Mr. Smith. Merely a custom. There is no law in relation to it. It does not of necessity follow that the senior apostle would be or should be chosen as the president of the church.

Senator Bailey. And if they did not elect him it would do no violence to the church or the organization?

Mr. Smith. No, sir; not in the least.

Senator McComas. You say the church elects the president?

Mr. Smith. Yes, sir.

Senator McComas. At that election there is but one nomination for the election?

Mr. Smith. There is only one. There has been only one. There never has been more than one that I know of.—Smoot Investigation, p. 93.

Mr. Smith. It has been the custom, since the death of Joseph Smith that the president of the twelve succeeded to the presidency of the church.

Mr. Worthington. That has been from the beginning—that has been a rule that has been followed?

Mr. Smith. It was the case with Brigham Young and his successors.

Mr. Worthington. How is the apostle who becomes president of that quorum selected? Is that by election or seniority, or how?

Mr. Smith. It is by seniority.

Mr. Worthington. So that the last apostle takes the foot of the list?

Mr. Smith. Yes, sir.

Mr. Worthington. And as vacancies occur he moves up?

Mr. Smith. Yes, sir.

Mr. Worthington. Has there, so far as you know, from the beginning been any other rule followed?

Mr. Smith. No.

Mr. Worthington. Or has that been universally followed?

Mr. Smith. That has been universally followed.

Mr. Worthington. So that all the rewards that have come in that way have been by simply following the custom of the church?

Mr. Smith. That is correct, sir.

Mr. Worthington. I understand you to say, however, that there is no law—no revelation or command—of the church in any way which requires that.

Mr. Smith. No; it is just simply a custom.

Mr. Worthington. And that if a vacancy should occur tomorrow it would be competent for any member of the church to be selected as president?

Mr. Smith. That is quite correct.—Smoot Investigation, p. 368.

The above is a clear declaration that it is merely a matter of custom and not of law and any other person could be elected just as well so far as the law is concerned. But that there is no question of revelation is shown by the testimony on page 92 as follows:

Senator McComas. And the twelve apostles were then first named?

Mr. Smith. Yes, sir.

Senator McComas. When vacancies occurred thereafter, by what body were the vacancies in the twelve apostles filled?

Mr. Smith. Perhaps I may say in this way: Chosen by the body, the twelve themselves, by and with the consent and approval of the first presidency.

Senator Hoar. Was there a revelation in regard to each of them?

Mr. Smith. No, sir; not in regard to each of them. Do you mean in the beginning?

Senator Hoar. I understand you to say that the original twelve apostles were selected by revelation?

Mr. Smith. Yes, sir.

Senator Hoar. Through Joseph Smith?

Mr. Smith. Yes, sir; that is right.

Senator Hoar. Is there any revelation in regard to the subsequent ones?

Mr. Smith. No, sir; it has been the choice of the body.

Senator McComas. Then the apostles are perpetuated in succession by their own act and the approval of the first presidency?

Mr. Smith. That is right.

Mr. Tayler. Mr. Smith, will you state—

Senator Bailey. Mr. Tayler, before you proceed I should like to ask the witness a question.

Mr. Tayler. Certainly.

Senator Bailey. Could the first president prevent a selection which had been made by the apostles to fill a vacancy in their number?

Mr. Smith. I think the twelve would be very reluctant to insist upon the election of a man to whom the president was opposed.

From this we see that the quorum of twelve in Utah is not selected by revelation, but is chosen by the twelve themselves, with the approval of the First Presidency. And then as a matter of custom with them by no means a revelation the senior president of the twelve becomes now the president of their church, without further call. This, according to the late Joseph F. Smith, was purely a matter of custom and not of law.

It is interesting to note that after the death of Brigham Young, three years passed before his successor was chosen. While in the case of the late Joseph F. Smith the day after his funeral an election was held. Here is custom more firmly established evidently without the force of law, certainly without the sustaining voice of revelation.

Further reading shows that Joseph F. Smith claimed that in this process, he thought the will of God was carried out and there was a species of inspiration, which is rather difficult to see. It is very clear from his statement that this process is not the voice of revelation.

Since writing the above there has come to hand the Improvement Era for January, 1919. The fact that it has become a matter of custom is set forth in the following words:

After the deaths of Joseph Smith, the Prophet, and Presidents Brigham Young and John Taylor, considerable time elapsed before the First Presidency was again organized. Before President Woodruff's death, he expressed a desire that thereafter this condition should change, and hence, the First Presidency has been reorganized without delay. In conformity with that custom, a special meeting of the Council of Twelve Apostles convened in the Temple, Salt Lake City, Saturday morning, nine o'clock, November 23, 1918, for the purpose of reorganizing under the inspiration of the Lord, and presiding quorum of high priests of the church.

Since it is a matter of custom and seniority, it does not leave room for the inspiration of the Lord. It is predetermined.

As our readers are well aware, in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, the president of the church is called by revelation. Joseph Smith who founded the church was so called. He so designated his son and set him apart, and he received along in the late 50's, further revelations regarding his own mission.

President Frederick M. Smith was called to the Presidency, and later was plainly designated as his father's successor. Doctrine and Covenants 126: 4, 6, 8; 127: 8 states that the call depends in part upon lineage, but more upon his being faithful and steadfast; and then upon the divine call or designation to the office.

The law is as follows: The rights of lineage are set forth in section 107: 18; 104: 18; 84: 3; 83: 3; 68: 2. These last two refer to the Bishopric. But the principle is the same.

The matter of appointment is set forth in Doctrine and Covenants 34: 4 and 27: 1, 2. The president is called by revelation as is shown by section 99: 6:

The president of the church, who is also the president of the council, is appointed by revelation, and acknowledged in his administration, by the voice of the church; and it is according to the dignity of his office, that he should preside over the high council of the church.

He is also sustained by the vote of the church.
(Doctrine and Covenants 17: 17; 104: 11.)

OUR READERS SHOULD KNOW

---

It is rather surprising at times to find that many of our readers are not aware of the proper procedure in connection with the publication of the HERALD. And this is even true of some whose duty it is to be informed.

The HERALD is mailed each Wednesday evening. Thursday morning as a rule, the "copy" or manuscript for the inside sixteen pages are turned in to the hands of the copy editor for the printers for the next week's issue. This includes the articles, items of General Interest, Woman's Auxiliary Department, The Staff (when it appears monthly), and letters.

By Saturday the Editorial Department, notices, announcements, and much of the miscellany and obituaries should be turned in. In fact it is better if much of it is turned in sometime on Friday. A long announcement or an editorial item not in hand Friday, means a real inconvenience in arranging copy. Yet short announcements may be made as late as Monday morning. After that the final forms are locked and the HERALD goes to press.

If the HERALD were a small job office, it is possible its going to press might be delayed a day or more. But in connection with handling the other work very little can be considered which is not on hand by Monday morning, and that only short items or notices.

It is much better if notices are on hand before the end of the week, as the HERALD must be printed in two sections. First, the inside sixteen pages; then the outside eight pages; then it has to be stapled and trimmed, as well as wrapped for mailing. As soon as one week's HERALD is out of the way, we start on the next week's issue. This is done for economy of management. Editorials are written whenever one of the Editors happens to get a bright idea and can find opportunity to perform the task.

The success of any department of work depends upon good will. We should like to have the good will of all of our readers and prospective readers. If you have a difficulty let us know. Several have already taken this means and we have been glad to assist them in getting matters straightened out. Almost invariably it is merely a little misunderstanding.

NEGATIVE TEACHING

The following story, though a sad one, illustrates a vital point in adolescent psychology. It is a problem in pedagogy. Unfortunately so much moral teaching is negative in character and merely emphasizes the don't.

This is well illustrated by another story of a mother coming in and finding the boy in front of the parrot, talking away at a great rate. She was very much shocked and said, "Why, Tommy, are you teaching the parrot to swear?" He turned to her very righteously and replied, "No, mamma, I'm only telling him what he musn't say."

This tragic story appeared in the Ladies' Home Journal for January, 1917.

There is thought for parents in the testimony of a woman in court, who, when the court asked her if she did not come from a very good family, answered:

"I did, your honor."

"Then," kindly asked the judge, "how did you begin on the career which has brought you to this serious pass? Can you remember?"

"I can," answered the woman. "It was one day when I wanted to go out alone and my mother remonstrated with me because, as she said, unspeakable dangers lay in waiting for a girl alone. I asked her: 'What sort of dangers, mother?' And my mother answered: 'Such dreadful dangers, my dear, that you would not understand if I told you.' That was the beginning, your honor. I had the curiosity of youth, and its impetuosity, and I determined to find out what those 'dangers' were. And," she ended miserably, "I have found out, and here I am."

RETURNING SOLDIERS

A letter from the Iowa Bureau for returning soldiers and sailors shows that there have been discharged in the last few weeks up to the middle of January, 9,397 Iowa men. Of these, 3,472 returned to jobs on Iowa farms; 4,364 returned to other than farm jobs; 110 sought employment on Iowa farms; 1,451 sought other than farm employment. Of these latter 1,561 men who were seeking employment, the various bureaus had placed 428 up to January 11. We present this because we have the figures for Iowa. Doubtless the same situation is to be found all over the country, and there is a need for organized effort.

Many firms are arranging to take back their war-time employees and also to make places for returning soldiers. This is a very patriotic service. Much yet remains to be done. We are confident that provision will be made, but to do so it is necessary that forethought be taken and an organized effort be instigated to help. Unity and cooperation are the watchwords.

DEDICATORY SERMON

(Delivered on the occasion of the dedication of the Port Huron, Michigan, church edifice, by Elder William Fligg, of London, Ontario.)

I desire to direct your attention this afternoon to the scriptural thought we wish to use as a basis of whatever remarks we may make upon this occasion. It is found in the 24th chapter of Proverbs, and the third verse. "Through wisdom is an house builded, and by understanding is it established." I want you to connect with that the statement of the Master found in the twelfth chapter of the gospel as recorded by Saint Matthew and a part of the 25th verse: "Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand."

I do not know that I am conscious of the extent of this opportunity this afternoon, but I feel that I want to be useful in the hand of our heavenly Father to delineate upon some phase of our religious philosophy that will give to you a concept of our understanding of God.

We have met, as you are all aware, for the purpose of giving this building as our gift of sacrifice and of toil to the Lord to be known as the Port Huron Branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. While the service may, to a great many, be of a character that would require some light or understanding, we hope for the enlargement of the Spirit of God so that we may be able to prepare the message that we feel is required for this present opportunity.

In the affairs of human life there are all manner of rules by which conduct is ordered. In the institutions of mankind, no matter where they are in their organized condition, there are rules and regulations drawn up that shall be for the government and for the salvation and the development of that institution. And while human thought has reached that height where fraternal benefits have been almost immeasurable; while human action has been such that in a great many cases there has been evidence of the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God, we take the position this afternoon and announce it to you that the Almighty, in the wisdom of his great economy, has provided rules and regulations whereby the conduct of the sons of men should be of such a character that man shall not only reach the highest pinnacle of spirituality but that he might be brought back into the presence of God. And the channel through which this spirit unction shall come must be of a character known to our heavenly Father and in his consideration for the sons of men. He will reveal it to them so that they may be able to comprehend and to understand it; and to the degree that men will apply themselves to it, to that degree will salvation and development come.

The thought resolves itself into this, that there is a God, and that he is no respecter of persons; and the manner and mode of the conduct that shall be on the part of the children of men should be of such a nature that when we appear before him the results to-day shall be the same as the results that have followed men in the days that have passed, when they have sought to be governed by the revelation of the will of God.

Back in the days when God desired that Israel might go to the land that flowed with milk and honey, while laboring in the wilderness there under the leadership of Moses, God indicated to Moses that there was to be a house built; there was to be a tabernacle erected. Its construction was to be of such a peculiar character that all the detail was revealed upon the part of our heavenly Father to Moses. Starting with the 25th chapter of Exodus and following it down through the following three or four chapters, God seemed to be so particular as to the furniture, as to the building, how it was to be erected, in what order the different things were to be laid, and the grand sum total of the instruction of our heavenly Father to Moses was "See thou doest all things according to the pattern."

One of the New Testament writers tells us, In a great house there are vessels of honor and vessels of dishonor, and as a man seeks to purify himself and make himself suitable for the Master, he shall be an instrument in the hands of God, displaying the honor and the glory of God within the house of God. But upon the other hand, according to the language of my text, "Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation. Every city or house divided against itself shall not stand." But there shall be conveyed to our minds the thought in this great scriptural utterance of our eternal Father; something that is potential of the hour and the day in which we live.

Jesus says upon one occasion, "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin; yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." Under the creative powers of our heavenly Father the lily comes to a position of perfection, of purity, and so perfect in the order of its construction that as we view it we see in that the possibilities of God and the impossibilities of man. When we look upon the glory of Solomon we see evidences of the work of man; of possibly the highest ideal of man; of possibly the manifestations of the selfishness of man; but in the order of the construction of God for the conduct of the human family that man might eventually get back into his presence, there has to be such an absence of human weakness, of human selfishness, and of those powers that give evidence of wanting to be, as it were, as men have tried to be in the past—imitate something that belonged only to God—there was to be an absence of these things in the development and the constructive work of the church of God, until it arrived to a position of perfection by which our heavenly Father may receive it unto himself. By this John was enabled to say, I see the bride as adorned for her husband, even the church of Jesus Christ.

Even when we make an application to the church of God, or when we come into the church of God and we are taught that the administration of the Holy Spirit is calculated to apply itself to the mind and to the life of the child of God, there has to be an education of us, to apply itself to us by which we might be able to live with our heavenly Father. A writer in the New Testament says, "Ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called: But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise." Why? That no flesh should glory in his presence. When there has been evidence in the past of flesh glorying in the presence of God, that has been the time when they have been humiliated. That has been the time when the fulfillment of this thought has come to pass. Verily in the lives of men, "He that exalteth himself shall be abased, but he that humbleth himself the same shall be exalted."

Jesus Christ said, "I am the door of the sheepfold," and if we will follow in in that way and participate with that that is contained within the sheepfold, we will never wish to say like men have said in the past, "I shall ascend above the clouds and I shall be like the Most High." It should never cause us to say like men said in the days of Moses, "you take too much upon yourselves." It should never cause men to say, "I will have my way. I will govern this condition as I think it should be governed or I shall bring ruin and devastation upon those who may be subject thereby."

This cannot live in the church of God. This demonstration of selfishness does not belong to the constructive work of God. And to the individual who may be contaminated with this element of selfishness or of human aggrandizement in evidence of things that they may consider spiritual; it has no place in the constructive work of God or in bringing about that great eternity of matter by which this mortal shape put on immortality, and there shall come a day when this corruptible shall put on incorruption. And by the final development and application of that spirit that shall enable us to serve God acceptably, there will come a time when this vile body of our humiliation shall be made like unto his most glorious body.

There is something significantly wonderful in the statement of the apostle when he says: "It doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." And the only possible method by which we can become like Jesus Christ will be for us to apply ourselves to the same rule of conduct as the Savior applied himself to when he was upon the earth. He rose to such a spiritual height that he could say, "I have finished the work that thou gavest me to do." He was so in touch and in harmony with the instruction given to him by his heavenly Father that he says, "I and my Father are one." Notwithstanding, there was a time in the history of his experience as the Son of God when it is said, He grew in wisdom and in favor and in stature with God. And if we take him as the standard of our spiritual humility and obedience, there then must be something of value attached to the language of the Apostle Paul. "We shall all be changed in a moment in the twinkling of an eye," and that change shall make us like our Lord and Savior, and thus shall we ever be with the Lord.

Then in the working of the church among men we must get away from the possible dangers that may lurk in our pathway and realize that our conduct cannot be ordered by any other than the revealments of God's will to us. We may accomplish a great deal because it has been brought to pass that man can of himself accomplish a great deal. But God has reserved unto himself certain works that he desires to be accomplished and those works are ordered in his way and he desires man to do it as he has instructed, and the promise is that we will be able, eventually, to be and to provide everything of which we have need.

So then, within the precincts of the Church of Jesus Christ that we represent this afternoon, we believe there is the greatest sequel contained for the development of the sons and daughters of men which cannot be possibly contained within any other institution that may be in the world to-day. Hence, as the Apostle Paul says, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation. . . . For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, The just shall live by faith."

There is the statement of the Master:

"Whoso heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock." When the storms come and the rains beat upon that house it shall stand because it is founded upon a rock. And he that heareth these tenets of Christ's and doeth them not is likened unto a man who built his house upon the sand. When the storms beat and the winds blow and the rain falls and beats upon that house it shall fall and great shall be the fall thereof.

Now, this afternoon we are dealing with the principle, the house. We offer this house as a gift to our heavenly Father. It is the work of five short years, but in that time there has been many seasons of sacrifice; there have been many doubtful hours; there have been many times when darkness has seemed to have pervaded the minds of those that were in charge and the minds of those who were assisting those in charge though they believed and realized they were workers together for God. But it has been finished. The debt has been liquidated. There is nothing now against it. And that our heavenly Father might manifest himself unto us in the way peculiar to himself, we now give to him this home, we give to him this house and as the children and servants of God and the people of Adam's posterity shall assemble themselves from time to time within these four walls there must in the very nature of God, something come to them by which they may be able to understand God better than they can in conditions that God has not recognized.

Jesus says in speaking of his disciples and in speaking of the work that was to be done, "I will pray my Father, and he shall give you another Comforter . . . whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him." Then we believe, as God has ruled that the conduct of man shall be governed by the revealments of his will, and the inspiration that he gives to mankind from time to time within the precinct of this building that has been erected as a branch of the great reorganization that he has set in operation amongst men to-day, he will reveal himself by that Spirit which he says the world cannot receive because it cannot understand. And if there ever was a time in the history of God's dealings with the sons of men that that Spirit should be manifested, it is at this time; it is under these conditions; it is at the hour in which we now live. Because we believe that we are just living in the days preceding the greatest event that shall transpire in the history of our world and its civilization.

In the days of Babylonian greatness a time came when that wonderful ruler flattered himself because of his wonderful surroundings. In the days of his soliloquy there came to him a dream. When it was revealed it showed to him the kingdoms of this world, and one kingdom was shown and then another and another, down until the end of time. Jesus says the kingdoms that are divided cannot stand and are brought to desolation, and a house divided against itself cannot stand. In speaking to his disciples in reference to the time of his near approach, they asked him the all-important question, "Master, what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" He said, kingdoms shall be divided against kingdoms and nations against nation, and the whole world shall be in commotion. I ask, are we not living in the days of the fulfillment of those prophecies? Should not the Bible as it comes to us to-day, freighted with the warnings of God in the ages that are past, have more precious meaning to us upon this occasion than in any of the days of the world's great history? Are we not just merging down to the fulfillment of the very things spoken of by Jesus Christ? And if there is any value attached to the thought given to his disciples that a kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation, I verily believe that we are living in that hour. And if there is any value attached to the thought of a house divided against itself we shall consider and take to ourselves the thought that this is the house of God and as we look out upon the arena of religious activity and see many houses and a great many worshipers and devotees to different rules other than those we believe in and teach, can it be said in the fulfillment of the things in relation to the kingdoms of the world because of their divided condition they are brought to desolation upon the houses, presumably being the houses of God, that they shall also be brought to destruction and to devastation and to conditions whereby they may lose the identity upon which they were erected, in the days when they were born into the world?

We have before us a house that is wisely built, and to be wisely built requires understanding. If we are going to erect a house in which to worship God, will God reveal himself in that house so that the worship there will enable them to get back into the presence of our heavenly Father? While upon the earth Jesus Christ demonstrated that he was in touch with his Father when he healed the sick. He also demonstrated it when he told men how they could be born again. He told them there would be a transformation; they would be translated from the kingdom of darkness to the kingdom of light. When speaking of the conditions that were brought against him in the garden of Gethsemane, he says, "My kingdom is not of this world. If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight."

He also gave a glorious finish to the work of his ministry by revealing to his apostles and the men he had selected to represent him out in the world the intelligence that under the instructions of his heavenly Father he was going to erect a church, and that church would be known as the church of God. Because, says he, "The Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting." And as he moved among his countrymen and his brethren, knowing how he had dealt with them in the past, he could say in reiteration of the revelations of God to the people of the past, "How often would I have gathered thy children together as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not!" Now he says your house has come to desolation. Why? Because the house divided against itself cannot stand. The very evidence that Jesus gave of the house that should be divided against itself came to such a wonderful fulfillment in his experience with his people at Jerusalem that desolation followed the ascension of the Lord Jesus Christ, but not until he had conveyed to them the intelligence that he was going to erect or finish his work that he was given by his Father, and he was going to build his church.

Now, I want you to bear in mind this thought. There are a great many things accomplished in the life of the Master that are questioned to-day by a great many of earth's children. And because there are a great many things questioned in the life of Jesus Christ is the reason why there are so many institutions in the world denominated the church of Jesus Christ or the church of Paul, or the church of Peter, or the church of John, as the case may be. And if there be any truth in the prophetic utterance of Jesus Christ that a house divided against itself cannot stand, then there must come a time when these institutions that have been erected in opposition to the work of Jesus Christ must of necessity fall, just as the kingdoms of the world in which we are now existing are rapidly falling to be no more. Kingdoms are being removed. Potentates are stepping down and out. Devastation and disorder are bringing ruin and bloodshed, confusion and anarchism are prevailing in the kingdoms of this present world. It seems to indicate that it is but a great upheaval or it is in fulfillment of the thought that the whole world shall be in commotion just prior to the coming of Jesus Christ.

We believe that in the days in which we now live God has set his own occasion, the second time, to save and to redeem his people. And in that order of salvation and in that work of redemption he has placed his coming among men and believing that they who enter in are workers together with God, and believing the statement of Jesus Christ that the Spirit he would send in the church, that was to operate within the church, the world could not receive because it understood him not. Then, we believe in the fulfillment of it and that the needs of God are only understood by the Spirit of God. And because there has been an absence of the Spirit of God from the world, many things that have been erected in the name of God are denied the power, and as a consequence of the denial of the power, much of the revelation and inspiration and perfect blessings are withheld which might be enjoyed, realizing, as we do, that destruction is apparent upon every hand.

Back in the days when God worked among men, we are informed by one of the New Testament writers, holy men of God spake as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost. Paul, in his letter to the Hebrews, makes a very profound statement when he says, "God who at sundry times and in divers manners spake to us by his Son." And when we take up the record, when we examine the testimony of the prophets, very frequently it is an indication that God is about to bring destruction upon that immediate country wherein those prophets resided. Jesus might say to the men of his day, Which of the prophets have not your fathers slain, yet you say had we lived in the days of our fathers the prophets, we would not have had these things. But, he says, you are the children of your father and the works of your father shall you do.

While we believe that the world to-day is in commotion, it is in a spiritual upheaval. There is uncertainty upon everything, and civilization is but a thin veneer. When it is uncovered because of some seeming injustice or because of some seeming disorder, it is with difficulty order is brought out of chaos. Then should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should to-day send prophets in the world? If there is a time when God desired to manifest himself to the sons of men, do you not think the time would be opportune now? And if God did desire to manifest himself to the sons of men and we by our human judgment realized that the time was opportune for the manifestation of that power, as in the past, through what channel do you think these manifestations would come? If God has set in the firmament the sun to rule by day, and if he has set the stars and the moon to rule by night, then the apostle looking away into the starry height could bring a wonderful comparison and see that in the resurrection, as one star differs from another star in glory, if he has been so orderly in all the creation that he has made, how great and powerful he is in all his works. And Jesus hath said that the value of the soul of man is greater than the world; so do you not think that God will, by some orderly way, by some organized manner, bring prophets into the world in the generation in which we now live, to warn men of the devastation that is coming and to ask men, as he asked men in the past, "Israel, prepare to meet thy God"?

The work of preparation requires a great deal of strenuous work. We can understand, to a certain degree, what it is to prepare for some of the events that transpire in our life. How much greater then must the preparation be upon the part of the sons of men to meet their God. How much greater then must the work of development be so that they might be able to live in the presence of God.

There has to be a great work of preparation upon the part of the sons of men, and as I stated in the opening of my remarks, that preparation can only be made as man submits himself to the rule by which man shall govern his conduct; by which he shall eventually be brought back into the presence of God. And, if it can be done, and shall be done, and will be done through the administration of the prophetic voice, that shall be true in these latter days. Then the prophetic voice, and the man that may stand as the prophet, should be found behind some organized form by which we might be able to see the good words for the inspiration of the souls of men, as orderly as the works in the sun, in the moon, in the stars, and in the action of the earth, and I pray that we may enjoy the blessings thereof.

Back then to my thought of Jesus Christ: "Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am?" In the sixteenth chapter of the gospel recorded by Matthew, I think; "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. . . . And upon this rock I will build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Jesus had done works among men so that they had been astounded. He had taught them until he brought forth the confession, "This man taught as one having authority and not as the scribes." He had called the elements together and with a few loaves and fishes he had fed a vast multitude. And while human mind and human understanding could not conceive of the way in which these blessings were to be enjoyed, there was a continuation of that work by the Father through the Son to the children of men in the establishing of the church. The very knowledge that Jesus was the Christ, as it was revealed to Peter, was to be the power by which the church was to be erected among men for the salvation of the souls of men.

Then the question resolves itself into this, What can we do that we might do the works of God? The great fundamental principle of doing and performing the works of God in the days of Jesus Christ was that they might be able to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and one of the great fundamental principles of our acceptance of God and of Jesus Christ is to believe upon the works that he set in operation among men. If we believe in the works that he set in operation, we will inevitably come in touch with the great constructive work of the church of Jesus Christ in the minds and hearts of men, and through that medium man shall eventually get back into the presence of his Father.

God set in the church, first, apostles; secondly, prophets; thirdly, teachers; then helps and governments and diversities of governments. One of the prime reasons was that it was for the work of the ministry. As we contemplate the work of the apostles in the past and realize their great intelligence that is conveyed to us through the letters of the New Testament, we believe that if there ever was a time in which apostles should be created by the intelligence of our heavenly Father for the sole purpose of the working of the ministry, that time should be now; because the man who goes out with a false cry, or false message, or the man who goes untruthfully to say concerning certain things that are to come to pass, and he does it without the favor and the signature of God Almighty behind the message, he brings devastation and destruction to the spirits of men. For the very first thing we see expressed by Jesus Christ when he spoke of his coming again to the world, he says, "Let no man deceive you, for many false prophets have gone out into the world." And if the Almighty in the consideration of the souls of men and their salvation and development with the great purpose of God, chooses that we might eventually live with him and be like our Master who was the standard of obedience, the memorial of faith, and who was all that was possible for him to be, then may we follow on and be eventually like him. I say that God is going to make these wonderful provisions within the precincts of the organization that he has inaugurated for the conduct of the human family, to eventually become divine and immortal.

Then let us respect the great thought of God. God set in the church first, apostles, and the prime reason for their being set there was for the work of the ministry, and the work of the ministry should be for the edifying of the body of Christ; and the edifying of the body of Christ should eventually arise to such conditions that there might be a unity of the faith; and when that unity of faith has been realized there will come safety that you might be "no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, and by the sleight of men and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive."

We read a great deal to-day in our magazines and in our daily papers, "After the war, what?" We are anxiously looking for that extraordinary assembly, even that peace conference. The various men who shall surround that table will represent millions of the earth's population and there shall have to be an absolute absence of selfishness upon the part of each and every one of them, because the man who seeks to represent more than he is entitled to, or the man who desires to obtain more than the others think he is entitled to shall not prevail.

A house that is divided against itself shall be brought to desolation. As that great house has been erected, and that extraordinary assembly shall assemble there under the peace conference to deal out to man republican liberty, and conditions of democracy by which our children and our children's children shall not suffer from the powers of oppression and militarism as they have in the past, there shall, I say, have to be such an absence of selfishness as the man Christ Jesus has taught us shall have to be manifested there. Then, when God Almighty has in these days organized his church and kingdom, his righteousness and justice shall prevail. When Daniel saw that wonderful image, every part indicated some period of the world's history. Each one of those periods represented various kingdoms that were in the world. He says, I sawest till the little stone was cut out of the mountain and it smote the image upon the feet and it passed away as the chaff before the morning breeze. And so we come to you to-day testifying that in the jurisdiction of Jesus Christ and in the powers that have been committed to him by his Father, important events shall transpire affecting even the destiny of nations. Civilization in its six thousand years has brought but selfishness and greed and unholy ambition. Jesus Christ shall be in control of the kingdoms of the world and the greatness of the kingdoms under the whole heavens shall be given to the people of the Most High and they shall possess it forever, and forever.

When we testify to you of the church that has been erected in these latter days among the kingdoms of men, it is in fulfillment of the intelligence of God and the human family. In that kingdom there have been placed apostles and prophets; and they are going forth with the same assurance to-day testifying under the power of God that destruction is coming upon the world; that Jesus Christ is about to make his second advent; that men should prepare to meet God, for it is said that the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy. And the man who has the testimony of Jesus and who is working among the children of men believes verily these things are coming to pass and in that organized form known as the church of God these men are working as messengers sent from God and are denominated as prophets. Evangelists are found therein, and pastors and teachers, representatives and governors, and as I before stated, for the work of the ministry and for the edifying of the body of Christ that we all come to a unity of the faith.

This is the church of God. This is what we stand for as being the work of God among men. We believe that if men apply themselves to it they shall eventually see God; for in the righteousness of God is the revealment of his will and in the revealment of that will do we seek to understand him and become workers with him. If we have faith in that which has been committed to our trust it shall be said of us as it was said of men in the days that are past, by Jesus Christ, "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." And the joy of our Lord shall be that we shall ever be with him, when the Church, the Lamb, the bride of Jesus Christ shall be accepted without spot or wrinkle and it shall be perfected as is the growth of the creations of God as told in the story of the lily when Jesus says, "Consider the lily." I tell you every creation is beyond the great Solomon and all his works.

That we might be able to share in the glories of his kingdom is my prayer.

"LOOKING UNTO JESUS"

Looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith.—Hebrews 12: 2.

As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him; rooted and built up in him, and established in the faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving. Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ.—Colossians 2: 6-8.

The writer's attention has been called to a criticism leveled at the church, as a whole, to the effect that we as a people are slowly losing our first love for Jesus the Master, and are being taken up by works of the world, reconstruction, vain philosophy, etc. How much truth there is in this assertion may be found by each of us looking within our own souls to see if our personal love for Jesus has not suffered by the terrible conditions in which we live to-day.

This is a strenuous time. For the past few years we have been lost in a maze of terrifying events. First the German menace, then the entry of our Nation into the war, bringing with it anxious hearts and tear-stained eyes; and soon our very souls were wrung with anguish as the sad news of our bereavement came to us. The conditions of the world sickened us and we longed to be with the loved one who had been taken into the bosom of God. Then came the influenza, that fearsome instrument in the hands of the pale reaper, which brought with it not only dread sickness, but darkness of mind and spirit. And now we hear from every side the ravages of Bolshevism, the terror of the I. W. W.'s, and the growing menace of the labor unrest threatening a world upheaval.

In the church we have watched with sorrowful hearts the falling into degradation of men once good and true; whose spirits—once thrilled with the joy of service, now are ringing their own death knell in a whirl of personal malice and petty hatred. By many insidious methods, shameful stories are carried on the wings of gossip to hearts not very strong in the faith—stories, whose only truth is that they all originate in the cunning of the archdeceiver, the adversary of the work of God. It is the hastening time—the time of sifting.

To offset these conditions in the minds of the Saints of God, it is necessary that we take to heart the wonderful messages of the Apostle Paul. There is scarcely a passage in all the epistles of this noble gospel soldier, but what mentions the name of his Master, Jesus Christ. The light upon the Damascus road which blinded his physical sight for three days shed a glorious beam into his soul that lasted through eternity. From that time there dawned a peace in his soul that no social upheaval could break. There came something into his life that gave him strength to stand all the punishments, tortures, and perils of this life, and which finally made him rejoice in the hope of a glorious death for the cause of the gospel.

That something was his knowledge of Jesus Christ—it was his personal friendship with the Savior of the world. With this in his heart is it any wonder that in writing to the Corinthian Saints he says: "For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified."

Paul lived in a strenuous age. He was in Rome when Nero burned it down and laid the blame for his insane deed upon the Christians. He was in Rome when his brethren in the faith were wrapped in tar and used as torches to light the streets of that city. He was in Rome when it was at the height of its licentiousness and sensual display of pomp and splendor. In Rome he died, in the same year that the terrible siege of Jerusalem was begun which was equaled in massacre and shameful crimes only by the present world war, and which ended in the Jews being driven to the four corners of the earth, where for nineteen centuries they have wandered homeless and cursed. His time was an age of foolish philosophy; when anything new was deified, and being afraid they might miss one, the Greeks had erected an altar "to the unknown God." To do right for right's sake was generally considered the height of foolishness. The world was dark. Its philosophy went so far as to force "little children who might be born slightly deformed, to be murdered by their fond mothers!"

Such was the condition of things when Paul was alive. Yet his faith in Christ Jesus never wavered. But to the end of life he fought a good fight, and died in the hope of receiving a glorious crown.

His hope can be our hope; his peace our peace; and the light which shone in his soul may also illumine our own life. Our foundation must be Jesus Christ and his words. "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." With this as our ideal all other things should be brought to it to be tested. It is too true that some of us, like the people of Israel, are clamoring for a king of our own; we wish to be like the people of the world. We forget that we "are a peculiar people," peculiar in the fact that our king is Christ Jesus, and our law his revealed truth.

All philosophy, all psychology, all science should be brought to the light that shines from the word of God. His word is too sacred and too precious to be thrown aside while we accept the contrary expression of some human theory which happens to fit in with our work and ever-wandering reason. If philosophical statements are contrary to a statement of Jesus Christ, then spurn the philosophy and hold fast to the word of the Master.

We are living in a world of unreality—in a world of pomp and power. It is as if a Pilate had arisen, and confronting the world had asked, "Will you crucify your king?" And they have answered, "We have no king but Cæsar! We have no ideal but our own selfish interests!" They have taken the Savior and with the hammer of their ambition they have driven their nails of gold into his quivering flesh. Upon his bleeding brow they press the thorny crown of their pomp and pride; and into his side they have thrust the spear of their immorality and lust. Upon the cross of their greedy desire hangs their Savior and Redeemer!

Yet Christ is not dead. He reigns in every loving heart which accepts him fully and unreservedly. Down the ages we hear the message of peace: "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." And in the midst of the world-sorrow we hear again, very plainly: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Oh, dear Saints, let us allow this life of Jesus to so fill our vision of things that like the disciples of old we see "no man, but Jesus only." Or, like Paul, we shall be determined not to know anything save Christ Jesus.

Then when we are tossed about upon the stormy waves of trial, upon the deep billows of doubt and sorrow, there shall come to us from out of the darkness of the storm the shining form of One so dear to us, and above the noise of the tempest of our fears his calm shall steal over our souls and we shall hear him say: "Peace: it is I; be not afraid."

FRANK BEST ALMOND.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

WAR PROBLEMS

It is recognized that the only divine institutions are the home and the church, from out of which all other institutions of the race have been developed. At the conclusion of the world war these same problems are forced upon us even more urgently than ever before. Whatever may be the outcome of the present peace conference, it is clear that our opinions and thoughts of to-day, growing out of our moral character, will make the program of our present activities and determine the future of the race.

The high-sounding terms which now are popular as democracy, liberty, and brotherhood, can only have meaning and value as each one of us individually, shall cultivate an appreciation of justice, righteousness, and sympathy.

The relationship of education to these great problems will be seen as we become impressed with the fact that real education means the preparation for life, and the test of life is the capacity for service.—John W. Rushton, as quoted in the Imperial Valley Press.

“AND VERILY THOU SHALT BE FED”

Did you ever stop to analyze avarice—to discover what it is that makes men hard and grasping? It's fear.

Men are afraid of being hungry; afraid of being cold; afraid of losing their money and having to start all over again.

In all the world there is nothing more tragic than the withered soul of a man who has a little money, and lies down and gets up in terror lest it should somehow be taken from him.

I have read somewhere that fear is the first instinct to reveal itself in infancy. Humor and love and faith and hope all come later; but the evidence of fear may be noted in the very first weeks of a newborn life.

And all the rest of our lives we battle, some more, some less successfully, against that bad inheritance.

Men who supposed that they had conquered fear are shivering again under its influence to-day. I meet them everywhere in business.

They talk in whispers of the Bolsheviki. We shall have our own Bolsheviki movement, they say. There will be a social revolution. Stocks and bonds may become merely scraps of paper.

Such conversation wearies me.

I do not expect any of these dreaded things to happen. But my respect is for the man who can face the possibility of their happening and still stand unafraid.

Who says to himself: “Whatever Fate may threaten, I am still strong and well: my purposes in the world are right: and I can make a living somewhere, come what may.”

Who believes that, through storm and revolution, somehow God still works to make a world more just and decent for the great body of his people.

Who, conscious that he seeks no unrighteous advantage for himself, nails to his mast-head the greatest promissory note in the world:

“Trust in the Lord, and do good: so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed.”

And in that faith goes forward.—Bruce Barton, Editor, Every Week, April 6, 1918.

A JEWISH HOMELAND IN PALESTINE

The Publicity Department of the Zionist Organization of America issues the following:

Jacob H. Schiff, veteran philanthropist and Jewish leader, has modified his former position and declared himself in favor of a Jewish homeland in Palestine. Mr. Schiff, although he finds himself unable to indorse some of the phases of the Zionist propaganda, in particular the emphasis on Jewish nationalism at the expense of religion, nevertheless endorses the central aim which is the “creation of a legally assured, publicly secured homeland for the Jewish people in Palestine.” Mr Schiff expresses his satisfaction over the fact that this aim had received the indorsement of the principal allied powers as well as of President Wilson, and calls upon all Jews without distinction of class or country or origin to participate in the work of establishing the Jewish homeland by contributing to the Palestine Restoration Fund.

Mr. Schiff was asked to name the causes which had brought about the change in his views. “The principal cause,” replied Mr. Schiff, “has been the Russian revolution. Whatever the political structure of the Russian state may eventually be, it is safe to predict that the many restrictions from which the Jews have suffered in Russia will be removed. The Jews will no longer be cooped up in the Pale of Settlement. They will no longer be denied access to the soil. They will no longer be denied the educational opportunities which are open to the rest of the population.

“Of course, together with all other Jews, I rejoice over the fact that henceforth our brethren in Russia will enjoy full civil and political rights. However, in thinking over all the implications of this happy development, it was borne in on me that Russia will no longer serve as a great reservoir for the Jewish spirit, as the source from which Jewish inspiration radiated to all outlying Jewish communities. With the disappearance of the concentration of Jewish population in Russia, the distinctive life of the Russian Jewish communities will also tend to disappear.

"From this it follows that a homeland for the Jewish people becomes a necessity. And right here another cause entered which turned my attention to Palestine. I am referring to the wonderful progress that the Jewish settlements have made in Palestine in the last generation. Starting as struggling groups of inexperienced young idealists, these settlements have developed into a chain of agricultural villages which are the most hopeful signs for the economic development of the Holy Land. And alongside of these agricultural villages there has arisen a very hopeful educational activity comprising schools from the kindergarten through college grades. In most of these schools the language of instruction is Hebrew and the spirit which they radiate is a very wholesome and hopeful one. It is a spirit which, with the proper fostering it should receive from the Jews of other lands, will prove itself capable of invigorating Jewish life wherever Jews live.

"The Zionists have made the mistake of emphasizing Jewish nationalism, whereas they should have emphasized the Jewish spirit. An autonomous Jewish homeland is necessary for the development of the Jewish spirit in Palestine. Of course all practical men realize, and many Zionists among them, that an autonomous Jewish homeland is not a matter of months or even years. It cannot be created by edict. The population of Palestine must become Jewish and by this I mean that the majority of the population must consist of Jews; but in order to bring this about, the Jews of all lands must get together and supply the wherewithal which will make it possible for Palestine to receive large numbers of Jews, especially of the countries where civic rights have so long been denied to the Jew, for even should, as we hope, through the mandate of the peace conference, full civic rights be restored to the Jewish people everywhere, we know that in some of the eastern countries anti-Semitism is so deeply imbedded in the general population, that the practical carrying into effect of the mandate of the peace conference will not be an easy matter. Because of this it will be a blessing to the Jews in these countries if, by the proper opening and restoration of Palestine, the opportunity be given them to exchange, if they desire, abodes in which they are more or less unhappy for a land in which they can make happy homes for themselves and their posterity.

"Agricultural and educational opportunities must be created. Roads must be built, swamps drained, arid land reclaimed, and harbors improved. And this involves large sums of money. These sums must be provided by Jews all over the world, and American Jews must bring forward their share. I would urge all Jews who give thought to the future of their people and of their religion to contribute to the Palestine Restoration Fund of the Zionist Organization."—The American Hebrew, February 14, 1919.

The Time, The Place, and The Letters!

The readers of our column will feel gratified to receive the little contributions of this number. They come from widely-scattered fields, but one is struck by the harmony of thought and interest they show. Surely the Spirit of God is at work in all his chosen, and the renewing of desires and determinations towards righteous and blameless living is but another testimony that the hastening time is indeed upon us. Zion's redemption is a work of education—slow process under ordinary conditions, but, under the tutelage of the Holy Spirit, which can in an instant unfold the glorious banner of truth to the earnest seeker, and point out, in an unmistakable manner, the right path of duty or conduct, it becomes a different matter, and we all have reasonable hope to see it accomplished quickly—in God's own time!

The purification and consecration of the desires and the efforts of the mothers in our homes will go a long and important way in bringing about the conditions which will bless. Children of to-day will shoulder the arms of the church tomorrow, and with energies and wills enlisted in the righteous cause, unhampered by cloudy mists of tradition or doubt, what will they not accomplish in the near future?

Arouse, then, and let even this little moment of our social hour's communion become a memorial, upon which we may register anew our vows and covenants with the Father of us all, who gives of his guidance and his blessing freely to all that need and earnestly desire!

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

FANNING, KANSAS, February 14, 1919.

My Auxiliary Sisters: I received my invitation to the social chat, and am willing and anxious to hear from others, but feel I must contribute my "bit" in exchange for the many good things I am anticipating from others.

We have been organized into a district association just one year. We have a Woman's Auxiliary Society in each branch of the district. Also four study classes and three Oriole circles. We held our convention last August, and much interest was manifested by the sisters present. Sisters Crooker and Pitsenberger have been very earnest workers.

I feel gratified with our first year's work, although far from being satisfied. I think our women have a better understanding of the work in a general way than ever before. Wherever I go I try to encourage self-improvement, and more of an effort along educational lines. Many have the idea that domestic work like quilting and sewing is the sphere of women's society.

Hoping and praying we may have a better and broader conception of woman's work in the church, and be efficient assistants in redeeming Zion, I am

Faithfully yours, MRS. EMMA HEDRICK.
Organizer, Northeastern Kansas District.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, February 14, 1919.

Dear Sisters: The conference year is so nearly ended; our plans for the convention and annual programs are well on the way. We wish all our members, from far and near, could meet together!

I have surely enjoyed my association with the executive board this year, although I have been prevented (by illness of my own the first six months), from even thinking of my special work for the Auxiliary. During the past few months there has been hardly a week that the illness of others has not taken so much of my time and thought that to have attempted this special work would have been most unwise.

In the past two weeks, however, I have been able to take up the history of the Auxiliary, and to make some plans. I know many must have wondered at not hearing from me, and I regret keenly my seeming neglect.

Now, I wonder how many of you have a district historian. I will be very glad and relieved to hear from these officers, with items concerning the progress of their work, as soon as possible. Where there are no historians, will the secretaries please take notice, and send such items? The material they send me will be used as news items if not appropriate for the history.

I will be writing those of you whose names I have, but do not wait to hear from me, if it is possible for you to write me sooner. Send just a note by way of introduction, if no more.

Sincerely, your sister,
MADGE M. SIEGFRIED.

CENTERVIEW, MISSOURI, February 12, 1919.

My Dear Sisters of the Church: In response to the invitation of our dear president, I come to meet with you in a social gathering in our column. I hope that many will come with their good and encouraging items of news. If they fail to attend this special hour, I hope they will come later, for by so doing they will encourage others. A great effort must be made by all of us, if we expect to move forward with the rest of God's people in the undaunted onward march to the goal we all have in view.

I would that every sister in the church would join the Auxiliary. There is so much to be gained by feeling that you are linked up with the woman's department of the church. Not all of us can do great things; great things are not expected of all of us, but the aggregate of many small things will help to spell success, if each unit does the best she can.

The purpose of the Auxiliary to bring about better conditions in the home is in harmony with the spirit of progress which is pervading all the other departments of church activity. What is there which has a greater appeal to the interests of the sisters than that which will work for the upbuilding of the home? What will prove more powerful in bringing about a general progression in all phases of life than advancement in home conditions?

There are also in the Auxiliary opportunities for social and intellectual development. What a rich store of good things is pointed out to us in the Year Book and its supplement! These helps are within the reach of every woman in the church, and each one would benefit greatly by studying them, and attempting to follow the suggestions offered there.

Very sincerely, MRS. MINNIE HARRING.

The Church of Christ is founded in faith, raised by hope, and finished by love.—Saint Augustine.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI.

Dear Auxiliary Friends: As organizer of the woman's work in the Holden Stake since June my view has been broadened, and I have keenly sensed the necessity for us, as women, to strive more diligently to fill the sphere unto which we are called.

Owing to the scourge that has been abroad in our land the regular class work has not accomplished the desired end that we were striving to attain.

There seems to be a great desire among the women to qualify for better united work. They are hungering for an education along their different lines of work that will be a practical help. I believe that the Home and Child Welfare Department is the most important department of woman's work. If our homes are what they should be, the educational qualifications of our children will be carefully looked after.

There are three great things in life—love, labor, and religion. Love—that divine principle that annihilates time and distance and disposition; that is in us before we come into the world, is all that we can take out of the world, and the best we can leave behind when we go. Labor—the nobility of useful endeavor through which we express ourselves by head and hand and heart in the creation of material objects; by which we grow food, make shelter, and weave raiment. Religion—the belief in the eternity of all that is good, a comfort in distress, a counselor and guide in uncertainties; that which lightens hope and strengthens faith; that which gives us courage in life and calm, restful repose in time of death. So the three great factors in woman's life should be—Love, labor, and religion.

Training for citizenship begins in the home as soon as the infant mind begins to unfold. So during early childhood depends largely the child's success or failure as a citizen. Hence the great necessity for parents to live exemplary lives. Are we training our children for citizenship?

During this war we as women have learned to give. We have learned that giving is sharing with others, and now in this reconstruction period we must equip ourselves to give to the world both by our lives and also the lives of our children the best we have. We as women have a very broad field for work in helping to establish Zion.

We women of the Holden Stake, are we thoroughly aroused to the task that lies before us? Are we making the home, the school, society, and the church better by our living here? If not, we have failed to grasp the very intent of our creation.

MRS. I. M. ROSS,
Stake Organizer.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN, February 10, 1919.

Dear Sister Krahl: The splendid work of the men and women (especially the men, who were almost unconsciously interested) at the late October conference has been far-reaching. One result will be that never again will our conference auxiliary programs be left entirely to women, for we as members of the district are finding our mutual dependence. We need the help of our brethren, and they need ours. Not all of our brethren have recognized this, but as they learn of our ideals and our efforts, they do feel interested, and can no longer scoff or smile indulgently. We are beginning to think, and are becoming liberated from some old and unjust notions. We must feel the desire, however, to exercise our new liberties in the proper manner, and along proper channels. We need never enter the strictly masculine domains, and should not desire to do so.

"We are now planning on introducing a study of self-culture for the women of this district. If we can read between the lines, our church president wants his people to become highly cultured. He wants us to stand on the topmost rounds of every vocation which engages our attention. The difference between the cultured and the uncultured may be sensed by the difference in experience when one attends a grand opera performance, or a community "sing." Generally speaking, the class of people who attend the former are students of music—at least, those who have studied to recognize good form—in manners as well as music. Nothing happens to hurt the sensitive; no loud noise, no coughing, no undertone talking, or whispered conversations; nothing crude to disturb or distress the finer feelings. But at a community sing! Just when one becomes interested, something brutal happens which makes one long to "lie down and die!" Surely we need culture of the truest type! Ignorance must be overcome—else our hope is vain, for it is our common enemy! It is no disgrace to have been ignorant, but it is to remain so!

We have excellent locals at Fremont, Indiana, and Coldwater, Michigan. The former is recently organized, a progressive young woman, with a wide vision of the work, at the head. They have been making a study of the auxiliary work itself—a splendid foundation for intelligent service. Their order is excellent—a thing which is not properly observed in all places. The Coldwater group is in excellent condition—more refined and intelligent women could not be found. Grand Rapids local is making wonderful progress, the result of much concentrated thought and action.

Success in auxiliary work, as in all others, comes by working out every detail; examination for errors and weak places; many executive meetings in which officers may see visions and learn duty; much counseling with the priesthood; patient working with the laity—oh, everything!

We meet at our regular place of worship; begin on time; have excellent programs, instructive as well as entertaining, and, best of all, the women feel as if they should take part, thereby obtaining the highest good. We have current events, parliamentary practice, reading of the best poetry, fine readings, talks, music. We have an English class, Bible research, physical culture, and sociology classes. The last-named is most inspiring! We have a large blackboard, and our meetings resemble a schoolroom session.

A month ago the Oriole circle was organized. The girls are to wear their uniforms for the first time next Friday evening, having charge of the Religio program, and, on the side, a candy sale. A while ago they gave an ice cream social. The women of the Auxiliary feel responsible for these girls, and evince a very creditable motherly interest in them and their doings.

Our course of study for the girls is table setting and etiquette. We always have demonstration with our lessons, and reports are out that the children are now teaching the parents! Orioles take turn in caring for small children while the mothers enjoy church services. . . . Next move will be the Temple Builders. This may be harder, as our young people already have a well-organized club.

We go to lectures, finding that the world has many a valuable lesson for us. Once a month we are to hold evening meetings to which the men are especially invited. This work is worthy of every effort one can possibly put into it. There is so much to learn, and so many opportunities to help. I long for conference time, when I can be a pupil, and imbibe new thoughts and ideas, and feel a fresh inspiration for the work of the coming year.

LOUISE EVANS, District Organizer.

SYDNEY, AUSTRALIA.

Dear Sister: We have desires strong within us for active service in the Lord's work. We are determined, by the grace of God, to be undaunted and very courageous, not suffering defeat, although our progress may be slow and mistakes numerous.

For some time the young women of these states met as the "Sunshine" girls. It was a very good movement, and some fine work was accomplished. In almost every local in Australia we have what is termed "Sunshine Work." It is a little apart from that of the Relief and Service, as we understand it—an admixture of that and the Oriole work. It consists mainly of surprise visits and dainty gifts to those who may need them, either through sickness, mourning, or, possibly, the more joyful occasions of marriage or birthday celebrations. Especially have we remembered our boys who are in the active service of our country, one feature of that work being the making of socks or other comforts for them. Our missionaries, too, receive our consideration.

I have mentioned this because you might not know just what was meant by reference to Sunshine visits, in my report. The work is in accordance with the rules of the general society. For instance, in the Young Woman's Department of the Balmain local we have a Sunshine Circle. Every member is required to be sunshiny, do something sunshiny, and be a help and a comfort as much as possible to all with whom she may come in contact. Letters to sick friends, bouquets, little gifts, cards, as well as visits, are recorded in a special book kept by the Sunshine recorder. In this way we rejoice in seeing how much good service our young women are doing. The same idea is carried out in the Relief and Service Department. We are looking forward with considerable interest and anticipation to the developments of the future. We sisters wish to cooperate as much as possible with the sisters of the United States, and we further desire that all we may do will be done in order and in accordance with the workings of the general society.

Our hearts are in the Lord's work. We lack much in the way of capabilities, and feel unqualified for many things required of us, since we are very inexperienced; but if we can, in a very small and humble way, lay a foundation here which will assist in a subsequent enlargement of the work, we will feel that our efforts, though feeble, have not been in vain.

With the hope that God's richest blessings will attend the workers for his cause, and much good be the result of their labors,

Your sister and coworker in gospel bonds,

ADRIENNE M. FLOOD,

District Secretary Woman's Auxiliary, Australian Mission.

(Gleaned from reports to the General Secretary.)

KIRTLAND, OHIO.

Dear Sister: I feel encouraged with the outlook here. Two very excellent young women have consented to assist me as organizers. We are going to do all we can for the very important work the women have to do in the church. There are wonderful opportunities before us in every line.

In the future the three auxiliaries of our district are going to meet at a separate time from the district conference, for the business as well as educational programs. We are planning for a big meeting next fall, and hope to have some splendid things to report. The influenza epidemic prevented my doing as much organizing work as I had planned, but I hope to get out before long and make up for lost time.

May God bless the auxiliary work,

MRS. W. C. GEORGE.

The highest exercise of charity is charity to the uncharitable.—J. S. Buckminster.

TULSA, OKLAHOMA.

Last summer we organized a Red Cross unit, with Sister Frye as captain. We met at the church one day each week, where at noon a lunch of sandwiches and drink was served for fifteen cents from each person, the proceeds going to the Auxiliary, and the sisters taking turns in providing the material. We bought a sewing machine, and rented another, while two were furnished by the Red Cross headquarters. Considerable work was done before October, when we were quarantined for five weeks. In June a committee selected a piano for our Sunday school and Religio, and we paid for it in six weeks. We finished paying for the interior decorations of our church by serving lunches at various times. We have kept up a sunshine fund from which flowers and fruit for our sick were supplied.

REVA F. CRANE, President.
MARY ERTER, Secretary and Treasurer.

Sunday school was first organized, April 4, 1916, we had only a little handful of people. The work was greatly opposed, but we persevered in our effort. Then when the idea of the Sunday schools paying off the church debt was first brought to our attention, it did not meet with a hearty response from the Capital Sunday School. No one seemed to be able to see why this Sunday school should be called upon to pay off a debt it had no hand in creating. So our first effort was very modest—only $6.30. The next year we had become a little more accustomed to the responsibility, and I know it was because this question was kept before our eyes by those having the work in charge, so our first amount was doubled up five and a half times, or $35 for 1917. This effort seemed to put energy into the scholars, and the third year we went over our first offering sixteen times, and over our second effort nearly three times, or $100. Is there a better record in all the Sunday schools? If so, let us hear of it. One little fellow, Willie Caldwell, less than seven years old, gave his $2 last year, and he now has over $1 for the month of January, this year, saved and ready for the next offering. He says he will have $4 for 1919. Willie is setting a hard pace for the rest of us and we may not be able to keep up with him, but we will be with him with all the energy we have for the progress of the gospel." We hope every school will read this out loud while in session. Let us hear of the better records.

El Reno, Oklahoma. "We have an enrollment of 49 and our 1918 offering was $150. Six families gave $148 of this, and $2 was from two sisters living now at other places. We have bought and repaired a building for worship, and paid a total of $700 for building, repairs, and furnishings, all this since last March; so you see we have not been idle—and I am sure that we have given at least $100 to the missionaries."

Evansville, Wisconsin.

Warton, Ontario.

North Platte, Nebraska. E. R. Sivits sends $44. They have 22 members.

The following schools are "over the top," but we have no letters from them:

- Kansas City, Missouri, Bennington Heights Sunday School.
- Hamilton, Missouri, Oakdale Sunday School.
- Hamilton, Missouri, Oakdale Home Department.
- Coutts, Alberta, Locke Sunday School.
- Denver, Colorado, First Denver Sunday School.
- Delisle, Saskatchewan, Grand Plains Sunday School.
- Springfield, Illinois, Hope of Zion Sunday School.
- Louisville, Kentucky, Highland Park Sunday School.

This will conclude our Roll of Honor for 1918, unless some of our foreign schools should reach us with reports, in which case we shall gladly publish same.

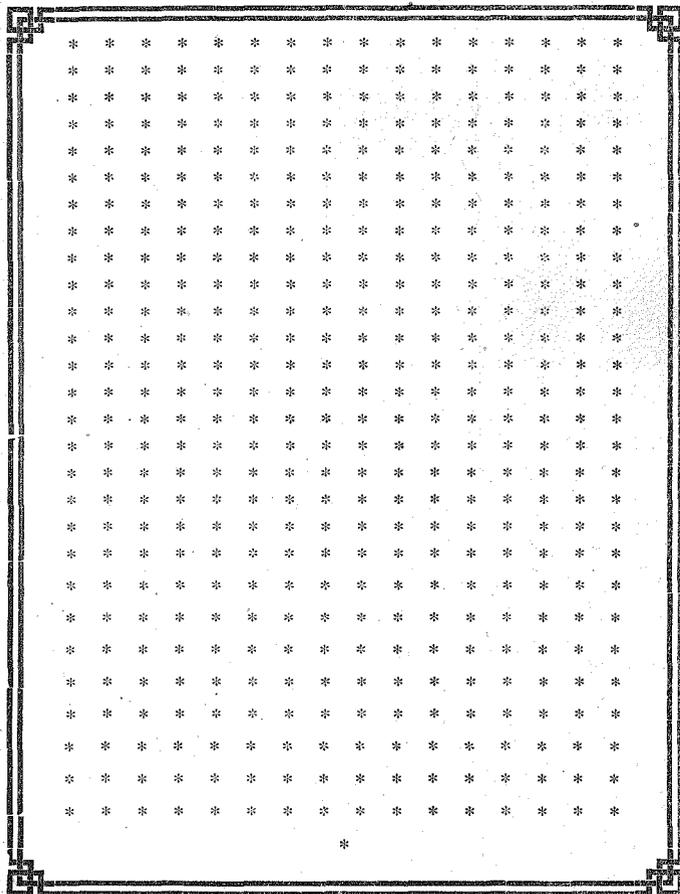

Here is one more, just came in, and it is a good one.

Nelsonville, Ohio. Charles McCray reports: "The Nelsonville Branch went "over the top" with an average of $5.27 plus per member. We have started our 1919 offering with $16.27 to date. Our aim for 1919 is $150. Yours for $150,000." Brother McCray wishes Brother Arthur Allen to take notice.

Again we thank all the good schools for their splendid support and cooperation. There has been a wonderful spirit manifest among our good workers who have been humble in their efforts. We trust that all the good schools will work hard this year so that we may have a nest egg on which to build, and so that our church will be in a position to help humanity in its struggle to a higher and better state of Christianity. We urge all schools to do their best this year—not that they may excel, but that we may assist in this great work.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Christmas Offering Roll of Honor

We have 449 stars to start, and fourteen more to add to this list makes a grand total of 463 stars. This is not even a good percentage when we consider that we have close to 800 schools. However, we are very grateful that we have done this well, and sincerely thank all schools for the support they gave us in this effort.

Remus, Michigan. Sister C. B. Tong reports six members and an offering of $25.

Ottawa, Ontario. Philemon Pement writes: "When our

Remember, our aim for this year is $150,000, and our suggestion for every member is that we give one penny each day to this good movement and in so doing let us consecrate the gift as an offering to God and seek his blessing on all our efforts, so that we may offer only that which will be acceptable to him.

Most sincerely your coworker,
ARTHUR W. SMITH.

From the Lamoni Branch

The winter conference of the stake is usually held here, and this year it occurred from the 13th to the 16th. The work of the conventions, chiefly business, was transacted on the afternoon of Thursday, and all day and evening Friday.

Bad weather and worse roads largely prevented the Saints from outside points from attending, but the Lamoni people can fill the church when they turn out, which they did during the later sessions.

Coordination is developing nicely and naturally in the stake work as well as locally. We are beginning to realize that there are limitations in the expression of our democracy, and that few people not officially and intimately interested in the various activities of an organization like ours can make a satisfactory choice in regard to nominations for office. As was noted last week, the stake presidency was asked to nominate the president of the stake, Religio and superintendent of the Sunday school. The presidency has never asked for such a privilege, nor sought the responsibility in any way. When the people desire such aid, it is given the most prayerful consideration. We are of the opinion that ere long there will be a demand that the executive heads of the stake departments nominate all the rest of the officers of the Sunday school and Religio. While it might not be practicable for territory less closely organized, this is a work which may well be developed in a compact and well-appointed organization such as a stake.

Some years ago a joint auditing plan was inaugurated in the stake, whereby one member each was elected from the church, the Sunday school, and the Religio, to audit all the accounts for the three organizations. The job has grown to such proportions, that this is found to be unsatisfactory, so the plan is being abandoned and the stake high council asked to consider and advise. The total amount of money handled by the stake bishopric the past year was over $57,000, which gives an idea of the size of the task.

There were a number of ordinations at the Sunday afternoon service: Oscar Anderson to office of high priest and member of the stake high council; W. B. Paul and C. E. Wight to office of elder; W. E. Prall and H. L. Barto to office of priest; Lonzo Jones, president of Lamoni Quorum of Priests, with Frank McDonald and Clarence Skinner counselors. Recommendations were approved and ordination provided for W. L. Morey, of Pleasanton, as elder, and John Mann, of Bloomington, as teacher.

The gifts were manifested at the meeting, and statements made through inspiration indicating that the time has come for special preparations for the spread of the gospel to the nations. We have been told in this manner recently that in the respite afforded us after the recent war the gospel must go forth to the nations in power. We are pleased that God is indicating his will in this regard, and leaving us without excuse in the preparation for the gathering.

The decision of the joint council at Independence, that the General Conference will be held here in spite of the report that has recently gained credence that it was seriously considered otherwise, has been announced. While it is a fact that conservation of water is being observed that there may be sufficient for the conference season, the figures show the supply is increasing, though 57 per cent of the normal amount has been used since January 1. This in spite of the fact that we have had deficient rainfall for the recent months. The records of rainfall as recorded here by the Government weather bureau for the past fifteen years lead one to believe that unless there is an unusual deficiency in precipitation between now and April 6, there will be sufficient for all needs, and this too even though the present conservation be not continued, and it is to be continued. So those who had expected to attend but were worried over the reports that have gone out, should consider the situation as it really is, and as evidenced by the action of the joint council not to change the place decided on by the General Conference of last year.

Special series of services are being held in surrounding places, with good attendance. The work in general looks promising.

Spirituality and Education

In writing this letter the writer wishes to touch the hearts of the more mature brothers and sisters who very often discourage the younger minds and are responsible for those minds not being developed.

Can we wonder that some of our promising young people become discouraged at the question of education when they are repeatedly hearing from the pulpit, or from their grandmothers, that education will deprive them of spirituality?

Your writer can truly testify that she has received a greater degree of spirituality since she has studied to show herself approved in the hallowed walls of Graceland than at any other time. Does this seem unnatural? No. The Lord is always willing to bless those who keep his commandments.

And what are some of the commandments? (See Doctrine and Covenants 87:5.) Study and learn and become acquainted with all good books, and with languages, tongues, and peoples. The Lord tells his disciples of latter days to study all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God; things both in heaven and earth, things under the earth, things which have been, and things which must shortly come to pass; things at home and abroad; the wars and perplexities of nations; and a knowledge also of countries and kingdoms, etc. (Doctrine and Covenants 85:21.)

If the gospel is to be preached to every nation and each specific nation to hear the gospel in its own tongue, we can see the necessity of becoming acquainted with tongues and peoples.

One of the best ways to begin is to seek diligently to master our mother tongue; for if we do not understand our own language we shall find it difficult to master a language which is entirely foreign to us.

We are to have knowledge also of countries. Can we not expect Christ's blessing as we study about the beautiful places where he walked and talked with the children of men? Yes, places where he cleansed the lepers, loosed the tongues of the dumb, and opened the eyes of the blind; places to which our beloved Apostle Paul wrote such beautiful letters as have been handed down through the ages and have become masterpieces to our most learned men.

The morning light is breaking, and even the nation which rejected the One who came to his own and his own received him not, will yet receive him gladly. Never again will they crucify their king. And,

"Shall we whose souls are lighted
With wisdom from on high,
Shall we to men be lighted
The lamp of light deny?"

Surely we are willing to thrust in our sharpened sickles. The more knowledge we have the more we shall be able to give out to those in darkness. No truer words did Nephi speak than when he said, "To be learned is good if ye hearken unto the counsels of God."

There is nothing of more value to the church than a learned brother or sister who is using his or her talents for the service of God, and whose one aim in life is for the elevating of humanity and the redemption of Zion.

Dear Saints, let us do all things with a view of building up. Surely we are going to encourage our young people in their educational pursuits. Many of our girls are already doing a good work in the Sunday school and Religio.

Who knows but what the time may come when they shall walk in the footprints of the Savior and apostles of old, and in those far-away lands, overshadowing with all that is beautiful, our sisters may be called upon to carry on their work among the little lambs, descendants of those of whom Christ said, "Such is the kingdom of heaven." Let us be ready.

MRS. FRANK B. ALMOND.

Testimony of a Veteran

---

I shall soon be eighty-four years old, and I think my time here will not be very long. I think there are not many men who have suffered more bodily pain than I, but the Lord has been with me through it all. As I am liable to be taken away at any time, I want to leave my testimony of some things I know in relation to this great latter-day gospel.

About forty-five years ago I was told by Elder J. C. Foss that if I would obey the gospel and live right I should know that the gospel was true. This was in February. At the place where we wanted to be baptized, the ice was about four feet thick. There were seven of us who had made up our minds that we would be baptized that day, so we went to work before the tide came in, and cut the ice and cleared it away. It reminded me of what Paul says in Romans 6: Buried with Christ by baptism and planted in the likeness of his death, we shall be in the likeness of his resurrection.

It was a bitter cold day, and Brother John stood in that cold water until he baptized us all. We then went home and changed our clothes, and then met at William Gray's, where Elder Foss confirmed each one. There was quite a crowd there, and we had a social meeting, and were very happy, for we believed that we were obeying God's law. If we had not so believed, we would not have gone into that cold water at zero weather.

I obeyed the gospel and made up my mind that I would live just as well as I could. I read in the seventh chapter of John: He that would do the will of the Father, he should know of the doctrine. That meant me, just as much as it did those who lived nineteen hundred years ago. If not, the Bible was of no use to us.

I had been told by a number of preachers that those things were not for us; God did not reveal anything in our day. If God doesn't reveal anything now, how do I know the Bible is true? The Bible says: No man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost. "Oh, I don't know," says one, "The Bible says so. How do I know the Bible is true if I can't know there was, and is, a Savior Jesus Christ? Without the Holy Ghost I can't tell the Bible is true. The whole religious world denies that God gives any revelations now. If that is so, then none of them can say there is a Jesus Christ."

Now I will say that I know that there is such a being as Jesus Christ, with power to give the Holy Ghost to men and women to-day as he did nineteen hundred years ago, if they will obey the same gospel. The sick will be healed, the lame walk, and devils be cast out, and there will be prophecy and speaking in tongues. I have seen all these things.

In 1870 I was ordained a priest, and shortly after that, an elder. After I was baptized one of my children, a girl eight years old, was taken sick. She was very ill indeed. One morning I went down the river to haul in my lobster traps and did not get home until about three o'clock. When I returned, the child was playing with the other children. I was very much surprised and asked my wife what had happened. She said that about the time she had dinner ready, Elder J. C. Foss had come. When he sat down at the table, the child said: "I want Brother John to administer to me." Brother Foss arose immediately, anointed her head with oil and asked God to bless and heal her, then went back to finish his dinner. The child said, "Mother, I want my clothes." She dressed herself and came out and ate her dinner, and from that time on, she was just as well as any child could be, and to-day she is fifty-four years old, and a good Latter Day Saint. "They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover."

One morning I went down to the river to haul in my traps. My house was about sixty yards from the landing place. When I got back, before I landed, I heard my wife groaning and screaming. I went to the house as quickly as I could and administered to her, and before I took my hands off her head she was perfectly easy. She then told me what had happened. After I had left that morning, she was not feeling very well. When she saw the doctor passing by, she called him in and he left some medicine for her. After she had taken it, her stomach and bowels commenced swelling, and she was in great misery and thought she was going to die immediately. She said she thought she would not have lived but a few minutes had it not been for the administration, for she thought the doctor made a mistake and gave her poison.

I must tell of one more case of healing, which concerned myself. I had a lame back and could not do anything for myself, and when I tried to move, I suffered greatly. One day Elders J. C. Foss and Michael Holland called at my house on their way to conference. When they entered the house, I was sitting in my chair. Brother John asked me if I were not going to the conference. I said: "I look like it, don't I? Can't get out of my chair." He said: "Haven't you any faith?" I told him I thought I had a little. He then took out his bottle of oil, which he always carried with him, and anointed my head, then they laid their hands on me, and asked the Lord to heal me. When they took their hands off my head, I got right up out of my chair, went and changed my clothes, and walked to the place of meeting, two miles away, and attended every meeting thereafter. The next Monday I went into the woods to work again.

I could tell of many things the Lord has done for me and mine, but this letter is already too long.

Our Life's Work

As each day unfolds itself to my view in observing the events that daily occur and the moving on of the cycle of time, I find the trend of my thought turns into the soliloquizing channel of "What is my life's work?" And in thinking out this matter, I opine that countless others will share with me, not only in the soliloquy but also in the conviction that here we are placed in our respective stations, here we have been set as stewards, and that we will have to render to the great Master an account of our stewardship "Aye! We are not our own."

He has given to each of us some talents; to some more, to others less, but in accordance with the proportion he expects the return. The talent of health and robustness—the talent of wealth—the talent of music—the talent of song—the talent of art—the talent of intellectual powers—the talent of good judgment and advice—the talent of sympathy—the talent of organizing—the talent of leading, etc., all these are not the result of mere chance.

After being convinced that our dear Master has assigned us places here on earth as stewards, let us set about discerning our talents, and in so doing, to strive with all our powers to increase them, remembering that "He that hath not, from him shall be taken, even that which he seemeth to have," and, "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty."

We are not journeying to a land of phantoms but to one of reality. Let us remember that here we are on probation, that we are now determining our eternal destiny; and as we do not know how soon we may be removed from this scene of labor—momentous thought to leave this world with our "life's work" unaccomplished—therefore it behooves us not to slacken our hands but to "Press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus," and to work out our own salvation, with fear and trembling.

"Life is real, and life is earnest,
And the grave is not its goal;
Dust thou art, to dust returneth,
Was not spoken of the soul."

E. M. POWELL.

Keep the Camp Fires Burning

With the passing of the old year we leave behind us many experiences that we would not recall if we could. The nineteen hundred and eighteenth chapter of the world's history has been written with a bloody pen. The pen of experience dipped in the blood of the nations has written heavy lines shaded with sorrow, and the pictures drawn tell but half the misery and destruction that have floated like a dark cloud around the world, touching the isolated cabin on the prairie, the mansion on the hill, and the hovel in the alley. All have seen the moving picture of destruction and paid the price. Oh, what a price!

What was it all for? We must read the answer while the great clock of the sky ticks off the days of the new year. For the effect of the war, its purpose and accomplishments, can only be determined as we see the great war machine weaving upon life's loom the developments of the future.

Will it turn people to God? Will the interest that has been consolidated in the happenings of the war, smolder away while a new fire shall be kindled from the torch of religion, lighting the way for all mankind to a home of safety and rest through the echoings of a peace that is but the shaping of character?

Day and night the camp fires of God's army must be kept burning, sending their light far out over the plains of despair where some aching heart has become entangled in the web of indifference, and only waits for the helping hand of a comrade to bring it back to the more abundant life.

Remember the angels of darkness are on the alert. The turning point of a man may be determined by encouragement. Who will come to the rescue? Men of the world are offering inducements that twine around the forms of men and women and mold them. Will we, as children of light, be diligent in pointing them to the better way? The many little acts of kindness, the gentle words of love and encouragement given at the right time are like life-savers to the souls adrift on the ocean of time. Have you any to spare? Then give them for the betterment of humanity. Don't be slackers and bring the flowers to the grave, but distribute them as you go and life will open up before you as the blossoming of a rose. The unfolding of its leaves will bring experiences that will brighten the lives of all that are touched by your work.

The work of God is a wonderful work. Opportunities are everywhere. Do you work? Then get busy and brighten the corner where you live. Don't wear the name of saint and be a sinner! Brother, sister, have you been placed on a committee? If so, what for? Some one has appointed you, confident that you would make good. Will you betray that confidence? No, a thousand times no!

LEVI HEMENWAY.

IRONTON, OHIO, February 5, 1919.

Editors Herald: On July 20, 1913, I was baptized into this grand work and I gave my all to the Lord's work. The same fall we started a Sunday school and I was put in as superintendent. We started with sixteen members, all members of the Ironton Branch, but I was not satisfied. I thought we ought to be reaching out for nonmembers. So I put my plans before the school, and in a short time we had an enrollment of from forty-five to fifty. Then came the time when we had to seek for more room. We secured the needed room, but it left us considerably in debt.

We have paid off six hundred dollars of the debt and still have four hundred dollars to pay, but raised sixty-three dollars for a Christmas offering.

In 1915 I was ordained a priest, and I have been trying to spread this glorious gospel. I can see the Spirit of the Lord working with us at this place. In June I baptized a good man and one who will be of service to us in this place to help spread the Lord's work.

I have put out twenty copies of A Marvelous Work and a Wonder, mostly among outsiders, and everyone tells me it is the grandest thing they have ever seen.

I am making arrangements to preach once a week at the shop where I work, and every day I have some one come and ask me something in regard to the church. This makes me feel the need of being informed so I can be of service in the work at this place.

Your brother and colaborer,

U. B. CHAMBERS.

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS, February 18, 1919.

Editors Herald: On Sunday night, the 16th, one of the best conferences in the history of the Clinton District came to a close. The Sunday school and Religio associations met on Friday. Both voted to coordinate with the church, which was acquiesced in by the conference. In fact, the work of coordination was entered into by the Sunday school at this convention so far as the choosing of officers was concerned, which seemed satisfactory to all.

Brethren Lee Quick, R. T. Walters, and W. W. Chrestensen of the missionary force were present. The local ministry were also fairly well represented.

It was voted to hold a reunion during 1919, and a committee appointed to secure location and report to the June conference. There was quite a strong sentiment in favor of securing grounds for a permanent location. The Holden Stake is invited to meet with us. The next conference will be at Mapleton, Kansas, June 6, 7, and 8.

There were Saints present from every branch in the district. Those attending seemed greatly encouraged, and the priesthood more determined to work in their calling than ever before.

Brother W. R. Odell, president of the elders' quorum, was present a while on Sunday and made selection of F. A. Hawley as one of his counselors, who was ordained at the afternoon prayer meeting by Elders Lee Quick and W. R. Odell. The afternoon prayer and testimony service on Sunday was a great spiritual feast for the Saints. Nonmembers were also visibly impressed, and tears of joy flowed from nearly every eye.

Meetings were held in the G. A. R. hall, and dinner and supper were served in dining room of the hall. There is a noble, earnest band of Saints in Fort Scott, and they spared no pains to make the conference a success and make visitors welcome.

Elder Solomon Tripp, from Mount Ida, Kansas, attended conference and rejoiced in the privilege of association with Saints. We hope to have him locate in the district later on.

Now that the scourge of influenza is declining, we hope for better and greater advancement in the months to come.

Yours in hope,

H. E. MOLER.

YODER, COLORADO, February 14, 1919.

Editors Herald: As I am renewing my subscription, I thought I would write a few lines asking that I may have an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may be helped and strengthened in passing through the great trial that has come to me and my five little children. We had to give up our dear husband and father the 21st of January. He died with double pneumonia. It is hard, indeed, to part with our loved ones, but the Lord knows best.

So, dear Saints, I ask that you pray for me that I may hold out faithful and raise my children in a way that they may be useful in service for the Master.

Your sister,

MRS. CARRIE GOUDY.

WOODBINE, IOWA, February 10, 1919.

Editors Herald: We are a branch of over three hundred members, and on the gain. We think the work here is moving upward. There seems to be harmony among all the active members. Some of our workers are away for the winter. Brother and Sister S. B. Kibler and Gladys Hupp are spending the winter on the coast.

We started the new year with some changes. The Sunday school elected D. M. Vredenburg as superintendent; the Religion, Brother Earl Lewis. These brethren have just recently moved here, having bought a store here a few months ago. There are also a few other members moving here, and some have come to us in the last year. Also several have been baptized.

The Lord has been very good to us. While the devastating plague was claiming so many victims, we escaped very well. Not many were sick, and those that were received some very great blessings, for which we praise our heavenly Father.

CORRESPONDENT.

All our disputings and hard speeches are the froth of our ignorance maddened by our pride.—Doctor H. Bushnell.

CULDESAC, IDAHO.

Editors Herald: I have been a careful reader of the HERALD for about three years, and during the recent time of scourge it has been an especially appreciated privilege. It seems such a profitable thing to read the letters that I will endeavor to do my part. We should all be interested in each other.

We have a very nice branch here, with Elder W. F. Yates as president. He is a natural leader. We have something over one hundred members, and a general attendance of about fifty when all are allowed to meet.

The influenza has been taking its course through this part of the country as it did elsewhere, but the few Saints who had it escaped easily. We believe it to be one of the scourges of the latter days, and it behooves every one of us to be diligent in our service to God. Even if we are not privileged to meet in our gathering places, we can observe our family worship, pursue our lesson studies, Bible readings, etc., as usual. These should be our guide, and let us include the financial law.

By all means, Saints, let us deal honestly with God in the payment of tithing, free-will offerings, Christmas offerings, etc. I have only been in this work about four years, but it has been a time of rejoicing for me. I began living the law of God to the best of my understanding. The first year I had no tithing, but now we are paying about a hundred dollars a year, so you see the Lord has been good to us.

We have a good representation of the priesthood here and all are enthused with the work, especially along the lines of the financial law and the Order of Enoch. We have felt it wise to organize an order with only four charter members. Others are becoming interested and want to live according to God's law. Our secretary is V. L. Gunter, Culdesac, Idaho, R. F. D. 1.

We had a good visit this fall from Brother Peter Anderson, and he seemed well pleased with conditions here. We surely enjoyed his stay.

Brother J. A. Bronson is again in the district. He is a live missionary, and surely God's Spirit accompanies him in his work.

We had some good sermons last summer from Brother R. L. Newby and wish he could have stayed longer. Possibly he can come again. District President S. S. Smith gave us some valuable talks.

I am local collector of tithing. We are looking for the time when Zion will be redeemed and God's people will have a gathering place, a place of refuge and safety, so he can protect us. I understand that Zion is to be a holy place, so how must it be redeemed? It must be by purchase, so, dear Saints, if we are not paying our tithes and offerings we are helping to delay the redemption of Zion. Let us arouse to our calling.

Order of the Herald Office a book on the financial law called The Law of Christ and Its Fulfillment. Read and study it. The Lord has not slackened his purposes. His words are being fulfilled before our eyes. Let us work while it is to-day and we have opportunity. I will close this by asking you to read Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2.

Your fellow worker for Christ,

PETER F. KLAUS.

THREE TRACTS

BY APOSTLE JOHN W. RUSHTON

Apostle Rushton has written three short tracts which have been published by the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and are on sale at 75 cents per hundred. They are printed on the best quality of white paper, in attractive form, and they are a credit to the publishers and to the church because of their neat and substantial appearance.

THEIR SUBJECT MATTER

A Nineteenth-Century Prophet and His Work is the title of the first, and is a splendid piece of literature with which to introduce the latter-day restoration. It sets out the demand for the existence of the church as founded by Joseph Smith; his claim that God had spoken to him; the reason for the revival of the Bible idea of Zion and a literal kingdom of God on the earth. This little piece of literature is a pleasing introduction of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and its ideals, and any Saint with a missionary spirit should possess a good supply. It and the other two of the series are the right size for use in a number 10 envelope.

The Latter Day Saints—A Question of Identity, another of the trio, makes clear the contention of the Reorganization that it is in fact the original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and brands the Utah apostasy out of evidence contained in its own standard works. A good tract for use where the issue as to which is the true church in succession from Joseph Smith the Prophet has been raised. This work is especially clear on the secession or apostasy of Brigham Young; on the law of marriage and the history of polygamy; and on the law of tithing—contrasting the views of the two churches on these subjects.

The President of the Church is an eight-page treatise on the law of succession in the presidency, designed to be used in meeting the Utah people and others who have heard their fallacious theory. It quotes the law of the Doctrine and Covenants, shows the Utah faction to be out of harmony therewith, and also quotes declarations by Brigham Young, B. H. Roberts, and Joseph F. Smith, and other testimony in the establishment of the true succession in the presidency of the church. The Utah 1906 edition of Doctrine and Covenants is used for reference and makes the case against the apostate church strong in that they are shown to be condemned out of their own mouths.

For the subjects treated we know of no superior literature to these three tracts, for they are fair, concise, and full of history and evidence. Invest $2.25 and have 100 of three good tracts on hand for emergencies; then use them freely in your work. You may be surprised and gratified at the results.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Conference Minutes

CENTRAL TEXAS.—At Houston, February 8 and 9. District president in charge, assisted by J. F. Curtis. Branches reporting: Dallas, Marlin, Houston, Central Texas, and New Baden. Report of Bishop's agent showed $1,143.59 received during the year. S. W. Simmons, S. N. Gray, Carrie Gray, A. J. Banta, and Jessie Banta were elected delegates to General Conference. A. J. Banta, D. A. Fuller, and S. L. Dotson were appointed a reunion committee. A resolution was adopted to purchase a district tent. A. J. Banta, S. N. Gray, and James Clevenger were appointed a committee to solicit means and purchase the tent. Sheldon Armstrong, secretary.

WESTERN COLORADO.—At Durango, Colorado, February 7, 8, and 9. The attendance of the Saints was not as large as expected, principally on account of the influenza and other afflictions. We noticed there were a greater number of non-members present than usual. Ammon White preached two very powerful sermons concerning an entrance into the kingdom of God. Amos T. Higdon, district president, also preached a fine sermon, and we feel that the Saints were greatly strengthened. The Sunday afternoon prayer service was one that will long be remembered by the Durango Saints. The Spirit of God was with us in great power. Some were rebuked by Brother White, while speaking under the influence of the Spirit, while others were encouraged to prepare for service in our Master's cause. John T. Scannell, secretary.

CENTRAL NEBRASKA.—At Inman, February 15, at 9.30 a. m., with W. M. Self in charge; Levi Gamet, secretary pro tem. The following branches reported: Clear Water, Meadow Grove, Inman, and Bonesteel. Reports were read from the following brethren: Levi Gamet, F. S. Gatenby, M. A. Peterson, W. M. Self, Harvey Gold, and Thomas Patras. The Bishop's agent's report showed total receipts for six months, $845.52; expenditures, $788.90. Levi Gamet elected president of district. Mrs. Mary Patras sustained as secretary, and N. S. Butler as treasurer; Mrs. Zaida Payne, chorister. Levi Gamet named F. S. Gatenby and W. M. Self as associates in the presidency of district, which nominations received the indorsement of the body. After some discussion,

DAILY HERALD

For General Conference

Again we are going to issue a daily edition of the HERALD to promptly and fully furnish the news and reports of the conference and convention sessions.

We assure our friends they will appreciate the service rendered in this manner, and believe we can even improve somewhat on the past record. Not only will the news be included to within an hour or less of going to press, but also many other interesting comments and sidelights with copious reports and summaries.

The first edition will be on the evening of the 7th, and continue daily except Sunday till the close of conference.

The old price is being maintained though material is costing double. Please order early—why not now?

the plan of coordination was adopted. Adjourned subject to call of the district presidency. Levi Gamet.

EASTERN OKLAHOMA.—At Haileyville, Oklahoma, February 15 and 16, 1919. All branches in district reported, and 6 of the ministry. Fort Towson, Oklahoma, was selected as the place of the next conference, the time to be left to the district president. A motion prevailed that we hold a reunion in connection with the conference, if it is possible, judgment of possibility to be left to the district president. A motion prevailed that we favor a State reunion, for the church, Religio, and Sunday school, as resolved by Central Oklahoma District, and encourage a good representation from Eastern Oklahoma District. The branches are again urged to comply with a resolution passed at the Grannis conference in 1915, which provides that each branch create a fund to be sent to the district treasurer, to pay the expenses of the district officials to and from conferences. J. E. Kelsey, secretary-treasurer.

LITTLE SIOUX.—At Woodbine, Iowa, February 9 and 10, Amos Berve, district president, in charge. The choice of Fred A. Fry as associate president, to fill vacancy of office by removal of W. R. Adams, was ratified. Statistical reports of all branches read, showing a total membership of 2,269, absent from branches about 900. Bishop's agent's annual report showed receipts from tithes and offerings, $17,708.67, and special consecration, $362.15, this being the largest sum received during any previous year. The district presidency reported an improved spiritual condition throughout the district. Recommendations for the ordination of the following were concurred in, the ordinations to be provided for: Jay E. Keck, Sioux City, Iowa, to office of priest; Elmer Redfield, Woodbine, to office of deacon. A committee was named to appoint delegates to the General Conference. The same were notified by the secretary of their appointment. Sermons were preached by T. A. Hougas, of Mills County, Charles J. Smith, district missionary, and Amos Berve, district president. Adjourned to meet at Missouri Valley, June, 1919. Ada S. Putnam, secretary.

NORTH DAKOTA.—At Fargo, February 15 and 16, in the Saints' Bungalow church, at 1423 First Avenue South. J. E. Wildermuth chosen to preside, with L. Whiting to assist. F. E. Hammel secretary pro tem. Branches reporting: Dunseith, Lansford, Minot, and Fargo. District officers reporting: Thomas Leitch, vice president; J. W. Darling, secretary and treasurer; Mrs. Bertha Graham, member of library board. J. E. Wildermuth, Bishop's agent, reported receipts for past six months, tithing and offering fund, $4,110.47; Christmas offerings, $963.85; balance and receipts for the year 1918, for general fund, $6,126.97; sent to Presiding Bishop, $3,200; paid to elders' families not laboring in district, $1,270.95; paid out for and in the district, $597. Delegates to General Conference: Thomas Leitch, N. C. Anderson, Iva Bullis, Mrs. M. J. Spaulding, J. E. Wildermuth. Alternates: Warren McElwain, Sister H. A. Moffit, Sister W. D. Thompson, M. J. Spaulding, W. E. Shakespeare, W. D. Thompson, J. C. Hanson. Preaching by L. W. Whiting, J. E. Wildermuth, F. E. Hammel, J. W. Thompson, and W. H. Baker. F. E. Hammel, secretary pro tem.

ALABAMA DISTRICT.—With Pleasant Hill Branch, February 8, 1919. J. R. Harper in charge. T. C. Kelley chosen to preside, assisted by J. R. Harper. D. T. Parker, secretary; D. E. Sellers, chorister; Maggie Sellers, organist. Minutes of last conference read and approved. Ministerial reports from 5 elders, 3 priests, one teacher, and one deacon. Bishop's agent reported: On hand at last report, $198.41; received since, $518.34; paid out, $385; on hand, $331.75. J. W. Baldwin, L. G. Sellers, and A. C. Cook were appointed to audit Bishop's agent's books. Books audited and an error of $100 found. Report should have read, on hand $431.75 instead of $331.75. Delegates to General Conference: T. C. Kelley, J. C. Crabb, F. A. Rowe, Sister F. A. Rowe, Sister Emma McPherson. Alternate: Thomas Vickery. Delegates authorized to cast majority and minority vote. Officers elected for next twelve months: J. R. Harper, president; A. A. Weaver, vice president; D. T. Parker, secretary; J. K. Patrick, treasurer. Conference adjourned to meet with the Pleasant Hill Branch at the call of district president. Preaching by F. A. Rowe, J. C. Crabb, and T. C. Kelley. D. T. Parker, secretary.

HOLDEN STAKE.—At Holden, Missouri, February 15 and 16. J. F. Curtis, associated with the stake presidency, D. J. Krahl and F. A. McWethy, in charge. Reports from all stake officers, quorums, departments, and branches. Bishop

C. J. Hunt's annual report shows total receipts, $13,091.78; balance on hand, $440.52. Eleven branches in stake, with membership of 1,349. Interesting meetings were held by the departments and priesthood. Advantages of the "boy movement" were ably presented by Brother George Goold, of Independence, Missouri. Preaching by J. E. Yates and J. F. Curtis. A resolution passed expressing approval of the efforts of the Missouri Children's Code Commission, and requesting our representative at Jefferson City to use every proper means at his command to support same. Delegates to the General Conference were elected as follows: D. J. Krahl, J. A. Miller, F. A. McWethy, W. S. Macrae, E. A. Davis, F. A. Cool, J. W. A. Bailey, Sisters Pearl Redfield, America Christenson, Will Anderson, I. M. Ross, I. M. Smith, and Lola Johnson. Alternates: Walter Johnson, James Williamson, James Brendel, J. F. Davis, C. L. House, C. J. Hunt, J. E. Hall, Sisters Mary Lovell, F. A. McWethy, Frances Moler, D. J. Krahl, C. L. House, and Carrie Danielson. Adjourned to meet at Sedalia, Missouri, at call of stake presidency. Mrs. M. A. Fender, secretary.

Convention Minutes

NORTH DAKOTA.—Sunday school, at Fargo, February 14, with assistant superintendent in charge. Reports seem to show schools in working condition and progressing. They have all been hindered by the influenza. Adjourned to meet the day after the district conference at the summer reunion in 1919. Gladys Darling, secretary, Thorne, North Dakota.

LITTLE SIOUX.—Sunday school, at Woodbine, Iowa, February 8, 9.30 a. m. Superintendent Charles Hyde in charge. Election of officers for 1919 as follows: Charles Hyde, superintendent; Fred Fry, assistant superintendent; Cora Kirkwood, secretary; A. E. Lewis, treasurer; Maude Schofield, home class superintendent; Alice Hupp, member library board; Pearl Van Eaton, chairman of good literature committee; Sister W. W. Baker, cradle roll superintendent. Thirteen schools in district: all reported, and all are alive and active. Next convention at Missouri Valley, Iowa, June, 1919. Cora Kirkwood, secretary, Logan, Iowa.

CLINTON.—Religio, at Fort Scott, Kansas, February 14, at 2 p. m., with district officers in charge. The coordination plan was adopted. The charters of the Clinton and Walker locals were taken from them. Delegates to the General Convention chosen: Mabel Braden, Lee Quick, J. W. Higgins, A. C. Dempsey, Mrs. A. C. Dempsey, F. A. Hawley, Mrs. A. C. Silvers, J. H. Gates, H. E. Moler, W. W. Chrestensen, J. W. Strader, Mrs. J. W. Strader, Helen Hawley, J. T. Higdon, Mrs. J. T. Higdon, Carl Gammet, W. A. Surface, Mrs. W. A. Surface, Ella Surface, Nellie Hayton, Clarence Higdon, A. L. Crooker, Mrs. A. L. Crooker, Adrian Lowe, Ada Hughes, Luella Topham. A profitable session was enjoyed. Helen Hawley, secretary.

Our Departed Ones

REESE.—Myrl, daughter of Moroni and Nellie Traxler, eldest of eight children, born in Harrison County, Missouri, June 26, 1892, passed to her reward at Chicago, Illinois, February 12, 1919. Baptized in 1904 by J. A. Gunsolley, deceased lived true to her covenant. Married William Reese, December 15, 1917. Her companion, serving in the army of the Nation, stationed at Douglas, Arizona, on leave, with other dear ones, including her mother, of Lamoni, Iowa, ministered during the last days of her earth life. She is survived by husband, father, mother, 3 brothers, 4 sisters, many other relatives and friends. Services at Lamoni, Iowa, February 16, 1919, in charge of D. T. Williams, sermon by J. F. Garver. Interment in Rosehill Cemetery.

DARST.—Mrs. Mary Jane Darst was born in New Cumberland in 1850, but had lived in New Philadelphia for 50 years. Though not a member of our church she was a very good woman and very kind to our people. Died at New Philadelphia, Ohio, January 21, 1919. Funeral from the home. Sermon by L. W. Powell, of Kirtland.

HAWN.—Mrs. Arley Farnworth Hawn was born in New Hampshire, August 10, 1843. Baptized in 1893. Died February 7, 1919, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. James King, of Detroit, Michigan. Her consistent, Christian life, and continual effort to assist others has endeared her to many. One son and 2 daughters are left to mourn. Funeral from the First Flint Church, in charge of Matthew Liston. Interment in Avontine Cemetery.

MYATT.—Louisa Myatt was born August 12, 1840, in Birmingham, England. Married Simon Myatt on August 17, 1865. One week after their marriage they started to America, locating near Elwood, Iowa. To this union were born 3 sons. Baptized January 18, 1880, and has lived true to her religion. Twenty years ago her eyesight began to fail, and resulted in total blindness. Died February 17, 1919, at Elwood, Iowa. She was very cheerful, and never complained. Sermon by John Heide, with the Methodist minister in charge. Interment at Maquoketa, Iowa.

QUINN.—James Cleo, son of William and Susan Quinn, was born October 25, 1901, at Wabash, Indiana. Died February 3, 1919. He leaves to mourn, father, mother, one brother, and one sister. Funeral at the residence. Sermon from Psalm 17: 15. Interment in cemetery at Wabash, Indiana.

FROM HERE AND THERE

The Santa Ana (California) Register, for February 14 and 15, carried about two columns of news items concerning the district conference and conventions. A number of extracts concerning our faith as stated by such brethren as G. H. Wixom, and on archæology by N. T. Chapman, are featured. We are pleased to note the prominence and exceptional fairness with which the event is reported for the readers of the Register.

It is expected that the committee on arrangements for the delegates at conference in Lamoni will make their announcements in our next issue.

Brother George Elson, of Wayne, Nebraska, desires an interest in the prayers of the Saints for relief from long-endured bodily suffering.

A letter from Mrs. Alwilda Shumard, R. F. D., Box 198, Terre Haute, Indiana, asks if there are any Saints near that place. She desires that some of the elders stop there and preach for them.

The correspondent of the Independence Religio relates that during a recent session President John Lloyd announced the serious illness of a Religian and the entire congregation knelt while fervent prayers were offered by R. T. Cooper and I. N. White. The program features are highly commended, and have included one given by the nurses of the Sanitarium, and another by the Boy Scouts, being an exhibition of first aid work.

GENERAL CONFERENCE IN LAMONI

After the HERALD had gone to press and a considerable number run off last week, we received a message from the joint council in session in Independence, saying that they desired publication of their decision that it was thought best to hold the conference here instead of changing it under present circumstances. Consequently, some of our readers will have received HERALDS stating the above facts, and some will have no reference to it. We, too, desired early publication of the item, for it seems many were somewhat disconcerted because of the conflicting rumors as to the place of the conference.

THE DAILY "HERALD"

An announcement is being made in this number that a Daily HERALD will be issued during the conference sessions. It levies considerable sacrifice from every person having to do with its publication, but they realize it is much appreciated and affords a means of disseminating information which would otherwise be limited to those in attendance. In fact it is noted that delegates who are here find pleasure in reading the happenings in the other meetings which they are not able to attend. Many excellent commendations were received concerning our daily issues two years ago, and we are confident we can improve on them at this time. The office folks are pleading that you order early so they can handle the work. Just sent 25 cents and ask for the Daily HERALD.

CORRECTIONS

In the article by J. W. Rushton in the issue of January 22, the following corrections should be noted: Paragraph 1, set should be sets. Paragraph 3, the author used the English Revised Version which read: "If any man willeth to do my will," etc. It was changed to rendering in Authorized Version, which is our usual custom when a notation as to the version is not cited. Paragraph 4, read raison d'etre instead of reason d'etre. Page 80, paragraph 2, leave off the s on Archbishops. Page 80, paragraph 3, read Cobden, instead of Coben. Page 81, the last word in the prose composition was inadvertently changed to opposite from the correct opposite.

Brother Fred C. Graff reports the organization of a home class in Greensburg, Pennsylvania, with seven members, and gives credit to L. F. P. Curry and W. H. Daugherty. A welcome is extended to any passing Saints to stop and make them a visit, for they feel they need encouragement.

ALL MODERN HOMES HAVE BOOKS

All Latter Day Saint homes should contain the History of the Church in four large volumes, for the adults and the students. $2 per volume in cloth.

And the Young People's History in two volumes, by Vida E. Smith. $1 per volume in cloth. The second volume is just off the press, and is a gem. Order now, in time for the long evenings.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

A WORTHY MINISTER

In the year just closing, we noted three incidents which appeared to us to be of marked interest, and which should give encouragement to those who work earnestly and devotedly, without an attempt to claim special personal glory but simply try to do the duty at hand day by day and year by year.

We had received a number of letters and were rather astonished to note how many men released by the appointive powers wrote in a tone that seemed to reflect upon others and rather tending to undermine their former work and testimony. It raised the question, Why should this be, that a man who has given his best years to the church, would seemingly go backward and get "soured" if another man is appointed to carry on that work?

We mentioned it to one of our prominent men, but not a member of the joint council, and he at once replied: "Why, the reason is simple. Many of these old-timers have felt that their work was essential to the onward progress of the church; they have been willing to work, take the glory and give it to the church; but the idea that the church would or could go on without their personal support is inconceivable. So if they are not put forward, they think that everything is necessarily going wrong."

It is indeed sad that there should be such cases. But this brother went ahead and mentioned the name of a man who was not actuated by such a spirit, but whose idea had been entirely, What can I do? Not, What can I get? but What can I give? He accepted his release frankly and without criticism, and seemed to be devoted to the church.

Therein lies the difference. Is it, What can we get, or is it What can we give? Are we becoming more of a Latter Day Saint as the years go by, or are we becoming less so and more self-centered?

Later we saw an editorial—the summary of a sermon by President Frederick M. Smith, in which he drew a contrast at the close between two men, one of whom he said was actuated by this spirit of devotion, and whose interest was the good of the church.

We read that sermon to one who has been a member of the church for nearly fifty years. We suppressed the name. She exclaimed, "Well, isn't that So-and-So?" I replied, "How long has it been since you have seen him?" "Oh, it has been thirty-five or forty years anyway." Yet she had named at once the man whom President Smith had named. He is the same man referred to by our brother above. That man is Charles Derry.

This is not written to praise the man, but for the lesson it involves. What a joy it must be in the evening of life to see many arise and call him blessed; and that his quiet humble example has made itself felt in many homes. And what a crowning it is of a life well lived; a man who chose not his own way but the way of right; who asked not for personal honor but what could he do to help onward the work of God. A man who felt no bitterness when younger men were called to take up his work, even though they stumbled, even though they have made mistakes—but with charity was willing to help them.

We heard again of an incident of an old brother who in a prayer meeting prayed just the opposite from what he intended, and was guilty of using language several times, which seemed exactly the opposite of what one would have expected. Brother Derry's attention was called to the incident, with a suggestion that he call the matter to the offending brother's attention, but he at once smoothed the matter over with the further statement, "Oh, I don't think I will do that. I will just tell the Lord what he intended to say."

We believe we have many men in our ranks of that splendid, devoted character, whose ambition is to help and to give, and to soothe; who look not to the casual mistakes but look rather to the deep purpose right back of it and accept the intention rather than the outward form.

We are reminded also of the statement of Elder John Lake when he was released from the Quorum of Twelve. He stated that he was willing to accept any position the Lord desired, whether it be that of deacon or any other; if the Lord wanted him to serve there, he was willing to do so until he should say, "John Lake, come home."

We recall to mind an instance when Elbert A. Smith, shortly before entering the Presidency, was called upon to perform for one winter the duties of a deacon, and did so without question. There are others who become more devoted, more truly Saints of God as the years pass.

But why prolong the roll? It is not in praise of men, but it is in praise of God and the humility that these men show. They are humble and full of love, and set us an example in accordance with the admonition of the Master.

This is the spirit of preferring one another. It is the spirit of preferring the work of God.

SHOULD THE BRANCH FIX THE PENALTY?

In the procedure of our elders' courts and of the other courts of the church it has long been a question in our minds what is gained by requiring the branch to approve the findings, and then to fix the penalty.

In the first place, on the fact that the branch has approved the findings is based the assumption that the branch can have no right of appeal. This, with the constant use of the term accused, causes it to appear as if an action brought by the church were similar to a criminal action. Some have even suggested that expulsion from the church is comparable to a capital sentence or execution.

We would beg leave to differ from this view. Expulsion from the church, or dismembership, does not take away a man's spiritual life. It is more comparable to an inquest; it merely discovers the facts, which are already existing. It finds he is spiritually dead. If there is life, the purpose of the church always is to bring about reformation and salvation, or to renew that life. (Matthew 18; Doctrine and Covenants 64:2.)

Again, it is not comparable to an execution because by a true repentance spiritual life may be resumed if the sin has not been unto lasting spiritual death; if it is not one of those few cases for which there is no repentance. The person may then be received into the church and again receive its privileges.

It would seem very plain from reading the gospel law that the purpose of the courts is not criminal at all nor for expulsion from the church, but rather to save or gain our brother. (Matthew 18.) This is also shown by Doctrine and Covenants 42:22, 23. An individual does not come before a court of the church as a criminal, even though the act be criminal before the law of the land. He comes as a brother to be saved, if that is possible.

The reason is well set forth in Rules of Order and Debate, paragraph 156, page 94, why the branch or conference should approve the findings since they do not hear the evidence on complaint. The same principle is laid down in General Conference Resolutions 608:18. The people are not authorized to judge.

But for like reasons should the court be privileged and empowered also to fix the penalty, for the penalty is and should be determined by all the many details of the case, many of which it is impossible and inadvisable to set forth before a branch. Sometimes the court is prevented from taking that action which they deem wisest, because they know it would not be sustained by the branch without an explanation which it would be inadvisable to give. To do so would be to set forth all of the details of the case before the branch, to the injury of the individual.

Circumstances of the case, confessions by the accused, age, service in the church, may tend to temper the recommendation or the penalty in the minds of the court. Or again, the circumstances may justify a severe penalty, not only from all the facts of the case, but also from the attitude of the defendant and the hope that thereby his reformation may be brought about. Reformation is the primary consideration. The right penalty can only be determined by considering all of the details of the case, and since the branch is not empowered to hear the case, it is not in a position to fix the proper penalty.

As matters stand, an appeal taken before the High Council at the seat of the First Presidency, heard and considered in all of its details by fifteen high priests, including the presiding high priests of the church, may be set aside as to the penalty by the branch action of a handful of individuals not posted on the facts. Is that wise? Is that right? Is it justified on any principle of democracy or of personal liberty?

It seems a farce to compel the branch to uphold the findings, and then upon that action prevent the branch taking an appeal. It would seem an equal farce to leave the fixing of the penalty to a body not conversant with the evidence and all of the circumstances of the case.

It is the duty of the court to consider every element that may be brought to bear, or which may be discovered, by which a just penalty may be secured. If the lower court errs, its action may be corrected by an appeal seasonably taken.

The only place we have been able to find in the constitutional law of the church affecting this question is in the case of second offense for adultery.

(Doctrine and Covenants 42: 22.) "And the elders shall lay the case before the church and the church shall lift up their hands against him or her, that they may be dealt with according to the law of God. . . . And thus ye shall do in all cases which shall come before you."

But in the very next paragraph we note: "If he or she confess not, thou shalt deliver him or her up unto the church, not to the members, but to the elders, and it shall be done in a meeting and that not before the world."

It may be a question, then, whether this requires the fixing of a penalty by the branch. It certainly does not say so. It does permit of the question, in the case of adultery, being submitted to the church, and directs that the church shall lift up their hands against him or her. Even though this be done, we again respectfully suggest that it should not prevent an equitable appeal in order that justice may be secured, the church protected from wrong, the individual wrongdoer saved as speedily as possible.

The keeping of one's name on the books of the church does not constitute salvation. It may happen, and does happen that some must be shown first that they can be expelled from the church before they will reform their wrong manner of living.

We know, then, of no passage in the fundamental law requiring that the branch shall fix the penalty. There is the one provision that the branch shall hold up their hands against him or her. There is the further statement that "thus ye shall do in all cases which shall come before you." (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 22.) And that would be to say that the action of the church confirms the action of the court, and does not contradict or prevent a case being taken on appeal to a bishop's court, or to the High Council, if it is a case grave in nature.

But the court is best prepared to determine the penalty.

MENTAL ABILITY A FACTOR IN CRIME AND IN EDUCATION

---

The Journal of the American Judicature Society for October, 1918, is devoted principally to a study of the criminal and setting forth that which has been done in the municipal court of Chicago. It would seem that researches were made, which demonstrated anew that in every case the criminal is the mental defective, even though he be only a moron.

The first striking factor was that the laboratory showed a marked prevalence of feeble-mindedness among delinquents. This according to psychiatrists is a defect of the cortex, which phylogenetically is newer than the rest of the brain. This being so, it would be incurable. And it would follow from this, that such an individual cannot attain a high psychological level, no matter how much attention is given to his education.

The Binet-Simon tests were used. Those giving results not over three years of age were idiots. Those corresponding to four, five, and six years of age were classed as imbeciles. Seven and eight years of mental age were classed as low grade morons. Nine and ten, as middle grade. High grade morons compare with normal children of ten and twelve years of age. By this it means that the person, regardless of how long he has lived upon earth, possesses the mental development to be expected of a child of that age.

Until recently, as is stated in the articles above referred to, this is as far as the classification has been carried. But Doctor Hickson, in charge of the laboratory in Chicago, classes those of thirteen and fourteen and fifteen years' mental development as sociopaths who may be divided into three grades. It is significant, since their manifestations are chiefly in the form of maladjustments to social conditions. There is still a higher grade of borderland cases to which he applies the title of high grade borderland sociopaths. We are informed that the tests are not simply to gauge degrees of normal intelligence. They are numerous, and approach the mental complex from a variety of angles. They are made very flexible. The writer continues as follows: "The skeptic is inclined to think that education is at the bottom of all differences of intelligence. Not so very long ago it was commonly believed that education could do everything, and that one not positively imbecilic could be taught book knowledge so as to acquire normal mentality. This unscientific view has been responsible for monstrous injustice to the feeble-minded and for countless tragedies of life. The idea survives in skepticism of the ability of the psychopathologist to correctly rate the individual who has had little or no education. But it is unfounded, for an expert can employ the tests in the case of an illiterate with entire success. . . .

"But slowness beyond an understood point is itself a symptom, so that the time element becomes of first-rate importance in the tests, most of which are given with a stop watch. The feeble-minded person may conceal his defect if given time enough to accomplish his circuitous mental processes, but he reveals his defectiveness when the stop watch is employed, and when, in ordinary life, he is called upon to form a correct judgment in an instant. Who has not known the person who invariably fails in any game calling for swift decisions, and cannot be depended upon in emergencies? This defect is a psychopathic symptom."

The value of this work is that the laboratory records show what may be anticipated when any serious consideration of the subject is made. A large proportion of the delinquents are impaired in intelligence. The feeble-minded are not criminals of necessity. The defect appears to be that feeble-minded become delinquents by indirection. They cannot realize that detection and punishment are certain, so they are used as tools by shrewder persons. Environment has much to do with whether a feeble-minded person becomes a criminal. The mental inhibitions are lessened. The animal passions are not impaired. Hence arises the danger.

One of the gravest problems that the psychiatrist and lawyers have to deal with is dementia præcox. Dementia præcox does not imply any lessening of intelligence. It may be associated with any grade of intellectual power. According to Doctor Hickson it affects the emotions or activities and so does not reveal itself to the uninitiated. He states that the sixty-five per cent of inmates of insane asylums are victims of dementia præcox, and there are doubtless more cases outside than in. They have been known to excel in extraordinary degree in some fields but are nevertheless mentally unstable. Some of them have been leaders of religious movements, successful inventors, masters of oratory, artists, and noted musicians.

Unfortunately such are often amoral. Doctor Hickson says one might as well try to teach kittens to swim as to reform amoral defectives affected with dementia præcox.

It is, in fact, in the victims of these two psychoses, feeble-mindedness and dementia præcox, that we find criminals; the latter of which appears to be the criminal type, par excellence. When the two are combined the individual is especially dangerous to society and yet has few or no physical stigmata.

The article is of considerable length and includes a number of cases from the laboratory. It is of interest in showing the relation of these two types to criminality. The feeble-minded are not criminals, though they may be made such by suggestion or environment. Dementia præcox many times marks the amoral individual. Combined either with high intelligence or feeble-mindedness it means danger to society.

It may have been a surprise to some of our readers to notice incidentally the article on relation between crime and mental deficiency, the statement that education cannot do everything; that it cannot raise the average intelligence of the feeble-minded. Nor can it change the amoral condition of dementia præcox so far as is known. We have urged and do urge very strongly the value of preparation or education. But using the words in the original sense that it means to lead out or to develop the capacity of the individual, it is the unfolding of natural ability. It is not the cramming of ability into empty containers.

The factor of capacity enters into the problem, so many are not capable of assimilating four years of high school and from four to seven years of college work. An additional defect is that many a good mechanic has been spoiled by an effort to make a professional man out of him. We have noticed this several times. It is only that which is not only studied but digested and thoroughly assimilated which becomes profitable. This does not mean that we decry education. Quite the reverse. We need trained men and women. We do not even assert that the man who is capable of great intellectual development is more necessary to society than the good mechanic. The past two years we have seen the mechanic drawing by far the larger pay. Social investigations as well as criminal court records show many a boy who takes a marked interest in machinery of all kinds but very little interest in books. With proper attention he develops into a very useful member of society. The greater objection to much educational work has been the effort to force all into the same mold. It has become so much so that the demand is not for intelligence or achievement so much as it is for the serving of so many years in some institution of learning, so-called. Now, we have the most profound respect and insist upon the great value of the study of the classics, but not everyone can fully assimilate and appreciate classical literature. Latin and Greek, as well as modern languages, make for a much broader outlook in life, and a saner view on many moral questions. But not every person is a good linguist. We are glad, therefore, to see vocational guidance being recognized as a vital part of education, but we do not want to see it carried to the point where everyone must take a course of manual training. There are differences in individuals. That which society and the church desires is that the natural capacity of everyone be unfolded and developed to the point of greatest efficiency and then that efficiency used for the common cause.

As there are recognized from five to ten different divisions of mental deficiency, there is also as great a difference between normal persons, as numerous differences of normal mentality on the question alone of capacity.

Schools have been organized for backward children, but not yet for those of more active mentality.

Again we would urge the broadest possible education which to the particular individual is possible and of that character for which he or she is best fitted.

SELLING OUR BIRTHRIGHT

CAN WE AS SAINTS SELL OUR BIRTHRIGHT OR INHERITANCE FOR "ONE MORSEL OF MEAT" OR "RED POTTAGE?"

Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord; looking diligently lest any man fail of the grace of God; lest any root of bitterness springing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled; lest there be any fornicator, or profane person, as Esau, who for one morsel of meat sold his birthright. For ye know how that afterward, when he would have inherited the blessing, he was rejected: for he found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears.—Hebrews 12: 14-17.

In this scripture we find the apostle referring to Esau, the brother of Jacob, who sold his birthright for a morsel of meat. The apostle refers to this character to present a lesson to the Saints, and advises that they be diligent lest any root of bitterness springing up, trouble them, and there be such a profane person as Esau, in the church, who would sell or exchange his birthright to satisfy his appetite or passions.

ESAU

In reference to Genesis 5: 27-34, we learn that Esau was a cunning hunter, or what we might call a sportsman, delighting in this fascinating sport. He had indulged until he became excessively hungry; until his desires to satisfy his natural animal appetite took first place in his mind. That at the time the desires to partake of that which was offered him as a temptation, he wanted it so much that he failed to realize the value of that which he possessed, which he must forfeit if his desires were supplied. And he cried out: "What profit shall this birthright be to me?" And after he takes the morsel of meat, he "rose up, and went his way: thus Esau despised his birthright."

We do not care to argue the fairness of the exchange or the righteousness of his tempter. The facts are, Esau cared less for his inheritance than he cared for the morsel of meat that momentarily satisfied his desires. The animal passion made its demands. It was satisfied at the sacrifice of his birthright.

The apostle informs us that afterward, when he would have inherited, when he realized the extent of his loss, he then seeks to repent. When he sought it carefully with tears, a mess of red pottage was of very little value. What was "sod pottage" or "lentiles" compared with such a rich heritage as was his? Reason was appealing to conscience; tears were but the outward expression of a sorrowing soul, blighted by the ravages of selfish passion, that know not the value of a rich heritage.

THE LESSON APPLIED

First, in order to apply this lesson to the church, what is a birthright or inheritance?

Birthright. Any right or privilege to which a person is entitled by birth. (Webster.)

Inheritance. To receive or take by birth, a permanent or valuable possession or blessing; to take by descent; to succeed as an heir. (Webster.)

We know how this applies in temporal affairs. The possessions of parents, all they have to give to their offspring, goes to their children as the legal heirs by law. Such privileges are by their favor, because we are their offspring, born into their family.

THE BIRTHRIGHT OF SAINTS

Have we a birthright as children of God? Are we born into his family?

As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name: which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.—John 1: 12, 13.

This is in harmony with the language of Jesus as he converses with the rulers of the Jews.

Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God. . . . How can a man be born when he is old? . . . Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit.—John 3: 3-6.

We are born again as children into the everlasting kingdom of God. As children in the family of God, we are the sons and daughters of God. "We are his offspring," "begotten through the gospel." "According to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled." "Being born again not of corruptible seed, but incorruptible, by the word of God. . . . And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you." "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." "As many as are led by the Spirit of God they are the Sons of God." "Whereby we cry Abba [or] Father." "Our Father who art in heaven."

INHERITANCE OF SAINTS

"And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be glorified together." A joint heir with our elder brother, Jesus Christ. That is, we hold joint heirship, in joy together, all that our heavenly Father possesses, all that is his to give, is ours by inheritance, as his children.

Well could our beloved apostle ask us to consider, "What manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." We can join our praises with the Apostle Paul, in "giving thanks unto the Father which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the Saints in light." "Translated into the kingdom of his dear Son." "Redeemed through his blood even the forgiveness of sin." "In whom also we have obtained an inheritance." "Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will." "To the praise of the glory of his grace."

WE SHOULD KNOW WHAT WE INHERIT

In order that we may not esteem lightly our inheritance, that we may not exchange our birthright, for a mess of red pottage, we must consider if our birthright is of any profit to us. Lest afterward, when we would inherit the blessing, we find no place for repentance, though we seek it carefully with tears. If we know what we really possess as an inheritance, how great its value, we are not so apt to let animal passion, or appetite, or desire blind us to make an exchange for something that may momentarily satisfy our desires, but really in and of itself has little or no value, and that may have a blighting effect upon our lives.

No good thing is withheld from us, but we must obey the rules of order in our Father's house. The apostle desired "that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto us the spirit of wisdom. That the eyes of our understanding may be enlightened, that we may know what is the hope of his calling, and what is the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the Saints," "and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to usward."

Having been enlightened, and having tasted of the heavenly gift, and made partakers of the spirit of our adoption, having tasted of the good promises of our Father, and having experienced the great powers of the world to come, we are then held accountable for the disposal of our heirship. After the free gift of our Father's love has been known by us, and we do not value the gift, and prefer a mess of red pottage to satisfy our ungoverned passion, we become a fornicator, or a profane person, and though we afterwards awaken to the fact, we have been cheated out of our inheritance. After disease, poverty, and misery bears down heavily upon our sin-cursed soul, we find the wages of sin is death. The gift of God, eternal life, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. And we, as one of old, may cry out, Send Lazarus to warn my five brethren not to come where I am; for I am tormented in this flame.

OUR BIRTHRIGHT

As a child born into the family of our parents, our first heritage is love. Love of our parents; love of our brothers and sisters; all the necessities of life are freely supplied, the convenience of the home, the pleasures of the home, the privileges of growth and attainment. Virtue, peace, health, refinement; all things necessary for our development are ours to use in order that we may become men worthy of respect, place, honor, and power in this world.

SPIRITUAL BIRTHRIGHT AS SAINTS

The spiritual birthright is similar. We, as newborn children in our heavenly Father's family, inherit the love of our heavenly Parent, the love of God. We also inherit the love of our brothers and sisters in the family. Even the angels of heaven rejoice over our birth, and welcome us to their angelic ministering. All the necessities of our new life are supplied—the privilege of growth and attainment; the virtue, peace, and refinement. All things are prepared for us; the free gift of our Father's love, that we may come to the fullness of the stature of our elder brother, Jesus, our joint heir; that we may be with him where he is; live and reign with him as kings and priests, where there is no sorrow, pain, or distress; where there is nothing to harm or molest; where there shall be no more war, no more death; where the king of peace shall reign as Lord of lords, and King of kings. If children, then heirs—heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ. No wonder they shall "sing a new song," "saying thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation."

True, we must take advantage of the gracious supply of spiritual food provided for us. We must eat and assimilate the food provided for us by our Father, refuse to partake of that which is harmful to us, and study to make ourselves approved to him who begot us unto himself. We are to have a lively hope; grow in grace and in the knowledge of God. By so doing, we will be neither barren nor unfruitful. We will then be worthy to receive the gift, otherwise what will it profit if a gift be bestowed upon us and we receive not the gift?

THE RED POTTAGE

Can we exchange or sell our birthright for a morsel of meat? Yes, some have; others may. For what do we trade? For that which we have desires, or appetite, lust for, or want. We may become a cunning hunter, overindulge in fascinating sport, until we become exceedingly hungry, overanxious to satisfy our desires; tempted, as we say, until we cry out, "What profit shall this birthright be to me?" So we take the morsel of meat, rise up and go on our way. And then we often say, "Give me some more of that same red pottage," until we finally despise our birthright.

We may never have expected to go so far when we first took the morsel of meat. We may never have expected our name to be changed to "Edom" when we allowed evil thoughts to remain in our minds; when we indulged in worldly pleasures, covetousness, jealousy, or backbiting. We never thought we would become "Edom" when we sucked our first cigarette, took our first drink, or looked lustfully upon the beautiful form of a woman. We never dreamed that our bodies would sometime be full of disease and we be found lying in the gutter, deadened to all the higher and better things of life.

No, we never thought we were trading our birthright for indifference, when we had our little church quarrel, and thereafter refused to attend the house of worship; became fretful, and complained at our brothers and sisters, because they did not treat us as we thought they should have done, or failed to live up to their high standard of living.

We do not expect to exchange our birthright for a verbal controversy in a business meeting, when our faces become flushed with heated passion, and we sometimes leave the room in a rage. Oh, we know too much about our Father's house for that? We know the church is true, but we cannot go to church so long as Brother or Sister So and So is there. It would be wrong to think we would trade our birthright for such a mess of red pottage as that. But many as honest a soul as you have done that very thing.

We never expect to become indifferent to the Sunday school, the Religio, and the prayer meeting, the first time we attend the dance, or have the little quarrel with loved ones at home. We love our inheritance too much for an exchange like that. We will still love the gospel, even though we do spend our Sundays out joy riding, or at the beach, or visiting some of our neighbors who do not go to church. We will help them to see the light. We will not despise our birthright, even though we do want some more of that same red pottage. Our names will not be changed to "Edom" because of that; and then, it is nobody's business whether we go to church or not. We can be as good and stay at home as that bunch is that goes to church; and then they are so slow and poky anyway; its about the same old bunch there all the time, and one hears about the same thing every time one goes; one knows that anyway, so what's the use?

Their faith in their heavenly Father giving them the inheritance of a Saint finally dwindled, and they often say, in action if not in words, "I am faint," and "what profit will this birthright be to me?" and "the roots of bitterness are springing up to trouble us, and thereby many become defiled." We cease to look diligently lest we fail of the grace (or favor) of God.

Let no man deceive you with vain words; for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience.

For this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolator, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God.

Be not ye therefore partakers with them. . . . But . . . walk as children of light; . . . proving what is acceptable unto the Lord. And have no fellowship with unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them.

Consider well the value of your inheritance, and do not sell it for "a mess of red pottage."

Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God.

ISAIAH 29:11

There are such varying opinions relative to the meaning of this scripture, that it may not be amiss to attempt an analysis, though it be but adding one more "meaning."

"And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed."

It is to be noted that the word vision scopes the world or all, and that the vision or spiritual insight of the people parallels the condition of "words" within a sealed book. Such words could not be seen, much less read, without the seal being broken. There are two ways in which the sealing may occur—the book be actually sealed by any one of different processes or the words so completely engulfed in an unknown language as to require some process of interpretation before such words could be read. The latter seems to be the condition of the "words" here mentioned, for it will be noted that the language analysis clearly implies that these words were to be delivered to the "learned," as the pronoun "which" can find its antecedent only in the noun "words." It is also implied that the "men" instrumental in delivering these words were to request a reading of the language, as the tense is immediately changed to the singular in the use of the pronoun "it."

The pretext clearly shows that the event was to be in a time when those who had inhabited Jerusalem (see verse 1) were to have neither prophets, rulers, nor seers, so that such event could only happen in a time when these people were in such a condition, hence could not have taken place when either one or all of these conditions existed and would or could not result until after the dispersion from Jerusalem.

The prophet suddenly breaks from the entire pretexts which clearly environ the inhabitants of Ariel only—that is those who at the time of the prophecy inhabited the holy city, and their direct descendants—and as suddenly scopes the condition of “all.”

The vision, or the spiritual ability to discern, was to be as obscure as the words of a sealed book. Proverbs 29:18 says: “Where there is no vision [spiritual insight], the people perish [turn to spiritual darkness]: but he that keepeth the law, happy is he.” It is a historical fact so well known it seems almost needless to recite, that such a condition caused the dispersion of Ariel’s inhabitants.

If it be not straining the analysis beyond its privileges, it might be well to say that one claiming to have a vision through angelic visitation also claimed to have been privileged to receive this “book” and from it translate by Urim and Thummim (“light and perfection”), a portion of the characters he had previously transcribed. This transcription and translation he put into the hands of one Martin Harris, who in turn took them to New York City, and there presented them to a “learned” man, Professor Charles Anthon, with a request that he determine the genuineness of such translation. Mr. Harris claimed that the professor issued a certificate favorable to their being genuine, but later requested its return and tore it in pieces on learning as to the claim that an angel had to do with the delivery of the plates from which the characters had been transcribed!

Be this as it may, it is yet singular that Messrs. Smith and Harris, “men,” did deliver “the words of a book” to a “learned” man, “saying, Read this, I pray thee,” and more singular still that had they been seeking to perpetrate a fraud they would thus have sought the easiest means possible for its betrayal. Then it all took place at a time, 1829, when the very conditions here depicted existed. Ariel had lost her prophets, rulers, and seers. They were “covered” ’neath the accumulated ruins of ages and ages of spiritual darkness, brought about by apostate conditions. In fact the “dark ages” had intervened and left in their wake a perished people—a people strangers to heavenly visions and knowing naught of the light resultant therefrom.

What wonder that the world thus benighted had need of a recurrence of angelic visitation and men to write and speak as they were moved by the Holy Ghost?

Immediately in connection with the appearance of this “book that is sealed,” God was to proceed to do “a marvelous work and a wonder,” and Amos 3:7 says, “Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets.” In Ezra 2:68 we are told that the people “should not eat of the most holy things, till there stood up a priest with Urim and Thummim.” Such being a necessity then would it not be so in any age and more especially so at a time when God was to proceed to do a marvelous work?

Mr. Smith claimed that it was by these instruments that he was thus permitted to translate as well as to have marvelous manifestations, so that from whatever angle one may look, there is no other analysis that fits into a revelation of fulfillment of Isaiah 29:11 as that which scopes the great latter-day restoration.

A much lengthier analysis might well be indulged, but this article has already gone far beyond the limits of its anticipated length.

WORLDLY AMUSEMENTS, OR SPIRITUAL EDUCATION

Very frequently we hear our older members lamenting the indifference and lack of interest in the regular church services on the part of our young members, and often the question is raised and seriously discussed; “What shall we do for our young?” And it is a serious question indeed, and should be considered with all earnestness, and with prayer to God for divine guidance. The great trouble with the young members many times, it seems, is that a desire for the pleasures and amusements of the world have such an influence over them as to make them forgetful and negligent of the solemn obligations taken by them in their baptismal covenant.

Some of our brethren have thought that the best and only way to hold them to the church is to furnish in the church and among ourselves such amusements and pleasures as young people desire. And this method has at times been tried, and is still being tried. But, after all, when we pause to make a serious consideration, may we not be pardoned if we ask, “Is it not a compromise with influences that we must finally overcome before we can attain perfection? Have the results been satisfactory? If so, why the repeated question of anxiety: “How can we save our young people to the church?” Can we afford to take chances on a compromise? Have you observed that the provision of worldly amusements, and neglecting the necessary spiritual teaching and discipline creates an increased desire for more and greater pleasures of the same sort?

We often hear it said, “Oh, well, you cannot put old heads on young shoulders;" and "If the church does not furnish amusements and recreation for our young they will go out in the world to find it." And sometimes this sentiment prevails and our loving, indulgent older members cater to the worldly inclinations of the youthful members who receive the provisions made for them with a kind of "Thank-you-but-you-ought-to-do-more" feeling, and still the anxious inquiry continues: "How can we interest our young people in the church?" Does it not indicate that the provision of that which gives amusement or even recreation, of itself, is not sufficient to hold them to the church work? Possibly we have put things in the wrong place. What is it that we, all of us, really desire for our children in the church? That they, as well as adult members, so conform to the law of life, given by our Redeemer, that will develop a character acceptable to God, is it not? Very well. Then why not place the teaching of spiritual duties first, and above all else? Why not teach them to read God's word, pray often and attend all the regular services of the church first, then let the matter of proper amusement and recreation be considered afterwards?

If this is done, it will be discovered that desire for amusement and temporal pleasures will be materially decreased.

If I wanted my son to become an efficient farmer, I would not train him as a baseball expert as the chief means to that end; if I desired my daughter to become a pianist, I would not advise her to join a girls' club, and give special attention to basket ball playing with the hope of achieving my purpose. But I would place them under such environment and tutorship as would interest and instruct them in that which I desire them to learn. So if we desire our children to be interested in the gospel, and this great latter-day work, we must, first of all, teach them the practical truths of the gospel faithfully, earnestly, persistently, and prayerfully; not in theory only, but by actual example and practice. And this cannot be done by pulpit teaching alone; neither alone by the teaching of the Sunday school and Religio. But the officers of the branches, in visiting the members, as the law directs, should carefully search to get in touch with all, especially the young, continually impressing upon their minds their great duties to God and each other in all love and kindness. A kindly sympathetic exhortation with an earnest humble prayer in the home of the member, goes a long way toward holding their fidelity to the work.

Parents, also, if they are really interested in keeping their children in the faith, will daily remind them of their duty, to always and at all times honor their religion and the profession they have made.

If they will do this, praying in their homes daily before and with their children, they will not need to worry because of lack of organizations, circles, clubs, etc., sufficient to keep them interested. Let us do our spiritual duty to our children first. Are we having prayer with our children? Do we take time and draw them aside and talk to them about the goodness of God and our duty to love him with all the heart, soul, and strength? Do we in cases of extreme anxiety, take son and daughter alone and kneel down with them in secret prayer? Do we have the reading of God's word in our homes daily? Do we teach our children to pray as God has told us in Doctrine and Covenants 68:4? If so, we find that we are under no necessity to be looking for the establishment of physical recreation or temporal amusements as the great means of keeping them in the church. Let these things always be of secondary importance.

All true, real, and healthful recreation and amusement should come to us as a privilege, by reason of our relationship with God and Jesus Christ, and not as a necessity to perpetuate that relationship. If spirituality is provided first, we can utilize the physical and temporal part to the honor and glory of our God, when properly provided. Temporal amusements are all right in their places, but can never supplant the spiritual education that is due our young people from the home, the church, and her auxiliaries.

God has given one law, only one, for the guidance of his Saints—whether they be old or young. Those who are old enough to understand and obey the gospel are old enough to live by its precepts—under proper influences. Proper influences, of course, are gospel influences.

Physical recreation benefits, principally, the physical organism; but alone is not sufficient for our spiritual natures. If we make the mistake of putting it foremost, failure and disaster will come as the result. We might have a gymnasium in every branch, but if that would be the greatest thing our young folks could see about the church they would soon tire of that which, in love and anxiety, was provided, and seek out in the world for something more gay and elaborate, and where a larger range of acquaintances may be formed.

No one, old or young, can become a good spiritual member of the church by simply attending parties, fetes, games. Neither can any Saint perform his full duty by attending the Sunday school alone, the Religio alone, nor the Woman's Auxiliary alone. And this is not speaking disparagingly of any of these organizations, for they are helps to the great work of the church. Loyalty to any of these exclusively will not perform our duty to the church. They may be, and are, helps to the church, but cannot be substituted for the church work. He who engages in any of the auxiliary movements with an eye single to the glory of God, will be the better qualified for, and the more faithful in, the regular church work. But he who engages in them with the object of avoiding the more devotional responsibility of church service, will gradually decrease in spirituality and true devotion, and increase in love of the world and worldly things.

The word of God says: "Bodily exercise profiteth little; but godliness is profitable unto all things." (1 Timothy 4: 8.)

Paul does not entirely discredit physical exercise, but gives us to understand there is something more profitable.

"And they shall teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord."—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.

Please note the language: "Teach their children to pray;" not merely teach them that they should pray. Our duty is not fulfilled until our children are praying children.

This same revelation gives reproof because there were "idlers among them and their children were growing up in wickedness."

In Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6, Frederick G. Williams was condemned because he "had not brought his children up in light and truth." Personally, the writer is in favor of everything in the way of legitimate recreation for the Saints, young and old, and would be glad to see a playground, gymnasium, and swimming pool, in every large branch, but is quite sure that those who look upon provisions of this kind as a sure means of holding members to the faith will be disappointed. If there has not been a sufficient awakening of the soul to the great love of God and his Son for us, and of the duty, beauty, privileges, and benefits of living "by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth God," and there is no desire for communion with God, all the available amusements and recreations in the world will not suffice to keep us in line.

What we need is the hope and sure anchorage referred to by Paul in Hebrews 6: 18, 19. "That by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us: which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil."

And again: "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ." (Colossians 2: 8.)

The churches of the world have been trying for some years to gain members, and retain those they already have, by the provision of amusements and recreations as special inducements; and the results are apparent. They are farther than ever from the word of God. We might be able to profit by observation, instead of trying the experiment ourselves.

There is sufficient in the gospel of Jesus Christ to interest and hold, in the service of God, all who have been converted to God, and have "tasted of the good word of God," and have been made partakers of the heavenly gift. If this fails, then nothing else can supplant it.

"IN THE DARK AND CLOUDY DAY"

(Reprinted from October, 1917, Autumn Leaves. Written for that magazine by request, by H. A. Stebbins.)

Sixty-five years ago last week, namely on June 12 and 13, 1852, there was held in a little grove in the township of Newark, Rock County, Wisconsin, a small gathering of Latter Day Saints from the different factions that had risen since the scattering from Nauvoo in 1844-45. This meeting, as it proved, was really the nucleus or beginning of the Reorganized Church.

Although I was not present on that occasion, yet I saw the place a few weeks later, when, as a boy in my ninth year, I visited a cousin of mine whose parents lived very near the little room that was cut out among the brush and saplings in which to hold the conference. My mother lived about two miles west of the spot.

I had never before seen such a place, one cut out in a grove, and the sight of it is indelibly fixed in my mind. From memory I believe that the space for seats was about one fifth as large as this room (the Lamoni upper auditorium) but by the accounts of that conference which I afterward read or heard related, it was abundant for all who gathered there.

The chief men present, who had followed the different leaders, were Zenos H. Gurley, sr., J. W. Briggs, John Harrington, David Powell, and some others. All told, they were very few. E. C. Briggs was a youth of seventeen years. Whether any of the Newkirks, Wildermuths, Clines, Godfreys, Harlöws, and others who were active a year later were present in 1852 I do not know.

Brother Gurley related that some months before the Newark meeting, while he was reading the Book of Covenants and meditating about it, the Spirit of the Lord spoke to him saying, "Rise up, cast off all that claim to be prophets, and go forth and preach the gospel, and say that God will raise up a prophet." He said that this was spoken to him on two occasions.

Also about January, 1852, by the gift of tongues and interpretation, Julia Gurley, the young daughter of Z. H. Gurley, had declared that in the seed of Joseph Smith would the leadership of the church be found.

This idea met with unanimous approval in the little assembly of June, 1852, and with solemn earnestness they adopted certain resolutions. By one of these the claims of Brigham Young, J. J. Strang, J. C. Brewster, William Smith, etc., were cast off forever, and by another they upheld the looked-for legal heir until he should come.

Years after that meeting, about 1865, I learned from another man that he was present on June 13, but not as a member or minister. Hardly able to ride there, he sat in his wagon outside the inclosure through one meeting. He had been previously convinced in his heart that the latter-day message was from heaven, but, as he told me, he rebelled against obeying it. Then he was taken very sick and saw that he was near his end. While in this low condition Samuel Powers was told that the natural result would be death, but that if he would humble himself, accept the gospel, and covenant to labor in it, his life would be spared. Therefore he subjected his will to God's will and was baptized and ordained. Later he became an apostle and labored in the cause till his death in 1873.

Samuel Powers was the first man of the church that I heard preach, by chance almost immediately after I came from the army. While there I had prayed to the Lord many times, and I had promised him that if I lived to return home I would seek to learn his will, and if he would make it plain, I would obey it. I then supposed that all the churches were right, yet I had an indistinct idea that special truth could be made known to me, by which I would be satisfied. When I heard Brother Powers preach I thought it a foolish delusion, but the more I examined it the more I became convinced that if there was any certain truth in religion this was it.

Thus at my second visit from Illinois I was baptized and confirmed by Brother Powers. He also ordained me an elder, July 20, 1865. I was sick and also poor, but I used to go from my mother's home in Illinois about twice a year to visit my uncle and Brother Powers in Wisconsin. I would induce him to sit up late and talk of the gospel, and would go with him to the field and in doing his chores that I might ask him a long list of questions which I had written down in studying at home. You see the church had no tracts then, no notebook, no compendiums, nothing to aid us, where now we have hundreds of helps. And when I could I used to go with him to Porter, and Janesville, and to Voree, and to Burlington when he went to preach, that I might learn all I could.

After the conference of June, 1852, the idea of Joseph the son of Joseph coming to lead the church increased among the Saints in southern Wisconsin and northern Illinois, and nearly all of the body that was called the Yellowstone Branch of the Strangite people accepted it, and they became the first branch in the Reorganized Church. And at the conference held there in April, 1853, the Reorganization was begun. Seven apostles and twenty-one of the seventy were ordained; also a stake presidency. That branch was near Blanchardsville, Lafayette County, Wisconsin.

Another man who was being prepared by the Lord's Spirit to take up the work was W. W. Blair. He was a merchant at Paw Paw village, east of Amboy, Illinois. In 1850 he had accepted the latter-day work and was baptized by one of the professed leaders. He received great witness that what he had done was accepted of God, yet the leader was found to be vile. Therefore Brother and Sister Blair left him. They could not take up with Young, or Strang, or Brewster, and they resolved to serve God in their own home and wait to see what might come.

Finally, in 1856, there came to their place two young men, E. C. Briggs, then twenty-one years old, and Samuel H. Gurley, bringing word that the Wisconsin Saints had been shown who would be the leader, by the Lord's direction. Brother Blair said to them that to him "it sounded like idle tales." But he took the men in and they together examined the books and prayed for light, and suddenly it came to Brother Blair. He afterward said, "My entire being was filled with the power of the Holy Spirit, even the same that bore witness to me after baptism." So he took up the gospel work as a high priest and then as an apostle, and did a great work from then on; from 1873 as one of the first presidency.

Along in 1859 the Spirit taught faithful seekers that in the coming year "Young Joseph," as he was commonly spoken of then, would come to the church and preside over it. I have read some of the old letters written in 1859, which stated how plainly the Holy Spirit had revealed it, and so it came to pass indeed. For in April, 1860, at Amboy, Illinois, Joseph was present and stated how he had been led and guided by the Lord to accept the charge. And he was there accepted and ordained and thenceforth went on as its appointed leader until his death in December, 1914.

I will add, in writing, that from 1865 onward, I traveled by team, or by horse and buggy many hundred miles in ministry work with Samuel Powers, Zenos H. Gurley, sr., Joseph Smith, W. W. Blair, C. H. Jones, I. L. Rogers, David Dancer, E. C. Briggs, Charles Williams, John Landers, and others, over the prairies of southern Wisconsin and northern Illinois. There were twelve branches, namely, Plano, Sandwich, Fox River, Amboy, Mission, Braidwood, Piper City, Batavia, Boone County, Pecatonica, Janesville, and Burlington, the last two in Wisconsin. During six years, summer and winter, I traveled among them as district president. For nearly four thousand miles in those years I drove the well-known "gospel horse," Joseph's intelligent, even-tempered mare named "Tatty," famed in song and story. She considered even a light touch of the whip an insult, for she was always willing to go, and a finger pointed at the whip was all the hint she needed to be off, without a jump or a jolt. But she held no grudges and was always gentle; she was a lady indeed. She liked the smell of apples in my pocket and knew she would have a share, as she nosed around for them.

In the houses of the above-named brethren I had my home, either for days or months, as the case might be, and I can say that nothing dishonest or unworthy was advised or taught by them. I hold in loving memory the most of the events of those years.

I also visited "Mother Emma" at Plano and Nauvoo, in the latter place when she lived in that part of the "Nauvoo House," that was built up in 1870-71 for her and her husband, Major Bidamon. She said that she knew that her first husband, Joseph Smith, did not have any other wife but her, and that he did not teach or practice polygamy, whatever others may have done who went wrong.

Will also say that while I was president of the Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin district, 1870-76, I did the first preaching in Chicago that was done there by our elders, namely in 1874, in a parlor of the Crossman House at 63 West Lake Street, and in a suburb named Forest Hill, Seventy-seventh Street, near Western Avenue. Mr. Crossman's mother-in-law, Sister Marcia Gilbert, was an old-time Saint, and they welcomed me there when I went to the city. In April, 1878, Brethren W. H. Kelley and Columbus Scott spoke in a hall on West Lake, and Brother M. H. Forscutt began in January, 1880. He was the first to continue because the church supported the effort financially and he remained. Finally the work in Chicago prospered and became strong and firm, as it is now.

I will add another instance of the Lord's providential care over the Reorganized Church in those days. About 1860 Brother James Blakeslee lived at Batavia, Illinois, thirty miles west of Chicago, twenty-two miles from Plano. One night a voice spoke to him saying, "Go and preach my gospel at Kewanee, for I have much people there." Brother Blakeslee did not know that there was such a place, but at the railway station next day he learned it was a coal-mining town away down toward Burlington, and he made ready to go. On his arrival there he found a large number of those who had been baptized at Dudley, England, and in that vicinity, by the Utah elders. They had come to the coal mines in America, but knew nothing of the few members of the Reorganized Church, or about the new work.

The second part of this providential dealing is that the night before Brother Blakeslee reached there one of those Saints had this dream: He saw himself standing at the railway station when a train came in, and he saw a man get off to whom his attention was especially directed. Then a voice spoke to him and said, "That is a servant of God, and he is coming to preach my gospel here. Go to the train tomorrow and take him to your home and care for him." He did next day as he had been instructed. He recognized Brother Blakeslee exactly as seen in the dream, and there and then began a work which reaches to this day and which will continue to the millennium. Many of the Kewanee people and their descendants live in Lamoni, and some in other places, such as the families of Thomas France, James Allen, William Shakespeare, Benjamin Sumption, John Whitehouse, Robert Garland, Thomas Charles, Joseph Boswell, William Grist, James Hart, John D. Jones, and others whose names do not now come to my memory. And I believe that the majority of them have proved faithful to their profession in Christ.

Now if an instance exactly like this was found in the Bible it would be glorified as a remarkable evidence of divine instruction and providential watch-care by the Lord over his work and people. And it is none the less so now, and such instances should comfort and strengthen all true Saints. It is a proof that God changes not in his way of conducting his work. As he was anciently so he is to-day and forever.

To the foregoing items about the beginning of the Reorganized Church in Wisconsin, I desire to give account of a pleasant and valuable experience that I had in that same region in the fall of 1874.

In his biography, Brother W. W. Blair mentions a trip we made together, at that time, to Janesville, Wisconsin, and vicinity to meet the Adventist, Mr. Sheldon. After this man, with various excuses, backed out of the expected debate, Brother Blair preached two nights and then left for his home at Sandwich, Illinois, to do his writing, going by way of Burlington, Wisconsin, and Chicago. I remained to preach in the Grange Hall, near Brother O. N. Dutton's and continued ten or twelve nights. From there I was engaged to go to Burlington Branch, in Racine County. The Saints of that branch lived in the county, around about old Voree, once so noted in the history of the Strangite faction, along in the fifties.

The former president of that branch, Brother John Gaylord had died, and as district president, (Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin) I was expected and was thus far on my way to attend to the putting in place of a new presiding officer. When Brother Blair departed from Janesville, I said to him that when he met with the Saints of that branch on Sunday, if he felt the Holy Spirit guiding him to nominate a man for president of the branch, to do so, as I could not come for two weeks, at least. If he did not, then I would attend to it on my arrival. As he was busy after his return home he did not write me whether he had done the work or not. However, when near the time for me to go, Brother Dutton said he would take me with a team, the thirty-five miles to Voree, and thus we went. While on the road there came into my mind suddenly as if some person spoke these words, "Did Brother Blair attend to the matter of placing a president over the branch?" Then immediately a voice spoke to my spirit saying these words: "Let David Montgomery be ordained to the priest's office and be placed in charge of the branch."

Now I knew Brother Montgomery as a noble and worthy man, a safe man, but not gifted in speech. On our arrival among the Saints, I asked if Brother Blair had not acted in putting a man in and was told that he had not felt to do so but had left it for me to do. And I learned that Brother Montgomery was the man the Saints wanted to preside over them, but that they considered that he should be ordained an elder. To this, his wife, who was not a member of the church, had objected. She said that if David was ordained an elder, probably he would sometime be sent away from his family to preach. She was not willing for this, although her hospitality and good deeds to the ministry and the Saints were as great as were manifested by the members of the church. But she was entirely willing for him to be ordained a priest and had so stated.

Therefore, when the Saints met, I related what had been spoken to me as instruction from the Lord. It was so acted upon and Brother Montgomery was ordained a priest and placed as president of the branch. It proved to be a good selection.

At many times have I thought about that experience. If I had found that Brother Blair had already seen to the matter, then the instruction that came to me would have been in vain. But the message was too clear and too divine to be a failure, and the Lord had thus guided me when I knew not what would be required of me, and he made plain to the branch and to me, when we needed light, just what course to pursue. And I have been thankful every time I have thought about it through the years that have elapsed, that he did make it plain.

Although a small matter, yet it shows clearly the Lord's purpose to call his servants according to his wisdom and his supervising power.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

NEW LIGHTS ON CHILDHOOD

Although the study of childhood had much of its early development in this country, it has had a remarkable growth elsewhere, and we must reluctantly admit that the Germans are now leading in that work. In recent years, some of the most important and practical knowledge of this subject of many ramifications has been presented to the world in German publications.

THE FIRST THREE YEARS

First comes the great new stress laid upon the first three years of life. Not only almost all the nervous and mental diseases, but the very hygienic constitution of the child have their foundation in that period. Although the events during these tender years will for the most part be lost to adult memory, they dominate all the future life of the child and determine his character. In part, physicians do not feel that they can accurately diagnose a case that has grave nervous complications until they know the main facts of the patient's early life. Even before birth, a nervous mother by the very tempo of her movements stamps upon the plastic organism of her unborn child her own neurotic disposition.

Second. Children of that tender age generally fall into two classes: the aggressive and self-willed, who assert themselves and who generally manage to attain their wishes; and the more passive and quiet, who are obedient and docile. By no means do boys always belong to the aggressive class, and girls to the passive class. That early tendency in the child is of vital significance to his later destiny and career; much can be done to correct either extreme in the earliest months of the child's life, and it should be remembered that in this respect character is pretty well formed by the fourth year. Both the aggressive and the passive types are necessary for society, and they both have their dangers. The self-assertive child may become a bully, and finally a criminal; or, if his aggressiveness leads him in the right direction, he may become a pioneer, a discoverer, or a leader of mankind. The receptive child may become flaccid, inert, dependent, prone to vice—a henchman or a victim of the other type; or he may become flaccid, inert, dependent, prone to vice thought of matter that the progressive or radical type brings into the world.

Third. To foster in children the idea that a boy is better than a girl is to exert a vicious but very subtle influence over them. Nowadays, a small boy regards as a dire indignity even the mere threat that as punishment for some misdeed he must wear a girl's dress or long hair. And a recent census taken in the United States shows that more than one third of the schoolgirls wished they had been boys. Whatever our views about the social or political status of the sexes, incalculable harm is done by fostering that idea of the superiority of the boy. He comes to swagger or to lord it over his sister, until she feels that she really is inferior to him.

Fourth. Every child, like every other human being, wishes to succeed, to excel, to get ahead of others; that, indeed, sums up the whole momentum of the will to live. It makes the child wish to be adult and to mimic the grown-ups he knows; it instills in him the fear of being inferior. The child is always subconsciously asking himself, "Do I look worse or better than others? Am I stronger or weaker, cleverer or more stupid, larger or smaller? Am I more favored or less favored by those about me?" In their weakness, size, and ignorance, children are inferior to adults. But a newly revealed and grave danger that works countless tragedies in life is that a child's feeling of inferiority, which perhaps is founded on some physical peculiarity or mental trait, should become dominant, and make him feel in his very earliest years that he is below par, and that he is condemned to a low-level existence, without friendship, appreciation, respect, admiration, or love. Thus the chronic teaser or hectorer may do a great mischief to the tender soul of a young child.

Fifth. Besides those traits, which have loomed up with such new significance for after life, we are now realizing the immense significance of childish daydreams, reveries, and wishes. Nearly every dream of adults, when analyzed, proves to be in large part a realization of long-forgotten childish wishes or fancies. When we sleep, we slough off very many of our later acquisitions, and retaining a few of them, lapse back to a childish type of mentation that lives in a world of ideals and imagination. Many delusions of insane persons can be traced back to the same source, and their very railings are performed in childish fantasies and daydreams. In sleep and in reverie we turn our backs upon present-day reality and the hard logic of the actual world about us, and retreat toward infancy, which is protected, isolated, and cared for.

THE CHILD AND HIS PARENT

Sixth. Every child passes through a stage during which his father or mother—perhaps especially the parent of the opposite sex—is his supreme ideal. The parent is large, strong, wise, and fearless. In short the attitude that the child in very tender years takes toward the parent is the attitude he will later take toward God. As a rule, it is only when the child reaches school age that he realizes that others may be greater, better, or more powerful than his parents. Sometimes, it is true, the boy is inclined to rival and even to resist his father. The study of childhood shows conclusively that the child's attitude toward the parent determines in general his attitude toward authority in later life. So by insisting too much upon obedience we make henchmen, and it is safe to say that all who revolt against tyrants in adult life have in infancy revolted against their parents, or those in authority. Thus in the first three years of the child's life his parents are predetermining his attitude toward society. The love, reverence, and sense of dependence that the young child feels toward his mother are the same that he will later feel toward a divine parent or the world itself.

IMPORTANCE OF INFANCY

Seventh. Scores of concrete cases show that under normal conditions a child takes the parent of the opposite sex as the pattern for his aftermate. Young men who in their childhood were on intimate terms with good mothers are likely to marry girls who resemble the mother in form, habit, or type of mind; if they choose a girl who differs too much from the type of the mother, conjugal harmony is usually less secure. The same, too, is true of the relation of girls to their fathers. If the intimacy between son and mother or daughter and father is too close or too greatly prolonged, the danger arises that the son or daughter will not be happy except with a mate who is made almost exactly in the image of the favored parent. Thus nature decrees that even parental love may be excessive.

Eighth. Thus we see a tendency to-day to ascribe even greater importance to infancy than either students of childhood or doctors have hitherto dreamed of. For the new students of the problems of childhood the early stages of life are of enormous significance. Not only does every adult dream realize some childish wish that has been repressed in waking or maturing life, but every kind of insanity, delusion, or illusion in an adult is nothing except a revival and amplification of infantile components or determinants. We might say that every break on our part with present reality is a retreat toward the state of infancy. People who are only a little ill often show such traits. When we are tired, too, we slip back and give the child in us a chance. Art, poetry, myth, religion, are all in more or less degree merely realizations in adult life of childish fantasies and desires. We are told that it is well to keep the way of retreat open, because thus the spontaneities of life are maintained unrepressed. To move freely up and down the life line rests us, and uncaps the evolutionary momentum that impels us on through life.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

LEXINGTON, MISSOURI.

Dear Sisters: The request has gone out that words of experience and observation be sent from all parts of the world to our column editor, that through the medium of the HERALD we might all touch hand and heart.

We feel that at no time in world history has woman's field and labor been so diversified, or has her influence been more needed.

We women in Lexington are attempting to help each other, and I believe we are succeeding. We have a relief and service department, and a class studying child training.

The year has been strenuous with substituting women workers for men gone to war, and assisting in time of the influenza epidemic. The relief and service workers have been most active. We have done a great deal of actual labor, but by this we get very near to hearts, thereby working a gradual reform where needed.

There is so much of good to be accomplished at this period of time, that no effort should seem too great for us. For the small branches I consider "child training," "Bible research," and "public speaking" the most practical of studies. However, the last-mentioned is very difficult for those who have had less than a grammar grade education.

I send greetings to all workers and urge those who do not come under that class to get into line, and "work while it is yet called day."
LOLA A. JOHNSON.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI, February 15, 1919.

Dear Members of the Auxiliary: In response to the request of our president, I will tell you what the Evergreen Circle of Orioles have been doing. We have seventeen members resident here, with the names of six others who have moved away carried on our honorary list. We had three meetings in January, the first of which was held at the Saints' Home. This was partly a business session, new names being placed upon our record, credits awarded, etc. Fifteen dollars were placed in our Christmas offering fund, and we decided to take up the public speaking course of the Auxiliary extension work.

Our second meeting, at the home of Neva Scott, was spent in having a good social time, eating apples, etc. Some good hard work was put in upon the program which our circle gave at the Religio the following Friday evening. Our third meeting was again at the home, Sister Krahl meeting with us, and giving us our first lesson in public speaking. The girls are very much interested in this work, and we feel that if we study it well, and try to apply it, we will sometime be able to get upon our feet, think, and express ourselves creditably.

We like the Oriole work and the social activities it affords. The sisters, too, enjoy the regular meetings of the Auxiliary proper. Many of the late meetings have been very interesting and instructive. Reports from the Bible research, and the other departments of the work indicate that all are enthused, and deriving benefit from the association, all trying to make our community a brighter and better place in which to live.
CORA BURROUGHS.

CALUMET, OKLAHOMA.

Dear Sisters of the Auxiliary: I am surely interested in the women's work of this church. Our own local has been too busy with Red Cross work to do much else for a time, but we hope soon to take up more regular work of our own. It is charitable work, and we are told that if we have not charity, we are profited nothing.

I was very much interested in the picture panels sent me to the Eagle City reunion. We had a lecture on them one afternoon, before a large attendance of sisters. We gained so much information about different things, that I would like to have them again, when we might have a special meeting with our Lamanite sisters. It would be such a help to them. As soon as an infant is born to them, they wrap it up in a blanket, and take a heavy cord and wind around and around that poor child, from shoulders to feet, and only untie it twice a day.

Nearly all the Indian babies have large heads and small bodies, due to the way they are kept wrapped for seven or eight months. They have but little use of themselves. The more educated Indians are abandoning that custom, but they are all certainly in need of much instruction in different lines. The panel pictures furnished us by the Auxiliary would be of great value in teaching the Indians, as they learn more quickly by observation than any other way.

Some day I might write a letter about the Indians and their conditions, for I have seen a great deal of them.
ANNA SANDERS.

Notes on Current Events

The cleansing fires set by war burn on. National prohibition came more easily than any of us dared hope. The serious problem of enforcing the will of the majority is before the Nation. Honest doubters would do well to read an article in Literary Digest for February 1, entitled, "Probable effects of Nation-wide prohibition." There are statistics to show the waste to the Nation from the liquor business; and the benefits, financial and otherwise, to be derived from prohibition are well stated.

Next comes a renewal of the war on the evil companion of intemperance—social sin and its diseases. The following is an announcement of "Health Sunday":

"HEALTH SUNDAY TO BE OBSERVED IN NATION"

"Ministers in the churches of the Nation will take up the fight against social diseases from their pulpits on Health Sunday, February 23.

"Suggestions have been sent to thousands of ministers in the Nation for a sermon on 'The responsibility of the churches for health and social morals,' to be delivered on Health Sunday. The Government urges each minister to follow up his text by organizing church committees to aid the health officials in the war on venereal diseases; to hold parents' meetings, and to form a civic committee of prominent citizens

Activities in Logan Sunday School

The home of Mr. and Mrs. T. M. Adams, of Logan, was the scene of a pleasant gathering Friday evening, February 14, at which time twenty-two members of the Junior Glee Club were entertained at a Valentine party. Music, games, refreshments, and other sources of entertainment were features of the evening, in addition to the decorations. In addition to Mr. and Mrs. T. M. Adams, and "Mother Adams," Miss Ollie Derry, musical director, Miss Ora Butterworth, Mrs. Robert Whitsitt, and Miss Eva Elefson were among the guests in attendance.

Lincoln's birthday was fittingly observed at the close of the Sunday school, Sunday morning, February 16. George A. Derry gave the biography of Abraham Lincoln; T. M. Adams, "In Memoriam—A. Lincoln"; Frank Hill read the Wilson address on "Abraham Lincoln," and Daniel Whitehead gave patriotic solos. A large picture of Lincoln was artistically draped with flags. The church was also decorated with flags.

Washington's birthday was appropriately observed on Sunday morning, February 23, as follows: "Hail to the day we honor," by the Junior Glee Club, was the opening song of the program. "Important events in Washington's life" was given by Vern Hight, then came the song, "Running through the years," by the junior club, followed by the reading, "Washington," by Gladys Barnum; and afterward the song, "Father of our country." The Glee Club was followed by Abbie Dungan in the reading of "Washington's birthday."

Washington's picture occupied a conspicuous place, and as in the observation of Lincoln's birthday, the church was effectively decorated with flags, banners, shields, and pennants, and the literary and musical features of the programs were entertaining, impressive, instructive, and reflected credit upon those taking part as well as credit upon Mrs. Rose Adams, Mrs. Frank Hill, Miss Ollie Derry, and others working to make the Logan Sunday School a success, and at the same time instilling patriotism and reverence for the day, and the men occupying so exalted a place in history and in the hearts of Americans. The programs were well attended and favorably commented upon by those present.

CHARLES L. CROW.

[Letter to Albert N. Hoxie from France]:

ON ACTIVE SERVICE WITH THE AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCE, January 21, 1919.

Dear Brother Albert: Well, Albert, I am still in France, but in a different part than I was since writing my last letter to you. At that time I was in a replacement camp doing what a soldier should do; that is—drilling, hiking, and so on, but now I am doing what wops are generally hired for in the States. I don't mean to belittle the work any; I merely want to show just what a fellow can do in the army without feeling the least bit of humiliation. At present I am acting in the noble capacity of switch-light tender in a railroad yard. I got promoted a few days ago from an ordinary section hand when I parted company with a lawyer, a real estate broker, an owner of a chain of tailoring shops, a lad who came originally from Warsaw and was studying music in New York, and various other tradesmen and workers of a more or less elevated station in life. So you can see why I say I can do many jobs in the army which in civilian life would rather cause me to lose some pride. It's a great life, if— . Physically I never felt better in my life; spiritually the experience is the most wonderful I have ever had. And right here, Albert, let me say a word about something which I think might interest you. One of the greatest blessings I have ever received was the opportunity you gave me to sit in the bass section of the old Choral Society.<sup>6</sup> Do you know I get a heap of comfort out of singing(?) over to myself the great choruses you put so much life into. I'll start down the road on a march singing some catchy air, popular to-day, and before I know it I won't be singing that at all but one of the first things you taught us to sing: "March on, march on, safe is the pathway before us." I can make the time to suit the cadence we are marching, whether it be the first mile at one hundred and twenty steps to the minute or the last at about ninety. Do you know that "The long, long trail" does not comfort me any more? It rather gets on my nerves. But then I have a better one: "Comfort ye my people" or "Every valley shall be exalted." I can consider them a personal possession almost, because everybody is not acquainted with them.

Sometimes I go along with peace in my soul, humming over one of those gems which I could not banish from my mind even though I wanted to. I'm sure, Albert, I don't want to, for they are to me a source of real enjoyment, and I consider them as a gift from a brother of mine back in Philadelphia, whom I want to thank for giving them to me when sometimes I felt as though I would rather do something else on Saturday nights than come around and receive them. If it will do you any good to know that one who did not at that time realize that he was being done a good turn has come to that realization, I want to let you know about it.

It is hard for me to express accurately just the feeling that these anthems bring to me, but I do know that they have helped me through many a tough hour, and I am sure that some of the other boys have received the same benefits.

Yes, Albert, the snappy popular ones might help some, but as far as I'm concerned, "Pack up your troubles in your old kit bag" doesn't strike the spot like "Be not afraid" from "Elijah." I know you realize this, but I just want to let you know that there are others and that it does not necessarily take one who has devoted a great deal of time to the study of music to get enjoyment out of these old masters. I couldn't tell you what key any of them are written in, but I know their composers had more than an ear for music when they produced them. I also know that there is an itch in my heart to get back and learn some more about them and to learn them from none other than yourself. I say this because I have heard the same things directed by others and have not gotten the same good out of them. I'm not saying this to flatter you, either! It's not natural for me to flatter anyone (ask my wife if you don't believe me) but I do want to tell the real truth. You've helped to do me much good and I want you to know it.

The chaplain back in my old company gave us a Thanksgiving talk, and during it he read a passage of Scripture which I can't remember, but it meant to think of your blessings and then come back and thank your benefactor. He even went so far as to tell us to thank the mess-sergeant for feeding us slum three times a day, and our corporal for giving us extra drilling when we needed it, so why should I not come back and thank one who has given me something worth while. I might add that it was not the chaplain's sermon that sent me back. I just thought of it (the sermon) now. Besides, he even told us to thank the Government for the clothes we wore. I just couldn't do that, because I thought that would have been too big a job. I just thanked them for the part of my underwear I was using. You see I had on a set that was at least three times too large, and I figured it was no fault of mine that I couldn't use the surplus material. (Pause here to light the lamps.)

At this time I am at a seaport town by the name of Nantes, which is about forty-five miles from Saint Nazaire, one of the American embarkation points. I have been gradually getting closer to that place, and am beginning to get expectations—if you know what I mean. I haven't been here so awfully long, but if I ever come back I don't think I'll ever want to come here again. I could say lots of nice things about beautiful scenery in France, but then I never make it a practice to spread scandal, and besides, we still have a censor. I can't help it if they censor our mail, but wait—I'll tell you lots of things about La Belle France, especially her seaports.

How are your musical affairs going these days? Are you still connected with the Community Singers? I surely wish I could be there right now, even though I did only occupy a seat between two chairs on the back row. Drop me a line, Albert, and let me know all about yourself. Give my regards to your wife and the kiddies, and lots of the same to yourself. I'll close now, again saying, "You have done me much good!"

Your brother,

ARCHIE.

Editors Herald: For the benefit of friends at home and abroad, I would like to invade the columns of the HERALD to let them know some of my doings of late.

While the above-named ship was refitting recently at Chatham Dockyard, in Kent, I had the opportunity of paying week-end visits to Saints located in Birmingham, Leicester, London, and Enfield. I was well received by everyone, and enjoyed much needed experience and benefit by occupying the stand. My last visit during my stay in England was to Enfield, on Sunday, October 27. While waiting for my train at Chatham Station, I got a paper and read of the high mortality amongst the population of Enfield. I was tempted to abandon the trip, but went all the same, and found the Saints very heavily hit by the Spanish influenza; Brother Judd and family among others. I visited some with him and tried to comfort and cheer by prayer and administration.

After leaving England on November 9 (two days before the armistice was signed), we quite unexpectedly found ourselves in New York. I located the Saints in Brooklyn on Sunday morning, December 8, and had the privilege of occupying at this session, by the invitation of Brother Rick; at Religio the same evening, and on Monday night. Also enjoyed midweek prayer and testimony meeting on Wednesday. Everyone was very nice and kind, and I enjoyed my visit very much. Here, also, I was pleased to meet Brother Johnson of Toronto and Vancouver.

Arrived at Kingston, Jamaica, on Christmas Eve, and was invited to speak at the Sailors' Rest (British and Foreign Missions to Seamen), and did so, and continued each of the four nights of our stay. A goodly number of our own men were present on each occasion, as well as Catholics, Anglicans, Presbyterians, Wesleyans, Quakers, and Salvationists. On Christmas night, a Reverend Watler, Presbyterian minister of Kingston, was the chairman, and I heard afterwards that he had taken notes while I was speaking on, "Whom do men say that I, the Son of Man, am?"

On the last night of my stay I had taken tea with one of the Quaker families, and exchanged views on the Revelations, and then proceeded to the "Rest" to fulfill advertised engagement. I was assailed afterwards by a soldier, on the question of baptism; for, professing Christianity, he didn't think it was essential to salvation, etc. I think that there were others who had been discomfited by hearing "strange doctrines," including a Roman Catholic civilian, who had tried to prevent the meetings by hilarious ridicule.

What struck me most about the native population was the increasing poverty of a large percentage. Such things as flour, meat, sugar, and dried fruits were almost unobtainable—bacon, three shillings per pound—eggs, four pence each—biscuits, six shillings and six pence per five-pound box—and tea, four shillings and six pence per pound. Then the wages for female labor is two shillings and six pence, or sixty cents, per week for the vast majority; with the deplorable result of the streets being filled with young girls, forced to sell their bodies in order to buy some of the bare necessities of life.

And yet they seemed to enjoy the Christmas season to the fullest extent of their excitable, and in some cases, superstitious natures; for on Christmas they crowded the main streets until the early hours of the morning, firing crackers and making an awful din by blowing penny trumpets, just like a lot of school children.

Very little work was done on Christmas Day and Boxing Day. All those who could went to sports, fetes, races, and picnics. The relief occasioned by the cessation of hostilities seems to have contributed a great deal to their holiday mood.

We arrived at Colon, December 30, and on the 31st—the last day of the memorable year in which the great European war ended—the old Berwick entered the Panama Canal, and in eight hours had crossed from the Atlantic into the Pacific—the first large British warship to have this experience.

The scenery on either side is generally new and picturesque, while the sensation of being lifted up on three successive stages in the first series of locks, some twenty odd feet in each case, in a very few moments, and being dropped again twice in the last two locks for a similar depth, in conjunction with being towed by three electric cars on each side, and to watch them climb up over the slopes like caterpillars, at an incline of about thirty-five degrees, all contributed to reveal to us the marvelous wonders of modern engineering skill.

Steaming southward, en route for Callao, Peru, we soon approached the "equatorial line," and on December 2, at one p. m., old Father Neptune appeared on board and challenged the captain, who came down from the bridge to welcome him and all his royal court. Arrived at Callao, Peru, on January 6, and during our stay here we had an opportunity of visiting Lima, the capital, founded by Francisco Pizarro, in 1531, after conquering the Incas; his mortal remains I saw in a glass-paneled coffin, deposited in one of the chapels dedicated to him, where he is worshiped as a Saint, in the massive cathedral, Plaza de la Armees. The altar in this chapel is ornamented with a covering of platinum, which the caretaker said was procured by the Incas, whether by way of penance for his assassination or not, in 1543, I could not understand. Also in the museum there are other evidences of the Incas' learning and civilization, in the shape of weapons, cooking and domestic articles, and mummified bodies discovered in the Valle de Acari, and of the Tiahuanaco period. (This may interest students of the Book of Mormon. To me it is a speaking witness.)

On Sunday, the 13th, the city of Lima was deserted. The populace flocked en masse to the plaza de toros, to witness a bull fight. A large number of our men went, and could not understand why I refused to countenance such a thing with my presence. Their verdict was, "A disgusting, degrading, and cruel spectacle." A few turned sick and had to leave. Six bulls and four horses were killed that afternoon.

Friday, the 24th, we returned from a trip to the Andes—the most remarkable mountain railway journey, and certainly the highest in the world. We did not have time to go up to Monte Meiggs, 17,575 feet above sea level, but got as far as Rio Blanco, nearly 12,000 feet up. As one contemplated these mighty hills, as silent geographical sentinels, guarding their past history and secrets, saw the ruined villages on the hillsides and valleys, the peasantry of Indian ancestry, and the freight cars laden with copper, silver, gold, and nitrate, it was borne on my mind more forcibly than ever that the blessings upon the head of Joseph did indeed extend to the bounds of the everlasting hills, and included the rich treasures of the ancient mountains.

Next week we are bound for Valparaiso. We hope this letter may be of interest to some.

Asking a continued interest in the prayers of the Saints, I remain,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

WILLIAM MOORE.

NIAGARA FALLS, NEW YORK, February 20, 1919.

Editors Herald: I wrote you from Wellsville, New York, last October. The influenza had closed all of the churches, but Brother Potter thought we might venture to hold meetings in his house, as that is the only place we have, or had up to that time. The influenza did not bother us much, and we had better audiences than usual. We held several services, then went to Greenwood, stopping for a day at Brother Elry Updyke's. Brother Updyke's is half way between Andover and Greenwood, and Greenwood at the present time seems to be about nine miles from nowhere. However, this is only what the people think who don't know how to get there. The nice little railroad that used to be there is used no more, and Greenwood, nestling as it does between beautiful mountains with silvery streams running through the valley, cut off as it is from the outside world, seems a place for romance and peace. The influenza got there before we did, just the same, and we could not hold any meetings.

I received word to go to Rochester, so I left George F. at Greenwood and went to Hammondsport to call on Brother Lee Lewis and his family. The "family" kept the writer interested while he was there, and we discussed everything from the journey of President Wilson to France to psychology. Long life to the Lewis family! Well, I received word not to come to Rochester on account of the influenza. Back to Greenwood, but same conditions. George had been visiting the Saints, and doing what he could. One always finds a good home and a cordial welcome at Brother and Sister Weeks'. Back to Wellsville, held a few services with good interest, and then George "got it." I continued to hold services until the "boy" was able to travel, and then we went home.

While in Wellsville, we had two houses opened for the preaching of the word, and the people seemed to be much interested in what we believe. November 24 found me in Fall River where I preached for the Saints. The next Sunday I went to Brockton. Brockton is a nice city, and what we would call lively. They have a nice branch there, and a fine young priesthood, that is, a fine lot of young men in the priesthood. It seems to me that there is a good opportunity for work there. Brother Ensign Baker is the president of the branch, and does all he can for the work. Oh, for a host of young consecrated men that are not too proud to fight, or too lazy to fight, the good fight of faith! Men who are willing to fit themselves for the battle, men who are not afraid to be spiritual, who think as much and more of God than they do of the almighty dollar. Men filled with a divine purpose, whose tongues have been touched with a coal from the altar of God. Men, a host of them, who, waking or sleeping, at home or abroad, on the land or the sea, are on fire with the life and character of Jesus Christ and his work, and who cannot rest until others know of it.

While in Brockton I met Sister Reynolds, who lives at East Bridgewater, a few miles from Brockton. She was very anxious to have an elder come to her place and hold some meetings. It was somewhat out of my field, so in my weekly letter to the Presidency I mentioned the request, and Brother U. W. Greene said, "Go ahead, if you can do any good," so I held forth there for two weeks, and felt well in presenting the word. I am sure some good was done. It is like "blazing" a trail through the forest sometimes, but somebody has to make the trail, or those that try to find their way would be lost.

Just before I held these services I got the influenza. Now, I don't believe as a general thing in the fashions of the day, but I remember some of the instructions I received at General Conference, "that we ought not to be odd or unlike others in dress or anything else." Now, everybody I saw asked me if I had had the "flu" yet. I began to feel as though I was out of fashion, and thought I must be missing something. But I did not miss it—no, it came swiftly and surely. I don't regret it, however, because I had been troubled by being deaf on one side for some time, but I lost both the "flu" and the deafness at the same time. Brother Gates of Providence administered to me.

While in Providence I had the pleasure of listening to Brother Dwyer in several of his lectures. January 15 found me in Sherrill in time to attend the prayer meeting. I remained at Sherrill until the 23d, and then went to Fulton. The Saints in Sherrill have decided to build a church, and I trust they may be helped in doing so. I found George F. holding forth at Fulton, and doing what he could for the Saints and any strangers that might become interested in the work. I was very glad to meet the Saints in Fulton, as I had not met them before, although I have been in this field for two years. Have been too busy to get there. We held a number of services while I was there, and I enjoyed my stay there very much.

From Fulton I went to Buffalo and preached for them three times; then I came here. Brother Bishop had been holding services here, and lecturing to the Saints on psychology and other subjects. At Brother Bishop's request, and in sympathy with the branch president, we have been trying to reach the people and help the Saints. I don't know what the result will be, but am hopeful. While in Providence, Frederick Alma asked me to write an original song for the Religio. I did not have time then, but wrote this afterwards:

HAIL RELIGIO

(Tune: "What a gathering there will be," No. 38 in "Zion's Praises.")

We have come to join together in the worship of our God,
We have come to sing the praises of our King—of our King,
And we know that he will meet us in the study of his word,
And accept the gifts and talents that we bring.

Chorus:

Then hail, Re-lig-io,
Then hail to Z-R-L-S, when we meet with one another, what a blessing of the Lord you've been to me—been to me.
Then hail, Re-lig-io,
Then hail to Z-R-L-S, when we meet with one another, may the blessing of our Lord remain with thee.

Here we bid farewell to pleasures of a kind that do not last,
And we seek the truest pleasures of the soul—of the soul.
And we'll lift on high our banner and we'll nail it to the mast,
For we're sure that vict'ry 'round us then will roll.

God is calling now for soldiers that are not afraid to fight,
And to kill within themselves the curse of sin—curse of sin.

Will you join the ranks to-day, my friend, and seek the blessed light,

And be ready when the Master says, "Come in"?

Then in Zion we shall surely be the people of the Lord,
And for this we'll work and live and fight and pray—fight and pray.

And with faith in God and Jesus Christ we'll heed his blessed word,

And remember all his goodness night and day.

Yours in bonds,

GEORGE W. ROBLEY.

SNOWER, MICHIGAN, February 23, 1919.

Editors Herald: A letter in the HERALD for February 19 expresses my thoughts in many ways. In speaking of education, and especially with regard to the education of our ministry, I can say that my sympathies, also, have been aroused many times along this line.

I believe that the majority of the church membership are among the uneducated, or at most, a limited education. How are we going to reach them with a right understanding of their duty, if we come to them with high-flown language which cannot be understood by them without a dictionary? Many of them are so occupied in trying to obtain a livelihood that they would not have time to study out the meaning.

When we start to school, if the teacher puts us in an algebra or Latin class, how far would we advance? But we are put in the alphabet class, and are advanced as we study and improve. So in gospel work. If one wishes his hearers to understand, they must be taught in language they can understand while the thought is before them; for if they tried to search out the meaning afterwards, the full meaning would be lost to them.

I have read, or tried to read, some articles in our church papers, which undoubtedly were good and instructive, but so far as my education was concerned, they were practically useless to me. I have heard many of the Saints express the same thought. Now of what value is such reading to the majority of the Saints?

I feel as Paul expressed himself when speaking of prophesying and speaking in tongues. (1 Corinthians 14:19.) I would rather speak five words with an understanding, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue. So in trying to teach the uneducated, language not easily understood is like Greek and Latin to them.

I find that when Alma went to preach to the Zoramites (Alma 16:12-34), and was rejected by the more well-to-do class, he turned to the poor, humble ones, and taught them in a language simple enough for anyone to understand. We know if he had not, it would not have appealed to them as it did.

I am not against education, and long to see the day when there will be no poor among us, and then we all will become better educated, which I believe is what God intends. But under present conditions, let us be careful that we do not place the gospel in a condition so only a few educated ones can understand, and the majority are left out because of lack of understanding and instruction.

Where would Eastern Michigan be to-day, had it not been for Elder J. J. Cornish, and others of the pioneers who were uneducated? I think the educated ones now would not have such easy work had it not been for them. Some say that that was all right for them in their day, but what are we going to do with the many who obeyed the gospel then, and need instruction now to prepare for Zionic conditions, if it is taught to them in language not easily understood?

My earnest desire and prayer to God is that we all become more in harmony with God's work. I long to see the day when Zion will be redeemed and the pure in heart will be gathered together as God designs. But, oh, there is such a great work ere that can be fully accomplished.

MRS. CLARA SHEFFER.

SWANSON, SASKATCHEWAN, February 15, 1919.

Editors Herald: I have read the letters in the HERALD from the brothers and sisters, telling of their experiences with regard to the recent epidemic. I love to read these letters of testimony—how God has been merciful to his children, and blessed them in these the latter days.

Some of the Saints in our branch have had the influenza, but so far God has spared us, and our meetings are in progress once again.

We greatly enjoyed a visit from our district president, Brother W. Cornish, and trust that the efforts he put forth here will bear fruit.

I have been in this great latter-day gospel four years, and I feel to add my testimony with the many others given, of God's love and mercy to me. In these days of great trials and sickness he has spared me through it all. When we look around us and see the many homes that have been made sad, we feel that we have much to be thankful for, as our own trials are mere trifles compared with those of others.

I hope and pray that I may remain faithful in the trying days to come, and ask that the Saints will pray for me.

"Let us pray for one another,
For the day is fading fast;
And the night is growing darker,
While the scourge goes flaming past."

In gospel bonds,

MARION BOWERMAN.

DAYTON, OHIO, February 21, 1919.

Editors Herald: All the excuse I have to make for not contributing to your esteemed paper for nearly two years is, I simply did not set myself to the task.

My opinion, which is based upon my twenty-five years as an enthusiastic reader of the HERALD, is that it is the best educator we have in the church; and no one, especially no member of the priesthood, can be fully alive to the work and not read it.

With the fast and momentous developments of the times, one can hardly get accustomed to one change until he is dazed by another more revolutionary in its character.

We are constantly reminded of the statement of Jesus Christ, in cataloguing the great events of the last days. He said, "perplexity of nations." Nations have never been so perplexed as now. The after-war problems are more serious than those in actual war time.

During war between England and France, an armistice was signed, and after desperate efforts to make permanent peace, the nations went to war again, and one of the leading statesmen leaned contentedly back in his chair, exclaiming: "Thank God, we are comfortably at war again." We hope this will not be true in the present difficulties. But it suggests the idea that it is easier to urge war than to make peace. It seems to be a mad race between unreasoning bolshevism and the peace conference, and the side that will win is the side that offers and fills the hungry stomachs first.

President Wilson, in cabling back from Europe, urged that $100,000,000 be appropriated for starving millions of Europe. He said, "Bolshevism is rapidly marching and spreading all over Europe, and cannot be stopped by the sword, but by bread." And in this all his colleagues agreed.

How plain it is to be seen that the time is upon us when those who do not want to take up this sword must flee to Zion for safety; for that will be the only people not at war. A place of refuge from the "wreck of matter and crush of worlds." We thank God every day for the hope of Zion—the only real solution for all the social, industrial, and economic dreams—when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

What are we doing individually to bring about that glorious event—the coming of the "Prince of peace"? True and lasting peace can only be established by a change of heart in the individual, and not a change of armament of the nations.

We wish, ere we close, to tell you of the things we are doing here at this time. The work of this district is making encouraging strides. In my travels among the branches I can see a more consecrated desire to become a real factor in the working out of the great problems before us. It has become a fixed habit with many of the Saints of this district to encourage the missionary with the material support.

This has been the most busy winter of my life. Have preached seventy-four sermons in sixty-three days, and have held eleven other services. Held some good meetings at Shawnee. There are bright prospects for an ingathering there soon. Also had some fine meetings at Nelsonville, and baptized two. Held several series of meetings at Wellston. Those branches are very much alive, and are blessed with good, humble, and faithful officers, so sadly lacking in many places. Held a few meetings at Springfield, and found a little band of faithful Saints there, longing for the hope of Israel. They are hopeful of having a branch there.

Came to Dayton, the city of airplanes, about a week ago. All day long the buzzing can be heard overhead, and casting the eye toward the clouds, one beholds, only for a moment—then out of sight, outstretched wings, with a human being in it, gliding so swiftly and smoothly through space. Then we remember the statement of the prophet: "Knowledge shall increase, and men shall run to and fro." And so we take another glance and see men running "to and fro," on the earth, under the earth, on the sea, under the sea, and in the air.

Did not Tennyson have prophetic foresight when giving utterance to these words:

"For I dipt into the future, far as human eye could see,
Saw the vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be;
Saw the heavens filled with commerce, argosies of magic sails,
Pilots of the purple twilight dropping down with costly bales.
Heard the heavens filled with shouting, and there rained a ghastly dew
From the nations' airy navies, grappling in the central blue."

Who can look at those "magic sails" "in the central blue," then turn their eyes to European battlefields and behold those "airy navies," as they "rained a ghastly dew" of high explosives, and not see that "God does rule in the affairs of men"?

Back to earth again! And permit me to take up the trail and tell you, last night I organized a very strong and promising branch in this beautiful city. There are about thirty members to begin with, others to be baptized within a week, and plans laid for effectual work. Brother Floyd Rockwell, an excellent young man of talent, is elder in charge, with Brethren Rebert and Warne as priests; Brother Watkins, teacher; and Franklin Reiske, deacon. They had maintained a live mission here for several years. We are expecting big things from the Dayton Branch.

I go to Middletown—a good, live branch—for over Sunday; and from there to McDermet, to hold a few meetings and baptize some. Then to our conference at Columbus—the State capital.

I cannot close this letter without telling the dear Saints of Jonesport, Maine, who have so endeared themselves to me in four years of most pleasant association and surroundings, I still remember you. And how my heart pains, and my sympathy flows for those who have been visited by the recent plague. Should I be permitted to return and visit you, many smiling and familiar faces will be missed.

Am feeling well in the work, and more like pushing it to final victory than ever.

F. J. EBELING.

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA, February 21, 1919.

Editors Herald: In the issue of February 12, one of your writers has asked to hear from the church members with regard to a mission paper—the great need—entitled, "The Restorer."

I feel like my feeble words are but a drop in the ocean. However, just to give a thought of approval, I venture to say, the magnitude of the field of such a work, if properly managed, is past speculation. I believe such a periodical would meet divine approval, and would meet also the extreme disapproval of Satanic powers.

One way to get such a work before the world would be for all Saints who can to subscribe for as many yearly subscriptions as they could afford, and have them sent directly from the publisher to neighbors or friends. I venture to say that money thus spent will never be missed. We are blessed spiritually for every good deed done for the good of others.

Such a project will meet the approval of many whose hearts are in the work of warning their neighbor.

Yours in gospel bonds,

2941 Franklin Boulevard.

FLORENCE N. McDONALD.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, February 22, 1919.

Editors Herald: The Nauvoo District conference was held at Burlington, February 15 and 16, with preliminary program Friday evening, the 14th, in charge of Sunday school and Religio executive. This program consisted of four talks interspersed by musical numbers, the themes being as follows: "Play instincts," by Sister Margaret Bishop, "Excesses to be avoided," by Elder James McKiernan, "Enthusiasm life," by Elder P. R. Burton, and "Use and value of illustrations," by Brother James McIntire.

The conference was significant because of being the first held in the district under the coordinating plan, which, so far as we have heard, proved acceptable to the body as a whole.

Prayer service was held at 8 a. m. Saturday; conference business session convened at 10 a. m., and both Sunday school and Religio business was disposed of Saturday afternoon, at which time we were glad to have in attendance a larger number of Sunday school and Religio workers than could have attended prior to that session. The nominations of the coordinating committee were well received, and assisted materially in the dispatch of business. One of the features referred to the committee was the nomination of a district leader for the boy movement.

The reunion committee met immediately following the business session, formulating definite plans for the reunion, which it is now expected will be held August 22 to 31 inclusive, probably at Montrose, Iowa, directly across the river from historic Nauvoo. We expect to make this a feature, and trust that many who have not visited the place may attend.

Saturday evening, Brother P. R. Burton was the speaker, on "These signs shall follow."

Sunday the order of services was as follows: Priesthood meeting at 8.30, Sunday school at 9.30, in charge of district and local officers, preaching at 11 by Bishop George P. Lambert, prayer and sacrament service at 2 p. m. in charge of district presidency, Religio at 6.15 in charge of district and local officers, followed by preaching by C. E. Willey. An attendance of over 100 at Sunday school and over 80 at Religio betokened good interest in auxiliary work.

The attendance of visitors (about 35) was only half that of last year, due we believe in part to a sudden change and inclemency of weather, and in part also to the recent epidemic.

Among "those present," and especially welcome after his absence of nearly a year, was Sergeant Henry F. Broman, recently returned from France, and released at Camp Dodge within the week preceding conference. A rousing welcome was given Brother Broman at his home Monday evening, the 17th, by some 30 or 40 of the members of the Religio and friends.

CORRESPONDENT.

LAKE CHARLES, LOUISIANA, February 22, 1919.

Editors Herald: I take pleasure in writing these few lines, as I wish to let those that have written me know that I appreciate their letters and would write to them, but we are very needy, so I just try to keep expenses down, and this I find impossible to do.

I wish we were located somewhere else, where the boys could get better wages. They work for only twenty-five per month, and board. Their work is farm work, and it takes over half to keep them in clothing and shoes. This leaves only a very little for the rest.

Now if this letter is published, I hope that some one will write me and say that they have need of a couple of good young men, either on a farm, or at some other trade. One of them can run a tractor, or a Studebaker, Overland, or Ford car, as well as a gasoline engine.

The place I should like to locate, on account of my health, is San Antonio, Texas, as here my health is very poor. My lungs are affected, and the climate here is very bad. I would leave at once if it were possible to sell or trade a little property I have here. I wish to leave soon as I believe I would fare so much better at San Antonio.

Should any of the San Antonio Saints read this, I would be very glad to hear from them in regard to a location there. I cannot take the church papers, so please address me at 402 Bilbo Street, Lake Charles, Louisiana.

Hoping that I may receive good news,

Your sister,

MRS. JOSIE HELMS.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLAHOMA, February 24, 1919.

Editors Herald: The genial brethren of the Oklahoma City church appointed as a committee to wait upon the visitors coming to attend the conventions and conference, scheduled to commence February 14, met us at the depot in Oklahoma City, but old Father Winter came also and contributed his share to the entertaining of the guests by furnishing us all with an abundant supply of snow and rain. The Religio convention was preceded by a brief prayer service, and was very well attended considering the unfavorable weather conditions. The Religio convention met at ten o'clock in the morning, and by 11 o'clock had all of its business properly disposed of, including the election of officers. Frank F. Wipper was reelected district president of the Religio. The Sunday school convention met at 11 o'clock, or immediately following the Religio, and also succeeded in disposing of all its business within one hour according to the program. Frederick W. Kueffer was reelected district superintendent.

The afternoon session was devoted to institute work in which the Religio and Sunday school workers participated jointly. After an interesting session of two hours we adjourned to meet again at half past seven for another joint institute session. This session was unusually well attended, and the program was liberally interspersed with entertaining numbers of a very edifying character, contributed by the young people from different parts of the Central Oklahoma District. Social work was given more than the ordinary amount of attention, with very profitable results. The effort of our young people at this time was supplemented with an abundant degree of the Holy Spirit, and its mellowing and enlightening rays were felt by all in attendance at this session. It surely was an effort that was well worth the while, and was a testimony to many of us that efforts of this kind were pleasing in the sight of our Father. We look to see more social work done among our young people.

Another conspicuous factor that contributed to the success of our conventions was the fact that the business, which formerly consumed a great deal of time, the disposition of which was frequently accompanied by irritating experiences, was disposed of at these conventions with system and dispatch, permitting more time for educational purposes.

The district conference, presided over by Brother Edward Rannie, convened at 10 o'clock Saturday morning. Bishop James F. Keir, of Independence, Missouri, arrived in time to be of service to the members in session in the morning, by counseling them on a difficult problem under discussion. The sunny countenance of Brother Keir was again in evidence during the afternoon session while he was in charge of a "round table" answering questions relating to the financial law. Brother Rannie read a very interesting paper on "Education as it is related to the redemption of Zion."

A large congregation greeted the speaker at the evening service. Bishop Keir delivered a very interesting discourse on "Stewardships." The Sunday school session on the following morning was conducted somewhat on the order of an institute meeting. At the eleven o'clock service on Sunday morning Bishop Keir delivered a powerful sermon on the spiritual side of the temporal law. At noon a very satisfying luncheon was served at the church by the sisters of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Our prayer and testimony service in the afternoon was indeed one of our "Times of refreshing." The peace of the Master prevailed, and many beautiful prayers were offered, and quite a number of excellent testimonies were borne.

Brother Frank F. Wipper was the speaker at the closing session of the conference. His subject was, "Sir, we would see Jesus." A large congregation was present.

The matter relating to time and place of next district conference was left in the hands of the district Presidency.

A special series of meetings is being held at present in the Oklahoma City Branch, conducted by Brother Wipper, of Independence, Missouri. Since Friday evening illustrated lectures on church history have been presented to interested audiences. It has been arranged to continue these special services for another week.

Notice of Appointment of District Chorister

To Whom Concerned: Elder Thomas R. Seaton, 5 Ross Street, Toronto, Ontario, has been recommended by the district conference of the Toronto District for appointment as chorister of said district.

We hereby take pleasure in publishing this, his appointment, and heartily recommend Brother Seaton to the musical forces of that district, urging them to cooperate with him in every way for the accomplishment of his work.

Respectfully,

ALBERT N. HOXIE,
General Church Chorister.

Approved by the Presidency:
FREDERICK M. SMITH.

BUTTERWORTH.—Bernard Everett, son of Elmer R. and Hazel Butterworth, was born near Dow City, Iowa, February 17, 1918, and died at the parental home, at Dow City, February 22, 1919, aged one year and five days. Services were conducted at the Saints' church, Dow City, Iowa. Sermon by Charles E. Harpe. Interment in the Dow City Cemetery.

HAEFER.—Clarence Lee, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry M. Haefler, died near Lamoni, Iowa, February 22, aged 5 years, 10 months, and 14 days. As influenza was the cause of the boy's death, no gathering was had at the house, only prayer was offered by H. A. Stebbins, but at the Lille Cemetery, by request, he gave a brief talk upon the certainty of the life beyond, and the need to prepare for it. Texts used were John 12: 26; John 17: 24; and John 8: 21.

LEGGOTT.—Mary Helen, wife of Elder G. W. Leggott, of Manchester, England, was born at Holbeck, Leeds, England. Baptized by G. T. Griffiths, about 23 years ago. Died December 2, 1918, at Manchester, aged 57 years. Funeral in charge of Thomas Taylor and John W. Taylor. Sermon by Thomas Taylor. Burial at Saint Cross's Church, Clayton, Manchester. Four daughters have preceded her. Her husband, son, and 3 daughters are left to mourn.

Prices of meals at the dining hall, and the rate for rooms will be announced in our next week's issue.

THE MARCH AUTUMN LEAVES

The leading article in this number is a classic by Augustine Dwyer on "My ideal of a preacher in the Church of Jesus Christ." In it he refers to a contribution from his pen appearing in the January number on "The art of clothing the heavenly message, and says: "I was not satisfied with the article because, owing to the many subjects covered on the preparation for the sublime office of preaching the gospel, its length overstepped the limits of space usually accorded a magazine article and prevented me from expressing my opinion of what I would term an ideal preacher in the church." This article is really a sequel to the former one and is a most important addition to the helpful literature of the church.

The entire number is inspiring and educational. The fourth number of "Book of Mormon evidences," is especially good; the "Call at evening" is finding a most enthusiastic welcome, and "A strange experience," by H. J. Davison, is an unusual account of a missionary experience. Single copies 15 cents; yearly subscriptions $1.25.

COURSE IN PUBLIC SPEAKING

A few weeks ago a notice appeared in the HERALD defining the work of the Woman's Auxiliary and outlining the course in public speaking. Inadvertently the name of Sister J. A. Gardner was given as the one to whom inquirers should write. This was a mistake. All such communications should be addressed to Mrs. Dora Glines, Independence, Missouri. Parties having written to Sister Gardner and receiving no reply will please write to Sister Glines. We are gratified with the response which has come as a result of our former notice. The enrollment in the department is increasing rapidly. We urge all parties who desire to improve their manner of address to avail themselves of this opportunity. T. W. Williams, 109, Fermanagh Avenue, Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

SIXTY-FOUR QUESTIONS ANSWERED

We have recently seen a copy of a four-page leaflet used by Elder Daniel Macgregor in his series of services at Flint, Michigan, where he is now concluding his sixth week with great crowds. The title of the leaflet is Sixty-Four Questions, which explains that many questions covering the greatest problems of Biblical lore and coming events are answered and explained. At the bottom of the first page is a blank for filling in the sermon subject for the evening, and a statement reading: "The audience is extended the privilege of selecting any of the questions herein listed, to be answered at the close of the evening lecture." The questions are numbered, and answered by scriptural citations.

"Will some of the Saints in this locality please call on or write to Mr. and Mrs. Howard Van Camp, Third Street, Midland, Ontario?" is the request of the sister mentioned.

Sister Cora B. Hart, chorister for the Eastern Iowa District, reports spending several days in Waterloo in the interests of the choir movement, and with apparently good results. She says there is good material there, and some of them are taking vocal instruction.

FROM THE DES MOINES DISTRICT DISPATCH

At the recent district conference of the Des Moines District a surprise program was carried out in honor of Elder O. Salisbury, who has moved to Council Bluffs and consequently could no longer serve as president of the district. Some personal speeches were made regarding the esteem in which he is held in the district, and he was presented with a copy of the Inspired Translation of the Bible from the priesthood of the district. Appropriate resolutions of appreciation were unanimously adopted. President Elbert A. Smith was in attendance at the conference and in charge of this program. Elder H. H. Hand, of Perry, is now serving as president of the district and editor of The Dispatch. The latter continues to be interesting and profitable.

WHO SHALL PRESIDE?

In the Rules of Order and Debate, paragraph 6, we read:

A branch is said to be fully organized when it has a presiding elder, a priest, a teacher, and a deacon. If necessity requires, two or more priests and teachers and deacons, or two or more of either of the officers of these three grades may be chosen.

We also note in the Rules of Order and Debate, section 161:

The officers of the church recognized by these meetings as having a right to preside, are: A presiding elder who has been regularly chosen by vote of the branch; a priest, or priests, also regularly chosen by vote of the branch; a teacher, or teachers, also regularly chosen by vote of the branch; a deacon, or deacons, also regularly chosen by vote of the branch; a secretary or clerk of the branch, also regularly chosen by vote of the branch.

In the absence of the presiding elder of the branch the priest or priests chosen by the branch or either of them shall have the right to preside, whatever other elders or priests may be present in such meeting; in the absence of the presiding elder and the priest or priests, the teacher or teachers, or either of them shall have the right to preside; in the absence of the presiding elder, the priest or priests, and the teacher or teachers, the deacon or deacons, or either of them, shall have the right to preside; the priority of right of associate priests, teachers, and deacons to be determined by seniority of office in the branch should question arise in regard to presidency; the right to act for the branch as its officers having been previously determined by the vote of the branch.

This last was suspended by action of the last General Conference, because of the difficulties of administration existing in stakes.

There has been some discussion concerning it, and the question naturally arises, What is the law? Both that which is directly expressed, and that which may be reasonably inferred.

In the first place none would take issue with the first part of paragraph 6, that a branch should have an elder, a priest, a teacher, and a deacon. These offices are so different, yet each are so important, and all should be had in a fully organized branch, and every man encouraged to perform his full duty.

But acting under the rest of this paragraph, and also of section 161, above referred to, some remarkable conditions have arisen.

In the first place we should remember that these provisions were adopted at a time when the church consisted of small branches, none of them having over two hundred and fifty members. It is not a question of the importance of the work of the priest, teacher, and deacon and the beauty of the divine order in setting these men in the church. Nor is the purpose of the movement to withdraw from them or the body any rights or privileges. The question is as to the standing and position of the Melchisedec priesthood.

We have observed in many cases where a presiding elder, one, was chosen,; and then a presiding priest, a presiding teacher, and a presiding deacon; and then all other members of the lesser priesthood were sustained. No elder could act as long as there were members of the lesser priesthood in attendance. Especially in case the presiding elder was absent, the presiding priest, or in his absence, the presiding teacher take charge, to the exclusion of all members of the Melchisedec priesthood.

In other instances the priest, then the first, second, third, fourth, assistant priests were chosen, until all of the priests had been nominated and elected in order; then a presiding teacher, and a first, second, third, fourth, etc., and fiftieth teacher in order; then a presiding deacon, and each one of the deacons as an assistant in order. Then in case of the absence of the presiding elder, he was not permitted to make arrangements for the services, or ask anyone else to take charge. That right devolved upon the presiding priest. We had the strange experience that a branch president could not ask a certain member of the priesthood to take charge or speak because, while he would be absent at a district conference, the third assistant teacher would be at home. (The third assistant teacher was not present when the time came.)

The result of such procedure has been that when an able and active priest was ordained to the office of an elder, he was at once laid on the shelf, along with other members of the Melchisedec priesthood. The elders were kept as a reserved and sacred body from whom the presiding elder should be chosen, the rest of whom should be laid on the shelf.

ABBIE A. HORTON
217 SO RIVER BLVD
INDEPENDENCE MO

It would not be necessary to say so much about it, but unfortunately it represents a condition. The presiding elder could have whom he chose to speak, providing he was present at the time. Under these conditions we at one time took a census on the question of efficiency in office, and used as the immediate test attendance at branch services, including all of the members holding a certain office in the priesthood. We found that during a considerable period, the priests gave an average attendance of 95 per cent; the teachers about 80 per cent; the deacons about 65 per cent; the Melchisedec priesthood about 17 per cent. Nor were they active elsewhere.

This is surprising but rather to be expected under these conditions of administration. Of course, some will say that the elders should go out and make new openings. But to a man engaged in business, yet willing to give of his service on the Lord's day, this sounds easier than it is.

Then in one of our stakes, many years ago, a good brother approached us very much wrought up because during the temporary absence of the stake president he left one of his counselors in charge of the services. The brother insisted that in the absence of the presiding elder, that the presiding priest should take charge, and not either or both of the counselors of the stake presidency.

In another stake, we are informed that objection was made against the election of the stake presidency to preside over the largest congregation, on the grounds that if this were done it would put three members of the Melchisedec priesthood among the branch officers, so that there would be a predominance of the Melchisedec priesthood. For some reason, not explained, it seemed that they thought that there must be, for proper administration, a large predominance of the lesser priesthood to act as branch officers.

It is a curious phase of thought that a branch should have but one elder, no matter how large, but might have any number of priests, teachers, and deacons, lest the Melchisedec priesthood control.

When we consider what belongs to this priesthood, and that after all that, in limiting ourselves in this way, it is done to the hurt of the work and this of necessity, it seems still more remarkable. It is evident that if one elder, one priest, one teacher, and one deacon are to constitute the branch officers that the Melchisedec priesthood is in a marked minority as compared with the lesser or Aaronic priesthood and its appendages.

There is the additional difficulty that in large branches it is not possible for one man to take care of all of the pastoral work. He must have assistants, not only for administration, but for the work that belongs to the pastor, the work that belongs to the Melchisedec priesthood in connection with the membership.

Now on the question of presiding, what is the law as set forth in the books of the church? We recall nothing decisive from the Bible or Book of Mormon. In Doctrine and Covenants 104:38 we learn of a president among the deacons, whose duty it is to preside over twelve deacons. In the 39th paragraph, the duty of the president over the office of the teacher is to preside over twenty-four of the teachers. Paragraph 40, also the duty of the president over the priesthood of Aaron is to preside over forty-eight priests. This president is to be a bishop. Paragraph 41 provides for a president over the office of elder, to preside over ninety-six elders. The 42d paragraph gives the duty of the president of the office of high priest. Elsewhere we find provision for the presidency over each of the various quorums of the church.

But we do not find elsewhere in the law provision for a priest, teacher, or deacon presiding, otherwise than in a quorum of their own members, with the exception of section 120:2.

A branch may be presided over by a high priest, an elder, priest, teacher, or deacon, chosen and sustained by the vote of the branch. Districts may be presided over by a high priest, or an elder, who shall be received and sustained in his office by the vote of the district. If a branch or district be large, he who is chosen to preside should be an high priest, if there be one possessed of the spirit of wisdom to administer in the office of president; or if an elder be chosen who may by experience be found qualified to preside, as soon as practicable thereafter he should be ordained an high priest by the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the one ordaining, and by direction of a high council, or general conference, as required in the law.

But it is evident that one thus chosen, as set forth in the first sentence of the above paragraph, is chosen to be president of the branch, the presiding officer. The branch has the right to choose a deacon, a teacher, or a priest. Such a person then becomes the presiding deacon, the presiding teacher, or presiding priest of the branch, under the law of common consent. Thus section 4, Rules of Order and Debate, provides that branches may be formed whenever six or more members in good standing are resident in any one neighborhood, one of whom must be an elder, a priest, a teacher, or a deacon. We do not state that it is the order laid down; nor does it belong to any of these ranks of the lesser priesthood by right to be president of the branch.

In this instance, however, any one of them may be chosen if circumstances so require. But the declaration is clear that in a large branch or district he who is chosen should be a high priest. An elder or high priest may preside over any district.

It would seem to designate rather clearly that it is the place of the Melchisedec priesthood to preside, at least over large branches and over all districts.

Then in section 104: 3, in addition to the right of presiding, again we note:

The office of an elder comes under the priesthood of Melchisedec. The Melchisedec priesthood holds the right of presidency, and has power and authority over all the offices in the church, in all ages of the world, to administer in spiritual things.

The above would seem to be sufficiently clear and definite. The office of elder comes under the priesthood of Melchisedec. The Melchisedec priesthood holds the right of presidency. While this passage applies to the president of the high priesthood and may in part be taken in connection with paragraph 4, yet we respectfully submit that its meaning is not thereby exhausted, but that the first part of paragraph 3 and the succeeding paragraphs, 5, 6, and 7 show that the high priests and elders are included within the presiding rights. In an ordinary organized branch it is proper that a member of the Melchisedec priesthood be chosen to preside. This is also true of districts and of stakes.

While we are of the opinion that circumstances sometimes arise justifying a different procedure, and that the branch under section 120: 2 may elect some other in case of exigency to preside, nevertheless, so far as presidency is concerned, it belongs to Melchisedec priesthood.

The purpose of the motion to suspend section 161 and which doubtless will later result in a motion to repeal this provision and make other provision, and to bring our procedure more nearly in accordance with the law of the Lord, is certainly not to withdraw from the Aaronic priesthood, any of their rights and privileges, but to see that the whole priesthood is better organized, and that the eldership are also given their duties to perform. It permits in the smaller branches, every man being put to work and assigned his proper duties. It permits in the very large branches a division of authority, permitting of assistant pastors, so that instead of it being a centralization of power to one man or three men, it results in a closer association of the presidency in a stake or large branch, with other members of the Melchisedec priesthood in their particular work; and also, a closer touch on their part with the work of the priest, the teacher, and the deacon.

Both in Independence and in Lamoni, the territory included within the confines of the larger congregation is divided up into wards, or districts, and an elder, priest, teacher, and deacon, are placed in charge of each of these districts, to minister to the spiritual life of the smaller group, and so enable the presiding elder of the congregation to come more closely in touch with his congregation, and to give help where it is most needed.

The organization of the various orders of priesthood under God is most remarkable. The Aaronic priesthood is made an appendage to the Melchisedec; every man has his own duty and his own work. But we feel the more closely we study the text that the responsibility of directing rests with the Melchisedec priesthood, and especially with that one, or those who are chosen to preside over the branch congregation, district, or stake.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Sectional conferences have been held throughout the country in connection with the League of Nations. The first were held in the east—Boston and New York, then Chicago, Minneapolis, Portland, San Francisco, Salt Lake City, Saint Louis, and Atlanta. We have not been informed who of our membership attended these various conferences, except that R. Archibald of Saint Louis, G. S. Trowbridge, president of the general Religio and the Associate Editor, and wife, were delegates to the one in Saint Louis.

It certainly was an enthusiastic gathering. William H. Taft was the principal speaker, but there was associated with him President Lowell, of Harvard University, Henry van Dyke, Henry Morgenthau, and many others of national fame. An answer was made to all of the various criticisms, as well as an affirmative argument in favor of the league of nations.

While the constitution proposed may not ideally satisfy everyone, it is a wonderful step in advance and shows remarkable progress toward the accomplishment of that ideal.

We note in this as has been noted so often, both inside and outside of the church, that some are overly ready to insist upon every possible and impossible objection, including those that "ain't so." While others, the constructive thinkers, while not blind to occasional defects which they strive to have corrected at the proper time and place, yet will not reject a good plan simply because every detail does not ideally satisfy their concept.

Some question has been raised in regard to the constitutionality of the league of nations—though reference has not been made so far to particular paragraphs or sentences on which the objection is based. It would indeed be a misfortune if we are forever prevented by our constitution from joining in an agreement for peace. Mr. Taft, whose special training would appear to make him the superior as a constitutional lawyer to any who have made objection, assured the delegates very positively that such objection was unfounded. He then proceeded to prove it by instances from our history.

The following from the program of the conference—under the heading, "The obligations of victory," states rather tersely the position of the league to enforce peace.

THE OBLIGATIONS OF VICTORY

The end of the war brings us face to face with the task of preventing the recurrence of a catastrophe that threatens the destruction of civilized life. The one plan for doing this that is receiving serious attention is that for the establishment of a League of Free Nations.

To business, which has seen the accumulations of a century consumed by war, this plan holds out a prospect of stable international relations.

Labor, which has always borne the principal burden of injustice and strife, sees in the new order of justice, democracy and fellowship guaranteed by a league the only refuge from Bolshevism.

Religion sees in the coming together of the nations the dawning of permanent peace on earth and good will toward men.

In the hearts of the mothers of a generation that has paid to war a toll of six million sons, the vision kindles a hope that their children's children may be spared the yet more terrible sorrows of future wars.

Men who risked their lives in the battle for democracy find in a league of nations the sum of that for which they fought and their comrades died.

The proposal presents the most important question of national policy that as citizens we shall face in our lifetime.

In an hour when the creation of a league is the principal subject for discussion throughout the world, the society that was the pioneer in bringing forward the project of a league owes to the unconvinced an explanation of what is proposed and to believers in a league a plan of action by which they may help to secure one that will succeed and endure. Such is the double purpose of this national congress.

VICTORY—DON'T WASTE IT!

FOREIGN MISSION WORK

The Presidency has felt that the time is very soon here when missionary work on a larger and more permanent basis than heretofore must be undertaken in Central European countries. To do this, preparation in earnest must be made now. With this in our thoughts, it was pleasing to receive the following letter from a brother, as it indicates that God is moving upon the people to support the movement:

When the Lord ordered that the Book of Mormon should be printed in the German language, and our people were admonished to study and learn foreign languages, it meant that our people would some day be in a position where they would have to use these languages and make use of the Book of Mormon printed in the German tongue. That time I believe is now, or will be at hand soon, and we must go out and teach those people if we want to fulfil the command of God, Go ye therefore in all the world and teach all nations. In order to send out missionaries we must be prepared also financially and this is what I want to write to you about. I am ready to give to the Lord or the Bishop $100 for this purpose, and I believe there ought to be ninety-nine other members of our blessed church who are willing and able to give a like amount. This would make a fund of $10,000 and would enable the Bishop to keep quite a few missionaries and their families in the Central European countries.

PROMOTION OF HOME LIFE

Our communities for social service are trying to do much to better the conditions surrounding home life. One thing is to prevent child labor. The argument is made that poor families need the labor of the children. This is used at times to cover up the negligence of an incompetent and unworthy father. But the loss to the state is so great that provision has been made in many States, for mother's pensions. This is not considered as charity, but more in the nature of a state payment to insure better citizens. Some States use the term compensation but New Jersey calls it "an act to promote home life for dependent children."

The recent federal law approved by the Senate, the Pomerene child labor measure does not fully meet the situation. It is necessary that the State take immediate care of its young. A minimum age should be secured, and every child in the democracy assured a proper education.

This is one of the factors of work belonging to the church with regards to its members, helping the mother to keep the family together, and giving her such support that she may remain at home and care for her young children. It is the best kind of church insurance, and should not be considered as charity. Of course such help can only be extended to worthy mothers. The interest of the child is the primary consideration. Where the parents are inefficient or immoral the State will support an effort to see that proper guardians are secured.

The annual report of Director General of Railroads, W. G. McAdoo, contains some very interesting data on the labor situation. He sets forth much more clearly than the items as a rule in the newspapers, the difficulties against which labor has had to contend, and why they were unwilling to accept some arbitration boards, as it was so difficult to secure a third arbitrator who was sufficiently familiar with the situation to be fair. Then the administration of the award was taken over entirely by the railroads. A great deal of leeway can be taken in the interpretation of an award especially when it is ambiguous as it is likely to be when the one who gives it is not thoroughly familiar with the conditions.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

THE LAST GENERATION

Since the commencement of the recent war, much has been said and written concerning the second coming of Christ, and very many say we are in the last war" with an additional, "I believe that whoever "nearer than we are aware of."

I have also received letters from many of my brethren asking me if I did not think "this is the last war" with an additional, "I believe that whoever lives until 1930 will see Christ in the flesh." In a social meeting, one stated among other things, "I would not be surprised to see Christ come any minute." This cannot be. The Savior cannot come until the Scriptures are fulfilled which he declares must be fulfilled before he comes.

I was greatly surprised to hear that one minister said in his discourse, during conference last April (while many of the hearers assented to the same), that "if Jesus Christ does not come any time between now and 1930, then this thing is a fizzle, and we may as well throw the books in the fire."

I hope no minister ever said anything of the kind; especially a minister and servant of the Lord Jesus Christ. I am sure he does not understand the Scriptures which refer to the last generation, or the second coming of Christ. He is surely mistaken, and those who hear and believe those statements are deceived.

Such expressions as, "I know that the Savior will come within twelve years," and "the Lord revealed to me that I should live to see the temple built," etc., are deceiving. The people have died and their fond hopes are not realized. Others, both in and out of the church, who are still living, are weakened by these statements. And we have to meet this almost everywhere we go.

Also many statements in our papers. I will mention one article only (SAINTS' HERALD, volume 65, pages 105-109) "Christ to come again." The writer says, "Jesus was speaking of the generation which should see all these things fulfilled; that is, which should see the fulfillment of the last of the signs, the falling of the stars, which occurred in 1833. The youngest of those who were living when the stars fell and who are still alive are now 84 years of age; and since 'this generation shall not pass' some of those people will still be alive when our Lord comes." (Page 108, second column.)

How could that fulfill the statement of the Master, when the sun and moon were darkened a generation before the stars fell and it is 84 years since the stars fell. (Another generation.) From the statement of the Savior, it would appear that the darkening of the sun and moon, and the falling of the stars would take place in the last generation, and the article referred to admits the darkening of the sun and moon was in 1780. It is not enough to see the fulfillment of that statement, "of the last of the signs." The last generation must see the darkening of the sun and moon as well as the falling of the stars. How can one think that the Savior's word can be fulfilled in that way when part of it happened in 1780, 138 years ago, and the other part of it occurred in 1833, 85 years ago? Yet the writer says, "Thus the last of the warning signs (the falling of the stars) has been fulfilled, and we are now to apply the parable of the fig tree; know that he is near, even at the door. (Matthew 24: 33.)"

And of the article the Editors say, "It is an interesting discussion of a timely topic."

I will now show that the darkening of the sun and moon, and the falling of the stars mentioned by the Master, as found in Matthew 24 and Mark 13, as well as in Luke 21, have not yet taken place.

WHAT THE LORD SAID

Not a year after the church was organized, and when many revelations had been given to the church, and Joseph Smith, jr., was working at the King James Translation of the Bible, correcting many of the most misleading statements, errors, etc., the Lord said:

Hearken, O ye people of my church, to whom the kingdom has been given, hearken ye, and give ear to him who laid the foundation of the earth, who made the heavens and all the hosts thereof, and by whom all things were made which live and move and have a being.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 1.

From the above I think all will agree that this is for the people of the whole church. And in paragraph 2, the Lord says:

Wherefore hearken, and I will reason with you, and I will speak unto you and prophesy, as unto men in days of old; and I will show it plainly, as I showed it unto my disciples, as I stood before them in the flesh, and spake unto them, saying, As ye have asked of me concerning the signs of my coming, in the day when I shall come in my glory in the clouds of heaven, to fulfill the promises that I have made unto your fathers; . . . I will show unto you how the day of redemption shall come, and also the restoration of the scattered Israel.—Paragraph 2.

From this we find that we could not understand at that time from any Bible, "how the day of redemption shall come."

Then in paragraphs 3 to 6, we are told a little more plainly than found in the King James Translation, concerning the destruction of the temple at Jerusalem, and the scattering of Israel, and of the last generation, his coming, etc. Then in paragraph 11, the Lord plainly says, "It shall not be given unto you to know any further concerning this chapter, [Matthew 24] until the New Testament be translated, and in it all these things shall be made known."

Dear readers of the HERALD, don't forget. This matter is not "made known" in any book we have except the New Testament as corrected by Joseph the Seer.

Now do not go back to Doctrine and Covenants 45: 4, to prop up something we have preached and prophesied of, concerning Jesus' coming so soon, etc., and quote:

And in that generation shall the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled; and there shall be men standing in that generation that shall not pass, until they shall see an overflowing scourge, for a desolating sickness shall come over the land; but my disciples shall stand in holy places, and shall not be moved.

This does not say that that is the last generation that shall pass until Christ will come. But it "shall not pass, until they see an overflowing scourge," etc., which we have, and are seeing.

SHALL BE MADE KNOWN

Again:

And now, behold, I say unto you, It shall not be given unto you to know any further concerning this chapter, until the New Testament be translated, and in it all these things shall be made known; wherefore I give unto you that you may now translate it, that ye may be prepared for the things to come; for verily I say unto you, that great things await you: ye hear of wars in foreign lands, but, behold, I say unto you, They are nigh, even at your doors, and not many years hence ye shall hear of wars in your own lands.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 11.

This shows us plainly that we have no scripture which makes that matter known to us, neither will we know "until the New Testament be translated." Then we must go to the New Testament as corrected by the Seer, "And in it all these things [signs of second coming and last generation] shall be made known." It is not made plain in any other book, hence there should be no question in our minds but that it is the book to take to obtain that knowledge.

From it we learned that the disciples asked the Master four things, namely:

And as he sat upon the Mount of Olives, his disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us, when shall these things be which thou hast said concerning the destruction of the temple, and the Jews; and what is the sign of thy coming; and of the end of the world?—Matthew 24: 4, Inspired Translation.

You will notice they have asked him to tell them of some things that will take place in two generations, the one in which the Savior was then living with them, and the last generation in which he would come again. To this he made answer: (I will paraphrase to save space.) Take heed—deliver you up to be afflicted—kill you—be hated of all nations—false prophets shall arise, etc. "When you, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet [Daniel 9: 26, 27; 12: 1], concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, then you shall stand in the holy place. (Whoso readeth let him understand.) Then let them who are in Judea flee into the mountains."

This was all fulfilled in that generation, when about 1,100,000 lost their lives and the balance were taken prisoners and scattered into all nations.

Remember the other thing they asked:

And what is the sign of thy coming; and of the end of the world?

Answer:

And they shall hear of wars, and rumors of wars. For nation shall rise against nation, kingdom against kingdom . . . famine . . . pestilence . . . earthquakes, etc. And again—iniquity. . . . And again, this gospel shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come or the destruction of the wicked. (Matthew 24: 29-32.)

SIGN OF THE LAST GENERATION

And again shall the abomination of desolation [the next destruction of Jerusalem], spoken of by Daniel the prophet be fulfilled.—Verse 33.

That has not yet taken place! Two prophets are yet to stand up and prophesy for three and one half years in that city. This will not be until they are more fully gathered than they are at the present time, and after the Gentile times are fulfilled, and before that war will take place. (Revelation 11.) And when the nations go up to take a spoil, it will not be until the spoil is there! It will take years yet before that war takes place. (Zechariah 14.) And after that "abomination of desolation" takes place (concerning the destruction of Jerusalem), yet to be, Jesus said:

And immediately after the tribulation of those days, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of heaven shall be shaken. Verily I say unto you, this generation, in the which these things shall be shown forth, shall not pass away until all I have told you shall be fulfilled.

Isn't that plain? Just as the Lord said, "And I will show it plainly, as I showed it unto my disciples in days of old."

SAINT MARK SAYS THE SAME

The disciples asked Jesus two questions, one concerning the destruction of the temple, and the Jews; the other, his coming, and the end of the world. Thus:

Tell us, when shall these things be which thou hast said, concerning the destruction of the temple and the Jews? [That generation.] And what is the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world, (or the destruction of the wicked which is the end of the world)?—Mark 13: 8, 9.

And as did Matthew, so does Mark tell us what Jesus said.

THAT GENERATION

Take heed that no man deceive you. There will be false Christs, and false prophets—you will be hated—killed—iniquity shall abound, etc., we are told. When you therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, then you shall stand in the holy place. Then flee—not return—woe to some (under certain conditions). Pray that it does not take place “in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day.” Not because there is any more sanctity on that day, any more than there is in the winter, but because if you had to flee that day, you would likely be punished for breaking their law; or in the winter, because it would be cold, and you would suffer by reason of the inclemency of the weather. So, all that the Master said should take place in that generation, came to pass.

SIGNS OF THE LAST GENERATION

Mark clearly shows the first and last generations of the gospel dispensations. Many of those things which will occur in the last generation are only a repetition of the former, or the one in which the Master lived. Concerning the signs of the last generation he records what Jesus said. Do not forget the question: “And what is the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?” The Savior said:

And they (who are living then) shall hear of wars and rumors of wars—nation against nation—famine, pestilence, and earthquakes in divers places.

And again, because iniquity shall abound, the love of men shall wax cold. . . . And again this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come, or the destruction of the wicked. And again shall the abomination of desolation [another war and destruction], spoken of by Daniel the prophet, be fulfilled. And immediately after the tribulation of those days, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of heaven shall be shaken. Verily I say unto you, this generation in the which these things shall be shown forth, shall not pass away till all I have told you shall be fulfilled.—Mark 13: 35-40.

This is surely as the Lord said. (Doctrine and Covenants 45.) “And I will show it plainly”—that which we could not know—“until the New Testament be translated, and in it all these things shall be made known.”

So then, instead of “Thus the last of the warning signs, [the falling of the stars] has been fulfilled,” as stated in the citation in the HERALD above mentioned, not one of them have taken place, neither will they take place until after many more of Israel will return, build up, and inhabit Jerusalem, after it comes into their possession—after the two prophets shall finish their testimony—and after the next destruction—at which time Christ must come and stop the battle and defend Israel. After that, and not before, will appear the “signs in the sun; moon, and stars.” (Mark 13: 37-39.)

LUKE ANOTHER WITNESS

Concerning the two generations you will readily see the distinction made in the division of the twenty-first chapter of Luke, in that the first twenty-three verses speak of the generation in which they then lived, and the balance of the chapter down to the end of the thirty-sixth verse, speaks of the last generation which shall not pass away until all be fulfilled.

After telling the disciples at Jerusalem about false Christs and false prophets, and great signs that shall be from heaven, and of their being hated, etc., as Matthew and Mark had recorded, Jesus winds up by telling them of the destruction of Jerusalem which would take place in that generation; thus:

And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled.—Luke 21: 23.

The Jews are still trodden down of the Gentiles, although during the recent war, the British have gotten the upper hand of the Turks, but it still is in Gentile hands, and it will be some time yet before the Gentiles cease to hold it, and the Jews have possession of it.

Now to make it clear to all who read this article, and confirm you in the belief that Christ and the disciples are here talking only about the two generations as before mentioned, I quote:

Now these things he spake unto them, concerning the destruction of Jerusalem.—Luke 21: 24. [That generation.]

SIGNS OF LAST GENERATION NOT YET GIVEN

If the reader will now read the balance of the 24th verse, it will show that all the disciples asked was concerning the time of his coming. And in his answer you will see that the signs of the last generation are not yet given:

And then his disciples asked him, saying, Master, tell us concerning thy coming? (And he answered them, and said, In the generation in which the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled, there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity, like the sea and the waves roaring. The earth also shall be troubled, and the waters of the great deep.—Luke 21: 24, 25.

It is not fulfilled, but it is all yet to come to pass.

And when these things begin to come to pass, (not yet begun) then look up and lift up your heads, for the day of your redemption draweth nigh.

Then he spake the parable of the fig tree and said :

Verily, I say unto you, this generation, the generation when the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled [not yet fulfilled], shall not pass away till all be fulfilled.—Luke 21: 32.

"Times" not "time" of Gentiles. The time is when some of the Gentiles who understand our claims well, now reject our message. The time is when some Gentile nations will not permit us the privileges we enjoy in the United States and Canada. Our work is virtually at a standstill now outside of America.

The time of the Gentiles will come when other doors will be fully opened to us. Another time of the Gentiles will come in when they refuse the gospel. Israel as a people, will not accept the gospel yet.

Blindness [or hardness] in part is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in.—Romans 11: 25.

Their times are not in. When it is in, Israel will accept it and be saved, and the Gentiles will reject it. Many years yet. Our work is not nearly finished among the Gentiles, and when their times are all in, and Israel becomes a nation again, owning and controlling the land wherein their fathers dwelt, then we must preach the gospel to them; that will also take many years more. When the Gentiles reject the gospel, their times are in, and Israel will begin to rejoice in the Holy One of Israel and fear the God of Jacob. Then those who are alive at that time will see the "signs" in the sun, the moon, and stars fulfilled.

The signs before mentioned as having taken place in 1780 may be counted as signs of the latter days, but not signs of the last generation, and as to the falling of the stars in 1833, some historians say this was periodical. But whatever signs may have appeared may be called signs of the latter days, and not signs of the last generation.

GENERATION

How long is a generation? Webster says: "A single succession in natural descent, as the children of the same parents; hence an age. The people of the same period, or living at the same time. A family; a race; progeny; offspring." Cruden: "By some of the ancients—100 years—110 years; others 33 or 30, and even 20." American: (Popular Dictionary) Same as Webster. Bible Dictionary, William Smith: "Patriarchal age 100 years; subsequently as other civilized nations, 30 to 40 years." Lee's Dictionary: "Thirty-three years." Bible: From Abraham to Christ was forty-two generations, about 48 years to a generation.

In the days of our Savior the gospel was preached to the Jewish nation—the first generation—then it went to the Gentiles, and was preached to the Gentiles from generation to generation.

But as the "first shall be last and the last shall be first," the Gentiles will get the gospel first (in the latter days), and it will be preached to them from generation to generation, and the Jews will get it last—in the last generation. And in that generation will appear the "signs" in the sun, and in the moon, and the stars shall fall, etc. (Matthew 19: 30; Luke 13: 30; 1 Nephi 3: 199, 200; Doctrine and Covenants 108: 3, 4.) But before all this, Israel will be gathering. Two prophets will prophesy for three and one half years, and be killed. (Revelation 11: 3-12.) After these prophets shall have finished their work, are rejected and killed, preparations will be made, and the war take place at Jerusalem. They are about to be overcome when their Messiah and Great Deliverer will come and, defending Israel, stop the battle, etc. (Zachariah 14.)

Then a nation will be converted to the Lord. That is the nation. That is the day. We can then preach the gospel to the Jews. They now know that Jesus is the Messiah. It will be easy to get them to understand and obey the gospel, and "a remnant shall be saved." (Romans 9: 27.)

When the gospel goes to the Jews, "And then cometh the day when the arm of the Lord shall be revealed in power [in their own tongue] in convincing the nations [not half the nations have the gospel yet], the heathen nations, the house of Joseph [Indians—not much will be done among them until the greater power comes], of the gospel of their salvation." (Doctrine and Covenants 87: 3, 4.) Then the Lord can cut his work short in righteousness.

When the Lord comes to defend the Jews at Jerusalem, it will not be to commence the millennium, but to stop the war against the Jews which will then be raging at Jerusalem. He must of a necessity come then to defend them, or they will all be exterminated.

We must look at this second coming as Israel should have looked at his first. It will be years after that war, before he comes to reign.

The main thing with us should be to "be ready." "Pray always." "Read the Scriptures." "And what I say unto one, I say unto all. Watch ye therefore, and pray always, and keep my commandments, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things which shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man when he shall come clothed in the glory of his Father." (Luke 21: 36.)

BOOK OF MORMON GEOGRAPHY

The study of the Book of Mormon claims is interesting and vital. The matter dealing with its archæology, as presented by Brother L. E. Hills, is as fascinating as it is probably correct. Surely we cannot brush it aside without sufficient reasons, and though I have heard others adversely criticise our brother's findings, yet I have neither heard nor seen proofs that contradicted his positions. The very hasty and brief investigation I have made of the latest publications have confirmed me in the belief that Central America is the place where the Nephites landed when they rediscovered this country. Avoiding long comments, I present a few findings:

In the March issue (1918) of the Missionary Review of the World, is an article entitled "Yucatan, Mexico's Utopia." The author writes:

It is not hard to believe that Yucatan was the seat of the highest form of native civilization when North America was discovered. The descendants of a race so civilized, so cleanly, so artistic and deft will serve the Lord with clean hands and pure hearts, the minute they are shown "the ascent unto the hill of the Lord."

The same condition of civilization exists there to-day, in many senses. Two thirds of Yucatan's 350,000 are Indians. Rural schools have been created there, about 1,200 in two years, with Mexico's best teachers in them. This country to-day is open to all forms of evangelical ministrations. God is preparing their mind for the introduction of the restored gospel; the people are being taught to reason and are breaking away from the yoke of Roman Catholicism. And it seems more than a coincidence that our Lamanitish population is largely found at the place of its beginning. Central and South America contain millions of pure-blooded Indians.

The Bulletin of the Pan-American Union, October, 1917, gives us a description of wonderful Guatemala. It is a "marvelous land of fragrant pine forests, flowers, singing birds, broad winding roads, and fertile fields of wheat and corn cultivated by hundreds of thousands of industrious Indians."

One of Guatemala's lakes, Atitlan, is described: "A vast lake 27 miles in greatest length and 12 miles wide, . . . depth of more than 1,000 feet. Its surface is more than 5,000 feet above the level of the sea." A severe earthquake, in 1773, destroyed the large city Antiqua. This wonderful lake resembles Lake Guija, which is about 160 miles further south, and is supposed by some to be the Waters of Mormon.

We read with much interest the reference to the Indians of this section, on page 473:

The people of the highlands, except in the larger towns, are mostly Indians who are believed to be descendants partly or wholly from the ancient Mayas. I had read that the faces upon the obelisks and monuments often bore a striking resemblance to the countenances of the Indians of to-day. The statement I found verified in the monuments at Quirigua. Of all the prehistoric races of the American hemisphere the Mayas were among the most advanced. They had progressed so far in mechanics that they were able to move rocks weighing 20 tons or more over great distances. They possessed a considerable amount of written lore, and represented sounds in their hieroglyphics. Their carvings of human beings or animals had been developed beyond the profile stage of the Egyptians.

The author of this article may not be correct in every statement he makes, but he directs our attention to Central America and its ancient civilization. And he adds this interesting item, reaching a bit out of the circle of this article: "There are some 50,000,000 peoples to the south of us whose official language is Spanish, whose early culture and learning were inherited from Spain, whose territory extends from the Rio Grande to Cape Horn, comprising an area equal to that of Brazil and the United States combined, divided into 18 independent republics, each with its own peculiar ambitions and characteristic traits."

And these people are waiting for the gospel—at least 10,000,000 of them are, for they are Lamanites, and the promise is that they shall "blossom as the rose." Why not turn to these people and read to them the history of their fathers, translated in the language of their day? The time to begin this great work is hastening towards us with rapid strides. A writer in the Missionary Review of the World, for January, 1918, tells us:

In Chile, where the Roman Catholic Church is better organized than in any other South American country, there are only priests enough to average one to 10,000 people. This gives some idea of how inadequate the religious needs of the continent are provided for, even by the Church of Rome. . . . In Mexico there are only two hundred ordained evangelical ministers, both foreign and native, to preach the gospel to a population of 13,000,000—an average parish of 75,000 people. . . . The greatest stretch of unevangelized territory in the world is the center of South America.

Let the mind dwell for a moment longer on the meaning of the foregoing quotation. Seventy-five thousand souls under the care of one minister, and he a Catholic priest! As has been said of the Indian of North America, the South and Central American Indian is apparently waiting for the true religion of his fathers. Though he, like the Jew, embraces the views of sectarianism (both Catholic and Protestant), he never forgets the traditions of the past. It seems to me the hand of God is seen in this fact, and it is an evidence in support of the Book of Mormon teachings concerning the descendants of Joseph and of Judah.

I am conscious that I am weaving two subjects in this article, but their setting is the same.

One of the most remarkable proofs of the derivation of the civilization of America from the Old World, is offered by the representation in Maya and Aztec documents of unmistakably Indian religious scenes, often with a Far Eastern tinge. J. Wilfred Jackson, F. G. S., Keeper Manchester Museum, has recently (1917) published a book which presents a most interesting shade of evidence supporting the claim that the ancient Americans landed first in Central America, or northwestern South America. The book is entitled, Shells as Evidence of the Migrations of Early Culture. I quote as follows:

Preface:

Both in the Old and New World purple was not only made and used in the same way for staining threads for weaving, but it was also employed for coloring precious manuscripts and as a cosmetic. If it be argued that purple was invented independently in the New World it must be remembered that the method of its production is a complex and difficult process, which in itself is sufficient to raise a doubt as to the likelihood of such a discovery being made more than once.

Page 27:

As already pointed out, this purple industry is closely associated, both in the Old and in the New World, with the appreciation of pearls and the use of the artificially devised conch-shell trumpet. Each of these cultural elements had their origin in the Eastern Mediterranean. Stations for the purple industry, as we have seen, were established by the early Mediterranean mariners in several places in the Old World. In addition, we find that an intimate relationship existed between this art and skill in weaving, as well as the mining, working and trafficking in metals, such as gold, silver, and copper. In the New World the purple industry is associated with similar pursuits.

Page 28:

That all the foregoing, in addition to other associated elements of culture, could have developed independently in the Old and in the New World is inconceivable. In Mexico, Central and South America, the aborigines unanimously disclaim their independent discovery of all arts and industries and assign their introduction to strangers of superior culture from distant and unknown parts.

Mr. Jackson's work affords two maps on which is traced the migration, or spread, of this ancient knowledge of purple manufacture and shell trumpet usage in worship. He believes that the arrow should begin in the regions of Eastern Mediterranean and end in Central and northwestern South America.

To quote from Dana G. Munroe's late work, The Five Republics of Central America (1918), page 261: "The most distinctive ruins in this area are those at Mitla, supposed to have been the center of Zapotec culture." Page 271: "Maya Chronology. 200 B. C., approximate earliest date. 50 A. D., period of sculpture. 600 A. D., last of dated sculptures." Mr. Munroe adds, on page 273, "For historical chronologies that correlate with dated time we must look chiefly to Mexico and Central America. Here lies one of our most important problems, for on its solution depends our proper perspective of New World culture." Another interesting and significant point mentioned by the author of this work, is that the Mayas in the days of the conquest were still of a culture type comparable to the Aztec group, having extensive knowledge of agriculture, raising maize, peppers, beans, cacao, etc., and domesticating bees for their honey and wax. Cotton woven by the Mayas was so fine that the Spaniards mistook it for silk. This reference to the honey bee is interesting in the light of Ether's statement: "And they did carry with them deseret, which, by interpretation is a honey bee; and thus they did carry with them swarms of bees."—Ether 1:24. As the ancient Americans migrated from the place of their first landing, their degeneracy lessened their appreciation for the comforts of civilization; hence, we see the North American Indian cultivating only a few food essentials; and the love of the beautiful, with its expression in cultivated lands and artistic architecture, disappeared also.

Clark Wissler, states in the American Museum Journal, February, 1917, that "the cradle of the New World agriculture appears to have been the highlands of Mexico and Central America." "The pottery of the lowest layer shows peculiar features in construction and ornament, and it has been possible to prove by these special features that ceramic art spread from Central America across northern South America to the mouth of the Amazon and over the mountains of Colombia and Ecuador to the coast of Peru.

Clark Wissler has written a book (1917), an introduction to the anthropology of the New World, The American Indian. In common with other recent authors who have touched this subject, Mr. Wissler has presented strong evidence in support of the position that Central America was the first home of the Ancient Americans. We quote from pages 104, 105:

We see, then, that in at least two particulars we have a broad cultural base for the highly specialized building arts of the Maya and Inca. That all these widely distributed characters result by diffusion from these two centers is scarcely logical, for even cultures are not built of nothing, but all have a long train of historical antecedents. It is much more reasonable to assume that diffusion, and perhaps other factors, brought a certain extended uniformity in house-building before the final burst of higher culture in these two centers. Granted that in this burst they may have been independent, they nevertheless had the same heritage from which to fashion their art.

Yet, the distinction remains, that secondary embellishment, or what is often considered true architecture, is characteristic only of Maya type. . . . As we proceed southward in Peru, architecture rapidly deteriorates, disappearing altogether at the River Maule.

Page 129:

Another invention of great significance is the art of writing. So far as we can tell, no form of writing was practiced in South America, that achievement appearing to be a Maya contribution. The codices of Mexico and their official use at the time of the conquest are matters of common knowledge, but the more definite extinct Maya system of writing presents one of the great puzzles of our subject. Some progress has been made in recovering the key to it, insofar as the calendar and dates are concerned. From these, it appears that the Maya system is both pictographic and phonetic and that the Mexican scheme was in the main derived from it. . . . Outside of Mexico and Central America, no paper was used, but some bark garments were made in the forest regions of South America.

"Another item of importance," writes Wissler, page 131, "is the astronomical knowledge and methods of reckoning time. Of South American system we know next to nothing, but that of the Maya excites our unbounded admiration."

True stone carving is rare in South America. The Peruvians did next to nothing of this sort. . . . In North America, no stone carving worthy of the name occurs north of the Rio Grande. Thus, the ancient Maya cities constitute the center of the sculptor's art, which fringes out in northern Mexico above and in Panama below.

In view of the fact that the church will one day direct its specific attention towards Central America, the following statement taken from Dana G. Munroe's, The Five Republics of Central America, a work published in 1918, pages 1, 12-14, is given:

The estimated area and population of the five countries, as given in the Statesman's Year Book for 1916, are: Guatemala, 48,290 square miles, 2,003,579 population; El Salvador, 7,225, 1,225,833; Nicaragua, 49,200, 703,540; Honduras, 44,275, 562,000; Costa Rica, 23,000, 420,179.

At one time the Catholic Church, to which all of the people normally belong, was very powerful throughout the Isthmus, and the clergy and the numerous monasteries exercised a strong social and political influence. A few years after the Declaration of Independence, however, the Liberal leaders, who had been opposed by the clerical party in their struggle to regain power during the years 1826-1829, expelled the archbishop and many of the other priests, and suppressed all of the convents. The religious orders were never revived, except in Guatemala after the Conservative victory of 1839. Then they continued to exercise a dominant influence until the revolution of 1871, after which the government again suppressed them and took radical measures to destroy the influence of the secular clergy. In the other countries, the priests continued to play a small part in politics usually as the allies of the Conservative party, but at present their influence can hardly be said to be important. In spiritual as well as in temporal affairs the church had now almost entirely lost hold on the people. Many of the women are still very devout, but the men, especially among the upper classes, are for the most part frankly irreligious. In the country districts, few of the churches can support a priest, and religious observances are confined to prayer meetings, led and participated in by women, and the rather licentious celebration of holy days. Among the priests, many of whom are foreigners, there are some who lead an irreproachable life, but many others, especially in poorer countries, do much to harm the church by their scandalous conduct. There are a few missionaries from England and the United States, but Protestantism is so utterly unsuited to the temperament of the people that they have made few converts.

. . . The Central American has, nevertheless, many good qualities. He is good to his family, and deeply susceptible to lofty ideals and patriotic impulses.

Now I, Moroni, write somewhat as seemeth me good; and I write unto my brethren the Lamanites. . . . And when ye shall receive these things, I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost; and by the power of the Holy Ghost, ye may know the truth of all things.—Moroni 10: 1, 4, 5.

Nevertheless, my work shall go forth, for, inasmuch as the knowledge of a Savior has come unto the world, through the testimony of the Jews, even so shall the knowledge of a Savior come unto my people, and to the Nephites, and the Jacobites, and the Josephites, and the Zoramites, through the testimony of their fathers; and this testimony shall come to the knowledge of the Lamanites, and the Lemuelites, and the Ishmaelites . . . that they may believe the gospel and rely upon the merits of Jesus Christ, and be glorified through faith in his name, and that through their repentance they might be saved.—Doctrine and Covenants 2: 6. (Also 3: 10; 49: 5; 29: 2.)

The promises of the Lord stand sure. We are living in the most wonderful age of all, an age when unbelief is devouring the world. May the church escape its frightful grasp. It is that day when we can look to the west and see the sun setting on Gentile reign, and look to the east and see the sun rising on the day of Jacob's redemption.

THE TRUE VINE

[The following is an extract from a sermon by Elder A. C. Barmore, delivered in the Saints' church at Santa Rosa, California, and reported by the Santa Rosa Republican on February 10, 1919.—EDITORS.]

The basis for my remarks this morning will be found in our Savior's parable found in John 15: 1-8. It is my purpose to call attention to two of its salient features. To begin with: We are living at a time when the necessity of connection with the visible church is called in question. Some would, therefore, have us believe that in some mystical sense we may become branches of the "true vine." In other words, it is contended that this affiliation does not mean an alliance with organized Christianity. Hence we often hear the affirmation: "I am as good a Christian as those who belong to the church." This, of course, puts "ethical Christianity" in the place of what some would call "ecclesiastical Christianity." It is true a man may live a clean moral life without church membership, but is he entitled to call himself a "Christian"? The Socialists, for the most part, accept "ethical Christianity," and yet repudiate the churches. Is this claim consistent? Was not Christianity first conceived of as an organized movement? Jesus said: "I will build my church." In the face of his words shall we now say the church is non-essential?

THE BODY OF CHRIST

The church is often referred to in the New Testament as "the body of Christ." Paul, in his vision while en route to Damascus, heard Jesus say: "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" Saul was not persecuting Christ in person; he was persecuting the church, but when the body suffered on earth the head from heaven complained. This very close connection between Christ and the church is evident through the New Testament. To be in Christ meant to be in the church. Twice in the writings of Paul we have the words, "baptized into Christ." By this process we become members of the family in which Christ is the Elder Brother. Some may assert that all that is essential to salvation may be realized in Christ apart from the church, but this is certainly not the doctrine of the New Testament.

APOSTLES BAPTIZED CHRISTIANS

This view originated, possibly, from the practice of providing a kind of vestibule for the church in which new converts were kept while in preparation for church membership. They were kept there for a varying period of time and were also called by various names. In the Middle Ages they were called "catechumens," in modern times "probationers." Such a course was unknown in New Testament times. In those days salvation was not obtainable in the world, nor in any half-way house, but in the church itself. The apostles baptized the first Christians immediately on satisfactory evidence of conversion. Of the Pentecostal converts we read: "Then they that gladly received the word were baptized, and the same day there were added to them about three thousand souls." The Philippian jailer "was baptized, he and all his, straightway, the same hour of the night" in which their conversion occurred. The Ethiopian eunuch was baptized as soon as he could intelligently and sincerely say, "I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God."

ENGRAFTED INTO TRUE VINE

By baptism we are initiated into Christ and his church. In other words, by that principle we are engrafted into the "true vine." This is the reason baptism is referred to as "for the remission of sins." It is not because water washes away sin, for that is impossible, nor does obedience to this ordinance as a commandment per se accomplish this result. Baptism celebrates the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ, and for that reason alone remits sin. In other language: We are baptized into Christ and his body, the church. By this process we come into contact with his blood which circulates within his body, hence the remission of sins. To say that we can be converted and pardoned entirely outside of the church is to affirm that his blood circulates outside his body, which would certainly be an anomaly.

What does it mean to "abide in Christ"? It must mean, to use his own language, for "my words to abide in you." Or, to quote Saint John in his second epistle, it means to "abide in the doctrine of Christ." Does this mean loyalty to Christ in an isolated, ostracized sense? No, to "abide in Christ" means to remain within the limits of Christian fellowship.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

NEW LIGHTS ON CHILDHOOD

[The following was inadvertently omitted from our issue of last week. It should be read as the conclusion of the article on pages 229-231 on the above subject.—EDITORS.]

UNITY OF THE SOUL

Ninth. This brings us to another, and in some respects the most important of all views of childhood. According to old ideas the human soul is simple, like a chemical element, for otherwise it would be dissolved at death into its more elemental parts. No ancient conception has been more completely reversed by modern psychology. The soul is now conceived of as being indefinitely complicated, as a compound made up of innumerable elements—old, new, high, low, animal, human, conscious, and unconscious. Modern man inherits every important trait in his pedigree back almost to the beginning of his development. Thus the soul is a moving equilibrium, in which one part now stimulates, now represses, another. There are endless conflicts and discords; moreover, there are moods, spells of rest, fatigue passivity, and activity, modes of life for home, other modes for inmates, and still others for the public; and in addition to all the strains from heredity, there is the powerful influence exerted by modern life, with its extreme and growing complexity.

Thus one of the deepest, if not the very deepest, of all the problems of the soul to-day is to maintain its unity, to avoid splitting into dual or multiple personalities, to prevent conflict between the warring factors within, to see that all the powers in it are developed—those that are low, spiritualized, those that are high, kept unimpeded. The ultimate end of education, of religion, and of science itself, then, is to organize the multitude of disparate and often warring elements in us into a civilized and regulated whole, where all shall be free and where all shall cooperate.

All mental and nervous invalids are people who are merely more or less disorganized, at war with themselves, in danger of breaking up. Their trouble is now often traced to a sense of inferiority that is bred in children in both family and school. Passivity and docility have helped to loosen the bonds that tie their traits together. For adults the most unifying of all things is the power of occasionally reverting to childhood, not so much recalling its scenes and feeling again its impulses and realizing its wishes. For those souls in danger of dissolution, therefore, to revert to childhood is to converge toward unity.

The lives of great men that have been studied seem to prove that the first few years of life, which the adult cannot remember, are fateful for health or disease, virtue or vice, success or failure. The younger the child is, the more is he the father of the man to be. The infantile in us makes up the unconscious, which largely constitutes our instincts and feelings. Consciousness or mind, as we generally understand it, is like an iceberg, only one ninth of which is above water, and which, often in the teeth of winds above follows the current of the denser medium.

The laws of the unconscious, and of the emotional life in general, are very different from those of the conscious mind. They have their own logic and their own psychology, and their processes can often be got at only indirectly; but things in this vast submerged region of the soul go by opposites. Fear and love often oscillate, each in turn now above, now below, the threshold, so that reversal into the opposite is a constant law.

Education has hitherto known little about what to do with those vaster parts of the soul; but now we understand that not one must be suppressed. Fear, which may breed the basest superstitions and make us cowards, must be sublimated to awe, interest, reverence, so that it is no longer a malign but a benign power. Although anger may be bestial, ferocious, and criminal, it should not be repressed, but should be refined and directed with its full force against the great evils of life and society. The same is true of love, which may be given the basest or most divine expressions.

This sin and evil are only the undeveloped or unrefined metal out of which all the best things of life are made. It is all a question of conserving, strengthening, and directing the crude energies of human nature. The practical psychologist is like a hydraulic engineer who builds an irrigation system, so that waters that went to waste in floods are stored, and rightly distributed to produce harvests and to turn the mills of industry.—G. Stanley Hall, President of Clark University, in The Youth's Companion, October 28, 1915.

WE ARE BECOMING A NATION OF TEA TOPERS

The National City Bank of New York has made a special investigation for the purpose of ascertaining whether the consumption of tea was increasing or diminishing. The result was the discovery that tea drinking is increasing in the United States at an alarmingly rapid rate. Between 1909 and 1918 the annual consumption of tea rose from 115,000,000 to 151,000,000 pounds, an increase of three and one half per cent per annum, or 4,000,000 pounds.

Estimating the average individual consumption of tea drinkers to be two fifths of an ounce per diem, the total number of tea drinkers in the United States is about 16,000,000, an army of drug addicts whose number is increasing annually by the addition of 425,000 new recruits.

Search for the cause of this surprisingly rapid increase of tea drinkers has led to the discovery that the increase of tea drinking has paralleled the decrease in the use of alcoholic liquors. It appears, indeed, that the American people are exchanging alcohol for tea. The question at once arises, Will the nation gain or lose by swapping rum drinking for tea tipping?

Of course the answer must depend upon the amount consumed in both cases. A little tea would of course be less damaging than much alcohol. On the other hand, a little alcohol would be less harmful than much tea. In equal quantities, tea is decidedly worse than beer. The amount of poison in a pint of strong tea is greater than that in an equal amount of beer, not by weight, but in physiologic effect. A man could drink without showing evidence or intoxication more pints of beer than of strong tea.

We shall not be satisfied to trade off whisky intemperance for tea tipping. Drug addiction of all sorts is to be frowned upon and suppressed. A tea drunkard is a nervous wreck—neurasthenic, unsettled, depressed, sleepless, inefficient, and haunted by morbid fears.

China, with the aid of the American Tobacco Company, has exchanged the opium pipe for the cigarette. The greater convenience of the cigarette compared with the pipe, and the vigorous propaganda of the selling agents, have fastened the cigarette habit upon a greater number of persons than ever were addicted to the use of opium.

English bayonets helped to establish the opium habit in China. America has given China the cigarette just as she was rising and shaking herself free from the slavery to the Indian poppy. And China may yet even up the scales by making us a nation of tea tipplers.

When King Alcohol is finally dethroned, we shall have to begin another campaign against tobacco and tea and coffee, so that we may be free from drug addiction of all kinds.—Good Health, February, 1919.

WHOLE WORLD SENSES UNIVERSAL KINSHIP

"There is no byway to grace, no walled highway on which the favorites of God may travel in their quest for bliss," said Tom Williams of Los Angeles, California, in his lecture at the Allen Theater last night.

Mr. William's subject was "A model church." He said: "The old idea of sect and isolated service is in the discard. The church of yesterday extorted tribute, impelled obedience, and commanded service from humanity. The church of to-day and to-morrow and for all of the to-morrows yet to come exists solely for the purpose of serving humanity and thus honoring God.

"The dominant mission of the church is to be of service to men and women in the here and now; to help solve the social, moral, and political problems which absorb the passion and purpose of men. The recluse, the cloister, isolated service, and self-exaltation are relics of a bygone age. The approach to God is through Gethsemane and Calvary. The Christ in Jesus was revealed when he fed the hungry multitude, healed the lame, the halt, and the blind, forgave moral lapses, loved the sinner, though he loathed the sin. It was his divinity which led him to have communion with Samaritans and publicans.

"The inspiring purpose whereby men of all religions and men who profess no religion forget imaginary boundary lines of creed and cult and unite in one common purpose to raise a million dollars for the hitherto despised Samaritan—the Salvation Army—demonstrates the spirit of the new age. All praise and commendation for the great Canadian spirit and purpose.

"Good results have come out of this cruel world war. The whole world is sensing the universal kinship. The brotherhood of man looms high in the horizon—the brotherhood of man through which only the fatherhood of God is revealed."—Toronto World, February 3, 1919.

"Bible has stood test. God, in every age, has inspired men and nations. He has moved the heart and mind of man to lofty purpose, and exalted service," said Tom Williams, of Los Angeles, California, at the Allen Theater last night. "The Bible has stood the test, it is coming into its own. Its sublime truths grip as never before."—Toronto Evening Telegram, January 27, 1919.

REESTABLISHING THE HEBREW NATION

[The following from the pen of a veteran editorial writer, appearing in a county newspaper of an adjoining county, is typical of the views of a great many people regarding the above subject. Grounded as we are in our well-founded belief in the restoration of Israel, it is well to keep in mind that most people are not of the same opinion as ourselves on this matter. As people come to crystalize their unaided human conclusions on the subject the result is often similar to the following.—EDITORS.]

In our theoretical peace talks in the prospect of the final settlement of national identities and bounds, a good deal is being said about the reorganization and reestablishment of the Hebrews in Palestine. An organization of Hebrews, known as the "Zion Movement" is working to that end. Its thoughts and efforts are based on the supposition that the geographical and climatic conditions in that land are just the same as when the Hebrew nation was at the height of its prosperity. This is a mistaken idea. The changes wrought by time and national revolutions are immense and radical. It amounts to an entire change in conditions. It was then a fruitful soil and deemed the "garden of the Lord." Since many wars and plagues have swept over it and left it a desolation and desert. Its forests have been destroyed and its soil swept to the valleys and thence to the ocean. It is now a barren land and the victim of the "drying up process" coming to all that land. And the worst of all, the natural and inevitable process of "drying up" cannot be resisted and the former conditions restored. The hand of fate lies heavy upon it. Like the "Great Sahara Desert" it will end in helpless desolation. To decide otherwise and to strive to that end is striving against the forces of nature. It is closely allied to the folly of fighting against God. The slow making of desert, and its creeping over what was once the habitable part of the earth, has gone on so fast that history may see and record it. On the south coast of the Mediterranean Sea, really on the edge of the Sahara desert, may still be found the remains of mighty aqueducts that once carried water to Carthage when in her glory. The streams in that region to-day could not fill similar aqueducts. The fact is that the land is "drying up." Palestine, now largely a desert, has really dried up since Old Testament Bible times. To deed the country to the Hebrews for national purposes would be tantalizing them with something useless and that cannot be made useful. Their leaders will be smart enough to scorn the proposal. It is all generous talk with no generosity in it. It is an impractical and deceptive suggestion, and let us hope that the "Jews," who have been "scattered and peeled" will not be deceived thereby.—J. H. Tedford, in Mount Ayr Record-News, February 19, 1919.

JEWS CHANGE FAMILY NAMES

[In The American Hebrew for January 3 we note the following comments. It is well to note that very few of these family names as originally given are Hebrew at all, but they are Teutonic. The Jew has proven very adaptive and has taken on in this way much of the color of his surroundings, while maintaining his distinction.—EDITORS.]

An interesting phenomenon of American Jewish life is the nom de guerre, the family name changed to exorcise the Teutonic curse. The transformations, in some instances, are truly marvelous. "Bernheimer," for example, as "Burten" is camouflaged beyond recognition. Who would be the rash person to assert that there is even a soupcion of "Cohn" in "Carno?" "Friedenreich" succumbs to "Fredericks," "Hurwitz" to "Harwood" or "Hewitt," "Heidelberg" to "Hyde," "Mandelbaum" to "Manley," "Posner" to "Parker," "Rosenberg" to "Rhodes," "Rosenthal" to "Rodney," "Schwartz" to "Shore," "Sundheimer" to "Sumner," and "Weingarten" to "Wingate." This is an imposing array of chemically transformed names showing a list of forefathers never dreamed of in the Pentateuch. The children of Israel came, saw, and conquered. Those who beheld with regret the movement of an earlier day to oust patriarchal "Moses" and ancestral "Isaac" for the pseudo-literary implications of "Milton" and "Irving" now have a chance to shed a few more unavailing tears. Professional anti-Semites, both Jewish and non-Jewish, will have greater difficulty than ever in compiling the index expurgatorious of clubs. Seekers after the easy charity dollar will have to circularize the Burkes and McDonalds as well as the Cohens and Levines lest even one good greenback escape. For, alas, "Burke" may be "Berkowitz" a la mode and "McDonald" only "Moseson" souffle.

"Love, the solvent. The ethical code of Jesus Christ is becoming the Magna Charta of nations," said Tom Williams at the Allen Theater last night. "Jesus was right," said he. "Life consists not in what we take in but in what we give out. Do you wish to be happy? Then try to make others happy. Do you wish to be free? Then dedicate your life to secure freedom for others. If every book in the universe were lost and all the Bible destroyed save the sermon on the mount as a basis for reconstruction we could rehabilitate civilization. Love is the great solvent. It is the one thing which can bind men and nations together. The real test of love is service for others."—Toronto World, February 10, 1919.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5026 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Still More Letters

AKRON, OHIO.

My Dear Sisters: It is indeed a pleasure and a help to me to read the articles in the Woman's Auxiliary column of the HERALD. It causes my heart to rejoice to see the women of the church engaged in such grand work.

I have three boys under ten years of age. My earnest desire is to start them right, and train them so they will grow up to be good and noble men in God's church and kingdom. I realize to be able to do this, I need not only help from God, but from my sisters as well. Those who have time for study and those who have had experience can be of so much help to us younger mothers.

Not long ago I had the privilege of hearing a very good speaker in one of our public schools on the subject of proper reading matter for our children, and the proper stories to tell them. He said many good, helpful things, one of which was a reminder that children under five years old retain eighty per cent of what they see, and only twenty per cent of what they hear. So parents should be extremely careful of the example they set before their little ones.

My desire is to see the auxiliary work develop, and to see the mothers, the young mothers who are just starting out, take a deep interest in it, and realize more fully the responsibility of motherhood. I want to be faithful in living the gospel as I understand it, and to perform creditably my duty as wife and mother—in a manner which shall be acceptable to my heavenly Father.

My prayers are ever for God's people and the advancement of his cause on earth.

Your sister in the faith,

BESSIE NEVILLE.

HAMILTON, MISSOURI, February 21, 1919.

Dear Sister: I am writing in response to your invitation through the HERALD, not so much for publication as in hopes that I may receive some ideas from my sisters which would be helpful to us.

We have had a society organized for three years. We have met every two weeks when possible, in the homes of our members. Our main object has been to help carry on branch, Sunday school, and Religio expenses, and to aid each missionary who comes into our midst. At our meetings we piece comfort tops, and tack comforts, do crocheting, etc. We have had suppers occasionally, and have been fairly successful so far as finance is concerned. Now some of us are becoming dissatisfied with this alone, and it has been suggested that we join the Auxiliary. So far this has not seemed attractive enough to have much effect, but we are still hoping that as the sisters know more of the general work, they will become enthused with it.

I am the mother of three small children, and I feel a great responsibility resting upon me. I realize that I could get a great deal of good advice and help through being associated with the active workers in the Auxiliary.

We are all farm women, and have much to do; but we feel that the time we could give to some good course of study would be well spent even if we all must do it in our own homes. What can the sisters suggest to us? How can we interest all? What is the most helpful line of study to take up?

In gospel bonds, your sister,

MABLE FORD.

OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA.

Dear Sisters: In answer to the call of our president I wish to meet with the sisters in behalf of the local at this place. We have labored under difficulties the last year, on account of the war and its attending circumstances, and, later, the epidemic of influenza which stopped all meetings for some time. A number of our members were afflicted, but we are thankful to record that no deaths occurred in our circle.

The sisters did a noble work in helping to raise our portion of the Christmas offering, and we all feel greatly encouraged at the successful outcome of the efforts in this direction.

We are determined to press forward, and unite in carrying on every good work that comes to our hands, so far as willing hearts and consecrated labor can accomplish it.

SR. A. Y. YOUNG, Corresponding Secretary.

PLEASANTON, IOWA.

Dear Editor: Noticing the request of our president in HERALD of February 5, I write of conditions at this place. They are not as encouraging at all times as we could wish, but we are struggling away. We were organized as an auxiliary a year ago last summer, but our president moved away soon after, and we have not as yet found one to fill her place.

A superintendent of the Oriole work was selected, but so far not much has been done in that direction, the one in charge being in rather poor health, and very busy with other responsibilities.

We desire to see the women's work of the church grow rapidly, and keep pace with the onward movement noted elsewhere. God has been good to me. Pray for the Pleasanton Branch and Auxiliary.

Yours in love,

CLARA MCNEIL.

LAMONI, IOWA.

Auxiliary Workers: Having entered on the new regime of the Woman's Auxiliary at the stake convention of January, 1918, we had anticipated quite a busy year. And it has been busy! Besides trying to keep pace with the new ideals of the organization, there have been constant demands on us for Red Cross and other war work. To these demands the women in the various parts of the stake have responded nobly and well.

We made our first duty of the year attendance at the general convention, which resulted in benefit and encouragement.

In June we attended the stake conference at Chariton, Iowa. A brief address on "Practical patriotism" was followed by a profitable discussion on "Women's war work," a goodly number participating with earnestness and enthusiasm. A meeting was called of the women from Hiteman, which resulted in their pastor, Brother William Wilson, organizing educational and relief and service departments in that branch.

In August the Auxiliary rendered a public program at the Lamoni Stake reunion, the organizer in charge. Interesting and forceful talks on educational lines (emphasizing in particular the child welfare work), and on practical conservation, were followed by animated and helpful discussions. At this reunion the "Orioles" and the "Temple Builders," under the direction of the general supervisors of that work, Sister Alice Burgess, and Sister Grace Thompson, enjoyed many activities together, and aided very materially in the success of the reunion.

Responding to invitation, we have met in joint session with Sunday school and Religio stake officers four times during the year, to arrange programs. These officers have extended courtesy, and generously shared with us the time allotted to programs, also bearing our part of the expense involved in the printing of programs. For this we express our appreciation.

In September we addressed the Saints at Andover, on "Practical hygiene." In February we met in conference with the stake presidency.

At the recent stake conference held in Lamoni, the Auxiliary held forth on February 13. At the afternoon session, a general explanation of the ultimate aims of the organization was followed by a talk on "Reconstruction," by Sister Lena Lambert Graham, in which she observed: "The unrest which is so general as a result of the war must be met and overcome to a great extent by the women in the homes." Discussion in regular round table fashion proved very inspirational, prompt, and enthusiastic, part being taken by most of the women present. Our experience is proving the truth of this quotation: "Don't do things for the people, but have activities by the people. The salvation of a community depends upon using its own forces to reconstruct itself."

At the evening session the "Oriole" work was clearly and definitely explained by its director, Sister Thompson. Sister May Needham very entertainingly told about what the "Temple Builders" are doing. This latter, comparatively new department has a membership here in Lamoni of 52, with Sister Estella Wight acting as "Mother," and Sister Needham as "Captain." Bishop Carmichael talked to us of "Woman's work," as he sees it, and we found much enlightenment and encouragement therein.

The interest and enthusiasm prevailing in these recent meetings have characterized them as the best of the kind in the stake. For this we are thankful, and our prayer is that every woman may become actively engaged in this important department of the church.

With hopes for our ultimate success,

SUSAN L. HAYER, Organizer.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Toronto Church News

Each day witnesses an appreciable gain in church work in Toronto. We are much more than holding our own. The enemy is discomfited and ill at ease. We remain calm and unperturbed. We are sure of our ground. We have great reason to rejoice.

We have succeeded beyond our fondest expectations. We have done what the enemy prophesied we would not and could not do. The credit for all this is due to our Father in heaven who has wondrously wrought in our favor.

The excellent publicity which we have been able to secure in the leading newspapers of Toronto has been of incalculable benefit. We have had a number of write-ups, interviews, and reports of lectures. This has enabled us to get the facts before the people. As a result the extreme prejudice which has been hitherto aroused is abating, and leading men and women of the city are investigating our position.

As a result of this publicity and the nature of our arguments in our articles in the newspapers and the bulletins which we have been issuing, Mr. Evans has been compelled to reveal his true position. Only recently, in a public lecture in Shea's Theater, he renounced the Book of Mormon and ridiculed the first vision of Joseph Smith the Seer. He has attacked the Inspired Translation of the Scriptures, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the latter-day work from its very inception.

This makes our future work easy. The church and the public know where Mr. Evans stands. His appeal to prejudice and passion; his attempt to arouse the spirit of persecution is reacting. Once a man resorts to misrepresentations he must continue and enlarge or surrender. All of the people cannot be fooled all of the time. It pays to stay by the facts in every instance.

As I review the work of the year and contemplate the conditions obtaining last spring with the situation to-day, I am constrained to realize that God has been with us. Despite the most bitter and concentrated opposition in the history of the Reorganized Church our work is in a much better condition than for a number of years past.

The membership of the church have an intelligent conception of the underlying principles of our work. Their allegiance is to the church. They are united and working for the establishment of Zion. The Spirit of God is working with them. Liberty and fellowship is evident on every hand. Persecution is having the effect of strengthening their faith in the church.

We started our theater meetings on November 26, and have continued every Sunday night since. Our audiences have ranged from eight hundred to one thousand, most of whom have been nonmembers of the church. The interest has been excellent from the very beginning and increasing nightly. The meeting lasts from 7.30 p. m. to 9.30 and sometimes 10 p. m. Nearly everyone remains until the close of the service.

The questions are of a high order, showing research and thought. Our collections have been good and we are meeting our expenses, although they are much increased over former years. We will come out nicely. We have made many friends. The enemy has been, and is, disconcerted. The latter-day work in Toronto has been advanced during 1918 over former years.

We have not dealt in pyrotechnics; we have not played to the galleries. We have not appealed to the credulity and superstition of the people. We have not attempted anything which savored of vaudeville and burlesque. We have been content to do our part, each and all working, not for the ascendancy of self, but for the glory of God and the furtherance of the gospel truth.

Brother Arthur Koehler, of Maine, has been with us for the past few weeks, assisting our chorister and helping to train the singers for more efficient service. He will remain until the close of the theater meetings.

Brother I. A. Smith and family have been sojourning in Toronto for the past two months. Brother Smith has been looking after certain church interests and is happy and confident.

Brethren Albert Carmichael, Mark Siegfried, and Charles Fry were recent visitors. While they only remained a few days yet their presence gave new impetus, and the Canadians were delighted with the identity of interest which these brethren displayed.

Brother George E. Harrington during his incumbency as district president has covered the entire district, visiting each branch. He is making good. The Saints are realizing his efficiency.

The members of the local priesthood are doing good work in conducting different missions and assisting locally. The Humber Bay and Davisville Saints have loyally supported the theater meetings.

The manner in which the membership has taken hold of the work is commendable. The sisters post three hundred small window cards in the different store windows each week. The brethren see that one hundred large bills are posted in different parts of the city. In addition to this we have put out twenty thousand door hangers and distributed thirty thousand pamphlets. Our year's work speaks for itself.

One by one the members who followed R. C. Evans out of the church are returning. There were six who withdrew from his church last week. Those who have returned are rejoicing in their deliverance from deception and error. The members who remained loyal to the church are happy and thankful that God opened their eyes, thus sparing them much mortification and disappointment.

In all the years of my ministry I have never experienced a moment when I felt that the truth could not be successfully defended. I have met all kinds of opposition, but God has been good and his Spirit has been sufficient for every experience.

The Gospel Progressive

Jesus said there would be foolish virgins among the wise.

In my experience in the church as a minister, I have often wondered at the attitude taken by some of our people (ministers as well as the laity) in regard to new thoughts and ideas, the spiritual applications of the Scriptures applied to our lives, as well as other things mentioned here. Too often I find many who seem to think that anyone who offers an advanced thought, something a little out of the ordinary line or rule laid down by our fathers at once is branded as heretic or apostate from the true religion.

Some are always ready to find fault because the thought presented was new to them. They either do not weigh the evidence or they are not capable of doing so. Possibly some of us have made the literal application of the Scriptures and forgotten the spiritual, when both should be applied.

Some say that the standard of evidence is that which is written, and that only. Personally I do not accept that which is written to be all the evidence; to me it is only a part. Christ is my standard, and the operation of his Spirit brings to my mind thoughts heretofore unborn in me, but by reason of his love he hath unfolded higher and nobler thoughts. My mental vision has enlarged as I have approached the object sought—Christ life. My powers of description have enlarged, and thus I have been better able to give a more complete story of God's love.

We do not all see through the same pair of eyes. God in the beginning created man and endowed him with the powers of understanding, but if we do not use that power we will be the loser, as well as those around us. The glory of God is intelligence, and if we wish to live close to God we must try to apply the attributes that will cause us to be like him.

Paul said to Timothy: "Study to show thyself approved." Study what? The Scriptures only? No; all good books.

Being finite we draw from the source of the Infinite through faith and prayer and study, with an open mind and a desire to progress in the great work of God, ever remembering that others outside of the church have desires to serve, and God gives to them light according to their faith, and they in turn speak words of truth, which when observed by us, will help us to advance to the goal—Christ life. Remember, every good thought comes from God. In my observation of the life of Christ, he taught the people many things in advance of their then present law. For instance, "Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you." Now the question is, Did God give both of these commandments—one to hate the enemy, and the other to love the enemy? Ask yourself the question: Does God reverse himself? If so, then he might say, Thou shalt have but one wife, and a little later say, Thou shalt take ten, when the truth is God did not give the first-mentioned, to hate thine enemy. That was the tradition that had crept in among the children of Israel, and Jesus corrected it, like he had to correct many other things.

The words of men too often are accepted, instead of looking to the true revelation of God to man, which is Jesus Christ.

The Jews taught their children that they should hate their enemy, and they were the custodians of God's law, but they had given place to error; false doctrine had crept in, and had become generally accepted by the people of the church. The Jews patted themselves on the backs and said they were the people of God, the seed of Abraham and heirs of salvation. In their conceit they could not understand the great love of God, and thought that salvation was for them only. To them all was lost outside of their little circle. They saw no hope for the Gentiles.

I wonder sometimes if some of us haven't gotten down in the same rut, and say we are the Saints of God; we are God's people, and the only people with whom God is well pleased; putting the application to individuals, when God spoke to us as a church and not as individuals.

Over this very class of people Jesus wept, and said, O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou who killest the prophets and stonest them that are sent unto thee, how oft would I have gathered thy children together even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wing, but you would not, and your house is left unto you desolate.

An obstinate people, self-satisfied, they were right and they knew it. Bigoted, they could see no good in the publican, who bowed before God and smote himself on the breast, and would not so much as lift up his eyes toward heaven, and said: "Lord, have mercy on me a sinner."

They knew nothing of God's love toward others; to them God only encircled their little nation, and all others were lost.

I fear like the Pharisee of old, our eyes are so steadily watching the faults of others that we fail to see our own.

It has been the constant admonition of the Lord for his people to come up higher; wash your hands of the mud you have been throwing at your neighbor, clean your own hands of wrongdoing, come up on a higher level than your neighbor, so he can see you, that you are clean and pure, and he will want to be like you.

In June, 1834, the Lord spoke through the Prophet, Joseph Smith, jr., Doctrine and Covenants 102:2: "Behold, I say unto you, Were it not for the transgression of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh Saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom, and Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself; and my people must need be chastened until they learn obedience if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer."

The above is plain language, and need not be misunderstood.

Do you know that if Zion could have been redeemed in 1834 by the Saints obeying the law, that it could be redeemed in 1919 by obedience to that same law?

Hence, we must be living below what God requires of us. We have all been baptized, but we have failed to put on Christ to the degree that is required of us.

This can only be done by adding to our nature that attribute, love, God-in-us.

Trusting God will bless you, and help you to be counted worthy of the celestial kingdom,,

I am your struggling brother,
WICHITA, KANSAS. E. L. BARRACLOUGH.

Northern California District Conference

---

The district conference met in the Saints' chapel on Danvers Street, in San Francisco, on February 22, following the Sunday school and Religio conventions, District President C. W. Hawkins and his counselors presiding. Although the weather was extremely disagreeable (California rainy season), there was a goodly number of enthusiastic delegates from all parts of the district present. All branches and about all the ministry reported—with encouraging color.

The retiring of good, faithful Bishop Parkin, and the partial year's report of our new and younger bishop, Edward Ingham, with the calling of two young hopefuls in the ministerial line—Cecil Hawley and E. A. Opsul for counselors, is a milestone on the journey of the Northern California District life, emphasizing the fact that relentless time is announcing his decrees and opening and shutting the doors of opportunity to the Saints.

Without giving items, it is pleasing to state that the financial phase of the work in these parts is in a healthy condition. And the Saints have the same confidence in the worth and integrity of the new financial officials, as well as love, as they had in and for those who, because of age, are retiring. It is splendid for the Saints that such conditions exist.

The election of officers resulted in but slight change of personnel. A fine picture-projecting machine was purchased, and ample provision has been made by the Sunday school, Religio, and church for the payment of it. In fact, but a small balance remains at present writing. There is a great improvement in gospel literature distributing this year; pieces distributed reaching into the thousands.

The business, as well as the social and spiritual exercises were characterized with a spirit that evidenced the right kind of a life among the delegates in the home branches.

The royal welcome and hospitable provision made for the visitors was an inspiration in itself. San Francisco knows who to select for committee work along that line. And yet they may have many more equally competent.

Elders Richard Bullard and A. C. Barmore were the only ones present not considered local. They were heard from and appreciated.

A splendid rendering of a cantata by the joint choir under the leadership of the district chorister, Sister Christiana Waller, was the feature of the Sunday morning service. Other features were enjoyable, and other names could be mentioned, but when it comes to the mentioning of names in a little write-up of a conference, the strain upon the discriminating ability of the present scribe would be too tense for a just particularization. We therefore choose the "better part of valor" and leave it all to the recording angel to announce sometime in the eve of the first resurrection. Kindly be present.

Next conference to be held at the reunion, probably in August.

Minnesota Conference

Knowing that many of the members of our district were prevented from attending our midwinter conference at Minneapolis, February 15 and 16, I thought that by sending an account to the HERALD and Ensign they would know that our assembling together was profitable.

There were in attendance some from Chetek, Wisconsin, Two Harbors, Clitherall, Frazee, and other outlying districts.

The members of the priesthood visiting were Patriarch J. W. Wight, Leroy Colbert, president of Chetek Branch, and those from the other branches of our district.

Friday was the day set apart for Sunday School Association. This day's work was introduced by a prayer service, after which the business session followed—and election of officers. H. M. Curtis was reelected district president, and so far as can be remembered about the same officers were the choice for another term.

A very successful institute session followed in the afternoon, which was so thorough in its nature that it brought forth a surprising compliment from Brother J. W. Wight, in which he was heard to say that it was equal to that which was had at the General Conventions of the Association.

Friday night all were entertained with a pictorial review of stereopticon pictures of the life of our Savior. Accompanying these splendid views was heard the fine singing of Sisters Ruth DeLapp and Alice Kress. After the entertainment, ice cream, and plenty of it, was served in the basement of the church, and at the conclusion of the social many comic valentines were given out to those present which was in keeping with the date, February 14, and which afforded laughter for all.

Saturday was a day of business sessions for all departments. However, the day ended with a splendid sermon by Brother Wight.

Sunday morning, we again listened to our brother speak, and after this the local Sunday school gave a neat program at which many were promoted into higher classes. The afternoon sacrament service like all the prayer services was a success and a spiritual stimulant to all. Brother Leroy Colbert spoke in the afternoon to a good audience, and we remember the good advice given. At 6.30 p. m. Religio held an interesting session, followed by a good program which ended with a parliamentary drill, Brother J. W. Wight presiding. Much fun was experienced during this event.

The preaching at 8 p. m. was by Brother Wight, which was of a high order, and a good-sized audience was present. A collection was taken at this service and enough was received to cover our entire expenses, thanks to all that contributed.

Many patriarchal blessings were given, and all went home greatly repaid for time and money spent at this conference. Brother Wight remained and preached until the middle of the week, following which was a fatherly blessing to our branch, and the Minnesota conference will go down to the benefit and profit of all concerned.

Yours for victory,

E. H. BENNETT.

Independence Items

We always have large crowds present at the preaching meetings, and all appear to be unitedly happy at their close.

Surely there is little room for agnostics or unbelievers at the Stone Church.

While noting the agnostic tendency of the religious world, we may cite a statement of one of our modern professors—the Dean of Lincoln. He tells us there is at present a tremendous sensation in London's clerical world over the story of the garden of Eden, the flood, and the creation of man, and remarks, "No man is able to charge agnosticism against one using common sense in the interpretation of the scheme of ancient mythology."

Well for us, dear Saints, we have been born and bred in this marvelous work and a wonder, and can sing with the Spirit, "God moves in a mysterious way, his wonders to perform."

Lately we listened to a good talk at the Temple Lot Branch by President F. M. Smith, in which he said, "There is abroad a breaking away from the standards of the word of God: there is the spirit of anarchy, and I wish not to sermonize but to talk about conditions in our midst, and to crystallize in a few words what is the great chief ideal to which we are working. We are to establish righteousness in the world, and not only to contend for our interpretation of the word of God, but for our individual ideas of right; and what a man believes to be right is worthy of our honor and respect.

"All the forces of the universe are controlled by the great Creator, and we have something to do to completely harmonize our lives with his will, and to stand for his code of ethics. We must take the broad view of our friend and neighbor. He is our brother.

"The work of the church is to develop social and religious consciousness, for we are all bound up together in the great plan and purposes of God. We are to keep open the path that leads us to him. He desires to speak to mankind; but man has closed up the channel of communication."

Our brother spoke also of spiritual gifts, and their diversities of operation. In closing he said: "We must consecrate our every energy to God's work and uncomplainingly go on, for it is only in this way we can succeed in our preparation for the coming of our Lord."

All departments of the work seem to be brightening up, and old and young are increasing their activities. New features are being weekly introduced in the Religio and Sunday school, the priesthood meetings, and Auxiliary circle. Work is gradually widening, while the tocsin "Reconstruction," heard on every hand, is being answered by even the youngest of the great army.

Brother Gould and his troop of Scouts, also the Sanitarium nurses, and the many good speakers at the Religio made things very interesting last week, and the program of the "winter institute" last Sunday was certainly an enjoyable affair. Brother John Lloyd is a fine leader in the Religio. Early prayer meetings, community singing under the leadership of Brother Russell, periods of instruction with programs brimful of wisdom and fraught with the experiences of true, active, and faithful Saints who are giving all they have and are to the building up and establishing the work of Zion—all helped to make the occasion one long to be remembered.

The active helpers on institute days were Brethren R. C. Russell, James F. Keir, F. M. McDowell, Albert L. Sanford, F. A. Russell, W. W. Smith, J. A. Koehler, and Sisters W. W. Smith, Edna Miller, Mollie Davis, and Brother and Sister George A. Gould. The evening address was excellent.

Although we have had to part with the company of some who have been endeared to us in the past, and sickness has invaded our ranks, we feel thankful for the many blessings vouchsafed to us and hope to be faithful and diligent in the days to come.

Yours in the faith,

ABBIE A. HORTON.

From a Philadelphia Saint Overseas

I take this method of letting my friends know of my whereabouts, inasmuch as it is almost a year since I have written to your valued paper.

I had the privilege of attending the district conference at Elk Mills last September, and inasmuch as that is the last meeting I have attended with the Saints I shall begin my history at that point.

I returned to Philadelphia from the conference strengthened physically and mentally, and better prepared to meet the duties I had to perform in the service. I returned to the receiving ship at Boston on September 5 and saw Sister Montgomery at Boston, she being the last Latter Day Saint that I have been able to see, although I have made searches on this side but without fruit. On September 6 I was transferred with a draft from Boston to Montreal, Canada, and arrived there on the morning of September 7, it being Sunday. It seems strange, but a large number of the moves that I have made have taken me over Sunday, but that is simply a peculiar thing about traveling under secret orders as most drafts are, or rather were, sent from place to place under confidential orders. Upon September 13, an unfortunate date by superstition, we left Montreal, laden with foodstuffs and a general cargo, arriving in Quebec the following day (Sunday). After securing some supplies at this place we proceeded on toward Sydney, Nova Scotia, arriving there several days later. After coaling and taking on a stock of stores, etc., we were ready for the overseas trip. I have forgotten to tell you what vessel I reported on but it was the United States Ship, Lake Pleasant, a 2,200-ton cargo vessel, built on the Great Lakes. Finally, on Sunday morning, at 6 a. m., September 22, the convoy set out from Sydney toward the great "Somewhere in Europe."

The trip was uneventful, and practically what might be called a good trip, as there was very little wind and storm, and all went well. An iceberg was sighted about half the way across, and finally the time drew near when we were arriving in the danger zone. Every precaution was observed to insure our safety, and all went well, so that finally the morning drew on when four destroyers were sighted. The night before had been rather stormy, but morning came on with a bright sun. The destroyers encircled us all the way in for two days, and then one morning we were surrounded with a large fleet of other destroyers, cruisers, mine sweepers, and several trawlers, which convoyed us to a point several miles out from the European coast. Here was the place where the convoy was wont to split, the French portion going into Brest and the British portion going toward the English Channel. The signals were displayed from the flagship, and soon we were in a different column under a different flagship heading in an opposite direction from the remainder of the convoy. Suddenly the warning whistle was heard in the other convoy, and the destroyers soon were on the spot discharging depth bombs, indicating that a U-boat had been sighted, and later, sunk.

The evening came on, and shortly after 6.30 p. m., Friday evening, October 4, a flashing light was to be seen as it shone across the waters. It was Ushant light, off the coast of France, not far from Brest. It was an indication that we were near France, the place that would probably be our home for the next few months at least. Shortly after midnight the entire convoy was safely anchored behind the nets in Brest harbor, and there we lay, under the starry sky, free from menace until the anchor should again be hoisted and we leave the safety of the harbor. The following day found us tugging at the anchor, awaiting orders which came in the form of notice to join the next southbound convoy and proceed to Rochefort, France, where we were to discharge our cargo. The following morning, October 6, we were in a convoy, and shortly after 4 a. m. we proceeded down the coast with a large convoy for the first stop, Quiberon Bay.

Arriving, after a stormy trip, at this place, we again anchored, and the same procedure followed the next morning and then the next, so that after anchoring off La Pallice and La Rochelle, we were on the last lap of the journey and had to go up a winding river, narrow and long. After an all-day trip we reached the town of Rochefort and tied up to the dock.

Thus had we come to the end of the first complete trip across. The place was new, the language was unknown, and the customs were odd, so that we had to talk more with our fingers for the first few days. A friend and I wanted to go to a barber's, and walking down the street we noticed the sign, "Coiffeur," indicating "Barber shop," we imagined, and entering we proved right. My friend had a slight (very slight) knowledge of French and I had a still slighter knowledge, but he knew that haircut was "Sh'ver," and with our hands we made the barber understand. Finishing the hair-cutting we pointed to our chins and he understood. I was the first victim, and sure did suffer. Instead of applying soap and all the things that we have become accustomed to at home, he unceremoniously daubed my face with a thin lather and then scraped. My face was sore, but the worst came when at the finish of the ordeal I was made to understand that they did not wash the lather off but that that was the customer's job, so he pointed out a basin, and I could make out the fact that it was up to me to remove the lather, which I did. After having a half hour's chat over the changing of American money into francs and centimes, he handed me what appeared to be several soap wrappers and cigarette coupons, but which in reality was French money.

This was my first experience in France, and of all words that I have used I think that the phrase so popular with the French people, "No compre," was the one I used most to indicate the fact that I did not comprehend. Later on I became better acquainted with the language so that I was able to purchase anything that I wanted, using the word, "Combien?" for "How much?" and the answer was always understandable—"cing contimes," "cinquant francs"; the first being five centimes or one cent, and the second being fifty francs, or about ten dollars.

Our stay at Rochefort was limited, so that after eight days we left there and proceeded in convoy, anchoring as before, until we reached Brest, and then instead of going westward we started the following morning across the English Channel. About half way across a disturbance was noticed in the water, and it proved that the dirigible that was flying along overhead with the convoy had sighted a sub, but by the time that we reached the position that took us where the sub had been there was nothing to be seen.

The convoy arrived in Penzance Bay, England, and anchored over night, proceeding the following morning for Wales. Barry Roads, Wales, was reached that night, and the following morning found us headed for Swansea, whither we had been directed. From Swansea I was transferred upon orders from the naval base at Cardiff to that place, which was about forty miles distant, and arrived in Cardiff, October 23, 1918. I was in Cardiff but eight days when I was again sent to another ship, the Kermoor, then at Barry, about twelve miles from Cardiff. I reported on board with the draft, and the vessel was placed in commission on November 1. The Kermoor now was entitled to place the initials "U. S. S.," meaning United States Ship, to her name, and thus the U. S. S. Kermoor, laden with coal, proceeded from Barry on November 5, across the Bristol and English Channels, and arrived in Brest on November 7. I went ashore for stores inasmuch as we were headed for Bordeaux, and that afternoon word came through that an armistice had been signed, upon which the population was filled with joy. Whistles were sounded and colored lights and rockets were sent far into the heavens, whilst the searchlights on the many ships in the harbor were crossing each other, indicating that the spirit of joy was not confined to any one locality. On November our thoughts were darkened when we got under way in a convoy and anchored all the way down the coast until we reached La Verdon Roads at the mouth of the Gironde, on the 11th. Our attention was attracted to guns firing in the harbor and also to the large display of colored bunting on the French ships at anchor. Several days later our orders came to proceed to Bordeaux, and after a several-hour trip up the Gironde River we arrived at the French docks and tied up, while stevedores soon began to unload the coal. Then the first authentic news came forth that an armistice had been signed, and Bordeaux was in a state of ecstasy. After a fortnight's stay at Bordeaux, we left for Barry again, and arrived in Barry, after traveling by ourselves with lights day and night, on the afternoon of November 28, Thanksgiving Day. Thus was this day spent at sea.

Numerous rumors always were to be heard on board, and daily some new "dope" was heard; some to the effect that we were to return to the States, and others that we had been designated as among those vessels that were to remain in foreign waters until all the business of the war had been settled. Mail was received at distant intervals, and the news received was of that variety that wanted all to return, but the word that we were to return was not to be heard, although it was expected daily. After lying in Barry several weeks, we received orders to take on coal and proceed to Saint Nazaire, France, which was done, arriving at Quiberon Bay, December 24, 1918. Orders were then received from the gunboat Marietta, at that place, that we were to return to Barry upon discharging our cargo, and that we would probably remain at anchor for several days at least, so that in accordance with this we were at anchor on Christmas Day, far from everything.

On December 28 orders came to proceed to Saint Nazaire, and finally, after a short run, we arrived and tied up to the docks at that place, which proved to be the muddiest place that could have been created. The visions of Sunny France had been dispelled soon after the first liberty party returned on board, but that did not affect the number going ashore, as all had or were able to borrow boots. Large numbers of American soldiers were to be seen here. The Y. M. C. A. and kindred organizations had large places here, but they were always loaded with army and navy men. However, it was better to go to the "Y" and be able to talk to some one, rather than remain on board all the time. The coal was unloaded and orders received in rapid succession, so that after some repairs had been completed we were loaded with 1,200 tons of material and ordered to Queenstown, Ireland, where we arrived this morning, after a trip that was nothing but stormy. Thus ends my narrative of where I have been, and answers the questions: "Where have you been?" "What have you been doing?" and "What places did you visit?"

I have made the acquaintance of many people over here, and have been much impressed with their simplicity. It is strange that the countries are so far behind, in our way of thinking, yet they get along. Wooden shoes are much in vogue in France on account of the shortage of leather, and

For General Conference

Again we are going to issue a daily edition of the HERALD to promptly and fully furnish the news and reports of the conference and convention sessions.

We assure our friends they will appreciate the service rendered in this manner, and believe we can even improve somewhat on the past record. Not only will the news be included to within an hour or less of going to press, but also many other interesting comments and sidelights with copious reports and summaries.

The first edition will be on the evening of the 7th, and continue daily except Sunday till the close of conference.

The old price is being maintained though material is costing double. Please order early—why not now?

they make much noise as the folks clatter down the street. I am glad that I have been permitted to come across, and I am sure that I would not exchange my experiences, although I do not think that I shall long to return to this side once I return to the States. It has been over three and a half months since I have been permitted to see any folks that attended our church, and I have longed in vain for the voice of some Latter Day Saint, but I suppose that I shall have to wait for these things.

I desire that the Saints might pray for me and remember me before the throne from time to time, in order that I might have the strength that is necessary to "carry on" in the grandest thing in the world, the latter-day gospel.

I send my heartiest wishes from across the seas, and pray that I might soon again be permitted to worship in the spirit of holiness with you in the house of the Lord.

Yours sincerely in the work of the Lord,

WILLIAM M. SAUTER.

SIDNEY, IOWA, February 20, 1919.

Editors Herald: Once more I write for your pages and wish to say that I rejoice in the gospel. I can say that I have felt a greater responsibility regarding the work; also a stronger interest toward the spreading of God's work, which must go to all nations.

As I have studied the word of God I have felt that if the Lord wants me to help bear the gospel message to the world, I will accept the call.

The Lord has permitted me to suffer many trials for some purpose which I do not know. However, may it be to his honor and glory.

Your brother in the gospel,

M. B. OLIVER.

JUNIATA, NEBRASKA, February 19, 1919.

Editors Herald: I love to read the HERALD each week, and it is the only preacher I have. We do not get to hear sermons very often. Brother Dowker preached at our house over a year ago, and that is the last sermon I have heard. However, I always read those in the HERALD.

We have had quite a siege of the influenza here this winter. Myself and two children were all down at the same time. There were three deaths in our little town here.

My health is very poor, and I have had some severe trials, but I am making an effort to live as my Savior would desire me to. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints, that I may live faithful and have a part in the first resurrection; also, that my children may obey the gospel. I have five children, and only one has been baptized.

I am one of the isolated ones, so dear Saints, please remember me and my family in your prayers. I am a widow and am in need of the prayers of God's people.

Yours in gospel bonds, EDNA BAY.

SANTA ROSA, CALIFORNIA, February 24, 1919.

Editors Herald: It is with pleasure I send you these lines as I wish to inform you of the state of the world in "good old California." To begin with: It was my privilege and pleasure to attend the conventions and conference held in San Francisco the 21st, 22d, and 23d instant. I did not attend all the sessions, for I arrived late and came back here to attend to my appointments. I returned because there were a number of nonmembers coming regularly and some of the Saints were coming better than hitherto. I did not wish to neglect this fresh manifestation of interest.

I am holding three Sunday preaching services and two during the week. I preach here twice on the Sabbath, and once at Windsor. We use a rented hall here, but the Saints at Windsor have a meeting place of their own. The members there belong to the Santa Rosa Branch. There are more members here but the attendance of both members and nonmembers is greater there.

The papers have given my efforts great publicity. The Republican prints a review of my Sunday sermon in its Monday issue. Both papers (the other is the Press Democrat) printed my addresses on Washington and Lincoln.

The conference was excellent. To me it was very encouraging.

EDGETTS, MICHIGAN, February 23, 1919.

Editors Herald: Just recently I have been reading the valuable pages of the HERALD. I find much on the subject of education, and I feel impressed to write a few words. I will benefit from the effort, if no one else does, for when our minds are centered on so great a subject as education, we cannot be the loser.

We have four boys and a little girl, all of whom are very precious to my wife and myself, and we want them to have an education. I realize that there are also other little boys and girls among the Saints who need education. Let us all work together.

The Lord says we should let our light shine that others may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven. Will we do this ignorantly or with learning? I thank God that we have a prophet who has undoubtedly seen the need of education and has approved of it.

Dear Saints, do we really realize that this is God's work? Some may say, What can we do? Is it not our duty to seek the advice of our local men? And as local servants, do we seek the advice of those set in order? The great Adviser says: Seek ye first the kingdom of heaven, and all these things will be added unto you. He that hungereth and thirsteth after righteousness shall be filled. Are we hungry? Are we thirsty?

In the HERALD we find the subject discussed pro and con, and the article by Brother Augustine Dwyer on our services was food to my soul. Although I am thirty-four years old, I considered it still another link in my education.

How many there are in the church to-day who do not take the church papers; and some do not even attend services, because of something some brother or sister has said or done. Would not education help to free them from the power that ruins the soul? It would be a spoke in the great wheel of education to see the church papers in the home of every Saint.

How much advanced we would be if every Saint would live the principles of his religion, and say: "I am a Saint. I am glad that I can tell you so," and realize the great honor and reward that awaits those who are Saints.

Ever praying for the progress of the gospel,

SAMUEL M. LONG.

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK, February 26, 1919.

Editors Herald: I wish to write something about our conference here. However, it is not the conference so much as the sacrament service which was held Sunday morning, February 23. I want to tell you that as long as I live, I will never forget that day. It was a holy session, with the presence of the Holy Ghost.

There were 127 Saints at the meeting, and we had 63 testimonies, 19 prayers, and 29 songs. The Lord spoke five times through Brethren Squire, Shaw, and Rich. The testimonies of the Saints were surely food for our hungry souls. Brother LeRoy Squire, our newly ordained priest, spoke to the Saints first, by the Spirit of God; then Brother Shaw, of Philadelphia, spoke to Brother Rich and to the young people of the district, and to a brother from Boston. Then the Spirit came through our beloved pastor, Brother Rich, to Brother Redfield and Sister Phillips. In a most wonderful language the Lord spake to his Saints, and the presence of the Holy Ghost was manifested upon all in the meeting.

A young friend from Broad River bore his testimony in tears, and asked for baptism, which was performed by Elder Gleazer.

Now, Saints, we cannot deny that the Lord is calling for battle, both the aged and the youth.

I cannot put everything in this letter as I would like to do, for I am afraid I will overdo it. I hope that the Lord will bless our efforts in building up his gospel, and so establish the kingdom of heaven upon this earth.

Yours in gospel bonds,

ANTHONY KONSTANTIN.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, February 26, 1919.

Editors Herald: Our Sunday school is in charge of Superintendent E. A. Webbe, who has successfully handled this work for several years. We have an enrollment of 75. Our Christmas offering last year amounted to $323. We have set our aim for this year at $500.

On February 9 Brother A. W. Smith favored us with a visit, which proved beneficial to our Sunday school and Religion. He gave us an interesting talk along the Christmas offering line and demonstrated the use of the clock. He enthused each one to better effort and greater accomplishment of the future. Tuesday evening following, Brother Smith called a joint meeting of Sunday school and Religion workers at which he conducted an interesting, instructive round table.

We will be glad at any time to receive a call from our general and district officers when they are in this vicinity.

The Presidency

GENERAL CONFERENCE 1919

Unless conditions compel a change of meeting place the General Conference of the church will convene in Lamoni, Iowa, April 6, 1919. Program for the opening day (Sunday), will be announced later. The exercises of the day will be exclusively religious, the first business session being on the 7th at 2.00 p. m. The conventions of the Auxiliary Societies will not be held previously to the conference as in the past, but will have hours assigned to them between the sixth and the closing day. The business sessions of the auxiliaries will be held from 10 a. m. to 12 m. each day after Sunday, the sixth, special meetings of the Auxiliaries being arranged for at other hours. Fuller announcements will appear later.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
For the Presidency.

Church Secretary

CLERGY CREDENTIALS

It will be necessary for all ministers under general appointment, in making application for clergy credentials to the various bureaus, to enclose their certificates of appointment signed by the president and secretary, with request that such be returned to them on issue of credential. The General Conference minutes of 1918, containing lists of all general appointees, is on file in all the bureaus.

Ministers other than general appointees making application for clergy credentials and who come within the rules of the bureaus must secure certificate of endorsement from the office of the First Presidency before sending in such application.

R. S. SALYARDS,
Church Secretary.

517 North Twenty-second Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri.

Religio and Sunday School Conventions

As the coming General Convention of the above named will be held according to the principle of coordination adopted in April, 1918, they will meet this year during the General Conference at Lamoni, after April 6.

Following the convention of the Woman's Auxiliary on Monday and Tuesday forenoons, the Religio Convention will be held on the forenoons of Wednesday and Thursday, April 9 and 10, from 10 a. m. to 12 m. The Sunday school will follow at the same hours Friday and Saturday, April 11 and 12. All these will be business sessions.

For educational programs we have been assigned a period following the afternoon business sessions of the General Conference each day. These will take the form of "Problem meetings," with a reporter on hand to take down the answers, given by department heads and others. What is your problem? State it clearly and send at once to one of the undersigned, each according to his department.

Secretaries who are holding delegate credentials are warned that the district is in danger of losing its representation in the convention.

G. S. TROWBRIDGE,
President of Zion's Religio-Literary Society.
G. R. WELLS,
Superintendent Sunday School Association.

Addresses

C. Edward Miller is leaving Honolulu, and his address is 202 Pendleton Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

Our Departed Ones

DUNFEE.—Niona, eldest child of Ona and Nina Dunfee, at Saint Joseph, Missouri, February 11, 1919. Funeral service at the home of the parents on February 13, sermon by R. S. Salyards. Interment in Ashland Cemetery. The departure of this sweet little daughter is a severe loss to this home circle and to other relatives and friends.

DEVRIES.—John Bennie Artes DeVries was born October 18, 1896, in Missouri. Died February 2, 1919, near Lamoni, Iowa, as a result of bursting a blood vessel in the brain. He had just returned from the army, and was an exceptionally fine young man, free from bad habits, a physical giant, and perfect specimen of great strength. Had been a member of the church for the past 6 years. He leaves a widowed mother, 8 brothers and sisters, and many friends to mourn. Funeral at the home. Sermon by Hubert Case.

BYRN.—Chauncey Carter Byrn was born December 24, 1851. Died February 7, 1919. Married Mahala Angeline Green, September 25, 1881. To this union 4 children were born. On July 3, 1890, he married Mary Hanna Ross. To this union 6 children were born. His third wife was Mrs. Elizabeth Allen, to whom he was married December 24, 1903, and who cared for him lovingly till his death. The deceased was baptized by J. W. Wight, about 14 years ago. Sermon by J. W. Metcalf in the Saints' church at Byrnesville, Indiana. Interment at Georgetown, Indiana.

STREETER.—Dennie C., son of Lilas and Mary Streeter, was born at Denison, Iowa, June 17, 1894. Died at his home in Deloit, Iowa, January 1, 1919. Death was due to a complication of diseases. He bore his suffering with patience and endurance. He grew to manhood at Deloit, Iowa, where his friends were numbered by his acquaintances. Baptized October 12, 1912, by W. A. Smith, and was a faithful member. He leaves to mourn, father, mother, 3 sisters, 2 brothers, 2 half sisters, one half brother, and his fiancée, Irene Baber, of Gordon, Nebraska. Services in charge of E. R. Butterworth. Sermon by Charles E. Harpe.

WILLIAMS.—Mrs. Agnes Williams was born in Flaxville, New York, September 8, 1840. Died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Harry Banker, near Springfield, Wisconsin, February 17, 1919. Married Henry Williams, June 3, 1863. To this union were born 5 sons and 5 daughters; one daughter died in 1903. She leaves to mourn, her husband, 9 children, many relatives, and friends. About 25 years ago she was baptized by M. T. Short. She was the only one of her family that accepted the latter-day work. Her consistent, Christian life, and continual effort to assist others has endeared her to many. While she did not have the opportunity to attend church often she remained faithful and devoted to the church. Sermon by W. A. McDowell.

FROM HERE AND THERE

The Church Recorder, C. I. Carpenter, of Independence, reports that his department is making a good showing this year: 5,195 baptisms, with a net gain of 4,565 in membership of the church. This makes our total membership to the end of 1918, 90,825.

POPE TO DECIDE WORLD CHURCH LEAGUE

A press dispatch dated March 2, issued from New York, reads as follows:

"Plans whereby the Roman Catholic, Greek, Russian, and Protestant churches may organize a league similar to that of the proposed society of nations, 'to cooperate in Christian work as brethren,' will be laid before the pope by three Protestant bishops, it was announced here to-day by Right Reverend R. H. Weller, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Fond Du Lac, Wisconsin. Bishop Weller said that, accompanied by Bishop Charles Anderson of Chicago, and another bishop yet to be named, he would journey soon to Rome in behalf of the church league."

We are pleased to note the progressiveness of the Religio at Logan, Iowa. It seems they hold monthly socials at the home of some member of the society and the program at these are denominated by C. L. Crow as "entertaining, instructive, and the social features of the gathering refined and helpful."

"THE LITTLE CAPTIVE MAID"

In the issue of Stepping Stones for March 25, will begin a serial by the editor, Estella Wight, which we are confident will be read with unusual interest and will long be remembered. The chief character is the little Jewish maid who dwelt in Damascus, in the house of Naaman, the Syrian captain, about whom we read in 2 Kings 5:2, 3. The historical setting is true to the scriptural account, the characters are many of them familiar ones, and the events are correctly portrayed. The author has allowed her imagination to develop a story from the recorded incidents and the result is most pleasing. We call special attention to it lest some miss reading the first chapters as they appear.

CORRECTION

In the article by Frank B. Almond, in our issue of the 26th, page 203, column 2, second paragraph, the word work should read weak, making the phrase to read: "fit in with our weak and ever-wandering reason."

THE "ACACIA VICTORIÆ"

The student body at Graceland College are getting out a fine edition of their annual this year and calling it "Acacia Victoriæ," in commemoration of the year of our victory. It is dedicated to the boys who gave their lives that we might secure victory for democracy. The color is a pleasing red, white, and blue design. While they have put out some excellent volumes in the past, this bids fair to excel them all, for it has more pictures and cartoons than ever. There are 175 pictures of individual students, 15 or 20 groups, some 20 pen-drawn headings of departments, with about the same number of snapshots of faculty members and student body. The book is in the hands of the printers now and will be ready about April 1. Mail orders should be sent to the business manager, Lonzo Jones, Lamoni, Iowa. Copies will be on sale during the conference in Lamoni. The price is $1.50.

THE AIMS OF ZIONISM

"THE JEWS REBUILD JERUSALEM, AS PROPHETS SAID THEY WOULD."

The first real ray of hope presaging allied victory came with the earliest successes of the British arms in Palestine. We took these successes as a happy portent that the free nations would be victorious and the Holy Land pass from the dominion of the Turk to the control of liberal governments that would favor the return of the Jew. At that time, in certain of our "Blue Pencil Notes," appearing in the HERALD for November 28, 1917, we wrote:

The fate of Palestine may seem a minor matter in this world war; but to our mind it is a matter of tremendous importance. History may reveal clearly how in the chaos and disorder of this great cataclysm God's hand was working in an orderly manner to accomplish his purposes concerning the Holy Land. An issue that we hope for is that Palestine may be freed or come under liberal and enlightened government so that the Jews may be permitted to return, redeem the land and restore their nation. Here is something to which one might pin a conviction. A triumph of the central powers would leave Jerusalem under the dominion of the Turk. That God will permit such a denouement seems to us incredible.

Happily, events are moving in harmony with our faith. At a meeting of Zionists, in Washington, District of Columbia, March 2, the following declaration and announcement of aims were adopted:

To Our Fellow Citizens, to the President, to the National Authorities, to the Congress in Session, and to the Christian Churches at the National Capital, Greetings:

The Zionists of the District of Columbia, mindful, as all Americans are, of the blessings of free American institutions, hereby reavow their whole-hearted support of our Constitution, and reaffirm their unqualified loyalty to the ideals which America stands for.

The reestablishment of a Jewish commonwealth, which the peace congress, in session at Versailles, has under consideration, will not affect the loyalty of the Jews to the countries of which they are citizens.

We gratefully recognize that under the benign influence of a latter-day civilization the United States and its high-minded allies intend that justice be rendered the people of Israel, after they have been deprived of their home land for over eighteen hundred years.

Under Jewish national rule the foundations of our present civilization were laid and proclaimed.

The Pilgrim Fathers, when they landed on the bleak New England shores, carried in their hands the Sacred Book conceived and written on Jewish soil.

Modern Christianity long ago recognized in their Savior a son of Judea, born of a Jewish mother, the lowly but supreme expounder of the message: "Peace on earth, good will to men," a message subsequently embodied in that sublime motto: "With charity for all, with malice toward none," which Abraham Lincoln engraved on his matchless escutcheon.

It is the aim of the Zionists to again add to principles of human conduct by establishing in Palestine a government in which social justice shall reign, where every child shall be well born and where every one shall be taught the tolerance of a broad humanitarianism, the blessings of education and the sacredness of peaceful toil.

A Jewish university which will soon rear its noble walls where the prophets of old pleaded for human rights and justice, will gather under its roof Jewish men of science, establish modern laboratories for research, and keep in touch with the scientific progress as it develops in other lands.

Public schools will abound, and with musical modern Hebrew, which will be the language of the land, English or French will be taught to every child, in order to open and keep open the minds of the future Palestinians whatever shall be wrought by human brains elsewhere, as shall be chronicled in foreign literature.

Farming under modern scientific methods, already flourishing in many scattered Jewish settlements, will again make of Palestine a land "flowing with milk and honey."

Jewish artists will in due time enrich the world with native productions, adding them to the storehouses of beauty and refinement so necessary and so dear to people of culture.

Finally will churches and the state exist peacefully side by side, precisely as in the United States, in England, in France, and Italy, and we believe that those Jews who will reassemble on the shores of the Jordan and in the shadows of Lebanon, will show themselves worthy of the hope and the confidence which the power of the allies may place in them.

These are the aims of the Zionists, this their program, and for them they would bespeak the interest, the active sympathy, and the good will of mankind.—Washington Post, March 3, 1919.

Well may the hearts of the Saints rejoice as they see prophecy fulfilled. One of the earliest announcements of Joseph Smith was to the effect that the angel told him the time was coming when the Jews would return, in harmony with the ancient predictions. Many scoffed at such an idea. Even during the early stages of the late war, when the Turks were oppressing the Jews in Jerusalem, and deporting them, we were told that the faith of the Saints was coming to naught.

Perhaps even some of our own people may have felt just a little dubious then, when Jerusalem seemed more likely to be permanently depopulated by starvation and massacre, and when an apparently imminent German victory promised to strengthen and perpetuate Turkish dominion. But the Lord's designs are not frustrated. We may again sing the good old hymn:

Go on in faith, ye Saints, go on,
Fear not, the cause is good;
The Jews rebuild Jerusalem,
As prophets said they would.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE ETERNAL JEW

---

[Reprinted from a former number of the HERALD.]

Have they not kingly lineage, have they not pedigree?
Are they not wrapped with wonder, like the darkness of the sea?

They come out of the night of years with Asia in their blood,
Out of the mystery of time that was before the Flood.

They saw imperial Egypt shrink and join the ruined lands;
They saw the sculptured, scarlet East sink under the gray sands;

They saw the star of Hellas rise and glimmer into dream;
They saw the wolf of Rome draw suck beside the yellow stream,

And go with ravenous eyes ablaze and jaws that would not spare,
Snarling across the Earth, then, toothless, die upon his lair.

And have they not grief enough, this people shrunk with chains?

Must there be more Assyrians, must there be other Spains?
They are the tribes of sorrow, and for ages have been fed
On brackish desert-wells of hate and exile's bitter bread.

They sang the elegies that tell the grief of mortal years;
They built the tombs of Pharaohs, mixing the bricks with tears;

They builded up fair cities with no threshold for their own;
They gave their dust to Nineveh, to Babylon their moan.

After tears by ruined altars, after toils in alien lands,
After wailings by strange waters, after lifting of vain hands,
After cords and stripes and burdens, after ages scorched with fire,

Shall they not find the way of peace, a land of heart's desire?

Shall they not have a place to pray, a land to lay the head?
Shall they not have the wild bird's nest, the foxes frugal bed.—Selected.

The Jew of yesterday is a noble figure in the world's history. He gives us the basis of our civil law. By him our religion is shaped. From his writings we glean the texts upon which our most spiritual sermons are built; they point our morals and adorn our orations.

There is no land to which a Hebrew wanderer has not penetrated. There is no law that a Hebrew lawyer has not helped to frame. There is no bright dream that a Hebrew poet has not dreamed. There is no vista of the dim future that has not opened to the eyes of a Hebrew prophet; to his quickened ear came the greatest revelation of Deity and his hand wrote the greatest books of all time.

We begin to trace their history as it takes its rise in the great patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, who, strong in body, mind, and spirit, became the fathers and founders of a wonderful people. Defective though their lives were in some respects, still they cherished the basic principles which insure existence and are the salt of religion and politics.

Next appears Moses, the great emancipator and lawgiver. After him was Joshua, the warrior. The one gave freedom to an oppressed people; the other drilled them and infused into them the militant spirit so that they went as conquerors into the promised land. There, by virtue of their native qualities and the divine inspiration received from on high, they became in most that is good the teachers and leaders of the whole world.

Reflect for a moment upon their illustrious names. Would you find a typical pioneer? He is found in Abraham, who heard the voice say, "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee." So he went and staked his claim in Canaan and founded a family that was to become a nation. Do you ask for a typical lawgiver? Moses is his name. Joshua is the valiant warrior; Daniel the inspired reformer. David is still the preeminent poet. Solomon is still the type of kingly splendor and wisdom. Jeremiah, Isaiah, Ezekiel, John—no greater prophets have been born of women.

But what a change since the day when the King of the Jews said, "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate!" What a change since Paul wrote, "Seeing ye judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles!"

The picture of the eternal Jew is drawn in black and white, and the contrast is harsh to the point of offense. Yesterday, the throne, the scepter, the altar, the psaltery; to-day, the sign of the three gilded balls.

If we seek for the typical Jew of to-day we do not find a warrior, a lawgiver, a poet, or a prophet. We find an ignorant Russian exile, a crafty dealer in second-hand clothing, a money-lender.

The race that once caught the gleam of fire in the burning bush now is supposed to see but the glint of gold. The race that once heard the voice of God at Sinai now hears mostly the clink of the silver dollar. The race that once thrilled in contemplation of the questions of eternity now thinks mainly of the problems of gain. The Jew has fallen so low that when any man of any race descends to unspeakable meanness in a bargain he is simply said to be "jew-ing his neighbor down." The very name has become a "hiss and a by-word."

Fortunately there is a brighter side to the picture, which is seen as we look at the future. The Jew of to-morrow will be as the Jew of yesterday. God plainly says that he will "set his hand again the second time to gather the remnant of his people."

This will not mean simply a return to the promised land, but a complete recovery of their former state of spiritual and temporal greatness. The reproach will be removed so that kings will be proud to be their "nursing fathers," and queens be honored to be called their "nursing mothers."

The promises of God concerning them have always been fulfilled. He declared that he would sift them among all nations "as corn is sifted in a sieve." It was done. Yet he declared that "not one grain" should be lost. It is true. They are scattered but not lost. So far as the Jew proper is concerned, he is a Jew anywhere. Bleached by the Arctic winds or tanned by the African sun, he is still a Jew. He may rise to the highest heights of education and wealth, or sink to the lowest depths of ignorance and poverty, he is still a Jew. Rothschild or "Shee-ney," he is a Jew.

When the gospel again comes to them, as it surely will when the "times of the Gentiles are fulfilled," the same spirit will go with it that has quickened the intellect of every people to whom God ever sent the gospel.

If the Gentle nations, among whom the gospel has been preached so long and whose intelligences have been enlivened by inspiration, shall fail to acknowledge the source of their greatness, the sun will set upon their glory, and they will cease to lead as inventors and rulers, as artists and writers, and the Jew will again lead and teach the world.

The subject is of vast importance because the welfare of the whole world is more or less affected by the welfare of the Jew. Abraham was not chosen for his own benefit alone, but that "in thee and in thy seed" all the nations of the earth might be blessed.

Looking into the future we see the time when the Jew shall attain to his supreme greatness, perhaps not as a Jew, but rather as a citizen of that great nation that shall be made up of men from every race and every clime—the great general assembly of the Firstborn.

WOMAN IN THE CHURCH WORK

Every once in a while some one rises to object on some pseudo grounds to the auxiliaries or departments of church work. They would narrow all of our activities and limit it to exactly what is positively directed, forgetting that we can do much good of ourselves, and rejecting the statement of the Lord concerning these organizations for good. (Doctrine and Covenants 117:12 as well as other passages.) Fortunately these are very, very rare.

Again we find, as one good sister expressed it, where there is ever a Sunday school or a Religio in good running order, due to the efforts largely of the sisters, some one comes along and demands that it be taken over by members of the priesthood; but it is never asked that the priesthood shall build up a defunct organization or waste their valuable time on one that is declining. Another sister said that she has seen more things in the church and from conversation with Latter Day Saints, to make her an ardent suffragette than in the outside world. She does not think the Lord intended things to be run that way, with the sisters all sitting on the fence and taking out their share.

In this connection, we are reminded of an editorial by President Joseph Smith a number of years ago in reply to the question whether women could teach. He referred to the very important work that women do in the home, and which we are quite ready to leave to their care. This is the training of the child in its early years of life. There are many who think that the first few years of life influence the child more than its training at any other time of life.

One prominent educator has made the declaration that the second seven years of a child's life will affect its after life more than any other period, except the first seven years. For the training and impressions it receives then do much to mold its future character. Yet this early work is left in the homes, almost entirely to women.

The training for the second period in our public schools is also almost entirely in the hands of women. And even in our Sunday school a large part of the teachers for the early years are women. How many men can you name in our church who are teaching in the infant department? And in this, we include both the beginner and the primary. There are very few as a rule in the junior department, though there are more in the intermediate. Yet the work of the mother and of the teacher in immediate contact with the child is of more vital importance than that of the superintendent, for the development of any individual boy or girl.

Are we to say that the women can do good work, especially the work in the home and in public schools, but they cannot teach anywhere else?

As early as 1830, three months after the organization of the church, the Lord spoke by revelation (section 24) to Emma Smith, and in that revelation, in addition to stating that the office of her calling shall be for a comfort to my servant Joseph Smith," she was also appointed as a scribe for a time. But further than this we find: "And thou shalt be ordained under his hand to expound the scriptures, and to exhort the church, according as it shall be given thee by my Spirit." It was seen then that there exists no inherent reason why a woman cannot teach or assist in the work of the church under God.

We have to remember that back in the thirties woman's position in civil life was much different than it is to-day. A married woman was still to a large extent the property of her husband. She had no independent rights for all of her property was his. As some one has expressed it, "They were one and he was the one." Yet despite this we find in the revelations of God and in the moving of the Holy Spirit that which leads to her emancipation, to the recognition of the fact that she is a human being and can and should assist in this work by active assistance.

It is significant, if we look back into the early years of the Christian era and note the very low positions held by women, to find how much was done and has been done by Christianity to emancipate and recognize her as a worker in the church. The Apostle Paul certainly did. The early Christian church most certainly did and used the services of women in many ways. But the whole spirit of Christianity has tended in that direction, towards the emancipation of women. It is true that there was a period of darkness through the Middle Ages in which matrimony was decried and woman was considered merely as a temptation. But the spiritual force of the genius of Christianity still made its influence felt and that for the freedom and justice towards women.

To-day the attitude of society is much more reasonable than it was even fifty years ago. The past five years have shown considerable progress in a recognition of the effective work of which woman is capable. It is folly for us to refuse to utilize these talents.

Many a time have we seen a Sunday school or Religio misruled by some incompetent man, when there was a woman in the assembly fully competent to have reorganized the school and to have made of it a good success.

The priesthood of God is a holy thing. It is manifested not alone by the laying on of hands, but also must be manifested by that spirit which comes down from above. The spirit of love, which, flowing out from the individual, makes its power felt, finds no need to continually hange concerning his authority and the dignity of his position or the honor that is due him. He is not concerned with honor but with service. Therein lies his authority. The spirit of inspiration and revelation that is upon him makes itself felt wherever he goes.

But we should not forget that there is no declaration that a monopoly of the Spirit is to be given to the priesthood. It would seem that real thought on the subject would convince anyone that we should use the most available material and persons that we have: those, in fact, best fitted at the time. But thinking is so rare an indulgence and many persons merely take a technical argument over words and their significance.

The true priest of God, recognized of him, is not only willing but glad to secure and employ the assistance of others. If there is a sister, as there often is, more capable for a local, district, or stake Sunday school superintendent or Religio president the church should have the advantage of her services in that department. May the Lord hasten the day when there is given to the priesthood that due respect which should go to the priesthood because by the manner of their lives and preparation for service they deserve it, and yet will recognize the value of the services of each and every Saint of God.

KIND WORDS

They never blister the tongue or lips, and we never heard of any mental trouble arising from this quarter. Though they do not cost much, yet they accomplish much. They help one's own good nature and good will. Soft words soften our own soul. Angry words are full to the flame of wrath, and make it burn more quickly. Kind words make other people good-natured. Cold words freeze people, and hot words scorch them, bitter words make them bitter, and wrathful words make them wrathful. There is such a rush of all kinds of words in our day, that it seems desirable to give kind words a chance among them. There are vain words, idle words, silly words, hasty words, spiteful and empty words, profane and warlike words. Kind words also produce their own image on men's souls, and a beautiful image it is. They soothe and quiet and comfort the hearer; they shame him out of his sour, morose, and unkind feelings. We have not yet begun to use kind words in such abundance as they ought to be used.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

NAUVOO AND THE "CHICAGO TRIBUNE"

Among many other articles lately referred to me, as a historian, none have impressed me with a deeper feeling of injustice and wrong and pure "malice aforethought" than the reference to the "Mormons" in the Chicago Sunday Tribune, for December 8, 1918. It is in an article entitled, "Centennial History of Illinois," and purports to be written by one Rollin Lynde Hartt, whoever he may be; none, even of our Illinois historians, so far as I know, having ever heard his name before.

The more obscure the author, however, the more eager he seems to be to misrepresent and slander, and thus inadvertently put the badge of ignorance and irresponsibility on himself.

It is with surprise as well as regret that I see a newspaper of the exalted standing and wide circulation of The Tribune giving space to such unwarranted fabrications. In the same article, in the same installment, Rollin Lynde Hartt portrays conditions in the State of Illinois outside of Nauvoo, as follows:

A dismal state of things—school sessions in rude quarters, church services likewise, and remarkable for scarcity at that! Unlike New England, Illinois had not been settled by religious enthusiasts. It had been settled by bluntly practical backwoodsmen. School improvements and churches could wait, thought they—an opinion with which pedagogues and circuit riders begged to differ.

If schoolmasters speeded up intellectual progress by adding "lickin" to "larnin," circuit riders speeded up spiritual progress by going in headlong for a wild and furious revivalism. The pioneers responded—sometimes by developing cases of "the jerks." Evidently Fordham has witnessed such cases. Among the sources of bad health among the people he mentions not only "the universal use of spirituous liquors," "the disregard of personal comfort and cleanliness," "the great excitement of the mental passions, which first settlers are by their situation to," and "in some cases very early marriages," but "(perhaps) violent religious enthusiasm."

So, while these early inhabitants were given to revivalism of a fearful and wonderful intensity, and while they blocked every effort toward establishing public schools (the Illinois public school system dates only from 1855), they were a shrewd set, splendid material intellectually, and less to be described as behind the times than as shunted to one side of them.

The reader will note that Hartt, by insinuation, attempts to partially account for ignorance and heathenism in Illinois in the 40's by writing, in the first paragraph of the above quotation, "Unlike New England, Illinois was not settled by religious enthusiasts."

He is right. Up to that period and later, Illinois was settled mostly by illiterate proslavery advocates from the South, among whom the New England "religious enthusiasts" and antislavery men who settled at Nauvoo were as welcome as was John Brown among the Missouri squatters in eastern Kansas. These Nauvoo New Englanders were also "educational enthusiasts," and also "prohibition enthusiasts," thus forming quite a remarkable contrast, indeed, to the native Illinoisians of that period, but not in the manner described by the "inspired" historian of the Chicago Tribune. At a time when Chicago had but emerged from a swamp producing, chiefly, skunks and wild onions (Chicago historians generally claim that the name of their city is an adaptation of the name of a mythical Indian chief, Chicagou; but one Illinois historian wrote an article, published by the Illinois State Historical Society, in which he contends that Chicago means "place of the skunk," or "place of the wild onion," and received this designation from the local Indians on account of the site of the pioneer village being a somewhat swampy place, producing abundance of wild onions, and much frequented by skunks), and was yet a rude village with quagmire streets; Nauvoo, with its progressive population of New England "religious enthusiasts," was the largest city in Illinois, had chartered and founded a university, established an unrivaled public school system, and was the only prohibition city in the world! Yes, indeed, Hartt; quite a contrast with the surrounding sea of ignorance, intemperance and illiteracy in the remainder of the State, as portrayed by your slanderous pen! A little honest investigation, Hartt, if you regard the truth at all, would often prevent serious error.

The charter of the city of Nauvoo made special provision for a university. This much maligned charter was approved both by the famous statesman, Stephen A. Douglas, and the great Abraham Lincoln, then a member of the Illinois legislature.

The act incorporating the "City of Nauvoo," has just passed. . . . Lincoln had the magnanimity to vote for our act, and came forward, after the final vote, to the bar of the house, and cordially congratulated me on its passage.—Times and Seasons, January 1, 1841, pp. 266, 267.

Section 24 of the charter read as follows:

The city council may establish and organize an institution of learning within the limits of the city, for the teaching of the arts, sciences, and learned professions, to be called the "University of the City of Nauvoo," which institution shall be under the control and management of a board of trustees, consisting of a chancellor, registrar, and twenty-three regents, which board shall thereafter be a body corporate and politic with perpetual succession by the name of the "Chancellor and Regents of the University of the City of Nauvoo," and shall have full power to pass, ordain, establish, and execute all such laws and ordinances as they may consider necessary for the welfare and prosperity of said university, its officers and students; provided, that the laws and ordinances shall not be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, or of this State; and provided, also, that the trustees shall at all times be appointed by the city council, and shall have all the powers and privileges for the advancement of the cause of education which appertain to the trustees of any other college or university of this State.—Times and Seasons, January 15, 1841, p. 284.

The Saints were quite enthusiastic about their university, as witnesses the following:

The "University of the City of Nauvoo" will enable us to teach our children wisdom—to instruct them in all knowledge, and learning, in the arts, sciences, and learned professions. We hope to make this institution one of the great lights of the world, and by and through it, to diffuse that kind of knowledge which will be of practical utility, and for the public good, and also for private and individual happiness. The regents of the university will take the general supervision of all matters appertaining to education from the common schools up to the highest branches of a most liberal collegiate course. They will establish a regular system of education and hand over the pupil from teacher to professor, until the regular graduation is consummated and the education finished.—Times and Seasons, January 15, 1841, pp. 274, 275.

And this, Mr. Hartt, the "Mormons" you malign, proceeded to do. They began at once to make their university "one of the great lights of the world," as per their above-expressed intention; but, "the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehendeth it not"; "even that mental and spiritual darkness of the inhabitants of Illinois, so graphically described, though somewhat exaggerated, by the romantic imagination, and ready pen of the "historian," Hartt.

By reference to the Times and Seasons of December 15, 1841, we find that the chancellor, registrar, and regents were duly elected and proceeded to appoint a university president and a faculty. The city council also passed an ordinance putting the public schools of the city under the direct supervision of the regents, and three school wardens were selected in each of the four wards of the city to act under the order of the regents of the university; and the wardens were instructed to see that the schools in their respective wards were duly systematized, and employ only such teachers as appeared before the chancellor and registrar of the university and passed a creditable teachers' examination. An up-to-date set of textbooks for the city schools was adopted (Times and Seasons, January 1, 1842, page 654), and (page 655 of the same) a department of music was established in the university and instructors provided for it. The first faculty according to the above authority, was as follows:

President, James Kelley, A. B., Trinity College, Dublin.

Orson Pratt, Department of Mathematics and English.

Orson Spencer, A. B., B. D., Graduate of Union College, and Baptist Literary and Theological Seminary, both of New York; Department of Languages.

Sidney Rigdon, Graduate of Brooklyn Seminary; Department of History.

Gustavus Hills, Department of Music.

(Times and Seasons, January 1, 1842; Bancroft's History of Utah, p. 146.)

Some have doubted that the Saints in Nauvoo manifested any decided abolition tendencies, and point to the prophet's great friendship for Stephen A. Douglas, the opponent of Lincoln, as evidence that the Saints were favorable to the political schemes of the "Little Giant."

I have proof that such was not the case. The leopard could change his spots and the Ethiopian his skin about as easily as a band of New Englanders could change their sentiments in regard to slavery. There was evidently a real friendship between Joseph Smith and Stephen A. Douglas, and when we come to examine the men carefully, they really had many characteristics in common. Douglas was not a Southerner. He was a native of Vermont, and like Joseph Smith, had been carefully brought up by a strict and pious mother and carefully grounded in New England principles and ideas. Like the Smiths, the Douglasses removed from Vermont to Canandaigua, New York, from which place, Douglas, after receiving the strict admonitions of his New England mother, came to seek his fortunes in Illinois. He acquired his education, with the exception of a short term at Canandaigua Academy, in about the same way as Joseph Smith, both of them having received the rudiments of education in the public schools. There were schools scattered over Illinois, too, in the period of intellectual darkness so exaggerated by Hartt, and Douglas taught in one of them for a while at Winchester, Illinois, he being a democrat and acceptable as a teacher among the settlers from the South.

While Douglas was an avowed Democrat before he came to Illinois, he evidently never was in full sympathy with the Southern slaveholders, and in the ultimate test, after running as the presidential candidate of the Northern Democrats while the Southern Democrats backed another, when Lincoln was elected and secession began he declared himself an adherent of Lincoln and the Union.

Joseph Smith and Douglas were natives of the same State, Vermont, and when Joseph made his appeal to the descendants of the Green Mountain Boys, their common ancestry in the American Revolution, the appeal did not fall on deaf ears as far as Douglas was concerned, and on the several occasions that opportunity offered he did not fail to render in full that justice for which the Prophet made his appeal.

In their turn, the Prophet and his followers from feelings of gratitude and respect, gave Judge Douglas some support politically, but that they ever followed Judge Douglas so far at any time as to forego their abolition principles history amply disproves. I have two old documents on my table now, found among the papers of one of the old-time Hancock County, Illinois, lawyers, in Carthage last summer, that I think are admissible as evidence. One is signed by twenty-one Democrats of the 40's residing in Appanoose Township, and the other is signed by twenty-seven of the same ilk residing in Pilot Grove Township. They are identical appeals to the Democratic party in Illinois setting forth that whereas, certain designing politicians have falsely accused the Democrats of Hancock County of being in league with the Mormons for political gain; the undersigned wish the people of Illinois to understand that just the opposite is the fact, and in reality it is the Whigs that are in league with the Mormons, while the Democrats are their mortal enemies. The signers of these documents are old residents of the county well known to me and my parents.

To show that Illinois newspapers of that day thoroughly understood the Puritan sentiments of the "Mormons," I here introduce extracts from two of the leading papers of opposite politics.

All the combined factions and fragments and sects of religion, morals, and politics have been arrayed against us. The Abolitionists falsely contended that they were neutral between the great contending parties. Their strength was a reserved force that fought us in ambush, under the standard of Federalism. The deluded and infatuated Mormons were mustered like so many regular soldiers, by that infamous impostor Joe Smith.—The (Jacksonville) Illinois Democrat, November 21, 1840.

To the above, we find in the Sangamon Journal (Springfield Illinois) of the next week, the following reply which also shows that the leading newspapers of the state were not as unanimous in condemning the "Mormons" as some of the modern "historians" assert.

The above precious and liberal morceau is taken from a long article in the last Illinois Democrat, printed in Jacksonville, Morgan County, and is one of the most prominent leading Van Buren papers in the State. . . . The paragraph above quoted declares that all sects of religion were arrayed against the Radicals and Agrarians who were the chief supporters of Van Buren in the late political contest, through which we have just passed. The assertion is in the main correct—it is not of that I complain—but it is that out of all the various denominations of Christians which the Democrat admits were arrayed against the Van Buren party, the Mormons should alone be made the special objects of their abuse. Are not the Mormons, citizens of the United States, entitled to the same protection under our Constitution and laws, as any other sect of Christians? Does not the Constitution guarantee to them, as well as the Baptist, the Methodist, or the Presbyterian, the unquestionable right of worshipping God according to the dictates of their own conscience? Why then does this leading organ of Van Burenism assail the Mormons as "deluded" and "infatuated" and brand one of their principal and most exemplary members as an "infamous impostor"? Does The Democrat hope that by such unmeasured and inflammatory appeals they can excite the populace to act over the scenes in Missouri, which banished hundreds of innocent individuals from their own soil and fireside—robbed them of their property, and left their children "houseless, save in a mother's arm—couchless, save upon a mother's breast"? Do the leaders of the party hope that the fire of persecution against this injured sect of Christians can be rekindled within this State, and the objects of their malice and hatred be made to flee from without our borders? If so, they will find themselves mistaken—the freemen of Illinois never will suffer the disgraceful scenes of Missouri to be acted over on this side of the Mississippi; and whenever The Democrat or any of its leaders, or any of its supporters, shall attempt a renewal of the persecutions against the Mormons, the assailants will find that the swords of the law-abiding portion of the community "are a thousand while their bosoms are one."

The Alton (Illinois) Review, in May, 1842, in publishing a speech by Governor Duncan quotes him as saying: "It struck us with a good deal of astonishment that Joe Smith and General Bennett should thus publicly avow their abolition principles." . . .

This was five years after Lovejoy had been driven from Missouri as a New England Abolitionist, and murdered by the pro-slavery mob at Alton for daring to even discuss slavery in his newspaper. Further evidence that their anti-slavery sentiments was one of the main things that prejudiced the settlers of Illinois against the people of Nauvoo, could be quoted ad infinitum, but this will suffice.

EDUCATION

(Read at Central Oklahoma conference, February 15, 1919.)

I will introduce my theme by quoting some definitions as to what the word means: "Education: Instructing, enlightening the understanding, and forming the manners. Education comprehends all that series of instruction and discipline which is intended to enlighten the understanding, correct the temper, and form the manners and habits of youth and fit them for usefulness in their future stations."

"To prepare for complete living."

An analysis of the definitions given will help us to understand the true purpose of education. A perversion of its meaning may lead us into error and hinder us from leading a useful life and robbing us of much joy and happiness.

"Instructing; Enlightening the understanding." To accomplish that purpose, to attain to that end we must be students of God's revealed word and also of the best literature that can be obtained in the world.

To this must be added what we can learn by association with our fellow men; traveling among different people is one of the best means that we can use to "enlighten the understanding," to say that we have an education because we have obtained what our public schools and colleges give us is a misuse of the term, that is only the preparatory work to fit us to go on to greater perfection. To understand prophecies in the Scriptures and comprehend their unfolding and also the ethical teachings of Jesus and the apostles we must be acquainted with ancient, mediæval, and modern history and also of the social customs during the times of the Savior and the apostles.

"Forming the manners." We cannot afford to miss such an opportunity. Good manners are a passport among people of refinement and intelligence. In our homes, in our churches, and other public places good manners should be in evidence; without them we add to the discomfort of others, and the home and the church is in a large sense desecrated and we appear as persons very uncouth in our conduct.

"Correct the temper," or in other words our mental disposition, our natural inclinations, so that we will be constantly in a mood that will be a pleasure to ourselves and not an annoyance to others.

"To form the habits of youth" is one of the functions of education. The habits we form in youth will largely determine what our future life will be, success or failure. If we form the habit of reading good books we will have knowledge that will help us to add greatly to our own happiness and pleasure and to be an instrument of usefulness in the world. The habit of industry in our business will bring us success in material wealth and make comparatively light all our tasks of a mental nature. The habit of economy in the use of our time will give us many precious minutes to be used for mental development and the acquiring of knowledge which in a lifetime will amount to years. The habit of economy in our private expenditures will mark the dividing line between poverty and plenty in material wealth and in physical comforts. The habits we form of a religious or spiritual kind largely determine as to whether or not our lives will give expression to cold formality or to emotions that spring from a soul that is in touch with the divine and infinite Father of us all.

To fit the young for a life of usefulness is another of the functions of education and it is the result that must flow from the mental attitude and habits that have been formed. It is not enough to be good, we must be useful if we would fulfil our proper station in life, God demands it if we would be in touch with him. The world needs it or it must remain stationary and the great purposes of our Father will be hindered in accomplishment for it is through human instruments his work is done. To prepare us for complete living would seem to be the goal of all our ambitions, the sum total of human effort. When we have attained to that condition we are on the mount of transfiguration and all the world is at our feet. It will be functioning of the triune man, spiritual, mental, and physical, none working out of harmony, but all in as perfect accord as the planets in the heavens, no physical pain, no mental diminution, no spiritual inharmony with the Father of our spirits, but a perfect blending of all the parts that make perfect manhood. Zion, the pure in heart, and material equality, is the goal set before us to be accomplished before our Lord shall return and again take his abode among men. To bring to fruition that happy condition, which has been sung of by poets, and foretold of by prophets, and put into practice by our Lord while he was among men, it must be done through human effort with divine assistance. It will be needful to have spiritual teachers, who will be in very close communion with our heavenly Father, so that their teachings will be like drinking from the fountain from which our Lord drank, when from his blessed lips flowed words whose power some day will transform the world, so that in our lives will be seen the image of the Christ.

Teachers in the public schools and colleges will be in great demand; the intellectual training of our children will have its beginning in those institutions. From where will they come? Will our own ranks be so deficient in men and women of intellectual training, that it will be necessary to go into the world to secure them? The present trend of thought in the medical and dental profession is preventive, teaching how to live that we may have strong bodies and clear minds. In Zion who shall be our teachers in hygiene? Whom shall we consult, so that we can be taught how to care for our bodies? Who shall stand beside the mother when she feels the pain and realizes the joy that goes with motherhood? Shall it be those of like precious faith upon whose lips is a prayer for strength and wisdom, or shall it be an alien hand with professional skill, but devoid of spiritual sympathy? To avoid such a condition our own young men and women must enter the professions of medicine, dentistry, and nursing.

Zion will need civil engineers, mechanical engineers, chemical engineers, and sanitary engineers. Where will they come from? Will they be found in our own ranks? If not, why not? Public buildings will be needed, beautiful parks, and public play will be a source of happiness and comfort to old and young. Pleasant, comfortable, and convenient homes will be found in the cities, villages, and country. To have all such comforts that belong to modern life the landscape gardener and architect must design them. Again I propound the question, From whence shall they come? Not from the undeveloped mind and untrained hand. Mechanics of all kinds will be in demand. It is an age of mechanical achievement. In our daily life we are in constant association with mechanical devices. Shall our boys and girls pass by these opportunities and be only "hewers of wood and drawers of water?" Is it not possible that with mechanical achievement and mental training that the drudgery of what is called common labor shall be largely removed?

Domestic science and the art of home making must be one of the glories of Zion, and without them there will be no Zion. Whether our daughters learn it from their own mothers or have been helped by study in the laboratories of our institutions of learning and in special training in hospitals, it will be an education that every woman can feel an honest pride in her soul that she possesses. Zion will not be a big country with a wire fence around it and the world looking at us and wondering what kind of animals we are. It will be a place of human activity, where we cannot completely separate ourselves from our Gentile neighbors. It will be a place that through the process of education worldly lusts will lie prostrate at our feet, our unholy passions of lust and selfishness will have been conquered, and all will be brothers and children of our heavenly Father.

Education means to prepare for complete living, physical, intellectual, and spiritual. Are we in favor of it?

EDWARD RANNIE.

SHALL WE READ FICTION?

---

I have heard the opinion expressed by some of our people that story-telling and writing should not be indulged in. "Truth is stronger than fiction," they quote. Nothing but absolute truth, they insist, should be contained in our publications. Yet I am thankful to note that such belief is waning and most of us are recognizing the tremendous importance of fiction and its place as a factor in church education.

Every normal child will read. He will read anything interesting, which must include fiction. We must supply it. If we do not, others will. Think of what this means; of the wonderful opportunities it offers us. We must take advantage of it. We must supply the sort of literature suitable to the age of the child. That literature must be placed in attractive, interesting form. The mind of the child must be gradually educated. He cannot at first grasp the deep, technical research work so appealing to the minds of those educated to comprehend it.

Before our minds can reach the enviable condition where it can seize and grasp the deeper thoughts contained in our books of science, we must master the subject in its elementary phases.

From the time the little boy or girl toddles to your side and says, "Tell me a story, daddie," they have placed a wonderful opportunity in your hands. Make the most of it. Tell them the story. Whether fact or fiction it makes no difference to them. It need not concern us, except to serve in one of the two great objects of story-telling—to teach some fundamental truth, something elevating and uplifting, or something calculated to stimulate the imagination of the child; something causing him to see pictures of the mind not caused by optical vision. To the childish brain the first story, or even jingle, is a puzzle, a problem; his imagination is undeveloped in the fullest sense of the word. Hitherto the mind pictures came through sight only. With this difficulty met and grappled, a picture formed purely by imagination, he has mastered his first great problem, and very justly feels elation. Then the question comes, Has his victory been one tending to elevate or degrade? The answer is left entirely with the story-teller. The child itself is helpless in the matter.

From the first problem represented in the jingle or simple story, the mind slowly advances until it is ready for that richest of imaginative material—the fairy tale. Some people there are who hold up their hands in horror at the mere mention of fairy tales. Yet the education is not complete without them. In word pictures they hold a high rank and are invaluable to the development of the brain. The great and lasting problem is the creating of a thinking, reasoning mind. This cannot be done without stimulating the imagination. As all branches of learning: Arithmetic, grammar, physiology, history, geography, the high school subjects, and on down through the normals, universities, colleges, and kindred institutions, are dependent on the ability of the pupil to form mental pictures, to vision the problems represented in their several lessons, it will readily be seen that the jingles, stories, fairy tales, and similar materials are invaluable stepping-stones to higher education. At the present time when the great wave of educational preparedness bids fair to revolutionize church activities, let us not overlook so important an asset.

Another form of fiction, equal, at least with the fairy tale is the fable. Innumerable are the lessons and word pictures supplied by the fable. All of us have read, enjoyed, and profited by them. They are so well known to old and young alike that to name them here would be a waste of time. See that the children secure the lesson taught in each well-written fable of our readers and magazines.

God placed the desire for a story in the mind of the child; it remains through budding manhood and womanhood, through early and middle life, through our declining days and old age, and only leaves when our spirits do. Did God place this desire within us as a means of accomplishing good, or merely as an idle whim? As God, our Creator, never acts from the latter motive, we can reach but one conclusion. That is that he planned and perfected this inborn longing for a story. He intended that it should be a means of bringing mental scenes before our eyes, stirring scenes, religious scenes, scenes in which the mind and desires of the heart are raised to a higher nobler plane.

If the stories are not well chosen they have a tendency to lower and degrade. Satan has always effective use of this mighty factor. In one of the first scenes of the Bible we find him pouring a fairy tale into the eager, inexperienced mind of Eve. As a consequence the mental picture conjured for her brain told her of great knowledge which would be hers should she simply stretch forth her hand and pluck the fruit. The picture was so pleasing that she fell, influencing Adam to share that fall. From then on down through the Bible days this evil power continued to use this means of education, but always with detrimental effect on those who listened. So much confidence had he in the effectiveness of the word picture, he drew one for Jesus, tempting him with food when he was hungry, and with power and popularity when he was so pitifully friendless, so far as the people of this earth were concerned.

To-day the mails are flooded with worthless, degrading, dangerous literature. Stories—whether fact or fiction it does not matter—that not only fail to teach a good lesson, but too often accomplish exactly the contrary.

Let us repeat: The lesson taught and remembered is the prime object in the story, short or long, for which we should aim. If we had two stories, one fact and the other fiction, both teaching the same lesson, but demonstrated more clearly by the fiction, the latter is preferable. Fiction is not to be considered as lies or falsehoods. The characters in the story are living, moving, acting creatures of the brain, as real and valuable as if they were boys and girls of flesh and blood. Christ did not hesitate to use fiction. Indeed, with him, it was a favorite mode of teaching. Who among us have not read and loved the beautiful parable of the prodigal son, of the talents, the sower, and many others used to such great advantage by the Master? What is a parable? The dictionary defines it as: "To represent by fiction or fable." In other words, a worthy lesson made impressive by use of fiction.

Should our stories be mild, tame, lifeless, what some of our boys would call "goody-goody," though with an excellent moral, or should they be stirring, warm-blooded, full of action and adventure, even carrying the reader into scenes of conflict, yet still possessed of the good moral or lesson? Choose the latter! This does not mean that we should choose stories of bloodshed, carnage, street brawls, and similar rowdyisms. It is easy to go to the extreme in either direction. There is such a thing in boys' stories, the kind they love to read, as conflict without bloodshed or other harrowing details; conflict with wrong in the cause of humanity having a tendency to elevate rather than degrade. Who among us would not be proud of a son who would champion, even to the extent of bodily strength, the cause of the downtrodden, especially if the unfortunate one should be worthy? If we admire a boy of this kind we should educate him to grow up as such. How can this better be done than by suggestion through the medium of the well-chosen story? The male of the race, boy or man, was designed by the Creator as a champion, a champion of woman, of Christ, of the gospel, of country, and of his fellow men. If he fails to be greatly influenced to this end there is something radically wrong with what he has read.

This applies to girls as well. Give a girl two stories, one written expressly for girls, the other for boys, and nine times in ten she will read and be more interested in the one written for boys. The reason for this is in the fact that the boy's story is the more apt to be red-blooded, adventurous, with the goal well-nigh unattainable, yet reached by that invincible spirit so admired by the reader, boy and girl alike. There are, of course, exceptions to this. A few of our writers have learned that stories for girls must not be "sissy," as they so aptly designate them. They must be real, live stories of venture-some, red-blooded, genuine boys and girls. Stories with a high aim, and that aim reached because of merit.

From the story of adventure, the boy's mind will turn to history and travel. When this time comes take full advantage of it. What boy or girl will not be greatly benefited by reading the life of such noble men as Washington, Crockett, Greene, the dashing, chivalrous Marion, the fiery-hearted, noble Ethen Allen, or Mad Anthony Wayne, or that ideal American, the idol of every heart that quickens at sight of the Stars and Stripes—Abraham Lincoln? Let them read the lives of such men and see that several such volumes are placed within their reach.

Also let them read the lives of such men as Kit Carson, Will Drannon, Fremont, Buffalo Bill (William F. Cody), and Wild Bill (William Hitchcock), but be sure such books are genuine histories of their lives and not one of the dangerous pretenses so abundant in our book stores. Every healthy American boy feels the call of the West, and will live the life in well-chosen stories and histories of the plains.

How many of us read the books our children read? Too few, I dare say. If we do not read them ourselves, which we should do whenever possible, we should at least take the advice of those who do. Provided, of course, that those who do are competent to judge. We are fortunate in having in the church two ideal magazines devoted to our young people, in which every article is read by editors competent to judge. In them we find the whole-souled, red-blooded story of the boy or girl not afraid to do and dare, each one calculated to lift the young reader to a higher plane of thought and deed. By all means have them on your library table. Then if your boy or girl feel the want of more reading material and you have not the time to give the selection careful personal attention, write to one of the editors and you will be placed in touch with those making such work a study.

Read fiction, and furnish fiction for your children. Whatever you buy, fact or fiction, history, story of the plains, of the north country, of the sea, the metropolis, fable, fairy tale, or stories of foreign country, see that it teaches a lesson. We have Christ's example before us. By following it we cannot go astray.

WE NEED A MISSIONARY PAPER

The recent article by R. W. Farrell in reference to the need of a missionary paper is timely and well taken. The gospel literature workers are in need of just such an instrument. It is the duty of everyone to warn his neighbor. We need something illustrated, brief, and to the point; something that will catch the eye. Of course, all members should read the church papers. The gospel literature workers should strive to get the church papers into every Saint's home. A mission paper will help do this.

We must wake up the inactive ones as well as nonmembers who are more or less interested. We must show first of all that we are interested ourselves. Let everyone do a little to help the great forward movement now due the church. We must show that there was need of a restoration; also that there was a restoration, and what it means to us and to others. We must create more interest in our church, our books, and our papers. A mission paper should be sold to the locals at less than cost, with the address of district or local thereon, announcing that we have speakers and lecturers who will fill suitable openings.

The Kirtland Temple is becoming of more interest. More people visit it each year. No one should be permitted to leave the building without some literature explaining what the Temple stands for, and our position in the world.

It is time for us to move forward in a world-wide effort. Some will be left behind of course, but many more will be added when they sense the obligation, and the benefits to be derived from such an organization that is going to fulfill the measure of its creation. From every man according to his means unto every man according to his needs, the fatherhood of God and brotherhood of man—"Zion Awake."

OF GENERAL INTEREST

WASHINGTON'S "FAREWELL ADDRESS" AND THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

So much is said by those who are opposed to the idea of any league of nations, about Washington's warning to his fellow countrymen against "entangling alliances." It seems well to remind the public (and when more appropriately than on the birthday we celebrate) of some of the words which he actually used in his farewell address which are pertinent to the great problem which our nation has before it at this time. Early in the address he said:

"I shall carry it with me to my grave, as a strong incitement to unceasing vows, that heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of his beneficence—that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual—that the free Constitution, which is the work of your hands, may be sacredly maintained—that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue—that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these States, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete, by so careful a preservation and so prudent a use of this blessing, as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection, and adoption of every nation, which is yet a stranger to it."

And that is precisely what the proponents of a league of nations are now engaged in doing; recommending the principle of our Federal Union to the nations of the world. Further on in the address Washington said:

"Is there a doubt, whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? Let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union, affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who in any quarter may endeavor to weaken its bands."

May we not well repeat these words to-day, with reference to the proposed "proper organization of the whole" society of nations? In view of the great object aimed at by a league of nations (the abolition of war, as a means for the settlement of differences between nations) ought we of to-day not also to say: "Let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. . . . It is well worth a fair and full experiment."

Again, Washington said in this address:

"I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with particular reference to the founding of them on geographical discriminations. Let me now take a more comprehensive view and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party, generally. . . . The common and continual mischief of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of wise people to discourage and restrain it."

Again:

"Observe good faith and justice toward all nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all. . . .

"Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens, the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake. . . .

"Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangling our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalry, interest, humor, or caprice?"

Here we have the only place or connection in the entire address in which the word "entangle" or any derivative or synonym of it, is found. Is it not clear that Washington in this touching "farewell address," in which he showed such love and solicitude for his country, written at a time when Canada was further from our own country than are the countries of Europe to-day, warned us against entering into partial alliances, which would involve us in the toils of the private ambitions of some of the European nations, towards whom we might entertain a particularly friendly feeling, rather than against an impartial federation, which is but giving world-wide application to the principle to establish which he devoted his life? In view of the foregoing, would Washington to-day oppose or favor a league of nations?—Percy Werner, in the Saint Louis Post Dispatch, February 22, 1919.

RELIGION DEPENDENT ON HEALTH

---

"The great impulse of the twentieth century is the conservation of life," said Tom Williams, of Los Angeles, California, in his lecture on "divine healing," at the Allen Theater last night.

Mr. Williams continued: "We now know that pain and piety are not necessarily akin. Religion and poor health are not synonymous. Weakness and suffering are not an essential corollary of grace. We no longer bleed men to make them religious. Red blood is not an indication of passion and sin. We know that the law of causation is ever operative. Men reap what they sow. Compensation enters into all life. We no longer charge God with our folly or place the results of our sin upon Providence. The dispensations of Providence are constructive. All the agencies making for health and longevity and the perpetuity of life are divine. The surgeon, the physician, the nurse, are ministers for God in the field for remedial and preventive service. Every invention or discovery which lessens pain or intensifies life is an inspiration from God.

"Men are apt to become pessimistic when they consider the terrible holocaust which the war lords of Germany precipitated upon the world. We have only to consider the wonderful achievements during the past century in the arts of peace to be filled with optimism and hope. The church is coming to know that salvation has to do with the body as well as the spirit. The religion of Jesus embraces social readjustment as well as individual regeneration. Christianity is not a spiritual thesis so much as it is a work-a-day program for men and women in all the affairs of life. The religion of Jesus is the religion of humanity. It radiates good cheer. It inspires fellowship. It stimulates good health. To be religious one must be happy. To be happy one must be well. It is well-nigh impossible for a man to be spiritual when his body is diseased. The one big problem before the church and the state to-day is to eliminate disease, overcome want, promote health, stimulate energy, and secure happiness to all."—Toronto World, February 24, 1919.

BRITISH LABOR

[We note from the Social Service Bulletin for December, 1918, that the British Labor Party places as its minimum demand, the equivalent of eighteen dollars per week in the United States; and a surplus to be built up for the common good. The following may prove of interest, as showing the attitude of British labor toward economic problems.—EDITORS.]

THE SURPLUS FOR THE COMMON GOOD

"One main pillar of the house that the Labor Party intends to build is the future appropriation of the surplus, not to the enlargement of any individual fortune, but to the common good. It is from this constantly arising surplus (to be secured, on the one hand, by nationalization and municipalization, and, on the other, by the steeply graduated taxation of private income and riches) that will have to be found the new capital which the community day by day needs for the perpetual improvement and increase of its various enterprises, for which we shall decline to be dependent on the usury exacting financiers."

An interesting provision is that made for scientific investigation and research—"not to say also for the promotion of music, literature, and fine art, which have been under capitalism so greatly neglected. . . . Society, like the individual, does not live by bread alone—does not exist only for perpetual wealth production. . . . The Labor Party, as the party of the producers by hand or by brain, most distinctively marks itself off from the older political parties, standing, as these do, essentially for the maintenance, unimpaired, of the perpetual private mortgage upon the annual product of the nation that is involved in the individual ownership of land and capital."

"THE STREET OF TOMORROW"

With the completion of its "house" the Labor Party considers the street in which it is to stand—the international relations of the democratized state.

"As regards our relations to foreign countries, we disavow and disclaim any desire or intention to dispossess or impoverish any other state or nation. We seek no increase of territory. We disclaim all idea of 'economic war.' We ourselves object to all protective customs tariffs; but we hold that each nation must be left free to do what it thinks best for its own economic development, without thought of injuring others. We believe that nations are in no way damaged by each other's economic prosperity or commercial progress; but, on the contrary, that they are actually themselves mutually enriched thereby. We would therefore put an end to the old entanglements and mistifications of secret diplomacy and the formation of leagues against leagues. We stand for the immediate establishment, actually as a part of the treaty of peace with which the present war will end, of a universal league or society of nations, a super-national authority, with an international high court to try all justiciable issues between nations; an international legislature to enact such common laws as can be mutually agreed upon, and an international council of mediation to endeavor to settle without ultimate conflict even those disputes which are not justiciable. We would have all the nations of the world most solemnly undertake and promise to make common cause against any one of them that broke away from this fundamental agreement. The world has suffered too much from war for the Labor Party to have any other policy than that of lasting peace."

Who Are Talented?

The general sense in which the word talented is usually employed is that in which it is applied to those who are considered unusually gifted in or having special aptitude for an art, a trade, or a profession. Thus we speak of a talented musician, a talented machinist, or a talented medical practitioner, etc. The word is applied most freely, and too often without proper discrimination, to those whom we choose to designate as having more than ordinary abilities. Too often it is used because it forms a convenient handle with which we may treat the special abilities, or lack of them, in others.

It must be understood at the start that the term is a very relative one, having a wide shade of meaning. For instance, we sometimes say that a person is talented who exhibits a cleverness in the display of his powers, while another person possessed of the same powers, but who unfortunately is not so clever in "showing off," is said not to be talented. Thus, mediocrity possessed with clever assurance will often "get by" where real ability may fail through timidity. Again, an individual is said to be talented who evidences a profundity of attainment and skill in his particular line, and the question very naturally arises, if the profoundly able man is talented what can be said of the one who is merely clever?

It must be admitted that there are degrees of talent, bearing in mind always that the real meaning of the word talent, expressed in very brief terms, is innate ability. Thus in music a child may be said to be talented who has the ability to master in a fair way one of the many instruments of music, although he may never hope to equal a Mozart, a Beethoven, or a Brahms, or, for that matter, any of the lesser lights of the musical firmament. Again, an individual may be blessed with talent to that degree that he may excel in large measure the average of his fellow creatures, and still not be able to attain the rare heights of the world's honored maestri. This principle of varying degrees of talent is supported by the Savior's parable of the talents; for, after all, we have to revert to the Bible for confirmation of many of our cardinal principles of life. So then the one possessing a small measure of ability may be justly considered talented as well as he who is superabundantly endowed.

We think the term talented is badly overworked, and some other words should be brought to do service. We might present the scheme of gradation embodied in the words talents, gifts, genius; ranging from those of mere ordinary powers to those endowed with the highest degrees of extraordinary abilities. Thus, those who possess ordinary powers which make for the staple, dependable service of life may be said to be talented; those whose powers enable them to stand preeminent above others may be said to be gifted; but it is the extraordinary endowment and acquisition of powers, that take hold of the creative and the supernatural, that enables one to rank with the men of genius. Doctor John G. Holland, the American man of letters, has rarely put it, "Nature is the master of talent; genius is the master of nature." Yet genius itself is entirely subject to human analysis and is not altogether that rare, evanescent quality we have supposed, was only the gift of the gods. Many more talented men may become gifted and even gifted men may become geniuses if they have the will to persevere. A certain writer has said, "Genius is but the capacity of taking infinite pains." Another, not so poetic in his expressing it but fully as practical, says, "Genius is one tenth inspiration and nine tenths perspiration." This is true; the old adage we used to have to write and rewrite in our copy books about labor conquering all things is but in fulfillment of the edict pronounced upon Adam by the Almighty, "By the sweat of thy brow shalt thou eat bread." Longfellow has beautifully expressed it in his immortal poem, "The ladder of Saint Augustine," one of his "Birds of passage" series:

"The heights by great men reached and kept
Were not attained by sudden flight,
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upward in the night."

But, who are talented; who of our ranks possess talent in music and can therefore attain results from its practice or pursuit? We are firmly of the opinion that many more of us are talented than is usually supposed. It is a well-authenticated fact that almost every child born is naturally a lover of music. That love may be primitive and crude, but it is there and capable of cultivation. We have yet to find the individual who did not respond to the impulses of rhythm, the first fundamental element of music. As Hans von Bulow, the great pianist and musical critic said, "In the beginning was rhythm." Again, nearly everyone responds to the appeal of simple melody, and it is only when melodies begin to be complex in themselves and in their relations to each other that the circle of music lovers begins to contract. The love of music is inherent in all men except those whom Shakespeare characterizes as "fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils."

But does this inherent love for music spell talent? We think it does in a large measure although not in an absolute sense or in every case. Certainly no talent can exist without it. If asked the question, does love beget talent or talent beget love, we would be forced to affirm the latter postulate. We are forced to believe that talent exists in many of us, even though in various degrees, ranging from the dull glow to the sparkling flame. Was not God mindful of this when he gave his wondrous counsel, "Let the young men and the maidens cultivate the gifts of music and of song"?

Now, as to the cultivation of this talent which has been so generously bestowed by a wise and glorious Parent, it is unquestionably the duty of all to heed the command of God as to cultivation of the gifts of music within them, so far as possibly lies in their power. In some way every young man or maiden of the church should be cultivating these gifts, if such cultivation is possible. Neither should "the middle-aged and the old" lapse, but should remember "the gladness of their youth."

I fancy many will say, "But I can't cultivate music; I could never learn to play or sing, for I am one of those who haven't any talent." Probably you are right, so far as the learning to play or sing is concerned. To very few has been given the talent to give expression to the musical nature within, to reproduce the musical sentiments of others. This is the rarer form of the musical gift, and but few, comparatively, have been intrusted with this divine calling. But to nearly everyone has been granted the talent to appreciate the musical expression of others, for the ability to enjoy and appreciate music is a talent as well as the ability to create or reproduce. So therefore let those who consider themselves without talent take heart. The talent for appreciation can be cultivated as well as the talent for expression or creation, and it is just as important that it be cultivated. This can be done by listening carefully to good music and demanding an abundance of good music.

Therefore, let every one strive to develop himself and his powers; and in the language of Paul to Timothy, we exhort everyone, old and young, to "neglect not the gift that is in thee."

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

Music religious heat inspires,
It wakes the soul, and lifts it high,
And wings it with sublime desires,
And fits it to bespeak the Deity.

A Touching Appeal

---

The following extract from a letter just received is worthy of a serious article in these columns, for it depicts a condition that obtains in many homes. This condition is not exactly a deplorable one, yet it is regrettable and deserves a remedy. While we have no panacea for it, we hope to offer some good counsel that will greatly ameliorate and afford help to the many women who find themselves in the situation described by the sister who writes this letter. The text of the letter is altered somewhat, that the identity of the writer may be concealed.

"February 24, 1919.

"Dear Brother: I have been reading your articles in the HERALD and you seem to give such good advice that I thought perhaps you could help me, or make some helpful suggestions, at least.

"It is along the lines of that much beloved and much neglected subject, music.

"I was raised a poor girl, having to leave home at the tender age of thirteen to do housework or whatever was available to help maintain myself; my father dying when I was quite small. Now I am married, have a nice home and two lovely children. We recently purchased a piano. I have taken a few lessons, but my husband does not think it would be well for me to take any more. He says I am too old and that I have my family and household duties to care for. I am twenty-seven years old and love music dearly, but of course cannot get along so fast as a young girl could. I had no chance to study music when I was a girl. Do you think it would pay me to take any more lessons?

"Your sister in gospel bonds."

Will it pay? That is the pressing question ever coming up to us for solution, but, unfortunately, we so often fail to regard all sides of it. Very many ventures, when considered from the standpoint of dollars and cents, or the acquisition of worldly treasure, are miserable failures; but from the side of spiritual or moral remuneration, pay big dividends. We should never decide the profitable side of a question from a material view without first pausing to inquire if it has not a spiritual or moral side as well. Very often loss incurred in a worldly sense is liberally compensated for in a spiritual way.

Another mistaken idea, partially expressed in our sister's letter, and held in common among many married people, is that marriage means a renunciation of most all that is æsthetic or cultural in its character; that the giving of the marriage vows and the assumption of the duties of wedlock means farewell to the pursuits of art or intellect; that home keeping and the care of children must always be drudgery, in which there is no time for recreation or self-culture.

We know it is true that in many cases the condition and circumstances of those who enter the marriage relation compel them to assume burdens of care and responsibility that effectually exclude most all efforts at self-culture, but it isn't necessarily so in all cases. Too often women who find themselves with the cares of home and family surrender themselves too readily to the chains of the burdens that enthrall them, and needlessly conclude that there is no chance for them to accomplish anything. We have seen many instances where women needlessly relinquished their opportunities for self-betterment under the mistaken conviction that there was no chance for them; that efforts in that direction wouldn't pay. Take the case of the sister who writes the letter, for instance. Her soul longs to express itself and to expand in the culture of her most cherished gift—music. Yet she hesitates because there is grave doubt as to whether such a course will pay.

We believe every woman should think well before abandoning herself to the dreary routine of mere household drudgery. She should refuse to do so unless absolutely impelled by unalterable circumstances, and then she should cherish the hope of some day emerging onto a higher plane. A lapse into such a state can only result in dwarfing one's better nature and denying oneself much that is rightly due.

Now, what are the possibilities for the average married woman to pursue her efforts for self-culture, and furthermore, what are the compensations she may expect to receive for so doing? In considering the case and its arguments we will draw our illustrations from the art of music (remember, The Staff is a musical publication) giving due credit, however, to the fact that cultural possibilities in the other arts and branches of knowledge are open to her and are equally important.

The woman who marries and finds herself under a burden of home duties and family cares that seem to close the door of every opportunity towards self-culture had better have a care, for these duties will increase and will press upon her more and more if she will let them; they will become more numerous and absorb more and more of her attention if she doesn't watch out. In time, if she allows them to overcome her, they will become the major part of her very being, actually influencing her character and habits of life, slowly but certainly tending to the dwarfing of her very soul. Such a woman, when she finds domestic cares beginning to master her, should seek proper diversion in other pursuits, that her nature may obtain its needed recreation. Such a course is entirely in harmony with the common-sense laws of our physical being and can be applied as well to the mental and spiritual of our lives. The burdens of the home and family are usually of a like character and generally exercise one set of mental and physical muscles continuously. Consequently the other muscles and faculties are neglected and tend to become atrophied. Therefore she should seek to intersperse her household cares with other pursuits that bring the other faculties into play and relieve the overworked ones. This is true recreation. Besides, it must inevitably result in real gain if wisely pursued.

Take the case of the sister who writes us the letter and who find the longings of her soul prompting her to seek diversion through the refining study of music. Her husband fears she is too old; but we are assuring her she is not. While it would be folly for her to begin the study for the purpose of attaining professional or artistic proficiency, she is not too old to pursue it for its cultural, refining influences; neither are a number of other women, some of them older than she. Besides, should the serious study of music be confined to the young only? Did not the Lord have this in mind when he issued his injunction (referring to the cultivation of the gifts of music, Doctrine and Covenants 119: 6), "Let not the middle-aged and the old forget the gladness of their youth"? This sister, as well as a number of others who likewise have their household cares upon them, could take up in a moderate way the serious study of music, sandwiching it in among the duties of the home in such a way that the essential things of life would still be cared for. If such a course were wisely planned and pursued they would find as a result that household cares would be greatly lightened, especially in character; their lives would be cheered and strengthened, and the entire atmosphere of the home made better and sweeter. The much-needed relief from the regular grind of daily tasks would be afforded. Men everywhere have come to realize that relaxation must be had; some secure it through vacations, others through "hobbies." Our women have hobbies, too, we observe. With some it is fancy work; with others the mentally vitiating element of fiction; while with some, unfortunately, it is gossip. But how much more profitably can a woman spend her time in the pursuit of some elevating form of culture that will enrich her soul and benefit society.

How many women complain of the galling drudgery of their home lives and of their slavery to their duties! Many do so, still unmindful of the possibilities around them for self-advancement. They are disposed to cast envious eyes at those who seem to be enjoying better privileges than they, but have no comprehension of the opportunities they themselves may be slighting. The situation reminds us of the experience of the Savior with Martha and Mary, recorded in Luke 10: 38-42. He was received into the home of Martha, who, to entertain her divine guest, immediately busied herself in the work of the household to that degree that she burdened herself with "much serving," desirous, no doubt, of giving her Lord a fitting entertainment. Mary, however, was mindful of the great spiritual opportunity of the occasion, and sat at the feet of her Lord, feasting on his wondrous wisdom. Doubtless she was mindful of the household duties around her as well as Martha, but found it impossible to resist the rare privilege that was hers, to hear the instruction of the Master. There is a world of meaning in the reply that Jesus gave to Martha when she expostulated with him regarding her sister's indifference to her burdens, for the Master gave her a wonderful sermon on the value of the spiritual in our lives, when he said, "Mary hath chosen that good part which shall not be taken from her."

We wonder how many of our women are proving to be Marthas, and in their daily lives are allowing themselves to be "cumbered about much serving," failing to heed the pleadings of the spiritual, failing to acquire "that good part" that cannot be "taken away."

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5920 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Still They Come to Chat!

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

While we have worked under very unfavorable circumstances for the past few months, we feel we have made some real progress in spite of it.

Mrs. J. E. Massie, supervisor of the Home and Child Welfare Department, reports a nice class organized at Central Church. She expects to organize another class in this department this month. She has about fifteen ladies already scheduled to take up the work.

The Young Woman's Department is doing nicely. There are five organized circles of Orioles, and some of them are very much alive—especially the ones at Mount Washington and Englewood. They gave a box social recently which brought them $36 profit. This they are spending for clothing for the children at the Home in Lamoni, each girl making a garment with her own hands. Mrs. R. E. Newkirk is supervisor of this work.

Mrs. D. J. Kennedy, supervisor of the Relief and Service Department of our stake, has indeed been wide awake to her opportunities, and has carried on the work intelligently and enthusiastically. It has been very gratifying to note the service the sisters of the stake are rendering to God through their service to humanity.

The Red Cross work comes under this department. It is very encouraging to know that our Red Cross work has been highly complimented at headquarters. I believe our women have entered into the real spirit of this work, and the feature of the silent prayer period, during which time the hearts were lifted to God for the protection and direction of our Nation, seemed to renew our strength for the service required.

In the past year there have been 188 garments made for the Red Cross, 36 garments mended, 60 pairs of socks mended, 11 wind-proof aviation vests made from old kid gloves, and a large number of socks, sweaters, and helmets knitted. The French and Belgian Relief work was not forgotten, for 834 garments—many of them having been made over—and ten quilts were turned over to headquarters.

The women in the different parts of the stake meet in their own locals once a week, where they sew and repair garments which are turned into the storehouse at Central Church, to be given out when and where need arises.

Some of the locals are still earning money in various ways, and caring for the sick and needy in their own localities. One local reports some children sent to the Home at Lamoni, their expenses paid by the sisters. Another turned quite a nice little sum over to the Christmas offering of their Sunday school.

We believe the sisters of the Kansas City Stake are truly seeing the importance of the opportunities which are theirs in this auxiliary work, and they are hoping to do still greater work in the future.

MRS. MAE PRICE,

Secretary for Stake Auxiliary.

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO.

Dear Sisters: Many thanks for the invitation to the social chat! Although somewhat late, I felt the "land of the maple" must be heard from.

My time in the Auxiliary branch of our church work has been short, as I was only appointed organizer for this district last December. The letter of appointment came but a short time before the holiday season, so we could not do much until that was over. We had our first meeting January 7. We have a membership of twenty-one. Our Relief and Service Department has two groups, one sewing, and the other social.

I find the work is new in the district, but I am looking forward to a full organization. Many of our churches are in country places, which adds to the difficulty of the work, but as I travel with Elder Mortimer the greater part of the time, I hope to meet with each before long.

I find the Year Book and Supplement indispensable. I find in the auxiliary work a vast field for the development of our women along various lines. I believe the educational work to be most important, and urge the women to take it up seriously. When the sisters come to understand the aim of this work, I am sure they will respond readily, and I hope to organize classes soon, in several places.

May our work receive our Father's blessing and approval.

In gospel bonds,

MRS. J. L. MORTIMER.

SANTA ANA, CALIFORNIA.

Dear Editor: Sister Krahl has asked me to write the column in regard to our work here in southern California. I hesitate to do so, since our efforts have been so hindered on account of the influenza. However, at our convention here in February, we had quite an enthusiastic "get-together" meeting, and plans were laid for the future.

Sister D. A. Lewis, of Los Angeles, was selected as our institute representative, if it meets with Sister Krahl's approval. We are looking forward to a great deal of good being accomplished by the institute work.

Some donations for the furnishing of our room in the Women's Building were received, and we hope to have it completed ere long.

On February 14 a stereopticon lecture was given by Brother N. T. Chapman, using the machine and Book of Mormon slides which were purchased by the Woman's Auxiliary of southern California.

During the conference lunches were served in the basement of the church. The Orioles were very much in evidence on these occasions, doing the serving, and acting as decorating committees.

Hoping for the further progress of the work here as elsewhere.

LOLA S. MITCHELL, Organizer.

OUR SERVICE FLAG!

Awake, oh soul, why longer sleep?
A nation calls for you;
Unfurl your unused "service flag"
And plant a star or two!

The whole world needs your help to-day,
So step right out in line;
There's room for everyone to serve
In this momentous time!

While some are serving at the front
Where "Old Glory" leads the way,
We, too, must labor here at home
And serve how'er we may.

The rich, the poor, the small, the great,
Are side by side in line,
And every loyal heart beats true
In this great serving time.

So shake the folds from out your flag,
Hang high your banner bright,

And add a brand-new service star
Upon its field of white!

LOLA S. MITCHELL.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

Dear Auxiliary Sisters: I think it a splendid idea to have letters from all over the country, and hasten to have California represented.

We have some earnest workers who seem anxious to make up for all the time we lost by the influenza epidemic. As district organizer I have received grand letters from the various locals, and all express a willingness—yes, more, an anxiety—to forge ahead with the general movement.

One special feature I will mention. Our "Auxiliary Rest Tent" for the next reunion, where couches, chairs, and all the conveniences for mothers with young children may be found within easy access, is to be materialized at last. This is something we have needed, and feel proud that our dear society will be the medium of its establishment. Each local will be notified of the articles they will be expected to furnish, and it is all under the management of an efficient chairman. We are sure this will prove to be a boon to mothers with little children attending the reunion.

Ever praying for the progress of the woman's work, I am,
Your colaborer,

CLEDA N. SIMPSON,
Organizer for Northern California.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.

Dear Auxiliary Friends: Our new Auxiliary officers are going about their work with an enthusiasm positively contagious! It is not only that their vision is wide and clear, but their capacity for work seems tremendous. Our first meeting under the new regime was with the president, Sister A. A. Thiehoff. About thirty ladies were present, which in itself was not so remarkable, but—which was the gratifying note—so many were new members. As in other cities, it is not always possible to call out the entire membership at any one meeting, but we are hoping that the attendance will be so good in average, that none of the sisters in the branch will feel that they have been on the outside when the good things were being passed around.

One after another, plans were taken up, discussed, and disposed of in prompt fashion. These were largely local, and included many little improvements which might be made in the management of our various local affairs. Among these we might mention just a few. It was decided to request the deacons to open wide, for five minutes, the windows in the church between the two morning services, and again between the two evening sessions. This exchange of "old air for new" will tend to improve the quality of attentiveness on the part of the congregations.

Again, the librarian responsible for the condition of the book cases, and the exchange of "Praises" for "Hymnals," or vice versa, was requested to check up such work with a little better system, that confusion might be avoided.

In connection with a special urging of mothers to have their baptized children present at every communion service, it was decided to ask the presiding officers to close such meetings more promptly. Children who have already attended the Sunday school session find it hard to sit quietly through a too-prolonged prayer service.

The grotesque effects which accrue from a large bouquet of flowers on the pulpit stand, were mentioned, with the result that the use of a pedestal and artistic flower holder was donated by two sisters.

As a side issue of the educational department work, the sisters agreed to try, each one, to read the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants entirely through during this coming year. It is important that we know well our own church books, and the president also urged each Auxiliary member to see that the church papers were in her home.

Sixty-three calls were reported as having been made since the January meeting. This is an important part of the work that women may do in a branch. Keeping in touch with the members, by pleasant contact in their homes, becoming identified with their general interests and, perhaps, particular trials, surely helps to cement the bonds of brotherly love. These calls are made by all the members, under a fine system arranged by Sister W. E. Stoft, who is in charge of the work.

The sisters meet for quilting, sewing, etc., each Wednesday afternoon at the church. Two of the number, commissioned by "turns," prepare an evening meal, to which all the branch is invited, the men and others coming after work. In good fellowship the food is eaten, and things cleared away in shipshape manner in good time for the midweek prayer service, which latter seems all the more enjoyable because of the social intercourse of the day.

These are only fragments of the many things which mark the activities of this devoted band of sisters. We may in the future tell you some more, and—listen!—we hope to have a wonderful surprise to disclose before long!

All success to the auxiliaries of the church!

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

An Open Challenge to R. C. Evans

My Dear Mr. Evans: In 1905 you gave expression to the following:

"The doctrine of polygamy is denounced by the revelations of Joseph Smith as contained in the Book of Covenants, by the great revelation that came through him to the church, known as the Book of Mormon, and by the Inspired Translation of the Bible."

You also stated that:

"There is not a single word, in a single sermon, lecture, statement, newspaper, or church publication printed during the lifetime of Joseph Smith, wherever he, by word, has indorsed the infamous doctrine of plurality of wives, not a single statement, and there is no Salt Lake Mormon breathing who can produce one and prove its authenticity."—Latter Day Polygamy, Its Origin, pp. 11, 12.

As late as 1917 you said:

"Those who knew and loved Joseph Smith, that is, his wife, his three sons, and many thousands of his people, urge that he was innocent of the charge. There is not a single word in all the sermons, lectures, editorials, books, or other literature published during the lifetime of Joseph Smith, wherein he, by a single word, indorsed the doctrine of polygamy."—Evans vs. McKenzie, p. 9.

I herewith challenge you to meet me in a public discussion to be held in the largest available hall in Toronto and prove the above statements false.

If you can produce any competent evidence from the writings or teachings of Joseph Smith or the official teaching or practice of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints from its inception in 1830 to the death of Joseph Smith on June 27, 1844, or of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints from its inception to the present time which will establish the guilt of Joseph Smith, or implicate the church in either teaching or practicing polygamy or plural marriage, I will contribute the sum of one hundred dollars to the Sick Children's Hospital. If you fail to produce such evidence you in turn will obligate yourself to donate the sum of one hundred dollars to the Sick Children's Hospital.

The decision as to the reliability and sufficiency of the evidence to be left to five competent judges in the Province of Ontario.

I am authorized to act on behalf of the general and local church in this matter.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) T. W. WILLIAMS.

The Redemption of Zion

My attention was drawn a few days ago to a letter in the HERALD of February 19, 1919, written by Brother Andrew Johnson. He stated that he was made happy by the reading of a letter written by Brother Glen Ingleright on the subject of the Lord coming to redeem Zion.

The quotation he cited was that of Matthew 24: 37: "But as the days of Noah were so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." Our brother states that it might be forty years yet before the Lord would come to redeem Zion, because Noah preached one hundred and twenty years.

To my mind, there is nothing in the passage to indicate that the Lord might delay his coming yet forty years, but rather to show by the next verse the condition of the world at his coming. He gave the idea that the people would be as careless as they were in the days of Noah, giving no heed to the signs of the times; as the people of Noah gave no heed to the building of the ark; but would be eating and drinking, and marrying and giving in marriage, until Christ shall come.

Now to prove my statement, let us turn to Luke 17: 28-30 where Jesus tells us: "Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded; but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed."

Note, we have no record of Lot preaching one hundred and twenty years.

JOHN H. MILLER.

A Call for Help

Missionaries, presidents of branches, and others, are you aware of the fact that since the beginning of the war the use of tobacco and especially the cigarette has had such an increase in consumption that the condition of our youth is becoming more and more alarming. Between twelve and fifteen youths contract the cigarette habit in the United States each day in the year.

About 1,446,600 acres of land in the United States are used for the cultivation of tobacco, 200,000 men, women, and children are employed in the manufacture of it, and 75,000 farmers are engaged in its cultivation. All this is worse than wasted. Shall we passively allow this condition to continue to exist. We should not.

On March 30 an effort is being made to educate the people as to the evils of intemperance. The Sunday school has prepared a lesson on the demon Alcohol, the Religio has one prepared on soft drinks, coming the Friday previous. This affords an opportune time for the branches to come to our help and give the cause of temperance such a boost as never before occurred.

I would like to have the missionaries, presidents of branches, and others interested to help the cause along by giving the eleven o'clock hour over to the discussion of the various phases of temperance, giving tobacco in the form of the cigarette especial emphasis. Kansas City and Far West States and Northeastern Kansas District have already consented to this plan, and to more fully establish the work in the various localities you should have a number of the leaflets, "Modern Use of Narcotics." They can be had for one dollar a hundred by sending to me at 1106 Bales Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri.

Let us give the boy a fair chance in life by abolishing the cigarette from the land. Our slogan should be, "A smokeless generation."

J. W. GUNSOLLEY, General Superintendent Temperance Department.

NORTH TOPEKA, KANSAS, March 4, 1919.

Editors Herald: As I am renewing my subscription, I will write a few lines to the HERALD. I think a great deal of this paper, and realize that the matter therein is very much improved. It keeps me in touch with headquarters, and gives a general knowledge of the church at large.

Church papers have been much neglected by many members of the church. This should not be, for good reading is food for the soul.

We have a nice little branch here with Elder A. P. Crooker as president, and he is a natural leader. Brother I. G. Whipple is our Sunday school superintendent, and he surely is an earnest worker.

We had a good visit from Brother Anderson this winter, and enjoyed his stay very much.

The influenza swept this branch during the quarantine, but in no case with fatal results, though one or two were quite ill. We have much to thank God for.

I have a sister and a cousin that were baptized February 25. My mother also has been baptized into this church. So I have much to thank God for. I was the first to obey the call, and it is good to see others follow. One of my girl friends also has obeyed the truth.

I have been in this church nearly four years, and can say I know that it is of God and not of man, for I have been blessed with the Holy Spirit.

My prayer is that we all, as God's people, will prove true to the end.

MRS. J. E. ALFREY.

WOODBINE, IOWA, March 6, 1919.

Editors Herald: We would like to speak of our work here for the month of February. It was a very good month. We started with a good sacrament service—a very good beginning—followed by a good midweek prayer meeting, at which Brother Berve spoke to us by the Spirit with some good promises.

On February 7 our district conventions and conference began with a good prayer service in the evening; and the 8th, the Religio and Sunday school conventions were active in the work before them, followed in the evening by a good program.

Sunday—prayer meeting at 9 a. m. in charge of Arthur Lane and H. S. Lytle—a good spiritual meeting. Preaching at 11 a. m. was by T. W. Hougas; a good talk with many good points. The 2 p. m. service consisted of preaching by Amos Berve, from chart—very interesting. In the evening, preaching by C. J. Smith.

Monday was taken up with conference work, a new thing with us, but it suits the people who work hard on Saturday. It gave us a chance to go to conference.

Brother Elmer Redfield was ordained a deacon at the evening service. He is a worthy man and we wish him success in his calling.

Brother Berve stayed with us and held meetings over the following Sunday and then went to Little Sioux.

Sunday, the 16th, H. S. Lytle went to Logan and preached morning and evening, with good interest. The 17th, Brother Fry was called to Missouri Valley to preach a funeral sermon.

Our midweek prayer meetings have been held at the homes of members, and have been generally good. Some feel that we are getting our share of the spiritual uplift. There is much lacking yet in coming to perfection. One of the things needed by us is that we be willing—willing in many ways.

There is a forward movement, and if we stop too long to be converted to each move, we may find ourselves behind. When God told Adam to offer burnt offerings, he did not ask why, but went ahead. He gave us something to think about, when in answer to the angel, he says, "I know not, save the Lord commanded me." Let that be our watchword and we will travel faster toward Zion conditions.

Sunday, the 23d, preaching was by F. A. Fry, both morning and evening, with good attendance and interest.

Sister Alice Hupp is one of a team doing institute work, and they are meeting with very good success. There should be more of this work in other departments.

CORRESPONDENT.

WEBB, SASKATCHEWAN, February 26, 1919.

Editors Herald: I am much pleased with the two papers that come to me each week—the Herald and Ensign. My wife and I are the only Saints around here, that we know of, and have no church privileges. For this reason the church papers are much enjoyed by us. The sermons and letters are a great help to encourage us along the path of righteousness. Also, I often find them a great help on subjects we often talk about to the neighbors.

It was only a short time ago that I was talking to a lady about "authority." She seemed to think that anyone having the feeling within his heart to preach, was called of God, and that the laying on of hands was not necessary to give one authority. I gave her the Apostle Paul's statement as to being called "as was Aaron"; also how Moses laid his hands on him and ordained him to the priesthood; and many other instances where it was practiced in the apostles' age. Only a few days passed until along came the Ensign with an editorial on the same subject. This made my heart rejoice, and I intend to pass it on to her.

Dear Saints, I can say I know that this work is of God, and I feel thankful to him that he opened my eyes to see the truthfulness of it, and feel that I owe the remainder of my life to the service of the Master.

We have three children, the youngest eleven years of age. They study the Sunday School Quarterlies with us, and I think they would unite with the church if they had an opportunity. I feel thankful to God that he is leading them in the way of righteousness. The only thing that grieves my heart is that when Sunday comes we have no place to go to worship. We sometimes attend the Presbyterian Church, but hear nothing there that gives food to the soul. We heard one man preach that there is no Devil. It made me think, When will they begin to preach that there is no God?

I certainly would like to see an elder come here. But I do not want to be selfish, and I read the letters of so many isolated Saints who are asking for elders. So let God's will be done in the matter. If he send us one, I will promise to do all in my power towards helping along this good work. Or if any elders happen to pass this way, do not fail to stop and see us. A telephone call from Webb will bring us to meet you.

I took advantage of an opportunity at Christmas time to visit the Saints at Port Arthur, and enjoyed a good time among them. I took sacrament with them, and heard two fine sermons delivered by Brother A. Miller. There is a nice little branch of Saints there, and others investigating.

Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, I am

Your brother,

JOHN H. MILLER.

WOODBINE, IOWA, March 2, 1919.

Editors Herald: Will you permit me to acknowledge the kindly and brotherly greetings of the several quorums of the priesthood to a worn-out brother in the cause of Christ, but who is still clinging to "the rod of iron which surely leads to the tree of life"?

While I appreciate the kindly and Christian greetings to a worn-out pioneer, I confess I am humbled at the thoughts of my heart that I fail to be worthy of such general expression of brotherly love. May God be with you in all your deliberations, in all your counsels and conference work. It would be a pleasure to be with you, but that is impossible for me. My health is perhaps as good as I have a right to expect.

If my life has proved worthy of such esteem, the praise belongs to God. I am waiting for the change that must come in God's due time. I have not trusted in him in vain. I have many evidences of his love and help in time of need.

Praying that God may direct your counsels and conference work, I remain

Your brother in Christ,

CHARLES DERRY.

HERMOSA BEACH, CALIFORNIA, March 7, 1919.

Editors Herald: Having read the testimonies in this week's papers, I feel that I must have a few words to say, too.

I have been a member of this church for nearly two years, and I thank my heavenly Father that I have been led to understand this great work and to accept it.

I am not near enough to a branch to be able to attend regularly. We have a Sunday school class at home, and I am teaching my children to understand the word of God. My husband does not belong but is interested, and I trust and pray that he will join some day.

We live three blocks back from the ocean, and I can sit by my window and see the waves rolling and breaking, and it makes me think of the wonders and marvelous works of God.

I know that this is the true church of God. Let us all study his word, for we cannot learn enough.

I ask an interest in your prayers that I may be faithful.

LEONA D. STILES.

[A letter to S. A. Burgess. Brother Scott was a favorite stenographer with Brother Burgess and at the time of entering the service was in the Church Recorder's department.]

AMERICAN COMMISSION TO NEGOTIATE PEACE,

4 Place de la Concorde, Paris, France, February 2, 1919.

Dear Brother: Your very good letter of December 27 received and I hasten to reply, for, as you know, the army "game" has taught us to be prompt and to do things as expeditiously as occasion requires.

Not unlike yourself, I too have resurrected from out of the past the association which you so generously gave me, and since being, as it were, out in the world for the past few months, I have been made to realize, to an extent, just what that association has meant to me. Allow me to assure you that I am not unappreciative.

There is so much which I would like to tell you in connection with my work here, but there is little which I am permitted to divulge at this time. Suffice it to say that I was the first enlisted man to report to the Peace Commission after the call was made, i. e., out of the A. E. F. I was made chief clerk of the personnel office "right off the bat," and since the date of my reporting, December 1, I have hardly had time to get my meals, and a full night's sleep has been impossible. I have a very efficient force working with me, including two boys from the company to which I belonged. These boys and myself have a fine living room in the same building in which the office is located. I consider myself fortunate in having the association of those with whom I have worked since entering the army, and especially in so large a city as this.

On the Sunday following New Year's, I accepted an invitation to take a sight-seeing trip to Versailles. This invitation was extended to about thirty of the enlisted boys working with the Commission, and was made by a Mrs. Bryant (one of the Armours of Chicago) who had charge of a large Red Cross Hospital at Saint Cloud, just outside Paris, during the war. Upon our arrival at Versailles, she secured the services of a competent guide who gave explanation in detail of each object of interest and its historical connection. Here we saw—

The Palace of Versailles, one of the most artistic buildings in France, built under Louis XIII, enlarged by Louis XIV and inhabited by French kings up to the Revolution. It is now converted into a museum, and having continued to play a part in great national events, presents a collection of the most interesting souvenirs of France.

The modern statue of Louis XIV (bronze).

The "Great Stables" where the king's horses used to be kept, and the "Little Stables" where the carriages were kept. They were designed by Mansart and have contained as many as 2,500 horses. To-day, one contains artillery workshops, and the other barracks of engineers.

The chapel, with its stone statues and windows ornamented with elegant sculpture.

The first rooms of French history, containing pictures of past historic deeds. Each picture bears an explanatory label.

The stone gallery, containing pieces of sculpture of the Middle Ages, casts of the royal statues on the tombs of Saint Denis; the tomb of Ferdinand, King of Aragon, and Isabella, Queen of Castile, a cast taken from the marble original at Granada.

Rooms of the Crusades, also containing pictures commemorating the history of the expeditions in the east during the 11th, 12th, and 13th centuries for the deliverance of Jerusalem and the Holy Sepulcher.

Room of Constantine—pictures representing the capture of Constantine.

The Smalah Room containing the celebrated picture representing the "Taking of the Smalah."

The Crimean and Italian room showing illustrations of the expedition of the Crimea, and of the Italian War.

The modern rooms, showing views illustrating more modern events.

The Room of Hercules, the great court ballroom of Louis XV. Its ceiling, one of the largest in existence (59 by 55 feet), represents the "Apotheosis of Hercules."

The Room of Plenty in which are large pieces of hand-work in gold, agate vases, and more pictures.

Five rooms each bearing the name of a planet. (Venus, Diana, Mars, Mercury, and Apollo.) Each divinity is represented on the ceiling with his or her principal attributes. These rooms were used three times a week for the celebrated receptions of the court of Louis XIV. It is in these rooms that one notices the figure of Louis XIV and his personal emblem, the Sun.

The Room of War—all ornaments, trophies, etc., are consistent with its name.

The Glass Gallery (244 feet long, 34 feet broad, and 42 feet high) with seventeen windows overlooking the gardens, each with a corresponding arch decorated with mirrors. The most important court receptions took place here, including modern events: The pontifical benediction given by Pope Pius VII, the coronation of the king of Prussia, the celebration of the centenary of the states-general by President Carnot in 1889, the reception of the Czar, Nicholas II in 1896.

Rooms of Louis XIV, XV, and XVI; rooms of Marie Antoinette; the Hall of Peace; the Queen's Bed Chamber; Room of the Queen's Guards, and other rooms too numerous to mention.

The Gallery of Battles (the room which I liked most of all) containing a complete set of pictures illustrating the principal battles in French History.

The gardens and fountains, with their beautiful statuary, I believe is one of the prettiest sights I have ever witnessed. Here also the figure of Louis XIV and his emblem, the sun, is quite prominent. It took some three or four hours to make the rounds of the "Park," and a detailed account would consume pages, so I desist. The greater part of this, I anticipate, you have read about, but to me it was new, and I candidly admit that I learned more about French History in connection with Louis XIV, XV, and XVI in the one day than all the history I have previously covered in study.

I must mention that we also went through the famous "Trianons," and there one gets a true idea of the beauties of Versailles.

The last place on our visit was the Museum of Carriages, containing state coaches dating from the First Empire and the Restoration, and sedan chairs and sleighs of the eighteenth century. This proved to be very interesting, giving a decided contrast with the modern vehicles of to-day.

I am anticipating taking more sight-seeing trips to various historic points of interest as time permits.

My stay in Paris is an indeterminable quantity as it depends on the length of the peace conference. I shall indeed be very glad to get back to the good old U. S. A., and especially home. I am very well pleased with my work and am feeling fine and dandy. I feel keenly the responsibility connected with my work, but confidently realize that I am being cared for. Your interest, with others, is earnestly solicited.

Must close and get busy. Remember me to all the force. Would appreciate hearing from you again at your convenience.

One who is trying,

RAYMOND "C."

[RAYMOND C. SCOTT.]

PORT ARTHUR, ONTARIO, March 8, 1919.

Editors Herald: As I was unable to get an elder here in time to stop the enemy from devouring us, I was reminded through the Spirit to defend the work that I love. The Adventists distributed tracts that put the Martyr Joseph Smith as the father of polygamy, the Adam-god theory, and blood-atonement. I advertised in the local press that the tract was false and that I would answer all the false statements published by the Seventh-day Adventists. So I began, and they sent their Aaron to defend and interrupt our meeting. I have examined the tract from beginning to the end, using the Bible to prove their mistakes. They attacked the Book of Mormon, second book of Nephi, chapter 1, verses 74 to 78. Here they say God is the author of sin because Adam had to transgress so as to have children. I showed from 1 Timothy 2:14 that Adam was not deceived, but the woman, and as woman (Eve) had been deceived and was then in a state to be separated from Adam, therefore Adam had to transgress if he wished to be with his wife, Eve. Therefore Eve would have had no children, as Book of Mormon says. At this point the Seventh-day Adventists cried out, "God would have given Adam another wife." I replied, "You would like God to start into polygamy, and if he gave Adam another wife how would it have helped Eve to have children? This seemed to bring the house down in a laugh, and the Aaron quieted down.

Again in Alma 5:9: "And behold he shall be born of Mary at Jerusalem." They tried to make out that the Book of Mormon contradicted Matthew 2:1 where it says that Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea. I showed from the Book of Mormon, that the prophet was speaking of Mary the Mother of Jesus, who would be living in Jerusalem and was not speaking that Jesus was born in Jerusalem. Again in Helaman 5:45: "And darkness shall cover the face of the whole land." I showed that the prophet spoke of the darkness of the sun and moon and stars which would give no light for the space of three days on this land, and that in verse 48 he spoke of the light of Jesus, as he was the light of the world. (John 1:8, 9.) And as they had crucified Jesus, then the light was taken away from the whole earth from his death to his resurrection, covering the three days. Thus the Book of Mormon was right. This drove the Aaron away from the meeting. Their Mores has tried his hand, and in our last talk he became a big fellow and began to bluff. At this I checked him and said: "If that is a challenge, I accept it." Then he replied: "No, I have no time to cast my pearls before swine." I thanked him for the compliment and said, "Others have bristles and if that is the kind of pearls you have they are not worth much. At any time you wish to meet our elders or myself on the stand so the people can judge, and not you and I, just name the date."

These people began their attack on us, and now I intend to defend the cause through my Master's help. The leader is a busy man now, warning his people to keep books from me for I would pick flaws with them. The Marvelous Work and a Wonder is working here, so I inclose another five-dollar order for these books. They are the thing to meet Seventh-day Adventists.

May I ask the prayers in behalf of Brother David McLean, Grandmother Bonsteel, and Brother A. Bonsteel, now in Rochester, that God may heal them from their lingering illnesses if it is his will.

Request Brother J. F. Curtis and Brother John Shields and all my old acquaintances to write me.

Yours truly,

Whalen Building.

better, in March. Quilting is the order of the day, and they are getting to be professionals. Several outsiders attend regularly, and we hope by this means to gather souls as well as money.

Our attendance at church services recently has been above the average. Brother Christy has been preaching some good sermons, and several not of our fold have shown a marked degree of interest.

Sister Nellie Morgan Gore is at the tubercular sanitarium. She is a young mother much needed in her home and in the branch. She has requested the prayers of the Saints that she might be restored to health.

Sister R. N. Burwell is visiting relatives in Lapeer, Michigan. Brother Burwell expects to join her for a short visit the last of the week.

We would be pleased to receive a call from any of our old friends in passing to or from General Conference. We can assure you a hearty welcome.

GALLANDS GROVE.—At Deloit, Iowa, February 15 and 16, District President J. L. Butterworth and associate C. E. Anderson in charge. One patriarch, 8 elders, and one teacher reported. Branch reports show total membership of 1,089, with 320 absent members. Bishop's agent reported: On hand June 7, $393.54; receipts to January 1, $3,927.52; expended to January 1, $2,963.88. Total receipts for the year, $7,701.62. Report of treasurer of library board shows balance of $14.47 in treasury. F. Dewey Anderson ordained to office of elder. The following resolution was adopted: Resolved that hereafter all persons appointed by the district conference whose work involves the receiving and expending of money, be and are hereby ordered to record all transactions so an intelligent audit can be taken of the accounts, such audit to be annually or at such times as the conference may determine. The following were chosen delegates to General Conference: Edward Broad, C. E. Harpe, J. L. Butterworth, J. B. Barrett, Mrs. James Sheldon, Wave Cross, J. B. Wildermuth, Dora Wildermuth, Lulu Crandall, Lillie Marks. Alternates: James Pearsall, Bessie Pearsall, F. F. and Pearl Jackson, Carl Streeter, C. W. Winey, Floy Holcomb, Frank and Amanda Sheldon. Next conference to be held the first Saturday and Sunday in June at Mallard, Iowa. Wave Cross, secretary.

LONDON, ENGLAND.—On January 18 and 19, at 58 Ickburgh Road, Upper Clapton, London. At request of conference, Bishop R. May presided. Communication from R. May read, together with his financial report. London and Enfield Branches sent in spiritual reports. Following labor reports received: Elder John W. Worth, (president London Branch) Elder John A. Judd (president Enfield Branch), Elders R. Goullee, R. Clift, and Dover E. Judd. Election of officers for the ensuing year: John A. Judd, president; Dover E. Judd, secretary; D. A. Oakham, recorder; Dover E. Judd, historian; Pearl Crick, chorister; auditors: D. A. Oakham, 3 years; William Worth, 2 years; treasurer, Sister E. E. Judd. Resolution prevailed that presidency of district be free from branch official capacity. Also that all ministers' labor reports be accepted only when made out on proper blank forms. Religious session on the 19th at Enfield, at 2.30 p. m. Meeting of district priesthood association at 4 p. m., at which Bishop R. May was reelected teacher. Preaching service at 6.30 p. m. Short addresses given by Bishop R. May, and Elders R. Goullee and John A. Judd. Several resolutions presented by Bishop R. May condemning action of the leader of the apostasy in Toronto, and also renewing expression of confidence in the presiding officials of the church were carried unanimously. Will meet again at call of president. Dover E. Judd, secretary.

SOUTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—At Springerton, February 15 and 16, President F. M. Davis in charge. Statistical reports read as follows: Joppa, 40; Bellair, 60; Poplar Creek, 118; Brush Creek, 379; Parrish, 128; Springerton, 141; Tunnel Hill, 215; Bungay, Dry Fork, and Skillet Fork not reporting. Recommendation from Joppa Branch that W. G. Barrett be ordained to office of elder, and S. O. Smith to office of priest was referred to the district presidency, they to provide for their ordination. Report of Bishop's agent: received $1,- 025.67; balance due church $48.54. Motion prevailed that the district secretary, together with the branch secretary, put forth an effort to locate absent members and their addresses. A motion to disorganize the Bungay Branch was referred to the district presidency and they to report to next conference. The following officers were chosen: district president, R. H. Hanson; associates, F. M. Slover and S. D. Goostree; secretary, W. E. Presnell; treasurer, W. W. Brown; librarian, Cora Henson. Sister Ruth Holman was recommended to the general church chorister to be appointed as district chorister. Delegates to General Conference: F. M. Slover, F. T. Sawley, Henry Sparling, Ruth Holman, W. H. Kelley, George Ellis, P. G. McMahan, Dora Lowry, W. W. Brown, Carol Dillon, W. G. Barrett. Preaching by L. C. Moore, F. M. Slover, and Henry Sparling. Adjourned to meet at Poplar Creek, at the call of the president. W. E. Presnell, secretary.

KANSAS CITY STAKE.—At Kansas City, February 22, 23, 1919, at 2.30 p. m. President J. A. Tanner presided. U. W. Greene, representing the Presidency, was called upon by Brother Tanner to assist in presiding. One hour and twenty-five minutes was spent in the detail work of reports from officers, quorums, auxiliaries, and special appointees of the stake. They were indicative of progress and development along many lines in the different branches of the work. The proceedings were handled with such system and method that not the slightest friction occurred and the general good spirit dominant was commented upon by many present. Delegates to General Conference elected: C. D. Jellings of Mount Washington Branch was approved, upon proper recommendation, for ordination to the office of high priest, and a member of the stake high council, and he was ordained. Upon like recommendation, the transfer of Paul Pugsley from the Far West to the Kansas City Stake High Council was approved. An invitation from the Holden Stake to meet with them in joint reunion in the 1919 session was approved, and the presidency and bishopric appointed with authority to represent our stake in the necessary carrying out of all plans. There were also a number of alternates elected to occupy, should they be called upon to fill the places of delegates not attending the conference. A resolution prevailed, authorizing the stake presidency and bishopric to confer with officers of adjoining stakes with a view to considering the possibility of securing a permanent and adequate reunion grounds upon which the stakes may hold a joint reunion. J. W. Gunsolley, temperance superintendent, asked that the last Friday and Sunday in march be observed throughout the stake with special temperance meetings. Woman's Auxiliary was addressed by Sister Dora Glines of Independence in connection with the regular program work. Preaching and lectures by Gomer T. Griffiths and U. W. Greene. Four baptisms. One of the very best sessions that the stake has experienced.

SEATTLE AND BRITISH COLUMBIA.—At Centralia, Washington, February 22 and 23, district officers presiding, Elder John Hartnell assisting, president and secretary reporting. Treasurer reported receipts of $73.72 and expenditures of $8.05, for the six months ending December 31. Bishop's agent reported total receipts of $2,476.02 in tithes and offerings, with a balance of $509.58. Statistical report showed Seattle total membership, 330, gain 17; Roslyn 37, gain 1; Centralia, 166, gain 2; New Westminster, 86, gain 1; Chilliwack, 49, no change; and Bellingham, 42, losing 2 and gaining 2, making a total of 710 for the district as reported, and a grand total of 759, having the enrollment of disorganized branches—Tacoma, Castle Rock, and Nanaimo, each having 16, 27, and 6 respectively. Ministry reporting were 7 elders, 2 priests, and one teacher. Gospel literature board reported the sale of upward of $50 worth of books. Petitions from the Seattle and Centralia Branches were granted for the ordinations of Robert J. Holman, George Samuel Kinghorn, and Clyde S. Rice to the office of priest, and Charles H. Powers to that of deacon, also D. Omar Cato an elder, and Paul E. Fisher, deacon. All were accordingly ordained except Brethren Kinghorn and Rice, not present. J. M. Terry was elected district president for the ensuing year, S. P. Cox, vice president, and F. W. Holman, secretary-treasurer. Bishop's agent, John Hartnell, unanimously sustained, also member gospel literature board, G. R. Brundage, reelected. Harold Premo was elected member library board, and Orville L. Oppelt, chorister. Brethren G. R. Brundage, John Hartnell, J. M. Terry, Jacob Berringer, and Byron Cheesebro, elected reunion committee. Delegates to General Conference: W. M. Aylor, Brother and Sister Richard Hartnell, Etta E. Rhodes, and C. N.

Heading. A petition to General Conference was ordered, for an elder or high priest to be sent to labor in Centralia, Washington, and as time will permit, in near-by vicinity. The time of annual election of district officers was changed to the August conference. It is earnestly requested that all who are enrolled on the records of disorganized branches—Tacoma, Castle Rock, and Nanaimo—will apply to the undersigned for certificates of transfer to their present near-by branches. Frederick W. Holman, secretary, 3633 Whitman Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

The Presidency

The quorums of seventy are called to meet at 10 a. m., April 3, 1919, in the basement of the Brick Church, to consider important matters.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
 PRESIDENT.

Quorum Notices

The First Quorum of Seventy will meet Friday, April 4, 1919, at 10 a. m., at Lamoni, Iowa, at the I. O. O. F. Hall. A general feeling prevails that this will be a very important conference. Let every seventy be present if possible. We will endeavor to get routine work out of the way before the General Conference convenes. E. E. Long, president.

The Council of Seven Presidents of Seventy will meet at Lamoni, Iowa, April 1, 1919, at 7.30 p. m. The place of meeting has not been determined yet, but I will see that a suitable place is in readiness in due time. E. E. Long, secretary.

Reunion Notices

Little Sioux and Gallands Grove Districts will hold a joint reunion at Dow City, Iowa, August 22 to 31 inclusive. Amos Berve, Logan, Iowa, chairman of reunion committee. F. R. Schafer, secretary; J. L. Butterworth, treasurer.

Addresses

Elder F. G. Pitt, 613 West Marion Street, Joliet, Illinois.

Notice

To the Branches of Northern California, Greeting: It is expected that each branch will contribute to district expense. Take a collection, or make a donation to that end. I was reelected treasurer, so please send the funds to me. You are expected to make a contribution each quarter, January, April, July, and October of each year. I trust that each branch will respond. C. A. Parkin, 579 Fifth Avenue, San Francisco, California.

Our Departed Ones

STARK.—Lowell A. Stark was married to Nina L. Morss, by R. Etzenhouser, November 14, 1902. Died at Burlingame, California, January 6, 1919, of influenza.

BENOLKEN.—Jennie Benolken, wife of Charles Benolken, died of influenza and pneumonia, at her home near Vanscoy, Saskatchewan, November 12, 1918, at the age of 33 years. She leaves husband, 2 daughters, 5 brothers, and 2 sisters to mourn. She was a kind and faithful wife, mother, and friend.

WILLIAMS.—Iva May Williams died at Port Clinton, Ohio, February 21, at the age of 18 years. She became a member of the church in childhood, and lived a consistent life as a saint of God. A short sermon was preached at the home in Port Clinton, Sunday, February 23, then the sermon followed at the church at Oak Harbor, by J. F. Mintun.

WELCH.—Isabel Welch, formerly Cover, died February 14, 1919, at the age of 63 years, 7 months, and 19 days. She was a member of the church for about 20 years, being among the first who were baptized near Oak Harbor, Ohio, but never formally became a member of the branch there after its organization. Services at the church in Oak Harbor, Sunday, February 16. Sermon by J. F. Mintun.

PHOENIX.—Thomas Wayne, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Phoenix, was born at Knoxville, Iowa, August 30, 1915, and died at his home after a short illness of influenza, February 20, 1919. He was a sweet child and was loved by all who knew him. He leaves father, mother, sister, and a host of friends and relatives to mourn. Funeral from the home, February 23. Sermon by Henry Castings. Interment in Graceland Cemetery.

ANDERSON.—Eliza Ann Sherman was born in Filmore County, Minnesota, January 6, 1863. Died at her home near Vanscoy, Saskatchewan, November 9, 1918, of pneumonia following influenza. Married R. B. Anderson, who with 5 sons and 3 daughters survive her. She is also survived by a sister and 2 brothers. Deceased has been a devout member of the church for 35 years, and had a host of friends, who with the relatives mourn her departure from this life.

FROM HERE AND THERE

Associate Editor S. A. Burgess and wife are the proud parents of a baby girl, born on the 13th, at Saint Louis, Missouri. Mother and child are doing well. The little miss has been named Eveline Alice.

The correspondent of the Fall River, Massachusetts, Branch writes most glowingly of the good work done at that place as well as throughout the Massachusetts District by Brother Augustine Dwyer. The press has spoken highly of him and the pulpits have been opened for his lectures. On the first Sunday in March he delivered his illustrated lecture on Palestine in the largest and most influential Congregational Church in Brockton, this being a return date following his previous series in that place, at another church. This correspondent says: "The united testimony of the branches of New England is that Brother Dwyer has brought honor to the Saints as a religious body, and has broken prejudice wherever he has lectured."

CONFERENCE ARRANGEMENTS

The joint council of the Lamoni Stake bishopric and the Lamoni Branch deacons, to whom was referred the matter of providing entertainment for the delegates and visitors to General Conference, have made the following appointments:

Committee on dining hall; A. Carmichael, A. Otis White, and Amos Berve. Committee on reception and location: A. J. Yarrington, Randall Robinson, J. A. Martin, Lonzo Jones and D. W. Stevenson.

All persons wishing information in regard to rooms should correspond with A. J. Yarrington, Lamoni, Iowa.

The price arranged for meals at the dining hall is 15 and 30 cents for breakfast, 35 cents for dinner, and 35 cents for supper. The maximum price for lodging per week was fixed at $2. On account of the difference in accommodation, it was not thought best to make a uniform price, but that each family should be left free to adjust their prices according to the accommodations available and their own wishes in the matter, only that in no case should the price exceed $2 per week. The matter of securing meals in private homes was left for all to make their own arrangements in case they did not wish to secure their meals at the dining hall. The Coliseum has been secured for the use of the General Conference, and the dining hall will be in the basement as heretofore. It is the purpose of those in charge to give as good a meal as will be possible at the prices charged.

COPIOUS RAINS IN LAMONI

On Friday and Saturday, the 14th and 15th, a total of 3.66 inches of rain fell at Lamoni, filling the city water reservoir to overflowing and filling all cisterns in like manner. Spring is well advanced and the farmers will be in the fields as soon as they dry from this rain. Visitors to conference may be assured there will be no inconvenience from lack of water.

On the evening of the 7th a surprise birthday party was held in Independence in honor of President Elbert Smith's birthday. Among those who spoke on the occasion were Frederick M. Smith, John W. Rushton, G. T. Griffiths, and H. S. Salisbury. His birthday occurred on the 8th.

Any Saints near Jefferson, Iowa, should call on Brother C. L. Wolf, manager of the Hotel Jefferson, who has moved there from Nevada, Iowa. We will print his letter next week.

Sister Mabel Johnson, of Deer Lodge, Montana, Box 822, has been elected home department superintendent for the district Sunday school, and wishes to get in touch with all in that district. She succeeded Sister G. W. Thorburn.

CORRECTION

In the first paragraph of the article by J. J. Cornish on "The last generation," in the HERALD for March 12, an error occurs. The fourth line should read: "last generation," and that his coming is much.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

THE WORK OF ALL IS NEEDED

All too often we notice the inability of some to appreciate the work of a person entirely different from themselves in character or in work, yet we never have seen a speaker sent out by the church, but what he appealed to some one better than almost any else could do.

The sacrifice made by our men who go into the mission field, leaving family and home, for the sake of the church can hardly be overestimated, nor can the sacrifice made by their families. The work that they do, going out to warn nations of the earth and preaching this gospel of the kingdom, is certainly of the most vital importance. The slurs with which their attempt is confronted by those not in sympathy with their work, are by no means pleasant to bear. They receive also an experience invaluable to them in dealing with the work of the church. Common courtesy would require a recognition when present in district or branch service. (Doctrine and Covenants 122.)

Yet we find many of these men who are able proselytizers seem able to carry the convert further. We know of many able to put them just inside the door as a newborn babe and then leave them. In a few instances they have baptized and left members without instruction in regard to the work of the bishopric, the Sunday school, the Religio, or the church publications, and out of touch with any branch. This latter, or course, should be corrected when found.

We are making no criticism as they have done well the work for which they are especially adapted, but there remains the necessity of caring for these newly baptized converts.

Further, the work of the local officers should be recognized and appreciated. They have the arduous work of developing the newly baptized into the stature of a man in Christ Jesus. Their work should be appreciated, for they are doubtless better prepared for that particular work than others according to their office and calling. And especially should this be true of the pastor or high priest who has been called and ordained to pastoral labor. It would seem that his special preparation and ability should also be recognized and appreciated.

Recently we attended a ministerial conference at which the following was brought up for debate: "Resolved, that the district president has the supervision and direction of the branch work and its officers." Instances were called forth in which the district president had claimed extreme rights. No doubt instances have occurred in which a district president has exceeded his rights, yet by virtue of his office and calling he should have a general supervision and direction of the work of the district, as well as an interest in the missionary work done within the district. This does not mean that he has the right to direct the seventies in their missionary work within the district, but it means that he should be willing to recognize their services, and cooperate.

But it is certain, whether it affects the Twelve, the high priest, the seventy, elder, priest, teacher, deacon, missionary in charge, submissonary in charge, district president, or branch president, as soon as there comes contention for rights and for authority there is a departure of the Spirit. We may be sure that whatever the results, it will be wrong that far. For the right result can only be achieved when we are working together, recognizing the ability, the authority, and the rights of each other.

Of course where there is a complete refusal so to recognize, there is at times the necessity for the exercising of authority. It may even become the duty of the official of highest rank to intercede.

We have no desire to deny the existence and righteousness of authority, but that authority should be the power of God which comes from above. It should be exercised in love it should be and usually is to be expressed from within out, so that those who come in contact with our work are willing to recognize the spirit which actuates and directs our efforts.

And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Nay, much more those members of the body, which seem to be more feeble, are necessary: And those members of the body, which we think to be less honorable, upon these we bestow more abundant honor; and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness. For our comely parts have no need: but God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honor to that part which lacked; that there should be no schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another.—1 Corinthians 12: 21-25.

There was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest. And he said unto them, The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them, and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors.—Luke 22: 24, 25.

Again we repeat, it is not a question of "glory for me." Nor can we hope to succeed through such an assumption. Cooperation in our work requires the assistance and wisdom of all, and above all the spirit of brotherly love.

DO WE NEED A "KICK COLUMN"?

We have sometimes thought it might be well, if for a short time we opened a "kick column." But much of the objection doubtless arises from misunderstanding of the necessary methods of publication. The institution belongs to the church and our readers should be especially interested in how it is managed and why.

As an instance, we have received a letter complaining because some items sent in for the Autumn Leaves had not yet appeared, though it was sent in nearly a month before. A week or so after it was sent a copy of the Autumn Leaves came out and did not contain it, though it was an important announcement.

Even the general officers of the Religio have not always appreciated the necessity under which we have labored and have given us notices too late for publication.

Now the answer is not difficult as stated. The material for the April number is turned in to the Editor of the Autumn Leaves March 1, then in due course the April number should be out about the 25th.

It is true that we sometimes have difficulty, as other publications have had during the past year, on account of the draft and the epidemic of influenza, which caused the delay of a week or so. Normally the material is turned in the first of the month and the magazine issued around the 25th.

This means that if a notice is turned in about the 6th or 7th of March it often has to be held over, and hence would not appear until the May number, being turned in with copy April 1, coming out the latter part of the month.

It will be seen that in this way the work of Autumn Leaves is divided up through the month. With an issue of tracts, books, and other matter it is more convenient to handle it this way, as well as being more businesslike.

Yet some complain because not sufficiently observing to notice that most of their monthly magazines are printed a month or more before the date on which they are received. One that came to our hands the 26th of December states: "As we are just going to press we learn that the Hohenzollerns are on the run." They do not even advise at that time that the armistice has been signed. The articles and stories were all written with the idea in mind that the war would be continued all winter. The copy to the editor of such magazines should be in their hands two or three months before publication, as it must be first considered by the editor, approved, turned in to the proof readers, then to the compositors and set up, composition must be read and reread by the proof readers up to the point of make-up, when it is divided into pages and the pages rechecked. Then it is locked in the forms and is ready for printing.

According to the item set forth above, all this had gone through with in the January issue of a popular magazine, and the forms were closed early in November, yet the magazine is not received until after Christmas.

Those having important announcements for the Religio's Arena or for the Sunday school department should take note of this fact, and govern themselves accordingly.

An amendment to the constitution must be in the hands of the Arena editor not later than January, if it is to be considered by the next convention. And if it is to be turned in with copy February 1 it should be mailed the last of January.

SOCIAL PURITY

It is interesting to note the position taken and maintained by the United States Government on the question of the social evil. It is doubtless true, as some have pointed out, that men on the way to the camps have been guilty of wrongful acts, pleading that they had a last chance before going in the army. But once in the army the Government and General Pershing for the first time insisted upon the possibility of absolute prohibition as of great economic value in times of war.

Having so successfully accomplished that, both in America and in France, so that the boys have been better taken care of than they would have been in civil life, the next step the Government is urging is a clean-up throughout the country, and that conditions be maintained at a high standard.

The unfortunate women involved are much better provided for if once properly treated and cared for, and then employed in some other way. Especially is this true when we consider how short is the life of those who pursue social immorality. Absolute prohibition is the only answer. Segregation and medical examination have been repeatedly shown to be a farce. It will take an aroused public opinion to prevent the opening of segregated districts after the military zones are removed from federal control. But this should be done for physical, economic, as well as for moral reasons.

It means only suffering for the women involved. It means the spreading of disease throughout the Nation. It means higher taxes and lower efficiency. We are glad to see this movement towards better living conditions in our cities and throughout the country.

We do not pretend that all vice can be stopped in this way. When men and women choose to do wrong they will do so. We can avoid giving it our official sanction, and we can reduce some of the worst features. Righteousness is necessarily a personal, intelligent act, but that is no reason why evil should be continually sanctioned and permitted. Rather society owes it to itself, as well as the unfortunates concerned, to do everything in its power to prevent a spreading of such wrong conditions.

We hear much of the epidemic of the influenza, but physicians agree that there is no epidemic, no other evil, no other disease, that not only is so deadly, that in fact produces so large a number of deaths and disease as does the "black plague." When we have been closing schools and churches to prevent the spread of influenza, certainly we are more than justified in ordering that like power be exercised and supporting it ourselves, for the prohibition of all segregated districts of vice. There is scarcely any comparison between the two evils. The evil of influenza is so much the lesser of the two, and this includes the loss of life.

As a church we would go one step farther and insist upon the teaching of right living for moral reasons. All this involves not only action but also the teaching of the public, and especially of our young people, and the maintenance of a higher standard of personal righteousness. Education has been shown to be a possibility. It should be continued, and to it should be added the moral sanction.

With all this the church should most heartily agree and will support. The highest ideals of conduct are none too high.

LEGAL PROCEDURE IN JAPAN

In the American Bar Association Journal for October, 1918, there appears an article on the "Civil liberty in Japan," by Tsunejiro Miyaoka. He draws some interesting comparisons between the constitution of Japan, its customs and rules, and that of France.

They have freedom of religious belief; freedom of speech, writing, publications, public meetings, and associations. They have a bicameral legislature. The budget is first laid before the lower or popular house, as is the case in the House of Commons in England.

Personal liberty is protected by due court procedure, with a court of preliminary investigation and provides for suitable appeal.

Laws are executed for protection of the home or domicile, against invasion by the police and proper provisions to protect privacy. The exceptions are limited to places where a peace officer, armed with a warrant of arrest has reason to believe that a person named is concealed about the premises. In such case, the mayor of the city, or the presence of two neighbors is required in order to enable the policeman to make the search, and the mayor or neighbors must sign with the policeman the minutes of the proceedings.

Judges of preliminary examination may have search made where the person who owns the house is charged with the commission of a crime. But this also requires certain witnesses, when the search is made, and such search may not be made after sunset and before sunrise, unless there is imminent danger to life or property.

The privacy of correspondence is also protected. Liberty of conscience is enjoyed, as also rights of property are fully protected.

The members of the Imperial Diet cannot be held responsible outside of the respective house, for any opinion uttered or vote given in the house.

The Constitution of Japan went into effect in November, 1890, and progress has been made, and is still being made toward popular rights.

INACCURATE STATISTICS

---

The following clipped from the Saturday Evening Post, February 8, 1919, calls to mind a condition we have many times observed. A broad statement is made, then inaccurately quoted, and in the end incorrect conclusions drawn.

Accuracy of premises is essential to a right argument.

A correspondent sends us a newspaper clipping about a lecture delivered to a city audience by a man who spoke as the accredited representative of an association engaged in a useful public work. This clipping represents the speaker as having said that less than one half of one per cent of the people of the United States own nine tenths of the country's wealth.

Now that is an idiotic statement—as anybody with sufficient intelligence to understand an ordinary newspaper headline could ascertain in a few minutes by stepping into the nearest public library and consulting the Census Bureau reports on the subject. These reports, whatever their imperfection in detail, are the basis of every intelligent and honest study of the subject. About the first thing they show is that nearly one quarter of the wealth of the United States consists of farm property, whose ownership is distributed among some millions of farm families.

A mischievous liar makes an absurd statement, in a conveniently compact statistical form, or some more or less well-meaning idiot deduces one from a statistical dream. It has a startling sound and is taken up and repeated without the slightest inquiry by people who are more interested in startling their hearers than in conveying the truth. Quite a body of bolshevik statistics gets currently accepted in that pernicious way.

PATENT MEDICINES

Question. Should women be interested in the making of laws governing the sale of harmful drugs such as are in poisonous powders, soothing syrups, and pain killers, that reap such a harvest every year among the children of those ignorant of these matters and establish the drug habit among the youth of our land?

Answer. This question answers itself. If the conditions are as alleged, only one answer is possible.

Unfortunately nearly all, if not all soothing syrups are narcotics and the fundamental principle of most of them is opium or morphine. Pain killers do not kill the pain, they only destroy our power of feeling the pain. In other words, they pro rata kill us and not the pain. Sometimes in the hands of a reputable physician it is necessary that the sense of pain should be lessened in order to insure recovery. If a cure occurred from a pain killer, it is nature which has effected a cure, while the cure has been retarded if anything, and the powers weakened by narcotics. Unfortunately, those who sell them pay but little attention to the possible idiosyncrasies of the patient and so give too large a dose. Coal tar derivatives are really assigned in dangerous doses for many people.

Headache powders almost invariably act upon the heart to depress and are dangerous and often fatal to those having weak hearts. Nearly all headache powders contain some coal tar product, an inorganic poison, acetanilid.

Many proprietary medicines, advertised as tonics, female medicine, and the like, are simply liquor, frequently of low quality and often adulterated.

Some people think that the opposition of reputable physicians to patent medicines is purely a selfish one, but such is not the case, no more than it would be if one should see a child playing with dynamite and a hammer. If medicine is strong enough to do any good, it is strong enough to harm. If a reputable physician, after a careful examination, knowing you and your family history, cannot help you, what is the possibility that some person who has never seen you, does not know what you can stand and who often knows nothing about medicine, will be able to offer you any valuable help?

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Conference Minutes

WHEELING.—At Wellsburg, West Virginia, March 8 and 9, O. J. Tary in charge, associated with James McConnaughy and William Richards. Reports of district officers read, and statistical reports from all the branches, showing a membership of 469. Officers elected: O. J. Tary, president; O. L. Martin and William Richards, vice presidents; Jasper N. Dobbs, secretary. Delegates to General Conference: John Carlisle, J. F. Ebeling, John Martin, Thomas Mills, with Thomas Newton alternate. Delegates authorized to cast majority and minority vote. Adjourned to meet with the Fairview Branch August 30 and 31. Jasper N. Dobbs, secretary.

SOUTHERN MISSOURI.—At Springfield, Missouri, February 22, 1919, with district officers in charge. Nine branches reported. Bishop's agent reported: Receipts $735; expended $626.97; balance on hand $108.03. Rule two of the by-laws was rescinded and the following was voted in lieu thereof: That we hold quarterly conferences, and hold our annual conference and elect district officers at the May conference. On motion, the present officers are to occupy until the May conference. The Woodside and Grove Spring Branches were disorganized and the district secretary authorized to grant letters to members of those branches unto the most convenient branch. The district president was requested to take action against inactive members of the priesthood in this district, in accordance with General Conference Resolution 104. Preaching during conference by J. F. Cunningham, Benjamin Pearson, and H. E. Winegar. Adjourned to meet in Springfield on the Saturday and Sunday before the full moon in May. Benjamin Pearson, secretary, Tigris, Missouri.

SOUTHERN INDIANA.—At Louisville, Kentucky, March 8 and 9, with James E. Warne and Charles A. Nolan presiding. The district missionaries were present: L. C. Moore and J. W. Metcalf, also Ed. O. Byrn, who has returned to the Byrnville Branch as its president. Brother and Sister A. W. Smith occupied the first evening with institute work and it was greatly appreciated. Fifteen priesthood reports were read, and statistical reports from Byrnville, Derby, Indianapolis, Louisville, and Union Branches read, with total membership of 506. Officers elected: J. E. Warne, president, with power to choose his two counselors, and he chose Ed. O. Byrne and L. C. Moore. Cordelia McCormick elected secretary; Sister E. Houston Glenn, member gospel literature board; Alta Stinnett, member library board; Cordelia McCormick sustained chorister; W. O. Robertson sustained Bishop's agent. Delegates to General Conference: Hazel Burwell, H. W. Burwell, Maude Warne, J. E. Warne, L. C. Moore. A reunion will be held at Marengo, Indiana, this summer, date not yet decided. Next conference at Indianapolis, second Saturday and Sunday in September. Cordelia McCormick, secretary.

FREMONT.—At the Saints' church near Thurman, Iowa, March 8, 1919, at 2:30 p. m., T. A. Hougas presiding. The following branches of the district reported: Bartlett 50, Glenwood 76, Thurman 194, Henderson 77, Shenandoah 103, Tabor 68. Fifteen ministerial reports were read. The action of the coordinating committee was adopted by unanimous vote. The district presidency was empowered to act as a reunion committee in conjunction with the other districts. Conference voted to meet at Tabor for next session, at the call of the presidency. Delegates to General Conference: T. A. Hougas, Mrs. T. A. Hougas, F. B. Knight, M. W. Gaylord, Mrs. E. E. Barber, H. N. Pierce. Alternates: J. B. Wildermuth, Inez Claiborn, Almon G. Hougas, Alta Hougas. Delegates empowered to cast a majority and minority vote. Motion prevailed that we request all the branch presidents to take up collections to defray our missionaries' expenses to General Conference, and for district tent work expenses. Secretary empowered to call to his assistance such help as he might need and make an inventory of the district chattels.

ZION, A PLACE OF SAFETY; ITS ESTABLISHMENT AT HAND

The great hope, longing, and expectation of the ages is about to be realized, yes, in very truth, for the set time to favor Zion is at hand. Does not the deep conviction of this glorious truth stir the soul and quicken the impulses of God's people, inspiring them to greater and more constant diligence, steeling them to meet every trial, and under the inspiration of God's Spirit and this inspiring hope arousing them to the performance of every God-honored, and holy duty, be it most humble and small apparently, or ever so huge and great—as a whole, how great it is!

The establishment of Zion! But, under God, it shall and will be accomplished. For the Great Creator and mover of heaven and earth has so decreed, and naught can stay his hand! The righteous that labor with him shall be supported and sustained. But those who seek to hinder or obstruct shall be dismayed, their efforts brought to naught, and where necessary, shall be destroyed. Fearless then, and with a boldness born of God's Holy Spirit we set our hands to the task and will not cease until our efforts shall be crowned with God's glory and Zion shall stand forth—the city of our God and his Christ—the dwelling place of the Saints of the Most High. How beautiful the vision, how inviting the picture, and how joyous shall be its realization.

LET US GIVE ALL

Then come, ye Saints of God, all will we give for this, all that we are, all that we have, and all we may hope to have. What we are and what we have is useless and valueless save as it may be used and used for good. We receive to give, and he who learns not this truth "is blind and cannot see afar off" and shall be a shrunken and shriveled dwarf until he awakes and begins to give and work. So shall he grow and his soul expand and thus shall he prove worthy of a place in Zion. Zion! the pure in heart—those free from the appalling, degrading, and shameful sin of selfishness, miserliness, miserableness. How wonderful and complete the salvation in Zion, and how splendid the fact that the very process by which Zion is to be established is the process through which, by consecration to God's service, our redemption is gained, so that we do not, as sinful and unworthy creatures, obtain the establishment of Zion and then enter into gain or obtain our salvation, but as we build Zion, we just so fast, by the same token, work out our own salvation, the one keeping a pace with the other—for they are akin to each other, and exist by each other—hence "Zion is the pure in heart," and the pure in heart are, or shall be Zion, and such shall see God.

Then the work of our salvation begins now, not after Zion is established, but now! Are you a minister of Christ. Keep, then, the law of Zion. Are you a farmer, merchant, laborer, whatever you may be, keep the law of Zion! Let us all labor together with God as Doctrine and Covenants 119:8 instructs.

Are some so penurious as to withhold their assistance, talents, gifts, or substance, God-given gifts and possessions, lent only to be used? Will you stand in the way of God and use it not freely to establish his Zion? If so you are not the sort that will redeem Zion, and you shall not occupy therein—unclean! unclean! You are without the pale; shake yourself, get busy or else you will be counted out. Give, give, keep on giving and God will give you more to give. Unless you have the spirit of giving, God could not save you, if he would—it is contrary to his necessary and just law, and he does not walk in crooked paths.

THE WRATH OF GOD Poured OUT

But perhaps these may not appear to be self-evident truths, that need but be stated to be believed, so, lest the Spirit that indites these words may not find a ready reception upon your part, to testify unto you these things, the close proximity of Zion, its near establishment, I make haste to bring forth the written word and we stand aside and listen to its voice and note the accompaniment of important events, which give final and all conclusive evidence, so that doubt cannot possibly remain.

The following quotation is found in the Book of Mormon, 1 Nephi 3: 232-237:

And it came to pass that I beheld that the wrath of God was poured out upon the great and abominable church, inasmuch that there were wars and rumors of wars among all the nations and kindreds of the earth, and as there began to be wars and rumors of wars among all the nations which belonged to the mother of abominations, the angel spake unto me saying, Behold, the wrath of God is upon the mother of harlots; and behold, thou seest all these things; and when the day cometh that the wrath of God is poured out upon the mother of harlots, which is the great and abominable church of all the earth, whose foundation is the devil, then at that day, the work of the Father shall commence, in preparing the way for the fulfilling of his covenants which he hath made to his people, who are of the house of Israel.

The foregoing prophecy is a remarkable one. The language is not vague nor meaningless and cannot be made to do service to anyone of a dozen possibly contradictory ideas and interpretations. The prophet speaks plainly, and the prophecy at once gives proof positive, because of its remarkable fulfillment, that the book is of divine origin—and gives remarkable information regarding the establishment of Zion.

Let us briefly consider some of its salient points.

Firstly, there was to be a universal world war. The war that has just ended is by all readily accepted as such, and the first of such a universal and world-wide character and notwithstanding such a war had for years been thought impossible by many of the most eminent and good of the world, still it came, as the sure word of prophecy in the Book of Mormon asserted that it would come. This point, then, being clearly settled, the remainder of the prophecy is just as plain and is as sure of fulfillment, in fact, is in process of fulfillment now—unmistakably so.

The Prophet Nephi says that when this universal war should occur, that “then at that day the work of the Father shall commence, in preparing the way for the fulfillment of his covenants which he hath made to his people, who are of the house of Israel.”—1 Nephi 3 : 237.

ISRAEL AGAIN FAVORED

Do we see any evidence that he is beginning to fulfill his covenants made with Israel? Yes, decidedly so! How surely during the universal war just ended has the infidel Turk been driven from the Holy Land, under whose possession and control the Jews, the seed of Abraham could not obtain it for their inheritance. But how marvelous are the works of God! “Hath he spoken and shall he not make it good?” Yea, verily!

While the land was yet being taken from the Turk, the British Government hastened to declare its policy toward that country, and in substance what was it? That it should be made a national home for the Jews; and the United States of America hastened to approve of and support the plan. Ah, you wandering and dispersed of Israel, you who never would relinquish your hope of finally possessing that land so dear to you, and given unto you by God himself, now shall your undying hope and faith in this, God's promise to you, be realized, for you shall enter in and occupy.

But what has that got to do with Latter Day Saints and Zion here in America, a place of safety for the children of the gospel covenant? Just so: Are we not children of the covenant? Are we not also Israel by adoption? Then are we not included among those with whom God shall shortly fulfill his covenants?

When we see such unmistakable signs of God's fulfilling his covenants with the Palestine branch of Israel, does it not hearten us and give assurance that he will also do his good work with us, “Joseph's land” branch of Israel? “And so, all Israel shall be saved.” (Romans 11: 26.)

THOSE WHO LEAVE THE CHURCH

At this juncture it might be well to reflect upon the spirit of gathering that has greatly increased throughout the church since the beginning of the world war. The recent activities of the Presiding Bishopric and the attitude of the general church authorities looking toward the preliminary work essential to the gathering gives evidence of the fact that the Spirit of God is moving us toward the gathering of the Saints. This was to be expected, as it is the time marked by Nephi for the work to begin, and these men are but instruments in the hands of God, moved upon by his Spirit to do this work. Let us support God through them in this work. As Christ anciently breathed upon his disciples and said: “Receive ye the Holy Ghost,” so today he is breathing upon his great church that it may under the fire of his Holy Spirit move on to the gathering of his chosen, God-ordained church—if any in the church shall be found at fault he will remove them, not the church. How foolish for men to find fault with some of the authorities and then leave the church supposing that God will use them to start all over again and build up another church to do his work.

God can more easily remove men who may be at fault in his church, select proper men, go on with his church which he has been nearly a century in preparing for this work, than to reject the church and build all over again. Vain men engaged in such efforts will come to a sad and miserable end. Their attempts but prove them to be vain, ambitious men, who, not finding opportunity to satisfy their greed for conspicuous positions in the church, are led by Satan and their own weakness for glory, to start something in which they will be the main figure, but they and their institutions are doomed.

But the church free of such men, can and will do its God-ordained work all the better, for God must have a humble, consecrated people who are not thinking of self nor seeking vain glory, but who are actuated by love. Let all others repent, or else they must be shaken loose in this crucial, sifting time, and so, in this as everything, God will but make it to serve his purpose in thus purifying his church. But the pure and faithful will continue in his work and the church, for they heed not the voice of men nor seducing spirits. Onward then with Christ and his church to victory, faltering never!

GOD FULFILLING HIS COVENANTS

Permit us to give more careful consideration to these covenants which God is commencing to fulfill, which he has made with his people, who are of the house of Israel. In Genesis 12: 1-7 we read that the Lord told Abraham to leave the land of his nativity and his people and that the Lord would direct him to another land. The land that he was led to was known as the land of Canaan in which Palestine of to-day is situated. In the 7th verse we are told that the Lord appeared unto Abraham after he arrived in Canaan, and told him that he would give to Abraham's seed—posterity—that land. Again, read Genesis 15: 5-18. The Lord here promises Abraham that his seed shall be numerous, and further says (18th verse), "In the same day the Lord made a covenant with Abram [Abraham] saying: unto thy seed have I given this land," etc.

In Genesis 28: 13-15 the Lord renews his promise and covenant with Jacob, grandson of Abraham, adding, "And in thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed," (verse 14). Thus we see that about four thousand years ago the land of Palestine, where Jerusalem is, was given to Abraham and his posterity who came to be known as Israel.

For a time they were denied the land, even as God had told Abraham they would be, and sojourned in Egypt, then God through Moses, with many miracles, led them back to the land of promise and they entered in and occupied.

In Exodus 6: 1-8 the Lord again renews his covenant and promise to Israel, speaking to Moses; also Exodus 19: 4-6. So one of the covenants that stand out prominently in the divine word that was made by the Father of the house of Israel, was the giving of the Holy Land to them, and that forever, too, even though they would be dispossessed of it at certain times through unworthiness as he declared through his prophets that they should be. But just so surely he declared they would reoccupy.

One thing is now evident; when Nephi prophesied that at the time of this great war God would commence to prepare the way for the fulfillment of his covenants with the house of Israel one of the things had in mind was restoring the Holy Land to the Jews, and it is being done! The way is being prepared and the Jews are taking advantage of it, too, and are preparing with a remarkable zeal and enthusiasm to establish themselves on that land, as their recent convention held here in Philadelphia gives strong evidence of. They have already begun to formulate the laws that shall govern them as a people in Palestine. And it closely approximates the law given to us that shall govern us here in Zion of America, as we have it in the Doctrine and Covenants.

We have been considering one covenant: The Jews inheritance of the land of Palestine. How about another covenant? Jeremiah gives us the desired information (31: 31-40). We are there informed that the day would come when the Lord would make a new covenant with Israel—it would be written in their inward parts—his law in their hearts—and they should all know the Lord and he would forgive them all their past transgressions and establish them in their land nevermore to be dispersed. We expect, then, their acceptance of Christ and the gospel when they are established fully in the Holy Land. The Book of Mormon, which contains Nephi's prophecy, shall assist in converting them, and God's Spirit will quicken the letter and touch their hearts, that his law may be written therein.

But let us again return to ourselves. What part do we have in this? How are we included? If there be a gathering place for us here in America as there is for the Jews in Palestine will it profit either them or us? Or is it but a sentimental whim? In answer to the last question, we shall indeed profit, in fact it is our only safety in this world, but we will get to that later.

WE ARE INCLUDED

We shall concern ourselves now with the first question—our inclusion in the house of Israel, with whom God is preparing to fulfill his covenants, which he made with them.

In Romans 11: 17-27 the Apostle Paul informs us that the Jews because of unbelief were to be rejected for a while; he speaks of them as the tame olive tree and says that some of their branches were broken off and that we by acceptance of the gospel are grafted in; and so we receive that which the tree (Israel) is heir to, because we become a part of the tree (Israel) by being grafted in (adopted into the house of Israel), hence are partakers of the promises and heirs of the covenants. Thus is fulfilled God's promise to Abraham and Jacob—"In thee and thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed."

But let us be further confirmed by the Scriptures on this subject. I shall forego some splendid thoughts that might be gained on this subject by consideration of a number of passages of scripture, and shall content myself by referring you to one other.—Galatians 3: 14-16; 26-29. Read the whole of it. I shall quote only a part:

"For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." Jew and Greek (Gentile) are all one in Christ Jesus. "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise." (Verses 27-29.)

PERMANENT PEACE IMPOSSIBLE

This, then, gives us full rights of inheritance with Israel and so, being of the house of Israel, the past war marks the appointed time to begin the work of preparation for the redemption of Zion, our Zion here in America according to God's covenants to us. In the Inspired Version of the Scriptures we read in Genesis 7: 69, 70 that the Lord, talking to Enoch, told him that in the last days he would cause righteousness and truth to sweep the earth as with a flood to gather out his elect from the four quarters of the earth, unto a place which he would prepare, which should be called Zion, a new Jerusalem, and that great tribulations should come among the children of men, but that his people he would preserve. The foregoing seems to answer the query: What will Zion, as a gathering place profit us?

Enoch saw tribulation on the earth and safety from it offered only to God's people who would gather to a place designated by him, which place should be known as Zion. "But surely," one may say, "this earth has passed through its greatest tribulation recently and the lessons from it have caused already a conference of the greatest and wisest to make impossible the recurrence of such a tragedy."

Far be it from me to belittle or scoff at this noble and valiant effort to make the world a safe and fit place to live in. I most heartily sympathize with these men and their movement and most ardently admire our great and wise statesman and noble Chief Executive, President Woodrow Wilson, the moving character in this great and magnificent effort to compose the inharmonious elements in the world so that peace, prosperity, and happiness shall be the happy result.

But my sympathy for this effort cannot blind me to the fact that all will not go well. Do not misunderstand me. Much may come of this effort. Conflicts in some instances may be prevented; it may all be a part of God's plan and may contribute to universal peace, finally, by carrying them just so much farther toward that goal, but it is not yet. Man proposes many things which fail of complete success, but we may well believe that God is working without, as also within his church. But we must accept his counsel and let him work within his church as he will, and we must work with him as he has and as he will direct us. What then is his voice to us, what is his counsel?

Please read Doctrine and Covenants 102:1, 2, 9. Allow me to give the substance of it: God speaks to his people concerning their redemption. He tells them that their redemption has been delayed because of their transgressions and unworthiness and that Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom. But his army (verse 9) was to first become very great and be sanctified before him. This of course would and has required time. Our army (church) has been increasing in numbers, has been receiving the necessary preliminary instruction, has had ever before it the thought of Zion, which was to be realized sometime.

A DAY OF CALLING—A DAY OF CHOOSING

But as we further read in the tenth verse: "There has been a day of calling, but the time has come for a day of choosing," and as the Spirit of God directs there are to be chosen those who will follow the counsel of the Lord, as it shall be given through those in authority and after many days Zion shall be an accomplished fact. (Doctrine and Covenants 102:10.)

However, we are warned in Doctrine and Covenants 106:2, that if we fail to observe the laws of Zion after we are gathered and are selfish and do not impart of our substance, etc., and so fail to sanctify the land, it shall not then be Zion unto us. Hence the establishment of Zion means more than a mere gathering together at some point. The work before us then is of a thorough and vast nature and much instruction will be given us there. We read in Doctrine and Covenants 94:3, that the ministry are to be instructed in their several callings, in theory, in principle, and doctrine in all things pertaining to the kingdom of God on earth, in fact, all necessary learning and instruction should be given in Zion. No place for sluggards; not a haphazard affair, but efficiency, warmed and made pleasing with a soul, shall help to redeem Zion and shall help to radiate the glory of God.

NEED OF A PLACE OF SAFETY

Now as to the further need of Zion as a place of safety for God's people and as further evidence of the perilous times awaiting the world, let us consider a revelation of the Lord found in Doctrine and Covenants 45:12-14. Read it all. I will give the substance of it here. We are told to gather up our riches that we may purchase an inheritance in Zion, a place of refuge, a place of safety for the Saints of the Most High God, and that the day will come that he who will not take up his sword against his neighbor must needs flee unto Zion for safety, and there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven, and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another.

The wicked shall not molest Zion. They shall fear the terror of the Lord, but his ransomed shall in Zion dwell in peace and safety, happy—supremely so—in the Lord their God and in the sweet fellowship of his Saints who shall all enjoy his Holy Spirit. But again be warned. Doctrine and Covenants 64:5 informs us that it is by sacrifice that we shall be entitled to a place in Zion, that it is a day of sacrifice for us now, a day for the tithing of God's people. Do any withhold? Shame on you! Unless you comply with God's laws and commandments you cannot occupy in Zion; you shall remain in Babylon among the proud and the wicked who shall be destroyed, and God will not spare any who remain in Babylon. (Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5.)

Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues.—Revelation 18: 4.

Wherefore, I the Lord have said, gather ye.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 12.

Mine indignation is soon to be poured out without measure upon all nations, and this will I do when the cup of their iniquity is full. [Alliances, leagues, unions, will not save them.] And in that day, all who are found upon the watch-tower, or in other words, all mine Israel shall be saved. And they that have been scattered shall be gathered. . . . Zion shall not be moved out of her place.—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4.

As to the location designated, all, of course, are familiar. Doctrine and Covenants 98: 9 gives Jackson County, Missouri, and the counties round about, as the place of Zion. "When there is found no more room for them [the Saints of Jackson County]; and then I have other places which I will appoint unto them, and they shall be called stakes, for the curtains, or the strength of Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4.

Thus we see that Nephi's prophecy, (1 Nephi 3: 232-237) regarding the fulfillment of God's covenants unto his children the house of Israel includes us. So his covenant to establish Zion for us here in America is soon to be fulfilled, as the war just ended signifies the time. Truly this is a wonderful age! The dawning of a glorious day!

The mere thought of it through all the past ages has been an inspiration to God's people to cheer them on—even though to them it was far in the future. Shall we who are at the threshold of its realization be less stirred by the vision and shall we fail now, when it is almost within our grasp? Surely a hard-hearted, selfish, and unworthy people if we fail, we, who have had so much bequeathed unto us. All the effort of the past, all the heroic sacrifice, all the blood that has been spilt for Christ's sake and the final redemption of his people, yea, count them over, those of the early days, and like worthy ones in this last dispensation of time since the restoration of the gospel in these latter days.

But, please God, we shall not fail! Individuals among us may, but not God's people as a whole. God has gone on record that this time his people shall not fail, not that we may not make many serious mistakes and blunders, and many become discouraged. This we may look for, and the process will only try us the more and establish who the faithful among us will be, and they who persevere, whatever the difficulties are, shall be ransomed and shall partake of the fat of the land, best of all, of the fullness of his Spirit.

In Daniel 2 we are told that in the establishment of God's kingdom in these last days, it should not be overthrown nor left to another people. I confidently rely on God's word. How piteous the prophetic wail of Christ over the Jews of his day because they proved miscreant to their trust and heeded not the call of Jesus unto them, as recorded in Matthew 23: 37, 38: O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how oft would I have gathered you together as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, but ye would not! "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate," and so it was, they were scattered and driven. Bitter have been their experiences. The lesson shall profit them and us, and this time we shall gather together.

WHY A PLACE OF SAFETY?

"There has been a day of calling, but now is the day of choosing." And what shall be our advantages in Zion; what our safety? Zion, a place of safety." There is something appealing about that, isn't there? The words commend themselves to us heartily. "Safety first," is one of the great slogans of the day—and if you will believe it—in Zion only shall there be safety. Safety? Yes, from what, and to what? Safety from a physical death in the world's violent combats? Shall this be the scope of our conception of safety in Zion? After all is physical death much of a cause for worry? "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul. But rather fear him which is able to destroy both body and soul in hell."—Matthew 10: 28.

In the days of Noah men became so wicked that God decided to destroy them off the face of the earth. He informed Noah of the fact and told him to build an ark and thus he could preserve himself and all the worthy who would enter in. The flood came and took all away, save Noah, his wife, three sons and their wives, eight in all, they having taken refuge in the ark. The wicked not only suffered a miserable death but they were also locked up in the prison house in the spirit world, and had the association of the evil one, and there Christ visited them. (1 Peter 3: 18-20.)

Those who will not flee the wicked world with its sins and prove themselves worthy of a home in Zion shall not only suffer the plagues of the wicked in this world but the further torments of the damned in hell. Those worthy to have a home in Zion shall not only escape the visitation of God's wrath upon all flesh out of Zion, but shall be able also to save their souls. Let us then try to get a glimpse of things without and things within Zion, the contributing causes to these two different and divers conditions. It may be said in a word, that the prevailing cause without is selfishness, and the prevailing cause within Zion for her safety, is unselfishness.

SELFISHNESS BRINGS DARKNESS

We have then the remarkable result that they who seek their own are selfish. Instead of really securing it they bring on their destruction, but in Zion, they who seek not their own but everyone his brother's and Christ's interest as well, are saved. As the Lord has said: "For whosoever shall save his life shall lose it, and whosoever shall lose his life for my sake shall find it." The wicked without Zion are destroyed because they seek their own. The righteous within Zion are saved because they overcome selfishness and work for Christ.

What is the picture, then, before us? Without, in the world, in Babylon, among the wicked, I see them contending against each other. Nation against nation? Not absolutely, but at least within the nations and irrespective of national boundaries, strife, and contention, and unrest. What the cause? Selfishness. But the immediate and direct cause? Class strife; upheavals in industrial life. The rich man trying to keep his money, to hold the upper hand, to keep his foot on the neck of the poor man that is down. The poor man trying to get the upper hand, to get the money of the rich, to get his foot on the neck of the rich, etc. And so, the unions, the strikes, the lockouts, strife, bloodshed, bolshevism, anarchism, everyone for himself—and against the other, causing destruction of property, destruction of life, and so he that "will not take up the sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety," for they "shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another." (Doctrine and Covenants 45: 13.)

Who is going to defend either of these striving classes as wholly clean and the other wholly unclean? The principle that actuates them both is the same. One has wealth of a kind and doesn't want the other to get it. The other hasn't got it, but wants to get it. And if the conditions of each class were reversed the struggle would go on just the same. But within Zion—"Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" (Psalm 133: 1.) Those who shall occupy in Zion are they who having espoused the gospel of Jesus Christ and have secured the only means, a miraculous one, of overcoming and getting rid of that one great and underlying evil nature, that seems to give rise to most all sin, namely, selfishness.

This people will be the only people who are sufficiently advanced in that higher life as to make possible such a condition as is to exist in Zion—be willing to abide the celestial law of the kingdom. They shall bring all and lay at the feet of the bishop of God's church, and all the worthy shall receive an inheritance and a stewardship. (Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2; 42: 8, 9.)

ALL OUR NEEDS SUPPLIED

Since the needs of all the worthy and industrious—and no other shall abide in Zion (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12)—shall be amply provided for, both they and their children throughout their generations, there will be then no fear nor misgivings as to the future necessities of physical life. Since man can produce more than he needs, after the just apportionment of everyone's needs, the rest, the profit, will not go to the aggrandizement of some individuals or merciless, soulless corporations, but will be held in trust by the bishopric of the church for the people, the church, the inhabitants of Zion. Do some become sick, they continue to have their just needs as though they were working. Poverty will be impossible, no room for bitterness. What a happy, contented people.

I see the farmers 'mid the waving fields of grain, the cattle as they graze on the meadows green, the birds in the trees as they sing more joyous than ever. The little children as they innocently scamper and run about, when free from their studies, and light, pleasant tasks. The mothers as they go about their pleasant duties, singing the songs of Zion. I hear the tolling of the near-by church bells and see the happy joyous faces of the healthy, pure young people, with the middle-aged and noble old as they gather at the churches throughout Zion and the angels (perhaps invisible) sing with them as with sweet and well-trained voices they sing, "Nearer my God, to thee," and all the sweet songs of Zion, but not now with a heavy cross to bear as when sung of old. I see the preachers in Zion who are now equipped with a good education and knowledge of the things of God's kingdom, as they have been instructed in Zion (Doctrine and Covenants 94: 3). I see them as with pleasant countenances lighted with the Spirit of God, they arise to speak on the things pertaining to Zion and the kingdom of our God. Behold the happy and righteous people!

Surely they are God's people and he their God! (Jeremiah 31: 33.) And the brethren in Palestine, the Jews, God in like manner will provide for them. Ah, ye ancient and more recent martyrs for God and Christ, you who looked for this day and saw it, and were glad, how now you shall rejoice at the triumph of your brethren, God's people, and how you shall make haste soon to join with them. Yea, verily, then shall there be a reunion of God's great family, both they that are in heaven and they that are on the earth, all here on the earth. The trump of God shall sound, and with the voice of an Archangel the Lord shall descend and the dead in Christ shall arise, and he shall bring his Saints with him, and so a happy, united family we shall ever be with the Lord. (1 Thessalonians 3: 13; 4: 16-18.) His kingdom shall spread until it covers the whole earth. Oh, how God is counting on us! How they who have gone on before are looking to us to complete the work which they so nobly and faithfully begun, that they may be able to come soon and join us.

May we be able to reply to the call to redeem Zion, "We are coming, our Father, the church of God, tens of thousands strong." Hear the hum of industry; note the people of our God; healthy, strong, and able-bodied people with super minds are these. The glory of God is intelligence. (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6.) "And his glory shall rest upon and fill Zion. (Doctrine and Covenants 94: 4, 5.) Thus shall our people, God's people, be saved, be saved from selfishness, from greediness, from cankered souls, from materialism, from undeveloped, dwarfed and shriveled souls, from ungodliness, from sin, and if from sin, from the wages of sin, which is death. Violence and death shall be without Zion. In Zion, growing in the measure and stature and fullness of Christ (Ephesians 4), we shall be like him and be saved unto him and unto God and our worthy loved ones.

A HEAVENLY PEACE

"And so shall we ever be with the Lord." All this means earnest work, intelligent thought—the redemption of Saints, we must solve the industrial and economic problems that are upsetting the world, and that we will do by observing the laws of the Lord. Our all we must contribute to this task. Under the laws that shall govern Zion, the impulse to profit from our fellow men and seek to build up ourselves individually cannot exist. Having our ample needs and comforts provided for, we cannot have more. No matter what we do there will be no need for more, and hence there will be no unions, no strikes, no lockouts, no contention, no strife.

Is it not a pleasing picture? The best of all is that it will come true. Those who are not inclined to observe the laws and conditions in Zion shall not remain there, but will depart, and without they are lost.

But the peaceable, the pure in heart, shall dwell in Zion. Don't you want to live there? Then come, let us do the right thing so we can abide there in safety. Your minds and your bodies shall be given the best of care. Schools to study and all the best that the world has will be employed for our good. The best of expert attention in case of sickness and that without paying a premium for it, or perhaps anything at all, for they shall be on a stewardship basis the same as you and I, each receiving their just needs from the church—so with every profession, trade, or occupation, all occupying as stewards, and all alike entitled to every attention, and all things they need.

But all necessary measures will be taken against sickness and all ill things, for the "ideal commonwealth of latter-day Israel," Zion must be composed of, you might say, super people, blessed in every good thing. With faith the elders should wait upon the sick according to their divine provision.

Then come, ye souls of valor, yea, forward with your might! Away with the world's delusions, establish with firmness the right! Ah, see Zion as it is established by Christ and his soldiers bold. And gather thou now the hungry sheep and feed them within the fold. Hushed will soon be the conflict—the victory through Christ be won, and Jesus sharing with us his glory, shall say: Enter in—well done.

THE DISCIPLINE OF CHANGE

---

Because they have no changes, therefore they fear not God.—Psalm 55: 19.

The old order changeth, giving place to new, and God fulfills himself in many ways, lest one good custom should corrupt the world.—Shakespeare.

These are the words of philosophers, men, who with far-seeing eyes judged in terms of the ultimate. The entire fifty-fifth Psalm is a complaint, or protest against the insidious evils of a retractive environment. Knowing that as stagnant water breeds malaria, so moral and spiritual degeneracy is the price of changeless ease and indolence, he felt moved to cry out against it. His protests may well be summed up in that one diagnostic clause, "Because they have no changes, therefore they fear not God." 'Tis the hoary law of cause and effect.

The trend of man is upward. Consequently he cannot follow the lines of least resistance. He must stem the tide. Crowns are promised to those who "endure to the end," and "overcome." Real men are not bred in a lotus isle of ease and forgetfulness. If so, a premium is placed upon parasitic, changeless inactivity. Monotony of life is guaranteed where no change comes. Well has Shakespeare said, "The old order changeth, giving place to new, and God fulfills himself in many ways, lest one good custom should corrupt the world."

From season to season nature's laws assiduously set before us the value and beauty of change, or what might be termed the variety of a changeless law, and we are pleased with the divine arrangement as stated in Genesis 8: 22: "While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night, shall not cease."

The poet has said, "Change and decay in all around I see," but if we see this in its proper perspective we need not fear, for the beauty of the thought is completed thus, "Oh, thou who changest not, abide with me." Our ultimate goal is God. "The measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ," verily a "changeless center in the midst of change."

Should we be alarmed then to learn that, as a church, we have been, and are passing through a period of change, a transition? If there be those who fail to appreciate the situation, surely such are dull of comprehension. A year ago a prophecy was uttered by one of the representative men of the church that within five years the church would have experienced such changes that it would not be recognized as the same church. We understood the changes would be in method, policy, and perhaps personnel—not principle. Principles of truth as found in God's law are unchangeable. They are part of the eternal "changeless center in the midst of change."

Some one has said "methods are to principles what harness is to a horse." Harness is changed, improved, or even new harness substituted if need be, according to emergencies which arise or the nature of the work to be done. It may be that we realize this, some methods and policies we have pursued not wisely, but well, may have to be abandoned. Should this cause any alarm? What is more logical than modern methods for modern problems? What is more reasonable than men and women, specialists if possible, with clear envisagement of the demands of the age, to solve the problems now before the church?

If my interest is in the triumph of the church and the consummation of its masterful program, rather than personal aggrandizement, I will welcome any change which looks to that end, even though it may mean partial elimination of my own personality, so far as the limelight of publicity is concerned. Or, if I have clear spiritual vision, doubtless I will be able to see that the success of the work of God does not depend upon any one man, especially if he be so weak as I, and shall not therefore be ruffled if others, whose strength and qualifications eclipse mine, be called to occupy in positions of great responsibility.

One man said recently that he could see the hand of God moving men here and there in the various positions of church work, as plainly as a man's hand could be seen moving the men on a checker board. What we need is an individual effort to interpret all movements and changes in the light of the divine purpose, then we all would see God "moving in his majesty and power." We cannot consistently expect other than changes in method as well as personnel, but would we do violence to Tennyson's philosophy if we said: "For men may come and men may go, but the church goes on forever?"

Perhaps in no other single instance have the changes now demanding our attention been reduced to concrete form as in the Coordinating Committee's report to the last conference. In a sense it seems deplorable that we are not able to see "eye to eye" as touching its program. This could hardly be expected, however. Some ideas and movements are so deeply significant that they cannot be understood and appreciated in one generation. Later generations, in the light of richer experience and more clarified vision may interpret and apply. Doubtless, we more fully comprehend the coordinating program now than a year ago. The year's experience in applying its principles in our efforts towards coordinating our local work has not only proven its feasibility, but also its necessity.

As we thus respond to the needs of the hour and the challenge of the new age what shall be our attitude? Shall we stubbornly cling to antiquated methods and the "traditions of the elders"? Traditions and methods which are painfully inadequate and incongruous with our present program? Nay, rather let us move near to the "golden dawning of the grander day" by seeking to realize the large part played in our moral and spiritual education by the discipline of change.

THE DUTY OF BRANCH OFFICERS

No work requires a closer study and diligence than that of the dealings with the souls of men. The time in which we live requires more watching and praying than at any previous time. If we want to live a higher type of life, we must have our environments so that the higher faculties may be brought into use and the lower ones suppressed.

The beginning of living a Christian life is not the end of it. The privilege to achieve is a wonderful one—a God-given boon. The plan laid down by God for the salvation of mankind is perfect. Order is heaven's first law. The Lord has system about all of his work. (Read Ephesians 4: 11-13.)

Again:

If my people will respect the officers whom I have called and set in the church, I will respect these officers; and if they do not, they cannot expect the riches of gifts and blessings of direction.—Doctrine and Covenants 125:14.

It may appear to some that little is accomplished by these officers. Big things are accomplished by the little things. The Lord has said: "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them." (Doctrine and Covenants 119:8.)

Brother Burgess says: "We each one can only do the best we can as our heavenly Father gives us wisdom and direction."

There should be unity between the ministry and the members of the church. It takes time and work and faith in God for us to ever reach perfection. Steadfastness is an important factor. In doing good we must live a life worthy of confidence. A harmony between precept and example should be had.

The duty of these officers, as outlined in Doctrine and Covenants, is great. It requires men of strong character to perform it. This work is somewhat personal and is intended to keep the Saints in lively remembrance of their duties and obligations. And where this godly work is cheerfully and continuously done, the effects are visible, as is also the result of negligence. A furnace in the house is of no use without fire in it; so are these servants of no use to the church without life in them to do their duty. The saying, to make "a mountain out of a mole hill" is too often allowed. These officials are rather appointed to prevent than to adjudicate trouble. These officers should be men who are not easily offended; should be careful not to be found guilty of doing what they teach others to avoid; should be prepared to take an insult in good spirit.

I have had some experience in that line of work. In going to certain homes I had things in my mind that I intended to say, but after I got there and the meeting was given over to our care, my mind was changed entirely. I have had it said to me, "You have done us much good." To God be the honor.

Jesus said: "Without me ye can do nothing." Leaving us in his hands for his Spirit to guide there comes a guarantee with wisdom to direct.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Our Coming Conference

The gathering light which precedes the dawn of our annual conference indicates to us that the time is upon us. This issue will reach our readers just before that busy time opens. What will it bring to us, we wonder? As a church, will we receive that courage and reassurance, that adjustment which we all feel necessary in order that the year ahead will be profitable? As an auxiliary, will the sisters show that interest in the work mapped out for them—work which is peculiarly and specially fitted for their needs and duties—that will cause them to return home, after the sessions are over, with songs of thanksgiving in their hearts because of the light and help they have received?

The answer to the last query altogether depends upon the spirit in which the women of the church will gather in Lamoni this spring. If that spirit be one of deep concern about their own individual responsibilities as women, if they are actuated by a sense that these days are pregnant with important events portending—that a difficult and heavy task is laid upon the church to the successful carrying on of which they are, in part, committed by their very membership and professed allegiance—then may we look for full attendances at the meetings specially set apart for the women. We shall not then be saddened by the spectacle which has often been observed in the past, where the women's meetings were but sparsely attended, although most "plain and precious things" were there being offered for their encouragement and enlightenment.

Sisters, what will it matter to us if we "gain the whole world, and lose our own" children? How do you account for the fact that so many of the offspring of "devoted" Saints are perfectly indifferent to the interests of the church which fostered them? Surely the parents are not keeping abreast of the rapid advance the world is making about them! Our children grow up in very different environments from those which surrounded and influenced us! Are we awake to those differences? And are we intelligently arming ourselves to meet them, to overcome them, and to help these dear young souls over the dangerous shoals? It is not that these dangers are all of one kind. Perfectly upright and noble young people are often utterly devoid of religious convictions. Is it that in the hurly-burly of this modern life, we have forgotten to do our planting when it was springtime in their lives? A beautiful tree cannot sprout from nothing! There must be the sowing time, if we wish a reaping. Are we sowing anything of value?

Oh, mothers in Israel! Let us come together this spring with prayerful hearts, with humility, seeking counsel, inspiration, sympathy, through which we may be open receptacles for the bestowal of that divine Spirit which will guide us into all truth! Let us come with a deep and convincing sense of our obligations to God, to the world of struggling souls about us, and, most especially, to these budding young lives which are to be crowned or wrecked by our intelligence or our ignorance!

It is not possible, at present writing, to inform you as to the details of the program outlined for the sisters at conference. The new order of procedure will provide a place for us worthy of the importance of our work and the relation it bears to the work of the church in general. We would most especially plead with the sisters to make themselves acquainted, as soon as possible, with the program of activities for women, and earnestly seek to lose not a crumb of what is thereby offered for their assimilation. You know, the most wonderful of feasts could never relieve the pangs of hunger did not the one in need come to the table, and place himself where he could receive. So, when the announcements are made, when the clarion call rings out, be ready and eager to respond to the invitation.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Somewhat Late, But Very Welcome!

ALTO, MICHIGAN, March 3, 1919.

Dear Sister: I am very much interested in the Auxiliary work, although I am not, as yet, a member. After reading the interesting letters in the woman's column of the HERALD, I feel a desire to participate in the social cheer.

I have had the pleasure of attending several meetings in Grand Rapids, the last two being especially enjoyable and profitable. While listening to the different classes and talks, my mind was drawn out in vision in regard to the scope and object of the woman's work, and I saw, or seemed to see:

That God is preparing the handmaidens of his church for future use—work here, and hereafter;

That this preparation will enable us not only to come up higher in this life, but to occupy higher ground in the life to come;

That our work will be carried on in Zion under more favorable conditions, but that we will be sent outside of Zion as well, to teach the nations this beautiful way of living;

That the people outside, seeing our good works, will come up to inquire of our ways of life;

That during the millennial reign a great work will be done by these handmaidens in helping to reclaim the fallen spirits to the better life, ultimately to enjoy the company of the glorified;

That there will be poor, broken-hearted sisters, who never had privileges in this life, who will need the ministry of the Woman's Auxiliary over there;

That there will indeed be "life more abundantly," both for those who learn and those who teach; and

That since God says his glory is intelligence, the more we learn, the more we understand the things of his kingdom, the more nearly we become the "delightful people" he intends us to be.

I am anxious to be in touch with the woman's work of the church, and hope to see the work started here in this branch. Otherwise I feel urged to get the books and study hard by myself.

Every branch, however, needs just what the Auxiliary can give it in order to progress as it should, and keep step with the times.

I realize more, each year, how fast the earth and its inhabitants are changing, and only desire to make my progress in the right direction—towards God and eternal life.

The letters in the HERALD are very helpful as well as interesting. My prayers are for the blessing of God, and the advancement of his work in all its phases.

Your sister in the faith, MRS. J. H. ELLIS.

AURORA, IOWA, March 12, 1919.

Dear Sisters of the Church: I must hurry or I will be too late for the social chat to which our president has so cordially invited us!

This district was organized a year ago last October, by Sister Lula Sandy. While it is very scattered, with small branches, and a degree of unfamiliarity in regard to the work to be overcome, I feel that we have made quite commendable progress already. We have locals in five of the larger branches, each including an Oriole circle. The girls seem to enjoy their work, and the women throughout the district are getting a larger view of theirs, as they understand it better.

To make Auxiliary work a success it will need fostering care and devoted attention. We do not want to lose any of the ground that we have gained so far. More must be accomplished in the future in order to satisfy us.

Our first convention was held at Waterloo, during the district conference, at which time we elected Sister Myrtle Grapes as secretary-treasurer, and Sister Cora Hart as supervisor of the Oriole work. They have rendered most excellent service, and I have received much encouragement from association with them, as well as others of the sisters.

I desire to see the Auxiliary work grow until we have all the departments in every branch of every district. To this end, and that the great and noble work God is calling upon the sisterhood of the church to do, may be accomplished to his glory, let us all "work, watch, and pray."

MRS. IRVY QUITMYER,
Organizer for Eastern Iowa District.

FLAT TOP, COLORADO, March 7, 1919.

Dear Sisters: Is it too late to come to your social gathering? Through some misfortune of the mail service, my invitation from Sister Krahl has just been received.

Eastern Colorado has been trying for two or three years to get in touch with the Woman's Auxiliary of the church. At our conference in February we at last organized, in harmony with instructions received from Sister Krahl, as well as those in the Year Book and Supplement. The sisters all seem enthusiastic over our prospects, and we have secured splendid women to head the four departments.

We all feel our inexperience is against us, but are working hard to gain an intelligent knowledge of affairs and opportunities.

Am expecting to visit the various branches in the interest of Auxiliary work, accompanying the Religio and Sunday school workers as well as our new Boy Scout leader.

We are to have a reunion at Fort Collins preceding our September conference, and are planning to have one of the general Auxiliary field workers with us at that time, to assist and instruct us. We hope to line up every woman in the district by that time. They are a fine group of women—good Latter Day Saints—and we feel that our district has a bright future.

Faithfully yours,

MRS. J. R. SUTTON,
District Organizer for Eastern Colorado.

Avoidable Darkness

If we visit any of our institutions for the blind, we are forced to agree that too much cannot be written on the subject of eyes, in order to keep ever present in the minds of the public the possibility of lessening the number of cases of preventable blindness. We are doing a great deal along some lines and too little along others in the way of educating the people on this important subject.

At birth and in infancy the eye requires special attention. In most of our States laws make it incumbent upon the physician to give a child attention, in the way of prophylactic treatment, immediately after its birth. This prevents many cases of blindness. The chief enemies to be combated are the many varieties of micro-organisms to be found almost everywhere, and some of great virulence which may be found, at times, in the mucous membrane of the mother. Before birth the eyelids are closed, and the eye itself free from these organisms but, in the process of birth, the whole body comes in contact with secretions containing them, and a careful physician knowing this endeavors to prevent these microbes from getting into the eye. He washes off the eyelids with some sterilized solution before the child has time to open them. If this is accomplished in quick time, it would seem unnecessary to instill any prophylactic solution into the eye itself, but since there must be some uncertainty as to whether there are still live microbes on the edge of the lids, it is thought better to instill a one-per-cent, or two-per cent, solution of silver nitrate or some other antiseptic lotion into the eye, and then wash it out with a sterile salt solution.

If the eyes of a child should get red in the slightest degree during infancy, the physician's attention should be directed to it, for the obvious reason that early cases are more easily treated and cured, than when they have advanced far. It should be remembered always that microbes which may be incapable of doing much harm to the adult may be very disastrous to the infant who has developed little immunity to them. For that reason great care should be taken that the wash cloth should be sterilized by boiling five minutes before being used on the baby's face. It should be unnecessary to say that the habit of touching the eyelids with fingers should not be indulged in. Fingers are rarely free from microbes, and those of attendants and of the baby itself should be kept scrupulously clean.

An infant is also less capable than an adult of protecting its eyes from bright lights and bright sunlight. Both of these are capable of permanently damaging the retina of the eye, and great care should be exercised that the baby be protected from them. No baby should be allowed to go to sleep in the sunlight. It sometimes happens that the baby is left in the shade and forgotten for a time, and the sun moves around and shines on the baby's face, with some damage to the eyes. This should be avoided by timely thought.

As the child grows up it should be cautioned constantly not to wipe its face on strange towels which have been used by others. Children should be taught to keep their fingers, or other microbe carriers, from their eyes, just as they should be taught to keep them from their mouths or lips.

It is common knowledge that defective eyes are the cause of defective school work, even though such eyes may or may not cause discomfort to the child. When there is lack of concentration in school work, etc., a good physician who has specialized in eye diseases should be consulted. Frequently, correcting glasses make an improvement in not only the school grades, but in the general health of the child. Cross eyes should be attended to when first noticed. If this is done, no operation will be necessary in the majority of cases, and the resulting blindness in one eye from untreated cross eyes will be averted.

In adolescence the amount of school work involving close reading begins to show its effect on the eye. Often the first trouble manifests itself at the age of from fifteen to eighteen years. Some eyes, which have given good service before, begin to show defects at these ages on account of growing refraction error. A person who is myopic, or shortsighted, at ten years will be more so at sixteen years. Almost all persons who are normal at ten years will become myopic at sixteen years. In other words, in order to be normal at sixteen years, it is necessary to have been longsighted in the previous years. Thus all persons are born longsighted and they gradually approach the normal as they grow up. This is physiological. If, however, they are not sufficiently longsighted at birth, they will become myopic at about the age of sixteen or before.

Timely treatment can sometimes slow down this progression toward myopia. In adult life, as time goes on, the near point begins to recede, and on account of a growing diminution of accommodation, a person will find it more comfortable to hold the reading matter farther from the eyes. At the age of forty, or even earlier, it may be necessary to procure glasses to relieve this strain.

The refractive changes above referred to take place in healthy people with healthy eyes, but there are many refractive changes as well as diseased conditions which are brought about by general diseases of the body. This is the reason it is not safe to trust your eyes to anyone except a physician who has specialized in diseases of the eye. It is his special study to interpret the eye-findings with a knowledge of the general condition of the patient. If the eye were merely an optical instrument—a dead thing—then anybody skilled in optics might prescribe suitable glasses; but the eye is a living, ever-changing, optical instrument, a mirror which reflects the general condition of the body, and in the eye the physician can often find not only the earliest but the only indication of many a fatal general disease. It is therefore important that you should dismiss from your mind the too-often repeated statement that the eye is nothing more than a mechanical optical instrument when it comes to examination for glasses or other conditions.

It is not the purpose in this short article to enumerate the many symptoms which should call for a doctor's care. They are too numerous. It is sufficient to emphasize the fact that there should be no delay in seeking advice, for ocular tissue is destroyed swiftly in some diseased conditions, and, once destroyed, can never be replaced. The greatest hope in all diseases of the eye, as in other diseases, lies in early treatment.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Objections to Our Tracts—And Our Reply

Editors Herald: I have lived in Miami, Florida, about five years. Miami has a population of something like thirty thousand. There never has been any church work done here prior to my coming, that I am aware of. I am sorry to say that I can't boast of very much since. I have succeeded in getting the promise of Elder E. C. Shelley to come and remain with us for an indefinite time, and to the end that I might be of service to him when he comes I thought it advisable to get some literature, that I might distribute the same as a preparatory move to his work when he comes. Whereupon I sent an order to the Ensign Office for literature and obtained quite an assortment. After careful reading of the same I discovered that each piece contained denials that the Reorganized Church was one and the same thing with the Utah Church, going into the subject at some length. . . .

It occurs to my mind to be very bad practice to set up a defense before there is any accusation laid against us. I have no neighbors or acquaintances to my knowledge who have ever accused me or any of my family with any connection with the Utah church. Consequently, I hesitated after reading this literature to put it out, for the same reason. I don't desire to cast any reflection on the ability or good intentions of those who wrote it, as it contains a great deal of instructive matter. However, if you have for sale something that sets forth the gospel as taught by the church which does not have this feature I would like to procure an order of the same. Please advise me and oblige.

JAMES ARMOUR.

MIAMI, FLORIDA, March 2, 1919.

March 20, 1919.

Mr. James Armour,
Miami, Florida.

Dear Brother: We were much interested in your letter concerning the character of our church literature. It is a subject worthy our consideration. We are glad to try to help you solve the apparent difficulty and suggest a few thoughts on the subject, with the hope that thereby you may possibly see the matter in its larger aspects.

On the face of it, your argument that we should not deny an allegation till it is made, is perfectly good. It is a principle that holds good in all our dealings with our fellow men. We believe your situation is a fairly typical one. In many places one may expect to live quietly on, saying little and doing less, and arouse little opposition. There is no occasion for anyone speaking disparagingly of us if we are not aggressive, for it is easy to discern that our influence is so limited that we are not worthy of notice.

But now that you have begun to do something you will find opposition, and if we mistake not, will be glad ere this letter reaches you, that there are well-supported denials of the charges that have been made against you and your religion.

Our tracts are some of them old ones. Nearly all of them have been written by men of the ministry, actively engaged in prosecuting the missionary work of the church. Being on the firing line, bearing the brunt of the battle, they have found a demand for a certain line of argument, and have incorporated it into tracts which have been effective. In spite of the desire to present our gospel affirmatively and not spend time denying all the vile charges made against us, the need of something printed so people could calmly peruse it has persisted, and most of these old tracts are still valuable.

It is too bad we have had to devote so much of our energies to these denials; and we dare say the followers of Christ often chafed under the charges made against them in the days of the early Christian church, when the name Christian was intended to mean all that some people put into the word Mormon. Yet it has ever been thus.

But to meet the demand you and those like you have raised, a series of tracts have been written within the past few years which will be all you desire. Among them we suggest the Angel Message Series, on the first principles. They are straightforward presentations of our beliefs and very convincing in their style, written by our best writers. In the inclosed price list we have checked them for your convenience.

Then there are some of our other newer tracts which present the history of the church in very brief form. Their plan is affirmative. In stating the apostasy development one can but see that some went in the wrong direction; let history decide which portion. If that be denying that we were responsible for the pernicious system that grew up in the West whereby polygamy, blood-atonement, and kindred evils were proclaimed and practiced, we are not able to do differently. Our history is clear; we are proud of it; if it by contrast reflects on the history of other organizations, we are not to blame.

But there are other tracts, among the large list that we publish. Let us cite a few of them:

- 1154. The Plan of Salvation.
- 1186. The Nature of Man, Is He Possessed of Immortality?
- 1188. The "One Body," or the Church Under the Apostleship and Under the Apostasy.
- 1194. The True Way Is the Gospel Way.
- 1215. The Narrow Way.
- 1229. Truth Made Manifest.
- 1239. Who Then Can Be Saved?
- 1252. The Pure Gospel of Christ.

This is a partial list, and if you will look through the price list—which you should always have convenient for the purpose, you will note titles of a number of tracts on special subjects such as spiritualism, the Sabbath question, the Book of Mormon, etc.

Evidently you were unfortunate in your selection. To get the best results one must know what he is ordering. We cannot hope to get satisfaction by phoning our grocer to send us sufficient food for the next week, and since he knows us, he can make up the list. Neither can we get good results by ordering tracts by guess.

To help our people make intelligent selections with a minimum of effort, a collection of the representative tracts of the church, covering practically all the phases of our belief, has been made up and widely advertised as the Dollar Library. It is a list of thirty-four tracts and a price list. One can for a dollar acquire a good working knowledge of our best tracts and then be in a position to intelligently order to meet his local demands. What is required in one neighborhood may not be in demand in another. The only way to know is to acquaint oneself with the contents, then use prayerful intelligence in making the selection.

In the years of the church from 1830 to 1844 the doctrines of this church swept the land like wildfire. In that brief time the church made a phenomenal growth. It is estimated that as many as three hundred thousand became affiliated with it. The restoration is a glorious subject when not associated with untrue and unclean things its enemies would attach to it. The name of the Book of Mormon did not bring up the hateful word polygamy then.

We are glad to present the same things now. The doctrines of this church have been proven time and again to be impregnably founded on the Rock of truth, which is Christ. But when those interested in us and our church ask us about our history, about the charges heard against us, we are frank enough to go all the way and ask them to investigate thoroughly. Then we turn to the convenient collations of evidences in the tracts you have objected to, for mere denials mean little. There must be something more. In those tracts you have it, evidently. We all learn best by elementary processes. If we use good judgment those who come into contact with us will receive the information they understand, and from it proceed to that which they do not understand, but the sound of which interests.

Our gospel literature department is becoming better equipped in its local, district, and general departments to give aid to those who need it in the distribution of literature. It is always a local problem, and no matter who solves it, he will do so properly only after a careful consideration of local conditions.

We expect to publish your letter and this reply for the benefit to others who have encountered the same problem. May you and they be blessed of God in the solution thereof and always feel that we are all glad to do our part to help. We subscribe ourselves as coworkers in the great missionary cause of Christ.

Assistant Editor.

Far West Stake

---

The spring conference of the stake, held with the First Branch, Saint Joseph, was decidedly "the best ever held" since the stake was organized. All the stake conferences have been excellent, but the last one was quite remarkable in its spirit of unity and happy, saintly fellowship. The presidency had asked the branches to observe the preceding Sunday as a season of fasting and prayer in the interests of the stake and General Conferences, and results were very apparent in the splendid spirit of unity and friendly, saintly fellowship which prevailed throughout.

The Saints of Saint Joseph entertained the visiting Saints free, at their homes and in the lower room of the church where meals were served Saturday and Sunday, noon and evening. Influenza had caused the October conference, to have been held at Cameron, to be annulled, hence a large amount of business had accumulated. It was handled systematically and promptly; among such items are: Brother John L. Bear, president of the Second Saint Joseph Branch, placed as a member of the high council; adoption of a resolution authorizing branches to provide for entertainment of conferences upon a basis of approximate cost, as at reunions and General Conferences; indorsement of General Conference action on coordination; adoption of resolution authorizing the presidency and bishopric to publish a paper in the interests of the stake work; a number of brethren were ordained to various offices.

At the ordination meeting on Sunday it was declared in prophecy that because the people in the assembly were more united it was commendable; that such condition of unity and increasing oneness must continue and that contention must not exist among the people of God; that times of great trouble were before the people, and that only by faithful observance of duty would the Saints be able to receive divine care by which they could endure; that in so doing they would know at no distant day that they had been kept amidst the terrible things that were coming upon the earth.

Brother J. A. Gillen, of the Twelve, preached two excellent discourses on Sunday. The stake choir, under the direction of Sister Dana E. Scott, rendered the cantata, "Olivet to Calvary." We were pleased to have with us Brother John Garver, president of the Lamoni Stake, and Brother A. J. Yarrington, of the Lamoni Stake Bishopric.

Word from Brother R. S. Salyards, jr., finds him at "The Pines Sanitarium," Colorado Springs, transferred from Fort Stanton, New Mexico. He is feeling fine and looks well and is gratified that he can now meet with the Saints at the Springs. Brother Frederick A. Smith called upon him en route to California; found him much improved and expecting to be discharged as cured in from three to four months.

Brother Samuel Twombly was taken with acute inflammatory rheumatism; was obliged to return to his home in Kansas last week, accompanied by his son. We hope for his early recovery; learn that he is improving.

Brother William Lewis remains in quite a critical condition; regret that we cannot report improvement. Brother W. P. Pickering is at home again, greatly improved by operation and treatment at the Noyes Hospital where he was taken because of the severity of his suffering not giving time to go to Independence.

An item published in the Maryville paper to the effect that a Latter Day Saint or "Mormon" missionary from Independence is said to have carried the spinal meningitis to Guilford is an error. Our missionaries have had no connection with this matter whatever. The statement in the Maryville paper will be corrected.

We were pleased to see Brethren Paul School, of Stewartsville, and Grant Gates, of Ravenwood, in attendance at our conference. Both returned from active participation in the severe service of the American Expeditionary Forces abroad.

A number of Saints from Minnesota were present at the conference, looking up locations in the stake. Brother J. W. Vernon and family, of Mount Carmel, Illinois, located recently near Hamilton. We welcome these new members and trust others will gather into this region of country.

Brother J. W. Roberts held a successful series of meetings at Oakdale Branch, near Hamilton, during February.

A BROTHER.

Bronson-Straub Debate

The writer has recently been in attendance, and acted as one of the moderators of a debate between Elder J. A. Bronson and Elder W. L. Straub of the Church of Christ, at Culdesac, Idaho, extending from February 26 to March 5. Elder Straub represented the Church of Christ, but was secured by the Christian Church of Culdesac to represent them. This debate was probably one of the most important encounters we have had with this church in the history of the Spokane District. There was to have been discussed four different propositions, the two church propositions, for four nights, and the Book of Mormon proposition for three nights, and the last on the Bible being a complete revelation, for three nights, but Elder Straub excused himself, not being able to carry out this schedule he had previously signed up, on account of previous appointments. He said he could not devote the remaining six nights to the last two propositions, and wanted to cut it down to three. We would not stand for that so the debate on the last two propositions was called off.

The propositions discussed were, "The church known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, of which I, J. A. Bronson, am a member and representative, is identical with the Church of Christ as established by Christ and his apostles, and is a restoration of the same." The second reads the same with the exception of the name "Church of Christ," instead of our name.

Brother Bronson led out in the affirmative, and made clear exposition of our conception of what constituted the ancient church, in organization, doctrine, and practice. He showed the authority of that ancient body, and how the power of God attended its administrations not only in the first century but afterward. His argument and evidence on the apostasy and restoration was clear and pointed.

Elder Straub came back by stating "apostles and prophets" of Ephesians 4:11 and 1 Corinthians 12:28 were not in the organic form of the church. This was met by showing the word set means to fix and establish, thus they became a permanent fixture in the primitive church, and with all of Straub's turning and twisting it did not destroy the force of that one evidence. Against Brother Bronson's evidence on the priesthood and authority, Elder Straub claimed Christ was the only high priest, and that every one was his own priest, using Revelation 1:6. It was shown this conception was faulty, that priesthood never in the past applied to a woman, and Exodus 19:6 was cited where a "kingdom of priests" was referred to, yet it did not mean all in the kingdom of Israel held sacred office in the priesthood but that it belonged to two special orders (2 Kings 23:4; Hebrews 7:5-18). That Christ was the great High Priest was freely admitted, but it was urged others held the same order of priesthood (Hebrews 3:1; 5:1; 8:3; and 4:14, 15). His attention was called to the "order of Melchisedec," and he was asked if he thought one man would constitute an "order." This seemed an eye opener. He argued because the "priesthood being changed" (Hebrews 7:12) that fact would do away with priesthood altogether. This was shown to be fallacious, for a "change" did not imply a relegation of priesthood by any means. There was a change in the law, there also was a "change" in the priesthood. Because there was a change of the law would not reason we are not under law to-day. Far from it, for Christ and his worthy representatives strove to "establish the law." It was shown by Brother Bronson, priesthood being defined means the office or character of a priest, and it was the order of men set apart to sacred office, like Paul and others who held office (Romans 11:13; Hebrews 7:5; 1 Timothy 3:1; Romans 12:4). More fully defined, priesthood means the authority and order of God committed to man commissioning him to officiate in his name, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and not into the name as so often perverted. The offices are varied and bear distinctive names and are made continuous; the occupant may be removed but the office remains. It was argued from Hebrews 5:1 that the high priest here referred to meant those under the law, for they were to "offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins," but this was shown to be faulty construction, for the sacrifices under the gospel law were of a "spiritual" nature (1 Peter 2:5). As a fitting climax to this formidable line of evidence it was shown the duties of this holy office could not be assumed at will by the individual, but God had to take the initiative in designating who was proper and worthy. (Hebrews 5:4.)

Mr. Straub's argument against the apostasy and restoration was weak indeed. While he admitted a partial apostasy, yet he claimed there was a remnant, and that all gospel truth was not taken from the earth, thus contradicting Daniel 7:25 and Revelation 13:7, besides the many statements from their own early writers, including Alexander Campbell. He claimed the "gospel" the angel of Revelation 14:6, 7 was to bring was the good news that Babylon is fallen. We admitted this was probably included in the angel's message, for that message includes the "judgment" which is a principle of the gospel (Hebrews 6:2). He only used one text against the usual line we present on the Elias (John the Baptist) of latter days, and that was the one found in John 1:21, 25. It was shown John's denial here seemingly given was for the reason he was not the Elias actually that had come in the flesh, but in "the spirit and power of Elias." (Luke 1:17 and Matthew 11:14.) The main evidences on the apostasy and restoration were never touched, and he tried to leave the impression it did not amount to anything, yet on his church proposition he was committed to that very thing.

On the line of apostolic succession he touched very lightly. He admitted Matthias of Acts 1:26 was an apostle. His denial of the others was no match for the scriptural proof texts presented by Brother Bronson. Eusebius here was used with telling effect, which shows there were others (see pages 111, 179, and 350).

He claimed the signs mentioned in Joel 2, and repeated on the Day of Pentecost, were all fulfilled at that time, basing his conclusion on the statement, "this is that," found in Acts 2:16. He was asked if anyone went to sleep on that memorable day and dreamed any dreams, saw visions, or even prophesied. Did any of the people see any of the heavenly phenomena mentioned in the 19th and 20th verses? He saw the point.

His ridicule of John the beloved not dying was met very effectually with the scripture found in John 21:21-23, and Revelation 10:11. Elder Straub justified his asking for a sign of "tongues" from 1 Corinthians 14:21-24. This was shown to be for the benefit of the unbeliever in the church, and not to those that were alien to the ancient church.

Elder Straub was quite an adept as a mud-slinger, and his dishonorable methods in such was lowering to the dignity of a true minister. His stock-in-trade was the old, fossilized Howe's work, and in reading those old slanderous allegations he forgot to read the answers to all of them. He brought nothing to light, only the same old rehash that has been served up a thousand times before. He proved to be a close student of Shook, Bays, and the R. B. Neal literature as well as the infamous allegations of the purported wives of Joseph Smith, coming from the Utah Mormons. Testimony regarding polygamy when applied to Joseph Smith would make him a "miserable reprobate," of contemptible mien, but "golden" when applied to those old avowed prostitutes of Utah. He would rather believe the testimony of those confessed polygamists than the testimony of one that was clean, and fought the abominable doctrine, by precept and example, as we know Joseph Smith did. The evidence of the courts he never touched, in fact he did not try. He seemed to manifest pride that his relatives in Missouri still have an old musket that was used in the "Mormon drive." His mind was directed to the fact that H. H. Bancroft in his history says the Saints of Missouri and Illinois were better than their neighbors. (Pages 164, 165, and 368.) If we were better than our neighbors, and we were immoral as Elder Straub claimed, in the name of reason what must our Campbellite neighbors have been? Why take pride in driving from the country a people that is better than we? Is this a distinction to be proud of?

When it came to his church, unlike the proverbial ground hog he went in his hole at Pentecost and never came out at all. He was asked for just one text that said the ancient church was set up at Pentecost. This he never presented. In refuting the Pentecostal idea for the organization of the church, Brother Bronson presented 1 Corinthians 12:28; Matthew 10:1, 2; 16:18; 18:17; 3:2; Luke 17:20, 21; 16:

16; Matthew 11:12; Acts 7:37, 38; Ephesians 5:25. This testimony he never answered. That the Holy Ghost was given before Pentecost was evident; nevertheless, Elder Straub to the contrary. (John 20:22; Luke 1:15; 2:25; 2 Peter 1:21; Acts 1:16.) One of the most absurd positions taken by Elder Straub and his church was, the gospel was not preached until Pentecost. This is such a glaring prevarication of fact it hardly needs noticing. This theory was hit hard with the following texts: Mark 1:1, 14; Matthew 4:23; Galatians 3:18; Matthew 24:14; Acts 10:36, 37; and 1 Corinthians 10:1, 2.

It was apparent he did not intend to come this side of Pentecost with the purported church, so it became necessary for Brother Bronson to take a peep into their modern origin. He found Alexander Campbell was their founder and not Jesus Christ. From Grafton's Life of Alexander Campbell he found on pages 33 and 75 how he was called. In 1810 young Alexander begins to preach (page 66); May 4, 1811, he is licensed (page 79); January 1, 1812, he is ordained (page 84); June 2, 1812, he is baptized by Luce, a Baptist who did not baptize for the remission of sins (page 87); then ten years later discovers baptism is for the remission of sins (page 143); then joins the Baptists (page 103); is kicked out (page 125); then called their prophet (pages 9, 13, 57); and finally tries his hand at prophesying (page 144). This seems to be an extraordinary procedure for one "like John the Baptist in the wilderness of Judea, to unmask the pharisaism of his time, and to call a world of erring ecclesiasts to true repentance" (page 75). We must say Joseph Smith had no such record as that. Elder Straub strenuously denied Alexander Campbell was the founder of this church, but in this he was contradicted by many of their own writers, such as Grafton, 5, 84; Egbert's book, page 9; and Old Paths, pages 18, 19. The Christian System, pages 8 and 9, which came from the prolific pen of Alexander Campbell, tells just how it was done; "argued out, . . . every inch of it was debated, argued, canvassed for several years in Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Ohio. On this bottom we put to sea, with scarcely hands enough to man the ship." Probably that is the reason they are the Ishmael of modern times, their hand is raised against all others.

In making a comparison of the church of the Campbells with that established by Christ and his apostles, Brother Bronson used a chart, and in the contrast it was found there was but little of the old church left, and the following story was told, "A mother makes a present to her son, and says, 'Here, my son, is a very precious relic that has been in the family for a number of generations. My son, this old vest was owned by your father, and was proudly worn by your grandfather, and was first purchased by your great grandfather over one hundred years ago. I want you to take it and keep it and hand it down to your children.' The son takes the old vest but commences to look it over, and soon makes a discovery, and says to his mother, 'Why, mother, the back part of this old vest has new cloth in it.' 'Yes,' says the mother, 'the old back part became so tattered and shabby looking I concluded to put in a new back.' In looking over the old vest still farther he makes another discovery, and he says again to his mother, 'Mother, the front part of this old vest seems, too, to be new cloth.' 'Yes, yes, my son, the front part became so rotten and moth eaten I just concluded to supply a new front part also.' This seemed to satisfy for a time, but finally the son commences to look at the buttons on the old vest, and still he makes another discovery, and he says to his irritable mother, 'Why, mother, these buttons bear the stamp of our merchant down town.' The mother becomes real indignant at the presumption of her son, and says, 'I'll give you to understand, my son, while it is true this old vest has a new front part and a new back part, as well as new buttons, yet it has the same old arm holes it had before."

This is a fit comparison to the church of the Campbells, they have done so much changing, and theological patch work, and if you were going out to look for the Bible church, you would never recognize it to be the one of old, for about all they have of the old apostolic church is the "same old arm holes."

We left the Saints of Gifford and Culdesac feeling well in the work, and confident they are identified with the true church, and although the onslaught was bitter and the cross hard to bear, because presented by a purported scholar, yet to see him go down before one that made no boasts of scholarly attainments made the victory doubly sure and important. This encounter put me in mind of the early days of Oklahoma when the cowboys were breaking wild outlaw bronchos. When the saddle was strapped on the back and the rider astride, the bucking was fierce and choppy, but after a time the animal became less and less powerful, and finally at the last under quirt and spur the victorious rider brings the broncho to a standstill, subdued, cowed, before the hilarious crowd.

The prospect in this district is looking better, and we feel encouraged. It is to be hoped we will have a fine reunion this year. We have selected the Valley, Idaho, Branch as the place, and the time will be the last of June. Let all the Saints of the Spokane District bear this in mind and prepare to come.

Respectfully, in gospel fellowship,
S. S. SMITH.

Indorses Mission Paper

Being isolated from church privileges, we (my wife and I) derive great pleasure and profit from the sermons, articles, and letters in the HERALD. We also take the Autumn Leaves and Stepping Stones. Some of our papers are passed on to others when possible, but as we live on a homestead in the woods, three miles from the nearest neighbor, it is not always possible to distribute papers or tracts.

In the HERALD of February 12, we noted an article on "A mission paper." If such a paper as Brother Farrell describes were published, we could subscribe for some of the outsiders in this section, and doubtless many others in similar circumstances could do the same.

Then, too, the missionaries could subscribe for nonmembers who manifest an interest in the services, and thereby "follow up" with more evidence and proof of the truthfulness of their message.

The HERALD is all that could be desired as a paper for Latter Day Saints, but it isn't quite the thing to give to nonmembers, especially those who know little or nothing of our belief.

When I first started to read the church papers I thought they were about the driest papers I had ever seen. That was before I knew anything about the doctrine, more than the six principles. To me they were Greek, so far as my understanding them. Now, however, by the aid of the Spirit, I am able to understand even the deepest of the sermons. Such is the change which takes place in us when we enter the kingdom and receive of the Spirit which leads unto all truth.

If other outsiders get no more from the papers which we give them than I did from the first I read, then we need a missionary paper, and I am willing to do my "bit" in helping it along.

DOLPH, OREGON.

VINCENT R. SHULTZ.

JEFFERSON, IOWA, March 10, 1919.

Editors Herald: We are located at the above place, and are wondering if there are any Saints near here. If there are any scattered Saints near, we will be glad to cooperate in trying to get together for services. Will be glad to hear from those near here. We have heard that there are a few Saints at Scranton, Iowa, which is the next station west.

We want to continue our activities in church work as much as is possible. My wife and children will move from Nevada, Iowa, to this place soon.

Sincerely,

C. L. WOLF.

CRESTON, IOWA, March 11, 1919.

Editors Herald: I take pleasure in writing your pages regarding the work at Creston, Iowa, at which place we have just finished a little work—five were baptized, and last May five were baptized, so you see the work is onward in this place.

Many will be glad to know that the prospects are encouraging for the organization of a branch here soon. We have about thirty members, and others soon to be baptized. Nearly all of them own their homes and are well employed. They are a live bunch of earnest workers.

Elder George Hall, an excellent young man of talent, has had charge of the work there for years. He has been a father to the Saints there, and is loved by all. Brother Homer is in charge of Sabbath school work, and has given excellent service.

Creston is a lovely city, and we feel sure a great work will be done there.

From here I go to Pleasanton, Iowa. I am well and happy in our Father's work, and have enjoyed many rich blessings this year.

Your brother in Christ,

W. E. HADEN.

SANDUSKY, MICHIGAN, March 9, 1919.

Editors Herald: We have just enjoyed a two-weeks series of special meetings at this place, which were conducted by Elder William I. Fligg of London, Ontario. Elder Fligg is a very congenial man and an able speaker. Although none were added to the branch by baptism, yet there are some who are investigating. We felt loath to have the brother go from our branch leaving an interested people, but as other duties called him to other parts we had to part with him. However, we trust that he may be able to return in the near future and reap some of the seed he has sown. We also had with us during the two weeks Brother Lewis Bender of Detroit who is a cornetist. We greatly prized his valuable services while the meetings were in progress.

On the last evening that Elder Fligg was with us, the Oriole girls, who are splendid entertainers, got busy and prepared a farewell entertainment for him. This was surely enjoyed by all. Two of the brethren were chosen as captains, one taking all whose birthdays came in the first six months of the year, and the others those whose birthdays came during the last six months of the year. The sides entered into a contest to see which could prepare and give the best program, each side to have twelve numbers or selections. And the young people surely did well. This provided amusement for a time, the winners being those born during the first six months of the year. A lunch followed. At the close of the program, Elder Fligg was presented by the Oriole girls with a beautiful shirt. After the presentation of this gift and a few appropriate remarks by one of the brethren concerning the work and our appreciation of Elder Fligg's efforts, the deacon of the branch presented Brother Fligg in behalf of the branch with a sum of money to aid him in going to General Conference and provide him with other necessities. He responded in his kind, earnest manner with an encouraging address, after which the branch joined in singing, "God be with you till we meet again." It was an occasion which we are sure will live in the memories of those participating.

Sandusky Branch is a live little place, having a membership of about seventy Saints. The church is a neat little home in the town which has a population of about one thousand. We are fortunate in having Elder R. W. Kenny, a man of progressive desires and ambitions, for our branch president. He is a young man zealous in the work and ever on the alert to see a privilege for activity.

The mayor of a certain city of Michigan was asked to aid in the opening exercises of our church there. This he did giving a splendid address and explaining the difference between our organization and the one at Utah. While our meetings here were in progress we secured a copy of this address and had it published in one of our local papers. What was our next surprise then when an individual signing his name as "Subscriber" replied to the article, trying to prove that Joseph Smith was the author of the revelation on polygamy. Elder Fligg ably replied to it in the late issue of the paper, and we do not yet know what the result will be. However, there is one thing that we feel we are doing for good, that is, we are getting our position before the people in this manner. We long for the day to come when Zion shall be redeemed and God's people shall gather home.

CORRESPONDENT.

ATCHISON, KANSAS, March 12, 1919.

Editors Herald: I never have been very anxious to get myself before the church through the columns of the papers, and have been thinking if all were like me there would be little contributed, and our paper would have to go out of business. I enjoy reading the letters and articles in all of our church papers, and have often wished that I were an able writer.

My work for a year and more has been of a local character, and while I have had to meet some things of a perplexing character I have enjoyed my work and the association of the Saints in my little branch. Though the powers of darkness have worked and sought the destruction of the work of the Lord in this city, we are pleased to report that we have survived the storm, and the branch to-day is in a good condition, and all seemingly are anxious that the work in this city will progress. We have learned more fully that we must meet the adversity with the successes, and only by overcoming the adversity shall we meet with success. There is yet room for improvement, and I presume will be till we reach the standard set, which will not be fully reached till we have had the thousand years' training with the Master. I can see growth manifest among our people, and find as each individually applies himself to the task of learning the great things of the law, and what is required of us that we might be ready for the examination that will take place at the beginning of the thousand years, I wonder, will we pass?

I am inclined to the idea that the biggest work before the church to-day is the education of the membership. I am converted to the idea of education, as I believe it is required of us. I do not mean college education, for we will not all be able to acquire that, but I believe we can use the opportunities at hand to make ourselves efficient workers in the kingdom of God and the work allotted us, aiming to be numbered among the best in the church. Some are adepts at finding fault and backbiting, it might be a good thing to turn our energies the other way and try boosting for awhile. I believe we would feel better.

But back to the news items. Our branch here is doing nicely now, and we have a good class of Saints in the main, and I think we can measure up with most of our branches both in a spiritual as well as in a temporal way.

During the first part of this year I made a missionary trip, taking in Topeka, holding forth there for two weeks. The prospects in Topeka look good and I see the possibility of opening missions in various parts of the city, as we have families living in various parts of the city where it could be tried out in cottage meetings. The Saints there seemingly are anxious to get the gospel before the people. Brother Crooker, the branch president, is absent from home most of the time, he being a traveler for a furniture house.

I went from Topeka to Ogden, Kansas, where I held forth in a union church, holding over three Sundays to fair audiences. Prejudice was very strong against us, yet we were able to make some friends. Brother John Clark made the opening there possible. He has been selected superintendent of the union Sunday school, and he was as a light set on a hill. Brother John made many friends in that place, and many were the expressions of regret when he finally had to leave there because of the lack of work. I think the highest tribute that could be paid to our young men was tendered Brother Clark and the young men of the church who were at Camp Funston by a Baptist minister at the last meeting I held at Ogden. I was pleased, and there welled up in me a justifiable pride to hear our boys eulogized. What a wonderful opportunity lies before each member of the church in the locality where he lives, the opportunity of living the gospel in every-day life. What powerful sermons! No pulpit discourse can compare with them. The pulpit discourse is a means to an end; it is not the end. If all would help the preacher by living lives that would attract those around them, what a help all would be! If, instead of speaking disparagingly about each other, rather point out what of good there is in each of us.

From Ogden I stole home for four days and enjoyed the association of wife and babies. From home I came to Atchison to prepare for the convening of our district conference which convened on the 7th, 8th, and 9th.

Our conference was among the best I have ever attended. The good Spirit was present throughout. The coordinating system was tried out and it worked fine, we were all a part of the main body. We commenced with a prayer service on Friday morning when the Spirit of the Master was felt and each session was enjoyed by all. The business was carried on in an ordinary manner, the usual business being attended to, of which you will no doubt get a report later. Friday evening was set apart for institute work, and Sister Glines of Independence being with us, was given the hour for explaining the educational features of the Woman's Auxiliary. All enjoyed the service. Saturday evening was devoted to a musical program, which was very much enjoyed by all present. Sunday, the usual meetings were held, commencing with a young people's prayer meeting at 8.30 a. m. I considered myself young, and met with them and enjoyed the association, it being only a foretaste of the day's enjoyment.

Brother J. F. Curtis was with us, and we had him occupy the preaching hours, and we listened to two live, instructive sermons. The afternoon prayer and sacrament meeting was among the best I have ever had the pleasure of attending. One brother said it surely is a foretaste of what we will receive at the General Conference. What a wonderful thing it will be when we are privileged to live in such an atmosphere all the time.

We have some sickness in the branch. The infant babe of Brother and Sister Harry Sprague is very sick, also Sister Carrie Scarcliff.

Your brother in Christ,

WILLIAM ANDERSON.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Preaching by N. L. Mortimore, T. A. Hougas, and H. N. Pierce. C. W. Forney, secretary.

NORTHEASTERN KANSAS.—At Atchison, March 7, 10 a. m., in charge of District President F. G. Hedrick, and J. F. Curtis. Working under the coordination plan which was adopted by the district, the morning session was devoted to Religio business, the afternoon to Sunday school business; both departments elected officers for the year. C. E. Schmid was elected president of Religio, and R. L. Tilden, superintendent of the Sunday school. The Woman's Auxiliary had charge of the evening service. Sister Glines of Independence gave a very instructive talk regarding the educational part of the department's work. Church business was taken up Saturday morning, routine business taking up the morning session, election of officers held during the afternoon. F. G. Hedrick was elected president, with William Anderson as vice president. The report of the committee appointed to readjust the financial system of the district was accepted, which makes the Bishop's agent custodian of all moneys belonging to the various departments. A budget was prepared and voted by the different departments, and we hope for greater progress as a result of the steps taken. Delegates to General Conference: F. G. Hedrick, William Anderson, L. W. Fike, Sister F. G. Hedrick, Gilbert Hedrick, Bertha Dittmore, Samuel Twombly, R. L. Tilden. Alternates: J. F. Curtis, John Cairns, Arthur Smith, Sister H. C. Pitzenberger, Sister Samuel Twombly. A musical program was given Saturday evening. Brother O. Nace of Independence was with us to assist with the orchestra work. Apostle J. F. Curtis delivered two sermons, Sunday. Sacrament and prayer service Sunday afternoon. Brother Will Bollinger, of the Atchison Branch, was recommended for ordination to office of elder, the same being attended to during the social service. R. L. Tilden, secretary.

INDEPENDENCE STAKE.—At the Stone Church at 8 p. m., March 8, 1919. The following recommendation from the stake high council was adopted: "In order to more effectively administer in stake affairs and looking to the realization of the objective that the Independence Stake shall be the center place in Zion, therefore be it resolved, That it is the opinion of the stake high council that the branches of the Independence Stake should be consolidated for administrative purposes, and that membership be held in the stake as such." Book Reviews

THE COMING OF THE LORD; WILL IT BE PREMILLENNIAL?—By James H. Snowden, D. D., LL. D. The Macmillan Company, New York, $1.75. Just recently a prominent missionary came into our office and asked if we had anything late on the coming of Christ. We were pleased to hand him our review copy of the above book, not only to furnish what he wanted but to get his opinion of the work. The next day he ordered a copy of his own and remarked that it was a book that should be in the hands of every missionary of our church, for it was the most comprehensive work on the subject he had seen.

While it is true that the scholarly author does not believe that Christ will come before the millennium and adduces the best available arguments for his side of the question, he very fairly presents the premillennial idea and reasons for belief in it. Quoting from John A. Marquis:

"This is a scholar's book, the book of a Christian scholar, whose scholarship is as reverent as it is profound. Doctor Snowden rests his case first of all on the teaching of the Scriptures. His standing as a theological teacher and writer will give what he has to say on this much discussed question a wide hearing. The books on the subject of the millennium are legion, but I have seen none that handles the matter in just the way this one does.

"The author has made himself master of the literature on both sides of the question in a very remarkable way, and his conclusions are not based on sentiment and bias but on the teaching of the Bible. Doctor Snowden not only sees the whole question clearly, but he discusses it in a style that makes it plain to the popular reader. He has made a real contribution to the discussion of a subject that has bulked large in the thought of Christian people in every time of calamity for the past nineteen hundred years."

The publishers believe that this is not another ephemeral book on the second coming of Christ, but one that will take a permanent place in the literature of this subject.

Our Departed Ones

CORLESS.—Ann E., youngest daughter of Carlton B. and Lucy C. Williams, a descendant of Roger Williams, founder first Baptist Church in America, was born February 16, 1836, at Evans, Erie County, New York. Came with family to Coldwater, Michigan, January, 1837, where her long and eventful life was passed. Married to Elder Bradford Corless, December 22, 1852. Five children came to bless the home. Two daughters died in infancy. Dean, the youngest of three surviving, was called to the beyond, April 21, 1917. Father, mother, brother, sister, and husband of Sister Corless preceded her, the latter dying August 6, 1911. Sister Corless was a woman of purity. Became identified with the church January 31, 1864. Baptized by O. J. Bailey—was a charter member, and leader of social functions 55 years, never tiring, advocating the purity of its principles and divinity of organization. She built up a character which everyone loves—eminently Christian. Cultivated virtues fitting and qualifying for heaven. Her life, an epitome of righteousness, was crowned with the greatest thing in the world—charity, and her earthly career closed amid divine benediction sealing her testimony to the truth of the gospel. Gifted with exceptional intelligence, endowed with poetic ability, she was a power for good, and will live long after “dust returns to dust.” She was a student, a reader of SAINTS' HERALD since Isaac Sheen was editor. Her home was a sanctuary of hospitality—the home of the ministry. Just previous to final scene, she was noticed by the family, to be praying. Turning her eyes to Brother and Sister Stroh, and Ethel, said: “Be faithful; be fervent; be humble,” then passed out with the tide, peacefully, a beautiful character in life and in death, February 19, 1919. Mourning their loss are two children—Star Corless, and Sister Samuel Stroh; 7 grandchildren, three great-grandchildren, and a long line of relatives and friends. Funeral at Saints' chapel. S. W. L. Scott officiated.

MYATT.—Louisa Myatt was born August 12, 1840, at Birmingham, Warwick County, England. Baptized January 18, 1880, at Maquoketa, Jackson County, Iowa. Died February 17, 1919. Was a member of the Baldwin Branch. Services in the Methodist Episcopal Church at Elwood, Iowa, sermon by John Heide. A grand Saint has gone to her reward.

CONNETT.—Louis Jasper Connett was born near Lookout, California, January 13, 1869; died at his residence near Westmond, Idaho, March 10, 1919, of a complication of diseases. Was married twice, his first wife having died a number of years ago. His wife, together with 7 of his 10 children, survive him. United with the church in 1889, being baptized by Thomas Daley. Funeral from the town hall of Westmond, March 12, sermon by S. S. Smith, burial in Westmond Cemetery.

FLANNAGAN.—Hannah Flannagan was born October 3, 1869, at Smethwick, Staffordshire, England. Baptized November 4, 1881, at Birmingham, by H. C. Crump. She was a daughter of Charles F. Tyler, who was president of the Summerfield Branch, Birmingham, for many years. Died February 9, 1919. She has suffered considerably, and a number of complications set in, hastening her death. Three sisters are left to mourn. R. May, Thomas Jones, T. E. Meredith, and E. J. Trapp took part at the burial and memorial services. Interment at Great Malvern. We have lost a devoted member and a good, practical Saint.

FROM HERE AND THERE

NOTICE TO EASTERN PARTIES FOR CONFERENCE

This from Ward L. Christy, 6532 South Hermitage Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, will be of special interest to those coming from around that place to General Conference:

“A special car over the Burlington will leave Chicago at 11 p. m. April 5, on train No. 11, arriving on the 6th, taking passengers for the conference without change, provided we can secure thirty passengers who will take sleeper privileges, or fifty for a through chair car. Notices of your desires should be sent at once to H. P. W. Keir, 6630 South Lincoln Street, Chicago, phone Prospect 7757, so that time may be had for making final arrangements. Nothing is saved by this arrangement, but a more pleasant and convenient passage is secured. State what you prefer and be willing to support what arrangements are made, as it is too late for extensive correspondence. Let all eastern and other conference traffic passing through Chicago support this better means of transportation. Brother Pement and Brother Keir will be glad to look after your interests at this end. Address A. C. Pement, 5217 Koster Avenue, phone McKinley 5717.”

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST

On another page we review an important new book on the above subject which should receive the attention of every student among us. During General Conference our copy will be available for those who wish to look it over. It is our opinion that to be fully informed concerning the conflicting views on such a subject is to be better fitted to present our own views intelligibly to an audience of members and nonmembers.

“THE JUNIOR COLLEGE”

We are pleased to note here that our young Professor Floyd M. McDowell, instructor at Graceland and leader in the boy movement in the church, has recently had his manuscript on “The Junior College” accepted for publication by the United States Bureau of Publication as a bulletin of the department. Commissioner Claxton states that he went through the manuscript with a great deal of interest and considers that it is a very important and valuable piece of work.

Prayers are requested for a young brother who is afflicted, that he may have health and strength through relief from the disease preying on his body, and help from God in overcoming his weaknesses.

Mrs. Ira Humes, of Elk Mills, Maryland, wishes to ask if any of the traveling ministry are passing through or near Harrisville, Ohio, they will call on her sister, Mrs. Harry Shane, as she has recently moved there and wishes to get in touch with the church people. Any Saints living near there are requested to call, and they will receive a warm welcome.

Thomas Jones reports that there has been a great deal of sickness from influenza at Great Malvern, Worcester, England, and a number of deaths. He has had the disease three times this winter.

Our soldiers in Germany or France are requested by Sister Helen Logan, of Box 1231, Tulsa, Oklahoma, to try to get in touch with Private E. E. Stone, American Expeditionary Forces, 96th Company, 6th Marines. She believes the lad would be interested in our work as his mother, who died when he was five years of age, belonged to the church.

IOWANS PAID FOR SAVING

More than $9,000,000 will be paid to the people of Iowa by the United States Government for their thrift during 1918, if the War Savings and Thrift Stamps sold in the State last year are held by buyers until maturity, according to an estimate made at State headquarters of the Iowa War Savings Committee.

This sum, representing the interest on War Savings alone, shows the great importance of aggregate saving in small amounts, and as well, the individual advantage to the person who invests a part of his savings in interest-bearing securities.

The people of Iowa in 1918 bought nearly 47,000,000 Thrift and War Savings Stamps, and it is reasonable to believe the lessons of thrift and saving learned then will result in a far greater amount of sales this year. If this is the case, the Government will be called to pay to the people of the State for their thrift in 1919 probably a good deal more than $10,000,000.

FELLOWSHIP

(A sermon by Elbert A. Smith, delivered at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, March 9, 1919. Mrs. A. Morgan, Reporter.)

THE TWO SPARROWS

The subject I wish to talk about this morning is that of fellowship. It was brought to my attention casually some Sundays ago. One Sunday morning when I was sitting under some trees by a fountain in a little public park, I noticed two sparrows on the ground, and immediately the words of the Master came to my mind, "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing, and yet not one of them shall fall to the ground without your heavenly Father's notice." Immediately the thought came to me that these little creatures that I have noticed so casually were recipients of the notice and care of the great God on high. If one of them falls to the ground injured or ill, the same God-given forces of nature are set at work to heal it that are set at work for you or me, if we fall to the ground injured or ill.

I noticed that these little sparrows when they drank at the fountain lifted their heads as though they might be giving thanks to the same God to whom I look for his bounteous care and blessings. I realized then that there was between us a bond of fellowship. We had the same Creator; we shared the fellowship of joy and of sorrow, the fellowship of peace or of pain.

THE HUMBLER FELLOWSHIP

There is, in fact, a degree of fellowship between man and the lower animals. In one of his stories Kipling tells how the animals first came and attached themselves to man. The dog came first that he might warm himself at the fire, and so became "the first friend." The horse came next, bowed his head to the halter, and became "the first servant." I think that the reason the Uncle Remus stories, and the bedtime stories by Thornton Burgess appeal so to children, and grown-ups as well, is because they touch something that is fundamental, the hereditary racial tie that has bound humanity to the lower animals through ages of mutual experiences.

But in this fellowship the animals can go only so far. They may share with us our physical struggles; they may even share our mental struggles, to a certain extent, but they cannot share with us our moral struggles. They do not realize any difference between right and wrong. But we are, as Satan said we should be, to a certain extent, at least, become as gods, knowing good and evil. Yet we remain lamentably human in that we must every day make the struggle of choice between the two.

It has seemed to me that it would be a fine thing if we could select some day, by the calendar, have one titanic struggle, win victory, and have it over forever; but instead, each day, we must make our choice. Each day temptation presents itself—and on the other hand the appeal to do good. Each day we must fight the battle. The only consolation is that victory becomes progressively easy until victory may become a habit; while of course the reverse is equally true, that defeat may become habitual until our wills are entirely broken.

THE UPWARD STRUGGLE

Then if we would find fellowship in our moral struggles, we must ascend to a higher plane and find it in the fellowship of man and in the fellowship of God. It seems to me, that just as my reflections appeared to be led casually from the observation of those two sparrows that Jesus said received the notice and recognition of God, up to the fellowship of man, so likewise the human race, in its experiences, has pursued a course that superficially might seem casual, from the brutal plane, where the physical was nearly all that was recognized, up to a plane where there was some sort of social unity and intercourse of a spiritual nature.

But that struggle, though it seems casual, has been one of tremendous sacrifice; and then the course upward from our social intercourse, to the point where we can fellowship with God, involves a struggle equally great, including the death and suffering of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ—for we obtain fellowship with God by way of Jesus Christ, his son.

The fellowship of man is a subject of vital importance, and has more, perhaps, than a religious basis, or a theoretical or theological foundation. Doctor Richard Cabot published a book several years ago called, What Men Live By, and in successive chapters in that book he deals with work, and play, and love, and worship. These four are fundamental, and we cannot take away any one of them and have a well-rounded life; but of course the last two mentioned, love and worship, come more directly under the subject that I have selected.

John is in harmony with Cabot where he says, "We know that we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren." That was an indication that he had passed from death unto life. It was a testimony to him, the love he felt in his heart for others. It was more perhaps than an evidence—it was a means of life, and assisted him in passing from the domain of death to the domain of life.

In one of his poems, Markham says:

The crest and crowing of all good,
Life's final star is brotherhood.

And so this struggle, this upward leading, has its final culmination in brotherhood; brotherhood with man; fellowship with Christ.

LIFE MADE TOLERABLE

Just our common friendship is about all that makes life tolerable—the life and fellowship that exists between brothers, father and son, and between husband and wife. The household in which this fellowship has developed between husband and wife and among children and parents certainly is fortunate. In the church, however, this fellowship is sanctified and brought to a higher and holier plane; so that we can truly sing and with the Spirit,

Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love.
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above.

Fellowship is all that makes life worth while. I remember one of the stories I read years ago in Gulliver's travels, by Jonathan Swift, about the "Strulbrugs." I don't know whether you recall it, but this traveler in the realm of imagination visited a strange nation, and while there he was told that occasionally there was an individual born who was immortal—he never would die. Perhaps one or two or three such individuals were born in the course of a generation, possessed of eternal life, called Strulbrugs.

He thought to himself, how exceedingly fortunate these individuals must be, to live forever in this beautiful world with all its attractions and its joys; but when he came in contact with them his ideal was speedily shattered. He found that these men passed through the various changes and periods of life incident to man until they became aged, perhaps ninety years old, with all the infirmities of age fastened upon them, and then they came to a stationary period and forever remained in that condition, their disease neither increasing nor diminishing. But the thing that made their condition most intolerable was that with the passing of the years their parents died, their children passed away, all their friends whose friendship they had cultivated in their younger years, one by one passed from the scene of action. Being in this state they were incapable of forming other friendships, so at last they were left entirely alone, loving no one, loved by no one. This made their condition so almost intolerable that they fain would have died—but they were immortal.

A man who loves no one and is loved by no one does not need to die to go to hell. He is there now. Immortality would be the worst possible punishment that could be inflicted upon such a man.

UNRAVEL YOUR OWN HEART

I remember talking with a man some years ago who had a very wide circle of acquaintances, and I noticed that almost every man that was mentioned in the course of conversation caused this brother to say, "There's another man that thinks a lot of me." I didn't hear him say at any time, "There's a man I think a lot of." It seemed to me he had hold of the wrong string. Sometimes we make a mistake in that way. We cannot all the time pull love towards us as though we were trying to unravel the hearts of the people for our benefit. We must unravel our own hearts. Give our own friendship, and it comes back again a hundred fold, as the Master said.

We do not need to limit our friendship and fellowship, either, to those who are effusive in their demonstrations toward us. Markham has another verse:

He drew a circle that shut me out—
But love and I had the wit to win.
We drew a circle that took him in.

The greatest fellowship is found in our fellowship with Jesus. The sweetest words in the New Testament—at least I think they are the sweetest when I read them—are those that he uttered when he said, "Henceforth I will call you no more servants; I will call you friends." There was to be no longer Master and servant, but Jesus and his followers were to be friends.

EXCEPT YE ARE ONE

Just as he had been united with God and was willing to become one with us, so he said to us, "Except ye are one ye are not mine." These are significant words, and they might be discouraging words to me if it were not for the philosophy that I have propounded in my own mind, that though we may not be one in opinion—which seems almost hopeless under existing circumstances, with our various past experiences and differences of training—though we may not be one in opinion, it is yet possible for us to be one in spirit, one in heart, one in consecrated desire to know the will of God, and knowing it, to do it. If we can only attain to that position, the time eventually will come when we will be one in understanding. The divine condition cannot be obtained instantaneously, but by a period of a process of growth.

In three of his miracles Jesus compares the kingdom of heaven to things that live and grow: The parable of the corn, first the blade and then the ear, then the full corn in the ear. The parable of the mustard seed that grows up and becomes a great plant. The parable of the yeast, that grows and multiplies until it leavens the whole lump.

THE KINGDOM NOT MANUFACTURED

The kingdom of heaven cannot be manufactured. It is a process of growth, and it involves the growth and the action and interaction and reaction upon each other of a multitude of souls. It would seem to be a fine thing if we could take pencil and paper and sit down and draw the plot of Zion and set the masons at work building the houses; and then draft rigid rules of conduct and life, and compel the people to conform to them. In a week's time, or a month, or possibly a year, we could have Zion; but we cannot do that. We have to wait for the growth of ourselves and the people. It is incumbent upon us to bear with the people, with each other, as God bears with us, until finally the kingdom of heaven has time to grow—and the Master says it comes not by "observation," either.

How long did it take Enoch and his people to establish the city of Zion? Not a month or a year, but many years, and after a long period, the trials and vicissitudes of which are not recorded, and are forgotten by us when we simply read of the crowning triumph when they ascended to heaven and were received by the Father. The fellowship of the Saints with each other is the only route by which we can arrive at fellowship with God, because James says to us, "How can a man love God whom he has never seen and hate his brother whom he has seen?" When this love of God comes into our midst it banishes many of the difficulties that otherwise seem insurmountable.

THE INCOMING TIDE

We have sometimes tried to illustrate the love of God and its influence upon the heart of man by the incoming of the tide. Two or three years ago my companion and I were living upon the beach in California where the tide came up at night and almost touched our doorstep. I noticed there would be a great many days in succession, perhaps for a week, when the waves coming in would deposit along the beach all sorts of rubbish and refuse from the ocean: seaweed, barnacles, kelp, and mussel shells—all sorts of stuff would be piled up along the beach.

Then there would come a night when a tremendous tide would come in from the ocean and sweep that beach from end to end, and in the morning when we looked out the sand would be as clean and fresh as on the morning of creation. So, when the pure love of God, in those "times of refreshing" that the apostle speaks of, comes to our hearts, as in our communion services, we will say, it sweeps away all evil passions, the envy and hatred and malice and temptations that have accumulated, and leaves us pure and clean in spirit and in soul. Then we can realize what the Master meant when he said, "The pure in heart shall see God."

LEARNING ZION'S ALPHABET

Sometimes we are discouraged, we feel so insignificant—I presume you have shared with me in this feeling, all of you—when we realize the tremendous difficulties that stand in our pathway in our effort to redeem Zion—the problems that seem beyond human power to solve. I think many of them will be solved in a simpler way than we imagine.

I may perhaps illustrate it in this way: Two or three Sundays ago when I visited Des Moines I had a little conversation with my first teacher, the one who taught me to read, taught me my letters. I felt then and feel now that I am greatly in her debt, and you are, too, to the extent that I may be able to administer to any of your spiritual needs this morning, for the fact that she placed in my hands the key to all English literature in those first few simple yet tedious lessons. Yes, and the key to other literature, if I should care to use it.

The same fundamental principles that she taught me in those early lessons I use every day. By their aid, while then I could read those simple lessons in the primer, I can now read the Sermon on the Mount, the Twenty-third Psalm, the Gettysburg Speech, a treatise on science, or the constitution of the new League of Nations. There is nothing so profound or so exalted that it does not yield its treasure to me when I remember and use those first few fundamental lessons in reading and use the simple letters in the alphabet to spell out the words.

In a like manner I believe that Jesus Christ in the very kindergarten of our religious experience, has taught us many things, that if we will but remember and use will help us solve these problems—and we may not need so many wonderful further revelations as we sometimes feel that we do.

Jesus said, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first great command. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two great commandments hang all the law and the prophets." These are primary lessons that we have been taught for years, but I believe that they will be just as vital and effectual in the school of the prophets as they are to-day in a quorum of deacons—just as effective in Zion as in the most obscure branch. So I take heart of hope, realizing that perhaps if we will but apply the lessons that God has already taught us, all the treasures of Zion and of heaven may yet be within our reach.

AN IMPORTANT ADMONITION

Before I close I would like to leave with you a little parting exhortation or admonition. I do not know what point of merit the sermon may have carried to you, but I do feel that the admonition and exhortation are applicable to the present situation, and ought to be of some force and benefit to the people.

It is reasonable to suppose that in the hastening time, which apparently has come upon the world, as well as upon the church, (when everything that can be shaken will be shaken, and is being shaken, and nations are being destroyed or built in a day) that the church also will have its turmoils, and that Satan will endeavor more strongly to frustrate our work as it draws to its culmination.

President Joseph Smith told us years ago that we would never be led into immoral teaching, as some were in the past. That Satan would make his attack within the church and attempt to disrupt that bond of fellowship that I have been talking about, by the use of suspicion and slander, and all that tends to divide brother from brother. During the past year we have seen some evidence of that, and perhaps in coming years we will see greater evidences.

Now, to the admonition. In the closing verse of section 122, the Lord says: "Let nothing separate you from each other and the work whereunto you have been called." Let nothing destroy this holy bond of fellowship. "The work whereunto you have been called." Every man is called. The Book of Doctrine and Covenants tells that all are called according to the gifts of God unto them, and the work is intrusted to all.

"THESE ARE MY PEOPLE"

In the communion service last Sunday in the lower auditorium there was a testimony borne that I wish all might have heard. It was borne by a sister, well known to you, a daughter of the late President Joseph Smith. It seems that some weeks ago, while in a period of mental distress, because of burdens known to herself better than to us, feeling that perhaps she too might fall, in some way, on account of that which she was called upon to bear, she passed a sleepless night of prayer until nearly morning, at which time she fell asleep and experienced this dream:

She thought she was here in the vicinity of the Stone Church. There were many people around the church, some going in and some going away. And a great many were simply wandering around in an undecided way. On many countenances there was a look of doubt and distress. She then saw she had in her hand a little traveling bag, indicating perhaps, that she, too, was going away. But she looked toward the church and saw those who were going up the steps into the church, and she handed the traveling bag to some one else, saying, "Here, take this! These are my people! My place is with them!" And when she started towards the church the heavens opened and there was a flood of light and glory, and she saw the Father and Son.

This is the thought: We do not know what may be before the church. We do not know! You do not know! As you sit here under the sound of my voice, perhaps feeling secure, firmly grounded in your faith and convictions, you little realize what trials, what false philosophy, what doubts and strife may be brought to overthrow you. We ought to remember the admonition, "Let nothing separate you from each other and the work whereunto you are called," and with this good sister say, "These are my people! My place is with them!"

ELDER DANIEL MACGREGOR IN FLINT

Everyone should read the letter of Elder Daniel Macgregor in this issue, telling of the work at Flint, Michigan, for the recent nine weeks.

This shows what an organized effort can do. Preparation was made beforehand. The matter kept before the church by announcements, and doubtless by prayer. The whole city was placarded with the result that the building was full the first night.

This united effort was not relaxed, but the choir and all the Saints continued their earnest support. Certainly all this would have availed little without the speaker, and his earnest presentation of the truth.

We have here another instance of what loyal, intelligent, local support, with an able representative and speaker, and above all with the support and direction of the Spirit of God, will do.

Some are loath to let their light shine. We see what has been done in Flint by united effort. What have you done? What are you going to do?

A DARKENED MIND

The apostacy of R. C. Evans and his subsequent repudiation of his former testimony in regard to the spiritual confirmation which he received as to the angel's message to Joseph Smith and the latter-day work, including the Book of Mormon, reveals to what extremity a man will go when once he loses the Spirit of God.

Mr. Evans's career in the latter-day work was unique. He espoused the cause when he was but a lad of fifteen years of age. He was then a newsboy. According to his own statement his education was quite limited, yet under the power and blessing of God, and the support and confidence of the church, his defense of the calling and ministry of Joseph Smith and of the gospel as restored to the earth by the hand of an angel has been unique. If Mr. Evans's past testimony is to be believed, he has been instrumental, through the blessing of God, in vindicating the angel's message, in confounding the wise and learned enemies of the church, and converting many to the faith. He claimed that remarkable instances of healing, wonderful manifestations of spiritual power, attended his work as a representative of the latter-day work.

Mr. Evans was ordained to the office of priest when he was seventeen years of age and successively occupied the position of elder, seventy, high priest, apostle, counselor to President Joseph Smith, and bishop.

There is no question but that during a portion of Mr. Evans's ministry in the church he was devoted and consecrated to the church, and during this period he gave of his time and talent to its extension. The fact that the church trusted him and that God blessed his labors is proof of this.

Mr. Evans has borne some very strong and convincing testimonies in regard to the latter-day work. These testimonies cannot be impeached by any denial on his part to-day. Many of them are confirmed, not in the testimony of one man, but of hundreds.

Throughout his ministry Mr. Evans has been given the unselfish love and support of his confreres in church work. His friends have been grieved to know of his withdrawal from the church. Occasionally we meet an individual who feels that the church has not done the square thing by Mr. Evans. I herewith present some recent statements from his tongue and pen. If there should remain some lingering confidence as to his loyalty to this latter-day work, in the mind of any member of the church, I am sure the following quotations will dissipate it.

In a lecture delivered by R. C. Evans at Shea's Theater, Toronto, Canada, Sunday evening, January 26, 1919, he said:

Three great cardinal points have been the destruction of the leading men in every dispensation. Do you want me to give them to you? They are frequently referred to as the world, the flesh, and the Devil. I will give them to you a little plainer. All you have got to do is to read the history of the church and you will find that this is a fact—lust for power and prominence; lust for gold, for wealth, and lust for the opposite sex has been the downfall, that triune enemy has been the downfall of almost every great man that has occupied in this or any other age of the world, high position in the Christian church.

It is quite significant that Mr. Evans, in discussing his departure from the church, took occasion to emphasize the "triune enemy" which has been the downfall of almost every great man as:

"Lust for power and prominence."

"Lust for gold, for wealth."

"Lust for the opposite sex."

Mr. Evans, in order to show that he had been a great man in the church, calls attention to the fact that he had risen from the position of a newsboy, being ordained in the church to the office of priest, elder, seventy, high priest, apostle, counselor to President of the church, Joseph Smith, and bishop, adding:

"I have been honored by the Latter Day Saints' Church as no other minister of that church has been honored."

Mr. Evans thus modestly admits that he has been a great man in the church. Inasmuch as he avers that the "triune enemy" portrayed above has been "the downfall of almost every great man" and inasmuch as he is no longer the great man he once was in the church, and no longer holds either ministry or membership in the church to-day, is it not pertinent to inquire of Mr. Evans if he would have us understand that this "triune enemy" has been the cause of his forfeiture of position and place in the church? If not, then his language is quite unfortunate.

In this lecture Mr. Evans continues:

I want to tell you that I have the best reasons to believe that if it wasn't for the protection of God Almighty and the Union Jack I wouldn't be here to-night. The spirit of murder has gone out against me to such a degree that anything in the world that can cause me trouble is being heaped upon me.

I say again I wouldn't give five cents for my life if God withdrew his protection from me.

I am sure this remark will come as a shock to every friend of Mr. Evans's within the church. It is so unjustifiable and unwarranted! It is so false and groundless! Surely no intelligent man or woman can give any credence to this extravagant statement. It seems incredible that any man should resort to such tactics in order to secure an audience and elicit the sympathy of emotional men and women.

R. C. Evans knows that the men and women whose characters he has sought to traduce and blacken would not harm a hair of his head. By such tactics, however, he would create the impression that the men and women with whom he has been in intimate association for forty-two years, and during which time he claimed they were the best people in the world, have suddenly turned murderers. There should be some law to protect innocent men and women from such insinuations!

The present attitude of Mr. Evans furnishes a key whereby we may understand how men holding a high position in the church in the days of Joseph Smith the Seer and, who for a time were blessed of God, could depart from the faith, and in their darkened condition, misrepresent and slander both the church and its leading representatives.

It is evident that Mr. Evans has sought to traduce the honor and blacken the character of the late President Joseph Smith, whom only a year ago he described as "the best friend I ever had."

The membership throughout the world who have learned to love and respect the life and memory of President Joseph Smith know how groundless is this attack upon his honor and character.

If this is the case in this instance wherein we are fully apprised of the facts, does it not justify the conclusion that it was true in the case of men who left the church during the lifetime of Joseph Smith the Seer?

Mr. Evans continues:

I was ordained a priest, I was ordained an elder, I was ordained a seventy, I was ordained a high priest, I was ordained one of the Twelve Apostles, I was ordained to one of the First Presidency, I was ordained a bishop, and it is admitted by the church, the leading men of the church, that I was ordained the last time under the hand of an angel. . . .

They say I was after the money. Wasn't I in a pretty good condition to get it? There wasn't anything within their grasp that I couldn't have had. . . .

I have been honored by the Latter Day Saint Church as no other minister of that church has been honored. No man living, so far as I know, or dead, has ever preached more than three sermons at a General Conference. Many of them have not preached one, but for years they have selected me to preach from fifteen to twenty-one sermons during the conference. Every night R. C. was on the platform. Every window held my picture. Every fence announced my subject. New bills were out every day telling what R. C. was going to say at night. Did they ever do that with any other man? Never.

The above comment indicated an exaggerated ego. The statement is not true. For several years Mr. Evans did hold meetings in a coliseum in Lamoni at the same time the General Conference was in session. These meetings were conducted as special revival services and in no sense interfered with the conference meetings proper. The citizens of Lamoni will realize how unreliable Mr. Evans's statements are when he says, "Every window held my picture. Every fence announced my subject." The "leading men of the church" have not admitted that he "was ordained the last time under the hand of an angel."

But what if this was all true, does it not tend to show more glaringly his present ingratitude? When a man becomes blinded to his own selfish egotism he becomes ridiculous to normal men and women.

Mr. Evans, in this lecture at Shea's Theater, repudiated the angel's visit to Joseph Smith and made sport of the Book of Mormon. He said:

I want to examine that a little while and tell you why I don't believe it. [Joseph Smith's first vision.] In the first place this little country boy, his biographers state he could scarcely write his name; he knew but mighty little of the rudiments of the school in the little country road, and he asks us to believe that God and Christ, the Majesty of heaven, came into his presence, and with the calmness and serenity of an angel this little country boy speaks up, "Which of all the sects are right?" "I want to know which one to join."

I want you to look at that. Think of it. When God appeared to Moses the very mountain shook, the earth quaked. So great was the power that forty days afterwards when Moses came down even the borrowed light that had been reflected from God upon Moses was so great that the people couldn't look upon Moses and he had to put a veil on his face. Yet this little boy, this country lad of fourteen years, could stand in the presence of the Deity unmoved and say, "Which of all the churches is right? Which one shall I join?" It would be hard work to make any jury believe that.

Another little thing I cannot swallow in it now, and it is this, that God Almighty, the divine Shekinah of the universe, would make a trip all the way from heaven and come down under that tree just to introduce Jesus Christ to Joseph Smith. Why couldn't Jesus Christ come alone? He was just as much a stranger to Joseph as God was. Joseph had never met God before. Here was one stranger introducing another. Why couldn't Jesus make the trip without the Father, but we are asked to believe that God Almighty came all the way from heaven, came down and said, "Joseph, this is Jesus; Jesus, this is Joseph." Now think about that for a minute. Now, that is all he did do. There isn't a word here to indicate that God said anything else. "This is my beloved Son, hear ye him." He made all that trip, came all the way from heaven to just introduce the Christ to Joseph. Don't that sound just a little fishy?

We can read all about the struggles of Luther and Calvin and Knox and Latimer and Ridley, and all the great reformers, all the great men; we can read all about the self-sacrificing men of the Romish church in the different ages, and they all went it alone. God Almighty did not stop business up there and come down and say, "Joseph, permit me to introduce to you my Son." Now look at it for a minute. Just try and take it in.

I know some of you here think this is terrible and I would not have done it five years ago, but I have got eyes to see now and ears to hear. . . . I will tell you this, this vision, this description of that vision was written many years afterwards when he was no longer a child, he was no longer a little country boy, but before that vision was written his lust for gold, his lust for power, his lust for women, was of such a character, that I wouldn't believe him under oath. I don't believe that vision ever occurred as it is stated there. If this is heresy, make the most of it.

The foregoing needs little comment. It points its own moral. When one recalls Mr. Evans in other years reverentially requesting the "privilege of getting a drink from the old well" which was close to "the house where Hyrum Smith once lived"; and that "when alone" he "could not refrain from bowing to offer a silent prayer in the house where once lived this great and good man"; and who received at the hands of the woman who resided in this building "a small stone taken from the well . . . 'of one of the best men that ever lived in Nauvoo'"; and that later he stood by the old "stone well that furnished the water for the baptismal font" of the Temple and "extracted a small stone from the side of the well"; and how, when he visited the once "happy home" of Joseph Smith and while gazing on the pages of the "well marked" "family Bible" he "longed for one page of this sacred book bearing a pencil mark from the hand of the greatest man who has stood upon God's green earth in the nineteenth century," one can but marvel at the transition which has taken place in this man.

When we recount that Mr. Evans in this visit to Nauvoo visited the place where lie the bodies of the martyred dead and remarked that "On the spot marked out as Joseph's tomb I saw a lily growing. I knew nature had planted this emblem of purity there, and I dug it up by the roots"; and when we recall Mr. Evans's remarks that "The roots of that lily remained in my satchel till I reached home May 14, when I planted it in my garden where it grew a foot high that summer," and "I was then directed to Emma's grave, she was the wife of the martyr, and mother of our present prophet. I clipped a twig from a lilac that grew thereon. With a silent prayer that we may be worthy to meet the pure dead that lie here when the Savior comes, we left the place. Oh, Joseph, though I plucked the lonely plant from thy grave, methinks to-day that everyone for whom you spoke a kind word and performed a kind deed to plant one frail sweet flower there, thou wouldst sleep to-night beneath a wilderness of flowers," we can then sense the truth of the statement of Jesus Christ when he said: "If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness."

It is worthy of passing notice that this man who now speaks of Joseph Smith as a "lustful degenerate" and a "murderer" and charges him with a number of unprintable crimes was at one time so enamored of his virtue and honor that in his adulation he made a special trip to "look at the putty in that cavity" through which "went the bullet that laid Hyrum Smith low." It is also a coincidence that this man, who now almost blasphemously attacks the honor and character of Joseph Smith, yet in the "dear, dead years of the past," "opened and looked out of the window from which Joseph fell" and as he "begged a nail from this window, walked out into the yard and stood upon the spot where fell the prophet of God." Another study in psychology.

And why this change? The general church refused to longer permit Mr. Evans to be a law unto himself and, finding that he could not have his own way, gives himself to renunciation of all his past testimony in regard to the latter-day work!

Mr. Evans in his recent pamphlet entitled, "Was Joseph Smith a polygamist?" tries to show that the Reorganized Church is a branch of the Mormons in these words:

Some of the leading men of the Mormon Church, including Joseph Smith, the son of the man in question (and because he was his son he was made President of one branch of the Mormon Church).

He then continues:

The different Mormon churches have each a different method of their own, each denounces the other, but a careful reading will show that the seed of all their systems of female defilement is found in the revelations of the first Prophet, Joseph Smith. They differ in wording, but it reaches the same end, the satisfying of the lust of the men and the assassination of the virtue of their female victims.

I am sure that this passage will cause a wave of righteous indignation throughout the church and the pure and virtuous womanhood of the Reorganization who are so grossly and maliciously slandered will appreciate to what extremities this once spiritual man has gone. Evidently "his reward is sure."

Mr. Evans in his pamphlet "Mormonism or Latter Day Saintism" states:

Mormonism is one religion, while Christianity is quite another. . . . The revelations of Joseph Smith, which both the Utah and the Reorganized Church believe to be the word of God, equal, yes, as I shall show, to be superior to the Bible, as held by the orthodox churches, teach that the Book of Mormon is the new covenant, and that said book is far superior to the Bible, and that Joseph Smith shed his blood to bring forth this new and everlasting covenant for the salvation of the world, but let us refer to the books for proof of this blasphemy. . . . Christ shed his blood to establish the covenant as found in the New Testament. Joseph Smith shed his blood to establish the new covenant as found in the Book of Mormon. The first is called Christianity, the second is called Mormonism.

Mr. Evans has thrown off the mask. His claim that he was withdrawing from the church because of the "autocracy and apostasy of Frederick M. Smith" was subterfuge. The real animus of his apostasy is in evidence. He will not deceive any well-informed Latter Day Saint.

The words and deeds of Mr. Evans will judge him at the last day. We leave the issue to the arbitrations of time. "The mills of the gods grind slowly but they grind exceeding fine." As for us we will continue to uphold the angel's message, to preach the principles of the restored gospel, to uphold the truths contained in the Book of Mormon and to defend the honor and integrity of the church.

WHAT IS BEAUTY?

One writer says that "from the earliest ages of civilized man, beauty has been an inherent part of the human ideal: worshiped in one form or another, according to the mold in which the individual mind was cast. The poet has worshiped beauty in rhythm of words; the musician in rhythm of sound; the artist finds his god of beauty in nature and the human form; while all mankind worships the beauty of woman, and the whole human race loves a beautiful face."

We have often heard the expression that "Beauty is only skin deep." That is true only when narrowly expressed. Beauty is more than "skin deep." A beautiful complexion cannot be had without an abundance of rich blood coursing through the capillaries and veins to tint the skin and make it glow with vigor and life. Without the blood the skin would be lifeless and lacking of beauty.

And yet beauty goes deeper and comprehends vastly more than this. An expressionless eye in effect destroys an otherwise beautiful face, and we often hear the expression that "the eye is the window of the soul." As the beauty of the face depends largely on the brightness and expression of the eye, so then beauty comes from the depths of the soul and beauty in the full sense is more than "skin deep."

Of beauty Webster says: "By an easy transition, the word beauty is used to express what is pleasing to the other senses, or to the understanding. Thus we say, the beauty of a thought, of a remark, of sound, etc." Another definition given is: "An assemblage of graces, or an assemblage of properties in the form of the person, or any other object which pleases the eye."

Real beauty in a person is dependent on character. Actions enhance or detract in beauty according as they may be good or bad. The Apostle Peter in 1 Peter 4: 8 says that "charity shall cover the multitude of sins," so good actions cover a multitude of bodily defects.

We often used to hear the expression, "Handsome is as handsome does." It is said of Abraham Lincoln that he was a very homely man. I cannot see his homeliness. When I look at his picture my eyes seem to penetrate deep into his great soul and I see not the contour of his face. I see eyes full of compassion and love, a mouth that spoke golden truths for the good of all generations after him. When I look at his picture my mind instantly goes to his life and what he did for his people. His beautiful character made his face beautiful to me.

A few years ago I was on a street car in Independence when near the post office a young woman of handsome features boarded the car. She had a gentleman escort with her who ascended the steps of the car to bid her good-by. Standing on the steps they hugged and kissed longer than the conductor thought necessary, and not wanting to hold the car any longer he said, "Oh, cut that out." The young woman turned loose on the conductor. Never in my life have I heard such vile language come from the lips of any man as was used by that young woman, and I have seen some pretty rough men, too. Profanity flowed from her tongue like an avalanche, and she called him everything that was vile, vulgar, and mean.

Instantly the beauty of that young woman faded away before my eyes. She was beautiful no more in my thought, and as she stepped back off the car my eyes beheld a different woman to what they beheld when she got on. Her beauty certainly was not the "beauty of holiness" mentioned by the Psalmist in the 29th and the 96th Psalms, nor the "perfection of beauty" spoken of in the 50th Psalm. Her beauty was the kind spoken of in Proverbs 31: 30—vanity.

In Isaiah 52 the Lord through the prophet said: "Put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city." Beautiful here means righteousness, so righteousness is one definition of beauty.

There are men as well as women who do not have features delineated according to the artist's model, nor a skin of peach-like complexion. Their features may be irregular and their skin sallow, but their lips have an ever-ready smile and their tongues are ever ready to speak words of comfort and cheer to those around them. Their eyes express compassion and no frown is seen on their foreheads. They may lack beauty. They may be homely, but they do not seem so.

If the late W. W. Blair had homely features I never saw them. I could not have seen him as homely, even if he had been, because of his beautiful demeanor. A sweet smile and a salute he had for every one, whether it was a little child or a gray-haired sage, rich or poor. To me he was a beautiful man because of his beautiful actions. He was one of a number of men in the church whom I loved because he and they were lovable. When I have seen him come home after an absence, perhaps on a mission, and kiss his grown up and married sons I have thought, what a blessed meeting of father and sons. I am sure that to the sons he was beautiful.

Then what is beauty? The lily of the valley is beautiful. "Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these," said the Master. Why? There is nothing connected with the lily to offset its beauty. There is beauty in both flower and foliage and no thorns, thistles, or anything to detract from its beauty. The beauty that surrounded Solomon was marred by his life and his surroundings.

Who Knows His Nose?

In considering the ear, nose, and throat from the viewpoint of the laity, we must remember that we are dealing with a very highly specialized group of organs, organs that must be handled with a great deal of delicacy, and only by those who are intimately acquainted with the proper functioning and physiology of these parts.

In times past men of the medical profession were prone to treat all parts of the human body and all ailments. Then came the era of specialization, and the first great group of specialists dealt with the eye, ear, nose, and throat. This opened such a tremendous field of study that it was soon recognized that even one man devoting his entire energies could not hope to master all four of these organs. So at the present time men devote their entire attention to either the eye, or to the other branch, the ear, nose, and throat.

It has often been thought by the laity that these four organs depend one upon the other. This is not true in every sense of the word, but there is a very intimate relationship between the eye and the nose, the nose and the throat, and the nose, throat, and ear.

The fundamental law emphasizing the delicacy of the ear was laid down some years ago by one of our foremost aurists, who declared that a patient should never place anything in the ear smaller than the thumb.

We consider the nose the uppermost part of the respiratory tract. It serves two functions. First, that of warming, moistening, and purifying the air as it passes through the nose on its way to the lungs. This is vitally necessary so that the incoming air will not strike the delicate lung tissue in a raw and uncleaned condition. It also serves a second purpose, which we may divide into two parts. First, the special sense of smell. The sense of smell is peculiar: the nose has this power through small nerve ends which come through the floor of the brain to end in the lining at the roof of the nose. An odor is brought to life by the volatilization of some oil, or evaporation of chemicals, or gas in the atmosphere. The air submits this to the nerve ends above mentioned, and from there it is reported to the brain. The second function of the nose in this group is that of speech or sound. The nose is the sounding-board of the human body, so that when a person has a blockage of the nose, we are very prone to misstate the condition, and say that the person is speaking through his nose, when, in fact, just the opposite is true. He is not speaking through his nose. Try this by closing your nose and talking. This function of sounding-board is performed by a series of openings and cavities in the bones that form the internal structure of the nose. These cavities of the bone are called the nasal sinuses. They are four in number. One group lies between the eye and the nose, another far back between the brain and the nose, one just above the eye, and one just below the eye. The functions of these holes or sinuses, besides the above-mentioned, are to evenly distribute the inspired air over these nerve ends of smell, and to lighten the bones of the skull in order that proper balance may be maintained. They also act as an adjunct to respiration, inasmuch as they help to moisten the inspired air.

Perhaps the greatest trouble that the human being has fallen heir to in this region is an obstruction to the nose. The nose is divided into two parts by a bony partition called the septum, which is covered with a lining called the mucous membrane. During early childhood when the bones are delicate and this partition is growing, it is very easily broken or caused to grow to one side or the other. This condition is called a deflection of the septum. It causes an increased air space on one side and a lessened air space on the other.

Examining the nose internally, we find three bones running from front to back, called the turbinates. These three bones on each side of the nose are what we may say the vital part of the organ. They contain the glands that moisten the nose and the air, the blood supply which warms the air, and the little hair-like projections that whip constantly back and forth to purify the air. In cold weather these turbinates swell with blood so that there will be an increase of warm fluid to help decrease the temperature of the air, and correspondingly shrink in summer. So you see that anything causing a lack of functioning of these bones is a very serious menace to the patient's health.

When we have a deflected septum to one side or the other, the side that has the largest opening has a corresponding increase in size of the turbinate, showing nature's effort to take care of the increased volume of air coming in at this point. If this condition continues over a length of time, this turbinate, through constant congestion, stays large, and gradually becomes strangulated from an excess of blood, so that an obstruction on both sides of the nose results. This condition leads to so-called catarrh; that is, the turbinates become tremendous in size, with an excess amount of blood, causing an over-secretion of mucus, since the mucus glands are situated in the turbinates. This is, by far, the most common form of the so-called catarrhal conditions of the nose. The term catarrh does not mean a disease, but comes from two Greek words meaning "to drop down," and, as applied to the nose, means a dropping down of mucus. The treatment of this condition, as applied here, is obvious. The use of nasal douches, sprays, medicinals, etc., is safe only in the hands of a doctor, and then it is only temporizing with a condition such treatment can never cure. If we remove the cause of this condition, by straightening the septum through a simple operation, and restore the turbinate to its normal shape, we have not only removed the catarrh, which in itself is disagreeable, but we have corrected the breathing space. We find many other conditions, but none so common as the above.

Among other conditions is that of a chronic infection of the nose due to repeated head-colds, or repeated infections of any sort. The infections in the cases gradually destroy the lining of the cavities before described, called the sinuses. These become more or less dead with the formation of pus, and pain appears. This is a very common cause of headache above the eyes, and in the back of the head, or over various parts of the face. About fifty per cent of all chronic headaches can be traced to certain nasal conditions, such as deflected septum or infection of the sinuses. It is useless to temporize with the condition by means of local treatment; we must remove the diseased tissue, and then, if necessary, treat.

Infection of the antrum of Highmore, which lies below the eye to the side of the nose and above the teeth, frequently follows from an abscess in the root of one of the teeth of the upper jaw. It is more or less a crime to remove one of the turbinates. It should never be done except as a last resort, for it causes a very disagreeable chain of trouble. Among these we find an excessive dryness of the nose and throat, with a crust formation. A few years ago, when the medical profession was learning the specializing of the nose, many turbinates were sacrificed. The operation is performed very often in the present day. A most frequent and disagreeable condition following is that of common head-colds. This is due to an infection, and sometimes offers very severe complications.

By proper hygiene, a normal nose, proper diet, sufficient exercise, well-ventilated rooms, sleeping porches, and a clean intestine, we may be relatively free from colds at all times. In other words, when the resistance of the body is lowered by improper living, we are subjected to any infection that may be flying around, and, because of the weakened body, this infection easily takes hold. The head-cold is a common infection which is scattered by promiscuous coughing, sneezing, and spitting. Always remember that a cold is contagious, especially so to those who overindulge. The home treatment of a cold consists first in elimination, a brisk cathartic, proper food, and a minimum amount of drugs. The vicious habit of snuffing salt water from the hands into the nose has caused more destruction of the ears than one would imagine.

Asthma is very frequently caused by a condition known as nasal polyps. These polyps are small tumors which spring from a diseased lining of the sinuses and nose. A poison is given off which is absorbed through the body. Polyps also cause a severe discharge from the nose, and extreme nasal blockage. Their cure is by means of their removal. They do not return if the base has been removed with the main polyps, but if they are simply snared out, or pulled out, they will return very quickly.

Certain eye conditions causing blindness may be traced to the nose. Certain forms of deafness also may be traced to the nose. A large majority of mouth-breathers breathe through their mouth because the nose is obstructed. Adenoids are not in the nose as is commonly supposed. One must be very careful in blowing the nose, as great damage may be done to the ears. There is a tube which reaches from the throat, behind the nose, called the Eustachian tube, which goes to the ear. Forcible blowing of the nose may force infection up this tube into the ear, causing an abscess of the ear, with many dire results. The proper way to blow the nose is to blow both sides at once, with the handkerchief held loosely in front of the nose, and no pressure exerted on the nose itself by the hand.

Never, under any circumstances, wash out the nose of a child. This very frequently causes an abscess of the ear. If you must put something in the child's nose, let it be a drop or two of pure olive oil. It is always best to see a doctor. If a child has constant discharge of the nose, or if it has difficulty in breathing through the nose, it is beyond simple home remedies, and demands expert attention. The safest plan regarding your nose, or that of your child, is to remember that anything that you may do yourself without advice is probably the wrong thing. Consult a doctor, and preferably a specialist, if possible.

In the light of the present knowledge, the mouth plays a very important role in personal health. We have found that neglected teeth cause more damage to other parts of the human body than any other single cause. A tooth may look and feel perfectly normal, but may have, lurking at its roots, a mass of infection which, when absorbed through the body, may cause rheumatism, kidney trouble, neuralgia, headaches, certain eye conditions, pain in the ear, and neuritis. Do not neglect your teeth. Consult a good dentist at least twice a year, whether you think it necessary or not.

Everybody has tonsils. Every child has adenoids. Adenoids are simply a mass of tonsil tissue normally found behind the nose and above the soft palate. It is only when the adenoid tissue becomes enlarged or diseased that it must be removed. The same is true of the tonsils. The sooner the tonsils and adenoids are removed when causing trouble, the better for your health. A diseased tonsil may give rise to any of the things enumerated above under the paragraph about the teeth. It is useless to treat a chronic diseased tonsil except in acute infected conditions such as acute sore throat. It is always far better to have them removed, which should only be done when they are not acutely inflamed. Do not believe anybody who tells you that he can treat a tonsil and cause it to disappear. Nor can adenoids be treated and caused to disappear. Adenoids and tonsils when properly removed do not reoccur except in special cases.

Acute tonsillitis is a disease that lasts from three to ten days. Rest in bed, a good cathartic, hot gargles, and ice applied to the throat may relieve the condition. Repeated attacks of sore throat should be an indication for the removal of the tonsils.

A child that is a mouth-breather because of adenoids should have them removed at once, the sooner the better. The adenoids swell, drop down, blocking the posterior opening of the nose so that it is impossible to breathe through the nose. This gradually affects the eyes and ears. It affects the ears by shutting off the supply to the ear by partially closing the Eustachian tube. It affects the mentality of the child, who does poor work in school for this reason. If he cannot breathe properly his body cannot functionate properly in any particular. If he cannot hear properly he misses a great deal of instruction and guidance. He uses a great part of his energy in straining to grasp words. When the ears are partially blocked, the eyes try to come to the rescue. Have you ever noticed how intently a person who is hard of hearing watched your lips? Children unconsciously do this thereby adding to the strain on the eyes. In time this produces weakness of that organ. Very frequently, too, infection of the kidneys results from diseased tonsils. So you see that nasal obstruction has more far-reaching effects than mere mouth-breathing. It is not fair to a child to allow this condition to become permanent. Many children have died from infections starting in either the teeth or the tonsils.

The ear serves two functions, first, that of hearing, and second, that of controlling the equilibrium of the body. The hearing is performed as follows: Sound, by means of sound waves, reaches the ear, passes through the canal of the ear to the drum; from there through the little bones of the ear it reaches the nerve of hearing, which is placed in the internal ear within the brain cavity. That part of the ear which controls the equilibrium is also within the brain cavity in the internal ear. Ninety-six per cent of all abscesses of the ear come from diseased conditions of the nose and throat, infection therefrom traveling up through the Eustachian tube into the ear. Frequent with these nose and throat conditions are enlarged tonsils and adenoids. The greatest prophylaxis and preventive for ear diseases and deafness is therefore a clean, normal nose and throat. By abscesses of the ear we mean the gathering of infection behind the ear drum. This is very frequent in children, and leads to serious complications, such as deafness, infection of the mastoid bone, and many undesirable brain conditions. A discharging ear should never be neglected, as it may be very serious. This condition is so serious that life insurance companies, and even the United States Army, will not accept a man so afflicted. One should never place foreign substances such as sweet oil and things of that nature in the ear. They can do no good, and many times a tremendous amount of damage is caused. Contrary to the treatment of the nose, the douching of the ear with sterile water is excellent. A pain in the ear is nature's warning, and should be sufficient for one to consult a doctor immediately. Never neglect your ears, they are delicate, easily destroyed, and hard to cure.

In conclusion, remember that small ailments have often a very serious ending; so do not neglect even a head cold. Most diseases of the ear, nose, and throat are easily cured if taken in time. Mastoid disease, which is so often fatal, can always be cured if taken soon enough. A discharging ear is a sleeping volcano, ready to erupt and destroy life at any time, usually through the mastoid bone behind the ear. A mastoid operation is not dangerous in the hands of a capable man, and should not be dreaded. A tonsil that is diseased and giving trouble is better out than in. It will add years to your life if removed soon enough.

Take things in time! "A stitch in time saves nine!"

When, What, and Whom

The "where" is, of course, Lamoni, during the Annual Conference, but we are glad to be able to tell you to-day, a little of the "what," the "when," and the "whom."

The first thing to fix in mind is the opening session of our Auxiliary. This will take place in the lower auditorium at eight o'clock Monday morning, April 7. Sister Krahl, our president, will address us on "Retrospective and forward," followed by our Honorary President Sister Frederick M. Smith, in a report on the activities of the Woman's Building committee. Business follows, until 10.30, when, in the upper auditorium, we will be addressed by President Frederick M. Smith. He will be followed by a discussion of the general policies of the Woman's Auxiliary, led by Sister F. M. Smith.

The busy first day of our convening as organized factors in the church work will close with a meeting in the evening, devoted to the interests of the young people of the church. Mrs. J. A. Gardner, our general secretary, will talk of "Organized Girlhood"; Sister Grace Thompson will tell of the Oriole work and that of the Temple Builders; and Brother Floyd McDowell, of Graceland College, director of the boy movement of the church, will tell of what has been done and what is being planned, in that department. Sister Nelle Atkinson Kelley of Omaha will sing, as well as the conference choir.

"Better homes through concerted action," is the topic upon which Brother Max Carmichael, superintendent of schools in Lamoni, will speak at the eight o'clock hour next morning. The discussion which will follow will be in the interests of the Home and Child Welfare work.

At 10.30 the same forenoon, Sister Mabel Knipschild Smith will talk on social service, and there will be an exhibit of panels arranged by the National Child Welfare Association. Wednesday morning at 8, a report of the Coordinating Committee will be followed by new business, recommendations, etc.

Thursday morning at 8 Sister William Madison, second vice president, will tell of the ways in which the studies of psychology and sociology may be made applicable in the practical demonstration of our lives. Sister Madison will be followed on the same subject by Sister Louise Evans of Michigan, one of our live wire organizers. Then the sisters will all unite in a general round table discussion of the educational feature of our work. That evening at 7.45, at the coliseum, a film furnished by the Iowa State College will be shown. It is a four part biological film, telling the story of how new plants and animals come into existence. At nine o'clock the same evening, at the high school building, an informal reception will be held, at which we hope to meet every woman attending conference. This will give the sisters from a distance an opportunity to get acquainted with officers of the Auxiliary, as well as others, whom they may be meeting for the first time.

Friday morning, Sister Rosa Tier of London, Ontario, will talk of the value of close cooperation between the pastor and the Woman's Auxiliary. A round table discussion on relief and service work will follow, led by Sister Mabel Knipschild Smith. There will also be a general discussion of the problems confronting organizers. This will be a splendid time and place to air your troubles, pass on your good ideas, and absorb many helpful thoughts and suggestions.

Round table discussion of the Temple Builders and Oriole girls will be had on Saturday morning at 8, led by Sister Thompson, assisted by Sister Wave Monroe. This will be followed by business, including the ratification of appointments made by the new executive.

Some slight variation may occur from the above program as we have presented it to you, but this will serve to give you an idea of some of the splendid things which are to be offered to you this year. Keep yourselves informed of the meetings of the women, and resolve to miss none of them. Come to the table, eat and be filled. Bring your note books and pencils along, that you may carry many helpful thoughts back to the sisters at home.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

The Bishopric Advocate for 1919

"Every Member a Tithe Payer"

---

Do you plan on spending all you earn or do you try to save all you can in order that you may be a liberal tithe payer and thus support the work of God?

What was God's purpose in giving the financial law? He must have had a reason. We cannot charge him with dealing in nonessentials. Giving is God's antidote for selfishness. We could not be perfect without getting rid of selfishness. I am glad he gave the law.

Ministers' Short Course Suggested

The latter-day work has passed the stage where a suggestion for intellectual as well as spiritual preparation might be generally regarded as a far cry from a solitary place. The ministry of the restoration are apprehending more clearly the fact that they are chosen to become teachers to the world.

The revelations to the church indicate our unusual opportunities for excellency in every branch of human knowledge. Keys have been given us that will unlock the great treasures of wisdom that surround us. The keys are in our hands and we may keep the treasures locked or open them to the profit of ourselves and others. Other treasures have already been opened and left exposed to view, freely offered to the passers-by. Shall we not from them enrich our minds as we pass on to the unity of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man?

Yet aimless, solitary wandering in the fertile fields of truths will never bring us to the unity of knowledge; nor will unsystematic gathering ever accumulate an available wealth of wisdom. Systematic methods of progression and a definite goal are essentials. Consequently, I am emboldened to make the abrupt suggestion that we establish a "Ministers' Short Course."

Short courses conducted for the benefit of farmers, teachers, and others who cannot avail themselves of the regular courses have become an important feature of the work of various higher educational institutions. The idea is even finding favor with the ministry of several religious denominations. A few weeks ago I had the interesting and profitable experience of attending the classes of a ministers' short course lasting one week at Penn College, Oskaloosa, Iowa. The program of that week with about thirty ministers of the Society of Friends offered a suggestion from which I have worked out a program suited to the needs of our own ministry. For the sake of clearness, for the stimulation of thought, and offering opportunity for revision and adaptation, I present this program in concrete form.

Let the short course be held, say, the week following General Conference, at Lamoni, with the instructors of Grace-land College available for some of the classes. Let there be seven lesson periods per day from Monday to Friday, as follows:

8 to 8.50 a. m.—Homiletics. Lessons on sermon material, arrangement, presentation, purpose, theme, etc.

9 to 9.50—Methods. Systematic visiting, branch finances, advertising, records of membership and prospects, evangelism.

10 to 10.50—Bible History.

11 to 11.50—Devotional. For ministerial testimony, prayer, and the seeking of knowledge from the Lord by faith.

2 to 2.50—Psychology. James's Shorter Course in Psychology is an excellent textbook for this purpose.

3 to 3.50—Public Speaking. Lessons on voice training, gesture, scripture reading, emotional control, appearance.

4 to 4.50—Directed Recreation. Lessons on physical efficiency, games, gymnasium work.

These subjects should be handled by instructors with special qualifications for their particular lines of work. In addition evening lectures may be given on various topics. Many other subjects may be substituted or added, as church history, astronomy, sociology, economics, Sunday school methods, English composition and rhetoric, world history.

Lest this article become too long, we omit suggesting textbooks for the various subjects, though many excellent ones are in print and could be adapted to our needs until we have more suitable texts written by our own people.

This course may be modified to cover a shorter or longer period. It may be adapted to accommodate the circumstances of reunions, or week-end conferences where the priesthood of one or more stakes or districts may meet Saturday and Sunday for mutual profit. Quorums also may make use of a similar program for institute sessions. And we may further indulge the hope that the faithful use of our privileges along these lines might lead eventually to the establishment of the "school of the prophets."

Successful Work at Flint, Michigan

Well, Flint struck fire all right, and it just seemed that the more water one poured on it the fiercer it burned.

Flint, Michigan, is a hustling city of a hundred thousand—automobile makers—and for ginger, push, and progress, I'll stack it up against any town I've ever been in. The people are up-to-date, hard workers, and big money makers; just the kind of a people to push our work amongst, for after all, it is only the energetic and successful, that make good Latter Day Saints.

Several years ago it was my privilege to occupy over Sunday in this pushing place, and since then I've always had a "hankering" to return. About a year ago, that hankering took definite form in that the Saints of Flint began to entreat the powers that be to send the undersigned to their smiling town, and the undersigned also began a pleading to let him go.

Last November everything ship-shaped to square away for the biggest campaign ever pulled off by our people in this power-wagon town.

A hundred dollars was collected and salted down, which only the grim necessities of missionary militarism might command. Now and again a letter from ye scribe, to the branch, through its accredited directors, Matt and Ralph, served to stimulate, while the incessant talk from the stand about what was coming helped to get the "pot a b'ilin'."

Upon reaching the old town in the middle of January, I found everything ready for the grand assault and on January 19, "over the top" we went.

It was a full house, packed to the doors, and everything augured well. Doubtless the strangers must have been peculiarly impressed as upon every side, nailed to the wall, placards displaying the following, greeted their wondering, if not amused vision: "Latter Day Saintism is the biggest thing on earth; what are you going to do about it?" "The citizens of Flint will hold every Latter Day Saint responsible for how he delivers the testimony of the truth." These and many other pungent paragraphs served to show that the Saints were afire, consumed with the message they believed, and meant to send home the most majestic message that ever fell from mortal tongue.

Well, the doings were on. Dan was there with his charts and everything bowled briskly.

As for the length of the discourse—that depended on the speaker. Sometimes it lasted an hour and a half, and sometimes two hours, but never under an hour. Everybody was out to win, and this thing of thirty-minute talks is all balderdash when you've got a message to deliver to lost and dying souls.

The attendance was good; indeed our capacious church was simply packed, aisles and all, every Sunday night. During the week it was comfortably filled.

One of the mightiest forces contributing to the success of the campaign, was the splendid work of the choir, under the management of Sister Belleisle. The singing was not of that voice displaying kind, rather of that soul-reaching, God-praising brand, which opened the heart of the sinner and the sorrowing, to the angel message of the minister. Every evening the choir had its little prayer before performing its part and unison was the grand controlling crescendo of every occasion.

For several weeks the meetings went on, attendance good, and the Spirit prevailing. As yet there was nothing doing in the washing line. But presently the break came. A sister from a near-by town visiting the city over Sunday arose at our Sunday morning meeting and testified that she saw five fine fish flow in from a river and they were ours, and that there were many more waiting to be caught. Well, we had announcements out for a baptism of three for that day, but by the time the baptismal service was on, the five were there.

Now commenced the supplementary work of God among the people. His Spirit manifest in dreams began an agitation, until presently a Mr. Fraser who had been attending our services remarked to his newly baptized wife, "Between you and God and Mr. Macgregor you are giving me a h—l of a time." Well, it wasn't long until his temperate moderated in the cool clear waters of baptism.

Another man had a dream of seeing the earth heaving like billows and a big black arm reached out to get him. "Oh, no," said the baptized brother, "I want to go to God," and he went. Another saw himself between two lakes, the one of fire and the other of water. He had to go toward one or the other and in his distress he awoke and took the water route.

By this time the creedal chains of centuries were clanking. The old gospel ship was about to move, and everybody realized they must get aboard.

Your writer also received some instruction in dream. He saw himself in association with the Saints, busied cutting down a bunch of trees. We had been working at it a long time with apparently no results. The trees were still standing. Presently there was a crash, and down that forest came. Upon examining the stumps, I discovered that we had been cutting all around the trees instead of sawing through from one side; thus we had worked on every tree until all were ready to topple over.

And so it was. They came by four and five—by eight and ten, until at last fifty-five precious souls were brought into Christ through the waters of baptism.

What a time of rejoicing! It is said that the angels of God rejoice over a soul that returneth, and surely their joy was reflected upon us.

It was rather remarkable that nearly all of those baptized were adults, perhaps not more than three or four being children. It was also noticeable that a very large percentage of the candidates were men.

From this we gather that the time has come when our work will command a more intense consideration from the men of the world.

It would be impossible for me to mention the host of helping ones who, throughout the long campaign of nine weeks, stood by us loyally, assisting by tract and testimony, by song and service, by life and labor, to lift high the ensign, and cry aloud the tidings of salvation. Suffice it to say their names are legion and their labors are recorded in that book of unfailling memory. It may, however, be permissible for me to say that the unstinted generosity of Brother Popplewell, in scattering abroad with lavish hand volumes of gospel literature, and that from an uncomplaining purse, will not lose its reward. Nor shall we forget the home-like hospitality of Brother Harder and his amiable companion, of Brother and Sister Ward, and of Big Chief McBride, and his noble lady.

May God continue to remember Flint.

DANIEL MACGREGOR.

To think about one's body or one's soul, to love with one's body or one's soul, is to paralyze the best activities of both. The foreground of consciousness should never be littered up with such fragments of a dismembered self. We want to devote the whole of ourselves to our job, to our family and friends, to nature, to play, to beauty, and to God.—Richard C. Cabot, in What Men Live By.

Carping

It is unfortunate that both by pen and voice there is so much carping indulged. One peruses the HERALD and reads of the "old" finding fault with the young as to education, or even from the pulpit hears a dig at these old for not giving the young a chance, while there is, on the other hand, the older ones finding fault with the young for their many shortcomings. Too bad that such should exist.

Just when did it become a virtue for the young to find fault with the old and a crime for the old to indulge a like attitude toward the young, or vice versa?

"But," says one, "the old are opposed to education!"

Since when? What is the meaning of this spending of thousands of dollars annually by the parents for the education of their children if so opposed? May it not be possible that you are judging the "old" indiscriminately because you have heard some talk against it? Is it not also possible that their definition of education and yours might differ and that it is your definition and not the thing itself that they oppose? I quite well remember how that as a young man I thought book learning was education! May the young not still be indulging the same false idea? If so then it is small wonder that you find opposition among the old. What is education? Is it not the development of the mental, physical, moral, and spiritual in one into that complete harmony of all the parts into a completed whole that finds a Christ correspondence? Or had you thought that mental attainment even to the exclusion of the other facts of your nature is "education"? If so you are very far short in your definition. Some of the worst of criminals that prey upon society have yet reached the apex of mental heights! Would you call such educated? Time to stop carping, and more especially so the indiscriminate kind. The "kickers" at whom one strikes are few in either camp as compared to the many. Why notice them at all?

Order of Enoch in Idaho

I have not written to the HERALD for several years because I did not feel that I had anything to write about of sufficient interest to be worthy of note. Of late, however, a few things have occurred which I believe a few Saints, at least, will be interested in, especially those of the Northwest, and others throughout the church who are interested in the financial arm of the church and the gathering.

One year ago last summer, while farming at Palouse, Washington, I was impressed by the Spirit to go to Culdesac, Idaho, which I did the following October, accompanied by my brother Frank, who is now in France.

Upon our arrival here, we were met by a number of good Saints of Palouse acquaintance, who had moved here the year previous. These were Elders W. T. Yates and V. L. Gunter, and families; also Brother W. H. Taylor, our companion and fellow traveler over mountains and plains, through valleys and forests, seeking and finding employment, from the Gallitan Valley (known as the Empire Valley of Montana) to the pine and fir forests of the western slope, until I began farming. Frank went back to Independence, and Brother Taylor forsook me, finding a more suitable companion among the fairer sex, Sister Maud Olney.

Under the leadership of Brother Yates, the priesthood were studying parliamentary law. Soon after my arrival, however, we began studying the financial law of the church, which we have continued to do as occasion would permit, the good Spirit attending.

I was fortunate in having with me considerable data given to the members of the Doctrine and Covenants class of the Lamoni Sunday school, by our teachers Bishops A. Carmichael and Joseph Roberts, while I was attending Graceland during the term of 1914-15. We have referred to these texts considerably in our studies.

As time went on, several of us became more and more interested till we decided to organize an Order of Enoch here, if there were no legal objections. The Presiding Bishop, Brother McGuire, encouraged us in our work, not objecting to our organizing, so on November 24, 1918, the following brethren, V. L. Gunter, P. F. Klaus, W. F. Yates, and myself organized a charter organization of the United Order of Enoch, signing the following bond and covenant:

"I do hereby agree with a bond and covenant that cannot be broken, except by transgression, to pay annually to the United Order of Enoch all my surplus property of all such holdings of value as shall be in my possession after my needs and just wants are supplied and such tithing paid into the church as the law requires.

"This bond is to continue through the length of my days, to be a blessing to my house and all the house of Israel who obey this covenant, to establish Israel, to raise her walls never more to be thrown down, to prepare a people, a peculiar people, righteous unto the Lord, to move the cause of Zion and be a standard between the righteous and the wicked, by which all may know whom we serve.

"Signed by .....

"Witnessed by .....

"President United Order of Enoch.

"Witnessed by .....

"Secretary United Order of Enoch."

(See Doctrine and Covenants 77: 2; 81: 4; 101: 9). In reading section 51, we observed that the Lord intended that these organizations should be formed in other places than Zion, and in all churches.

In entering this work, we realized that we must bid farewell forever to the lustful stores of mammon, seeking wealth only for the common good of mankind. May God bless the effort, that we may be Zion indeed, the pure in heart, seeking only to bless, strengthen, and comfort.

At first mention of this organization some feared we were trying to establish Zion out here, moving her out of place, but we assured them we were only trying to do as the Lord had said, getting ourselves into a condition to be a real help in building up Zion, when he should command us to go to that promised land, as stated in Doctrine and Covenants 51: 4.

We notice a desire on the part of many Saints to gather together, so they can stand in holy places and thus claim the Lord's promise of protection.

Testimonies are given by a number of Saints that this will be a gathering place of many Saints throughout the Northwest, preparatory to moving to Independence, Missouri, at any rate we see the clouds portentous of evil days to come, and are desirous of living more closely together where we can mingle our songs and prayers in saintly communion, and ask in humble petition the loving care and guiding hand of our Father who reigns above.

Since organizing, two more have joined our ranks, Brethren Mark Newby and Clarence Butler. The Spirit abundantly bore witness to several present when their names were presented for membership that these brethren were worthy to unite with this holy order. It is our object to keep in close touch with our heavenly leader.

We have a storehouse established, and our agent, Brother Peter F. Klaus, is able to buy at wholesale prices, which is a great help to us. We all consecrate as our financial circumstances permit, no one reserving more than his needs and just wants require, and no one consecrating what he justly needs. (Section 42: 8-10; 18: 5; 51: 1.) After these consecrations are made, all have equal claim on the storehouse for their needs and just wants. (Section 10: 12; 81: 4.) The worthy poor and needy receive without money, and without price. (2 Corinthians 8: 11-15; Doctrine and Covenants 101: 12.)

Our work has brought an increased feeling of brotherhood, because in this order our avowed affections are verified by our actions. So when we see a brother coming, we feel to say, Here comes one who has contracted with a willing mind and heart to labor for me as he does for himself, and I have the sweet joy of knowing that he knows I have done the same for him.

May God hasten the day when all will be willing to bond themselves in this celestial tie of brotherhood. Then shall Zion be the habitation of the righteous and be a uniting place for the angel throng who shall descend with our Lord when he comes to make up his jewels.

If the editor will give space for this, we will try again, giving details of our work and progress from time to time.

To the Saints, I will say this letter is not written with the intention of causing any one to rush to this place, for the gathering in all places should not be done in haste nor without consulting with the elders, that all things may be prepared before them. (Doctrine and Covenants 98: 5-9, 10; 58: 12.)

In regard to the Saints gathering in various places preparatory to moving to Zion, I will pass along the suggestion Bishop McGuire made me—read carefully section 51 of the Doctrine and Covenants.

Your brother in the gospel,

O. D. SHIRK.

NEBO, ILLINOIS, March 10, 1919.

Editors Herald: On the front page of The Illinois Baptist for March 8, in an editorial by Doctor Throckmorton, is a new idea—or at least, it is new to me. Here it is:

"They say the best way to fight Mormonism as a menace is for the evangelical denominations to practice tithing."

The doctor does not say who the "they say" is, nor does he say how many of the evangelical denominations have adopted this anti-Mormon weapon, or who first originated it.

It is a well-known fact that the teaching and practice of paying tithing is and has been a peculiarly Latter Day Saint doctrine. Now, one of the leading representatives of one of the leading evangelical denominations voices a sentiment somewhere by some one expressed, "The best way to put it down is to accept it and teach it."

A few weeks ago, some one wrote the Doctor Throckmorton from Centralia for suggestion of a competent man to meet the Mormons. His suggestion was to call Brother W. J. Moore of Carbondale, Illinois, as he was the best posted on Mormonism of any man he knew in his field.

Do you suppose Brother Moore as yet has heard the latest? If you haven't, Brother Moore, just teach everybody to pay tithing.

Again, another peculiar teaching of the Latter Day Saints, and it ever has been, is that an angel has come and delivered a message to this generation; and that angels may come to individuals. No Latter Day Saint has failed to hear this vigorously opposed by one and all of these evangelical denominations.

On page 6 of The Illinois Baptist for Saturday, December 18, 1915, the reverend doctor administers another antidote for the menace under the heading "angels." This article fills more than a column in explanation of the prerogatives of angels. Listen to what the doctor heard!

"I here describe a scene as it was told to me by an eye-witness. A lady from twenty to twenty-five years old was thought to be on her deathbed with consumption. The church met at her home for worship. Under the power of the preaching of the gospel the woman was saved. She begged to be baptized, and after much consultation, the attending physician gave his consent on the grounds that it could shorten her days but a few. She was carried from her room on a chair, taken to the baptismal water, and sitting upon the chair was lowered in the water. The people who stood upon the banks involuntarily exclaimed: 'See that angel!' And many testified that they saw an angel hovering over the woman as she was raised out of the water.

"She did not die, but lived to raise a family, and the facts as stated above were given me by the lady herself."

This same story was told by the doctor some fourteen or fifteen years before this printing, at head of his editorial, in a sermon on baptism. Doctor G. W. Danbury in The Illinois Baptist for March 19, 1910, tells the same story as told him by purported eyewitness.

In the same issue, under the heading, "The ice floated back," one Elder J. B. Blair tells that standing on the banks of the Illinois River, when it was gorged with floating ice, he and others witnessed the miracle of the ice floating up stream, against the current of the river and a strong wind, and standing there until the baptism was administered.

Now listen, when we hear these anti-"Mormon" lectures and see if they teach tithing, angels coming in broad daylight before witnesses, miraculous healings, or even the swift waters of the Illinois River running upstream—listen and see.

Others since heard from have indorsed our report of the Baker-Robert's debate, notwithstanding Robert's moderator's report to the contrary. Since the debate, we have been informed that both Roberts and Roady have buried their wives. We extend to them our sympathy.

Yours for the truth,

W. A. GUTHRIE.

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO, March 11, 1919.

Editors Herald: It is with a heart overflowing with gratitude for the manifold blessings bestowed upon us, that we contribute a few lines to your valuable columns.

The HERALD is a weekly comer to our home—it has really become as one of the family leaving home for a week to return each week end with his stories to tell—always interesting and much appreciated.

As a family, we have been especially remembered of late, and that, because we encountered one of those places in life where we must place ourselves in a recipient attitude for such blessings, to fortify and strengthen our faith to go onward.

Two weeks ago the influenza came to our home—the first patient being our second girl, twelve years of age. As she had already had two attacks of pneumonia in her life, and being somewhat delicate, we have been very cautious about having her exposed to the disease in any way. On Sunday she had a high temperature, and toward evening asked for administration. Monday afternoon she had a hemorrhage of the nose. We were very much alarmed at this, but on the arrival of a physician, we learned what a blessing it had been—the blessing she had sought, and the one for which we had hoped—for he said that experience had proven that this was a preventive of pneumonia.

On Tuesday the oldest girl was stricken, and the fever raged high with her. However it dropped almost three degrees within one and one half hours after administration.

The youngest, two and one half years, was overcome the following Wednesday. Awakening about 1.30 a. m. Thursday, filled in chest and throat with phlegm, she pleaded: "Mother, will you get Brother Thomas and daddy to pour some oil on my head and say a little prayer so I get better?" (Elder T. U. Thomas, our branch president, was the one to whom she referred.) I explained that the cars were not running and that Brother Thomas would have a long way to come and that it was nighttime, and asked her if it would do just to call daddy. She said it would, and I called him. He administered, and in not more than five minutes afterwards, up came the phlegm and in a little while she began singing and prattling, which lasted about an hour, when she fell asleep, and in the morning was much better.

Thus we are made to feel that truly it is good to be a Saint of God. We have seen our neighboring families afflicted with this dreaded disease, and while assisting them all we could, we were made to realize that they were without a great and grand knowledge that would have been such a help, such a strength, such a hope, and such a consolation to them. But we have called their attention to the fact that more than human power has been striving to help them, and we hope to warn them as we have been enjoined to do, as recorded in the Scriptures, if we do not succeed in convincing them of God's great plan.

We trust the silver lining of this cloud of ours has been so pictured that you, dear reader, can see it and be made to feel encouraged, as we have been made to feel, to serve the Lord better than ever.

Our branch here has been watched over during the epidemic that none have been lost. A new life is being taken on in our Sabbath school, and the Christmas offering is being boosted for this year.

Our desires are to be faithful and do all we can while today is ours, for the advancement of His cause.

Yours in gospel bonds,

LORA H. STRACHAN.

DE WITT, ARKANSAS, March 14, 1919.

Editors Herald: This morning I feel like writing to let the Saints know what a feast we have had here in a series of meetings that have been held the past two weeks.

Brother J. T. Riley came here and preached for two weeks, and has done a grand work. He baptized five into the kingdom of God; three of them were of my family; the others were a young man and young woman.

So the good work goes on. My wife and I were the only Saints here. The people here had never heard the true gospel before. We had the best of order. The people said it was something new, and that they had never heard such preaching. There are others almost persuaded to join.

We feel lonely this morning as Brother Riley has just left us to return home. We hope and pray that he will be sent back to this field again.

I have been in the church for twenty-nine years, but about half of that time I have been away from any branch. I hope we will soon have a branch here.

Pray for us that we may so live that others may be brought into the kingdom, and that the seed that Brother Riley has sown will bring forth good fruit.

Your brother in Christ,

S. M. ELDER.

Faith lays hold upon the territory which lies outside the realm of the senses, stakes its boundaries, notes its contents, and invites thought to take possession of it.—Samuel F. Halfyard, in Cardinal Truths of the Gospel.

SCRANTON, KANSAS, March 16, 1919.

Editors Herald: We should be the broadest-minded people in the world, since God has been so kind to us and has said there is a spark of divinity in every man that cometh into the world. (See Doctrine and Covenants 90:1.) But it is just as true that all men do not cultivate alike, so as a natural consequence we do not all develop alike, and to get the best results we must cultivate continually.

There is nothing more fatal to progress than being satisfied with what we have. "Be ye transformed" is the injunction of Paul, and this can be done by obedience to the law of God, which is the perfect law of liberty.

We have read that the deadliest thing in the world is a hobby that has been ridden to death. We have two that never did good, but much harm. The "fruit abundantly" cannot come from them,

I have attended what seemed to me an interesting revival meeting, and was glad to see it. There was a Methodist minister attended, whom I asked to open our meeting. He prayed that the meetings would be profitable, and that God would bless the preacher. But, behold, the preacher opened with: Let no man take this honor unto himself. You can guess how many converts were made.

Were there no men with honor, who preached righteousness before the angel came to Brother Joseph? Yes, many of them help to prepare the way for the gospel. There had to be a preparation, and hence the reformers were blessed of the same God that blesses us when we are doing right.

In the year of our Lord 1492, the Lord was moving when Columbus discovered this land. All Latter Day Saints will agree to this. And ever since then we can see the hand of God leading men nearer to him.

Patrick Hamilton, in 1528, brought the first Bible to Scotland. He said it was the right and duty of every man to hear the Lord's own voice in answer to prayer.

Also, Paden, in Scotland, said that the day would come when the church would come forth in beauty and glory, as a bride adorned for her husband. Who told him? According to some men, he had no right to speak. But God gave him the knowledge and he could not keep still.

Walter Smith said in Scotland, in 1681, "We are under the obligation of the whole law, which is the perfect law of righteousness." Those men spoke like Latter Day Saints, and like Paul, as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. Who wrote those good books that the Lord tells us to read? Why, it was good men, and those are their testimonies, and the Lord wants you to know of them. Hobby number one is dead, and I am glad of it.

The Lord says (in Doctrine and Covenants 85) to seek out those good books and study them, and get acquainted. God has been moving among men since they began to come out of the Dark Ages.

But I must pass on to hobby number two. That is just as hurtful to our progress as any."

Authority. Who has it? We have it if we are in the kingdom and keeping his law.

In Luke 9:49 we read that John was not pleased with some that were not following, and who were casting out devils in his name. What a glorious business to be in. You know that no man can be successful at that work except God is with him. But John was not going to be discouraged. He got James, and in company with him felt stronger. So when James and John saw that they would not receive him, they asked Jesus if they should command fire to come down from heaven and consume them.

But Jesus turned and rebuked them, and said, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of." Then he told them that he did not come to destroy, but to save. So that is our mission—to seek and to save.

Who gave John Wesley authority to say in his 71st sermon?—the times that we have reason to believe are at hand, that many pious men have termed the latter-day glory, when God would gloriously display his power:

Now we will get right down to the church, our church, God's church, the church of the First Born. God speaks to us (Doctrine and Covenants 49:2) saying: "I will that all men shall repent, for all are under sin, except them which I have reserved unto myself, holy men that ye know not of."

And again, the Lord spoke through one of the First Presidency in a prayer meeting at Lamoni, saying: "Hear the Spirit's voice to all. I have many forces at work in the world, saith the Lord. I have many spiritual forces at work that you know not of. You see but the smaller part of my work."

With all the light and revelation given to us, more than to many others, why should we not be the greatest, yet humblest broad-minded men in the world? We are more responsible than any people we know. But there are others. God said so. Let God speak the truth.

When God was proclaiming his judgments against Israel through his servant Amos, because of their wickedness it was only right that he should let them know that he was a prophet of God; and to let them know what God had revealed to him, because they had despised the law of the Lord, and had not kept his commandments. Have we any like that to-day? If not, Zion will soon be redeemed. "Fear God and keep his commandments." This is the whole duty of man. This always was our duty, and always will be our duty. Nothing short of God's law will meet with God's approval. And Walter Smith could rightfully say, in Scotland, in 1681, "We are under the obligation of the whole law which is the perfect law of righteousness," as that is the doctrine of Jesus. If we do not teach and practice it, we are living under our privileges.

And in the language of the admonition:

"Love ye me and love all people—
Love as I have loved you;
This your calling—this my purpose—
Thus be my disciples true.
Then in this exalted station
Your companion I will be;
Every promise of my Scriptures
Will be verified in thee."

JAMES BAILLIE.

OUTLOOK, MONTANA, March 11, 1919.

Editors Herald: Though the Outlook Branch does not seem very progressive, yet we are steadfast in the faith. The Saints are few in number and also scattered, making it hard to meet and carry on the gospel work as we trust we may soon.

We are planning to rent a small building and hold Sunday school and prayer meetings throughout the summer months.

In the month of February our district president, Elder Eli Bronson, and Elder A. M. Chase visited our branch and held meetings in the Lutheran Church, which was granted them by the church trustees. Meetings were held every night for a week, good crowds in attendance. It seemed that great interest was created; people stood in stores and talked about the meetings. Some carried their Bibles, and looked up references given them by the elders, and there was a general stir among the town folk. It seemed such a wave of Christianity never was aroused here before. After meetings some lingered and asked questions, which were explained by the elders:

The last evening Brother Bronson preached on the Book of Mormon, and after service I think about forty or more stayed and asked questions and heard different thoughts exchanged. Brother Chase answered all questions and was blessed by the Spirit abundantly, until it made us all rejoice.

But alas! Someone informed the pastor of the Lutheran Church that Latter Day Saint ministers were occupying his pulpit, and he immediately came and demanded the keys, which were given him by Brother Bronson. But the little minister of the near-by town had to speak his piece, and it contained such names as blasphemers, liars, and devils; and as he left the gate of our house he said: "O God, forgive me for letting such bad people preach in my church."

As the man and our two elders talked, I stood by and noted the expression on their faces, and the spirit they manifested. I beheld the Spirit of God, of love and charity in our brethren, and I saw hatred and antagonism in the other.

However, this did not hinder our meeting, for we hurried and rented a hall, and faithful Sister Forchee went out on the street and gave notice that the meeting would be in the hall, and the result was that about one hundred people came to hear the sermon on the Book of Mormon by Brother Eli.

One good soul said he was fully convinced that this is the true gospel, and we feel that more will follow. The elders promised to return in the future, and we will welcome them gladly. We will distribute literature and try to do our bit.

Ever praying for God's speed in this glorious gospel,
Yours in bonds,
SISTER O. B. SNUGGINS.

DERBY LINE, VERMONT, March 18, 1919.

Editors Herald: I wish to send greetings to all the dear sisters who wrote me kind letters of cheer. As we are not blessed in this world's goods, I take this way to reply to those letters. May God bless all of you in your walk through life.

What I should like, is to hear from those living in a nice, dry State, where there are Saints to help us find a shelter and light work with pay enough so that we can live where there are some others of God's people. Pray for us and our welfare.
ADDIE COLES.

TOLEDO, OHIO, March 12, 1919.

Editors Herald: I have been appointed district superintendent of the home department of the Northwestern Ohio District, and home department superintendent of the Religious local home department. Just as soon as the weather will permit me to do so, I want to get out and organize home classes, and also do Sunday school work.

I believe there never was a time when we needed the co-operation of God's people in spreading this glorious gospel as we now do.

The 2d day of June, 1918, I renewed my covenant with God in baptism. The Saints that know me know that I have passed the best years for my service to God, so now I must put forth my best foot and do all I can the rest of my life. We must be up and doing that we may be found blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ.

When I read so many good letters in the Ensign and HERALD, my heart is glad. I want to tell all the Saints that I will be glad to receive Ensigns, HERALDS, and tracts, all I can get, for I need them. I will pay all postage on what is sent to me.

I saw a letter from Fairfield, Illinois, by Albert N. Warren, that filled my heart with joy. I am homesick to get back to Centralia, Illinois, and believe I will some day.

Our pastor is J. F. Mintun, and I learn a great deal of him. Saints, pray for me that I may do all that God requires of me. I want to do all I can.

I will not forget Elders I. C. Morris and Henry Sparling. I have been told what God had in store for me if I would repent. I did repent and I want to do what is set before me, then God will give me more to do. I have had some great promises if I do my part.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

LAFAYETTE GOTT.

FLINT, MICHIGAN, March 12, 1919.

Editors Herald: Just a few lines to let you know that the work in Flint is moving onward and upward.

Elder Daniel Macgregor has now entered the eighth week of his series of meetings in this place.

The meetings have not only been enlightening and educational to those of the world, but have indeed proven to be a spiritual feast for the Saints.

The attendance was greatly increased by a house to house canvass throughout the city. A sixty-four question pamphlet prepared by Elder Macgregor was used for this purpose.

Up to the present time thirty-eight have entered the waters of baptism.

Brother Macgregor has been greatly assisted by the splendid work of the choir.

CORRESPONDENT FIRST BRANCH.

[The following letter from one of our soldier boys was addressed to President F. M. Smith]:

RITTERSDORF, GERMANY, March 3, 1919.

Dear Brother Smith: I have been intending to write you but duties were such I could not get to it. We are now in Germany and have visited most all the principal points of interest here in the occupied territory. Also we made a trip down the Rhine some thirty miles and that is one trip that is grand—so many old castles, Roman ruins, and all the old historic places, each having a legend. I was often made to laugh when I thought of Mark Twain's Innocents Abroad.

It certainly wounds me every time I think of it, how dear Harvey Gold had to be taken from us. I had indeed all the hopes and faith in the world he would pull through. He was wounded by a high explosive shrapnel shell just fifteen minutes before the end of the war, receiving the wound between the knees and hips; he was at once taken care of, and every hope was given for his recovery. My, you cannot imagine how lonely it makes me feel! We were just like two sweethearts amid shot and shell, but on that drive it was an "inferno" that morning and it's a wonder I'm yet alive.

Where I am quartered here with German people they sure treat us boys nice, and I find that some of the boys are marrying the German girls in the next town. The food condition of this country is one that is indeed acute. It is nothing to see almost every hour of the day little children come and stand outside of the door and pray for a slice of bread. Europe is certainly hungry. My! my! people at home couldn't stand such a condition.

I am now doing interpreting for officers and also attend to civil affairs such as meetings and report on them. I could write you a book of things, I could tell you. We are certainly homesick and I will frankly confess I am, for I had anticipated being there for the conference. It is a heartache to me, but we are stuck to stick now until June before we come, unless the good people at home do something for us to get us back sooner.

I'm sure heartsick for I wanted to get married in June, but it's just always my luck. When we get home they won't even look at us soldiers, who have actually been at the front and in drives, and all the good times and eats will be all gone. Ha, ha.

Please never ask any of us soldiers about the Y. M. C. A., for it won't be proper to give vent to feelings which we have, for at the front and in drives they were "Par, bon." It's a shame. (An instance, one day one of our church boys, Gomer Macrea from Knobnoster, wanted to get some writing paper to write to his mother and couldn't get it. On his way to return to his post he was shot at by a German aviator, the bullet glanced on some rocks and entered his coat above the shoulder and he was slightly wounded, which healed up in a few days. We often ran the chance of life and death in order to get paper to write home.)

I certainly hope that America will not let Bolshevism enter, for the conditions it has brought Europe are awful. Germans have expressed to me that (they were from Essen, Dusseldorf, and other manufacturing towns) they wished American troops would come and occupy the towns for the civilians were even in danger. I was also talking to a Russian prisoner here in Germany and he was given his liberty to return home. He got near his home in Russia, when lo, the Bolsheviks grabbed one of his comrades and made him dig his own grave and then shot him. I hope you or Brother Rushton will speak to the people sometime on this subject as it is a dangerous form of government and is spreading like fire, and knowing the attitude of some at home we don't care to spend all of our lives as soldiers. Here's hoping that we will sometime get to come home. Remember us in our homesickness, please.

WIGAN, LANCASHIRE, ENGLAND, February 28, 1919.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is always a welcome visitor to my home, bringing with it tidings of great joy from all parts of the world, and keeping one in touch with the progress of the church.

I am glad to give a favorable report of the work in this part of the vineyard. We are laboring in Wigan, and are preaching the word with power and effect. Have been favored with good attendance and keen investigation. The angel's message has stood the test, and we have added thirty-one to our number in twelve months, from February, 1918, to February, 1919. Others are investigating and no doubt will follow in a short time. We truly are thankful for the increase and hope that by our faith and works we may glorify God.

As president of this Wigan Branch, I am pleased to say we have a good band of Saints here and are rejoicing in the fullness of the gospel and endeavoring to so walk in this life that we may be found worthy to receive the glory which is set apart for the faithful ones.

I wish the HERALD every success, and can recommend it to every Saint.

Your brother and colaborer,
WILLIAM SPARGO.

ANGLUM, MISSOURI, March 17, 1919.

Editors Herald: This morning as I renew our subscription for the HERALD, I want to say that it is a blessing to the home of any Saint, if he will only read it. We have church, Sunday school, prayer meeting, and Religio, but still we get many good things out of the HERALD that we don't get from the others.

I feel that if many of our people who fall would only read the church papers it would give them strength to press on.

I did enjoy reading the article, "Selling our birthright." We see so many of our brothers and sisters fall because of such things. Many times I sit and think, and pray that we will never take such things into our lives that will cause us to turn from the truth, as I know this is the true work of God.

I have been in the church four years, and it has been the happiest time of my life. The past year there has been much sorrow in the world, but in the Spirit of God there has been much happiness. I feel much sympathy for the mothers who have had to give up their sons. But let us lift up our heads and rejoice, for we know that this only brings us closer to the coming of our Savior, when this sorrow will turn to joy for those who are pure in heart.

I ask an interest in your prayers that I may live faithful to the end.

Your sister in the gospel,

E. ANDERSON.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

REPORT OF PRESIDING BISHOP TO GENERAL CONFERENCE

To the First Presidency and General Conference: The common concern manifested by the Saints in the financial progress of the church in the year 1917, has in face of many hindering causes been maintained with increasing interest in 1918. An analysis of the following summarized report shows that the tithe, offering, and consecration receipts for 1918, exclusive of the Christmas offering, exceeded the 1917 contributions for the same purposes by $61,714.37. During the year the amount spent to aid the poor and needy ones, beside the amount paid to the various homes and other church institutions was $6,496.01 more than the amount paid out for this worthy object in 1917. While the statement shows a total indebtedness on December 31, 1918, of $159,686.19, there has since been paid by leaving unpaid March 24, 1919, a total indebtedness of $76,043.33, with cash, certificates of deposit, and bonds in hands of the Presiding Bishop, local bishops and agents sufficient to wholly satisfy all outstanding obligations when they mature.

The Sunday schools returned a Christmas offering of $90,807.56 or $16,130.38 more than in the year 1917. The hearty response of the schools in all parts of the world to the suggestions of Brother Arthur W. Smith, appointed by the General Sunday School Association to supervise this work, is commendable, and reveals what it is possible for the church to accomplish by a united effort. We believe that the raising of the Christmas offering has proven a valuable lesson in team work, increased the interest and gained membership. Now that the special object to which this fund has been applied during the past two years has been accomplished, a few have thought we should slacken our efforts. It should be recognized, however, that freed from debt, the church is under a greater responsibility to carry the gospel of our blessed Lord to those that sit in darkness. Let us then contribute our tithes, offerings, and consecrations, not grudgingly, nor of necessity, nor to the hurt of the work locally, but with a free heart, willingly; that the missionary work may be performed; the poor and needy supplied, and stewardships established. Should the Bishopric, after mature consideration, propose some one special object for which the offering of 1919 should be used, announcement thereof can be made at a later date. Besides the work of the traveling and local bishops, bishop's agents and solicitors, without which this splendid financial showing could not have been possible, acknowledgement is made of the cooperation of auxiliary societies and ministry generally.

It will be noticed that this report included a statement of the houses of worship owned by the church throughout the world. This record, while not complete owing to the difficulty in obtaining the necessary data, could not have been submitted at this time had it not been for the untiring efforts of Brother Robert T. Cooper, under whose direction the report was made. Heretofore each branch has purchased its fire protection from some local fire insurance company. From information in hand we hope that the Bishopric may be able to formulate a plan for legislation to be enacted at this conference by which it may be made possible for the church to carry fire risk on church buildings, permitting money heretofore spent for fire insurance to form a church extension fund.

The questionnaires mailed to the membership during the year have elicited favorable comment, and the returns to date have made possible the compiling of statistics which will be very necessary and helpful in the development of the Zionie program. In this work we are fortunate in having had the able assistance of Brother J. August Koehler.

The willing contributions of funds for the purchase of lands to establish stewardships is very gratifying. Fifty thousand dollars ($50,000) has already been so invested. Donations for this purpose to date, however, amount to only $17,564.29. We are satisfied, now that the war is ended and the requirements of the Government are lessened, this fund will increase apace, as it should be apparent to all that it must, before a great deal in this regard can be accomplished.

In the month of October, arrangements were effected whereby Bishop Mark H. Siegfried, in addition to his duties as manager of the Independence Sanitarium, undertook the active supervision of the work of the Bishopric relating to the Homes. This has made possible a more careful investigation of all applications for admission and it is expected will result in the arranging of the work so as to give better service to those seeking the aid of these institutions without additional expense to the church, and making possible the extension of the field of usefulness of these institutions.

The report of the stewards managing the Independence and Lamoni Storehouse and Lamoni Steam Laundry show a very satisfactory progress. These establishments are filling a present need and gaining an increasing patronage.

Several requests of the Bishopric to foster similar enterprises in other localities have been received. We have thought best not to encourage such undertakings until experience has proven, not only the value, but also the best method of conducting these endeavors. Many letters have been received and interviews held relative to the gathering. To all such we have felt, and still feel constrained to say: "Let your gathering not be in haste; have all things prepared."

During the year members of the Presiding Bishopric have traveled quite extensively in the interest of the work as occasion required, or opportunity afforded, and have everywhere found an increasing interest manifested to know the temporal law and desire to comply therewith.

Pursuant to resolution of the Order of Bishops with the assistance of the General Church Auditor, Brother R. B. Trowbridge, a uniform Bishops and Bishop's Agent's Ledger has been prepared, and is now in use; also a uniform receipt and report blank by which it will be possible to audit all accounts at the general office. We do not, however, advocate that district and stake auditors be released unless experience shall prove they are unnecessary.

The general church offices, while furnishing temporary relief are inadequate to the present requirements. Brother Henry C. Smith, (Church Architect) is preparing plans to provide additional space. The necessity for this building operation, together with the College Library and General Conference building at Independence to properly meet the growing demands is unquestioned.

There is under consideration a general church budget plan designed to secure a proper application of church funds to such objects and in such proportion as to conserve and advance the work as a whole. It is expected this plan may be perfected in time to receive the approval of this conference.

In order for the church to successfully perform the work which is entrusted to all, we have felt impressed to advocate: "Every member a tithe payer." Past efforts have brought new opportunities. May we all correctly evaluate and properly use them to the blessing of mankind and the glory of our heavenly Father.

Respectfully submitted,

BENJ. R. MCGUIRE.
