One day near Christmas time Brother Smith was walking by one of the large banks of the city. The banker stopped him and called him into the bank and said: "Here is twenty dollars for a Christmas present. Every church in the city has requested a present for their pastor except your church and we do not intend that you shall be forgotten."

This little incident is only one of many that we might mention to show the high esteem in which he was held by the business men of this city. Elder Smith came in 1886, and in 1889 the Saints of San Bernardino having disposed of the branch property which was located in what seemed to be the undesirable part of the city, built a larger church in a more favorable locality. In this work Brother Smith took active part, being on the building committee.

The outlook for the church work was more auspicious than ever before, and the arrival of Brother Smith and his congenial wife had made success doubly sure. This happy couple who had just entered into a covenant to be each other's companion and helper through life, entered into their new field of labor with a will, and a smile of good cheer, which won to their support every member of the branch, as well as throughout the mission field assigned him.

When the time came for our brother and his little family to take their leave, well do I remember the last service when we all stood up and with tears filling our eyes sang: "God be with you till we meet again."

Some little time after Brother Smith left this place and was engaged in gospel work in the southern field, an evangelist of the Disciple Church, by the name of V. S. Martin, came to this city to deliver a series of lectures. The Reverend Martin, during his stay, took occasion to make a bitter attack upon our work.

Some of the business men of the city resented this unfair attack upon a people whose lives were known to the community as being above reproach; and two of the men, one a banker and the other a lawyer, offered to pay the expenses of sending for Brother Smith if he would return and meet Mr. Martin in public debate where both sides could be heard before the people of this city.

Elder D. L. Harris, being in charge of the work here, sent a telegram to Brother Smith asking him if he could come at once in case a debate could be arranged for. Almost immediately a reply was received from him stating: "If I am needed I will come on the first train out for California."

A challenge was issued at once to Reverend Martin, and published in the daily papers. Everything possible was done to secure a signed agreement for Mr. Martin to enter into a joint debate with Elder Smith, but to no avail.

This incident made it clear that Brother Smith had made a lasting impression for good upon the leading men of this city as well as upon the minds of the community at large.

We were all made to feel that he knew that the gospel he preached was of God. He was clear-cut, positive, and forceful in the presentation of his message. He was never pretentious but was always humble and approachable. To know him was to love him. We looked upon him as the servant of God, and truly God loved him and inspired him in his work.

We wish to state in closing that this short reference to the work of Elder Smith, while in this mission, does not do him justice, but is only intended to bring out a few incidents of interest which will help us to keep in memory the life and work of this noble friend and brother. In closing I wish to place his name among those referred to by the poet, Longfellow, when he said:

"Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime,
And, departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time."

G. H. WIXOM.

SAN BERNARDINO, CALIFORNIA.

Far West Stake

Brother J. H. Hitch, who for a time was badly disabled by a stroke of paralysis, has recovered the use of his limbs sufficiently to attend church, also almost his full power of speech.

Brother L. A. Keck has been seriously ill with gastric ulcer. He is recovering as a result of prolonged abstinence and rest.

The First and Second Branches, Saint Joseph, will each hold a picnic on the Fourth at well-selected rural places in the city.

Brother Samuel Twombly filled the pulpit of the First Branch on Sunday, the 22d, in the absence of the pastor at DeKalb Branch, Stewartsville.

Brother E. F. Robertson, formerly of the missionary force, has been appointed to the Far West Stake, in time to become a member of the stake presidency. He is acting with the presidency and his labors have been well received. Wide missionary experience as a seventy furnishes good discipline for other work.

Brother R. D. Weaver, of the missionary force, is expected to begin his labors in the stake in or about Trenton—a good town and a division point on the Rock Island—the latter part of present week. It is probable that he will locate his home at Trenton, as it is good policy not to concentrate too much in one region, though he will labor throughout the entire stake. We trust he will like this field and believe the field will like him.

Bishop Bullard has been working temporarily in the stake, where he is always welcome and his work a power for good. The stake is awaiting action of the joint council in permanent appointment of a bishop.

The wheat fields of Far West are showing indications of reaching the ripening stage soon. A good crop is expected, though some in low places is badly twisted and fallen. Corn is being cleaned, now that more settled weather has come.

Brother V. M. Goodrich has been laboring in Saint Joseph, Guilford, and is now at Fortesque, doing what his state of health will permit.

The reunion at Stewartsville will begin on Friday, August 15. We want to start in good form and on time. Everybody order tents ahead and have them up ready for the opening day. See notice elsewhere. For tents write Elias Hinderks, Stewartsville, Missouri.

The work in the stake, as elsewhere, is moving in proportion to the development and intelligent activity of its people—that's about all we can say. It's a big movement—the latter-day work—and, like every other movement, is to be measured by the devotion and true progress of its adherents. We believe the Lord is trying hard to establish the people; their response in devoted, intelligent obedience is the measure of our progress. We have some good people and are hopeful.

The Maple Grove Branch has improved its building by a cement foundation and interior rearrangements. Children's Day, the 22d, was a nice occasion, well attended.

The stake president will be at Sweet Home Branch June 28, 29. Members of the stake presidency will conduct a series of two-day meetings in July and August at Raven-wood, Fortesque, Bedison, and Guilford; other two-day meetings to follow the reunion.

Quarterly meeting of the stake priesthood the first Sunday of the quarter, July 6, with First Saint Joseph Branch, 3 p. m. After a general session of one hour the various divisions of the ministry will meet in their respective sessions from 4 to 5 p. m.

Sister Ruth Greene, formerly of Maple Grove Branch, has accepted a position in the stake office, as assistant to Sister Minnie Scott Dobson, stake secretary. Work is increasing, hence additional help.

The weather is h-o-t!

WRITER.

The Bishopric

Advocate for 1919

"Every Member a Tithe Payer"

"Is my name written there?"

"Where?"

"In the Lamb's Book of Life."

If it is it will also be written in the tithing books.

"If ye will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world, you must prepare yourself by doing the things that I have required of you."

Are These the Latter Days?

"But as the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."—Matthew 24: 37.

I have been approached by a certain one with the request that I write something original. The request in itself seems fair enough, but after some contemplation as to what originality really is, I am brought face to face with the fact as presented by Solomon: "Is there anything whereof it may be said, See, this is new? it hath been already of old time, which was before us." (Ecclesiastes 1: 10.)

This subject appealed to me because of the apparent indifference of many both in the church and out, to the second coming of Jesus and the signs attendant thereto.

From the words of Jesus we can rightly conclude that the state of the world prior to his return must be in harmony with conditions existent in the time of Noah.

Sunday evening we strolled down the main thoroughfare of one of our large cities and noticed an immense throng congregated before some richly ornamented doorway waiting in breathless silence for the doors to open. My friend asked: "Has not the deacon arrived yet?" "Yes, he is there, but not in his official capacity. The theater has not opened yet."

We understand that Noah was a preacher of righteousness (2 Peter 2: 5) to a world that had too soon forgotten their Maker, living in great wickedness and evil imagination of heart (Genesis 6: 5) and it remains to be seen as to whether we as a people have gained anything by the experience of the antediluvians who received a just reward for their works.

Many no doubt have noted the rapid increase of strikes, and in this connection we may yet see more hardships than that entailed by war, as it is only reasonable to expect a scarcity in the line of commodity affected, as well as an increase in its price, eventually resulting, if protracted, in low finances with its attendant high cost of food.

It seems harsh to associate wickedness with the desire of the working classes for wealth and equalization. But if we penetrate the cloud surrounding the source of this great industrial current, we learn that the greed for gain manifested by most large employers of labor has resulted in a total obscurity of their employee's personal needs, brought about by the aforementioned thirst for immense profit at the expense of the workman, in long hours and small pay.

It is evident that the laborer of to-day has not been getting a just proportion of that which he produces.

This condition has been ameliorated somewhat in the immediate past by some of the larger concerns who have decided to share present profits and also shorten the hours of the laborer, but almost too late, for their eleventh-hour repentance was looked upon by labor as a confession of previous guilt and in consequence we have the fulfillment of that written by James: "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasures together for the last days." (James 5:1-3.)

We notice that the rust of gold and silver will be a witness against them and this is to happen in the last days. In proof of this we find the laborer dissatisfied with an equalization of present profits, but will also want a share of that previously kept back by fraud, as again foretold by James: "Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of the sabbath." (James 5:4.)

Also in Isaiah 24:16: "My leanness, my leanness, woe unto me! the treacherous dealers have dealt treacherously; yea, the treacherous dealers have dealt very treacherously."

That these conditions antecede the immediate coming of Jesus, is proven by continuing the fifth chapter of James: "Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord."

Also in the 8th verse: "For the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

Have we oil in our vessels, or will we be endeavoring to purchase that which is not for sale?

In Isaiah 24:11 we find "there is crying for wine in the streets; all joy is darkened, the mirth of the land is gone."

We are living in an age of prohibition, brought about in part by a desire to conserve our grain for the feeding of the millions in devastated Europe, a devastation caused by the fulfillment of that sure word of prophecy found in Isaiah 34.

Has prohibition taken away the desire for strong drink? It appears not, as just recently when this issue was presented in Quebec, many serious demonstrations occurred, literally crying for wine in the streets.

"The new wine mourneth, the vine languisheth, all the merry-hearted do sigh."—Isaiah 24:7.

A wine dealer in a near-by town has been compelled to close his wine cellars, and in consequence has neglected to give his vineyards the care formerly thought necessary.

In face of the fact that the consumption of liquor is forbidden, many under the pretext of some trivial ailment or other get prescriptions from the local physician and usually wake up in the city jail with surroundings entirely foreign to that of the hospital, where one would imagine their indisposition could be better treated. The morning after they find most bitter medicine dosed out by the magistrate in charge unconsciously bringing to pass (Isaiah 24:9): "They shall not drink wine with a song; strong drink shall be bitter to them that drink it."

You will notice that the entire twenty-fourth chapter deals with the last days.

The Prophet Daniel in the twelfth chapter, speaking of the time of the end, says: "None of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand." And again, "And seal the book, even to the time of the end. Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased. What is knowledge or wisdom? Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom." (Job 28:28.)

"And the knowledge of the Holy is understanding."—Proverbs 9:10.

We as Saints are entitled to that wisdom to exercise the intelligence that God has given us, or will Jesus find us with the foolish sleeping when the last trump call shall sound?

The world to-day scoffs at the idea of Jesus returning at this time, but did they not scoff at the idea of a flood, while Noah patiently built the ark? Let us now be preparing our ark in Zion where we will not be swept away in the flood of wickedness, that is soon to cover the earth.

JAY L. FRYER.

---

Saint Louis, Missouri

---

We are looking for a revival in our work here. The minister appointed to our district, Brother Farrell, came last week and at once took hold of the situation.

On Wednesday evening, at a class social of Sister Lizzie Patterson's Sunday school class, he was present, shaking hands with everyone, and finally giving a brief talk to the assembled group.

Friday evening the men's class seemed much interested in his presentation of the lesson, while a number of the young men were seen in earnest conversation with Brother Farrell at the close of the service.

Sunday was a fine day and good attendance at all meetings. Brother Farrell addressed the Sunday school briefly, and gave a very interesting "service" talk to the congregation at the eleven o'clock hour.

This "heart to heart" talk was so feelingly given that we believe all felt a new desire to do something for the cause of Christ.

The music by our choir was exceptionally good at both sessions, and the bass solo, in the evening anthem, so well sung that no doubt it further encouraged the speaker in handling his themes.

Our local officers are enthusiastic in their support of Brother Farrell's efforts, and we are glad of a pastor to revive our luke-warm members and prove to all that the gospel is worth while.

E. B.

---

New England News

---

The work in this section is "onward and upward" (using the Religio slogan). The members have been very busy during the year. The activities of our young men's and young ladies' clubs, the Woman's Auxiliary, choir, and other societies, have occupied our time almost every night in the week and four or five meetings on Sunday. Now that the summer is here, "outdoor" sports draw our attention. We have a nice tennis court, which we have had one year, and the Orioles are enjoying hikes into the country by themselves. Some weeks ago this city had a Salvation Army fund drive; the Elks lodge had it in charge and they asked our Oriole girls to assist. Saturday was designated as Tag Day; there were two other city societies working on this day, soliciting funds; they had thirty members out, while the Orioles had only nine, but the nine obtained about one third of all the money collected that day. The next Sunday night the Orioles were invited by the Elks lodge to attend a Flag Day celebration, given by this lodge in one of our theaters. The girls went in a body in their uniforms.

The Sunday school officers are pushing the Christmas fund. This school went "over the top" last year, and we hope to duplicate our efforts this year, and then some.

Our Religio is doing good work; we also have a splendid choir, whose members are constantly being solicited to sing in the community's activities. Some months ago the church choir furnished the musical program for one of the Attleboro community fellowship meetings, which are held every month in our city high school auditorium.

We believe we have a special feature in this branch, that few branches can boast of, namely, a set of triplets (all boys), one year old. They are healthy and robust, and have a total of 21 teeth. Each boy weighs about 20 pounds. They have consumed 1,640 quarts of milk during their first year, besides 40 pounds of sugar of milk. These boys were born on their father's thirty-third birthday; their mother, Mrs. Chester Everett, is a member of the Attleboro Branch; their home is in Plainville, Massachusetts, a village six miles north of this city. The Boston newspapers seem to be proud of the triplets, as they have published their pictures a couple of times, and frequently refer to the growth and health of the boys.

While this branch has been busy and consecrated to their work, we have not been without trials. On May 18 we lost by death our presiding teacher, John Siddall, and others died during the influenza epidemic.

We had a little excitement in this quiet city last week, in the shape of representatives from the National Reform Association of Pittsburgh, who make a specialty of "misrepresenting Mormonism." On the 16th of this month, one of the representatives, Mrs. Lulu L. Shepard, lectured in this city on "Mormonism." The only distinction the lady would allow us as a church, was that we did not practice polygamy, but we were Mormons just the same. She told the people that all the difference there was between the Reorganized Mormons and the Utah Mormons, was when the revelation was received by Joseph Smith on polygamous marriages in the church, that those that believed that Joseph received the revelation from God followed Brigham Young to Utah, and those that believed that he received it from the Devil, went with Joseph's mother into the Reorganization. Then the lecturer gave a description of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon in a bungled way, showing that she had been reading such unreliable books as those published by E. D. Howe, Beadle, Bennett, Smucker, et al. The lady declared that she was next to the greatest living exponent of Mormonism, Frank Cannon having the distinction of being the greatest, and that much of her information she had received first hand, as she had lived in Utah a number of years.

When the lecturer called for questions, I arose and commenced to interrogate the lady on some declarations made in regard to the character of Joseph Smith, and Book of Mormon being stolen from the writings of Solomon Spalding; at this juncture the lecturer became somewhat confused, the audience clapped their hands, stamped their feet, and some of the women hissed like snakes; this was done to make me sit down and keep still. When the audience had quieted down, I resumed my questioning, which terminated in challenging the lady to a public debate, to prove the statements she had just made in regard to Joseph Smith. This she promptly refused.

A few days after this event we were able to get a column and a half article in our city daily paper, explaining the difference between us and the Mormons of Utah.

On the next Sunday evening we advertised and lectured on the difference between the Reorganization and the Utah Mormons, and answered some of the statements made by Mrs. Shepard. The city paper promised to print my sermon, but after reading it they declined to publish it. We suspect that ministerial pressure had been brought to bear upon the editors, as we had a long talk with one of the ministers of this city on this subject.

I do not believe the lectures are going to do us much harm, as it has given our people an opportunity to talk to people that they otherwise would not have had, and we got one article in the city paper and a small notice in regard to the event in one of the Providence papers.

When I was pastor of the Brooklyn, New York, church I had occasion to meet another representative from the National Reform Association, the same association that Mrs. Shepard represents. The representative was a Miss C. T. Swartz, who lectured before the ministers of Brooklyn. She made special reference to our church, and said they were the same as the Utah Mormons. Her lecture was published in the Brooklyn Eagle. We answered the article and got a column and a half of free advertising in the July 5, 1914, edition of that paper, which would have been denied us if Miss Swartz's false statements had not been printed.

One thing is certain, our people must study and become acquainted with the history of our church, as well as many other things, in order to intelligently explain our position to investigators or people inquiring the difference between the Utah Mormons and ourselves. The word of the Lord has come to us in this section a number of times this year, warning our people of the trials that are coming, and pleading with us to study and become acquainted with the work that we profess to believe and must represent, not only with our voice but by our lives. The world is certainly watching us to see if what we profess "will actually work in us"; if we make it work, they may be induced to try it.

E. B. HULL.

ATTLEBORO, MASSACHUSETTS.

May 24, 1919.

Editors Herald: It was a great pleasure to me to receive the copies of the Ensign, for there was much in them that was worth reading; then the letters, written by members whom I have met, were like meeting old friends.

I have been quite closely associated with the work in eastern Iowa, where I have attended two conferences, and made quite a number of friends among the Saints. It has not been my pleasure to meet any Latter Day Saints over here, so that is the way those papers came in so nicely.

I left for camp from home July 25, 1918, and was in Southampton, England, September 21. We were in quarantine for one week, and left about seventy men in the hospital with the influenza, where some of our good Iowa boys died.

The scenery around there was very fine. Each day all of us that were able would take about a three-mile hike, which did more for us than anything else.

We went from there to a little town in France (Chissay). Here we trained for three weeks. Around this place were many interesting sights, one of which is the remains of an old church, built more than one thousand years ago; also an old castle built in the ninth century. This looks to be in quite good condition from a distance. However, I never saw it except from a distance of about three fourths of a mile.

One of the most interesting things was to see many houses, or rather caves, cut out of the solid rock, for the people along the road we traveled, for about twelve miles, lived in these houses made right in the side of the hill, and these also had rooms for the stock and poultry.

We were then transferred to Bourbonne Les Baines, where the United States Government had one of its largest remount stations in France. There was quite a nice little town of about four thousand. Here a large number of horses were handled. I wouldn't have any idea how many, for the troops that run it were among the first in France, and all of them are wearing three gold stripes.

We are now stationed near Romorantin, a town of eight thousand. This is one of Uncle Sam's air service centers, and aircraft is about as common as chickens on Iowa farms.

I trust I may soon be back among the good old friends, and many thanks for the copies sent me.

Yours, with best wishes for you and your many coworkers.

PRIVATE PETER J. EDWARDS.

Troop I, Third Cavalry, A. S. P. C. 2, A. P. O. 713A.

[From a personal letter to President Smith]:

DURANGO, COLORADO, May 29, 1919.

Since coming here I have been preaching at night and visiting with the members of the church during the afternoons. I am reserving the forenoons for my correspondence and study.

I find the Saints are in a mood to move forward to redeem Zion, and if the entire church feels as the members of this district with which I have come in contact since coming into the field, we are going to be able to raise the half-million dollars this year without any trouble. There is a great desire on the part of the Saints to see this accomplished, and I am glad to know the membership of this district is awake to the needs of the hour. It is my desire to keep them encouraged along this line.

Your brother in Christ,

AMOS T. HIGDON.

CONCEPTION JUNCTION, MISSOURI, June 4, 1919.

Editors Herald: Brother R. S. Salyards, our stake president, has just been here in Bedison Branch on a little mission, and preached six sermons. Though it threatened rain, the weather held good while he was here, and the Saints had the opportunity to come out to hear him. The Lord blessed our brother, and good was done.

When he was here the first time, some of the Saints thought he was hard to become acquainted with. This time they became better acquainted, and say Brother Salyards is a different man from what they thought him to be. I had my opinion of the brother long before I met him—that he was a man of God, and I was not disappointed. It is not always necessary for us to be personally acquainted in this latter-day work to know each other. I was not personally acquainted with Brother Heman C. Smith, but his death affected me more than any other man's death in the church. But why it was so, I cannot tell. Whenever his name is mentioned, or I see his picture, it causes tears to flow. He was a man of God. I never saw his name signed to any of our church literature but what I read it, and always found food for thought. His name and work will never die. May the Lord comfort his family.

Brother Salyards is a man with a broad mind, capable of doing his work, and able to teach the Saints. His effort is to help his brothers and sisters to become more useful in the Lord's work. We do ourselves the most good when we do something for others.

A. JENSEN.

ARTLAND, SASKATCHEWAN, June 4, 1919.

Editors Herald: Three auto loads of our Saints went across country to Battleford, to hear the debate between Elder Daniel Macgregor and an Adventist minister. About four hundred were in attendance. This debate was held June 1 and 2. Among those in attendance from here were Elder A. J. Cornish and wife, Elder W. J. Cornish and wife, Brethren H. Millen and W. McMillan. These prevailed upon Elder Macgregor to favor us with a series of meetings to last one week, commencing June 10. The meetings are to be held in the hall at Senlac, to let our neighbors know us better.

Elder J. J. Cornish has been in Washington and British Columbia on mission work for nearly a year. His wife and daughter will join him there soon and remain for a few months.

One of our new members, a colored brother from Jamaica, has been giving us some interesting talks at Religio. One was about an earthquake he had witnessed. He was a soldier belonging to the colored troops there. He included an experience in whale-fishing. Brother W. G. Allison, our worthy Religio president, gives us some excellent surprises by way of programs.

Brother Howard Allison, our youngest priest, has been giving us some good food for thought in his sermons. One of his illustrations told of trapping coyotes. The big thing was the catching, not the style of trap, so is it with the snares Satan sets for us.

CORRESPONDENT.

FREEDOM, OKLAHOMA, June 5, 1919.

Editors Herald: I am now at Freedom, and am going to stay until after Sunday, which is Children's Day here, then I will go back to Wilmore, Kansas. I just commenced an investigation of the Latter Day Saint faith, about March 1, at M. S. Moreland's, Brother Oglesby's, and C. V. Moody's, and find it, to the best of my judgment, to be the restored Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints that I have been looking for for a number of years.

I was baptized and confirmed last Sunday, June 1, as a new member, and I desire the prayers of all the Saints that I may have entire comprehension of the holy word and commandments of God, to keep and teach me in a manner that I may become a laborer in his vineyard.

I am sending for some books to study, and desire if you have any surplus tracts for distribution that you will send me some of them, also. Also send me the names of Saints or missionaries in southwestern Kansas, and where located, as I may wish to visit them this summer as I am out working.

Your brother in Christ,

J. M. EAGAN.

LINVILLE, ARKANSAS, June 6, 1919.

Editors Herald: I am on Mulberry Mountain trying to tell the beautiful gospel, and having a good meeting at this place. But oh, how sad everything looks. It is raining almost every day, and the farmers are wondering what will become of their crops, and I am wondering what will become of their souls.

What a wonderful time we are living in. I often think about what the historian, Mr. Farrar, said about pagan society, at the time when the Sun of righteousness arose with healing in his wings. He said, "Never did a grosser darkness or a thicker mist of moral pestilence brood over the surface of pagan society than at that period." Are we not about in that sad condition now? Where is the faith the Saints of God once had? Yes, let us ask again, Where is the love that the beautiful gospel always brought to man's heart? Has the power of the gospel forever gone? I do not wonder at our Savior asking the question, "When the Son of man cometh, will he find faith on the earth?"

Ah, how wonderful was that ministry of the living word in all its simplicity and tenderness. It was a constant miracle in assuaging and comforting the troubled spirits of men. Can we not find that love and peace again in the gospel? Yes, I think I hear the Spirit say, "Jesus Christ is coming soon and then we will have peace and love."

Yes, I look beyond these sad times that are now on us, when inspiration will again come to the church in power to prepare the Saints for the coming of our Savior, to reign a thousand years with us. So let us bear our cross and endure our trials though they may be many. The Lord has always spoken peace to our troubled souls. Our Savior has promised to be with us until the end, so let us endure. This is the sifting time. Who will be able to stand?

We have accepted the gospel and it will accomplish the work whereunto it has been sent. Zion will be redeemed and the pure in heart will see God. So may the Lord bless his work this year, and may the Saints try to live nearer him than ever before.

This year will have a sad story to tell when it has passed by. So let us be up and doing.

Your brother in the gospel,

E. A. ERWIN.

[Elder J. W. Layton writes to President Smith concerning his work in the old historic houses at Nauvoo, as follows]:

NAUVOO, ILLINOIS, May 25, 1919.

It has been some time since I have written you.

Everything is moving about the same here. We have a good many visitors when the weather is fine. We have among them over one hundred elders and women (young) from Utah and we try to give them some tracts but do not antagonize them, but talk in a friendly way. We have some very nice talks with some, and some seem to be really interested and want to know the facts; then there are others who do not seem to care, only to see the houses.

We have given away quite a number of tracts and we are trying to make it pleasant for visitors.

Wife and self go to Montrose when the Sunday mornings are fine. I talked to them in the morning two weeks since.

Since commencing this we had four visitors in the house and around the places. We are doing our best to enlighten the people that visit here.

TAYLORVILLE, ILLINOIS, June 8, 1919.

Editors Herald: I am writing this to express my appreciation for the church papers. They surely do contain a store of valuable information.

I was especially impressed by the sermon in the HERALD of June 4, "On the threshold of a new era." Surely the leading officials of the church and the editors receive some very harsh criticisms on many subjects, especially from the advocates of socialistic ideas and labor unions.

I am especially glad to learn that this is one thing the Lamoni Stake will not have to overcome, and hope the other stakes are in accord, for the Saints will have to attain a higher plane before reaching Zion conditions.

To be sure, some such advocates, holding views on certain subjects as they do, can make a great showing by not looking into the effects on our fellow men. Such a man was a Belgian I was talking to not long ago. He claimed that the whole State of California, and those similarly situated, would be in a state of starvation when prohibited from making wine of their grapes. I could have told him that it would allow California to send many more raisins to such countries as his to prevent starvation, but like many others laboring under that spirit, he didn't want to hear what anyone else had to say about it.

I realize that the Lord has yet a great work to accomplish. A great increase of knowledge will be needed. The glory of God is intelligence, but we will have to attain to a higher plane than "might makes right" to receive that glory.

If the Saints had been a city set on a hill, a light to the world in the truest sense, and in a condition to receive the intelligence of God along the line of invention alone, we would to-day be the wealthiest people in the world. In 1830, one speaking of the inventions of to-day as they actually exist would have been counted insane. Yet why should we not possess a greater knowledge than the world, and anticipate the future?

I am glad we have such a noble set of men leading this work, and trust they will ever be firm and even bolder than now in condemning that which is foreign to the gospel.

Ever praying and doing what we can for the success of the work and the redemption of Zion,

Your brother,

G. E. MOSES.

[A letter to the First Presidency]:

ATTLEBORO, MASSACHUSETTS, June 9, 1919.

Last Sunday was Children's Day with us. Our church was well filled, both in the morning and at the evening service. We had our special exercises in the evening. A majority of our primary children are from homes whose parents do not belong to our church, so on occasions where the children take part the parents always come out; it is hard to get them out at any other time, as they are not interested in any kind of religion, but they always seem solicitous for their children.

To-night a number of our people take part in a community program given in our high school. We have a special community feature every month in our high school, but to-night's program will be extra fine, and a number of our singers have been rehearsing with the people for some weeks for this event. I am on the entertaining committee of the Attleboro Fellowship Community's work. One of the principal features of the work of the Attleboro Community Fellowship is the Americanizing of our foreign citizens, not only having them naturalized citizens, but getting them to attend our night schools, and take up the studies they should have to make them thorough American people. We have been successful along this line; large Americanization classes were had all last winter, with good results.

Our "Orioles" have come to be recognized by the citizens of this city; probably because of the help given in the last drive for the Salvation Army. At this time our girls did finely. Next Sunday the Elks of this place are going to have a big celebration of Flag Day in one of our theaters, and our Orioles are to attend in a body in uniform, seats being reserved for them as well as all patriotic orders of this city.

Our work is progressing very nicely. We are not making any converts at the present time, but we are making a lot of friends; probably converts will come in the near future. We have induced our people to pay tithing in small amounts, an envelope system having been established for this purpose, and it is working out nicely.

Sincerely yours,

E. B. HULL.

SENLAC, SASKATCHEWAN, June 11, 1919.

Editors Herald: Well, the fight is over! Three months ago I received from a professor of the Adventist academy of Battleford, Saskatchewan, a letter inclosing a signed proposition for debate. Of course, it was a proposition affirming the exclusive merits of the Saturday Sabbath. Indeed, that is about all Adventists talk about anyway.

After due consultation with members of the Twelve, we accepted the gauge of battle and everything was fixed for June 1, in the old town of Battleford.

Although this was an Adventist stronghold, maintaining as they do an academy of some two hundred pupils, many of them designed for the ministry, we felt sure that the shades of the former fallen conquerors, from whom Battleford got its name, would saturate the ether with enough stuff to put the soul-sleepers to sleep.

The Princess Theater was secured, and before a goodly gathering the fight was on. Our opponents mustered a large choir of excellent talent which did not fail to impress with their excellent renditions, but when they attempted to retain that choir on the rostrum while the shot and shell of argument were doing their deadly work, I deemed it wise to protest against their presence. I objected only on the ground of unfairness in supplementing my opponent's speeches with a "psychological reinforcement." Objection carried, and choir vacated.

The discussion was carried through three sessions of two hours' deliberation each. Needless to say it was a get-and-go-it affair from beginning to end. Professor Farnsworth was probably the ablest Adventist it has ever been my pleasure to meet. He was gentlemanly in demeanor, and clever in argument. It was evident to all, however, that he had met his Waterloo, for upon being challenged to meet the issue again, in Saskatoon or elsewhere, he found a convenient excuse. In thus refusing, he very impressively fulfilled a prediction of the writer, who in his opening speech declared that following this debate the professor would never again meet the issue with the writer.

Had the pleasure of baptizing several after the debate while the whole town, Adventists excepted, are jubilant in acclaiming our victory and the enemy's defeat.

Have just learned that President Rowe, of the same academy, evidently dissatisfied with the result of the battle, has noised around his willingness to meet the issues once more. Have written him. Let's hope that the report is true, for I am convinced that the only way to counteract the influence of this sect is to meet them as often as possible.

Adventism is a delusion. One of the deadliest! And its willingness to meet the issues should never be disregarded.

Several Saint families of the East have recently moved to these parts, and are rejoicing in our wonderful West—a land of unequalled opportunity and awaiting wealth.

Sincerely,

DANIEL MACGREGOR.

JAY, FLORIDA, June 13, 1919.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I have sent anything to your columns, but I want you to know that I am yet alive in this glorious work. I was baptized in 1881 and I thank God for permitting me to see the true way before it was too late. I was raised a Baptist, my mother and father both belonging to that church.

Upon hearing this gospel my mother recognized at once that it was of God and, after eighteen years' membership, died in full faith.

My husband is an elder in the church, and though he experiences much of the bitter along with the sweet, he is trying to stand firm for the right. The people here seem to enjoy his preaching but are slow to take hold of the gospel. The doctrine seems to be too strong for them.

We are just a little band of unorganized Saints here. Have no place to hold services except in our homes. We experience many hindrances by not being organized.

I do try every day to live the life of a Saint, and I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may hold out faithfully to the end. "Let us pray for one another, for the day is fading fast," so, I am ever praying for the upbuilding of Zion.

Your sister in Christ,

ELIZABETH BOOKER.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, June 13, 1919.

Editors Herald: I want to show my love and thankfulness for my brothers and sisters in the great restored gospel, and will send a letter to the Saints in the best paper in the world.

I am twenty years old and have been in the church most of my life and want to repay my parents and brothers and sisters for all I have learned in the gospel by helping them and profiting by my experiences.

I have had a friend, an English boy, living the gospel with me the last two years, and it is twice as easy to shun evil when there is some one to help you. I have learned what power and blessings can be derived from unity though there are only the two of us. We were both called to the priesthood this spring and are preparing to fight for the right.

It has been my lot to live near, and work in the centers of the automobile industry, and I can truly say that the harvest of souls to be redeemed from sin is greater than we can imagine. I think sometimes that if God looks upon the actions of his angels as folly, how must he look upon the condition of the lives of some of the children of men of this day and age? Truly his anger is kindled and punishments are near at hand.

We as Saints should rejoice and have faith and patience to do our duty individually, and remember the Nephite saints who, though they suffered much persecution and trouble while looking for the coming of the Lord, were more than repaid by the blessings they received and the joy of seeing God's power manifest.

We each have a body intrusted to our care, and if we make the actions of the members of that body perfect, we will have joy and peace, though called upon to pass through experiences that test us in our weakest qualities. Many of our trials are mental, as we might say, over the disappointments we experience in the actions of our friends and brothers and sisters. If we were chastened more, physically, we would not be too proud to love one another more. All of man's wisdom was vain in combating the scourge of influenza, yet most of us have forgotten it already.

I am trying to make my actions reflect the intents of my heart, and I find that the battle is never won. If we cease shedding our light either in public or private we soon become miserable people and we need to fortify ourselves while alone, through prayer and reflection. Thus we may profit by our own mistakes and those of others.

I sometimes wonder how our Creator can look upon so much wickedness and see so many precious souls give up hope of doing right by only seeing the selfish, frivolous, dishonest condition that is prevalent in this, the once "land of the free and home of the brave."

The Saints are the salt of the earth, and until we rid ourselves of all pride and redeem ourselves before God as a body and let love rule and humbly seek divine approval of our actions and can prove to the children of men by example that our claims are true, the Evil One will have all opportunity to lead thousands of souls down in sin to death. Surely we do not need punishment to make us humble and love one another in the face of our responsibility to those who do not know the angel's message. We should all be live coals of fire, burning always, burning with God's Spirit, shining and confirming our message with power and much assurance. We should dry ourselves of all the water of that river of sin that Lehi and Nephi saw and burn the Lord's Spirit that the destroying angel may know us and pass us by.

That we may arouse ourselves and enjoy the gospel as we can and not wait to be chastened before we demonstrate what we teach, is my prayer. We expect to be at conference in Flint and meet many of the Michigan Saints.

Your brother in the gospel,

G. INGLERIGHT.

DALLAS, TEXAS, June 15, 1919.

Editors Herald: Perhaps you would like to hear from the Dallas Branch. We are enjoying the Spirit of the Lord and trying hard in our weak way to build up the work that it may spread over this city. We have a membership of ninety-nine, and most all are live wires.

It is wonderful to note the progress this little branch has made in the last five years. When I embraced this glorious gospel the work had just begun here. A little three-room house was given to us. We tore the partition out of the front rooms and placed a few chairs, six or eight, and a couple or three homemade seats, and came and worshiped every Sunday.

Now we have a nice church, well seated, and we are growing. We expect to go forward, no matter how hard the Devil tries to hinder. We know when he is hindering he is angry because we are about to run over him with our army of soldiers, with a command, "Forward march."

There are many honest hearts here. We are placing tract cases in every place we can get permission to put them, and filling them with all kinds of good tracts. The gospel literature board is active. We put 150 HERALDS and Ensigns in the jail one afternoon and the prisoners accepted them gladly. It is our desire to canvass the city.

Our dear president of the branch, Brother Sidney Gray, gives us his support in every available way. We are co-workers in the grand work of God.

We wish to secure a tent to place around in different parts of the city, that we may have preaching all the time in some part.

Our worthy seventy, Brother S. W. Simmons, has done much good here and baptized about twenty in the last year. We wish him to be the tent master.

We are not forgetting the Christmas offering.

Mother's Day will be July 1. We will not be a back number in this noble work either.

We all have the spirit of hurry, get busy, and see that our neighbors are warned, everything in order, that our place in Zion may be secured.

May we have your prayers for the Dallas Branch, is the request of your sister,

In gospel bonds,

MATTIE WILLIAMS.

CENTRALIA, WASHINGTON, June 22, 1919.

Editors Herald: Just a few notes of our continued efforts here. Elder J. J. Cornish held a series of meetings for four weeks in the church during the latter part of March and first two weeks in April. Good liberty, enlightening discussions, splendid attention and interest were the principal points noteworthy during the series.

The Saints were greatly benefited in many ways, and their continued attendance was encouraging. Also a number of nonmembers displayed their interest by being present at many of the different meetings. Two were baptized.

We were loth to have Brother Cornish leave our community for other localities. His genial nature won a warm spot in our hearts, and his beaming countenance was ever a bright ray of light or sunshine, encouraging, exhorting, and uplifting. We are hoping that he will see fit to visit us again before the year closes.

Elder S. S. Smith, recently from the East, but now residing with his family at Bellingham, visited Centralia lately and delivered several good sermons.

The work here is moving on slowly and quietly this spring. With a growing interest the Saints are looking forward to the coming district conference and reunion to be held at Bellingham the first ten days in August.

We desire to continue on in line with God's own plan, the Holy Spirit ever directing our work until the final sound of triumph.

LULA PREMO, Branch Correspondent.

TULSA, OKLAHOMA, June 24, 1919.

Editors Herald: The hearts of the Saints of this branch were made sad by the death of Wayne Moore, sixteen-year-old son of Sister Cara Bailey Brand.

Thursday evening, June 12, the ladies of this branch gave an ice cream festival on the church lawn, Wayne attending. After helping to carry chairs and tables to their places he left the church between five and three minutes of twelve, walking home, a distance of about eleven blocks. When nearly home he heard a disturbance at a neighbor's and as he walked on to where the noise seemed to be, he was shot by a policeman, who fired upon him thinking him to be a robber. Wayne was taken to the Tulsa Hospital, where he died Friday, June 13, at 11 a. m.

Words fail when we try to express our love and high esteem for this grand boy. His death brought a deep sadness to all who knew him, as he was loved by all. He was the purest, noblest boy I have ever known, his life being one of love and duty to his loved ones and the church. Many times have we been to the prayer service, also Religio and preaching, when Wayne was the only young person present. He was always willing to serve and always with a kind word and sweet smile.

How we miss him! Yet we do not miss him as will his loved ones. His first thought seemed always for mother, grandmother, or home.

We know Wayne is gone to return with the Savior, yet we mourn and ask the Saints to pray for comfort and peace to come to those loving, sad hearts.

Only hoping my life may be better by the beautiful example given us by Wayne, I am sincerely,

REVA F. CRANE.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, June 25, 1919.

Editors Herald: The Religio and Sunday school, at the close of Children's Day, on June 8, presented a fine screen picture on the life of Christ and the effort proved to be generally satisfactory. There was a large assembly on the church lawn, and while the sun was setting, the beauty of the surrounding verdure, the singing of hymns by the Saints, and the sweet songs of the young Temple Builders, all lent a charm of beauty and gladness to the occasion.

The institute class work we understand has closed for the present, to be resumed later on.

The list of books in the library, which is in charge of Sister M. T. Short, is being added to, and a good opportunity to both young and old is given every afternoon to read the literature there, both secular and religious.

The local missionary project of a wider circulation of the Ensign, through the efforts of Brother John Lloyd and his many assistants, promises to be a success.

In these days of reconstruction, in the opinion of some, there is a surplus of independent thought extant, even in the Latter Day Saint Church, but all are made to feel the heavenly glow of the Spirit when "independent thought" is expressed, and the coordinating processes of the new movement in the church are talked about and put in motion.

Amid all the changes occurring now, it is truly remarkable to see the expressions of charity and forbearance in our people and to witness with what integrity and faithfulness of Spirit they are going forward in their varied efforts toward the bringing forth of the redemption of Zion.

The isolated ones and even the shut-ins who are sick and afflicted, all may rejoice together with the active workers and leaders in this glorious work, for it is the promise that "if thou art faithful unto the end, thou shalt have a crown of immortality and eternal life."

The fact that there is more truth and light come to us through "the group movement" is evident. John Robinson and John Smyth, the Pilgrim pastors, charged their church members "not to come to a period in religion," but to keep their minds open "for more truth and light."

So it appears it has taken three or four centuries to teach us the good of "the newly accepted" "group movement." A few of the Saints are slow in taking up with the group idea; they will meet at the cottage prayer meeting once a month, but every other week, never.

Then that other movement, which is for the benefit of the young is a most remarkable and unprecedented one. That before the coming of the end "he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers," is prophetic, is proved by reading Malachi in his last writings. In accord with this sentiment, a dozen prayers were offered for the young on Sunday, the 15th, early in the morning, at the old folks' prayer meeting.

This intercession for the youth was by the special request of the presiding elder; and an influential brother present stated that by actual observation, he could testify that some of our young people required an intensive supervision and a serious looking after. There were forty present and nearly all spoke to the point.

Upon its younger members will soon rest the responsibility and burdens of the church; and the work of consecrated hearts and hands, everywhere, must be elicited in their behalf.

At the Sunday school on Children's Day, June 8, when thirty-six boys and girls were baptized and confirmed, there were nine hundred and seventy-six present; and on June 13 and 15 occurred the Religio spring festival.

This latter event was the result of much thought and earnest effort on the part of Brother John Lloyd and his assistants, and no pains were spared to obtain good speakers and secure excellent interest.

The decorations were beautiful, and the speeches of Brethren J. A. Tanner, Elbert A. Smith, and Walter W. Smith which were highly instructive, were heard and appreciated by large audiences.

Brother Granville Trowbridge was here on Sunday afternoon and conducted, in the upper room, a round table for the benefit of the officers and teachers, and at this hour also was a lively prayer meeting in the lower auditorium, and this was well attended.

The evening's discourse was given on the lawn, as usual, and the text, "A sightless church," like the one in the morning based on scripture, found in 1 John 3 on love, elicited much food for thought.

The moving picture show has come to stay and it seems to answer the purposes of a long-felt want. Both the young and old are its advocates just now. ABBIE A. HORTON.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, June 25, 1919.

Editors Herald: We enjoyed a brief visit from Bishop George Lewis of Australia and Bishop James F. Keir, May 28. The order of the service was changed in the evening, and both Brother Lewis and Brother Keir spoke to us.

The sacrament service Sunday, June 1, was especially good, and was characterized by a note of gratitude, inasmuch as it marked the return of the last of our soldier boys, Brother Leon Bauer.

A number of our Burlington people attended the district conference at Fort Madison, Iowa, June 7 and 8. Friday evening was given to the auxiliaries, and an enjoyable program rendered. All the conference sessions seemed characterized by a cheery good feeling and, though there were no weighty matters of business or special manifestations, all the visitors seemed to enjoy to the utmost the hospitality of the Fort Madison Saints. The completion of plans was considered for the reunion to be held at Montrose, Iowa, August 21 to 31. It is hoped that a number of our people other than those resident in the district will take advantage of this opportunity to visit historic Nauvoo.

Children's Day was observed by the Sunday school during the morning service hour, June 15, with an appropriate and well-rendered program, at the close of which five children from the school were baptized, and two more in the evening.

In accord with previous request of the branch, Brother Henry C. Smith, Church Architect, visited us Wednesday, June 18, looked over the ground and offered his suggestions in the evening. Provision was made for the purchase of the lot adjoining, and definite action as to plans deferred for further consideration.

Brother John Jenkins and family, of Hiteman, Iowa, were with us over Sunday, the 22d, and Brother Jenkins spoke for us in the evening.

CORRESPONDENT.

SARANAC LAKE, NEW YORK, June 26, 1919.

Editors Herald: I wrote you from Niagara Falls, last February, where I was holding a series of meetings. It was a pleasure to be with the Saints in Niagara Falls, and to enjoy the hospitality of their homes and their liberality in other ways. Brother Will Landes is president of the branch, and Brother George Landes is priest. Both are good men, as are the other officers. We are blessed by having good, talented men both in Buffalo and Niagara Falls. I was made at home at Brother and Sister Green's and felt it was good to have Saints to look after our temporal welfare.

Brother James Bishop was with me, or I was with him (I don't know which), part of the time while I was in the "Falls," and well, those who know James can imagine how many arguments we had. The only difficulty seemed to be that we always agreed, until one fatal evening with a cloudless sky, and the bright beams of Venus shining in the west with Jupiter majestically sailing through the constellation of Gemini, and Aldebaran looking at us with his one ghost eye, alas! we fell into a dispute about the stars. We did not fight (James is too big), there are so many stars anyway. What's the use? Name them anything you want to, and let it go at that.

Brother Bishop and the writer went from the "Falls" to Greenwood, where we were entertained by Brother Jason Weeks and wife. We held forth in the church at Greenwood until March 26, when I left for Wellsville, and Brother Bishop went to his home. I held a few services in Wellsville, and then left for General Conference. We had fairly good audiences at Greenwood, and enjoyed our stay there very much. Well, nobody who attended the last General Conference will ever forget it. Personally, I even forgot the days of the week, and did not even make a speech at that.

From Lamoni I went to Independence, as I had promised to call on some people there that are from New York State. I went from Independence to Warrensburg, where my daughter lives. Warrensburg is a very pretty town of about six thousand inhabitants. It is a dandelion city. The Saints have a nice brick church, and a fine-spirited people. I visited my old traveling companion, Brother I. M. Smith, and his excellent wife Clara, and found them in a nice little home, and as genial as ever. I preached once for the Saints while there.

While in Warrensburg one of the brethren took us over to Holden where I had the privilege of going through the Saints' Home. It is a very beautiful structure and amid quiet surroundings. The church is indeed fortunate in securing such a nice home for our aged Saints.

It was with regret that I turned my face eastward, and left the smiling fields and even the mud of old Missouri. A day and a night on the train and I am in Buffalo. Day or night, I know where to go when I am in Buffalo. Brother George LaFey is as round and as good-natured as ever. I attended the Wednesday night service in Buffalo and met our friends there (some of them). Doctor Weegar is always on the job.

From Buffalo I went home. It is surprising how fast some girls grow. I am glad that I can get home once in a while or I am afraid that I would not know some of mine. Brother Ralph asked me to preach in Providence, and I did so with good liberty. Ah! Providence, God's providence, "How dear to the heart are the scenes of my childhood."

I attended the district conference at Fall River, May 10 and 11. We had a good conference and a splendid, spiritual time in the prayer service. Brother Harry Howlett is president of the branch in Fall River, and is doing well. Brother E. L. Traver of the Boston Branch was short of a preacher, so the writer went to the "Hub" to fill the gap. I tried twice to do so, and hope that I succeeded fairly well.

A call came the next week from Dennisport on old Cape Cod for a preacher, so Brother Suttill asked the writer to go. Of course it is always a severe(?) trial for me to go to the Cape. The summertime is the busy time now for Dennisport as it is quite a resort for the city people. We held services nearly every night while I was there, and had a fairly good turn out, and the last night the church was full. The church looks very nice inside, as they have new, comfortable seats, and it is always kept spotlessly clean. It was good to meet with old friends and sad to think that there were some that we could never see again in this life.

From Dennisport I went to New London, and found Brother Thomas Whipple able to get around on crutches but still very lame. You would have to take away the use of both legs and arms from Brother Whipple to keep him from trying to do what he could in the field or in the house. Some of our people that were in New London during the war are now in other places. But we have about twelve left in New London and Groton. We held two interesting services while there.

From New London I went to Saranac Lake, stopping in Providence and attending the Wednesday night service. The Spirit of God was there. How nice it is to be remembered by our heavenly Father. I have been here at Saranac Lake for two weeks. Last Monday night I baptized a sister who has been trying to understand the work, but she was unable to understand the English language very well, so we read to her out of her own German Bible and pointed her to the passages of Scripture that spoke of our work, and she could see, as the Spirit made the word plain to her. She is now rejoicing in the truth. The people that come here are from all parts of the United States and from other countries seeking health, in this high altitude.

Yours as ever, GEORGE W. ROBLEY.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Post Conference Appointments

The following list of appointments made by the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric at its June meeting is published as supplemental to the General Conference list. The appointments are at once operative.

In addition to these definite appointments, selection of group supervisors of missionary work has been made. It is not deemed necessary to publish notice of the appointment of those supervisors, but the supervisors themselves will be notified by circular or personal letter. It is expected that the group supervisors will at once get in touch with the missionary force placed under them. This supervision does not, of course, apply to the local work, that being distinct from the missionary.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President of the Church.

- Angus, A. D., Kirtland District.
Bailey, J. W. A., Holden Stake. M.
Berve, Amos, Eastern Iowa District. L.
Blackmore, John, Northern New South Wales. M.
Brown, Bruce E., Southern Missouri District, Springfield objective. L.
Carpenter, C. L., Kewanee District. L.
Case, Hubert, American Indians. M.
Cousins, Charles, Sheffield District. L.
Davis, E. R., Arizona. L.
Davis, James W., Ohio. M.
Davis, William, Eastern Michigan District. M.
Dexter, W. R., Lamoni Stake. M.
Doty, B. H., Central Michigan District, Bay City objective. M.
Dowker, J. A., Lamoni Stake. M.
Ellis, W. D., Western Michigan District. M.
Etzenhouser, M. A., Utah District, Salt Lake City objective. L.
Etzenhouser, Virgil B., and wife, Hawaii Territory, Honolulu objective. L.
Garrett, W. H., Superannuated.
Gray, Sidney N., Spokane District, Spokane objective. M.
Goodrich, V. M., Far West Stake. L.
Gresty, J. T., Australia.
Halb, Jacob G., and wife, Switzerland. M.
Hall, Abel, Manchester and Sheffield Districts, Leeds and Bradford objective. L.
Hawn, O. J., Northwestern Ohio District. M.
Holm, S. S., Utah District. M.
Houghton, Leonard, Southern Wisconsin District. M.
Karlstrom, A. V., and wife, Society Islands.
Lennox, E. J., Northern Wisconsin District. M.
Luff, Joseph, Referred to Presidency and Presiding Bishopric.
McConnaughy, J. C., Kirtland District. M.
McKim, B. L., Central Oklahoma District. M.
McKnight, J. W., Western Michigan District. M.
Macgregor, Daniel, Iowa. M.
Metcalf, J. W., Southern Indiana District, Kentucky and Tennessee Districts. M.
Miller, C. Edward, Massachusetts District. L.
Mills, A. H., Referred to Presidency.
Mussell, Fred T., Northeastern Missouri District. L.
Orton, E. M., Central Michigan District. M.
Osler, William, New York and Philadelphia District, First Philadelphia Church objective. L.
Overcast, John T., Kentucky and Tennessee District. M.
Parsons, A. H., Independence Stake. L.
Passman, Harry, and wife, Palestine, Jerusalem objective. M.
Peisker, E. A. H., West Australia. M.
Perkins, D. B., Owen Sound District. L.
Phillips, A. B., New England States and Maritime Provinces. M.
Pierce, H. N., Central Nebraska District. M.
Pitt, Sidney, Little Sioux District. L.
Pycock, James, London and Chatham Districts. M.
Reeves, Gomer T., Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District. M.
Richards, William B., Winnipeg District. L.
Robley, George F., New York District. M.
Stead, J. D., Alberta District. L.

"There's many a gold nugget in the rock that does not show itself at once."

Stoft, A. E., Spring River District, Pittsburg objective. L.
 Taylor, J. R., Australia. M.
 Thorburn, G. W., Eastern Montana. M.
 Tomlinson, G. C., jr., Massachusetts District. M.
 Trapp, E. J., Southwestern England, and Eastern and Western Wales Districts. L.
 Ulrich, E. L., Northwestern Ohio District. M.
 Umphrey, Matthew, Central Michigan District. L.
 White, Ammon, Idaho District.
 Wildermuth, J. B., Northern Wisconsin District. M.
 Wipper, F. F., Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana
 District. M.
 Yates, D. Amos, Northern California District. M.

Conference Minutes

MOBILE.—Conference assembled at Bay Minette, Alabama, May 10, 1919. Prayer meeting at 9 a. m., A. E. Warr and Zenas Booker presiding. Business opened at 10 a. m., with district president in the chair. Brethren A. E. Warr and A. G. Miller were chosen to assist in presiding. Minutes of last conference were read and approved. President, secretary-treasurer, and Bishop's agent reported. Treasurer's report adopted as read. On hand $5.10. An auditing committee reported agent's books correct. Branches reporting: Mobile, 113; Vancleave, 177; Escatawpa, 198; Bay Minette, 357; Theodore, 71. Work in the Vancleave, Mobile, and Bay Minette Branches was reported by their presidents. The Escatawpa priesthood refused to report through the president. Individual reports were read and district president instructed to make a special effort to adjust the difficulty over reporting before next conference. Officers elected: President, T. J. Booker; secretary-treasurer, Edna Cochran; member library board, Irene Davies. A. D. McCall and Henry Hough were chosen by president as counselors and choice was ratified. A committee was appointed to draft a letter of condolence to Sister Heman C. Smith. The following was unanimously adopted: Whereas, the general church is working upon the coordinating system, and whereas as a district we concur in the ideas therein contained and desire to be in harmony with the general body, therefore be it resolved, That hereafter nominations of the heads of the Sunday school, Religio, and Woman's Auxiliary be lodged with the district presidency, subject to the approval of these departments. Delegates to General Conference reported. Conference adjourned to meet at Escatawpa, Mississippi, on Friday before the full moon in September. Edna Cochran, secretary, Moss Point, Mississippi.

LITTLE SIOUX.—At Missouri Valley, Iowa, June 8 and 9, President Amos Berve in charge. Minutes of the last conference were read. President, secretary, treasurer, Bishop's agent reported. Bishop's agent's report showed receipts for four months ending May 31, $4,023.87. Officers elected: Amos Berve, president; Ada S. Putnam, secretary; Charles F. Putnam, treasurer; Raymond Smith, member library board. Olive Derry, chorister, and A. M. Fyrando, Bishop's agent, were also sustained. Samuel C. Smith, of the Biglers Grove Branch, was ordained to the office of priest. By motion the district president is hereafter empowered to perfect the organization of the conference, i. e., to select ushers, organist, and whatever other help might be needed. Preaching by Carl Ballantyne, C. B. Woodstock, Amos Berve, and Charles J. Smith. Next conference to meet at Magnolia, Iowa, in October. Ada S. Putnam, clerk.

The Presidency

CHANGE IN RECORDER'S OFFICE

At the recent sittings of the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, Brother C. I. Carpenter, who for nineteen years has been in the office of Church Recorder, most of that time as Recorder, was appointed to Kewanee District to take the presidency thereof. The good work of Brother Carpenter as Recorder is recognized and valued. His painstaking attention to details is well known and his widely-known signature will be missed by those who correspond with that department.

We commend Brother Carpenter to the Saints of Kewanee District, and feel they are to be congratulated in securing his services.

On behalf of the church the undersigned extends expressions of appreciation for the long services he has rendered as Recorder, while we express the hope and belief that in his new field of endeavor he will find much satisfaction and pleasure in the rendering of much-needed service.

Brother Frank A. Russell has been appointed Church Recorder vice C. I. Carpenter, and we bespeak the support and confidence of the Saints for the brother in this office.

Respectfully submitted,

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President of the Church.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 1, 1919.

APPOINTMENT OF HISTORIAN AND ASSISTANT

To the Church: It will be remembered that the matter of reorganizing the historical department of the church was referred to the First Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric. This action was had by the conference of 1918, and Heman C. Smith was continued as Historian, with Herbert S. Salisbury assistant. The recent decease of the Historian has made it necessary to further reorganize the department, and this was taken under consideration by the council above-mentioned. On recommendation of the President of the church Brother Walter W. Smith, of Independence, Missouri, was appointed Church Historian, and Heman Hale Smith, son of the late Heman C. Smith, was appointed Assistant Historian.

These brethren come to the work of the department of history with splendid equipment in the way of preparation, and we feel that the work of the department will be well cared for. Brother W. W. Smith has other burdens to carry which necessarily limit the time and attention he can give to historical matters, but the work will be organized, the burdens equalized as rapidly as possible, with the interests of all concerned in view.

We bespeak for the department of history the confidence of the Saints.

Respectfully submitted,

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President of the Church.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 1, 1919.

The Bishopric

By action of General Conference the elders will hereafter report monthly to the Presiding Bishop their receipts and expenditures instead of annually. The new form of expense reports have been mailed to each general church officer and missionary. If, within the next few days, you do not receive these books, kindly notify this office.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, June 30, 1919.

Notice of Appointments of District Chorister

To Whom Concerned: Brother Edwin Fishburn, 695 East Speer Boulevard, Denver, Colorado, has been recommended by the Eastern Colorado District for appointment as chorister of that district.

Brother Fishburn's qualifications for this position coming to our knowledge, we take pleasure in publishing this his appointment and trust that his district may profit abundantly from his labors.

We therefore bespeak for Brother Fishburn the hearty support of all the musical forces of this district and urge that they cooperate with him in every way for the accomplishment of the musical advancement of the district.

Respectfully,

A. N. HOXIE,
General Chorister.
 ARTHUR H. MILLS,
General Secretary.

Approved by the Presidency,
 FREDERICK M. SMITH,
 June 26, 1919.

Conference Notices

Northern California, at reunion camp grounds, Irvington, California, August 22, 2 p. m., and on the 23d. Full statistical reports desired from all the branches, as well as spiritual reports from all branch presidents desired. Don't forget this, brethren. All elders and missionaries, including all who hold Melchisedec priesthood, are asked to report. Send them to John A. Lawn, Hollister, California, two weeks before the convening of conference. We are expecting some of the "wise men of the East" to be at the reunion and conference. C. W. Hawkins, president; John A. Lawn, secretary.

Central Nebraska Sunday school, Religio, and church work will be held Friday and Saturday, July 18 and 19 next, by order of the presidency of district. Levi Gamet, F. S. Gatenby, William Self.

Western Colorado, Bayfield, August 16 and 17.

Two-Day Meetings

July 19 and 20 at McGregor, Michigan. Expect one of the Quorum of Twelve to be present. All are welcome. Bring your baskets. William Fligg, president.

Addresses

Mrs. Emma Burton, 719 East Fourth Street, Santa Ana, California.

Horatio W. Howlett, 199 Ward Street, Fall River, Massachusetts.

John W. Taylor, Hope Cottage, Eccles Old Road, Pendleton, Manchester, England.

Richard D. Weaver, Box 335, Trenton, Missouri.

Reunion Calendar

(The figures in parenthesis give the page of the HERALD on which details have been given.)

Northern Dakota, Graham's farm, north of Burlington, July 4-14 (503).

Central Nebraska, Neligh, Nebraska, July 10-20 (407, 527). Chatham, Ontario, Erie Beach, July 18-28 (598).

Massachusetts, Onset, Massachusetts, July 19-August 4 (527).

Kentucky and Tennessee, 7 miles east of Paris, Kentucky, July 26 to August 3 (654).

Toronto, Low Banks, Ontario, July 26 to August 10.

Lamoni Stake, Lamoni, July 30 to August 10 (655).

Alabama, McKenzie, August 1-10 (527).

Seattle and British Columbia, Bellingham, Washington, August 1-10 (527).

Western Oklahoma, Sander's Grove at Calumet, August 1-10 (552).

Southern California, Hermosa Beach, August 1-10 (598, 654). Eastern Oklahoma, North of Fort Towson, August 1-10 (654).

Kirtland, Ohio, Kirtland, Ohio, August 7-17 (311).

Des Moines, Runnells, Iowa, August 8-17 (575).

Clinton, Missouri, Eldorado Springs, August 8-17 (598, 654).

Southwestern Texas, Pipe Creek, Texas, August 8-17 (conference and ten-day meeting) (655).

Northeastern Nebraska, Southern Nebraska, Pottawattamie, and Fremont, Iowa, Council Bluffs, Iowa, August 15-24 (552).

Northern California, Irvington, California, August 14-24 (654).

Holden, Kansas City, and Independence Stakes, Pertle Springs, August 15-24 (598).

Far West, Missouri, Stewartsville, August 15-24 (654).

Little Sioux and Gallands Grove, Dow City, Iowa, August 22-31 (503).

Southeastern Illinois, Springerton, Illinois, August 15-24 (654).

Nauvoo, Illinois, Montrose, Iowa, August 22-31 (527).

Northern Wisconsin, Chetek, August 22-31 (655).

Southern Indiana, Marengo, Indiana, August 22-31 (552).

Southern Idaho, Hagerman, August 22-31.

Northeastern Illinois, Plano, Illinois, August 29 to September 7 (553).

Reunion Notices

Toronto, at Low Banks, Ontario, July 26 to August 10. Missionaries intending to come please send notice as soon as possible. Those wishing tents will do likewise. Further particulars later. A. F. McLean, secretary, 48 Fern Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

Kirtland, at Kirtland, Ohio, August 7 to 17. Send orders for tents to James E. Bishop, care A. E. Stone, R. F. D. 2, Willoughby, Ohio. Meals will be served at the lowest price possible. Elder L. F. P. Curry has prepared an excellent program for institute work. James E. Bishop, for committee.

Our Departed Ones

WELLS.—J. H. Wells was born June 29, 1842, at Webster, Missouri. Baptized March 6, 1887, by Joseph Luff. Died March 28, 1919, at Bozeman, Montana. Funeral attended

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor.

The official organ of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Published every Wednesday by the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. Entered at the post office at Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

PRICE, $1.75 A YEAR IN ADVANCE

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words.

CONTENTS

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| EDITORIAL:  |     |
| The Effect of the War on Religion  | 657 |
| The Historical Department  | 658 |
| Walter Wayne Smith   | 659 |
| Truth and Social Change  | 660 |
| War Savings Stamps   | 660 |
| Confidence and Right Doing   | 660 |
| ORIGINAL ARTICLES:  |     |
| Our Religion, by T. W. Williams  | 661 |
| OF GENERAL INTEREST:  |     |
| Early to Bed and Early to Rise   | 666 |
| Rejects Cigarette Advertising  | 666 |
| WOMAN'S AUXILIARY   |     |
| Mrs. J. A. Gardner—Audentia Anderson—Mrs. D. J. Krahl.   |     |
| LETTER DEPARTMENT   |     |
| G. H. Wixom—Jay L. Fryer—E. B.—E. B. Hull—Private Peter J. Edwards—Amos T. Higdon—A. Jensen—J. M. Eagan—E. A. Erwin—J. W. Layton—G. E. Moses—E. B. Hull—Daniel Macgregor—Elizabeth Booker—G. Ingleright—Mattie Williams—Lulu Premo—Reva F. Crane—Abbie A. Horton—George W. Robley. | 668 |
| MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT  |     |
| FROM HERE AND THERE  | 677 |

by a large crowd of old pioneer friends. Services by A. J. Moore.

ANDREWS.—Samuel Andrews was born November 30, 1856, at Derry, Coleraine County, North Ireland. Baptized about twenty years ago and was a member of the East Delavan Branch. Lived faithful in the work of the Master. Died at Beloit, Wisconsin, June 20, 1919. He did not have a relative in this country yet had many friends. Sermon by W. A. McDowell, assisted by E. A. Townsend. Body laid to rest at Beloit, Wisconsin.

Among other leagues being formed at this time it is of interest to note the organization of the World's League against alcoholism which was made at the Washington conference last month. It was signed on behalf of temperance and prohibition organizations of the following countries: Australia, Canada, England, Denmark, France, Ireland, Japan, Mexico, New Zealand, Scotland, Switzerland, and the United States.

John W. Rushton spoke again at the San Bernardino High School on June 12. His address was reported as being a masterpiece. He also spoke at the Southern California Sunday school picnic, at Pomona, California, on Flag Day, June 14. The speakers included T. W. Williams and George H. Wixom.

The Assistant Church Historian, Professor H. S. Salisbury, left Independence, Wednesday, June 25, for Chicago, where he expected to continue some research work he is doing in the history of Illinois, and take up some matters of interest of the history of the church in Illinois requiring attention.

In The Rock Island Argus for June 9, reference is made to the conference of the Kewanee District. A resolution was adopted in aid of the Jews and in protest against pogroms in Poland and Rumania. The resolution was based upon the work of America in the war, the purpose and ideals of this, the peace for which our Nation has fought, the views of the church, of Christianity and civilization.

Elder U. W. Greene delivered a stirring sermon on the horrors and atrocities of the Huns and Turks. To many of the incidents related he was an eyewitness. He based his sermon upon certain prophecies which he considers were fulfilled by the late war.

Elder Greene was also announced to speak in Rock Island following the conference on "The restoration of Israel to the land of Palestine." He followed with sermons at Moline and Davenport.

Elder F. M. McDowell left Lamoni recently for Iowa City, to attend a meeting of Boy Scout leaders. Orrin Moon, of Lamoni, also is in attendance for the training. Our people all over the church are taking much interest in this special feature for the boys. Brother McDowell expects to devote considerable time this summer to work at the college, in preparation for next year's extension work.

ENSIGN EDITOR RESIGNS

Following his appointment as Historian of the church, Elder Walter W. Smith, who has served for several years as editor of the Zion's Ensign, filed his resignation as editor, to more fully give his time to his other duties. We have not learned of his successor being appointed.

A letter from A. E. Loving, secretary of the Southern Queensland, Australia, District Sunday school association, reports that district in good shape in its Sunday school work. Their April convention was a record breaker in interest and attendance. Though the scourge of influenza has hitherto been kept out of that State by the vigilance of the health officers, it had made some inroads at the time the letter was written, May 20. It being winter season in that southern clime, makes it easy to understand why they are thus afflicted now while the disease has practically subsided in this land.

PRICE LEVEL

The wholesale price level of basic commodities as estimated by the bureau of labor statistics, basing the average for 1913 as 100, was 197 for February this year; 200 for March; 203 for April. These are Chicago figures, and show food prices 18 per cent higher last April than for April, 1918; and 85 per cent higher than for April, 1913. Last week's report shows a decline from December 1, 1918, to March 1, 1919; and a rise then to June 1. The report shows that the cost of men's clothing is almost exactly double, March, 1919, what it was in 1914. The same is true of a woman's budget for clothing. This itself would indicate that there will be no immediate decline.

The Northern Baptist Association at the convention held in Denver, announced a movement for the creation of a fund of one hundred million dollars for the extension work of the Baptist denomination. This sum is in addition to the seventy-five million to be raised by the Southern Baptists. The entire fund to be used in working out their problems.

SUCCESSFUL TWO-DAY MEETINGS

Brother William S. Methner sends us a complete report of the two-day meetings recently held at Coleman, Michigan. Among the speakers we noted Matthew Umphrey, George N. Burt, S. T. Pendleton, O. J. Hawn, Ernest Orton, E. N. Burt. Some good social meetings were enjoyed. Brother

Hawn is reported to have preached a sermon on the lawn lasting two hours and a half.

Estella Wight, editor of Stepping Stones, accompanied by Marcella Schenck and some other friends, recently departed for a place in the mountains west of Denver for a vacation. They sought out a quiet spot where they might have peace and seclusion and rest.

SECOND FLINT BRANCH

In a letter from Pearl Herbst, correspondent of the Second Flint, Michigan, Branch, we learn that in their recent election James Groombridge was chosen branch president. Their meetings are spiritual and uplifting. Choir and orchestra work are reported in good condition and efforts being made to enlarge the scope of their work. The death of William Gilland is noted.

Prayers are desired for S. J. Dawson, who is broken down with nervous prostration.

GRACELAND OFFERS TWO WIRELESS COURSES

Graceland now offers two courses of study in wireless telegraphy to meet the demands of those who wish to take a straight wireless course and complete it in the shortest possible time, and for young men and young women who desire to take wireless in conjunction with other school work.

The Semester Radio Course is offered for the former class. Students taking this course, in eighteen weeks, qualify themselves to pass the United States Government examination for commercial radio operators. The only requirement for entrance is that the student shall have completed grammar school work; those possessing a high school or college education will find same very much to their advantage. The number of hours per week for each subject follows: Code, 19; technical course, lectures and quizzes 5, laboratory 3; traffic regulations and radio law 1; penmanship 5.

The Students' Supplementary Radio Course may be taken in conjunction with work in the regular college departments, and continues throughout the school year. Four hours per week are devoted to class and laboratory work. Students take five to ten hours' code work per week, according to their ability and requirements. Credit is given in the Graceland Academy for satisfactory work in this course since it is classed as a regular science elective. It is believed that this course will meet with great favor because it is a preparation for an interesting and very profitable vocation.

Complete information regarding these courses may be obtained from the new Graceland catalogue. To obtain a copy write The President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

President George N. Briggs, of Graceland College, left June 29 for Chicago and Milwaukee, at which latter place he attended the meetings of the National Educational Association.

SUPERINTENDENT OF BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS WANTED

An all-around handy man who can do steam-fitting, plumbing, boiler repairs, carpentering, concrete work, etc. He must be able to direct the work of students in janitor work, caring for furnace, caring for buildings and grounds, etc. He should be patient, firm, and systematic. Apply to Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

Elder Alma C. Barmore held a two weeks' meeting in the Cotati Congregational Church near Santa Rosa, California, the last two weeks in June. On the 22d, eight were baptized, three of them children of Saints, the rest new converts, of whom three were heads of families. This makes twelve candidates baptized since the 1st of January. A good interest still continues.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

Volume 66

Lamoni, Iowa, July 16, 1919

Number 29

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Though the ratification of the peace treaty and the consequent acceptance of the constitution of the league of nations is made a political issue, it is much greater than that, and should be so considered.

The consideration of such an agreement among the peoples of the world should be entirely dissociated from narrow partisanship and provincialism. In the words of President Wilson when at the second meeting of the peace conference he moved the adoption of the league covenant—

I may say without straining a point, that we are not the representatives of governments, but representatives of the people. It will not suffice to satisfy governmental circles anywhere. It is necessary that we should satisfy the opinion of mankind.

Both the treaty and the league should be ratified. In fact this talk of indorsing the former and rejecting the latter is folly, for they are so inseparable that it is out of the question—as now written, the one cannot exist without the other.

But there is likely to be little trouble over the final ratification, even if the people of this Nation are required to take special steps to see that their will is properly carried out. We can say this dispassionately after reading after such noted opponents as Senators Reed, Lodge, Knox, and others. They have raised serious objections to the workability of such an association of nations. Some of these objections are as yet unanswered, and, to our way of thinking, are unanswerable. Yet when the Constitution of the United States was first proposed, it was too Utopian for the times. Evidently no nation could live up to its wonderful provisions, yet under its guarantees religious freedom has been established as it had not existed for millenniums of time.

We opine that the constitution of the league of nations is in advance of the world's readiness to accept its mandates. It is based on the principles of Christianity, yet the world is not Christian. Only a small minority of the world's vast population is professedly Christian, and most of those are only nominally so, while as individuals as well as nations they are ready to engage in any military or economic venture that will bring gain to self, to the detriment of others.

Though it may seem paradoxical, we favor the adoption of the league covenant with the peace treaty, though freely confessing we have no confidence in its permanency.

We have little confidence in deathbed repentance as a policy, yet even a belated repentance is better than none. Some of its enthusiastic devotees are confident that the proposition will prove a panacea for all the ills of this sick old world and believe it will soon usher in the millennium, practically superseding the definite gospel of Jesus Christ, but we do not.

Much as we appreciate our own national Constitution and the governmental system which has grown out of it, we have never been able to vision it as a permanent system, adequate for all humanity's needs. Under its sheltering influence many corrupt institutions have grown up and flourished alongside the many commendable and appreciated advantages it has offered. But not until the divine theocracy of God is set up on earth and in full operation will entire justice of God be meted out to all alike. Yet God uses human aid in our present condition and will in the millennium and in the farther distant future state. Read:

Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ and shall reign with him a thousand years.—Revelation 20: 6.

These are they who receive not of his fullness in the eternal world, but of the Holy Spirit through the ministration of the terrestrial; and the terrestrial through the ministration of the celestial: and also the celestial receive it of the administering of angels, who are appointed to minister for them, or who are appointed to be ministering spirits for them, for they shall be heirs of salvation.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7.

There is a point that as Saints of God we cannot disregard. It has a peculiar significance which we especially appreciate and which must not be overlooked in our consideration of the whole plan for the affiliation of the peoples. No government originated and established in human wisdom can hope to attain the perfection of Christ's glorious kingdom. There is a danger that we shall put too much faith in the mundane schemes for governmental reform and lose sight of the spiritual kingdom of Jesus Christ.

Then there is this phase—we think the dominating one: The gospel of the kingdom of Jesus Christ must be proclaimed in all the world as a witness before the end (Matthew 24: 32, Inspired Translation). The league of nations will no doubt have as important a part in making the world safe for religious liberty as did our Constitution in making this Nation a haven for the religiously oppressed. The latter provided a means whereby the latter-day restoration was possible. The league of nations may provide a situation whereby world evangelism may be possible. Prior to the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, religious liberty was an experiment only, but under a democracy it has proved feasible and was recognized as an inalienable right of man. Before the war, the doors of many important nations of the world were practically locked against the preaching of the gospel of Christ. Under the new proposals these barriers should no longer exist, for the league idea is based on the higher principles of Christian belief.

To be sure, God could, in spite of governmental opposition, send messengers of salvation to the entire world, yet since he has always recognized and utilized human organizations and the machinery they set up, we believe he will continue to do so until it is necessary to use other forces.

Then there is the prophecy in Matthew 24: 28, Inspired Translation, which must be fulfilled:

Behold, wheresoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together; so likewise shall mine elect be gathered from the four quarters of the earth.

Those at all conversant with the gathering principle, realize that conditions have hitherto hardly been propitious for the assembling of God's people from the four quarters of the earth. The least we can say for the condition to grow out of the league establishment is that the gathering will be a more simple matter than it has been under the autocratic monarchies that have hitherto flourished.

So we say we are in favor of the league of nations as a means to an end, rather than an end. Because we believe that it will serve merely as a stepping-stone, is no reason why we should disdain to use it accordingly as such. The time required to establish it and try out its policies will permit the evangelization of the world. Its ultimate collapse because of the in-grown wickedness of this generation will be not so much the fault of the plan itself as the inability of the peoples represented to arrive at the altruistic state essential to the higher form of government. It had its birth in a Christian ideal; it cannot mature except under a universal Christian brotherhood, which we do not as yet have. We would accept it because it is a step toward better conditions, yet not expect too much of it. As those whose eyes have seen the glorious vision of the consummation of God's wondrous decrees, it seems to us we can do no less.

E. D. MOORE.

---

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

---

THE ETERNAL TRIANGLE

Some one has said that it takes two to live the Christian religion. Every effort to retire to the desert or bury one's self in a monastery in order to be truly religious must fail. There is no opportunity for full fruition.

True religion involves at least three individuals, a man, his God, and his brother. Yonder is God. Here am I. There is my brother. It is the eternal triangle.

I have established relations with God. My brother has established relations with God. But Christ is not satisfied until my brother and I have established proper relations with each other. And we must maintain those relations.

For that reason Jesus has commanded that if one bring a gift to his altar and there remember that he has aught against his brother he shall leave the gift and go and make peace with his brother.

When the line of communication is interrupted between a man and his brother it is interrupted between that man and his God. No man can perpetuate a quarrel or refuse to do his utmost to settle a quarrel without forfeiting his right to approach God. Others, too, may be affected. While it is said that it takes two to make a quarrel, a quarrel is seldom confined to two.

The shortest way to God may be the longest way around—via the third person. Inasmuch as you have done it unto him you have done it unto Jesus. We cannot pass a cup of cold water to Jesus excepting as we press it to the lips of a brother. In all temporal matters that is our approach.

So we are told: "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support. . . . And inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me."

The time has come when the Saints must get closer together in love and sympathy. The triangle must be made strong and sure. The point of danger—the point where the break almost always occurs, is between brethren.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

HEMAN HALE SMITH

Heman Hale Smith, our new Assistant Historian, is the only son of our late Church Historian, Heman C. Smith. He was born in San Bernardino, California, in 1887. His schooling was in the Lamoni schools, Graceland Collage, and the Iowa State University, from which latter place he secured his bachelor of arts degree.

He was for several years general Church Librarian, and also served for a few years on the general library commission, as well as continuing his work as custodian of the church library.

He has contributed to the Journal of History from the very first volume, and has been at times associated with his father in the work of the Historian's office.

History has been, and is, with him a passion, and has been the special subject of his teaching in the high schools of Seattle, and will now be in Graceland College. He comes to the work with enthusiasm, and very deep interest; and also, because of his father's work he accepts his new position as a sacred trust.

VI.

LEADERSHIP AND EDUCATION

It may be more than a curiosity that the word for leader in Latin is dux, duce. This is derived from ducere, to lead.

It is from the same root that we have educate, which is the past participle of educare; derived from ex, out of, and ducare, to lead. In its primary sense it is therefore to lead out of, to bring or draw forth, to cause to appear, as a natural and logical consequence. It is not the pounding of a mass into the head; it is a leading out, and developing of the child's natural capacity.

As to leadership we have several ideals. At one extreme is the military leader, who simply issues orders which must be obeyed; who allows no discretion to his associates; who does not inform them as to what he desires to be done, or why. The director makes the laws, and simply orders things done and issues his own punishment for disobedience.

On the other hand we have the leader who is the law giver, who instructs his people and teaches them. Moses was the schoolmaster, though he was forced by the actions of his people to assume some arbitrary power. But the Mosaic law is the schoolmaster, and he wandered with the children of Israel in the wilderness for forty years, that they might be taught.

Education is connected with the right of free speech, and of a free press. Thinking people will talk. The press offers an opportunity for instruction, and for the discussion of fundamental principles.

Recognizing the strife among the disciples on a certain occasion, who of them should be the greatest, the Master spoke and said unto them:

The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them, and they who exercise authority upon them, are called benefactors. But it ought not to be so with you; but he who is greatest among you, let him be as the younger; and he who is chief, as he who doth serve. For whether is he greater, who sitteth at meat, or he who serveth? I am not as he who sitteth at meat, but I am among you as he who serveth.—Luke 22: 25-27.

"He who is the greatest among you, let him be as the younger; he who is chief, as he who doth serve." We find this carried out in the 13th chapter of John, 4th to 17th verses, when he washed the disciples' feet as an example to them, and taught them thereby a great lesson.

The same thought is repeated in the Doctrine and Covenants, and notably in the school of the prophets. (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36-46.) Here we have reemphasized the lesson of humility. We have, in many other passages, emphasis on the duty of teaching, as for example, Doctrine and Covenants 122: 1.

Teaching is not simply the giving of an arbitrary interpretation. Education is not the cramming in of knowledge. In its secondary sense it means to show, to guide. In a latter sense it is to cause to know. Teaching is not only to impart knowledge, though it is that; but there is much of the thought contained in the word education, to lead out, to develop, to cause to know.

It is not enough that a leader give a right answer. It is not enough that a leader with other leaders consider even with prayer until an answer is secured. It is not enough to give that answer. But there should be teaching that will cause the people to know.

It may be expected when some new plan, though long considered by a few, is suddenly presented there will arise opposition, unless there has preceded it such a discussion as will prepare the way, so that many are thinking of the problem, and of its possible solution. All too often, we have the answer when only a few know that the problem exists.

The ideal of the leader, of the Christian leader, is not the man in shining armor, at whom the people dare not look. But it is the simple master, who goes among the people, who knows their needs, where they are, and who guides them from where they are to better things. He teaches them so they desire to move, and so they understand the reason for the forward movement.

In bitter warfare, it is many times necessary that but few know the real objective, and that orders be issued and obeyed. But the pattern set by our Elder Brother and Master was rather that of the teacher among the people, who wept for them, and with them, and who taught them the way of light and of truth.

The Christian leader in every age is the great teacher. He is the educator. He is the thinker who communes with God and then guides his people step by step to better things; who keeps the point of contact, not only of divine communion, but also of human communication.

True teaching is causing to know. It is not enough that the answer be given in some language, but it must be so spoken as to be understood. It must not only be in the tongue or language that the people ordinarily use, but it should be in such a phraseology, and with such a choice of words as is within their comprehension. Though a beautiful truth be presented to a people, it profits them not at all unless they can receive, and no truth can be received unless it is understood.

Hence the Christian leader stands for education, the best obtainable, and is himself an educator, though not simply a school man. S. A. B.

---

TREATIES FOR PEACE

---

John H. Clark, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, in his address before the American Bar Association, in the fall of 1918, took up especially the question of a league of nations to enforce the peace of the world. This address was both prepared and delivered before the armistice was signed.

He takes up some of the violations of international law, and then the aims of Germany to establish a league of nations, which she would dominate and in which others would be vassals.

A second way of ending the war suggested by some was the boycott of Germany. A third method was the league of nations to bring peace on earth to men of good will. But to accomplish it there would have to be a delegation of power, and a new restraint upon national ambition, together with a larger sympathy and vision among the peoples of the world.

Mr. Clark notes the fact that thirty nations have already accepted certain principles in treaties with our own Government which have been officially termed "treaties for the promotion of peace." These treaties have all been executed since August, 1913, in the one year before the war; and all of the important nations at war have joined, except Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Turkey.

---

COST OF LIVING

---

In addition to the figures printed in the Outlook for April 30, by Theodore H. Price, there is a column of figures in June 25 number of the same paper. The point which is put in issue was that prices increased two hundred per cent since 1896.

Mr. Price makes a comparison, which shows the following percentage of increase from January, 1896, to October, 1918. The figures given are the percentage of increase, which means that the price in 1918 was one hundred per cent more than the figures given. For instance 249 means that wheat cost 3.49 times as much in 1918 as in 1896; corn 364 means that corn cost 4.64 times as much as at the latter date. The list is as follows:

Wheat 249; corn 364; cotton 313; live hogs 375; dressed pork 383; lard 378; hides for shoes vary from 196 to 315 (this affects the price of shoes).

Cotton goods: Brown sheeting, standard 263; wide sheeting 275; brown sheeting—four yard 268; brown drills, standard 274; staple gingham 254.

Woolen goods: Clay worsted, 16 oz., 305; fancy cassimere, 218.

Iron and steel: Bessemer iron, Pittsburgh 2<sup>c</sup> gray forge iron, Pittsburgh 206; structural beams; Pittsburgh 100; wire nails, Pittsburgh 55; cut nails, Pittsburgh 100; iron bars, ref., Philadelphia 187.

Coffee alone shows a decrease of 31 per cent. The average percentage of increase is 244. That is, present prices are nearly three and a half times as great as in 1896.

---

Christ never once gave alms, not once, not once in all his ministry. He gave life. He gave capacity. He made people over again. Charity is the lesser gift. Jesus was never an almsgiver, he was a life-giver. He never tinkered with humanity. He did not give money to the cripple and leave him a cripple; he gave him capacity to use his limbs. Society can give charity; it is only religion that can give capacity.—Doctor Jowett, quoted by Samuel F. Halfyard, in Cardinal Truths of the Gospel.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

THE LARGER VISION

(Sermon by C. Edward Miller, delivered at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, May 11, 1919. Mrs. A. Morgan, reporter.)

I wish to call your attention to the sixth chapter of Daniel, tenth verse:

Now when Daniel knew that the writing was signed, he went into his house; and, his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime.

You know there was an edict went forth from the king that for thirty days no one should pray or ask a petition of anyone but the king. This was a conspiracy by two of the parties associated with Daniel, and so, when they saw him praying at his window, they told the king. They were jealous of Daniel; but courageously he went right on, as aforetime, and did his duty. His windows were open towards Jerusalem and he prayed as aforetime. He cared nothing for the edict of a king if it interfered with his duty towards his God. That was courage.

To-night we want to speak about some visions, various kinds of visions. Christ must have had some kind of a vision to leave his home in the courts of glory and come down to this earth and become the Babe of Bethlehem. That was a tremendous sacrifice to make. He left heavenly company to mingle with, very often, the dregs of the earth. He had a vision. Visions generally result in activity of some kind. Sometimes it is not very wise activity, but where there are no visions there is stagnation.

We must have visions. Abraham had a vision, it took him to an unknown land, and he left his kindred. The vision forced him to act in this way. Moses had a vision. He left the palace of the Pharaohs to go into the wilderness with a rebel horde. His vision was to take them to the promised land. He had a great vision. Lehi and Nephi's vision sent them from familiar shores to an unknown land. Paul tried to hold back the kingdom of God, but he had a vision. It resulted in the golden Dianas being thrown on the junk heap. His visions changed his ideas completely; his conception of God and the Lord's work. Christ, Peter, James, and John up on the mount of God had a vision.

Well, it generally requires climbing to get visions, and the crowd doesn't like to climb. Therefore, the crowd doesn't generally have the visions. The whole theological crowd threw mud at Joseph Smith because he had a vision. Why, it is visions that have revolutionized the world. Edison had a vision of bathing the world in light and we have the light. We must have these visions. It is written, Without vision the people perish. Yes; some kind of a vision; an insight; special sight.

The church started with a vision, and this church must continue to have visions or it will perish. It must have various kinds of visions. There must be the God visions. God must give them. Men must have mental visions and they must have spiritual and intellectual visions. Where you just have the spiritual vision without the intellectual there may be a degree of disaster follow. Where you have the intellectual vision and are not guided by the spiritual there may be disaster. We want both. We want these visions; these various kinds of visions. The church must have them.

Daniel had a vision. Daniel was a man of pedigree. Flowing in his veins was the blood of ancestors who had talked and walked with God. They were the poets, the philosophers of the Jewish race; they were the sweet singers; they were the men of God. Daniel had lineage. He may have been proud of it, and I think as he kneeled there—and I suppose if that statement had been made in the Book of Mormon they would have called it one of the Book of Mormon beauties—it says, he kneeled on his knees. How else could he kneel? If you want to get critical you can find peculiar expressions in the Bible also. It says he kneeled three times a day with his window open towards Jerusalem, his beloved city. He had mind visuality.

He saw Jerusalem when it was in its glory. He was a captive there in Babylon, but he never forgot his religion, his God, or his city; and so he had a vision there of its past, and he prayed for its future. Being educated and entertained in the palace of a king didn't spoil him. The trouble with too many of us is prosperity and wealth. Education spoils us when it should make us better, or should humble us. The better education we have the more humble we should be. Then we have sense enough to know how little we do know. An ignorant man doesn't know how little he knows. Daniel was an unspoiled young man, a beautiful young man, and he had a vision, and it changed the course of that nation, to some extent—the vision he had.

The church is having visions at the present time. They may be, to some extent, spiritual and intellectual visions. As the church grows in power, in strength, in numbers, in wealth, it must have larger vision, and possibly our visions will change some with increased experience, and with an enlarged opportunity to worship God.

About eighteen months ago, I think, one of the magazines got out a series of articles on how some of the largest establishments of the United States were run. There were three methods of running great business concerns. One method is for the head of the concern to dabble into everything. He is all over the works. All over the factory; in the office; goes everywhere. That's one method. Another method is quite the opposite. The individual who runs the establishment is called the "cave man." He sits in his office; never goes out in the works; has no source of relationship with the employees whatever; cares nothing whatever about them; doesn't see them when he passes them; he sits there in his office receiving reports. When he engages a man he simply says, "I want you to make good; no excuses; simply make good or get out, and I will get somebody else." Reports come in. He gets to find out in this way whether they are making good or not. That is all he did; he was a receiver of reports. Another method. The head of the concern is at his office an hour or two in the morning, and an hour or so in the afternoon or evening. He would go out and play golf. He got results. He had a good time. Some of his friends said, "You ought to be ashamed to draw your salary. Why don't you go to your office and work?" He said, "I don't dare to." "Why not?" "That isn't my business; I don't dare to. I am just directing here and there, and that's all I must do. I must keep my hands off the business to some extent."

The church must be run as a spiritual business. There was a head to all these establishments. There must be a head, and it must use certain methods of conducting its business. The head of this last concern went out and had a good time, but he got magnificent results. Later, he met with an accident and was killed; the stockholders sent to another city and obtained one of those men who dabbled into everything and got him to run the concern, and he wrecked it. His friends made criticisms like this, "Don't you know you are working with high-priced men who are managers? You mustn't dabble into everything. Put these men on their mettle." That's what the church must do. The president of this church must be given increased power, as the church gets larger. The Quorum of Twelve, the Bishopric, all of these quorums must receive enlarged power; not one at the expense of the other. If the church is to increase in power the church must give these men that power.

Which one of these three methods should the church use? These three methods. In a way, the church, I think, must use all of them. We want the members of this church to be busy. They say that Joseph Smith, the martyr, was a lazy man. But see what he accomplished in fourteen years! And you cannot say Fred M. is lazy. He is one of the busiest men I know of. But he must use the talent he has at his disposal. That is good management. He has under him men who are managers, and these men must be given increased authority as the years go by. No quorum must suffer at the expense of the other. They must all have increased power. The church must give that to these various quorums of the church. These men must have vision, and if they don't have it they must get it or some men be put in there who have vision. They must see into the future, the church's needs.

It used to be that the Quorum of High Priests was called the lumber room of the church. If they didn't know what to do with a man they put him into the Quorum of High Priests. High Priests now are being placed in responsible positions. The pastor of the Independence church is a high priest. Is he in the lumber room? Does he belong there? Now, that quorum is having larger power given it. As the years go by there are younger men being called into it. The church must adjust itself to these various conditions. It must have vision. God must give us the spiritual visions, and we must work for the intellectual visions. God is not going to do the whole thing. The Lord doesn't place any premium upon ignorance; but "the glory of God is intelligence," and we must use it. We must use the spiritual part of it, for if we don't we are becoming lopsided. That's a common expression perhaps, but it is a fact.

In adjusting ourselves to new conditions here's what may happen. When I was a little fellow going to school, I would go home to my mother crying, and say, "Mother, I have such pains here; they hurt so!" She would say, "What are you crying for? You ought to be happy; those are growing pains." Well, I wish I had had more of them. Now, the church is going to have some growing pains, and I think it had some pains up there at conference that were growing pains. I think there was nothing to be alarmed about. This church is going on triumphantly, and nothing can interfere with its upward progress. We want to have faith; we want to have confidence that God is at the helm and at this time in world history there is too much work for the church to do to be stopped for any period, either a comma or semicolon. It is going to move right along and neither man nor Satanic forces can stop it now. We shall have growing pains but they will be good for us. All development, to some extent, is the result of more or less pain and effort.

As one of the men who have been in the missionary field for a number of years, I have had a little vision of what the ministry ought to be. I have looked through the windows and could see what the ministry will be. I know what the ministry of to-day is not. I know this from personal experience. Let me illustrate one phase of this matter. The president of this stake has a fine speaking voice. It is full of life and has excellent qualities. But has it been developed to its full capacity? I think not. How many heard the reading of the minutes at the late business meeting? We have not been trained to lower our voices in small rooms and let them out in large auditoriums. The facts are we have not been trained to deliver the most important message the world has to hear.

When a child gives promise of a good voice, often great sacrifices are made to have that voice trained. Since I have taken some lessons in the Graceland extension course on public speaking I have been greatly benefited. One time when we were traveling on the Island of Maui I practiced on our horse—he didn't seem to mind. It is vitally important that our audiences hear the message in the most agreeable manner possible; hence the necessity of our voices being properly trained to speak in a musical and not in a harsh, rasping tone and to use good English and have at our disposal a good vocabulary.

Joseph Smith was instructed to become acquainted with countries, languages, peoples, etc. What was good for him will surely be good for us so far as that is concerned. Can you not visualize one of the ministry, with a trained voice, using good English actuated by the Spirit of God as being superior and a better workman for the Lord than one who may lack in the first two requirements?

Brigadier General W. S. Scott, commanding officer at Camp Funston was asked by Professor Peacock of the Peacock Military College of Texas to give the cause of so many dismissals and failures among the candidates. General Scott submitted the question to the instructors at the camp. Here were some of the reasons given.

Perhaps the most glaring fault noted in aspirants to the officers reserve corps, is one that might be characterized by the general word slouchiness. I refer to what might be termed a mental and physical indifference. At Camp Funston and other military camps throughout the country mental alertness, accuracy in thinking and acting, clearness in enunciation, sureness and ease of carriage and bearing must be insisted upon. . . . A great number of men have failed at Camp Funston because of inability to articulate clearly. A man who cannot impart his ideas to his command in clear, distinct language, and with sufficient volume of voice to be heard reasonably far is not qualified to give commands upon which human life will depend. . . . Many men disqualified by this handicap might have become officers under their country's flag had they been properly trained in school and college. . . . Even without prescribed training in elocution a great improvement could be wrought by the instructors in our schools and colleges regardless of the subject, insisting that all answers be given in a loud, clear, well-rounded voice; which, of course, necessitates the opening of the mouth and the free movement of the lips.

If the Government finds it necessary to train men to give commands in a clear, distinct voice to kill men, have we not sufficient vision to see that the church should train its ministry to tell the gospel story in a clear, distinct manner to save men.

We have "slouchy" men in dress, in their mental makeup, and in the way they deliver the message. One of our able ministers had to be reminded time and again at Lamoni during the past conference while he was preaching in the Coliseum, to speak louder. He had a good clear voice but used very poor judgment and would let it drop so low it must have been difficult to have heard him ten feet away. He was not trained; that was the reason. Why didn't the church say to me: You want to serve the Lord, don't you? All right, we will give you six months' instruction in English, instruction in using your voice, and good pulpit manners. Did I get it? The ministry has grown up a Topsy affair; they have just grown; no instruction whatever; no shine; some of us are really uncouth and don't use proper English; simply have to grow; pick it up.

I am trying to take lessons, but I suppose that these habits formed in youth will be difficult to throw off. The church must have a larger vision regarding its ministry. As I understand it, an educated minister is a minister who knows what he ought to know. Do you object to the ministry knowing what they ought to know? Isn't that education? And if the ministry don't know what they ought to know they don't know very much, and I don't care how much they know. Should not a minister know how to use his voice? Should he not know how to clothe his thoughts in the best possible language? You have an educated ministry, if you have that, and isn't it about time that the ministry of the church were given these privileges?

I believe that the young men—I have written to the President of the church along this line—believe the young men who show ability and have been called as preachers should be taken from the field and permitted to have some training for six months or a year, if necessary, and then start them out again; if they have the right mettle in them they will be better preachers than ever before. If not, let them get out, and make room for somebody else.

It is going to be a sifting time, so we must enlarge our vision regarding the work of the ministry in the future. In the Hawaiian congregation, I saw the majority of the young men and women, graduates of high school, half a dozen of them going to the college in Honolulu. They could pick flaws in my grammar right along if they tried. Is that a good thing? Would it not be better now for a man to be sent on a mission like that who could clothe the message in a proper way? Yes; and it is going to be that eventually; there will be more education than there has been in the past.

I believe somebody says that some in this branch or this stake are going wild on education. It is all right. Let a man who has been out in the field have his say regarding it. As one of the ministry, let me give you a few experiences about the calling of the ministry. I believe in a call from God. In the Doctrine and Covenants we are told that the first twelve were called through a committee. The committee were told to "search out those men who had the desire." See? These men went around and searched out the first Quorum of the Twelve, and they hunted for them. That's what the church is going to do to-day; hunt for young men and women who are ready to go out and offer their services.

There's been a call made for the young men who are to go to foreign missions—to prepare. Let me just tell you a little about our mission over in Hawaii. We have done work among the Chinese, and Japanese, but to my mind our labors over there have been practically a failure. I do not say this to disparage the noble efforts made there by conscientious and intelligent and consecrated men and women; but our methods have been wrong. Our vision has been too narrow; too limited.

To work effectively among these people I believe we must have a man and a woman for the Japanese, say, who will give all their time to the Japanese Mission. They will have a mission house, and must entertain them; must look after them. The women must be interested in the habits of the women. The men must be interested in the work, in the lives of the men, and they must have some knowledge of hygiene. They must have some knowledge of the customs of the people, and this matter must come in their instruction, and I believe we are on the right track if we adopt some such methods.

In the church in the islands there are Hawaiians, Japanese, Filipinos, Chinese, and we have to mix them all, and it doesn't work very well. At least, that is my experience over there. I have possibly baptized just as many Orientals who have held on as some of the others, but I think with our present methods, our mission to the Chinese and Japanese is decidedly a failure. Who will volunteer for such work as that? The church is calling for volunteers. I hope a lot of young men and women will volunteer. I hope five hundred young men and women will volunteer to prepare for future missionary work in foreign fields, and that from them the selection will be made under divine direction.

Now, let me tell you what happens over there in that mission. We have some Chinese children in our Sunday school. It is an inspiring sight to see them come into the Sabbath school, and then when the first song is finished they are ready to march. We have some Chinese, Japanese, Hawaiians, part Hawaiians, some white, we have Filipinos, and we have some various nationalities, and all these marching around there. It is a grand sight to me; but let me tell you what actually happens in practice. These Chinese children may go to two other Sabbath schools the same day. They thereby get a kind of theological hash. They will go to three Sabbath schools in one day—all different denominations. When they get up to a certain age we cannot hold them. One young girl was very active in Sabbath school, worked faithfully; she went to these other denominations; they offered her a position, to be instructor, act as a paid teacher, and she took it: We didn't have such a position to offer her, and we lost her.

These foreign missions require special instruction for those who take part in them, and we must enlarge our vision regarding foreign work. I believe it is absolutely necessary.

Daniel was a man of God. He must have had intellectual visions as well as the spiritual ones, and if we are men and women of God we are going to have spiritual and intellectual visions; but I believe that men and women must be called of God to officiate in the work of the Lord, and I think that God Almighty is calling men and women into the various branches of the church work. Let me assure you the Lord is working. Men must receive visions regarding the work of God.

When I was called to the ministry, three times in one night the Lord spoke to me in a way that so long as I have memory I shall never forget. I was called through Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths, and I wouldn't accept ordination until I knew for myself, and I don't think any man ought to accept ordination until he is sure—positive that the call is from God. When I was called I prayed and fasted, prayed standing, prayed kneeling, and finally I sprawled right on the floor and said, "Lord, I cannot get down any lower." The trouble is, we want to receive information from the Lord without working and wrestling for it. Revelation doesn't come cheaply. If revelation could be had cheaply, it would be cheap revelation. I worked, and fasted, and prayed, prayed, prayed, and finally one night I received, three times, instruction that I have never forgotten, and never shall forget, regarding my call, and here was what came to me:

I prayed the Lord that he would satisfy me. The Lord gave it to me in this way: "The call through mine apostle, Gomer T. Griffiths, is of me." I went to sleep again, and then I was roused with the glorious physical feeling that came over me, and then the message came to me. I went to sleep, and again was aroused the third time, and then I knew what the Lord wanted, so I got out of bed, and thanked the Lord, and gave him thanks for this wonderful message which had come to me, then I wondered at my audacity in demanding that the heavens tell me something. But, anyway, I wanted to know, so I could go out and tell the people something that I know to be of God.

I have been president of various districts, and I remember one time I was over in the western part of the district, and word came to me by the Spirit of the Lord. I had the vision that a young man in the city should be called as an elder. I wondered, thinking about that man, and wrote the minister in charge, Brother R. C. Russell. I have traveled with him. I am glad I had that opportunity. I consulted with him about it, and I learned later on that a young sister got up in a district conference and prophesied that this young man should be called soon to the eldership, and I knew nothing about it. So God is calling men and women into the church work.

Let me tell you what happened over in Honolulu. I was walking down Kala Kaua Avenue, and was about to get upon the Waikiki car when all at once the Spirit of the Lord rested upon me, and gave me instruction regarding a young sister there, that her work was along lines of vocal work in the church, and oh, the glorious feeling that came over me when that light came to me! She was trained, and had a cultivated voice. She was prepared when the time came for the Lord to call her—a prepared individual. That's the vision we must have. We must prepare, brothers and sisters, for this work of the Lord. We must get busy. The ministry must not be lazy. They must avail themselves of every opportunity to develop themselves.

I will give you another instance of a call over there. To my mind it was a beautiful call—coming to a brother over there, a very faithful man; faithful for years. He has raised his family in the church, and they are faithful. He is a white man. His daughters are educated girls, and above the ordinary in intelligence. He is a man of beautiful character. I have often wondered why that man was never called to the ministry. He was not called to any office, and yet he had been faithful there for years.

One day I was out in the mission house, and all at once the Spirit said to me, "My servant Lorenzo A. Moore should be ordained to the office of elder." I was astonished. Ordain that man! take him right out of the membership and make him an elder! And then here's what came to me—that the Lord has reserved men. This is the army of the Lord. Every army has reserved men, and the Lord told the elders there in the first part of the Doctrine and Covenants: I have reserved men that ye know not of, holy men; and as much as told the elders, If you don't do the work I will call upon some who will. If we don't do the work the Lord has reserved men somewhere, and he knows where they are. The time had arrived for this reserved man to be called, and in his ordination was this beautiful thought given. This man has a very responsible position. He has charge of the reservoir where the elite of Honolulu reside. He has charge of the reservoir—that the water doesn't become contaminated; so in this ordination this is what was presented. As man has intrusted you with responsibility in looking after the waters which quench the thirst, the Lord now places upon you the responsibility of giving the waters of life of which if men and women shall drink they shall never thirst.

God is calling men and women by revelation, and don't become fearful that the church is abandoning its position along that line. I wouldn't give much for a man who occupies in the ministry who hasn't been called of God. I believe the new Church Architect has been called of God. He has been preparing for that purpose. We need an architect. If you don't believe it just go around and see some of the architectural blunders and monstrosities that we have for churches. I believe the auditor of this church is called of God. His schooling has been such as to make him competent. So, let's prepare for any work the Lord wants us to go into. Let's have the larger vision, the vision of preparation, and let's try to hold to this vision; and you young men and women say as we have here in this hymn No. 28 in the Praises, "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord; I'll do what you want me to do."

I am sorry we don't sing that at General Conference any more. A man who is not willing to go out with these sentiments in his heart hasn't any business in it at all. Do you want to go where the Lord wants you to go? Or do you want to go some place where you will not fit—like a square peg in a round hole? If you don't want to go where he wants you to go you are a very poor excuse of a representative.

Let the young men and women volunteer in any way they can, for this is a day of sacrifice. The strong have been dying for the weak. Why, Darwin's theory is upset. This war is a demonstration of it. Instead of the survival of the fittest and the strong, it is the weak, the women and babes, except those the Germans got—it is for them the strong young men have died. They died for the women and children, and the old men, and that law of sacrifice runs throughout nature. It is not the survival of the strongest all the time. There's this law of sacrifice; and now the church has called upon the strong to save the weak. Christ, the strong, came to the earth to save the lowest and the weakest.

May the Lord bless and guide us. I believe that the church is the apple of God's eye. I believe that Christ, as the record says, Christ gave his life for us. If we carry it to the end it will permit us to travel first-class through the ages of eternity. Brethren and sisters, I have traveled on ships first-class, second-class, steerage, and down in the hold. I have traveled four different ways. I don't want to see my brethren have to travel down in the hold throughout the ages of eternity because the hold, well, I won't say anything about it; you can imagine it if you have any imagination. The steerage isn't what you would like to travel in throughout the ages of eternity. I came over from Honolulu first-class because that's the only class I could get. I have gone in the second-class. The difference in the intelligence and culture between the first and the second class is noticeable. And I have been down in the steerage. Difference there again. Brothers and sisters, how do you want to travel through the countless ages of eternity? Have you a vision? I have a vision of traveling with God and Christ and the elite of the whole universe. That's the kind of people I want to be with.

The beauty of traveling first-class is that you can go anywhere; all over the ship; from its top down into the steerage; but if you want to go first-class, you may go lower but you must not go higher. They are to some extent in prison, and I think that is what the prison is like, and what it means. Just simply have to stay in the one place, while those who travel first-class can go anywhere, and Jesus Christ says, All power is given unto you, both in heaven and on the earth. He says to his apostles, Go ye into all the world—trying to enlarge their vision.

I believe the ministry of this church should have the prayers of the Saints more than they do have them. They should have your assistance; they need your encouragement as they have never had it before. I believe there are fields of investigation and ways of defending this latter-day work that have not presented themselves to our minds in the past. For instance; I am getting up a little lecture on astronomy. I have been studying that subject for years.

I have never heard, in all the time I have been in the church, an elder, nor one of the ministry, preach upon that subject which God Almighty says in the Doctrine and Covenants, "any man who hath seen any or the least of those hath seen God moving in his majesty and power." Why haven't the ministry of this church taken the stars for their subject and showed the majesty of the Almighty? Because we have not had sufficient training. We were too ignorant. I have been studying up on that subject, and have prepared some lantern slides.

When I landed in San Francisco of course I wanted to come right home, but I have always had a desire to look through the Lick telescope. I wanted to see that vision—looking through that sixty foot, thirty-six inch instrument. You can only get there Saturday night. I landed in 'Frisco on Monday. So I stayed around San Francisco, preached for them, and eventually went to San Jose. The San Jose branch kindly made arrangements, and provided a car, so we toiled up Mount Hamilton. We had to climb to get the vision, and it is a very dangerous climb, too; but as you get up what a magnificent sight! You look down upon the California poppies, the peach trees, the apple trees, the plums, and the various trees—everything in bloom.

No wonder the California people love California. The better part of it is almost as nice as Hawaii, but not altogether. In spring it is beautiful, but Hawaii is paradise all the time. We got up there and found there was a fog. Couldn't see a thing. There was that magnificent instrument—and sometimes the church gets in the fog. It has all its machinery. Everything is all right, but we don't have any vision. We cannot see. Above were the Pleiades, Saturn, and Jupiter. They were all up there, we knew, but we couldn't see them because of too much fog. We looked at that instrument by which these things are revealed, and had profound respect for it. It wonderfully enlarges men's vision. There are two little telescopes put together called a spectroscope. A grating having something like 40,000 lines to an inch, ruled on it with those two little telescopes and this grating, men can tell upon the distant suns what kind of elements are there.

How wonderfully these little instruments have enlarged the vision of man. The Doctrine and Covenants is a wonderful book. The eighty-fifth section to my mind is the biggest form of inspiration. It has enlarged our vision. The God of wisdom is with us and will enlighten our minds. "The glory of God is intelligence."

---

Honesty is one part of eloquence. We persuade others by being in earnest ourselves.—Hazlitt.

THE OUTLOOK---Part 3 Retro-, Per-, and Prospective

BY COLUMBUS SCOTT

THE GREAT RESTORATION

The Prophet Zachariah speaks very plainly of the opening of "the eleventh hour" dispensation, "restitution," and work as follows:

I lifted up mine eyes again, and looked, and, behold, a man with a measuring line in his hand. Then said I, whither goest thou? And he said unto me, To measure Jerusalem, to see what is the breadth thereof, and what is the length thereof. And, behold, the angel that talked with me went forth, and another angel went out to meet him, and said unto him, Run, speaking to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein: for I, saith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and will be the glory in the midst of her.—Zachariah 2:1-5.

A wonderful prophecy this!

Progressive events and conditions have been favorable to the fulfillment of this prophecy, since the restoration of the gospel through the angel's message of 1823 to 1830, and since. But not before. A different civilization has arrived on earth. Now, stone walls are no longer a defense to great cities in these days of gunpowder and forty-two centimetre guns! God will now be Jacob's defense, as saith the prophecy foregoing.

When Judah returned from captivity in Babylon, B. C. 530 to 536 (see Nehemiah 4, 5), an angel appeared to the aged man, Daniel, the prophet, and told him the walls of Jerusalem would be built again, even in troublous times. (Daniel 9:25.) But before Jacob's final restoration, God's angel was to visit a young man; saying: Jerusalem shall be inhabited "as towns without walls," by God's "ancient covenant people." (Jeremiah 30:1, 2; 7:9-11; Romans 11:25-27.) When Israel is restored and are building their eclectic republic, God will be their "wall of fire round about, and will be the glory in the midst," he says. (Zachariah 2:1-6.) Later Christ will come, and reign gloriously in their midst. (Isaiah 24:21-23; Micah 4:3, 4; Joel 3:15, 16; Zachariah 8:2; Matthew 19:27, 28.)

This is confirmed by the great evangelistic prophet, Isaiah, thus:

Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously.—Isaiah 24:23.

THE YOUNG MAN

God has ever had the way and the time when his purposes should begin, and be carried out. He has always done his work among men, as a rule, as man unconverted decides he should not do it. See all history. God does not it seems—cannot please man in his ways. Strange! Jesus said to the Jews of the coming of John the Baptist and his coming:

But whereunto shall I liken this generation? It is like unto children sitting in the markets, and calling unto the fellows, and saying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented. For John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say, he hath a devil. The Son of man came eating and drinking, and they say, Behold a man gluttonous, and a winebibber. . . . But wisdom is justified of her children.—Matthew 11:16-19.

It seems impossible for God's ways to suit man. Is not this strange?

For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord.—Isaiah 55:8.

What are the Lord's ways? What have they ever been, in his dealings, in his works with man?

And by a prophet the Lord brought Israel out of Egypt, and by a prophet was he preserved.—Hosea 12:13.

Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets.—Amos 3:7.

Who among men to-day will instruct God as to where, and through whom, and at what locality, and in which government he should begin the wonderful work of "the eleventh hour"? And whom he should authorize to open up that work?

It was in the year 1823 to 1830 A. D., and in western New York, near Palmyra, and in Seneca and Wayne Counties, and at Fayette the work began. At the home of citizen Peter Whitmer, a good man, the first branch of the church was organized. A young man, Joseph Smith, by name, associated with another, Oliver Cowdery, and four others, formed the church. A small beginning do you say? How many were associated with Moses and John the Baptist at their respective beginnings? (Exodus 3; and Mark 1:1-3.) Joseph Smith was born of honest, humble parents, at Sharon, Windsor County, Vermont, November 23, 1805. When ten years of age, he with his father's family, removed to near Palmyra, New York; and to Manchester, five years later. A great religious revival was held there, in which and after, the ministers differed in teachings. This aroused thought as to who was right; which one of the differing doctrines was true? This question became serious. It kept recurring to him. He was unable to determine as to which doctrine taught was right! He was unable to decide. He read the New Testament and began to pray as to which to join. He solemnly considered, in the light of an earnest desire to be saved, as to the differing doctrines and churches existing, the question: Who is right? What shall I do to be saved? And who of all these differing teachers is the one to unite with, was a serious consideration.

He was finally led to seek the Lord, as he rightly did, to show him the right way. It is a splendid thing even at this late date not to take everything for granted! We have the right to inquire and be satisfied on this subject of eternal interest to us. God's word gives us this liberty.

Making this discovery, and reading to find the truth and the way, he read the language of James:

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.—James 1: 5.

But let us be sure in advance, that if we ask, believing, God will never contradict himself. He will answer just the same every time.

Desiring earnestly to know what he must do, he was answered to the effect that those differing sects were not any of them altogether right; that their creeds were wrong; and that he must not join any of them. He halted at this, but continued to read and pray.

While at prayer one day, a heavenly "vision" was opened to him, and two glorious personages appeared in the vision. One of them pointed to the other, saying: "This is my beloved Son, hear him!" God thus began to prepare him for his part in "the eleventh hour." He was assured that God and Christ existed. And although he was bitterly persecuted and cast from the midst of the people there, he stood to the truth of it all his life.

After his vision the "young man" was bitterly persecuted. Although so young, he moved about in the community as did other young men, and said but little about his vision for a season. At length, on the evening of September 21, 1823, he was led to surrender himself to humble, fervent prayer to God, for the forgiveness of his sins, and to know how he stood before the Lord, and for direction as to his duty. After being thus engaged for a season, an angelic messenger appeared to him, a personage of indescribable brightness and glory. His glory dispersed the darkness of the room. Being fearful, the angel spoke to him, saying, "Fear not."

This beautiful personage said he was a messenger from God to him, and among other things, that God had a work for him to do; and gave him such other information as he was sent to impart to him.

In order to impress him as to his duties, as to his work and mission, and the development of the great work of the last days, the angel appeared three times the same night, rehearsing the information, and further, instructing him concerning the great work of God to be accomplished in these "the last days." He was told that "his name should be had for good and evil among all nations."

Among other things concerning which he was informed from the Lord was that the time was near at hand when God would begin to prepare the way for the children of Abraham to return to the land of their inheritance—the land that God gave in olden time to Abraham and his descendants, "to a thousand generations." (Psalm 105: 6-11.) After the Book of Mormon was delivered to him (1827), and had been translated, being a record of the history of the peoples of ancient America and of God's dealings with them, it was printed and sent to the world in 1830.

In the year previous the divine authority to preach and administer in the ordinances of the gospel was restored to him, and the young man associated with him, Oliver Cowdery, by name—a school-teacher. Thus the work of the Lord in "the eleventh hour" began to open up; and many became converted. Thus the work grew.

Joseph lived to see the church increase in numbers till June 27, 1844, when it numbered some 150,000 or more, on which date, he, the presiding elder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and his brother Hyrum Smith, were martyred at Carthage, Illinois, for the faith of the everlasting gospel restored through him. His brother Hyrum was the patriarch of the church. No charge ever brought against them by the opposers of the church was ever sustained. (See Matthew 23: 33, 34.) And such has been the lot of many righteous prophets and others since Paul's day. (See Revelation 6: 8-11.)

We have given the merest outline of the introduction of the great and wonderful work of God; of the time of the opening of "the eleventh hour" dispensation—the great latter-day work of God. And the Biblical evidences submitted may be better appreciated as we consider the work of God to be done in his infinite love, in behalf of the human family in

THE LAST DAYS

Are the people of the earth now living in the last days? Many of even the learned are coming to the conclusion that we are. Conditions now existing among the nations of the earth so testify. "The last days" were in the future from the ancient apostles' days. (See on this 2 Timothy 3: 1-9; 2 Peter 3: 3-6; James 5: 1-8.) "Perilous times," and scoffers at the doctrine of the second advent of Christ as prophetically taught, and the trials of the world as between labor and capital. Where is the wisdom to be found now to steer the world clear of the perils here predicted?

But to the important subject—God's "eleventh hour" call to the kingdom of God, to mankind unto eternal life.

After the church organized by the Savior and his apostles, in the three following centuries, had apostatized from the faith—gospel truth—because of false teachers, as predicted, and was gradually disorganized; (See Acts 20: 28-30; 2 Thessalonians 2: 1-12; Revelation 12), after her official power had left her, under the symbol of the "man child," she was left to the aid of the world, flying by earthly aid or "wings"; flew into "the wilderness," where her food—doctrine—came from "the face of the serpent,"—not from God! (1 Timothy 4: 1-6.) She sought the favor of the world! Nor was she ever seen to be recovered from the wilderness. The last time she was seen, she was seated on the world (Roman), her new name written on her forehead. (Revelation 17.) Strange! But after the gospel was restored, the church was restored anew. (Jeremiah 31: 31-34; Revelation 14: 6, 7.)

But you say: she (the church) went to the "place prepared of God" for her. So did the rich man. (Luke 16: 22, 23); and "the devil and his angels." (Matthew 25: 41.) That the church might be restored in "the eleventh hour," this prophecy was fulfilled in 1829.

And I saw another angel [messenger] fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people. Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea; and the fountains of waters.—Revelation 14: 6, 7.

Churches, like other organizations, are the outgrowth of doctrines. Differing doctrines produce diversity of organizations. It cannot be otherwise. Said Jesus: "My doctrine is not mine but his that sent me." (John 7: 16; 12: 48-50.) As we contrast organizations existing now with the church as a body described in the New Testament; and note that as the expression of the will of the unchangeable God; we should not wonder that the time is now past that he has restored the everlasting gospel, not only in "word" but in "authority," and the Holy Ghost (See 1 Thessalonians 1: 5; Galatians 1: 8-10), and the church, as his means of regenerating and saving man. Even the gospel, in word, to convert, "power" to administer by the authority; Holy Ghost to give the "much assurance," the church in which all may be in the one body. (Acts 2: 47; 1 Corinthians 12: 13; Ephesians 4: 4, 5.)

Did God make a mistake and find it out later? And still later let the world out to classes of learned men, who without any revelation from him to themselves, and per consequence, without any divine authority try their hand at organizing churches in which to associate us all religiously? How can we be assured, or they assure us that we can be saved outside of the church described in the New Testament as God originally built? How? Where? By whom? Show us where God ever authorized a change from his will as originally expressed? We are generally answered: "The church as originally organized was, with its originally chosen officers as originally chosen and authorized, done away because no longer needed!" Where is that prophesied or so stated by any divinely inspired man? Show us this from God. It will be a new revelation. This new doctrine is not "confirmed by signs following!" This is purely human and not of God. We prefer to believe the doctrine of the great restoration of the gospel, and the church, the Jews; and the earth to its paradisaic glory, than to trust this human assertion supportive only of human inventions!

Our Savior, when interrogated by his apostles as to what the "sign" of his coming (see Matthew 16: 27; 25: 31; Daniel 7: 13, 14, and 27; Psalm 50: 3-6) would be, answered:

And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.—Matthew 24: 14.

This language is the conclusion of the last part of a three-fold question which the apostles propounded. (See verse 3.) He warns them first, relating to the deceptive spirits that will be among men just before his second coming in great glory. The question is not, What shall be the signs (plural), but specifically, "the sign," "of thy coming, and of the end of the world?"

At verse 15, Jesus begins his answer to the disciples' first question, which relates to the destruction of Jerusalem, and which was fulfilled in A. D. 65 to 72. He concludes the answer to the first question at verse 29, and then reverts in general to the signs of his second coming to the end of the chapter. A "sign" in any respect is an unusual event pointing to another event. The proclamation of "this gospel of the kingdom," there referred to, but not another gospel, but it is the one he and his disciples preached in that day when he was here. None of the renditions of the varied doctrines that differ with his can point to the near approach of the end of the world as a "sign" or rather "the sign" of his coming. But the proclamation of "this gospel of the kingdom" restored in its full, will—does, rather—constitute "the sign of his coming, and the end of the world."

For the principles of the doctrine as then taught see Hebrews 5: 12; 6: 1-3; Matthew 5; Acts 2: 38, 39; 8: 14-18; 19: 1-6; 13: 1-4. Men obeyed the gospel so far as to be baptized, and "had great joy," but had not received the Holy Ghost till after the laying on of hands. Paul and Barnabas did not go into the gospel work till they were called of God through the Holy Ghost, and ordained by the laying on of hands of those authorized.

Did the ancient ministry of Christ preach and practice more than the gospel when they confirmed believers for the reception of the Holy Spirit? If so, why? Were they doing wrong? If the ancient divinely called ministry could not do their duty as such, and leave the laying on of hands with prayer out, how can uninspired men preach the gospel and leave the laying on of hands out now?

Was it a part of the "all things" they were commanded by Christ to teach "them to observe," and "lo, he would be with them to the end of the world?" What part of the gospel so anciently declared can be left out now? Did mankind need more gospel to save them in apostolic days than to-day? If so, how much?

These questions carefully considered will enable us to see why the gospel, including divine authority to administer in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, should be restored in the last days.

The definite "gospel of the kingdom," preached as a witness—"the sign of" the coming of Christ in glory, appealing directly to man's reasoning powers, renders the other marvels as signs of Christ's coming intelligible.

That is as true as that signs are now occurring and will occur. But speak to many of the signs of the near approach of the second advent, and they will reply, "Oh, such things have always been."

"There have always been earthquakes, pestilences, famines, and curses of various descriptions." But the gospel, as Jesus and his ancient apostles taught it, is the surprise of all in these last days! And this is the answer to the question! What shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world? Surprising! In the light of these reflections, read again Matthew 24:3-14, and think; and see the reason for the restoration of the gospel in "the eleventh hour" call.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE LIFTING MISTS OF ALCOHOL

Forecast: Probably dry.

Which serves to remind of many things. A considerable proportion of the adult male population of these free and independent States has been seeing things through the bottom of a glass for some generations. These lookers through a glass mistily are now going to find out how things look to the naked eye.

They will find it a strange world. Everything they see will be as it is, and consequently novel and unfamiliar. They will have to get acquainted with all objects that before looked to be something they were not. They will have to learn to recognize the truth when they hear it and wisdom when it is expounded, for heretofore they knew truth and wisdom only as those articles were indicated with a wet forefinger on the bar by a companion on one side of it or the person in a white apron on the other.

The maxims, the advice, the protestations of verity, the luck pledged, the friendships sworn—how sound and plausible they all seemed at the time. The strange man who suddenly appeared out of the mist at our elbow, whose hand was on our shoulder and whom we had invited home to dinner, oblivious to the fact that the next meal in regular order at our house would be breakfast—how feasible and rational seemed the propositions discussed with him and sealed with handclasps.

The bartender whose wet towel travels round and round and round on the bar leaving your elbow an island in a bubbling sea, how weighty and convincing and how replete with the philosophy of ages seemed his conversation. How sparkling his repartee, how lively his wit.

Only with the morning sun did doubts arise that this flow of soul was genuine. Then it seemed a flow of the mere mopings under the bartender's towel. We tried to recall the name of the man we had agreed to meet every afternoon regularly, just to talk to. We hoped he was a stranger in town and wouldn't come back for years.

These next mornings are going to be a regular thing with many persons now. They are going to see the facts of life by the light of day. They have got to make a new line of conversation and establish a new reputation for wit. It won't be so easy to raise applause and laughter, and approach to and by strangers is going to be considerably more difficult.

The saloon door is oscillating to a final close. It is closing on a chimera—and a smell—that never have been reconciled to our natural habits of living. It was an unreal atmosphere. We never could carry it with us further than from one saloon to another.—Selected.

THE CHURCH AND THE PEOPLE

[The following is an extract from the Empire News, of May 18, from an address by the Reverend E. E. Smith, Vicar of Saint Matthew's, Leicester. It concerns itself especially with the Church of England, but is worthy of consideration by all.

In a recent lecture, President F. M. Smith remarked that the church seemed to have been building a hospital and graveyard at the foot of the cliff, to take care of the people after they fell off, instead of putting a railing at the top to keep them from falling.

To-day, the thought of many is given to this problem, How to make the church more effective for service here.

It has been one of the fundamental principles of our church that the brotherhood of man is as vital as the doctrine of the Fatherhood of God. The redemption of Zion here means care for the laboring man here and now, instead of the other worldliness too common in the history of the church at large in the past. This church has always held the economic and social problem to be the vital part of its work, and that in a way to help man, and not simply to dole out a pittance from time to time.

This clipping is sent us by the kindness of W. Spargo.—
EDITORS.]

(By the Reverend E. E. Smith, Vicar of Saint Matthew's, Leicester. Son of a working man himself, he is out to bring the church more in sympathy with the great mass of the people.)

"The church for the people, and the people for the church," ought to be the motto of every parish priest in the country.

Before the war it was publicly known that every section of organized Christianity was losing its hold upon the working classes. During the war this was more and more manifested.

After the feverish rush to churches on the part of a great number of people during August to December of 1914 there has been a steady relapse; the church is regarded by many as effete and as having no hold upon the working classes.

For this there are many reasons. And not chief amongst these are: (1) the respectability of the Church of England; and (2) the lack of sympathy she has shown in the interests of the poorer and working classes.

The church has, in the past, been tied down by an inelastic system, with its leanings towards the "respectable" and moneyed classes.

The interest she has shown in the rank and file of the democracy has been one of a patronizing and "ambulance" nature.

The working man hates patronizing, and justly so; and the "ambulance" work of the church has consisted in dealing with and alleviating symptoms rather than with the disease itself.

The handing out of doles and charities, of relief tickets and other effects of a pauperizing nature, have been the outward signs of an ineffective and false economy.

The church has taken the side of the man who has exploited man, curried favor with him, and tried to compensate and also salve her conscience by charitably relieving the distresses of the sweated laborer.

The "sweater" is not only a robber of men but a robber of God, and this is not far to seek as a deduction from the church's creed. The laborer uses his life in his labor; in the case of the "sweated" the bulk of the profits go to the "sweater."

In other words, the life given by God has been exploited for the sweater's own profits. And yet the church has stood by and witnessed this scandal without protest.

Christianity comprises not only the belief of a faith, but the application of that faith to everyday principles; otherwise it is reduced to nothing more than a philosophy.

But if the church is to be any power and example in the world of reconstruction she must set her own house in order. She must see that her own employees are not sweated.

The fact that the verger of my own church should have to keep clean a church which accommodates twelve hundred people for the magnificent sum of fourteen shillings a week is a case in point.

On the other hand many clergy are having to work for salaries which, comparatively speaking, are no better than this. Much more might be written on this point, but my space is limited.

Taking up the democratic point of view, we want more clergy from the working classes. Men who have been brought up in the hard school of labor, and who know from bitter experience what constitutes poverty and real suffering.

The experimental person who takes on a laborer's job for a week only knows one side. He can return to his comfortable home, and has no fears, knowing for a fact that his income of wealth is assured.

But not so the "sweated" laborer. His is not experiment, but experience, with a return to a home of dire necessity, and that makes all the difference in the world.

If, then, we can have in our ranks more men who have tasted of this dire necessity, and who, in consequence, are better able to truly sympathize with the laborer and the poor, then we can look to a steady flow to the church of those with whom the church has lost touch.

This is one of the remedies—and there are others besides—which will help us on to "The church for the people, and the people for the church."

---

PEACE OF WESTPHALIA

---

Doctor Arthur MacDonald of Washington, District of Columbia, has prepared a pamphlet, "Suggestions of the Peace Treaty of Westphalia for the Peace Conference in Paris," in which he draws a number of parallels between the conditions at the end of the Thirty Years' War, and of the recent world war. The Thirty Years' War was one of the bloodiest wars and most terrible ever held. It was a religious war, but the peace of Westphalia marked the end of religious war. The conclusion should prove of interest at the present time. The Thirty Years' War involved much of Western Europe before its conclusion. There was some disinclination to peace. Though it was a religious war, still such terms appeared in the treaty as: "No one of any party shall look askance at anyone on account of his creed."

In conclusion Doctor MacDonald's leaflet should prove of present interest.

"As the victorious party in war is much less inclined (if inclined at all) than the conquered foe to yield anything, will the allies, without the experience of defeat and exhaustion, be willing to yield enough of their sovereignty to make the future peace of the world permanent? Will they be magnanimous and give up some national advantages of the present for future international benefits to all mankind? In short, are they unselfish enough to so temper their justice with mercy as to establish a world peace, the greatest boon to humanity ever known?

"Here is a supreme opportunity. Will the victorious allies arise to the occasion and make future wars improbable, if not impossible? We say 'impossible,' because if a nation is recalcitrant, it can be punished by a general boycott, leading toward its economic ruin. As the instinct of self preservation is the most powerful influence in nations as well as individuals, it is a moral certainty that no nation could or would submit very long to such punishment. Just after a war is ended, when the belligerents feel more keenly its effect than later on, they are much more disposed to make mutual concessions. Will the victors of the European War strike at once while the iron is hot, and insist at the outset on the one paramount issue, the absolute prohibition of all wars? Such a decision would radiate through all further proceedings of the peace conference and greatly facilitate its work. By this making a certainty of the most important question of all history, no matter how difficult and delicate matters of greater or less importance may be, the conference of Paris will have assured its success in advance the greatest and most beneficent influence that the world has ever experienced, just as the peace of Westphalia was in its generation.

"In the peace treaty of Westphalia were these words: 'The hostilities that have taken place from the beginning of the late disturbances, in any place of whatsoever kind, by one side or the other, shall be forgotten and forgiven, so that neither party shall cherish enmity or hatred against, nor molest nor injure the other for any cause whatsoever.' Will the peace treaty of Paris contain as generous and noble words, and stop all political wars forever, just as the peace of Westphalia put an end to all religious wars?

"Will the twentieth-century Christianity, with its supposed greater liberality and enlightenment, be as far-seeing, unselfish, and effective as the Christianity of the seventeenth century?

"Let the conference at Paris answer: Yes.

"Just as the spread of education and knowledge has gradually liberated the intellect so as to undermine the ideas upon which religious wars were based, so a similar process of enlightenment may be necessary to cause political wars to cease."

---

SECONDHAND BIBLE KNOWLEDGE

---

"The pages of the Bible have never been opened by many of the great social leaders of to-day," declared Doctor Charles Foster Kent, noted religious writer and Yale theologian who to-day addressed the fifty religious workers in attendance at the religious conference now in session at the University of Iowa.

"These men are living on the inheritance of the Bible which they received from their fathers and grandfathers. The great question now is how many generations can this endure before they must return to the fountain source."

Doctor Kent is not worried about the present generation's seeming indifference towards the Bible. He thinks we are on the verge of a revival of interest in the book. Scientific methods and higher criticism, instead of making persons lose faith in the Scriptures, are only making the Bible fit the needs of the new generation.

That the Bible should be taught in all the schools and colleges from the historical and literary standpoint is the belief of Doctor Kent; he considers this would be a big step toward united Christendom.—Des Moines Register, June 25, 1919.

---

Women sometimes get a little provoked at their housekeeping. It's get up, get washed, brush hair, get breakfast, sweep and dust and cook and bake and wash dishes and make beds, brush hair, sew and wash and get lunch ready and just the same monotonous round. They get cross at their husbands because they have to do the same thing every day. That's a perfectly natural feeling, but it isn't supernatural. Life does not win by the things easy to do, but by the hard things; not by the natural but by the supernatural. Every man gets tired when he reenters the house and always hears the same thing, "Wipe your feet off." When life is hardest is where life fails to reach up and dream. Christ took an ordinary evening meal and made it ineffable and eternal.—William Quayle.

Each day is a new life and an abridgment of the whole. I will so live as if I counted every day my first and last; as if I began to live but then, and should live no more afterwards.—Bishop Hall.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

God's Holy Spirit

(A translation of Hymn 85, Welsh Hymn Book. By special requests from Wales. By J. R. Gibbs, Warrensville, Ohio.)

God's Holy Spirit, the true light,
Shall dwell in us to lead us right,
And kindle in us heavenly flame
In strains divine to praise his name.

May its revealing power show
The perils in our path that grow,
And 'all the wily deeds of hell
Before they come, the Spirit tell.

Temptations in our path that lie—
The Spirit helps to pass them by;
And wrath and envy in the heart
The Spirit causes to depart.

Hypocrisy cannot prevail;
The Spirit shows beneath its veil,
And treachery within a heart
The knowledge of it He imparts.

All foolish pride and self-desire
Will vanish by its heavenly fire;
And grief and pain within the heart,
By its great power will depart.

Blessed are they whose faces shine
Like beaming stars with love divine;
They are the happiest of the race;
Are saved forever by God's grace.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

The Pressing Need of the Church To-Day

My observations in various branches since the General Conference and my conversations with some of the deeply consecrated men in our church, lead me to the conviction that before we launch out upon foreign mission work we need a revival of faith in the gospel among our people at home.

Everything points to the fact that we are living in peculiar and trying times. Some aged, faithful members of the church bear testimony that they never witnessed the indifference among the Saints that exists to-day. The apostasy that is in the air everywhere about us, has crept in among the Saints, and they are being seriously affected by it. We must find a remedy. There is only one: the kindling of fervent faith on the altars of our branches. Our reunions this year, should, it seems to me, give themselves up to fervent prayer. It rejoices my soul that I am finding this condition at the reunion here in Clitherall, Minnesota, from which point I am writing this article.

The apostasy in Canada, the turning away of members in many of the branches, and the indifference of others, have caused the church to bleed from many wounds. We are not suffering quite so badly as the sectarian churches. The Reverend C. F. Wimber, the well-known evangelist, is my authority for the statement that seven thousand congregations passed through twelve months without a single member being added by conversion, letter, or otherwise. The whole religious world seems to be affected by the spirit of apostasy that seems to be "going about like a roaring lion, seeking whom it may devour." The painful fact is, it is devouring thousands. The pride of Babel is seen to-day, not in the erection of a tower on the plains of Babylon, but in the God-defying spirit of the age.

I have just finished reading, for the fourth time, Canon Farrar's great Christian classic, entitled, Early Christianity. He shows that the history of God's dealings with the world and through the church, has been one long series of backslidings and reclamations, fallings away and restorations.

But Canon Farrar seems to lose sight of the fact that Paul tells us of a time, which would precede the coming of the Anti-Christ, when there would be a general falling away, more universal and pronounced than any that had obtained before. I do not wonder that many Christ-loving souls, in the church and out of it, are profoundly convinced that we are in the "testing time" or "hastening time," in other words, that we are entering into the apostasy that was seen coming through the inspired eye of the apostle.

A great religious revival, prepared for by days of prayer and supplication in all our branches, seems to be the desirable thing at this moment. The branches are sorely in need of it. Nothing but the humbling message of the cross can bring us to our senses. We are told that the Son of Man is as one going into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom and then to return. Great things are ahead. Glorious things are spoken with regard to the church. They will be realized in God's own time. But we must give ourselves to the great work of bringing them about.

We must be true to our calling and fight the apostasy that seems to be gaining ground everywhere about us. Once in a while in conversation with my benefactor, John S. Huyler, he said to me with a sad expression on his face: "It seems to me we are entering a starless midnight of church apostasy." That was many years ago. It was a fearful statement, but the statement does not compare with the reality that is on the world to-day.

I once asked a noted bishop of one of the leading denominations what percentage of the denomination he believed were Christians. He answered, "Not more than eight per cent." That was ten years ago. If this good man's words were true then I wonder what percentage that same denomination would meet the requirements of Bible Christians now. During the white heat of the unfavorable criticism heaped on the Y. M. C. A., a worker of that organization was asked to sincerely state how many, in his judgment, were members of that organization, for religious reasons. The answer he gave, and which, in truth, he had to give, was startling. It was this: "Not more than five per cent, to be liberal in my estimate; but I doubt if more than three per cent really are such."

This is outside the church. But who can deny that we are affected by the apostasy everywhere about us? To say we are not is to cloud the truth. Whoever says we are not is ignorant of the religious state of the church. The fires on many of our altars are burning low. They need reviving.

AUGUSTINE DWYER.

The crowning fortune of a man is to be born with a bias to some pursuit, which finds him in employment and happiness.—Emerson.

Believe me, the talent of success is nothing more than doing what you can do well, whatever you do, without a thought of fame.—Longfellow.

The Holloway-Robinson Debate

I arrived in Salt Lake City Thursday, June 12, and found that Brethren Holloway and McKim had started holding meetings on the streets of the little town of Bountiful, some ten miles from the city. We continued the effort, preaching and then granting the congregation the privilege of asking us questions, until we had aroused an interested crowd of four or five hundred to a condition of earnestness seldom witnessed in this part of the Lord's vineyard. It seems that the interest was too great for the satisfaction of some, and so one night when Elder McKim was nearly exhausted, his throat being in such a condition he could hardly speak, an Elder Robinson of the Utah church started an argument with him, which terminated in a challenge for a debate. The next day Brother Holloway wrote a set of propositions and read them on the street that night, and the following night Elder Robinson signed up, and the controversy was on. The usual propositions were debated. Mr. Robinson affirmed that the church he represented was the true and legal continuation of the church organized in 1830 by Joseph Smith; Brother Holloway denying, and affirming that our church was the true continuation of the church organized in 1830, and Mr. Robinson denying.

The discussion commenced on Monday night, June 23, Brother Holloway leading with his affirmative in which he ably set forth our position of the Reorganization. Of course Mr. Robinson denied the authority of the brethren who were instrumental in the reorganization of the church, but he never denied or pretended to deny the fact that there was revelation from God to those men. In his second speech Elder Robinson read from our Church History, volume 3, page 217, this statement: "There was not so much of the manifestation of the Spirit at this time as upon former occasions, nevertheless a good feeling and influence prevailed. After the meeting had continued about one hour, a man belonging to the Brighamites, about half drunk, came in, and took a seat among us. Shortly after, this brother came to me and asked if I had received any answer to our question. I said, 'No.' He said, 'I have.' At my request he sat down and wrote it. It read as follows." Elder Robinson then read the revelation given to Brother H. H. Deam, and made it appear that it was given through "the half-drunken Brighamite." And then in very sarcastic language he proceeded to show that the source of the inspiration bringing into being the Reorganization was a half-drunken Brighamite and therefore the Reorganized Church is founded on a revelation given through a half-drunken Brighamite. Oh, it brought the house down all right and his people had a good laugh over it that evening. But it was not so funny when Brother Holloway showed on the following evening that Elder Robinson had deliberately left out the little letter "a." When he was exposed in this act of dishonesty, Elder Robinson tried to apologize by saying he did not discover that he had left out the little letter "a" until he had gotten home and then he had worried about it all night and day. Then, of course, he confessed he had made a mistake. According to the statement in the history it should read, "Shortly after this a brother came to me," etc.

It has never been the writer's experience to see such duplicity and deception used in public debate, and if you will allow my personal opinion, I think that the reason Elder Robinson was so sorry of his mistake, was because he was caught. The reason that I have this opinion is that while Elder Robinson claimed to be sorry for his mistake he still continued throughout the debate to urge that the drunken Brighamite had something to do with the revelation upon which the Reorganization was founded.

But he went from bad to worse, and on the second night of his proposition, he introduced Mr. Shook's book of The True Origin of Mormon Polygamy as his star witness against us. This was rich indeed, as he proved by this act to what straits he was forced, choosing a man who was as bitter an enemy to his church as ours, and in fact all phases of the restoration.

On the following evening he affirmed that he was willing to stand by Mr. Shook as a witness. Brother Holloway held him to his statement, and then things began to happen as Brother Holloway read from Shook's book the vile slanders upon the name of Joseph Smith and the Saints of the early-day church; how he accused them of every crime imaginable, thus lowering the latter-day work to the lowest depths of immorality, degradation, and sin. Brother Holloway repeatedly said he did not believe these things stated by Mr. Shook, but that he believed Mr. Shook was a liar. But, of course, Elder Robinson had accepted Shook as a witness and said he was willing to stand by him, and therefore Elder Robinson must believe the things Shook said about the Prophet Joseph Smith and the church in general. Elder Robinson and his friends looked rather sick as Brother Holloway brought out these thoughts. By this time the laugh was going the other way and Brother Holloway was receiving the applause.

There was quite a little complaint from our opponent, because Brother Holloway received so much assistance from Brother McKim, his moderator, but Brother Holloway asked what they thought he had a moderator for, to "sit still and look wise?" This brought a laugh because of the fact that "looking wise" was about all that Elder Robinson's moderator did.

In his closing speech Brother Holloway told his hearers that it was not our intention to be their enemies, but we came as their friends and it was our desire to help them and not injure them in any way. Brother Holloway had good liberty and his speech was very impressive. He also informed the congregation that during the debate he had tried to use his opponent as a gentleman should use an opponent, and that not once had he referred to him or his people as "not having any sense, as liars, or compared them to swine, etc.," which our opponent had done.

Elder Robinson was repeatedly asked to produce the revelation that called Brigham Young to the office of president of the church, and the record of his ordination to that office, when he was ordained, and who by. This was never done. The fact remaining is, that Brigham Young was never called of God, never ordained of man to be the president, prophet, and revelator to the church, therefore the Utah church cannot be the true successor and continuation of the church organized in 1830, by Joseph Smith, the Prophet. Brother Holloway then showed, by their own records, that Heber J. Grant, who recently became president of the Utah church, was ordained to that office, which procedure had never been followed in the case of any president previous. Therefore, if they are right in ordaining Heber J. Grant to the office of president of the church, then all the other men from Brigham Young up to the present president unlawfully occupied in this high calling. This is a tacit acknowledgment that up to this time the church in Utah was out of harmony with the law providing for the calling of a president to the high priesthood as stated in the Doctrine and Covenants.

At the close of the debate the best of feeling existed and we received a cordial invitation to come back and hold meetings on the street again sometime in the near future. Your writer feels that this is one of the most successful debates that it has ever been his good fortune to attend and he believes much good was done, many friends being made. I might also just state here that there seems to be a better feeling existing between the missionary force of our church out here and the Utah church than has ever been before. I myself was invited to come to Bountiful and bring my wife to take dinner with an ex-missionary of the Utah church, a very fine young man, but as we think mistaken a little in his theology.

Ever praying that the good work may go on, I remain,
Your brother in Christ,

R. L. FULK.

SALT LAKE CITY, 336 South Fourth East Street.

---

Lamoni Stake

---

The work in this stake has a hopeful aspect. Naturally, there are disappointments and discouragements, but in the steady onward march of progress these soon become only memories and then are forgotten.

At the stake conference at Hiteman, several important matters came up and were adopted. The nomination of Elder Cyril E. Wight as high priest and counselor to the president of the stake was indorsed and the brother so ordained. This gives us an excellent quorum of three young men to carry the executive responsibilities of the stake and Lamoni Branch, and they have the full confidence of the Saints.

The following document requesting the stake presidency to nominate presidents of branches was presented to the conference by the stake high council and unanimously adopted:

"After careful deliberation, the Lamoni Stake high council by this instrument conveys for your consideration the following concerning the election of presidents of branches of the stake:

"1. Recognizing as we do the right of the stake presidency to nominate men for presidents of branches under their jurisdiction;

"2. Believing that where they may deem it wise or necessary in the interests of the work of the church to so do the presidency should nominate;

"3. And believing further that the time has come in the development of the stake when a fuller cooperation should be had between the stake presidency and Saints in matters of so vital importance to the cause, combining the wisdom of the Presidency as such procedure would do with the wisdom of the people, we are of the conviction that the stake presidency should be requested to hereafter submit at the regular election time in the branches nominations for presidents of the various branches of the stake, and we so recommend.

"4. And we further recommend that elections in the various branches be annually, the term of office in each instance to begin January 1."

The stake has for several years had a joint auditing committee for the finances of the stake, composed of a member each from the stake, the Sunday school association, and the Religio Society. This was found inadequate for the task, and after having the matter referred to them, the stake high council presented the following resolutions, which were adopted, and followed by a nomination and selection of G. W. Blair as stake auditor:

"Be it resolved: 1. That the present system of auditing be discontinued.

"2. That one competent auditor be selected to audit the various accounts of the stake, including those of the auxiliaries.

"3. That the selection of the auditor be on nomination by the stake presidency and election by the stake conference."

The memorial address at the county celebration of the Fourth of July at Leon was by President F. M. Smith. It was a most excellent address and highly commended by all who have expressed themselves. The day was badly intermixed with showers, which finally disrupted all arrangements, but the address was given in the morning to a fairly large audience.

Preparations are being made for the annual stake reunion at the grounds a mile south of town. The twenty-acre grounds are becoming more beautiful each year, and the importance of the reunion keeps pace therewith. The reunion is a vital affair with us, always resulting in renewed spiritual vigor and increased activity. We hear of a number from a distance who intend to become members of the big camp.

The Sunday school is doing fairly well, but the Religio, meeting at 6.30 Sunday evenings, has been having its annual struggle for existence. The exodus of college students each spring has a paralyzing effect that continues for some time. The following announcement from the branch presidency indicates a contemplated change: "Yielding to a combination of circumstances, it has been thought best to combine for the balance of the summer the Religio and the Sunday evening service. These meetings will be held in the church park at 7.30 p. m. This arrangement will allow latitude for the presentation of matters of interest and profit to all. The Religio will provide appropriate program features, and the church brief addresses. A. M. Carmichael will appear Sunday evening next, in the first of these addresses, discussing the subject, 'The Saint and the community.'"

The local Temple Builders, a live organization of some forty young women of the town, are announcing a "new-fashioned ice cream social" for the evening of July 18, the proceeds to apply on the purchase of a tent for the organization and young people's affairs. Their leader is Miss May Needham.
E. D. MOORE.

---

The Bishopric

Advocate for 1919

"Every Member a Tithe Payer"

Are you teaching your children to support the Lord's work by tithes and offerings?

Where their treasure is, there will their heart be also.

---

Some War Experiences

During the recent war I was taken a prisoner and thought perhaps my experiences might be interesting to some of your readers, including some friends in England.

On May 26, 1917, I enlisted in the Fourth Ohio National Guards, in order to get into service. Was called out on July 15, 1917, and mustered into Federal service on August 5, 1917. We were trained at Camp Perry and Camp Mills, and our company was assigned to the 42d Division, 116th Regiment, now known as the Rainbow Division. This division was complete in all departments and was in reality a separate army in itself. This was also made up of the National Guards from twenty-six States. We sailed October 29 and landed in Brest on November 17, 1917. The ship we sailed on was the Agamemnon, being the former German ship, Kaiser Wilhelm II.

We trained in France about three months, reaching the front February 15, 1918, at the Saint Clement sector in Lorraine. Here we stayed about four months and were moved to the Champagne front.

The Germans made a drive on July 15. We were located behind what had been a German line in 1914, and a few of us were located on an outpost guarding a 75-milimeter anti-tank gun. With a small detachment of us were two French machine gun crews which consisted of twelve men to each crew. One of the guns actually fired three shots and then ran for cover, the other machine guns fired until they saw the Germans coming, and then they also ran. The Germans came on in mass formation, wave after wave, and before we knew just what was happening they got through the woods and surrounded us. However, we kept them back until we ran out of ammunition, then we tried to get back but found they had machine guns behind us covering the trench, and we could not get through. The post we were occupying was about a half-mile ahead of our division. In the fray I was wounded. Two of our men were killed outright and some were gassed. The rest of us, including myself, were taken prisoners. After being surrounded, they came in and took us back about one and a half miles behind their lines. Here we stayed for about four days, then we were transferred to a point a half-mile farther back, and were kept there for about ten days.

The first night rations consisted of some biscuits and a can of goulash, or what is commonly known as horse meat, about the size of a can of Borden's condensed milk, for four men. We had small quantities given to us during the rest of the time we were behind the lines, that is, the four-day time. We were compelled to build a corderoy road under our own shell fire. Our own artillery chased us away from this three times in one day. On the fourth day they removed us to a larger camp or inclosure. In this camp there was no shelter. We were there for ten days. I did not have to work while at this camp on account of my wound, having to go to the hospital every day as there was a first-aid station at this place.

I have forgotten to mention that in regard to my being wounded, I shot at a German who was in the cleaning-up squad when we met them on my attempt to return to my own lines. I do not know whether I hit him or not, but in about two minutes I saw a rifle pointing at me and he shot. I had a book in my right breast pocket. The bullet passed through the elbow of the gas mask and the book. On the left side it entered my breast and glanced off my rib and went out again. In the book which I had in my pocket was a letter from my mother's sister in England, one from the Oriole Girls from Columbus, Ohio, one from the North Manchester Sunday school, and one from a niece in America, so you can see that many things contrived to deflect the bullet which probably would have resulted in my death had it not been for the effect of the glancing blow.

The second place where we stopped to eat they gave us some oatmeal soup and some cornmeal soup and a piece of moldy bread. We then went back about forty miles to Vouziers. At this place we got a little better feed, but they used us in place of horses to haul their wood. Six or seven would have to pull about a half-ton of wood on a wagon for the officers. We were there about two weeks and from there we went to Rastatt-Baden, Germany. At this place the feed was worse, but sleeping conditions a little better. We used sour grass to make soup from, so you can see that we were not very well fed.

About September 1 the Red Cross succeeded in getting a load of canned goods to us, including hard-tack, etc. From this time on we did not fare very badly, as it seemed as if the Germans were aware that they would have to give up sooner or later. The Red Cross also got our uniforms to us so that we were in better shape along this line.

After the armistice was signed we could cook our own meals. We were not treated so badly at Rastatt. We were, however, used as horses to haul loads of bread, and had to work in Camp Garden. Some of us during our stay at Rastatt were sent out to work in the factory. I worked fifteen days in a car factory. Some were sent out on farms. I personally could not say that I was mistreated, but the punishment of some was rather severe. As an instance, one of the fellows wrote home on a postal card, there was only one place in Columbus that he would rather be than in the German military prison, and that was Greenlawn. Greenlawn is a cemetery at Columbus. The Germans did not know this and it passed the censor all right.

After the armistice was signed, we were detained at Rastatt until about December 8, and I was among the first ones who left on Swiss trains, armed with Swiss guards. We went through Basel, Switzerland, and were given a big feed and new clothes. At Geneva the American Red Cross trains took us up to a hospital in France. This was at Vichy, which was a base hospital No. 1. Then for about two months I was attached to the 91st Division; sailed from Saint Mazaire April 4, landed April 15, and was discharged at Camp Sherman, April 30.

This is just a short history of my own experiences. While I escaped from being shot by the Germans on account of being able to walk, some of the boys who were wounded so they could not stand up or walk, were killed on the ground by the Germans at the time they took us prisoners.

All the time, the hope which I had helped me to be strong under these peculiar conditions.

ALMA WEATE.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 13, 1919.

PARK VIEW TERRACE, DANESMOOR, ENGLAND,
June 16, 1919.

Editors Herald: As it is so long a time since I wrote to your column, it may be thought that the writer has deserted the HERALD. Whilst that may be true, yet I want it to be understood that I have by no means deserted the cause of Christ. I have been endeavoring with my humble efforts to preach the word of God, to be instant in season, and want to say that the work is dearer to me to-day than ever it was. Through it there has been brought into my life a happiness that compensates for whatever sacrifice may have been made.

I think you will agree with me, Mr. Editor, that at times it is almost impossible for us to put in black and white the feelings engendered by our experiences.

Looking back upon this last nine months and reviewing my experiences during that time, I am appalled at the change that has taken place within myself as a result of those experiences. I have been in touch with life in its various phases, have had my soul seared with the bitterness of despair, only again to feel the reviving power of renewed energy and desire. Have sorrowed with the sorrowful, joyed with the joyful, sympathized with those needing sympathy, and at all times tried to emulate the example of the divine Teacher, and feel now as I write that I am the gainer by those experiences.

In October of last year, by request, I attended the reunion of the Sheffield District, held in Sutton on the 12th and 13th of that month. What a wonderful experience! On Sunday night, after the close of the reunion, I was invited to go along with some of the Clay Cross Saints on their trap, to Clay Cross. As I had to be at a place called Grassington in Yorkshire on the day following, and being informed that I could get a better connection by going to Clay Cross, I readily assented. What a memorable ride! Our party consisted of Sisters Rosa Holmes, Mable Holmes, Lillie Holmes, Brother Frank Holmes, and the writer. The night was a beautiful one, and as I took my seat next to our Sister Lillie Holmes, there was nothing but happiness in our hearts, and no thought whatever of the tragedy that was shortly to be enacted.

We had one or two slight mishaps on the way. First, the improvised seat gave way, and after we had fixed that up, the rear lamp came off, and not being able to fasten the same on again, the writer had to act as lamp holder for the remainder of the journey. Since this time I have had several rides with some one or other of the Clay Cross Saints, but none stand out so well in my memory as this first ride in the night. Possibly after-events have fixed it indelibly upon my mind.

On the Monday, as arranged, I left for Grassington, accompanied with an urgent request to pay a visit to Clay Cross as soon as possible.

I accordingly arranged to return in November, and on Saturday, the 2d, I arrive in Clay Cross on the bus from Chesterfield, somewhere about 8.30 p. m. During the afternoon of this date, our Brother Joseph Holmes and his two sisters had met several busses, anticipating that I should be coming, and finally the brother having to leave them, the two sisters determined to wait for this one bus (8.30), and if I was not on that they would come to the conclusion that something had prevented my coming. However, this time they were not disappointed.

As I shook hands with our Sister Lillie, a most uncontrollable feeling of depression took possession of me. I mentioned it to the sisters, and at the time I could not account for it.

After partaking of a meal in the home of Brother and Sister Simon Holmes, I was taken to the meeting room close by, where a meeting was in progress, and there introduced to the president, Elder Joseph Holmes.

I spoke a little to them on the Saturday night, occupied the Sunday following, and also Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday nights. The following Sunday I occupied again, and the three ensuing nights I lectured upon the Book of Mormon, using my own map.

A remarkable incident occurred on the very first Sunday night. Three of the Saints testified that whilst I was preaching they saw a star suspended immediately above my head. Another lady (a nonmember) who was passing the meeting room at the time, called the next day at the home of one of our sisters, and stated that her attention had been attracted to a peculiar-looking star that hung over our meeting house, and whilst she was gazing at it, the star seemed to move from over the meeting house and travel until it was immediately over the home of our Sister Lillie Holmes, after which it disappeared.

During the course of my lectures, Sister Lillie took ill with the influenza. Her sister Mable also was struck down with it, then her brother Frank. Three of the party that rode from Sutton to Clay Cross on that memorable night, were now stricken down. I offered my services to Sister Rachel Holmes, the mother, and these being accepted, I did all that lay in my power to assist. Brother Joseph Holmes and I administered to them several times, and eventually Sister Mable and Frank were restored. Our concern now was for Sister Lillie. Her faith never relaxed, but she grew worse and worse, and as I look at my diary now, I find the record from the 16th to the 20th: "Anxiously watching at the bedside of Lillie." On the morning of the 21st at 1.40 a. m., she passed away. On Sunday, the 24th, I officiated at her funeral in the cemetery close by.

Since that date my labors have been chiefly centered in and around Clay Cross. The Saints themselves arranged for a month's propaganda work, and the Branch, Sunday school, and Religio are meeting the expenses of the same.

The program has been as follows:

Sunday, special services in the meetinghouse.

Monday and Wednesday also in the meetinghouse.

Tuesday and Thursday on the fair ground.

Sunday morning after the service in the room, we have adjourned to a place called Danesmoor, and there held an outdoor service to an interested audience.

On the fair ground we have taken a dray, placed an organ on it, and used it as our stand. I have received splendid assistance from the branch president, Elder Joseph Holmes, and also his sister Mable, who has officiated for us at the organ. Others who were regular in assistance rendered by their presence and also singing, were Sister Annie Holmes, the wife of the president, Sister Wragg, Brother and Sister Timms, and Sister Titmus.

I could write of many more experiences, but do not want to encroach too much upon your space. May God bless our efforts, and through all the various changes in life, may we ever prove faithful, be true to our trust; and so inherit eternal life.

Yours in the cause of Christ,

ABEL HALL.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

By Way of Information

Thirteen years ago, by action of the church I was directed to assume responsibilities and perform duties along medical lines in connection with ministerial work then engaging my attention, and three years later, by conference vote was relieved of my responsibilities as an active member of the Quorum of Twelve, and instructed to give my entire attention to the medical service.

As announced by me to the General Conference of 1909, that was the most solemn moment of my life; but it was the voice of the church in acquiescence with what to it seemed to be the counsel of God, and I tried to honor the order as best I could in evidence of my loyalty to the body, and, though I later surrendered the official title connected with the new line of work, I have continued in the service appointed to this day, and have tried to perform it in the same spirit of consecration to God and good will to man as belonged to the more spiritual lines of work, and not as a means for personal gain or aggrandizement.

To-day there comes to me a call from the church, as represented by the unanimous vote of the First Presidency, the Twelve, and Bishopric, to drop the medical work and step back into the old lines of ministerial activity, and give the remainder of my life to preaching the gospel among the churches as I may be led by the Spirit of our common Master and the counsel of those in charge.

Obedient to this call, and with a feeling of joy and gratitude such as stirs the liberated captive, I have this day disposed of all my office equipment of a medical character to Doctor (brother) W. E. Messenger, who is at present in charge of the Sanitarium, and who, by reason of several years of close association with me is able and ready to take up the work where I lay it down, and to continue it in the interests of all concerned. He is a physician of over thirty years' experience, and into his hands I have committed all the records connected with the years of my labor, so that not a ripple need occur from his adoption of my practice. Every case under my care is recorded as to its history and treatment, and he has been a close counselor with me in my work, so that his mind and eye are familiar with the details, and he is making provision for this addition to his own former practice. Those who have been my patients therefore will know no difference by reason of this transfer, except in the improvement which his longer experience and riper skill as a physician will add to their treatment. All correspondence, whether relating to future treatment or settlement of past accounts due me, and all payments should be made and addressed to Doctor W. E. Messenger, Independence, Missouri. Everything is now in his hands and all who wish particulars as to his charges, terms, etc., should write him for the same.

Following this adieu to medicine as a life engagement, I turn to the church, and with all the earnestness I can infuse into language, appeal for your prayers that my resumption of the old line of work may not only prove a joy to me, which it surely is, but a blessing to all who shall be affected by it. I am older than I was and cannot throw the vigor of a young man into my work any more; but what there is to me shall be unreservedly given, and my devout prayer in renewing my consecration to exclusively ministerial work is that every sermon preached and every rite observed by me shall be as fully characterized by the divine unction as God desires it shall be or shall make possible.

Keenly conscious that the world's closing day is upon us, my hope is that my life shall have its finishing amid those engagements that help to prepare the Bride in her work of adorning, that the Master's coming may be hastened, and that I may with all the Saints be permitted attendance at the wedding ceremony and festival.

My wife, upon whom the sacrifice connected with this change must fall, bids me, as she always has done, to follow the Master's beckoning and trust her to his care. In this expressed devotion I find especial happiness. I know not how long my earth life may yet be extended, but my sincere wish is that every hour of it shall be employed in ways that will meet with divine approval.

The church, from the crown of its divine head down, means much—very much to me. There is really nothing outside of it for me, and I want so much to mean something to it, if God will favor me with that honor, and there is no honor more royal among men than the right and privilege to represent so divine a creation, so kingly an estate as is tinctured in our gospel message—this "marvelous work and a wonder." May God help us to estimate it more nearly as it deserves, and to give that estimate a life-voicing.

By the time this announcement has obtained general circulation I expect to be in the field and at work, so that no correspondence relating to medicine should be sent to me. Private correspondence may be addressed to 120 Pendleton Avenue, Independence, Missouri, and it will be forwarded to me.

With thanks to my patients everywhere, and with a prayer that the change will be for their betterment, I remain in the gospel hope,
Your brother,
JOSEPH LUFF.

July 9, 1919.

Pastoral

I have lately been appointed to labor in the following counties of Iowa: Mills, Montgomery, Adams, Fremont, Page, and Taylor. All of the branches of this district are located in the two counties of Mills and Fremont, except Shenandoah, which is just across the line in Page County.

I am anxious to do some work in the eastern counties of this district, but am not acquainted with a single person in them; I therefore desire to hear from anyone in this district who can in any way assist to get a place in which to preach. It does not make any difference to me whether there are any members of the church living there or not, if you know of a place that you have reason to think would open a schoolhouse or other building to me for meetings, please write me, giving what details you can. Address me at 719 Hazel Street, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Your brother,

B. S. LAMBKIN.

GLENWOOD, IOWA, July 8, 1919.

Under my new appointment to labor among the American Indians this year I find a big field and it certainly is new and uncultivated, but I am sure it will yield a bountiful harvest. I have already had a number of invitations to come and preach among them, and I trust that I may have the earnest cooperation of the local Saints as well as the prayers of the Saints in general for the success of this work in which the church has so long been interested in and looked forward to the day that this people would blossom as the rose as the promise is made in the Book of Mormon. All our Religians who have gone over these promises again and again in the study of that book have hoped to see the day when our church could move out and occupy among that people. The past five or six years have demonstrated to me the possibilities of our work among them. And I am confident with the help of a few devoted, studious young men, whom I trust will come forward and take up this work in the near future, we may move this work to the various tribes and see our hopes realized.

The first Indian church has just been completed among the Omahas, and the Cheyennes are now calling for a building in which their people can meet, where I did my first Indian work. I would be very glad to correspond with any of the Saints anywhere in the United States or Canada, regarding opportunities for work among this people. I am taking up a thorough study of the Indian question and shall welcome suggestions from any of the Saints.

Sincerely your brother,

HUBERT CASE.

LAMONI, IOWA.

Reunion Calendar

(The figures in parenthesis give the page of the HERALD on which details have been given.)

Central Nebraska, Neligh, Nebraska, July 10-20 (407, 527).
Chatham, Ontario, Erie Beach, July 18-28 (598).

Massachusetts, Onset, Massachusetts, July 19-August 4 (527).

Kentucky and Tennessee, 7 miles east of Paris, Kentucky, July 26 to August 3 (654).

Toronto, Low Banks, Ontario, July 26 to August 10.

Lamoni Stake, Lamoni, July 30 to August 10 (655).

Alabama, McKenzie, August 1-10 (527).

Seattle and British Columbia, Bellingham, Washington, August 1-10 (527).

Western Oklahoma, Sanders's Grove at Calumet, August 1-10 (552).

Southern California, Hermosa Beach, August 1-10 (598, 654).
Eastern Oklahoma, North of Fort Towson, August 1-10 (654).

Western Nebraska, near Tryon, August 1-10 (702).

Spring River, Joplin, Missouri, August 1-10 (702).

Kirtland, Ohio, Kirtland, Ohio, August 7-17 (311).

Des Moines, Runnells, Iowa, August 8-17 (575).

Clinton, Missouri, Eldorado Springs, August 8-17 (598, 654).

Southwestern Texas, Pipe Creek, Texas, August 8-17 (conference and ten-day meeting) (655).

Northeastern Nebraska, Southern Nebraska, Pottawattamie, and Fremont, Iowa, Council Bluffs, Iowa, August 15-24 (552, 703).

Northern California, Irvington, California, August 14-24 (654).

Holden, Kansas City, and Independence Stakes, Pertle Springs, August 15-24 (598).

Far West, Missouri, Stewartville, August 15-24 (654).

Little Sioux and Gallands Grove, Dow City, Iowa, August 22-31 (503).

Southeastern Illinois, Springerton, Illinois, August 15-24 (654).

Southern Missouri, Springfield, August 20-31 (702).

Nauvoo, Illinois, Montrose, Iowa, August 22-31 (527).

Northern Wisconsin, Chetek, August 22-31 (655).

Southern Idaho, Hagerman, August 22-31.

Northeastern Illinois, Plano, Illinois, August 29 to September 7 (553).

Reunion Notices

There has been some little mix-up in the announcement of meal prices for Chetek reunion. They should be: Breakfast, 25 cents; dinner, 35 cents; supper, 30 cents.

Western Nebraska, at the Pleasant View Branch, near Tryon, Nebraska, August 1 to 10. All Saints that can are invited to be with us. L. C. Reneau, secretary committee.

Conditions make it unfavorable to carry on a reunion at Marengo, and after concurring with the committee and local Saints, we deem it wisdom to call off the reunion for this year. J. E. Warne, president of Southern Indiana District.

Southern Missouri, at Springfield, August 20-31, at the park. Sunday school convention August 22; conference August 23. Brother Ogden has a number of vacant houses which he offers free of charge. Some can be used for the men to sleep in, and others for the ladies, and the cooking can be done at one place. All come prepared to care for yourselves. Bring quilts, blankets, and straw ticks. We will have straw to fill ticks on ground, if you will notify us of your needs. We expect to have a good attendance, so come and have a good time with us. A. V. Closson, chairman, Higgins, Missouri.

Spring River, at Cunningham Park, Joplin, Missouri, August 1 to 10. Tents set up: 8x10, $2.25; 10x12, $2.75; 12x14, $3.25; 9½x13, $2.50; 12x14, 6-foot wall, $6.50; 12x20, 6-foot wall, $7.50. Cots 50 cents. Persons desiring, may obtain furnished rooms at reasonable rates. Meals at dining tent, by meal ticket of 21 meals, 20 cents per meal; single meals 25 cents; Sunday dinner 30 cents; tea or coffee 5 cents extra. Children under 10 years, one-half price. Orders for tents should be in by July 30. Address all orders and requests for information to S. G. Carrow, R. F. D., Box 304, Joplin, Missouri. We are taking an advance step in reunion work this year and will offer the Saints many helpful features. Many ministers and workers will conduct the varied program. Charles Fry, chairman.

Northeastern Nebraska, Southern Nebraska, Pottawattamie, and Fremont in Iowa, will convene in joint reunion on the hills back of Council Bluffs, Iowa, August 15 to 24. Prices for tents and equipment: 10 by 12 wall, $8; 12 by 14 wall, $3.50; 12 by 14, 6-foot wall, $5; 12 by 19, 6-foot wall, $7.50; 14 by 16, 4-foot wall, $5. Tents set up will be 25 cents extra; saw-buck cots, 50 cents extra; tables, 75 cents extra; chairs, 25 cents extra. The committee will conduct a dining tent and supply stand on the ground and price of meals will be reasonable. Baggage will be hauled free to and from the grounds. All those desiring tents and equipment should place their order with the undersigned before August 10. J. L. Parker, secretary, 3326 R Street, Lincoln, Nebraska. After August 10 send all orders and inquiries to the secretary, Council Bluffs, Iowa, general delivery.

Conference Notices

Northern Saskatchewan, with Minnesota Branch, Vanscoy, July 26 and 27. Religio convention 24th, Sunday school 25th. All trains met at Vanscoy, and accommodation provided for visiting Saints. Mrs. C. R. Bowerman, care Rose Lodge, Regina, secretary.

Convention Notices

Northern Saskatchewan Religio, July 24, at Brother Van Eaton's home, near Eaton siding, eight miles from Saskatoon. Mrs. J. A. Beckman, secretary.

Kentucky and Tennessee Sunday school, with the Mays Hill Branch, July 31. O. S. Caldwell, superintendent.

The Presidency

NOTICE OF APPOINTMENT

Notice is hereby given of the appointment by the Presidency and Twelve of Elder Birch Whiting to Saskatchewan, where he will labor locally.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
BY F. M. S.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 10, 1919.

To the Church: In the list of appointments recently issued, the name of Joseph Luff appears as having been referred to the First Presidency. After due consultation between the First Presidency and Brother Luff, the latter takes the field to labor as his strength and circumstances permit, devoting himself wholly to church work under the supervision of the Presidency. No definite assignment of field has been made, it being thought best to leave considerable freedom in this direction, in order that his ministerial services can be extended, so far as practicable, wherever demanded.

Brother Luff's long experience as a minister and church worker and well-known ability as a preacher make him a welcome addition to the list of appointees, and we bid him Godspeed, and pray that his efforts shall continually be for the upbuilding of the cause for which he has so long labored.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President of the Church.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 10, 1919.

The Bishopric

We are advised by Sister Laura B. Clark that the May Flower Aid Society, of Rock Elm, Wisconsin, has been dissolved and she has forwarded to this office as an offering from this society the amount which they had in their treasury, namely: Cash $12.67 and notes $50. To those who have labored in the interest of this society, we desire to express our thanks for this contribution to the Lord's work.

Sincerely yours,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

Two-Day Meetings

At Levering, Michigan, August 2 and 3. Meals will be free, so come with well-filled baskets to help bear the burden of caring for the body, and we will try to provide nourishment for the inner man. Arthur E. Starks, president.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor.

The official organ of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Published every Wednesday by the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. Entered at the post office at Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

PRICE, $1.75 A YEAR IN ADVANCE

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

|                          |           |     |
|--------------------------|-----------|-----|
| The League of Nations    | - - - - - | 681 |
| Blue Pencil Notes        | - - - - - | 682 |
| Heman Hale Smith         | - - - - - | 683 |
| Leadership and Education | - - - - - | 683 |
| Treaties for Peace       | - - - - - | 684 |
| Cost of Living           | - - - - - | 684 |

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

|  |           |     |
|--|-----------|-----|
| The Larger Vision, by C. Edward Miller | - - - - - | 685 |
| The Outlook, by Columbus Scott         | - - - - - | 691 |

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

|                              |           |     |
|------------------------------|-----------|-----|
| The Lifting Mists of Alcohol | - - - - - | 694 |
| The Church and the People    | - - - - - | 694 |
| Peace of Westphalia          | - - - - - | 695 |
| Secondhand Bible Knowledge   | - - - - - | 696 |

HYMNS AND POEMS

|           |           |     |
|-----------|-----------|-----|
| - - - - - | - - - - - | 697 |
|-----------|-----------|-----|

LETTER DEPARTMENT

|           |           |     |
|-----------|-----------|-----|
| - - - - - | - - - - - | 697 |
|-----------|-----------|-----|

Augustine Dwyer—R. L. Fulk—E. D. Moore—
Alma Weate—Abel Hall.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

|           |           |     |
|-----------|-----------|-----|
| - - - - - | - - - - - | 701 |
|-----------|-----------|-----|

Our Departed Ones

KINGMAN.—Zelia M. Kingman, was born November 13, 1845, at Reading, Massachusetts; baptized June 13, 1916; Died May 31, 1919, at North Saugus, Massachusetts. Services in charge of E. L. Traver. Sermon by William F. Frost.

HEGARTY.—Eva Floy Hegarty, daughter of Patrick and Julia Hegarty, born at Underwood, Pennsylvania, September 29, 1901; baptized November, 1917; died May 23, 1919, at her home in Fort Dodge, Iowa. Leaves to mourn, father, mother, 3 sisters, and other relatives. Services in the Saints' church at Underwood. Sermon by D. R. Chambers.

NELSON.—Mary Freese Nelson was born in Copenhagen, Denmark, November 21, 1847, and died May 31, 1919, at Hutchinson, Kansas, after a few hours' illness. Leaves to mourn, 3 daughters. Had been a member of the church for nearly fifty years. Funeral sermon preached by Reverend Wilson of the Presbyterian Church; burial at Hutchinson, Kansas.

RADMALL.—Sadie B. Radmall was born at Pleasant Grove, Utah, September 28, 1888. Moved with her parents to Independence, Missouri, in 1907. She was an untiring worker for Christ. "Service" was her motto. After three years of patient suffering, she died April 19, 1919, at the home of her parents near Blue Springs, Missouri. Funeral services at the home of her sister, Mrs. J. E. Vanderwood. Sermon by Ward L. Christy. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

BARKER.—Arthur Barker was born January 1, 1855, at Great Ashfield, Suffolk County, England. Married Ellen Spence, to whom were born 13 children. His wife and 5 children have gone on before. There remain 8 children, 24 grandchildren, 1 great-grandchild to mourn. He was baptized February 27, 1887, at Saint Thomas, Ontario. Ordained a deacon February 17, 1889. Died May 31, 1919. Was a good, faithful officer and brother. Sermon by James McConnaughy.

CLOUGH.—Phoebe Ellen Clough was born in Amesbury, Massachusetts, March 31, 1868. Married George B. Clough, January 18, 1887. Baptized by Richard Bullard at Somerville, February 3, 1901. Underwent an operation May 3, and died May 4, 1919, in a hospital at Stoneham. She was loved by all who knew her, as a kind and loving wife and mother. Husband, 2 sons, 2 daughters, 9 grandchildren, and a host of friends are left to mourn. Funeral services at the home in Stoneham, Massachusetts; E. L. Traver in charge, sermon by Richard Baldwin. Interment in Canaan, New Hampshire, where one son is buried.

BARREY.—Rolland Barrey was born in Oregon, September 17, 1895. Baptized at Laguna Beach, December 11, 1918, by Elder G. H. Wixom. Died June 9, 1919, at Laguna Beach. Services were held June 12. Sermon by G. H. Wixom.

CAVE.—William L. Cave was born October 31, 1869, at San Bernardino, California. Baptized August 19, 1900, at San Bernardino, by A. E. Jones. Confirmed by A. E. Jones, E. A. Smith, and William Gibson. Died at San Bernardino, June 2, 1919, following an operation at the local hospital. Services at the Saints' church. Sermon by G. H. Wixom.

CAVE.—Clara Cave, wife of William L. Cave, deceased, died June 8, 1919. She was seriously ill at the time of her husband's death, and the service was almost identical with that held for the husband a few days previous. Sermon by G. H. Wixom, assisted by A. H. Mills. Interment in Mountain View Cemetery.

JACKSON.—L. B. Jackson, father of J. W. Jackson, for several years a missionary in Arkansas and Oklahoma. Born May 14, 1842, in Henderson, Tennessee. Baptized July 4, 1902, by J. W. Jackson. Had been married twice. Leaves aged wife, ten children and a host of friends. His residence was always a home for the missionaries. He and his wife cared for J. D. Erwin years ago when the latter had been whipped by a mob. Died at Euclid, Arkansas, January 25, 1919. Funeral sermon by E. A. Erwin.

FROM HERE AND THERE

WORK FOR CHILDREN AT KIRTLAND

Mrs. Lora Strachan, of 1029 Owens Street, Youngstown, Ohio, writes, regarding the Kirtland reunion: "Our work for the children at the reunion is under the institute department and classed under that department as the 'Manual school.' We include children ranging from four to fourteen years of age. We meet each morning for one hour and a half, during which time we engage in singing, hand-work, and story-telling. We want the children to feel the meetings are for them, and the parents to appreciate the value of the meetings for the children. Following our system of credits in the Youngstown school, we are giving a certificate to each child who attends four or more sessions during the reunion. I want to hear from all the superintendents of Sunday schools in the district who expect to be represented at the reunion, with how many children are likely to come, and the names and addresses of a lady in each place who could be recommended as a help to us in teaching the children."

"Arrangements have been concluded for the Jerusalem Mission, and Brother and Sister Harry Passman will soon leave us for three years or more in the land of Jesus. On Tuesday evening a large company of their associates from all over the city bade them Godspeed. Games, speech-making, and songs made more pleasant the parting."—First Chicago Branch Bulletin, July 6.

"The bands dropped out of the parade at Harvey Park where memorial services were held immediately after the parade for the soldiers, sailors, and marines of Decatur County who had sacrificed their lives for their country. President Frederick M. Smith, of the L. D. S. Church, was the speaker, and his address was one of the finest ever delivered in Leon."—Decatur County Journal.

CITY MANAGER WANTED

The town council of Lamoni is advertising for a city manager. They want to hire some one to whom they can turn over the job of looking after all the various civic interests of the town. They are willing to pay an adequate salary and give him their support.

President Frederick M. Smith has canceled for the present his proposed trip to England and will not sail this month as previously announced.

NEW MANAGER AT HERALD OFFICE

J. A. Koehler, member of the Independence Stake presidency, has been selected by the Board of Publication as manager of the Herald Publishing House. He is expected to visit Lamoni soon, and probably will move his family to Lamoni in August.

HELP WANTED

Permanent position to competent cooks and housekeepers in Saints' and Children's Homes, Lamoni, Iowa. Apply to A. J. Yarrington, 202 North Walnut Street, Lamoni, Iowa.

CARETAKER WANTED

We want a caretaker for buildings and grounds at Saints' Home, at Lamoni. Should be an all-around handy man who can do carpenter work, steam fitting, take care of lawn and garden, care for heating plant. Apply to A. J. Yarrington, Lamoni, Iowa.

Elder John Shields wishes to correct a recent statement he made in the HERALD by adding the name of James Pycok to the list of those preaching at the recent Owen Sound conference. It was simple an oversight on his part.

The first successful ocean trip from east to west by an airship has just been completed, by the super-dirigible R-34. This is the first air machine to cross the Atlantic either way. The trip required one hundred and eight hours and twelve minutes. This is the third time that the trip has been made in a flying machine between America and England in the past few months.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Publication, Walter W. Smith, the new Church Historian, was appointed as editor of the Journal of History, the appointment to take effect at once.

During the Detroit district conference at Flint, Michigan, June 28 and 29, the First Flint Branch church building was dedicated, the sermon being delivered by U. W. Greene.

Elder Hubert Case has been holding some excellently attended meetings at Pleasanton, fourteen miles from Lamoni. Though it has been a very busy time for the farmers, they have responded loyally. The standing of the few Saints in that place is very high, and the business men of the place are very commendatory in their statements. The Lamoni singers have rendered good service in the meetings, going by auto. Brother Case says he never held meetings where he enjoyed it better.

"MODERN USE OF NARCOTICS"

The leaflet, "Modern use of narcotics," containing twenty pages of closely-written matter, treating on a number of the most commonly used narcotics, their effect upon the system, and their relation to society, may be purchased of the Herald Publishing House, Ensign Publishing House, or the author, J. W. Gunsolley, 1106 Bales Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri, at the following reduced prices: 5 cents for one; 25 cents for 12; 100 for $1.50. Send an order for what you can use, and help fortify the boy against the use of the cigarette that is fast blighting the youth of our Nation. There are many who can afford to invest $1.50 for the benefit of our youth. Much good would result from such an investment.

Vol. 66

No. 30

The Saints' Herald

Graceland College Magazine Number

Main Administration and Recitation Building

Other Buildings: Patroness Hall, Marietta Hall, the Cottage, the Farmhouse, the Gymnasium, Heating Plant

State of Iowa

Department of Public Instruction

P. E. McCLENAHAN, SUPERINTENDENT

Des Moines

July 14, 1919.

President George N. Briggs,

Dear Mr. Briggs:

Permit me to congratulate you upon your Junior college achievement. I am pleased to know that you have entered this field of education as a pioneer in Iowa, and now you are leading in a movement which I believe will accomplish much good in your locality and set a new ideal and a new standard in Iowa education.

The Junior college in Iowa is yet in its infancy but it fills a place in local educational systems, where it can accomplish much good. It is confined to a field only half as broad as the standard college but this place in our system has been neglected. The Junior college, with its new course of study, with its revival of interest in Freshman and Sophomore years of college work, with its special emphasis upon a modern educational ideal, with its attention to vocational education, comes to fill an educational need.

A man who has the right ideals and lives up to them fulfills his mission in this world; and in your college you are receiving young men and women and are helping them to form the right habits and to follow ideals that will make them better and happier in the future.

I have been personally interested in this movement for several years past and am glad that you have a chance to start the work in Iowa. Your broad experience, coupled with your executive ability and scholarly attainments, make you an excellent leader in this new Junior college movement.

I have been fortunate in knowing some members of your faculty and if all the faculty are as thorough, and well grounded in educational work as those I have known, you are indeed fortunate to work with such a group of educators and the education of your pupils will be of the highest type.

Again permit me to congratulate you and to wish you and your college success and to assure you that you have my heartiest cooperation and sympathy in the great educational work that you are doing.

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) P. E. McClenahan.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8:31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2:36.

Volume 66

Lamoni, Iowa, July 23, 1919

Number 30

A CALL TO SERVICE

(Extracts from an address by President Frederick M. Smith.)

I know, of course, that one of the prime objects, perhaps the prime object of the church, is to foster religion. I may add that it is in the development of spirituality and in the fostering of religion that the church finds its work—in the development of spiritual culture. In using the term spiritual culture it probably grated on the ears of none of you, but had I said that its chief function was to educate, many of you might accuse me by saying, "There he goes again, riding his hobby." That is to say, if I appreciate spiritual culture in its broadest significance, that the work of the church is not only to indulge and meditate upon any ideas of how things are, or are to be, or ought to be in the other world, but that we are to take into consideration some of the things that exist here. Learning what are the conditions now, what ought as well as what ought not to be, we should endeavor to estimate most carefully all the forces to-day that are working towards the conditions that shall exist to-morrow, and recognizing them, be able to apply intelligence, inspiration, and work, to directing these forces so that the conditions which shall exist to-morrow, shall be in harmony with the principles of the gospel as we recognize them, and hence be assured that they are those forces which are tending toward the ideal conditions that we are prone to dream about and to live for. . . .

We know that our burdens must, sooner or later, be laid down because of the advance of senility, and the burdens, if carried on, must be taken up by younger persons. In other words, our future welfare as an institution is inextricably wrapped up with the future of our youth, and whether it shall die at our death, or whether it shall flourish, depends upon the interest that the young of to-day have finally developed in the church, and the ambition that there may be engendered with them to carry on the work of their fathers and forefathers; and if this, then, be true, and we cannot but grant it, the young have a tremendous responsibility of preparation for carrying on of the burdens or taking of them up where we lay them down, and I have faith and confidence in the average youth of the church to believe that when they become cognizant of that, they will be aroused by the exigencies demanding preparation for those burdens when the time comes to assume them. But in order for us to make them realize that, there must be begun and carried on a process of education, in its broadest sense. Yes, in the nearly twenty years of my church work I have continuously plead for preparation by education for greater usefulness. I have plead that the members use every energy possible to educate themselves against the coming of a day when there would be thrown upon their shoulders a burden that they cannot carry unless that education or preparation has been had. And if there ever has been a man in this church who has had his position vindicated I have had mine within the last few months. What has been the answer to that appeal, made by your leader, as he believes under the impulses of inspiration, calling upon you for earnest preparation against the coming of that day when the burdens that shall be thrown upon you will be greater than you can carry in your own strength only as you shall have qualified under the inspiration of Almighty God, and the development through your own energies of abilities that God endowed you with. Has that all been heeded as it should? Let the answer be found in the response that we gave to the call of the Government to furnish young men of high school education to enter the Students' Army Training Corps, and let me say that it is with a great degree of sadness that I realize that the failure of all our young men to have reached that standard demanded by the Government not only handicaps us in our response as citizens of the Government, but is bound to handicap us in our response as citizens of the kingdom of God. And what is the remedy? The Government has learned that college-bred men because of their mental training are the ones quickest to solve the new problems that confront them in any undertaking. That's why they are asking these young men to prepare themselves, and assume responsibility as officers in the army.

We can see it now because it has come home to us. Mothers and fathers who had been indifferent to this matter of education, or had been the first to say "hobby-rider" when I had plead for education, are now keenly sensing their error, for the matter has been brought close home.

How much longer are we going to be dilatory? I stated to you some months ago, I don't know whether you all felt it as keenly as I did when I said it, but I want to repeat it, that we have for many years been calling your attention to the repeated instructions given of the Lord, that every individual, especially the young, should make preparation for the coming of greater responsibility. I have been calling, I said, and what's the result? Because of an indifferent response to that call there is now made apparent the necessity to speed up and energize to a degree that we have never energized in the past. One of two things is going to happen to us as far as the church is concerned. You individuals that sooner or later must have to carry responsibilities that the men of the church must sooner or later lay down, either you are going to make preparation for that tremendous activity that will drive you to the very limit of your possibilities, or you will fail, to a large extent in accomplishing this work. It seems to me that the time has been reached to-day, when every young person ought to feel the importance of that and realize that it is absolutely necessary, by reason of the impress of the principle of inspiration upon us and the voice of God through the leaders of the church to-day, and by reason of the very array of facts in everyday affairs, that there is a need for haste and a greater speeding up than has ever been indulged in the past.

. . . If the Government needs educated men in such works as war, can you not see how much more important that other call is, and how much more far-reaching? It will demand trained and tried men for the work that will be begun the moment the war ends, the reconstructive work. And that is why we are calling on the young men to prepare, to educate themselves, for we realize that, strenuous as is the activity that must be indulged in by the young man that goes into the trenches, it is not to be compared with the work that must be done when these young men come home again and are mustered out. And the same thing is true of us, we have a great work to do if the church work is to be carried on. . . .

There never was a time in the history of our church when a demand for our consecrated service was greater or keener than now. Every individual, and that applies particularly to the young, should be sought out by the officers of the church, and auxiliaries of the church, and that individual fired with this ambition to give service to the cause in which his name is written or enrolled, and to give that service to the very maximum of his ability. . . .

The demands of the hour are, Consecrate; and in your consecration bring preparation for still greater service, for it will be demanded of you eventually as sure as God is and is directing activities in this church.—Autumn Leaves, January, 1919.

---

SPIRITUALITY AND EDUCATION

---

BY ELBERT A. SMITH

Note the subject carefully: "Spirituality and education." I say that because so many essay to pervert it to read, "Spirituality or education." They would force a choice between the two. We do not have to choose. Or they would assume that some one would persuade the church to choose education definitely and reject spirituality.

Nor would it be profitable to discuss the subject, "Spirituality versus education." A man who has two sons does not waste time deciding which he loves most when he loves both. The Lord says, "Seek learning even by study, and also by faith." If that means anything it means that both the intellectual and the spiritual side of man should be enlisted in the great pursuit of truth.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION

One whole generation of scientists attempted to knock the props from under religion. They made intellect all. They denied revelation and inspiration. Faith to them meant superstition. But now a whole school, led by Lodge, says: "The pre-scientific insight of genius—of poets and prophets and saints—was of supreme value;" and adds, "Genuine religion has its roots deep down in the heart of humanity and in the reality of things."

One whole generation of religious people feared and hated scientific investigation. But now men are beginning to feel that no single fact will ever be found in earth or star to disprove the "eternal verities." Latter Day Saints least of all have cause to fear. Their revelation is recent and vital, confirming the ancient testimonies.

HEART AND MIND

Jesus said, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength."

The heart is supposed to be the seat of emotions. Formerly it was supposed to be literally the seat of the emotions; now it is always referred to in a figurative sense in that way. So we are to love God with our emotional nature. Our religion must be emotional.

The mind is the seat of the intellect. Our religion is to be intellectual. Once in a while an elder says that he is trying to educate the Saints to make their religion more intellectual and less emotional. I am not, I want it to be both emotional and intellectual.

I'LL TAKE BOTH

Once in a while one says that we need more spirituality and less education. I don't think so. We need more of both. A certain noted character in newspaper comics was asked which he would take, the light meat or the dark. He replied that he would take both.

Why wrangle about the relative merits of light meat and dark when we can have both? Why quarrel about the relative importance of spirituality and education when we should have both and God wants us to have both?

The man who stresses one and neglects the other makes a mistake. His mistake may be merely technical, because he may take the other quite for granted. But the argument which results is more often than not due to a failure to understand positions. One argues for education and one for spirituality when in fact they could as well as not agree in arguing for both.

HARD-HEADED AND SOFT-HEARTED SAINTS

The great preachers of all ages have been intensely emotional. There is no occasion to slur emotionalism providing it is balanced by sanity. No man ever greatly declared a great message until his own soul was on fire with it. Cold logic alone in the pulpit will never convert men. There are too many cold altars already. The lips of the preacher must be touched by burning coals from the altar of heaven.

But it is equally true that "the glory of God is intelligence." The greater the education and the better the training of the preacher the more effectually he can show forth the glory of God—for it will be in his own person. And this applies to the private life of the individual quite as much as to the public ministrations of the preacher.

Our religion should involve both heart and head. A Latter Day Saint should be a hard-headed and soft-hearted Christian gentleman. If he gets reversed on either point or on both he is in a bad way.

TO FAITH VIRTUE, TO VIRTUE KNOWLEDGE

The writer pleads for education always with the understanding that it is to be used to assist in promulgating to the world in both word and deed the gospel message. If that objective were lost sight of our building of colleges and drafting of curriculums would all be in vain.

If this church should ever come to reject inspiration and discard revelation and spiritual guidance its decline and fall would be sure and speedy. God would then again call from some carpenter shop or mine some unlettered but faithful man to proclaim our folly. But so far as we know no one contemplates such a program.

The plea for higher learning and pure spirituality is strictly in harmony with Saint Peter's exhortation, "Add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge." May our faith reach out and lay hold upon all things worthy of belief, and our storehouse of knowledge expand continuously until it shall embrace all truth.

---

GRACELAND AND THE CHURCH

---

BY ELDER A. FORMER STUDENT

The success of a school is judged in a large measure by the success of its alumni. If, then, in the organization of a school there be some specific ideal, some particular aim, its success is determined by the ratio in which its ambitions are realized in the lives of these alumni.

Graceland College has for its particular work the education of the youth of the church, with a view to moral and spiritual as well as intellectual development: that out of these processes there shall come to the church an ever-increasing class of efficient workmen, with Zionite ideals clear before them, and with qualifications for their realization. In other words, the special aim of Graceland is not only to educate in the secular sense those who come under its influence, but also to root and ground them in the faith, and to inspire each with the ambition to labor in that field for which he is best fitted, for the success of the great work entrusted to all.

In measuring the success of the college along these lines, we look at this time to a few men active in the work of the church, and who have been helped to a higher ideal through their contact with the influences at work at the college and in the community where it is located.

It is fitting that we head this list with that stalwart worthy, President Frederick M. Smith, the first graduate from the college of liberal arts. That Graceland College with other institutions has helped in molding so well this man's ideals during the formative periods of his life is a matter well worth its effort, and which now serves through his work, the whole church.

In the Quorum of Twelve we have a man who received a part of his educational training at Graceland College, and of his spiritual training under its atmosphere, and out of his activities as a visiting officer among the families of the Lamoni Saints. We refer to Paul M. Hanson, a man for the third time sent on a mission to far-away Australia. James E. Kelley, a member of this same quorum for some years and till his demise in 1917, and whose influence lives on in the lives of those among whom the work of his ministry was so well performed, likewise received a part of his training in Graceland.

M. A. McConley, of the Seventy, who received from his school life at the college and from his associations in the community a great impetus in church work, is for the second time on an important mission, and trusted to get results, in the Hawaiian Islands. Other worthy members of this quorum who have received help from the college and who are consequently better qualified for this work are G. W. Thorburn, W. E. Haden, and H. W. Smith.

Among the elders who have been and are under conference appointment, and who were once enrolled as Graceland students, are J. B. Barrett, L. W. Fike, and Fred Moser.

In other departments of the church and occupying places of trust are Elders I. A. Smith and J. F. Garver. Both of these men, former Graceland students, have served on the editorial staff of the Saints' Herald. Elder Smith occupied for some time as a counselor in the Presidency of Independence Stake; and Elder Garver for nine years as a counselor in the Presidency of Lamoni Stake. The latter has for three years past acted as president of Lamoni Stake. Both of these men have served the church in other responsible places.

Elder F. M. McDowell, dean of the Junior College, instructor at Graceland, a member of the Lamoni Stake High Council, director of the boy movement, and whose influence is felt in other lines of church work, began his college education at Graceland. And it is here that as a student and a teacher he has realized a breadth of view and a development which have placed him in the front ranks among the able young men of the church.

Elder C. E. Irwin, a former student and later a member of the Graceland faculty, is now at Chicago University, where next year he will secure his doctor's degree, with the intention of returning to the college as instructor, and to such other church work as he may be requested to do.

Elder C. E. Wight, who received his business education at Graceland and who for some years was in charge of the department of stenography at the college is now serving in connection with the missionary course being organized at the college, and is also occupying as a counselor in the Presidency of Lamoni Stake.

Henry C. Smith, Church Architect, and before whom there lies a fertile field for service, is a one-time Graceland student, whose vision has been broadened and his ambition to do good quickened by his association at Graceland with those of like precious faith, and who like him were endeavoring to qualify for church work.

There might be added to this list the names of men who are serving in other capacities, and the names of many noble women who have been benefited through the college, and who are passing on the good received. These named, however, serve as illustrations, suggesting as they do one way in which the college occupies as an important auxiliary to the church.

This discussion is not intended to suggest that none of these men would have engaged in church work had it not been for the college. Nor is it the purpose to intimate that no man can serve effectively unless he has attended the college. It is rather the purpose to set forth, as is set forth, that through the college, men have been better qualified for their work, and that the church is benefited by the fuller service thus made possible; especially is this true of those who could not have attended school elsewhere, or who would not have done so had it not been for the opportunity extended at Graceland.

It is the ambition of the Graceland authorities that out of the activities of our church school and through like influences there may grow a mighty educational effort and qualification, that, seasoned with wisdom, and quickened by the Spirit of God, shall carry forward all of our people in an intelligent cooperation along the many lines of work before us in the redemption of Zion. And to this end they shall continue to labor.

---

SPECIAL MISSION OF GRACELAND

---

(Extracts from an address by Elder Daniel Macgregor.)

THE CHURCH NEEDS A PERSONALITY

What the church needs and demands to-day is a place in the sun. We cannot obtain it by permitting ourselves to be absorbed by other institutions, whether secular, collegiate, or religious. Neither can we obtain it by an unsocial aloofness. It must be by creating an active, positive, and distinct individuality. . . .

Graceland, as the child of the church created by the revelations of God, commands a unique and unequalled distinction amongst the innumerable institutions of learning, inheriting a personality all its own. Many of her faculty, endowed by honorable degrees of learning, are endowed in another and more distinguished way. As holders of the holy priesthood they are in the way of receiving that divinest of all endowments, that enriching personality of Pentecostal times.

Who shall not perceive that contact with such magnets, yes, a personal contact between master and student so permissible and possible at Graceland, will endow her offspring with a personality of the most pronounced type.

GRACELAND, A PARTNER IN THE FIRM

The story of Graceland is one of suffering and success, of trial and triumph. Born, as was Isaac, when its parent, the church, was advanced in age; cradled, as was Moses, amid the bulrushes of opposition; and banished, as was Jesus, to an Egypt of temporary rejection, the child, returning to the Nazareth of the church, has grown up in our midst until at last attaining its majority it has been incorporated into a full partnership with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and to-day as an institution of higher learning we meet in the jubilee of deliverance, destined henceforth to sit in the councils of the government of God, doing our bit for the uplift and amelioration of mankind.

GRACELAND, THE MELTING POT

It has been said that the United States, as the melting pot of all nations, produces from the rich ore of humanity constantly brought to her shores from foreign lands, the best possible in the line of an iron manhood. And it is the work of Graceland to take of that manhood and from it produce the tempered steel.

It is intended that, in Graceland's gold refining crucible, the ancient methods of yesterday and the freakish notions of to-day shall submit to an acid test and only the serviceable shall survive. The church in all of her departments wants only the serviceable.

GRACELAND, THE INTRODUCTORY MEDIUM

"The world do move." It is evolutionizing itself every decade. But the church as the custodian of ancient truths, imperishable and eternal, has given much, if not all of its time, to the proclamation of those truths, hence it will be apparent to all, that the church and the world, each pursuing divergent paths, must needs separate and that separation widen into an unbridgable chasm. In this the world loses sight of the greatest benefactor, and the church loses sight of the object of its mission.

Herein is manifest the indispensable mission of the college. By it the church is kept in touch with the ideas of modernity, and the world is kept in touch with the principles of antiquity and eternity.

THE RELIGION OF GRACELAND

All institutions consciously or otherwise have a religion. It has been said that Graceland is non-sectarian. In a sense that is still true, for we will not force our religion upon any, nor yet does it form part of the curriculum. But whether taught or not it will be practiced in the daily life and conversation, in and out of Graceland. And herein exists our mightiest force making for a personality.

Ours is a unique religion, different and distinct from all others. It encompasses the historic past and reaches into the revealed future. The story of one half the ancient world is known only by Latter Day Saints.

Unto us has been committed a religion undoubtedly the most ancient and unquestionably the most modern. It was written in olden times upon plates of imperishable gold, and revealed in latter days from the sacred Sinai of Cumorah.

Harvard, Princeton, Oxford, and Cambridge owe their prestige largely to those celebrities educated within their walls. But you, the sons and daughters of the restored church, may claim as your ancestral faculty Joseph the deliverer, Abraham the faithful, Daniel the learned, Jared the man of faith, Lehi the seer, Nephi the stalwart, Moroni the general, Mormon the historian, and the twelve of special calling—professors of all of them, for they professed and possessed the fundamentals of all learning, past, present, and future.

And does not the consciousness of such prenatal greatness send the conqueror's blood a-thrilling through your veins?

Indeed, if we lift higher the veil, we shall note that angels from heaven frequently ministered of their learning, when earthly understanding had reached that impenetrable darkness which separates the human and divine.

With such an inspiration who will not appreciate the limitless possibilities of our doors? And who shall not apply himself with diligence and service?

Yes; you will apply yourselves, but not with any groveling, servile spirit—rather with an invincible will to solve the problems of the ages.

In this work of study, you will not be building yourselves into the theories of others, but you will gather from those fundamental stones of fact, and those timbers of truth, the materials out of which you will erect for yourselves a palace of learning all your own.

It is said that every race reveals a peculiarity developed through long years of subjection or freedom, as the case may be: the Negro his servility; the Irishman his kind-heartedness to a fellow sufferer; the Scotchman the granite inwoven with his soul from the hardening experience of harvesting his living from the rugged hills of his native heath. But Graceland, located in the very bosom of that people, who politically and religiously know no task-masters, ministered unto by masters and matrons of exceptional talent, and nourished by a student body comprising the brain and brawn of the church, gathered from the four corners of the earth, shall grow up into a veritable endowment house.

With such an aggregation of choicest material who shall doubt that Graceland has in store for her students a personality of rare quality, distinctly Latter Day Saint, and exercising a commanding control.—The Saints' Herald.

---

Letters from Ex-Presidents

---

Graceland College! Surely her best years are before her, in ever-increasing opportunities for service. She is now free from debt, has a rapidly-growing collegiate department, which, with a course for missionaries, together with her former qualifications, gives hope of a firm foundation for future building. Our interest in her welfare has not grown less. Her work is clear as the educational center of the church. May success in full measure be hers, and above all, the blessings of God.

LAMONI, IOWA.

S. A. BURGESS,

Associate Editor Herald.

July 12, 1919.

To All Patrons and Friends of Graceland, Lamoni, Iowa; Greeting: The letter which your president wrote asking for a word of greeting called back to my mind a flood of associations with Graceland and Graceland experiences. In fact, my four years' work in Graceland College are always remembered on account of the most pleasant relations with faculty, pupils, and community. It is my hope that the small service that I rendered there may continue to bear fruit, if not in the newer directions of the college, at least in the lives of those whom we touched at the time. One could cherish no greater reward, I take it. May Graceland live long and well in the hearts of her constituents, not for her own sake alone, but for the people who come to her for information, training, and discipline; and further to get an attitude of mind toward the problems of life.

The responsibility of education and schools is growing. More and more of the problems of life are being turned to the school for solution; and there were never more of them to solve than right now. Who can solve them? Certainly not he who boasts of his ignorance, nor he who merely dabbles in its outer forms will be able to solve them; but he who tackles them with heroic, spiritual impulse, fortified with a knowledge of facts and principles and a skill sufficient to warrant confidence. Education furnishes the equipment for progress in any undertaking worthy of man's engagement; and, therefore, education becomes not only the handmaiden of religion, but the handmaiden of trade and vocation also. Education is the basis of common understanding; therefore, of community life. How can we hope to progress to-day without the fullest understanding of the facts and principles that enter into our complex economic, social, and religious life? If for no loftier purpose, education is our best means of defense, whether we think of the individual, the church, the community, or the State; whether we think of the tradesmith, the farmer, the business man, the teacher, or the minister. Our democracy which we prize gets its meaning and significance in a higher and higher level of control which universal education would furnish. From the standpoint of the special agencies which promote education, of which Graceland is one, the institution becomes the stable form which embodies our holier thoughts, our loftier visions, and our more efficient types of service to the communities served. All three of these purposes ought to be reflected in all institutions.

In the same spirit of the days when I served at Graceland, I still urge tenacity of purpose in promoting the interests of education. If my attitude has changed on this point in eleven years since I went to Graceland—and I am sure it has—it has changed in the following directions: first, the more urgent need of ever higher grades of education for all people; and, second, increased emphasis upon guidance in educational preparation so that the individual may find his life calling more readily and that society, therefore, may be served the better. That Graceland may continue to serve the church and community in these directions is my genuine desire.

Most cordially yours,

ROLLAND M. STEWART,

Professor of Education.

CORNELL UNIVERSITY, ITHACA, NEW YORK.

July 14, 1919.

History tells us that the great Puritan movement which resulted in the founding of New England was led and fostered by college men, many of whom were martyrs to the cause, one of Joseph Smith's ancestors being among those burned at the stake during the reign of Queen Mary.

The Puritan movement culminated in the development of this great republic, the United States of America, and furnished men and opportunity for God's greatest work of modern times, the Restoration of Christ's church on earth.

Hand in hand with the development of political and religious institutions under the direction of the Puritan patriots came the development of popular education, which made the great progress in politics, religion, and material things possible. New England had free schools two hundred years before they were started in Old England, the mother of modern civilization.

Wherever the Puritans and their descendants have gone they have founded colleges and universities, such as Harvard, Yale, Princeton, etc., in the East; and leading westward, a great galaxy of colleges and universities, including, among our people, the true descendants and heirs of the Puritans, such institutions as the University of Nauvoo, and Graceland College. Without higher education we could not be true to our Puritan heritage and true to the revealed will of God.

I congratulate you and your faculty on the grand results of your noble efforts and heroic sacrifices, and herewith repeat the prayer that the blessing of Heaven may rest on Graceland College.

Yours truly,

HERBERT SPENCER SALISBURY.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

July 10, 1919.

It is with a sense of pardonable pride that I send a word of greeting to Graceland College.

I was present when her doors were opened, and have always held in high esteem the confidence imposed in me in being made acting president during the last year of my connection with the institution.

May her field of influence broaden, and continue along the lines contemplated by her founders.

Graceland College is the product of an ideal, long cherished by the Reorganized Church, the forerunner of many greater things yet to be.

Sincerely yours,

JOSEPH T. PENCE,

Attorney-at-Law.

BOISE, IDAHO.

STANDARDIZATION AND ACCREDITING

COMMERCIAL

BY G. N. BRIGGS, PRESIDENT

There are certain standardizing and accrediting associations in this country which pass upon the matter of the faculty, buildings, library, laboratories, and material equipment of the colleges and universities to ascertain whether or not they meet standard requirements and are qualified to give instruction along the lines recognized as being within the province of the institution asking for recognition. In this State the authorities of the State Educational Department and the faculties of the three State institutions of higher learning constitute such a standardizing and accrediting body.

Their authorities have inspected Graceland College and have passed upon her ability to meet the requirements laid down by laws, customs, and regulations and in all the departments which the State accredits in other institutions and for which accrediting has been requested in Graceland full recognition has been accorded by the State authorities.

JUNIOR COLLEGE

The junior college department offers the first two years of the standard college course, graduates from which are granted the degree of Associate in Arts (A. A.) first granted by the junior college of the University of Chicago and are admitted to full standing without examination to the third or junior year of the universities of the land.

Graduates who have pursued for two years courses in education, including psychology, history and principles of education, school hygiene, school administration, methods and practice teaching are granted a state teacher's certificate which can be renewed every five years as long as the graduate remains in the teaching profession. In accordance with the laws of the State, graduates from this department who enter the teaching profession are granted a minimum entrance salary of $80 per month and after two years' successful teaching experience $100 per month. Most of the graduates of the class of 1919 have already been elected to teaching positions for next year at salaries ranging from $80 to $133.33 per month.

ACADEMY

The academy corresponds to the secondary or high school of the public school system. Graduates from this department are admitted without examination to the junior college department or to any college or university having the same requirements for admission as the North Central Association of Colleges and Universities, and that includes all the high-grade institutions of the United States.

Within the past year the State has decided upon the standardization and accrediting of the commercial or business departments of the institutions of learning within the State asking for such recognition. In line with this effort on the part of the State Graceland asked for and received full accrediting for her combined commercial-academic course which means that students pursuing this course take certain commercial subjects as electives during their last two years in the academy, and on graduation meet the full requirements for admission to college and also are qualified to enter a business life as stenographer or bookkeeper or may use their ability as stenographer and bookkeeper to assist them through their college course. The combined course practically saves one year of time for the student who desires to perfect himself for a business life.

Thus the three departments for which accrediting has been requested have received full recognition and Graceland is thus fully standardized and officially accredited in the departments which the State has attempted to standardize.

The junior college movement is a comparatively new one in this country, only a few states having thus far authorized their establishment. Some have none at all, others may have ten or twelve. Iowa has three, Graceland being the first and the only one so far to have full State recognition; one of the others being accredited for one year's college work and the other being refused official recognition up to the present.

Whatever distinction and honor belongs to the pioneer in any avenue of effort belongs to Graceland in the junior college movement in Iowa and being the leading junior college in the State she has certain responsibilities in the way of establishing standards and fixing precedents which will have far-reaching effects.

Doctor Harper, the first president of the University of Chicago, said many years ago that there is a distinct place in the field of American education for the junior college, and the ambition of Graceland is to establish such an enviable record in the line of her junior college work that when the larger field of a standard college and the still larger one of a university opens up she will have so laid her foundation in solid rock that there will be no question on the part of either the church or the State that she is amply able to step in and occupy to the end that the still greater demands by the church may be met in every possible way.

---

"Learning is ever in the freshness of its youth, even for the old."—Agamemnon.

THE JUNIOR COLLEGE

BY F. M. M'DOWELL

As an institution the American college is unique. Though perhaps similar at the time of its origin to certain European institutions, it has been so changed by the genius and originality of the American people that it no longer bears the marks of its ancestors. To-day the hundreds of small colleges scattered from coast to coast stand as monuments to the American, the democratic spirit in higher education.

No better evidence of this statement can be found than in the study of the rapid growth in the number of these institutions. Of the 567 colleges and universities listed by the Bureau of Education in 1914, 262 were established before the Civil War. In the thirty years immediately following the close of that war 240 more were organized. A total of 305 institutions were established between 1860 and 1914. President Pritchett, in his investigations for the Carnegie Foundation a few years ago, found nearly one thousand institutions in the United States calling themselves colleges or universities.

Throughout the history of higher education in the United States the small college has been the typical institution. In 1850 there was not a college in the country that enrolled more than 400 students. Even as late as 1912, according to the Commissioner of Education, 64.4 per cent of the 596 colleges and universities reporting had less than 400 students, and 312 or 52 per cent had less than 300 students enrolled.

With the rapid growth of the public high school on the one hand and the State university on the other, the typical small college has had to pass through a terrific struggle for its very existence. In many States the competition has been so severe and the modern educational standards so high that a number of these institutions have had to close their doors or limit their claims to the means at their disposal. For the most part, however, the small college has emerged from this struggle unscathed. It has more than justified its existence in the minds of the American people. Why?

1. The small colleges offer the opportunity for a closer, more intimate and personal contact between instructor and student that is often entirely lacking in larger institutions. This close association is not only ideal but absolutely necessary for the American youth at certain ages.

2. It is an established fact that in the smaller institution a greater sense of individual responsibility is developed. Each student counts for more. It has been the writer's observation that students of average ability will participate actively in the affairs of the small college while they would have neither the opportunity nor the desire to do so in a larger institution.

3. The small college often brings the opportunities for securing a higher education to the very door of those whose limited means make impossible attendance at larger and more distant institutions.

4. The growing recognition among educators of the fact that the high school graduates are as a class immature and that the transition from the strict control of the high school to the larger and freer life of the university may not only be morally but intellectually disastrous.

This latter point is sufficiently important to deserve further discussion. There has been no more significant development in American education than that of the last two or three decades which has had as its purpose the readjustment of our educational institutions to meet the needs of the young men and women just out of high school.

1. A number of the larger universities have established the practice of distinguishing sharply between "lower" and "upper" classmen. Or between what they now call "junior" and "senior" college students. It is recognized by these universities that students of the first two years in college must be handled much as secondary school students; in small groups with close personal supervision. Notable examples of this tendency are found in the universities of Chicago, Columbia, and California.

2. There is an ever-increasing number of public high schools which are attempting to meet the needs of their graduates by furnishing them the opportunity of securing two years of college education at public expense. This in itself is an admission of two important facts. In the first place it demonstrates that the American public realizes the necessity of a college education. In the second place it supports our contention that the high school graduate needs special attention for two years at least.

3. A large number of private and denominational colleges are now devoting their time and means to furnishing high school graduates two additional years of education under properly controlled conditions.

Institutions of the type just mentioned are coming to be known as junior colleges. Their rapid growth in the last few years furnished a striking evidence of the growing realization of the necessity of securing at least two years of college education.

There are now over 100 junior colleges in existence. Of these 69 were established during the years 1907 to 1917, inclusive. More than half of these 69 have become junior colleges since 1914 when Graceland was first organized as such. During this time the enrollment in this type of institution in the United States has increased 150 per cent.

Graceland is proud of the fact that she so early recognized this tendency in educational development and hence became the first junior college to be officially accredited in the State of Iowa. Her rapid growth during the last few years has more than justified this change. The following table gives the enrollment in the junior college (the first two years of standard college work) for the past four years showing actual increase and per cent of increase each year:

| Year    | Enrollment | Increase | Percentage of Increase |
|---------|------------|----------|------------------------|
| 1915-16 | 22         |          |                        |
| 1916-17 | 39         | 17       | 77                     |
| 1917-18 | 47         | 8        | 22                     |
| 1918-19 | 79         | 32       | 70                     |

The total increase in enrollment in the junior college during the years 1915-16 to 1918-19 was 360 per cent.

Graceland Junior College offers to-day to the young people of the church opportunities which they cannot afford to neglect.

1. The junior college is fully standardized and has been officially accredited by the State of Iowa. Graduates are admitted without examination to the junior year of the State University or to any of the professional schools requiring two years of college work for admission.

2. This additional training can be secured under the close personal supervision of men and women whose training, both intellectual and religious, assures the student of a well-rounded development in mind and body alike. A conscious effort is always made at Graceland to blend the intellectual, moral, physical, and spiritual into a symmetrical whole.

3. Education received at Graceland pays from a money standpoint alone. Graduates of the junior college this year who received a state certificate have secured positions in the schools of the State at salaries ranging all the way from $80 to $133 per month. Most of these were without previous teaching experience.

4. The man or woman who neglects the opportunity to develop the talents with which God has endowed them, is a slacker both to his Nation and to his church. The college-bred man has been the one who has answered the call of his Nation in the crisis just passed. He will be the one to meet the new issues which confront us as a church and as a Nation. A college education has been justified a thousand times over during the recent war. The problems of reconstruction which confront us to-day demand the trained individual. No other need apply.

You ask: "Does education pay?" We should let Orison Swett Marden answer:

"Does it pay to learn to make life a glory instead of a grind?"

"Does it pay for an acorn to become an oak?"

"Does it pay to get a glimpse of the joy of living?"

"Does it pay to change a bar of rough pig iron into hair-springs for watches?"

"Does it pay to experience the joy of self-discovery?"

"Does it pay to have four years filled with the most delightful associations with cultured people, at an age when ambitions and high ideals have not been dulled or shattered by disappointment, or the unbounded faith in human nature shocked by violated pledges?"

There is but one answer.

---

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

---

BY C. E. WIGHT

Due to the conditions surrounding the church in its early history, a sentiment has prevailed in the minds of many of our very best people to the effect that a concerted effort along the line of religious education of our missionaries should be discouraged.

Fortunately, this sentiment has largely given way before the pressing demand on the part of our men for better equipment and preparation to meet the increasing demands of the hour. While only a small beginning is being made to meet this demand, it is hoped and confidently believed that the coming years will see this beginning grow and develop.

Even the casual student of the Doctrine and Covenants can scarcely fail to note the recurrent frequency with which this matter is referred to in the revelations. Our men have repeatedly been counseled to study the doctrines of the church, both as to theory and practice.

With this instruction of the Lord as a basis and the need for organized effort becoming more and more apparent, the conference of 1919 authorized the undertaking of this work. Due to the facilities for taking care of it, the church authorities have decided to handle the course through Graceland College. It will be known as the "Department of Religious Education."

The efforts of this department during the coming year will be devoted to the preparation of such men and women as will be designated by the church authorities for foreign missionary service. It is hoped that this preliminary preparation will accomplish two things:

1. It will make for greater efficiency by attempting to solve in advance some of the problems that will be met during the active discharge of foreign service.

2. It will make it possible for the authorities to select with greater certainty those who are peculiarly qualified to enter the foreign missionary service.

We are frequently told that ours is the work of God. We believe this with all our hearts and yet we are also aware that the work is to be done through human instrumentality. Humanity is fallible. Because of this human fallibility, we should seize every instrument at our command for assisting us to prosecute the work more vigorously.

God has never expected that we should use haphazard and unscientific methods in our gospel warfare, and with the increase of scientific effort on the part of the opposing powers it is essential that we make every effort to prepare ourselves.

The course of study for the coming year has already been published in detail. However, some comments regarding particular features of the course may be timely.

One of the most discouraging factors of foreign missionary effort in the past has been the lack of knowledge of the language, customs, geography, and history of the country to which missionaries are sent. If preparation along these various lines can be made beforehand, the work can be carried on more intelligently and without so many attendant discouragements. A study of these conditions has been made an important part of the curriculum.

A poor vocabulary and lack of knowledge of just how to express himself clearly in public has been the stumblingblock for more than one of our young missionaries. The study of English and public speaking has been made a second feature of the course and it is believed this combination will aid materially in overcoming the handicaps referred to.

A study of psychology will give the young missionary an understanding of the mental attitude of his fellow men, while applied psychology will assist him in dealing with crowds, methods of advertising, correct methods of approach, etc. The study of these subjects has been made a third feature of the course.

A fourth feature, and we believe the most important of all, will be known as the department of church doctrine. In this course will be taken up a study of church history, the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. In addition, a lecture course has been provided, dealing with the fundamental doctrines of the church.

Probably one of the most interesting features of the course in church doctrine will be the lecture course provided under the heading of apologetics. We are arranging to have with us a number of missionaries who have spent many years in the service. These men will present the arguments they have used most effectively in answering the objections of opponents. These lectures should be of wonderful benefit to our men. Some of our missionaries are better equipped than others with the peculiar qualifications necessary for making a success of this class of work. If our men can have the benefit of the knowledge gained by these missionaries through years of experience, they will be far better prepared to meet the stock objections that are constantly being presented.

To sum up, then, the Department of Religious Education has for its purpose the accomplishment of two objects:

1. The personal preparation of our men and women for more effective missionary work.
2. The bringing about of a greater unity of understanding and teaching of our church doctrines.

Neither of these aims can be accomplished in a day, but there is satisfaction in the thought that a start is being made. If this course is good for foreign missionaries, it should be just as good for those under appointment in our own country. It should therefore be the goal of the church that at some future time every man called to active missionary service should have the opportunity of taking advantage of this intensified course of study. This constant consideration and discussion of the important questions of church doctrine can assure us that a greater unity of understanding and teaching will finally be attained.

As a concluding thought let us again emphasize the fact that no proponent of religious education considers for a moment that this effort should supplant the leadings of the Spirit of God. Rather, it should supplement. If it be true that "The glory of God is intelligence," the Holy Spirit can do its most effective work with those who through study and application have attempted to develop their mental equipment to the highest possible degree.

---

COMMERCIAL DEPARTMENT

---

BY J. A. GUNSOLLEY

This department has always been one of the most popular and financially profitable of the departments of the institution. It enjoys the rare distinction of having at its head the same person that took charge of it when the college opened in September, 1895. During the twenty-three years he has occupied as principal of the Commercial School, except four, two of which he was under General Conference appointment, and the other two he was acting president and teacher in another department.

Three distinct courses are offered: Stenographic, business, and academic-commercial. The first of these includes shorthand or stenotypy, typewriting, salesmanship, English, spelling, penmanship, carbon duplicating, mimeographing, filing, and office practice. Students completing this course are prepared for positions as amanuenses.

The business course includes bookkeeping, commercial arithmetic, salesmanship, commercial law, English, spelling, penmanship, and rapid calculation. A voucher system of bookkeeping is used in which familiarity with commercial forms of papers and documents is secured. Graduates from this course are fitted for clerical positions and accountants.

The academic-commercial course consists of the first two years of the regular academic course, with shorthand, typewriting, bookkeeping, salesmanship, commercial arithmetic, commercial law, and English included in the last two years. These commercial subjects are given sufficient credit to admit graduates from this course to college or the university without examination, having been fully accredited by our State educational authorities, and the combined academic-commercial course approved by them. Students taking this course practically save one year, covering the essential commercial subjects and at the same time qualifying for admission to the college or the university. Many students who must finance themselves through their higher educational careers may take this course with advantage, since their knowledge of the commercial subjects furnishes them a means to profitable and pleasant employment for which there is usually a demand.

From the above it will be seen that our commercial department is upon a fully accredited basis, as well as our academy and junior college. Students who expect to continue their studies in other institutions for advanced work need not hesitate to do what work Graceland offers, for being accredited by our own State university which is a member of the American Association of Colleges and Universities means being accredited in all the institutions holding membership in that association. Besides this it has been demonstrated that students who spend their first years of college life in the small college make stronger and better students in the later years of school life than do those who go directly from the public schools to the large colleges and universities.

Students from this department are occupying and have occupied responsible and remunerative positions. A few of these we mention, but only a few, as we do not have anywhere near complete data. E. C. Bell, Traffic Manager, M. K. & T. Railway; R. W. Johnson, clerical position in the army; Raymond Scott, stenographer at the Peace Conference, Versailles; David Jepson, field clerk, A. E. F. in France; R. A. Wight, important civil service position, Washington, District of Columbia, and elsewhere; Frank Jones, civil service position, Washington, District of Columbia; C. E. Wight, teacher of shorthand and typewriting in Graceland for a number of years, released to enter the Lamoni Stake Presidency; Claire Van Eaton succeeding C. E. Wight as teacher of shorthand in Graceland; Pauline Anthony, for a number of years teacher of shorthand and typewriting in Graceland; Florence Heathman, private secretary and bookkeeper in Graceland; Lucy Gunsolley Glick, secretary to Registrar, State University of Iowa; Harold Gunsolley, Chief Yeoman, United States Navy, Boston; Ruth McMullen, secretary in Presiding Bishop's office, Independence, Missouri; Louise Wall, secretary in statehouse, Nashville, Tennessee; Dorothy Case, stenographer in Interstate Garage, Lamoni; Vere Turney, bookkeeper, Herald Publishing House; Jeannette Leetun, stenographer to business manager, Herald Publishing House; Helen Bootman, stenographer, Detroit, Michigan; Verva Ballou, stenographer, Des Moines, Iowa; Hirotaro Tsuji, bookkeeper, Federal Bank, Kansas City, Missouri; H. O. Medley, bookkeeper, Tulsa, Oklahoma; Ruth Fisher Fusselman, stenographer, Montgomery Ward and Company, Kansas City; Agnes Luff, stenographer, Independence Foundry, Independence, Missouri. But to extend the list would become wearisome, therefore this few may suffice.

The outlook for this department is good. Business training is becoming recognized as an essential in the preparation for every vocation. The teacher, the lawyer, the doctor, the preacher, the farmer, the engineer, and other professions and callings, each need training peculiar to his calling; but all need at least elementary training in business as all must have more or less to do with business in one way or another. Each should know how to keep his own accounts, and should know what his proper business relations with others are, how to exercise and how to protect himself therein. With J. A. Gunsolley as principal and instructor in bookkeeping, law, salesmanship, and arithmetic, Miss Claire Van Eaton at the head of the shorthand and typewriting course, and with Miss Marjorie Gunsolley instructor in typewriting, we bespeak for the department a prosperous year and a big enrollment.

---

If you want an education and do not have the money, write to the president of the college and see if you cannot arrange a loan from some of the funds available for that purpose. The church wants its young people educated, and is willing to help them. Some who have secured training in this way have made an immediate success in their chosen lines. Where there's a will there's a way.

THE STUDIO DEPARTMENT

BY PAUL N. CRAIG

It was very early recognized by those having charge of the interests of Graceland College that no higher institution of learning would be complete and been reached in any other way. The Studio Department, including as it does instruction in voice, piano, band, and orchestra with mandolin and guitar, oratory and public speaking, is able to reach many students through these courses whose interests and activities might otherwise have been lost or at least diverted to other less worthy purposes.

In addition to individual or private lessons in the various courses offered in the studio department many group or class activities are carried on.

The College Glee Club composed of between fifty and sixty students renders some of the very highest grade musical numbers to be heard any-that no one's liberal education would be fully rounded out without full provision being made for cultivating and developing those finer and higher traits of human nature through music and the allied arts.

THE COLLEGE ORCHESTRA

With that necessity in mind Graceland's Studio Department has for many years been instrumental in helping prepare the youth of the church for a higher grade of service through cultivation of those talents with which God endowed them.

By means of singing and the musical instruments the gospel story has many times been made more effective; and it has been possible to reach some who could not have where. Smaller groups of students in choruses, quartets, duets, etc., receive much valuable and instructive training and add very materially to the religious and literary exercises of the college. These students will most certainly be in a position to be of great service in their respective branches when they enter upon their larger church activities after graduation. The students of the orchestra and band department and those in the piano courses are receiving a training of the utmost value to them as future church workers.

FOUR-MINUTE SINGERS

Organized for patriotic singing during the war.

To the department of oratory and public speaking Graceland's remarkable success in intercollegiate debates, oratorical and declamatory contests is due. Knowledge is of the highest value only when it can most effectively be imparted to others. Thus it is of prime importance that our youth, maidens as well as young men, be prepared to impart to others the gospel story and do so in the most effective manner possible.

A VIEW OF THE PHYSICS AND WIRELESS LABORATORY

The studio, then, through its voice department, both singing and public speaking, and through its instrumental department, piano, band, and orchestra, plays a most important part in the largest possible preparation of Graceland students for their active life in the church, and adding as they do so materially to the interests and the possibilities of the college years, forms one of the most important departments of Graceland.

The indirect way in which Graceland helps the church is one of far-reaching importance. The ideals that a young Saint develops at our church school are often the means of materially changing the tendencies of a community to which they return.

Graceland is not saying that those who do not accept its offers are without hope. Rather is she saying that with the advantages she offers any average person increases his opportunities for success about fifty per cent.

RADIO DEPARTMENT

BY ARTHUR B. CHURCH

The science of radio communication has made such great progress during the last few years that it is no longer considered an interesting curiosity but rather on the plane of commercial telephony and land and cable telegraphy. War pressure gave it many new applications besides overcoming several of the greatest obstacles to this new means of transmitting intelligence. Recently, by means of the radio telephone, President Wilson kept in communication with the United States and France throughout his trips between these two countries, and the trans-

Atlantic fliers communicated with various stations at land and sea while making their perilous sea journeys.

In spite of the fact that thousands of men received wireless training to meet the war emergency the field is far from overcrowded. In fact, the United States Shipping Board has just recently found it necessary to open up a large special school in order to help supply its tremendous needs for radio operators and experts in the new merchant marine. Wireless has come to stay!

The Graceland wireless station was installed in 1915 and a similar station was simultaneously erected at Independence. Communication was thus established between the two places which proved of great value until the closing down of stations at the entrance of the United States into the World War. Graceland became known throughout the country as 9 Y O (the official call assigned by the Government) for her messages were read from New York to Idaho, and from North Dakota to Florida, Texas, and Arizona.

Our entrance into the war demanded that thousands of radio operators be trained as soon as possible and the Government requested Graceland to lend assistance. So new equipment was purchased and facilities were furnished which, it was thought, would meet the demand. At several times, however, the radio department became overcrowded and it was a difficult task to handle the men. During the emergency over one hundred twenty-five men registered for wireless training. Many of these were called before completing the course; some, however, were sent to special camps to finish their work. Two of Graceland's wireless students, Allen Trachsel and Towner Bohn, as indicated on their stars on the service flag, made the supreme sacrifice. The Graceland radio-trained men served in the Signal Corps, Navy, Air Service, Radio Intelligence Service, and other branches of service, in capacities of operators, radio electricians, instructors, wireless station directors, etc. Graceland can justly feel proud of the service rendered our Nation by its radio department.

The Graceland Radio Department offers two courses which are specially arranged to meet the Government requirements for first-class commercial radio operators. The semester course is an intensive wireless operators' training which may be completed in eighteen weeks. The radio supplementary course is a regular science elective in the Graceland academy, full credit for which is given; and it may also be taken in conjunction with any other work offered by the college. The value of a vocational training in school systems, is becoming more and more recognized, and wireless offers a splendid vocation. A new wage law assures a minimum salary of $85 per month for junior operators and $110 for senior operators; board and room is also generally furnished.

Besides training operators, the radio department also plays an important part in the church system of radio communication whereby it is hoped to eventually connect the most important stakes and branches of the church by this modern means of communication.

---

THE NEW YEAR

---

A great American educator recently said, "We stand on the threshold of a new era, the international or supernational era, an era of great political and social changes.

As a church we are entering upon an era of unprecedented opportunity and responsibility and provision is being made in large part to take advantage of that opportunity and meet that responsibility.

Graceland College as one of the institutions of the church, is prepared to do her part in getting ready for and grasping this great chance for reconstruction.

All these changes are bound to effect higher education profoundly. The fascination and challenge of these new world interests, responsibilities, and opportunities are appealing to the best young manhood and womanhood of our church and the land.

Education so tremendously justified itself during the war and is so tremendously justifying itself in these periods of the reconstruction of the world that the eyes of all are turned as never before towards the halls of learning.

Until our new building is completed ready for occupancy we are going to be somewhat handicapped, but temporary provisions are being made for the large increase in attendance next year. Already practically all our dormitory facilities are reserved for the coming school year and rooming quarters are being offered in the homes of Lamoni, so that it is believed that suitable quarters can be provided for everyone.

Not only are the young men and women of the church seeing the handwriting on the wall and making their plans to attend college in ever-increasing numbers, but a large number of the older church members who have been engaged in educational work in some of the best educational institutions of the land, both as students and teachers, have joined our faculty for next year and will bring to us the accumulated experience and strength of the many universities and colleges from which they come.

In addition to members of last year's faculty who will remain with the institution during the coming year the following will join us:

Heman Hale Smith, a graduate of the Universities of Iowa and Washington, with several years of very successful experience as instructor in history and allied subjects, will have charge of the department of history.

Miss Irene Layton of the State Normal School of Warrensburg, Missouri, and the State University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, where she has served as instructor in the department of English for the past two years, will have charge of the English department. Miss Layton had several years of successful teaching experience before her connection with the University of Michigan.

Miss June Whiting of the State Universities of Minnesota and Montana with very successful experience as teacher in public speaking and English will teach those subjects during the coming year.

Johannes Bergman, a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of the University of Iowa, who has been teaching modern language for a number of years, will have charge of the department of modern languages.

Miss Dagmar M. Holm of Colorado College and the University of California will have charge of the department of ancient languages. Sister Holm has had very successful experiences for a number of years in Colorado.

Lieutenant R. A. Wight, until recently in the United States Army, comes to us with the very best of preparation to serve as College Commandant and Director of Athletics.

Miss Claire Van Eaton, a graduate of Graceland and a student of the Gregg School of Shorthand in Chicago will have charge of stenography and type-writing.

C. E. Wight, a member of the Lamoni Stake Presidency, will direct the work in Religious Education, not only the Bible Study courses heretofore offered, but the special one-year course provided for the training of missionaries.

The following special lecturers will appear at different times during the year; President Frederick M. Smith, Elbert A. Smith, Benjamin R. McGuire, John F. Garver, W. W. Smith, J. A. Koehler, J. A. Gillen, S. A. Burgess, Augustine Dwyer, Doctor J. Leonard Harrington.

With the exceptionally strong members of the faculty of previous years and these additions representing so many different high-grade educational institutions from various sections of the country it is felt that the new year is being entered upon under the most favorable auspices.

As a member of the Quorum of the Twelve recently said:

"There never was a greater need, never a nobler work, and never a finer opportunity. Our future depends upon our fidelity to the duty of to-day. Let the youth of the church respond with the same spirit and high sense of chivalry to meet the demands of peace as they did to meet the demands of war. Graceland is ready and the church invites; who will come?"

---

ATHLETICS

---

BY R. A. WIGHT, LIEUTENANT, U. S. A., COLLEGE COMMANDANT AND DIRECTOR OF ATHLETICS

When a term has been misused and misapplied to a certain extent, it is necessary to go to our old stand-by, the dictionary, to give us the true meaning. Athletics, as a term, has been misused and misapplied to a great extent in some schools and colleges, more so in some than others.

Athletics is any system of physical training by gymnastic exercises and outdoor sports. How, then, has this been misapplied?

In a great many of the smaller schools and colleges especially, athletics has consisted of a very small percentage of the students going into the various sports, some into one and some into others. A student goes out for football in the fall. It is true he follows a system of physical training during the football season. At the end of this time, his training is relaxed and the benefit he has received from this system of training does not stay with him. The system of training this student receives should cover the entire school year, otherwise he has not received the proper amount of physical training necessary to a man who is spending most of his time studying.

In the broader sense of the term, athletics means that every student, both men and women, attending the institution should receive a system of physical training suited to his particular needs. In the past, in a great many places, too much attention has been given to the few who engage in the major sports, such as football, baseball, etc., and not enough attention paid to the ones who are really in need of the training to develop them in a physical way. It is not meant that anything should detract from the attention given to those major sports, for there is nothing in the school or college that raises the morale of the student body higher than the fact that they have winning teams in all competition with other schools. But it is meant that attention should be paid to the students that do not participate in these games.

The army has long since recognized the value of a system of physical training to keep its soldiers in the best of health, and any soldier who has been in the recent war long enough to get the benefit of the training system, will testify as to the results. But the results speak for themselves. In a chapter on personal hygiene in one of the army manuals, the following is stated in one of the rules. "Exercise is absolutely necessary to good health. Lack of exercise of any set of muscles will cause them to grow flabby and weak. Outdoor sports are the best form of exercise, because they use all the body muscles, and are in the open clear air." How much more the above might be applied to a college student who does not get any of the ordinary exercise of a soldier.

Graceland College is fortunate indeed in having at its head men who realize the necessity of physical training for all its students and who intend to see that the college course of each student includes the proper amount of this training. A system is being outlined to provide for the entire year's work along this line. The strength of each student is determined by his weakest physical part, therefore, every effort, possible will be made toward strengthening his weak points and not toward increasing the power of his muscles already strong. It will be the aim to produce as many all-around athletes among both men and women in all lines as possible, rather than specialists in particular sports or in a limited number of athletic exercises. This does not mean that development along some particular line such as baseball or football will be discouraged, for we want winning teams in all lines of sport. Graceland has an enviable record in many lines of sports now and we must look forward to still better records, for with this system of training, they will come. But the man or woman who is a specialist in some certain line will receive the training along other lines to develop the weaker physical parts at a time when the special training is not being carried on.

Other schools are using this system with marked success. The army used this system and is still using it with wonderful results. With the increased equipment that the athletic department of Graceland will have the coming school year, every form of athletics can be followed up and there is no reason why the necessary physical training in combination with the moral and mental. Can we afford to neglect any one of the three?

THE EXTENSION DEPARTMENT

BY LONZO JONES AND ARTHUR B. CHURCH

The work of the Extension Department of Graceland College includes the following branches: Correspondence courses, lecture course, educational survey work, and normal training.

For several years the college has maintained a correspondence department offering commercial and academic courses by mail which, together with the Graceland Extension institute, has made available for the membership of the church a series of home study courses in educational, commercial, scientific, and philosophical subjects. The latter organization was not a department of Graceland College but was composed of a considerable number of the leading educators of the church who offered their services gratis for the same success should not follow the work there as it has in other places.

GIRLS' BASKET BALL TEAM

Three phases of every person's life should be given ample opportunity to develop. They are: the moral (which includes the spiritual), the mental, and the physical. Graceland has always given the best of moral training to all her students. She has developed the mental in a way that she has become recognized everywhere for her ability along this line. From this time on, every student will receive the benefit of those who desire to better qualify themselves for life's service through study.

Another organization within the church, the Woman's Auxiliary, offered a course in public speaking which met with great favor, about five hundred students having been enrolled. The lessons for this course have been prepared by Brother T. W. Williams and the instruction work until recently has been carried out by the Woman's Auxiliary.

The last General Conference, acting on the recommendations of the coordinating committee, provided for the organization of the extension department of Graceland College which was to take over the public speaking course, the lecture course of the Religio, the normal training department of the Sunday school, and the work of the Graceland Extension Institute, besides the regular correspondence courses offered by the college. The purpose of this merging was to coordinate the work so that it could be handled more efficiently and economically and to better serve the people and the interests of the church at large.

The great number of students registering for these courses necessitated so much work and expense for clerical help printing and mailing lessons, etc., as to become a burden under the existing organization. Very small fees were charged for some of the subjects and no fees whatever for others. It has become apparent that some registered for these courses who did so merely because it cost them nothing for they have never even made reports on the first lesson. This, however, is not the case with all, for many have sent in their lesson reports regularly; others who felt unable to answer the lesson questions have written that they nevertheless felt that they received great benefit from the work.

The important fact remained, however, that the courses were becoming too large a burden for those handling them, so it was decided best to transfer this work to Graceland and there organize a department that could handle it on an efficient and economical basis.

Under the new management the faculty of Graceland College acts also as instructors for the correspondence subjects and give the students their personal attention. Thus students taking the public speaking course have their papers corrected and graded by the professor of oratory and public speaking. The value of this arrangement to students is apparent.

Several classes of correspondence courses are offered, credits for which are given in the respective departments of the college when work is successfully completed. Thus, if desired, part of the subjects may be taken by mail, and the remaining subjects required for graduation may be taken in resident work at the college. There are some who feel unable to master the lessons well enough to be graded on same, yet feel that they derived considerable benefit from the work; these, of course, do not receive credit for their work.

Following are some of the subjects offered: Mathematics—Algebra, Geometry; Language—Latin, English; History—Ancient, Medieval, Modern, American, English; Commercial—Bookkeeping, Commercial Law, Salesmanship, Penmanship, Commerce Arithmetic; Grammar; Public Speaking; Logic, and Psychology.

The matter of tuition has been carefully considered. It is desired that as many as possible obtain the benefits of the correspondence courses so the tuition fee has been put at a figure barely large enough to pay the expenses involved. Thus the people of the church who desire to study and prepare themselves for more efficient service can do so at a fraction of the usual cost for such courses. Graceland now says to you: "If you can't come to me, let me go to you."

LECTURE COURSE

At the last General Conference the lecture course managed by the Religio was turned over to the college. The purpose of this lecture course is to provide good speakers on various subjects wherever they are desired. Since these lecturers offer their service free of charge for the good of all, the only cost necessary in obtaining them is that of railroad fare and the other expenses incidental to the trips. Where several branches in the same district arrange for a lecturer to visit them the expense is very slight for each.

The church possesses many men and women who have become highly specialized along various lines such as archaeology, history, education, science, sociology, business, child training, literature, art, etc. Those who have offered their services are able not only to entertain but also to instruct. The work is a highly valuable one, offering as it does opportunities for service to the learned and opportunities for learning to all.

EDUCATIONAL SURVEY WORK

During the past year the Department of Education of Graceland has carried out an interesting survey of certain branches of public school work in Decatur County. By means of diagnostic tests the abilities of children in the various schools were learned and compared. These tests are of twofold value; first, to the teacher and educator because they reveal the weak and strong points of the pupils, faults in the curriculum, and avenues of improvement, and second, to the pupils because they create initiative and interest.

The Extension Department tabulates these tests and supplies the diagnostic test forms to Graceland graduates who are in the teaching profession. The service thus rendered redounds to the benefit of both the Department of Education and to the rapidly increasing number of teacher training graduates.

NORMAL TRAINING

The normal training work of the Sunday school and Religio, is just now being taken over by the college. As soon as the officials can bring their work up to date those offices in the general organizations will be done away with and all lessons, examinations, and correspondence on normal work will be conducted through the college. This course is designed to meet the demand for the preparation of men and women for Sunday-school teachers. Many Sunday schools are handicapped by not having a sufficient number of teachers, and those they do have find themselves handicapped by lack of preparation. This course contemplates giving instruction in the study of the Bible, its organization and content; Bible geography, and Bible history. It also offers courses in child study, laws of teaching, and storytelling. These courses fill the needs long felt by Sunday school workers and in the hands of the college should be pushed to a successful future.

Those interested in these courses, either individuals or classes, should write the President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

---

EDUCATION AND TEMPORALITIES

---

The present has been called the Industrial Age, which means to many the making of money and to such it is always necessary to talk in terms of dollars and cents when considering any activity. Education in this bulletin has been treated from the cultural, religious, and commercial viewpoints and the money standpoint remains for consideration.

Proposed investments by business men are always gauged by their past experiences, by the results of other investments. By that standard, is money spent for education a good investment? We are not left in the dark for our answer. This is no new question—it has been asked and answered many times—and always the answer is the same—it is one of the very best investments from the money-returns viewpoint alone, not considering any other of the many advantages an education brings to one.

Who's Who in America contains the biographies of nearly 23,000 of the notable living men and women of the United States. These 23,000 leaders in the civil, military, naval, religious, and educational life of the country are the men and women who have been of the most service to their fellow men, who have been largely instrumental in making the world a better place in which to live. Prominence does not always indicate success, nor does the accumulation of wealth necessarily mean success, but considering these points as factors our investigation of the record of Who's Who shows:

First. A man without education cannot become prominent.

Second. The man with a common school training has one chance in 8,812.

Third. A man with a high school training has one chance in 404.

Fourth. The man with a college training has one chance in 42.

The college graduates of the United States constitute eight tenths of one per cent of the total population. From this less than one per cent of the people, 95 per cent of the officials of the United States, from congressmen up to president, including elective and appointive officers, were selected.

The above are some of the facts shown by Who's Who in America.

From other sources definite figures as to the money income of the educated as compared with the non-educated are available.

The United States Bureau of Education issued a bulletin on "The Money Value of Education" in 1917 from which it may be of interest to quote.

It says: "Education is not a charity, but the best paying investment," and as proof submits the results of its investigation of the educational facilities and earning power of the citizens of two typical States of the Union—Massachusetts and Tennessee. Massachusetts spends $38.55 a year per pupil in education, while Tennessee spends only $4.68 per pupil. The citizens of Massachusetts produced for the year under consideration an average of $144 each more than did Tennessee citizens, or a total of nearly $404,000,000 more than Tennessee. If Massachusetts gives $12,000,000 more to schools and her better educated citizens produce $404,000,000 more per year, how much profit does that State make on her investment in education?

Doctor Charles Thwing as a result of an investigation made by him finds that there are 277 times as many college-bred men in the United States who have amassed great wealth as there are noncollege-bred men, and yet less than one per cent of the population are college men.

For the financial returns of education to the individual so many investigations have been made by the Government and they all show the same result, viz, the overwhelming evidence of the greater income of the educated person over the noneducated, that it is difficult in the brief space available to give figures.

Perhaps the best summary of all the individual investigations made is shown on page 32 of the bulletin above referred to, issued by the United States Government.

In the chart there shown the Government says, "Every day spent in school pays the child nine dollars," and gives the proof as follows:

Uneducated laborers earn on the average $500 per year for forty years, a total of $20,000.

Educated laborers earn on the average $1,000 per year for forty years, a total of $40,000.

This education required on the average twelve years of school of 180 days each, a total of 2,160 days in school.

If 2,160 days at school add $20,000 to the income for life, then each day at school adds $9.02.

The child that stays out of school to earn less than $9 a day is losing money, not making money.

Based on the above facts the following quoted from the last annual report of the President of Graceland College will be of interest.

MONEY VALUE OF EDUCATION

"A recent United States Government Bulletin shows the results of an investigation throughout the country, proving that every day spent in school by the child is worth $9.02 to him. If that is true of the child in the public schools of the country, of how much greater value is every day spent in college! However, taking the Government average for public schools as applying to college students and our attendance for this year up to the date of this report shows that Graceland has increased the earning capacity of her students $145,699, and figuring to the end of the college year in June, taking the average attendance up to date for the rest of the school year, it shows that our young people of the church will be enabled to earn $254,702 more during their natural life than if they had not been in attendance at college this year.

"These figures are almost beyond belief, yet they are based on the most thorough investigation by the United States Government. When we consider the fact that more than a quarter of a million dollars does not represent the earnings of a single year, but is spread out over the years of activity after graduation and is a continued source of income to the church and its members, we are led to ask: Does an education pay from the standpoint of money alone? If it does, is there any better investment for the church to make than to provide adequate facilities which will meet not only the requirements of the church but the requirements of the State?"

The junior college idea simply means that instead of jumping from high school into the great university, the student may receive the first two years of college work under the more personal influence of an efficiently-small college and the next two years of the four-year course at such university as he may choose, for the credits are accepted without question at practically every such school.

On one occasion Aristotle was asked how much educated men were superior to those uneducated: "As much," said he, "as the living are to the dead." He took the broadest view of education.

WHY ATTEND GRACELAND?

Why should young people be induced to attend Graceland rather than some other good school?

1. Graceland is especially well prepared to meet the needs of young men and women who expect to be active in the interests of the church.

2. The faculty and equipment of Graceland are adequate to the needs of a standardized and fully accredited institution.

3. The ideals of integrity, honor, industry, and a love for the truth and the right are developed as perhaps at no other school.

4. Students at Graceland come in contact with leaders in all departments of church work, men and women who are going to be instrumental for many years in determining the policies of the church.

5. A large percentage of young church members who go elsewhere for their whole education are lost to the interests of the church, while most of those who pass through Graceland go away inspired with a love for the gospel and a desire to be of service.

6. Graceland ranks high among the very best junior colleges of the country. Her faculty, buildings, equipment, library, laboratories, all meet the most exacting requirements as passed upon by the inspecting officials of the Government.

7. Graceland holds an enviable record of successful contests in athletics, debate, and oratory with schools in Iowa, Missouri, and Kansas.

8. Graceland is "our school"; every additional student helps to make her possibilities greater.

GRACELAND'S BEGINNINGS

BY BISHOP E. L. KELLEY

Among the many needful things brought to the attention of the Saints from the beginning of 1880, and extending to 1896, was that of suitable and efficient means of further instructing and educating the young people, after they had finished the work provided for in the public schools of the country.

Further attainments and developments were necessary in order to better qualify them as instructors and helpers, in moving forward under the demands of life's changing and uplifting work.

Other institutions of learning did not meet the demands at this time as the prejudice of pupils and instructors unacquainted with our church work was difficult to meet by a true and faithful pupil.

A single citation in the HERALD, volume 38, page 719, will suffice to explain the perplexing pressure brought against the pupil.

A young man, Brother C. R. Duncan, referring to the situation, writes, that after the school learned of his religious views, he was shunned by the students, "and even the professor himself endeavored to make me the subject of ridicule at every possible opportunity." He also states that he is "persuaded that many of our young people are neglecting to attend school on just the same grounds. . . . If we had a good college, . . . many of them would get a good education who otherwise would never do so."

In an editorial of the HERALD, December, 1891, we find clearly stated the object and needs of a proper school of this kind. The object is not primarily to make preachers. The intention is to found a school in which the youth of the Saints may secure an education such as they now obtain at public schools of a similar kind; if the Lord chooses to call any of those attending such school, or after they shall have ceased attending it, we see no reason why what they have gathered of knowledge and discipline at such a school will prevent the call or disqualify them for service. . . . So far as we are concerned, we do not hesitate to state that of two schools alike in all their appointments, the one established in or near to a large and flourishing branch of the church, and the managers and teachers of which were of the faith; the other at or near some large town or city, whose teachers and managers were of the world, or sectarian, we should unhesitatingly choose in favor of the first named for our children. . . . The moral atmosphere of a community of the people of the faith is conducive of morality, industry, sobriety, and virtue, without the harshness of strictness and restraint, such as, in our judgment, is found nowhere else. . . . It is in such a place and amid such surroundings it is intended to build a college, where the children of the Saints may get an education if one is built."

At the April Conference, 1890, it was passed by the assembly that the "time has arrived when it may be expedient to establish an institution of learning under the control or influence of our church organization, and to this end there shall be a committee appointed to receive proposals for a location and take such other preliminary measures as may be necessary;" and to establish such institution.

A committee of seven was selected, president Joseph Smith, the chairman. A former effort had been made in 1889 in the town of Lamoni, Iowa, and a few subscriptions taken then. Friday evening, April 20, 1891, at a meeting of the committee in Lamoni, special effort was made in obtaining subscriptions, and on the 23d of the same month the subscriptions amounted to $5,100.

Action of the church and the committee subsequently fixed the erection of the college at Lamoni. Later it was published by the committee that, "No better outlay can any man make of money, the preaching of the gospel excepted, than in fostering the educational efforts of his time; it is money well expended to endow an institution of learning."

College subscriptions came slowly, however, and the committee entering upon, and urgently pushing the enterprise, gathered much more means by the time of its meeting June 26, 1895. The land secured for the location was duly surveyed also, and the time for opening the school set for September 16, 1895, in a building rented for the work. In November, 1895, the college library was started to assist pupils in their work, and during the first year's instruction of pupils, the college buildings were erected, so that they were ready for use at the time of opening of the second college year, A. D. 1896. All was under the management of well selected and able professors and teachers.

At the opening of the school in the second year of its work, many pupils came in from distant places, and many parts of the country, and the institution proved of great good to its patrons and those associated, and it was but a few years when a number of its pupils entered the State University of Iowa for further instruction, and were specially complimented on the good work that Graceland College had meted out to them, by leading officers and professors of that institution.

Subsequent to its opening the institution has moved forward, and to-day holds out an excellent course of study and is blessed with an excellent patronage of pupils, who are under the direct and special instruction and care of approved professors and teachers.

The institution is in the most appropriate sense for the uplift and instruction of its many pupils and should move forward with honor and success.

---

GRACELAND AND THE WORLD WAR

---

BY J. A. GUNSOLLEY

Did Graceland do her part?

To one who understands fully the true spirit of Graceland such a question would be absurd. But to those who do not understand her spirit a few facts will be both interesting and edifying.

Loyalty and patriotism have always been given due attention both in the class room and in the daily deportment and example of the officers, teachers, and student body of the institution. As evidence of this fact the response to the Nation's call for men both in the Spanish-American War and in the World War just closed are cited.

The size of the student body at the time of the Spanish-American War was small compared to now, but then three young men left the classroom for the scene of conflict.

With the declaration of war in April, 1917, and the call to arms of American manhood in the succeeding months, Graceland, as might have been reasonably expected, responded promptly and liberally to her country's need. From her faculty and student body more than forty men left the classroom to serve against the common enemy of civilization. A little later many more young men joined the Students' Army Training Corps and were located in vice flag about four feet wide and eight feet long, constructed of felt stretched upon a wooden frame bearing a star for each name hangs in the main hall near the college entrance.

The excellency of the men representing the college in the Government war forces is attested by the fact that a little more than six per cent attained to commissioned offices, one captain and seven lieutenants. How many sergeants, corporals, and other noncommissioned officers there were, Goodness only knows. Quite a large number were given places of responsibility such as quartermasters, yeomen, clerks of various kinds, etc. They were sober, temperate, intellectually and morally clean, having high ideals of honor and honesty. Such men are always in demand everywhere. So that it would be a wonder if they did not command respect and gain recognition and secure promotion.

It may be noted upon our service flag that there are eight stars upon which have been placed gold medallions, certifying to the fact that these seven young men and one young woman made the supreme sacrifice. They gave their lives freely that others might live and have life more abundantly than could have been the case had our enemy triumphed. The following are the names with date and cause of death: Myron Morgan, died of wounds July 25, 1918; Allen Trachsel, died in camp of influenza September 19, 1918; Tru Myers, killed in action September 26, 1918; Burrell Crook, did in camp of influenza October, 1918; Towner Bohn, died in camp of influenza October 8, 1918; Miss Hortense Wind, died in camp of influenza December 10, 1918; Bernard McNamara, missing in action, 1918; Lieutenant H. V. Grenawalt, died in camp of influenza October 24, 1918.

The memory of these honored dead is to be perpetuated by a beautiful bronze tablet, the gift of the graduating class of 1919. This bears upon its face the figure of the Christian Cross, across which appears the words, "In honored memory of our fellow students who died in the world war 1914-1918." Below this in two columns the names of the honored ones, and below the names the following: "Presented by the class of 1919." This will be placed upon the wall ultimately of the "Memorial Hall" which it is hoped will be erected by the church and dedicated to the memory of all who served in the war for humanity. Temporarily the tablet may be seen upon the wall in the main corridor of the present college building.

Thus in brief is the chapter. Hundreds of others would have gone forth just as readily and willingly as did those of whom special mention has been made. Many young men and young women remained at their studies, actuated with as much patriotism and different institutions where such organizations had been established.

Nor were the young women lacking in the spirit of patriotism and love for democracy as shown by the fact that quite a number offered their services for such work as they might be qualified to do in assisting to make this world a place where civilized human beings might live in safety.

With as much care as could be exercised, names of those who had been identified with the college at some time who entered some department of the Government service in connection with the war, one hundred thirty-six were gathered. A beautiful ser-loyalty as moved those who went to the front, realizing that our country needs the services of educated men and women in the various lines of industry and activity, as much as it needs good gunners. Others remained at the plow with an equal amount of patriotism, knowing that an army without food would be powerless.

The war is not over, though peace may be signed. The work of reconstruction involves as perplexing and difficult problems as those of the war. The results of this conflict will still be felt a generation hence. Opportunity for loyalty to principle and patriotic service to our Government and humanity will be as great in the future as during the war. Will Graceland do her part? To those who know her spirit there is but one answer. To those who do not know her spirit we say, watch and see.

---

GREATER GRACELAND

---

BY C. B. WOODSTOCK

What an inspiration in the words! Do you catch their full meaning and significance? Perhaps they do not mean exactly the same thing to each of us. That is, each of us has an ideal, a mental picture of what Graceland shall one day be. But in the main, the larger view, the increased membership, the enlarged facilities, the extended opportunities, and the great service the college is to render in helping to solve the industrial, social, economic, and moral problems before our people is the same with all of us.

It has been this larger view and the inspiration gained from its contemplation that has engendered faith in the men and women who have in the past given of their means or their time and talent that the Graceland of the present might be. It has been with no little faith that faculty members and others have given their best effort for five, eight, ten, and even twenty years of service and at a salary often much below what might have been had elsewhere. It is this same faith, inspired by the same vision that leads men and women of the highest educational attainment or years of success and prominence in the world to come to our college and take up their humble duties, happy in the thought that their lives are not only prepared for efficient service, but that they are accounted worthy to labor with and for Him whom they have chosen to serve. We are aware that this vision of Graceland's place in the economy of the church, has not been indulged in alone by the few who have labored within its walls. There have been and are many other earnest hearts which have been made to realize the need of our own educational institution. And there is the great body of former students! We have yet to learn of a single one who did not in later years bless the day that he entered Graceland's walls. Even in cases where a student's life seemed unfortunate and his stay ended abruptly—yet the experience at Graceland, the influence of deans, of the president, of his fellow students have remained as a cherished memory and only good words are spoken for our college.

Among the alumni and other former students there are men and women who manifest unquestioned allegiance to Graceland and its interests. Some of them are in the missionary work of the church and are doing splendid service for the college by their service and influence wherever they go. Others have climbed high in the world of science or letters and while they successfully occupy in other fields of learning they are ready to respond to Graceland's call when their services shall be needed in our own school and among our own young people.

And there are still others who are busily engaged in the industries of life. They love the church and its institutions and have a profound regard for Graceland. They are grateful for what it has done for them and hopeful for its future. We can only hope that the day may not be far distant when they, too, may be privileged to do their part in the realization of what greater Graceland is to be.

---

COLLEGE HONORS

---

College life should be and is a preparation for life in the activities of the world after graduation. Not only is it a preparation but it is life itself. The student who is active during his college career, who sees and takes advantage of his opportunities, who can be depended upon under all circumstances to meet the situations of his college life, who participates in the so-called "college activities" is, nine cases out of ten, the one who will be found to be the leader in the larger activities of his experience after graduation.

To such students honors come, not only material honors, the respect and esteem of his fellow students, but the self-respect and self-confidence resulting from the accomplishment of a task well worth while.

In Graceland specific honors are of three classes:

For scholarship.

In forensics.

In athletics.

SCHOLARSHIP

To be entitled to an honor scholarship in either the college or the academy one must have spent the last two years previous to graduation in Graceland. Scholarship honors are granted at the time of graduation.

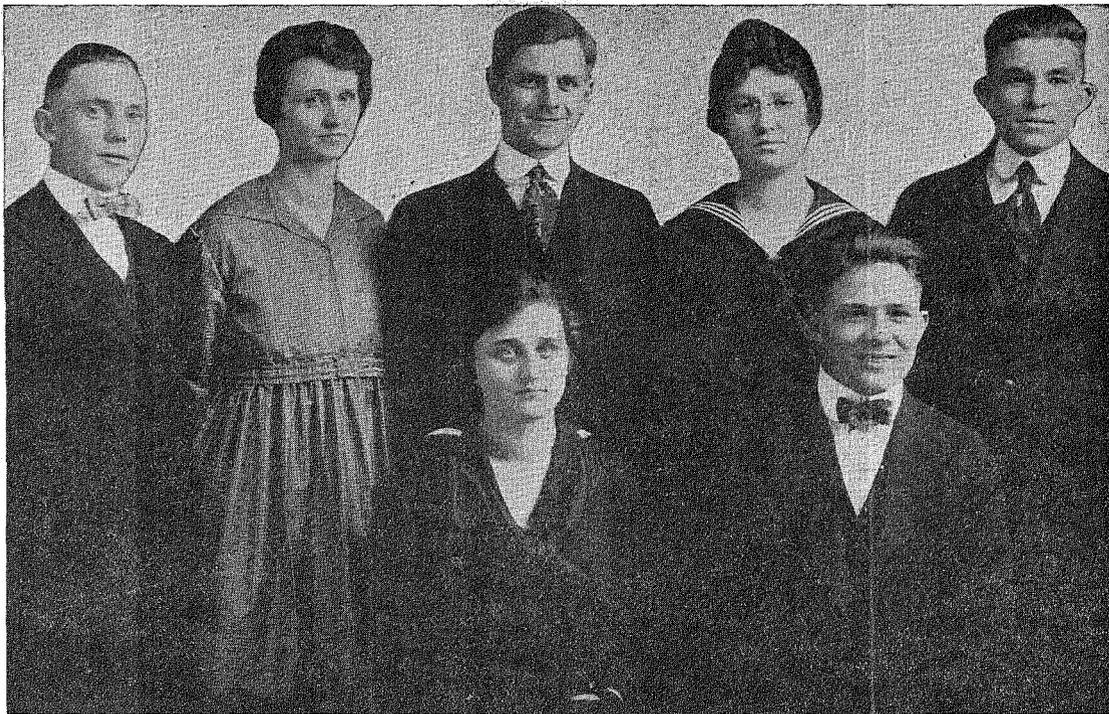

The college honor scholarship is granted to the student maintaining the highest rank in scholarship during the entire college course. It is one of the prizes all worthy students seek and represents two years of the most conscientious attention to the scholastic interests of the college.

The academy honor scholarship is granted by the Iowa State Board of Education each year to some member of the graduating class of each accredited institution for maintaining the highest rank in scholarship during the entire preparatory course. The honor represents four years of close attention to the work of the school and is a prize worthy of the very best effort.

FORENSICS

The honors in this line are won in oratory, debate, and declamation. From the material standpoint perhaps the reward granted to the winner of the annual oratorical contest is of the greatest value, being a free scholarship in Graceland College.

ORATORICAL CONTESTANTS

The final oratorical contest represents a number of students who have successfully passed through the sifting process and have shown by their ability to write and deliver that they are worthy of representing the institution's best tradition along the line of public speaking.

The written orations are first passed upon by a committee of the college faculty which decides whether or not they have sufficient merit to warrant their being delivered in the preliminary contest.

Those orations accepted are then turned over to three judges on thought and composition who grade the orations without consulting with each other to determine their rank as to matters from the standpoint of the thought and composition used.

The contestants then enter a preliminary contest on delivery for the purpose of selecting the four who are to represent the college in the final contest.

The markings of the three judges on thought and composition are combined with the markings of the three judges in the preliminary contest on delivery to determine the four to enter the final contest.

On the final contest three judges on delivery rank the contestants, taking into consideration such points as pronunciation, articulation, carriage, gesture, expression, and general effect on the hearer, and these rankings are combined with the rankings of the six judges who have previously passed upon the orations, thus making a combined mark of nine judges.

It can easily be seen that the winner of such a contest merits the high reward which he receives. It is one of the highest honors available during the student's entire course in college.

In debate there are honors for both academy students and college students. Gold medals are awarded to the winners in these contests who also represent the institution in intercollegiate and interacademy debates. For the college students there are two debates held with other colleges—one for the boys of the college and one for the girls.

Preliminary tryouts and intersectional debates are held within the institution and the final debaters, three boys for one debate and three girls for the other debate, are selected to represent the college department in debates with other colleges.

The past year is a typical one in intercollegiate debate for Graceland. The girls' college debate this year was with Tabor College, a four-year, standard college located at Tabor, Iowa, the question under discussion being, "Resolved, that Federal control of education would be beneficial." Graceland had the affirmative and received the unanimous decision of the judges. The team was composed of girls from California, Wyoming, and Kansas.

The boys' college debate was with Simpson College, a four-year standard college located at Indianola, Iowa. During the week preceding our debate Simpson College had debated the same question with Luther College at Decorah, Iowa. Two debates were held between Simpson and Luther, each College having two teams, one affirmative team and one negative team. In those two debates Simpson won both, and Graceland was called upon to meet the winning team. The plan of having a single expert judge, the professor of public speaking at one of the large colleges of the State, was followed. The decision was in favor of Graceland thus making her the winner in the triangular contest between Simpson, Luther, and Graceland.

It was impossible to hold the academy debate this year owing to the inability of the academy which we were to debate to secure a team. The tryouts and preliminary intersectional debates were, however, held before we were advised that no contest could be held this year, so that whatever gain accrued was secured by the students participating.

The declamatory contestants are selected entirely from the academy, and the winners of the first and second places respectively represent Graceland in the State contest and the county contest. For the past year both of our contestants received gold medals evidencing the very high standards maintained in this line of interests.

ATHLETICS

In athletics the letter "G" and some years sweaters with the "G" are awarded to those students showing marked proficiency in physical training.

Football, baseball, basket ball, track, tennis, and other forms of athletics are provided for and constitute a most important department of physical education.

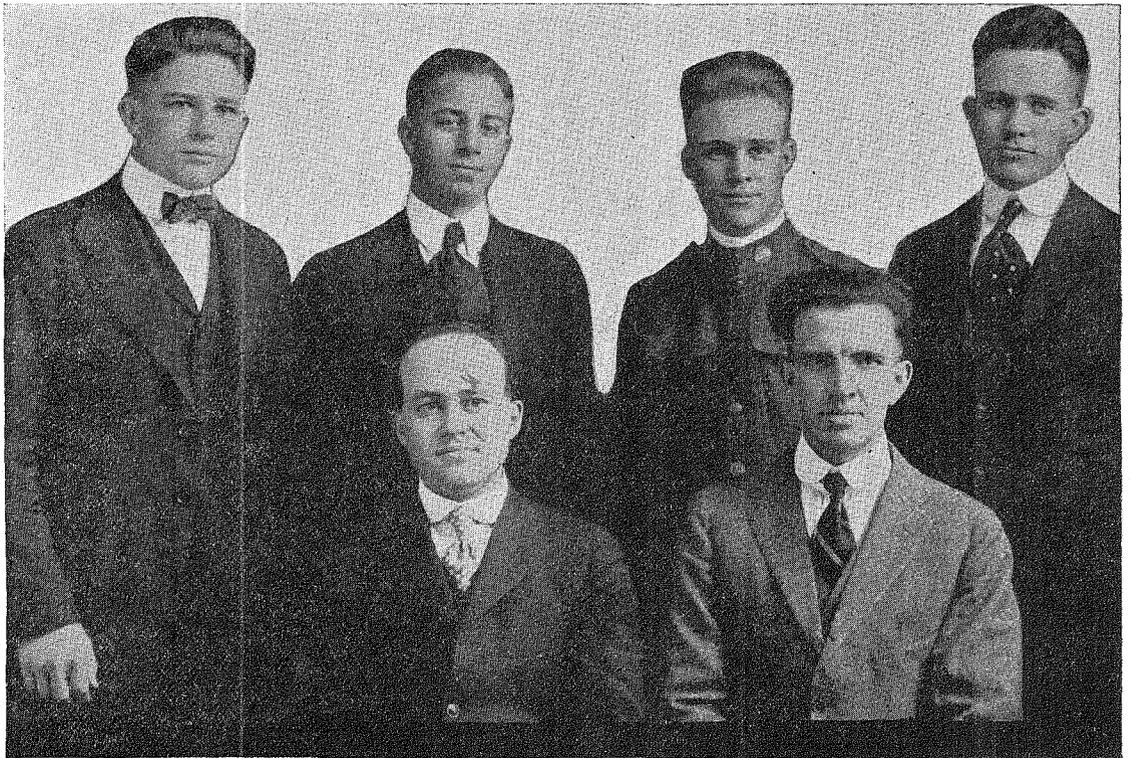

Intercollegiate athletic contests are held in the colleges in Iowa, Missouri, and Kansas, thus enabling our students to come into contact with the best representatives of other institutions.

---

STUDENT ACTIVITIES

---

Nearly every college man looks back to his college days as the happiest, busiest, most joyous ones of his life. Never are they remembered as a period of dry, listless plodding through long, tiresome lessons; nor are they remembered as a period of strenuous strivings for graduation and a diploma. But those days recur to our memories as the days of free expressing of active, growing, expanding life, a period when our minds and bodies develop into active factors of society, and to which society we are able to contribute our share of service, and from which we draw a double measure of development.

COLLEGE BOYS' DEBATING TEAM

Yes, there is more to one's college education than the books he reads, the lessons he recites, and the diploma he receives. These are only half. On the other hand balancing and augmenting these are the various activities of the student body. These include literary, athletic, and social activities. And no man's education is complete, nor his character fully rounded until he has made his mark both in his studies and in the student activities. How well do I remember during my first years in Graceland, the admiration and esteem I had for those young men and women who could not only stand at the head of their classes, but also were leaders either in debate, oratory, singing, or athletics, or in all of them. I remember how I held them as my ideal and often wondered would the day ever come when I too could speak in Athenian or play on the football team or lead the booster club. And well might I thus have held my ideal. For the men and women length, covering the best of athletes, of debaters, of singers, or of winners in the oratorical contests and almost without exception those individuals have made the best grades and are now making the best success in their chosen work. Small wonder, then, that a new student should admire the leaders in these school activities, nor is it a mean ambition to aspire to a place in those activities, and work and strive and study to place his name on the list of honor where it will always be remembered by Graceland folk, and from which achievements he can go on to bigger things in his life work. What then are some of these activities of the student body which means so much to the development of the student and to the spice and worth of school life; and which calls forth and tests the very best metal a man possesses? The Athenian Literary Society should stand first in this list. For under its auspices and through its channels are carried into action many of the activities of the school. As already indicated, this society was organized February 8, 1898. Its beginning was humble indeed, for at the first meeting only twelve active members answered roll call. But it was a beginning and from that small nucleus has grown the society as it stands to-day with a membership of 140.

A TYPE OF STUDENT ORGANIZATION

who have gone from Graceland and who have made or are now making an unbounded success in their chosen professions, almost without exception they have been leaders amongst their fellow students, and leaders in the movements that still stand as a memorial to their effective work.

Frederick M. Smith was leader of the movement that established the Athenian Literary Society in 1898, an institution which still stands and has grown and grown until it stands without a peer in literary work in any of the small colleges with which we have come in contact. Frank Jones was a leader in debating, and one whose record is not only bright in Graceland, but in Iowa City as well. Charles Irwin was one of the best athletes that ever passed through the halls of Graceland College and his debating record is almost without parallel. F. M. McDowell, besides his activity in football and debate, was directly responsible for the issuance and establishment of the first Acacia or the Graceland Year Book. So one might go on at

Through these twenty-one years of its existence there have been times when the membership has lagged to almost nothing, and again there have been times when the chapel would scarcely hold the members. At the present time under the supervision of the Athenian is being fostered three smaller or sub-literary societies, each with its distinct set of officers and giving its own program. From these societies a program is furnished every Saturday evening of the school year. Students are encouraged to join, and required to make public appearances in plays, readings, vocal and instrumental solos, debates, orations, and extemporaneous speaking. Lack of experience is no handicap. Students who never before faced an audience are required to do their part. Many a student whose first appearance was a timid, halting, frightened one has developed into a forceful, fluent speaker or an artist with voice or instrument.

The business meetings of the Athenian should not be overlooked, for they constitute a fundamental part of Athenian instruction. The constitution of the Athenian requires that every member remain after each program for the business meeting. Here all the business of the society is transacted strictly to the order of the best parliamentary practice. If the society cannot furnish sufficient business, mock business is brought in. So every student has an opportunity to develop himself as a parliamentarian. As a reward for good work in this department the Athenian offers the highest honors due to one of its members—the presidency of the society. For almost without exception the one who holds that office is one whose steady consistent work in school activities and whose knowledge of parliamentary law exceeds that of every other student.

The Athenian has gradually extended its service until to-day it is fostering the intercollegiate and academy debates, the oratorical contest, the declamatory contest, the Acacia, the motion pictures, and assists materially in furnishing books and magazines for the college library. To cover each of these fully would take unlimited space, so we can only touch each one briefly.

Graceland's debating has been a decided success and is being stressed more the last two or three years. Out of six intercollegiate debates held, five have been victorious for Graceland. During the last year two such debates were held, one with Tabor College of Tabor, Iowa, the other with Simpson College of Indianola, Iowa, Graceland winning in both cases. With these victories to our credit we look forward to next year's contests with a great deal of enthusiasm and hope. More especially so because we are anticipating a much larger student body than ever before.

In all about twelve oratorical contests have been held, one each year since 1907. The honors in this contest are awarded solely upon the merits of the students individual work. The academy debating is also becoming popular and each year we expect to put out an academy team able to maintain the record of one year ago when the Graceland Academy won from Culver-Stockton Academy on a vote of two to one.

The manner in which these contests are conducted is touched upon in the article headed "Honors" in this issue.

Under recent arrangements our academy students are permitted to contest both in the county and State declamatory contests for secondary schools. The past year Graceland students won second honors in both county and State.

Each week the Athenian furnishes a set of reels and a set of slides dealing with commercial and scientific subjects, to be shown in chapel before the entire school. These pictures have proved very instructive and interesting to the students whose opportunities for travel and investigation are limited.

The biggest undertaking the Athenian concerns itself with is the Acacia or College Annual. Unlike other schools the Graceland Annual is not published by the junior or senior class but by the Athenian and is entirely representative of the student body. Each student has his picture in the book besides pictures of the faculty, of groups, clubs, etc. The publication of the book calls for a large sum of money and for efficient work in managing, editing, and illustrating. The Athenian elects a business manager and a treasurer who appoint an editor in chief and art editor. These four comprise the staff responsible for the publication of the book. These positions while not remunerative, offer a vast amount of experience to members of the student body and are positions of trust and responsibility to which all could justly aspire.

Of the student activities, the Booster Club is next in importance. Every student is automatically a member of the Graceland Boosters. Through a committee of nine members known as the "pep committee" this club furnishes the boosting and crowds to support the college activities. They sell the tickets and do the cheering for the athletic and forensic contests, and in fact furnish the physical support of body and voice to every student undertaking.

The athletics of the school are covered by a special article in this issue.

The Glee Club, the Four-Minute Singers, the College Quartet, and the Orchestra are organizations offering opportunity for musical development. The Glee Club meets on Tuesday evenings throughout the year and is composed of some fifty or sixty voices. They do a great deal of local singing in the church choir and on special occasions. The main feature of the Glee Club is an operetta or a light opera staged near the close of the school year in which every member of the Glee Club participates. These musical plays are becoming more popular and more appreciated each year.

The Four-Minute Singers were organized under Government direction to sing on patriotic occasions during the war. Graceland students furnished the singers for this community.

The orchestra is under the direction of the instructor of band and orchestral instruments of the college and is open to any who are interested in that line of work.

Another student function which is dear to every Graceland student is the college prayer meeting held every Wednesday evening in the college building. Nearly all of the students attend these meetings and it is the testimony of nearly every one that they miss the college prayer meetings more than any other one thing when they return to their homes.

So it is in Graceland. The young men and women of the church come to Graceland with the intention of getting an education along scholastic lines alone, but before leaving discover that the instruction is thrice that, if he will but enter in. For the school training is accomplished under the direction of men and women of God; the athletic, literary, and social activities are directed through the student organizations, and all this is mellowed and enhanced through the gentle influence of the Spirit of God received in the college prayer meetings. Thus they become the threefold, fully-rounded man, mentally, physically, spiritually.

---

THE PATRONESSES OF GRACELAND

---

BY MRS. LENA J. GRAHAM

The Society of Patronesses stands as a shining light in the history of the achievements of Graceland College. The society is composed of a band of loyal women who are bound together by a love of learning and a consecrated desire to further the interests of our own beloved Graceland in every way possible.

The society was organized in May, 1903, under the direction of Professor Charles M. Barber, then a member of the faculty. The response which he met from the women of the community assured him that their pent-up enthusiasm to serve in this way was only awaiting a chance for expression. The organization meeting was held at the home of Mrs. J. F. Hopkins, still an active member, and the following officers were elected: Mrs. E. L. Kelley, president; Mrs. Anna Dancer, vice president; Mrs. F. M. Smith, secretary; Mrs. Daniel Anderson, corresponding secretary; Mrs. John Smith, treasurer. There were ten charter members, fifty-five names being added at the second meeting. The membership has grown very rapidly until its workers are not confined to Lamon, but extend to many communities from which come each year words of good cheer accompanied by yearly dues.

The financial aid extended perhaps is most noticeable since the results from such assistance are more direct. By means of bazaars, socials, apron sales, furnishing of dinners and lunches on various public occasions, the sale of home-made cookbooks, and in many other ways, all of which have meant days and weeks of ceaseless toil and sacrifice, over six thousand dollars have been earned and expended in the interests of Graceland.

Every student who enjoys the comforts of the girls' dormitory, Patroness Hall, which was named for the society, gives thanks to the tireless efforts of this band of willing workers, who with no desire save that of serving not only those of their own time but the girls and boys of the future who avail themselves of the advantages of Graceland, aided so materially in the erecting of the building and the furnishing thereof. Their aid has also been extended in like manner to the boys' dormitory, Marietta Hall. The cement walks around the buildings and down the long hill are another evidence of their labors.

But we must not dwell too lengthily on this side of the work of the Patronesses. Many a homesick student has been cheered and helped by these women, especially in the early days before the erection of the dormitories added the atmosphere of real college life between class times, and when they were compelled to board at many separate places in town. Who can count the value of a cheery word, a bit of kind advice, or a few hour's entertainment in one's home to the student who is away from his own home? Thus in ways too numerous to mention and only thought of by those dedicated to the service of the institution, has the work been forwarded, and a just pride is felt by those who have borne the battle in the heat of the day in the growth and development of the college.

The membership of the society to-day numbers about two hundred; and while like other societies their efforts for the past few years have been mostly directed to war activities, their hearts are just as willing and they expect to still continue to push until our Graceland reaches the summit of success and we can sing with full comprehension of our "College on the Hill."

The present officers are Mrs. Wilber Prall, president; Mrs. G. L. Smith, vice president; Mrs. Lena J. Graham, secretary; Mrs. C. E. Wight corresponding secretary; Mrs. Charles France, treasurer.

---

GROWTH AND DEVELOPMENT

---

BY S. A. BURGESS

In view of the close association of the church of God with education from the very earliest ages, if history and tradition are to be accepted, it is not surprising that in the restoration of the gospel a primary consideration was the instruction of the young and preparation for advanced schooling. Joseph Smith the Martyr was a leader in this movement.

The Reorganized Church started as early as 1869 to secure a suitable school building. It finally became effectual at the conference in 1895, in arrangement for the articles of incorporation of Graceland College, and preparation for the erection of a building.

Sister Marietta Walker, Sister Minnie A. Wickes, and W. A. Hopkins, together, donated some forty acres, and twenty-six acres additional were purchased, and the college building erected. In 1907 Marietta Hall was erected as a girls' dormitory; and in 1909 Patroness Hall was erected for the girls' dormitory, and Marietta descended to the boys. In the meantime the forty acres to the east had been purchased, giving a farm of one hundred acres, together with farmhouse and barn. About four or five years later, other minor improvements were made—installing of city water, the erection of the heating plant and silo. And within the past two years, the heating plant has been enlarged, a story being added, and a cement stack erected.

The library has grown steadily, especially since it was reorganized by Professor T. J. Fitzpatrick in 1908. It has been found necessary to increase the room and remove books rarely called for, in order to make the useful books accessible.

By various gifts from time to time, the assets of the college has steadily increased. From its foundation, Graceland has been in debt until the past year. In 1904 the debt was so serious that a motion obtained to close the college. But since the necessary legal steps had not been taken, on reconsideration in 1905 the work was continued, and special subscriptions made to pay the debt. In 1914 a regular budget was adopted for Graceland, and she was recognized as a definite part of church work, justifying the use of the funds of the church to accomplish so desirable an end. However, it was not until 1916 that sufficient funds were received to make possible the reduction of the debt. But now, thanks to the support of the church, and of the Presiding Bishopric, Graceland is at last free from debt, and looks forward with better hopes than ever before to the future.

The first classes in the fall of 1895 were held in the France Building in Lamoni, as the college building was not ready for dedication until January 1, 1897. At first the principal emphasis was placed upon the collegiate work, and a class graduated in 1898, consisting of Frederick M. Smith. Since 1899 a decline is noticed in the collegiate department. There was an increase of attendance in 1905-09; then again a serious decline. In 1912 the Board of Trustees took action making of Graceland a junior college. This plan was put finally into full effect, and Professor McDowell was made dean of the junior college in the fall of 1914. From 1912 on there has been a growing interest in the collegiate work, and this has been especially marked during the past few years under the able leadership of Dean McDowell and President Briggs, so that the college is the most prominent department of work, as it should be.

In earlier years there was also a normal department which at one time proved quite popular. The rearrangement of studies merged this department with the collegiate and academic. In fact it is stronger the last few years than ever before, receiving full credit from the State. The discussion about credits has been determined favorably and decisively within the past six years.

The commercial department of bookkeeping, shorthand, and typewriting, has also had a long history. The period from 1910-14 represented its greatest activity. Of late years, more stress has been placed upon the academic and collegiate. This decreased for a time the enrollment in this department.

The academic department fills a long-felt need. It is almost exclusively high school work, and helps to provide for those whose school work has been neglected in the days of youth for good reasons, qualifying them as quickly as possible to undertake collegiate studies. This department has always proved one of relatively high efficiency in its service to the young people of the church, and that continues to be the case. Along with the collegiate department it has been greatly strengthened of late.

The studio department arose practically with the organization of Graceland. The zenith was reached in 1912-14 in the piano department. The vocal department was added at an early period and has grown stronger of late years under the able leadership of Paul N. Craig. The department in oratory also has a life nearly as long as that of the school. These departments have helped decidedly to carry our school over her lean and trying years.

To these three departments, within the past year there has been added courses in band and orchestra instruments, the mandolin, and the guitar.

The manual training department was established in 1907, and proved very popular under the direction of Professor C. B. Woodstock, but since he left the school in 1914, the interest has declined somewhat. But what has been lost in that department has been more than made up in the great interest in wireless telegraphy the past few years. This has proven to be one of the most popular departments of the school.

Other departments are home economics, religious pedagogy, and extension work. The latter is now to be more fully organized and thoroughly handled than ever before. It is being taken up with such energy that it practically constitutes a new department, though in fact it has been in force for four or five years, but not so well supported as it will be now that the Graceland extension institute will be wholly under college direction.

The missionary course this year adds another very valuable factor and makes it clear that Graceland on the whole is showing both remarkable development in the extension of her interests, and also a solid growth in numbers.

This is not a biography of individuals, but merely a very brief sketch of our college.

Now that the war is over and our young men free to attend, we confidently expect the coming year to be the greatest in her history. There are many who have been associated with her in her hours of trial whose love for the old school has not grown less.

P. E. McCLENAHAN

Superintendent Department of Public Instruction, whose letter appears on second page of this issue.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor.

The official organ of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Published every Wednesday by the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. Entered at the post office at Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

PRICE, $1.75 A YEAR IN ADVANCE

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words.

CONTENTS

|   |     |     |
|---|-----|-----|
| A Call to Service, by Frederick M. Smith                      | - - | 707 |
| Spirituality and Education, by Elbert A. Smith                | - - | 708 |
| Graceland and the Church                                      | - - | 709 |
| Special Mission of Graceland, by Daniel Macgregor             | - - | 710 |
| Letters from Ex-Presidents                                    | - - | 712 |
| Standardization and Accrediting, by G. N. Briggs              | - - | 712 |
| The Junior College, by F. M. McDowell                         | - - | 713 |
| Religious Education, by C. E. Wight                           | - - | 714 |
| Commercial Department, by J. A. Gunsolley                     | - - | 715 |
| The Studio Department, by Paul N. Craig                       | - - | 717 |
| Radio Department, by Arthur B. Church                         | - - | 718 |
| The New Year  | - - | 720 |
| Athletics, by R. A. Wight                                     | - - | 721 |
| The Extension Department, by Lonzo Jones and Arthur B. Church | - - | 722 |
| Education and Temporalities                                   | - - | 724 |
| Why Attend Graceland?   | - - | 725 |
| Graceland's Beginnings, by E. L. Kelley                       | - - | 725 |
| Graceland and the World War, by J. A. Gunsolley               | - - | 726 |
| Greater Graceland, by C. B. Woodstock                         | - - | 728 |
| College Honors  | - - | 728 |
| Student Activities  | - - | 730 |
| The Patronesses of Graceland, by Lena J. Graham               | - - | 733 |
| Growth and Development, by S. A. Burgess                      | - - | 733 |
| Miscellaneous Department                                      | - - | 735 |

To the Saints of Eastern and Western Colorado, Southern Wyoming, and Western Nebraska: The proposed reunion of Eastern Colorado District will convene, commencing the evening of August 21, 1919, and continuing over the 31st, in the beautiful chapel on the State College grounds in Fort Collins, Colorado. Fort Collins is situated about 70 miles north of Denver, right at the foothills of the mountains, on the main line of the Colorado and Southern Railroad, and also the Union Pacific Short Line from Denver, and being beautiful for situation, is also a beautiful city. Upon the State College grounds is located a very commodious dining hall, operated by State authority, where we have arranged to have meals served at 35 cents, which, I can assure you, will be good meals, too, where there will be neither flies nor dirt, and where as many as seven hundred people may be served in less than an hour. East of the chapel, two blocks, we have procured nice grounds where tents may be located and cars parked free of charge, where we will have also a large tent furnished with tables, stoves, and a stand where those who do not desire to go to the dining hall may procure foodstuffs at a reasonable sum. The use of the tables and stoves of course will be free. Ten by twelve tents may be secured for $3 for the time, and well-furnished rooms may be rented for $4 per week. Those desiring rooms are requested to write to Emma Savage, 520 West Oak Street; and those desiring tents, please write to Elder George Bullard, 317 Elizabeth Street, Fort Collins, Colorado. Be sure to write in time. We expect to have two patriarchs present, and also a number of good preachers from various places. Missionaries and their families will be provided for free. In these meetings we will coordinate; prayer service beginning at 9 a. m., auxiliaries, 10; preaching at 11. Afternoons free for entertainment and sightseeing. Come, dear Saints, all who can, from every quarter. Leave your toil and anxiety, and let us have a spiritual feast together, a foretaste of the Zion to be. Those who come on Colorado and Southern Railroad can get off at College grounds. J. R. Sutton, district president; George Bullard, chairman committee.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Reunion Notices

Those wanting tents for the Springerton reunion will please let me know as soon as possible. I am unable to say just what they will cost, but see the prices they have on them at other places, so I presume the prices here will be about the same. Rufus Stallings, secretary.

Southern Wisconsin, at Monona Park, Madison, Wisconsin, August 22-31. Meals will be served by ticket, at 25 cents per meal; transients, 35 cents; children under eight years, half price. Tents 10 by 12, wall, $2.50; 12 by 14 wall, $4; 10 by 15, cottage, $4; 12 by 19, cottage, $4.50; 14 by 21, cottage, $5. Double springs, 50 cents; straw for ticks, 15 cents. Have your orders in by at least August 18, and we will do our best to meet your needs, but conditions are not normal and some changes may be necessary, since we must depend on others for our supplies. B. C. Flint, president of committee, 401 South Second Street, Evansville, Wisconsin.

The Church is Calling You

*"They were summoned from the hillside, they were called in from the glen,
And the country found them ready, at the stirring call for men."*

In the hour of our country's crisis, the men responded willingly by the thousands and by the millions. Are you as willing to respond to the call of the church as you were ready to answer the call of your country?

Perhaps you can be of greatest service on the farm. Perhaps your qualifications will enable you to render greatest service in a clerical capacity. Perhaps you may be called into active missionary service for the church.

Are You Ready?

You may be willing to render service, but the question is, "Are you ready for the service you may be called upon to perform?" No matter in what field of activity you may be called to labor, it is vitally necessary that you be thoroughly prepared to meet the problems by which you will be confronted.

Let Graceland Help You

Here are some of the good reasons why you should make your preparation at Graceland:

1. Graceland is fully standardized and officially accredited.
2. Graceland offers opportunity to prepare for any field of activity.
3. Graceland offers thorough mental training, complete physical development, splendid spiritual environment.

Write at once for complete catalogue giving full information regarding the following courses: Junior College, Academy, Commercial, Shorthand and Typewriting, Religious Education, Preparatory, Radio, Vocal and Instrumental Music, Band and Orchestra, Oratory and Public Speaking.

Answer the Call--Prepare At Graceland

FOR CATALOGUE, ADDRESS

The President, Graceland College

LAMONI, IOWA

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8:31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2:36.

Volume 66

Lamoni, Iowa, July 30, 1919

Number 31

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

WHY AN EDITOR?

Some letters we have received the past several months causes the question to arise why should we have an editor for our church publications? We have received quite a number of demands of one kind and another. Some think that they should insist upon free speech, a free pulpit, and a free press. This is correct.

But freedom of speech does not mean that anyone can say anything he desires without responsibility. It simply means that anyone is free to speak and say what he chooses, and then take the consequences. If he is guilty of extending aid and comfort to the enemy in time of war, or interfering with the process of government, he may be called to account.

If he is guilty of slander against other persons he may be called to account and required to pay the damages.

A FREE PULPIT

Some evidently think that a free pulpit means that anyone who desires may at any time, come and demand the right to speak as many times as he chooses; that the body is bound to furnish the heat, light, janitor service, and building, and even the congregation, and allow him to present his peculiar ideas.

This is not true. A free pulpit is open to the discussion of any proper question, but it is usually under the control of those appointed by the body, and if the body desires to hear, will be heard in the long run. A free pulpit is open to the discussion of any proper problem, but that does not mean that those rightfully chosen to direct and arrange for the regular services can be removed arbitrarily by anyone who may apply. It rather means the right of any individual or collection of individuals to erect their own pulpit at their own expense and thus speak freely there, subject to the law governing free speech.

A FREE PRESS

The freedom of the press means that any person or collection of persons may, at their own expense, secure a press and print that which they choose, or may hire the printing done by others, signing, however, their statements, and assuming full responsibility therefor.

To-day in several States, if an attack is made on others in a political manner, it is a criminal offense to send it out unsigned. That which is written must be accounted for. In times of war, we may be called to account for treason, or interfering with the processes of government. At any time one may be called to account for other offenses, such as fraud, or obscenity, or libel. While one may print what he chooses, he must take the consequences provided in the law.

A free press does not mean that any man can demand from anyone publishing a newspaper or a magazine, that all the space he wants be granted him to say what he chooses, and that he may demand that the publisher print this without expense to him.

Some even think they should be permitted to present what they desire and have it printed, their name being withheld, making an attack in the dark, and leaving the editors to assume all the consequences, whether civil or criminal.

But that is not what is meant by freedom of the press. It does not mean that one can have what he chooses printed for nothing. But that any one or more may, at their own expense, print what they choose, and then take the consequences.

Evidently, if one makes an attack on an individual in writing, and therein makes a misstatement of facts, he should be ready and willing to correct that misstatement as soon as it is pointed out. That is a matter of courtesy and honor, and has nothing to do with the freedom of the press.

The HERALD is very glad to print both sides, or more than both sides, if there are more than two sides to a question, and get the facts before its readers. It wants good, fair articles, which attempt to discuss the subject and not simply to indulge in undue personalities. It should be possible to write a reply to a previous article without referring to the writer, or without referring to the article directly; simply to present our own views affirmatively, without regard to that which has gone before. We have noted this time and again in the course of controversy, the tendency for it to take the form of reiteration of first one side or the other, with no new thought or light on the subject.

Some express themselves as "ready for conviction." This is as it should be, but must be accompanied by a mind open to evidence. In many cases, it means practically, "I want you to admit that I am right," and the manner of reply shows that the writer is not open to the right.

We know of several men who think themselves to be specially called, and some demand or request the right to use the HERALD to set forth their views; but unfortunately a careful examination brings it down to this: "I think I am the man." Or, "I have had a dream or a vision, appointing me." And they proceed to condemn the officers of the church for not accepting this call.

Why should such a call be accepted any more than in the case of a man who tries to call himself to the priesthood? Is it surprising if a man at one time will demand ordination at the hands of one having authority, that afterwards he departs from the truth? The priesthood does not rest upon personal ambition.

The HERALD is interested in presenting the truth. We would not consider ourselves justified in printing knowingly a false attack upon some individual. We do not see any reason why we should publish for others assertions and attacks upon individuals who happen to be prominent in the church work, when there is not one particle of evidence produced to substantiate the charge, and we have no reason to believe it to be true. The knowledge of truth is not increased by such a procedure. There are some publications which indulge in a great deal of gratuitous assault upon individuals. We have no ambition to enter that class.

Nonmembers of the church sometimes dare and double dare us to print an assault upon some man living or dead, which is plainly untrue, and which is not pertinent to any issue before the church. Principally these attacks consist of twisting statements out of their reasonable and usually understood meaning, and giving them a perverted sense; and then upon that perversion an attempt is made to found an argument.

We have received such letters from various insane asylums, from penitentiaries, and elsewhere. But these are men who are not members of the church, it is only fair to add.

Where an incorrect statement appears in our columns, we believe it should be corrected promptly, no matter whom it affects.

An article which sets forth a different view of some subject under discussion is, as a rule, welcome, when it tries fairly to discuss the issue and arrive at the truth, and not simply to attack another.

But we feel ourselves under no necessity to offer free advertisement to those who desire to assault our position. In fact, it takes a good deal of nerve to ask several dollars' worth of free advertising, and then use it for a libel upon the church or its officers.

We do not think the test should be that which the editor thinks is right. We continuously publish views which we consider unsound and incorrect, and which do not rightly represent the teachings of the church, nor the opinion of its leading representatives so far as we know. But other views should fairly be considered when fairly presented and possessing sufficient merit. Still, our principle efforts should be to present a series of articles which will rightly divide the word of God, and aid to a better understanding.

We have rejected articles which misrepresented the position of the church. We have rejected articles which consisted merely of a gratuitous assault upon men of the church. We have rejected articles which involved sustained attacks upon our opponents or other men who are not members of the church. We have rejected articles which have unfairly presented the position of our opponents. Still the number so rejected is very small. Our desire is to see both sides presented fairly and truly; and we have resisted as strongly the one misrepresentation as the other.

That which will constructively throw more light upon the work of the church and its history; that which will help to a better understanding of the word of God; that which will point out defects and weakness in our organization in an effort to correct, we are ready to receive and consider. But when the purpose is only to hinder and to harm, we consider we are justified in hesitating.

Men who will do everything they can to keep their own people from hearing both sides of the question, will still object and accuse us of being unfair. It is one thing to advise adherents not to hear the other side, taking steps to prevent them from hearing that side; and it is another thing to refuse to pay their advertising bills. By giving free publicity to unfounded assaults, is the cause of justice thereby secured? There are some people so unwise as to think that an accusation is evidence of guilt. But is it not.

Further than this the editors have to consider the form of a manuscript, punctuation, spelling, grammatical construction, paragraphing, clearness of type, and whether written on one or two sides of the page. Though the editors have, and will again take care of all such objectionable features, when the article warrants it, and the author so desires, still it is natural that an article properly prepared and properly written should have the preference.

The editors naturally attempt, as a rule, to select from the best manuscripts before them. The mediocre production should expect to have to wait many months, if not longer, for publication.

The editors have special articles which are held for special occasions, so that the merit of the article does not solely determine its time of publication, as some of the best articles are preserved for special periods or for special numbers.

Finally, we are for justice, right, and the truth. The proper method to try an individual for offense is not through the HERALD, though it is true that certain personal actions, because of their historical importance, may properly there be discussed.

The man who has a message to give, to add something to our knowledge of that truth, to develop some idea in an affirmative way, and who prepares his manuscript with care, has an excellent hope of seeing his article appear in the HERALD.

But the one whose main purpose is to tear down and attack somebody, who is not sufficiently careful of his facts, who is careless in the manner of preparation of his manuscript, who makes assertions without any attempt to demonstrate or prove them, is quite likely to find his manuscript withheld.

S. A. BURGESS.

---

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

---

JEALOUSY OF OUR BRETHREN

Away down in the human heart there burns a little mean fire of envy and hatred toward the successful brother. It is the work of the gospel to put that fire out. The gospel will do it, too, if we do not fan the flames. If we do, then let us look to our own spiritual safety.

Sometimes when one is doing especially good work or is called or elected to some position of trust or power, another will show by unmistakable signs that he is jealous. He craves the personal attention that seems likely to be given to his fellow servant, perhaps, as he imagines, to his own exclusion. The natural course indicated by such a condition of mind and heart will be an attempt to defeat the work of the one envied, an effort to oust him from his position, or bring about a partial eclipse of his power or popularity.

Such a state of affairs in any part of the church is pleasing to the Devil and his associates and to no one else. It may obtain in a Sunday school, in a choir, in a branch or district organization, in a quorum of the priesthood, in the general church organization, or even between two missionaries when one harbors the thought that the other is given preference in the field.

To envy the ability or success of another is a very serious and stupid blunder. We are all in this church work together. Every strong and true man that the church develops is so much gain to us all. Instead of envying such a man his prowess we should hail him as a fighting comrade. He helps us to hold our defenses against a hostile world. By him we are all made more secure. His strength adds so much to the sum total of the strength of the church. We fight forward a little to the spot where he has planted the colors. We gain a little ground. Thank God. Send more such men. Cursed be the hand that would pull the colors down because the color-bearer is disliked.

That the church has not always been free from the evil of which we write is very evident. Paul wrote to the Corinthians, "We are yet carnal: for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men?"—1 Corinthians 3:3. The Lord himself has said of the church in our age, "Behold, I say unto you, there were jarrings, and contentions, and envyings, and strifes, . . . therefore by these things they polluted their inheritances."—Doctrine and Covenants 98:3.

Wherever we find envyings among the people of God we find strife and contention, for such are the natural expressions of envy. The divine rebuke and chastisement follow in the stead of blessing and favor.

We turn now to a brighter picture, that of John the Baptist and his attitude toward Christ. John had gained a wonderful following in Jerusalem and Judea and in the regions round about Jordan. He was hailed as a prophet and many were even ready to receive him as a Messiah. He had but to say the word. By comparison Jesus had been for a time almost unknown. Yet John faced a certain fact, faced it and stated it without reservation, "He must increase, but I must decrease."

"After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judea; and there he tarried with them, and baptized. And John also was baptizing in Enon near to Salim, because there was much water there: and they came, and were baptized. For John was not yet cast into prison. Then there arose a question between some of John's disciples and the Jews about purifying. And they came unto John, and said unto him, Rabbi, he that was with thee beyond Jordan, to whom thou bearest witness, behold the same baptizeth, and all men come unto him. John answered and said, A man can receive nothing except it be given him from heaven. Ye yourselves bear me witness, that I said, I am not the Christ, but that I am sent before him. He that hath the bride is the bridegroom: but the friend of the bridegroom, which standeth and heareth him, rejoiceth greatly because of the bridegroom's voice: this my joy is therefore fulfilled. He must increase but I must decrease."—John 3: 23-36.

Think of that. Here is one of the hardest sentences to utter that the mind of man ever framed. Many the lips that have been twisted and distorted in a vain attempt to utter it. "He must increase, but I must decrease."

John was a true man, a man of God with an inspired and high courage, and he declared a true philosophy, "A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven." So without a spark of jealousy he saw the sun set on his own career and rise on that of another, the latchet of whose shoes he felt unworthy to touch.

John won a true victory, the greatest victory, the victory over self, and as a result he could say, "But the friend of the bridegroom, which standeth and heareth him, rejoiceth greatly because of the bridegroom's voice: this my joy therefore is fulfilled."

John did not envy Christ, because he felt that in the gospel work a man "can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven." If God commands me to stand here and my brother to stand yonder, what is that to me? It is his work and he is all-wise. Or why should I envy another the abilities that God has given him; by them is our work magnified and honor and good repute are increased to us all as one body.

John did not envy Christ, because he loved him. Paul made no mistake when he said, "Charity (the pure love of God) envieth not." If we have more love we shall have less envy, and consequently more fellowship, unity, and power. Let us avoid the mistakes of the past, learning to respect and sustain each man in his office and calling, in true humility preferring our brethren to ourselves.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE NEED OF REVELATION

In a recent issue of the HERALD there appeared a clipping from the New York Herald pointing out that the sultan of Turkey, a British general, a wealthy business man, American officers, and other leaders to the number of a dozen or more feel a yearning desire for a prophet, and spiritual leader, who will bring about a spiritual rebirth, a new interpretation of the eternal.

There has been such a growing need felt for the last several years, and especially within the last decade; men realizing that revelation is from God, and that he has not retired beyond a mysterious heaven which shuts him out forever from communion with man, but that he is a living and loving Father.

Many cults have arisen in recent years showing this growing need on the part of humanity, and this growing hunger for the word of God; for present-day divine direction, as well as for spiritual inspiration to understand and interpret the word already received.

The war caused a spiritual revival throughout Europe. It has left the countries of Europe open for a new effort by the way of the message of Jesus. When men go down into the valley of death, they appreciate their own insignificance, and there wells up within them the innate demand and with it an assurance, both of a life to come and of an eternal Father.

Is it not natural that men should desire then to hear from him? A young man, Joseph Smith, nearly a hundred years ago, reading the first chapter of James, was so impressed and offered his petition in God's first temple, his native woods. He came with a "Thus saith the Lord." His message was then rejected by the great multitudes, as they were not then ready for it. It was accepted by a few, a hundred or two hundred thousand.

But while this still remained the principal point of attack, there remained also the growing hunger for divine communion as a vital factor of the new era. God can and will speak to men to-day.

Since the war there comes ever stronger this cry of many souls for the word of God. For the divinely called prophet, who shall come with a "thus saith the Lord," who shall speak not as one having authority from the Scribes and Pharisees, but as one having authority from God.

This presents in the world, at home and abroad, a splendid field for the work of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. There is a responsibility, that we should move forward and prepare ourselves to supply and meet this demand.

(Continued on page 757.)

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

THE CHURCH, THE WAR, THE WORLD

(A sermon delivered at the late General Conference by Elder R. W. Farrell.)

To speak or not to speak, that is the question. We agree that the mere opinions of men are dangerous things to accept as the voice of authority. But pretty much everything that is said nowadays is the mere opinion of men. Many of the utterances of President Wilson are prophetic in their nature because he is a wise man and a deep student of history, and speaks from the abundance of his historical heart. On the other hand, other wise men speak, but their predictions come to naught because lacking in truth. In the year 1913, David Starr Jordan, then president of a great university and leader of the world's peace movement, addressed an audience of one thousand men and women in Ford Hall, Boston, and explained wherein it would be impossible for another big war to be staged and enacted. Germany was held up as a nation whose great ambition could not be realized because it could never secure sufficient money with which to carry on active warfare. Alas, for the opinion of men. It has ever been thus.

PROPHETIC FAILURES

No one with mortal vision has ever penetrated the future. Trials have been numerous, and failures have been pathetic and ludicrous. More than one person has cried out, "Oh, my prophetic soul," but the vaporings of those prophetic (?) souls have been anything but foretelling. Witness the suppressing of Ellen G. White's "Testimonies," regarding the "shut door" theory; or the teaching of Pastor Russell that "the kingdoms of this world" were to become the kingdoms of Christ in 1914; and William Miller's false reckoning concerning the end of the world in 1843-44. And the attempts on the part of followers to patch up these delusions have made them appear the more glaring in their inconsistency. I neglected to add to the list the name of another false prophet—Brigham Young. He predicted that polygamy would ride over every objection, but in less than forty years after the utterance, the president of the Utah church issued a manifesto, which he claimed was from God, forbidding the practice of plurality of wives. The travesty of fate! (It will not do to argue that the possible introduction of polygamy in European countries after the war, will help the case, for the plurality of wives dogma to which Young referred, is the one made possible by the "keys" which he claimed to hold.)

Looking back into the pages of history, we find the same conditions existing: men predicting and time contradicting. When the Spanish Armada was expected to visit the coast of England, many ancient and strange prophecies, in divers languages, and many excellent astronomers of sundry nations had in very plain terms foretold that the year one thousand five hundred and eighty-eight should be most fatal and ominous to all estates, concluding in these words: "And if in that year the world do not perish and utterly decay, yet empires all, and kingdoms after, shall; and no man to raise himself shall know a way, and that forever after it shall be called the year of wonders." Simply another prediction gone wrong.

Peter the Hermit returned from Jerusalem an accomplished fanatic. His body was emaciated, his fancy was enflamed; whatever he wished, he believed; whatever he believed, he saw in dreams and revelations. Jerusalem must be delivered. Pope Urban II received him as a prophet and applauded his glorious design, promised to support it, and encouraged him to proclaim the deliverance of the Holy Land. Thus began the Crusades. But what was accomplished? Not much beside the humiliation of man. His vision was dull, false.

Napoleon, the military genius, tried his skill at making predictions. Said he, "In fifty years all Europe will be either Cossack or Republic." God sent a storm to wet the battlefields of Waterloo; Napoleon was delayed six hours in bringing up his artillery; the tides of battle turned against him. Twice fifty years have passed, and Europe is still divided into kingdoms, locked in the embrace of merciless war which is by no means ended. One of the public men of Great Britain recently said, apparently without any thought of the scripture in his mind at all, "This war is not like any preceding wars. Other wars have been wars of armies, this is a rising up of nation against nation, of kingdom against kingdom," and thus apparently without purpose he confirms the very word which God has spoken respecting the world war which has paused for breath.

THE SURE WORD OF GOD

It is a relief to turn from the surmises and vain imaginations of man, to the sure word of God. "Thus saith the Lord Jehovah to Tyre, . . . I shall make thee a desolate city, . . . I shall bring the deep upon thee, and great waters shall cover thee. . . . And I will make thee a bare rock; thou shalt be a place for the spreading of nets; thou shalt be built no more: for I Jehovah hath spoken it, saith the Lord Jehovah." (Ezekiel 26: 19, 15, 14, Revised Version.)

Tyre then set as queen of the sea, and when Jerusalem fell the Tyrians rejoiced and their exultation shouted forth in the one word "aha." God touched the lips of his prophet, and his denunciation rang out like a death knell. A record was preserved. Over two hundred years passed. The man and his message were forgotten by all except a few faithful students of the word of God. Suddenly the tramp of many feet is heard; the great army of Nebuchadnezzar thunders into the streets of old Tyre and strikes the first deadly blow which prepared for, and was the earnest of, the final doom of the city to be made desolate and cast into the sea. Again years pass. Bats cling by day to the molding rocks of fallen grandeur, and where once was heard the song of revelry a lone bird calls to his mate. Part of the prophecy has been fulfilled, so might we expect the rest? Another great conquerer comes. He is Alexander the Great. His soldiers camp on the remains of the old city and sing the songs of war where once the priests chanted praises in the temple of Hercules. New Tyre, built on an island, defied Alexander. White-capped waves of the Mediterranean danced between him and victory. "Thus saith the Lord to Tyre, great waters shall cover thee." With the "stones, timbers," and rubbish of Old Tyre, Alexander built a causeway in seven months to the island city and took it. God had spoken. The wicked city was covered by the deep and now its harbors are choked with sand, precluding all hope of restoration; not one entire house is left, and only a few fishermen take shelter in the vaults and dry their nets on the rocks.

When Napoleon was defeated, it was predicted that the world would soon end and the golden age begin. But neither happened. One great teaching of Scripture was overlooked: the redemption of the land of Jacob—the gathering of the Jews. When Napoleon died at Saint Helena's isle, there were not three hundred Jews in Jerusalem. Think of the fact. Think of the statement of Christ: "And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led captive into all the nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." (Luke 21: 24.) The word until means much—it means that "a hardening in part hath befallen Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in; and so all Israel shall be saved: even as it is written, There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer; he shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: and this is my covenant unto them, When I shall take away their sorrow." (Romans 11: 26, 27, Revised Version.) And when this day comes, Jacob shall not be ashamed, because he shall see his people in the midst of him—gathered home. (Isaiah 29: 22, 23.)

The word of God could not be broken. The predictions of man might run counter to inspiration but they could not destroy it. The prediction of Miller that the world would end in 1844, is an example. He reckoned without the host, as it were. How could the world end before the Jews were gathered home? The Spirit of God speaking through Daniel would not contradict itself speaking through another prophet. Thus, in order to know about the world, the church, and the war, we must keep our mind constantly free from traditional influence, bias, and vain imaginations. We must reason from a true premise rather than from one made by our desire or what our neighbors say should be. When God thundered his warnings through Joseph Smith jr., the world shouted back, such things cannot be because we have the contrary word from our religious leaders. The teaching "the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth" (Doctrine and Covenants 1), met with the scorn of the populace because they had been taught that the great reign of peace was soon to be ushered in. However, had they but read the Bible aright they could not have consistently rejected that which stood before them in such apparent harmony with scriptural fact. Peace was taken from the earth in the days of Noah, in the days of Sodom's downfall (Genesis 6: 4, 5; 19: 24, 25) and likewise it has been removed in the last days (Luke 17: 26-30).

THE WORLD ON FIRE

To-day we are engaged in a mighty conflict. The world is on fire. Men who have been trained in the school of optimism hope and believe that after the war closes there will ensue a reign of tranquility. They talk of the world alliance for international friendship through the churches; they write of the league of nations to prevent war. They cry "peace, peace, when there is no peace," and will be no peace among the wicked, but rather will conditions wax worse and worse, blacker and blacker will grow the world's night, until the sun of righteousness arise with healing in its beams. The righteous need not be frightened by this picture, for the Lord has said that they should lift up their heads and rejoice when these things take place, for their redemption draweth nigh. "When ye see all these things, know ye that he is nigh, even at the doors." (Matthew 24: 33.)

It is well to refresh our minds regarding the words of the prophets. In the midst of this war of words and opinions, relative to the signs of the times, it is eminently fitting that we read what God has said through his prophets.

Wherefore the voice of the Lord is unto the ends of the earth, that all that will hear may hear; prepare ye, prepare ye for that which is to come, for the Lord is nigh; and the anger of the Lord is kindled, and his sword is bathed in heaven, and it shall fall upon the inhabitants of the earth; and the arm of the Lord shall be revealed; and the day cometh that they who will not hear the voice of the Lord, neither the voice of his servants, neither give heed to the words of the prophets and apostles, shall be cut off from among the people . . . wherefore I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, jr., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments, and also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world. . . . I the Lord . . . willeth that all men shall know that the day speedily cometh, the hour is not yet [1831], but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth, and the Devil shall have power over his own dominion; and also the Lord shall have power over his saints, and shall reign in their midst, and shall come down in judgment upon Idumea, or the world.—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 3, 4, 6; revelation given through Joseph Smith in November, 1831.

The statement, "I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, jr.," is one of the most significant in sacred literature. If it means anything at all, it means that in the message which God gave to the world through Joseph Smith, is a revelation of facts upon which rests the salvation of the world. It means that except Elijah come the whole world will be smitten with a curse. It means that God will prepare a way of escape for those who repent and obey the glad tidings of the restored gospel of Jesus Christ.

CHURCH HAS DISTINCT MISSION WORK

I must confess that I do not understand any attempt on the part of a Saint to make little the great claim of the church, to minimize the importance of our message to the world, or in any way to blur the fact that the church has a distinct mission work, and one that is different from all other churches or cults on the face of the earth. If we cannot and do not offer humanity a plan that is infinitely superior to anything else in the earth, then we have no right to exist—there are churches enough to confuse without our multiplying the confusion. We must shine out as a distinct star; we must be just what God said we should be—"clear as the moon, fair as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners." And in this great battle or spiritual Armagedden we shall have few if any imitators, and victory must come to the side that is right.

But our work must be more than theorizing. And so it is. But we are not advancing with the times, as we should do and must do. I come not to you to prophesy lies and tell deceitful stories. I come to face facts. And facts are not always pleasant things to face. The human part of God's church has lived beneath its privileges and has shrunk from duties—which should be pleasures—till in some instances we have gotten to the ragged edge of things, in this:

That some of our members are losing faith in God, faith in themselves, and are wandering in the ways of the world simply because they have allowed their hand to let go of the rod of iron; and in most cases, if not all, the reason for this loss of interest is that church obligations have been neglected, prayers discontinued, tithing not paid, the warning voice not lifted up, the cry of conscience stifled. There are stagnant pools in which sleep men who hold the priesthood. Members are allowed to drift away from the fold. And angels are preparing to sound the midnight cry, "Behold, the bridegroom comes."

We need no longer study symptoms; we know that the disease exists and that the remedy is the removal of the cause. What is the cause? What is the disease? The disease that makes the church sick, is Faithlessness; the cause of faithlessness is neglect of cultivating those values that beget faith. Of course, let the church pray—and it must pray if it is to live; but prayer is not enough, we want men (and have them, too,) who will work to fulfill the wish of their prayers—who will work as well as pray. And now is the day of work.

We believe that the body without the spirit is dead, and we also believe that the church must and will show its life by its deeds of righteousness. It is a harsh but true accusation that may be leveled at many modern religions, when we say that they appear to be disembodied things, vamping forth theories of the other life, and forgetting entirely the actuality of this life. These thin, anemic, and ghost-like teachings that hover over the habitations of men and refuse to materialize into actual service—these teachings that skim swallow-like over the surface of tangible things, are the teachings which have made of cults and creeds a hiss and a byword on the lips of men and women who ask for bread and receive stones, who ask for spiritual blessings and receive promises. These things I say need not be construed as inditements, rather let them be called observations of a horrible truth, a stern fact which it is folly to ignore. God is speaking to this moral and social chaos and seeking to bring about order, but the only answer to his call is from the hearts of men and women who are willing to repent and obey his precepts and keep his commandments.

Can not we who discern the face of the sky also see the signs of the times? What of this awful Bolshevik movement that is filling the world with fear, that is crowding its way into the papers, occupying the thoughts of men in wakeful and sleeping moments, monopolizing the conversation period? It is the turning of the worm, the reply of a mob stung to bitter hate because of social injustice. I know that the use of the fagot, the sword, the rope, and the jail will never solve this problem of social unrest. On the other hand, what has been accomplished by the millions of pulpit declarations of sectarian hirelings who lift no voice against the slaughter of the innocents, for fear of offending the rich parishioners who put blood money on the collection plate, who make chattel slaves of their help, not willing to recognize the fact that God created all men to be brothers, not masters and slaves, not rich and poor. Thank God! in the Zion that is to be, there will be no rich or poor, but a brotherhood bound together by the ties of the Spirit.

In this our message is distinct. Our church alone offers a check to this madness, if men will only stop to reason and obey, rather than attempt to right their wrongs by committing other wrongs. What other institution is built on the foundation teaching of a gathering together of kindred spirits who will be sanctified by the Golden Rule, thus becoming of one heart and one mind, dwelling in righteousness and called the city of holiness? Our message is distinct in that it calls upon men everywhere to bow in allegiance to the gospel as taught in the New Testament, believing all things taught by Christ and his ministry. The isolation of the church on this point would be pathetic indeed were it not for the fact that written on the lintel is the word Immanuel. And if God be for us, who can prevail against us? provided, always, that we obey our Leader, Jesus of Nazareth?

And if we obey God's voice we will be a light set on a hill, a light that will throw its beams into the darkness and direct wanderers to the ark of safety. This is the mission of the church and it has been imposed on her by a revelation from heaven. The salvation she offers to the world—the obedient world—is temporal as well as spiritual, and in this offer she stands out as distinct as a mountain top against a clear sky. In this work we shall have no successful competitors and few if any imitators. Unselfishness is the ground from which is to grow this tree of life, and wherever you find a heart unselfish you find the church strength. The work of Zion's redemption must begin with the heart of her children. We must become practical Christians; not Platonic dreamers alone but doers of the practical things. Paul's writings are wonderful, but the epistle of James challenges us with the trumpet call to deeds of pure religion. Faith is the root and deeds are the fruit of true religion.

Oh, we face a great future. And we live in a great present. Men inside and men outside of the church are asking themselves serious questions. Where are we? What can we do? And notwithstanding the awful vision of the recent war, we still thank God that we are born in the age when his great white hand is revealed in the eastern sky. Let us use glorious colors in painting the picture of to-day and to-morrow; we cannot change the somber background of yesterday. Think of the dead of France alone! If her slain were to crowd New York's Broadway, and march by a given point, beginning at sunrise and pressing on till sunset, it would take eleven days for her heroes to pass by. Eleven days!

NEW ORDER

That we are facing a new order of things, no one can deny truthfully. But this new world is not to be remade by patching up old forms of government, by a rehash of past failures; it is to be remade, if done at all, only through the release of old spiritual energies. It was sin that called down the fires of Sodom; it was sin that covered the earth with a flood, and it is sin that to-day has brought fire, blood, pestilence, and disaster into the world. To reason otherwise is to distort facts.

The world is filled with cruelty and foul play. Never a day dawns and fades that some heart does not break under the weight of undeserved and accumulated wrongs. Again and again is truth crushed to earth, and in many cases it does not rise again till the great day of reckoning. God is indeed in his heaven, but all is not well with the world; and were there no golden yet to come, the present world would become an insoluble riddle, and life an enigma which tortures the heart.

What ails the world? Unrequited evil. Evil is here. We cannot deny it. Banks have locks. Hospitals are filled with sick and dying. The world is filled with selfish men. What ails the world? Rich men grow richer, and the poor grow poorer. The children of the one feast and are fat, those of the poor fast and die. Ignorance and commercial greed are the two roads that lead to the little white casket. Men tire of waiting and watching, with bleeding fingers and tearless eyes. Their faith turns to darkness, and as skeptics they cry out—"What's the use?" Mothers in war-stricken Europe cover the faces of their dead babies with black earth and sob with dry lips. What ails the world?

In the midst of this carnage and chaos God is speaking. His voice is heard by ears willing to hear. He is saying, "let there be light." He is calling to the world to repent and bring forth fruit meet for repentance. Trench repentance is not enough. Much of this kind goes out when fear leaves the mind. Mere words are not enough—the world has been fed on promises till skepticism has devoured it. Aemic religion has cursed the world. Campbell's cry has been reiterated by thousands of voices—"We want the old gospel back, sustained by the ancient order of things."

The world needs the cry of a prophet to-day. One who will speak as did Noah, Enoch, Isaiah, Malachi. One who will cry, "Repent, turn and live!" The world is on fire. Men must be stung into realization of two things—heaven is for the righteous, hell for the wicked. Let truth be shouted throughout the land; let hypocrisy snarl and slink away. Lip-service worship with heart turned away, was to characterize that people among whom God would perform his "marvelous work and a wonder." We face that day when iniquity exists and the love of many wax cold. And it is worth while to face this fact with clear-eyed patience, and with the inspiration of God directing our ways, for surely man alone stands helpless before the puzzle.

REPENTANCE

Whispering through the land the voice of God is heard, saying: "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." The whole world needs to repent. Lord Bryce, looking to the future of the nations, has declared, on the basis of his rich knowledge of affairs, "We need a change of heart in the peoples of the world." The golden age must have its foundation in penitence for past misdoings, and be built up in righteousness and loving kindness. And there must be a moral leadership rooted in spiritual reality. As it was in the days of Noah, so it is to-day. "Cry nothing but repentance to this generation." Because nothing but repentance will save it. It was thundered to ancient Israel, "Turn from your backsliding and I will heal you." The united cry of the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Covenants is, "Repent and believe the gospel." Adam repented and found peace at the foot of the cross. Abraham put away Hagar and experienced the joy that comes from pure living. Alma's sons came back to duty and found the peace of God. The prodigal son returned and found his father waiting at the brow of the hill. Even David sobbed out his penitence beneath the tender skies of Judean nights. So have we all—all been healed again and again by the balm which is in Gilead.

But the fruit of repentance is obedience. No man can say he has repented who does not obey. "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" Restoration is the root that feeds true repentance. Grace said over food bought with blood money will not remove its curse. Lord, if I have defrauded any man, I will restore him fourfold," is the cry that reaches the ears of God. Whole-hearted allegiance, fidelity to the very end, these are the things that mark the sincere man. Without obedience to the highest that is in him, no man realizes that highest. "He that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them," is one of those sayings of Jesus which cuts deep into the quick. "To obey is better than sacrifice." The hour to face this great truth is come. He that loveth God is he that keepeth his commandments. Let us not forget this. Too many are forgetting. They speak of love and know not its meaning. Love is not love if it does not serve. The world has been poisoned by the concoction of sham religion. No more solemn truths ever came to this people than those truths given in the songs "Entreaty" and "Admonition." Profane history offers no parallel of the woes which Christ pronounced against those persons professing to serve God but denying him in works: Listen: "Woe unto you scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye cleanse the outside of the cup and of the platter, but within they are full of extortion and excess . . . ye appear righteous unto men, but inwardly ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity. . . . Fill ye up then the measures of your fathers. Ye serpents, ye offspring of vipers, how shall ye escape the damnation of hell?" And it seems to me that the same things have been said in these latter days, in the words recorded in section 101, paragraph 2, of the Doctrine and Covenants: "Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment."

AT THE CROSSROADS

As a church we have come to the crossroads—and in speaking to you, I speak to the church—we have reached the place where we cannot shift burdens, but must either go on faithfully performing the work demanded of us or drop by the wayside and let another step into our place and fill the ranks. It is time to become either hot or cold. We cannot serve two masters; it is either God or Mammon. Which shall it be? Let every man decide at once and get down to real work, for the time before us is short, the harvest is now white and waiting for the harvesters. There is a mission offered to every member of the church. The question is, What must I do to be saved? Faith without works is dead. And that which is dead is fit only to be cast out and burned or buried. What we need to-day is a re-discovery of what it really means to be a Christian—a Saint. In this twentieth century we need a generation of Christians who have a life so emptied of self that God can work through that life for his own purpose and for his own glory. The church needs men and women who are willing to lift and carry. And we have such. To be sure the army is small yet, but it is increasing. The church is coming out of the wilderness, clear as the moon, fair as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners. And with the music of heaven thrilling us, and God the general, who can refuse to volunteer his services?

To fear God and keep his commandments is the whole duty of man. Let us get the noun and verb of life related—duty and behavior. There is no other mission than this—trying to behave. One of the few great domestic tragedies is the manner in which parents behave before their imitating children, and expect their children to be models of sweetness and decorum. An irritant mother dragged her little girl into a side room and roughly rebuked her—"I do wish you would be good!" And the little child through her tears whispered: "I is trying, mamma." Oh, that is the pathos of the ecstasy of life. Trying to be good. Trying to walk in the steps of the Savior. We are all imitators. My little girl takes from the library the little green book on Hamlet, and walking about the room, repeats: "Has this thing 'peared again to-night?—has this thing 'peared to-night?"—evidently quoting from the ghost scene.

We can learn so much from the children. Their confidence is supreme. Their forgiveness is sweet as heaven. Their laughter the music of eternity. Only a father who has had children and laid them away under the daisies, could write as Strickland Gillilan has written. I must quote here one of his heart bursts of love:

I'm not a-scared of horses nor street cars nor anyfing,
Nor automobiles nor th' cops; an' once, away last spring,
A grea' hook an' ladder fng went slapy-bangin' by An' I was purtnear in th' way, an' didn't even cry;
'Cause when I'm down town I go 'round wif papa un'erstand,
An' I'm not 'fraid o' nuffin' when my papa holds my hand.
W'y street cars couldn't hurt him, an' th' horses wouldn't dare,

An' if a automobile run again' 'im, he won't care.
He'll al'ys keep between me an' fings 'ith danger in—
I know so, 'cause he al'ys has 'ist every place we been;
An' nen at night I laughed myself clear into dreamyland
An' never care how dark it is, when papa holds my hand.
'S a funny fng,—one night when I puttended I was 'sleep
An' papa's face was on my hand, I felt a somepin' creep
Acrost my fingers, an' it felt ezactly like a tear,
But couldn't been, for wasn't any cryin' t' I could hear.
An' when I asked him 'bout it he 'ist laughed to beat the band,

But I kep' wonderin' what it was 'at creeped out on my hand.
Sometimes my papa holds on like I maybe helped him, too,
An' makes me feel most awful good puttendin' like I do.
An' papa says—w'y papa says—w'y somepin' like at we
An' God 'ist keep a holding hands the same as him-an' me.
He says some uvver fings 'at I 'ist partly un'erstand,
But I know this—I'm not afraid when papa holds my hand.

Strickland tells us, in his wondrous human lecture, that his mother wanted every one of her sons to become preachers, in the regular way, but that the cloth did not seem to fit him. He tried once to preach a regulation sermon, and when he had finished, the choir rose bewilderedly to its hind-feet and sang, "Hallelujah, 'tis done." And I want to quote again from Mr. Gillilan's lecture. I want you to know what he says about optimism.

Optimism isn't what some people think it is. Some people think an optimist is that sort of thing that goes around grinning all the time like a Cheshire cat, saying, "Everything's all right, everything's all right," when half the time everything isn't all right. That isn't an optimist that does that—it's a cheerful idiot. It takes intelligence of the finest, faith of the most sublime, sanity of the most complete to be a real optimist. Faith and intelligence and balance to know that although there may be heartaches to-day—and God who made us and loves us knows that some to-days are just crowded with heartaches that nobody but an idiot or a lunatic could laugh at the time—though these things come and hurt as deeply as we think we can bear, those things aren't permanent. Oh, isn't it great that they don't last always! What a little of the sum total of our life they form—they aren't tunnels—they are only way stations and whistling posts and water tanks on the road toward the great, big, beautiful finish of things in God's own good time and perfect way—that he is saving as a glorious and satisfying surprise for us.

"REJOICE EVERMORE"

And this brings me to the real lesson I am trying to teach in this discourse. It is the lesson of cheerfulness. The gospel is sparkling with hope. There is no shadow in the Father's "many Mansions." He has admonished us to be cheerful. Paul, from the catacombs of Rome, wrote to the Saints at Thessalonica, "Rejoice evermore." Christ speaks to us out of the silence of the centuries, "Lift up your head and rejoice." And the whole thing is summed up in the words: "Let not the middle-aged and the old forget the gladness of their youth. . . . And remember that Saints should be cheerful in their warfare that they may be joyous in their triumph."

The real pessimist is the man who Fletcherizes his quinine pills. He sees no good in anything. He is the man who joins the "Don't Worry Club" and goes home and writes this verse:

I've joined the "Don't Worry Club,"
But now you cannot guess—
I'm so afraid I'll worry
That I'm worried 'most to death!

Let us join the new school whose members are known as peptimists. Let us put our hearts into our work. Let us serve God with all our mind, might, and strength. Nothing less will do.

The "Good Cheer Club" of Somerville, Massachusetts, is worthy of duplication in every community in the country. The pledge of the members of the club is as following:

I will talk health instead of sickness.
I will talk prosperity instead of failure.
I will carry good news instead of bad news.
I will tell the cheerful tale instead of the bad tale.
I will mention my blessings instead of my burdens.
I will speak of the sunshine of yesterday and to-morrow, instead of the clouds of to-day.

I will encourage instead of discourage.
I will be a friend to everyone.

SONG OF SUNSHINE

O kiss the sunlight back again
To eyes that have seen clouds and tears,
And plant the rosy roads of men
With blossoms of a thousand cheers!

Put arms around the neck of grief,
And smooth the wrinkles of her brow—
And, oh, let waiting be but brief—
Life wants the sunshine now!

O kiss the sweetness and the glow
Back to the faces that seem sad,
And help the hearts of care to know
The medicine of being glad!

Hold fast the hands that need your aid,
And hold them now, not after while—
Pour forth your pity unafraid,
'Tis now the whole world needs your smile!

THE OUTLOOK---Part 4 Retro-, Per-, and Prospective

BY COLUMBUS SCOTT

Now let us hear the testimony of some of the prophets on the proposition:

THE CHURCH TO BE RESTORED

First: We call attention to Isaiah the Evangelical prophet. It is very plain, descriptive, and eloquent as to the time and nature of the work.

The word that Isaiah the son of Amos saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem. And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. O house of Jacob, come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord.—Isaiah 2:1-5.

Wonderful prophecy this in its realization "in the last days." Of such infinite importance, that God revealed this great work to be fulfilled in the time so specifically expressed, "the last days," that God told the prophet, Micah (see chapter 4:1-5), the same great work should be done, in almost the same language verbatim.

1. The mountain of the Lord's house, God's government or church, to be set up or restored, according to the New Testament order, "in the last days," or "the eleventh hour."

2. The gospel of Jesus Christ being established on, or consisting of principles (and principles are as unchangeable as God—never change, worlds without end) the church can only exist according to one and the same pattern as established in ancient apostolic days. It takes this to save men in eternal life and glory. Can men go beyond or differ from God in church building?

Since men differ from each other, and from God, as to church forms of organization, and as to purpose, unless we go back to the original gospel principles, original power, and form of church organization, where is certainty as to whether we are saved, or will be, or not? Answer, oh, answer us, ye wise men!

(See Acts 2:47; Ephesians 5:25-32; Hebrews 5:12 and 6:1-6.) Paul, in the last two citations, says God's oracles or word consists of "principles." Eternity never changes principles. Keep this in mind, oh man. God's church is a "building" as definite as the perfect human body, or a divinely created world. (See Matthew 16:17, 18.) It is "fitly framed together," Jesus, the builder, being "the chief corner stone." It is founded on the unchangeable, eternal word of Jehovah, and is "the body of Christ." (Ephesians 4.) Seven unities all taught by "one Spirit," "one body," or church (verses 3-8; and verses 8-14) "fitly framed together," (Ephesians 2:20-22).

The church of God is one, and one only. For these divine reasons, we must expect nothing short of the church in which God has set apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, bishops, priests, deacons, and seventies. (Ephesians 4:17, 18; 1 Corinthians 12:13-21, and 27-31; Luke 10:1-3.)

It must be "the government of the Lord's house." (See Isaiah 2:3; Micah 4:1-3.) We cannot in the divine organization of Christ's kingdom accept any "substitutes!"

The word mountain as used by the prophets in connection with God's government does not always mean a literal mountain like Pike's Peak, or Lowe, the Rockies, or the Ural Mountains, but is used figuratively. In Jeremiah 51:25, Babylon of old is called a "burnt mountain," a "destroying mountain." Daniel 2:44, when he interpreted the dream of King Nebuchadnezzar, of the work we are here treating, the kingdom of God to be set up "in the latter days," says:

"And the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." (Verse 35.) And the divine interpretation reads (Daniel 2:44):

And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever.

What in the king's dream is called a "great mountain," is in God's interpretation through Daniel, shown to be God's kingdom set up in the latter days, and after Christ comes in glory to reign on the earth (Matthew 16: 27, 28, and 25: 31), when he ceases to occupy on his Father's throne as the mediator of man (Psalm 110: 1-3; Hebrews 8: 6), and comes in glory to sit on David's throne restored (Isaiah 9: 6, 7; Luke 1: 32, 33; Revelation 3: 21). Then shall earthly kingdoms be dissolved, and cease to be. (Daniel 2: 44; Isaiah 11: 9.)

This is sufficient on the word mountain, as used by the prophets, when foretelling the restoration of the church or kingdom of heaven in the last days. It is appropriate at this stage of this subject to introduce on the subject of the great restoration in "the last days," "spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world began." (Acts 3: 21.) No one could be more concerned than he, since the Apostle Peter associates the restitution of all things with his second coming. Most Bible readers are familiar with that wonderful account of Christ's transfiguration, that wonderful attestation of his Messiahship.

THE TESTIMONY OF OUR SAVIOR

Let us seriously consider it with its relation to the eleventh hour call and work. His testimony cannot be set aside by any save the skeptic.

And after six days Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into an high mountain apart, and was transfigured before them; and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light. And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with him. Then answered Peter, and said unto Jesus, Lord, it is good for us to be here: if thou wilt, let us make here three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias. While he yet spake, behold a bright cloud overshadowed them: and behold a voice out of the cloud, which said, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him. And when the disciples heard it, they fell on their face, and were sore afraid. And Jesus came and touched them, and said, Arise, and be not afraid. And when they had lifted up their eyes, they saw no man, save Jesus only. And as they came down from the mountain, Jesus charged them, saying, Tell the vision to no man, until the Son of man be risen again from the dead. And his disciples asked him, saying, Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come? And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things. But I say unto you, That Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. Likewise shall also the Son of man suffer of them. Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist.—Matthew 17: 1-13.

The disciples, no doubt, while yet in the Jewish church, read and heard the scribes comment on the prophecy of Malachi, relating to "the great and dreadful day of the Lord." (Malachi 4: 5.) (Elijah in Hebrews is Elias in the Greek.) "The great and dreadful day of the Lord," the three disciples had now seen in vision, and Moses and Elias with him! But in this vision, Elias did not come before this day! As foretold by Malachi, the Elias that came before him then will also come before him to prepare the way for Jesus' future coming in power and great glory. Hence their inquiry that brought forth Jesus' reply: "Elias truly shall first come and restore all things," and then gave them to understand that John the Baptist was the Elias referred to. (See Luke 1: 13-17, especially verses 15 to 17.) He had prepared the way for the first coming of Christ, and was to have a part in preparing the way for the second advent of Christ. What? John to have a second mission?

Jesus says: "Elias truly shall first come and restore all things." He places this coming, here referred to, his coming to prepare the way for Christ's coming, as illustrated in the vision, the transfiguration, the second coming in glory. John the Baptist had been slain by King Herod before the transfiguration.

Again, John was not the only one, however, to minister in preparing the way for the Savior's coming in glory. But the Elijah of old is to bear a part in the great restoration of the literal Israel. (Malachi 4: 5, 6; Revelation 14: 8, 9.) But let us return to John's second mission.

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.—Revelation 14: 6, 7.

Who is the angel, or messenger referred to here by John the revelator? Let our Savior answer. But we wish at this point to interject this inquiry: Is it not justice that the nations and tribes to whom the gospel was to be preached, as seen by John, should hear the gospel by which they are to be judged and rewarded? Jesus gave the world but one gospel. "God is no respecter of persons." (Acts 10: 34; Romans 2: 11-17.) But let us proceed. The voice out of the bright cloud said: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him." (Matthew 17: 5.)

And as they departed, Jesus began to say unto the multitudes concerning John, What went ye out into the wilderness to see? A reed shaken with the wind? But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment? Behold, they that wear soft clothing are in kings' houses. But what went ye out for to see? A prophet? yea, I say unto you, and more than a prophet. For this is he, of whom it is written, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee. Verily I say unto you, Among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist: notwithstanding he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he. And from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force.

For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John. And if ye will receive it, this is the Elias which was for to come. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.—Matthew 11: 7-15.

This is a wonderful saying. It clearly portrays the second mission of John the Baptist. He is the Elias which was, according to prophecy (Malachi 3: 1-6), to come and restore all things; plainly foretelling, not only of his first coming to prepare the way, but be the preparer of Christ's second advent also! (Isaiah 40: 1 and 7: 11.) John is more than a prophet; his is also a restorer! The greatest born of woman. Yet Christ, while the least in the kingdom of God, was greater than John. John is the messenger who goes before the face of Christ, to prepare the way for his second coming. Jesus in our last quotation refers us to the Prophet Malachi (chapter 3: 1) which incontrovertibly refers to our Savior's second coming. He gives a description in part of Christ's second coming to judge mankind. And we now live in the period of this day of preparation—restoration. And Elias has done a part, at least, of that work of preparation! That work is the "restoration" of "this gospel (the authority by which it is being proclaimed to the world) of the kingdom," "as a witness unto the nations (Revelation 14: 6, 7; Matthew 24: 3, 14), and then shall the end come."

Now let us note carefully what Malachi says:

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? For he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap: and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years. And I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts. For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.—Malachi 3: 1-6.

This prophecy in general relates to the work of "the eleventh hour" (Matthew 20: 1-16), and the coming and mission of the Messiah in glory, to reign and judge mankind. Who shall stand when he appeareth? Who did not stand when he came on his first mission? Then, in such humility, he broke not "the bruised reed." He did not quench the smoking flax or the gently burning taper. He was not coronated king; nor did he judge anyone (Matthew 12: 20) but came the servant of all. "Made himself of no reputation," and "was made in the likeness of men." (Philippians 2: 7.) He entered into judgment with no one. "And one of the company said unto him, Master, speak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with me. And he said unto him, Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you?" (Luke 12: 13, 14.)

I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness. And if any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him not: for I came not to judge the world but to save the world.—John 12: 46-48.

Jesus' first mission was not to judge, but to save, if the world will but hear and obey his word; and not man's interpretation of that word.

But again, at Christ's first coming Judah and Jerusalem did not offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. The house of Judah rejected the Christ. They had killed the prophets who came before him, and their leaders agreed to his crucifixion after rejecting him; and for their sins, they were as a kingdom dissolved—broken down, and their remnants carried captive among the Gentile nations as at this time. But we remember his prophetic words on this subject when he weeping exclaimed:

O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not. Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.—Matthew 23: 37-39.

And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken.—Luke 21: 24-26.

By these statements of our Savior, we can see plainly when they are compared with the statements of Malachi 3, that Jacob's condition at our Savior's first coming to offer the new covenant (Jeremiah 31: 31-35) to the house of Judah, was just the opposite of what it is to be at his second coming, as declared by the Prophet Malachi, after his way has been prepared by the Lord's messenger, whom the Savior says is John the Baptist. (Matthew 11: 10.) That "way" is being prepared now; since 1823-1830 A. D., when the Lord's great work of the last days was ushered in through the Lord's young prophet, Joseph Smith, and others chosen of God to assist; Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, Martin Harris, Hyrum Smith, and others still as the work advanced; and those to whom the Lord revealed himself.

In view of the great truth that "this gospel of the kingdom" (not a gospel or gospels; not religion or religions, but the "this gospel of the kingdom"), is to be preached as the sign (not a sign, merely), witness to all nations that the end of the world is near (Matthew 24: 3-14), we cannot well omit the testimony of two of the witnesses, at least of the event, the coming of the messenger, John the Baptist, when he restored the authority by which this gospel should be declared as "the sign" of the second coming of the Savior "in power and great glory." (Matthew 24: 3-14; 16: 26-28.) The light of the work of "the eleventh hour," or the light of the latter-day glory began to dawn in the year of our Lord, 1823. And as those to be used of God to introduce this great work were being prepared by revelation from heaven for their part in it, it was to the young prophet, Joseph Smith, and his associate, Oliver Cowdery, that God's messenger, John the Baptist, was sent in May, 1829. They were awaiting his coming.

Of the promised visitation, Oliver Cowdery says:

This was not long desired before it was realized. The Lord, who is rich in mercy, and ever willing to answer the consistent prayer of the humble, after we had called upon him in a fervent manner, aside from the abodes of men, condescended to manifest to us his will. On a sudden, as from the midst of eternity, the voice of the Redeemer spake peace to us, while the veil was parted and the angel of God came down clothed with glory, and delivered the anxiously looked-for message, and the keys of the gospel of repentance! What joy! What wonder! What amazement! While the world was racked and distracted—while millions were groping as the blind for the wall, and while all men were resting upon uncertainty, as a general mass, our eyes beheld—our ears heard. As in the "blaze of day"; yes, more—above the glitter of the May sunbeam, which then shed its brilliancy over the face of nature! Then his voice, though mild, pierced to the center, and his words, "I am thy fellow servant," dispelled every fear. We listened—we gazed—we admired! 'Twas the voice of the angel from glory—'twas a message from the Most High! and as we heard we rejoiced, while his love enkindled upon our souls, and we were rapt in the vision of the Almighty! Where was room for doubt? No-where: uncertainty had fled, doubt had sunk, no more to rise, while fiction and deception had fled forever!

But, dear brother, think, further think for a moment, what joy filled our hearts and with what surprise we must have bowed (for who would not have bowed the knee for such a blessing?) when we received under his hand the holy priesthood, as he said, "Upon you my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer this priesthood of this authority, which shall remain upon earth, that the sons of Levi may yet offer an offering unto the Lord in righteousness!"

I shall not attempt to paint to you the feelings of this heart, nor the majestic beauty and glory which surrounded us on this occasion; but you will believe me when I say, that earth, nor men, with the eloquence of time, cannot begin to clothe language in as interesting and sublime a manner as this holy personage. No; nor has this earth power to give the joy, to bestow the peace, or comprehend the wisdom which was contained in each sentence as they were delivered by the power of the Holy Spirit! Man may deceive his fellow man; deception may follow deception, and the children of the wicked one may have power to seduce the foolish and untaught, till naught but fiction feeds the many, and the fruit of falsehood carries in its current the giddy to the grave; but one touch with the finger of his love, yes, one ray of glory from the upper world, or one word from the mouth of the Savior, from the bosom of eternity, strikes it all into insignificance, and blots it forever from the mind! The assurance that we were in the presence of an angel; the certainty that we heard the voice of Jesus, and the truth unsullied as it flowed from a pure personage, dictated by the will of God, is to me, past description, and I shall ever look upon this expression of the Savior's goodness with wonder and thanksgiving while I am permitted to tarry, and in those mansions where perfection dwells and sin never comes, I hope to adore in that day which shall never cease!—Church History, authorized by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, published at Lamoni, Iowa, vol. 1, pp. 37-39.

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH SMITH, JR.

Joseph Smith was less than twenty-four years of age at the time of his ordination by the Lord's messenger, May, 1829. He says:

We still continued the work of translation [of the Book of Mormon] when in the ensuing month (May, 1829) we on a certain day went into the woods to pray and inquire of the Lord respecting baptism for the remission of sins, as we found mentioned in the translation of the plates. While we were thus employed, praying, and calling upon the Lord, a messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light, and having laid his hands upon us, he ordained us, saying unto us, "Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion, for the remission of sins; and this shall never be taken again from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness." He said this Aaronic priesthood had not the power of laying on of hands, for the gift of the Holy Ghost, but that this should be conferred on us hereafter; and he commanded us to go and be baptized, and gave us directions that I should baptize Oliver Cowdery, and afterwards that he should baptize me.

Accordingly we went and were baptized, I baptized him first, and afterwards he baptized me, after which I laid my hands upon his head and ordained him to the Aaronic priesthood, and afterwards he laid his hands on me and ordained me to the same priesthood, for so we were commanded. [A command of God is authority. (Exodus 3: 11-13.)]

The messenger who visited us on this occasion, and conferred this priesthood upon us, said that his name was John, the same that is called John the Baptist, in the New Testament, and that he acted under the direction of Peter, James, and John, who held the keys of the priesthood of Melchisedec, which priesthood he said should in due time be conferred on us—and that I should be called the first elder, and he the second. It was on the fifteenth day of May, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, that we were baptized and ordained under the hand of the messenger.—Church History, pp. 34-36.

Thus was the primal move of God's hand, in the introduction of the restitution "spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world began." Thus was the "marvelous work and a wonder" begun! And "the way" for our Lord to come suddenly to "his temple," in its first great appearing, came upon the stage to begin the great work of "the eleventh hour." Wonderful! It began in A. D. 1829 and 1830. Further evidence? The eternal gospel is being proclaimed! (Hebrews 6: 1-4.)

A brief period after the Levitical priesthood had been conferred on Joseph Smith, and Oliver Cowdery, later in the year 1829, it pleased the Lord to bestow the additional authority, the Melchisedec priesthood, upon them. This was done by God's direct command to them. This case was similar to the procedure in the case of Paul and Baranbas. (See Acts 13: 1-5.) God commanded them there and then to be ordained. His command is authority to do the thing commanded. But Joseph and Oliver were also told to wait to be ordained, till those baptized could be congregated and be agreed to the work to be done. This was accomplished April 6, 1830. Being ordained to be elders, the church began to be organized on that day, with the full consent of six members. All the members were confirmed by the laying on of hands of the elders for the gift of the Holy Spirit. (Matthew 28: 18-20; Acts 8: 14-17; 19: 1-6.) God commanded to lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, or he did not. Which? Was it a gospel ordinance? If not, why did the ancient elders practice it? (1 Peter 5: 1; 1 Timothy 4: 16. See also, Hebrews 5: 12; 6: 1-3.) "Principles" are eternal.

Thus was the grand and divine era of "the eleventh hour" and its work opened up, and thus was the priesthood of Aaron, which was held by John the Baptist, by which he was authorized to preach the gospel anciently (Mark 1: 1-3), thus preparing the way for the second advent of Christ in glory, now being prepared. Wonderful events! Wonderful era! The day's closing labor is being now accomplished! (Matthew 20: 6, 7.)

(To be continued.)

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Our Personal Agency

We were interested in the following statements of Luther Burbank, the man who has done so much patient work and study for the benefit of mankind. He has developed wonders in plant life, insisting that it has all come about through hard work and patient persistence. The line he draws between the possibilities of plant life and human life, however, is one which Latter Day Saints should recognize and respect, for we have been clearly taught concerning the agency of man, and the reason God has for expecting us to develop, approaching closely unto his own perfection. No one should find excuse in heredity or environment for not living up to the best he can conceive. His own life and actions should reflect his highest thought, instead of being an expression of his indolence or weakness. It is so easy to say, "I can't help it!" when the truth would be more nearly expressed were we to say, "I do not want to help it!"

Luther Burbank has some interesting ideas about "training the human plant." For one thing, he insists that the first ten years of a child's life should be unhampered by formal study, but given over to the all-important task of making the individual a healthy animal—strong in body, nerve, and mind. All the education it should receive prior to that age, should be imparted only by intelligent replies to questions, allowing its mind to unfold naturally, responsive to the impulses from within, just as a flower unfolds. This is somewhat new, and few parents have the courage to adopt the course indicated, but we wonder how many parents, did they subject themselves and their mental processes to close scrutiny, would not find that their motive in putting their children in the schoolroom at a tender age was pride, that those children might not appear behind others, or, worse, simply a desire to get them safely out of the way!

At any rate, read Mr. Burbank's clear-cut challenge to every man and woman to live up to his best, as he insists that the high plane of human achievement is not only possible, but expected of the race.

A. A.

His Philosophy

In addition to his experimental work, Mr. Burbank is a good deal of a philosopher and pounds home some of his ideas as follows:

"I have little sympathy for triers, slackers, and whiners. I prefer the doers. Providence and nature intended every normal human being to render the service for which he is fitted. It has been proved time and again that the normal man has in him the latent capacity for far greater things than he accomplishes in his daily routine. It is only a question of arousing this capacity and establishing the habit of putting it to its best uses constantly.

"Sporadic excellence and improvement will not get a man very far. Like the plant breeder, he must learn how to fix the new traits and characteristics he develops so that the improvement will be a lasting one that can be transmitted to future generations.

"In my experiments I have often grown, examined, and destroyed hundreds of thousands of plants at a time, frequently retaining only one, sowing its seed and repeating the process until I have produced a plant which unfailingly transmitted its newly acquired traits to its progeny. With some plants this process of fixation is comparatively easy. Other plants, like certain species of palms, are so absolutely, so stubbornly fixed in their hereditary characteristics that no human expedient has been able to produce an alteration so far.

"We can't select the best individual human beings, keep them for breeding purposes, and kill off all the rest. Nor is this necessary. Man has in him the power of conscious self-improvement, and the exercise of this power makes every succeeding step easier for the individual."—Selected.

Reading Material that Should Be in the Home

A number of years ago, the writer as librarian of the district instituted a plan to encourage the reading of good books. We offered a prize to each school, a certain percentage of whose membership read and reviewed a book before a given time. The prize was to be their choice of a number of books published by the Herald Publishing House. Blanks for the book reviews were furnished and were to be filled out and returned.

A certain, good, humble brother, now since gone to his reward, filled out and returned his blank promptly. The first few lines read something like this: "Name of book: Holy Bible; name of author: Almighty God; other books by the same author: Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants." And farther along in the report it was hinted that these three books were sufficient reading matter.

While we smiled at the gentle rebuke we had received for encouraging the reading of other than the "three books" we admired the brother for having the courage of his convictions as well as for his appreciation of the books that should be household companions in every Latter Day Saint home. We believe these books should be read and studied. Their characters should become our friends with whom we may frequently commune. The same is true of other good books.

Ruskin says: "Here in books, it is possible for us to choose our friends, and from the very best of earth. Sometimes we may by good fortune obtain a glimpse of a great poet and hear the sound of his voice, or put a question to a man of science and be answered good-humoredly, or snatch the privilege of throwing a bouquet in the path of a princess, or arresting the kind glance of a queen; . . . but, meantime, there is a society continually open to us of people who will talk to us as long as we like, whatever our rank or occupation, talk to us in the best words they can choose and with thanks, if we listen to them. And this society, because it is so numerous and so gentle and can be kept waiting around us all day long, not to grant audience, but to gain it—kings and statesmen lingering patiently in those plainly furnished and narrow anterooms, our bookcase shelves, we make no account of that company—perhaps never listen to a word they would say all day long."

We find here not only suggestions as to the value of having good books in the home, but also a hint as to what books are desirable—"the very best of the earth." Are we not told in modern revelation to seek out of the best books words of wisdom? We should choose our book-friends from histories and biographies; from travels and explorations; from the works of poets and statesmen; from men of morals and religion. Is this not in harmony with revelation in which we are told to "obtain a knowledge of histories and of countries and of kingdoms, of laws of God and of man, and all this for the salvation of Zion"?

We would call attention to the last thought in this modern command: "And all this for the salvation of Zion." In choosing books for the home let us keep this thought in mind—choose only those that will be for the uplift and for the furthering of efficiency of the different members of the family that each may be better fitted for his respective work in the church as well as for his secular duties.

While choosing books, let us not forget the children. There are thousands of books for children but not so many for Latter Day Saint children. Yet there are more than enough for them. Let us begin with our own birth offering series. But stop just a moment and think! How many of that series have you read? How many are in your home? How many are there of them and what are they? After we have answered these questions we are ready to ascertain what other books are published by our own publishing house, and then take note of how many we have access to. Remember that since few if any of these are to be found in the public libraries we should make sure to have them either in the home or the Sunday school libraries.

In addition to these of our own publication let us seek for clean, refreshing stories—history stories such as those by Mara L. Pratt; animal stories such as those by Ernest Thompson Seton or Floyd Brolliar; and some of merely made-up stories—fiction if you please—such as those by Miss Alcott for girls or those by Marshall Saunders and others for boys. Then there are the travel books like the Rollo books and books of children's poems. It seems almost hopeless to begin naming juvenile books for there are so many. We do not even claim that the ones named are choice above many others. Neither will we attempt to name books for the adults, but leave this suggestion with you: Out of the myriads of books let us choose but few and let those be of the very best. A few reference books are almost indispensable while professional or vocational books may be needed.

This much for books as reading matter in the home. What about periodicals? As with the books, let us begin with our own publications. If there are children they should have the Hope and Stepping Stones. If they get them regularly at Sunday school all well and good. If not these papers should be subscribed for. And who of our young people can afford to be without the Autumn Leaves? The HERALD and Ensign should seem so indispensable to us that we would do without any other paper in preference to them. Would that time would permit us to say more of our own papers; but suffice it to say that when once we become acquainted with them we would not think of doing without them.

One or two good standard magazines should be in the home; also one good weekly current events paper such as The Pathfinder. Dailies? In these times, yes. But care should be taken that they be not too sensational. Comic supplements? Let me ask: Will a love for the beautiful in art be engendered by gazing at the distorted figures in the "funny papers"? Will our use of English be improved upon by their coarse, slangy, or flippant language? Will respect for age or authority be augmented by reading about Foxy Grandpa or the Katzenjammer Kids? Is the alarming increase in juvenile delinquency due in any way to these papers? And lastly, could all this possibly work for the "salvation of Zion"?

These questions may indicate an extreme view; but are we not living in extreme times? Can we be too careful of the influences that surround our youth? Some very small stumbling stone may turn a boy or girl from the path of right.

There are plenty of illustrated papers for childhood and youth. David C. Cook publishes a number of such. "The Little Folks Magazine is an interesting paper for children. Many of our boys enjoy the American Boy and other "boy papers." Some grown-up boys of mechanical turn will appreciate Popular Mechanics. Some of our girls may enjoy a good floral magazine.

These are merely hints as to what periodicals we should read. With periodicals as with the books let us select them with care, ever remembering that just as our friends and associates influence us for good or ill so do the things we read.

Can we afford to be indifferent to the class of reading matter we have in our homes? ETHEL I. SKANK.
(Written for Fremont District Sunday School Convention.)

---

Self-Reliance

---

There are several graces of character that must be cultivated before one can be really self-reliant. In the first place, one must be firm in his own mind, that the influences which surround may be overcome. Correct decision, and firmness of will, develop the strength of character necessary to act wisely and efficiently—a strength which recognizes its source as in Him who is able to give and to guide.

If we are willing to ask aright, and equally willing to do our part in controlling and overcoming the weaknesses in our natures which are obstacles in our pathway, we will gain self-control and patience, and finally, the self-reliance we are seeking.

Man is the crowning piece of God's handiwork, and yet we see him, often, the weakest of those creations. The beasts of the field, and the birds of the air, trust Him at all times and seasons for food and shelter, and, under divine guidance, are led from zone to zone. Should not we, who are made in His own image, and blessed with a portion of that intelligence which is the glory of God, be willing to be guided and directed by the spirit of our Maker to the end that we may cultivate those graces and gifts which are most expressive of Him? If we are, we will ultimately be enabled to overcome all things, ordering our lives in humility, wisdom, self-reliance, and confidence.

CLARA WHITNEY.

STRATFORD, ONTARIO.

Home Duty

Home should be the best place on earth for those who abide there. Children brought up in a happy home are better fitted for life and its lessons than those who know not such a blessing. It gives them the right outlook upon life, and enables them to see their duty more clearly.

Since cleanliness is "next to godliness," it is a prime essential in our homes if we wish our children to be Godlike. Another duty we should bear in mind, is to practice a wise economy, that our children may not grow up with idle, expensive habits. During the war, the papers were full of suggestions for economy, and the lessons learned then, are just as applicable and desirable now, and throughout life, as well. Even queens practiced sacrifice, as noted when we learned that for two years Queen Mary did not have a slice of white bread upon her table. Did each of us do as well? As people of God, we should fall in line with every good movement, and do what we can to make the world better.

One thing for which there is no place in a home, is worry. If we live in the sight and love of God, we should have no cause for worry, which has ruined the happiness of many homes. I believe if we enter upon some active study, take up training for some special line of service, we will lose the sense of petty worry, and will find the truth in the story told by the old lady, that her life had been filled with trials and troubles, disasters, and disease, accidents and afflictions—and most of them never happened!

One duty of the home too often neglected is that of prayer. Not only in secret prayer is a home benefited, but by family prayer, with all the members in attendance. I once heard an elder say that if his family went astray, he could blame himself, for he had not made family prayer a habit in his home. As his children grew up, he realized his mistake. No matter how small the children are, they may always be influenced by the earnest prayers heard in their homes. Memories of childhood days and the heartfelt prayers of parents have done much to keep the feet of young people in the paths of righteousness.

Mothers and wives are the pivots about which the homes of the nation and church are turning. We should each be truly thankful that we have such empires, where we may sway and influence, and exercise our God-given talents. A recent letter from my missionary husband assures me that thoughts of home, and our prayers there, help him to be faithful and courageous, adding the wish that the sweet peace of the Spirit may continue to abide with us. It was a beautiful thought to me, that while he is so far away, his home is still a source of strength and comfort to him.

Much more might be written of the good that comes from the center of a real home, but I will give it over now to some one else.

SISTER THOMPSON.

STRATFORD, ONTARIO.

Before It Is Too Late

If you have a gray-haired mother
In an old home far away,
Sit down and write the letter
You put off day by day.
Don't wait until her tired steps
Reach heaven's pearly gate,
But show her that you think of her—
Before it is too late.

If you've a tender message,
Or a loving word to say,
Don't wait till you forget it,
But whisper it to-day.
Who knows what bitter memories
May haunt you if you wait!
So make the loved one happy
Before it is too late.

We live but in the present,
The future is unknown;
To-morrow is a mystery,
To-day is all our own.
The chance that fortune lends us
May vanish while we wait,
So spend life's richest treasures
Before it is too late.

The tender word unspoken
The letter never sent,
The long-forgotten messages,
The wealth of love unsent—
For these some hearts are breaking,
For these some loved ones wait;
Show them that you care for them—
Before it is too late.

—Selected.

Her Star of Gold

Kisses and smiles and his lips, for you,
And happiness—all that your heart can hold!
For the star in your window, thank God, is blue—
But the star that I wear on my heart is gold!

Your boy will march by in the gallant row
Of heroes, cheered by the waiting line—
On a grave in Flanders, where the poppies blow,
They are laying a wreath, to-day, for mine!

And yet—I shall stand in the crowded place,
And cheer, with the rest, for your boy—you'll see!
For the glory that shines in your glowing face
Is naught to the glory that throbs in me!

Then gaze not at me with that pitying glance,
For do you not know that I share your pride,
And that there, where the long brown files advance,
Your hero and mine march side by side.

Oh, can you not see him come striding there,
With the old free swing of his strong young thighs,
And the little cap set on his shining hair,
And the gay little smile in his dear young eyes?

For my boy lives still in the heart of me;
He lives where the poppies blow red—and yet,

He lives in the soul of a world made free.
And the heart of a world that shall not forget!

And I do not weep, and I do not sigh,
And you never shall think, nor dream, nor know,
As I pass you, smiling, with head held high,
Of the little white cross where the poppies blow.

Nay, mother, here's joy and his lips for you,
And happiness—all that your life can hold!
For the star in your window, thank God, is blue—
Though the star that I wear on my heart is gold!
—Helen Rowland.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

The Bishopric

Advocate for 1919

"Every Member a Tithe Payer"

"Teach them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

That embraces tithing.

Our Christmas Offering

Dear Coworkers: The many enthusiastic, earnest, and sincere letters that I am receiving from the various schools are indeed gratifying, and the excellent work accomplished last year seems to have imbued our schools with a desire to do a greater work this year. We earnestly hope and pray that every one of our schools are lending a sincere and earnest effort to the Christmas offering cause for 1919.

We want to quote from a letter just received from Brother Francis May, Christmas offering secretary for the Middletown, Ohio, Sunday school:

"About that Christmas offering, of course Middletown Sunday school started early in the year, in fact the first Sunday. We set our aim at $250. On July 1 our offering was $285. Our efforts now shall be to double our first aim, to reach the $500 mark. Our offering last year was $194. We attribute our success to the fact of a better working plan, and we emphasized three points: First, a Christmas offering secretary to boost the offering. Second, a definite minimum offering each Sunday. Third, rally days for special effort. Our rally days have been a great success, contributing more than two fifths of our collection. Our Christmas offering has helped rather than hindered other causes. Tithes and offerings have increased surprisingly and we have purchased a new organ for the church. That the church offering of the whole church may greatly exceed last year's is the desire of your brother.

"FRANCIS MAY."

If any of our good workers can read this letter and then not feel like they wanted to get out and double their efforts for the offering cause, we shall feel disappointed. Surely the Middletown workers are alive to the interests of the work and they have been abundantly blessed in these efforts, not any more so than will the other good schools if they will just as earnestly and zealously enter into the work.

We shall be glad to hear from our other enthusiastic workers.

Yours very truly,
A. W. SMITH.

HAMILTON, MISSOURI, June 27, 1919.

Editors Herald: We of the Oakdale Branch are not many in number, but alive to the interests of the work and trying to serve our Master.

When we moved here about ten years ago there were about a dozen Saints here. They had a fine little church, and God told them the time would come when they would have to broaden their walls. The prophecy is being fulfilled. The Saints are settling so fast that truly we will have to extend our walls.

I know this is one of God's gathering places and we are happy to have a home in Zion. We were very glad to note that our Christmas offering is to be devoted to purchase of land. Last year I had a little bed of strawberries and told the Lord I would give him half of what I sold. I was able to give eight dollars, which was two thirds. This year I promised all I sold, and it was over seventeen dollars. The Lord will do his part if we do ours.

Yours in bonds,

NETTIE B. DIEM.

BEVIER, MISSOURI, June 26, 1919.

Editors Herald: The Northeastern Missouri District conference met at Bevier, June 21 and 22, with members from Macon, Higbee, Huntsville, and Kirksville present, also our missionaries, John Davis and Archie McCord. Brother R. A. Lloyd, of Saint Louis, made us several good talks in behalf of the Sunday school and Religio work. Brother McCord was a stranger to most of us, but from what we have seen and heard of him we feel confident that all are pleased with his appointment to labor in this district.

We were treated to a genuine surprise, which was pleasing to the Bevier Saints, when a letter was read from the First Presidency announcing the appointment of High Priest Frederick T. Mussell of Des Moines, Iowa, to have charge of this district. Brother Mussell was raised at Bevier and is well known all over the district. He was elected district president, but will not devote all his time to the work until September 1. We are pleased to have him back in the district. He came here for the Sunday services.

Among the important business transacted was the selection of a committee to see if arrangements can be made for a reunion, also to see if funds can be raised to purchase a car for district work. Our branches and members are widely scattered over this part of the State.

Brother Venard Ruch, of Huntsville, related a miraculous escape from death which he experienced while at his work in the coal mines a few days before conference. A large rock requiring seven men to lift, fell on him, but he escaped with only one rib broken. It was a wonderful escape from death or serious injury, and Brother Ruch stated it was only the hand of God that saved him. We all feel thankful that God does watch over his children when they live close to him.

Ever praying for the success of this work, I am,

Your brother,

J. L. WILLIAMS.

KINGSTON, MISSOURI, June 26, 1919.

Editors Herald: I have received the magazine number of the HERALD and with much pleasure have read the articles from Saints we met in Canada. The fair Dominion was our home for a few years, and while there we learned to love the people. We appreciate how hard a field it is for the missionaries, the few of them who go there. We would say to the Saints, "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness," come to the land of Zion for a few years, help build up the waste places, and you will go back nobler men and women, better prepared to gather the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

EFFIE J. DENTON.

[A letter to the First Presidency]:

PARSONS, KANSAS, June 27, 1919.

A branch organization was effected at Parsons, Kansas, on last Sunday, June 22, Elder Daniel Gray, of 2716 Chess Avenue, being chosen president, and Mrs. W. E. Park, 2507 Belmont Avenue, secretary. Brother Frank Reynolds was chosen priest, A. L. Crocker teacher, and Norman W. Gray deacon. The musical work will be in the care of Mrs. W. H. MacLaren as chorister and Miss Ruth Gray as pianist. Brother J. A. Gillen presided over the work of organization, together with Charles Fry and A. V. Karlstrom of the district presidency, and Patriarch H. O. Smith, and the business was done with unanimous voice and splendid feeling. The new branch starts out with hopeful prospects of growth and accomplishment, and with faithfulness in the members its success is assured.

Brother Gillen preached in the morning, and Brother A. V. Karlstrom at night, while Brother H. O. Smith has continued here during the week in his line as evangelist and patriarch, to the encouragement and uplift of the Saints and friends.

It was with some surprise and with gladness and regret that I learned of the appointment of A. V. Karlstrom and wife to the South Sea Islands mission; glad that they were found qualified and worthy of the call, but regret at our having to lose them from the district. Our loss is really serious, Brother Karlstrom being district vice president, bishop's agent, superintendent of Sunday schools, and leading member of our reunion committee, while Sister Karlstrom is district secretary of Sunday schools, and their leaving will weaken our district force very much. Brother Karlstrom was fast building up a reputation as a public speaker throughout the district and his removal will be a distinct loss in that line. I have always held that one's obligation to the general church is always greater than to any part of the church, and when he took me into his confidence and sought my counsel I could only urge him to accept the call and fulfill it to the best of his ability. I believe the church will have no reason to regret his appointment and its confidence will find safe repose in him. I trust he will at least be permitted to remain here until after our reunion August 1 to 10.

I am going to Pittsburg for Sunday morning next where there is an ordination to be performed, and to Arma for a few nights next week where a church building is contemplated. Weather is very hot and sultry, and harvest is the most important thing just now among the farmers, which is frequently delayed by rains.

Sincerely,

CHARLES FRY.

MCWILLIAMS, ALABAMA, June 29, 1919.

Editors Herald: Having read the letters of the Saints in the HERALD, I feel I would like to say a few words. I have been a member ever since I was ten years of age, and am twenty-three now. I am married and have a good husband, but he not a member of the church. I ask the prayers of the Saints that he may obey the gospel. I am the only Saint in this place. Sometimes I feel I am very weak, and when I think of the many blessings God has bestowed I resist evil and earnestly pray I may never grow weak in the true faith. Also pray for my mother, who is blind. I would like to hear from any of the Saints by letter.

R. F. D. 1, Box 24.

Your sister,
ESTELLA B.

BOZEMAN, MONTANA, June 29, 1919.

Editors Herald: Since I last asked for space in your columns, several months ago, I have received my discharge from military service, so am again at home after an absence of a little over two years. I spent nineteen months in the service, although I was never permitted to cross "the pond." But I can truly say that I tried to do my bit just the same.

In my blessing, given in July, 1911, three years before the great war begun, I was told that, if faithful, I would be delivered from danger in the great judgment that was about to be poured out upon the world. To-day I can look back and see the hand of God in every move I made since that time. I am glad that I enlisted, and especially in the branch in which I did.

I received a training which will be of untold value to me through future life, and especially do I hope to be able to use it in the work of the Master. I enlisted in the medical department, and received seventeen months of actual hospital experience. It was work I thoroughly enjoyed, and hope to make use of the knowledge gained in advancing the mission of Christ.

This part of the country is passing through the worst drouth ever known here, and as result crops are very light. While the outlook is very discouraging to many of us, yet, for my part, this condition has also brought its blessings. I realize more than ever my own weakness, and my need of His help; my need of closer communion with Him. And I am striving to bring myself into that condition whereby I may merit the blessings He so graciously bestows.

I desire to thank the many Saints and friends who helped us to pass away many lonely hours in our camp life by their kind letters. Many of these Saints perhaps we shall never meet, but their kind words and loving deeds shall ever be remembered, and I feel sure that some day they shall be rewarded. We cannot keep up our correspondence with all, but we assure you that your act was truly appreciated.

I desire an interest in the prayers of the Saints, that I may so live that I may, become a useful instrument in the hand of God, in the furthering of his work among men.

In gospel bonds,

WILLIAM J. MURRAY.

BENTLY, MICHIGAN, June 30, 1919.

Editors Herald: We are glad to send a short letter in the SAINTS' HERALD, telling the brothers and sisters how we have been blessed in our branch. On June 22, thirteen children were baptized. It seems good to see the young boys and girls coming forward to take up the work, that some of the old workers must lay down. Most of the candidates were from the junior Sunday school class. These are the first baptisms in our local since last fall, but others are investigating. We have just had election of officers with very little changes. The Glover orchestra is coming along just fine, with prospects of soon purchasing a piano. We are grateful to Brother Ben Burtch, as their leader, as he has devoted and sacrificed much time to make the orchestra a success.

Brother Roy Newberry from West Branch is with us now. This makes us four priests, two teachers, and three elders in our branch. Brother Wiederhold and Brother Varil Yerrington have been holding house to house meetings near Rhodes for the past three weeks. Some have heartily welcomed us there, and are greatly interested. While the crowds have not been very large, fourteen outsiders being the most at one meeting, yet each time new ones come in and we are glad to explain to them our beliefs. Sister Martha Umphrey is historian, so will leave it to her to tell you all about it. We are looking forward to our two-day meeting, which has been appointed for September 13 and 14. Hope to meet the brothers and sisters from all over the district.

May all those who have obeyed God's law in its fullness be faithful unto the end.

Your sister in the gospel,
NELLIE WIEDERHOLD.

KINGSTON, MISSOURI, July 1, 1919.

Editors Herald: The HERALD comes to our home each week, and I eagerly scan its pages to see if there is not some letter or article from some old friend. I read with pleasure the article from Sister C. E. Diggle in a recent number, for I am well acquainted with her. Her work there is no light thing, for the Saints are much scattered there. How glad all were when Sister Diggle first came among us at Shellbrook, introducing the first work among the women that we had received.

The Autumn Leaves, too, is a welcome addition to our list of papers, and is perused with gladness. The article from Augustine Dwyer on "What shall we read?" was read with much interest, and my mind flew rapidly back to my girlhood days and things I used to read. At one time I was very fond of reading love stories, and many romantic visions I had. I am thankful to say that long ago I outgrew the mania for reading light literature. Also in the same number of Autumn Leaves a short item caught my eye and set me thinking. It was under the heading: "The things that are God's." It seems we feel less the duty of service in respect to money than all other things combined, and if Christ should come to the earth now and sit in judgment upon us and show us the way of duty and consecration, money would be the greatest thing he would strive to impress upon us, I think.

I love the law of our church, law of tithing, and the custom of giving Christmas offerings. More so, now that we are informed that the money will be spent in such a good way: the buying of lands so all the poor may be able to purchase a home, for it is difficult under existing circumstances, to pay for a home in Zion. I love the stewardship plan and will be glad when it is fully in operation. There is a right and wrong way to help God carry out the plans he has made. Many of us love to give, but want to use our own judgment and give as we think best. The only right way is to honor the financial officers that God has set in the church. We see events taking place rapidly which herald the return of our Lord and Savior. I desire to be worthy to meet him when he comes. Saints, pray for me that I may hold faithful to the end.

EFFIE J. DENTON.

ELK MILLS, MARYLAND, July 1, 1919.

Editors Herald: During the month of June, we had with us Elder Edmund J. Gleazer, district missionary, who visited the Saints and nonmembers, and conducted a successful series of meeting. During his visit, Elder Gleazer occupied two Sunday afternoons in the Methodist Church, a few miles from this place, with good interest.

In company with him, I went to Fawn Grove, Pennsylvania, where a number of Saints reside. We have held some services in the homes of the Saints, and the interest was good, considering that this is a farming community, and the farmers are busy harvesting their crops. We have at last succeeded in obtaining the use of a hall for five nights, three miles from Fawn Grove, and are holding forth to fair crowds, with the object of stirring up an interest, so that it will be possible to follow up this effort in the fall when the farmers are not so busy.

Brother Gleazer baptized a fine young woman last Saturday, who has a wonderful influence for good in this vicinity.

Sunday morning we served the sacrament, and it made our hearts glad to see twenty or more Saints renew their covenant.

The Saints appreciate our efforts very much, as it is seldom they hear the gospel preached, owing to the fact that there is no one in their midst holding the priesthood.

Trusting that our efforts will prove successful,
Your brother in the faith,

IRA W. HUMES.

MADISON, WISCONSIN, July 6, 1919.

Editors Herald: We have been thinking the Saints at large might be interested in our Madison Branch. We are in a very much alive condition although the strike has taken all of our branch officers except the deacon. The branch is in charge of Elder Stevens, who is seventy-five years of age. We are looking forward to the reunion, the first in two years, with much anticipation and hope God's blessing will be on it.

The Saints celebrated the Fourth with a picnic in the beautiful grove near Lake Monona. It was rather damp, as we had a heavy thunderstorm but we all kept good-natured.

Personally, we are deeply thankful just now that our only son has recently returned safely from overseas where he had been fourteen months on the firing line.

Your aged brother and sister,

H. D. AND H. I. STEVENS.

[The following letter to the Presidency somewhat delayed may still interest our readers.—EDITORS.]

Since writing you before, we finished the Clitheral reunion. We had a very nice, spiritual meeting. Brother Dwyer expressed himself in the prayer meeting that it was the most spiritual meeting he had ever attended. He seemed to be very much taken with the spirit of the meeting. I left Sunday at one o'clock. They drove us to Fargo in auto where we took the train at 4.31 p. m.

There was a heavy wind blowing from the southeast and a big storm working up from the northwest. We boarded our train with some rain falling. The engineer was trying to make up time, so, commonly speaking, he "turned her loose." We got about five miles from Fergus Falls when the engineer saw the nature of the storm and ran our speed up to about fifty-five miles an hour; and just as we were emerging out of a little cut that cyclone struck us fair; and when that train at a speed of fifty-five miles and the cyclone at a speed we knew nothing about came together we certainly felt as though we had struck a heavy bank. Things shook and trembled, the rain was falling in torrents and the wind was howling and whistling almost like a steam whistle—something fearful—when suddenly there was a tremendous jolt, followed by two or three more in quick succession, throwing the people in the sleeper out of their seats and mixing them up quite promiscuously. Then a sudden stop. It had become so dark they had turned the electric lights on. When we stopped the lights went out, and for a minute it was pretty dark. Everything then was still or partially so except a heavy fall of rain and a strong wind outside for several minutes. It then quieted down and you would not have known that there had been any destruction so far as the elements were concerned.

Brother J. E. Wildermuth was on the train with us going to his home in Fargo, and he was in the day coach while we had taken berths in the sleeper. As soon as we could do so we made our way to the front to find out how bad things really were. We got as far as the dining car which we found partially over on her side with the front down in the ditch, standing at an angle of about thirty degrees. We undertook to get out but found we could not open the vestibules because of the strained conditions. I got around where I could get a glimpse of the front end of the train only to discover that everything in front of the tourist sleeper which was ahead of the dining car had turned clear over on their sides, the baggage car being clear behind them up the bank, showing that the train had gone four and one-half car lengths from the time the wind blew the baggage car off the track, which broke the connection and set the emergency brake. The day coaches were filled and we expected to see a number of them killed and many injured; for it was a sight to behold, not a truck under the coaches, lying on their side. Whether the wind lifted them off their trucks or the emergency brakes had stopped the trucks so suddenly that the cars were shot on over them we could not tell. but the trucks were jammed into one heap while the cars had plowed through mud on their side until even the vestibules were filled full of mud.

You can imagine our surprise when we found no one killed or seriously hurt. One lady had her ankle sprained or dislocated, they could not tell exactly which, and with some few cuts and bruises of minor importance all were able to take care of themselves. Some of them were a wet, bedraggled, muddy, dirty-looking bunch, but happy beyond expression that they were alive.

The storm that hit us passed on, tearing the town of Fergus Falls all to pieces, which you no doubt have seen in the papers. We were not scratched and not even badly frightened, for the whole thing lasted, as far as the real danger part was concerned, less than a minute. When the wind threw the baggage car over it disconnected the engine and the train, and with the emergency brakes set the engineer ran a half mile or more before he discovered that they did not have the train following them. They immediately came back and finding condition of the train they hastened on for help, not knowing what damage had really been done to life. The east-bound train was lying at the next station about three miles from us waiting to meet our train. They immediately came down, took all the passengers aboard and ran up to Fargo, North Dakota.

We found Brother Jerome Wildermuth was not hurt, in the least, although he was in one of the day coaches when the thing happened.

This, of course, delayed us so that we reached Spokane sixteen hours late but well and safe. We reached the reunion ground here last night after a very beautiful ride down through canyons and over high tablelands. This is a rough country where they raise lots of wheat, some little corn and plenty of fruit. I wish you could have seen the road from Culdesac out to the reunion ground. We crossed one canyon one thousand feet deep and about one thousand feet wide at the top, winding our way down the side of that canyon and up around the points on the other side. It was some climb either way. The perfume was sweet and rich, for the sides of the canyon were covered with syringa bushes in full bloom. They grow wild here. While we have quite an interesting reunion here it is in a kind of an out-of-the-way place, but seems to be well attended. The prospects are that I will have about all that I want to do here at the Culdesac reunion.

FREDERICK A. SMITH.

THE NEED OF REVELATION

(Continued from page 740.)

The Methodist Church and the Baptist Church are each raising $100,000,000 and more for this work. We have need of greater devotion than ever before, that a world hungering and thirsting after righteousness may be filled with the Spirit of God.

S. A. B.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

The Presidency

CHANGE IN APPOINTMENT

By concurrent action of the First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve, the appointment of Elder B. S. Lambkin for the year has been changed from the Pottawattamie District to the Fremont District. Those concerned please take note.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

The Bishopric

NEW YORK

Brother L. H. Lewis having moved to Kirtland, Ohio, it becomes necessary for us to appoint a Bishop's agent for the above district. We are pleased to commend to the Saints Brother F. C. Mesle, of Oneida, New York, who is well known to the Saints of this district; a man of integrity; an honest advocate of the gospel message, and one that we can heartily commend to the Saints for their support.

Conditions existing in the world to-day are making greater demands upon the financial interests of the Lord's work. I trust that the Saints shall appreciate this and will do their full duty, for which the Lord has promised to add his blessings. There is always a degree of satisfaction that comes to the individual who does the thing that God has required at his hands.

The above appointment will be in effect from August 1, 1919.

Sincerely yours,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

To the Saints of the Spokane District; Greeting: One of the chief duties of the Bishopric is to assist members and friends who are interested in the Lord's work to fulfill the law relating to temporal things so they may be acceptable stewards.

This is my fourteenth year as Bishop's agent in this district. I am still at your service, a willing worker. This is a day of sacrifice, the hastening time is on. The Lord recently said, "Bring in your tithes and offerings that my work may increase." Let us heed this instruction that we may not be found wanting when he comes! We preach an unchangeable God and an everlasting gospel, hence in every age and dispensation the law of tithes is taught; it is for the gospel extension we plead, and by obedience to the law be rewarded in the day of judgment.

Let us make up our minds to pay the tenth of our increase to the Lord so we may reasonably expect his blessings. Here is a statement: "I, the Lord am bound when you do what I say." Do you believe it? If so, your duty is clear. We must not withhold because we find it takes effort and diligence on our part, nor because of the need of sacrifice, because the Lord says: "Gather my saints together unto me: those who have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." (Psalm 50:5.) We must work out our salvation according to the pattern, not some other way; real Saints must prove themselves and make a reasonable effort to do what the law says. Every member of the household of faith should take pleasure and interest in helping the financial work along.

The 1919 motto is: "Every member a tithe payer." Is your name written there?

We take pleasure in commending the following solicitors to the Saints and friends of the Spokane District, who are authorized to receipt for tithes and offerings. Oliver Turnbull, Sagle, Idaho; Peter F. Klaus, Culdesac, Idaho; L. E. Holmes, Gibbs, Idaho; J. E. Turnbow, Palouse, Washington; H. P. Jenkins, Kennewick, Washington; George Leach, Erickson, British Columbia; D. S. McDole, Okanogan, Washington.

Hoping for the cooperation of each one interested in the work of the Lord,

Yours in bonds,

W. W. FORDHAM,

Bishop's Agent, Spokane District.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, South 238 Haven Street.

From the Bishopric of the British Isles Mission to the Elders, Priests, Teachers, and Deacons, Including the Presidents of Branches and Districts: This letter is personal to each one of you for the reason that you are called as ministers to the church. The law specifically states that all of the above ministry are to teach the law as given in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the revelations to the church, therefore you are instructed to teach both the temporal law and the spiritual law. They being of equal importance should be taught with equal diligence.

The Bishopric desires and requests your cooperation and assistance in teaching the temporal law of tithes, offering oblation, consecration, and surplus. Further, the teacher should be, in all cases, an example, in accordance with his teaching. The taking of inventories is one of the first and most necessary requirements to the fulfilling of the law, as none are exempt. (See Doctrine and Covenants 70:3.)

As late as April 18, 1909, the Lord, by the voice of inspiration and warning instructed the church to conform with the instructions and renditions of the Bishopric with regard to the temporal law. (See Doctrine and Covenants 129:8.) This indicates that the church was not keeping up with its duties in temporalities.

In making this request of the ministry in general, it is to be understood that they are not to be burdened with the collecting of finances except as they may already be appointed as collectors by the bishop.

The bishopric is pleased to inform the membership of the mission that the contributions that came into their hands in 1918 were 100 per cent over the amount collected the previous year. Now it is desired that 100 per cent of the membership be on the bishop's record for the year 1919.

For the benefit of all will state that the bishopric alone are the ones to whom inventories should be submitted. In conclusion, will state that we are very thankful to the Saints in the mission for their hearty cooperation in the past. The bishop would be pleased to hear from every minister in the mission expressing his approval and cooperation in complying with the above request. Any instructions required will be gladly given by the bishopric.

Hoping that the future may bring us more success, both spiritually and temporally, I remain,

Yours in gospel bonds,
RODERICK MAY,
In behalf of the Bishopric.

Pastoral

HOLDEN STAKE MISSIONARY WORK

In accord with appointment made by the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, and for the purpose that the missionary work may be systematically unified, we are asking that calls for missionary preaching and opportunities for missionary work within the Holden Stake be reported to the undersigned at 1101 East Fifteenth Street, Sedalia, Missouri.

We are not making promise to respond at once to all calls, for the harvest is great and the laborers are few; but by being informed of the various needs of the field we will be in a better position to serve, and will reach as many points as possible with our limited force.

The mission workers will please feel free to correspond with the undersigned in any matter pertaining to the work intrusted to us all; and whatever information we can secure concerning the needs of the work, and the calls for preaching, will be at the disposal of each missionary upon application for the same. We shall be pleased to be kept in touch with this department of the work to the end that such assistance to each worker as is possible by a unanimity of purpose and effort, may be had.

Your fellow servant unto the Lord,
JAMES E. YATES.

SEDALIA, MISSOURI.

To the Saints of Arizona: Having been appointed to labor in the State of Arizona I take this means of inviting the cooperation of all the Saints throughout the State. As my work will be confined mostly to the vicinity of Bisbee and Douglas, I may not be able to visit all the Saints in the State, but I am at your service to do all that time, opportunity, and means will permit. Please write to me, giving your location and making your wants known, and I will render such service as I can.

E. R. DAVIS.
BISBEE, ARIZONA, Box 453.

THE NEW ENGLAND SAINTS

Having been appointed to missionary work in New England States and Maritime Provinces, I wish to know the most available places for labor in the territories named; it having been several years since I was engaged in any part of them, and the conditions there now being more or less unknown to me.

If anyone who knows of openings for presenting the gospel will write me, stating substantially the details of the matter,

I shall appreciate the kindness and will endeavor to provide for the occasions as far as practicable. I feel that you are, with me, anxious that the Lord's work may be presented to all those who seek him earnestly, and to this end we can be coworkers together with him. I trust that no one will hesitate to inform me of any opportunity that may be available, so that I can arrange my work as fully as possible.

Your brother in Christ,
A. B. PHILLIPS.

SOMERVILLE, MASSACHUSETTS, 70 Albion Street.

Conference Notices

Eastern Colorado, at Fort Collins, August 30, 10 a. m. J. R. Sutton, president.

New York and Philadelphia, at Archbald, Pennsylvania, August 30, 31, and September 1. Elizabeth Teal, secretary.

Northeastern Kansas, at Blue Rapids, September 5 to 7. Mail reports to R. L. Tilden, Troy, Kansas.

West Virginia, at Indian Creek, with the Harmony Branch, September 6 and 7, 1919. Visiting Saints change cars at Cornwallis for Harrisonville, where trains will be met by those in charge. B. E. Wadsworth, secretary.

Central Oklahoma, at Tulsa, September 5, 6, and 7. Religio 9 a. m., Sunday school 10 a. m. Church location, Tenth and Rockford Streets. Street cars, Orcutt Lake and Bellview. Edward Rannie, president, 1227 East Seventh Street, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Convention Notices

Western Colorado, at Bayfield, August 15, 1919, in Union Church, at 8 p. m. Minnie Akers, secretary.

Northern California Sunday school and Religio, at Irvington, August 20 and 21. Mrs. L. Day, secretary.

Reunion Calendar

(The figures in parenthesis give the page of the HERALD on which details have been given.)

Massachusetts, Onset, Massachusetts, July 19-August 4 (527).

Kentucky and Tennessee, 7 miles east of Paris, Kentucky, July 26 to August 3 (654).

Toronto, Low Banks, Ontario, July 26 to August 10.

Lamoni Stake, Lamoni, July 30 to August 10 (655).

Alabama, McKenzie, August 1-10 (527).

Seattle and British Columbia, Bellingham, Washington, August 1-10 (527).

Western Oklahoma, Sanders's Grove at Calumet, August 1-10 (552).

Southern California, Hermosa Beach, August 1-10 (598, 654).

Eastern Oklahoma, North of Fort Towson, August 1-10 (654, 759).

Western Nebraska, near Tryon, August 1-10 (702).

Spring River, Joplin, Missouri, August 1-10 (702).

Eastern Iowa, Muscatine, August 8-15 (576).

Kirtland, Ohio, Kirtland, Ohio, August 7-17 (311).

Des Moines, Runnells, Iowa, August 8-17 (575).

Clinton, Missouri, Eldorado Springs, August 8-17 (598, 654).

Southwestern Texas, Pipe Creek, Texas, August 8-17 (conference and ten-day meeting) (655).

Kewanee, Matherville, Illinois, August 14-25 (759).

Northeastern Nebraska, Southern Nebraska, Pottawattamie, and Fremont, Iowa, Council Bluffs, Iowa, August 15-24 (552, 703).

Northern California, Irvington, California, August 14-24 (654).

Holden, Kansas City, and Independence Stakes, Pertle Springs, August 15-24 (598).

Far West, Missouri, Stewartville, August 15-24 (654).

Little Sioux and Gallands Grove, Dow City, Iowa, August 22-31 (503).

Southeastern Illinois, Springerton, Illinois, August 15-24 (654, 735).

Southern Missouri, Springfield, August 20-31 (702).

Eastern Colorado, Fort Collins, August 22-31 (735).

Nauvoo, Illinois, Montrose, Iowa, August 22-31 (527, 759).

Northern Wisconsin, Chetek, August 22-31 (655).

Southern Idaho, Hagerman, August 22-31.

Southern Wisconsin, Madison, August 22-31 (735).

Northeastern Illinois, Plano, Illinois, August 29 to September 7 (553).

Southwestern Oregon, Myrtle Point, August 29 to September 7 (759).

Reunion Notices

Southwestern Oregon, at Myrtle Point, Oregon, August 29 to September 7. District conference September 6 and 7. M. H. Cook, president, Myrtle Point, Oregon.

Those wishing tents and cots for the Nauvoo reunion should send in their orders to Arthur Allen before August 10. Reunion 22d to 31st of August. Price of tents as follows: 9½ by 12, 4-foot wall, $3.50; 12 by 14, 4-foot wall, $4; 10 by 14, 6-foot wall, $5.50; double cots, $1.10. Apostle G. T. Griffiths and Patriarch J. W. Wight will be with us; A. W. Smith and wife of Saint Louis will be with us in the interest of the auxiliary work. Arthur Allen, chairman of reunion committee, 225 West Fourth Street, Ottumwa, Iowa.

Those attending the Eastern Oklahoma reunion and debate near Fort Towson, Oklahoma, beginning August 1, will be met at the depot at Fort Towson, and taken to the reunion grounds in autos. It would be well to write and inform the committee as to the day of arrival. Saints coming from the north and south over Kansas City Southern should get off at Ashdown, Arkansas, and go west over Frisco to Fort Towson; those coming from the north or south over the Frisco, get off at Hugo, Oklahoma, and go east to Fort Towson. J. C. Chrestensen, for the committee, Haileyville, Oklahoma.

Kewanee, at Matherville, Illinois, August 14 to 25. Tents, 9½ by 12, 3-foot wall, canvas cots, and straw will be free to all. Larger tents may be had by ordering and paying the difference amounting to 50 cents on 12 by 14, 3½-foot wall; $1.50 on 12 by 18, 4-foot wall; $6 on 12 by 24, 6-foot wall, 5-room compartment tent. Bring your bedding and food, no eating house on the ground, but a good bakery one fourth mile from camp, also stores where food may be had at same prices we pay at home. The Saints of Matherville expect to shut their houses and tent with us on the grounds to make one large family, so come expecting to occupy a tent. The poor had the gospel preached to them when Christ was on earth, bring the poor with you and we will feed them and lodge them free. To be sure of the size of tent you wish, notice should be in the hands of your committee by the 1st day of August; if your notice gets to us later we will care for you, so be sure to come, and brethren and sisters, come prayerfully and all will be well. Patriarch F. G. Pitt, District President C. I. Carpenter, and missionaries J. W. Smith and Okerlind will be with us as speakers. All expense will be met by freewill offering. J. W. Bean, secretary committee.

Quorum Notices

Northern California Quorum of Priests will meet at Irvington, California, during reunion, August 14-24. All who can please attend. Election of officers, etc. Bishop E. Ingham will be in charge. E. S. Parks, secretary.

Two-Day Meetings

At Prescott, Michigan, August 9 and 10; at Butman, Michigan, August 16 and 17. Matthew Umphrey, president, Bentley, Michigan.

At Harlan, Iowa, August 2 and 3. Saints in the Gallands Grove District who have cars, and are not too far distant, please take this as a special invitation to you to attend these meetings. We have a special purpose in these meetings, and you will be benefited by coming, besides cheering up the local Saints. C. E. Anderson, secretary.

One-Day Meetings

Western Michigan: Ludington, July 26; Burdickville, August 10; South Boardman, August 17; Bendon, August 24; Marion, September 7, 1919. Sunday school and Religio convention, September 12; district conference, September 13 and 14; both at Freesoil, Michigan. John Schreur, president, Freesoil, Michigan; Homer Doty, secretary, Traverse City, Michigan.

Our Departed Ones

BEACH.—Brother E. W. Beach was born in Buffalo, New York, in 1843; died July 8, 1919, at the Independence Sanitarium, of general decline. Had been an inmate of the Sanitarium over a year. Funeral by Joseph Arber, from Carson's undertaking parlors. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

ROBERTSON.—Cynthia Ann Baggerley, daughter of Reverend David and Emily Baggerley, was born in Clark County,

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor.

The official organ of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Published every Wednesday by the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. Entered at the post office at Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

PRICE, $1.75 A YEAR IN ADVANCE

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words.

CONTENTS

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| EDITORIAL:   |     |
| Why an Editor   | 737 |
| Blue Pencil Notes   | 739 |
| The Need of Revelation  | 740 |
| ORIGINAL ARTICLES:   |     |
| The Church, the War, the World, by R. W. Farrell  | 741 |
| The Outlook, by Columbus Scott  | 747 |
| WOMAN'S AUXILIARY  |     |
| Ethel I. Skank—Clara Whitney—Sister Thompson.   | 751 |
| LETTER DEPARTMENT  |     |
| A. W. Smith—Nettie B. Diem—J. L. Williams—Effie J. Denton—Charles Fry—Estella B.—William J. Murray—Nellie Wiederhold—Effie J. Denton—Ira W. Humes—H. D. and H. I. Stevens—Frederick A. Smith. | 754 |
| MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT   |     |
| FROM HERE AND THERE   | 760 |

Indiana, December 9, 1836. Married William H. Robertson, and both had united with the Christian Church early in life. After hearing W. W. Blair of the Reorganized Church, they were baptized and confirmed, June 13, 1870, and lived consistent lives in this faith. Died June 25, 1919, at Eckerty, Indiana. Funeral in charge of L. C. Moore.

HOLMES.—Bettie Jean, infant daughter of Brother Clyde and Sister Evelyn Holmes, was born in San Jose, California, November 4, 1918. Died at San Jose, California, May 28, 1919. Funeral services conducted by C. W. Hawkins.

HENINGSSEN.—At her home in Tacoma, Washington, Mrs. Elizabeth Heningsen passed away on Sunday, June 22, 1919. The funeral was deferred for return of a soldier brother, till June 28, when appropriate services were held at the undertaking parlors. A large attendance, and banks of beautiful flowers attested her favorable standing. She leaves husband and infant child, mother, 4 sisters, and 2 brothers. Her mother, Sister Meehan, was baptized some years ago by T. W. Smith. Sermon by J. M. Terry.

STANLEY.—At Saints' Home, Lamoni, Iowa, June 3, 1919, Brother Daniel Stanley, aged 93 years, 2 months, and 27 days. He was born in West Virginia in 1826. Served in the Confederate Army in the Civil War. Later on he heard the gospel and believed. Brother J. M. Stubbart baptized him. Came to Lamoni in 1915. Services at the Saints' Home. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins, assisted by Lonzo Jones and Eli Hayer.

HINDS.—Paul Herbert, son of William H. and Phoebe Etta Hinds, was born at Waterloo, Iowa, August 27, 1909. Blessed by J. B. Wildermuth, September 1, 1909. Baptized and confirmed by William Sparling, at Waterloo, Iowa, June 7, 1918. Died June 19, 1919. Death caused by drowning. He was very active in Sunday school and church work, and was loved by all who knew him. Services in the Saints' chapel. Sermon by Duncan Campbell, of Cedar Falls, assisted by Victor A. Hall, pastor of this branch.

WILLIAMS.—William Williams, born October 30, 1836, in Mercer County, New Jersey; died June 2, 1919, at his home near Savannah, Illinois. Leaves to mourn, 5 sons, Sumner, David, Lehigh, Schyler, Albert. His wife preceded him in 1914. Baptized November 3, 1872. Funeral services from the Saints' church at Savanna. Sermon by Elwyn R. Davis.

FROM HERE AND THERE

COURSE IN PUBLIC SPEAKING

As has been announced, the course in public speaking, conducted by the Woman's Auxiliary and prepared by Elder T. W. Williams, was, on the request of the Auxiliary and approval of the general coordinating committee, turned over by the last General Conference to Graceland College to be carried on by its Extension Department.

The chief reason for this request on the part of the Auxiliary was that the course was too expensive to finance on the basis on which it was being conducted. During the past year the large expense incidental to the mimeographing of the lessons has been met by the office of the General Bishopric but the Presiding Bishop feels that the course, like all other educational courses, should be carried on by the college on as nearly a self-supporting basis as possible, that is, there should be a fee charged large enough to cover the expense.

In view of this presentation of the matter by the Presiding Bishop and the Auxiliary it was recommended by the coordinating committee that the course be handled by the Extension Department of Graceland. This recommendation was approved and Graceland is now prepared to carry on this course along with her other many correspondence courses. Elder T. W. Williams will continue in general charge of the preparation of the lessons and Miss June Whiting, a graduate of the Universities of Montana and Minnesota, will have direct charge of the grading of lessons. She will also have charge of the department of public speaking at the college next year.

The cost for this course will be $12.50, which it is hoped will meet the expenses of mimeographing the lessons and other expenses connected therewith. The price is considerably less than that charged in many other institutions. An examination of the catalogues of two exclusively correspondence colleges shows their prices to be $55 and $24, while the charge made by two State universities is $20 and $21 respectively.

The latter one of these State universities makes this comment in connection with the fees charged in its correspondence department:

"The cost of taking work in the regular sessions is about $10 a credit hour. The cost of taking a course by correspondence (exclusive of postage) is $3.50 a credit hour, which represents only about one third the cost of courses, including room and board, to students in attendance at the University. Correspondence work affords an excellent opportunity for those students who wish to do part of their college course at a minimum expense while engaged in other work."

The above is the experience of one State university. We hope to keep our expenses down so that the correspondence courses can be offered at a rate of $12.50.

Our special correspondence bulletin is now issued showing all the subjects which may be taken by correspondence. We shall be glad to send to anyone interested. Write, President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

The reunion institute at Kirtland, August 7 to 17, offers formal courses in child study, pedagogy, religious education, social service, and public speaking. The lectures will be given by qualified teachers during each forenoon, commencing at eight o'clock. It is hoped to do work for which credit may be had at Graceland College, completing each course in three years. The committee is circulating some nicely illustrated cards advertising the reunion, gotten out by the Kirtland Arts and Crafts press.

NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE

Graceland has just issued a new illustrated catalogue containing announcements of faculty members and courses for the college year 1919-20.

The two departments for which provision has recently been made—the extension department and that for religious education—are fully described.

Anyone interested in these two departments or the general courses offered by the college should write for the free catalogue to President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

RECENT ORDINATIONS

At a sitting of the high council at Independence, Friday, July 25, the ordination of A. V. Karlstrom to office of bishop was ordered, also ordination of George H. Wixom, Roy S. Budd, and C. I. Carpenter to office of high priest. Brother Karlstrom goes to the South Sea Islands on a mission; Brother Wixom is president of the Southern California District; Brother Carpenter soon goes to Kewanee District, where he is president; and Brother Budd is president of the branch at Cameron, Missouri.

SUCCESSFUL TWO-DAY MEETINGS

The two-day meeting at McGregor, Michigan, July 19 and 20, was in charge of William Fligg and Alma Campbell. About three hundred people were in attendance at the Sunday morning meeting and a real spiritual feast was enjoyed. Among the speakers were F. S. Brackenbury, C. C. Whitford, H. Sheffler, O. L. Thompson, R. Kenney, and B. Brown, who is appointed to labor in Missouri. The musical features were in charge of Sister Plato and Sister Cadow, and many of our district orchestral players were present, who rendered fine music with the assistance of Mr. Bostwick, of Detroit.

The wife of Brother Oscar Case, of Spokane District, was killed instantly in an auto accident at the Culdesac reunion. The car became unmanageable and turned over. The sister was held in high esteem by all the Saints.

Anyone needing a good chart on the signs of the times, or the Two-Way chart, should correspond with James Schofield, Lamoni, Iowa. He has two good large ones made by Brother Weston, and will sell at a low price.

From The American Issue of July 12, we learn again that only three States have failed to that time to ratify the prohibition amendment. These are Rhode Island, New Jersey, and Connecticut. All of the other States have ratified, that is, forty-five. The total house vote of these States which have ratified is 3,737 for, and 934 against; the senate vote, 1,289 to 213. That is, the dry vote has been over 80 per cent of legislative vote.

LAMONI REUNION TO HAVE WIRELESS STATION

Visitors at the Lamoni Saints' reunion will have the opportunity of seeing a modern wireless station in operation and will hear signals from stations many hundreds of miles away. The station will be operated by the Radio Department of Graceland College at the Graceland tent.

The late Central Texas conference adopted resolutions of respect and condolence in behalf of the family of the late Elder Samuel R. Hay, who passed away March 10. We are pleased to record this fact, but in accord with our policy to exclude all such documents from our columns so there may be no discrimination, we must be content with this brief mention.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

Volume 66

Lamoni, Iowa, August 6, 1919

Number 32

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

HAVE FAITH IN GOD

(From a sermon at the Bloomington chapel, near Lamoni, Iowa, July 27, 1918, by E. D. Moore.)

For a text we have chosen the simple statement from the Scriptures: "Have faith in God."

It is as interesting to-day as it ever has been, and because of the stress of the times is perhaps more important to us as a basic element of our existence than ever before. We can think of nothing this morning about which we may concern ourselves with more profit.

It certainly is an elusive word when we try to define or measure it. In spite of Paul's definition we are still in doubt when we try to determine its properties and measure its volume. It cannot be measured. We weigh our grain to determine the quantity we have to sell; we measure our lots and our farms; we let the dealer influence us in setting a price on our used cars; but no one knows how much faith he has. When we think we have the most, some little rat of skepticism or indecision or indifference will gnaw its way into our source of supply and suddenly we find it is gone.

On the other hand, when we feel that there is a great dearth of that sturdy quality in our makeup, some crisis may come up and we learn that there has been lying dormant in our bosom a great force which buoys us up in the storms of life—and we may justifiably call it faith.

When the Master gathered little children about him and told his followers that except they became as those little ones they could not even see the kingdom of God, he uttered an unpopular sentiment. Go to the average strong man and try to explain to him that to be a true follower of Christ he must become as the little child here at its mother's breast. Impress, if you can, the mind of the adolescent boy who has recently become a man in strength that he is to again be as a little child. Failing with him, in his superabundance of physical power that he is always wanting to try on some one, suggest to his budding sister that she is to be as a child to live the truly useful life.

You know how hopeless a task it would be. They frankly believe you are muchly mistaken, and usually tell you so without special ceremony.

Yet we believe it; furthermore, we know it. And we know it is possible. We know that to possess the strength of a giant and the humility and gentleness of a child is entirely feasible.

Stand on the street corner with me and watch the passing of the autos. Among the many little noisy affairs we occasionally see a big, quiet fellow gliding along. You know that it doesn't require more skill nor force to control the power under that hood. There is power there, sufficient to frighten a swarm of little engines, yet so refined and controlled is it that a child may manipulate the simple levers that gauge the speed and steer the machine.

Go with me to the huge factories where iron and steel are fed into the arteries of commerce. In one of these I especially recall a favorite trip hammer that I liked especially to watch.

Great steel girders were fed into its mouth, held a moment, while the great hammer clanged and hissed a few times, shaping it for its place in some towering skyscraper or far-flung bridge. Yet with all its mighty power, it was possible to so control the stroke of that mighty trip hammer that a walnut could be cracked without breaking the kernel.

Once I had charge of a printing establishment. It was quite an honor. I was the whole force—devil, compositor, floor man, pressman, editor. The whole outfit went into a small space, and the press was one of those little hand affairs with a capacity of fifteen or twenty sheets a minute when all went well. Contrast your mental picture of this establishment with what you can see at any of the great printing plants in the cities, where the press foreman by the simple push of a switch starts the great perfecting press which unwinds great rolls of paper at one end, and turns them out printed and folded newspapers at the other. I could work harder and sweat more in one evening at the task I had than the master pressman with his monster press does in a week.

After all, then, we must admit that it is only a matter of control. Wonderful physical strength is not incompatible with great spiritual control, and when once effected becomes well-nigh irresistible. And in the same manner, marvelous mental prowess guided into the channels of gospel application, becomes a force indeed.

When we see those among us attain to considerable eminence in scholastic lines, yet find it impossible to adjust that acquirement to the solution of the great common problems of humanity, we shudder at their possible fate because of the prostituted acquirements. It makes us wonder if possibly the possession of great learning takes us so far from the source of faith that the common faith in God and humanity is impossible. But a little consideration will satisfy any of us that the mere attainment of certain heights in mental training cannot take the place of faith any more than to be a physical giant places us in a special class above the need of humility. We like to believe it only enhances our faith when properly utilized.

"Except ye become as a little child, ye cannot see the kingdom of God." Since the word see is universally used to imply comprehension, we may well suppose that without the traits of true faith, deep humility, and simple trust, we cannot comprehend the kingdom of God though it be in operation in our midst. We often would compel people to see. It is a common fault for us to desire to literally kick a certain class of people out of our presence because they seem so willfully blind. They are a sore trial to us and wear on our tempers in dealing with them, but we know that faith is something we cannot transplant bodily. We must sow the seed and try to help it develop and mature, but we cannot force its development.

The faith of a little child is a beautiful thing. To see the implicit trust it has in its father and mother, to note that no matter what assails it from without, it turns with unfaltering trust to its earthly parent is a sight we cannot forget. Woe to the person who betrays that trust, for "it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea."

Every child that is not dyspeptic is optimistic. Find me one pessimistically inclined and I will show you one whose digestion is bad. The normal outlook of every child is hopeful and trustful. And in the same manner is the tendency of every child of God whose faith is as a little child: no matter what the apparent outlook, he trusts in God, has faith in his fellow men, and in himself. When these things do not prevail, there is something organically wrong. Spiritual dyspepsia should be treated vigorously and early. Woe to the person who willfully betrays that trust and tears down the structure of faith which has been erected in the hearts of any of God's children.

But as we become more and more mature, our interests become complex. This simple faith we attained in our childish trust is assailed by so many outside influences we become disheartened and sometimes dismayed. Then it is that the problem intensifies.

As a child takes delight in confiding in its mother, we come to confide in God and godly people. The more we talk with each other and exchange views, the better established we should become, and the more clearly recognize the foundation of our faith.

Occasionally it has been my privilege to have various of the brethren you know discuss at length the ideas they wished to present to such audiences as yourselves here this morning, and it was with the frank intention of better crystallizing their sentiments and to eliminate the chaff from the wheat. It was a mutually helpful process. Daniel Webster is said to have practiced his orations on the cattle in his father's barn, and as I thought of those patient creatures and their privileges, I felt as flattered as they.

But there is a real sustaining element in such mutual discussions, for often the viewpoint we have may be just the one some brother or sister needs. In every community there are professional gloom dispensers who can from the torpidity of their diseased spiritual livers color everything about them a sickly green. I know the type from experience. You, too, unless you are especially fortunate, know it, yet we know that in the reaction from their morbid views we often find ourselves stancher than before.

The conflict with our faith helps us more nearly to locate and evaluate it. We are better able, after spending a few hours brightening the outlook for some poor victimized brother, to locate the ideals upon which our own faith is based, and with a clear vision continue to point out the path wherein others may find the solace that has come to us.

The faith which should be resident within our hearts should enable us to see beneath the surface and better judge the real situations of life.

We know how the average person hates the Jew. He is thought of as a grasping money-getter, with latent Shylock ideals and a persistent hater of Christianity. Yet the faith we have in the outcome of the prophecies of old allows us to see beneath all this exterior and vision a gathered and restored people to a land made free for them. We can think of them as the chosen people of God who have about paid the penalty for the rejection of the true Messiah and will yet come to him as a people—a conclusion all at variance with the commonly-held notion of the Jew.

Then when we consider the remnant of Jacob on this continent—the American Indian—we do not agree with the usual idea that they are a race who deserve to be exterminated or crowded into the fast-receding wilderness till there is no place for them. Instead, we recall the many beautiful promises in the Book of Mormon and realize the prominent part the Lamanite is to play in the building of Zion and the temple. Thus does faith give us the advantage in judging the present and future by the past.

“A little learning is a dangerous thing,” we read. A little knowledge allowed to take the place of a greater faith, is a real danger in our lives. We should drink so deeply at the fount of knowledge, that no matter what comes, we shall not lose our faith in the outcome of the church. There are always those who run with panic when anything unusual happens. At the late conference there were those whose hearts failed them lest the church be wrecked and we all be cast on the rocks. Yet, when we have the right sort of faith, based on the unassailable foundations of truth and intelligence, we can calmly proceed, knowing that whether men in high places or on the same level as ourselves falter and fall, that the kingdom of God will steadily progress till its work on earth is accomplished. We can often explain many situations if we are alert and well-informed, but we can at least have a wholesome attitude toward the evident shortcomings in others.

More than ever in these days of high speed and great tension is it necessary to have the calm poise and self-control which comes from a deeply grounded faith in the promises of God.

The time is at hand for the trial of the faith of each of us. If possible, the very elect will be deceived. Unless we have a deep and strong ideal on which our faith is based, we may find it gone when the crisis comes to us. And our fall may weaken the faith of others, so that our responsibility toward each other is more far-reaching than we realize. The church has not attained its goal. As compared with the constantly increasing demand on it, there are indications of failure in many ways, yet through it all our faith must shine steadily on, for we have the assurance, verified from innumerable sources, that when we have done all we can as individuals—but not until then—God will intercede for us.

When we think of the insufficiency of the branch, when we review the apparent failures of the stake, when we wonder if the church is ever going to arise and take her proper place, we must invariably come back to our individual selves and realize that none of these can rise higher than the individuals who go to make them up. When we have developed our faith to where it should be, we can not only move mountains and change the course of rivers, but we can hope to be a strongly moving factor among the children of God.

---

CHRISTMAS OFFERING

---

The Blue Stepping Stones recently published, has taken but little over nineteen pages for offerings of over $90,000. That is over $4,500 per page. In 1888, one page of the Zion's Hope was used, and the total offering was $154.

We have seen it grow steadily to $1,000, then to $2,000, and so on to $10,000. For 1916 the Blue Stepping Stones published in 1917, showed $12,000.

There is not only the increased amount to be considered, but also the fact that the Blue Stepping Stones, a few years ago, took sixty-four pages to print, at a cost of about $15 to $16 per page, which had to be paid by the church; that is, the receipts were less than $200 a page, and it cost about eight per cent to print.

Now, it will be noticed, while many more are contributing, two lines suffice for the Independence Sunday school, $2,482.26, and the same is true of other Sunday schools. The result is, that with seven times as large a collection, it is taking less than one third as much space. That means that the net Christmas offering to the church is so much more, and the percentage taken for printing is only a fraction of one per cent. This is more important now, since the cost of paper and ink has so largely increased.

For the coming year, the Bishopric has set for our effort the raising of funds to provide homes for the poor. The debt is paid, and we move out for constructive work. Surely everyone wishes to assist in this splendid effort to build up Zion as a place of brotherly cooperation. The year is half gone. What have we accomplished? S. A. B.

---

HERBERT S. SALISBURY

---

A brief sketch of the work of Herbert S. Salisbury during the past year, should prove of interest to our readers. Brother Salisbury is a grandson of Catherine Salisbury, who was a sister of Joseph the Martyr. He has been active in the work of church history for several years. His grandmother taught him much of the history of the early church in his childhood.

Like others, his college and university work was taken under the hindrances of poverty and opposition from others, so that he had to work his way through. He is a graduate from Carthage College and has recently taken his masters' degree. He is also a member of several of the leading historical and colonial societies, and has been very active and successful in having our history correctly stated in different State histories and historical journals, magazines, and newspapers. He has written valuable articles on our church history, and has taken much interest in securing correct data to furnish other historians.

He has been honored many times by those well acquainted with him, holding county office in Hancock County, Illinois, being first of the Saints to hold office since the exodus from Nauvoo. Though he was known to fellow students as a Latter Day Saint, he still was honored by them and also by historical and colonial societies.

During his occupancy of the office of assistant historian, many rare and valuable books were collected, which have been turned over to the church historical library, on his relinquishing that office. His research work will be continued as opportunity offers, as his interest is in church history. In the near future a short history of the church, begun the previous year will probably be completed and printed.

S. A. B.

---

GOOD WORD FOR THE SANITARIUM

---

Following is an extract from a private letter written by a sister whose companion passed away at the Sanitarium. Occasionally some one who has visited the Sanitarium becomes dissatisfied and circulates bitter and unjust criticisms concerning the institution. Almost universally, however, those who have come to the Sanitarium in distress go away with a good memory and good words for the institution, and the physicians and nurses thereof. It is only fair that occasionally such should be heard from.

"My Dear Little Auntie: What is this I hear, you down sick? But oh, thank God for the Sanitarium and the blessed ones who minister there. To me it was the sweetest place I found during all those weeks of anxiety, in no place did I find the comfort and peace that I found there, for they gave relief to H—— and lifted so much of the burden from me. If the nurses who attend you are as sweet and lovely and gentle as ours were—you will want to keep them for your own girls forever and ever. I wish I had means to bestow upon them some gift. And the doctors, why, Doctor Messenger is a treasured memory. Tender and sympathetic and, well, just "God-blessed" that's all. If ever I get ill enough to deserve it I hope they will take me there—and I've saved Sister Laura Mann up for the last of my expressions—she is a bona-fide, absolute, really for true Latter Day Saint. Good to know and a tonic to think about. I'd like to see her this moment right there by my dearest of little aunts. Of course, I'd have to be there to see you both and then I'd see the rest. Miss Neff, Miss Ganver, our own girls they are, and Miss Simpson and McLain. Oh, dear, I guess I'd love to see them all. Now, I must go. God bless you. And if your guardian angel has ever neglected you those white capped nurses will make that angel ashamed, the way they will care for you. Blessings on you."

---

SOME SOCIAL UNREST

---

There are some who apparently think that in socializing industry we shall be relieved of the necessity to work or at least the larger part of that necessity. The large gains of the few blind them to the fact that the sum in the aggregate is not so large when divided up.

A national income of fifty billion, divided equally to every man, woman, and child, would give nearly five hundred dollars a year to each or twenty-five hundred to a family of five. If all worked half so long there would be half as much produced and ready to be divided.

It is worthy of serious thought. Especially as we find a similar attitude of several towards Zion and consecration. In some miraculous way we are to get much without effort—work half time and everyone live in luxury.

But that does not appear to be a sound basis for proceeding. We cannot have what is not produced. Also, we read:

Thou shalt not be idle; for he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer.—Doctrine and Covenants 42:12.

And again, verily I say unto you, that every man who is obliged to provide for his own family, let him provide and he shall in no wise lose his crown; and let him labor in the church. Let every man be diligent in all things. And the idler shall not have place in the church, except he repents and mends his ways.—Doctrine and Covenants 75:5.

And the inhabitants of Zion, also, shall remember their labors, inasmuch as they are appointed to labor, in all faithfulness; for the idler shall be had in remembrance before the Lord. Now, I, the Lord, am not well pleased with the inhabitants of Zion, for there are idlers among them; and their children are also growing up in wickedness; they also seek not earnestly the riches of eternity, but their eyes are full of greediness.—Doctrine and Covenants 68:4.

We hold strongly for social cooperation. The laborer is worthy and should have his just dues. Every man should bear his share of the burden, and receive his share of the reward, or wealth produced. The plan for Zion is the best system by far that we know of, and should bring success and righteous wealth, in a sane way.

S. A. B.

---

Would you think of asking an angel, "Where are you descended from?" What difference does it make where you are descended from? What matters is, "Where are you ascending to?"—William Quayle.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

THE OUTLOOK---Part 5 Retro-, Per-, and Prospective

BY COLUMBUS SCOTT

THE TIME OF THE GREAT LATTER-DAY WORK IDENTIFIED

Following the introduction of this wonderful work of God in "the eleventh hour," two wonderful facts are used by the prophets of old to identify the time of its introduction and accomplishment.

These two facts are, First: the restoration of the early and latter rains to Palestine, and the gathering of the children of Abraham, Jacob, Israel, and Judah to the land given to them for their patrimony, by "an everlasting covenant." (See Genesis 17: 6-8; 15: 18-21; Deuteronomy 11: 23, 24; Psalm 105: 7-15.)

After the Savior visited Judah, A. D. 30 to 33, and offered them the gospel and they rejected it as a people, and had him slain, not long after—72 A. D.—their government was destroyed, and they have to this time, been detained among the Gentiles (Matthew 23: 35-37; Luke 24: 28), till the end of the Gentile times. What more could the God of Abraham do for his vineyard, Israel, than to have sent their Messiah unto them to tell them what to do? The land was to be trodden down, laid waste. "I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it." (Isaiah 5: 1-6.) This has literally been fulfilled.

For some 1,800 years was Palestine a barren waste in general, and its children scattered among the Gentile nations. But in 1846 to 1853 A. D. the early and latter rains were restored. We could give multiplied historical evidences of this, but it is so well known by society generally, that this is quite useless here.

Palestine was under the curse of waste and drouth, but this has been removed by the divine hand in harmony with the divine plan.

Some of the children of Israel have since settled—colonized their fatherland, and have lived and died there.

God says Israel shall again possess their land and indicated to Jeremiah the prophet, that it would be at a day when conditions in our world would be in human affairs, as never before; "Alas for that day is great, so that none is like it: it is even the time of Jacob's trouble. But he shall be saved out of it." (Jeremiah 30: 1-7.)

Isaiah, the prophet, was inspired of God to portray in graphic terms the leading outlines of the great work of God in the last days, even "the eleventh hour" work. Indeed, though so highly inspired as to be constituted the evangelical prophet, he calls the work "a marvelous work and a wonder."

He first calls our attention to the final overthrow of the house of Judah, and the destruction of Jerusalem. (Isaiah 29: 1-6.) And in verses seven to ten, his attention is directed to the Gentiles, and their condition—civil and religiously, that hold the children of Abraham in captivity on down through the centuries to "the last days," noting their religiously divided conditions, and the fear of God being taught "by the precepts of men, being without inspired and divinely authorize teachers to lead them in the way of gospel truth; no living prophets and seers; and for nearly nineteen hundred years, with no divine revelation from God to direct them, until, as saith the word, divinity "hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes; the prophets and your rulers, the seers hath he covered." (Verse 10.)

We here request serious investigation, and investigators to open the pages of religions of the fifth to the nineteenth centuries, but especially of the last five hundred years. Note the religious controversies; the differing religious organizations! But do not be discouraged now. Religious divisions are not gospel Christianity. (John 17: 11-21; 1 Corinthians 12: 12-18. Read again Ephesians 4: 1-7.)

I am taught that God has not given to man any revelation along religious lines since he spoke to John on the isle of Patmos, about 94 to 96 A. D. Where then is the divine wisdom and authority to organize again; and direct the church since that time? Where is the "one body" of Christ that has the Holy Ghost as its life and guide? Where it is, there is no schism—division, there. (John 16: 7-15.) "The body without the spirit is dead." (James 2: 26.)

The unity of Christ's followers is so essential with God, that the faith of the world, in him, is based on this. (John 17: 20-23.) But Isaiah says: "They are drunken, but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink." (Isaiah 29: 9.)

So vividly this latter-day religiously confused and divided condition continues, that the prophet declares while viewing it prophetically: "And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed." (Verse 11.)

The wise men without God's aid cannot extricate themselves from their divided state. The confusion is unreadable to them as the sealed book. Hence: "And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee; and he saith, I am not learned." (Verse 12.)

But the book was read by the unlearned—one to whom the Lord could reveal himself. As the sealed book is a mystery till read—understood, so divided religious conditions cannot save the world. Human wisdom when substituted for the gospel is foolishness. (1 Corinthians 1:29.) Paul was educated enough to know this. He was a truly educated man. God could speak to him. The sealed book was left in the hands of the unlearned, by the Prophet Isaiah, and by him was it read (see verse 18), and because of the Lord's marvelous work, the eyes of the blind (religiously) shall see out of the darkened condition and come to the Lord's light. Wise, honest men have given to the world their religious efforts, but God chose the unlearned young man, Joseph Smith, whom he could teach, through whom to introduce "the eleventh hour" work. He was willing to labor as God directed, as did John the Baptist, and the apostles anciently. (Acts 4:2-13; and verses 18-20.)

No flesh was to glory before the Lord in his work. So in 1830, Isaiah continues:

Wherefore the Lord said, Forasmuch as this people draw near to me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men: Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder; for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid.—Isaiah 29: 12, 13.

The restoration of "this gospel of the kingdom," the definite sign of "the end of the world," the reinstatement of the church as of old, and the translation of the Book of Mormon, surely is "a marvelous work and a wonder!" Before it human wisdom alone has gone, and is going down, in relation to the great work of "the eleventh hour," religiously considered; and the work has stood the test since 1827 to 1830—over eighty years now.

The sealed book, now unsealed, has been speaking to men's understanding since 1830 A. D. It alone tells us of the original settlements of ancient America, with two or three civilizations—civilized peoples, the first from the Tower of Babel, about 2,200 years before the birth of Christ, the other from Jerusalem, Palestine, 600 B. C. (See Genesis 11: 4-9; Deuteronomy 32: 8, 9; Psalm 37: 1-7.)

And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us; For in him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain also of your own poets have said, For we also are his offspring.—Acts 17: 26-28.

According to Moses and Paul, God "willed" and "appointed" and determined that man should dwell on this Western, as well as on the Eastern Continent—even all "the whole earth." Are they not dwelling on all the face thereof? The second settlement made on this Western Continent was Jewish, B. C. 600. A descendant of Joseph. (See Genesis 49: 22-26.)

Joseph's prophetic blessing gave to his descendants a land beyond the sea, "the wall" of the earth, where also they were to become a multitude of nations in the midst of the earth. Here their patrimony extended to "the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills" and mountains; America is rich with gold, silver, and the other ores; commercial highway streams and lakes traverse this land. Palestine has not one navigable river. Its mountains never yielded a pound of gold or silver or steel. All Israel became but two nations in all the Old World. (Ezekiel 37: 22; Jeremiah 31: 31-34.) Judah and Israel (Jeremiah 33: 24), Manasseh's descendants, found such a land as this to be their landed estate, as predicted by Joseph, and Moses—when delivering their respective prophetic blessing on Joseph's posterity. (Genesis 49: 22-26; Deuteronomy 33: 17.) America is in "the midst" or middle of the earth. (Genesis 49: 16.) Examine a world chart as to the latitude of America.

The sealed book of Isaiah 29 has been read—translated. It agrees with the prophetic statements of both Jacob and Moses as before cited. Its history covers more than one thousand years of Israel's history in America. Their prophets taught them "holiness of life," and the gospel, as Christ came to the "other sheep" found here, and not of the fold at Jerusalem. (John 10: 14-16.) "Other sheep I have." He was not sent to the Gentiles personally; he had no sheep among the Gentiles at that time. (Matthew 15: 24.) Some of its prophecies are in process of fulfillment. We cite one and connectives. It cannot be denied as to its truth. It was given on this land more than five hundred years B. C., and relates to the time subsequent to the coming of the Gentiles to America in 1492. It reads:

But behold, this land, saith God, shall be a land of thine inheritance; and the Gentiles shall be blessed upon the land. And this land shall be a land of liberty unto the Gentiles; and there shall be no kings upon the land, who shall raise up unto the Gentiles. And I will fortify this land against all other nations; and he that fighteth against Zion, shall perish, saith God; for he that raiseth up a king against me, shall perish. For I the Lord, the King of heaven, will be their king; and I will be a light unto them forever, that hear my words. Wherefore, for this cause, that my covenants may be fulfilled, which I have made unto the children of men, that I will do unto them while they are in the flesh, I must needs destroy the secret works of darkness, and of murders and of abominations.—Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 7: 17-22.

No king to be raised up by the Gentiles on the land of America. Remember the effort of Don Pedro of Portugal, in the United States of Brazil, along about 1835-1840; and in Mexico, Napoleon and his cousin Maximilian, around 1866-1868 A. D. Is this land a land of liberty unto the Gentiles?

But the foregoing prophecy is so plain that further comment is unnecessary. So we may proceed. In our next chapter we will group some events herein referred to under the head, "God's marvelous work and a wonder."

(To be continued.)

A FEW THOUGHTS FOR PASTORS

Presiding over bodies of people is the most uncertain of all vocations. Men are constantly changed in this particular line of endeavor. Solomon said, "When the righteous are in authority, the people rejoice; but when the wicked beareth rule, the people mourn."

When men have presided over governments by common consent, and held the confidence of the people, that nation has always been looked upon as a progressive nation; but when kings hold governmental reins, by unfair methods, there seems to be a greater chance to lose the confidence of their subjects. We can only say that failure has followed as a result of such presiding. While the means by which they held their position might not be altogether the thing that caused failure, yet it tends in that direction.

While men preside over large companies and hold their position by financial advantage, it is quite noticeable that they cannot give to their subjects the same helpfulness as he who holds the right to preside from true merit, and has been chosen by the consent of the body.

Individuals who preside over benevolent bodies (speaking of churches and religious societies), are changed more than any other officers. It is quite common to see changes in from three months to two years. No doubt the reason the Lord gave the common consent privilege was because he knew how quick weak man was to lose the spirit of charity (without which none can assist in the Lord's work), and give way to conscientious (no doubt) impositions.

While it is true that one man could not bring unity to a body, it is equally true that any act upon the part of the presiding officer has more to do with progression, stagnation, "rejoicing" or "mourning" than any other connected with the group.

The text of scripture above quoted cannot apply but in a general way. But it reveals a principle or rule which is applicable to organizations of human societies.

Inasmuch as the people are to rejoice under the authority of the righteous, we naturally expect that a progressive branch will be happy and enthusiastic, and where such is not the case, the causes are one of several things: The presiding officer is not occupying according to his calling, or not living worthy of the spirit of the office. If the former be true, the mourning of the people will not be necessarily the fault of him who presides. Is it not true that a responsible leader will rid the body of wicked, unrighteous characters, that the congregation might not suffer?

We might mention a few causes for failure. Some do not adapt themselves to the problems that confront the people; but have special lines of thought that particularly interest themselves, without regard to those things that interest the people. All people are looking for suggestions of helpfulness (unless too conceited), and when they can get such from one whom they know gives it because he senses their need, then the response will be at least confidence in the one who thus tries to help them. Confidence is one of the things that must exist between pastors and their congregations if success follows their work. A forced or mechanical effort to do work will never do. It must come from a deep interest in the one that is to be helped. Most all people can feel and understand the real attitude of another. If it is that of love, they then respect and are quite willing to be led; and if indifference there is emptiness which may develop into "mourning."

In a private letter from Liberty Jail, written by Joseph the Martyr, he gives some very pointed suggestions, as was printed in The Millennium Star 17: 342; also in the Manual of the Priesthood, page 103. And while these things were given to the priesthood in general, they should particularly apply to those who preside:

If there are any among you who aspire after their own aggrandizement and opulence, while their brethren are groaning in poverty and laboring under sore trials and temptations, they cannot be benefited by intercessions of the Holy Spirit.

This only suggests to us that the revelations given to the church in the early thirties, dealing with this high order of life, calculated in its nature when applied to bring the temporal salvation of those "poverty stricken" and "tempted ones," should be dealt with and taught by pastors, that hope and faith might increase and as a result good works.

No power or influence can or ought to be maintained by virtue of the priesthood only by persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness, by meekness, and by love unfeigned without hypocrisy, and without guile; reproving with sharpness when moved upon by the Holy Ghost, and afterwards showing an increase of love towards him whom thou hast reproved lest he esteem thee to be his enemy, so that he might know that thy faithfulness is stronger than the cords of death. Let thy soul be filled with charity, and virtue guide thy thoughts unceasingly, then shall thy confidence wax strong in the presence of God, and the doctrines of the priesthood shall distill upon thy soul as the dews from heaven, thy scepter shall be an unchanging scepter of righteousness, the Holy Ghost shall be thy constant companion, thy dominion shall be an everlasting dominion, the ends of the earth shall inquire after thy name, fools shall have thee in derision, hell shall rage against thee, while the pure in heart, the wise, the noble and the virtuous shall seek counsel, authority, and blessings constantly under thy hands.

If one possessing these beautiful, Christlike graces could have the "ends of the earth," inquire after their name, what is to be said of us if we fail in our work as pastors? Too often we do not possess enough of these characteristics to hold the confidence of the people but a short time. We believe it is too often the case that the president of the branch is at fault when unity is lacking. The writer of this article makes no claim of measuring up to this high standard; but to stimulate thought is the object of the effort. We often hear young men say, What shall we take up in life? The crying need of the times in the church and the world as well, is for men that can preside.

Selfishness is a barrier to man in whatever he undertakes. He that is free from this monster can claim the trophies when it comes to this line of endeavor. We hope and trust that the young men of the church can sense the wide field of opportunity. A pastor free from selfishness can possess the Holy Spirit, and under its influence he can wield the most powerful tool ever placed in the hand of man (that of charity). By its power he can assist in breaking down the fortifications of the Devil, and assist in bringing the full accomplishment of the kingdom of God. He, indeed, occupies a place of trust in assisting fallen man back to his Creator, to occupy in a place prepared from the beginning, the "celestial kingdom of God."

WILBER F. YATES.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE SOCIAL ASPECT OF THE CHURCH

[On June 18, we printed in our department Of General Interest extracts from the following article, as was printed in the Utah Labor News of May 17. We are reproducing here the full manuscript which came to our hands after the former publication, thinking our readers would be interested in reading the original in full. The author is Elder John W. Rushton.—EDITORS.]

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has, from its beginning in 1830, been interested in the application of the Christian aspects of life. (And while it is true that there is but little to show that it is concrete, and that little unpretentious, yet it is encouraging to be able to point to a church organization which includes in its essential theories the extension to the economic, industrial, and social affairs the same principle and dynamics which are applied to the individual life in its effort to win a future heaven. It is decidedly refreshing to the student of these important departments to find a people who have attempted the difficult task of urging people to believe in God and indorse a religious philosophy for reasons other than those individualistically prudential.)

With more and more clarity we are beginning to appreciate the fact that life is not a dessicated association of nonrelated interests, and that we cannot successfully think of dividing it into separate compartments. But, that all the varied days' work and experiences, whether physical, mental, or spiritual are intimately related to each other; and indeed frequently, if not always, identical in their bearing upon character and destiny. The time, place, and the manner of life, together with the educational, cultural, and religious influences are important factors in contributing to the sum total of character wherein lies the secret of "destiny." While it may be true that the church cannot become the instrument of politics, industry, and commerce directly, and as a matter of fact it seems that every time she did so, or attempted it, the church was in serious trouble, yet together with the home and the school, the church is one of the great and primary agents in the development of character, the modifications in environment, and the generating of activities making altogether for better societal conditionings. It is just as true that when the church tried to divorce herself from the things which were near and real to the life of men, she was not only worthless but became an actual menace to the public weal. (For if it is true of the individual that "if a man says he loves God and shuts up the bowels of compassion against his brother, how doth the love of God dwell in him?"; it must still be a darker and more hopeless problem when the organization of lovers of God are in their organized capacity indifferent to and separated from the life of their fellows.)

A casual reading of the Old Testament shows that organized religion aimed to establish a commonwealth in which the concept of God, the relationship of the person to his God, and all that belonged to that condition whether philosophy or ritualism or institution would regulate if not control communal developments of the national life. It was the dream of the Old Testament people and the leaders to make Jerusalem the universal metropolis from out of which the prevailing ideals and customs of life would emanate.

It was also true of the New Testament, and the "kingdom of God" was apparently the raison d'etre and also the objective of the Christ's message and mission. To the Master, salvation was a term which meant much more than merely personal preparation for heaven. It was a very practical thing and included the reactions for goodness, justice, and truth which an individual Christian would set up in the community in which he lived. Even the judgment was interpreted by him to be an investigation by God of the way in which our alleged Christianity had resulted in the alleviation of human misery, the abolition of hunger and poverty, together with the heroic devotion of ourselves to the uplift of our fellows from the slough of despond into which they had sunken. From out of these teachings the apostles and preachers of the primitive church gathered their ideal of communism and even echatology; and our New Testament closes with the vision of the Mystic who as prisoner on the Isle of Patmos saw the New Jerusalem, the city of God wherein there was no longer the night, the tears, the sighing, nor the vices of the old times.

The Latter Day Saints from the beginning have been greatly interested in this aspect of the Christian hope, and have persistently preached a "literal Zion" upon the earth, which would have its beginning at Independence, Missouri, and widening out more and more, until the whole earth should be filled with the "glory of God." To these people, the kingdom of heaven also meant the literal organization of men and women, who, accepting the Christian ethic as the rule of conduct, would bring the collective life under the immediate control of God.

While the Bible is, of course, the chief and ultimate standard of appeal, the book of Doctrine and Covenants is particularly the textbook governing the policies of the modern church; and, whatever may be said of the alleged revelations which Joseph Smith claimed to have had contained therein, it is significant in these days of economic and social stress, that they deal less with theology and ecclesiastical matters than with moral, economic, and social principles making for improvement in the societal conditions. To remove the curse of poverty and resultant hardships by giving to all men equal opportunities so that each would be all and do all for the communal weal, to impress the wealthy with the truth that they were "stewards" and should use their means, opportunities, and powers to insure the greatest happiness to the greatest number, and not for their own ends or selfish purposes. This was the purpose of the teaching of "consecration," by which was meant, the individual should voluntarily give to the church all over and above his needs for himself, family, and business, to be applied where there may be deficiencies, under the superintendency of the Bishopric. The "tithing" meaning the voluntary paying of ten per cent of the net increase, which together with the "freewill offerings" and "oblations" would create a fund from out of which there would be relief to those who were embarrassed by poverty, the payment of the executive salaries, the expenses of propaganda, etc., as well as the development of ways and means through which there may be established an industrial and economic environment favorable to the ideals of the institution.

This, of course, is the merest outline of the policy and does not pretend to explain details.

While it is true that the several attempts made to realize the ends in view may not have produced any revolutionary results, yet at least it is sure that the people have become saturated with the idea of socialized religion and have made some heroic progress to give concrete expression thereto.

Herewith we present some of the actual results in a very general manner, the value of which is not to be measured in the acreage of land, not the amount of dollars controlled, nor in the number of enterprises established, but rather in the fact that men and women are visioning the possibilities of church life, fructifying in the common gardens of labor and industry. For it is still true that what man can dream of they have the power to be.

At the present time an auxiliary order consisting of church members called by the rather antiquated and possibly pretentious name of "The Order of Enoch" because of the tradition that Enoch's people were pure in heart, and no man considered what he had was his own, so that there was not any poor because no man was rich, is the agency through which the efforts to apply the religious principles to economics and industry is being made. A large tract of land has been secured on the outskirts of Independence, Missouri, and this has been parceled out and people who wish to secure a home of their own can do so under terms and conditions much more equitable and easier than any other way. For there is not any profit being made by the order or any person associated with it. Besides, people who may be in need or in poverty, through circumstances which they could not well control, are treated not only benevolently and charitably by having immediate relief, but the object is to place all who are in need into a position of self-help. It is admittedly a serious problem to avoid the tendency to pauperization by employing the usual methods of charity. To secure present relief from the pressure of poverty at the sacrifice of manhood is too big a price to pay, but to try and neutralize the difficulties which so many have to endure because of the uncertain conditions of the labor world to-day by encouraging commercial and industrial pursuits in a true cooperative sense, in which the community will finance those who can prove they are worthy and lend the protection and prestige of the many to foster the interests of men and companies until they can get upon their own feet and so become assets in the collective life, is a task worthy of attempting under the aegis of Christianity. To provide opportunity to all to secure a home and then to engage in the business to which each may be accepted so that each may be and do his best for the social well-being is the admitted task before the social group of to-day.

The method of raising the means is simple. First, those who are able and willing make their donations to the order, much or little as they may be disposed, and then those who have been assisted to secure either home, business, employment, or an education, consider the assistance advanced not as a gift, but as a loan, and they in their turn will pay into the treasury according to their means, and will keep the income of the order in such condition that the work of the economic and social redemption may be continued.

It may be objected that this is very Utopian and too sentimental. But after all it is the common stuff out of which our modern credit is developed. The abiding faith in the good-will and honor of men is our chief asset and without which there could not be any so-called standard of values.

So far as the church is concerned, it is the purpose of the Presiding Bishopric, the financial department of the church, to cultivate in the consciousness of the people the idea of "stewardships"; by which is meant in a liberal sense, that whatever means, business, employment, or profession any may have or be engaged in will be regarded not as an instrument for securing personal gains or ends, but rather as the "ministry" through which service on behalf of the mass may be rendered. The good and well-being of the community will be the first consideration, and not the enrichment of self or the providing of a fortune for the family will be characteristic. This is not as Quixotic as it would have seemed before the fateful August of 1914, when the world was plunged into the tragedy of this terrific war, for through the fire, vapor, smoke, and blood, we are seeing the steady and even rapid translation of this principle from the abstract to the concrete, especially in Great Britain, as well as in the United States.

What has been and is being accomplished is more impressive for what is promised and portended than for the actual and immediate, which is also the statesmanlike way of evaluating things and persons as well as enterprises.

Already, however, many have been assisted to find a way for themselves through the mazes of the economic and industrial problems. Some as individuals or groups according to ability and opportunity, have been given starts in various businesses, some in manufacturing, some in mechanical ventures, others in retail stores, and others in securing professional or academic courses, and again others have engaged in grocery and provision supplies, and others in agriculture, coal mining, and even extending to light and power plants for municipal demands, and all of these with the idea of ministering for the good of the societal whole first, rather than because of what Ruskin calls the "fee." Wages, dividends, and interests under this scheme become to be regarded as "honorarium" in the highest and most ethical sense.

Already there are striking examples of what can be accomplished by the application of the religious principle of brotherhood to these every-day and commonplace affairs of life, which in their way are not different to the spirit and sacrifice of those who under pressure of the war are doing precisely the same sort of thing. Surely we cannot consent to the idea that humanity can only be noble, generous, and great in times of war and not maintain that grandeur of character and nobility of purpose in the ways of peace!

There are those who have given up opportunities of making name and fortune in the ways of advanced professions, those who have sacrificed the calls from various commercial pursuits and lucrative positions in public and working on an actual and real minimum of wage "according to just wants and needs" have devoted themselves to the safeguarding of the community in times of peculiar stress and strain. When others would take advantage of fortuitous circumstances to victimize the consumers because they believed that there was no way out, then this method of self-help was able to interpose its defensive arm and save to the people not only money but the very supplies which were threatened.

In this brief sketch there is much that must be unsaid perforce, but this must not be allowed to escape our attention: in the very nature of things, the success of the enterprise depends more upon the spirit of the members and the cultivation of the sense of interdependence of each unitary part rather than upon either rules or mechanism. For in all such cooperative methods it must be remembered the union of persons motivated by this high spirit of service for others is more than union of means; and only insofar as men are loyal to the cause and the principles for which the cause stands can the movement be triumphant.

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

When folks have life and don't dream, they live where they stay. That's a calamity. Don't live where you stay, even if one stays in jail he doesn't have to live there. I once knew a Baptist who did something and was put in jail. Jail isn't a good place, not even for a Baptist, but he didn't stay there; his soul wasn't there; it was up among the stars, visiting with the angels.—William Quayle.

SOILING THE NAME OF GENTLEMAN

The word gentleman in both England and America is loosely used and misapplied. In England it is used mainly in reference to persons occupying a certain rank or station and a claim to the title is not based on merit. There are more gentlemen in America where class cleavage counts for less, and it has come to be regarded as a kind of insult to say or imply that a man is not a gentleman.

An interesting definition of a gentleman was given by Cardinal Newman. A gentleman, Newman says in substance, is a man who never inflicts pain consciously or intentionally. He is a man who never forgets the kind of company he is in, who always adapts himself to that company and who seeks to make that company, whether it be one person or a score, perfectly at ease and at home. The gentleman warms the company like a good fire, he keeps himself in the background, never thrusts his ideas forward or seeks to impose them upon others.

If he argues, he does not hack and haw, but cuts clean, and makes his points prevail without a show of dominance. He throws himself into the mind of the person near him, anticipates his words and helps to present them clearly. He never tries to replace argument with noise. The gentleman is merciful toward the timid, forbearing toward the haughty, and absolutely unmoved at the confusion and clatter of the rude. The gentleman is at home anywhere and in any company and, so far as is humanly possible, makes everyone about him feel equally at ease.

This ideal of conduct is not at all impossible. In fact, it is as much of a reality as it is an ideal, because there are men everywhere who live in all sincerity the part of a gentleman. But there are many more, it cannot be said how many, who not only do not live the part, but who make no approach at living it. Yet these would be greatly offended as not being ranked as gentlemen.—Selected.

THE MILLENNIAL CITY

(Extract from an article in The National Geographic Magazine, June, 1919, by Ralph A. Graves.)

Whether the league of nations proves a will-o'-the-wisp, leading peoples into a morass of war-breeding misunderstandings, or the beacon guiding them into the paths of perpetual peace, Geneva, its capital, will be known henceforth as the Millennial City. If the league succeeds, the Swiss municipality will become the city set on a hill, the center of a man's moral universe.

Viscount Bryce has said that there are four cities that belong to all men rather than to any one nation—cities that have influenced the whole world or round which its history has at one time or another revolved; cities in which students and philosophers from every country are equally interested. To these four—Jerusalem, Athens, Rome, and Constantinople—must now be added Geneva.

Jerusalem gave to the western civilization its religion. Athens was our great preceptress in liberty, literature, and art. Rome was the mother who gave us our laws and to most of us our language, while the power of her political and ecclesiastical institutions still sways half the globe. Constantinople, after the sacking of Rome, became the preserver of civilization, was the birthplace of the Justinian Code, the seat of an empire for fifteen hundred years, and the link between the waning glories of the Orient and the growing splendors of the Occident. Geneva now becomes the fountainhead of what might be either the most noble triumph or the most colossal failure in the history of human endeavor.

A HALF-WAY HOUSE BETWEEN BELLIGERENTS DURING THE WAR

Seated serenely on both banks of the River Rhone, where it leaves the limpid waters of Lake Geneva as a placid stream, in contrast to the muddy turbulence of its ingress at the other end of the lake, Geneva is not the metropolis of the miniature Republic of Switzerland, for Zurich surpasses it in population by fifty per cent and Bern is the capital. But it is doubtful whether before the world war any other city of its size was visited annually by as many tourists, for it was the main gateway into the world-famous "playground of Europe."

During the European conflict many of the finest Swiss hotels, which in seasons past have entertained thousands of Americans, suffered greatly for lack of wealthy patronage, and the federal government found it advisable to come to their financial relief by passing an ordinance extending the time for payment of interest on mortgages.

Other hostelries, however, were as crowded during the four years of horror and bloodshed as are the fashionable caravansaries of New York during Horse Show and Automobile Show weeks. But it was a kind of patronage different from any to which Geneva had catered since the days of the Reformation. Refugees from the belligerent countries flocked here, and thousands of interned soldiers were fed and housed by the government at a contract price, the country to which the soldier belonged reimbursing the Swiss.

Here, too, assembled the propagandists of every creed and complexion. Geneva, and in fact all Switzerland, fairly seethed with plot and counterplot, as agents and spies trafficked in military secrets and in the honor of foreign public officials. Here the nascent nations of middle Europe organized their bureaus of publicity and sent forth their pleas for recognition. Thus the republic became the busy halfway house between the belligerent forces.

THE STAFF

Edited by ARTHUR H. MILLS
1514 West Short Street, Independence, Mo.

Please Note Change of Our Address

We have found it necessary to return to our former home at Independence, Missouri. Therefore we ask that all who have occasion to address us on matters connected with any of the musical interests of the General Choir Movement or of The Staff, do so at the address below.

Owing to the work incident to moving back to Independence we have been unable to prepare anything for this issue of the Staff. However, we have had sent us some very excellent contributions in the form of clippings, which we will insert. These will serve the double purpose of relieving us in the situation, and also affording some variety in our columns.

We are still as anxious as ever to secure good, pertinent articles and contributions for these columns, and we therefore again urge those so talented to send them in to us at our new address.

As ever, your servant,

ARTHUR H. MILLS, Editor.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 1514 West Short Street.

Post Bellum Music in London

[The following, clipped from the London Daily News of May 10, 1919, is sent to us by Brother John W. Rushton, and it evidences the naturally developing inquiry as to what will be the future of music in the English metropolis now that the people can turn their attention to the arts of peace.

Incidentally, we wish the others of the church's ministry would emulate the example of Brother Rushton, and send us clippings and articles of musical interest to the whole church. We cannot promise to use all of them but many of them, doubtless, will prove of value in stimulating thought and musical development. The ministry of the church should constantly bear in mind that music has ever been the intimate handmaiden of religion and religious development, and the church's servants should constantly seek to employ and advance this most useful and appropriate art.—EDITOR.]

From every point of view, the opening of the opera season at Covent Garden on Monday is by far the most important event of next week. There are certain questions which one cannot help asking oneself—even if one is not in the least high browed—because of the unique circumstances of this season. How has the interval of nearly five years affected the Covent Garden public. Has the lavish supply of opera we have had in the interval satisfied London's appetite for opera, or merely whetted it? Has the public got a new standard? Will it be more exacting in the matter of ensemble? Will it think more than it used to do of mere beauty of voice and singing? Will it think more of the operas performed or the manner of performance? The future of opera in this country will depend largely on the way in which these questions are answered.

10,000 SINGERS IN HYDE PARK

Messrs. Novello have published the music to be sung on Empire Day (May 24) in Hyde Park by Doctor Charles Harris's great choir of 10,000 voices, with the massed Guards' bands. Besides the National Anthems of the Allies, it includes the Old Hundredth, Dyke's "God of our Fathers," the "Hallelujah Chorus," "Jesus, Lover of my Soul," and "O God, our Help in Ages Past." The "Soldier's Chorus" from "Faust," "Wi' a Hundred Pipers," and "The Minstrel Boy," and Arthur Sullivan's "The Homeland," supply the secular element in a program which should have an overwhelming effect, if only the weather is propitious, and if the crowds cast aside their insular diffidence sufficiently to join wholeheartedly in the singing.

A CHAIR OF CHURCH MUSIC

There is no country in the civilized world in which ecclesiastical music has had so wide an influence on the art generally as England. In the opinion of many the emancipation of secular music is not yet complete. Be that as it may, the subject is of great importance, and the suggestion that a chair of ecclesiastical music should be endowed at King's College will be widely supported. An appeal for £12,000 for the purpose is signed by Sir Frederick Bridge, Mr. S. H. Nicholson, Dr. Walford Davies, and many other well-known church musicians, and the names of Doctor H. P. Allen and Sir W. H. Hadow show that the movement has support outside the church.

Remarkable Spread of Interest in Music

The increasing space devoted to music in the editorial columns of the leading papers of the country has a deep significance for one studying the tendency of the times. The war has brought many changes, but few of greater consequence to the people than the clearer understanding of music's value. Henceforth music is to occupy a larger part in the life of every man, woman and child, and the newspapers are showing a recognition of this fact. Otherwise, the Boston Globe, one of the foremost papers in the country, would not have devoted nearly two full columns on its editorial page to the following editorial on the wonderful resources of music:

THE GREATEST SHOW ON EARTH

At the side of the road where we all pass are two gates. One leads into an ordinary circus side show. The other leads into a land of wonder. All the marvel and mystery of the Arabian Nights there comes true. Old folks grow young again and live over their happiest hours. We toss on moonlit tropic seas. We scale majestic mountain summits. We speak with the good and great of past ages. Our dead friends return. Our failures are wiped out. Here we are everything we ever aspired to be. We are demigods striding across the world from peak to peak. . . .

What are those two gates? They are music. One is poor music: a vulgar side show. The other is great music: the illimitable kingdom of the imagination. Why do so many of us waste our time and our money on the side show when the other gate stands wide open and the admission fee is no higher?

IT PAYS TO GET THE BEST

Two forbidding doorkeepers are falsely supposed to bar the way—talent and expense. If they ever did they do no longer. A time may have been when a musical education was necessary to gain access to this treasure house of the human spirit; hours and hours of technical study and money to pay for it. But now machines which worthily reproduce much of the finest music in existence are purchasable by practically anybody willing to go without things less important.

"In getting clothes," we say, "it pays to get the best." They wear longer. The same is true of music. How is the best to be obtained? Quite simply. The appetite for good music is like the appetite for a narcotic; the more you have the more you want. Begin with a few good pieces and you are sure to get more.

This has a scientific explanation. "The ear craves the unnatural interval." That is, commonplace music pleases the first time through because its notes are exactly what we would expect. But repeated often it wearies us. Great music baffles us at first because its notes always do the unexpected. It ends by fascinating us. The oftener we hear it the better we like it. The ear learns to enjoy the "unnatural interval," the unexpected note.

To know this land of magic, therefore, one has only to walk in and keep going. The farther one goes the better it gets.

MOUNTAIN PEAKS OF MUSIC

Here are a few landmarks. Those who scale mountain peaks must first climb foot hills. Music does not have to be opera or symphony to be good or great. The ballads and folk songs which the old folks love, "Sweet Alice Ben Bolt," "Annie Laurie," "All Through the Night," "Old Black Joe," and a hundred others, are genuinely fine music because quite simply and sincerely they express an honest passion—something which the singer has felt deeply and told truly. Some of the modern ragtime tunes have this same quality; they are the beginnings of an American folk music—for all truly great music must begin among the people. The great composers only come later and lick it into shape, the way Robert Burns rewrote Scottish folk poetry.

Then come lively tunes and rousing choruses from the operas of Italian and French masters: Verdi, Donizetti, Rossini, Gounod or Bizet; or from the oratorios of Handel, Mendelssohn or Haydn. Such songs and choruses are easier to enjoy because they usually have a story to tell.

Now we are ready for the mountains. What does the guide book say? This mountain range is French: Saint-Saens, over whose music shines the calm radiance of Gallic order and beauty; Vincent D'Indy, architect of exquisite dream cities, and his old master, Cesar Franck, of whom it might be written, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God"; and Claude Debussy, weaver of shimmering robes of iridescent gossamer, delicate spiderwebs of sound.

Northward tower two Scandinavian peaks, knee-deep in the sea water of great bays and fiords, the Norwegian, Grieg; the Finn, Sibelius.

Eastward, where Asia joins Europe, a range of barbaric grandeur, the Russian composers: Tschaikovsky, whose shouts of triumph and cries of despair awake personal echoes in any human heart; Rimsky Korsakoff, who kidnaps imagination and whisks you away into a world of the Arabian Nights; Borodin, who sets pulses thumping to the wild dances of Tartar tribes; Rachmaninoff, who wraps you in robes of somber grandeur; Moussourgsky, the realist; Scriabine, the poet of ecstasy; Arensky, Glazounoff—the range fades over the horizon.

HEROIC CAREERS

And nearer, towering in Central Europe, proudly aloof from the squalor and turbulence of Imperial Germany, those Alps of music: Bach, Handel, Mozart, Haydn, Beethoven, Schubert, Schumann, Grahms, Liszt, Wagner, Hugo Wolf, Richard Strauss—to name only the loftiest peaks; and out of Poland, as Mount Wauchusett rises from the plains of mid-Massachusetts, the gentle poet of the piano, Frederic Chopin.

To miss having these men for friends and companions is as if one had missed falling in love. They are builders of vast, rich cathedrals of the human spirit into which we may go to worship. They are mighty poets, profound thinkers, and, above all, great men.

Even if one were never to hear a bar of their music, the mere story of their struggles against poverty and oppression builds the fire under one's boiler which generates moral steam. Schubert, so poor his friends had to stake him to his meals and music paper so that his songs could be written; Chopin and Schumann, battling against ill-health and prejudice; Cesar Franck, getting up at five in morning to compose until eight, then setting off on a ten-hour round of music lessons; Beethoven, stricken stone deaf in the height of his career, and only saved from suicide by the imperious necessity of his will to go on creating the mighty music which surged in him; Hugo Wolf, poor, ill, alone, and periodically deserted even by his power to write music; Wagner, battling single-handed against the whole of Europe for fifty years and winning at last. They are heroes. And so heroic were their careers that the barest recital of their lives in an encyclopedia often tells all that need be known.

FRIENDS FOR LIFE

Children brought up under the influence of great music are likely to retain its stamp throughout their lives. All unknown to them, it sets up in their minds a standard of excellence, a dissatisfaction with the second rate. Take a boy reared on the music of Beethoven to a burlesque show, and the mere raucous noise of it revolts him. The companionship of great music can elevate and ennoble a whole life. It is the dream world of childhood; the inspirer of youth; the solace of old age.

Here, at the side of the road where we all pass, is the gate. Within are the heroic friends, the great companions.—Uncle Dudley, in Boston Sunday Globe.

The End of the Navy Yard "Sings"

With a record crowd in attendance and a great burst of enthusiasm, the widely famed League Island Navy Yard Sings came to an end a few days ago with the official termination of Song Director Albert N. Hoxie's work under the Commission on Training Camp Activities. The occasion marked the end of the great chorus's second eventful year and took the form of an ovation to Hoxie, who is one of the outstanding figures in the mass singing movement that has spread so rapidly through the country. So many good results are traceable to the Navy Yard Sings in Philadelphia and so far-reaching has been their influence outside that they will probably be continued under other than War Department auspices.

TWO MILLION PEOPLE REACHED BY HOXIE

About 350,000 men in the service and workers in the shipyard have participated in the sings. This, however, represents but a small fraction of those who have come under Hoxie's leadership, as it does not include the thousands of visitors and relatives who have come to League Island every evening for the past 24 months. Nor does it include the vast number of Philadelphians who come to sing under Hoxie in Hunting Park or anywhere else he may take up his stand. He has led altogether nearly 1,000 sings in stores, factories, clubs, schools, parks and at the Navy Yard in a little more than two years, has reached some 2,000,000 people, and is perhaps the most popular man in the Quaker City.

PHILADELPHIA MUSIC ACTIVITIES INSPIRED BY CHORUS

An offspring of the Navy Yard Chorus, also under the leadership of Hoxie, is the Liberty Chorus of 1,000 picked voices, which has received such thorough training that it has given public performances of "The Holy City," "Stabat Mater," and other oratorios, beside knowing by memory 175 songs.

Among the other musical movements in Philadelphia, whose inspiration if not origin has been the League Island Chorus are the Block Sings, sixteen or twenty of which are sometimes held on a single evening in the city's streets; glee clubs and choruses in a number of the leading mercantile and industrial plants; and Christmas caroling from door to door when the Yuletide season comes around.

A moving picture history of all these activities was given as a feature of the Navy Yards celebration. This exhibit is now traveling through the country.

HOW THE MOVEMENT IS SPREAD

Song books containing the selections dear to the heart of the League Island Chorus have been given as personal gifts from Hoxie to all the service men he has led, and these little echoes from home have traveled in their pockets all over the world. Five thousand of the booklets have recently gone to Siberia. Sunday newspapers in a number of cities have also issued reprints of them to their readers as supplements, and in this way alone over 1,000,000 copies have been distributed. Other newspapers are planning similar action, so that half the families in the country may soon possess copies.

These are some of the ways in which the influence of the League Island Chorus has spread and been a factor in developing that community singing which has become so typically American an institution and so important an element in civic life.

Probably the boys themselves who have been trained in the chorus are the best missionaries of its ideals as they return to their home. They have seen what it did for them while they were in uniform and they want these benefits to reach the home folks too. Is it any wonder that our country is fast becoming the singing nation Walt Whitman dreamed of?

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Before the Ceremony

There now, Maggie, don't you worry
'Bout your dad—don't do it, pet,
Course he's bound to miss his baby,
Miss her lots an' lots, you bet!
But he'll realize she's happy,
Billy's sure to make her so.
There, now Maggie, don't you worry,
Boston ain't so far, you know.

Maggie, honey, daddy's wishin'
Mother could be here to-day;
She just idolized our baby,
An' the night she went away,
'Member how she kissed you, honey,
Told you to be good to dad?
Well, you've done it, Maggie, darlin',
You've made daddy's old heart glad.

There, now Maggie—don't you worry
'Bout your dad—don't do it, dear,
'Twon't be long till you'll be comin'
Back to make a visit here.

Be a good, sweet wife to Billy,
Hush now—bless your little heart!
Dry those tears and do some smilin'
Child, the best of friends must part.

—Selected.

Pray for Guidance

Dear Sisters: I have been tempted several times to write a letter to the woman's department of the HERALD, but refrained because I felt that the responsibilities of items in the department belonged to more active women of the church. Since reading Sister Audentia Anderson's editorial report, however, I am led to believe that all should play a part and not leave the whole responsibility on more willing shoulders.

As I am a mother, perhaps my experience might benefit some who are struggling with problems which seem hard to them. A mother often feels a great responsibility when her child is small, but she will learn the responsibility increases as that child gets older. I believe that every child should be taught to pray that God might direct it in its associations, that it may choose wisely, for a child's life is greatly influenced for good or evil by its associates. In the grave matter of choosing a life companion, many mistakes would be avoided if young people would pray to be guided in their selections. We do not often have wisdom enough, at that tender age, to choose happily for ourselves. Since I was a child I have had this idea, and I believe it was God-given for my protection, for I have been told in later years, that God has led and guided me when I did not realize it. How good, kind, and merciful He has been to me! I cannot praise him enough for what he has done for me!

When I was about eighteen—a foolish age—I almost forgot this idea I had had in childhood, that we should pray for direction as to our companion, and I was about to marry a certain young man. I had never heard anything but good reported of him, and therefore I attempted to decide for myself, as lots of other young people both in and out of the church do every day. A few days before my wedding, I came to my senses, and getting down on my knees, I asked God concerning the matter. In a dream, that very night, he made known to me that the young man would become an enemy to the church.

I went directly to him and told him what God had made known to me, and we parted, although he did not believe me, claiming that I was being misled. I can now exclaim, "Thanks be to God," for while it cost me a struggle at the time, I have been made to see that God was guiding me. That brother is now an enemy to the church, saying evil of it and its people, and is indeed serving a sentence behind prison bars.

Years afterward I met the man who became my husband. He was not my ideal in many ways—was only a plain member of the church, and a discouraged one at that but to-day he is my ideal, for God has used him to bring about his purposes, has called and ordained him into the priesthood, and he is humbly trying to serve his Maker.

So I thank God for his guidance, and I would that every young person in the church would put his complete trust in him, letting him decide these weighty matters for them. Let us teach our children this confidence, and urge them to pray always.

Your sister in bonds,

WINNIE WISMER.

"Somehow or other the chap who suspects everyone of being his worst enemy never thinks of looking in the mirror."

Training Little Children

LET US LIVE WITH OUR CHILDREN

"Come let us live with our children!" What more fitting advice to mothers than this old motto of Froebel's? To live with our children not only makes for their best development, but also develops the best motherhood in us. There would be more happy mothers if all could know the joy and satisfaction there is in living with the children, in sharing their work and pleasure and letting them share ours.

Let the child be with you while you work; let him help you even if he does "hinder" a little. Let him take walks with you. Tell him about the birds, squirrels, rabbits, trees, flowers, and all you see. Encourage him to see even things that you do not see, or if he is not inclined to observe readily, call his attention to the objects of nature, and gradually explain their life to him. He will soon begin to ask questions. Answer every sensible question truthfully—I want to emphasize this point. I have made it a rule to give information when it is asked for, and almost at no other time—at least not until the child shows by some word or act that he is ready for it. The best way to teach a child is to give him truthful answers to his questions. Some one has said, "It makes a vast difference whether the soul of the child is regarded as a piece of blank paper to be written upon, or as a living power to be quickened by sympathy, to be educated by truth."

I remember when my oldest child was about two years old, that in watching the sunset he said, "Mother, where does the sun go when it sets?" I explained to him as well as I could, and then, taking an apple to represent the earth, showed him how the little Chinese children had sunlight when it was dark on our side of the earth. Whenever he talked about it afterward he always said, "After dark the sun is down with the little Chinese children." One day about three years later, he came running home from kindergarten and exclaimed, "Oh, Mother, now I know what you mean by the sun setting." Then he repeated for me the little song, "Good morning, merry sunshine."

"Good morning, Merry Sunshine,
How did you wake so soon?
You've scared the little stars away,
And driven away the moon.

"I saw you go to sleep last night,
Before I ceased my playing;
How did you get 'way over there,
And where have you been staying?"

"I never go to sleep, dear child,
I just go round to see
My little children of the East,
Who rise and watch for me.

"I waken all the birds and bees
And flowers on my way,
And last of all the little child,
Who stays out late to play."

—Eleanor Smith.

Another time, my boy asked the question, "How are the mountains made?" To explain to him I took two apples, setting one in the window and letting it shrivel up, and baking the other at the first suitable opportunity. In showing the baked apple to the children, I pointed out that heat had made it burst out of the skin and that in just this way, the earth, which was hot at the center, erupted into mountains.

With the other apple I showed how the drying of the skin had made ridges, like those on the crust of the earth. Some months later the boy went to visit his uncle, who is a geologist, and when the conversation turned upon mountains, he remembered all I had said, and talked most intelligently on this subject.

On our walks through the woods I do not say, "There is a beautiful tree," but rather, "There is an oak or an elm tree." When they were four or five years old, my children knew all the trees in our suburb, not only by their leaves, but by their bark. In the same way, they have learned about the flowers. Even the baby knows a "robber" (robin).—Mrs. Princess B. Trowbridge, in National Kindergarten Association bulletin.

From a District Organizer

Dear Sisters of the London District: I take this method of writing to you all, to tell you why I have been so inactive since our convention in Saint Thomas last October.

The week following our convention, the "flu" broke out in all its fury, and I left my home, and gave my services to suffering humanity, Brother Tier working, and caring for himself. In January I was called home to the bedside of my dear companion who was stricken down with heart trouble, brought on from the influenza which he had in the September previous, though we thought at the time it was typhoid fever.

From the first of February he sat in a large armchair, night and day, until ten days before he passed away, when he took to bed. I had to give up all my local and district work, to care for my husband through the trying days of his illness, devoting all my time to his needs and comforts. I shall never forget the kindness of the Saints during those days of suffering, mental and physical. They came to my assistance generously, the brothers taking turns sitting up nights, some of the sisters also sharing the vigils. It would do anyone good to see how Brother Tier enjoyed their company, and the knowledge that I was getting some sorely-needed rest.

Now he has gone to his well-earned reward, and I am left, heart-broken and lonely, my eyes blinded with tears as I write. I do not want to murmur or complain at my lot. Those who have been called to pass through a similar trial can really sympathize with me. My faith is unshaken, and remains centered in a loving Father who has never made a mistake, or asked one of his children to shed needless tears.

I know that if I can endure to the end, I shall again meet my beloved companion. The closing scenes of his life were very impressive and beautiful. On Sunday, June 1, the officers brought the sacrament to him and Elder Doty, who was lying in the next room, ill with typhoid fever. Sister Hackey, who nursed him, and I, also, received of the emblems. After the brethren had gone, I sat on the side of my husband's bed and hummed a few tunes from the Zion's Praises. Brother Tier joined in singing, his voice clear and sweet. Sister Hackey also joined us, and we sang Nos. 8, 10, and 137. Then he repeated "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," a saying he repeated frequently during the hours which followed. He slept peacefully away, passing at three p. m., Monday, June 2. He was never happier than when doing something for the church, or God's servants, many of whom stayed with us in London.

Those dear, good days are gone, and I must adjust myself as best I may, to new conditions. I am willing to give my services to the church, and woman's work therein. I am especially interested in the girl movement. At present I feel weak in body, and distressed in mind but hope to be useful soon. Our local auxiliary has shown me much kindness, and the sisters of Saint Thomas, Stratford, and Watertown also sent me letters of sympathy, supporting me by their prayers. I do want to thank you, one and all, for your kind sympathy, and pray that I will be able to live worthy of your confidence and esteem. I will try to visit all of you this summer, and encourage you in your auxiliary work.

Elder Grice, of Crosswell, Michigan, officiated at Brother Tier's funeral service using the quotation, "Eye hath not seen," etc. He was very much blessed with the Spirit while discoursing, many nonmembers present speaking, afterwards, of the wonderful sermon, declaring it to be the best they had ever heard. The many beautiful floral offerings sent from shopmates, employer, and Saints, carried silent messages of peace and comfort, as they spoke of the esteem in which my dear companion had been held.

Dear Sisters, I still need your prayers.

LONDON, ONTARIO, 661 Lome Avenue.

ROSA TIER.

Not Understood

Not understood, we move along asunder,
Our paths grow wider as the seasons creep;
Along the years we marvel and we wonder
Why life is life? And then we fall asleep—
Not understood.

Not understood, we gather false impressions
And hug them closer as the years go by,
'Til virtues often seem to us transgressions,
And thus men rise and fall, and live and die—
Not understood.

Not understood—how trifles often change us,
The thoughtless sentence or the fancied slight,
Destroy long years of friendship and estrange us,
And on our souls there falls a freezing blight—
Not understood.

How many cheerless, lonely hearts are aching
For lack of sympathy—Ah, day by day
How many cheerless lonely hearts are breaking,
How many noble spirits pass away—
Not understood.

Oh, God! That men could see a little clearer
Or judge less harshly where they cannot see—
Oh, God! That men would draw a little nearer
One another, they'd be nearer thee—
And understood.

—Selected.

However unideal it be, it is certain that the great majority of people are restrained by accepted beliefs, by the opinion of society, by the vision of those who have seen for themselves. Nothing is finally secure until everyone believes on personal conviction, whatever others may think, and guides his life by an authority his whole being can accept; but we are not helped on towards that by repudiating all ideals, all social restraints.—W. E. Orchard, in The Outlook for Religion.

Like the permeating leaven which works unseen, or the seed which grows unobserved, the divine Spirit, often without demonstration, renews human hearts and fills them with the life of heaven.—Samuel F. Halfyard, in Cardinal Truths of the Gospel.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

The Christmas Offering

Daily we are receiving some splendid letters from the various schools who are zealously working for a greater offering this year. In a letter received from C. A. Ralston, Christmas offering treasurer of the Wiley, Colorado, Sunday school, we quote the following. "We have an enrollment of 50 members and have set our aim for $365. Last year we raised a little over $250, but we thought with a little extra effort we could make it amount to $1 for each day of the year or a total of $365."

We like the sound of this, for it denotes the proper attitude, and a sincerity combined with earnest efforts are sure to bring about the desired results. Brother Ralston also tells us they have four pigs that have been donated to the offering and that they are going to feed them well so that when they are sold they will bring the largest amount possible. We have great hopes for these pigs and hope they will eat heartily and fatten easily. We are wondering how many more of our members will be willing to donate a pig to their school for the offering cause.

We are forced to again call the attention of the schools to the fact that a number of the schools have not responded and returned the cards which were sent to them early in the year asking for information relative to enrollment, etc., name and address of superintendent and other information. We are also advised that some of the schools have not received clocks and we sincerely hope that if your school is not using a clock that you will ask your superintendent whether or not these clocks had been received and if not will you please write us immediately so that we can see that your school is supplied.

We are very earnestly trying to get clocks into every one of our schools, but we cannot do this without some cooperation from the school. Won't you help us? Don't forget that we are also interested in knowing the progress of your school, write us telling us about the success you are having so that we may spread the enthusiasm to others. We will soon publish a statement showing the schools that have passed the $2.50-per-member mark this year and we desire to hear from every one of the schools, who have not already reported, telling us the date they passed this mark.

Very sincerely,

ARTHUR W. SMITH.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, 2903 Sullivan Avenue.

The Bishopric Advocate
for 1919

Every Member a Tithe Payer

SAVING

Secretary of Commerce, William C. Redfield said: "To win the war we need production and yet again production. This means saving waste of every kind, waste of time, waste of material, waste of money. If this is done in our industries we shall become like manufacturing athletes and that is just the condition in which we shall be best fit to meet the 'after the war' problem."

If this is true to enable us to be politically free it is also true to enable us to be spiritually free. We must save for the Lord just as carefully as for our nation and then pay the Lord what is due him out of our savings which is one tenth—the tithe.

Our Church Societies, Etc.

We seem to be growing a considerable number of societies. If it be wise or otherwise, time will tell, but when we are in the business why not have another one, to be known as the "Pioneer Society"?

Some limit the age at twenty-two years and some at thirty-five years for other societies. If it is good for one age to have a society, why not the pioneers?

If it is wise or otherwise to have so many societies, let us have all that is coming to us. We know it will increase our meetings, if that be wise or otherwise, time will tell.

The pioneer society would have the usual functions in it, such as pioneer prayer meetings, pioneer banquets, and pioneer social promoters, etc.

If it be wise or otherwise for one age to have societies, why not give the pioneers a chance, otherwise it looks selfish to see them minus a society.

Yours for fair play,

J. H. TYRRELL.

CHATHAM, ONTARIO, 197 King Street West.

ORCHARDVILLE, ILLINOIS, July 7, 1919.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I wrote to your pages, and I take this privilege to inform the Saints that I am still alive and in the work, with our noble missionaries, W. H. Kelley, Henry Sparling, and F. L. Sawley. I am glad to report that by the aid of these men and our local force, the work is progressing nicely. I have had the pleasure of visiting a number of places of worship among the Saints, and I find a growing interest.

I note with pleasure the success of our late district conference. Quite a representation was present of the priesthood and in the legislative work. We still look forward for more progress in the future. We have on foot a move for the repairing of the Kinmundy church, which has been idle so long. In visiting that place I find a fine band of Saints who are now willing to furnish means to repair their church, regardless of the cost. Also the Bungay Branch there is contemplating the erection of a new church.

The Brush Creek Branch, of which our worthy Brother William Clements is president, is repairing their church. My home branch, Poplar Creek, has just completed their new church, and will dedicate it Sunday, July 27.

I do not know the whereabouts of Brethren Kelley and Sparling. I would like to have these brethren take notice, and write me.

I also note the reunion which will be at Springerton, August 15 to 24 inclusive. We are expecting our patriarch, Joshua Carlisle, with our missionaries, and all our local force.

In conclusion I will say to the priesthood of all branches, and members also, Be humble and faithful; attend all services in your branches, preaching, prayer meeting, Sunday school, and Religio, and keep the camp fire blazing.

In bonds,

R. H. HENSON.

NORTHWEST VALLEY, DUNEDIN, NEW ZEALAND.

Editors Herald: We are beginning to move along here. We had Brother A. V. Robinson with us for nearly four months and he gave us some grand sermons and advice. He baptized four the day before he left to return to Auckland, and I am pleased to say that the husband of one of the new members is to be baptized to-morrow evening, so we are looking forward to a good meeting. He is a fine fellow, and will be a credit to the branch, and we hope that more will become interested in the angel's message, and so become members of the great kingdom of God.

We are anxiously looking for news of the General Conference, for I believe that big things are about to eventuate for the good of the church.

We have had some grand meetings lately, and the Spirit of God was with us, and if we continue to come together in fasting and prayer, we will have a further outpouring of his Spirit.

I am pleased to see that the work is looking brighter in Toronto, and, according to all reports, you have the right man in the right place. We pray that the work will not be hampered through the actions of one who should have acted differently.

Before we received any details of the above, we all knew where the fault lay, and were astounded to think that he should act as he has, after preaching such powerful sermons and receiving many manifestations. It is an object lesson to us to be ever on the watch lest we stumble also. How we need the united prayers of all to strengthen and keep us in the straight and narrow way.

I did not send in my report last year for the epidemic was at its height, and all our meetings were suspended for a while, but I hope I shall have a good report by the end of this year. I am thankful to say that all the Saints who had the influenza were raised up to health and strength again, and we all feel grateful to God when we think of the many sad cases in our midst. May we continue to move onward and upward until Zion is established in these latter days.

Ever praying for the advancement of this, the greatest work on earth, I remain

Your brother in gospel bonds,

23 Cornhill Street.

J. C. BRADLEY.

IN ACTIVE SERVICE OVERSEAS, June 20, 1919.

Editors Herald: I have been in the service with the U. S. Marines a year now. Little have I done of real worth, and at times I have almost failed to live up to the standard I had set. I found myself sinking step by step, and was beginning to sow my wild oats as it were.

I never did pray much; my thoughts seemed to be on other things than that which was right. True, at times my conscience has hurt me, and I have asked forgiveness, but I have failed to put forth a full effort to live the life God would have me live.

For a while in my military life temptations were not so plentiful as they have been since I have been in France. At first I found a friend, a Christian Scientist in belief. He was a good boy and we became close friends. But while in Virginia, just a few days before time to leave, he got the influenza and failed to get across with us. While with him, every night we would take a walk by ourselves and read our Bibles, and ask the Lord to help us live as he would have us live.

After we were separated, I was lost. There was no one I cared to associate with as closely as I did with him, and until about two months ago I found myself going down. The thing that brought me to my feet again was the taunt of some of the boys. One day when I was doing things I shouldn't, one of the boys said to me, "What would your mother say if she could see you now?" That was enough. I knew what she would say, and I didn't care to have her know.

This set me thinking. If I was doing things that I knew I would be ashamed to let my dear mother know, how much more should I be ashamed to let my blessed Master know. He knew it. Of course he did.

Now I am trying to live a better life than I ever lived before. It is harder to do, and the temptation is greater than ever before.

Young brethren, please hold in your minds that if there is anything you desire to hold from the knowledge of the dearest woman on the earth, your mother, you also desire to hold it from the Lord. There is but one way to keep it from his knowledge. Don't do it.

Pray for me, and for all of the young that may be in need of your prayers.

Yours in bonds,

PRIVATE O. V. COOP.

Supply Company, 11th Marines, A. E. F., France, A. P. O. 738.

OYEN, ALBERTA, July 8, 1919.

Editors Herald: A very interesting gathering was held at the home of Sister G. A. Taylor on Wednesday last, when the first annual meeting of the "Cradle Roll" took place. Over thirty Saints, mothers and children, were present.

The meeting was addressed by Elder George Lindsay and others, and Sister Taylor gave a short sketch of the work. A short program of songs and recitations was given, and thoroughly enjoyed.

Sister Taylor is to be highly commended for the work done amongst the little ones here, and we trust she will receive the support of all who are interested in the spread of the gospel, as thereby many will be brought into the light.

Yours in bonds,

W. N. CHANDLER.

WRAY, COLORADO, July 14, 1919.

Editors Herald: I have lately been more than ever impressed with the inconsistency of professed messengers of Christ who, by virtue of their assuming that which "no man taketh to himself," run without tidings.

Recently Brother J. Charles May and I stepped into the meeting of an evangelist (am I doing violence to the term?) whom we had previously heard and who had been made aware of our identity. He immediately began an assault upon the idea of living apostles. Note his substitute for logic:

"'God hath set some in the church,' etc., and they are still there [the same twelve], Christ having ascended to heaven that he might become the head of the church." He also gave us to understand that spiritual gifts are no longer to be expected.

Carrying the figure a little further: this gentleman then represents a body having its head and vital organs taken to a far distant country with absolutely no communication between them and the "remains," and with all food withheld. This body, deprived of eyes, is expected to read the bill of fare and be nourished with the knowledge of what used to be on the table. Is it any wonder there is scarcely enough of that body left to become putrid?

Talking one evening to four young ladies, he stated that his church has no organization. In the last sermon he heard, he made an effort to show that there was no need of any reorganization as the church of Christ has never been disorganized. The only one of the young ladies to take any step was baptized the day following that sermon by Brother May.

Assembling at the water with a few Saints and friends for the baptism, we found a group preparing to observe the ordinance on behalf of this evangelist. He and his two assistants were conspicuous by their absence. It was done by a harvest hand whom no one in the neighborhood knew to be a preacher. One of the candidates had talked several times with Brother May and me. He could not give up the idea that all organization is of the Devil, and had once given me to understand that if we would baptize him without his going into any organization he would receive the ordinance. After the baptisms, each group having witnessed the ceremony of the other, the writer could not refrain from saying to Brother May that Mr. — had what he wanted: baptism, without getting into anything.

This message never loses by comparison with any of the creations of men, and our faith increases as we see the results of each new encounter.

JAMES A. THOMAS.

FORT DODGE, IOWA, July 21, 1919.

Editors Herald: On July 19 and 20 it was the writer's good pleasure to attend a two-day meeting at Auburn, Iowa (Gallands Grove District).

The district presidency have appointed several series of two-day meetings throughout the district, the meeting at Auburn being the first of the series. There was such a splendid spirit of unity and good will throughout the meetings that it is worthy of special note.

The Saints who make up the congregation at Auburn, for the greater part, live in the country, some coming a distance of sixteen and even twenty miles to attend services. And this not only for the special services, but they attend regularly on Sunday when the roads are passable. The Lanesboro Saints, who have no place to meet, have been meeting with the Auburn Saints for some time past, and it was an enjoyable season indeed when on Sunday, in harmony with their own wishes and the advice of the district presidency, the membership of the Lanesboro Branch who were still resident within its precincts were transferred into the Auburn Branch, thus making a good branch of active resident Saints.

Election of officers was held in the same meeting, and the unanimous choice of the Saints was for Brother William A. Carroll, who has long been president of the Auburn Branch, to be president of the renewed organization. Elder George G. Juergens, Priest M. B. Skinner; Abel H. Reynolds and Oris Salisbury, deacons, are associated with Brother Carroll in the work, and will no doubt prove their faith by their works as they have in the past. Brother Herald Salisbury was chosen clerk, Brother Emery Salisbury, chorister, and Sister Ruth Juergens, organist. We are expecting good work from this sector.

Elder James B. Barrett, who is our missionary and also our district president, was on the ground and preached for the Saints on Saturday evening. Sunday school was held in the morning, followed by preaching by the writer. The afternoon session was occupied in a business session, and Elder Barrett closed the series with a sermon in the evening. Elder Barrett also gave some helpful instruction to the priesthood, outlining some of his plans, and his expectancy for the year's work.

There is a great field for work in this district. And the writer feels that there is no need more pressing at the present time than that our young people should be won to the cause. I heard Sir John Foster Frazier lecture here recently on the question of "remaking the map of the world," and among other things he said that France's wealth of young men had been mercilessly destroyed in the late war.

And when one looks around and begins to take an inventory of the church ranks, he must be conscious that the "spirit of the times" has been waging a devastating war on the church. Many times Sunday school sessions are made up of children under twelve, and middle-aged and sometimes gray-haired people. The middle class, the young men and women, full of life and energy, find the church services too dull. And can we blame them? It isn't because the gospel has lost its power, nor that the young people are extraordinarily wayward, but rather because in our church policy we fail to provide the proper contact with the different natures of the people who make up our congregations. This fault is unquestionably local, as it is quite evident that general church authorities have sensed this need long ago, but we are too slow to fall in line.

Time was in this broad land of ours when a farmer was an object of mirth and laughter, because of what people termed his "green, gawky appearance," contrasted with the "natural people." But times have changed and most people have come to realize that back of all our wealth, our progress and growth, is the progressive American farmer. And one would think many times that our young people were either "angels of light," not capable of wrongdoing, or else "misfits," not capable of being used, since they are left so beautifully alone. But if this generation of the church succeeds in pushing the cause of the restored gospel as high as the Lord's expectancy for it, it must come to the realization that one of its wealthy physical and spiritual resources is its young people.

How much, then, depends on the local priesthood, and upon the parents, for if our young people grow up into manhood and womanhood without being awakened to a God-consciousness, who will be to blame?

C. E. ANDERSON.

Box 211.

HILO, HAWAII, July 7, 1919.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
Independence, Missouri.

Dear Brethren: Hilo had the biggest celebration in her history and all week preparations were being perfected for accommodating the crowds. All hotel space was reserved and also available room in private homes.

The boat arriving Thursday from Honolulu brought as many as it could accommodate, and people began arriving from all parts of the Islands. It almost taxed Hilo's capacity to take care of the crowds. We took care of twelve here in our little four-room quarters on the night of the Fourth. Brother Puuhau had ten, and others in proportion.

The celebration took place on the 4th and 5th. A fine program of clean sports was carried out, including senior and junior six-oar boat races in which three crews from Honolulu competed; also horse races, ball games, track meet, etc. The first evening was a Japanese Sampan parade in the harbor, and fireworks, and the next evening a Japanese lantern parade on land. Two airplanes (from the naval base in Honolulu) flew each day, thereby bringing Hilo's celebration right up-to-date.

Thursday, July 3, the first official airplane mail was carried from Honolulu to Hilo. The Honolulu Sunday school sent greetings to our Hilo school. Sunday, July 6, the airplanes returned to Honolulu carrying mail and the Hilo postmaster.

On account of the holiday spirit prevailing, no extra services or missionary trips were undertaken. Yesterday's services were well attended considering the strenuous celebration which had just closed. Of course the attendance was partially abnormal, since some half dozen young people from Honolulu were present.

In gospel bonds.

M. A. McCONLEY.

HEARNE, TEXAS, July 22, 1919.

Editors Herald: The conference and reunion of the Texas Central District, held here July 12th to 21st was excellent from start to finish and a means of comfort and strength to those who attended.

Apostle J. F. Curtis, with the district presidency and the writer were chosen to preside over the meetings. Peace, harmony, and love seemed to reign supreme in all our efforts and the Saints of God were made to feel that it is good indeed to be a Saint in latter days. The speakers were: J. F. Curtis, F. M. Slover, M. F. Gowell, J. M. Nunley, J. C. Clevenger, and A. J. Banta, district president. The preaching of the word was in power and in much assurance. The prayer meetings were good. The auxiliary work was looked after, and in the afternoons there was round-table work, presided over by J. F. Curtis and the writer, in which much valuable information was imparted to the Saints. Four were baptized, and one priest and one deacon were ordained. Taken as a whole the meetings were very highly educational in gospel work, and will be of great benefit to those who are determined to work for the Master.

Apostle J. F. Curtis rendered excellent help in making the meeting a success by his good sermons and advice. The Spirit of God was with us to cheer, educate and guide us in our work.

Brother A. J. Banta, the district president and Bishop's agent, is the son of Brother Elijah Banta who was one of the old stand-bys in the early days of the Reorganization, and is a chip off the old block. What a grand thing it is to see the son of the old veteran walking in the footsteps of the father.

A great many of the Saints did not attend the reunion on account of being thrown behind in their work because of so much rain this summer. This was a drawback, for those who did not attend missed a great treat. To those who may ask how do you like your new field? will say that I like it fine, from the fact I am in the field to labor for Christ and to spread his glorious gospel which is worth more to me than all earthly honors, or silver, gold, or diamonds. I like any field where I can keep busy working for the Master. This is a very important field and needs to be worked in order to get results and the missionaries as well as the local men need all the help and support they can get from any quarter in order to spread the gospel. We have no time for back-biting or quarreling over methods of work, for our rule of action is plainly stated in the law of God. I am authorized to state that I have been appointed to act as missionary in charge of Texas and New Mexico; and I am anxious to get in touch with all the Saints either in person or by letter, in order to learn the conditions and circumstances regarding the work where you live. I advise every Saint who may read this to do all he can to secure new openings or places for preaching the word so that the missionaries may be kept busy in the work in which they have been called. The command is to preach the word and let our light shine before men, by walking in the steps of our Savior. "It becometh every man who hath been warned to warn his neighbor." Let that warning be not only by precept but also by a godly example and God will bless you and you will see our work prosper and souls saved in the kingdom of God.

Please write to me as requested above. Until further notice address me at Dallas, Texas, general delivery.

Sincerely yours,

F. M. SLOVER.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, July 29, 1919.

Editors Herald: Sunday, July 20, was a "red-letter day" for the Nauvoo District, in the observance of a sort of "rally day" or union service at Nauvoo. Urgent invitation was sent by Brother P. R. Burton to the various branches of the district, and the result was gratifying, as the registry book at the Mansion House showed an attendance approximating 125. The order of services was as follows: Sunday school at 10 a. m. in charge of district officers; preaching at 11 by Brother D. J. Williams, and preaching again at 3 p. m. by Brother Burton. It had been the plan to hold all services and have a big basket dinner on the lawn of the old Homestead, but the willow bugs encroached upon our freedom, and both services and dinner were under the shelter of the Nauvoo House, within a few feet of the gentle plashing of the Mississippi. Brother and Sister Burton who now occupy the house, were most hospitable host and hostess, as were also Brother and Sister Layton at the Mansion House. Brother Burton was heard to remark that when all the children came home it kept him busy to look after them, but he wore a cheerful smile all day, and said at parting he hoped the "family reunion" would be repeated soon again—the unanimous desire of all who attended, we are sure. A good feeling was manifested through the entire day, from the opening of the Sunday school session, at which an attendance of 76 was reported, and the offerings amounting to something over eight dollars were by unanimous vote, appropriated to the advancement of the work at Nauvoo. We were told that it was the first time a service had been held in the Nauvoo House since the 40's and Brother Burton's voice broke with feeling in the opening prayer of the Sunday school session, in words of gratitude that the hearts of the Lord's people were again turning to this, the "cornerstone of Zion."

In his morning discourse, Brother Williams set out under the subject, "The science of character," forcefully and earnestly, the principles whereby character may be developed in accord with the gospel law.

If we may judge by a large, somewhat elaborate chart, Brother Burton expected to "establish our faith" with a gospel sermon on first principles in the afternoon, but the sermon developed into a strong, forceful, uplifting admonition to the Saints—a plea for greater diligence, lives more closely in accord with our profession, and the saving of the children to the church.

A special feature at the afternoon service which elicited much comment was the sketching in color of Joseph the Martyr, by Brother James MacIntire of Burlington, while a quartet sang "Book of Mormon hid for ages," and "Prophet." This work was most excellently done. Some nonmembers, residents of Nauvoo attended the preaching services, and we parted feeling that good had been done, and that we had all derived much pleasure and benefit from the day's association. Five of our seven branches were represented, and some from outlying parts of the district, with two visitors from Quincy.

Brother D. J. Williams held a series of meetings at or near Middletown, about twelve miles west of Burlington, last week, these meetings being led up to by his having met the Adventist people there in response to a request of one of our members residing there. Good interest is reported and some investigation. While immediate results are not apparent, it is hoped that it will mean the adding of one or more to the fold.

Attendance has suffered just a little owing to summer vacations, but is picking up again, and we were especially gratified at the well-filled house for Religio Sunday evening, when the special feature of the program was a debate by four of our young people on the proposition; "Resolved; that the moving picture show is a menace to the community." Both affirmative and negative were so excellently presented that the judges confessed themselves in a plight to know to whom the honors were due. The final summarizing by the affirmative was perhaps what balanced the vote, though the negative put forth some excellent arguments for the educational possibilities of the cinemetograph. Sensational posters were displayed by the affirmative, and educational authorities quoted by both sides; scriptural references were used on the one hand, and the use of the cinema in our large branches referred to on the other. The subject was earnestly discussed, and yet with all good feeling. Some amusement was aroused by the sallies of both affirmative and negative, and in all we are sure the session did credit to the participants and gave pleasure and benefit to the listeners.

CORRESPONDENT.

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI, July 28, 1919.

Editors Herald: We wish the readers of the HERALD to know we are in our field of labor for another year, and anxious to get in touch with the Saints, especially of the Southern Missouri District.

We would like to hear from any wanting preaching or visiting in their community. The only way a missionary has to know your needs is to hear from you. I see where one member writing to the papers from Missouri said he had not heard a sermon in two years. Many times the missionary is not to blame for not coming. He must know where preaching is wanted.

Come to our reunion to be held at Springfield, Missouri, August 20 to 31. There should be a good representation of the district there at that time. Make the effort necessary to be there. This work calls for sacrifice, and to come to the conference and reunion is a good time to make it.

Get into your Ford or wagon or come on the train, and bring your family and friends and have a good time with us. Don't forget the date and place. We will look for you.

Your brother,

H. E. WINEGAR.

Home address: INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 1423 Kensington Avenue.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Conference Minutes

EASTERN IOWA.—At Oelwein, June 20-22, E. R. Davis presiding, Amos Berve assisting. Elder Berve was elected president of the district and given power to choose assistant. Cora Hart elected secretary; John Heide, treasurer; Florence Pool, member library board and member gospel literature board. Time and place of next conference left with district presidency. Hearty vote of thanks extended to Brethren Sparling and Davis for their faithfulness in labor while among us. We heartily welcome Brother Berve. Cora B. Hart, secretary.

NORTHEASTERN MISSOURI.—At Bevier, Missouri, June 21, 10 a. m.; W. B. Richards, A. McCord, and John Davis presiding; William C. Chapman and Vernie Ruch, clerks. Bevier, Higbee, and Menefee Branches reported. An amendment to the by-laws to change our annual conference from June to February, and our semiannual conference from November to August was presented, and will come up at our next conference for final action. F. T. Mussel was elected district president; W. B. Richards, vice president; William C. Chapman, secretary-treasurer. William C. Chapman, secretary.

SOUTHERN NEBRASKA.—Nebraska City, June 7 and 8. Branches reporting: Blue River, Eustis, Nebraska City, Lincoln, and Fairfield. A motion prevailed to publish a district paper called The Arimat, the staff to consist of H. A. Higgins, J. L. Parker, and E. E. Long, as published in the first issue. H. A. Higgins resigned as president, and J. L. Parker was elected to fill vacancy. He chose as his associates H. A. Higgins and Samuel Broliar. Blanche I. Andrews also resigned as secretary. Edith Trask was elected to succeed her. M. A. Smith was elected to succeed F. H. Higgins as recorder. Ned O. Calhoun was ordained an elder and Grover Wall a priest. Speakers of the conference were J. A. Dowker, H. A. Higgins, and J. L. Parker. Adjourned to meet at Fairfield some time in October. Edith Trask, secretary.

SOUTHERN MICHIGAN AND NORTHERN INDIANA.—With the Clear Lake Branch, at Clear Lake, Michigan, June 14, 15.

Saturday: Opening business session at 10 a. m., with the district presidency presiding. At 2.15 p. m., business session. At 3.30 p. m. the Oriole Girls and Boy Scouts entertained the young people at conference with a picnic at the lake. Preaching service at 8 p. m. Sunday: 8 a. m., young people's prayer meeting; 9 a. m., sacrament meeting; 3.30 p. m., preaching service; 4 p. m., open priesthood meeting; 8 p. m., preaching service. The conference was well attended and thoroughly enjoyed by all, a goodly portion of God's Spirit being present. Clarke E. Buckley, assistant secretary.

SPOKANE.—At the reunion grounds near Gifford, Idaho, June 28, 1919. No member of the presidency being present, the assembly was called to order by Oliver Turnbull, secretary. J. A. Bronson was chosen to preside, and he chose W. F. Yates and Pearl Reed to assist. Statistical reports from Valley, Idaho, 67, gain 5; Sagle, Idaho, 57, loss 1; Gifford, Idaho, 111, gain 8; Mansfield, 38; Spokane, 331, gain 4; Palouse, Washington, 19. Voted unanimously that we hold a reunion in 1920, place and time left to district presidency to report to fall conference. W. F. Yates, J. A. Bronson, and Oliver Turnbull were chosen as a committee to revise our district resolutions, and report to next district conference. On account of so many having moved away, Mansfield, Washington, Branch was declared disorganized and the district officers authorized to grant letters to members to the nearest branch. No recommendation having been received from the joint council, W. F. Yates was elected to serve as district president until next conference. Pearl Reed was elected vice president, and Oliver Turnbull secretary of the district. Sister J. A. Bronson was sustained as member library board, and Charles Crabb elected member gospel literature board. The children were organized and drilled by Brother Kendall. Preaching by Brethren F. A. Smith and William Dexter. Two were baptized and four children blessed. Adjourned to meet at Spokane, Washington, at call of district presidency. Oliver Turnbull, clerk.

SOUTHERN MISSOURI.—Conference and conventions at Springfield, Missouri, May 9-11, 1919. Mary Martin, district superintendent, presided, with Benjamin Pearson, secretary. Only 3 schools reported. The treasurer having removed from the district, it was voted that the superintendent appoint some one to fill the office for the remainder of the year. There not being any special work before the convention, the superintendent appointed the secretary as treasurer, and the convention adjourned to meet on the Friday before the next conference. On Saturday morning Brother A. V. Closson called the meeting to order, and after the opening exercises Apostle U. W. Greene was chosen to preside, assisted by the district officials. Branches reporting: Ava, Springfield, Beaver, and Thayer. It was decided to hold a reunion in Springfield this fall, about the time of the next conference; the exact date to be set by the reunion committee, composed of Brethren A. V. Closson, A. W. Duenlar, Francis Bishop, Henry Oliver, Sister Mary Martin of Springfield, and J. F. Cunningham, of Thayer. Bishop's agent, G. A. Davis, of Thayer, reported: Receipts $379.17; balance on hand $79.17. Adjourned to meet during the reunion. Benjamin Pearson, secretary.

FREMONT.—Tabor, Iowa, June 7, 1919, at 10 a. m. The district presidency was chosen to preside and authorized to complete the organization. Minutes of last conference were read and approved. Branches reporting: Tabor, 68; Henderson, 77; Glenwood, 76; Shenandoah, 104; Hamburg, 59; Bartlett, 49; Thurman, 195. Ministry reporting: T. A. Hougas, J. B. Wildermuth, N. L. Mortimore, M. W. Gaylord, James Comstock, J. W. Dunagan, John Huston, M. M. Case, W. R. Richardson, W. A. Hougas, C. W. Forney, F. B. Knight, William Kuykendall, Roy J. Dunsdon, William Eyles, S. S. Clark. District tent work was discussed. At the afternoon session J. B. Wildermuth was called to assist N. L. Mortimore in presiding in the absence of T. A. Hougas. Next conference at Bartlett, at call of district presidency. Officers elected: T. A. Hougas, district president; N. L. Mortimore, counselor; C. W. Forney, secretary. Priesthood meeting at 9 a. m. Sunday morning. Preaching by R. E. Pratt, N. L. Mortimore, and T. A. Hougas. C. W. Forney, secretary.

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—With Mission Branch, June 14 and 15, J. O. Dutton and Ward L. Christy in charge. Statistical reports from First Chicago, Mission, Sandwich, Rockford, Piper City, Plano, Deselm, Dekalb, West Pullman, Central Chicago, and Belvidere Branches. Ministerial reports show: Sermons, 324; baptisms, 10; ordinations, 1; children blessed, 12; marriages, 6. Bishop's agent's report, December 1 to May 31: $4,175 received; on hand, $613.07. District treasurer reported on district and reunion funds. Reunion date was changed to August 29 to September 7, which is one week later on account of not being able to get the grounds at the time set previously. Election of officers of district resulted as follows: President, J. O. Dutton; vice presidents, J. L. Cooper and C. B. Hartshorn; secretary, F. E. Bone; Bishop's agent sustained as district treasurer; chorister, Ward L. Christy; member library board, John Tenos, member gospel literature board, W. L. Christy. R. N. Burwell sustained as Bishop's agent. Next district conference at Central Chicago in December. Preaching by F. G. Pitt, J. O. Dutton, W. A. McDowell, and W. L. Christy.

OWEN SOUND.—At Wiarton, June 14 and 15, presidency of the district, assisted by Elders Harrington and Pycock, presiding. Fifteen branches reported. Financial reports were submitted by district president, secretary, library board, gospel literature board, and Bishop's agent. Officers elected: D. B. Perkins of Clavering, president; N. E. Leeder, jr., Port Elgin, and B. Belrose, Owen Sound, vice presidents; J. H. Leeder, North Bruce, secretary; J. A. Morrison, Owen Sound, Bishop's agent; A. Taylor, Grand Valley, chorister; S. M. Shute, Wiarton, member library board; L. Taylor, Grand Valley, member gospel literature board. Brethren King Cooper, of Guelph, and P. Mason, of Wiarton, were ordained elders; and H. Sagle, of Manitowaning, priest. Delegates to next General Conference: D. B. Perkins, N. E. Leeder, jr., J. A. Morrison, R. J. Wilcox, Ernest Clark, Chester Smith, S. W. Tomlinson, S. G. StJohn, J. Shields, Sr. J. H. Leeder. The speakers were: J. A. Morrison, S. W. Tomlinson, J. Pycock, J. T. Thompson, G. E. Harrington. A season of refreshing to those assembled. J. H. Leeder, secretary.

SPRING RIVER.—At Joplin, Missouri, May 31 and June 1. Statistical reports: Angola, 67; Carthage, 58; Fairland, 277; Joplin, 421; Mulberry, 90; Nowata, 83; Pittsburg, 153; Purcell, 77; Scammon, 124; Webb City, 373; Weir, 131; scattered members, 259; total, 2,013. The following branches failed to report: Arma, Lowell, Pleasant View, Traverse. Reports from the priesthood: 1 high priest, 1 seventy, 22 elders, 10 priests, 1 teacher, 1 deacon. The following officers were elected: President, Charles Fry, 1225 West Hayward Avenue, Independence, Missouri; Albert V. Karlstrom, vice president, 1702 Picher Avenue, Joplin, Missouri; John C. Virgin, secretary, 114 South Roane Street, Webb City, Missouri; A. V. Karlstrom, treasurer; Neil McCallum, chorister, Scammon, Kansas; Shelby G. Carrow, member library board, R. F. D. 4, Joplin, Missouri; Alice Jones, member gospel literature board, Scammon, Kansas; Shelby G. Carrow, member auditing committee; Will Bath, Scammon, Kansas, was elected to fill unexpired term of one year as member of auditing committee made vacant upon resignation of A. V. Karlstrom. Appointment of A. V. Karlstrom as Bishop's agent accepted by conference. Next conference to be held at Nowata, Oklahoma, October 18 and 19, 1919. John C. Virgin, secretary.

GALLANDS GROVE.—At Mallard, Iowa, June 7 and 8. Cherokee, Denison, Gallands Grove, Deloit, Mallard, Dow City, and Coalville Branches reported. Reports from 9 elders. Report of E. R. Butterworth on dining tent at Dow City reunion, 1918, shows profit of $70. C. E. Anderson, Bishop's agent, reports $1,933 as receipts for quarter ending June 7. Virgil Butterworth, treasurer of the library board, reports $14.47 in the treasury. The advisability of consolidating the Lanesboro and Auburn Branches was considered; no definite action was taken at the conference, but proceedings relative to the consolidation was left to the discretion of the district presidency. Officers elected for coming year: President, J. B. Barrett; associates, C. E. Anderson and E. R. Butterworth; secretary, Wave Cross; treasurer, C. E. Anderson; member of library board, Virgil Butterworth; chorister, James Pearsall; assistant, Eunice Dobson; Bishop's agent, C. E. Anderson; historian, F. R. Schafer. The conference adjourned to meet at Denison, Iowa, the first Saturday and Sunday in October. Wave Cross, secretary, 1811 Eighth Avenue North, Fort Dodge, Iowa.

Convention Minutes

MOBILE.—Sunday School Association met at Bay Minette, Alabama, May 9, 1919. Prayer meeting at 9 a. m. Institute session at 11.30. Business meeting at 3 p. m. Officers reporting: superintendent, assistant superintendent, secretary-treasurer, home department superintendent, and Christmas offering superintendent. Delegates to General Convention reported. School reports were read. The coordinating plan as adopted by the general church and auxiliaries was adopted. A budget of $8 for officers' expenses till next convention was adopted. The schools of the district were requested to assist in purchasing a typewriter for the district superintendent. A session of institute work was held in the evening. Adjourned to meet sometime during the next district conference. Edna Cochran, secretary.

OWEN SOUND.—Sunday school, at Wiarton, June 13, at 10 a. m. Enrollment of district increased from 816 to 842. One new school organized, Port Arthur. The work of the home department greatly improved. The district resolved to bear the expense of one delegate to 1920 General Conference. All officers reelected, except treasurer, Melvin Perkins being elected. Convention adjourned to meet Thursday preceding district conference. Lillian Perkins, secretary.

NORTH DAKOTA.—Sunday school, at Burlington, July 8. District officers in charge. Reports from officers read. Officers elected: Thomas Leitch, superintendent; Ferd Hammel, assistant superintendent; Gladys Darling, secretary-treasurer; Jennie Cluver, home department superintendent; Edna Bailey, cradle roll superintendent; Sister Will Almy, member of library board; Lydia Moffit, member good literature board. Adjourned to meet same place and day of next conference. Gladys Darling, secretary.

CLINTON.—Religio, at Mapleton, Kansas, June 6, 1919, at 2.30 p. m., with district officers in charge. Reports from district officers and locals read. A standard of excellence was adopted for the district. The following officers were elected: Mable Braden, president; Orral Andes, vice president; Helen Hawley, secretary; Zora Glick, treasurer; Dollie Masterson, home class superintendent; Vere Davis, temperance superintendent; Ada Hughes, member good literature board; Mary Rolls, member library board; W. W. Kearney, superintendent boy movement; Gertie Bailey, normal superintendent. We met under the coordination plan for the first time, and had success. Adjourned to meet at Coal Hill, November 7, 8, and 9. Helen Hawley, secretary, Fort Scott, Kansas, Route 8.

KEWANEE.—Religio, at Rock Island, Illinois, June 6. All locals reported. Officers elected: Edward Jones, Kewanee, president; H. J. Archambault, Rock Island, vice president; Thomas R. Willetts, Rock Island, secretary; Elbert Holmes, Joy, treasurer; Arvilla Lorange, Dahinda, home department superintendent; Effie Denton, Galesburg, superintendent normal department; Sister Elmer C. Peer, Peoria, member library board; Harley Cady, Millersburg, member gospel literature board. Several talks were given regarding the good of a district organization and the benefit to be derived therefrom. F. G. Pitt gave a good talk on the young of the church. U. W. Greene was present and told about the work of the young in the church. Next convention prior to district conference. Thomas R. Willetts, secretary, Rock Island, Illinois.

Conference Notices

Mobile, at Escatawna, Mississippi, September 5, at 9 a. m. Auxiliary work will be held under the direction of the conference. T. J. Booker, president, Bay Minette, Alabama.

Wheeling District, with Fairview Branch, Glen Easton, West Virginia, August 30 and 31. Opening session 10 a. m. District priesthood meeting on Monday morning, September 1. Regular Sunday school and Religio work will be taken care of within conference time. O. J. Tary, president; Jasper N. Dobbs, secretary.

Convention Notices

Eastern Colorado Sunday school at Fort Collins, August 22. Mrs. Agnes Massey, secretary.

Auxiliary Notice

All the societies of the Woman's Auxiliary of Eastern Colorado are asked to send reports of work done, membership, and any other items of importance, together with a collection for expenses of district, to Mrs. J. R. Sutton, Flat Top, Colorado. Send reports to reach me by August 15.

Two-Day Meetings

At Cash, Michigan, August 16, 17. All are welcome. Bring your baskets. Prominent speakers will be present. William Fligg, president.

At Sandfield Mills, Manitoulin Island, Ontario, September 6 and 7. Come and bring your baskets. All welcome. Arthur Gordon, president.

At Onaway, Michigan, August 16 and 17. Meals will be served free. All bring baskets who can. Arthur E. Starks, president.

Pastoral

To the Members of the Clinton District: We find now upon us, and everywhere, a spirit of great indifference to spiritual things, such as we have never seen before. If at any time and in any way we slight our duties as professed Saints of God, we contribute to the spread of this great paralyzing spirit of indifference. Let us, therefore, be awake to a sense of our heavenly Father and his great work.

First of all, be very humble and prayerful. When opportunity offers, do not fail to tell your neighbors and friends what the gospel has done for you. We can hardly expect the world to be interested in our message unless we demonstrate our own interest in it.

To the scattered ones, and those isolated from branches: We request that you let us know your location and your needs. While we have only one missionary and one local worker for the entire district, and one missionary who gives only a part of his time to the two Kansas counties of our district, we wish to reach all those who need our help. So do not hesitate to write us and state your needs and advise of prospects.

To the priesthood: Let us each try to honor our calling, and do all in our power and by God's help to keep the work moving. We may all feel our weakness many times, but let us each do what we can. Do not allow the cares of this life to occupy all our time and talents.

H. E. MOLER, President.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI, 400 East Fourth Street.

Reunion Calendar

(The figures in parenthesis give the page of the HERALD on which details have been given.)

- Toronto, Low-Banks, Ontario, July 26 to August 10.
- Lamoni Stake, Lamoni, July 30 to August 10 (655).
- Alabama, McKenzie, August 1-10 (527).
- Seattle and British Columbia, Bellingham, Washington, August 1-10 (527).
- Western Oklahoma, Sanders's Grove at Calumet, August 1-10 (552).
- Southern California, Hermosa Beach, August 1-10 (598, 654).
- Eastern Oklahoma, North of Fort Towson, August 1-10 (654, 759).
- Western Nebraska, near Tryon, August 1-10 (702).
- Spring River, Joplin, Missouri, August 1-10 (702).
- Eastern Iowa, Muscatine, August 8-15 (576).
- Kirtland, Ohio, Kirtland, Ohio, August 7-17 (311).
- Des Moines, Runnells, Iowa, August 8-17 (575).
- Clinton, Missouri, Eldorado Springs, August 8-17 (598, 654).
- Southwestern Texas, Pipe Creek, Texas, August 8-17 (conference and ten-day meeting) (655).
- Kewanee, Matherville, Illinois, August 14-25 (759).
- Northeastern Nebraska, Southern Nebraska, Pottawattamie, and Fremont, Iowa, Council Bluffs, Iowa, August 15-24 (552, 703).
- Northern California, Irvington, California, August 14-24 (654).
- Holden, Kansas City, and Independence Stakes, Pertle Springs, August 15-24 (598).
- Far West, Missouri, Stewartville, August 15-24 (654).
- Northwestern Kansas, Alexander, August 16-24 (782).
- Little Sioux and Gallands Grove, Dow City, Iowa, August 22-31 (503).
- Southeastern Illinois, Springerton, Illinois, August 15-24 (654, 735).
- Southern Missouri, Springfield, August 20-31 (702).
- Eastern Colorado, Fort Collins, August 22-31 (735).
- Nauvoo, Illinois, Montrose, Iowa, August 22-31 (527, 759).
- Northern Wisconsin, Chetek, August 22-31 (655).
- Southern Idaho, Hagerman, August 22-31.
- Southern Wisconsin, Madison, August 22-31 (735).
- Northeastern Illinois, Plano, Illinois, August 29 to September 7 (553).
- Southwestern Oregon, Myrtle Point, August 29 to September 7 (759).

Reunion Notices

Northwestern Kansas, at Alexander, August 16 to 24. Conference 23d, 2 p. m. Officers of district for ensuing year to be elected. Send reports to district secretary, Elsie Ebert, Bazine, Kansas, in time, otherwise to undersigned at Alexander, Kansas, marked "conference matter." Orders for tents should be sent to J. B. Ansley, Osborne, Kansas, at once. Come prepared to camp. We expect good speakers to be in attendance. John A. Teeters.

Our Departed Ones

NELSON.—Mary Freese Nelson was born in Copenhagen, Denmark, November 21, 1847. Died May 31, 1919, at Hutchinson, Kansas, after a few hours' illness. She leaves to mourn three daughters, Flora, Cora, and Minnie. She had been a member of the church for nearly fifty years. Sermon by Reverend Wilson of the Presbyterian Church. Burial at Hutchinson, Kansas.

TURNER.—Albert Turner, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Turner, was born February 3, 1898, at Gardner, New Mexico. Died at Las Vegas, New Mexico, May 29, 1919. Baptized by J. F. Petre, September 6, 1913. The remains were brought to Raton, New Mexico. Services in charge of Evan Edwards. Sermon by James Watson. Interment in Fairmount Cemetery.

BANNISTER.—James Bannister was born March 25, 1887. United with the church early in life. Married Martha B. Dixon, April 12, 1910. Was teacher of the Niagara Falls Branch, and also Bishop's agent. He was attacked with influenza, and after a gallant fight passed away Easter Sunday, leaving to mourn wife and little son, also several sisters, two brothers, and his parents of Vanessa, Ontario. He was highly esteemed and respected in this community. Funeral from the Saints' church, Niagara Falls, New York, William J. Landis officiating. Interment in The Falls Riverdale Cemetery.

CROSS.—Julia Evelyn Cross was born June 14, 1843; at Jackson, Jackson County, Michigan. Removed to California in 1874. Baptized in 1885. Died at Stockton, California, July 16, 1919. She leaves to mourn 8 children, 18 grandchildren, 4 great-grandchildren, and many friends. She was an exceptionally self-sacrificing mother, a worthy church member, and a good, faithful friend, and will be greatly missed. Funeral at the church was largely attended. Burial at Parkview Cemetery, H. J. Davison officiating.

ST. JOHN.—Martie Roberta, daughter of Estel and Edna May St. John, was born November 10, 1918, at Kansas City, Missouri. Died July 17, 1919, at Kansas City, Missouri. Funeral service conducted from Armourdale Mission, July 19, 1919.

MCLEAN.—Helen Mary, six-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. H. McLean, was born in Rockford, Minnesota, moving to Council Bluffs with her parents three years ago. She has been a regular attendant of the beginner department of the Sunday school. Died May 3, 1919, after an illness of about three weeks. Besides her parents she leaves one sister, Muriel, aged eight. Funeral sermon by B. S. Lambkin. She was a favorite with young and old, and in her home her bright smile and loving presence will always be missed.

BEECROFT.—Henry Beecroft, aged 78 years, 9 months, and 20 days, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. H. H. McLean, March 25, 1919, at Council Bluffs, Iowa. He had been a member of the church since 1892. His wife passed to her reward in 1909. Eight children survive him, also one sister, 35 grandchildren, and 6 great-grandchildren. Sermon by B. S. Lambkin. Interment in Walnut Hill Cemetery.

WOOD.—Guy Herbert, son of Brother James A. and Sister Edith Wood, was born at La Farge, Wisconsin, January 19, 1904. Baptized at Lamoni, Iowa, April 13, 1917. Died July 16, 1919. Death was caused by blood poison, beginning in a small cut in the right leg, which had been afflicted for several years. Funeral service at the home in Greenwood, Wisconsin. Sermon by L. Houghton. Burial in Greenwood Cemetery.

WOOD.—Lyle James, infant son of Brother James A. and Sister Edith Wood, was born May 18, 1919. Died July 7, 1919. Funeral service at the home. Sermon by L. Houghton. Burial in the Greenwood Cemetery. Friends and neighbors were all very kind in assisting in laying the little body to rest.

ALDEN.—Sister Leah Alden died at her home in Pleasanton, Iowa, April 22, 1919, aged 92 years and 15 days. She united with the Latter Day Saint Church in her youth and lived faithful until death. Funeral at her home. Sermon by M. M. Turpen.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor.
The official organ of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Published every Wednesday by the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. Entered at the post office at Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

PRICE, $1.75 A YEAR IN ADVANCE

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
 Have Faith in God - - - - - 761
 Christmas Offering - - - - - 763
 Herbert S. Salisbury - - - - - 763
 Good Word for the Sanitarium - - - - - 764
 Some Social Unrest - - - - - 764

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
 The Outlook, by Columbus Scott - - - - - 765
 A Few Thoughts for Pastors, by Wilber F. Yates 767

OF GENERAL INTEREST:
 The Social Aspect of the Church - - - - - 768
 Soiling the Name of Gentlemen - - - - - 771
 The Millennial City - - - - - 771

THE STAFF - - - - - 772
WOMAN'S AUXILIARY - - - - - 774
 Winnie Wismer—Rosa Tier.

LETTER DEPARTMENT - - - - - 776
 Arthur W. Smith—J. H. Tyrrell—R. H. Henson
 —J. C. Bradley—Private O. V. Coop—W. N. Chandler—James A. Thomas—C. E. Anderson
 —M. A. McConley—F. M. Slover—H. E. Winegar.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT - - - - - 780
FROM HERE AND THERE - - - - - 783

FROM HERE AND THERE

NEW EDITOR FOR AUTUMN LEAVES

At a recent meeting of the Board of Publication, Elbert A. Smith's resignation as editor of Autumn Leaves was accepted, and Edward D. Moore chosen as editor. For the past few years, the latter has been associated in this work with President Smith.

"July has, with the Saints in Independence, been a month of social, mental, and spiritual uplift," writes Sister Abbie A. Horton. The "Liberty Orchestra Concert," under the direction of Brother R. T. Cooper was an especially auspicious event. The statement made by the editor of the Independence daily is quoted, as indicative of the housing condition: "What of next year? Independence, that sits on a hill, has had a steady growth. More people are coming here to live, business has increased, rentals are higher and the demand for houses is much greater than the supply." Sister Horton suggests that with the wards more thickly settled, there is better opportunity for group work and consequent unity. The "capture of Jerusalem" was recently shown in moving pictures on the lawn, supplemented by explanations by Elder U. W. Greene. Among many other services, one was recently devoted to the young people, with R. V. Hopkins as speaker, and the Temple Builders arranged on the platform.

WIRELESS A SPLendid PROFESSION

In choosing a trade, profession, or vocation one wants to KNOW that the work will be congenial—that the surroundings will be attractive and conducive to mental and moral progress—that the pay is good—that the work will offer opportunities for advancement and promotion to more responsible work and higher pay—that the field is uncrowded—that one's work will make the world a better place to live in.

Wireless meets all these requirements. The demand for wireless experts is enormous; within the next few years it will be even greater. Salaries are high. Wireless offers unlimited opportunities for advancement. As one of the important means of communication it is a valuable asset to mankind.

The Radio Department of Graceland College offers two thorough radio operators' training courses. For catalogue and full information write the President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

SACRAMENTAL WINE

Every religious organization in the United States will have an opportunity to obtain wine for sacramental purposes under the terms of regulations just issued by the bureau of internal revenue. Deputy Commissioner Gaylord is quoted as saying: "We have endeavored to cut out all red tape and have made the regulations easy for bona fide organizations to follow."—The American Issue.

But it will not affect our church, for from its organization it has used only the pure, unfermented juice of the grape, prepared by our own members.

President Frederick M. Smith and family have changed their residence from Independence to Kansas City. A number of church men and their wives from Independence spent a social evening with them recently. Their new home is a comfortable, modest, two-story stucco building adequate to the needs of a family of their size. With the passing of time and the congestion of Saints in the center spot, the demands upon the time and strength of the occupants of the "little gray cottage" in Independence became too great. Their home is in a quiet, pleasant neighborhood in Kansas City where President Smith hopes to have opportunity for some duties pertaining to his work which has necessarily been delayed. He is also easily accessible to his office in Independence.

CARNIVALS BANNED ON PROTEST OF OUR PASTOR

The newspapers of Scranton, Pennsylvania, under date of June 14, report that on complaint of Elder John H. Lentell, our missionary pastor at that place, the mayor of the city has issued an order prohibiting the usual street carnivals from operating. A lot next to our church building had been occupied at various times by these vulgar tent shows, and when the council and mayor were informed of conditions as they had existed there and elsewhere in the city, the order was issued to put an end to all such trouble in the future, as they had long been a source of much trouble.

A lengthy article appears in The Springfield, Missouri, Daily Leader for July 5, over the signature of Elder A. V. Closson, in which our brother answers some misstatements which had appeared in that paper. It was given a most prominent place on the front page, and no doubt will be generally read. We appreciate the tendency among most editors to give the truth on these matters, so far as they can obtain it. We only wish our elders were as active in presenting these things in their proper relation originally instead of waiting till some one has made a lot of assertions which need to be corrected. The newspapers want the news, and are as glad to get it from reliable sources as from others, if it is fairly and interestingly written.

COMMENDS NORTH DAKOTA REUNION

An item in one of the leading newspapers of Minot, North Dakota, commends most cordially the reunion of the North Dakota District held at that place recently. From it we quote: "The daily program consisted of religious services, preaching and also lectures upon educational subjects. A great many nonmembers of the Latter Day Saint Church were in attendance. A marked feature of the reunion was the large number of young people. One of the efforts of the church is to hold out to its young people educational advantages as well as spiritual. The strides the church has made in educational progress the past five years are a matter of satisfaction to the members."

RELIGIO WILL LOAN SCHOLARSHIP FUND

The Religio Society has on hand quite a large scholarship fund from which they are glad to loan worthy students in amounts not exceeding $60 per annum for a reasonable time without interest, upon recommendation of the president of Graceland College. We will be very glad indeed to have this fund entirely in use and hope worthy scholars will make use of this opportunity. Write to The President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

G. S. TROWBRIDGE.

SUCCESSFUL TORONTO REUNION

Brother T. W. Williams is again in Ontario and busy, as usual. From a characteristic letter we quote: "Stopped off for four days' rest at Erie Beach reunion en route from Los Angeles to Toronto. Spoke seven times and presided over one prayer meeting. Large attendance, enthusiastic workers, good preaching, excellent interest. One six o'clock young people's prayer meeting registered 13 songs, 7 prayers, and 87 testimonies. One hundred and twenty-five tents and four hundred campers on the ground.

"Our Low Banks (Toronto District) reunion now in progress, has attendance larger than expected, an excellent spirit, perfect amity and good will. Missionaries on the ground: Joseph Luff, T. W. Williams, George E. Harrington, J. W. Wight, George W. Robley, Archibald Angus, John Shields, John St. John, and S. Tomlinson. Brother Luff left to-day for an eastern reunion, after preaching Sunday and Monday evenings. Reunion continues till August 10."

"THE SCHOOL OF THE PROPHETS"

One of the leading articles in the July number of Autumn Leaves, sent out recently, is an article by Augustine Dwyer, on "The school of the prophets," which should have a wide reading. The brother does not attempt to outline a curriculum, but does present some most inspiring thoughts as to the possibilities of the school.

LAMONI STAKE REUNION IN PROGRESS

The reunion at this place is progressing nicely. The attendance is about normal, possibly a half dozen tents less, and the interest good. The prayer meetings are of a high order, the gifts of the Spirit being manifested and the Saints edified. The preaching is very good, and the auxiliary and recreational features well-planned and appreciated. There is a good representation of Saints and of the ministry from other districts. Extreme heat and much dust prevailed the first day or two, but a half-inch rain brought grateful relief.

Sister Effie Denton, Kingston, Missouri, writes that she is much pleased with the July Autumn Leaves, especially the article on "frontier experiences," by J. W. Peterson. The picture of the three missionaries was taken by herself, with her husband's wheat field for a background.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8:31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2:36.

Volume 66

Lamoni, Iowa, August 13, 1919

Number 33

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

CHILDREN OF GOD

It is indeed a splendid thing that we should be called the sons and daughters of God, the children of our heavenly Father. But do we always stop to consider what that term means? "Of God" has so pleasing a sound that we often are prone to forget the "children" part.

We all know in the affairs of life there are many things that, try as we may, we cannot tell to a little child. We cannot explain the mysteries of life so a little child can understand them. There are questions a child will ask that we can only answer in small part, until general knowledge and the added years of experience makes possible a more rational explanation.

May it not be so with us? and when we lift our eyes in our hour of anguish and cry, "O Father, why did this have to be? Why was my loved one taken? Why, why, why?" can we not conceive of our heavenly Father's love reaching down even to us, in great sympathy, and yet with the wisdom to know there are things that he cannot tell us as yet; we cannot understand. And if he told us now, it would only be for our injury.

There are things, if we told the children—forces, which if we give into the hands of a child—will work for destruction, rather than for construction, until added years and experience has made the needed preparation.

But as Job tells us, great men are not always wise.

I said, Days shall speak, and multitude of years should teach wisdom. But there is a spirit in man; and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding. Great men are not always wise; neither do the aged understand judgment.—Job 32:7-9.

The passing of years is not enough. Our progress nearer to our heavenly Father depends upon our efforts to put on the stature of a man in Christ Jesus. As we grow in this work, we marvel many times how that which was not clear before, is made plain; how ready the Spirit of God is to teach us, and to explain the trying things of life, when we have developed so that we can receive and understand. We may then be taken up and shown things unlawful to utter. There is great peace, and with it all that peace and understanding that comes with the Spirit of God.

"CHILDREN OF GOD"

Yet we are told unless we become as a little child we cannot enter the kingdom of heaven. A little child may be angry; a little child may be ready to sing, "You can't play in our yard any more," but a child soon forgets its anger and is ready to be friends again. Oh, that the children of older growth could learn this much needed lesson, not to hold ill will one towards another.

A child just able to walk, and scarcely able, yet with only one finger of a father's hand, will walk along with much confidence. It may be that no real support is given, but if the hand is withdrawn, the child falls.

Even the child of younger years, when its mother is by, has no fear for its safety. It may tremble, may be startled, but its faith, its confidence is seemingly implicit. When danger threatens, instead of weeping there comes forth a joyful laugh, because with the parents by, all will be well.

Have we this implicit confidence in our heavenly Father, that when things seem the darkest we know that they will not be permitted to work a serious hurt because our Father is near us?

LOVE ONE ANOTHER

Many times we are reminded that John stated:

If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?—1 John 4:20.

Again and again is this commandment repeated from the lips of the Master and from his disciples, that we should love one another.

Where there is love, there is trust; where there is love, there is confidence; where there is love, there is faith. Of course there is not that implicit faith in our brother that there should be in our Father. For we realize that he is human, and may make mistakes. Not those mistakes that we sometimes infer, but there may be the hour of darkness or of trial, the time when he will stumble, but we should have that confidence in his integrity that he will get up at once and go on, that he is, and will try to do the right. Let us not by our lack of confidence, our lack of faith one in another, prevent his rising. In other words, let us not interfere with the work of God.

We think we can hear the apostle John as he repeats in that beautiful letter, the love that we should have for one another, the love of God for us, the love of Jesus for us, and our love for him. We think we can hear him say, "True love casteth out all fear. Where there is love, there is confidence and faith. He who says I have faith in God, but have not faith in my brother (have not confidence in my brother), is a liar, for how can he have confidence in God whom he hath not seen, if he hath not confidence in his brother whom he hath seen."

But you may say there are some who have seen him. Yes, but such as have seen him are known by the fact that they have love and confidence for their brethren.

S. A. B.

---

THE LAMONI STAKE REUNION

---

The Lamoni Stake reunion is now a thing of the past, but we trust that the good resulting therefrom is only beginning. Owing to the late rains in the spring there was a slight decrease in the attendance, as the farmers were busy with their crops. Still, on the first Sunday there were one hundred fifty, or more, outside autos on the grounds. Some have estimated the number at two hundred.

Four afternoons and one evening was given to recreation. Two afternoons devoted to special business, and the remaining four to the Woman's Auxiliary, the Religio, the Boy Movement, and the Girl Movement. Sunday afternoons were as usual devoted to preaching services. There were many in attendance from other places, and some twenty or more able speakers.

But the big factor of the reunion was the morning prayer service, held each day in the general assembly tent. Special prayer meetings were held for the young people, at an early hour, except on Sunday; but every day the general prayer meeting was the first service in the big tent.

There were many prophecies, and admonitions. The gift of tongues was also manifested; but the great moving theme of the reunion was reconsecration. At the beginning of the opening session an admonition was given which was surprising to us. It was for a call for reconsecration, and with it the promise that our former sins would be remitted, and remembered no more, if only now we meet and reconsecrate ourselves to His service. The outpouring of the Spirit would not depend on the past, if only now our best efforts were put forward with a new devotion, for a reconsecration, and a better service. That certainly is a worthy theme, even though there was coupled with it, that if afterwards we returned to our former ways, then would our sins, even the former sins return.

With this wonderful opportunity why should we not at once turn our back on those things that lead us away, and make a new pledge from this time forth?

The following from The Camp Cricket, by Max Carmichael, gives an excellent general review:

To the editors the outstanding successful feature of the reunion was the perfection of the organization. Every man knows his place, and seems to perform his function well. While each person is working in his place, these places are united toward a common end with a unity of purpose and a solidarity of sentiment, that means the greatest amount of good for the attendants of the reunion.

Ye editors were confirmed in the opinion that this feature, the organization of the reunion, was the most remarkable, by one of our visitors, Brother Elbert. Upon being approached last evening and interviewed as to the outstanding feature of the reunion that he would carry away with him to tell others, this feature, organization, was the one readily and promptly mentioned. This, we all know, is due to our stake presidency; to their untiring efforts, and painstaking attention to all details.

While organization may be the most successful feature of this reunion, the most surprising feature was the extent of the success of our new police policy. This can be due to no other thing than the high order of spirituality which pervades our assembly; that high order of spirituality which brings the utmost respect and thoughtfulness for the peace and happiness of others. It also means that those who find no pleasure in this high order of spirituality, find no pleasure in being on the grounds, and hence prefer to be elsewhere. This in turn serves to make our order better, and in turn our spirituality.

But in speaking of order, we must not confine ourselves to the general or police order of the camp. We must speak of the excellent order of our meetings, especially the prayer meetings, of the deliberateness of the proceedings, of the freedom from anything which may smack of Satanic excitability. The Spirit of God brings, indeed, a spirit of peace.

Along this same line, we may say that the most remarkable feature of our reunion is the wholesome sanitary conditions which are maintained throughout the entire reunion. Indeed, this feature of the reunion seems almost a miracle, because it demands the cooperation of everybody on the grounds, and those, too, who visit us. How easily disease could be started and scattered on these grounds, perhaps, is not known to the average person, but only to those particularly learned in matters of sanitation. When you stop to think that there are from three hundred to four hundred people on this ground all the time, and that their back yards are but a few feet from each other, and that but very little rubbish and trash can cause the accumulation of millions of flies, the most common carriers of disease, its remarkableness may be partly appreciated by us. That mothers can bring upon these grounds and keep here for the entire period, infants under the one-year mark, the period of heaviest mortality, with such safety as has been exemplified, is wonderful. Knowing the danger, as we do, could we expect the intelligent Spirit of God to be with us, if our sanitary conditions were anything otherwise than they are?

How thankful, too, should we be for the conveniences that are provided for us. Who prepared these garbage pits for us to dispose of our refuse? Do we appreciate their work? We expect that while these worthy brethren were preparing these pits, they were wondering if we campers would appreciate their work. In the matter of conveniences, we must not pass by our lighting system, the accessibility of water. Somebody must see to it that the supply of water is kept adequate.

Last but not least by any means among our many conveniences must we mention our dining tent. The people who run this part of our reunion perhaps have to sacrifice, in a way, more than any other person on the grounds. They have to sacrifice vacation privileges, privileges of rest and recreation the rest of us enjoy. Indeed, these very sacrifices upon the part of the dining tent people are what furnish us our vacation privileges, our privileges of rest and recreation.

The mothers of our camp have been especially blessed by the presence and work of Orrin Moon. As voiced elsewhere in this paper, the mothers have been freed from responsibility of keeping track of the activities and companionships of their boys. The work of the boys has been programmed, and we know their activities have been wholesome. While your editors would like to say more about this feature of our reunion, we desist because the Boy Scout Movement has already been stressed to a great extent this afternoon.

Along with this comes the social activity of our young folk, their play and social parties. This part of our work this reunion seems to have had a more spiritual complexion than usual. That they have received the stamp of divine approval we assert most positively.

We feel that we have been especially blessed by our visitors. We have quoted Brother Elbert's impression of the reunion. Brother W. A. McDowell is sure that the spirituality of the reunion has been excellent, perhaps more excellent than the activity of the Saints as a whole would warrant. Brother Robertson of Saint Joseph says that one outstanding feature of the reunion to him is the trend of our sermons toward practical service, and the practical accomplishment of our great purpose, Zion.

We have had other brethren with us, Brother Roberts of Far West Stake, Brother Dowker from Nebraska, who will labor among us for a while. Brother Riley Briggs, the only man living who attended the first conference of the Reorganization, has been with us. We might say by way of information that this conference was held in Beloit, Wisconsin, in 1852, at the home of Polly Briggs, mother of Riley Briggs, and grandmother of George N. Briggs now of Grace-land College.

Ye editors have seen a remarkable correlation of unity between our sermons, our testimonies, and the spiritual manifestations. Their united trend follows exactly the motto of our reunion, "Rededication." Throughout all of them, a single line of thought has wended its way. The Spirit of God has voiced one sentiment, that, too, we believe, the keynote to the success of our own peculiar purposes. The voice of the Spirit has been directed to all; in only a very few instances to particular individuals. The Lord is calling to us all for united action. Leaders, wonderful leaders, we have. We must follow as one great united band.

You have noticed, no doubt, that every outward manifestation has been of a pleading nature, pleading for us to do our part. Almost every one has asserted that God has done his part. What more can we ask of him, before we respond to that already given. Rededicate ourselves, let us all resolve. Notwithstanding our apparent apathy to the pleadings of our spiritual leaders, and to the voice of God, God has not withheld his voice, has graciously bestowed the influence of his presence upon us, all for one purpose, that we might rededicate our lives to the accomplishing of his purposes, the establishment of Zion, and the preaching of his word to the ends of the earth.

Why this seeming apathy upon our part, why this seeming tendency to fail to express our appreciation of what God has recently done for us? Our last two reunions have been held, we know, amidst trying times, when the hearts of all are stirred by the events of the day, when all hearts are disturbed by the conditions of war, fearful lest its destructiveness fall upon us. Are we so soon to forget God's goodness to us? Are we so soon to fall back to the same old ruts of passiveness.

We see in this reunion a remarkable beginning of the sifting process of which we hear so much. A revival of this sort cannot help but bring out those who have had their religious fervor and unction enhanced, and also bring out those who have lost joy in the attendance upon these meetings and in the service of our Lord.

We fear lest we see the parting of the ways with many, who were wont once to visit the house of the Lord often. But with joy we see for many the beginning of a new endowment, a fresh start in the straight and narrow way that leadeth unto eternal life. To the first the doctrine and purposes of the church seem hard. To sacrifice their own worldly pleasures for the enhancement of this church they cannot stand. They seek solace in accusing our leaders of being hard, and without spirituality. To the second class of people, the service of God and the church seems never more attractive, and these, as a result of these twelve days of communion with God, will travel on with the faith once delivered to the Saints.

---

NEWS AND GOSSIP

---

We hear occasionally some objection that THE SAINTS' HERALD does not print the news. It is true that we refrain from publishing items before they can be verified. It is also true that we do not consider ourselves justified in printing every vagrant rumor, or even the worst that we can find out about the men with whom we are associated. There is no man but who makes a mistake sometime, however small it may be. But the quality of our men is usually very high.

If all over the church the petty gossip, the things that are done by this one or that one, which do not seem to be right, were published, it would become quite a "tattle sheet." Some may say, "Well, the truth should be printed, no matter whom it hits." That is correct. But very often the gossip is almost wholly untrue, and rarely is it accurate in details, besides it ignores the basic facts of character.

The effect of common gossip, the effect of repeating unkind things against our brethren and sisters tends to lower efficiency, to make us feel discouraged, and to discourage them. It also presents a false picture, because we make the center of our attention the mote in our brother's eye, instead of considering his many good qualities.

This is easily seen in a local way. If each member spent his and her time pointing out even the recognized and actual faults existing in others, at once the tendency is to retaliate—to pick the flaws in the first speaker. It is the most natural thing in the world, and is very nearly reflex. To real faults there are then added imaginary failings, which tend to create the feeling, "there is no use trying, for I will be blamed anyhow." So it tends to the feeling of loss of confidence in our associates.

It has happened with children, and it has happened with adults, that an assertion is made that one will or will not do a certain thing. If our attention is given to that wrong assertion, it tends to confirm the person in his or her fault. While if we strike deeper, to the real nature of the person, we come nearer to the true man or woman. By an appeal to his higher nature, an appeal to his ideals, we may help him to become more nearly what he hopes to be and wants to be, and is, fundamentally.

In the time of severe trial, it helps one to choose the right way to feel that there are some who have confidence in him, and implicit confidence that he will do that which is right. In that way, we help instead of hinder his or her progress to a better condition.

Our objection in printing much of such matter as is referred to above is, First, that fundamentally it is not true. Second, it tends to lower ideals and lower conditions instead of helping us to the work of the Master.

Often when there are differences of opinion it is difficult for the parties themselves, let alone anyone else to tell what it is really all about. Invariably the discussion branches off into side issues.

The purpose of our publication is to present our ideals, our purposes, our real news in a broad way, and not to spend our time pointing out petty faults.

The Master in the Sermon on the Mount said: "Seek and ye shall find." Those who enter a meeting seeking to find fault will find it. Those who visit a friend seeking to discover flaws will find them. Those who are seeking the kingdom of heaven will find it. Those who are seeking disorder, will to their own satisfaction at least, discover it. What are you seeking?

S. A. B.

I shall be content if those shall pronounce my History useful who desire to give a view to events as they did really happen, and as they are very likely, in accordance with human nature, to repeat themselves at some future time—if not exactly the same, yet very similar.—Thucydides.

DEMOCRACY

We have commented many times upon the fact that the kingdom of God is not a pure democracy, but that it combines the best of democracy, of aristocracy, and of monarchy without their disadvantages. It is a monarchy, or the rule of one, the rule of him who alone is most worthy, the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

It is aristocracy expressed in the selection of the most able men, and placing upon them the responsibility to work for the good of all. Office becomes not a prerogative or special privilege, so much as it is an opportunity and responsibility of service.

Certain authority is therefore given to those who are able, but they are required to devote their best effort for the sake of all.

It is a democracy because the rights of the people are protected at every point; they have the right of sustaining, or refusing to sustain, and that is a real privilege and obligation to be exercised intelligently.

It is curious at times how words are misapplied. Democracy is a government by the people. When a matter is submitted to the general body in conference instead of to the quorum there is not thereby a violation of the principles of democracy. Whatever other wrong may have been committed, the submission of the matter frankly to the people, is not a violation of a democratic principle.

Some urge the New England town meeting as a model with which we might well associate the Russian mir, and other similar organizations.

All of these are excellent examples of democratic administration, and have proved quite effective in local affairs and legislation, but which have proven quite ineffective when it comes to administration. That is only accomplished by delegating the responsibility to a limited number.

The same is true when a judicial question is at issue, to try a particular case, or to consider a particular matter. The number who can act successfully is limited.

We were much amused recently to note the incident of a professor who announced to the students under his charge that on a certain day a referendum would be taken upon a certain matter. It seemed that the matter had been submitted to the faculty of that department, but had not been adopted. So he took it to the student body. Of course, in doing so, he was not violating any principle of democracy.

But it happened that the appeal was made during the late war. He followed the announcement with a very strong argument, lining up all the reasons he could in favor of the action desired by him and ignoring any argument that might be made against the proposition, nor did he permit others to present

(Continued on page 805.)

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

HOW MUCH TITHING DO I OWE?

We are frequently asked this question. The answer is that one tenth of our increase (not our income) belongs to God. By increase we mean the difference between what we are now worth and what we were worth at the time we paid our last tithing, provided it was paid in full. Whatever we may contribute to the Lord's work over and above one tenth of our increase should not be called tithing but should be termed freewill offering, surplus, or consecration for purposes such as temple fund, Children's Home, land fund, etc.

If last year we found that upon making an inventory of everything we possessed of value, we were worth .....$1,000 after paying one tenth .....or.....100

we would have left .....$900
 If now our inventory would show our net worth 1,100 the increase would be .....200 one tenth of which would show the tithing now due
 ..... or ..... 20

A very simple way to arrive at the correct amount of tithing due is to set down your present worth .....$1,100 add to this the tithing already paid ..... 100

one tenth of this would be ..... 120
 Deduct tithing already paid ..... 100

Tithing now due .....$ 20

Either one of the above methods of figuring your tithing will give a correct answer.

Question. How often should tithing be paid?

Answer. If you are receiving weekly wages we recommend the payment of your tithing weekly—if monthly, then monthly. Why? Because every time you pay your tithing you are reminded of the fact that you are doing the thing that God asked you to do. Make it just as easy as is possible for yourself to observe his law.

Q. My companion is not a member of the church; how should I figure my tithing?

A. A husband and wife should consider themselves as partners in life, each owning one half of their possession. The Saint should pay tithing in full upon net worth at the time of marriage and upon one half of the amount accumulated after marriage which is the result of their combined efforts. This should be done with the full knowledge and consent of the companion; to do otherwise would only serve to do harm, bringing discord into the home and creating prejudice against the Lord's work.

When the Saint desires to pay his tithing, he should show a spirit of fairness, granting to his companion the privilege of taking an equal amount of money and letting him or her do with it as they think best. If they are members of another church they may contribute it for the support of that church or give it to the Red Cross or to some hospital. In a great many instances, this suggestion has appealed to the nonmember with such force that they have agreed to take their tithe also and place it in the Lord's treasury.

Q. How often should inventories be filed with the Presiding Bishop?

A. Annually. Every successful business house takes stock at least once a year, and we should be just as businesslike in dealing with the Lord.

Herewith we show the present form of inventories.

PROPERTY STATEMENT

By .....

Post office address .....

Insert the first or given name of the wife as well as that of the husband. Street .....

RESOURCES

Residence, fair value, .....$ .....

Household furniture, .....

Clothing, .....

Real estate:

1 .....

2 .....

Bonds, .....

Mortgages receivable, .....

Notes receivable, .....

Live stock: .....

Poultry, .....

Horses, .....

Cattle, .....

Hogs, .....

Other stock, .....

Machinery, .....

Grain, hay, and produce, .....

Cash, .....

Other property, .....

Total $ .....

Deduct liabilities .....$ .....

Present net worth .....$ .....

Add to this tithing paid before this date $ .....

Total to be tithed .....$ .....

Tithe one tenth of above amount .....$ .....

Deduct tithing paid .....$ .....

Tithing still unpaid .....$ .....

LIABILITIES

Mortgages payable:
 No. 1 .....$
 No. 2 .....
 Notes payable:
 No. 1.....Interest.....per cent.....
 No. 2.....Interest.....per cent.....
 No. 3.....Interest.....per cent.....
 Accounts payable:
 No. 1 .....$
 No. 2 .....
 Total $.....

My occupation is:
 .....
 Age of husband ..... wife
 Number of dependent children .....
 Number of married children .....
 Age of Boys .....
 Girls .....
 Date ..... 191
 Signed .....
 Member of ..... Branch
 Special consecration $.....
 My surplus property is valued at .....
 ..... which I am willing to turn over to the church for its use and benefit.

Taken by .....
 { Bishop
 Bishop's Counselor
 Bishop's Agent

EXPLANATION.—These inventories are for use by the bishops and agents only in their work.

Under the heading of "Resources" place the present valuation of your real estate, and personal property of whatever kind, as bonds, mortgages, notes, live stock, implements, cash, etc. Place each item or kind of property on separate line. Under the head of "Liabilities" place amount of indebtedness and whether bearing interest and when due and payable. The information will be treated as strictly confidential.

Inventories should be filed annually with the Presiding Bishop and a copy with the local bishop.

Q. Who should file inventories?

A. Every member of the church.

Q. Why have children do this?

A. Because the very thought in the child's mind that they have done what God's law requires will have a very wholesome effect in tying the child to God through his church.

Q. If I have overpaid my tithing or have no increase, is there nothing that I can do to assist the Lord in a financial way?

A. Yes, the privilege of making freewill offerings is always open to you and you should avail yourself of it. Remember there are always hundreds of others that are not situated as favorably as you are and with your mite you can help them. An offering of a penny a day from the entire membership of the church would amount to over $328,000 per year. This shows what is possible if all do just a little.

"It is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people." It requires little sacrifice to pay tithing for that comes out of the increase, but it may require considerable sacrifice for many to make freewill offerings; but God takes notice of these acts and they will not pass by unrewarded.

Q. I have belonged to the church for five years and have understood the law of tithing but did not obey; I was worth $500 but have since lost all—do I owe any tithing?

A. Yes. $50.

That $50 was a debt and remains a debt until paid. If you built a house worth $3,000 upon which you owed $500 and the house was destroyed by fire and you had no insurance, would that cancel your debt?

God holds us responsible for the keeping of his law from the time we understand it.

Q. We are buying a home and paying for it in monthly installments, part of which applies upon the principle and the remainder on interest. Do we owe any tithing until we get our home paid for and get our deed?

A. Yes. Every dollar you pay upon the principle adds to your equity in the property and represents increase. In making out your inventory, list the property at its present valuation on the left hand side and on the right hand side show the amount you still owe upon the purchase price.

Q. Should tithing be paid upon clothing, household goods, utensils, farm implements, etc.?

A. Yes. Everything of value should be listed in our inventory at present valuations. However, one need not descend to too great particulars such as itemizing each article, but give only total values under the headings provided for in the accompanying inventory blank.

Q. Have I done all that is necessary when I pay my tithing in full?

A. No. The Lord expects you to be a wise steward and husband carefully the nine tenths, that you may be still further able to assist the poor and needy among us who are worthy, but who need opportunities, by making freewill offerings and also by consecrating of your surplus.

Q. I own a $1,000 Liberty Bond on which I have paid $100 tithing. Is this the correct amount?

A. No. If you list the bond .....$1,000 and cash on hand ..... 100

Total .....$1,100

You will see that one tenth of this amount is ....$110

Q. How are values determined?

A. We recommend present selling prices; however, no hard and fast rules can be laid down for this. The payment of tithing being a voluntary act on your part to give the Lord his portion of the blessings that he has bestowed upon you; it is your responsibility to see to it that you do not deprive the Lord of a part of that which is due him. The Bishopric will gladly assist or advise you in all your efforts to comply with the financial law of Christ.

Q. I purchased my home twenty years ago for $3,000; to-day it is only worth $2,000; at what price should I list it in my inventory?

A. At its present valuation, $2,000; on the other hand had your home or farm increased in value it should now be listed at the present selling price.

Q. I work on a salary. I do not save anything because I do not repress unnecessary wants. Still I would like to assist in the Lord's work. What can I do?

A. God has made you a steward over your material things and will require an accounting both in time and in eternity. He has counseled you to practice economy and repression of unnecessary wants and thus permit the accumulations of tithes and offerings in his treasury. If no increase has taken place you can by self-denial make freewill offerings as the Lord has provided for both tithes and offerings in his law.

Many of the Saints have had beautiful experiences in connection with observing the law of tithing. We shall be pleased to have you write us and tell us of your experiences so that we may pass them along that others may be encouraged and blessed.

Yours in the conflict for right,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

Presiding Bishop.

NOTE: Inventory blanks will be mailed you on request.

I am aware that men disappointed frequently make mistakes in attributing their disappointment to somebody else beside themselves; but if we will as individuals and as a collective body reflect that the work is the Master's, and if after that we find fault with conditions that are controlled by him alone, it is finding fault with him; and as the history of the past has shown, he does not allow any human instrumentalities to intervene between him and the accomplishment of his purpose, whether the men are with you or with me, so we ought to understand he will continue his work; and while we would praise him for anything which might be given to us by which we should be enlarged or helped, at the same time we ought to be willing to say, "Thy will be done," and bow even to the stroke of the rod, if he has need to apply it; and I presume he knows whether he has such need or not.—Joseph Smith.

THE OUTLOOK---Part 6 Retro-, Per-, and Prospective

BY COLUMBUS SCOTT

GOD'S MARVELOUS WORK AND A WONDER

As we are foretold by the Prophet Isaiah and other inspired men, it begins its rise through the instrumentality of the unlearned young man (Zachariah 2:1-6), Joseph Smith, and others chosen of God. They were not popular. (Luke 18:9; 1 Corinthians 1:27-29.) Which of the prophets were? In 1827 to 1830, "the sealed book" was given to the public, as translated by Joseph Smith, jr., then twenty-four years of age. The church of God began to be organized April 6, 1830. This was to begin just "a very little while," before Palestine—Lebanon—was to "be turned into a fruitful field." To it "the former and latter rains" were restored A. D. 1846-1853. This is the order in which the three events are placed by Isaiah. In this order they came. There is no way to disprove this. Palestine's fruitfulness must follow, not precede the organization of the church. The Turks have now gone from Palestine. Israel can go home! Build their republic! It is now near a hundred years too late to accept the claims of any man who may essay to now introduce or organize the church primarily! The church restored, associated with the sealed book, and the revival of God's everlastingly covenanted land to Abraham and his children. "Too late, too late!"

ZION'S RISE IN THE LAST DAYS

Zion is another name for the church, as used by the apostles and prophets. This name Zion could only have been known among men by revelation from heaven. It never could have come by imagination. There is nothing visible in nature to have suggested it to the natural intellect. That called imagination never exists, only as suggested by the real. Try it!

"Zion is the pure in heart." According to revelation, it is to be a glorious condition of God's adopted children through his Son, Jesus Christ, by the gospel. Zion—the church of God, according to the New Testament, came once, but because of its absence from the earth by apostasy, God is bringing it again in "the eleventh hour," and as the day of Christ's second coming approaches. In Isaiah 28:16, we read:

Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste.

When Jesus was at Jerusalem, he offered the gospel, "the kingdom of God," Zion, unto them, "they stumbled at that stumblingstone;" "as it is written," "behold I lay in Zion," quoting from Isaiah. (See Romans 9:32-33; Matthew 24:3-14.) Judah did not accept Christ, this "sure foundation," and their house was left unto them desolate. (Matthew 23: 37.) But, as Zion, the church is restored in these the last days; when their "time is come in," they will have their final opportunity. (See Romans 11: 25-27.) "For the gifts and callings of God are without repentance." This is when the "fullness of the Gentiles," has arrived. Christ, as we here see, is the precious foundation stone laid for the faith.

King David, the sweet singer of Israel, when prophetically viewing the Lord's work of "the eleventh hour," exclaims:

Thou shalt arise, and have mercy upon Zion: for the time to favor her, yea, the set time is come. For thy servants take pleasure in her stones, and favor the dust thereof. So the heathen shall fear the name of the Lord, and all the kings of the earth thy glory. When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory.—Psalm 102: 13-16.

Notice closely this last verse quoted. The time here indicated when Zion is to be builded, is just before Christ, the heir to David's throne restored (Isaiah 9: 6; Luke 2: 32, 33) "comes in his glory."

As "this gospel of the kingdom" (Matthew 24: 14) is being proclaimed as a witness unto all nations, those who will be gathered out therefrom will constitute "Zion" here spoken of by David. Moreover, he portrays conditions in verses following, showing that this is to be accomplished just before our Savior comes in glory to reign in righteousness; "When the people are gathered together, and the kingdoms, to serve the Lord." (Verse 22.)

Let us note carefully how those prophecies relating to the rise of God's church in the last days are, in those prophecies, associated with the gathering of Israel, the rebuilding of Jerusalem, and their establishment in their land of promise, Palestine. Isaiah also foresaw God's great latter-day work, and states the following:

O Zion, that bringest good tidings, get thee up into the high mountain; O Jerusalem that bringest good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid; say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God.—Isaiah 40: 9.

This work of restoration is just to precede the wonderful second advent of our Savior, for Isaiah continues:

Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him.

Christ's "reward is with him," at his second coming in glory. (See Matthew 16: 27, 28; 25: 31.) And when he comes and "his arm shall rule for him," this same prophet tells us:

And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall punish the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth. And they shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited. Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of Hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously.—Isaiah 24: 21-32.

The reign of Christ here referred to, is not in Mount Zion or Jerusalem, but in Mount Zion and Jerusalem. He shall have a palace royal, in both cities. His ancient apostles shall sit on thrones at Jerusalem, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. (Matthew 19: 27, 28.)

"Behold a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment."—Isaiah 32: 1. (See also verses 2-5.)

Zion and Jerusalem are two distinct and glorious capital cities at this time. This phraseology is Biblical. (See Revelation 20: 12.) "And death and hell." (See the plural pronoun "them" following.)

But let us quote again from Isaiah, on the rise of Zion in the last days; its rise is closely associated with Jerusalem's redemption in "the eleventh hour."

How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that sayeth unto Zion, Thy God reigneth! Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing: for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion. [Notice what follows the bringing "again Zion."] Break forth into joy, sing together ye waste places of Jerusalem: for the Lord hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem. The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God.—Isaiah 52: 7-10.

A wonderful work is this, here foretold by Isaiah. It could only be done as God directs. All are united when the Lord brings again Zion—his church; the watchmen "see eye to eye." Wonderful when compared with the divided, diversified works of men, moving out to build up religious movements without direct revelation from God! But the Lord is bringing again Zion, since 1823 to 1830 A. D. Wonder not that "the waste places of Jerusalem" are breaking "forth into singing!" What wonder that God is now preparing the way for literal Israel to go home to Palestine! The world is busy; but God is moving on! O man, open thine eyes and see! Read the sure word of prophecy, believe. Behold it being fulfilled now. And it is in progress. And God is being pleased with his work. Men are being saved from sin; and fitted for eternal life by the gospel now restored and being preached as in Jesus' and Paul's dispensation. Wonderful, is it not?

Let us all forever remember, O man, that God has revealed or ordained but one gospel system of eternal salvation to and for mankind! "The everlasting gospel." (Matthew 24: 3-14; Galatians 1: 6-9; Revelation 14: 6, 7.) This is the power of God unto eternal salvation and eternal life. Now let us see where Jacob's salvation in God's kingdom eternal is to come from in these "the last days." He has made the promise of salvation to their remnants.

I bring near my righteousness; it shall not be far off, and my salvation shall not tarry: and I will place salvation in Zion for Israel my glory.—Isaiah 46: 13.

Without doubt, this is the reason that David cried out when beholding the Lord's dealings with the children—descendants of Abraham's children, in "the time of the end," "Oh that the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion! When God bringeth back the captivity of his people, Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad." (Psalm 53: 6.)

Notice once more how Israel's salvation in the last days is closely associated with the building up of Zion, Zion the church of Christ is established first, salvation for Israel, captive Israel, and Judah, is placed therein; and following this, Israel is gathered to Palestine, and their gospel salvation follows when they accept the everlasting gospel, God's "covenant" unto them. So Paul understood this wonderful work. Hear him:

For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery [secret to the Gentiles then.—C. S.], lest ye should be wise in your own conceits, that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved; as it is written, There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob. For this is my covenant unto them when I shall take away their sins.—Romans 11: 25-27.

When the fullness of the Gentiles come in then, Zion will again be established, and from Zion the covenant of God, that "everlasting covenant" that was broken during the dark ages (Isaiah 24: 5, 6; Acts 22: 28, 29; 2 Thessalonians 1: 8; Revelation 12: 12-16), as Isaiah, Paul, and John predicted, during which time the earth, not God, helped the church, and she was nourished "from the face of the serpent," not away from his face, intelligence, laboring under a "broken covenant," grievous, wolf teachers, till the time of the restoration; and the gospel was brought back, as seen by John the revelator. (Revelation 14: 6, 7.)

When the scriptures here cited are carefully considered, they show us the ancient apostasy from the gospel faith, and the reason why the restoration was necessary, why the church of God, Zion, is to be established in the top of the mountains in "the last days." (See John Wesley's ninety-fourth published sermon, "The latter-day glory," and other reformers on this question, and Isaiah 2: 1-5; Micah 4: 1-4; Matthew 24: 14). We are here at "the fullness of the Gentiles"! This is wonderful!

GOD HAS SET HIS HAND

"The second time," to establish Zion, to prepare a people to meet him at his coming in glory from among the Gentiles and the Hebrews—Jacob. Therefore search the Scriptures! Follow us as we quote:

For God is my king of old, working salvation in the midst of the earth. . . . Have respect unto the covenant.—Psalm 74: 12, 20.

What man is he that feareth the Lord? him shall he teach in the way that he shall choose. His soul shall dwell at ease; and his seed shall inherit the earth. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him; and he will show them his covenant.—Psalm 25: 12-14.

Also in the eighty-fifth Psalm, speaking of Israel's gathering in the last days when God would restore Palestine's fertility (1846 and since), as written of by so many travelers who have visited the Holy Land, David said:

I will hear what God the Lord will speak: for he will speak peace unto his people, and to his Saints: but let them not turn again to folly. Surely his salvation is nigh them that fear him; that glory may dwell in our land.—Psalm 85: 8, 9.

(We here cite Bausman, published in Philadelphia, in 1858, entitled Sinai and Zion. See also Parson's Text Book, pages 200 to 210.) Many authorities could be cited on the restoration of Palestine's fertility, but this will suffice.

Then David continues in the same Psalm:

Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other. Truth shall spring out of the earth, and righteousness shall look down from heaven. Yea, the Lord shall give that which is good; and our land shall yield her increase. Righteousness shall go before him, and shall set us in the way of his steps.—Psalm 85: 10-13.

He who reads to profit, will not deny that this prophetic statement is being fulfilled. Righteousness came down from heaven, and truth sprang out of the earth; when the messengers (1827 and 1829) John, (Malachi 3: 1; Matthew 11: 10-15), delivered the plates of the Book of Mormon and the other conferred the divine authority to build up Zion—the church.

The gospel has been, and is being proclaimed, not only in "word" but also "in power, and in the Holy Ghost and in much assurance." (1 Thessalonians 5; Galatians 1: 6-9; Revelation 14: 6, 7.) Let us not forget that David said: "He will speak peace unto his people, and to his saints," at this same period. (See also Ezekiel 37: 16-22; Zachariah 2: 1-6.) And the material, open to the eyes feature of this triune miracle, is. God has been showing "favor" to David's land by birthright; where also he reigned king by divine appointment (Luke 1: 31, 32), by restoring the rains and its fertility; its increase, its renowned fruit and barley, now, the sight of the nations and Jacob, the people to whom covenanted by the God of heaven (see Genesis 15: 18-21; 17: 18; Psalm 105: 7-11), "to a thousand generations," are being restored.

And in this period, God has spoken, and he will continue to speak peace to his people and his Saints. "But let them not turn again to folly." Therefore, let those who say, and have said: "God spoke to John on Patmos last, and will speak no more till he comes in glory," dismiss forever this merely human statement, and contradict God's word no more!

The Bible being true, this statement is untrue. Does the Holy Ghost visit God's people to-day? Does he say anything? "Whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak. And he will show you things to come." (John 16: 13; Revelation 10: 10, 11.) Will God, Christ, and the Holy Ghost change? God changes not in his purposes. (Isaiah 46: 10; Malachi 3: 6; Acts 10: 34-36.) God changes not, "Therefore ye sons of Jacob," for all their sins, "are not consumed."

But who will give in measure the importance of our theme; the calling of God, and the labor of his divinely authorized servants in "the eleventh hour" call? What will the harvest be? What the eternal results? The evidence on this question is not only its amount, but also its nature and character! It is divine. It infinitely concerns the eternal condition of human souls in the ceaseless eternity to come! Can it be made too strongly impressive on the human mind? Tell us, please. An eternal day—"morning" is approaching; to some a day of rest and glory eternal. A night, also, is almost at hand for some!

And the watchman said: the morning cometh, and also the night.—Isaiah 21: 12.

What will it be to you, the night? the morning? the millennium? or "the prison?"

Look at our latest caption—headline. What does it mean for the Lord to lift up or "set" his hand to do a work, as used in prophecy or in history? Let us learn. Let the record be its own witness, and interpreter. Of the crowning work of Deity in the last days, let the great prophet, Isaiah, speak:

And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea. And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth.—Isaiah 11: 11, 12.

A mighty work is this to be accomplished when God sets his hand the second time to recover the remnant of his people; and sets up his ensign to the nations; and assembles the outcast of Israel. A wonderful work!

Let us further proceed to examine the topic before us. The work of God we are having in review, was to begin among the Gentiles first, and then go to Jacob. Let us again read:

Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people: and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders.—Isaiah 49: 22. (Also see verse 24-26.)

Judah went into captivity A. D. 72; a "lawful captivity" before the Lord, soon after the Messiah was "cut off; but not for himself;" but the Gentiles have since dealt very unlawfully with them. But by the lifting up of the Lord's hand they are to be delivered, Yea, are now being delivered; but this deliverance of Israel (their remnants) is the third great work in the series of three most wonderful events. First, the restoration of the church of God resulting from its proclamation to mankind; and in "a very little while," the restoration of Palestine's former and latter rains, and its fertility. These two are here! The time has rolled on since 1823 to 1830, to 1853, as we have already seen, and now the third wonder, Israel's gathering to their promised land, to all Israel their dear homeland. Now is indeed a most wonderful age in which to live to all who are watching the movements of the "hand" of God!

But please do not forget that the lifting up of the Lord's hand, as used in Bible prophecy, is his moving his work on by the direction of present and new revelation. When God revealed to the prophet, Ezekiel, ancient Israel's wickedness, and their then future fortunes, suffering, captivities, and their restoration in "the last day," he says:

And the hand of the Lord was there upon me; and he said unto me, Arise, go forth into the plain, and I will there talk with thee. Then I arose, and went forth into the plain: and, behold, the glory of the Lord stood there, as the glory which I saw by the river of Chebar; and I fell on my face. Then the Spirit entered into me, and set me upon my feet, and spake with me, Go shut thyself within thine house. . . . But when I speak with thee, I will open thy mouth, and thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God, He that heareth, let him hear; and he that forbeareth, let him forbear: for they are a rebellious house.—Ezekiel 3: 22-24, 27.

But once more:

And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; In the day when I chose Israel, and lifted up mine hand unto the seed of the house of Jacob, and made myself known unto them in the land of Egypt, when I lifted up mine hand unto them, saying, I am the Lord your God; In the day that I lifted up mine hand unto them, to bring them forth of the land of Egypt into a land that I had espied for them, flowing with milk and honey, which is the glory of all lands; then said I unto them, Cast ye away every man the abominations of his eyes, and defile not yourselves with the idols of Egypt: I am the Lord your God.—Ezekiel 20: 5-7, also verse 15.

This is sufficient on this important subject. Each and all of the passages here cited are self-explanatory. Whenever, in the past, God has lifted his hand to do a work, any of his purposes, he gave the necessary revelation to accomplish that work. This is true as the Bible is true. No way to evade this except to squarely deny its truth—its divinity!

So the conclusion is forced upon us that in the last days, when God "lifted up" or "set his hand" to restore all things spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world began, and beginning with the restoration of the everlasting gospel, to be proclaimed unto all nations before he comes in his glory to restore the bodies of mankind to their spirits immortalized, and to reign in judgment, mercy, and infinite justice, he will begin it, progress, and conclude it—"restoration," with divine revelation!

Therefore be gloriously amazed all who have believed God would speak no more until he comes in glory! Who could tell when the restoration should begin, and where? Or who should begin that work—who carry it on to its glorious and triumphant culmination? Answer who will. No Bible prophecy of the past, relating to events of the past to date—the now present—has ever failed, unless the conditions were complied with; as for instance, Nineveh's repentance at Jonah's preaching (Matthew 12: 39; Jonah 3: 5: 10), by God's direction.

Herewith we conclude this effort relating to "the dispensation" or God's handing out "of the fullness of times." (Ephesians 1: 9, 10.) The great "restitution of all things, spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world began. (Acts 3: 19-21.) The culminating work of God in "the eleventh hour" is now moving grandly onward, and approaching "the time of the end." (Daniel 12: 4.)

(Concluded.)

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE ELDER MINISTER

[Recently, quite by accident, we picked up a book in the church library, called Not in His Steps, by Francis T. Hoover, and from it we make the following extract from the introduction.—EDITORS.]

The confusion into which our churches are thrown by the frequent settling and unsettling of ministers naturally calls attention to the duration of the pastorate. Frequent and just complaints are made that our theological seminaries are drying up for lack of students. For this state of things there are assigned various reasons, of which the principal one is probably the instability of the pastoral relation and the consequent uncertainty of the minister's home. It is evident, therefore, that the question as to how long a pastor should be retained by his church deserves thorough consideration.

We admit that churches may sometimes have serious reasons for preferring the young minister. The youthful pastor may possess a spring, an alertness, and vivacity which his seniors in the profession do not possess, and which he will not himself retain when he reaches their age. He is more in sympathy with the younger members of his congregation, because he is nearer to their view of life. In these respects his presence, influence, and service are desirable. But, on the other hand, he is crude in thought and untried in action, is liable to defects of judgment, and lacks that subtle, indefinable tact which is born only of long experience. He is also compelled to make his first experiments upon a congregation which may be greatly injured by his well-meant but ill-directed efforts, knowing all the while that they have invited him to try his raw hand upon themselves. No patient who is seriously sick would place his life in the hands of a young physician who has just left the medical school. No man of means would confide a contested estate to the hands of a youth who had graduated from the law school during the previous week. Yet our congregations often prefer to take their chances for the pastorate with boyhood and inexperience, rejecting the man of tried ability with full record of success.

It is to be presumed, on the other hand, that the minister of longer years has been through more experience in life, and possesses the wider and deeper knowledge of it. In the nature of things he has met more men and read more books than his youthful comrade. It is reasonably to be expected that the older man will possess the clearer insight and the sounder judgment, and in the emergencies of church life the path of strong and solid wisdom will be the more evident to him. In times of prosperity he will be less visionary, during periods of disappointment he will be less depressed, in all points of church management his view will be broader than that of his younger companion.

Yet with all these facts well known to church committees, the valuable ship is often intrusted to an inexperienced pilot. If our railroads should be managed as our churches are, our entire system of transportation would be broken up in a month. Train conductors are not selected because they have young and handsome faces, neither are freight transportation agents appointed merely because they are juvenile in appearance, and dress in good taste. For the conduct of business, firms and corporations want men of ability and tried experience for the guidance of their souls to another world, members of the congregation prefer the services of a boy. The directors of the Cunard Steamship Company would not probably give the command of the Lusitania to an officer of slight experience because he is young and handsome, but the guidance of an important church when it becomes vacant is often given not to the ablest but to the youngest of the candidates for the position, and that avowedly because he is young. The trustees have uncertain proof of his ability, but decisive evidence of his youth.

There is nothing I know of so sublime as a fact.
—George Canning.

THE PRICE OF EDUCATION IS THE PRICE OF SUCCESS

Wendell Phillips, one of America's greatest thinkers, reformers, and orators, declared in a great speech that "education is the only interest worthy the deep controlling anxiety of the thoughtful man."

A distinguished Frenchman once said "a boy is better unborn than untaught."

Horace Mann, America's great educator, declared "education alone can conduct us to that enjoyment which is at once the best in quality and infinite in quantity."

England's great thinker, Lord Bacon, said: "History makes men wise; poetry, witty; mathematics, subtle; natural philosophy, deep; morals, grave; logic and rhetoric, able to contend." Therefore, these elements of education tend to make us wise, witty, subtle, grave, and able to enforce our opinions upon mankind.

But it is hardly necessary to dwell upon the importance of education. It needs no argument this day to show the value of education. Its value and necessity in the progress of individuals and nations has become a fundamental axiom.

This does not mean that mere book learning is the key to success and especially does not mean that there is no education to be obtained except in the schoolhouse. Abraham Lincoln did not get his education in a schoolhouse. The word educate is not derived from any connection with any words that mean books or schools.

Education really means the cultivation of the mind, and the mind needs cultivation just as soil does. It needs exercise just as the muscles need exercise. It can get that exercise in a thousand ways. In this country nearly every boy and girl can get it in schools and with books, but the exceptional boy or girl who is unable to get it in schools and from books, can get it out of those experiences "from which learning may wiser grow without his books."

If a boy or girl or young man or young woman or a middle-aged man or a middle-aged woman should determine to get an education, they can obtain it by saving all idle moments just as money is saved by saving pennies. Education like anything else can be had by paying the price. It is the same price which every successful man or woman has to pay for success. It is an accumulation of a great number of little sacrifices of pleasure and of irksome labor. Soon, however, when the habit of study and reflection is formed, the sacrifice becomes less and less and we get the advantage of what we call habit—that powerful inertia which makes the continuance of beneficial habit as fortunately easy as a bad habit is unfortunately easy.

The average young man wastes in the evenings, Sundays, and holidays more time before he is thirty years old than would be necessary to give him a college education. If he spent that time educating himself, he would have acquired as much knowledge as the college graduate, and what is infinitely of greater importance, he would have acquired a mental self-discipline that the boys and girls in college do not acquire, and he would also have been gaining an experience which they do not gain.

The boys or girls who are obliged to earn their own living have an advantage over those who are kept at home, which means a great deal if it does not involve a loss of earning. Cowper puts it rather roughly when he says:

How much a dunce that has been sent to roam,
Excels a dunce that has been kept at home.

But while the ambitious boys and girls can get their education without the schools, yet it is certainly true that the nation which has the best schools and colleges and makes the most of its citizens attend them is the most efficient and progressive nation. The public school and college are the foundation of the institutions of all progressive peoples.—Boston American.

RETURN OF OUR SOLDIERS

One factor that we are quite prone to overlook is the heavy falling off in immigration during the past five years. Preceding 1915, for several years immigration averaged one million a year. Since January 1, 1915, the average has been more nearly 150,000 per year.

In addition to this, emigration became rather heavy, especially in 1914, and immediately thereafter, many returning to Europe to take part in the great war on behalf of one of the European allies.

Despite the continued suggestion of this land proving a land of refuge to the nations of the earth, we note distinctly a disposition on the part of European governments to prevent their people leaving their native land in the year immediately succeeding the war. As a rule it is the most able men who go forth first in a new country, and then send for their families. There seems a disposition to keep these men and the women at home.

In addition to this limitation on emigration from Europe, we may note the repeated proposal on limiting immigration to this country.

To that must be added the disposition on the part of many in different localities to return to Europe as soon as conditions will warrant for a visit or otherwise. All of these conditions would indicate a falling off in the available men and women to carry on the work of the country. We have depended so largely upon immigration in the past. This leads us to hope that with the necessary post-war activities in making up for the lapse in building and in other peace work, the army of young men returning from abroad will be very quickly employed and so taken care of. But this does not mean that we should not give serious attention to their reemployment in order to make their period of idleness as short as is possible.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

The Foundation for Character is Laid Early

FROM THE THIRD TO THE NINTH YEAR

In studying the mental and physical powers of a child we speak of two forces so closely allied to each other that one cannot be considered without the other: Physical and mental action. Whatever action is conceived by the mental power, the physical reproduction will be in accord. Because of this fact the period between three and nine years is the most important in a child's whole life. During these years the mind is the most plastic, and impressions made upon it during this time are very apt to be permanent and to have a dominating influence in determining the child's future course of action. Not without reason does the Catholic Church say, "Give us the child until he is nine years old and he will be ours forever."

It is during these years that adverse characteristics seemingly natural to the child must be overcome, if overcome at all. It is then a child must learn self-control, unselfishness, respect of parents, honor and obedience; and above all it is then that the gospel of Jesus Christ should be taught that the child might early enter the kingdom. Surely, God knew best when he said that a normally intelligent child could be ready for baptism at eight. And the responsibility rests upon the parents.

CULTIVATING THE CHILD'S CONFIDENCE

One of the first characteristics noticeable in a babe, and a very prominent one, is curiosity. As soon as he learns to speak a child will ask a hundred and one questions about the most commonplace things. It is sometimes rather trying on the mother, but it shows that the baby mind is waking up, that it takes in whatever it sees, and seeks enlightenment on what it does not understand.

Right here, while asking these seemingly foolish little questions, the child learns not only the knowledge he seeks but whether or not he may come to his parents for instruction upon whatever puzzles him. And he understands sooner than we may realize whether he has been answered wisely or merely put aside with a thoughtless answer. When a child learns at an early age that in his mother he has a confidant, a never-failing source of information, the foundation has been laid that will bind that boy or girl to the parents in all their growing years, and will carry them safely past many a danger point. If on the other hand the child has been turned away unsatisfied or with answers that he soon learns in his own wisdom to be untrue, he gradually becomes reticent in coming to his parents with his questions, and finally ceases entirely.

Many parents are mistaken in thinking that because the child seeks no information from them that his mind is a blank, that he is not able to formulate any ideas of his own.

Perhaps he is not so stupid as he seems. He may merely have learned by experience that he cannot rely upon his father or mother to answer him truthfully. Therefore he goes to others for the desired information, not always to the best instructors, and his education along the lines sought for suffers accordingly.

Never answer a child's questions lightly, nor turn him aside with an evasive reply. A child's questions show how his mind advances. When a child becomes curious enough about any subject to ask questions concerning it, then he is old enough and wise enough to have those questions answered truthfully in such a way that he can grasp it. Parents thus have the best means possible to keep within their own control the direction and development of their child's mental activity.

DON'T CODDLE THE CHILD

One very important step in a child's development is to teach him to be independent, to wait upon himself, and not to be continually calling for help. For a mother always to stand ready to serve a child at every beck, call, and whim makes of him a dependent and a parasite upon his mother's time and energy. Desire to act leads to action. Therefore stimulate the desire to do certain things and action is very apt to follow. Teach him that nothing is impossible. Let him help, let him feel that his effort is appreciated, and it is amazing how soon the active little brain takes control of the situation and teaches the more tardy hands and feet to overcome the obstacles in their way. How happy the little boy is when he has first learned to put on his own coat, cap, and shoes and stockings. How proudly he tells papa that he is now big enough to help mamma by helping himself, and it does help, too, as every mother knows.

EARLY IMITATORS—BEWARE OF EXAMPLE

Children are natural mimics and enjoy nothing better than to imitate their parents in their play. A boy whose father is a homesteader can easily imagine that a turned-over box with a rope attached is a sulky plow and can plow more ground in an hour than his father can in a day. A little girl likes nothing better than to be allowed to stir the gravy, wipe the spoons, and dust the chairs, or dress up in imitation of mother. Most children have a great deal of imagination. I say most because we have a striking example of the exception in our own family. When our oldest son was scarcely two years of age his grandfather presented him with a pair of fine rocking-horses. He showed them to him, extolling their good points and finally asked him how he liked them. The sturdy little fellow stood with his hands behind him looking at them for a moment and then remarked shortly: "Those aren't real horses and I won't ride on them." And he never did.

In striking contrast is the next boy, four years younger. He was a baby on a dairy farm, and of course the main topic of conversation as well as the most important factor here was cows. When he was about two years of age I heard him talking to himself one day while working in an adjoining room. I peeked in to see what the baby was doing and saw him busily engaged driving a herd of imaginary cows into an imaginary barn, shutting them up in imaginary stanchions and milking them in imaginary pails. He separated the imaginary milk in an imaginary separator and carried it to some imaginary calves and pigs and then turned his imaginary cows into his imaginary pasture. He went through each motion as realistically as life without having touched an article of any kind with his hands and using the same manner and language as his father. I could not but wonder that so young a mind had taken in and retained so accurately what those baby eyes and ears had seen and heard. I give this illustration because it tends to show that a child though a mere infant does retain in his mind those things impressed upon him during his early years. How important then that the impressions be good, that the examples set for him be of the right sort. And so a boy can be taught while a mere babe to be kind to his imaginary cows and horses, to treat his woolly dog gently, not to be cruel to his hobbyhorse, and not to become angry because his house of blocks tumbles down. A baby girl can be taught gentleness and love in caring for her dolly and patience while molding a refractory lump of dough into some semblance of a loaf.

THE MAKING OF GOOD CITIZENS

One of the natural, inherent characteristics of a child and the one I believe the hardest to train is selfishness. This not only makes a child jealous of his possessions, but it leads to a desire to rule or assume authority over other children, with a view to having his own desire gratified at the expense of the wishes of the others. None of us enjoy the sight of one child lording it over another, but it is indeed an unfortunate thing to see a mere babe overruling the wishes of its parents.

In order for a man to be a good citizen of a country he must submit to its laws. For a child to be a good member of a home circle he must obey the rules of that home. He must honor and respect his father and mother; their word should be law to him. Nor should one parent take sides with the child against the correction of the other. The father or mother who, when a child has been corrected by the other parent, teaches the child that it was wrong to punish him, weakens the respect of the child for that parent and paves the way for further disobedience and final lawlessness. The child who is not a good citizen of his home; who does not respect the authority of father and mother, never can become a good citizen of his country in the truest sense.

If a child is brought up to give perfect obedience to the laws of the home enforced with kindness and patience but yet with firmness, he will be very apt to be obedient to the laws of his country, unless that government be despotic and tyrannical. He will also realize that some one besides himself has some right in this world and so make it pleasant for himself and everyone around him.

SUPERVISED PLAY

A child's amusements should be chosen with a view to forming a well-rounded, balanced development. The lines in which he is delinquent are those in which he should be encouraged. If naturally boisterous he should be enticed to spend part of each day at some quiet pastime, as tracing pictures, cutting out with scissors, molding with clay, or building with blocks. If a girl, to tending her doll or having a quiet little tea party. If old enough she can sit by mother and learn to stitch a seam neatly, or do a little plain mending. If on the other hand the child is inclined to be too quiet and possibly not very robust, some form of play should be encouraged by which the child might obtain the necessary exercise, such as walking, running, jumping, climbing, tumbling, etc. The health of mind and body depends so largely upon each other that one cannot be neglected unless at the expense of the other. Neither can one be taxed too severely without the other suffering thereby.

So, between the ages of three and nine we find the mental and physical forces developing hand in hand, each one dependent upon the unfolding of the other, and both dependent upon the power that guides, controls, directs, and restricts them as needed, and that power is the united efforts of the parents.

THE MOST IMPORTANT OF ALL

But let us not forget in our zeal to develop a perfect mental and physical organism, that the united development of these two forces is only for the perfecting of a third element and that one the most important of all. In our eagerness to develop the brain and the body let us not forget that the child was put here for the development of his soul. And even as the responsibility of food for the mind and body rests upon the parents, so also does it behoove those parents to provide spiritual food for that unfolding spirit to thrive on.

Babies love to have mother sing to them. Why not sing of Jesus, the babe of Bethlehem. As they grow older they enjoy stories. Why not use some of the many interesting and beautiful stories found in the Bible? If your little girl likes fairy tales, try substituting some of the miracles of Christ and see if they do not create more wonder than any fairy tale. Tell her of the great millennium when Christ shall reign, and how she shall play with the lion and bear without harm and how the tiger will lie down at her feet in friendship. If your boy likes stories of strong men, of giants, or of heroes, tell them of Samson, David, and Goliath, Daniel, Moses, Enoch, and many others, putting stress upon source of their strength.

As the children grow older and acquire a love for history, could you find in all the history of the world a subject more interesting than the study of the Jewish race? If a girl takes to romance let her read the book of Ruth—romance, but pure and clean. You will find that the child is satisfied and at the same time learning valuable lessons. The sooner he commences learning these lessons the sooner he will be of service to God and man, as comprehended in the following precepts:

"Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind."—Matthew 22: 37.

"Love thy neighbor as thyself."—Matthew 22: 39.

"Every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things."—1 Corinthians 9: 25.

"Honor thy father and thy mother."—Exodus 20: 12.

"A wholesome tongue is a tree of life, but perverseness therein is a breach in the spirit."—Proverbs 15: 4.

FROM NINE TO TWELVE—THE FIRST TESTING

As the years from three to nine are those in which the parents must get in their instruction, so the years from nine to twelve are those in which the strength of that instruction is first tested. Until nine years of age a child is constantly under the mother's watchful eye, but from that time on he comes more in contact with outside forces. It is now that the depth of the early instruction will be tried. If the seed was well and carefully sown the plant will stand, and instead of being weakened by the adverse elements with which it comes in contact it will be strengthened by its very resistance to them.

A kernel of corn deeply planted, with the earth packed firmly above it, has its roots set deep in a solid foundation. As it grows up straight and strong, the winds come and shake it, but it has such a good grip upon mother earth, so many new roots and fibers have come to its assistance, it is almost impossible for the wind to blow it over. On the other hand, place a kernel of corn upon the ground, cover it lightly with soil and watch the result. It probably sprouts as soon as the first one, and as straight, but some one steps near it and the root being shallow turns to one side and we have a leaning stalk of corn. It grows on, however, its roots attempting to right the wrong the sower committed. But when grown almost to maturity perhaps a heavy wind comes and the whole stalk is uprooted without bearing its fruit, and all the energy put forth by the plant itself was spent in vain.

Of just as much importance now at nine to twelve will be the depth at which the kernel of wisdom was planted in the child's mind before that time. New interests come to absorb their attention; new thoughts come to fill their minds; new activities come to occupy their time. They have to do now, not so much with receiving the seed as with the development, growth, and strengthening of that seed already planted. They must begin to apply, by their own judgment, the wisdom they have already gained, the lessons they have already learned.

A child now begins to show a more decided inclination to use his own judgment, to depend upon his own wisdom. How important then that that judgment has been wisely directed, that the seed of true wisdom has been deeply sown. The mental and soul development now depends upon two things more than upon anything else. The choice of companions and the choice of reading matter. But the foundation for both of these should have already been laid.

SUPERVISE THE READING

Upon the stories told by the parents, upon the choice of conversation and books in the home depend largely the child's choice of reading matter. And yet at the same time he now reaches out so hungrily for everything that appeals to his fancy that there is great danger of being led astray, unless wisely guided. The parents should place at the child's disposal good, clean, instructive literature of the sort that most appeals to the individual type each child represents, and he should be encouraged to read it.

The child is very apt during these years to make the hero or heroine of the stories and books the ideal at which to aim. Many a man or woman has had the whole trend of their lives changed by the character of a hero or heroine whom they idealized and whom they attempted to imitate during these years. I remember distinctly how Josephine in one of Louise M. Alcott's books impressed me at about that age. Of course you read the series wherein Jo played a very important part. Most likely you also remember the incident where financial trouble came into the home of her parents; that money was badly needed and that Jo who had a beautiful head of black hair had it cut off and sold to obtain money to help her parents out of their straits. Somehow this sacrifice made a deep impression on me and I tried my best to think of something my parents stood in terrible need of that I might do the same thing. I couldn't think of anything that would demand this sacrifice, but I was so possessed with the idea that I went to the mirror to see how much of that material I had for sale. And really I cannot explain the utter hopelessness and despondency that took possession of me. I had forgotten that my hair was not long and black, and I fairly hated those short yellow curls for many days after. It never dawned upon me that anything but long black hair was salable. You may say incidents such as this have no influence, and yet the idea of self-sacrifice gained from this very incident remained with me for years.

Of course one such incident alone does not suffice. But take for example a boy of nine years who each day for three years reads one story, or a recital of some true occurrence in each of which the hero embodied one of the elements of purity, manliness, self-sacrifice, kindness, or honesty. Do you not think that at the age of twelve having read three times 365 or 1,095 stories embodying these elements, this boy's ideal will be one containing these same characteristics? And do you not think he will have tried to put into his own life those characteristics which he has learned make for a noble man? And having imbibed for three years these ennobling elements do you think he would choose or even enjoy a book in which the hero were the opposite? No indeed. If true manhood, true womanhood, nobility, purity, and honor be the ideal set before our boys and girls in their reading matter between the ages of nine and twelve we have little to fear for their further choice of literature.

INFLUENCE OF COMPANIONSHIP

And the books they read have a great deal of influence in their selection of companions. A child is very apt to choose as companions those among his circle of acquaintances who measure up the nearest to the height of the hero in his books. How often we hear parents mourn over the fact that it was bad company that led their child astray. But where does the real trouble generally lie? If a child has been taught as he should be from three to nine the kind of a boy you taught your boy to be is the kind he will naturally choose as his pal. The kind of a girl you taught your girl to be is the kind she will choose for her chum.

Above all, the closest companions during these years should be father and mother. Be interested in whatever interests the child. Lead and guide his interests, but do not turn the child from you because he happens to be interested in something of which you do not approve. If he decides that he is going to purchase a gun as soon as he has saved up enough pennies, be interested in guns although you are scared to death at the sight of one. Look them over with him in the catalogue and help him pick out the best one, even though you do not know the best from the worst. Nine chances out of ten before the required amount of pennies have been saved, he will have forgotten about the gun and his interests directed elsewhere. But whatever you do, show him that you are interested in his interests, show him that you are for him, his pal, then most likely, you yourself will be his chief companion.

MRS. EMMA JAMES.

LOST LAKE, MONTANA.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Our Inventory

In the commercial and business trade of life, every good business man generally takes an inventory once a year of his stock in hand; by it he determines whether he is gaining or losing ground.

And, too, sometimes he finds shelf-worn goods that he culls out and offers to the public at greatly reduced prices.

Nearly sixteen years have elapsed since I accepted the angel's message; a happy and joyous sixteen years, though it has been fraught with many difficulties, trials, and disappointments.

But from time to time as I have taken an inventory of stock in hand, I feel to rejoice that I have gained ground, even though it has been slow.

It seems amid all that we are passing through, and as we note the unrest in the world, the old Jerusalem gospel is indeed an anchor to the soul; and we can well sing with renewed zeal and fervor the good old song:

"We have an anchor that keeps the soul, Steadfast and sure while the billows roll."

What is an inventory? A list of goods. We count and measure our goods on hand, which determines our loss or gain.

Our stock in hand should consist of faith, works, zeal, love, character, not omitting church publications.

Dear brothers and sisters, have you taken an inventory lately, to see if your supplies are running low?

I admire the methods pursued by some. When you enter their place of business everything is in order, clean, and tidy; you feel like trading there, and the clean goods and courtesies shown, create a desire within you to want to return. Moral: We are clean and the fruits of our labors, by obedience to the gospel, are wholesome and pure. It is the glory of a man to have clean lips and a clean mind.

Ah! we have the best trade in all the wide world, to offer to the people; let us see to it we keep it one hundred per cent pure; no adulterations, or substitutes. If, perchance, we find any old shelf-worn goods on hand, such as hatred, envy, strife, jealousies, etc., let us relegate them to the place from whence they came, not only at greatly reduced prices, but at a discount, and replace them with the fruits of the Spirit.

I feel sincerely that if the expression of one thought in this effort may inspire a single soul to a closer walk with God, the feeble attempt will not be in vain.

Often I have been greatly encouraged by reading the letters and articles in the church papers, and many a time the Spirit has brought tears of joy to me as I have perused the goodly letters and articles in the HERALD and Ensign. Saints, how can we do without them? The dailies are full of strife, strikes, murders, thefts, and such like. We need the others full of love, and good will, to counteract the poison.

I will take this means to express my love and good will to all the Saints and friends of Logan, where nearly all my life has been spent, and especially true in church work, praying God will bless you in your labors. I hope the day may come when I can give more of my time to the Lord's work.

I trust we all may take an inventory, and that after so doing it will show an increase both spiritual and temporal; then you will need to make an inventory to our Bishop, and then you will have an inventory within an inventory.

Let us all labor faithfully to increase our worth to God and the church, and remember, dear Saints, the price of all great achievements is a constant struggle, a ceaseless battle to win success in spite of every barrier.

The objects for which we strive tells the story of our lives; so with the virtues of this gospel message, may we strive to make people happy and lead them to see its beauty and worth.

Sincerely your brother,

WILL R. ADAMS.

MCALLEN, TEXAS.

---

Life's Opportunities

---

Have we availed ourselves of life's opportunities? If we have, all is well. If we have not, why not? Have we an ideal in life? Have we a goal we desire to reach? If we have not, why not? Are we like a ship at sea without a rudder, tossed by winds and storm? Would that be a desirable position? Is your house built on the sand or on the rock? Are you building on "the sure foundation"? Take stock, and see what you think. Measure yourself by the perfect law. God has promised us his cooperation if we cooperate with him. But will he, if we do not? If ye love me, demonstrate your love, by keeping my commandments, he says. If our actions do not show it, what will? It seems there is so much involved, we ought to give proof that is unmistakable in our conduct. I know many who are, and I know some who are not.

How can we expect God to answer our prayers, if we do not comply with the conditions upon which he has promised to answer? "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth will make you free." Free from condemnation. We must exemplify our love for God, mentally, physically, spiritually, and financially. We read: "I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would that thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth." Of course this applied to a church or a branch, but what applies to them does to us as individuals. God has given us conditions upon which he will care for us. If we do not observe them, will he do it anyway? If so, why give any conditions? They are useless, does he do useless things?

How few people really trust God? Did you ever live the "law of life" and while so doing became afflicted, and continued to trust him? Very few do. My wife did. She had a tumor in the abdomen, and four eminent physicians said, nothing but an operation could save her life. She heard all their opinions, and then she made up her mind to trust God. She got very low, and then it was shown her that if she would have a certain man to administer to her, she would be healed. She was administered to by him and healed instantaneously. In three weeks we could find no tumor, and she has been well ever since. Besides being well, it saved us a thousand dollars. God is no respecter of persons, the same trust and faith will bring the same result. After she was well, the doctor saw her and noticing her good health, asked, "What did you do?"

"I was healed by the prayer of faith," she said. "God healed me."

"Oh," he said, "we all take off our hats to Him."

She made up her mind if God let her die, it must be the best, because he knows. She had been administered to many times before, but only temporary results followed. In her agony she cried, "O God, what shall I do?" Then she was shown the man to administer to her. "God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform." She never wavered in her trust in God. Twelve years have passed, and she is well now, able to do more work than many younger women. God is the great Physician; why do we not trust him? Why do so many of us not live the life he wants us to live? She would not submit to an operation under any circumstance.

CHARLEY A. PARKIN.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

---

The Bishopric Advocate
for 1919

Every Member a Tithe Payer

---

SUCCESS

Unless you take a real pleasure both in your secular work and your spiritual work for its own sake, you can't succeed. If you are fitted for the secular work you will succeed.

If you are truly converted and pay your tithe as well as do your other spiritual work you will succeed.

HELPING

We can only help others by helping them to help themselves and by helping them to help themselves we help them to help ourselves.

The Lord has provided that we all should pay the tenth or tithe of our net increase to enable us to help our brother and thus help ourselves. Why not help?

An Interesting Naval Trip

Several months have passed since I wrote in reference to my experiences on the great "over there," and at the time of my arrival in the United States I little dreamed of the further travels that I was to have and I thought that it might be of interest to the Saints to know of my last voyage, so will endeavor to give a brief account of the last trip and the one which seemed to be the most interesting.

The U. S. S. Kermoor, to which I was attached during the greater part of the time while stationed at Cardiff, Wales, left the city of Queenstown, Ireland, on March 6, and after a stormy trip arrived in Baltimore on the 27th. It was the popular opinion that the entire ship's company would be discharged upon arrival, but many were doomed to disappointment; I among them. Instead of discharge I was transferred after a hurried trip to my home in Philadelphia, to the U. S. S. Western Chief, a cargo vessel of 8,800 tons, then in Baltimore.

On April 16 we left Baltimore for Falmouth, England, according to the orders received, and it was understood that we would then be sent to Rotterdam, Holland, as our cargo consisted of flour which was distributed from that port. Our trip across the Atlantic was without incident and required sixteen days. When within two days of Falmouth orders were received by wireless to "proceed to Dartmouth for coal." Our course was changed accordingly and early on Saturday morning, May 3, we arrived at the mouth of the River Dart and signaled for a pilot. He came aboard and soon afterward we were under way past the gloomy, ancient castle at the mouth and up toward the anchorage opposite the town. It was a lovely morning and the hills and distant mountains presented a scene of rare beauty as the sun covered them with a brilliant light. Arriving at the anchorage the ship was moored alongside an old hulk filled with coal and several officers went ashore to report our arrival. A band of workmen came aboard and began to transfer the coal from the hulk to our bunkers and at 4.30 a number of men were granted liberty to go ashore. The town was not very modern and the people seemed to regard the men from our ship with an attitude that resembled both awe and suspicion, and yet they treated us with civility and kindness whenever opportunity was afforded, such as in the stores, etc. The streets were narrow and permitted but one vehicle going through them and the vehicle itself had to be quite narrow to pass without going upon the pavement, which admitted of two persons walking abreast. The main place of interest was Dartmouth Castle and the castle-keeper after admitting our party went through a complete history of the ancient structure. His narrative was amusing both in the history he related and the manner he spoke. There were three of us and after viewing the old church (a part of the castle), we went to the door of the building and knocked. An elderly gentleman admitted us with not a word and soon we were conducted into a room which contained an old show case, filled with a varied collection of antiques. The man who admitted us then began to speak. He reminded one of the little school boy going up for the first time to recite a Christmas piece, and frightened by the crowd gazes into space over the heads of the audience and recites. This is the way the keeper began: "Although the history of this castle dates back to the year 671 (the date is not certain) I will only relate that part which begins from the year 1,077, A. D., when his majesty King — took possession of the castle." He then relates how an attacking force under another king besieged the castle for a great length of time and finally caused them to surrender. He showed us ancient cannon balls made of stone and perfectly round. We were informed that the banks of the river for a mile were filled with these balls which were fired from the attacking forces across the river. Two large holes were to be seen in a large rock directly beneath the castle, and these, he said, were used to haul in a large, heavy chain that was stretched across the river to prevent hostile craft from entering. The roof of one section was covered with lead melted in the year 1260 (or thereabouts), and we were shown the holes in the walls where hot lead and burning oil were poured on the heads of an advancing foe, when they reached the castle. The prisoners were disposed of in a way that certainly would bring forth a letter of protest should it be done to-day. The unfortunate was placed in a small closet and the door was shut. The floor was dropped and the prisoner fell through a sort of chute. About half way down a pair of cross knives were placed and as the heavy body of the prisoner passed these knives it was cut and maimed, and the remains were finally deposited in a basin at the bottom of the castle as they dropped out of the chute. As the tide went out they were washed out and thus a stench was prevented.

Other measures of similar gentleness were shown us among the dungeons, which had been sealed over. The room where King Charles held a conference with his royal followers was shown us, and several other things of lesser interest. It required several hours to pass through the castle which, although about 1,500 years old, was well preserved. The Pilgrims left Dartmouth, originally, but put into Plymouth for provisions and fuel and thus robbed that city of the honor of being the place from which they departed on their long voyage. Leaving the castle we returned to the city, walking along a shady road. There were no public conveyances except one auto in the town.

On May 5 we left Dartmouth, after receiving orders to proceed to Danzig, Germany, with the flour. We started up the British coast and had excellent weather all the way. On Tuesday, the 6th, we passed the chalk cliffs of Dover and the straits, where a pilot was taken on board. Going out into the North Sea we lost sight of land, and that night when the pilot was told, casually, that our final destination was Germany (he was only to go to the Hook of Holland and our destination or port of discharge was not necessary for his information) he complained of the large numbers of floating mines in the North Sea and decided that he would not go the entire distance. We put into Orfordness that night and he got off. It was morning when another pilot was procured and we then continued our voyage, arriving at the Hook of Holland that night and anchoring. We received further orders there to proceed, and left soon afterward, going through the North Sea at full speed. The night passed without event and then our attention was directed to the late hour at which the darkness appeared as we got farther north. It was light until about 10 p. m., and each night seemed to remain daylight longer. About 6 a. m. we passed two floating mines within a few yards. Flags and bouys marked the places where ships had been mined or torpedoed, and they were numerous. Few ships were sighted, and finally we reached a point where a German pilot came aboard. He acted rather sheepish and had not a word to say. He had the distinction of being the first German citizen that had been aboard the Western Chief.

It was getting on toward evening when the pilot came aboard and the weather was cold and bleak. Throughout the night the wind blew, and when morning came on we were reaching German waters. The first thing we saw was Helgoland, the mighty German fortress. Its cliffs are reddish colored and the expression "the Red Cliffs of Helgoland" is a common one. The fact that this fort had withstood attack for four years was proof of its strength, and the guns visible from where we were looked as if they could spit forth destruction when required and the mines with which the island had been surrounded could take care of any vessels intent on reaching the fort.

The fort was soon fading in the distance and at noon we reached the mouth of the Elbe River, upon which Hamburg is situated. Entering the river we passed several light-vessels, armed with small guns, and several powerful shore batteries, but farther off from the water front towns could be seen and the tall stacks and spires presented a modern appearance. Several hours in the Elbe and we arrived at the entrance of the Kiel Canal, better known in Germany as "The Kaiser Wilhelm Canal," which words were on a large tablet in the concrete bulkhead at the entrance. It was necessary to tie up to the dock while waiting for the locks to open and while waiting there a number of German sailors and civilians came down to see the ship. Some offered a ring for a bar of soap, and before five minutes had passed we were trading soap for all kinds of souvenirs, some of the Germans taking off their insignia, etc. to trade.

We left the dock and started on through the canal proper and the scenes along its banks were wonderful. Boulevards could be seen running parallel with the canal, and large, steel bridges were passed under. The pilot showed us one of these bridges, not yet completed which had been built by French and Belgian prisoners during the conflict. A Belgian prison camp was along the bank and other evidences of the late war were passed. It required eight long hours to pass through, and at 1.30 a. m. we finally reached the Baltic and entered that great body of water. Two days in the Baltic and we were at our destination, Danzig. We created no little excitement judging by the people on the breakwater, although several American vessels had preceded us into the port. We tied up to the dock and although hostilities had ceased we were not permitted to go ashore. Our views of Germany were restricted to what could be seen from the ship and post cards, although after a week there we were permitted to go to the town in order to witness a ball game between the crew of the Western Chief and the U. S. S. Lea, a destroyer. In order to get souvenirs we had to ask the stevedores to bring things aboard and soon a regular traffic was begun. The standard of money in Germany is marks and pfennigs, but after our arrival it was changed to "cartons" and "packages" (of cigarettes). Every sort of souvenir was brought aboard for a chance purchase and at the time we departed a large variety were aboard: Helmets, guns, rifles, swords, bayonets, amber penholders, and other amber material, and one fellow even had a machine gun sight. If we had remained there long enough I dare say we would have had several submarines to take home, but as it was we were satisfied, and on May 26 left Germany for Copenhagen, Denmark, arriving there in about thirty-four hours.

We went ashore and indeed it was the most modern city that I had seen in Europe. Everything was modern and they had a park that resembled our parks very much both in size and variety of amusement. We spent a week in Copenhagen and had a good time and then finally left for Scotland for coal. From Copenhagen we had a good trip, and after going through the mine-infested North Sea we arrived at Burntisland, Scotland, and began taking on coal immediately after our arrival. German interned vessels were in the background and the historic site where the German fleet was taken over was within sight. The Forth Bridge was visible and many minor things of "Bleaky Scotland" but the town itself was very small. We left Burntisland two days later, on June 7, and had a cold trip through the North Atlantic and finally arrived at Baltimore, June 24.

Thus ended the best trip I have had. Although I have visited England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, France, Germany, and Denmark I feel that I'd rather remain in the good old U. S. A. The time is near, I hope, when I shall be released and return to civil life, while the experience of the past two years, I trust, will help me on my way to a goal far ahead. This letter, I think, unless something else happens of interest, will be the last of my experiences, and when I lay down the uniform to don "civies," I will always have a warm spot in my heart for those that have, by letters and magazines, cheered the blue hours and made the time go by more rapidly. My only hope is that my labors for the gospel may be more sincere and better directed to the cause of Him who has through trial and strife made it possible for me to return whole and sound although through some very perilous places. In closing, I desire the prayers of the Saints in order that I might be better fitted to serve the Lord. A letter from anyone in the work will be appreciated.

Very sincerely,

WILLIAM M. SAUTER.

U. S. N. Receiving Ship, Hampton, Roads, Virginia, Care Executive Office.

---

From a Young Graceland Student

---

Editors Herald: It is with joy in my heart that I take my pen and write this letter to the HERALD, in behalf of Graceland College.

I am very glad indeed at the thought that our people are becoming better acquainted with Graceland College, and that they are beginning to realize the great place that it occupies in the church, among the young people. They are beginning to uphold her, instead of tearing her down.

We had somewhere near one hundred and fifty students last year. I hope that our number will be at least doubled this coming year. Please tell me, dear reader, why can't it be doubled? The war is over. The boys have many of them returned, and others are returning. Let them come and join us. We certainly need every one of you that can possibly come.

There are many boys and girls that would like very much to attend Graceland, but who cannot see their way clear, so keep putting it off. To such persons I would say, look on the bright side of things, and make up your mind to come. We certainly will be glad to have you with us, and I believe the way will be opened up before you.

To those who are planning on coming, I would say, don't think that everything in the land called Zion is just perfect, because it isn't; and you may get discouraged and feel like returning to your home again. When you make up your mind to come, just get that determination within you that you will like it, and that you will meet your trials and temptations successfully, and that you will push your way through even if others drop off on the wayside. If you do this, I am sure that things will go your way all right.

We have had students come there who would get a little discouraged just because some little thing did not happen their way; then they would get that terrible feeling called homesickness, and would leave, and go home again, and that would be the last we would hear of them. This is not the kind of people that we are trying to get to Graceland, but it is those that have a will power of their own. Other students had to return home because of sickness, or circumstances over which they had no control. Such students we feel sorry for, and hope they will be able to return again in the future.

Possibly some do not come because they may have heard that there were students down here that were not good for their son and daughter to be with, and thus they are held back with the thought that Graceland isn't a fit place for them. It is true that there are some that come that may not be a credit to the college, but please let me explain why this is. There is somebody that has a son that he has no control over, yet this poor man wishes his son to be good, and has a desire to see him a good man, so he packs his trunk and sends him to Graceland. A few such boys get together there, and just have what they think is a very good time, but those over the college have a different mind than this, and soon they are sent home again, and the poor man is heart broken to think that his son was expelled from school. Sometimes Graceland will make a man of such a person, but more often it happens in this way. These are not the kind of people we want. If their parents cannot control them, other people certainly stand a poor show of doing so.

I certainly feel very proud of my year's work, and will be glad to meet the new students this fall and continue my work. My only regret in being here is that I will have to be counted absent from the Chatham District reunion, which is held at Erie Beach, Ontario.

There are other things that might be said, and more that I would like to say, but I feel that this will be plenty for this time.

I enjoyed the Canadian Number of the HERALD very much.

Your brother in Christ,

JOHN A. TAYLOR.

---

A Warning Regarding Education and Recreation

---

Reflecting upon the condition and needs of the church, my mind goes back to the experiences that I have passed through during the more than fifty years that I have been a member of it. Though I at times have been tried, I cannot deny the testimonies that have confirmed me in the faith of the gospel of the Son of God. It came to me not in man's wisdom, but through the gift and power of God, enabling me to understand what the apostle meant when he said: "For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." I behold with satisfaction that the church is making strides along educational lines, and that the youth of to-day has an opportunity far in advance of what fell to my lot. I feel no cause to murmur nor complain, as I would not exchange my experience in the Master's cause for all the theoretical wisdom that can be attained to in the world.

I fear while we think we are making progress that we are not growing in spirituality as we ought, and that we are permitting our eyes to become blinded by the glimmer of the deceptive influences of the world. Israel of old made a sad mistake when they sought to become like the nations surrounding them, instead of remaining God's peculiar people, and if we think we can better accomplish God's work by patterning after the world, forgetting that we have been called to come out from the world, we will be guilty of like blunder. If we are growing and making progress, why are we not increasing in spirituality, and enjoying more of the blessings and gifts of God? I do not want to be a pessimist and would rather look on the beautiful side of the picture, but neither do I want to shut my eyes and become blind to the real situation. I think it is well to heed the apostle's admonition when he said: "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith." Also to remember his declaration: "To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." And again: "For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which is God's."

I would not wish to put a straight jacket upon the young of the church, and deny them healthy and proper recreation, but the work of the church ought to be first, and last, and all the time the upbuilding of the kingdom of God and the establishing of righteousness. While the world is ripe for the harvest, and such a stupendous work lieth before us, requiring sacrifice of time and means, how can we feel justified in expending energy and money for that which will only promote amusement and bodily recreation? Especially as such does not belong to the work imposed upon us by the Lord when he called us into his service. The plea that this must be attended to in order to keep our young people in the church, I think is not well founded, as it will not promote spirituality, but rather increase a desire for more of the things that are carnal, and hence will lead them away from God. To keep the young in the church they must be made interested in the gospel and in the work of the Lord, and they must be taught to find enjoyment in the work pertaining to the upbuilding of the kingdom of God. This we know is real enjoyment, and is lasting. I myself came into the church when less than seventeen years of age, and I am glad that I found something more, and of greater value than athletic sports, or I would hardly be in the church to-day. I found God was with his people to bless them when they would draw near to him, and in this assurance I rejoice until now.

I believe we live in a momentous age. An age with great opportunities for all, but especially for those who yet have their best days before them. I believe they should be encouraged to make preparation for a life of usefulness and service in the cause of the Lord. This preparation should not consist merely in education, such as is imparted in our schools and colleges, though that certainly can be made helpful, when used with meekness, and in the interest of the Lord's work. This, however, has been emphasized so much, and so often, that there is some danger of overlooking that which is even much weightier. Man might possess all educational qualifications and have a perfect understanding of the Lord's work, theoretically, and yet be a total failure in the work of the Lord. Spirituality must be developed, and a laborer for God must himself have drunk deep from the waters of salvation and must have tasted of the power and blessings of God. In an early day in the history of the latter-day work, even before the church was organized, the word of the Lord was as follows: "No one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care."

We want to avoid extremes and hence cannot accept the theory that all a preacher need to do is to open his mouth, and God will fill it. If the Lord always did that, he would be pandering to slovenliness and encourage idleness which we are assured that he will not. Still we are forced to admit that the most able and scholarly presentation of the gospel is tame, without effect, failing to reach the heart of the honest soul, unless it is accompanied by the spiritual power and divine influence that comes from the Lord. This is the gift and blessing that the ministers of the church need, for at best we can only hope to be in partnership with God, and we must learn that without him we can do nothing. Paul was among the educated men of his time, but he recognized himself but an earthen vessel, "that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us." He knew that "the wisdom of this world was foolishness with God," and that man's faith "should not stand in the wisdom of man, but in the power of God." There must be in the heart a love for God and humanity, and a love for righteousness and truth, or the efforts will be barren and unfruitful, even though knowledge and wisdom should abound. To this the same apostle bears testimony when he says: "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge, . . . and have not charity, I am nothing." In harmony with this is the word of the Lord in this dispensation, when he says: "He that thrusteth in his sickle with his might, the same layeth up in store that he perish not, but bringeth salvation to his own soul; and faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work."

It was through instrumentalities of men, unqualified as far as the wisdom of the world is concerned, that God established his work in this last dispensation, and through like instrumentalities that his work has been maintained and cared for until the present. We have heard them sing:

"We come from bench and anvil;
From merchant's desk and plow,
But not with learning trammelled,
Our help alone art Thou."

God's work will go on and prosper as long as his servants continue in humility and seek the guiding hand of the Almighty, but without his assistance it will fail even though we may have all the benefits of scholarship and the theoretical wisdom of the world.

I know I am running the risk of being regarded as an old foggy, and not up to the times, but as long as I believe in the immutability of Christ and his word, I find it difficult to keep pace with movements now on foot. I shall be glad to be considered old-fashioned however, for I am quite willing to accept the prophet's admonition when he said: "Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your soul."

I trust that the Lord who began his work and cared for it until the present may overrule all for the best, and be our helper in the trying hour.

UNDERWOOD, IOWA.

Sincerely,

H. N. HANSEN.

DAYTON, OHIO, July 22, 1919.

Editors Herald: I can hardly wait from one week to another to get to read the dear HERALD, as it brings so many glad tidings of good things each week. I often wish everybody could see and realize the greatness and importance of the message which it bears; and the benefits man may obtain if they heed the advice it gives. We are living in a time when all should obey its instructions in love and humility, that they may be blessed and protected by the kind Father in heaven, and that by a close walk with him, may be prepared for the service that is so much needed in the world to-day.

What greater privilege could we ask for than to be a light in this dark world, and our light should be as that mentioned by the Apostle Paul, that of the sun. We should make so much greater a light than others, that as the stars and the moon hide when the sun comes up, so may the world not notice the light of other religions when ours is brought to them and lived out before them.

Every Saint of God should be demonstrating the religion of Jesus Christ to the world in their lives, that they can see it is the best there is.

We labored among a noble band of Saints of late at Shawnee, Ohio. They are Saints indeed. You cannot help but love them. We had a great day there Sunday, July 20. We had a good basket dinner. Sister Halb gave a twenty-minute talk in Sunday school; and the writer preached three sermons during the day, baptized eight, and two children were blessed at the confirmation service. It was one of the most pleasant days of my missionary experience. May we be up and doing.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
JACOB G. HALB.

GROTON, CONNECTICUT, July 6, 1919.

Editors Herald: It is Sunday and our nearest church, at Providence, Rhode Island, is sixty-four miles away. We have no church privileges, and while our six children are all in the church, it is hard for them to live as near to the Lord as they should. But they all are firm in the faith.

There are about nineteen or twenty members within a radius of twelve miles from here, and nine are near enough to the city of New London to attend meetings if we had an elder here.

This is a beautiful country, and there is plenty of work for carpenters, machinists, etc., at good wages. Also there is plenty of work for girls and women in the mills, stores, and restaurants, etc.

I was disappointed in not getting the HERALD last night; but yesterday's mail brought John Zahnd's little paper which the poor man is sending broadcast in his efforts to build up himself as a temporal and spiritual leader. In his paper are numerous quotations from letters received by him from our church members and others, some sending money to help him in his work in building up his all-things-common scheme. One letter received by him from R. C. Evans contained ten cents, and requested Zahnd to announce in his next paper that Evans is selling a number of books and leaflets, etc., against our church. Poor Evans and Zahnd! Both are in the same boat. Both are workers together with his Satanic majesty, in his efforts to frustrate the work of God.

Zahnd quotes extracts from different publications trying to show that Joseph and Hyrum Smith, as well as many others of the early church, had fallen from grace, and taught and practiced many things contrary to the true way. He quotes from a letter of Hyrum Smith to the Saints living on China Street, Hemlock County, which letter is recorded by our Church History, volume 2, page 731. He garbles the letter and fails to quote those parts that would show the true stand of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, as taken in the letter quoted from. The part which Zahnd didn't quote comes just before his quotation, and reads as follows:

"Notice

"As we have lately been credibly informed that an elder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, by the name of Hyrum Brown has been preaching polygamy and other false and corrupt doctrines, in the county of Lapeer, State of Michigan;

"This is to notify him and the church in general, that he has been cut off from the church for his iniquity; and he is further notified to appear at the special conference, on the 6th of April next, to make answer to these charges.

"(Signed) "JOSEPH SMITH,
"HYRUM SMITH,

"Presidents of said church."

The letter was then written to the Saints at China Creek, and sent by Brother Hewitt, and Mr. Zahnd quotes correctly until he gets to the end of the first paragraph. The next paragraph, which is left out by Zahnd, reads as follows:

"And any man that is found teaching privately or publicly any such doctrine (polygamy) is culpable and will stand a chance to be brought before the High Council, and lose his license and membership also; therefore he had better beware what he is about."

Brigham Young himself publicly boasted that it was he and not the Seer that first introduced polygamy. Brigham stated that it was revealed to him while on a mission in England. Such apostates as Zahnd and D. H. Bays, Evans and others who, because of their iniquities have allowed their minds to become darkened, will twist and distort the true intent of true, righteous testimonies, endeavoring to make them appear evil.

Sister Emma, just before her death, testified that Joseph was a good, reasonable man; that she was nearly always with him, and that she had much influence over him; that they never quarreled; that he never had the so-called revelation on polygamy, to her knowledge, as claimed by Brigham, and that she never burned the original, as claimed by Brigham.

She was one of those who wrote the manuscript of the Book of Mormon, as her husband translated from the plates. And after some of the leaders strayed from the true way, and followed that man of sin to the salt land to make their habitation, she, true to her convictions, came with young Joseph and was received into the true church, organized by her husband in 1830.

If any true Saints will read in volume 3 of our Church History of the wonderful way that God worked in helping the scattered Saints (who did not stay with those ambitious would-be leaders) to reorganize, and how he poured out the Holy Ghost upon them and instructed them, you will feel the Spirit burning within you testifying that the reorganizing of the church was of God. And disinterested men, judges of the land, before whom the different factions tried to obtain the church properties, said that the Reorganized Church was the true and original church, as founded by the Lord through Joseph the Seer.

So, brethren, do not be fooled by these smooth-tongued, dissatisfied soreheads who would seek to tear down the work of God because they cannot run the kingdom of God to suit themselves.

These would-be leaders look in vain for some flaw in the life of the late Joseph Smith, and while they garble some of the sayings of Brother Elbert and Brother F. M. Smith, they can say nothing to compare to Paul's statement about Peter, whom he rebuked to his face, for, said Paul, he was to be blamed.

Well has God told us to read the books of the church. Every Saint should read volume 3 of Church History. If you do you can plainly see the hand of God working in helping them to reorganize. And he is still with us, for my soul burned under the influence of the Holy Ghost as I read the words of God given through F. M. Smith (and even now it fills my soul as I write).

Brethren, we have the truth and need fear nothing but our own weaknesses, and our liability to fall away through the workings of Satan and his emissaries. So let us be faithful and stand by those that God has set over us, praying that God will pour out the Spirit of wisdom upon them to help them in their duties.

With love in my heart for all Saints, and also those that are in darkness, and praying that we may all walk in the light as He is in the light; that we may have fellowship with one another, and that His blood may cleanse from all unrighteousness, I remain,

Yours in the only true church,

THOMAS G. WHIPPLE.

DEMOCRACY

(Continued from page 788.)

their view. On the day of the vote he again used every argument he could bring to bear in oratory, diplomacy, and finesse to carry the proposition. He said there could be no reasons against except selfish reasons. He summed it up that "The president of the United States, the nations of Europe, all the world is looking upon you to take the right action and vote affirmatively." He concluded by putting it as a war measure; those who did not vote affirmatively were unpatriotic; there could be no reason for voting against it. In voting each one should sign his name, and if anyone should vote in the negative he should give his reasons and if they were selfish his vote would be ignored. We favor the initiative, the referendum, and recall, but that is form without substance.

In the church no principle is more firmly established than that of common consent. No man can be ordained to any office, where there is an organized branch, without the consent of that branch. No man can be ordained to the general offices of the church, the presidency, twelve, bishopric, high council, high priest, seventy, or patriarch without the vote and approval of a general conference or in some instances of a high council. Every man should be subject, at least annually to popular support, approval, or disapproval. No revelation becomes binding upon the church, until it is passed upon by the quorums, and accepted by the people, for the Lord has given to man his free agency. He expects him to assume the responsibility of exercising it in righteousness. It is a responsibility and a privilege. The laws which govern the church are also subject to the frank consideration of the people, and then their approval or disapproval.

But at the same time there is wise provision for leadership, for men on whom is laid the responsibility not only for their own actions, but for directing the action of the church.

Above all, there is the direction of our heavenly Father, but neither the one nor the other prevents, nor should it be permitted to prevent the action of the people and their freedom of thought and will. The divine plan has evidently been to give a man his free agency. It was Lucifer who offered to save man, regardless of his will. But that was not the plan of our heavenly Father.

Fisher Ames has compared monarchy (or aristocracy) to a merchantman. It sails well, but when it strikes a rock, it goes to the bottom. Democracy he compares to a raft. It never sinks, but your feet are always in the water.

The divine plan comprises the best of all systems of government, just as it is probably the origin of all. It offers the splendid sailing qualities of the merchantman with the safety of the raft.

S. A. B.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Conference Minutes

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN.—At Viceroy, July 17, T. J. Jordan, president, in chair. William Aylor was chosen to preside, with power to choose associates, and district presidency and missionaries J. W. Peterson and D. Macgregor asked to assist. As the church work has progressed from year to year there has been a division of districts, and this was the first year for the South Saskatchewan District and the attendance was more than expected. Out of 7 branches 5 reported, showing a membership of 206. Item of interest was the advisability of a mission paper, which was favored for Western Canada, and a committee was to act with the North Saskatchewan and the Alberta Districts in this. Also picture machine received consideration. Bishop's agent report gave as receipts since last conference the sum of $2,468.45, and paid out $2,419.55. A Woman's Auxiliary was organized with Sister Malden, president; Jennie Neil, secretary. The Religio and the Sunday school had their election of officers and there prevailed the thought that there would be a good report received from their work for the coming year. The conference will meet semiannually, and the next place will be at the call of the district presidency. The speakers of the conference were William Aylor, D. Macgregor, J. W. Peterson, assisted by others of priesthood present. C. B. Bergersen, secretary, Radville, Saskatchewan.

KEWANEE.—At Rock Island, Illinois, on June 6-8, 1919. This was the 184th session. Was presided over by Elders U. W. Greene, of the Twelve, and George Sackfield, vice president of the district. Statistical reports: Kewanee, 144; Joy, 109; Dahinda, 91; Peoria, 81; East Moline (formerly Twin City), 79; Millersburg, 76; Matherville, 71; Buffalo Prairie, 60; Rock Island, 57. Secretary's report showed district contained 10 branches; total membership of 821; priesthood, 55; absent from branches, 317. H. C. Ziegenhorn, Bishop's agent, reported total collections with balance, January 1, 1919, to June 1, 1919, to have been $1,180.23. Balance June 1, 1919, $193.23. Instruction from the presidency with reference to the Kindlesparger case was heard and by motion approved. The instruction was that Buffalo Prairie Branch be instructed to restore Jonas Kindlesparger to membership and letter granted as per request. Annual election resulted in choosing Elder George Sackfield, vice president; Mary E. Gillin, secretary; H. C. Ziegenhorn, treasurer; J. G. Cole, chorister; Eva Bean, librarian. Conference sustained H. C. Ziegenhorn as Bishop's agent, and Mary E. Gillin as historian. No president was chosen, but it was moved that we ask the joint council to send us a high priest to preside. Motion prevailed. J. W. Bean was chosen as member auditing committee. It was decided to hold a reunion this year. Next conference to be held at Dahinda, date left to presidency of district. Preaching by U. W. Greene and F. G. Pitt. J. W. Smith, missionary, was present as well as many of the local workers of district. Questions of vital importance were discussed, and the consensus of opinion seemed to be that the time of "hastening" was approaching. Necessity for greater vigilance apparent. Mary E. Gillin, secretary, Peoria, Illinois, 115 Clarke Avenue.

Conference Notices

Western Maine, at Little Deer Isle, August 30 and 31. H. A. Koehler, president.

Nauvoo, at Montrose, Iowa, at 10 a. m., August 30. This will be during the reunion. W. H. Gunn, secretary.

Convention Notices

Woman's Auxiliary of the New York and Philadelphia District at Archbald, Pennsylvania, during the district conference, August 30 to September 1. Mrs. J. R. Lentell, organizer.

Reunion Calendar

(The figures in parenthesis give the page of the HERALD on which details have been given.)
 Eastern Iowa, Muscatine, August 8-15 (576).
 Kirtland, Ohio, Kirtland, Ohio, August 7-17 (311).
 Des Moines, Runnells, Iowa, August 8-17 (575).
 Clinton, Missouri, Eldorado Springs, August 8-17 (598, 654).
 Southwestern Texas, Pipe Creek, Texas, August 8-17 (conference and ten-day meeting) (655).
 Kewanee, Matherville, Illinois, August 14-25 (759).
 Northeastern Nebraska, Southern Nebraska, Pottawattamie, and Fremont, Iowa, Council Bluffs, Iowa, August 15-24 (552, 703).
 Northern California, Irvington, California, August 14-24 (654).
 Holden, Kansas City, and Independence Stakes, Pertle Springs, August 15-24 (598).
 Far West, Missouri, Stewartville, August 15-24 (654).
 Northwestern Kansas, Alexander, August 16-24 (782).
 Little Sioux and Gallands Grove, Dow City, Iowa, August 22-31 (503, 806).
 Southern Missouri, Springfield, August 20-31 (702).
 Eastern Colorado, Fort Collins, August 22-31 (735).
 Southeastern Illinois, Brush Creek, August 22-31 (654, 735, 806).
 Nauvoo, Illinois, Montrose, Iowa, August 22-31 (527, 759).
 Northern Wisconsin, Chetek, August 22-31 (655).
 Southern Idaho, Hagerman, August 22-31.
 Southern Wisconsin, Madison, August 22-31 (735).
 Northeastern Illinois, Plano, Illinois, August 29 to September 7 (553).
 Southwestern Oregon, Myrtle Point, August 29 to September 7 (759).

Reunion Notices

Southeastern Illinois, which was to have been held at Springerton, August 15 to 24, has been changed to Brush Creek, August 22 to 31. The smallpox has broken out at Springerton, so it could not be held there, and the committee changed to Brush Creek. Those wanting tents notify the undersigned at once. There will be a dining hall on ground to accommodate those desiring to pay board. Those coming by rail come to Xenia. Notify secretary and you will be met. W. E. Presnell, secretary.

The Little Sioux and Gallands Grove Districts will hold a joint reunion at Dow City, Iowa, August 22-31. Tents, 8x10, $2.25; 10x12, $2.75; 12x14, $3.80; each having 3-foot wall; 14x16, 6-foot wall, $5.40. Setting up tent, 25 cents extra. Meals furnished at reasonable rates at camp grounds. No profiteering. President Elbert A. Smith and Apostle U. W. Greene will be with us. Brother Heman Hale Smith will also be present to deliver some of his interesting, up-to-date lectures. Sister Vida E. Smith will represent the Woman's Auxiliary and the Sunday school. Boy Scout Movement, institute work, and recreational activities will be arranged for. Good music at all services. F. R. Schafer, secretary, Denison, Iowa; Amos Berve, chairman, Logan, Iowa.

Two-Day Meetings

At Beaverton, Michigan, August 23, 24.

At the Saints' Church, five miles north and one mile east of Gladwin, Michigan, August 30, 31. Trains will be met Friday night and Saturday, at Gladwin.

At Bentley, Michigan, September 6 and 7. All invited. Matthew Umphrey, president.

Addresses

Edward Rannie, Tulsa, Oklahoma, R. F. D. 2, Box 149.

Book Reviews

TRAINING OF A SALESMAN.—By William Maxwell, vice president of the Thomas A. Edison Company, Incorporated, J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, $1.50 net. This is a new book that is really worth while and will rank high in the already large number of books written on this important subject. This was so interesting that we stayed with it and read it all at one sitting on a recent railroad trip. It made us feel like applying for a job as salesman so we could put it all into effect. Our experience and observation makes us believe that the book is eminently practical as well as interesting. There are no tedious pages on useless discussions, but there is a whole bookful of spicy, human-

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor.

The official organ of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Published every Wednesday by the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. Entered at the post office at Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

PRICE, $1.75 A YEAR IN ADVANCE

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words.

CONTENTS

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| EDITORIAL:   |     |
| Children of God - - - - -  | 785 |
| The Lamoni Stake Reunion - - - - -   | 786 |
| News and Gossip - - - - -  | 787 |
| Democracy - - - - -  | 788 |
| ORIGINAL ARTICLES:   |     |
| How Much Tithing Do I Owe, by Benjamin R. McGuire - - - - -  | 789 |
| The Outlook, by Columbus Scott - - - - -   | 791 |
| OF GENERAL INTEREST:   |     |
| The Elder Minister - - - - -   | 795 |
| The Price of Education Is the Price of Success - - - - -   | 796 |
| Return of Our Soldiers - - - - -   | 796 |
| WOMAN'S AUXILIARY - - - - -  |     |
| Mrs. Emma James. - - - - -   | 797 |
| LETTER DEPARTMENT - - - - -  |     |
| Will R. Adams—Charley A. Parkin—William M. Sauter—John A. Taylor—H. N. Hansen—Jacob G. Halb—Thomas G. Whipple. - - - - - | 799 |
| MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT - - - - -   |     |
| FROM HERE AND THERE - - - - -  | 806 |
|  | 808 |

interest sales talk that not only interests salesmen, but well applies to all of us, no matter what our profession. The book applies with equal force to saleswomen as well as salesmen, the word being used in a generic sense, and there is a chapter on "The 50-Dollar a Week Girl." Some of our quorums are studying salesmanship and applying the general principles to their work. This book will be an excellent text for that purpose, while our L. D. S. Sales Association members will each one find this a delightful addition to their books on the subject. As for ourselves, we shall count this book as a personal friend and occasionally take it up to renew the impressions it made, and apply them in our work.

A PILGRIM IN PALESTINE.—By Doctor John Huston Finley, Commissioner of Education for New York State, who went to Palestine as head of the Red Cross mission for investigating and alleviating conditions. Published in 1919 by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York, $2. This is a book over which every devout Saint will wax enthusiastic. Doctor Finley describes in an intimate manner the sights and impressions he imbibed in two trips afoot across Palestine, the one from sea to sea, the other from Beersheba to Dan. Since he was following the conquering armies under General Allenby, it was but natural to reverse the usual "from Dan to Beersheba." As our own missionaries again begin the establishment of the gospel in this historic land we shall follow with keen interest the progress of their work throughout this wonderful land promised as an inheritance to Abraham's children. A book written as intelligently and reverently as this one is will find a welcome not only to our library shelves but to our hearts. The suggestions in the final chapter on the disposition of the land by internationalizing or mutualizing it offer a solution to the seemingly difficult problem before the peace conference or its successor—the league of nations. In speaking of it as a homeland for the Jews, the author says: "A Homeland! Yes! But an international Homeland; one which gives welcome to every earth child who turns toward its holy hills with a pure heart and with clean hands—not one which narrows sympathies or accentuates differences of race or creed—a Homeland whose tenantry shall be primarily those who, like the families of Gershon, Kohath, and Merari of old, care for the sacred things of humanity, which must now include the utensils of democracy—not a Homeland to be peopled by persecutions or pogroms of other lands, for these can no longer exist, but a Homeland re-peopled by its own appeal to a humanity seeking not personal salvation nor ease nor pleasure, but a higher common experience and an 'eternal excellence.'"

THE WAR ROMANCE OF THE SALVATION ARMY.—By Evangeline Booth and Grace Livingston Hill. J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, net, $1.50; 30 illustrations. This official story of the work of the Salvation Army is well named when it is called a "romance," for to follow the unvarnished tale of this wonderful organization in its work among the soldiers of France is like reading a fiction account—yet this truth is indeed stranger than fiction. To our minds, the work they did is in many respects so much like the work we must yet do as a church for the oppressed peoples of the world, it might well be included in the required reading course of those training for foreign mission work. They met obstacles—seemingly that was about all they did meet—and overcame them. They took the Spirit of Christ with them to the fullest extent they had received it, and through fog and rain, in the hours of the night, on the roads, under shell fire, served the boys with food and cheer. When occasion offered—which was often—they explained the love of Christ for humanity, and because they were demonstrating it in their lives, the men believed what was said. They did not furnish theatricals, but did furnish music. They provided games, yet there was no card playing, no shooting craps. They baked pies and doughnuts, served coffee and cocoa, but did not sell or give away cigarettes or tobacco. No Salvation Army worker was sent to France who used tobacco in any form or drank intoxicating liquors. No man can hold a commission in the Salvation Army and use tobacco. Knowing these things, and a little of the work they have done, to read the book itself and study the pictures is a real inspiration.

Our Departed Ones

BRANSON.—Robert Lee, son of Brother and Sister S. J. Branson, was born April 22, 1919, in Atchison, Kansas. Died June 27, 1919. Funeral service at the residence of D. C. White, Lamoni, Iowa. Sermon by J. F. Garver. Interment in Rosehill Cemetery.

SWAINSON.—John G. Swainson was born April 1, 1852, at Worcestershire, England. Died at Sarnia, July 16, 1919. Married Margaret Hayes and to them were born eight children. Baptized and confirmed August 10, 1893, at Wallaceburg, Ontario, by Edward DeLong. Ordained elder on October 16, 1898, at Wallaceburg, by George Green and B. St. John. Sermon by John Shields.

SWAINSON.—John Swainson, son of John G. and Margaret Swainson, and husband of Elise Cosgrove, was born September 29, 1894, at Wallaceburg, Ontario. Died May 13, 1919, in Toronto, Ontario. Baptized March 12, 1905. There are left to mourn, his wife and one little daughter, Marie, his parents, 2 brothers, and 4 sisters. Services at Saints' church in Toronto. Sermon by R. Baldwin, of Boston.

LOGAN.—William John, infant son of J. M. and Ruth Logan, grandson of Elder and Mrs. William Davis, was born September 25, 1917, near Ubyly, Michigan. Died July 31, 1919, as a result of being kicked by a horse. Funeral August 3, 1919, from the Saints' church, Ubyly, Michigan. Sermon by Myron Carr, and interment in Ubyly Cemetery.

SORENSEN.—Trena Margret Sorensen, wife of S. K. Sorensen, was born August 19, 1865, in Denmark. Came to the United States with her parents in 1871. Baptized July 6, 1879, at Plano, Illinois, by F. G. Pitt. Married S. K. Sorensen, August 2, 1886. Died at the Independence Sanitarium, July 29, 1919. Funeral held at the family residence in Lamoni, Iowa, August 2, 1919, on their 33d wedding anniversary, in charge of J. A. Dowker. Sermon by Hubert Case.

FILLMORE.—Anna, wife of Blair Fillmore, died at her home at Glensville, Nova Scotia, July 20, aged 51 years. Baptized in June, 1911, by Elder Macgregor, and was true to her covenant. She leaves to mourn, 2 daughters, Sister R. M. Knight, of California, and Calla Canning, at home; also one son, Etter. Service at the home in charge of Mr. Neal, Methodist minister. A good wife and mother has gone to rest leaving a home that will always miss her presence.

EVANS.—Evelyn Evans was born January 13, 1897. Married George Evans May 4, 1918. Baptized in 1917, by F. S. Brackenbury. Died June 11, 1919. She leaves to mourn, husband, father, mother, Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Schaar, 3 brothers, and one sister, together with many friends. Funeral service at Canbro Baptist Church. Sermon by Myron A. Carr. Interment in Grant Cemetery.

CRUM.—Alfred Gomer Crum was born September 10, 1850, in Genessee, Whiteside County, Illinois. Died July 25, 1919, in Spokane, Washington. Survived by wife, 7 sons, and one daughter. Brother Crum was baptized at Holdenville, Oklahoma, July 19, 1903, when sixteen years of age, by Elder Peter Adamson. A good man has gone to his reward. Service in charge of Oscar Case. Sermon by W. M. Aylor.

GOFF.—Ruby (Linch) Goff was born October 13, 1899. Baptized March 10, 1910, by Hubert Case. Died July 7, 1919, as the result of an explosion following an attempt to kindle a fire with coal oil. Sister Ruby had been married the previous year and was living with her husband, D. Goff, and baby, near Bison, Oklahoma, at the time of the terrible accident which resulted in her death a few hours later.

WASH.—Joseph P. Wash passed away at Salmon City, Idaho, July 3, 1919. Brother Wash was an ideal Saint, humble and earnest. He was sorely afflicted with asthma, which finally caused his death. He had mining interests in Idaho to which he was going. An appropriate service was held in his memory in Seattle, his home, on July 13, 1919. Sister Eddeva Irwin sang two beautiful solos, and the choir sang an anthem. Service in charge of F. W. Holman. Sermon by J. M. Terry.

LOVEJOY.—Howard E. Lovejoy was born in Davenport, Iowa, April 7, 1861, and passed away very suddenly at his home on Whidby Island, Washington, July 8, 1919, heart trouble being the cause of his death. Baptized June 13, 1897, in Missouri, by M. M. Turpen. Leaves wife and one son, Howard J. Lovejoy, of Centralia, Washington; to mourn. Brother Lovejoy was a member of the Masonic Order, and was laid away with the Masonic rites, after a short service at the home in charge of R. H. Millman, an old friend of the family.

CASE.—Jessie Harriett Blackman Case was born November 6, 1875, near Magnolia, Iowa. Married Oscar Case, July 26, 1894. To this union 4 daughters were born; 2 of them are married and 2 of them are at home. She was killed in an auto accident, June 27, 1919, near Spokane, Washington. Leaves to mourn, her husband, 4 daughters, father, C. W. Blackman, and mother, Arilla Blackman, 2 brothers, and 2 sisters, besides a host of friends. Funeral sermon by F. A. Smith, assisted by J. A. Bronson.

BOHN.—In a hospital in France, on October 9, 1918, William Towner Bohn, aged 21 years, 9 months, and 27 days. He gave his life for humanity's sake and was a clean and worthy young man. Also he loved the gospel of Christ and had been baptized in 1916 by R. V. Hopkins, at Lamoni. Memorial service was delayed until his brother Robert could leave his work and come from Colorado. Father, mother, 3 brothers, and 2 sisters survive him. Sermon at Lamoni, on July 20, 1919, by H. A. Stebbins. E. D. Moore assisted.

FROM HERE AND THERE

Albert N. Hoxie, General Chorister, announces the coming of a daughter to their home.

Floyd M. McDowell, at the head of the Boy Movement, is to be in attendance at the Des Moines and Council Bluffs reunions, in the interests of the work of his department.

Ordering some copies of the HERALD for July 30, 1919, H. L. Schofield, of Lincoln, Nebraska, says: "The article, 'The church, the world, and the war,' by R. W. Farrell, is the strongest we have ever read, and we want to pass it along."

If there are any Saints at Tucson, Arizona, they are requested to call on Mrs. Mary Stone, R. F. D. 1, Box 65. She is a sister who moved there from San Jose, and is anxious to get in touch with some of the Saints.

A letter from C. J. Spurlock, at Independence, commenting on the recent work of the joint council, attaches considerable importance to the work done by these brethren, and implies that the writer is especially delighted with the appointment of Elder Joseph Luff to missionary work. He pertinently closes: "While these noble and consecrated men and women are going forth to war, we at home must do what we can in all the ways we can to support them. Shall we?"

ASSISTANT HISTORIAN TOURS REUNIONS

Heman Hale Smith will be in attendance at several reunions between now and September 1, lecturing and getting in touch with the people. His itinerary includes Eastern Iowa reunion, Pertle Springs, Stewartsville, and Dow City. He returns to Lamoni in time for the opening of Graceland College, September 4, where he will teach history in connection with his work as Assistant Historian and assistant editor of the Journal of History.

Indications are that Stewartsville will have a larger reunion than last year. Not only excellent speakers, but good recreational and other features are to be provided. Heman Hale Smith will lecture on "The church and democracy," and the choir will render "Olivet to Calvary." Among the speakers are Elbert A. Smith, B. R. McGuire, and J. A. Gillen. The reunion committee have purchased an entire electric lighting outfit for the camp.

The following item clipped and sent in by one of our readers is of interest. To meet these figures, one would have to assume that the family was in the first place well-equipped, so that this is the amount of upkeep. Those who have had practical experience will realize that the figures are by no means excessive: Who Wears the Clothes? Mr. Average Man is firmly convinced that the women spend the money and that a lot of it goes for their dressing. Well, here are some facts on the matter: The Bureau of Labor Statistics in Secretary Wilson's Department of Labor has been studying the yearly cost of clothing for a hundred representative families in the New York City shipbuilding district. The average income involved was $1,300 per year. They found it cost $73.17 to dress papa, $52.04 to dress mamma; big brother's clothes came to $70.41; big sister's to $62.13; the kids in school ran from $37.81 to $40.46 for the boys, $33.07 to $38.86 for the girls; boys under six had to have about $32.30 worth of clothes for the year, and male babies $19.10; the little girls cost $29.60 to dress, and the female babies $22.36, and it is in this last class that the women, for the first and only time in their lives, are more sartorially expensive than the men!

SUCCESS SEEKS OUT THOSE WHO ARE TRAINED

Success sends Opportunity out to look for young men and women. But Opportunity passes by those who have wasted their time in wishing, and summons those who have made ready. The church and the world have a place for you only if you are prepared. Graceland College gives you the training.

Additional reasons why you should attend Graceland:

1. Officially accredited and fully standardized.
2. Life State Teachers' Certificates to graduates.
3. Prepares for courses in Law, Medicine, Dentistry, Journalism, Commerce, Engineering, Agriculture, etc.
4. Special courses for wireless operators. Courses in Academy, Bookkeeping, Shorthand, Oratory, Vocal and Instrumental Music, Home Economics, Teacher Training, Band and Orchestra.

By law Graceland graduates entering the teaching profession receive a minimum of $80 per month. After two years' successful experience the salary is $100 per month.

Free—A new illustrated catalogue just off the press—Free Write The President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

Volume 66

Lamoni, Iowa, August 20, 1919

Number 34

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

DON'T FORGET THE MAIN ISSUE

WHILE DISCUSSING THE QUESTION, "WAS JOSEPH SMITH A POLYGAMIST?"

Two men, Jones and Smith, were having a very heated argument on politics. Finally Jones, being a democrat (or was he a republican?), was driven into a corner. He got the worst of the argument. Then as a happy way out of his trouble he turned upon Smith and said, "Your great-great-grandfather, who assisted in founding the party, was a notorious rascal." From that point on he refused to discuss principles and insisted that the argument should have to do exclusively with the character of Smith's ancestors. The maneuver was not logical, but it was expedient—from his viewpoint.

For many years the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ has had a controversy with the world. Generally when we get our opponents in a corner they immediately attempt to shift the argument to the character of Joseph Smith, alleging that he was a polygamist, and what not, that is bad. Sometimes, recognizing the value of preventives, they do not wait until they get in a corner. The logic is bad, but no doubt the procedure is expedient—from their standpoint.

A Christian and an infidel were discussing matters of difference in belief. The infidel, being hard put to it on principle and doctrine, fell back upon the "mistakes of Moses," and finally landed hard on Abraham, calling him a polygamist, and yet one recognized by Christians as the "Father of the Faithful." After that the infidel always kept as far as possible from the New Testament and as near as possible to Moses and Abraham. Our opponents use typical infidel tactics.

Ingersoll ignored the teaching of Jesus Christ and tried to confine the argument to "the mistakes of Moses." Ingersoll is dead. Christianity still lives. Ingersoll is now mourning "the mistakes of Ingersoll." Our doughty opponents may choose to ignore our position and insist on debating the "mistakes of Joseph Smith," or his alleged mistakes. After they are dead and gone to judgment the church will stand.

Just as an example, we note a tract entitled, "Mormonism Polygamous," issued by the National Reform Association, and written by the reverend William E. LaRue, B. D. The Reverend LaRue, B. D., is rather impartial, devoting very nearly one half of his article to the Utah Church, the balance to the Reorganization. However, he does give us a little more than half of his attention. He advertises us of being "anti-polygamous" in belief. For that much credit we thank him. But why one who is out to fight polygamy should devote more than half of his attention to an "anti-polygamous" organization remains to be explained. He is not the first man to pursue that course. Sometimes we suspect that all this to-do about polygamy is really a smoke screen—a little ecclesiastical camouflage.

The burden of the LaRue article is an effort to prove that Joseph Smith taught and practiced polygamy. Because we do not agree with him on that point he concludes that we are dishonest. It is not our purpose in this article to review the old charges; but merely to point out that they do not touch the vital question at issue. That man Jones mentioned in the first paragraph, could never have won his argument by diverting the discussion to a consideration of the character of Smith's ancestors. Nor could Ingersoll win out on the "mistakes of Moses."

Our people were not converted to Joseph Smith. They were converted to Jesus Christ, and to certain very positive doctrines. These doctrines are true or false, and always have been true or false. Nothing in the life of Joseph Smith can in any way affect them. The statement that Joseph Smith was not a polygamist is not found anywhere in our creed. Even if some one should prove that he was a polygamist at one time in his career (which has not been done), that would not affect our religious conceptions in the slightest.

If our opponents cannot see that, it may be their fault or it may merely be their misfortune. The old Scotchman sold a blind horse under the guarantee that it was entirely without fault. Presently the buyer was back with the horse and with the complaint, "He's blind, and you said he didn't have a fault." The canny Scott replied, "Mon, that's no' his fault. That's his misfortune."

It is true that once in a great while an elder who has one eye on popularity and the other on position may discover suddenly that Joseph Smith was a polygamist. Even a bishop, whose official actions were about to be called into question, suddenly discovered, almost over night, as it were, that Joseph Smith had taught polygamy. Exit bishop to the rustle of angel's wings. And immediately he founded a new church. It is as though he said, "Joseph Smith was a polygamist, and upon this rock I will build my church." And the gates of hell are greatly amused—if gates can be said to have any sense of humor.

Most of our men are not blind either by fault or misfortune. They know that our position regarding church organization, revelations, spiritual gifts, and doctrinal principles, as well as on those important economic principles now coming so much to the fore, equality, consecration, and stewardships, is true. Nothing that Joseph Smith did or did not do seventy-five years ago can affect the matter one way or the other.

For that reason in discussion they generally insist upon what are termed "church propositions." They do not bite on every little pin hook to which some preacher may attach a bait. They demand that the other fellow shall give half time and set up his own church and doctrine for scrutiny, and for attack if found at fault. Some of our opponents refuse to sign such propositions, preferring a one-sided debate and obviously wishing to keep as far as possible from principles and as much as possible on the question of the other man's character. They may not be logical, or sportsmanlike, or Christian, but it is exceedingly expedient—from their standpoint.

Many will join the writer in the following sentiment: I do not believe that Joseph Smith ever practiced or taught polygamy. But if I should become convinced that he did, while I would feel exceedingly sorry that a family name should suffer shame, I would say, Let him meet the issue at the bar of God—I am a minister for Jesus Christ and a preacher of his gospel, my ministry will go on absolutely unchanged.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

I have always been averse, was when I was a boy and am yet, to casting my failure to accomplish what was expected of me upon somebody else, making him to bear the burden of my fault; and I did not when I was a boy shirk from the rod when the schoolmaster applied it when he thought it was necessary, by endeavoring to place the rod upon somebody else; and I feel in this work a good deal as I did when a boy.—Joseph Smith in SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 44, p. 229.

REUNIONS

We are just at the height of the reunion season. Nine reunions closed August 10, five closed August 17, while seven are now in session, and seven more will start the last of this week. After that we note we have but two reunions listed.

That means twenty-eight reunions are held in August; two are held after the first of September; and seven or more were held prior to August 1.

This illustrates how remarkably the reunion movement has developed within the past few years. In several instances it represents a reunion of more than one stake or district. The Pertle Springs reunion, now in session, represents three stakes, while the reunion at Council Bluffs, also in session, represents four districts. Outside districts are represented at other reunions by many visitors.

The reunion has evidently proven a success. Time is given for recreation, but very little time is taken for conference business, and as a rule, only the business of the reunion is undertaken. On the other hand, much time is given to the prayer services, to study classes, to work undertaken by the various departments, and by no means least, preaching. The speakers have their minds free from the cares which so often occupy their thoughts during the various conferences, and so it becomes what its name signifies—a reunion of the people of God, a time for spiritual rejoicing.

S. A. B.

THE COLLEGE BULLETIN

The Graceland College Bulletin recently issued shows that President George N. Briggs, Professors J. A. Gunsolley, Floyd M. McDowell, F. B. Elliott, Cyril E. Wight, Paul N. Craig, J. H. Anthony, and Belle Patterson, will continue their services with Graceland. Brother Wight's services are transferred, however, from the business department to that of religious education.

The following new members of the faculty have been chosen: Esther Irene Layton, English; June Whiting, English and Public Speaking; Dagmar M. Holm, Ancient Languages; Heman Hale Smith, History; Johannes C. Bergman, Romance Languages; Claire Van Eaton, Shorthand and Typewriting; Marjorie Gunsolley, Typewriting; Lieutenant R. A. Wight, Commandant and Director of Athletics.

Lonzo Jones continues as dean of the dormitory; Arthur B. Church, returns to take charge of wireless telegraphy; and Miss Lyda Elefson becomes librarian and curator.

In addition to the course of lectures announced in previous years, there has been added Floyd T. Lesh, agriculture; Mabel K. Smith, home economics;

Henry C. Smith, architecture; T. W. Williams, public speaking.

There is also announced a series of lectures in the department of religious education, which were duly stated in the issue of the SAINTS' HERALD, July 2.

While special interest is felt in this course of religious instruction, the collegiate, academic, commercial, and studio work will be continued, as in past years.

September 4 is announced as registration day.

---

PERTLE SPRINGS REUNION

---

The program for the Pertle Springs reunion has just reached our desk. This reunion is for the three stakes which formerly constituted the Independence Stake, but which are now the Kansas City, Independence, and Holden Stakes.

We note that this reunion combines the three factors, spiritual power, study classes, and recreation. Prayer meeting is from 8.15 to 9.45; then 10 to 12 is spent in the school of methods under the direction of Elder Walter W. Smith. The first hour is class work; the second hour a lecture. The afternoon is given over entirely to recreation, with one sermon for the day at night.

On Sunday, Sunday school and a sermon follows the prayer meeting, with another sermon in the afternoon.

The Massachusetts District reunion is organized on a similar plan. Every week-day afternoon is given to recreation, with a sermon at night. The morning is given into three or four periods from 8 to 12, with class work, prayer service, a lecture, and a sermon.

We have attended many reunions in years past. Our experience and observation is that the recreational feature does not detract from either spirituality, or the value of the class work. To the contrary, it means an increased interest and power in every direction.

S. A. B.

---

SELF-PRESERVATION AND HONOR

---

The assumed law of self-preservation, as the first law of nature and of economic determinism is continually set to one side. For example, in Belgium during the war (see Saturday Evening Post, May 10, 1919) they refused to work though offered as much for one day as they were living upon for a week. This would tend to prove that hunger is not the determining factor in the lives of men, at least not the controlling factor, for there are issues that rise above the will to live and self-preservation.

The Germans proceeded on the theory that self-preservation controlled the policy of Belgium as a nation. In this they were mistaken. But they still persistently held that it was the controlling feature with the lives of individuals, but again were they mistaken, for thousands upon thousands, millions upon millions refused luxurious slavery, preferring starvation with honor and independence.

Some writers of nature and evolution have proceeded on the theory that nature is a constant or continued warfare. According to this theory, those who enter the wild places do so at the peril of life and limb, which makes it nearly equivalent to suicide. But such is not the case. We are even informed that the skunk is social and does not use his poisonous odor, unless provoked. The rattlesnake is called a gentleman, as he does not strike without warning, and but few snakes attack unless provoked. We are assured that the wolves of this country have not, within a hundred years attacked human beings, whatever may have been the case in the past.

The animals of the wild kill only for food, or else necessary protection of life and limb. Only man kills for sport, as a rule. There are reported some instances of mountain animals killing, as where a tame dog kills sheep and leaves them. There are a few instances of other animals acting in a similar manner, but they are rather exceptional.

Ants organize their family life and keep parasites to support them, to act as sort of milch cows. They provide for these parasites and so have them in a way for their support. There are many such instances of organized life, even in the insect world.

The bear, we are told, is as a rule friendly, and the mountain lion is likely to cause less disturbance of sleep than is a tame tom cat, as it very rarely attacks men.

The assumption that all nature is relentless warfare, or a struggle for existence, demonstrating solely the will to live and self-preservation can easily be questioned. For there is another instinct as valuable and equally dominant, and that is the genesis and preservation of the species and family life.

Animals gather and birds gather food for their young, as well as for self. In fact, in very many instances the young are fed first and parents suffer the lack of food. Many birds and animals so sacrifice self for young, while insects die regularly for their young.

It may seriously be questioned if life in the wilds, and remote parts of earth is as dangerous as in the crowded marts of trade in our cities, or even in a settled town.

Fantastic stories are handed down which no doubt have their psychological significance, and some of which may point to monsters of the past. Hence the stories of the dragon may point to some remote form of animal life now extinct.

There is, however, deep in life another vital principle, and that is the law of sacrifice. The mother for her child is one instance of this which does not belong exclusively to the human mother. In the higher forms, even in animal life, the father will lay down his life for his child. And even among the animals, if one of a pair be killed, the other must also be accounted for.

This principle of sacrifice, of which some evidences are to be found among the lower animals and mammals, reaches a splendid manifestation in the human race.

We refer to this factor among the animals merely to show that the law of self-preservation is not a universal rule, but the law of sacrifice also appears throughout nature.

When the Titanic went down, when the Lusitania went down, there was no law that could be enforced for women and children first. Mankind recognized it as a matter of course. As a result, unknown children and unknown women were saved, while men who had made their service to humanity felt went down to death.

A little child is on the railroad track. The train is approaching. Any man who is worthy of the name will risk his life to save the child. Despite the law of life men will do things, endanger their own safety, for the sake of those who are weaker.

Belgium held her honor higher than national self-preservation. The Belgian citizen held his honor higher than personal self-preservation and the will to live.

The men who have taken valiant part in this recent war held their honor higher than the risk of death. The will to live was not the primary consideration.

The roots of honor and of sacrifice reach deep down into human nature and are fundamental. So that Jesus of Nazareth in emphasizing these principles called Christian, in teaching brotherly love, forbearance, and help for the weak, was moving in accordance with well-known and clear natural laws. For principle a man will die if need be, and the worthy man will die to save others. That is a law, written on the tables of the heart. S. A. B.

---

A CHURCH SURVEY

---

Through the kindness of Elder Edward Ingham we have received an extract from the San Francisco Examiner of July 11, 1919, stating that a church survey is to be made in California, and that a meeting was held in San Francisco to organize. It is the intention to try to ascertain the facts about the Protestant churches; to learn why congregations are diminishing, and suggest means to increase the attendance and the religious interest. The survey it is proposed will be city by city, and county by county, each congregation and community being made the subject of study.

Elder Ingham kindly sent us a full set of report blanks, which show that the survey will be very critically made in an effort to ascertain the community needs.

He states that in answer to a question concerning the theological seminary and the survey. Professor Nash replied to the effect that that question would be carefully considered, and that if it should develop from the survey that men with no seminary training whatever made the best pastors and ministers, it would at least give the churches an opportunity to drop a lot of useless material. It is evident that the value of the survey will depend upon the open-mindedness of the investigators.

In relation to the immediate church problems, the present economic, social, and civic conditions will be considered and a thorough classification undertaken, including a mapping of the city, and a consideration of all church and community activities.

Such an investigation should prove of value, still it is very evident, unless the Lord builds the house they labor in vain who build it. This is apparent from the questionnaire submitted.

---

RELIEF NEEDED IN NEAR EAST

---

Recently Bishop B. R. McGuire forwarded to the American Committee for Relief in the Near East contributions received by him from our church members for this purpose. In reply he received the following letter:

NEW YORK, August 8, 1919.

Mr. Benjamin R. McGuire,
Box 256,
Independence, Missouri.

My Dear Mr. McGuire: We greatly appreciate your kind contribution for the relief of the suffering people of the Near East.

We recently had a cablegram from Mr. Hoover informing us that in spite of everything that can be done, two hundred thousand will die within the next few months, but that there are five hundred thousand who may be saved if we send immediate and far-reaching relief. A letter just received from Tiflis states that it is a common sight to see starving children stumbling into the gutters and drains, dropping by the wayside because their little starved bodies have no further strength. It is not going to be a brief task to make these children into self-supporting and independent adults and to instill in them idealism of government and life, but it is a task that is decidedly worth while.

Again thanking you for your kind interest and expressing the hope that you will add to this generous contribution from time to time as circumstances may permit, I am

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) H. C. JAQUITH.

Bishop McGuire adds that any Saints who wish to send contributions to him to be transmitted to the American Committee may do so, and he will see that they are promptly forwarded. The need is apparently very great and urgent.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

OUTLINE STUDY OF THE FIRST PRINCIPLES

What are the essential points in connection with our work that I should understand?

How can I study these points intelligently, without unnecessary loss of time, and with a view to reaching correct conclusions?

These and similar questions confront every young man who desires to study to show himself approved.

It was this desire to get a more thorough understanding of the basic principles of the church doctrine, that prompted the young men's college class of the Lamoni Sunday school to take up a study of what are usually called the first principles of the gospel.

As a result of a year's time spent in this study, the outline printed below has been evolved. It was the desire of the class to consider the subject philosophically rather than dogmatically, working out the proof point by point and using scriptures to support the conclusions.

Such an outline, placed in the hands of any young man or young woman, should enable him to give a reason for the hope within him. Whether we have succeeded in our effort to present a conclusive and logical outline remains to be seen.

We feel, however, that a start has been made, and the outline is published with a view to provoking constructive and helpful criticism. Such criticisms and suggestions will be thankfully received and should be addressed to C. E. Wight, Lamoni, Iowa.

The outline was worked out by a committee consisting of Floyd M. McDowell, former teacher; C. E. Wight, present teacher; Frank B. Almond, assistant teacher; Lonzo Jones and Leonard Lea.

Assistance from the following brethren in the shape of lectures and articles is gratefully acknowledged: E. A. Smith, Hubert Case, J. F. Garver, and James Davis. The Instructor, the Compendium and Doctrinal References have been used to good advantage as reference books.

It will be noted that the outline of the resurrection and eternal judgment is very brief. It was our desire to present no mooted and theoretical points, but only those which are essential and generally accepted.

FIRST PRINCIPLES OF THE GOSPEL

FAITH

A. What Is Faith?

I—"Assurance of things hoped for, evidence of things not seen."—Hebrews 11: 1, Inspired Translation.

- (a) Assurance amounts to a certainty.

1. Certainty is fixed because our belief is dependent to a certain extent upon knowledge of the operation of definite laws.
2. The certainty is increased through the apparent parallel of the spiritual and natural forces.

(b) Evidence may be real even though circumstantial.

1. Circumstantial evidence, if conclusive, is accepted in a court of law.

II—Faith is confidence; the basis of all human activity.

(a) Government

1. Paper money is worthless without confidence.
2. Bonds would be scraps of paper without confidence.

(b) Business

1. Credit based on confidence.
2. Salesmanship based on confidence.
3. Advertising ineffective without confidence.

(c) Farming

1. The planting of the seed requires faith or confidence.

(d) Medicine

1. Confidence recognized as essential in the treatment of disease.

B. Is Faith Necessary?

I—The Bible teaches it.

(a) "Without faith it is impossible to please . . . God."—Hebrews 11: 6.

1. Because faith leads to action.
2. Action leads to the doing of the works of God.

(b) "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them."—Mark 11: 24.

II—The Book of Mormon teaches it.

(a) "And if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you."—Moroni 10: 5.

III—The Doctrine and Covenants teaches it.

(a) "They shall have faith in me, or they can in no wise be saved."—Doctrine and Covenants 32: 3.

IV—Faith is opening of door between man and God (Romans 5: 1, 2).

(a) Man makes initial move. (Effect of this move shown by the transformation of the western deserts. "The barren desert was transformed into green pastures, smiling orchards, and fertile fields."—Religion and Life, p. 167.)

(b) Faith is the only means by which unseen (spiritual) forces can be understood by man. (See Romans 1: 20.)

V—Faith governs the conduct and character of a man.

(a) Through conscience.

1. Causing repentance.

(b) Through affections.

1. Begets confidence and trust in God.
2. Trust begets love.
3. Love begets obedience.

C. How Is Faith Obtained?

I—Faith is a potential element or instinct of every human being.

II—This natural or instinctive faith is developed through the early training of the child.

III—This natural faith may be transformed into spiritual faith.

(a) Through a desire to believe. (Alma 16: 151.)

(b) Through intelligent prayer.

- (c) Through cultivation, in the study of the parallel between natural and spiritual forces.
- IV—Spiritual faith is obtained by some in large measure as a gift. (1 Corinthians 12:9.)
- D. What Is the Relation of Faith to Knowledge?
- I—Faith, according to Webster, is “trust in the honesty and truth of another; belief; assent of the mind to divine revelation; unshaken adherence.”
- II—Knowledge is defined as “a clear perception of a truth or a fact.”
- III—Faith, insofar as details are concerned, is done away with as knowledge increases.
- (a) “Faith is not to have a perfect knowledge.”—Alma 16:143.
- (b) “And he had faith no longer, for he knew.”—Ether 1:85.
- IV—Faith in God and in his plan increases as knowledge of God and his plan increases.
- V—Faith and knowledge grow side by side until faith is finally swallowed up in a perfect knowledge.
- E. What Is the Attitude of Jesus toward Faith?
- I—He regarded faith as a “mainspring of action.”
- (a) Men will not act without faith.
- (b) If they do not act, they will never perform the works of God.
- (c) If they do not perform the works of God, they are not entitled to salvation.
- (d) Hence, salvation was made contingent upon faith.
- II—He regarded faith as progressive, affirmative, dynamic, as opposed to atheism, which is negative and reactionary, the “creeping paralysis of human aspiration.”
- (a) “I will build my church.”
- III—His attitude is clearly shown in the following passages:
- “Have faith in God.”—Mark 11:22.
- “Repent ye, and believe the gospel.”—Mark 1:15.
- “Thy faith hath made thee whole.”—Matthew 9:22.
- “According to your faith be it unto you.”—Matthew 9:29.
- F. What Is the Attitude of Science toward Faith?
- I—Science uses faith in its procedure.
- (a) No one begins a scientific investigation without a faith that the ultimate outcome will be for the good of himself or of humanity.
- (b) The inventor often endures years of privation and even social ostracism because he has faith in the final success of his efforts.
- (c) Progress never comes except through effort of some person or persons. Men do not as a rule waste time and money in an effort in which they have no faith.
- II—True science increases faith.
- (a) The object of true science is knowledge.
- (b) As one's knowledge (based upon true science) of the facts of nature increases, his faith in God and his plan increases.
- (c) Leading scientists now openly admit a belief in God.
- III—We have a right to believe. It is rational to believe.
- (a) “There are cases where a fact cannot come, unless a preliminary faith exists in its coming. And where faith in a fact can help create the fact. . . . In truth dependent on our personal action, faith based upon desire is certainly a lawful and possibly an indispensable thing.”—William James in The Will to Believe, p. 25.
- G. Specific Instances of Faith.
- I—In Old Testament times.
- (a) Of Abel, in offering sacrifice.
- (b) Of Enoch, as a result of which he was translated.
- (c) Of Noah—in the building of the ark.
- (d) Of Abraham, in offering Isaac as a sacrifice; in dwelling in a strange land, the land of promise.
- (For further instances, see the 11th chapter of Hebrews.)
- II—In the days of Jesus.
- (a) Of the centurion.—Matthew 8:5-13.
- (b) Of the palsied man.—Matthew 9:2-6.
- (c) Of the two blind men.—Matthew 9:27-30.
- (d) Of the woman of Canaan.—Matthew 15:22-28.
- (e) If “as a grain of mustard seed.”—Matthew 17:20.
- III—In Book of Mormon times.
- (a) Of the two thousand young men under Moroni who by their faith were saved in battle.
- (b) Of the brother of Jared.
- IV—In modern times.
- (a) Of a missionary who through faith caused the trade winds in the Society Islands to change from east to west. (These winds normally blow continuously from the east.)
- (b) Of a missionary on the above islands, who when without food for himself and family, obtained both food and money through faith and prayer. (The above are but suggestive instances of the many that might be given.)
- H. What Is the Relation of Faith to Our Latter-Day Work?
- I—We must have faith in the plan of salvation.
- (a) Because the greater part of our achievement is still ahead.
- (b) Because we have only a part knowledge and we must exercise faith in those things which are yet to come.
- II—We must have faith in the individuals to whom God has intrusted the working out of his plan.
- (a) Because God's work must be accomplished through human agency.
- (b) Because the plan of redemption is a cooperative one, and can only be accomplished through the combined efforts of inspired leaders and loyal followers.
- III—We must have faith not only in the redemption of Zion as a final attainment, but we must have faith in the processes by which Zion is to be redeemed.
- REPENTANCE
- A. What Is Repentance?
- I—A changed condition of the heart, manifested by outward signs.
- B. On What Is Repentance Based?
- I—On faith.
- (a) Repentance implies a belief in God.
- II—On consciousness of sin.
- (a) “Now when they heard this, they were pricked to their heart. . . . Repent, and be baptized every one of you.”—Acts 2:37, 38.
- III—On godly sorrow.
- (a) “Godly sorrow worketh repentance.”—2 Corinthians 7:10.
- C. What Are the Fruits of Repentance?
- I—Confession of wrongdoing.
- (a) Secretly if sin is in secret, publicly if sin is in public.

1. See Doctrine and Covenants 42: 23, entire verse.
2. "By this ye shall know if a man repenteth of his sins. Behold, he will confess them and forsake them."—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 9.

(Note: In the confessional, the papacy has shown an exaggerated conception of true confession.)

II—Restitution for injury, insofar as possible.

(a) See Leviticus 6: 1-5 and Luke 19: 8.

(Note: The doing of penance is an unnatural attempt at restitution.)

III—A ceasing to do evil, a learning to do well. (Isaiah 1: 16, 17.)

IV—A changed life; from pride to humility; from hate to brotherly love; from greed to unselfishness; from egotism to prayerfulness; from profligacy to temperance; from anger to patience; from impurity to chastity.

(a) Psychology emphasizes the fact that the way to break an old habit is to substitute a new one.

(b) "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good."—Romans 12: 21.

D. Is Repentance Necessary?

I—Except ye become as little children, etc.—Matthew 18: 2.

II—Christ preached it. (Matthew 4: 17 and Revelation 3: 19, 20.)

John preached it. (Matthew 3: 2.)

Peter preached it. (Acts 2: 38.)

Paul preached it. (Acts 17: 30.)

Isaiah preached it. (Isaiah 1: 16; 55: 7.)

III—Latter-day revelation teaches it. (Doctrine and Covenants 6: 4; 18: 2.)

BAPTISM

A. What Is Baptism?

I—Burial of the old self. (Romans 6: 4; Colossians 2: 12.)

II—Birth of the new self. (Romans 6: 4; John 3: 5; Galatians 6: 15.)

III—Type of the inward cleansing.

IV—Surrender of life into the hands of God on his terms.

B. What Are God's Terms?

I—Immersion, the only correct mode. (Colossians 2: 12; John 3: 23; Acts 8: 36-38.)

II—Should be administered at the age of eight years. (Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.)

(a) Science now asserts that the brain of a child is complete at the age of eight years.

III—Should be administered only through those duly authorized to act for God. (Hebrews 5: 4; Exodus 28: 1.)

C. What Is the Purpose of Baptism?

I—For the remission of sin. (Mark 1: 4; Luke 3: 3; Acts 2: 38.)

II—To actively express repentance, through humility.

III—To fulfill all righteousness. (Matthew 3: 15.)

D. Is Baptism Necessary?

I—The Bible teaches it. (See Matthew 28: 19, 20; Acts 10: 44-48; Mark 16: 15, 16.)

II—The Book of Mormon teaches it. (See 2 Nephi 6: 48, 49; 2 Nephi 13: 7; Mosiah 9: 41-48.)

III—Doctrine and Covenants teaches it. (See Doctrine and Covenants 105: 11; 83: 12; 39: 56; 42: 2.)

E. Historical Evidence of Baptism.

I—Of Mode. (See The Instructor.)

II—Of Age. (See The Instructor.)

F. Did Baptism Originate with Jesus?

Kersey Graves, in his book, Sixteen Crucified Saviors, presents the fact that there are no less than sixteen traditions among the nations of the world relating the story of a crucified Savior and of an initiatory rite of baptism. The answer to this statement may be based on the story found in the Holy Scriptures, to the effect that the gospel was preached in the days of Adam. The peoples of the entire world therefore looked forward to the coming of the Savior, and when the nations were scattered at the time of the fall of the Tower of Babel, it was but natural that this fact should be woven, in garbled form, into the traditions of the people.

LAYING ON OF HANDS

A. What Are the Uses of?

I—For the gift of the Holy Ghost. (Acts 19: 1-6; 8: 14-17.)

II—For ordination. (Acts 6: 5, 6; 13: 1-3; 1 Timothy 4: 14; Numbers 27: 18-20.)

III—For healing. (Mark 16: 18; 8: 23, 24; 6: 5.)

IV—For blessing of children. (Matthew 19: 13-15; Mark 10: 13-16.)

B. What Is the Purpose of?

I—As human instrument for transfer of divine power.

(a) "God came from Teman, . . . he had horns coming out of his hand: and there was the hiding of his power."—Habakkuk 3: 3, 4.

1. The parallel between the natural and spiritual forces is apparent, since all inventions are brought into existence through the instrumentality of the hands.

C. Is Laying on of Hands Necessary?

I—Bible teaches it. (See quotations above.)

II—Book of Mormon teaches it. (Moroni 3 and 4.)

III—Doctrine and Covenants teaches it. (32: 3; 34: 2; 39: 6, etc.)

IV—Necessity recognized by the sectarian world for ordination to the ministry.

V—If it is necessary for ordination, it is quite as necessary for the other uses taught by the Bible.

D. Laying on of Hands Was Practiced by:

I—Christ. (Luke 4: 40; 13: 11-13.)

II—Paul. (Acts 19: 11; 28: 8.)

III—Other apostles. (Acts 5: 12; 14: 3.)

E. Historical Evidence of the Laying on of Hands.

(See The Instructor.)

RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD

A. When Will the Resurrection Occur?

I—Resurrection of the just, at the time of the coming of Christ. (1 Thessalonians 4: 15-17.)

II—Resurrection of the unjust, at the close of the thousand years' reign. (Revelation 20: 5.)

B. Scriptural Evidence of Resurrection.

I—Bible: Job 19: 23-27; 14: 14; Isaiah 26: 19; Psalm 49: 14, 15; 1 Samuel 2: 6; Hosea 13: 14; John 5: 25, 28, 29; 11: 25; Revelation 20: 12, 13; 20: 4-6; Luke 14: 14; Acts 24: 13-15; John 5: 25-29; Daniel 12: 2; Hebrews 11: 35; Romans 6: 5; Psalm 17: 15; Ezekiel 37: 1-14; 1 Corinthians 15: 44-49.

II—Book of Mormon: Mosiah 8: 58; Alma 8: 100; 9: 14-27, 41-43; 19: 28-65; Moroni 7: 31.

III—Doctrine and Covenants: 36: 12; 42: 12; 45: 10; 63: 5, 13; 76: 3-5, 7; 85: 4; 110: 12.

C. Historical Evidence of the Resurrection.

(See The Instructor.)

D. Scientific Evidence of the Resurrection.

I—The seed must die before the resurrection of its likeness.

ETERNAL JUDGMENT

A. When Will the Judgment Occur?

I—Preliminary judgment to occur prior to the coming of Christ. This is indicated by the fact that the just are to come forth at that time, and no such decision could be made without a preliminary judgment.

II—Final judgment to be made at the time usually designated as the end of the world—following the reign of Christ and "the little season."

B. Scriptural Evidence of the Eternal Judgment.

I—Bible: Hebrews 6: 2; 9: 27; John 5: 22-30; Acts 17: 31; Romans 2: 5; Daniel 7: 10; Revelation 20: 12; Psalm 9: 7, 8; Revelation 22: 12; Matthew 16: 27; Ecclesiastes 12: 14; Romans 2: 16.

II—Book of Mormon: 3 Nephi 6: 33-35; Alma 9: 21; 2 Nephi 6: 36-38; Mosiah 1: 126.

III—Doctrine and Covenants: 43: 7; 41: 3; 56: 5; 108: 1.

It is our hope that this effort will merit the consideration of the brethren and be worthy of suggestions for enlargement and improvement.

Respectfully submitted,

C. E. WIGHT, for the committee.

THE CHURCH VERSUS CARL LEWIS

The policy of the church, when that unpleasant task is necessary, is to discipline its members in as quiet a manner and in as restricted circles as practicable. There are times, however, when the interests of the work require something beyond this procedure. The above-entitled case is considered an occasion for such departure from the usual, set policy.

Carl Lewis, a resident of Lamoni, Iowa, and a member of the Lamoni Branch, through the fallacious reasoning well known to the brethren and Saints informed as to the tactics of the latter-day apostasy, and common to those who hold to such doctrines, seems some time ago to have reached the conclusion that polygamy and concubines were orders divinely appointed in ages past, which may be so appointed again, and when so commanded have been and will be justified.

Now Mr. Lewis to promulgate these doctrines and to further his peculiar interests as same shall hereinafter appear, prepared and caused to be circulated letters and a series of pamphlets incorporating these doctrines. And it seems to have been his particular ambition to distribute certain of these among ministers of the various churches.

As if to prepare the way for the urging of matter, so glaringly at variance with the standard books and teachings of the church and the universal position of the ministry of the church relative to the doctrines of polygamy and concubinage, Mr. Lewis in these same pamphlets puts forward the sophistry that stealing and homicide in times past and under certain conditions have been justified and may again be justified. This contention, however, is only secondary to the first, which first contention as we have noted seeks to establish polygamy and concubinage as divinely appointed.

In his pamphlets he urges not only claims as to concubinage and polygamy, but also seeks to establish that these relations between men and women of the past, and particularly between Abraham, Jacob, and David and certain women are justified by the Inspired Version and the Book of Mormon—and he stresses especially the Book of Mormon, Jacob 2—wresting the scriptures in an attempt to forecast the time when concubinage and polygamy shall be the order of God and the church. Indeed, in his pamphlet, The Future Head, and circulated in the town of Lamoni, he positively affirms:

A belief in the righteousness of plural marriage practiced under right "conditions" shall become firmly established in his church. And those who are unable to accept the scorn and contempt of the world for the sake of the doctrine of Christ shall find plenty of room out in the world.

It was evident to Mr. Lewis that in order to establish his doctrines in the church it would be necessary to remove the present ministry. Beginning in this matter at the very head, he moves boldly and directly. In a pamphlet entitled, The Blemished Head, and generally distributed, he declares the president of the church to be "no longer chosen of God for that prophetic office. . . . God will surely supplant him by another. . . . Be prepared for changes—they are coming!"

Again in a later pamphlet, The Future Head, he says of the president that he "fell firstly because of disobedience, and secondly because I, at God's bidding, ventured against him."

And in the same pamphlet, discussing further the president and referring to the counselor and remaining member of the presidency he says:

The present temporary head . . . must take warning and walk in a different path for "nor my temple David build" applies to him in a very significant manner also, and if he continues to walk in that path of perverseness which was laid out by the great pervert [the president of the church.—J. F. G.] . . . which is the path of the least resistance from the world, and which means illegitimate worldly honor and approval, God's hand to punish will surely rest upon him also. He shall not escape. God wants men in his church, not cowards.

In the judgment of Mr. Lewis as visited upon them the only thing in which these men of the First Presidency are lacking is in this: The president, according to this man, has fallen and perverted the way of righteousness, because he has failed to advocate polygamy and concubinage; for by holding to monogamy, Mr. Lewis claims, he disobeys the voice of God and courts favor of the world. The counselor to the president according to this judgment is already in the same way of perverseness and for the same reason, and in which if he continue, God will strike him also from the Presidency.

This is all Mr. Lewis has to urge against these men. They are fallen first in the eyes of God because of disobedience to his law, and second in the eyes of the church because Mr. Lewis has ventured to expose their duplicity, the perverseness of their cowardly procedure, as he claims, having learned the righteous ways of God's marital orders—the ways of polygamy and concubinage—through fear of the world perverting that way by the substitution of monogamy to the hurt of the Saints.

The Presidency according to Mr. Lewis having fallen; the way is clear. So we read in the pamphlet, The Future Head:

God has chosen me to be the future head of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and no man, or set of men, or traditions taught in defiance of the truth, as given in the Inspired Scriptures [that is, in defiance of his interpretation of these Scriptures.—J. F. G.], shall prevent me occupying that high position for which God has chosen me.

As the way is clear for the prophet of the new dispensation, so it is clear that the new cause may prosper. We have already noted that "a belief in the righteousness of plural marriage . . . shall become firmly established in his church." We now learn from the pamphlet, The Blemished Head:

I will never be excommunicated by this church because of what I have advocated, for God's time has come to bring back the Inspired Bible into the church.

Having thus before us a brief digest of the work of Mr. Lewis, we come now to further particularize his actions, and to relate the procedure of the church.

Following the distribution of pamphlets entitled, Abraham, Yourself, and Jacob, Our Inspired Bible, and The Future Head, the former two seeking to establish his polygamous claims, the latter libeling the president of the church, officers of the Lamoni Branch undertook labor. Efforts to restore the brother to the faith and to effect a discontinuation of practices reflecting on the cause and misleading to those not well acquainted with the teachings of the church proving of no avail, charges were preferred and a trial asked for. These charges sought to establish:

1. That the brother was a teacher of heresy under counts A, polygamy; B, homicide; C, stealing.
2. That by so teaching and representing the church as so teaching, he was misrepresenting the teachings of the church.
3. That he was libeling the president of the church.
4. That in refusing to hear the officers of the church and by persisting in the above-described course, he was insubordinate to the authorities of the church.

We recall here that up to the time of preferring charges Mr. Lewis had circulated only the pamphlets, Abraham, Yourself, and Jacob, Our Inspired Bible, and The Blemished Head. Following charges and before trial he circulated the pamphlet, Book of Mormon. Soon thereafter and still before trial, he circulated among Gentiles of Independence and Kansas City, Missouri, a revised edition of the same pamphlet, Book of Mormon, if possible more reflective than the first.

And again, following this circulation and still before trial he distributed in Lamoni, Iowa, the pamphlet, The Future Head.

Defendant was first cited for trial before the Lamoni Stake bishop's court. He was here found guilty on every count, findings being later affirmed by the branch.

Recommendation of the court and adopted by the branch allowed defendant thirty days in which to begin restitution, and which completed, required acknowledgment before the branch, and the circulation of retraction as widely as damaging literature had been circulated.

Appeal was taken from the decision of the bishop's court and action of the Lamoni Branch thereupon, to the Lamoni Stake High Council. The cause was gone into anew and exhaustively by the high council, findings of the bishop's court being in every count and particular sustained. The branch affirmed the findings of the high council and adopted recommendations requiring complete restitution as per recommendation of the bishop's court within one month.

On his failure to make restitution, and after notice formally filed by him with the president of the branch and high council, stating that he would not comply with said requirements as stipulated, Carl Lewis was on March 4, 1919, by unanimous vote of Lamoni Branch expelled from membership in the church.

Now the church was quite ready and would have been glad at this juncture to rest the case. Mr. Lewis, however, persists in his course. He has since final action by Lamoni Branch expelling him, caused to be printed and distributed a revised edition of the pamphlet, Book of Mormon, in which he yet urges his polygamous doctrines. And this he does without reference to the position of the church, nor to his expulsion from the church. In fact the effect of this work of his among men uninformed, is to lead them to the conclusion that the books of the church both teach and justify polygamy and concubinage, and that the members and priesthood of the church look forward to a restoration of this order as one of divine appointment.

In the introductory paragraph of this last edition of the pamphlet, Book of Mormon, we read:

All my reference books, consisting of Book of Mormon, Inspired or Corrected Bible, and Doctrine and Covenants, are the three standard books of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters located at Independence, Missouri, just twelve miles east of Kansas City, and are late editions printed by this same church at its printing plant, the Herald Office, located at Lamoni, Iowa. I make special mention of these facts, because some may suppose I used Brighamite or Utah Mormon reference books in writing this article. Such a supposition is entirely wrong.

In the concluding paragraph of this same pamphlet, referring to the polygamous relations of David and others:

It was the lack of obedience and the abuse of the privilege which caused God to condemn the actions, in a general way, of those of old time. There were, however, some very notable exceptions—men like Abraham and Jacob, who kept God's charge, his commandments, his statutes, and his laws, and who received the greatest of rewards and are now sitting on God's right hand, as stated in the Doctrine and Covenants. And if a sufficient number of the people of Zion will reach the road of obedience which Abraham and Jacob traveled, and by traveling it reach the same condition of spiritual strength and stability which they reached, it may be that God may see fit to trust us with as great a trust as they prove he was justified in placing in them. And the granting of this privilege will not result in the abuse of those of the opposite sex by the righteous men of Zion, but will result in especially benefiting them, as the decree that it is not good for man to live alone applies in an equal degree to the women, and the decree has gone forth that men of Zion shall fall by the sword and her mighty in the war: Isaiah 3, and Book of Mormon.

And as if to heap insult upon injury, in the first paragraph just quoted, the word Reorganized appears in the pamphlet in blackfaced type; and the pamphlet is signed, Carl Lewis, Lamoni, Iowa, the known headquarters of the church.

The circulation of this last pamphlet makes necessary some rejoinder, that the brethren and Saints generally may know the facts and how to present them in instances where they are confronted with the unfavorable situation the pamphlet creates for them. In this connection the above is quite sufficient. The position of the church and the teachings of its standard books and ministry in the matter of marital relation is so well known that anything defining same further would be superfluous.

Be it therefore known to all parties concerned that Carl Lewis of Lamoni, Iowa, a promoter of doctrines contrary to the teachings of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, has by the courts of said church been found an heretic; and that he has by said church as represented in Lamoni Branch, been expelled from membership in the church. And be it further known that he has had every opportunity to observe that his representations of the teachings of the church and persisted in to this day are in fact misrepresentations of the teachings of same.

Mr. Lewis has openly affirmed that at the direction of God he has ventured against the president of the church, who he says is a fallen prophet, and who must give place to another.

He has as boldly affirmed that God has chosen him to succeed the incumbent as "the future head of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

He has also as boldly affirmed that he would never be excommunicated by this church because of his advocacy of polygamy and concubinage.

Mr. Lewis has been excommunicated, and primarily because of his advocacy of these doctrines. The Saints may judge as to the occasion for the removal of the incumbent; and as to the probability of Mr. Lewis succeeding him in the presidency of the church.

Committing this case to the hands of God who knows the church authorities concerned and all concerned have made every effort and in the fear of God to reclaim this man, we ask that his mercy be extended to the wayward, and that his blessings attend the cause of Zion.

J. F. GARVER, President of Lamoni Stake.

---

GETTING RELIGION

---

Thomas Nixon Carver, in his book The Religion Worth Having, says: "A virile morality supported by a sound but fervid religion is a powerful factor in any group organization."

A study of the gospel of Jesus Christ adequately confirms this statement. To speak of a virile morality implies a conception of a vital condition in which there is an approach to a proper balance between those things which have been regarded as exclusively spiritual on the one hand, and those which have been regarded as temporal on the other. Likewise there has always been a prevailing tendency to regard spiritual factors as eternal and fundamental, while temporal matters have been largely considered to be perishable and limited in their usefulness to man. To think of salvation as being something affecting only the spiritual life of man without concern for the temporal environment in which he must live, is a common error into which most of the sectarian churches have fallen. It is a salvation which has been insufficient for the needs of men who live in the work-a-day world. The man who feeds the machines of industry, who toils in the fields, who ministers to the comforts of society is quite unable to vision a Utopian "Erehwon" where salvation is bestowed by some supreme doner, in lavish abundance, upon a people whom nobody seems to know. Even if, perchance, he does allow himself the luxury of such an extravagant dream, in the hope that he may in some mysterious way be transported to this wonderful "Freeland," his raptures are sure to be rudely broken by the persistent intrusion of certain factors in his immediate environment. No, salvation is rather a product of a morality evolved by a people who have struggled against odds; who have pitted their combined strength against common enemies which war upon both mental and physical heritages. Salvation like sovereignty comes up from the people, a product of their own endeavor, and not down from some constituted authority of heaven. This kind of salvation is the child of a "Fervid religion."

When we united with the church and cast our lot with this people we accepted an onus of responsibility which few of us at that time were able to sense. Later there was borne in upon us the consciousness of a wonderful plan. But not till every man, woman, and child becomes filled with a desire to give all, can we be sure that the historian will not have to write our names in that interminably long list of the world's failures. We have, by no means, been the first to attempt to establish a Zion. There are scores of volumes written which record the stories of groups which have sought to work out their salvation according to some definite group plan. Unfortunately all have failed, leaving only the memory of fair hopes and lofty ideals. They have sprung up and flourished for a while only to fall into a state of lethargy and disruption because the members allowed ulterior motives of self-interest to overshadow those finer altruistic sentiments. When we come to feel a definite sense of responsibility for the group of which we are a part, then we shall have begun to work out our own salvation, a product of our own initiative.

These communistic experiments, so many of which have been dismal failures, indicate very clearly the lack of a proper conception of what salvation means and how it is to be obtained. They further indicate the fact that men and women generally do not know how to appreciate the significance of responsibility as a factor in securing group welfare. It is plain, therefore, that the church must emphasize the doctrine of hard and honest work at one's regular job instead of preaching a kind of vague and indefinite sort of social service. The man who, while occupied in the factory, the mill, or on the farm, is not able to feel that he is making preparation against the time when he shall be called to render his service to the church, is not converted. The man who cannot say, "I am working at this job, but all the while I am thinking of the time when I can use this training to the blessing and profit of the people with whom I am associated and whom I love," has yet to learn what it is to really be converted. That man really has religion when he has learned to turn to account all his experiences for the upbuilding and profit of the group. In this aspect of the matter religion becomes a very effective means of stimulating productive virtues.

When the farmer gets this kind of religion there is a very marked indication of its effect upon his productivity. The farm is still his own property but it is operated as one of the links in the great chain of productive enterprises which are cooperating to supply the group with those things necessary to the maintenance of life and vigor. It is no longer a matter of selfish individualism, but a case of his acceptance of the additional responsibility for the elevation of the economic welfare of the whole group. His is the task of applying labor, choosing the land, applying fertilizer in proper proportions, counting the cost of his enterprise, in short managing his stewardship so that his talents may yield their increase. He now labors under a new incentive and a new dignity attaches to his position. In a larger sense he becomes a public servant demanding intelligent consideration and rendering intelligent service.

When the doctor gets this kind of religion he devotes himself to the search for formulæ, the use of which will counteract much of the misery prevailing among his people. He is no longer intent upon maintaining a monopoly upon the knowledge of medical science in the fear that his services may depreciate in value if the knowledge of the public is increased along this line. He works to decrease the death rate; he cooperates with the dietitian and the psychologist in the study of food consumption; in short his special care is the physical and mental efficiency of the group. In this way he is increasing his own productive virtues because he is serving an ideal which functions in the immediate present.

If the business man gets this kind of religion his store or place of business becomes a laboratory where his conclusions are formed with reference to the value or injury of certain business practices to the group which he serves. It is not a question of competition nor yet of monopoly; both may be useful under given conditions. It is rather a question as to whether group interest is to dictate the terms under which his business policy is to be formulated. Questions of scientific management, of profit-sharing, and welfare policies among employees all become of interest to him insofar as they have a direct bearing upon his ability as a productive factor in his group. This is his religion. Christ taught the gospel of work when he said, "Know ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" He had his own work to do, that the Father had committed to his charge and the responsibility for the salvation of all men rested heavily upon his mind.

We may say, therefore, that this type of religion lays a basis for a doctrine of salvation which is fundamental. There ought to be quite a powerful appeal to the young men and women of the church in the thesis that in the last analysis sin is a waste of energy and that salvation follows when energy is conserved. This means simply that young people who have the length of years ahead of them must school themselves in the fine art of discrimination in order that they may learn to count the cost of alternative activities which are open to them at every turn of the road. It becomes a test of how well one is able to appreciate the value of his mental and physical endowment so that he will, so far as his best judgment will enable him, repudiate any attack upon him which is calculated to break down his economic or spiritual morale. It is at least worthy the conjecture that this must have been in the mind of the Master on different occasions when he appealed to his people to "come up higher" and to make themselves "delightsome" in his sight.

A YOUNG ELDER.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE NEW SOCIAL ORDER

The following resolutions were adopted by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America:

I. SOCIAL SERVICE

Facing the social issues involved in reconstruction, we affirm, as Christian churches, the belief:

1. That the teachings of Jesus are those of essential democracy and express themselves through brotherhood and the cooperation of all groups. We deplore class struggle and declare against all class domination, whether of capital or labor. Sympathizing with labor's desire for a better day and an equitable share in the profits and management of industry, we stand for orderly and progressive social reconstruction instead of revolution by violence.

2. That an ordered and constructive democracy in industry is as necessary as political democracy and that collective bargaining and the sharing of shop control and management are inevitable steps in its attainment.

3. That the first charge upon industry should be that of a wage sufficient to support an American standard of living. To that end we advocate the guarantee of a minimum wage, the control of unemployment through Government labor exchanges, public works, land settlement, social insurance, and experimentation in profit sharing and cooperative ownership.

4. We recognize that women played no small part in the winning of the war. We believe that they should have full political and economic equality with equal pay for equal work, and a maximum eight-hour day. We declare for the abolition of night work, by women, and the abolition of child labor; and for the provision of adequate safeguards to insure the moral as well as the physical health of the mothers and children of the race.

Resolved, that the statement of the Commission on the Church and Social Service, "The Church and Social Reconstruction," be received; that it be referred to the administrative committee with the idea of publication after revision over the seal of the Federal Council and that it be commended to the churches for study and use.

II. NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL

Resolved, that we express our gratitude for the establishment of the league of nations as agreed upon by the Paris Peace Conference and pledge our support in securing its ratification by the Senate of the United States and our devotion to make it a success.

Resolved, that we urge the incorporation at an early date into the covenant of the league of nations of a clause guaranteeing freedom of religious belief.

Resolved, that we urge the incorporation at an early date into the covenant of the league of nations a clause guaranteeing equality of race treatment, understanding by this equal treatment in respect of the law and its administration in the case of aliens lawfully within the territory of the government concerned.

Resolved, that legislation by Congress should be passed providing for the adequate protection of the lives and property of aliens by the Federal authorities.

Resolved, that the new world situation arising through the developing life of the Orient requires of the United States the adoption (a) of a new oriental policy bringing our laws into harmony with our treaties with China and (b) of a policy in the restriction of immigration which shall be based on a just and equitable regard for the interests of all the nations concerned.

Whereas, wartime and constitutional prohibition having been adopted, we appeal to the Congress of the United States to enact proper laws for their effective enforcement. We appeal to all public officials to fearlessly enforce the laws that have been or may be enacted and pledge them our hearty support in the enforcement of their duties.

Resolved, that the churches be urged to take vigorous measures to resist the attempt which is being made in many States for legalizing admission fees to motion pictures and to baseball games on Sunday.—Rochester Times Union, May 23, 1919.

One eyewitness is of more weight than ten hearsays.—Plautus.

OUR RESPONSIBILITIES

[George H. Wixom kindly sends us an extract from the San Bernardino Daily Sun, of July 21, in which it includes a synopsis of two sermons delivered by Elder John W. Rush-ton in that city. The evening sermon was concerning Christians' responsibility and the solution of the problems of capital and labor. The brief synopsis is as follows]:

In the long and bitter struggle which is still per-sisting in the economic and social realm can we not find the proper solution by applying the same princi-ple to this department which is now being applied to the political world?

In the economic world capital on the one side has acted on the principle of "personal right to property, and whatever either by talent, or opportunity, or good fortune it could get." It recognizes no other law of its being but the mechanics of the market and repudiates all moral and spiritual responsibilities while taking all the produce which they could pos-sibly secure. Then this resulted also in labor being looked down upon with contempt because it has created a standard of valuation based upon wealth for its own sake. Such a view makes man the center of his own universe and practically unsocializes him and makes religion, art, and wisdom impossible, be-cause these imply the acceptance of personal limita-tion.

Labor, on the other hand, has felt the stigma and curse of its own poverty and therefore aspires to shift the balance of power morally and lawfully, or un-morally and with force, so that the parasites upon industry who toil without contributing to the burden and effort of toil shall be eliminated. However de-sirable this course may have been considered in the past, the recent experiences with Bolshevism and the I. W. W.'s surely will make us hesitate before we approve of such thorough-going methods.

Is not the real solution of this problem to be found rather in changing the attitude towards this question and instead of capital and labor being two irrecon-cilable antagonists each believing that the other is encroaching upon its rights, why not abolish the idea of individual rights to property, talent, and opportunity and accept the principle which is at the back of the ideal of the league of nations? Mutual responsibility to conserve the interests of others and the willingness to accept the personal inconveniences of limitation of individual rights? Not rights; but what Professor Tawney, of Oxford, calls the ability and privilege of functioning for the social well-being be the law of balance between capital and labor.

Already, in spite of the persistent campaign more or less organized in this country to discredit munici-palization and industrial cooperation, this is being done successfully in other countries, particularly in Great Britain. This is the practical interpretation of what the Bible speaks of as the "Law of Steward-ship."

"Are We Watching and Praying, or Just Watching?"

We have just returned from attendance at the Lamoni Stake reunion. We quote our heading from J. F. Garver, the stake president. While the weather was very hot and dis-agreeable for a part of the time, we feel sure that others, like ourselves, believe that it has been very good for them to have been there. It is not alone in the enjoyment of the spiri-tual "gifts" that one senses the watchful and protecting care of God over his people, but in the general spirit of good will, of kindly thought, of consideration and patience which char-acterizes the Saints.

We have sometimes deplored the fact that some of our people seem to think a meeting is dull, or unprofitable, just because there have been moments of silence. For our part we do not feel such moments have always "gone to waste." Oft-times the gentle influence which attends some spiritual testi-mony, continues for several moments, and the train of thought so started has been very enlightening and instruct-ive. At such a moment, the introduction of wholly different thoughts partakes almost of the nature of an intrusion, and comes with a distinct sense of shock, especially so if the second testimony be of an indifferent quality. True the time has been "occupied," and so, to some, apparently, a fine meet-ing insured.

In the years that have elapsed since we met in reunion ca-pacity with the Lamoni Saints, we note wide progress. It is gratifying to see the efficiency with which the stake presi-dency conducts the large assemblies, plans for the welfare of the entire camp, and sees that the plans are carried out. It is also gratifying to note the high spirituality which at-tends such service and such efficiency. It is good to have strong, fearless men at the guiding wheels of this church, so that the course pursued may not be erratic, fluctuating, or indefinite, but, instead, our good ship held steadily towards the direct goal of progress and attainment. It is still better when we note that such men, in spite of their strength and fearlessness, in spite of the delicate situations which they must often handle, in spite of the natural handicaps they, as all mortals, possess, have won for themselves true regard, genuine love, and unflinching loyalty from those among whom they minister.

One theme stressed at a few of the meetings at this re-union, was that almost hackneyed one of "supporting by our faith and prayers" the leading men of the church. This was presented in several new garments at different times, and in ways which were quite effective. The mistakes we note in the men who are carrying the spiritual load of this church, are mistakes due to their humanity, without doubt, else the Lord would remove the men and supply others in their places. Granting that, then, the thing devolvent upon the member-ship is that they should not fail in their duties, one of which, most clearly, is loyalty. Since the work of Zion's redemption cannot be accomplished by any unit separately, and must be accomplished through the united effort of the units, surely all must see that any unit which withholds his confidence, his prayers, and his loyal effort, is, by just so much, retarding the culmination of that for which we all long.

We would not blind men's judgment, or chloroform their reason. They are gifts too precious to so stultify, but we would plead for a greater exercise of faith, of confidence, and the pure love which should animate Christ's followers. "Perfect love casteth out fear," and did we love greatly enough, we would criticize less, and would also become imbued with that faith in God which would preclude the creeping into our minds of any doubts as to the outcome of his work on earth. It does not take education or wide experience to find fault. An insane person can destroy a beautiful structure, which only an artistic architect could design, or skilled workmen erect. It is much easier to pick flaws with another's efforts, than to so work, ourselves, that none could find errors in ours.

Thus we found it good to hear from the lips of many, the renewed desires to "get in step," to stay in step, and by that means, make real progress. Harsh criticism is reactive in its effects; it hurts the faultfinder perhaps even more than the one at whom it is aimed. In like manner, love also is reactive, and blesses the giver as much as the receiver. We can never long feel ugly towards one for whom we earnestly pray, and we will find in this kind of Christian duty, an avenue of escape from many of the fears and doubts which have disturbed us.

None should be "lulled to sleep," none should shut eyes to the duty of watching until the Lord shall come, but it should be accompanied with prayer, and trust, and confidence, and the exertion of every legitimate power to assist in preparing this people for his reception. We are sure that he will be well pleased to find us united in our watching, our waiting, and our praying, for only in that way will our service avail to the ends desired. Singly we will fail in the big project; united and blessed, we will win the earth for Christ!

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

What Have You Observed?

We want your help. We need it. Will you give it? Then tell us some of these things:

What, in your experience, is the most common mistake made by mothers in caring for their children?

What is the most vital error made?

What is most neglected by parents—the physical, the mental, or the spiritual training of their children?

What help would be of the most value to young Latter Day Saint mothers?

Are the majority of mothers capable of properly caring for the bodies, minds, or souls of their offspring?

Wherein could the church provide the instruction needed? Through what department should it come?

How, in your opinion, could such instruction be made to reach the ones who most need it?

If young mothers will not read, what then? Would a trained social worker be of service here?

Are fathers equally with the mothers responsible for the welfare of their children? If so, what avenues are open for their education in these matters?

Who are the custodians of the child's spiritual development, the parents, or the church?

Who are custodians of its mental progress, the parents, or the state?

Who are the custodians of its physical welfare? Just the parents?

Are you prepared to support the movement in your locality for social medical oversight, a school nurse, examinations by experts, and a community interest in the well-being of the children?

Answers to the above queries will be gladly welcomed by the undersigned, and may be addressed to her privately, or for publication in this column. Let us think, for therein lies our salvation!

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, 5020 California Street.

Training Little Children

Often mothers say to me, "Don't all the things you do with your children take most of your time?" By no means, I am a mother of three, and do all my own work, except washing and ironing, and I have to do sewing without end.

A busy mother will make suggestions which can be carried out while she is busy at her household tasks. Stories may be told; for instance, baking will suggest the story of "The gingerbread man." This can be found in Best Stories to Tell to Children, by Sara Cone Bryant. Paring an apple or a squash makes the opportunity to tell about the seeds hidden in their cradle—how in the winter they go to sleep and so on. Make a whole story of it. A few days ago I told my three-year-old baby this story and sang to her:

"I know of a baby so small and so good,
Who sleeps in a cradle as good babies should.
Sleep, baby, sleep.

"I know of a mother so kind and so warm,
Who covers this baby from all cold and harm.
Sleep, baby, sleep."

Several days later we had another squash to prepare, and immediately she said, "Mother, sing about the baby." Later, on request, she told her older brother and sister the story of the seed babies.

It is well to make much of holiday celebrations. Have the children prepare little gifts for a birthday. Perhaps it may be only to draw a picture.

On Valentine's Day we always make valentines. Use scrap-pictures and paste them on colored cardboard. Or use paper doilies, cutting out the center and pasting on a piece of cardboard, with an appropriate picture underneath. This makes a pretty little valentine of paper lace. Cut out hearts of red cardboard or paper, and string them together in graduated sizes, on red ribbon or twine.

At Christmas time even the baby can make something. A simple matchholder may be made as follows: Cut from cardboard a circle about four inches in diameter. Cut a slit one third of the diameter at each end. Fold the lower half upwards, turning the cut edges in and pasting them to the upper semicircle to form the holder.

To make a match-scratcher, cut a piece of sandpaper any desired shape, and paste on cardboard. A Christmas picture or bell may be pasted at the top of the cardboard. Penny calendars can be used by the children in endless ways.

Mats for the dining table are also easily made. Cut a six-inch circle of cardboard with a circular hole in the center, and wind with raffia. Picture frames can be made in the same way, cutting the cardboard any shape desired. There are endless things children can make with water colors or crayons and cardboard, using colored paper and the Perry pictures. Perry pictures can be bought for one cent each. A catalogue will be sent upon request by the Perry Pictures Company, Malden, Massachusetts.

Children never tire of making chains out of colored paper. Take a strip of paper about four inches long and half an inch wide, and make a ring by pasting one end over the other; slip another strip through this ring, and paste ends together, and so on. Our children make paper chains for one another as birthday presents. They always bring delight. White and colored chains can be used as Christmas tree decorations.

Let me urge fathers as well as mothers to enter into the life and play of their children. For only when the father lends his aid in the process of child-training can there be perfect unity. By working together mother and father can lead the children to understand the life about them. They can teach them to know and to love nature. They can direct the emotions, develop the intellect, and strengthen the will. And as a result the children will naturally come to feel and understand the divine Love which lies only half-concealed behind all things.—Mrs. Princess B. Trowbridge, in bulletin from United States Bureau of Education and National Kindergarten Association.

Books Which Every Mother Should Own

Mottoes and Commentaries of Froebel's Mother Play, and Songs and Games of Froebel's Mother Play, translated by Susan E. Blow. Published by D. Appleton and Company, New York City. $1.60, each.

As the Twig Is Bent, by Susan Chenery. Published by Houghton, Mifflin Company, New York City. $1.

Fundamentals of Child Study, by E. A. Kirkpatrick. Published by Macmillan Company, New York City. $1.25.

In the Child's World, by Emilie Poulsson. Published by Milton Bradley Company, Springfield, Massachusetts. $2.

Sex Equality in Japan

Students of Japanese history and character will await with interest developments in the movement for equality of women with men.

In spite of all its claims and pretensions to civilization and its undoubted progress in material and physical respects, spiritually, intellectually, and morally, Japan still remains conspicuously a backward nation. Protestations by her leading statesmen have failed to convince the world that her policies are actuated by unselfishness or that her promises possess the quality of sincerity.

The civilization of a race or an era is judged by the honor, respect, and consideration in which its women are held; and measured by this standard Japan is among the least progressive of the peoples of the world. What in this country is called "white slavery," in Japan has received official recognition and encouragement from time immemorial, and in large cities extensive areas are devoted to the sequestration of women living lives of shame.

Travelers, missionaries, and other American and European residents in Japan almost unanimously have attributed to Japanese womanhood in general qualities of refinement and gentleness, unselfishness, and powers of spiritual perception denied to the men of Japan; and it is possible that the material achievements of the latter during the last fifty years may receive through the new awakening of the women the spiritual impulse needed to raise them from the plain of national self-seeking to the higher status of generous contributions to world progress.—Omaha Bee.

I know that there are still many persons who call themselves Christians who prize the good things of life—wealth, position, education, culture—chiefly because other persons cannot enjoy them. Their aim in life is to exclude, to be exclusive. They make their culture, their social rank, even their religion, a thing which separates them from the rest of humanity, rather than a thing which binds them to it.—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

The Bishopric Advocate
for 1919

Every Member a Tithe Payer

Stewardship implies that we do not own but owe. My substance is not to be used in ministering to my own selfishness, but is to be employed in the service of my fellow men; and those who have most must serve most. Jesus made the supreme sacrifice for us. Should we not be willing to make the small sacrifice he requires of us? The tithe is the Lord's.

The statement of Jesus: "He that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad," is quite applicable to our financial affairs. At least, the Lord told Haggai that certain people were earning wages to put it into a bag with holes. The Lord's storehouse is the safest depository: why not use it?

If it is true that a man's riches consist not so much in the multitude of his possessions as in the fewness of his wants, then my surplus is a hindrance rather than a help to me and I am really a richer man without it than I am with it. Consecration of surplus is the logical answer.

Our Relation to the World

It has been quite a length of time since I appeared in your columns. It is rather unexpected to myself that I should reappear by way of this part of Uncle Sam's dominion. His dominion is more cheerfully acknowledged, I think, than the Lord's.

It is disputed as in other parts by various enticements and allurements. They all come under one head: that of "the church of the Devil," though his tentacles seriously involve many organizations, and possibly many members of our own organization. They are in danger at least, when the spirit that is in the world entices them, and makes a strong appeal to them; so strong that they are willing to forsake the church temporarily even, for some of the associations, enticements, and allurements of the world. They want to be in the church and of the church to a certain extent, but they wish to be in favor with the world; wish to be thought well of by the world. The associations of the anti-Christians are really sought out, and held in high estimation. What is there in this, but a loss of spiritual life and power; a weakening of already weak forces? We cannot join in the revival efforts of other churches; add to their crowds, singing, praying, etc., without a loss of our spiritual life, and a gain, of what kind? Does a United States warship lower its flag in English or any other waters? Yet we lower ours in the assemblies of Baal; the idolatries of the idolatrous, if we as Saints join in with such by acknowledging and participating in their worship. The friendship of such at the price; that of turning the back upon the true worship of the true God, is at too great a cost. James wrote of some who were two friendly with the world: "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God." (James 4: 4.) The spiritual strength of some has evaporated through covetousness. It is absolutely gone.

No matter what appeal the world or "the church of the Devil" makes to us, it must be absolutely disregarded, if we are to retain the love and power of God. We must make our choice as to whom we will serve—God or Mammon. We cannot serve both. The church has too long halted in indecision, and is losing its power, even if it gains in numbers. To strain every nerve for numerical gain, and daily see our spirituality declining by departure from the law, and the laws of consecration, is far from cause of self-praise or congratulation. We preach with all the power we are entitled to, considering our ways. We are in danger of running into, if we have not already done it, a form without power. How long shall we run on as we are, and have been running on? Is it not time to call a halt, and organize the church on the basis of the whole law? (Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1.) We had better come down to Gideon's three hundred of chosen material, than go on as we are, up to 400,000. I should dread to see the church as it is, number 400,000. It would be a positive calamity to see four times as many Saints as now dwell at Independence, Missouri, gathered there in unchanged conditions; the same that are in the world. We have nothing more in Independence of the operation of the celestial law, than elsewhere. The larger the gathering without this law, the greater the danger.

The gathering should not be encouraged anywhere, only in accordance with the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom (Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2; 127: 7). I am sure that the hand of the Lord will be heavily laid on this church, if it does not repent. It has had time enough to make up its mind to keep the whole law, and thus support the preaching of the gospel by the works that are called for in its specifications. If we do not agree by some General Conference action to keep the whole law, we will never do it. If we cannot as a church agree to abide the whole law, let us call in the missionary force until the people are willing to back it up with "their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honors," or with the last dollar, and the last drop of blood if need be. This work is all that it is represented to be, or it is nothing. It should mean equally as much to one as to another. It should bind one, equally with another. If it does not do it, let us find out where we are.

"Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly, and execute judgment in Zion! Let us have a Zion of such material as thou wouldst choose. Then shall the gospel go forth, and sinners shall be converted unto thee. Now, there is no church on earth that reflects thy law, and shows forth thy praise."

Is not this the truth as measured by the three books? We must acknowledge that it is. None know it quite so well as those who are up against it in missionary work. None have a better right to make an insistent demand upon the church to repent of pride, selfishness, vanity, and unbelief, and not only say but do "according to that which I have written, that they may bring forth fruit meet for their Father's kingdom, otherwise there remaineth a scourge and a judgment to be poured out upon the children of Zion; for, shall the children of the kingdom pollute my holy land? Verily, I say unto you, Nay." (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 8.)

Why should not every individual member of the church feel himself directly responsible for the success of this work in proportion to the character of his stewardship, and hold himself accountable to God and the church therefor? And why not now? Now for you; now for me; now for God. He will not say to-morrow if we say now. It is to-day so far as he is concerned; only to-morrow so far as we are concerned.

Personalities and particulars we have not time nor space for in this letter, but we demand consecration of ourselves as well as others, and in this spirit labor for Zion, without respect of persons of saint or sinner. However, we feel like making the stronger demand upon the professed Saint, not expecting too much of the sinner, or the professed Christian who is blinded by the traditions of error in various forms and sects. We have patience with such. We may not have any too much patience with the Saint who obstructs the light, rather than reflects it as he should. We need more firm and steadfast Saints everywhere. Mere profession does not count, except against the gospel and church, so we insist on repentance within, as well as without the church. If the church cannot stand it, woe to the church. God can raise up a church that will do according to his will, and we pray that he may, if this church does not soon come to his terms. We have too long side-stepped them. I hold them in reverence above any number of people who do not take them to heart; and my admiration is not for the mere name of Saint, or even the name "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

When this church gets a move on it, up to its espoused faith and chosen Lord, I will hold it in equal reverence with its doctrine or profession.

The church and its foundation are not all one and the same. The church is not "the pillar and ground of the truth," the King James' Version to the contrary notwithstanding. It reflects the Catholic and Church of England point of view. The Inspired Translation states that, "The pillar and ground of the truth is (and without controversy great is the mystery of godliness), God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory." (1 Timothy 3: 16.)

The condemnation pronounced by the Lord in 1832 has evidently not been lifted. Is there room for pride, for ease, for complacency, while we are yet in a perilous and unsafe condition, temporally and spiritually?

Is it not a time to "call the solemn assemblies," and secure the spiritual endowment and equipment necessary to the operation of the whole law? Can we do it by debate? Are not humility and "mighty prayer" the needs of now, for all of God's servants and people? We think so, and experience, study, and inspiration bring us to this conclusion.

The day of individual effort is no longer sufficient. Cooperation in things spiritual and temporal, or united and collective effort is now necessary to success. Shall we longer plan and work without it unto defeat? Or shall we proceed to secure it unto victory?

The submergence of self all along the line, or lines, spiritual and temporal, is the only way out of our bondage, and into our true liberties and securities.

The consecration of ourselves will make easy the consecration of money and properties. To a great extent we have withheld ourselves, and God has withheld to the same extent. He waits for us, not we for him. How much longer will he wait, or shall we keep him waiting? It is for the individual to say. It is for the whole church to say. Let us no longer halt in indecision, but in decision move forward. Whatever consecration implies for us or requires of us, be it this habit or that or the other; this selfish propensity or that or the other, it must go. The law knows no respect of persons, of either rich or poor. We must not know it, be it in things small or great; things spiritual, physical, or temporal. The gospel is adapted to all of life. Let all of life be adjusted to the gospel, and the gospel will demonstrate its power over things spiritual, physical, and temporal. The world is not holding us back. The field is white already to harvest. We are holding ourselves back, and need to sit in judgment severely on ourselves, applying to the complete standard of judgment the whole law, and the Spirit of God. We cannot but write as we see it, and feel it, and know it by stern and painful experience. But it is worth all that it ever cost, and we do not begrudge the price paid. We do not write for approval; we run all the risks of disapproval or criticism. We hope for some good to result as the only reason for "breaking in" once more and occupying space in the HERALD.

We are holding forth at this point, or five miles southeast of it (Brother J. M. Nunley and myself) to fair crowds and respectful hearings. We hear some favorable comments.

Yours as ever,

M. F. GOWELL.

GAUSE, TEXAS.

---

Far West Stake

---

A social at the First Branch on Thursday, July 31, brought a cooling rain, relief from excessive heat, and a good time to the people who came. While rain diminished the amount of ice cream negotiated, it saved the corn crop and induced abundant streams of revenue in behalf of the common good. Should another drouth set in we shall try the experiment again—the cure is not hard to take.

The stake president spent the entire day, Sunday, July 27, with the Third Saint Joseph Branch to his satisfaction, at least. Quite a number of fine, earnest Saints there.

Brother Samuel Twombly filled the pulpit at the First Branch on that date—filled it to the full; everybody can hear Brother Twombly and understand clearly what he means.

Brother V. M. Goodrich so far recovered as to speak at the First Saint Joseph Branch on Sunday morning, the 10th. Brother Salyards spoke at 8 p. m., and at the Second Branch at 11 p. m.

The stake presidency has programmed work at various branches and other places up to and including the October conference. This schedule plan, projected ahead, subject to necessary modifications, has distinctive advantages for all concerned. Systematic efforts, persistently worked out, are becoming more in evidence in our church work, we note, to the good of the cause and the increasing awakening of our people.

The two-day meetings at Bedison, Fortescue, Ross Grove, and Guilford, held by Brethren Roberts and Robertson, were successful and enjoyed by the Saints. Other two-day meetings will follow the reunion.

The stake president has written a special tract for distribution in the city of Saint Joseph. It contains a cut of the First Branch, list of services, invitations to attend departments, items of faith, information on church succession, the reformation, restoration, etc., and distinguishes the church from the people of Utah. It may be used by any branch in the stake with slight alterations as to chapel location, etc. It is intended for systematic distribution throughout the city, with other literature. It is surprising that with the vast amount of advertising done by our people so few seem to identify us clearly. A house to house canvass is necessary to advertise us properly and to warn our neighbors.

Many places of former, extreme business activity are now closed in Saint Joseph. However, there still remain some indications that Mr. Barleycorn has resources in underground territory; but, on the whole, a diminishing number of intemperate men and other omens indicate much improvement thus far. We join with others in prayer and work having in view the ultimate extinction of the party named above with all his wicked works, several and general. Much of the energetic, sustained, continuous efforts of the Anti-Saloon League furnish an object lesson to others who have a cause to push to the front, with active prejudice and opposition to overcome. We need more positive and less negative people among our membership, if we are to come to the front and win the battle. The Presiding Bishop's slogan, "Every Member a Tithe Payer," might to great advantage be expanded to include, "Every Member an Intelligent Live Wire and Dependable Worker."

There is an opening for a newspaper man and a printer—a sort of double-barreled editor and utility printer—in a small town with a branch in the stake. The citizens will sell a good plant outright or make inviting concessions with their proposition. Needless to say, Mr. Editor, that a man to fill this place must be a good, competent man, having a record as a consistent member of the church. We want assets, not liabilities. "We need" them (the assets, you understand) "every hour and everywhere!"

Good opening for a blacksmith in a country town with a good branch.

A leading contracting carpenter of Saint Joseph wants good carpenters of our membership; he has had some and liked them; will pay good wages.

There is a lot of hard work to be done—physical work, strong moral work, and evidences of spiritual power in continuous, progressive supremacy by the people of God, in order to overcome present conditions and "build up" a Zion of "the pure in heart." Much constructive effort is needed in all lines. We are looking for capable, aggressive people, trained by contact with the divine sources of power and developed by intelligent use of their own powers of body and of mind. We see prospects of Zion's unfolding as we secure the actual work of people of steadfast spiritual character.

A BROTHER.

---

Observations

---

One of the most severe cuts we ever got in shaving was with a safety razor. We relied too much on the safety.

If some people would look to their spiritual adornment in the gospel looking glass, as they do their dress and physical form in the mirror, they might remove some blemishes, and be better Saints.

We knew an ardent religionist who used to testify that he had a home, and a million dollar life insurance in heaven; it made him feel so rich that when he died his family were without home and became objects of charity.

We have known men of the ministry who preached temperance, prohibition, and "Word of Wisdom," who suffered and died as the direct result of overeating.

We knew a person who wrote often, and eloquently of "high ideals," of "Zion," of "godliness," etc. We visited her home. Everything about the home, and her dress and face and hands suggested the need of soap, and we failed to appreciate her articles thereafter.

We believe in the fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, but we have met brethren who were so effusive in the use of "Brother," that we wondered if it were a habit, or they had a purpose. Anyway, it was overdone.

There was the wife of a branch officer, who invariably turned around to see who was partaking sacrament, and who was not; and who during sacramental prayer looked peekaboo through her fingers to see if all bowed in prayer. She was either officious, or trying to be a helpmate(?). At any rate she did harm, and reflected on her own and her husband's wisdom.

Some people devote their whole thought and effort to acquire wealth, and we wonder how they may be made happy in heaven if there be no "money making" there.

Doctrine and Covenants 119:3: "The elders and men should be . . . clean in your bodies and in your clothing. Let your garments be of a sober character," etc. Questions: Is it right to demand sober garb of the men of the church, while many good sisters dress in ridiculous style? Is a sister in short skirts, low V-waist, lingerie exposed, a fitting or exemplary or consistent teacher of social purity?

ALMA.

---

Prayer

---

Some people think that to be dependent is a mark of weakness. Instead it is a mark of strength. We grow in grace and knowledge as we grow in ability to draw help from God. Jesus encouraged us to pray, and we know that he prayed much. He says the Father always heard his prayer. (John 11:1, 2.) And we have his promise that if we pray aright, we shall be heard and answered. (John 15:7.) We also have careful direction from him how to pray.

In looking to others for help, much depends upon whom we look to for help. I did not make myself. The world in which I live is new to me. As I see more of it, I am led to tread more carefully and thoughtfully each day. My method of asking help is by prayer of the One who made me, and is the channel through which he is able to give that help. I may believe in God but I can have no heart knowledge of him only by true prayer. A life that looks alone to other human lives for help can never rise above these. No two of us are alike, or placed in circumstances exactly the same. He who made us is the only one to direct us with perfect wisdom; and he can do this only as we put ourselves in an attitude to receive his direction. Jesus encouraged us "to pray and not to faint."

We are apt to think of God's care as only general, because he has so many to care for. But we may think of it as ever personal. Jesus taught us not only to think of God as our Father, but to put his name in place of the fathers, asking even of him as of the Father. (John 14:13, 14.)

Jesus says in the seventh chapter of Matthew: "Ask and it shall be given you, seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you." Then he adds: "For everyone that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened." The same words are found in Luke 11:9, 10. Now does everyone that prays to Jesus receive what he asks for? Many will say, No. Who can number the prayers that remain unanswered? If unanswered, is it because Jesus has deceived us? or because we do not ask as he directs?

Jesus does not say, "According to your prayer be it unto you," but, "According to your faith." Prayer sometimes shows distrust, or lack of faith. In times of trial, one stands more in need of trust, than of prayer. The right prayer may lead to trust, but the wrong petition to distrust. Jesus, asleep in the boat during a storm, is a picture of perfect trust. The disciples cried to him, "Carest thou not that we perish?" That was a prayer of distrust. He said unto them, "Why are ye so fearful? How is it that ye have no faith?" The only good thing about their prayer was that they came to him for help.

Far different is a life like Christ's, pillowing the head on his bosom, trusting to him through all storm. Storms are no storms to such a life; it rests; it sleeps; it is rocked to sleep by them.

It is trustful faith that many need, rather than faith that we shall receive any one thing which we think he has promised. Trusting him gives us trust in his doing for us.

Prayer is a means of enabling Jesus to make himself continually felt in your heart. In this highest form of prayer, you talk with him, not to him, and this kind of prayer receives continual answer. The prayer of loving trust knows as it asks what its answer will be. "And it shall come to pass that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear." (Isaiah 65:24.)

To pray aright one must have the Spirit of Jesus. True prayer is a state, rather than an effort. There is a secret place, a place under "the shadow of the Almighty," the all-loving one. It is the place of loving trust. Of those it may be said, "There shall no plague come nigh thy dwelling." (Psalm 91:10.)

A SISTER.

---

Ask and Ye Shall Receive

---

When I went to arrange for the meeting to be held in the First Methodist Church at Santa Ana, some of our own members were afraid that we would not succeed, and at once began to speak discouragingly about all such efforts.

We found the pastor of this church to be a very pleasant man to meet and who treated us very kindly, doing all in his power to secure a crowd. A number of people expressed themselves as being interested in this lecture and were pleased that we were making these arrangements. It was explained to the pastor who and what we are and still he stood by us. However, you would not expect anything else, he being an Englishman.

What our people need more than anything else is to be stimulated to have faith in our message and our men. What is it that they are afraid of? Well, the meeting was well attended and it was noted that a number of prominent attorneys and ministers were present, also a newspaper man, who promised to give us a good write-up. I had to leave there before the paper went to press so I have not learned yet what might have been said about the lecture.

We went from Santa Ana to San Bernardino, where I had made arrangements for two lectures to be delivered by Brother Rushton. The papers there are always glad to give us a hearing.

If I can get hold of one of the Santa Ana papers with an account of Brother Rushton's address, I will send you a copy.

G. H. WIXOM.

---

BOZEMAN, MONTANA, August 1, 1919.

Editors Herald: The summer, now waning, has been for me a season of spiritual blessings. The gospel never meant more to me than it does to-day. I have been edified at all I have witnessed and experienced in the reunions of the Saints here in the Northwest.

The preaching of Patriarch Frederick A. Smith was so full of practical, sound sense, so considerate, so void of the "attacking spirit," that it did much good, not only among the Saints, but among the outsiders who were attracted to it. Such preaching ennoble the gospel message and wins respect for the church. Even the secular press spoke highly in praise of it.

Such preaching, moreover, is necessary to meet the conditions that now seem to prevail in the church. The disturbance going on everywhere in the world has found its way into the very sanctuary. Everywhere the Saints are speaking of "perilous times." We grant that the times are perilous, but we must remember that in every age of the church's history, there have been perils to face. It has been so from the beginning. Look back to those Judaizers who crucified Jesus, stoned Stephen, killed James, persecuted Paul, then slew him. I recall, as I write this letter, how my soul was touched to its inmost depths, when in the catacombs of Rome, I read on slabs of marble, rudely inscribed in the Latin tongue, where this and that faithful member of the early church shed his or her blood for the gospel's sweet sake.

In all of these perils thousands upon thousands have been martyrs to the gospel, and doubtless in that far-off day, when the gospel shone in all its purity, vast multitudes from fear of scorn and persecution kept back from accepting the gospel, and great numbers of others accepted it, then recanted or became backsliders. How the heart of Paul was tried by them! We look back with horror to those days of the persecution by Nero and Domitian, and other Roman rulers, and we thank God we did not live in those perilous times. And truly this is something for which to be thankful.

But let us not become carelessly exultant. These are not the only, nor are they the worst perils. It is not such a bad thing to die a martyr for the gospel, but it is a fearful thing to backslide and become indifferent. Anything that imperils our faith in the gospel, that destroys our personal friendship with God, that obscures our vision of the revelations he has made to his church through his anointed servants is peril vastly greater than any persecution that can come to us from the enemies of the gospel, or the opposers of it. True, the two often go together. But the peril is just as great, yea, much greater, when the physical danger is not attendant. For when there is no persecution many get careless. The martyr spirit is a good spirit for all of us, and much needed for all of us. Jesus said, "He that endureth to the end shall be saved." He saw down the ages where his Saints would have to endure: foes within and foes without—the spirit sorely tried in every way.

Paul speaks of a condition which will darken the last days as "perilous times." We may not be living in these times, but it does seem as if we were rapidly approaching them. Wickedness abounds in high places, and in low places. The cry is: "Who will show us any good?" Religion is discredited almost everywhere. It must be that we are deeply in the shadow of the approaching storm. We believe it may be truthfully said that never have there been days of greater peril than those in which we are now living. We have heard of outbreaks in far-off Armenia, and in near-by Chicago and Washington, prompted by racial hatred, bitter and unrelenting. In these instances we had physical danger most terrible, but the spiritual danger everywhere confronting us is simply appalling. Even in the church, in these trying days, Satan is more aggressive than most of us are aware. He is very subtle and is hidden in much of his work.

These are times of falling away. Many of us seem to invite the pleasures of the world into the church, and cover them with the approval of the church, not knowing what we do. Possibly one of the greatest misfortunes to the early church was when Constantine made Christianity the religion of the Roman empire. By the act he stopped the physical persecutions, but in popularizing Christianity by compromising with the world he opened the door to worldliness, heresy, and the Roman papacy, and brought on the Dark Ages in which the gospel was lost. May God protect us Latter Day Saints from the folly of popularizing the gospel! The sectarian churches tried to do that with their fragments of the gospel, and behold the result! What they had, at best, was a mere shell without the kernel. But now they have not even the shell. They lost whatever truth of the gospel they had in an ethical and social teaching of Jesus without his sin-destroying, soul-transforming life. They tried to reform the world without destroying human depravity. They tried to make men better without conversion and sanctification. They tried to bring in the millennium by human means. Their seminaries of theological training are dubbed by many of their own men as "breeders of infidelity." Their preaching they defined as modern, sane, advanced Christianity. Their eyes were veiled. They could not see that such preaching, instead of saving souls, was preparing the way for the coming of the anti-Christ.

This, I say, is the most deceptive work of Satan. May we not accept it as a warning? Do we not find cropping out, here and there, in our own church, preaching tainted with socialism? Any man, with powers of oratory, can move people, even to tears, and gain a following who will emphasize the ethical and social teachings of Jesus. He can fascinate his hearers by dwelling upon the standard Jesus has laid down for the outward life. To raise a voice in opposition, is in the light of those who have drunk in such preaching, like opposing the work of the gospel. Surely, the most conservative member in the church does not wish to be in opposition to the practical application of the teachings of Jesus to the outward life, and even to world affairs. But it seems to me that it behooves us all to take watchful heed that we have and maintain the real divine life. Only that social salvation which follows or results from the inward salvation clearly taught in Latter Day Saint gospel is safe. If the messages "Ye must be born again," and "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord," are neglected, the work is only veneer.

May God keep us true to the sound doctrine of salvation.
AUGUSTINE DWYER.

EROS, LOUISIANA, August 7, 1919.

Editors Herald: I am glad for the world to know that I'm a member of the Latter Day Saint Church. I enlisted as a soldier for Christ just one year ago and that wasn't as early as I should have volunteered, but I was a member of the Baptist Church and owing to its popularity and influence of the spirit of Satan I wouldn't give up.

Two years before I joined this church, I began teaching for the people who belong to the Eros Branch, and chanced to hear the gospel preached, which was the first time I ever heard it. My soul was made to rejoice, because I knew our dear Elders J. T. Riley and W. H. Fuller had proclaimed the true gospel of Jesus Christ. I had read the Bible enough to know it when I heard it.

The second year I was here I went to Brother Fuller and asked for explanation on some things I didn't understand and he gladly taught me. Finally I told him this, "Mr. Fuller, this is the true gospel and I am thoroughly convinced of the fact." His reply was, "Mr. Larche, this is the everlasting gospel, and after you have heard it and then reject it you will be lost." I knew it to be true, and it wasn't long before I was baptized. I thank God for giving me the privilege of being a member, and I shall never cease loving Elder W. H. Fuller for helping me to see the light.

Our branch, called the Eros Branch, is progressing nicely. We have good attendance at Sunday school every Sunday and we always have preaching.

Satan tries to overthrow us frequently, but by the help of God we don't give up, for we want to reach the goal.

We are anxiously waiting for our missionary to come. Those who come always bring us glorious messages. I earnestly desire the prayers of the Saints.

EARL C. LARCHE.

ESCATAWPA, MISSISSIPPI, July 24, 1919.

Editors Herald: I have been blessed in many ways. My patriarchal blessing told me I had been the means of bringing souls into his kingdom.

The Lord answered my prayer when I was but a small child. They sent me to the spring one day in a rush. They told me mamma was dying. I was to get water. I hurried but stopped long enough to say the little "lay me down to sleep" prayer, and asked the Lord to spare mamma. I always thought the Lord answered my prayer, as mother is with us yet. When I was small I thought so because I was little, and now I think so because that was the best I could do and I obeyed the Lord in asking.

I have never spoken or prayed in public, and this is my first attempt at writing for the HERALD. My husband and I both belong to the church, for which I am very thankful. I know how bad it is for a home to be divided.

MARY PORTER.

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA, August 8, 1919.

Editors Herald: On July 25 our Sunday school held its annual picnic at Lake Winola, Pennsylvania, and we are willing to admit that it was the best picnic that we ever had and one long to be remembered by all who attended. As usual the feature of the day was the baseball game between the married men and the single men of the branch. Of course, the single men were returned the winners at the end of the game, but the old-timers promise to turn the tables next year. Boating, swimming, racing, and volley-ball were some of the other features.

The young people are taking hold on the athletic activities that are so essential to our development physically, mentally, and spiritually. Only a few weeks ago we organized an athletic association and we are glad to make note that they are doing nicely, and hope to hear more from them in the near future.

The branch as a whole is coming back to itself, and we are enjoying the Spirit of the Lord in our prayer meetings. We cannot help but mention that our pastor and his companion are faithful workers and doing all in their power for the cause of the gospel.

The L. D. S. Band of Scranton has been reorganized with Brother Albert Lewis as the leader. They are progressing at this writing.

Under the able leadership of Sister Lentell the choir is doing its part in the branch work; also the young ladies' chorus with Sister Lentell, leader, and the male chorus with Albert Lewis, leader.

With all these departments in active motion we believe that much good will be accomplished and many brought into the work of the Master. We trust that we all will work for the spread of the gospel, and the gathering of the faithful.

CORRESPONDENT.

Man can no more be the author of his spiritual life than he can be the author of his physical life. The one is as impossible as the other. Those who are in Christ are what they are, not by their own strength, but by the grace of God.—Samuel F. Halfyard, in Cardinal Truths of the Gospel.

Men are born with two eyes, but with one tongue, in order that they may see twice as much as they say.—Colton.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Convention Minutes

NORTHERN SASKATCHEWAN.—Daniel Macgregor and J. W. Peterson chosen to preside in the absence of superintendency of Sunday school association; Joseph Bates, secretary. A number of those present gave short talks on "Teachers and their problems." Elder Macgregor gave one of his interesting sermons. Officers elected: A. J. Cornish, Senlac, superintendent; W. E. Dorr, assistant superintendent, Joseph Bates, Senlac, secretary; Benjamin Van Eaton, Saskatoon, treasurer; Sister A. Beckman, librarian; Sister Osler, cradle roll superintendent; Sister Harper, home class superintendent; W. Allison, superintendent gospel literature board. It was resolved that when we adjourn we do so to meet under the auspices of district conference. At 7.30 a musical and literary program was enjoyed by those present. Joseph Bates, secretary.

Conference Notices

Southern Indiana, at Indianapolis, Indiana, September 13. All who desire information write J. E. Warne, president, 220 East Saint Clair Street, Indianapolis, Indiana.

Ohio, with the First Columbus Branch, September 13 and 14. The new church will be dedicated on Sunday, the 14th. Friday evening and Saturday morning will be devoted to institute work under the auspices of the Religio and Sunday school. F. J. Ebeling, president.

Northern Michigan, at Boyne City, September 20 and 21. It is expected that one of the general church officers will be with us. Arthur E. Starks, president.

Convention Notices

Idaho Sunday school, at Hagerman, August 29. Mrs. Jennie Condit, secretary.

Southeastern Illinois Sunday school, at Brush Creek, during the reunion. So far as we are able to tell will convene the 27th. Ruth Lewis Holman, secretary.

West Virginia Sunday school, at Harmony Church on Indian Creek, Ritchie County, West Virginia, Friday, September 5, 2 p. m. H. G. Johnson, superintendent.

Southern Indiana Sunday school, Friday, September 12, at Indianapolis, Indiana. Maud Shanks, secretary, Marengo, Indiana.

Pastoral

To All the Saints of the State of Iowa, Whether in Branch or Abroad; Greeting:

The undersigned recently received a communication from the Twelve from which I excerpt the following:

"After due and careful consideration it has been thought advisable to place you in charge of the missionary work in the entire State of Iowa."

The responsibility herein imposed was unsolicited and unexpected. Indeed I am only responsible for the manner in which I carry out this apostolic order.

In the first place I conceive it to be necessary to get in touch with the mission, with every nook and corner of it; hence this little unenviable self-imposed task of heralding my appointment; an indelicacy I could have wished that the powers that be, had relieved me of.

Now then to the task. Are you interested in missionary work? If not why not?

Missionary work is preeminently the work of the church. It is the carrying out of the great commission, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

No matter what your station or your environment, time and place should be reserved for missionary work.

We doubt not but what you are interested in the church, and that your time is taken up in one or more of the many departments of churchly service, but even that will not relieve you of your obligations to tell the gospel tidings.

The task of warning your neighbor, missionary in its character, was never intended to be set aside by other engagements, humanitarian or otherwise.

As a school worker, a Religio enthusiast, an auxiliary agitator, a Boy Scout director, a choral singer, or a Graceland student, it was never designed that these beneficial helps and governments should monopolize your time. Nor were they intended as sepulchers for the burial of the energies and ambitions of the church. Rather were they particularly purposed to qualify all concerned therein for that distinctive work of the church, preaching the gospel to a fast expiring world.

Missionary work should be the center of the solar system to the church. It is the hub around which all our energies should revolve. It was the one work of our Lord, and monopolized the attention of every prophet and every apostle.

Indeed, the records of the past show that there were but few office elders, while all were field workers.

There are several factors entering into the active prosecution of this work, in certain of which you are sure to qualify:

1. Distributing tracts.
2. Conversing with your neighbors.
3. Choral work or telling the gospel in song.
4. Advertising meetings through the agency of the press, or by personal calls.
5. Soliciting a fund for active propaganda work in your neighborhood, to be available when the missionary comes along.
6. Living the gospel in such a way that the public will be influenced by the virtue that comes from your life.
7. Praying for your neighbors and the community.
8. Preaching the gospel by word of mouth.

In this work, all may enter, and should enter, whether rich or poor, bond or free, talented or untalented, old or young. There can be no excuse for the shirker.

If your society obligations are taking your time, cut them out, or else make your social calls a means for telling the gospel story.

If your studies at school are burdensome, unload a little by seeking first the kingdom of God, or if your work in the Sunday school, the Religio, or choir is already too much, then eliminate some of it, and freshen up by getting into a good old gospel argument with your neighbor.

Iowa is the biggest field of opportunity in the church. There are more Saints here than in any other State. That being true it should accomplish most in a missionary way.

We went to hear from every branch, and from every Saint living in outlying districts, as to the possibilities of missionary work in your community. Write and tell us your needs, and of what you can do. If we cannot wait upon you personally, we shall take it up with our associates in the missionary field.

Again, we want to hear from those prepared to do volunteer service. Can you give us a few weeks of your time in real live fighting missionary work? If you are scared to go out alone, possibly we can attach you to some efficient worker. We will have lots of work in lots of places and room for all.

We will appreciate it, if some of our capable singers will volunteer their services in real missionary song-fest work. It is not necessary that you be a solo artist. We have need, rather, of genuine gospel singers, willing to assist on street corners, in hall, or wherever the missionary may have occasion to speak.

Come on! Old corn-fed, gospel-hungry Iowa, you can do it. Let's hear from you and that right away.

Lamoni, Iowa, is my mission headquarters.

Yours, a comrade in the common cause,
DANIEL MACGREGOR.

The Presidency

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of James A. Thomas to Eastern Colorado District as missionary.

Elder B. L. McKim has been transferred from Central Oklahoma District to Utah District, where he will labor as missionary.

Elder S. W. L. Scott whose appointment was referred to the Presidency and Bishopric has been assigned to the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District for the balance of the conference year.

In harmony with his request, Elder E. L. Henson has been released from missionary appointment, effective August 1.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Dedication

To Members and Friends of the First Denver Branch: Dedication of the church at Speer Boulevard and Logan Street which was postponed October 6, 1918, on account of influenza epidemic will be held September 7. Notice the date—one week after district conference. A large attendance is hoped for. E. J. Williams, branch president.

Two-Day Meetings

At Stratford, Ontario, August 30 and 31, and at Rostock, Ontario, September 6 and 7. Good speakers will be provided. All are welcome, William M. Grice, president.

At Gallands Grove, Iowa, August 16 and 17. On account of most of the Saints being busy with farm work, the first meeting will be held on Saturday evening, with a full day of service on Sunday, August 17. Neighboring Saints are invited to come. These meetings will be helpful to all. C. E. Anderson.

Addresses

Ammon White, 1010 Thatcher Street, Boise, Idaho.

Reunion Calendar

(The figures in parenthesis give the page of the HERALD on which details have been given.)

Kewanee, Matherville, Illinois, August 14-25 (759).
Northeastern Nebraska, Southern Nebraska, Pottawattamie, and Fremont, Iowa, Council Bluffs, Iowa, August 15-24 (552, 703).

Northern California, Irvington, California, August 14-24 (654).

Holden, Kansas City, and Independence Stakes, Pertle Springs, August 15-24 (598).

Far West, Missouri, Stewartville, August 15-24 (654).

Northwestern Kansas, Alexander, August 16-24 (782).

Little Sioux and Gallands Grove, Dow City, Iowa, August 22-31 (503, 806).

Southern Missouri, Springfield, August 20-31 (702).

Eastern Colorado, Fort Collins, August 22-31 (735).

Southeastern Illinois, Brush Creek, August 22-31 (654, 735, 806).

Nauvoo, Illinois, Montrose, Iowa, August 22-31 (527, 759).

Northern Wisconsin, Chetek, August 22-31 (655).

Southern Idaho, Hagerman, August 22-31.

Southern Wisconsin, Madison, August 22-31 (735).

Northeastern Illinois, Plano, Illinois, August 29 to September 7 (553).

Southwestern Oregon, Myrtle Point, August 29 to September 7 (759).

Our Departed Ones

WADLEY.—Near Lamoni, Iowa, August 3, 1919, William Wadley, aged 87 years, 7 months and 14 days. Born in Kentucky in 1831. Resided near Lamoni sixty-three years. Not a member of the church but an honest man. All his seven sons and daughters were present at his funeral; two daughters are Saints. His wife died two months before his going. The sermon was preached by Henry A. Stebbins. Robert A. Ballantyne assisting.

FRISHKORN.—Ernest Frishkorn was born February 3, 1873. Died June 5, 1919. Married Irene Harris, of Chicago, June 26, 1904. Baptized in 1904. Died of pneumonia, June 5, 1919. Leaves 4 children, 3 girls and one boy, besides wife and a host of friends to mourn. As he was all for home and family, words cannot explain how much he will be missed. Funeral sermon by Ward L. Christy, at Hegewisch, Illinois.

ADSIT.—Lillie Roberta Adsit was born June 15, 1892, at Mulvane, Kansas. Died August 9, 1919, at Terlton, Oklahoma, after a severe illness of five weeks. Married Claud O. Adsit July 8, 1913. Baptized July 8, 1906, by William Aylor. She leaves to mourn, husband, 2 daughters (Claudine age 4, Lorine age five months) father and mother Parshall, 6 sisters, 2 brothers, and many friends. Interment in Rosehill Cemetery, Tulsa, Oklahoma, George A. Kelley, officiating. She died strong in the faith, and was loved by all who knew her.

LANN.—Thomason Lailor Lann was born November 20, 1853, at Aberdeen, Mississippi. Died at Egerton Junction, August 1, 1919. He came to this place December 1, 1879, Married Luella Holland September 24, 1881. To them were born 9 children, 7 boys and 2 girls. Mother, one son and 2 daughters preceded him. In March, 1900, Brother Lann married Mattie Holland. One child was born, who died sometime last spring. Baptized October 8, 1896. He leaves to mourn, wife, 6 stepsons, and many friends. Funeral at Saints' Church in charge of J. Mauzee.

GIVENS.—William Orval Givens, born September 28, 1892, died July 13, 1919. Leaves wife, mother, father, grandmother, 5 sisters, and 5 brothers. Baptized June 9, 1901. Enlisted in the army July 31, 1917. Sailed overseas May 4, 1918. Served in the 110th Engineers, Company E., 35th Division. Discharged May 3, 1919. Gassed once, shell-shocked twice in Argonne Forest. Battles and engagements: Amiens sector, May 27 to June 8, 1918; Alsace sector, July 1 to August 31; Saint Mihiel offensive, September 12 to 16; Meuse-Argonne offensive, September 26 to October 6; Verdun sector, October 15 to November 6.

WARBY.—Melinda Van Dusen Warby was born December 14, 1852, at Richford, Vermont. Married Henry J. Warby September 16, 1866, at North Troy, Vermont. Died in hospital, Aurora, Illinois, June 3, 1919. Leaves husband, 2 sons, 6 daughters, 19 grandchildren, and 4 great-grandchildren. Services were held in Stone Church, Plano, Illinois, June 5, 1919, in charge of Joseph Blakely. Sermon by F. M. Cooper. Deceased was baptized by George Shedicker, DeKalb, Illinois, in 1876. Sister Warby was among the tried and true and was faithful unto death.

HAYER.—Melina Hegland Hayer was born March 25, 1844, near Stavanger, Norway. Came to the States when 15 years of age, residing 8 years in Minnesota, thence to Illinois where she spent the remainder of her life. Married Goodman L. Hayer August, 1869, at Ottawa, Illinois. To them were born 6 children. Died at her home, Seneca, Illinois, August 4, 1919, leaving her husband, 2 sons, one daughter, and a number of grandchildren to mourn. Funeral at the Saints' chapel, Mission, Illinois, August 8, 1919, in charge of Thomas Hougas. Sermon by F. M. Cooper. The beautiful life of deceased was illustrative of the virtues of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

LENTHOLD.—Lillian Lenthold was born March 23, 1903, in Pennsylvania. Died July 27, 1919, at Bandon, Oregon. Was a member of the Sunday school and Religio of Bandon Branch, and expressed her desire to be baptized as soon as all opposition in her home was overcome. She was a beautiful character and gave her life to service in her home. Leaves eight brothers and sisters, besides parents. Was cruelly murdered, her body, shot through the head, being found in the brush not far from her home. No motive known. Supposed to be the deed of a boy, considered a degenerate. Funeral July 30, A. A. Baker officiating.

BOHALL.—Mary Constance Cathey was born in Morgan County, Missouri, September 3, 1847. In 1849 came to California with her family. The greater part of her life she resided in Humboldt County. On December 16, 1863, married Walter Brown Bohall, at Eureka, Humboldt County. Eight children blessed this union, all of whom survive. She and husband were baptized September 25, 1869, by Glaudd Rodger. She was a loving wife and devoted mother. She loved the church and its work, never missing an opportunity to be present at services. Her testimony to the truthfulness of the work was very strong. The slogan of her life was service, which she rendered unreservedly. She passed from earth life June 5, 1919, at San Francisco. Her remains were taken to Eureka and buried beside those of her husband.

TAYLOR.—Mary Ann Taylor died at the home of her adopted daughter, Sister Boyd Johnson, Amherst, Nova Scotia, on July 27, aged 70 years. Born in New Albany, Indiana. Baptized by H. J. Davison in 1895, at Williamsdale, and her testimony a few days before she died was that she never regretted it, and though in failing health for a year, she was only confined to her room two weeks. She maintained her faculties to the last hour and made all preparation for the end which she calmly awaited. The remains were brought to Williamsdale and laid to rest beside her husband. Service in the Methodist Church. Sermon by Reverend Neal.

HOAGUE.—Charles Clinton Hoague was born near Monroe, Green County, Wisconsin, February 17, 1854. Died suddenly at his home near Evansville, Wisconsin, July 21, 1919. Married Mary A. Corrington, September 12, 1877. To this union 2 sons, Joseph and Charles C., were born. Baptized June 12, 1892, by Henry Southwick. Later ordained an elder. For many years he was president of the Janesville Branch, and for more than 12 years has served as Bishop's agent and treasurer of the Southern Wisconsin District. He was a true and faithful branch president, and the Saints will greatly miss him. He leaves to mourn, wife, 2 brothers, 2 sisters, and one grandchild, together with many friends. Sermon by W. A. McDowell, assisted by J. O. Dutton and P. Muceus.

HARVEY.—Elder John J. Harvey was born May 26, 1849, at Wilmont, Ontario, Canada. Married Annie Johnson, June 8, 1876. Baptized May 28, 1879. He served as a teacher a number of years and was ordained an elder in October, 1901. Died July 18, 1919; buried at Mount Hope Cemetery, in Kansas City, Kansas. Funeral at Chelsea Park Branch in charge of J. A. Harrington. Sermon by M. A. Etzenhouser. There are left to mourn, his widow, Sister J. J. Harvey, Sister Sargent, Sister Christgen, Fred W., Joe, Will, and Bertha Harvey, Sister Anna Peterson, and other relatives and a host of friends. Brother Harvey came to Kansas City, Kansas, in the early 80's and was one of the pioneers in the work in this city. He had been unable because of weakened condition to work in his office for about six months, and was anxious that the Lord would take him.

JULY JOURNAL OF HISTORY FOR SALE

Those who are not regular subscribers to the Journal of History but who would like to secure some excellent matter concerning the life of the late departed Heman C. Smith, historian and editor, should send 25 cents for a copy of the July number of the Journal, just off the press. In addition to a good cut of the brother, there are appreciations written by Elbert A. Smith and Heman Hale Smith, with a biographical sketch by Samuel A. Burgess. While sending the 25 cents, it would be well to make it a dollar, and be put on the list to receive the magazine a year.

ATTENTION WIRELESS EXPERIMENTERS

All commercial radio operators, amateurs, experimenters—all persons interested in a system of radio communication for the church are requested to write at once to Arthur B. Church, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa. Wireless station owners are asked to give full data regarding their equipment, transmitting and receiving range, operating speed and experience. Everyone interested in an organization of radio experimenters within the church should give his or her suggestions for making it successful. Please show this announcement to every radio experimenter you know.

Glowing reports are had from Bozeman, Montana, where Brother Augustine Dwyer has delivered a series of his lectures. The church was filled to capacity and many stood at all the windows and doors. A planned trip through the Yellowstone Park with Brother and Sister Thomas Reese was postponed at the last minute to allow a continuance of the lectures to meet the demand.

Elder J. F. Garver, president of the Lamoni Stake, has left for other parts on a vacation of several weeks. He has practically recovered from his severe breakdown yet seems to lack somewhat of his old-time vigor, which he hopes to regain in a short respite from the strenuous duties of his office.

COURSE IN RELIGIOUS EDUCATION OPEN TO ALL

A large number of inquiries have come to the college relative to the Special One Year Course in Religious Education which will be offered beginning in September. For the information of all it may be of interest to know that the course is open to anyone who desires to enroll on exactly the same basis as any other of the college courses.

In order to reply to inquiries we have a special leaflet giving the outline of the course. We shall be glad to send that or one of our new illustrated catalogues to any one interested. College opens September 4. Write The President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

HOW TO STUDY EFFECTIVELY

(A brief message of special import from G. R. Wells, General Superintendent of the Sunday school.)

TO THE STUDENT

Have you ever spent an hour or two in studying and then found you had nothing to show for it? You wrinkled your brow and forced your eyes to go over the printed page but your brain did not get one clear idea. Isn't it an awful feeling—that fear that you are going to flunk? "I studied hard on that lesson," we hear some students say and yet they "can't get it." The truth is, they only thought they were studying—just going through the motions. You will have more time for play and recreation if you learn how to study.

TO THE TEACHER

There are few grown-ups who know how to study. Do you know how to study effectively? Better yet, can you teach a boy or girl how to study? If so, you render a service worth more than gold. The study season is upon us. We urge every one to send 55 cents to the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, ordering that excellent little book, How to Study Effectively, by Whipple. After consulting seventeen authors on this subject, he has boiled it all down to 38 rules with convincing reasons for each one, every one necessary to the maximum of success. You will say that the author knew how to study effectively to provide you with such a valuable book.

TO PARENTS

In order to cooperate with your boys and girls you should know the secret of effective study. Some of the most necessary conditions are things only you can control for their good. You would not stand in the way of their success if you knew, I am sure. And you must know and they must know, if those precious study hours that never come again and the money spent for education shall yield the fullest returns. Before you condemn the child for not getting on at school, be sure he knows how to study effectively and that you have provided your part of the necessary conditions. Don't wait till Christmas to give a present—do it now, and Christmas will beam with the smiles of happier students because they know they are not going to flunk.

CONCERNING THE RELIGIOUS EDUCATION PLANS

The committee appointed recently by the Joint Council for the consideration of applicants for the course in Religious Education at Graceland College, met in the office of the Twelve in Independence on Friday, July 18. U. W. Greene was selected as chairman and C. E. Wight secretary of the committee. About forty names were presented, from which number twenty have been definitely selected. This group is composed of six married couples, seven single men, and one single woman. All of the men are ordained, six holding the office of priest and seven that of elder. The committee consisted of U. W. Greene, George N. Briggs, J. A. Gillen, Walter W. Smith, R. V. Hopkins, and C. E. Wight. Those who have been selected to take the course expect to enroll about August 23, two weeks earlier than the regular opening date. These two weeks will be spent in preliminary work of a nature calculated to prepare them for the regular course to follow.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor.

The official organ of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Published every Wednesday by the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. Entered at the post office at Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

PRICE, $1.75 A YEAR IN ADVANCE

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words.

CONTENTS

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| EDITORIAL:   |     |
| Don't Forget the Main Issue  | 809 |
| Reunions   | 810 |
| The College Bulletin   | 810 |
| Pertle Springs Reunion   | 811 |
| Self-Preservation and Honor  | 811 |
| Relief Needed in Near East   | 812 |
| A Church Survey  | 812 |
| ORIGINAL ARTICLES:   |     |
| Outline Study of the First Principles, by C. E. Wight  | 813 |
| The Church Versus Carl Lewis, by J. F. Garver  | 816 |
| Getting Religion, by A Young Elder   | 818 |
| OF GENERAL INTEREST:   |     |
| The New Social Order   | 820 |
| Our Responsibilities   | 821 |
| WOMAN'S AUXILIARY  | 821 |
| LETTER DEPARTMENT  | 823 |
| M. F. Gowell—A Brother—Alma—A Sister—G. H. Wixom—Augustine Dwyer—Earl C. Larche—Mary Porter—Correspondent. |     |
| MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT   | 828 |
| FROM HERE AND THERE  | 830 |

REUNION SONGS—A GOOD IDEA

Prior to the recent Lamoni Stake reunion, a committee, headed by Stake Chorister H. C. Burgess, met and selected twenty-three of the favorite songs of the stake membership and had the words printed in pamphlet form for the reunion services. They were much appreciated, and made the congregational singing more general and effective. The method of selection was a novel one. The five members of the committee went carefully through the Saints' Hymnal and Zion's Praises, and made note of the numbers which they thought would be most appreciated. After this was completed, the entire committee discussed and voted on the choices made until there were twenty-three selected by unanimous choice. The following numbers from the two books were chosen: Hymnal—11, 21, 92, 110, 120, 141, 145, 179, 377, 365, 347, and "Admonition" by Joseph Luff; Zion's Praises—20, 37, 66, 71, 109, 110, 120, 134, 153, 206, 207.

Benjamin R. McGuire was in attendance at the Spring River District reunion at Joplin, on Sunday, August 10, and from there went to the Clinton District reunion, meeting at Eldorado Springs. He remained at the latter reunion Monday and Tuesday, but was then evidently called back to his office by pressure of work. He reports the Joplin reunion to have been a success in every way, and he left the Saints rejoicing at Eldorado Springs, with every indication of a successful gathering.

BUDGET SYSTEMS PROMOTE ECONOMY

(J. W. Perry advocates budget systems for the home and for the expenditure of public funds. He is president of Kansas City's largest banking institution, the National Bank of Commerce. He has recently rendered a distinct service to Kansas City in his successful leadership of drives for war work fund.)

A budget system for business is so in keeping with intelligent administrators of public, as well as private affairs, that it would seem to demand no defense. If every household would take stock at the beginning of the year of all supplies on hand, then make an estimate of all expenditures for the year, and, as time passes, take careful note of the results, we would find better run homes and more agreeable households.

The American man or woman dislikes the idea of being put on an allowance, but it would be the very best thing that could happen in most of our homes. We are all imbued with the idea that this is a free country and that we should be permitted to enjoy all the blessings at hand. It would be a real blessing to have our homes, as well as our business, run on a plan that will insure safety first and results all the time.

An account at the bank is considered undesirable, when those in charge have no definite program of income and expense. We can all very closely estimate our incomes and with this before us, lay aside, first, a portion for household and living expenses, insurance, incidentals—which includes sickness and bad luck accounts of all kinds—educational and recreational privileges, and a savings account in the bank or laid away in a sound investment each month or period as we receive our incomes.

This same rule should apply to the business in which we are engaged and will make for success in the business as well as the home.

The same budget system should be rigidly applied in all government and municipal affairs. It would do away with needless expenditures and would prevent special legislation, which so often is ill advised. Expenditures should be recommended by those in position to judge and then should have the careful perusal of the debt making and paying department.

Such a course would prevent so much waste in our State, county, and city. Why is it a fact that our School Board always has funds with which to pay bills and make the necessary improvements? First, the people are willing to vote the money because the funds are not wasted and then the School Board works to a program and seldom comes out wrong.

If the individual would begin to follow the budget plan, it would soon be considered a crime for such loose expenditures as we have seen made in our city, county, and state affairs.

Education along these lines will do wonders in creating such a feeling. Spend wisely and the income will take care of itself.

A CRYING NEED OF OUR CHILDREN

The estimate that three fourths of the 22,000,000 school children in the United States have health defects which are actually potentially injurious to them as prospective citizens is reported by Thomas D. Wood, Chairman Committee on Health Problems in Education, National Council of Education, in a forthcoming volume, "Standards of Child Welfare—A Report of the Children's Bureau Conferences," being published by the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor. Doctor Wood urged daily health inspection and annual health examination of school children in order to discover and to remedy these defects.

Doctor William R. P. Emerson estimated that about one third of all school children are undernourished, a condition due to poverty and to ignorance of dietary essentials. As a result he stated from 20 to 40 per cent of those graduating from elementary schools are physically unfit. To eradicate this source of national weakness Doctor Emerson and others contributing to the volume, advocate the establishment of nutrition clinics in the public school system.

Major Lewis Terman of Leland Stanford Junior University, in urging the establishment of dental clinics in the schools, stated that 90 per cent of the school children of the country are suffering from dental caries while 20 per cent of all the teeth of school children are in a more or less serious state of decay. Major Terman calculated that forty to fifty millions of dollars "would put all the teeth of all the children in order as nearly as dental science is able to do it" and that the cost of keeping them in order would be from twenty-five to thirty millions a year. Major Terman pointed out the diseases such as rheumatism and heart disease due to dental neglect.

An inclusive set of National standards designed to safeguard the health of children and mothers are reported. Copies of "Standards of Child Welfare" may be obtained through the Children's Bureau, Washington, D. C.

Almost anyone can take an unimportant thought and clothe it in big words so that no one can understand it. That is easy. To take a thought that is profound, fundamental, and explain it so simply that all may understand, is a triumph.—Elbert A. Smith.

You Need More Church Books

Order a few of the church books you have long needed, and begin a systematic course of study.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8:31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2:36.

Volume 66

Lamoni, Iowa, August 27, 1919

Number 35

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

OPTIMISTS AND PESSIMISTS

We have all noted the case of those who are so optimistic that there are "millions" in anything they undertake. They expect by an economic rearrangement "we shall only have to work two or three hours a day, and then have every luxury in the world."

We can easily see that such extreme optimism may prove injurious to those who base their life and fortune on such an extreme assurance without regard to facts.

Yet there is an equal damage, if not greater, because of those who are always pessimistic. To hear them speak, you would think that nothing could ever succeed; nothing is right nor ever will be. The officers of the church, high and low, are wrong. The officers of the government are wrong. The nation, and the whole world is getting so bad that it is unsafe to shake hands with anyone. They would discourage all effort. Those who follow such are afraid to attempt anything, and therefore will lose all.

At first glance, one looks as bad as the other, but such is not the case. For a cheerful outlook on life tends to produce great results. A dread of responsibility, a fear to undertake or put a matter to the issue, rob the very forces of life themselves.

Inside of this extreme, dealing with the more practical problems that confront us, we have that more numerous class who, while they work and mean well, are continually discouraging every effort. They are referred to in the Fishing River revelation (Doctrine and Covenants 102:3). Even when results are apparent they still will speak discouragingly. Such tend decidedly to hold back any work. They tend to bring about the very thing concerning which they talk and to defeat the work the church is undertaking.

When we have not confidence in our brother, when we doubt him, when we continually think he is worth but little, and even say so, we tend to lower decidedly his efficiency and lessen the work that he can do.

While when we have confidence in a man, even though we express more confidence than he feels he really deserves, yet it not only encourages him, but it causes him to try to make that good opinion true. We are exercising then a decided force for the success of the work.

We are told to be cheerful in our warfare. We are commanded repeatedly to have faith. Faith is a moving power. It belongs to the optimist. It does not belong to the pessimist. A man can do so much more work when he is cheerful, and those around him are cheerful; when he feels the force of their supporting confidence; when he is literally "on his toes."

These are some of the reasons why we greatly prefer the optimist to the pessimist—because while the pessimist hinders, throws down, tends to bring his dark forecastings to pass, the optimist is exercising his full power to make the world a better place, to make the church better, to make those with whom he associates better, and more capable workmen.

We want men who will rightly divide the word of truth, who can face disaster as well as triumph, and still move steadily forward, whose confidence in God is not weakened by a brother's faults.

We want men who can see the truth before us, and the truth concerning the men with whom we work. Who can face the facts good and bad yet cheerfully continue their work.

But if we have to have men and women who lean a little one way or the other, it were better to err on the side of those who have too great confidence, too great faith, who are striving a little too hard to bring to pass the will of the Lord.

When the children of Israel came to the promised land, there were two optimists, there were ten pessimists. The pessimists said, "There are giants in the land; we are but grasshoppers in their sight." But the optimists said, "The Lord is on our side; who can prevail against him?"

S. A. B.

I call that a complete and generous education which fits a man to perform deftly, skillfully, and magnanimously all the offices both public and private of peace and war.—John Milton.

THE CHRISTMAS OFFERING

Probably when Sister Marietta Walker founded the Christmas offering years ago she little dreamed the magnitude that it would presently attain. As was noted in the HERALD some weeks ago, the total collection for 1888 was reported as $154. It will be remembered that the Christmas offering for 1918 amounted to more than $90,000. So that our daily offering now is much larger than the annual offering thirty years ago.

Perhaps the more marked increase has occurred in the past ten years. The offering for 1909 was $5,499.70; that of 1918 was $90,807.56.

The offering for the most part shows a steady growth, the most marked decline occurring in 1906 when there was a slump of nearly $2,000, and the former good showing was not regained until 1910. Since that period the figures have mounted rapidly, —in 1917 jumping from $12,946 to $74,676. This rapid increase was largely due to a systematic campaign.

Comparative figures from 1903 are furnished by the Bishop's office, as follows:

|            |             |
|------------|-------------|
| 1903 ..... | $ 1,876.74 |
| 1904 ..... | 2,515.98    |
| 1905 ..... | 6,308.44    |
| 1906 ..... | 4,056.17    |
| 1907 ..... | 5,030.12    |
| 1908 ..... | 5,394.60    |
| 1909 ..... | 5,499.70    |
| 1910 ..... | 6,776.65    |
| 1911 ..... | 8,127.82    |
| 1912 ..... | 8,220.18    |
| 1913 ..... | 9,060.55    |
| 1914 ..... | 10,072.78   |
| 1915 ..... | 10,904.24   |
| 1916 ..... | 12,946.03   |
| 1917 ..... | 74,676.18   |
| 1918 ..... | 90,807.56   |

Perhaps the outstanding feature in the Christmas offering is its lesson as a work in cooperation. It is a standing example of the power that there is in cooperation. Jesus recognized and blessed the widow's mite, and there is every reason to believe that he recognizes and blesses the children's mite. The old Scotch saying that "many a mickle makes a muckle" is quite true. By putting their pennies together day by day throughout the year the children of the Saints in all parts of the world are able at the close of the year to present the Bishop with more than $90,000. It is hoped and expected that this year the offering will aggregate $150,000. This shows what may be done by cooperation along all lines of efforts to redeem Zion, and carry on the work assigned us by our Lord and Master.

The Bishop desires that one thought shall be emphasized, namely, children are to earn the money that they present as Christmas offering. They are not to wheedle it out of their fathers and mothers, as this might work a hardship where there is a large family of children.

Due prominence should be given the Christmas offerings, but it should not be pushed so strongly as to work harm in any quarter. Legitimate tithing ought not to be robbed in the interests of Christmas offering. It is believed that such has not been the case. The Bishopric reports that they have observed carefully and they find that communities that respond most generously to the Christmas offering have the best attendance and are most faithful in tithing. The biggest Christmas offering was reported last year and at the same time tithing receipts exceeded those of the year before by about $50,000. So that apparently habitual and systematic laying aside for the Christmas offering encourages rather than discourages the paying of tithing.

Formerly the Christmas offering was used for missionary work, and we can only estimate the number of missionaries that were kept in the field by the children's pennies. In that way many a child, and many an older person as well, who could not possibly preach a sermon was able by proxy to preach many sermons, or assist in preaching them, and will share in the blessings that inevitably must result.

It is now announced that the offering will be used to purchase land in the development of Zion. This is no less a noble enterprise, as the ownership of land must underlie all our industrial, and even our spiritual development in Zion. It is expected, therefore, that the appeal will lose none of its vigor and that the response will be just as hearty as in former years, so that the offering may continue steadily to grow as in the past.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THRIFT NEEDED

The Lord counseled the church in 1913, both in private and public expenditures, to carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants. (Doctrine and Covenants 130:7).

The purpose of this is very clearly stated, in order that sufficient tithes and offerings may be accumulated to pay the debts of the church and its various institutions. This we are advised has now been done.

It doubtless had the further purpose of preparing us by due economy to prepare for the period through which we have just been passing, and through which we are now passing. It was necessary during the period of the war. The very thing he declares as sacrifice he classified under "repression of unnecessary wants."

The condition in the world of high prices justifies a continuance of this principle. In fact, for the sake of the kingdom of God, every man, woman, and child should practice self-sacrifice.

In the first place, as the Bishopric plainly set forth in the HERALD from week to week, every church member should be a tithe payer. One tenth of the increase belongs to the Lord, and we should pay our debts.

In the second place, higher prices mean that there is required a larger amount of money to carry on the same work that the church has done in the past, since the cost of living is now three and one half times as great as it was then.

There is also the work of redeeming land, of the settlement of the Saints, of the gathering, and of many other things concerning which we talk, but to put them into effect will require liberal support.

At the least calculation the tithing should be paid, but we should remember also that we have been bought with a price. Our service is due to humanity, and when we read of the suffering in the Near East, of the poverty abroad, there still remains a need for our sacrifice and self-denial, in order that the lives of others may be saved.

High, keen thinking goes with simple living. The great work before us requires an army trained and prepared by voluntary self-denial. As a church it is axiomatic that we must have clean, simple living.

As citizens, it is not enough to save money we must also save food and clothing and avoid waste for the benefit of other suffering people this coming winter.

S. A. B.

---

JOINT STOCK COMPANIES

---

The following extract from an editorial of Joseph Smith in the winter of 1871-72 may prove of interest in connection with the work of the Bishopric and of stewardships. There is no mysterious law of getting something for nothing, even by gathering a number together. It will need to be through better work, or better methods, or more work, if there is gain to the body as a whole, and then a fair distribution of the proceeds.

"The organization and operation of joint stock companies was a favorite measure of the immediate past. We cannot write the history of them all, nor do we care to write the history of any; it is enough that they one by one perished, dwindled away by improvidence, waste, and consumption. The usual features of them one and all may be confidently told. They were almost invariably an attempt to make any given number of poor men rich, by the aggregation of their poverty; as suppose, one thousand men propose a stock company, and subscribe ten dollars each to the capital stock, there is the aggregate of the nice little sum of ten thousand dollars. This seems large, and it would be for one man; but when we reflect that there are one thousand persons holding interests, we can easily perceive that they are not individually richer, as they own but ten dollars each. Now, if five hundred stockholders draw out for daily consumption twenty dollars each, the whole sum is exhausted, and five hundred stockholders are defrauded out of their whole stock; if two hundred and fifty draw out forty dollars each, the stock is exhausted, and seven hundred and fifty stockholders are left minus their stock—the fact is, we believe that nine out of every ten joint stock companies, organized among the Saints, died of 'home consumption.' Instead of being stockholders, the members of them became stock consumers; and those organizations instead of being 'fat and well favored,' were 'lean and ill favored.' The very means which should have made the people rich, an aggregation of labor and capital, was made a means of robbery and extortion, until to call an association a 'joint stock' was to condemn it. This should not have been the case. We do not defend the men who were the founders of those schemes, we do not condemn them personally, for we do not know them, at least not many of them, but the principle of the association of labor and capital is a measure of policy and sound wisdom, we believe. Many instances may be cited of what may be done by unity of labor; the most striking one occurring to our memory of late occurrence is that of a beautiful stone church, standing not far from the south end of Grand Avenue, Saint Louis, Missouri, built by an order of Catholic priests; and when it is stated that these men, although few in number, are prohibited from asking alms, and have done all the work on their building, quarrying, cutting, and laying the stone, together with doing the whole of the wood work, it will be conceded that a unity of purpose with energy of action will usually accomplish the most unlikely of human designs, and render those of great feasibility a thing of a day."—Church History, vol. 3, pp 669-671.

---

A LITTLE LEAVEN

---

Question. Please discuss in the HERALD at your convenience Matthew 13: 33. Whom does the woman represent? When, where, and how was the leaven hidden? What is meant specifically by the "three measures of meal"? When will the leavening process be completed?

Answer. A great deal of speculation is possible about this, as it is about other texts. The story may be used as a convenient allegory at times to illustrate different ideas. This is only one of several parables related at that time, the first of which is the parable of the tares, which was explained by the Master.

He then declares that the kingdom of heaven is like a mustard seed; faith is small but by culture grows until it can move mountains, or in the image used here, until it becomes a tree and shelters the birds of the field.

Then in one verse this third parable is given. The kingdom of heaven is like leaven, which is hid in the meal, until all be leavened. It is a living power, seemingly small, but spreads until it fills the whole measure. It is so in the life of an individual, it is so in the history of the world. It may seem but small at the start and weak, yet it grows and should grow, until it dominates the life of the individual.

The revealed truth of God in any age spreads forth and leavens the thought of all mankind. It is gradual, its course cannot be traced, yet it becomes an accomplished fact. It has been so in this age.

Also we note in this same chapter, the kingdom of heaven is compared to a treasure hid in the field; and again to a goodly pearl; and again to a net that is cast into the sea; and again every scribe well instructed is likened to a householder, who bringeth forth out of his treasure, that which is new and that which is old.

We do not pretend to speak for all of our brethren. We know that some extreme constructions have been placed upon this passage. Because it says a woman, she is compared with other allegorical women mentioned in the Bible. Some have compared the three measures of meal to the three books of the church.

The figure three was a magical number. It is full of symbolic significance to oriental people. But that it refers here to one or more of these symbolic uses, we have no direct evidence.

One commentary states that three measures was the usual amount taken for a baking. If that is true, it is a simple, homely parable relating to their everyday life. It is connected with the illustration immediately preceding it, just as the parable of the goodly pearl is connected with the preceding parable of the treasure in a field. It is very small, and in the eyes of men insignificant, yet it makes alive and vivifies the whole mass of meal.

In the absence of any clear statement it is possible to speculate on any one of the points raised above. There are several possible interpretations of the three measures of meal, and some possible interpretations of the question: What does the woman represent?

After all it is the theme of the story that is important. The use of the woman here is not allegoric. The leaven is hidden whenever our heavenly Father restores the gospel to earth as he did in the days of Jesus. According to the parable, the leavening process is completed when the whole is leavened.

That will naturally be when the Master, our Elder Brother, surrenders his mission to the Father, and when every knee is bowed and every tongue confesses.

We do not think it is profitable to place a forced construction, though such may be used often as convenient illustrations.

S. A. B.

---

"BACKWARD, TURN BACKWARD--"

---

It was a very smart audience in a very wealthy club in a suburban American town. There had been a very highbrow paper read by a long-haired gentleman, who was slightly knock-kneed, on the Group Home.

The central idea he expressed was that the home of the future would be a community home, where, say, a hundred families would share a central kitchen and dining room, where a central nursery would take care of the children, where the mothers would work at a trade or profession as well as the fathers, seeing their children only occasionally.

Practically all of the audience was harrowed by the servant question, and the long-haired gentleman was applauded violently. The hand-clapping had scarcely died down, however, when an elderly man rose. He too was applauded, for he was one of the most distinguished scientists of his day.

"I am not on the program," he said, "but I would like to make a short comment. As you all know, I am a busy man who has spent his life handling cold facts. I haven't any sentimentality in my make-up and I am all for efficiency."

"But, my friends, efficiency is not always what it seems, and as I grow older I realize that many seemingly useless institutions based on sentiment are really essential to human progress."

"While this very clever paper was being read, my mind reverted to my school-days, and over and over there has come to me an old poem that was in our Fifth Reader. I am going to repeat two verses of that to you as my comment on the Group Home—the motherless home!

Backward, turn backward, O Time, in thy flight!
 Make me a child again, just for to-night.
 Mother, come back from the echoless shore;
 Take me again to your heart as of yore.
 Over my heart in the days that have flown
 No love like mother-love ever has shone;

No other worship abides and endures,
 Faithful, unselfish, and patient like yours;
 None like a mother can charm away pain
 From the sick soul and the world-weary brain.
 Over my slumber your loving watch keep,
 Rock me to sleep, mother; rock me to sleep."

—The Delineator, May, 1919.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

HOW SHALL THE CHILD SPEND ITS SABBATH?

The Sabbath should be the most cheerful, the happiest, and the best day of the week in every home.

Our modern life is so complex, so strenuous that we need the blessings of the Sabbath. In many homes, overworked adults and pleasure-loving young people are inclined to oversleep, except the mother who must get the littler ones off to Sunday school, clear away the odds and ends left from Saturday and prepare a good dinner. Thus all of them more or less neglect the spiritual exercises that belong to the day.

There are some few who are strict observers of the day and put the children into Puritanic straight jackets. Week days are full enough of "don'ts," but the Sabbath is bristling with threatening prohibitions that make the young child hate the day, whereas the Bible says it should be called a delight. The child must go to Sunday school and prayer meeting and listen to two sermons that he cannot appreciate.

There are many others who have not the heart to be so cruel, so they reluctantly allow the children to spend the day according to their own caprice, which, many times brings uneasiness of mind because it is clear the child is growing up without a conscience, so far as the Sabbath is concerned.

Adults can cease their physical labors and rest, but this cannot apply to the young child, whose active nature and growing body calls for play. The mental faculties for reflection and concentration being only partially developed, they have no other method of expression but physical activity. Sunday school primary teachers have learned that their pupils can sit still and concentrate but a few moments at a time. They must provide frequent changes and rest exercises.

Churches, homes and communities, with very few exceptions, make no effort to supervise the play of the children during the week. What wonder, then, that they are unable to direct their children's activities outside of church services, on the Sabbath. When we have progressed on the first, the other will have begun to be solved, unless the church leads out alone. Is it likely to do that?

On a sacred or a secular day, the nature of childhood is the same. All are aware of the sanctity of the Sabbath, but how many realize the sacredness of the God-given nature of a child. It should not be repressed, but directed into channels suitable to the sacredness of the day.

Between birth and the age of twenty-one, there are three years of Sundays—three year soft opportunity.

Unless I can provide something better I haven't the heart to forbid the week-day games the junior and intermediate boys and girls want to play on Sunday afternoon. Realizing that this day is different, the boy will say: "Papa, can I fly my kite?" or it may be, "play catch and bat the ball." I put it up to him thus: "If you do the same things on the Sabbath you do on week days, what difference, to you, is there between this day and the others?" He answers "none." "Then, it is only different accordingly as we act differently." He sees that, but goes away with a troubled expression. I have developed his conscience somewhat, but I realize deeply that the environment into which he has been born makes it almost impossible to be true to his conscience, because his moral courage has not fully developed. My neighbors may have no Sabbath conscience at all. What can I do when their boys begin these games? They are my boy's playmates during the week. Therefore I am more perplexed than the child.

The more we think it over the more we see that there are three factors that, working together, can solve this problem: The home, the church, and the community, and neither one alone can provide the proper environment for the child. "Zion" means a perfect cooperation of the three. But the first two in active cooperation can the sooner bring the third into the partnership.

Who can offer experience or suggestions on the kind of activities or program, directed or free, for our children's Sabbath? Let us have it so others can know of it.

Nature study is possible most of the year, but it must be directed. How many will prepare for this work? Who can give parents some practical suggestions?

I heard of a teacher who took his organized class out to study the works of God in nature and made it so impressive that a certain good result was known to come from it almost immediately. One of the boys was heard to use a filthy oath. The teacher did not say anything at the time, but a few days later met the boy alone and asked him what he thought of the Great Creator who was back of all the work they had studied on their hike. He said nothing but showed by his manner that he was reverent about it. The teacher then asked him what he thought about a boy who would use the name of that Creator in a profane way. The boy was silent, but at their next class meeting he brought in a resolution which proposed to deal severely with every member of the class thereafter who used "cuss words."

In dramatized Bible stories, also other good stories, we have something that could be carried out on any shady lawn, in park or grove, and it furnishes delightful play with wholesome education. Of course, it, too, must be directed, but the director will go to sleep with a good Sabbath conscience. It is quite the reverse when the children run wild all day, get into mischief, tear their clothes, fight, and act exactly the same as on week-days.

What of the older ones, the adolescent? They have social natures which are God-given. They resent direction and yet, it is possible to get results through proper community cooperation, and through organization. The situation is more difficult, but surely it can be met.

The church must proceed at once to train social leaders and leaders in recreation. Thus equipped, the home, church, and community could produce a Sabbath observance that would have a powerful influence on establishing Zion, the kingdom of God.

Two years ago we called attention to these Sabbath conditions and urged the General Convention to take preliminary action towards coping with them, but nothing was done. We suspect it was because the remedy does not lie on the surface, but must be thought out. We feel impressed to urge it now for a more general agitation. No one with a good Latter Day Saint conscience can read Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4 and feel at ease under present conditions.

While writing this I wanted very much to offer something more affirmative and constructive, but found that little had been developed that we could offer at present.

The list of books following are given only as helps and not as completely meeting the needs of the church, the home, and the community. There are others, no doubt, still more helpful. Let us know of them.

Books and games, for both summer and winter may be ordered through the Herald Publishing House, but as prices have advanced it would be better first to write for same, always giving full description and publisher.

BOOKS FOR PARENTS

|  |        |
|--|--------|
| Sundays and Weekdays with the Children .....   | $ .75 |
| With the Children on Sundays; (the eye-gate and ear-gate into city of childhood. Something for each Sunday, by the Uplift Publishing Co., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Very fine) ..... | 2.50   |
| The Teacher and the Child .....  | .75    |
| What Shall a Young Girl Read? (Sangster) .....   | .75    |
| Hints on Child Training (Trumbull) .....   | 1.25   |
| Telling Bible Stories (Louise Seymour Houghton) .....  | 1.25   |
| Child Culture in the Home (Martha B. Mosher) .....   | 1.00   |
| Occupations for Little Fingers .....   | 1.00   |
| Paper Sloud for Primary Grades .....   | .75    |

GAMES FOR SUNDAY AFTERNOONS

(Always mention the publishers, whose names are given below.)

|  |             |
|--|-------------|
| The Temple of Knowledge .....  | 1.00        |
| Bible A B C's .....  | .10         |
| Bible Characters .....   | .25         |
| Bible Links .....  | .25         |
| William H. Dietz, Chicago, Illinois                                  |             |
| The Bible Memory Game of New Testament Authors .....                 | .30 and .40 |
| Eugene F. Parker, Bath, New York.                                    |             |
| Book of the Book of Books .....                                      | .25         |
| A. B. Floyd, Buffalo, New York.                                      |             |
| Promises .....   | .10         |
| Bible Cities .....   | .10         |
| Mrs. Nellie T. Magee, Lincoln, Nebraska.                             |             |
| Grandma's Sunday Game of Bible Questions:                            |             |
| Old Testament .....  | .30         |
| New Testament .....  | .30         |
| Young Folk's Scriptural Cards .....                                  | .30         |
| Improved Scripture Cards .....                                       | 1.25        |
| Anagrams .....   | .40         |
| McLoughlin Bros., New York.  |             |
| Sunday Occupations for Children .....                                | .25         |
| Mrs. H. E. Morrow, 15 Temple Street, Springfield, Massachusetts      |             |
| Bible Panorama, (containing seventy pictures of Bible objects) ..... | 1.00        |
| An Oriental House, with Upper Room-Cardboard Model .....             | .75         |
| Model of Solomon's Temple .....                                      | .50         |
| Sunday School Building Blocks .....                                  | .20         |
| Model of the Tabernacle and Camp of Israel .....                     | 1.40        |
| Bible Geography Symbols, per set .....                               | .15         |
| Pease's Bible Symbols .....  | .56         |
| Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia.                     |             |

GOMER R. WELLS.

THE LORD'S MESSAGES NEVER POPULAR

The Prophet Amos says, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets."—Amos 3:7.

When the Lord sends a prophet with a message to mankind, man has no say in the matter as to whom he shall choose as his human instrument, or what the message shall be. His duty is to heed and obey the message.

But every message that comes from the Lord will agree and harmonize perfectly in principle and doctrine with all previous messages from him, when rightly understood, in the gospel dispensation. For the Lord is unchangeable and does not travel in crooked paths, but is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. And in this way, and for this reason, we can judge whether messages are from him, by comparing them with the scriptures that he has previously given. And thus we are to "prove all things," and should "hold fast that which is good." (1 Thesalonians 5: 21.)

But, as with Joseph Smith and the gospel message given the world through him, men have always been ready to find fault with God's messages and his messengers. His messengers are never popular with certain classes, whose sins are exposed and condemned by the message. And the prudent among them, finding that the truth cannot be fairly met and vanquished, seek by unfair means and false and slanderous reports and the assailing of character, to prevent the people from going to hear the message.

The humble instruments chosen of the Lord as his messengers to the people, are ever an offense to the Pharisaical leaders of the day and age in which they are sent, and all manner of evil is reported of them falsely. They are not of their class. For James says, "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to those that love him?" (James 2: 5.) And Paul says, "Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise." (1 Corinthians 1: 26, 27.) It was "the common people," that heard Jesus "gladly." (Mark 12: 37.)

Joseph R. Buchanan, in his Journal of Man, volume 2, published at Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1851, page 321, says:

Truth, in her first visits to earth, has ever been scornfully received. Her messengers have been murdered, stoned, imprisoned, disgraced, or scoffed and hooted away from human society. But when her brave heralds have secured a foothold on earth, her messages have been derided in all the high places of the world, and compelled to circulate among the poor, the humble, and oppressed. The ruling class of the world—who are indebted for all they really enjoy, to the share of truth which they possess—look down with infinite scorn upon the generous and gifted few who wish to give them more. . . . To bring forward the purest and highest truth which would abolish all ignorance, misery, and crime, and introduce endless ages of human happiness, is an offense against which mobs arise, armies bristle with bayonet, and the fires of the inquisition are kindled. The laws of eternal justice and truth are reversed. The highest virtue is esteemed the highest crime, while crime itself is almost canonized.

In a sermon by the late Reverend T. DeWitt Talmage, in the Christian Herald of June 26, 1901 (of which paper he was editor), he says:

The grandest and best things ever accomplished have been in the teeth of hostilities. Consider the greatest enterprise of the eternities—the salvation of the world. Did the Roman empire send up invitation to the heavens inviting the Lord to descend amid vociferations of welcome? . . . No; it struck him with insult as soon as it could reach him. Let the camel drivers in the Bethlehem caravansaries testify. See the vilest hate pursue him to the borders of the Nile! Watch his arraignment as a criminal in the courts! See how they belie his every action, misrepresent his best words, howl at him with worst mobs, wear him out with sleepless nights on the cold mountains! See him hoisted into a martyrdom at which the noonday cowered itself with midnight shadows, and the rocks shook into cataclysms, and the dead started out of their sepulcher, feeling that it was no time to sleep when such horrors were being enacted! The wind of stormiest opposition blew upon his cradle, blew upon his mountain pulpit, blew upon the homestead that dared to give him shelter, blew upon his grave; but he went right on and sowed the earth with sympathetic tears, and redeeming blood, and consolation, and helpfulness, and redemption, and victory. . . . Just call over the names of the men and women who have done most for our poor old world, and you will call over the names of those who had mobs after them. They were shunned by the elite; they were cartooned by the satirists; they lived on food that you and I would not throw to a kennel. Some of them died in prisons; some of them were burned at the stake; some of them were buried at the public expense, because of the laws of sanitation. They were hounded through the world, and hounded out of it. Now we cross the ocean to see the room in which they were born or died, and look up at monuments which the church or the world has reared to their matchless fidelity and courage. After one or two or three hundred years, the world has made up its mind that instead of being flagellated, they ought to have been garlanded; instead of caves of the mountains for residence, they ought to have had bestowed upon them an Alhambra.

Our Revolutionary War for liberty from the tyranny and injustice of the Old World, was characterized by Tory papers of that time as, "The most wicked, daring, and unnatural rebellion that ever disgraced the annals of history."

Yet we believe now that the Lord had a hand in that work, and a far-reaching purpose in freeing this land and setting up this Government, that he might have a place, free from religious tyranny, where he could set up his great latter-day work, that would restore his gospel in its fullness, with its former-day gifts and blessings restored, and the authority to officiate in its ordinances in inducting men into his kingdom; all of which had, by the "falling away" or apostacy of the primitive church, been lost to the world. And we believe that the tenacity and persistence of purpose shown by Columbus, resulting in his discovering of this land, was the result of the Spirit of God working on him, with the future purpose of God, as above pointed out, then in the divine mind.

In a sermon in October of 1880, Doctor Talmage said:

All those men who have passed into the gallery of national sainthood were called in their day to go chin deep through the slush of lampoonery and pasquinade and there was no exception. Thomas Paine wrote and published a letter to George Washington, the first president, and said: "Treacherous in private friendship and hypocritical in public life, the world will be puzzled to decide whether you are an apostate or an impostor, whether you abandoned good principles or whether you never had any." . . . Martin Van Buren was caricatured as a rat. Thomas Benton and Amos Kendal as robbers hurling a battering ram against the door of the United States Bank. . . . Daniel Webster, under political assault and neglect, died of a broken heart at Marsfield. . . . There were millions of people who, during his [James K. Polk's] administration, never mentioned his name without a sneer of contempt. . . . All the terms of obloquy were heaped upon Abraham Lincoln. The filthy joker, the wholesale butcher, the buffoon, the gorilla of the White House, were the more genteel and refined of the epithets. All these men have taken their places in history, honorable and radiant. But we are still at the old business of base travesty.

Again, in one of his sermons, the late Doctor Talmage says, of some people:

Trying to do a good and honorable and useful thing, they are misrepresented and belied as if they had practiced a villainy. There are people who all their lives have suffered injustice. The world had had many specimens of slandered men and women, their motives slandered, their habits slandered—slandered until they get out of the world, and then perhaps honored by elaborate eulogium, and tall shaft of granite, all four sides chiseled with the story of how good and great they were.

Many of these are among those "of whom the world was not worthy." (Hebrews 11:38.) It is the same old story still going on, of building the tombs and garnishing the sepulchers of the prophets and worthy men before our time, and saying, "If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets." (Matthew 23:29, 30), while at the same time not recognizing those of our own time, because all manner of evil is spoken of them falsely, and we drift with "the commonly received opinion," forgetting that it was the same with Christ and the prophets in their own time. They had enemies and were hated by the evilly disposed, and by those whose evils and false doctrines were spoken against by their message, and were misrepresented and belied by the popular report, and had all manner of evil spoken of them falsely.

What real wrong was Paul guilty of, that he should be persecuted? Yet he writes of himself and the former-day saints, "Being reviled, we bless; being persecuted, we suffer it; being defamed, we entreat; we are made the filth of the world, and are the offscouring of all things unto this day." (1 Corinthians 4:12, 13.)

Of course they had their faults and failings and had not yet attained to perfection, and the best of them were ready to admit that they were "men of like passions" with other men. (Acts 14:15; James 5:17.) But these things ought to show us how uncertain and unjust the popular report and opinion can be, in judging character, and how blind in judging in this way the message that angels have brought to earth and delivered to those whom God has chosen as his humble servants, to proclaim them to the world.

We ought to try, or "prove all things," by comparing them, not with the mere opinions of men, but with the "more sure word of prophecy"—the inspired standard of divine truth, especially when a thing comes before us claiming to be the beginning of the Lord's great latter-day work, in which will be brought about the restoration of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began." (Acts 3:31.) And to be the gospel restored in its fullness—"this gospel of the kingdom," as preached of old and which Jesus said "shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."—Matthew 24:14.

C. W. LAMB.

---

WHAT GOD DEMANDS OF A SAINT

---

We must go into our work for Christ and humanity with a purity of motive and self-disinterestedness such as the world has never known, because not yet are the people of the world converted to the principles of their own religions much less to the true gospel. Not yet is slavery abolished; not yet is society redeemed from its sin-cursed state. If civilization were converted there would be no need of a league of nations; if the churches were really Christian, a league of churches would not be necessary. The facts are with us, that the world needs the comprehensive as well as the workable character of the gospel. Religious Babylon is a huge old tree of denominationalism, and as time goes on it becomes more hollow, necessarily being propped up by a system of trusts and wealth, but will some day, by a general storm, come down with a crash. It is so predicted, "Babylon the great shall fall."

No one can read the first section of the Doctrine and Covenants with any degree of understanding, but they will see that the time has come when it is necessary that a new start be made to save the world. Therefore it is necessary that we give the greatest possible service to the world. The conditions that confront us should bring us to the real issue. The sovereignty of Jesus Christ is an absolute thing; the allegiance which we owe to him transcends and takes precedence over every other loyalty. The Lord is our Redeemer. If we would be redeemed he demands everything. He demands the first place in our life. There is not a Latter Day Saint in the world that would dispute this, therefore to us will come the greater condemnation and many stripes, if we do not practice what we believe and teach.

Is it possible to follow the teachings of Christ literally? Is not some discrimination necessary? If discriminations are necessary, how are we to know where to draw the line? These are questions that are asked by the denominational Christians. What are our answers to be to them? If we cannot answer affirmatively that the teachings of Christ can be followed literally, we hold Christ in discount. These are momentous questions and of the greatest importance to us. Everyone should ask the questions of himself and be convinced in his own mind. We can neither discount nor discriminate from the laws of God without having to suffer the consequences that surely must follow. There is a law that is at least as old as the race. We know not its origin, but it had its effect in the eternal world. It is known as the law of compensation.

All through the ages the voice of God to all men was, believe; then comes the evidence which means faith in God and its reward. Perhaps one of the greatest tests of our faith will be the gathering and its associate requirements. Gathering has been associated with the work of God from the beginning. Christ said, "How often would I have gathered the children together even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not." The gathering in the last days is predicted to be the greatest of all gatherings, which will finally merge into the gathering referred to by Paul that, "In the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in him: in whom we also have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will."

Christ also said that he will gather his elect from the four quarters of the earth. That will take the wisest heads of this generation as well as the inspiration of heaven. The gospel, to be preached to all nations, means more to us than to any other religious body in the world. To most, if not to all others, it is superficial. They see little or nothing in the gospel pertaining to the social and economic conditions of life. To convert the nations means a complete revolution of the social and economic condition before they can become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ. The conversion of the nations is the work of this church.

Small and insignificant as it may appear at the present time, there is a wonderful prophecy to be found in the Doctrine and Covenants which says, "Wherefore I say unto you, that I have sent unto you mine everlasting covenant, even that which was from the beginning, and that which I have promised I have so fulfilled, and the nations of the earth shall bow to it; and if not of themselves they shall come down," etc. To teach the nations of the whole world, people must be brought to the sense of a network of revelations and the spirit of brotherly love; not only to live and let live, but to help one another so that all may share the joy of living.

To promote the nobler way of living both by precept and practice is the business of the church, exemplifying to the world that we acknowledge the sovereignty of Christ, not only as the Son of God, but the Supreme Director in the temporal as well as the spiritual conversion of the human family. Believing and obeying him brings the evidence. We shall assuredly know that it is possible to follow the teachings of Christ literally in this day and generation.

One thing however, is certain: that Zion shall be established, her foundations shall be laid, her beauty shall astonish the world, and she become the glory of the whole earth. These things are decreed by the King of kings and Lord of lords, and he hath declared that heaven and earth may pass away, but not one jot or tittle of His word shall fall to the ground.

Knowing then that the work of the Lord is propelled by Almighty power, the saints can rest satisfied, under all circumstances, that it will roll forth with power and energy that shall comport with the purposes of Jehovah. . . .

Where is the individual whose mind is sufficient to grasp the fullness, extent, and glory of the church? None but those who catch the sacred spirit which animated the bosom of the prophets when they foretold of the glories of the last days, when the visions of the Almighty rested upon them.

A field wide as eternity, a labor worthy the archangels, appear before the saints of God, and to accomplish which they must be faithful, diligent, enterprising, and prepared to make whatever sacrifice the Almighty may require at their hands. By doing so they will not only be instrumental in securing the happiness of their fellow man, but their own; and when the judgment is set and the books are opened and every man rewarded according to his works, they shall hear from the righteous Judge, "Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, now I will make thee ruler over many things, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."—Times and Seasons, vol. 2, pp. 423, 424; Church History, vol. 2, page 525.

Every man and woman who belongs to this church is required to make the sacrifice of their time, talent, and all they have and are, for the prosperity of the kingdom we love. Let us remember, a man's nature runs either to herbs or weeds; which will we water? There is no such thing as a bargain counter religion; with God all is pure and undefiled, and we must pay full price. There are no excursions to heaven; we must pay full fare. Our religion is worth to us what it costs. Working for God is the greatest and best business in the world. This thing of just ringing the bell to get people to come in is played out.

RODERICK MAY.

---

THE WORLD WAR

---

IS THIS THE LAST GREAT WAR—THE BATTLE OF ARMAGEDDON?

(A sermon by Elder A. C. Barmore.)

My remarks this evening will be based on Isaiah 2: 4 and Micah 4: 3. In each case the verse is the famous prophecy regarding the abolition of war. In considering it we should remember it follows a period where the opposite condition obtains. The previous condition is described by Joel as follows: "Beat your plowshears into swords and your pruning hooks into spears." (3: 10.)

THE CESSATION OF WAR

As to when this will be we can judge by considering the contexts. Isaiah, in verse 17, says: "The loftiness of man shall be bowed down, and the haughtiness of man shall be made low; and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day." Here we have a forecast of the abolition of autocracy. When Israel desired a king that they might be like other nations the Lord said to Samuel: "They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them." According to this we should have no king but God, and true to this idea one of our national hymns, America, says: "Great God our King." The return to God as the only king will be one of the results following the cessation of war. This great war has thrown the doctrine of "the divine right" of monarchical rulers into the discard, hence the time for the discontinuance of war is already due.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY ALLOWED

Another thought: Michael's prophecy regarding the abandonment of war is followed by these words: "They shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid. . . . For all the people shall walk every one in the name of his god, and we will walk in the name of the Lord our God forever and ever." When I was a boy I was taught that "war will not cease until the personal advent of Christ, who will, by his coming, compel the peace of the world." I do not accept this view now, for the prophecies indicate worldwide peace as a preparation for the Savior's return. Micah indicates that temporal security and religious liberty will be among the results of universal peace. Please note the words, "All people will walk every one in the name of his god." The small letter g indicates that "god" in this case refers to idols, and not to the Almighty. An infidel once criticized this text upon the presumption that idols would be worshiped in heaven, which he said was unreasonable. To a certain extent he was right, but he overlooked the fact that the text deals with earthly conditions. It is true of course that idol worship in heaven is absurd, but the verse does not indicate continuous idolatry. It only reveals the fact that idolatry would be tolerated as the result of the prevalence of religious freedom. It does, however, indicate the eternal worship of the Almighty in the words, "and we will walk in the name of the Lord our God forever and ever." Apparently Isaiah (2: 20, 21) foretells the overthrow of idols at the time war is abolished and monarchical rulers humbled, but this is only apparent, for the verses referred to will be fulfilled at the very time of Christ's coming, for then, as all will admit, the idol worshipers will abscond.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

As to what the League of Nations will accomplish depends upon whether such a move is due or not. We have shown that war will cease when monarchy is overthrown, and universal religious liberty secured. The time for these things having arrived, as I verily believe it has, the psychological moment has come for the League of Nations to secure and maintain the world's peace. Personally, I am glad that at last America has a part in this great work. Considering the famous American trio, often mentioned of late, I should list their work as follows: Washington's work was original formation, Lincoln's, national extension, Wilson's, universal diffusion. In this, of course, I refer to democratic government. Again, we may vary the form of these positions by saying, the work of the first was liberty founding the Nation, the work of the second was liberty preserving the Nation, the work of the third is liberty enlightening the world.

THE LAST GREAT BATTLE

In a sense this war may be said to be the battle of Armagedden, that is, since it is the last great war this side of the coming of Christ, but it is not the Armageddon of the Bible. The battle of Revelation 16: 13-16, and that of Revelation 20: 7-10 are one and the same. This conflict will be a single battle, and will not only be fought after the coming of Christ but subsequent to the thousand years' reign, commonly called the millennium.

Let me again mention Napoleon. I have named him before in these addresses. When I refer to him I speak of one whose genius I greatly admire and whose life is most intensely interesting. It will be remembered that he abdicated the first time in April, 1814, and was banished to the island of Elba. At the end of the year he left his private retreat and gathered his forces to recover his empire. The result is told in one word—Waterloo. Upon his retirement to Elba peace lasted about one year.

This great struggle ends international war for a much longer period. Armament will at first be reduced, but gradually the manufacture of military weapons will cease altogether. There will no doubt be trivial troubles like the Mexican affair. There will also be domestic disturbances in which the revolver and dagger will take the place of regular martial implements. At the end of the millennium, however, Satan, like Napoleon, will again marshal his forces to reorganize his empire. The result can be stated in one word—Armageddon. He will meet with final subjugation, and war will forever cease.

Every author will bear testimony to the fact that much which he meant to convey has never been guessed at.—Bulwer-Lytton.

DEVELOPMENT

We have spent a great deal of time in the perfecting of things man uses and too little time in the perfecting of man himself. In this age of cooperation we find an increasing multitude of organizations, each one dedicated to a special purpose—that purpose being the improvement of something that will serve man. Ceaseless efforts have been put forth to improve, to perfect everything that man can employ to please the body, to minister to the mind, or to satisfy the soul.

If a man is worthy to have so much thought and labor devoted to his comfort, surely it is time we were developing man himself.

If truth is what we wish to take into consideration in the development of man we must first know what truth is. Truth is not a product of the intellect alone; it is a product of the whole nature. The body is engaged in it, and the mind, and the soul.

Before an artist can do anything the instrument must be tuned.

Life is the finest of fine arts. Few men know how to live. We grow up at random, carrying into mature life the merely animal methods and motives which we had as little children. This must be changed. Christianity is to teach men the art of life." Education may be divided into three parts: "Learn of me."

Before we can learn of Him we must educate ourselves. There are several definitions for education, but the one that seems the most fitting is this: "True education means the drawing out and development of all the human faculties and the preparation of the man or woman for the duties and responsibilities of life." Education may be divided into three parts. Intellectual, industrial, and moral.

The first thing intellectual education does for a man is to wake him up. After spending a number of years in, or out of school for that matter, in developing the mind, a man suddenly discovers that God Almighty has made him for a purpose, and that deep down within his being are powers which when developed will aid him in accomplishing the end for which he has been created.

Intellectual education makes a man intelligent. If a man is intelligent he can and will see what things are aids to prosperity. At one time cotton was king in the South, and the supply of this staple was far in excess of the demand and hence there was but little profit in its cultivation; so they turned their attention to truck farming and stock raising; but the ignorant farmer, who cannot tell how or why a grain of corn sprouts when planted, is unable to see the relation of supply to demand, and so he will continue to plant cotton until he dies, and his children after him will plant cotton unless they are more intelligent than their father.

Intellectual education makes a man patriotic. If a man love his country, he will strive to build it up and protect it; if a man build up and protect his country, of a necessity he must first build up and protect himself and his home for the home is the seat of all government. Too many people depend upon the Sunday school and Religio to make little angels of their children, but these are only steps in the ladder and most of the child's character will depend on his home surroundings.

Intellectual education teaches how to economize. Economy is the road to wealth. However large a man's income, if he and those dependent upon him have not learned to make one dollar go as far as two, he will never be prosperous. If we would have prosperity come to us we must see to it that our extravagance does not eat up our profits and involve us in debt.

Intellectual education multiplies man's wants. In the ignorant state the man is content to know nothing, do nothing, have nothing, and consequently to be nothing; but the man whose every faculty has been developed longs to know all things of God and the universe, longs to own something, is restless when idle, longs to act well his part in the affairs of life. To the result of these longings we owe the progress, prosperity, and grandeur of the centuries. It is a significant fact that those who have solved, and those who are yet solving, great problems in the scientific, mechanical, and social world have not been nor are they yet ignorant men, but men whose minds have been so disciplined by intellectual education as to prepare them for those tasks. The magnetic telegraph, the steam engine, the cotton gin, the Atlantic cable, the telephone, the phonograph, and the X ray could not have been possible had not such masterminds as Morse, Stevenson, Whitney, Fields, Bell, Edison, and Roentgen attempted the tasks. No ignorant man could have solved or ever will solve such problems.

Intellectual education will preserve the race of man. As we become acquainted with the laws of health, we become more careful of our bodies. All around us are human beings wasting away with diseases, all of which can be traced back to some violation of nature's laws by somebody. Errors of ignorance give to the state an increased number of lunatics and nonprogressive men give to families parents who are physical wrecks, and then not only the prosperity of those families is affected, but that of following generations as well, for saith God Almighty, "I will visit the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation."

Industrial education teaches the dignity of honest labor. When a man has been educated in this direction, he becomes as willing to handle a spade as to handle a pen; when a man has been educated to a point that he will put brain into the ordinary vocations of life, by the eternal law that intelligence will bring to its possessors its own exceeding great reward, that man cannot help but be prosperous. The men and women who will work are the ones who in the course of time will become wealthy and independent.

Moral education has to do with the training of the heart. To whatever extent the other faculties are developed, however strong, wealthy, and learned the man, if his heart is not right he cannot be prosperous in the highest sense. When you educate the heart of a man, you make him recognize his moral obligations, his own rights, and the rights of others. If the hearts of men were right, jails, penitentiaries, gallows, and law courts would be useless. Every crime committed can be traced back to some violation of the moral laws by somebody. Visit the places of punishment and there you will find intelligent men and others who have been industrious and wealthy, but who have fallen because of some defect in their moral training or in that of others. When we deal with the moral nature or spiritual nature of man, we are dealing with the most important part. The Pharisees asked about Christ: "How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?" The organ of knowledge is not nearly so much mind, as the organ that Christ used, namely, obedience, and that was the organ which he himself insisted upon when he said: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." If any man be simply willing to do his will—if he has an absolutely undivided mind about it—that man will know what truth is and what falsehood is; a stranger he will not follow.

While in the development of the three parts of man, the mental, the physical, and the moral, one must be careful not to exaggerate one truth at the expense of another. For example: we might take a plant and place it in the sunshine, which is one of the essential elements that produces life to the plant, but it could not live on that alone, as it takes all the elements, sunshine, air, moisture, soil, etc., there has to be a balance. We are told in the Bible to "add to your faith virtue, and to virtue, knowledge, and to your knowledge temperance" or balance. It is a word taken from the orchestra, where all the parts—the sopranos, the basses, the altos, and the tenors, and all the rest of them—must be regulated. If you have too much of the bass, or too much of the soprano, there is want of harmony. Truth may be turned into falsehood very easily by simply being either too much enlarged or too much diminished. Some blind men were taken to a menagerie.

They had gone around the animals, and four of them were allowed to touch an elephant as they went past. They were discussing afterwards what kind of a creature the elephant was. One man, who had touched its tail, said "the elephant is like a rope." Another of the blind men, who had touched his hind limb said, "No such thing, the elephant is like the trunk of a tree." Another who had felt its side said, "That is all rubbish. An elephant is a thing like a wall." And the fourth, who had felt its ear, said, "An elephant is like none of these things; it is like a leather bag." Now men look at truth; at different bits of it and they are very apt to imagine that the thing that they have seen is the whole thing. Truth is very much bigger than an elephant and we are very much blinder than any of those blind men as we come to look at it.

Christ made us aware that it is quite possible for a man to have ears and hear nothing and to have eyes and see nothing. One of the disciples saw a great deal of Christ and he never knew him. "Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? He that hath seen me hath seen the Father."

"A little learning is a dangerous thing, drink deep or touch not the cup." We must not think we know it all because we know a very, very little. "Very few of us know how much we must know in order to know how little we know."

May God preserve us from slothfulness, from content with present attainments. Man's discontent is the wing of his spirit, the impulse which gives him power to soar. His thoughts then become prayers, his desires great purposes, his yearnings divine achievements. He is dissatisfied with his environment because he is greater than his environment, and his dissatisfaction is the evidence of his greatness. Withdraw that, and he is but an animal. Foster it and the spirit grows within him till he cries, "God is my refuge and my strength. Whom have I in heaven but thee, and who upon earth is like unto thee? I shall awake in thine image, and be satisfied."

JAY LEEKA.

---

FRUITS IN SEASON

---

All wholesome herbs God hath ordained for the constitution, nature, and use of man, every herb in the season thereof, and every fruit in the season thereof.

Over this text many controversial battles have been, and are still being waged, and the "bone of contention" has been—"in the season thereof."

We offer no apology for entering the arena believing that light has been revealed, and with it, the responsibility of passing on that light which, so far, has been the means of creating unanimity on the subject.

Latter Day Saints universally demand scriptural support for all theories advanced, and while the great majority have judged correctly in the matter, the keystone of their arch has been missing, and to that extent their claims were found wanting.

Sufficient evidence can be produced, if necessary, to show that wholesome herbs and fruits have always been ordained for the use of man, "in the season thereof." (Genesis 1:31; 3:24; 9:9; Psalm 104:14; Proverbs 15:17; Hebrews 6:7.) But when is the season of a fruit or herb?

It has been contended that when they are ripe, and then only, is the season thereof. Should this be the correct solution, we would be debarred from using preserved fruits or vegetables, and a host of things that are almost universally eaten while in an immature state. Opposed to this view, we find that the green herb was given to man for food (Genesis 9:9, Inspired Translation), that in harmony with this under the law of Moses, the people were commanded "thou shalt offer for the meat offering of thy first fruits green ears of corn dried by the fire, even corn beaten out of full ears. (Leviticus 2:14; 23:14.) Storehouses were established, into which these tithes were paid for the sustenance of the priestly orders. The people were commanded to offer salt with all their offerings, for the obvious reason, that these tithes of food might be preserved in the storehouses.

On the other hand, it is contended, and rightly so in view of what has been stated, that man is justified in using whatever means his ingenuity may devise in order that he might preserve his surplus food against the time when none grows. Now while the problem "in the season thereof" still remains unsolved, yet this fact is established, that whatever the solution may be, it must harmonize with the word of God as revealed and practiced.

No scripture is of private interpretation, but it is to be understood in the light of other scripture, the seeker for truth having his mind illuminated by the Spirit of God.

To apply this rule of interpretation to the text under consideration, we turn to Doctrine and Covenants 59:4 and read that if we are faithful, the fullness of the earth is ours to enjoy, including the beasts of the field, the birds, the herbs, and the good things which cometh of the earth, "yea, all things which cometh of the earth, in the season thereof, are made for the benefit and the use of man, both to please the eye, and to gladden the heart; yea, for food and for raiment, for taste and for smell, to strengthen the body, and to enliven the soul." (See also Doctrine and Covenants 49:3.)

Connecting this with what is recorded in Doctrine and Covenants 86:2 we find that when these things come of the earth, i. e., grow, or reproduce, "in the season thereof," that is, in the season in which they were designed to grow, that then they are for the benefit and use of man, and are suited to his constitution. It follows, then, that when anything grows in its proper season, it may be used at any time during its growth that is deemed profitable or advisable, and also that at any stage it may be preserved or stored for future use, it being clearly understood then that we are eating something at a time that is not its season to grow, but, because it grew, or came of the earth, in the proper season, by which it was suited for the constitution of man, it is still "in season," retaining those properties which made it beneficial for the use of man, by reason of the art of preservation. (Doctrine and Covenants 51:4; 1 Nephi 5:62; 1 Nephi 5:176.) If this be true, the herbs and fruit may, and do, at times, grow out of season, and that in that case they are not of use to man being lacking in the qualities that are found in those things that grow "in season."

Yes, this is so, and in our own garden we have lately seen a number of things that grew out of season, such as tomatoes, grapes, and pumpkins.

Having had no opportunity to investigate this matter outside of our own country, Australia, we can only refer to, in support, those things that we have examined here, but it seems reasonable to suppose, that to a greater or lesser extent, similar conditions may be seen in any land. We learn from nature that the cattle eat the grass from the time it begins to shoot, until it is fully matured, and if it is grown in its season, they thrive on it, but we recently saw great numbers of cattle, that were nearly starving, with plenty of grass all around them. The trouble lay in the fact, that because of the unseasonable weather conditions the grass had grown out of its season, and so had very little nourishment in it. Sometimes in the autumn, the fruit trees will blossom and produce fruit of a normal size, but which is hard and woody.

A similar occurrence is sometimes seen in the spring. After the young fruit has begun to grow, a heavy rain followed by hot weather will cause the tree to blossom and produce more fruit, which though like the rest of the fruit in appearance, is very woody and of no value for food at all.

Similar results may be observed among all kinds of fruits and vegetables and of all things that grow out of season, this is true, that they are almost valueless as a food, and their seeds do not mature, and are not capable of reproduction, not possessing the germ of life.

The Lord has given these things of nature to man, "that he might have in abundance, but it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another" (Doctrine and Covenants 49:3), and this can only be accomplished by aid of the storehouse, which is a very old institution.

In the building up of Zion in these latter days, the storehouse will play an extremely important part, and we look forward to the time when the church will own and operate, for the benefit of its members, great granaries, canning factories, and refrigerating plants, equal to anything in the world in size and methods.

Remembering the precarious times that are ahead of us, of which we have been warned, we should be prepared to use every means within our power, both as individuals and as a body to preserve and store up food and means of every kind against the day of famine, so that in that day, God's people might be preserved, and be able to rejoice in the wonderful love of Him who cares not only for their spiritual but for their temporal welfare.

C. W. BUTTERWORTH.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE CHURCH AND SOCIAL UNREST

(Deliverance of the Centenary Conservation Convention of the Methodist Episcopal Church held at Cleveland, June 24, 25.)

As this is not a legislative body, it cannot, of course, give an authoritative utterance for the church on this vital subject. It can only record its convictions. The marked condition of social and industrial, as well as political unrest and upheaval through which the world is just now passing, calls for the best thought which the church can give. While much of this condition is a direct result of the war, it is also a revelation disclosed by the war of things which have been in existence but have not been so clearly seen.

The only wise thing for the church to do is to face these problems with the same courage it has shown in other great issues. Closing the eyes will find no solution.

In the study of causes it is clear that there are grave inequalities of opportunity facing many men and serious inequities in the distribution of the products of their toil.

The privileges of self-government, spiritual and intellectual, are denied to multitudes of toilers, both for themselves and their families, because of the hard conditions under which they must labor for their daily bread.

Every man is, under God, entitled to something more than a bare living for himself and his family if he be sober and industrious. The church, commissioned of its great Head to preach the "abundant life" for all, cannot be indifferent to the deplorable conditions mentioned.

The church must regard the laborer as a man, not as a machine; as a living soul, not as a commercial commodity to be purchased on the market. This is essential for the common good of society as much as for the welfare of the individuals directly concerned, for the essence of civilization is found in the values placed on human life. This is also the genius of the gospel of Christ, upon which alone true civilization can be built. It is the business of the church to set up the kingdom of God in the earth; that is, to bring about such conditions that each man will have his chance to reach his best estate.

To this end, the church is under obligation to encourage a better understanding between employers and employees; so that whatever rights are claimed by one shall be enjoyed by the other. In other words, it must strenuously inculcate the principle that employers and employees are in their very natures, partners, not competitors; allies, not enemies. On no other basis can permanent harmony between them be established.

This means not only the democratization of industry, but its Christianization also. It means that power, political, economic, or industrial, shall not be monopolized by one class to the detriment or defrauding of another. Indeed, class distinctions must disappear if a true Christian civilization is ever to be realized. This only is the true democracy, for which the world waits. The church of Christ must prepare the way for this, by recognizing no barriers of class or race, and by discouraging undue development of class consciousness.

The church must be interested in all men, in all the ranks of life. It must have an equal ministry to all, devoid of partizanship or favoritism. It must be as much concerned in the wages of the poor as the wealth of the rich. It must see the menace to society in those that have too much, as well as in those who have too little. There are encouraging signs that the great movements of the times are toward the goal above described. The lessons of common brotherhood, born of the common peril of the great world conflict just ended, will not easily be forgotten.

Employers are showing a disposition of greater fairness toward their employees, while the utterances of some recent labor conventions have been very pronounced against the use of violence in the settlement of disputes, and in condemnation of broken contracts between employers and employees.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, with its advanced social creed, has openly avowed its advocacy of everything which will advance the common good. Let us have no fear of practicing what we preach, of encouraging the open discussion in the church of these vital questions, until "the good of all shall become each man's law."

RICHARD J. COOKE, Chairman,
GEORGE W. WHITE, Secretary.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5620 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Are We Our Children's Keepers?

As Latter Day Saints, or even as consistent Christians, can we shut our eyes to our responsibilities when it comes to a question of supporting, not only by word, but by deed, the good efforts that are being made in our country at the present time for the betterment of the condition of our children? We know that such agencies are at work. We can scarcely pick up a newspaper, or a magazine, without becoming aware of the fact that good men and women are giving intense thought and effort, and in some cases, their very lives, for this exalted objective, viz: that every child born in this country shall have, at least as approximately as possible, its God-given rights.

Even a most casual glance about it enough to convince us that such is not the case in every instance. We do not need to go to the slums, either, to find the pitiful proof. Right in our own communities, we can find children who are struggling along under some dreadful, physical handicap which mere justice, let alone the stirring of warm, loving, humanity, should order removed. The dull child at school, who has become the "horrible example" for the rest, perhaps needs but trifling attention and care, to be placed again in the race with full power and vigor. Please know that God did not intend his people to be so sadly handicapped in their struggle toward divinity, but through our own blunders and missteps humanity has wandered a long way from the creation God pronounced "very good." That wandering has not been wholly of a spiritual nature. Physically, we have wandered, and our children are suffering, not for their own remissness, but for the mistakes made by their long line of ancestors.

There is hope, however, strong hope, in the new impetus which has been given to the better protection of our children. In the national movements towards the better care and better training of our Nation's young, we see signs of that time coming when every parent shall indeed be the loving custodian of his offspring, not of his material possessions alone as of yore, but of his physical and spiritual wealth, as well.

The thing for us to do, here and now, is to "get back of" every local effort which may be made to place new standards for our children. If, in your home town, you hear talk of a community nurse, or of a trained social worker who may supply to some overburdened or illy-prepared mother some lack in knowledge or experience, or of a public fund for the purposes of insuring the public health, please see it as your Christian duty, as a follower of Him who went about healing and removing handicaps, physical as well as spiritual, to support that movement! We emphasize the word support, for it must be taken to mean financial, personal, oratorical, and every other kind of support which spells success for the movement. Do not "knock." A knocker is so cheap a thing. He is always unprogressive, and can see little farther than his own restricted loop-hole! He has eyes blinded to the wide expanses of human achievement. He is a good person to let alone!

Read the article printed on page 822 of last week's HERALD sent out by the Children's Bureau at Washington. Follow that with the extract we have taken from a report of the Washington Conference on Child Welfare, which conference was held last May. Then consider how much you have done, or are doing, to stand behind the establishment of these standards for your children! Are you investigating the conditions which surround your child? Are you doing all you can to improve the poor ones, to eliminate the bad, or increase to greater efficiency the good ones you find? Are you interested? indifferent? or just sleeping, and awaiting some earthquake of personal sorrow or loss to awaken you?

A. A.

An Estimation

The following estimate of the minimum standards for the proper protection of the health of our school children was arrived at by the Child Welfare Conference held in Washington this year. For how many does your community stand?

1. Proper location, construction, hygiene, and sanitation of schoolhouse; adequate room space—no overcrowding.
2. Adequate playground and recreational facilities, physical training, and supervised recreation.
3. Open-air classes, and rest periods for pre-tubercular and certain tuberculous children, and children with grave malnutrition. Special classes for children needing some form of special instruction due to physical or mental defect.
4. Full-time school nurse for not more than 1,000 children, to give instruction in personal hygiene and diet, to make home visits to advise and instruct mothers in principles of hygiene, nutrition, and selection of family diet, and to take children to clinics with permission of parents.
5. Adequate space and equipment for school medical work and available laboratory service.
6. Part-time physician with one full-time nurse for not more than 2,000 children, or full-time physician with two full-time nurses for 4,000 children for:
  - a. Complete standardized basic physical examinations once a year, with determination of weight and height at beginning and end of each school year; monthly weighing wherever possible.
  - b. Continuous health record for each child, to be kept on file with other records of the pupil. This should be a continuation of the pre-school health record which should accompany the child to school.
  - c. Special examinations to be made of children referred by teacher or nurse.
  - d. Supervision to control communicable disease.
  - e. Recommendation of treatment for all remediable defects, diseases, deformities, and cases of malnutrition.
  - f. Follow-up work by nurse, to see that physician's recommendations are carried out.
7. Available clinics for dentistry, nose, throat, eye, ear, skin, and orthopedic work; and for free vaccination for smallpox and typhoid.
8. Nutrition classes for physically subnormal children, and the maintenance of midmorning lunch or hot noonday meal when necessary.
9. Examination by psychiatrist of all atypical or retarded children.
10. Education of school children in health essentials.

11. General education work in health and hygiene, including education of parent and teacher, to secure full cooperation in health program.

Shall We Lead?

We have only a few members of our Auxiliary here, but God is blessing our work, and we are "growing in knowledge and grace," so perhaps you will be interested in knowing what we are doing.

In addition to our study of Child Life and Child Training by Forbush, which we have found very helpful, we secured a quantity of leaflets and books published by the Government. These are on the care of our bodies, prevention of disease, etc.

In May, Sister Christy of Chicago, met with us, and gave a splendid talk on caring for infants and children. She distributed some valuable leaflets to mothers. On July 23, our county nurse, Miss Mary Kennedy, R. N., of Kankakee, attended our meeting, and gave us an interesting talk on tuberculosis, admonishing us to use every precaution with the children, as nearly every case of this fatal disease can be traced back to childhood.

At each meeting we have some special features: music, readings, memory verses, etc. We also serve lunch, which helps bring us in closer touch and greater unity.

"And the Lord shall make thee the head, and not the tail; and thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath; if that thou hearken into the commandments of the Lord thy God." (Deuteronomy 28:13.) From this verse we learn that God intends his people to be the leaders in all movements for the upbuilding of humanity. We feel that our work should be to help, not only our own members, but many others who may be induced to attend our meetings.

There are so many avenues of work open to the Woman's Auxiliary, that no member should be idle. God has bountiful blessings in store for the women of the church, if we only rise to our privileges, and grasp each opportunity as it is presented to us. May the Woman's Auxiliary get a vision of the greatness of its possibilities, and fulfill the mission the blessed Master designed for it.

DESELM, ILLINOIS.

BEATRICE ROGERS.

Comrades

The term comrade has been used in varied senses but it has come to mean those attracted on account of common interests. If we investigate, however, we find it is derived from the Latin word camera meaning a chamber, thus suggesting, in our common usage of the term, a roommate or close companion. The writer uses it as a subject under which to discuss some efforts necessary to bring parents and children into a "partnership for the business of life."

Time is moving fast, and with this onward sweep many of our young people are being carried, as by a flood, some toward the things that will build character—some, alas, into ways and temptations under which many of the weaker ones will be overcome. What can we do to save even a few from the pitfalls of life and corruption of noble purposes all too commonly found?

We, who have dealt most with childhood in day school, Sunday school, and like relationships, know the trustful and loving confidence placed in us, and how readily even the smallest child surrenders himself and his safety into our hands. How much more should this be true of his trust and belief in his parents!

There are years in which his fast developing mind demands a knowledge of the curious conditions surrounding him. If he is turned away with, "Never mind," or "Little children should be seen and not heard," he will seek those who will give him satisfaction, though it may be of the wrong kind; and the parent who is supposed to be his help and guide will wonder later on why his child does not appeal to him, and confide in him as he should. Often is the sad lesson learned too late that a barrier has been erected too strong to break down and often too high to surmount. Then we see the pitiful spectacle of parents and child drifting farther and farther apart.

The writer calls to mind one home where the child time and time again was repulsed in her affection and confidences and punished for a childlike effervescence of energy, until at last she grew to feel that her parents hated her, and wondered if she were not, in reality, a foundling. She seemed misunderstood on all sides and yet every characteristic was good if the parents had taken advantage of them and cultivated them. At last, a chasm was formed between her and her parents, and though later they grew to depend upon her, and had great pride in her success, yet never could she feel a freedom, or comradeship with them. We must snatch the opportunity at the critical moment in these young lives, and mold the spirit while it is pliable under our influences.

Too long, parents have felt that ignorance is innocence. Let them awake to their responsibility and privilege, and in their declining years they will live to hear their children call them "blessed."

It takes time and study to understand the various natures in one's family, but only by this patient investigation and close sympathy can the best in the child develop, just as a flower opens in the warm sunshine and cooling dew, and though it is often almost beyond endurance yet if one of those little faces should be suddenly missed from its place in the family circle, would we not cherish every hour of effort! Love will do much but it must be a big, broad, unselfish love which always means self-denial.

The following poem suggests the first steps to be taken by those who want to be comrades to their children:

"SEND THEM TO BED WITH A KISS

"O Mothers, so weary, discouraged,
Worn out with the cares of the day,
You often grow cross and impatient,
Complain of the noise of the play;
For the day brings so many vexations,
So many things going amiss;
But, mothers, whatever may vex you,
Send the children to bed with a kiss!

"The dear little feet wander often,
Perhaps, from the pathway of right,
The dear little hands find new mischief
To try you from morning till night;
But think of the desolate mothers
Who'd give all the world for your bliss,
And, as thanks for your infinite blessings,
Send the children to bed with a kiss!

"For some day their noise will not vex you,
The silence will hurt you far more;
You will long for their sweet childish voices
For a sweet, childish face at the door;
And to press a child's face to your bosom,
You'd give all the world for just this!
For the comfort 'twill bring you in sorrow,
Send the children to bed with a kiss!"

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.

CHARLOTTE DRYDEN.

Is Your Baby Well-fed?

Sister Ross, of California, who was present at the Lamoni Stake reunion, offered formulas for feeding young children. She stated that she had never failed to receive satisfactory results from this feeding, the babies soon losing that pinched, ill-nourished appearance, and taking on brightness of eye, freshness of skin, and plumpness of body which betokens proper nutriment.

FORMULA 1—FOR A BABY FROM THREE WEEKS TO SIX MONTHS OLD

12 ounces barley water.
3½ ounces cream.
6 ounces milk.
1 ounce soda water.
5½ level teaspoonfuls sugar of milk.

FORMULA 2—FROM THREE TO SIX MONTHS OLD

16 ounces barley water.
5 ounces cream.
9½ ounces milk.
1¼ ounces soda water.
7½ level teaspoonfuls sugar of milk.

Directions: Get Robinson's Barley at drug store. Also the sugar of milk. Use the very best baking soda. Take a heaping teaspoonful of the barley flour and mix with a little cold water. Add boiling water and let boil half an hour. If it boils down add boiling water to make 12 ounces. For the "soda water," take one level teaspoon of soda and add one pint of boiling water. Put away in a jar for use in mixing the food. When mixing, add the soda water to the milk, cream, sugar of milk, and barley water. The sugar of milk may be dissolved in a little of the formula before putting it in the whole amount.

Keep the food in a cool place. In summer it will probably have to be sterilized to keep it sweet, as the amount is enough for a day and a night. At first, do not feed more than three ounces, and that regularly when the baby is awake. As the baby grows older, the formula increases accordingly. It is best to use a graduated nursing bottle, so that you may know just how much you are giving.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

En Route to Jerusalem

Many of our friends requested us to write to them. We stated it would be impossible to keep up a personal correspondence with all, but we would write them through the HERALD and Ensign, and in this way all would know what we were doing.

We spent three days in Detroit, Michigan. Had an opportunity to meet old friends in the church, and when we saw some who were active seventeen years ago and noticed their present activity it caused our hearts to rejoice. We also met some that were active then who are inactive now, and we did our best to try to restore them to their former standing. I preached at the second Detroit church July 13.

We arrived in Rochester, New York, July 16. It is a city of two hundred and twenty-two thousand and the gospel that Paul preached has no abode here. I looked for a Sister Riddle at 198 Meig Street and learned she left Rochester some time ago. We were unable to locate any more Saints here. The Utah church projected a campaign of advertising, and with it a house-to-house canvass teaching the first principles of the doctrine of Christ. So far as I am able to learn, it has profited them little, however my friends put me to work explaining the difference between the two churches.

We visited the Mount Hope Cemetery and decorated the grave of my father-in-law. Here we had an opportunity to view the monument erected for soldiers and sailors who fought in the Rebellion 1861-65. The statue is about 40 feet high. One young man about seventeen years of age stands erect with rifle over shoulder, and an old man by his side, shoulders bent forward, head drooping, and in an attitude of meditation. As I gazed at it, I was reminded of the old adage, "Old men for counsel; young men for war." Back of this monument we see about five hundred grave stones all exactly the same size and shape. It is a unique scene. The following inscription is engraved in a bronze plate,

"On Fame's eternal camping ground,
Their silent tents are spread,
And glory guards with solemn round,
The bivouac of the dead."

I was attracted by another monument about fifty feet in height dedicated to the firemen for the loss of life they sustained during the Steam Gauge and Lantern Company fire of November 9, 1888, in which thirty-four lives were lost. The inscription on this monument was as follows:

"But God was not in the fire,
And after the fire a still small voice."

The saying of the Master came forcibly to my mind, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

I had the privilege of visiting one of my former school-teachers here in Rochester. I found her sick and confined to her bed. I explained the gospel to her as we preach it and she exclaimed, "Can it be possible that these blessings are for us in this day and age of the world?" It is not necessary for me to write the answer. Any Latter Day Saint knows it. Sufficient faith was generated to enable me to anoint with oil and pray over her. I enjoyed splendid liberty during the administration and what the fruits will be time alone will tell.

We left Rochester, New York, July 29. The view along the Hudson River was one of the prettiest I ever gazed upon. The beautiful Catskill Mountains with their peaks and whale-back silhouetted against the azure sky, inlaid with beautiful clouds of silver and gray was an inspiring sight. In the foreground the magnificent Hudson with its billows surging toward the shore appeared like myriads of mountains and valleys afloat, silvered by the sun's rays. This scene, helps one to sense the Psalmist's statement, "The heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth his handywork."

We arrived in New York City July 29 at six o'clock. Lee Hartshorn escorted us to his home. Wednesday evening attended prayer meeting at the Brooklyn Church. The Spirit of God was present in a marked degree and we enjoyed the meeting. I preached the following Sunday evening and it seemed like old times to gaze at a congregation with the Logans, Goods, Hartshorns, and Sister Lester present. It was a grand reunion, for we had not seen these people in six years and we enjoyed a lengthy visit. At the morning sacrament meeting we met Sister Addie Beardsley and husband, also had an opportunity to meet Elder Rich, the city missionary and wife, whose creditable work here is very highly spoken of.

We sent in our applications for passports July 3 and were very much surprised to learn that they have not arrived. I wrote to President F. M. Smith asking him to use his influence to hasten the delivery of our passports. We made this matter a subject of prayer and on the night of August 5 I dreamed a dream. I saw President F. M. Smith and another, elder walk into our house and in his terse way say, Those passports will be here within five days. This is August 7 and passports have arrived, thanks to God for hearing our prayer and answering it.

The Brooklyn Rapid Transit is on a strike and nearly all surface lines and elevated railroads have ceased running. Mayor Hylare threatens to tear out surface tracks and put in a fleet of bus lines. He said, things that go in grooves do not go at all nowadays and surface cars run in grooves and are not the most efficient means of transportation.

Your brother and sister of like faith,

ELDER HARRY PASSMAN AND WIFE.

RICHMOND HILL, NEW YORK, 10242 Eighty-fifth Avenue.

The Bishopric Advocate
for 1919

Every Member a Tithe Payer

SUCCESS

The successful man is always busy whether he feels like it or not. Any man can work when he feels like it.

The successful Christian pays his tithe whether he feels like it or not. Any man can pay his tithe when he feels like it.

MAKING GOOD

"Make good—don't explain. Do the thing you are expected to do. Don't waste time in giving reasons, why you didn't or couldn't or wouldn't or shouldn't."

Take this advice about paying your tithe. You will feel a whole lot better.

A TRUE LEADER

"A leader can only be judged by his ability to foresee emergencies and prepare for them."

"I have given him for . . . a leader . . . to the people." Isaiah 55: 4.

As a perfect leader Christ gave a perfect law to follow. He taught us to pay our tenth.

Can we sing, "I'll do what you want me to do, dear Lord" and then forget to pay our tithe.

The Group Movement

"Where there is no peace of mind, there can be no energy in endeavor."

"America saved Europe by her action in arms, she must now save it by her action in peace."

"A new day has dawned, and we must be united if we would succeed."

These are some of President Wilson's sentiments which a few of his official family look down upon with scorn. Like him, we, too, must be optimists; that is, be cheerful in our warfare, and know that the very world, from which we would turn away and must not fully trust, is the self same world that is beneficent toward us by providing us means of progress in an intellectual and even general way. Let us be grateful. Let us "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

But on the other hand, Paul says, "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." And this phrase was the subject treated on by Pastor W. W. Smith recently. The process, to the speaker's philosophical mind, included the bringing into action the entire forces of the body of both church and its members; and he divided up the organization into four separate parts with their special functions. They are the sustaining, perpetuating, regulating, and developing organs.

The gospel work is made very clear, when its cause is rightly pointed out, and our ministry, enlightened by the Spirit, leads the way.

There continues good attendance throughout the churches of the stake, and at present, as the Ensign states, "the one big event uppermost in all minds in the Pertle Springs reunion which will begin August 15." It will take away some of our preachers, but there will be enough good ones "to go around" left at home.

A plentiful downpour of refreshing rain has revived the growing crops; and if it were not for grim old H. C. L. the Saints and their town friends would go on swimmingly.

It would appear that the very thing necessary to accomplish any given purpose is the adoption of the fine principles of unity and optimism; they may apply to both world affairs and gospel life. The benefit of a common interest in "the brotherhood" is very clearly set forth in Brother I. M. Smith's series, Number 10 in Ensign of August 7; and many of us feel that the teaching of the elders in the Temple Lot Branch concerning the principles of unity and equality and other gospel truths is, in their presentation now, both timely and fruitful.

President Wilson, in his late address to Congress, said: "Now, and in the days of readjustment and recuperation that are ahead of us, let us resort more and more to frank and intimate counsel, and make ourselves a great and triumphant nation by making ourselves a united force in the life of the world. It will not then have looked to us for leadership in vain."

The words intimate counsel, to us suggest the group movement, and Brother I. M. Smith's "Gospel subjects" would be a good choice of readings to pass along to our neighbors. And we must not delay our work, and pause to look at our difference, but press onward, in our effort to spread abroad—whether we belong to the church of saint or sect—the light of truth.

When we take a good look at the two arms of church service, it is plain to be seen that the group work is based and runs on the self-same plan as the wonder-working missionary work. Some of the neighbors cannot "see to read," and worse than that. Our church literature just fills the long-felt want of the community, for it furnishes excellent reading, whether poetry, history, story, or sermon.

It is a living fountain, overflowing, and full of opulence and heavenly light. And here is a grand opportunity for engaging in gospel service, and to be a blessing to our brethren and fellow men.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Pruning the Fig Tree

We read in Matthew 21: 18, 19:

"Now in the morning, as he returned into the city, he hungered. And when he saw a fig tree in the way, he came to it, and found nothing thereon, but leaves only, and said unto it, Let no fruit grow on thee henceforth forever. And presently the fig tree withered away."

I wonder in studying over the words of these two verses if I can sense the meaning of them, and if when we study or read them we can apply the meaning to our lives as Jesus would wish us to do. If we can consider that this miracle was performed by the Savior as a lesson to his disciples, to have faith in God, and if we can carefully consider the words that are contained therein, we can be able by the grace of God to understand them.

As Jesus was hungry in the morning, so are the people to-day hungry. For what, you ask? They are hungry for the pure word of God, and for the true Christ character that should be in the lives of those who profess to belong to the church of Christ.

When we say the word of God, we mean as it was taught by Jesus himself, and not as so many of the churches of to-day are teaching, leaving out that which they do not like. And as Jesus cursed the fig tree for not bearing fruit, just so it is in our own lives. We must bear fruit, or we are going to have a life that is barren in the great beyond.

These things should be of importance to those of us who have been called to labor in his vineyard. The world to-day is watching the Saints of God, and just so long as our fig tree is not bearing the fruit that it should, just so long we are a hindrance to the work. I sometimes wonder if there is anything on my tree of life but leaves, and if the leaves are even green. There seems to be so much to be done and so few who are willing to do it. We do not seem to have enough faith in God.

Jesus says: "Feed my sheep." And if we do not wish to become like the fig tree, "barren of fruit," and cramped and warped in our souls, our spirit, and ideals, and start to thinking that the word of God was meant "for me, and no one else," we must prune our fig tree of life. We must not be found sleeping at our post. We must "feed the sheep."

The disciples that were with Jesus were astonished that the fig tree had withered. Sometimes we get withered and become astonished when some one tells us about it. Or we become astonished when some whom we consider are stronger in the faith, drift away into the world. Maybe if our tree had been trimmed and bearing fruit it would not have happened. Some may say, "That is not my fault. I am having a hard enough time trying to keep the faith without bothering with some one else." Perhaps they are. But did they ever stop to consider that if they could get away from the narrow viewpoint of self, and learn to live as Jesus did, then they would understand that it is of vital importance to them. They are the ones whose tree is not bearing fruit, and they cannot see it.

When we get into the condition that we are clean in body and in spirit, we are then in a condition to labor in the vineyard of God with the assurance that we are going to receive results. Let us prune our own fig tree before we prune some one else's tree. Let us clean up our own yard before we try to clean up some of our neighbors' yards.

And as I write these words, things come up before me that show me I must start to pruning my tree of life, getting rid of the undesirable fruit that I may bear fruit later on, and that I may be clean in body and in spirit. How are we going to go about it? Let us go about it through faith and prayer. Let us have faith in God. Jesus tells us in Matthew 21: 22: "And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." So we must come believing that God is able to make those things right, or to help us make them right if we will but let him.

So, dear Saints and brethren of the priesthood, let us trim up our lives so that we can enter into the work and have nothing that will be of a hindering nature; that we can enter into it with a steadfast purpose and do the will of God, leaving behind us thoughts of our individual selves. And let us labor together with God for the best interest of the work.

GUY M. HAYNES.

London Religious Statistics

[Religious statistics gathered by Bishop Roderick May from the London Directory for the benefit of the readers of the HERALD.]

The Church of England has 2 cathedrals, 1 abbey, 2 royal chapels, 154 parish churches and 458 district churches and chapels, total 617, with incumbent officiating clergymen. The one officiating at Saint Paul's Cathedral is the Right Reverend A. F. Ingram, D. D., (a bishop) with 68 attendant clergymen. The Southwick Cathedral has 1 bishop, 4 attendant bishops, 6 canons, and 8 other attending clergymen. Westminster Abbey has 1 dean, (a bishop) and 11 canons. The Chapel Royal Saint James has 2 deans and other attendants.

The Roman Catholic Church has 2 cathedrals and an oratory, and 64 churches, the Westminster Cathedral, being one of the largest, is presided over by Cardinal Francis Bourne, Archbishop of Westminster, and has 22 attendants, many of them being bishops. The Saint George's Cathedral is presided over by the Right Reverend Peter Immanuel Amigo, D. D., (a bishop) and 12 attendants, many of whom are bishops. The oratory at South Kensington is presided over by William Henry Cator, bishop, with 19 attendants.

London has 65 different Christian denominations, in all 1,780 churches and many hundred missions, the leading ones being, Church of England, 617 churches; Primitive Methodist, 210; Salvation Army, 159; Wesleyan, 225; Presbyterian Church of England, 88; Baptist, 83; Congregational 87; United Methodists, 71; Roman Catholic, 66; Unitarian, 20. Besides these the Jews have 46 synagogues, and every pagan religion known in the world is represented in London. There are over 3,000 stationed Christian clergymen in London besides those mentioned in the Roman Catholic and Church of England. The clergy of the Church of England is highly paid, the salary ranging from $2,500 to $75,000 a year. The Bishop of London gets $50,000. Ministers of other denominations receive from $2,500 to $15,000. If all the people in London decided to go to church at the same time only one in seven could get in. The principal ones patronized are the cathedrals and abbeys. Other churches seldom have over one third of a congregation. A few have been abandoned.

While we are here as a church we are not on record as a denomination nor have we a church building.

BLACK SEA FORCES, June 28, 1919.

Editors Herald: Debarred of the opportunity of meeting the Saints, I take pleasure in writing.

It is twenty months since I left England to proceed to Saloniki, from whence I soon went to the trenches on the stormy front in Macedonia. I had not been there long before I got my experience of heavy shellfire. After some weary months on this front, we proceeded to another part of the front, where we stayed until September 30, when the good news came that the Bulgars had asked for an armistice. This I can assure you, was received with great joy.

Early in October my company left the trenches to collect all war material. We did not get much done before we were ordered to take up the line of communication in Bulgaria, where we found conditions none too pleasant for weeks. I may say that the state of affairs were bad with the Bulgars.

After a few months we were relieved and went to Saloniki for a rest, but not for long, for we soon left for Turkey, Asia Minor, where I am at present.

The people out here are entirely different from us in customs, and they are a long way behind in many things, especially sanitation. They have some fine buildings in Constantinople, but where I am at present is a small town where things generally are years behind times.

There are a great number of Greeks and Armenians in this country who have had a bad time of it, but I see they are taking full advantage of their liberty now.

What I have heard and seen has caused me to rejoice that righteousness has overcome might. The army life is not like civil life. It has caused me many hours regret, but I am glad I have done and still am doing my very small bit. I am detained for the army of occupation, and expect to be some months yet.

In the three years and five months in the army, I have had fairly good health, and have never been in a hospital.

I have something to be thankful for to my heavenly Father. The gift of tongues which was given on August 3, 1914, at Gloucester, has been fulfilled wherein the Lord said: "Fear not, I will preserve you." These words have given me great consolation in my army life.

The weather is very hot here now, and the mosquitoes are very busy.

I am still desirous of going on in the church, and am always pleased to have any church papers or letters. I read with delight where so much is done for the young Saints in America. I should like to see something done to help to educate the young also in the British Isles, who I am afraid are debarred of many things you enjoy in America, and most young people want encouragement and something to interest them. It is the young of the church who are to carry on the work when our loyal older brothers and sisters lay it down.

Dear Saints, I need your prayers, that I may be faithful, as to-day so much sin exists it is a big fight for the lads to do the things which are right. As I mentioned before, the army is not a sweet life.

My motto has been and with endurance will try to keep it, "First: a soldier of Christ. Secondly: a soldier of my king."

That the work may still prosper and grow is the desire of Your brother in bonds,

F. BEVAN.

DELISLE, SASKATCHEWAN, August 8, 1919.

Editors Herald: To-day I am leaving for the south, for my Iowa field; and while I am looking forward in hopeful anticipation of a successful campaign, yet it is with feelings of sadness I leave the dear old scenes of Western Canada.

Here we have a boundless land of limitless possibilities, whose citizens, in the pioneer stage of life, freed from the conservative prejudices of the long settled East, are open to a consideration of the angel message.

Never have I labored in a more propitious field; indeed none so opportune. We have simply to make bold, enter in, and occupy.

At a recent meeting in a country school ten auto loads were turned away. They came for miles to hear the pure preached word. If it were possible to subdivide myself into twenty sections and each section an active entity, it would be an easy matter to keep every portion busy.

At present a great tide of immigration is flowing into the country. Thousands are coming from the States, while the Old World is on the verge of sending us her hosts, where, under a flag of equality, liberty, and opportunity they may find an asylum of rest, far from the maelstrom of European militarism.

That particular part of the West to which the tide of immigration wends its way is the famous Peace River country of Northern Alberta, where homesteads for the million await the student of the soil. Here we have a rich alluvial land sufficiently freed from frosts to ripen all kinds of garden truck; and whose winters tempered by the Chinook breezes of the Pacific, presents a tempting allurements unto all disposed to ally their interests with a responsive virgin soil. Five hundred bushels of potatoes to the acre is a common occurrence, and forty and fifty bushels of wheat to the same amount of ground is not uncommon. As a stock country it cannot be excelled. Pea vine, vetch, and other grasses grow in matted luxuriance while silvery sheens and winding streams of purest water make it one of the finest grazing lands of the world.

At present the Government is settling returned soldiers in this beautiful district; but there are 30,000,000 acres of untaken land in this last great West and the earlier settler gets the best.

At this juncture let me ask would it not be a wise move for the church to take in hand the placing of colonies in this rare country? Other churches are doing it. Salt Lake Mormonism settled large colonies in Southern Alberta twenty years ago, and to-day they have acquired a financial competency that makes them the envy of all. Nor has this promotion of their temporal interests divorced their love from their church. To the contrary they love it that much the more, because it has done something for them.

The colonistic movement is as old as the revelations, and if it is at present impracticable to buy up all the land in Jackson County, it is not prohibited that we should colonize where it is practicable.

Is it not time that the Church was doing something for her children, reciprocating the long years of sacrifice and charity extended by the children to the church.

Canada, constituting a geographical domain one half of the North American Continent, is surely within the pale of the promise extended to Joseph's land; and affording as she does, the only available fertile lands for settlement, ought to be considered as worthy a place for the locating of Saints.

Undoubtedly there are hundreds of our people in the Old World, as well as many in the New, who only await the encouragement of the church to accept the unstinted hospitality of our Canadian Government.

One thing is certain, a free farm of 160 productive acres is much to be preferred to a congested city existence, where, with all that one may make, it is devoured the next day in keeping body and soul together.

Such a land settlement scheme need not cost the church anything, save the appointment of a few locators to look over the land, who then would confer with the Government with a view of effecting reservations on an extensive scale. This could be done, as I have learned.

It is possible that in some cases a small loan would be required to start our poor, but honest Saints. This could be returned when the crops came along. To my mind this is real gospel work, and would do more to emphasize the human helpfulness of our church than anything else.

Times are busy with me. Preaching about every night. Have baptized over eighty thus far this year. My mission address is now Lamoni, Iowa.

Sincerely,

DANIEL MACGREGOR.

ANDES, MONTANA, August 14, 1919.

Editors Herald: We have truly enjoyed reading the letters of others. We do not know that even now we can be entirely optimistic in our viewpoint as we feel something like Brother Columbus Scott did when he expressed himself in testimony at Lamoni in the spring of 1911, I think it was. He said, "I am the bluest of pessimists concerning this old world of ours." It seems to us that conditions are very serious. We see many things to indicate as much: the warring conditions of which we read, the sufferings among the peoples of the world, the drouth conditions of Eastern Montana, the storms we have witnessed. Neighbors have told us about crops being entirely destroyed by hail. Hailstones were as large as walnuts and some said as large as hen's eggs, destroying what little was left by the drouth. Their veracity we would not doubt. Windstorms have been unusually bad, some of a cyclonic nature. Physicians are worked nearly day and night because of so much sickness, adding this to the unrest of the people, and we would be "blue" were it not for the promise, "When you see these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads, for the day of your redemption draweth nigh."

We feel God has blessed us as a people here at this place, and for this we are glad. It seemed for a time we would have nothing. Then local showers came, and it seemed we always got our share minus the hail, so we will have a small harvest though a few Saints have suffered almost total loss. Gardens are very poor, which is very unusual for this part of Montana.

The recent reunion at Glasgow we have been told was a success.

In these discouraging times we need the gospel and faith in God. Why is it when we need faith most we so often feel so weak in faith? We have had experiences this summer that have strengthened our faith, and it seems so many times our prayers have been heard and answered by the God of heaven, then again when a little babe was given us and we would have given so much to have had it stay with us it was not God's will. "Why," we would ask, but the echo only came back, "Why?" I am satisfied, he knoweth the best. This spring when it seemed in human judgment that we must have rain, or we would receive nothing in return for our toil of seeding the crop, an assurance came that we would have something, and this saved so many days of anxiety, and it has been realized though the harvest is not great. But many near us have nothing, not even feed for their stock, that our hearts are full of thankfulness to the giver of all good gifts. How could we have hope to-day were it not for the gospel.

We have read with interest the articles in the church papers on the subject of education, and feel that we would like to express ourselves along with others. It seems to us personally that if we had a chance to spend years of study to better ourselves spiritually and mentally that we still would be so far beneath the divine plan that it could be said of us, "What is man that thou art mindful of him?" I further believe that the message that is given without the aid of the Spirit of God is dead and fails to reach either saint or sinner, be the words ever so well chosen. God can reach the hearts of people better than men. I cannot doubt that God is calling those who, by education and otherwise, are blessed with many talents to consecrate the best they have to his service. Some time ago the Spirit rested upon me, impressing me with the work that some could do here in our branch because of their gifts and talents if they would but use these gifts for the advancement of God's work with humility. God has spoken that except a man is humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, he cannot assist in this work. Surely this is the hastening time, and a time when the faith of many, even those who considered themselves strong in the work, has been severely tried. To us at least the words of that old hymn have been a comfort,

"The soul that on Jesus still leans for repose,
I will not, I cannot, desert to his foes:

That soul, though all hell should endeavor to shake,
I'll never, no never, no never forsake."

I trust that our faith shall ever be centered in Christ, and our works from day to day may be works of righteousness. May Zion be redeemed and the church triumph, is our prayer.

MRS. C. B. FREEMAN.

---

From Another Former Graceland Student

---

My heart is made to burst with joy as I read of Graceland and her students from time to time.

It is the opinion of many of our people that we are becoming better acquainted with Graceland College; in a sense this is true; but I do not believe we are making the acquaintance with her that we really should at this time.

A few years ago, as a church, we knew very little or nothing about that institution, but, as she is molding her students into true womanhood and true manhood and they go home entirely different than when they left, our people are beginning to realize now that there must be something unusual in Graceland.

Graceland to-day stands as a city set on a hill and cannot be hid; those who a few years ago would do almost anything to see her finish and fall, are to-day working without end for her cause, and those who have not yet given up the ghost (so far as Graceland is concerned), are kicking themselves because they are away behind in the race for better education, and better Latter Day Saintism. Who is against Graceland? If there is any man or woman in or outside of the church who can bring one reason against her, I will produce one hundred reasons for her. (Take me up.)

Am I satisfied that Graceland is a Junior College? Yes. But I am also looking forward to the time when she will become a fully standardized University and one of the leading universities of the world. Why? because she has a master president, a wonderful faculty, and the God of heaven behind her.

Dear readers, we are living in the time when we must specialize, must become educated and have a definite aim in life. Young people, do you realize that you cannot attain to any great position in this world without education? Your father or mother may have had a good position twenty or thirty years ago without education; that may be true, but you must remember, that was twenty or thirty years ago, we are living under different conditions now. Only one in five thousand do that to-day. Are you going to take a chance of being the one out of the five thousand? If you do you will never get there. Young people, why not go to Graceland? If you can't afford to go take a correspondence course and you will be preparing for a greater work.

I am a firm believer in the principles of education. I believe a man should grasp all the education he possibly can and become master of it, but, at the same time, I am also a firm believer that we should become educated in the spiritual things of God. The individual that attains education without the spiritual development is certainly losing ground; but I want to tell you my friends, that when you attend Graceland you have the opportunity of education in its fullest sense—spiritual education and education so far as this world is concerned. Graceland will educate us for Zion; to be a better people, better citizens for our country, and better citizens for God. If you cannot go to Graceland yourself, send your brother or sister, your son or daughter, or your neighbor.

I close with a prayer to God for the "Navy Blue and Old Gold."

JOHN K. JENKINS.

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA.

BROCKTON, MASSACHUSETTS, August 14, 1919.

Editors Herald: Time and tide wait for no man. And so the long-looked-for reunion of the Massachusetts District is past and gone into history. Our reunions are looked forward to from year to year, and they are one of the bright spots in the lives of the Saints; both in anticipation and realization. They are a foretaste of the Zion to come. Our reunion this year was a grand success and remarkable in many ways. Our heavenly Father was very near his people and we were greatly blessed. It was the best reunion in many years.

We cannot forget the excellent leadership of Apostle G. T. Griffiths, his fatherly advice, his words of wisdom and counsel. God has blessed him with that precious gift of executive ability, and he has endeavored to use it wisely and unassumingly for the glory of God and the benefit of his people. His presence was a big factor in the success of our reunion and his counsel edifying and inspiring.

Our reunion committee, Brethren Travers and Joy worked faithfully and well against many obstacles. The Saints appreciate the excellent work of their committee. Brother Johnson of Providence acted as our chorister and did nobly. Brother Sam Moore sounded the taps, and woe to those who desired to slumber on. Brother Newman was faithful as chief of police. One of the features of the reunion was the duets of Brethren Koehler and Sheehy. Brother Jakes championed the cause of the Boy Movement; Sisters Sears and Studley the Woman's Auxiliary; Brother Yerrington on better methods of teaching. Sisters Ross, Dobbins, and Roberts took charge of the children and were assisted by Brother Hull, whom the children always like to hear. Brother Bradshaw was faithful at the organ. Our secretary, Dr. W. A. Sinclair, has become a fixture as clerk at our reunions for many years, having the history of our gatherings not only in the books but in his head.

Our missionaries who came from far and near consisting of Brethren Griffiths, Lewis, Baldwin, Miller, Bullard, Hull, Koehler, Gleazer, Luff, Sheehy, did excellent work in the handling of the word of God and spoke in power and much assurance. All our meetings were of a very high order and will long be remembered.

We are very much pleased to have another efficient missionary in our district, Brother C. E. Miller, who will be district president. Brother Miller is a man of energy, tact, and ideas. He has the confidence of the Saints, and we pray that great blessings may attend him in his new field.

How true are the words of one inspired when he uttered these words:

"Oh, my people, saith the Spirit,
Hear the word of God to-day;
Be not slothful, but obedient;
'Tis the world's momentous day!
Unto honor I have called you—
Honor great as angels know;
Heed ye then a Father's counsel,
And your deeds your purpose show.

"Time is ripe; my work must hasten!
Whoso will may 'bide the hour.
Naught can harm whom God protecteth—
Elements confess his power,
Up ye then, to the high places
I have bid you occupy!
Perils wait upon the heedless!
Grace upon the souls who try."

WILL ROBERTS.

IRVINGTON, CALIFORNIA, August 15, 1919.

Editors Herald: The weather, the number of Saints assembling, the good nature prevailing, the spirit of devotion and other favorable features, all presage a splendid reunion in the Northern California District this year. We have been practically two days enjoying the association of happy Saints coming from all parts even as far east as Independence, Missouri. The two sermons that have been preached were excellent. All say that meals prepared are splendid, and prices reasonable.

H. J. DAVISON,
Press Committee.

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA, August 17, 1919.

Editors Herald: "No man liveth unto himself, and no man dieth unto himself," is a scriptural truth that was never more apparent than it is to-day. The turtle lives in his shell, but who wants to be a turtle? We may all exert helpful influences on every hand and thus show that we do not live in vain. By bringing comfort and cheer to others, we brighten our own pathway and strew joy and smiles instead of gloom and tears in the lives of all."

This is a bit of Brother A. B. Phillip's philosophy, and through his untiring efforts a social committee has been originated in our branch. I hope the good work which the committee is doing will not go unnoticed, as it may prove an encouragement and incentive to other locals.

The purpose of the social committee is to see that beneficial entertainment is supplied for young and old, to bring about a closer social contact and to awaken the spirit of service. In order that no one in the branch shall be slighted, the members have been divided into three groups. Group 1 includes the boys and girls of 16 to 20; group 2, the young men and women of 21 to 30, and group 3, all of the older folks. Each group is being well taken care of; for the committee has been divided into two's. Each "two" having charge of one of the groups.

Group 1 has taken up the idea with great enthusiasm. The committee has helped them to organize a club which promises to be a big success. Every Saturday afternoon the young folks gather at Burholme Park to play tennis until dark. When the sun goes down behind the hill and the ball can no longer be seen, other games commence. Marshmallow toasts, strawrides, and watermelon parties are tried with great success. The boys and girls are quite enthusiastic over the club, and say they shall never let it fall through.

Group 2 is not quite so enthusiastic. Most of its members are married or soon to be married, so making it hard to keep the group together. Nevertheless good times have been planned for the future in the way of corn roasts, marshmallow toasts, and strawrides. One Sunday afternoon the group went for a walk through the country to take pictures.

Group 3 does not look on parties and frolicsome times with as much fervor as the other two groups do. They depend more or less on entertainments given at the church. A very good one was given a short time ago at our church, at which some very good talent was displayed. Several vocal, piano, and violin solos were given by our church members and their friends. We even had a gentleman from Mexico, who both sang in Spanish and played for us. It was quite a surprise and treat. If success were to be measured by the applause, the performance was more than successful. We have many more surprises in store for the older folks. Before cold weather comes we intend to have a picnic for them, and in order that they may live again the olden times, the children will be taken care of by a committee appointed for that purpose. We hope to make it one of the big features of the season and to follow it up with many more diversions of the kind for group 3.

Every member of the social committee is earnest about this work and very eager to make it a success, for it is right and necessary that opportunity be given for social development, unless we wish it to take place entirely outside of the church. None of us desire that; nor do we wish to exclude others, for this should not be. We should offer an opportunity to get acquainted with one another and to let the friends of our church members become acquainted with us. The desire of every member of the social committee is to become capable of offering a more acceptable service than ever before.

Sincerely, your sister,

EDNA M. STARZMANN.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor.
The official organ of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Published every Wednesday by the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. Entered at the post office at Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

PRICE, $1.75 A YEAR IN ADVANCE

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Convention Minutes

ALABAMA.—With Pleasant Hill Branch, August 2. J. R. Harper presiding, assisted by T. C. Kelley. D. T. Parker, secretary. Seven elders reported, 4 priests, 1 teacher. Bishop's agent reported on hand last report $434.75, on hand now, $40.75. J. W. Baldwin, A. A. Odom, and D. B. Sellers appointed to audit Bishop's agent's books. The committee reported the report correct but had found an error in last committee's report of $3 in favor of the church. Committee was continued till report was corrected. Secretary was authorized to purchase new district record and draw on treasurer for same. Branches reporting: Lone Star, 176 last report, present number 179; Pleasant Hill 373, gain 8. Adjourned to meet at call of district president; Preaching by M. M. Turpen and T. C. Kelley. D. T. Parker, secretary.

Conference Notices

New York and Philadelphia at Archbald, Pennsylvania, August 30, 31, and September 1. Elizabeth Teal, secretary.

Two-Day Meetings

At Midland, Michigan, September 14 and 15. Bring well-filled baskets. Everybody invited. Matthew Umphrey, president.

Caseville, Michigan, August 30 and 31. Meals will be served in church basement, 25 cents. William Fligg, president.

Shabbona, Michigan, September 6 and 7. Bring your baskets. William Fligg, president.

One-Day Meetings

Snover, Michigan, September 14. Big day. Marlette, Michigan, September 21. All-day services. All welcome, William Fligg, president.

Reunion Calendar

(The figures in parenthesis give the page of the HERALD on which details have been given.)

Little Sioux and Gallands Grove, Dow City, Iowa, August 22-31 (503, 806).

Southern Missouri, Springfield, August 20-31 (702).

Eastern Colorado, Fort Collins, August 22-31 (735).

Southeastern Illinois, Brush Creek, August 22-31 (654, 735, 806).

Nauvoo, Illinois, Montrose, Iowa, August 22-31 (527, 759).

Northern Wisconsin, Chetek, August 22-31 (655).

Southern Idaho, Hagerman, August 22-31.

Southern Wisconsin, Madison, August 22-31 (735).

Northeastern Illinois, Plano, Illinois, August 29 to September 7 (553).

Southwestern Oregon, Myrtle Point, August 29 to September 7 (759).

Our Departed Ones

ROBISON.—Moses Robison was born in Canada near Toronto, August 16, 1837. Married Mrs. Elizabeth McLeod September 11, 1878. Came to Michigan in the year 1880 settling on the lake shore, Sanilac County, Michigan, where he continued to reside until his death, August 13, 1919. Baptized by J. J. Cornish, September 17, 1882. His life was such

CONTENTS

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| EDITORIAL:  |     |
| Optimists and Pessimists  | 833 |
| The Christmas Offering  | 834 |
| Thrift Needed   | 834 |
| Joint Stock Companies   | 835 |
| A Little Leaven   | 835 |
| "Backward, Turn Backward—"  | 836 |
| ORIGINAL ARTICLES:  |     |
| How Shall the Child Spend its Sabbath, by Gomer R. Wells  | 837 |
| The Lord's Message Never Popular, by C. W. Lamb   | 838 |
| What God Demands of a Saint, by Roderick May  | 840 |
| The World War, by A. C. Barmore   | 841 |
| Development, by Jay Leeka   | 843 |
| Fruits in Season, by C. W. Butterworth  | 844 |
| OF GENERAL INTEREST:  |     |
| The Church and Social Unrest  | 846 |
| WOMAN'S AUXILIARY   |     |
| Beatrice Rogers—Charlotte Dryden.   | 847 |
| LETTER DEPARTMENT   |     |
| Elder Harry Passman and wife—Abbia A. Horton—Guy M. Haynes—F. Bevan—Daniel Macgregor—Mrs. C. B. Freeman—John K. Jenkins—Will Roberts—H. J. Davison—Edna M. Starzmann. | 849 |
| FROM HERE AND THERE   | 855 |
| MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT  | 855 |

that gained the respect of all. Leaves his wife and others to mourn. Services conducted by A. Leverton and Thomas Rosen.

DEHART.—Florence Maree Dehart was born April 6, 1904, near Allendale, Missouri. Baptized June 7, 1914. Died August 6, 1919, near Kingston, Missouri. She was a daughter of Sister Robertson and granddaughter of Brother and Sister Sam Pinkerton, who moved here last spring from Oklahoma. Funeral in the Kingston Church. Sermon by J. T. Ford.

FROM HERE AND THERE

S O S CALL FOR RADIO OPERATORS

The Radio Department of Graceland College has recently received a letter from the Radio Department of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation which should prove of interest to the young men of the church. It follows:

"August 18, 1919.

"Graceland Radio Institute,
"Lamoni Iowa.

"Gentlemen: At the present time we are in need of a large number of radio operators and we are of the opinion that at no time during the remainder of the year will the supply equal the demand. As you no doubt know the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation owns and controls approximately one thousand vessels distributed on trade routes touching all important ports of the world.

"If you will be so kind as to bring the opportunity offered by this department of the Shipping Board to the attention of your students, we would appreciate your effort and any further information that you wish for from time to time in the future we would be glad to give you, such as demand for radio operators, salary paid, etc., relative to radio operators.

"Yours very truly,

(Signed) "F. P. GUTHRIE,

"Manager, Radio Department."

Attached to the above letter was a bulletin entitled "S O S Call for Wireless Operators." Paragraphs from this bulletin follow.

"The United States Shipping Board is in immediate need of qualified radio operators, and can furnish employment to any man who possesses a first-grade commercial license issued by the Department of Commerce. In accordance with the new wage scale recently established, the first operator is paid $125 per month, the second operator $100, in addition to all expenses. The radio operator is considered an officer and is provided with superior accommodations."

"All Shipping Board vessels carry one or two radio operators. When a ship carries two operators an experienced man is generally put in charge as first operator, with an assistant as second operator. In case the ship only carries one operator, he is usually rated as first operator, and should be a man who has made at least one voyage. During the war, a large number of radio operators secured training at the expense of the Government for both the Army and the Navy. Any of these operators who desire employment have only to secure a commercial radio operator's license, issued by the Department of Commerce after passing the required examination.

"An excellent opportunity is provided for any bright young man to see the world and at the same time be very well paid for his services. Those who desire advancement may easily spend their spare time studying navigation or engineering. . . .

"The shortage in radio operators has been brought about by the demobilization of the navy and the withdrawal of radio operators from Shipping Board vessels. There are a number of schools throughout the country which offer very good courses in radio telegraphy, and it is possible for a beginner to qualify for a license in a few months time. There is hardly any other field in which a beginner may qualify as quickly."

The United States Shipping Board is only one of a number of organizations employing radio operators. Men are needed on land as well as on sea. Anyone possessing an ordinary school education can qualify as a radio operator by taking a course at a good radio school. Graceland College offers two splendid, practical courses in wireless telegraphy; her graduates are fully qualified to pass the examinations of the Department of Commerce, and are assisted in obtaining positions. The fall term begins September 4. If you need further information before enrolling for a course in radio write at once to The President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

NEW MANAGER ON DUTY

Elder J. A. Koehler, the new manager of the Herald Publishing House, assumed his new duties on the 25th. He has moved with his family to Lamoni and will enter whole-heartedly into the task of making the church's leading printing establishment of maximum service to the church. He has been in the employ of large corporations in executive capacities, and knows the possibilities of efficiently managed business. O. W. Parker, former manager, will continue in the employ of the office.

H. S. Salisbury has returned from Chicago, where he spent two weeks in history research in the famous Newberry Library for the Society of Colonial wars of which he is a member. Mr. Salisbury received a personal letter of thanks from Governor Lowden of Illinois for assistance given the Illinois Centennial Commission in preparing the Centennial History of Illinois.—Independence Examiner, August 21, 1919.

GOOD REUNIONS

Reports from every part of the country are exceptionally favorable with regard to the various reunions. An intellectual and spiritual feast is reported from Southern California; the same is true of the eastern reunion. The reunion at Kirtland is reported to be better than in former years. It was a wonderful success, both at Kirtland and also at Onset, with the spiritual social service of a high order, and a peaceful spirit throughout. The reunion at Kirtland was made sad by the sudden death of Doctor Roy Jones of Cleveland, who was killed shortly after the reunion started. It was an accident through the end gate of a truck on which he was riding giving away, causing him to fall and break his neck. He was beloved of all who knew him, and appeared to have a splendid life of service before him.

GRACELAND OPENING

The registration day is Thursday, September 4, the opening exercises with beginning of class, September 5.

It is hoped that all who expect to enter will be on hand promptly ready for the opening day, September 4, thus avoiding the penalty for later registration and enabling one to enter actively upon the regular year's work.

There is every evidence of a large enrollment and with the added members of the faculty and the added equipment and facilities it is believed a most successful year is being entered upon.

Remember the date of registration—September 4. For a new illustrated catalogue write The President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

Solomon Salisbury and Frederick Salisbury, his brother, left their home in Illinois about August 4 to visit Kirtland, Ohio, and the Kirtland Temple. Solomon Salisbury is a nephew of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, a son of Catherine Salisbury, and was born in Kirtland eighty-seven years ago. That is one reason for their return, as stated in the Nauvoo Independent for August 9.

NEW COURSE OF STUDY IN THE RELIGIO

Commencing with the issue of the Senior Quarterly for the fourth quarter the Religio will begin studying the Book of Mormon from a doctrinal standpoint which will be followed for three years or more. In this course the principles of the gospel will be carefully brought out using the Book of Mormon as a basis and other church books as corroborative. This will be very interesting and prove valuable to those who have not known just where in the Book of Mormon to locate teachings substantiating the principles of the gospel. All local Religios should be sure that orders are sent in promptly for sufficient supplies of Quarterlies, remembering that during the winter months the attendance will very likely increase and also not overlooking the fact that there is a substantial saving by ordering the Quarterly by the year instead of by the quarter.

Brother Alvin Knisley is touring Wyoming in an effort to locate all the scattered members. Writing from Northwestern Wyoming, he says: "I have baptized four on the way thus far and have a candidate for to-day." We are complying with his request for a list of the subscribers to our church publications in that State.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8:31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2:36.

Volume 66

Lamoni, Iowa, September 3, 1919.

Number 36

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

THE CHURCH AND EDUCATION

The near approach of the opening of Graceland College calls to mind the subject of the relation of the church to education.

As far back as history goes, the relation of the church in the broad sense of the term to education, has been very close. Such was the case in the Middle Ages. Such was the case in ancient historical times. It was the priest who taught, whether in Egypt, Babylon, or Jerusalem. It was the priests who were the depository of knowledge in India and China. It is the church which has preserved learning for the world.

Or taking it in the sense of that which we regard rightly as the true church, with the gospel of Jesus Christ, according to tradition, Enoch was one of the most learned men of his time. The patriarchs had the leisure and used it to study the heavens and the ways of the earth. Moses was learned in all the ways of the Egyptians. Joseph and Daniel were evidently also widely trained. These men received both divine knowledge and the learning of their time, and some of them, at least, were classed as great teachers. This is particularly true of Enoch and of Moses. We might add to the list, if that were desirable.

Perhaps some of us have been prone to belittle the learning of the early historical ages of the world. But that is because of our ignorance, and not because of breadth of knowledge. There is much evidence indeed to show that their learning was much more extensive than ordinarily supposed, even though the bulk of it has evidently been lost.

It is true that when the Master came, he chose the fishermen, not from the lower ranks of society, but from the great middle class. Yet it is the Apostle Paul who has left his especial impress on the history of the early Christian church. Christian schools were soon organized.

The Master, it is true, needed not to be taught of man, but rightfully placed the emphasis upon divine knowledge, and the value of inspiration. The Apostle Paul also laid emphasis on the fact that it was the humble of the earth, those directed by the Spirit of God, who could do the work of God.

It is right that this fact should receive emphasis, that man in his own wisdom cannot do the work of God. But the fact still remains that so far as we have certain knowledge, the spirit of inspiration led to much study, not only in the search for religious truth but in the gaining of human knowledge, which after all led rightly to better knowledge of the divine truth.

So when the gospel was restored, nearly ninety years ago, we find that several men of broad education were attracted to it, and that Joseph Smith himself was foremost in emphasizing the value of proper schooling, not only for the children, but also for those older in years. Busy as was his life, and his time was fully occupied, yet he found time to carry books with him and study by the way.

The church had been organized but a short time when a school was organized for rhetoric and Hebrew in Kirtland. The Saints led in Missouri with their school at Far West, and it was but a little while before a university was established at Nauvoo. They were short of buildings, but elected a faculty and held class work while they were building that city.

The revelations to the church are full of commandments to study, especially such passages as Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21, and 87: 4. And the practice of these early men is clear.

It is not therefore surprising that as early as 1869 a resolution was adopted for the erection of a school, where young men might be trained for the ministry. But it was felt that this training of men for the ministry would constitute a school of the prophets, so action was later deferred. But about 1889 efforts were made with the result that Graceland was established in 1895.

When the matter was up last fall of the Students' Army Training Corps, we heard adverse comment, as though the record of the church was bad. Some of our men have heard the statement made so often that we are an ignorant people, that they have believed it, without taking the trouble to investigate.

President Frederick M. Smith is a graduate of Clark University, but he is neither the first nor the last of our membership who have received that honor. Several others have received their Ph. D. degree elsewhere.

We have not the list of those who have received their master's degree, but we can call to mind not a few, including two of our young women. In fact, these latter have done college work in advance of their master's degree, yet have proven that college work is only an additional qualification for service, not only in the church, but in the home. They hold firm for the old-fashioned virtue of motherhood and the home (they are both married), but at the same time for justice to womankind in the new movement.

While the number who have received their bachelor's degree, usually the bachelor of arts degree, are too numerous for a ready list. It would be interesting to have such figures listed, as disproof of the occasional unjust allegation that our faith is founded on ignorance rather than on the most critical scientific analysis.

We have noted it repeatedly stated that the general average of those who graduate from high school is two and one half per cent. Others have estimated that as high as five per cent in some localities graduate from high school. Two and one half per cent seems to be an agreed average. Some state that only one per cent enter college.

From statistics we would naturally expect that about eight per cent of the population would be young men and young women qualified by age to enter college. If only two and one half per cent of these graduate from high school, and are prepared for college, that would represent one fifth of one per cent. We notice from the World Almanac that these figures are practically confirmed, and the total number for the United States of those attending colleges and universities is just about one fifth of one per cent, if not a little less. These figures were taken from the 1913 almanac.

Other estimates we have made tended to confirm these figures. (See "School attendance" in the HERALD.) At that rate we would expect 180 of our young men and young women to be of a suitable age to attend in some college or university somewhere. But that would include at least four years of college work. If we disregard the post graduate classes for a junior college we would expect less than that number, say 120, to be generous, of young men and young women for the first two years of college work. We rather suspect that a census would show that we equal and exceed these figures, as only part of our young people, as yet, go to our own church school, but many attend colleges, where such are located near their family home.

Applying a similar estimate to the S. A. T. C., it would mean that about three per cent of the population would represent boys eighteen, nineteen, and twenty years of age. If only two and one half per cent of these graduate from high school, an average would be three fortieths of one per cent of the population, who would be young men of suitable age, who could be expected to have graduated from high school.

That would represent sixty or seventy young men for the whole church throughout the world, and less than sixty for the United States. In fact sixty were found, through an intensive campaign, which was made only in the five stakes, with a membership of about 13,000 and nearly all of them were found in these five stakes. The average for a membership of 13,000 would have been ten young men.

It would thus appear that the church members have done their part in the preparation; at least, much in excess of the average for the United States, and I think we are safe in saying, much in excess of the average for the States of Iowa and Missouri.

We read somewhere that Iowa had six thousand ready for the S. A. T. C. This was considered high. The church members in the five stakes would have equaled that if they had about thirty to thirty-five ready! But an excess of that number was secured.

We have every reason to believe if the plan had been known early in the summer, and time given for a wide canvass through the church, Graceland would easily have secured one hundred, if not many more young men throughout the church.

In the past we note that Doctor Charles F. Thwing, in The American College, states that of those who have lived in America, not more than two hundred thousand have ever graduated from a university, and he gives the number of those who have lived in America to have been at least one hundred million. It would mean from this that one in five hundred have graduated from college. The percentage, be what it may, has certainly been small. The average to-day would probably be above the average for the past, and should be, but there is still relatively only a small fraction of a per cent who graduate from college.

We notice that all the figures available seem to agree and give results that are approximately similar. The result is that we should expect to have about one hundred and seventy to one hundred and eighty taking college work; and about seven times that many in high school.

As above pointed out, the church has never stood for ignorance, but has emphasized again and again, and still does, that the glory of God is intelligence (Doctrine and Covenants 90:6). The church stands for the most critical analysis. Its creed is, all truth. The church as such favors and has favored a liberal training for its membership, and especially is emphasis laid upon the necessity of preparation in youth.

But neither in the ages past, nor at the present time are the efforts of the church confined to the young. Classes are held for those who are past the ordinary school period.

While we have emphasized here the position of the church and slightly the great value of proper preparation, we by no means lose sight of the fact that one with the Lord is a host, and that we cannot succeed in this work without divine inspiration. Nor do we ignore the many noble men and women who have made equivalent preparation in other ways from their own personal reading and study. We do emphasize, however,

First. That the position of the church is consistent and identical with its position in the early days of the reorganization; with its position in the old church; with its position in the days of the Master; and with its position in ancient times.

Second. Despite handicaps and poverty in many instances the preparation made by the church membership is equal to that made by others. In fact, it is much above the average.

Third. To this we would add that it is not yet as high as it should be, and that despite handicaps as a church and as individuals, we should make yet more earnest efforts for the service of humanity and of our heavenly Father.

S. A. B.

---

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE

---

The World Almanac for 1917 gives the number of school attendants in the United States for 1915. In the elementary schools, primary, and grammar, there were nearly two million students; about eight per cent of these were in private schools.

In high school, private academies, and academies in colleges, there was a total of nearly 1,565,000, of whom eighty-five per cent were in public high schools and fifteen per cent in other academies.

In universities and colleges there were 237,168; professional schools about one quarter of that number, and in normal schools about 100,000. The normal school, however, should rather be classified with the high school.

That would mean, nearly twenty per cent of the population of the United States were engaged in elementary and grammar school work; one and one half per cent in high school, and less than one fourth of one per cent in universities and colleges. In fact, there were less than two and four tenths in a thousand.

It is interesting to note that there were 678,000 in evening schools, and over 183,000 in business schools, including musical, art, blind, deaf, orphans, kindergarten, and all. It indicates a total of something over twenty-three million at school, which was twenty-three per cent of the population of America in some form of school work.

The World Almanac for 1918 gives the figures for 1916, showing attendance in elementary schools over 20,560,000; high school over 1,700,000; universities and colleges a little over 259,000; professional schools not quite 70,000; and normal schools over 111,000. Evening schools show a slight falling off to not quite 648,000; while commercial schools have increased to 192,000.

Making allowance for all of the various schools in the country, including reform, deaf, blind, feeble minded, Indian, orphan, private kindergarten, art, music, etc., the number attending school is given as 23,856,980, of whom 21,410,691 attended public schools, and less than two and one half million private schools, colleges, and universities.

It is interesting to note how large a part public education plays in America. There has been no census since 1910, but a rough percentage may be figured on a population of slightly over one hundred million. This would probably give us twenty per cent in the elementary schools, one and six tenths in high school, one fourth of one per cent in colleges, and about twenty-three per cent in all kinds of schools.

We have no statistics for the church, but based upon the figures given in General Conference Minutes 1917, and the total January 1, 1917, we should expect 14,000 children to be in primary and grammar schools; 1,200 in various high schools and academies, and 175 in various colleges and universities, with perhaps 110 or 115 in the first two years of college work and the balance in the third and fourth year or taking advanced university work.

S. A. B.

---

ANOTHER MISSIONARY PASSES AWAY

---

It is with profound regret and sorrow that we received the recent news that Elder Francis M. Slover had passed to his reward on August 26, last, at San Antonio, Texas, in the midst of his missionary service.

Brother Slover was born November 9, 1867; was baptized September 15, 1886; ordained an elder November 2, 1893, at Brush Creek, in Southeastern Illinois District, by Emslie Curtis, I. P. Baggerly, and I. A. Morris.

Brush Creek is one of those branches which was organized in the days of Joseph Smith the Martyr, and which has continued its existence through the dark and cloudy days, and down to these latter days in the Reorganization. It has tradition reaching back through many decades to be upheld, and Brother Slover as one of the sons of that branch held high its reputation.

We first find Brother Slover's name in the list of General Conference appointments for 1893. He was appointed then to the Southeastern Illinois District, and continued in that field of Southern Illinois until 1904. In 1896 he was enrolled with the Fifth Quorum of Elders. But in the meantime he had been called to the office of seventy at the General Conference of 1896, and was ordained April 7, 1897, being enrolled with the Second Quorum of Seventies, with which he continued until now.

In the next fifteen years after 1904, he spent the greater part of the time in the Southeastern States, viz, Florida, South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, and Alabama. For two years he labored again in the Southeastern Illinois District. He labored in the Spring River, Clinton, and Central Illinois Districts.

Recently he had been appointed to Texas and was laboring in the vicinity of San Antonio when taken sick. From the Ensign we learn that the news of his sickness and the telegram concerning his death were both received on the afternoon of the 26th. So he evidently was not ill long.

Brother Slover was a valiant servant of Christ, of the faithful, devoted type, who find much to do in the interest of the work everywhere. The church can ill afford to spare such men.

---

A RESTORATION NEEDED

---

The Christian Standard for August 23, is almost solely taken up with the restoration movement. They feel that it is necessary to return to the New Testament of evangelism, to repudiate the materialistic philosophy; to repudiate the methods of materialism which attempt to substitute human creeds for the New Testament, and to take action to reassert the New Testament with increased vigor.

We fully agree that a restoration is needed in the Christian world at large, but we would beg leave to point out that the restoration can only be made by our heavenly Father and not by men, if it is to be his.

Displayed on the front page appeared the following:

RESTORATION OF ANCIENT ORDER OF THINGS

Christianity cannot be reformed. Every attempt to reform Christianity is like an attempt to create a new sun, or to change the revolutions of the heavenly bodies—unprofitable and vain. In a word, we have had reformation enough. . . . A restoration of the ancient order of things is all that is necessary to the happiness and usefulness of Christians. . . . To bring the societies of Christians up to the New Testament is just to bring the disciples, individually and collectively, to walk in the faith and in the commandments of the Lord and Savior, as presented in that blessed volume; and this is to restore the ancient order of things. Celebrated as the era of reformation is, we doubt not but that the era of restoration will far transcend it in importance and fame.—Alexander Campbell, in Christian Baptist.

---

CRITICISM

---

In the HERALD for November 30, 1898, we note an editorial, quoting one column from The Patriot for November 17, on the subject of criticism. We are reproducing that column here for the value it possesses.

The Patriot is sorry to have the sad thought impressed again and again, that there is a disposition anywhere to discourage criticism. Instead it should be heartily and earnestly encouraged. The safety, defense, and spread of truth; the development of characters of eternally enduring material; the love of justice and right in their most enlightened form, are the natural outgrowth and product of just criticism. A people that persists in critically and justly examining all things with which they are connected, both men and principles, may be expected to stand for the right, and hence always resist the wrong; but a people who can be persuaded to close their eyes, cease to justly criticize either men or principles, or both, is in a favorable condition to be misled by ambitious and unrighteous men. Such a condition it is the duty of all to avoid.

But criticism to be valuable must be just. The carping croaker is a pest to any community. The very evils at which he strikes are aggravated by his one injustice.

But such unjust criticism can never be avoided by an equally unjust wholesale condemnation of all criticism. Such a course aggravates and spreads the disease, the cure of which it essays to perform. If hammering the tree laden with ripened seed, is a good way to prevent the spread of such seed, then continually hammering and scolding tattlers, bickbiters, and critics generally, without any distinction as to the kind of criticism is a good way to stop such work.

He who is strong in the consciousness that he is right, usually has neither need nor disposition to cry out against criticism, nor any fear of its consequences; hence such outcry only serves to create the fear, in the minds of those intelligent persons previously free therefrom, that probably there is something that needs to be guarded from a close examination.

Just criticism cannot be made without knowledge. Hence, he who desires to criticize justly and in no other way, will find upon a careful examination of himself as a rule, that the number of the things he criticizes will be materially, and in the cases of many strikingly, reduced and the character of the criticism touching others radically changed; all of which tends to the betterment of the critic, and the improvement of the conditions to which his attention is given. Criticism, therefore, properly indulged, will condemn that species of condemnation not based upon proper information, just as much as it will condemn the failure to condemn that which is proven wrong by competent and material evidence. It will lead to more careful research, to fuller information, to nicer discrimination, to a greater and keener love for the right. It will make better men, better women, better citizens. Indeed, it is the uplifter of the race, the purifier of the world; and the brightest and most consoling hope held before all the

(Continued on page 877.)

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

PUBLIC SPEAKING

Whether conscious of the fact or not, all public speakers either use or abuse certain fundamental laws. Of one of these I write briefly, trusting that my effort will be taken kindly and with profit by those who need the knowledge.

The body of this article is formed with material taken from one of the most illuminating books on the subject of preaching I have read. It is Psychology and Preaching by Charles S. Gardner, published by The MacMillan Company, New York. But I do not recommend it to the man who is not willing to study its pages. Very little good comes from a hasty perusal of any important subject. That which we can learn by a hasty reading is so light that the passing breeze of time blows it from our memory.

When discussing the needs of our ministry, a brother and I concluded that carefully prepared reviews of important books, published in the HERALD, would be valuable. In this paper I begin to make good my promise to prepare a series of such reviews, and in doing so help myself as much as I help the reader.

The mind of the preacher should not be a chaos but a cosmos. We want to cultivate careful thinking. We depend so much on memory it should be exercised in a manner to keep it fresh and strong. To fix images in our mind we concentrate and associate. Concentration is focalization. The camera man will appreciate this illustration. Until we focus our lens the objects are indistinct; we distinguish nothing that remains in the thought. To learn, let the mind play on the object of your study as a bull's-eye lantern lights directly and distinctly on one object at a time. This is concentration. Little by little we build images in the mind, provided we build properly. Then it is easy to recall those scenes. The more distinct, clear, vivid, definite we receive, the more we shall be able to impart in like manner.

For example: This morning I gaze from my window on the park. The pitcher's box where the boys played ball yesterday is filled with water from the rain last night. These little pools of water reflect the gray sky. They are little patches of somber monotony bordered by the green grass. So is life. A little dog is vainly endeavoring to leap into the branches of a tree in which some birds securely perch and look down with placid humor. Here is your image of contrast. A little boy passes. He has a white clay pipe in his mouth. His finger is wrapped with a white cloth. His chest is caved in. What a pity! Life! Images. Concentration of vision and thought harvesting.

I find that Mr. Gardner's book is filled, from cover to cover, with good suggestions. His chapter on "Feeling" is worthy a word by word study. In other chapters he deals with belief, assemblies, suggestion, mental epidemics, mental images, sentiment, and ideals, etc. I shall select for examination his treatment of attention. Who has not struggled to hold the attention of his audience? Who has not often closed his sermon experiencing the silence of mystery? Why did So-and-So sleep placidly through it all? Why did two or more persons whisper? Why? Why? Always, why?

Attention is focalized consciousness. Inattention is simply the direction of the focus toward some object other than that to which it should be directed. Various things, such as sight, sound, smell, taste, appeals to emotions, are constantly, during our waking moments, making appeals to us for recognition. Some of these we notice, others we turn away, or allow them to pass unnoticed. Why do we do this? When you can answer this you have the secret of attention.

Attention always moves along the line of interest.

Those objects draw attention to themselves which are out of the ordinary.

Attention is closely related to volition, will, choice.

There are three kinds of attention; or more properly speaking, one's interest may determine the direction of his attention in three different ways.

Compulsory attention. This is the attention which is directed upon a stimulus that forces itself into the focus of consciousness. It not infrequently happens that the attention which a public speaker "commands" is of the compulsory type. It may be that it is not what he says, but his manner that compels attention. Compulsory attention, even when elicited by some pleasing peculiarity or device of the orator, is really centered upon the orator himself, or his method, and not upon his message. This is true of a continuous and justly censurable play on the emotions of an audience. The so-called "teary" preacher, catering to the effect of the moment only, never really edifies his hearers. Pathos is a wonderful power, but carried to extremes its only result is to stamp the preacher as lacking in mental power and leaves the audience, at the end of the Sabbath Day, like Thomas Hood, as far from heaven as when he was a boy." Certain women and a few so-called men enjoy this sentimentality, but whenever emotional flutter fails to stimulate intelligent application nothing of a practical nature is accomplished. We should not, however, overlook the proper heart appeal. True religion is of both the heart and the head. But I see that I am wandering from the book.

Voluntary attention. In this the concentration of the mind takes place under the control of the will. It is a matter of choice, and is based upon some measure of deliberation, or weighing of alternatives. That is, we hold one picture in the foreground while we hold the other in the background, keeping our special attention on the one in front. There is a recurrent swinging of the attention away from one object of interest to another and a repeated pulling of it back. This is wearisome and oftentimes disagreeable. Voluntary attention is akin to compulsory attention. We might call it "duty" attention. And who wants to be listened to simply because the audience feels it a duty to listen? If our aim is to get certain truths—and it is—accepted most readily, believed most heartily, appreciated most highly, and acted on most promptly, we should use another method than one to demand or entreat attention. We do not preach for the purpose of giving the hearers a needed exercise in the control of the attention. They are at liberty to attend or not. We must seek always to interest our auditors, for only the interested ones will obey the message.

The preacher should make as small a demand as possible on the voluntary attention of his hearers. If he finds them inattentive it is generally useless, and often suicidal, to scold or lecture them for their failure to listen. (Whoever has been guilty of this mistake, please hold up his hand. All hands up!) There is a better way. It is the way of—

Spontaneous attention. To my mind, these two words express the whole philosophy of gospel preaching. Jesus said the same thing, in substance, when he called out, "He that has ears to hear, let him hear." It is useless to force the heart or the brain. If men are "his sheep" they will hear his voice. There will be no need of any wild or extravagant appeal from without, nor any force from within. The shoddy and tinsel of sham oratory will never convince people of the truthfulness of the gospel. The rant and blat of men laboring under the deluded traditions of old-school, elocution fallacies will never be successful preaching of the simple word of salvation. (If in the warmth of feeling I depart from the book we consider, I make no apology.) Were it not for the fact that the speaker is sometimes to be blamed, we might throw the whole responsibility for lack of attention on the audience, and quoting these words "he that is of God will hear the word of God," dismiss the subject. But there's the rub. The speaker does not always preach the word of God. He interjects his own personality to that extent that his hearers are offended, and, like the ghost of Hamlet's father, walk away (in thought).

Spontaneous attention is often interrupted by the speaker's lack of courtesy. He loses sight completely of the instruction:

There is a great work to be done by mine elders, and that they may be fitted to do this work and the accomplishment thereof be not prevented, it is enjoined upon them that they shall not only be kind of heart and of lowly spirit, that their wisdom may be the wisdom of the Lord and their strength the strength of the Spirit, but they shall lay aside lightness of speech and lightness of manner when standing to declare the word, and shall study to approve their ministrations to the people by candor in speech and courtesy in demeanor, that as ministers of the gospel they may win souls unto Christ.

I stated years ago that this instruction, given through the prophet of the church, was superior to any teaching given in the hundreds of volumes of instruction on homiletics.

To analyze and impress the points of section 119, paragraph 2, of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, might do more good than to examine further Gardner's chapter on attention. But both are valuable.

In spontaneous attention the mind is dwelling on something which is in itself interesting, and so interesting that at the moment it takes practically complete possession of our thoughts. Under such circumstances the mind drifts, but never away from the current of thought. And here let me issue the important warning: do not attempt to hold the attention of your audience too long on details. To do this is to beget monotony, and monotony is poison to spontaneous attention. A person resents any attempt to make him understand better a thing which he thinks he understands perfectly. It is not a bad plan to leave something to the imagination. When we see a sap pail overflowing we think only of the waste of the sap. Loss of attention is the effect of the cause. Remove the cause. One preacher was nicknamed Old-Pound-and-Yell. He not only pounded the pulpit, but he also pounded the attention of his hearer, and pounded it till paralysis resulted in unconsciousness. To introduce the variety without injuring the theme is to keep clear the road in which spontaneous attention may travel. The attention of a child flutters from one object to another as a butterfly flits from flower to flower. The average mind of the adult can dwell, intelligently, only so long on any phase of instruction. In some psychological manner a frequent illustration (the parable or story,) will rest or relieve fixity and keep the mind, for a certain period, interested in the sermon. If a man can actually benefit his audience by giving them one-hour-and-a-half sermons, I do not see why he or the audience should "kick." But this man should not ridicule his brother who has sense enough to stop preaching when he sees that he has said enough in less time.

But I must get back to the book. And this thought or statement of Mr. Gardner's should be quoted in full. "How shall the preacher secure the spontaneous attention of his hearers, which requires him to present his message so as to appeal to some inclination of theirs, when the message itself opposes some of their strong inclinations?"* (This is often the case with us Latter Day Saint preachers.) "The only way," says Gardner, "is to stimulate some inclination of theirs, when the message itself opposes some it will overflow their consciousness with the corresponding feelings and submerge the opposing inclinations." He speaks of the great advantage of illustration (story-telling) and dramatic art. But a word of caution may be interjected here. God's servants do not stoop to the use of cunning trade tricks. Flattery is one. It has been well said that "flattery is the food of fools." Only the trickster uses flattery—and over-praise borders on flattery. Some think it good policy, when dealing with persons opposed to the Saints' message, to agree on the agreeable. But there is a difference between this method and advancing from the known to the unknown. The latter method is sound above question. But the propriety of compromising by lowering the standard need not be a question that waits long for answer. There is as much danger of overdoing as of underdoing. To lay a foundation of common agreement is proper; but after all it is a question of what we believe that other people do not believe, that is vital in the main. Courtesy, the fruit of kindness, will bridge many a prejudice. Life is not logic, but ethics. One touch of the Spirit of God will go farther towards the convictions of man's soul than strained attempts to conciliate the feelings of the guilty.

The scope of attention is limited to one thing at a time.

Attention shifts from one thing to another, rapidly and constantly.

"What this characteristic of the attention means for the public speaker is obvious. The attention of his hearers will move on. He should not dwell upon a single point longer than is necessary for them to grasp it. If he does, one of two things will happen. Either they will become drowsy or their minds will flit away to other things, which most probably will be wholly unrelated to his discourse. In any case he will lose their attention, and any method he may adopt to compel them to listen will be unavailing."

The discourse must have movement; and different phases of the subject must be presented with a rapidity corresponding to the rapidity of a normal mental movement. "Move on" is the order which psychology gives to the speaker. But do not move too fast. If the ideas are complex, a certain time is necessary for the attention to seize adequately the object or idea. If we deluge an audience with facts, there will be a brave struggle for a while to assimilate the food; not succeeding they will cease to take in matter, and simply wait till a new or different idea is presented. Then we notice a revival of interest.

So we may agree that the laws of attention set limits and standards for public discourse which the speaker ignores at the peril of failure.

Above all else, may I advise the ministry to take a life course in the university of observation. Here we find the greatest teachers and the most vivid lessons; here we learn lessons of greatest value. Begin to-day to observe. Do not imitate bad examples. Assimilate good ones. Learn spelling from the books and papers you read. Learn proper pronunciation and correct speaking from educated persons. Be exact. Make a notebook of your brain. Burn things into it by concentration of thought. Look at things with open eyes.

RALPH W. FARRELL.

---

HOMILETICS: A STUDY IN THE ART OF PREACHING

---

Homiletics is the title of that branch of theology which treats of sermons and their composition.

It is the science which treats of the art of preaching, or the method of instructing hearers in spiritual matters and doctrine.

Now I wish you to take particular notice of two words in the above definition. The first word is science, the second word is art. There are also other words that I shall use in this essay, which I wish to define, so that you may have a perfect understanding of the sense in which they are to be applied.

The words are practical, personality, individuality, and faculty.

The word science I shall define as, knowledge systematized in matter or in mind.

The word art implies skill, a readiness acquired by learning or by study. Art is the skillful employment of means to an end—a knowledge of rule or method with ability to apply them.

The word practical means useful, to be of use; methods known to act if the rule is applied.

Personality is represented by character, originality of mind and style.

Individuality is represented by those qualities which distinguish one person from another—self-control or self-reliance.

Faculty means having the power to act, such as the power of the intellect, as reasoning, memory, speech, skill, tact. We may have a particular faculty for our profession, or trade, or calling. But every minister should possess some faculty, or power to minister. With these definitions you will now be able to follow my train of thought throughout this essay.

It is common knowledge that many of the churches have failed to attract the people, simply because the preachers were unattractive in their discourse. Yet in point of mental culture and literary achievement, they may stand preeminent.

Doctor Harold Ford, M. A., speaking of the English church in his work on The Art of Preaching, makes the following statement: "Yet withal, it may be said of her, 'One thing thou lackest.' As an evangelizing power she is weakest in one of her main functions—that of preaching."

You will note here that the pulpit is spoken of as an evangelizing power. We also believe that our pulpit should stand preeminent to every other effort that is made in the evangelization of the world.

Is it a fact that the people are kept away from our churches because our pulpit very largely depends upon those who may occupy? Take for instance, the fact that when a powerful preacher such as the Reverend Boyd-Carpenter, or Knox-Little, are announced to preach in the pulpit at Westminster.

The people have waited for hours for the doors to open, while hundreds of young men would stand throughout the service.

Now what is the reason that they can attract such numbers while the churches are complaining of empty pews and benches?

The sermon is in no sense subordinated to the service, nor should it be. Music is a most powerful attraction, and its influence is great, yet it does not possess the irresistible power of the human voice as an exponent of the divine will.

All men are not orators, or even great preachers, nor can they become eloquent. By eloquence we do not mean smart in language, or in tricks of speech—but speaking from personal experience, in fervid language of the heart, as soul to soul. It is only when the soul goes forth out of itself and speaks to the soul, that man can sway the will of his fellow men.

Eloquence then may be said to consist of burning, forceful words—but with a power above words—a force which pierces the soul addressed and transposes into it the speaker's thoughts.

We may not possess the eloquence or the reputation of any great preacher, but we can impress the mind and heart of each hearer with the truth of our own deep personal conviction, otherwise our efforts will be miserable failures.

Booklearning may be profitable, and it is necessary that we should obtain all the knowledge that may be possible, but it may also be a great hindrance to us, if we depend altogether upon that fact.

Take the case of the Master, for instance, when they questioned each other regarding his learning.

"How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?" He may not have set at the feet of a learned rabbi—but he had learned much more than these learned ones could possibly know.

The secret of the Master is given to us by the Apostle John: "And the word became flesh and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory," etc. Brethren it is this glory that we are short of.

There is more in this passage than most of us understand but the truth may be discovered, and it is quite possible for you and me to obtain light and information thereon, if we will give a little more attention to the value of the priesthood which we have the honor to hold.

Self is the great hindrance. The preacher should not be in view for a moment. Christ should occupy the pulpit; the will of God should be presented through the clarified mind and vision of him who may be called upon to preach the word and represent the Master, and through the power of the gospel.

Preaching, then, has its place, as Christ commanded, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." While the Apostle Paul's dying charge to Timothy was, "Preach the word."

SERMON SHOULD BE MAIN FACTOR

To the mind of the writer, it would appear that the failure of the world to attract the people to the churches is very largely due to the fact that the sermon is very often subordinate to the service, whereas it should be the main factor. The fashion of the world has been to present short sermons. This to my mind belittles the highest function or charge given to ministers of the gospel. For the chief feature in the great commission is the preaching of the gospel.

But let me say that it would be far better to content ourselves with short sermons, rather than bore or weary the people with a long string of personal experiences, which often do more harm to the cause, the preacher, and the congregation, than we have any idea of.

We are not commissioned to represent ourselves, we are to preach Christ and the gospel. "Study to show thyself . . . a workman" was and is now the counsel of the Apostle Paul.

The inefficiency of the preacher is largely due to his neglect to study the word, for if we would regard the word of God as he intended that we should, then as in the case of the Master, we should realize the truth (and the word became flesh) of the message in body, mind, and spirit.

THE PREACHER'S PERSONALITY

Therefore preparation must be made for preaching, if we would succeed in reaching the people. The preacher's personality consists of physical, mental, and spiritual power.

We possess natural ability—nature's gift.

We possess mental ability—labor's reward.

We possess spiritual ability—power acquired by obedience. The preacher must study—acquire knowledge—the degree rests with himself.

The preacher must be in earnest, with real solid purpose. There is no middle course. The preacher must possess personality and individuality in the truest sense of these terms. Study means much more than simply to read. We must think and reason for ourselves, giving much attention to detail, order and system. There is a great art in presenting one's thoughts. To some preachers it is a natural gift, but in most preachers the art is acquired by patient labor and study.

It is the lack of these qualities that cause many to fail and become unattractive in this most important feature of our duty and calling.

THE KINDS OF PREACHERS

The late Bishop of Peterborough, divided all preachers into three classes.

1st. The preachers you cannot listen to.

2d. The preachers you can listen to.

3d. The preachers you cannot help listening to.

I have no need to ask you which of these preachers you prefer to become. But I will say this much, I believe the time is not far distant when men will have to show some special qualification to entitle them to hold the priesthood in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

How then shall we begin to acquire the art of preaching? I call your attention to the fact, that when this church was founded, the Lord provided the school of the prophets for this very purpose, and trained teachers were employed to teach and train the early pioneers of this work.

Joseph Smith, though a poor, illiterate boy when he was called to perform his task, was an accomplished linguist in several languages when he met his death.

We may not be able to go back to school, but we can school ourselves to a wonderful degree in a very short space of time if our mind is set to that purpose. Is there any reasonable objection that can be taken to the establishment of a school for this purpose or ever availing ourselves of the services of those already established?

OPEN YOUR MIND

Let me ask you, What is necessary that the preacher may be able to discourse intelligently? The old adage was, "Open your mouth and the Lord will fill it." Pardon me if I suggest that it is now very much out of date.

So for our present purpose it may be wise to revise this old adage, and I submit the revision thus, Open your mind and the Lord will fill it. If you remember I included in faculty, intellect, reason, memory, speech, skill, tact, as special illustrations, therefore, open these faculties to the Lord, and the brain will begin to operate. Intelligence will be the natural result, thinking will become a pleasure, preaching instead of being regarded as a task will be looked upon as a privilege.

Think of the reasoning power that we might possess. "Man, know thyself." We do know to a great extent the amount of power and ability which we possess under ordinary conditions of life, otherwise we could not earn our living.

While the gospel reveals to us the power of adjustment, and also the power of self-control, by which we may subdue all things, overcome all things, in this way the Lord will fill your mind, your mouth, your brain, your spirit, with those life-giving forces which will enable you to present the word of life in such a manner that will attract men and women to the gospel of Christ.

The art of preaching therefore rests with yourselves—if you are willing to work, God is quite as willing to pay your wages.

The wages of sin (neglect to study and acquire knowledge) is death (the failure to attract). Life begets life, energy begets energy. If you do not possess, you cannot give. The world was not made out of nothing, it was formed out of material already existing. "Let there be light" is a thought that may assist us, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." Let therefore implies consent. Consent to remove the darkness from your mind and the result will be light (understanding). The material is the word of God.

Brethren, there is said to be no royal road to learning, but if there should be, you will find that the name of that road is study.

There are natural gifts, and there are acquired gifts, of the former there are few, of the latter there may be many. If you are not numbered with the few, you may with special effort be numbered with the many.

METHODS OF IMPROVEMENT

Unfortunately, many of us have not had the means to acquire a decent education, such as a college training would give, but we have the opportunity for self-improvement before us always, and even this aid would give us a wonderful advantage and power over and above that which we find ourselves in possession of to-day, if we would make the best use of our time and talents.

For instance, we can increase our vocabulary by one hundred per cent by the use of a good dictionary, and by the study of synonymous terms we can acquire a readiness of speech. And this can be accomplished in a very short space of time.

I have been of the opinion for many years that we have neglected this particular study, for we have some of our brethren who could give very material assistance in this direction.

I have already mentioned the establishing of a school, in which languages, British and foreign, grammar, science, and art, and any other feature that would be of service to the priesthood could be taught.

All these things have been possible to us, and we should not have had to go outside our own church to acquire them.

I feel that the time is not far distant when we shall be compelled to give attention to these important studies.

You will now observe that the study of homiletics, the science which treats of the art of preaching, or the method of instructing hearers in spiritual matters and doctrine, is most worthy of our undivided attention.

In conclusion I wish to state that our pulpit should enjoy the highest reputation for the art of preaching, seeing that we have the restored gospel. And further, the servants of God should speak as they are led by the Spirit, while the counsel of the Lord is, if we receive not the Spirit we shall not teach or preach.

I feel that you will agree with me when I state that our pulpit should be the most attractive of all, when we fully realize that we are guided in the art of preaching by the Spirit of the Lord.

W. H. GREENWOOD.

---

PASTORAL WORK: WHAT IS IT AND HOW CONDUCTED?

---

(Read before the High Priests' Quorum, April, 1919.)

As Paul says: A pastor is an overseer to feed the church of God, or as Christ presents it, "To give them meat in due season." This feeding is done not only from the pulpit, but as he mingles with his flock in the various gatherings, or meets them at their homes, ministering to their needs as opportunity is offered. Ian Maclaren in his lecture, "The cure of the soul" suggests that there be at least two placed in charge of a congregation, to care for the flock; and that the work be divided, and as one essential is the preaching of the word from the pulpit, one be appointed to this part of the work; and the other one look after the needs of the flock other than that of preaching.

THE DUAL WORK

However, as we cannot afford to appoint more than one man in charge of a congregation (with but few exceptions) a pastor should try to qualify upon all lines, that he may be a pastor indeed. Some of our brethren are very affable and have all the traits of a good pastor, except they are poor preachers. We have more than once heard it said, that we like Brother — but he is not much of a preacher, and he cannot interest a congregation, yet he has endeared himself to us, so that we do not want to lose him. Again we have heard it said, that Brother — is a fine preacher, and we like to take our friends to church to hear him, but he seems not to be fitted to perform the other duties of a pastor. He does not visit us.

Wherein a pastor is lacking (and he cannot help but see wherein he lacks) he should try that much harder to qualify. He should realize that when he is given charge of a congregation that the flock is under his care. As one minister said, when a brother minister complained about what a small congregation he had: "My son you will find in the day of judgment that you had quite enough people for whom to be held accountable," so he should fully realize that these souls are committed to his care.

A PASTOR OR SHEPHERD

The pastor or shepherd giveth his life for the sheep, that is, he spends his energy, his life, in looking after them, and assisting them to a higher plane of living, and should be willing to respond to the call of the sick or the needy night or day. This is the best service that he can render, not that he will be called upon to give up his life for the sheep, but he spends his life in serving them.

The opportunity afforded to break the bread of life to his members from the pulpit should be highly esteemed by a pastor, and he ought to prepare diligently and prayerfully for this work. By being observant and seeking direction, he will be led to select such subjects as will best supply the needs of his audience. Though he may not at all times be able to please his hearers, he should try to give them such thoughts as will help them to shape their lives in harmony with the celestial law.

Louis XIV said to Massillon, the great French preacher: "I have heard many great orators, and have been highly pleased with them; but whenever I hear you, I go away displeased with myself." This is the highest encomium that could be bestowed on a preacher. Bishop Gregg says: "There are three things to aim at in public speaking; first to get into your subject, then to get your subject into yourself, and lastly to get your subject into your hearers." It is well to commence the first part of the week the preparation of our sermons for Sunday, giving such time to this study through the week as you can, or in the press of other duties, the week may pass by with no preparation on your part, and unless the Lord especially assist you, your congregation will be the loser. However, by diligently making preparation, we shall be better fitted to deliver the word of life, also to meet emergencies.

SPEAK CLEARLY, NOT LOUDLY

He should speak so that all in the room can hear him. We have frequently heard it said, The speaker speaks so low at times, that I do not hear all he says, and I lose the connection of his discourse. Again I have heard it said of a certain brother that he talks so loud that he makes one's head ache: loud talking is not necessary to good preaching. It is said that Henry Ward Beecher, after preaching one Sunday morning, was walking home with a friend, who said to him, "Henry, I never heard you preach so loud before." Mr. Beecher answered: "When I have nothing to say I always holler."

THE ART OF SPEAKING

A pastor should try to acquire the art of public speaking. He should couch his thought in such language that can be understood by his hearers. A lady went to hear a preacher and she was heard saying as she was leaving the church, "I brought my Bible with me thinking I might want to look up a passage, but I find that I should have brought my dictionary."

He should open meetings on time, and close on time. There may be occasions that would justify him in prolonging the meetings, but these are rare. It is much better to leave the congregation hungry for more preaching than to tire a large number of them with a long sermon. A number of years ago I was preaching to a good-sized audience and I preached a full hour. As I stepped from the platform, a gentleman met me and said, "I could have sit and listened to you another hour." Then a sister came to me and said, "I thought that you were preaching to-morrow night's sermon also." I did not know whether to feel elated or chagrined.

In all of his work he should keep self out of sight. As one old angler who was coaching a young fisherman said, "The first thing to do to become a good fisherman is to keep self out of sight, and the second thing to do is to keep self out of sight, and the third thing is to keep self out of sight."

Colton says: "In pulpit eloquence, the grand difficulty is to give the subject all the dignity it deserves without attaching any importance to ourselves." We ought to feel that we are the servants of our Master and servants of the people; and seek to give them such food as will be most beneficial to them; it may not always please them, but if we manifest a kindly spirit in our preaching, they will think about what we say, and will undoubtedly profit thereby.

SERMONS FOR SPECIAL PURPOSES

It is a good plan to have our sermons suited to the occasion, such as New Year's Day, Easter, Decoration Day, Thanksgiving Day, Christmas Day, and other events. Have a rally day in the fall when all have returned from their vacation and try to get every member to come. Make the day especially interesting and enthuse all with the spirit of work and devotion.

It is a good plan to give a short sermon occasionally to the children; they will appreciate it and look forward with joy to the occasion. Jesus said, "Feed my sheep" but he also said, "Feed my lambs." The parents will also enjoy these meetings.

It is well to give an occasional talk on the financial law, that is, when the congregation is not visited by a bishop or a good live Bishop's agent. Members need it, and when they understand it they will enjoy giving and will receive greater blessings by so doing. We will have more paying tithing, and you will have less difficulty in keeping up the expenses of the branch.

It is a good plan to have a series of sermons for Sunday nights, more especially for the benefit of those who attend the meetings who are not members of the church. We have found this very profitable and have been able to create a good interest.

The pastor should see that the announcements of services are published in the papers. It is well to have a press committee, the pastor to be chairman of same, and get before the public through the press, when you can. See that strangers are made welcome. He should rejoice if he has a good choir who love their work, for they will be of great assistance to him.

HIS APPEARANCE AND DEVELOPMENT

A pastor should be careful of his appearance. He cannot afford to go shabby, and the church cannot afford to have him go that way. He should have his shoes clean, his clothes clean and pressed and his hair dressed, in other words he should be neat in his appearance, for people like to see their pastor neat. It does not matter how eloquent or proficient he may be, if he is slovenly he will lose prestige. He should be a leader of the people, an example to the flock, kind and courteous, easy to be approached and yet not too familiar. William Hazlitt says: "Though familiarity may not breed contempt, it takes off the edge of admiration." His department should be above reproach that the statement of Thomas Fuller may not apply to him: "It was said of one who preached very well, and lived very illy, that when he was out of the pulpit, it was a pity that he should ever go in; and when in the pulpit, it was a pity that he should ever come out."

AN ADVISOR

The pastor of a branch should be in close touch with all the officers and assist them in outlining their work and try to get them to feel that in him they have a friend that they can go to for counsel and advice. He should encourage them to perform their duty, that the membership may be blessed through their labors; for the visiting officers must perform their duty if we are to have a good live branch. The pastor's visit does not take the place of the visit that should be made by the priests. He should urge that the priests visit the homes of each member, at least twice a year, and better still, once a quarter and help him to meet the various problems that confront him in his labors.

When he notices members are absent from several consecutive meetings and he does not know of any good reason, he should inquire whether the teacher has visited them. Should he know of any hardness existing between the members, or members doing wrong, or that which will bring a reproach upon the church, he should see that the teacher look after such members and try to get them to do right and attend the meetings. In other words, the flock and their welfare should ever be upon his heart, their trials, successes, and joys, and he should try to get the officers to do their respective duties faithfully, that is, in the Spirit of Christ, for the letter killeth but the Spirit maketh alive. He should counsel with the deacon, giving him such aid as is necessary for him to carry on his work.

When a man is ordained to an office in the church, that is, a branch office, it is supposed that he will work in the office to which he has been ordained. It may be necessary for the pastor to greatly assist a young officer in starting out to perform his duty. He should aid him in every way possible so that he may become proficient in his work. We have found in many branches, that they have a number of priests, but none of them doing any visiting; also a number of teachers where half of the membership do not attend meetings, but the teachers do not visit them. Part of their duty is to see that the church, that is, the members, meet often together.

The pastor should labor with these officers to get them to perform their respective duties. He should be a worker in the Sunday school and Religio where he has an opportunity to get better acquainted with the younger members of his flock, better understand their needs, and thus be better prepared to feed the lambs. He should meet with the teachers and officers of these societies in their counsel meetings, advising and assisting them in their problems for the improvement of the Sunday school and Religio, and encourage them to work out the social part of their work, so that there will be recreation for our younger members and also for the older ones.

He should encourage every department of the church work, and encourage the officers of the Woman's Auxiliary, especially in its work of teaching the young. He should arrange for a society for the young men and thus help them in their battles against the evils of life. He should try and get all those who have time to spare to work for the interest of the church in some department, for we should all be laborers together with God and it is easier to keep members interested when we can get them to work and they will then share the glory of the fruit that is gathered or the progress made.

A VISITOR

The pastor should visit the members at their homes, finding out how many of the family belong to the church and as far as possible the spiritual development and needs. If there are some of the family not belonging to the church, he can generally find out the reason they have for staying out and in some cases may be able to help remove the objection and win them to the church. He should be interested in the wife, husband, father, or mother, praying for loved ones to see the light, or children praying for their parents, and remember these before the throne of grace in his private devotions.

Often he will be told of the trials of some of the Saints and he should be sympathetic and ready to listen and give them wholesome advice that will enable them to better their condition, or to bear the trials cheerfully and patiently, trusting in God to lift the cloud in his own due time. Some may confess their wrongdoings to him, but he should hear no more of the painful secret than is necessary to aid him to give the proper advice and should see that this confidence is not betrayed, that is, that nothing "leaks out." All should be made to feel that he is a friend, a spiritual father or shepherd and that they can confide in him. One writer has said, "A friend is one that knows all about you and loves you just the same."

He should admonish them not to waste, but diligently to use the time allotted to them in gaining knowledge; that is, where he finds Saints wasting their time. We have found in many homes that they take no studies and have no books or papers, but idle away a great portion of their time.

ENCOURAGE GOOD READING

He should encourage these to take the church papers, and to purchase the standard books of the church and read them, for we cannot have good, live members if they have the chance to read good books and papers and do not. We have been in some homes of the Saints where there were many books and magazines, containing nothing but trashy novels with nothing to elevate, and not a church book or paper in the house. He may get these to read church papers and books, also good books from the library, for some splendid books and good fiction can be obtained from the library that will help us to see the beauty of right living.

Bacon says: "Some books are to be tasted, others swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested." The lives of some people are largely shaped by what they read. The pastor can help the members in selecting their reading matter, and if he has a wide knowledge of books he is better prepared for this duty.

He should be so well acquainted with his congregation that when they are absent from meetings, he may telephone to them (if they have a telephone and he cannot visit them) and find out what is keeping them from meetings, tell them that you missed them and encourage them to come. Most people like to know they are missed and while this particular work, viz., seeing that the church (members) meet often together, belongs to the teacher, the pastor by being watchful and using the means at his hands can save the teacher a great deal of work.

THE CARE OF SAINTS MOVING FROM HOME

When he learns of Saints being in town, who are not members of the branch and are not coming to meetings, he should search for them and try to get them to attend meetings. If they are going to remain there, he should see that their letter of transfer is forwarded to that branch. If members are going to move away from the branch, he should get their address and if they are moving where there is a branch, he should give them the address of the church and the name and address of the president of the branch, also a letter of introduction to the president of the branch. If they expect to remain there, send their letters of transfer to the president or secretary of the branch.

He should also write a letter to the president of the branch advising him of the presence in town of these Saints, giving him their address, requesting him to look them up and get them to attend the services and tell him wherein they need help to enable them to be workers in the church. By so doing the Saints in moving from one branch to another may at once find a place to work and help the branch and also help themselves to advance in this great work.

If Saints are moving to where they cannot attend a branch, he should get the address and write to them occasionally and urge them to correspond with him and give them the address of the district president. Then write to the district president, give him the address of the Saints that have moved into his district and ask him to visit them and as far as possible look after their spiritual needs. In other words, he should keep in touch with them and endeavor to keep them in the faith until they are placed under the care of another shepherd.

A pastor can do a great deal with his pen towards keeping scattered members in the church. The Spirit of our heavenly Father will help him to use his pen as well as his tongue. Many have moved away from a branch and have drifted away from the church, when they might have been saved to the church, if they had been sought after and encouraged. It is a poor idea to gather sheep into the fold and then turn them out into the wilderness to perish.

If all pastors would do as is herein suggested, our Church Recorder would not have to report, as he reported last conference, 34,500 absent from branches.

The pastor should go over the branch record with the secretary carefully, taking a list of all those who are absent from the branch and use every means possible to locate them and get them enrolled upon a branch record where they are located.

CARE OF HOME MEMBERS

The pastor should have a book with names and addresses of the members of the branch, their telephone number, also the address of the place where they work, their business telephone, in order to reach them quickly when he wishes to talk to them and notify them of anything special that may come up. As it is hard to remember all the details of the conditions as he meets them, it might be well for him to have another loose-leaf book where he can note whether they have church papers and books, and what class of studies and reading they have, their strong points of character, as well as their weak ones, so that at a glance he may refresh his memory as to conditions of that member or home. This book could be so arranged so as to note changes as the conditions change and he could then see if the member is falling backwards or going forward. These notes should be kept for his eye alone.

It takes a pastor a long while to learn his congregations and their needs and to plan his work. It has often happened in the past that a minister has just got the work nicely started when he has been appointed to another field, and has had to start all over again. The brother who takes his place finds himself in the same condition. I hope that the time is not far distant when the appointing powers will appoint us for a period of at least four years (of course subject to removal if necessary) as then we can plan with better grace, for we will realize that we will be able to carry out our plans.

AN OVERSEER

One of the definitions of pastor given in the dictionary is a spiritual overseer. What I have written pertains chiefly to a pastor of a branch and it may not be out of place for me to write a few words relative to the duties of a district president.

I received a letter some time ago in which the writer, writing of a district president, said that all he seemed to think of was preaching and the other part of his work was neglected. Preaching is only a part of his work. He should be in close touch with the presidents of the branches and counsel with them and help them in their efforts to improve the conditions of their branch. Have a priesthood meeting of the officers of the branch and encourage each officer to do his respective duty. There may be branches that have no officer who can preach, or the one who does the preaching may be a very poor preacher, and because of this the attendance may be falling off. There may be another branch near by that has several good preachers and he may be able to make arrangements so that they could go and help out.

He should see that as far as possible all the branches hold regular services. He should also try and keep in touch with the scattered members of the district, those who cannot attend a branch and assist them all he can, see that they are given an opportunity to partake of the sacrament occasionally and write to them. We have received letters in answer to letters that we have written to scattered Saints that have made us rejoice and we have felt that they were helped on in the good way.

After all that we may write along this line and all of our studies we shall not be able to accomplish all that we could wish unless we are richly endowed with the Spirit of our Master, and this cannot be obtained unless we live a consecrated life before him and present ourselves a living sacrifice wholly acceptable unto the Lord. May this feeble effort help us to better understand and perform our duty.

ARTHUR ALLEN.

We should be torn to pieces or made silly by the effort to express endless gratitude, or to spend it on some finite object, were we not dimly or clearly aware that benefits received from any one of God's creatures can be repaid to any or all of the others. Indirectly through them, directly through the praise of God, we can utter in infinite time the full force of our gratitude.—Richard C. Cabot, in What Men Live By.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

WHAT LABOR EXPECTS OF THE CHURCH

The following is the synopsis of an address by Brother John R. T. Rives, before the Community Congress held in Birmingham, Alabama, April 2:

I don't know how far I am expected to go in discussing this subject. I am assuming that this conference and these subjects are all born of the reconstruction atmosphere we are living in just now. I shall speak frankly, but not unkindly.

I am not accustomed to speaking in church, but having been invited here, I will take a text, which will be found in Galatians, fifth chapter, first, thirteenth, and fourteenth verses.

First. "Stand fast, therefore, in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage."

Thirteenth. "For, brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another."

Fourteenth. "For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

The church to-day has such an opportunity as has not been before it in a century. It has the heart and a soul for this mission. It has the material means. It has the brains in its ministry and church officials, but, has it the courage?

When Christ, the son of a carpenter, was on earth, the world was under the heel of the Roman Government, the most despotic power on earth at that time. He told the doctor and the lawyers in the temple what labor expected of the church then. And by precept and example went among the masses of the people and preached the new law. Later on, he drove the usurers, money changers, and sellers of doves from the temple.

What labor expects of the church is that it shall not only teach and preach, but that it shall demand of its followers that the principles of Jesus Christ shall be the living, everyday principles of its membership.

Labor expects of the church that it shall give a little less of God on Sunday and very much more of God the other six days of the week.

Labor expects the employers who are members of the church to follow that part of the text which says: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." In other words, that the rights of men to organize and to be represented in the naming of their wages, hours of service, and their working conditions shall not be denied, but their representatives may meet the representatives of capital across the table face to face and discuss these question like brethren should.

We have entered into a new era of thought, of impulses, of aspirations. The man who works may not have caught the vision of "a new heaven." The church must reveal that to him; but he has caught a vision of "a new earth," and he believes that this new earth and the fullness thereof will be for him and his if he is true to the ideals in his heart and life.

Labor expects the church to help him realize this new thought, this new impulse, this new inspiration, and I speak with the knowledge of association with laboring people to-day. If the church will do this, it will come in the appearance of having a new life and new garments to the eyes of labor.

The reconstruction of the world finds us enjoying a new liberty, industrial liberty, which we will never be willing to surrender. We have given to the world's deliverance as much, or more, than any other class. We believe the world is ready to give us our just dues, and we expect the church to help us in maintaining our industrial liberty.

You may say that the industrial world is outside the sphere where the church may exert herself. I hold and will maintain that the church has the proper ground to exercise her powers in any sphere where right and wrong may enter. Some of our preachers who have taken the trouble to visit the men in workshops and mills will tell you that labor is always glad to hear the true teachings of the Nazarene when expounded by the representatives of the church, when they come with the spirit and fire of the Holy Ghost. Sometimes preachers of this kind are frowned down for going out among the workers and familiarizing themselves with the hopes and ideals of the man who toils.

I want to tell you what labor expects of the church from a recent article by one of the church's most representative men, Bishop Charles D. Williams of the Protestant Episcopal Church of Michigan. Hear him:

"We fought this war to make the world safe for democracy, but the masses of the people in every land will not long be satisfied with and fooled by that camouflage of democracy in political form which has hitherto, particularly in America, coexisted contentedly, if not unconsciously, with a most ruthless autoeracy in industry, finance, and commerce. They are going to seek, with increasing clarity of vision and imperativeness of demand, a real democracy which shall penetrate and possess all our life in all its interrelations, particularly in industry and trade.

"They are going to see that the laborer who invests his personality and very life in a business shall have some larger share in the proceeds and also a larger share in the management of that business along with the capitalist who invests his money therein.

"There is a rising surge of aspiration after such a real democracy. It is spreading around the world.

"How are we going to meet it in America? Are we going to attempt merely to militarize the mind of the coming generation into docile submission to the system of 'things as they are,' and to the inviolable authority of the 'powers that be'?"

"Are we going to ask further and attempt to surpass by force the rising tides of this new democracy in industry?"

"These are evidently the plans of our reactionaries and Tories. If they succeed in putting weights on the safe, do not wonder if explosions result.

"If bolshevism ever sweeps over America it will be due not to the I. W. W. and the ignorant proletariat, who fly the red flag, but to the blind conservatives who resist the cosmic tide of the new democracy."

I want you to understand that it was not a laboring man that said the above, but a leading man of the church. Allow me to say that the bolsheviki of Russia and other forces of like character in Europe are not to be confused with the orderly and organized trade unionist of America.

The trades union movement of America has been in existence since the Civil War and is bound by sensible and just rules and regulations, and while labor has not always followed the rules as laid down by their organizations, yet they are long-suffering and patient and believe in law and order.

The proper recognition of orderly and duly organized labor by the employers where all questions may be met and honestly discussed will do more to discourage I. W. W.-ism and bolshevism than any efforts of force of arms can expect to do.

The labor organizations of this country will see to it that bolshevism gets no foothold in this country if industrial autoeracy is abolished and the rights of the men are made secure.—The Railway Conductor, June, 1919.

Unfertile piety is a curse. It is a byword for the heathen and a hissing for the infidel. The religious man who abounds in words, as the fig tree in leaves, who is full of doctrines and authorities, but cannot yield a practical life upon which tired wayfarers can quench their hunger and thirst, only cumber the ground. The test of religion is in its reproductiveness. . . . Any church member who does not bring forth an abundance of good fruit must be taken away and cast into the fire. The barrenness of speculation, the fruitless controversies often indulged in, the dearth of genuine spirituality and practical usefulness in religious bodies, might well necessitate the parable of the fig tree.—P. C. Mozoomdar.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Effective Punishment for Children's Naughtiness

If you should ask any kindergartner what punishment she relies on in all cases needing instant attention, she would invariably answer; isolating a child from the group and excluding him from all work or play, for a short time. Usually putting John to one side where he can see what he is missing will be sufficient, and the question, after a few minutes, as to whether he is now ready to join the class again will meet with a ready acquiescence.

Does this plan work as well in the home as in kindergarten? It certainly does, but it must be differently managed. Since there is not so much definite work or play going on in the home as in kindergarten, exclusion has to be more complete to be noticed by the child. That is to say, something more will be necessary than simply having him draw his chair to one side of the room. It must be, "Go away by yourself, John, until you are ready to be a pleasant companion again." Banishment must be complete even to closing the door. Of course, cries will ensue, sometimes screams, but they are caused by no physical pain, and the mental shock of being entirely alone and cut off from the family is generally all that is needed to stop naughtiness. After the tempest is over, the mother will go to her little one and ask, "We want you when you are yourself again, John. Can we have you back now?"

Many of the minor naughtinesses such as whining, teasing, mimicking, shoving, snatching, and stamping, are easily managed in this simple way.

Just here let me say, we mothers must be careful in our choice of words for wrong actions. Let us not call all of them bad, or even naughty. If a child is disagreeable or unkind when he is tired, we shouldn't tell him that he is bad. Save that worst word for real wrongs like slapping, sneaking, or deceiving and the like. Then it will carry weight and mean something. Real wrongs must be met with severe punishments, such as depriving the child of some cherished possession.

Even a baby as young as a year old feels isolation. One of our little ones was forming the habit of throwing herself back in her high chair and screaming all during mealtime because she didn't get things just as she wanted them. She was cured in less than a week by her father's taking her, chair and all, to the kitchen the minute she began and leaving her there behind a closed door until she stopped. How long did she cry? At the most, two or three minutes, and less and less each time, until she gave up the habit entirely.

Care must be taken to go to the child as soon as the storm passes, or he will begin to cry again from a feeling of neglect.

The isolation method of punishment takes time, but any kind of punishment takes time except the ever easy slap and shake which do so little good and soon breed in the child the fear of physical violence.

By a little wise thinking and skillful management it is often possible to avoid punishments entirely. One method is to avoid the issue by diverting the attention. Another simple preventative is to explain actions and happenings to children. Even two and three-year-olds can grasp much more than most people suppose if it is only told them in language they can understand. Explain what is going to happen and why they should act in such and such a way; explain what did happen and why you asked them to act as you did. Help to trace an action and establish a connection between effects and cause.

Of course, explanation may be carried to excess. Sometimes instant and unquestioning obedience is necessary for safety. Positive commands will always be obeyed if children know that as soon as possible explanations will follow. When a grown-up obeys blind orders, he expects that the reason for them will be explained to him later. Why should not a child expect the same treatment?—Mrs. Laura Willard Lawrence, in Government Bulletin.

The State Should Protect the Child

"Every child should have normal home life, an opportunity for education, recreation, vocational preparation for life, and have moral and spiritual development in harmony with American ideals." The importance of home care and the necessity of adequate family income should be emphasized. The necessity of State supervision of all institutions and agencies caring for children is being stressed. The conclusions of the White House Conference of 1909 concerning the care of dependent children was reaffirmed at the late conference. It is stated that "the child of illegitimate birth represents a very serious condition of neglect and, for this reason, several safeguards should be provided for these children."

Contributions from leaders in juvenile court work and from other fields of public and private charitable endeavor are presented in the volume, Standards of Child Welfare, which may be obtained through the Children's Bureau, United States Department of Labor, Washington, District of Columbia.

Reform and Not Punishment

May an outsider be permitted to say a few words in regard to the moral conditions as they exist at the present time? It seems to one who looks on from the outside in all cities of any size, the real culprits are shielded, while the poor deluded wrecks, who are in many cases blameless; are the ones to receive the punishment. It has been found that the great majority of the young at least, who are classed among the criminals, are irresponsible, weak-willed, feeble-minded, or physically incompetent. You cannot blame the narcotic or alcoholic habituate for resorting to any means in their power to get the drug that is a necessary ingredient to their physical being. To remove these drugs from them at once—makes living a perfect hell to them. Don't blame them if they commit some overt act while in this condition, but put the blame where it rightly belongs—on the state or nation. Such laws should not be passed unless some means are provided to take care of these unfortunates. They are sick and need medical treatment. Some of them can be cured and made self-supporting, while others need institutional care all their lives. The state or institution that takes these cases under control cannot hope to effect a cure in a day, month, or even year. The patient must be treated as sick and kept under care in a hospital for this purpose until cured, and if incurable, handled in the same way as are the insane.

As long as our Government will permit undesirable physical and mental incompetents to marry and bring defectives into the world just so long will our police courts be crowded with criminal and noncriminal defendants. Let us have more common sense and less law and we will go far towards reclaiming practically every "bad boy." As an instance of this you are referred to the act of the Pittsburgh moral court. The magistrate, Tancard de Wolf, is not a lawyer, and some of his acts, while based on common sense, would be exactly contrary to the legal view. Much of the legal red tape has been discarded and old ideas of punishment have been set aside, with apparently ideal effect.

Punishment, as we all know, many of us from experience, embitters, but does not amend the boy, man, woman, or girl. The aim of this Pittsburgh morals court is to make it physically impossible for the boy to commit an offense a second time. This end is attained by changing the entire environment of the boy or girl and placing them in an environment that is wholesome, so that their viewpoint of life may be broadened and clarified, rather than the environment incident to the jail or reform school. The judge makes it plain to the boy or girl what the consequences of continued wrongdoing will be, and points out how much more pleasure and self-benefit will come to them if they act upon the square. For instance, when lawlessness breaks out in any section, he takes it as indicative that a recreation center is badly needed there and his recommendation to the city for such a place is promptly approved. A normal outlet for the surplus energies of youth must be afforded if lawlessness is to cease. He is assisted by a volunteer organization of "regular fellows," represented in the court room by two men, one representing the Catholic church, the other the Protestant. When a boy is brought into the court the judge and his two assistants question him, without formality, without legal phraseology, in fact, it is simply a home council, the boy taking an active part in the council. He is made to think that he is among friends who will protect and not punish him. He is then turned over to these two men and inside of 24 hours a responsible business man (one who is not afraid to take him into his home for fear of contamination), calls on the boy and assumes responsibility for straightening out the youngster's life. He finds a job for the boy, keeps in close touch with his family, and works to correct any conditions in his home or elsewhere that may be unwholesome.

Girls are handled the same way, only it seems harder to get those women, who are so loud in their protestations against the social evils, to act out their preaching. They are afraid that their person might be contaminated, if they act only afar off through a monacle. The results in Pittsburgh have exceeded the expectations of its founder and sponsor. Only subnormal lads appear a second time in the court, as a general rule, and these should be placed under institutional care, according to the degree of their abnormality. Normal youngsters make good. By changing the boy's or girl's attitude toward life before they become incorrigible, they are started on the road to good citizenship. This is a system that we believe will work to a great extent at all ages, if the person is normal; if they are not normal they need institutional care and treatment.—H. T. L., in Omaha Bee.

Purity

The word purity means to us almost more than we can comprehend, and yet, in spite of its great importance, we are sorry to say it is a something which is rarely mentioned nowadays. The words purity and modesty have almost become obsolete, it would seem, and if a mother should suggest them to her girls, she might be assured that they are virtues of the past, or, in other words, "old fogyism."

We are sure that the time is here, however, when many things must not only be mentioned to our young, but impressed upon their minds in such a way that the evils of the present day may pass them by. We should all be concerned with the importance of those factors which will make for the betterment of our children, for the proper place for them to receive the correct light upon life and its problems is in the home, through the careful and prayerful efforts of the parents, who, in their sacred offices, hold the keys to the souls of the young.

We all agree that this correct training should begin at a very early period in a child's life, at the mother's knee, or the home fireside. There, lessons of purity, modesty, and virtue should be taught, as well as the valuable ones of discernment and self-control. Purity of thought, modesty of action, and chastity of speech should be recognized as essentials to right living, and a mother who seeks to bring her little ones up to their highest possibilities cannot overlook the necessity for impressing these upon them. We all desire that our children should develop the very best traits of character—those which should qualify them to take a worthy part in the noblest of life's purposes.

Surely a mother, better than anyone else, can see to it that her girls are dressed modestly, and not allowed to wear extravagant, suggestive styles which she, herself, would blush to wear! And then the girl's speech, and her voice! Do all girls, we wonder, realize how much their words and accents betray of their real characters—their inward lives? The worst and the best traits are often emphasized perhaps all unwittingly, by a girl's conversation. What a joy it is to hear a girl talk in a calm, quiet, well-modulated voice, free from slang or vulgarities, without boisterousness or light-minded suggestions! We can feel sure that such a girl has had the companionship of a loving, thoughtful mother, whose bequeathment to her daughter in this regard, is more valuable than silver or gold.

A girl who, on the contrary, has not had the privilege of an inheritance of refinement, nor that of the best association, can do much towards overcoming those handicaps, and acquiring the poise and good taste which is but the "outward sign of inward grace." Anything can be overcome by the girl who persists in trying, who is watchful and prayerful. She might ask the advice and assistance of some kind woman whom she admires, who will help her to cultivate the lovely and lovable disposition she so much desires. As a minister said, in a sermon on morals, "It only requires stamina and backbone," and girls, don't think, for a minute, that you will not need both of these. You will, if ever you make a success of life, for the enemy of our souls is ever alert to destroy the overconfident or the unwary.

We repeat, you can cultivate any character you desire, but you must understand that the outward semblance of what you would be must come from being that thing! Pure thoughts will give rise to pure speech; modest thoughts will be reflected in modest actions. Gentleness of thought will bring about gentleness of manner, and by constantly watching and controlling your temper, you will attain to uniform kindness and cheerfulness. Think kind thoughts, and you will become a blessing to all, because of your habitual consideration and unselfishness. Be kind to everybody, the old and uninteresting as well as the young and attractive. Especially be kind to your mother, who has given the best years of her life for you, caring for you in your helplessness, and training you in right paths that you may grow up in honor. A good mother is the best friend a girl ever had, and her advice and counsel may be depended upon, for she has only your welfare at heart. Many a heartache would be spared young people, could they but believe in their parents, and trust securely in the counsels given by them. Good parents are entitled to your consideration, your companionship, and your highest regard. The best you can do is not too much, and it will be a comfort to you, some day, to know that you gave that respect and love before it was too late, for "It was your mother who made home happy for you!

Through all the long, sad years
She toiled on, and never stopped to rest
Until they crossed her hands upon her breast—
And closed her eyes—no longer dim with tears!"

MRS. JOHN PRESTON.

MAZOMANIE, WISCONSIN.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Curtis-Chism Debate

The Curtis and Chism debate is a matter of history. On the 12th of this month Brother J. F. Curtis and Elder J. W. Chism began a debate and church propositions were discussed.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was on trial first. Elder J. W. Chism took up a great deal of his time reading from Hyde's History of Mormonism. He used all the histories that our enemies have written against the church, and tried to brand Joseph Smith as a very mean man. Brother Curtis showed by the testimony of thousands of men and women that knew Joseph Smith that he was a noble Christian man.

Elder Chism took some very peculiar positions. He said Christ would never set his feet on earth any more. Brother Curtis read to him the statement made in Zechariah 14: 4-6, stating that Christ will stand upon the Mount of Olives, and the mountain will be divided, and half go north and half south. Chism said that was fulfilled while Christ was on earth. Brother Curtis showed from many other Scriptures that Christ was coming on earth to take charge of his kingdom and reign with his Saints.

Another peculiar position Elder Chism took was that ancient Israel would never be gathered back to Jerusalem, and that David's throne that Christ was to sit on was in heaven.

When the poor little Christian Church came on trial it was sad to hear its pedigree. Brother Curtis had the history of its birth, its organization, how they named the poor little institution, and when the first baptism was performed by Alexander Campbell, of how he went out on a root in the creek and had his candidates walk out in the water to their necks, while he pushed their heads under the water. Brother Curtis read from their own books that God was notified not to have anything to do with this institution called the Christian Church.

All this brought fire from those who are looking to this institution for salvation, and it looked for a while as though we were going to have a rough debate, but all soon quieted down, and the debate went on nicely. The Christian people wanted to rule out all of their books, but we had a fine man for a chairman—Mr. Alma Moore of Fort Towson. Indeed he was a noble man and wanted everyone to have justice, and he gave it to all concerned. So the book was introduced, and when the death knell came, then came many sad looks.

To say we had a victory would be putting it mildly. Brother Curtis is a noble servant of the Lord, and a fine debater, and by the help of God's divine Spirit, he is able to confound all enemies of truth.

Our chairman did not belong to any church, but he enjoyed the debate. He said his soul was delighted to know he had heard the gospel of Jesus Christ, and my prayers are that he may accept it some day.

Elder Chism's moderator was Elder Foster of Fort Towson. He is a nice man, and he and I got along splendidly in the debate.

Two were baptized next morning after the debate closed, and I believe many others are near the kingdom.

The chairman, to show his appreciation of what he enjoyed during the debate, gave Brother Curtis a ten-dollar gold piece, which he had had for twenty years.

The Saints in the vicinity where the debate was held did all they could to make it a success. They spared neither money nor time. Indeed there are noble Saints in that vicinity.

So may the gospel roll on until all the honest in heart have heard it, and Zion be built up and our Savior come and reign with his Saints. Then our warfare will be over and we will be at peace. May God speed the day.

Your brother,

E. A. ERWIN.

A Vision in Answer to Prayer

I saw the Lord come down from heaven to a beautiful temple. There was a beautiful paved road from it. I then went to the temple for shelter as there was a terrible storm on. My thoughts turned to my children. I asked, Where are my children? A voice said that they had been changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye.

As I stepped to the door of the temple there stood the Savior. I kissed his cheek, and then his feet, and then his robe. As I rose the door of the temple opened and Jesus said, Enter. On entering I saw a large table and a man at the head of it. He had a long, white beard. I stepped to him and asked him if he was John the Baptist. He answered, "I am Lehi." I asked him about baptism, and my parents, and my husband. He told me that an angel would be sent to them to guide them.

As I looked at the building I said, "This temple is built on a rock." Then Lehi answered, "Some men built their house on the sand and when the flood came it fell. But this house is built on a rock and shall stand forevermore." He confirmed this bringing his hand down smartly on the table.

I then went out of the temple and on returning I walked down the aisle singing "Redeemer of Israel," when all joined in with me.

Dear Saints: As the vision was very long, for the want of space I only have given the important part of it for publication. At the time I received the vision, I was praying to know if this was the true church. I did not know who the Prophet Lehi was, and kept the vision to myself for some time, as I wished to find out who Lehi was. I had been convinced of the work, hearing Brother A. Miller in his sermons, yet I wished some evidence.

On June 15, I heard a sermon on the Book of Mormon from Brother A. Miller. At times I was carried away in my mind in this sermon and when he came to speak of Lehi leaving Jerusalem, and the good work he did in his journey and on this continent, I was caused to rejoice as I had found out who Lehi was.

The next day, June 16, I told Brother Miller the vision:

I saw his eyes fill with tears as he said, "It is of God." I asked for baptism and on June 22 he baptized me, and now I wait my confirmation when an elder comes here.

I am thankful to the Lord that he gave me the vision, and that he used his servant to reveal to me who Lehi was. I trust I shall be faithful to my covenant and some day see my Savior and that dear old prophet, Lehi, as I shall know him when I shall see him again.

Your sister in the truth,

MRS. MARY CARTER.

PORT ARTHUR, ONTARIO.

---

The Lamoni Stake Reunion

---

Some things we would like to make mention of. First, the grounds were more beautifully dressed this year on account of so much moisture in the spring.

And then the splendid behavior on the part of all who attended, as to not need policing as in former years.

The musical numbers rendered by both individuals and the choir were beautiful. One number especially we would mention, as to its beauty and also as being out of the ordinary, was a song by Sister Lucy Smith Lysinger, accompanied by Sister Audentia Smith Anderson and son Duane. The words were one of Sister Vida Smith's latest poems (so you see it was a Smith number), and was much spoken of as being sublime and beautiful.

Another thing we noticed was the simplicity in which our sisters dressed this year, gingham or its equivalent being in the foreground. Sister Audie, or perhaps as well known by Sister "A. A." [Audentia Anderson] appearing the most of the time in this fabric, others of note did likewise.

And again, the relief we mothers enjoyed this year of not worrying about our little boys, as they were so well taken care of and so much enthused with the Boy Scout movement, conducted by Brother Orrin Moon and Forrest Roberts. The little fellows were anxious to go to the reunion because they had something special to do.

And at the young people's tent! What grand spiritual prayer services they had, and the afternoon programs where Sister Vida Smith, Alice and Bertha Burgess, and Sister Luella Wight were so entertaining. The girls say they were splendid.

And so we could go on writing at length of the good things at our reunion, but will leave the rest for some more able writer. There is usually so little said or seen in our pages of the Lamoni Stake reunion, and so many want to know about it.

A SISTER.

---

Lamoni Stake

---

The work in the stake and in the central place looks prosperous and healthful. There seems to be nothing spectacular in progress, but the impressions one gets are good.

The impetus given us by the recent excellent reunion, the coming of more pleasant weather, the beginning of the school year, all conduce to united and strenuous efforts.

We are pleased to see such fine looking young people enrolled in the new missionary training course at Graceland. Already they have been meeting and passing various tests preliminary to the real heavy work to come. The course is a heavy one, the intention being to make it intensive and of the utmost value to those selected for the work. Seventeen are here of those chosen by the committee, two having to drop out because of illness. Others are here and coming to take the course on their own initiative, deeming it of special value to them. In the intelligence tests given them some records were broken. One of the young brethren made 186 points of a possible 212, while the highest previous record at the school was 176 in a tie by two last year. As a whole the new class averages higher than most groups of the size. And it is also of interest to note that as a rule, those with the most schooling ranked the highest, though certain individuals ranked higher than the average in their group.

The usual four ward meetings and the young people's social service are being held on Wednesday evenings. In addition, there is the social service on Sunday afternoons and at the homes for the aged on Wednesday evenings.

The publicity committee of the branch have recently installed an encased announcement board on the busiest business corner of town, and are keeping all church activities announced. With this addition to the liberal space given by the local newspaper, nearly everyone in the entire community may be reached with the announcements.

We are pleased to note that for Sunday the 31st, five of the new missionary class are engaged to fill preaching appointments in this and surrounding communities. This will keep them in touch with the people and allow the people to get acquainted with them.

The combined Religio-church services in the park on Sunday evenings are continuing. In the second series of subjects taken up by the speakers are three, two of which have already been delivered: "The Saint in the home," by D. T. Williams; "The Saint in society," by S. A. Burgess; "The Saint in school," by G. N. Briggs. These services are well attended and considered a success. The Religio puts on the program features.

A series of two-day meetings are to be held in the stake soon. They will no doubt be announced. They are called two-day meetings, but in reality begin on Friday evening and continue over Saturday and Sunday. D. T. Williams is the special sponsor of these meetings.

College opens on the fourth with a fine prospect for a large enrollment and a successful year. Though the dormitories were fully engaged long before now, the homes of Lamoni are being thrown open to students, and it is likely some suitable accommodations will be provided for all.

E. D. MOORE.

---

DALLAS, TEXAS, August 19, 1919.

As a branch we have been dragging behind considerably in the past, not doing as much for the cause of Christ as we could have done, for several different reasons. But I think the time has come that our little branch has set a new mark and is trying to work to that end.

We had with us a few Sundays ago, Brother Banta from Houston, and his sermons were enjoyed by everyone who attended. While here, we had a business meeting and re-elected officers for the ensuing term. We have as our presiding officer Elder W. R. Standefer, who is a fluent speaker. We also have Elder Moore, one who is very devoted to the church and indeed a noble speaker. We are so glad to see the branch take new life, and trust that God's Spirit will be with us all, and direct each one, that we may make this among the most lively branches in the district.

Our little band is striving to come forward with our Christmas offering, and I know we will do so. So look out for us in the future. Our branch is trying to be such that when visiting missionaries come into our midst we will have something to be proud of. We have had some very active members with us who have done much for the upbuilding of the work at this place, but they have been placed in other fields of labor. We ask God's richest blessings upon them that he will always be with them. The Lord knows best.

We have our meetings as usual: Sunday school at 10 a. m., preaching—11 a. m., Religio—6.30 p. m., history class—7.30 p. m., and preaching again at 8.30 p. m. Also have our Wednesday evening prayer meetings, which are enjoyed by all.

BRANCH CORRESPONDENT.

WATERLOO, IOWA, August 18, 1919.

Editors Herald: The Waterloo Branch, "the baby" of the Eastern Iowa District, is growing upward we hope in spite of many obstacles and trials. Recently we purchased two splendid lots on which stood a little old stone building sixty-four years old. We are with hard work bringing this little stone building into a beautiful state of repair and expect to occupy the same the early part of September. We are poor, hard-working people, but we know God will still continue to bless us if we continue faithful as he has so bountifully done before. One good sister has given her organ for the cause, another a stove, and still another young sister has made a beautiful pulpit from the boards derived from the wreckage of an old organ which was in the building. Brother V. A. Hall, our branch president, is a young man of energy and high ideals, who has done much to make this branch what it is. He and Brother W. H. Hinds with their strongly opposite natures, one of impetuous enthusiasm and the other of calm deliberation keep the equilibrium of the branch in good shape. We thank God for all earnest workers and pray that others may more fully sense the gravity of saving souls, which is the hub of our activities.

Many persons in the vicinity of our prospective church are anxiously waiting for its opening. Several children have expressed the desire of attending our Sunday school.

Our hearts were made glad and thankful by the baptism of a young brother recently. This young man has a work to do for the Lord if he keeps the faith.

There are many men out of work in this city because of labor conditions. Surely men's hearts fail them when they see these conditions coming on the world. Oh, we have so much to be thankful for when we are privileged to be in the kingdom with its manifold blessings!

Realizing my own unworthiness and foolishness, I ask the prayers of those who read these few lines, that I may ever follow in the footsteps of Jesus.

A striving sister in Christ,

MYRTLE GRAPES.

AKRON, COLORADO, August 24, 1919.

Editors Herald: The work in this part of the Lord's vineyard has been progressing very nicely in the hands of Brothers J. Charles May and James A. Thomas. Though the harvest has not been abundant the fruit is of excellent quality. Two new openings have been effected in this immediate locality and three earnest souls have entered the fold.

Some four months ago while directing the music in the Methodist church a young lady in the choir asked me a couple of questions that opened my eyes to the fact that there were people who were actually seeking the kingdom of God. They were as follows: "Do you think that baptism by immersion, administered by one who believes in several modes of baptism will be accepted of God?" "Don't you think the Christian Church comes nearer being patterned after the church that Christ established while he was here on earth than any other?"

A young man in the same congregation in a casual way, expressed his desire to sometime become a preacher. I think he has been spoiled now for a preacher for any organization save the one teaching the gospel of Christ in its fullness, though he has not yet expressed his desire to unite with the church. I began talking with these young people and with one or two others who seemed to be interested, and soon found need for official assistance. I wrote my brother James at Wray, asking him to come. We procured a schoolhouse six miles from Akron for Sunday services, and he did some fireside work between times. Brother May joined him later, and as a result of the efforts the young lady mentioned above, Sister Helen Zapf, was led into the waters of baptism. Sister Zapf was present at a prayer meeting prior to her baptism, and in an effort to prove to her own satisfaction the truthfulness of our religious belief made this statement: "I don't understand why God would send his Spirit to encourage you in your meetings, as he did in that one, if you were not representing his true church."

Later two others in the neighborhood of the schoolhouse, Brother and Sister Ervin Parker united with the church. These three are firm in their belief, and in the prayer meetings testify so positively that they know this work is true.

Brother Coral Willis, president of the Wray Branch, and Brother and Sister Reno Auld of Otis, together with those mentioned above, ten altogether, assembled in prayer and sacrament service at my home two weeks ago. The Spirit of God was certainly with us. Everyone took part in both prayer and testimony, including the one who has not yet come into the fold, and never have I seen a band of people who seemed to enjoy themselves more than did this little group of Saints.

Last Sunday we held another prayer meeting, and had the pleasure of having Sister May with us. Needless to say another spiritual feast was enjoyed.

On Monday evening we met for the purpose of organizing a home class, and our first meeting is to be held this afternoon. Six of our local Saints who, we believe, will be in regular attendance, were present at the organization. It is quite possible that four or five others will be in position to meet with us frequently.

Last Sunday evening the brethren held a farewell service at the schoolhouse prior to leaving for the reunion at Fort Collins. About sixty were present. Special music, including a duet in Tahatian by Brother and Sister May, was a part of the evening's program, Brother Thomas preaching the sermon. After the services a gentleman asked the boys if they objected to them taking a collection. It was explained that we do not attempt to encourage collections, but that if they cared to do so it would be all right. The result was $24, which solved the question of railroad fare to the reunion, a question that had been made a subject of prayer a day or two before.

Brother May and Brother Thomas have been doing some very effective work in the musical part of their programs, and their sermons have been filled with the Holy Spirit. In fact, it has recently been said of one of them, "He seems to have so much of the Holy Spirit with him." They certainly make a good team, and one man said to me this morning, "We sure miss the boys."

They have also been holding meetings at Dillingham, about thirty miles south of Akron, and two were recently baptized there. The meetings held there were during the busy harvest season, and it was seldom that the crowd could assemble for preaching services before ten o'clock, and the baptisms took place at midnight, after one of their regular evening sermons.

The people here are looking forward to their return for a series of meetings, which we hope for the latter part of September.

Yours in gospel bonds,
D. O. THOMAS.

PITSMOOR, SHEFFIELD, ENGLAND, August 3, 1919.

Editors Herald: The conference of the Sheffield District convened in the Saint's Chapel, Revell Street, Claycross, Derbyshire, on July 12 and 13. Conference business session was in charge of the presidency of the district, and the Saints of all the branches turned out in force. I believe it was a record in point of numbers, there being over sixty visitors present on Sunday.

Elder Charles Cousins, district president, was the speaker at the morning session. We again had the pleasure of the company of Brother and Sister John Schofield, along with Brethren Meredith and Thomas Kendrick; the last named Brother now resident in Sheffield.

The reports to hand indicated that the spirit of progress was in our midst, and the desire was manifest on all hands to heed the injunction to come up higher.

High Priest John Schofield, of Birmingham was in charge of the afternoon fellowship meeting, when the spirit of worship was present to a large degree. There was a baptism between the afternoon and evening services—Doris Arber, the youngest daughter of the writer was inducted into God's kingdom, the confirmation taking place at the same time. Brother Abel Hall baptized our young sister. A life of usefulness was promised, provided our sister heeded the admonition of the Spirit, coupled with the instruction received from her parents.

Brother Abel Hall of the missionary force was the speaker at the evening meeting. Thus closed one of the best conferences ever held in this district.

In behalf of the district,
G. H. ARBER, Secretary.

6 Cranworth Road.

GROTON, CONNECTICUT, August 3, 1919.

Editors Herald: Our reunion at Onset, Massachusetts, closes to-day. It was my privilege to attend eleven days, and we enjoyed a spiritual and social feast. Our testimony meetings were all good, the gifts being manifest in nearly every one. Among those that preached were Richard Baldwin, C. Ed Miller, recently returned from the islands, Bishop Lewis of Australia, Apostle Gomer Griffiths, Elder Hull of Attleboro, Massachusetts, John Sheehy of Maine, and Elder Gleazer of Pennsylvania, and a host of local preachers. Our lovely surroundings were conducive to spirituality and we were all edified.

The health of the campers was generally good. One prophecy, given through Sister Lucy Sears, said that the Lord was pleased with the young and that their play was like the songs of the birds to him. It was a common sight to see the little ones hand in hand with Brother Griffiths, and other of the elders. A number were baptized before I went home last Wednesday.

Bishop Bullard of Independence, Missouri, gave a good talk to us along the line of duty in temporal things. It was with sorrow that I separated from them Wednesday morning and started home to New London, one hundred and fifteen miles away, where we arrived at 4.40 p. m. to find all well.

We are expecting some of the ministry to visit us ere long and hope to see something done here along spiritual lines. Our reunions are a source of spiritual and social uplift, especially for us scattered Saints, and we were made to long for the time when we should be gathered in Zion.

Praying that God will give spiritual strength and wisdom to those in authority to that end, I am,

As ever, yours in the restored gospel,
THOMAS G. WHIPPLE.

COCHITUATE, MASSACHUSETTS, August 25, 1919.

Editors Herald: I do not want to miss a copy of my paper as I am isolated from any church just now. Am a member of the Brockton Branch, but as my husband is blind I cannot leave him to go as I used to, so the HERALD and Ensign are my only means of hearing the gospel. I am strong in the faith, and my faith in my heavenly Father has done great things for me and my husband, who is also a member.

Yours in bonds,
MAY ARMAND.

CRITICISM

(Continued from page 860.)

race, is that at last, justice will be done to all, that is, just criticism or judgment, will be passed upon all.

We should as a people sense very clearly the need of constructive criticism, in civic affairs and in the church. We want men who can think clearly and independently. Just criticism is founded upon knowledge.

In the case of Lincoln, it is said that he suffered more from attacks behind, from those who should have supported him, than he did from his opponents in the South or elsewhere. Also in the case of McKinley, he was attacked more by democratic papers than by the press of Spain. And again recently we have the sight, in the case of President Wilson, of the numerous attacks from the opposition party, the supposedly American party, attacking what the head of the Government was trying to do so severely as to give aid and comfort to the enemy. Yet this was permitted to pass.

We seriously question that we need in the church, constituted opposition. In fact, we are of the opinion that we do not. By this term we mean a body of men who, while they may pass by the larger part of the matter presented, yet are watching critically always for every fault and consider it their place to do everything that can possibly be done always in opposition. Distinction should be drawn between this regular, continued opposition, and the critical attention which any measure warrants, and which it should receive before adoption by the body. This critical attention may be undertaken in a fair and kindly spirit, and so it may be seen that there is nothing of animus in their discussion. This is as it should be.

S. A. B.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Conference Minutes

EASTERN OKLAHOMA.—August 2, 10 a. m., at Fort Towson, Oklahoma, District President J. C. Chrestensen in charge. Branches reporting: Manchester, Winthorpe, Haileyville, Grannis, Wilburton. Seven of the priesthood reported. Fanshawe, Oklahoma, chosen as place of next conference, time to be fixed by district president. Election of officers: J. C. Chrestensen, president, J. E. Kelsey, secretary-treasurer.

WESTERN COLORADO.—At Bayfield, August 16 and 17. District President Amos T. Higdon was in charge. A large number of nonmembers attended and were especially interested in the preaching services. E. N. Slick was ordained to the office of priest and John T. Scannell to the office of elder. There were four baptisms and five children blessed. J. D. Curtis and O. E. Sade were present and presented the gospel story in a powerful way. John T. Scannell.

SEATTLE AND BRITISH COLUMBIA.—August 5, 1919, during the time of reunion at Bellingham, Washington, District President J. M. Terry and W. M. Aylor, presiding, F. W. Holman secretary. Bishop's agent's report showed a total debit of $2,730.50 and a disbursement of $2,364.73. District treasurer's report showed a debit of $126.43 and an expenditure of $55.23. Branch statistical reports showed: Seattle with a membership of 329, loss 1; Roslyn 37; Centralia 184, gain 18; New Westminster 94, gain 8; Chilliwack 49, no change; and Bellingham 46, gain 8; making a total of 735 for the district as reported, and a grand total of 782, with disorganized branches: Tacoma, Castle Rock, and Nanaimo added. Ministry reporting: 9 elders, 2 priests, and one deacon. District officers elected for the ensuing year: J. M. Terry, president; C. N. Heading, vice president; F. W. Holman, secretary-treasurer; G. R. Brundage, member of gospel literature board; Harold Premo, member library board; Orville L. Opplet, chorister, and F. W. Holman, member auditing board, for three-year term. John Hartnell was sustained as Bishop's agent. Bellingham selected as the place for reunion in 1920. G. R. Brundage, John Hartnell, and Jacob Berringer elected to serve together with the district presidency, as reunion committee, with power to appoint such others as thought needed by them. By resolution, the raising of a tent fund was started, realizing $55.82 in contributions and subscriptions, John Hartnell made custodian of said fund. Seattle was selected for the coming February conference, at the call of the district presidency. All who may desire to be transferred from the disorganized branches of Tacoma, Castle Rock, and Nanaimo, will please apply to the undersigned. Frederick W. Holman, secretary, 3633 Whitman Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

Conference Notices

Florida, with Alafloa Branch, eight miles south of Brewton, Alabama, 10 a. m., October 3. E. N. McCall, secretary.

Central Michigan, at Whittemore, September 27 and 28. Branch secretaries should get reports to Elsie Janson, Rose City, before that time. Some of the brethren of the leading quorums are expected to be with us. As the gathering is expected to be a large one, come with full baskets, as was voted at last conference. Matthew Umphrey, president.

Convention Notices

Central Michigan Sunday school September 26, 2 p. m., at Rose City. Gladys Umphrey, secretary, Bentley, Michigan.

Quorum Notices

Northern Michigan quorum of elders at Boyne City, Michigan, September 20 and 21. All elders requested to be present. E. S. White, president.

Notice

To Branch Presidents of Northern California: To meet the expenses of the district, it is necessary that each do his share. Quarterly contributions can be made as follows: First quarter, January 1 to March 31; second quarter, April 1 to June 30; third quarter, July 1 to September 30; fourth quarter, October 1 to December 31. Some of the branches are always punctual, others are not. This is not a complaint, but a reminder. Please send your contributions to me. C. A. Parkin, treasurer 579 Fifth Avenue, San Francisco, California.

Reunion Notices

Florida, at the Alafloa Church, eight miles south of Brewton, Alabama, October 3. E. N. McCall, of reunion committee.

Reunion Calendar

(The figures in parenthesis give the page of the HERALD on which details have been given.)

Northeastern Illinois, Plano, Illinois, August 29 to September 7 (553).

Southwestern Oregon, Myrtle Point, August 29 to September 7 (759).

Florida, Alafloa Church, eight miles north of Brewton, Alabama, October 3. (878.)

Addresses

Elder R. D. Weaver, Box 35, Cameron, Missouri.

Information Wanted

The Pittsburg, Kansas, Branch, desire information as to whereabouts of the following: Louis H. Bradshaw, John W. DuBoise, Violet Gass, Arminda D. Harmon, Sarah Arminda Harmon, William Henry Harmon, Loretta Urmal Harmon, Bessie Hammon Ray, Jess Ray. Address A. R. Gilbert, branch secretary, 112 West Jefferson Street, Pittsburg, Kansas.

Book Reviews

A SAMPLE CASE OF HUMOR.—By Strickland Gillilan, $1.25, Forbes and Company, Chicago. The author is a humorist of the type who arouse our risibilities yet leave us more thoughtful and serious from the experience. In other words, the introspection caused by reading such a book as this new one is worth far more to one than the price would indicate. Speaking of humor's purpose he says: "Yet there is a purpose far higher than mere tickle, in humor. A healthy laugh is a blessing. But humor should have a more lasting effect. It should teach us optimism. Optimism is the opposite of pessimism. Pessimism—well, it is the least sane of all the human characteristics." The "sample case" idea in the title is shown in the various sorts of humor he presents, all sane and well-balanced and wholesome.

THE MAN WHO DISCOVERED HIMSELF.—By Willis George Emerson. Forbes and Company, Chicago, $1.50. This novel is based on an inspirational theme and cannot fail to enthruse those inclined to minimize their possibilities. In the fight for health, the hero regains it and much more, the whole situation, with its contrasting unpleasantnesses proceeding with increasing interest to a strong climax. If the author had not seemingly strained himself to force the use of tobacco and wine on the hero who evidently was not so inclined, it would be a story to meet with our entire approval. We who have tried it, know it is possible to sound the depths of comradeship or genial friendship without recourse to the filthy weed or the glass that sparkles. These features do not spoil the story for the discriminating, but largely disqualify it for universal recommendation to our young people.

Our Departed Ones

RAMSHAW.—At Union, Cass County, Nebraska, August 19, 1919. Sister Agnes, daughter of Brother and Sister William Ramshaw, aged 20 years, 6 months, and 13 days. She had diabetes for some months but died unexpectedly when away from home. She was a worthy Saint, dutiful to her parents, and beloved by many friends. Her body was brought home to Lamoni and laid to rest. The services were in charge of D. T. Williams, sermon by H. A. Stebbins. Agnes was born at Ellenboro, Grant County, Wisconsin, in 1899.

GARRETT.—Albert L. Garrett died from an accident while sawing at a mill, August 21, 1919. He was born October 8, 1881, at Benton, Saline County, Arkansas. Married Miss Pearl E. Taylor of Saline County, Arkansas, August 17, 1901. Baptized at Hot Springs, Arkansas, October 16, 1918, by E. A. Irwin. Lived a faithful and brotherly life. Leaves to mourn, wife, 5 children and a host of relatives and friends. Interment in Pleasant Hill Cemetery. Sermon by T. A. Donathan.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor.

The official organ of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Published every Wednesday by the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. Entered at the post office at Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

PRICE, $1.75 A YEAR IN ADVANCE

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words.

CAIN.—Nina Cain, wife of Brother G. J. Cain was born November 13, 1872, in Fountain County, Indiana; died August 4, 1919, at her home in Indianapolis, Indiana, aged 47 years. Sister Cain was baptized September 13, 1914, and remained a faithful member, until death. Funeral in charge of J. E. Matthews of Columbus, Ohio, and burial in Crown Hill Cemetery. A husband and numerous friends are left to mourn.

FRANTZ.—Vivian Maude Frantz, daughter of Addison and Maude Frantz, was born September 22, 1907, at Chicago, Illinois. Died August 23, 1919, at 8 p. m. after a severe illness of several months. Vivian was baptized by H. P. W. Keir, at Chicago, May 27, 1917. Her mother and father deeply mourn her departure, and their grief is so intense that they are in great need of our prayers. Funeral August 26, 1919. Sermon by Frank F. Wipper.

FROM HERE AND THERE

COST OF LIVING

The Commoner for August, 1919, states that a Washington dispatch of August 7 shows that the cost of foodstuffs have advanced 88 per cent since before the war, some items 100 per cent or more such as sugar, pork, potatoes, cornmeal, flour, and lard. The past year alone food advanced 14 per cent.

Since December 1915 there has been an increase of 120 per cent in the cost of wearing apparel, 45 per cent in fuel and light, 125 per cent for furniture and furnishings, and 65 per cent for miscellaneous articles.

GOVERNMENT INSURANCE

The Government reports that during the war the number of applications for war risk insurance was 4,539,048, for a total of nearly 40 billion dollars; that the average policy was for $8,740. The number filed in the active war period totaled 900 million. The premiums paid by men in active war period was 200 million. The net cost to the nation 700 million dollars. Over twenty-five thousand death claims were approved and over thirty thousand disability through service claims, a total of $1,652,000 each month, or a little less than twenty million a year. Much of the insurance runs for twenty years; that is, the Government pays an annuity for that period of time.

NATURE STUDY IN SUNDAY SCHOOL

"Should a Sunday school class absent themselves from the sessions of the school for nature study, and if so, should they be marked present or absent?" was asked of the superintendent of the General Sunday School recently. His affirmative answer is found in the Sunday school department of the September Autumn Leaves, and should have a wide reading. In addition to this discussion, there are a number of other timely topics presented.

PLEASE SIGN YOUR NAME

Again we must insist that our contributors sign their names to the items sent us. It is not necessary to always print the names, but we want to know who is responsible for the information. Our rule is to pay no attention to anonymous contributions, but since we try to maintain a personal relation between the editors and the readers, we fear some might misunderstand. We have a letter from a brother who explains in detail the difficulties he has encountered, and desires the prayers of the Saints. For a great many reasons, we need the name of such a person, though there is no special reason why it should be printed, if the writer prefers to remain unknown.

CONTENTS

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| EDITORIAL:  |     |
| The Church and Education  | 857 |
| School Attendance   | 859 |
| Another Missionary Passes Away  | 859 |
| A Restoration Needed  | 860 |
| Criticism   | 860 |
| ORIGINAL ARTICLES:  |     |
| Public Speaking, by Ralph W. Farrell  | 861 |
| Homiletics. A study in the Art of Preaching, by W. H. Greenwood   | 863 |
| Pastoral Work: What is it and How Conducted, by Arthur Allen  | 866 |
| OF GENERAL INTEREST:  |     |
| What Labor Expects of the Church  | 870 |
| WOMAN'S AUXILIARY   |     |
| Mrs. John Preston.  | 872 |
| LETTER DEPARTMENT   |     |
| E. A. Irwin—Mrs. Mary Carter—E. D. Moore—Myrtle Grapes—D. O. Thomas—Thomas G. Whipple—G. H. Arber—May Armand. | 874 |
| MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT  |     |
| FROM HERE AND THERE   | 878 |
|   | 879 |

QUARTERLIES EARLIER

Everything indicates that the issuance of the various grades of Sunday school and Religio Quarterlies will be in ample time to reach the various schools in this land before the expiration of the present quarter. A strenuous effort is being made by all concerned, from the editors to the publishers, to get ahead of the present belated schedule, and these efforts are bearing fruit. Without doubt, the plan to issue these in sufficient time to reach foreign fields in time for use on the dates published will soon materialize. The publication of such large editions requires considerable time, and to get ahead means special effort, but things are hopeful all around.

The Bishopric Advocate for 1919

Every Member a Tithe Payer

LITTLE THINGS

"The street car companies get rich on small fares. The prudent man acquires knowledge by turning to profit the odd moments of the day."

The gospel can be preacher to "every nation, kindred, tongue, and people" by everyone paying their tithe no matter how small.

JUDGING

"Do not believe all you see. The tallest shaft in the cemetery doesn't always reach nearest to heaven." We might add that the man who gives the most is not always a better man than the man who gives as the law of God demands—his tithe.

Think it over.

LECTURE COURSE ANNOUNCEMENT

The Extension Department of Graceland College has taken over the lecture board work and asks the cooperation of district presidents, branch presidents, Religio and Sunday school leaders, besides all who have the ability to deliver interesting educational addresses.

Officers in the various departments of the church are asked to acquaint their membership with the opportunity they have of obtaining this lecture service, and to communicate with the Extension Department.

The lecture work offers a splendid opportunity for service to men and women who are capable public speakers. Every reader of this announcement who has specialized in science, literature, history, child study, philosophy, sociology, economics, medicine, dentistry, hygiene, education, business, or other lines, and who can assist in this work should offer his or her services. Lecturers with stereopticon equipment and lantern slides are especially needed.

All concerned in this announcement are urged to communicate with the Extension Department, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

EDUCATION FOR EVERYONE

The Extension Department of Graceland College reports a steady increase in enrollments for the correspondence courses offered by the college. This department of our church college is offering a considerable number of very fine correspondence courses which should appeal to thousands of people within the church who desire to develop and become better educated but cannot attend school.

The following courses are being offered at present: Mathematics, language—Latin and English, history—ancient, medieval, modern, American history; commercial bookkeeping, commercial law, salesmanship, penmanship, commercial arithmetic; college and special psychology, history of education, principles of education, economics, sociology, logic, ethics, English, grammar, composition and rhetoric, English classics, public speaking. There are also offered the regular normal training courses for Sunday school and Religio workers; these include work in Bible history, Bible geography, Book of Mormon history, Book of Mormon geography and institutions, teacher training, and other subjects.

Everyone in the church should learn more fully about this opportunity for home study which is offered by their own educational institution, and should write at once for literature and information to the President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

THE CAMP LOG

We are in receipt of most of volume 1 of The Camp Log, the camp newspaper issued during the recent joint reunion at Pertle Springs. The editor is Alice Myrmda Smith, with a number of reporters or contributing editors. It seems to have been issued in ample editions for the entire camp each day by the use of a mimeograph, and sold at one cent each.

In addition to short and pertinent editorials, there appear timely announcements, comments, and the little items that go to make up a newspaper of interest. Where carefully and conscientiously edited, these camp newspapers have proved to be indispensable in the larger reunions.

In notifying us of the change of his address from Trenton to Cameron, Missouri, Brother R. D. Weaver says: "I am well and happy in the work. Like the Far West Stake splendidly so far, and hope to make a success of my work here. I attended the reunion at Stewartsville and met some very fine people there and had a very good time."

The Saints of Des Moines maintained an eating house on the grounds during the recent Iowa State Fair, and at last report were doing well, expecting to clear a thousand dollars. Last year they made seven hundred dollars.

"BACK TO SCHOOL WEEK"

During August we noted posters displayed in a number of prominent places urging the observance of "Back to school week," the movement being in the special interests of the Boys' Working reserve. On the posters were five very convincing reproductions of educational charts, which we learn were from originals worked out by President G. N. Briggs, of Graceland College, when he was in the employ of the United States Bureau of Education. They were originally used at the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco.

HERALDS WANTED

The editors would like to have some Lamoni Saint supply us with four copies of the HERALD that we lack for a special file. Phone, write to or see the editors so we won't need to get a lot of duplicates. We need two copies of January 9, 1918 issue, one of January 23, 1918, and one for October 30, 1918.

Sister (Mrs.) Bertha M. V. Converse, Box 133, Rexford, Montana, recently baptized, wants the addresses of some of the Canadian elders. She has lived at various points and desires to have her former friends hear the gospel. Those anywhere near the following places should write her: Westaskwin, Ponoka, Clanesholm, Stavely, Alberta, and Rocanville, Saskatchewan.

WANTED At once

Pressman, for two Miehle cylinder presses and two job presses.

Press feeder, for Miehle cylinder press.

For details write to J. A. Koehler, Manager

Herald Publishing House

Lamoni, Iowa

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Réorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8:31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2:36.

Volume 66

Lamoni, Iowa, September 10, 1919

Number 37

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

SQUARE BLOCKS

I may have in my mind a very splendid picture of a rose. But if I am obliged to attempt to outline and portray that rose with the aid only of square wooden blocks I convey to your mind a very inadequate idea of that which is in my mind.

That is the trouble with words. They are square blocks that we have invented to express our thoughts. They are very imperfect and we use them very imperfectly—all of which accounts for a great deal of the misunderstanding in the church as well as in the world.

It is true that some men are more gifted than others. With them language is both vivid and plastic, taking always the form of their thought—but most of us work with square blocks.

Fortunately, however, words are more important in logic than in life—if you can get what is meant by that. Men of scholastic mind are always very much interested in formulating exact definitions for every proposition—or rather in attempting to formulate exact definitions. That is proper, too, for definitions must accompany every attempt to analyze. But we repeat, words are more important to logic than to life.

The spirit of man, as well as the Spirit of God has a way of speaking over, under, between words—however you wish to express the thought. We are not altogether limited to square blocks.

My friend stands at the grave side of his little child. I come to him filled with sympathy but quite unable to clothe my feelings in words. All the fine big words have vanished away. Only a few common ones are at hand and they do not seem to mean much, under the circumstances. But something does speak through my halting phrases and reach his heart so that he is comforted and understands. Lips say little to ear; but heart speaks to heart so that the idea clumsily portrayed by my square blocks is expressed and comprehended.

There is something after all to the almost inarticulate appeal with which we often end an effort to explain, "Well, you know what I mean, anyway."

History is full of instances where speech has produced astounding results quite out of proportion to anything that was put into words. Back of every impassioned utterance is a great reservoir of human emotion that bursts over the dam and gets away without being recorded. "Liberty, equality, fraternity,"—that was all the French Revolution put into words. But those three square blocks of speech were accompanied by torrents of emotion and cataclysmic action.

Analyze Peter's speech at Pentecost. Is there anything in it, so far as we have it in words, to a count for the astonishing effect produced at the time? But Peter was endowed with power from on high, as was promised. The spirit of Peter spoke much more than the lips of Peter could utter. The Spirit of God rode through and over and under his speech. It is well said that his hearers were "pricked in their hearts." There may have been logic there—but it was logic plus. There was something besides Peter's very hard and very square utterances.

So after all there must be a profound philosophy in the injunction that we shall not attempt to preach without the Spirit. Otherwise we may merely attempt to portray a splendid picture with the aid only of a few square blocks (some speakers have a bigger collection than others) and the result will be pitiful when it is not ridiculous, and so terribly, terribly monotonous. Without that peculiar unction from on high that gave wings to his thoughts Peter's pentecostal sermon might have put the whole audience to sleep. We suspect that people did go to sleep sometimes when Peter preached, but not at Pentecost.

A study of homiletics, rhetoric, logic, public speaking may help one a great deal in the arrangement of his ideas in an orderly and logical manner and in the selection and delivery of his sentences. But if that is all he has, men very quickly discover that he is merely playing in the pulpit with building blocks. They prefer to play with their own blocks on the street corner or in the club. After Jesus had taught the apostles for years, and when the mission field lay before them white for the harvest, as he himself had declared, he yet said to them, "Wait, wait, wait."

Wait for what? Did they not understand the gospel message? Did they not have words—words—plenty of words, good words? Peter never lacked for words. The harvest was white. The laborers were few. Yet Jesus said, "Wait." Wait for what? "Wait till you are endowed with power from on high."

A certain well-known elder who left the church years ago felt that he could go on preaching without any trouble. He had been very popular as a preacher. He said, "Why of course I can go on preaching. All there is to preaching is to make up one's mind what to say and then get up in the pulpit and say it." Very simple. Yet as a matter of fact he had lost his power to preach and never regained it. The change was patent even to non-members.

Mark Twain once made a minister very angry of a Sunday when he said, "I have a book at home in my library which contains every word of your sermon." Mark referred to the dictionary. A pocket dictionary contains all the words that a man will need for a very good sermon—at least it has all that there are in the Sermon on the Mount. The Instructor has in small compass classified texts enough to supply scripture for a great many sermons on a great many subjects. Pattison tells all about "The making of the sermon." Well, what more does a man need? There are the words, there are the texts, there are the rules.

But every time a man goes into the pulpit, if he is a man of sense and modesty, he is likely to be appalled by the thought, "How am I to portray Christ with the square blocks at my disposal? The words come to him also, "Wait—wait—until you are endowed with power from on high." Jesus said, "My words they are spirit and they are life." And the promise was given of old, "I will make my words in thy mouth fire."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

---

A TIME OF PROVING

---

We have been warned, that we are living in the age when he who can be shaken will be shaken. During the past year several men have rather flooded the country and the church with their literature. To give over our columns to a discussion of their assertions would take too much of space, and give them a dignity which they do not deserve.

If the statements which they made were true, conditions would be indeed serious. We realize that it presents a serious question to many of our members who are not posted in regard to the facts. In the final issue every man must of necessity decide for himself. He who loves the truth will find the truth, and the truth will make him free. Those who are seeking power, those who are simply disgruntled, those who allow personal dissatisfaction of an incidental nature to deter them, will not choose the truth.

We are reminded at times that work in the church becomes a trial. It may be from lack of support, it may be from other causes. Conditions may arise, which would in a worldly sense justify our withdrawal from responsibility, but under the law of God, since it is for him and for the church, we can be released only when he releases us. This does not refer alone to those who withdraw from the church, but also to all on whom lays the responsibility of official work. But we must still move forward regardless of all handicaps and difficulties.

So as to the church there are men who call lo here, and lo there. The Master distinctly stated that such would be the case in the latter days. It will be a time of proving for those who love the truth. Regretfully we are forced to assume that there are some who prefer their own way.

We recall one man who was once with us, to whom we wrote no less than three times offering to explain certain matters. The explanation could not have bound him; it would only have been his willingness to examine the evidence; but not once did he express his willingness to consider the matter impartially. Rather he preferred to continue to assert a probable untruth unsupported by a due regard for evidence.

Truly the time is upon us that those who can be shaken shall be shaken; while those who love the truth and the Lord will be manifest when he appears. He whose trust is in the arm of flesh, whose reliance is in man alone, needs to take heed lest he stumbles. He who loves the truth and seeks earnestly for it, will stand firm and be found faithful when the Lord appears.

S. A. B.

---

CHRISTIANITY AND THE CRIMINAL

---

Over a year ago we were permitted to read a serious attack upon Christianity upon behalf of the criminal class, in which the claim was made that religion, the church, and Christianity, are not fair to the criminal. The book was, The Under Dog, by Robert Blatchford.

He apparently assumes that the church, and especially Christianity does not care for "the under dog," but only to punish.

The facts are, instead, that Christianity especially tries to help the weak, and to-day the criminal is not one to be punished so much as cured. At one time he was supposed to be possessed of the Devil. In the light of modern thought as set forth in the Freudian Wish (Edwin B. Holt) this may not be so far wrong.

It is coming clearly to be recognized by society that inhumanity to criminals is neither necessary, nor justifiable; that the criminal, in many cases at least is mentally deficient and so belongs to the lower order of society; that he is a defective and should be treated with charity in the effort to better his condition. A wrong birth and wrong education accounts for far the greater part of crime.

President Frederick M. Smith has written several articles to this general effect and has given such particular attention as his time permitted to this aspect of the case—the moral delinquent and defective, as affecting the criminal classes, and he has urged that this should be taken into consideration and an effort made to cure them rather than to punish.

Yet the earliest recognition of this fact that we have yet read is to be found in the address of Joseph Smith, the Martyr, as printed in 1844, from which we quote as follows:

Advise your legislators when they make laws for larceny, burglary, or any felony, to make the penalty applicable to work upon the roads, public works, or any place where the culprit can be taught more wisdom and more virtues; and become more enlightened. Rigor and seclusion will never do as much to reform the propensities of man as reason and friendship. Murder only can claim confinement or death. Let the penitentiaries be turned into seminaries of learning, where intelligence, like the angels of heaven, would banish such fragments of barbarism; imprisonment for debt is a meaner practice than the savage tolerates with all his ferocity. Amor vincit omnia. Love conquers all. . . .

Abolish the practice in the army and navy of trying men by court martial for desertion; if a soldier or marine runs away, send him his wages, with this instruction, that his country will never trust him again, he has forfeited his honor. Make honor the standard with all men. Be sure that good is rendered for evil in all cases, and the whole nation, like a kingdom of kings and priests, will rise up with righteousness: and be respected as wise and worthy on earth; and as just and worthy for heaven; by Jehovah, the author of perfection.

The jails at that time were far worse than to-day. In fact humanism and fair treatment for criminals is very modern and is still limited in its application, though it is coming to be recognized in increasing measure what rational care will do as a means of cure.

To-day, prisoners are allowed to have baseball teams; George has established his junior republic; Osborne at Sing Sing has attempted an honor system, and its effect is becoming quite generally apparent in other penal institutions.

It is quite a common thing for the prisoners to be allowed not only to work out doors, but to have their baseball teams and their newspapers. Better even than this is the effort to prepare them for the problems of life, to educate them and to train them so they will be made better citizens upon release.

In April, 1912, J. C. Sanders, warden of the State Penitentiary at Fort Madison, Iowa, reported on changes needed in penal laws from which we may give a few brief extracts.

Prison methods, that is, the best methods, are in advance of the criminal laws. They always have been. They always will be. . . . Where final punishment is delayed and uncertain the deterrent effect is badly weakened and society takes on an attitude of unconcern.

Criminology should be taught in the public schools. The judge of the criminal court ought to be an expert in criminal law, and, moreover, in the nature of criminals, and know as definitely as it is possible where insanity begins and criminality leaves off. . . .

The only way to cure a crime or any abnormal disorder is to remove the cause rather than to apply salve to the symptoms, but that is practically what we are doing most of the time. Prevention is better than cure. The science of penology should be concerned more with the examination and removal of the cause of crime. Shakespeare says that the first step in criminal law should be to hang in public defenders for both sides. Bring the efficiency of the defense up to the standard of perfection. . . .

When the prisoner has done his time and leaves the institution he enters upon a new life. The State of Iowa makes no provision for the care of the prisoner who has paid his debt, according to the standard laid down by our legislature. Many charitable institutions extend a helping hand, but not the State. To the man who is paroled, that is the man who has not yet served his time, is given a position; the helping hand is extended to him. Why not to the man who has paid his debt in full? Until such time as we give as much attention to the man going out as we do to the man coming in we cannot hope for very great results.

In 1913, G. S. Robinson, chairman of the Board of Control of State Institutions of Iowa, furnished the State an article on the "Employment of prisoners," of which we quote his conclusions.

My conclusions in regard to the employment of prisoners committed to the penitentiary and reformatory of this State are as follows:

1. As a rule, no prisoner should be employed in places frequented by the public outside prison walls if an armed guard be necessary. A majority of the prisoners cannot be so employed and escapes be prevented without armed guards. All able-bodied prisoners should be fully employed in school, in trade schools or in some kind of labor. If in labor their time should be fully employed and they should be required to do a fair amount of work each day. They should not be permitted to acquire habits of idleness by loitering at work. Therefore it will be necessary to provide employment in the prisons for a large number of prisoners.

2. The contract system should be abolished and manufacturing on State account substituted, but the present system should be continued until ample provision is made for the full employment of all prisoners.

3. The most desirable employment for prisoners who can be worked outside prison walls is farming, gardening, stock raising and dairying. This should be on farms near the prisons.

4. The goods manufactured should be for state use so far as needed and those not needed for that purpose should be sold on state account. The goods manufactured in excess of the demands of the state should be of a character to compete as little as possible with industries of a local character.

5. All well-behaved prisoners should be allowed compensation for labor they perform, and this should be a substantial share of the value of their labor. The allowance should be determined according to the conduct of the prisoner, his application and skill, and the work he accomplishes.

In 1914, the Chaplain Phelix H. Pickworth, of the Reformatory, at Anamosa, Iowa, reported in the bulletin of State institutions on the moral and religious life of the prisoners. He shows a keen appreciation of the possibilities and great improvements in these lines. We quote only a small part:

Further, most of those condemned of crime are, admittedly, ignorant and poor. The normal delinquencies of the poor seem to be more readily detected and more quickly dealt with than are those of the rich and favored. Money is used without stint in sending persons to prison and in keeping them there, but supplied grudgingly in the endeavor to remove the causes which contribute to their being there.

And in 1915, "The prison school," is discussed in the bulletin, by E. A. Cromer, superintendent of schools, The Reformatory, Anamosa, Iowa. This latter is especially valuable because it shows research work and shows the situation not in general terms, but in particular, so it gives us a better grasp of the real problem. The article as a whole also discusses the difficulty of young men securing proper training in the world—the difficulty, in fact, of our present industrial situation, which also requires definite consideration and cure. But it is useless to attempt to cure a man when he is in prison if we do not take care of him beforehand and after. Before in order to prevent him going to prison. It is a curious fact that we spend about as much on the insane as we do on our public schools, and we spend a large part as much on our prisons. It would seem that it would pay to spend more on the proper training and less on cooping men up, that is, at least, the modern tendency.

A few extracts from Mr. Cromer's article follow:

There are over one hundred thousand persons in prisons in the United States. The maximum number of these are between the ages of twenty and twenty-five. Of this vast multitude about fifteen per cent are absolutely illiterate, while a larger number, impossible to accurately determine, are practically illiterate. At least seventy per cent are without trades, and of the remaining thirty per cent many are not capable of earning a livelihood as journeymen.

These figures do not necessarily prove ignorance to be the cause of crime, but we have a right to assume that there is a very intimate relation between ignorance and crime. They show a positive and urgent need of general instruction and industrial training in prison. . . .

Physical and moral development are of the highest importance. A weakened will is often the counterpart of a weakened body, and a masterful will is the first essential of a strong, manly character.

One who has not come into intimate association with habitual offenders can have no conception of how few their real interests are and how low and unworthy they are in most cases. They must be awakened to larger and more varied interests, learning in some way that they as men have a right to enjoy the best in art, in science, in religion. . . .

This kind of training constitutes the highest ideal in moral education, for it teaches self-respect, which is the essence of morality, and a better basis of good citizenship than political or moral maxims. It is especially fitting for a certain type of men and boys so often found in prison—the drifting, floating fellows, who are on the job to-day and off to-morrow, who quit work on the slightest excuse, never becoming skilled workmen in any line; they are often of low intelligence, many of them over-sensitive, nervous, restless, impatient, who seem to take naturally to stimulants or other excesses. . . .

In order to make comparisons, I addressed a questionnaire to twenty-two prisons in the United States, receiving replies from fourteen. . . . The item which brought the greatest variety of replies was the question regarding mental defectives, which showed different individual standards and different methods used in testing. The percentage of mental defectives is invariably rated higher by expert psychologists than by others.

In view of the similarity of conditions, I have included the Reformatory at Anamosa, making fifteen institutions in all, and I am submitting such parts of reports as are pertinent to our discussion: Total population of the fifteen institutions, 11,023; of this number 12 per cent are absolutely illiterate; 33 per cent are mental defectives; 19 per cent have had a common school education; 2.7 per cent are high-school graduates; 1 per cent are college graduates; 28 per cent are now attending day school; 14 per cent are attending night school; 3 per cent are studying by correspondence; 25 per cent have trades. Number of institutions having trade schools, 4; number having all citizen teachers, 6; number having one citizen teacher with prisoners as assistants, 2. None have any system of correlating trade schools with schools of letters, and only two have inspection of schools by state department of education.

The Reformatory at Anamosa, Iowa, had on July 1, 1914, a population of 689. Deducting 60 insane patients and 20 superannuated leaves 609. Of this number 56 per cent were between the ages of 16 and 24 and 28 per cent were between 25 and 35, the average physical age being 21 years, 7 months, while the average mental age according to the Binet-Simon test was 11 years, 4 months, and more than 50 per cent were mentally below normal. . . .

Any prison expert will tell you that routine institution work does not train skilled workers. Prisoners are often assigned to such work not because they are needed, or because they are adapted to a particular kind of work, but for the sole purpose of keeping them from absolute idleness. Some one has said that the way to educate a man is to set him to work; the way to get him to work is to interest him; the way to interest him is to vitalize his task by relating it to something real.

There is an old rabbinical saying that a father who does not teach his son a trade teaches him to be a thief, which is more apt to-day than when first uttered for the reason that it is more difficult for a boy to learn a trade to-day than it ever was before. What opportunity has he to so exercise his wits and his skill during plastic period of youth that he can, when reaching manhood, enter at once into productive industry? . . .

Recently an educational publication in estimating the value of an education stated that the average earnings of a man having a common school education were about $24,000. On

(Continued on page 901.)

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

BIBLE READING IN THE PULPIT

"And they read in the book, in the law of God, distinctly, they gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading."—Nehemiah 8:8.

The Bible is the great monument of all literature. Indeed, I might say it is all kinds of poetry in one, and in each it contains the highest degree of perfection. Sublimely lyrics than the Psalms of David, more touching elegies than the Lamentations of Jeremiah, more tragic drama than the book of Job, sweeter idylls than those of Esther and Tobias, cannot be found in the whole range of literature. It was Carlyle who said that from a literary viewpoint "the Bible stands as high above Shakespeare as Shakespeare stands above the ordinary newspaper." Every student of literature, no matter what his religious convictions are, admits that the Bible is the supreme work of literary art.

But how shall it be read before a congregation, so that its solemn, impressive utterances will have the desired effect? That is the question I shall try to answer in this article. One of our priesthood has just written me: "After listening to your talk to our priesthood upon the reading of the Bible, I went home and spent nearly two hours applying all you said in your talk to my reading aloud of the fifth chapter of Matthew's gospel. I tried to emphasize the ideas the words expressed rather than the words themselves. I began to observe the difference that resulted in the modulations of my voice. The next Sunday I read that chapter from the pulpit in our morning service. I noticed a closer attention on the part of the audience than I have ever had. One brother, who has had some advantages in education, grasped my hand after the service and told me he was much impressed at the correct way in which I read the Scripture. I tell you, Brother Dwyer, it counts, and I want more of it."

It was a revelation to the brother to see that the difference between our reading and talking results from our differences in thinking. When we do not think, our reading is bad, when we genuinely think and feel and live the ideas, our reading appears free and natural and wins the attention of the audience.

We must ever keep in mind that the content of the Bible ranks in adequate comparison with its literary excellence. We find portrayed in its pages all phases of human life; its achievements, its failures, its aspirations, its passions, its joys, its sorrows, its interests, its problems. Moreover, men of all ages, races, and climes, find in this one book, the Bible, that which meets the spiritual needs of the soul—that for which the soul longs. Its profundity of thought has been characterized as the "unsearchable riches," yea "the riches of the glory of the mystery, which is Christ in you, the hope of glory," "The power of God unto salvation." It is the very Spirit and life of God breathed into us by the Most High himself. On opening its covers we should have in mind the inspired utterance of the great apostle:

"O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God!" It is so high, so wonderful! O that we could utter it and make others see it! Edwin Booth melted an audience of worldly people to tears when in answer to an encore he recited the twenty-third Psalm. On another occasion, a vast audience, in the Globe Theater, bowed their heads, as if impelled by a common sense of reverence, when the great tragedian uttered the Lord's prayer. Madam Modjeska, who was present upon that occasion, said: "Under the spell of the voice I closed my eyes. The theater and the vast audience faded away. I was far off on the hillside of old Judea, and Jesus was teaching the disciples to pray." Edwin Booth, let me say, all his life, was a man of profound spirituality. We cannot all read the Bible as he read it, but we can by study and thought, improve our reading of it. Let me impress upon the reader of this article this fact: the source, the quality, the power, and the mission of the Bible, demand that it be read with interpretation, distinctly, reverently, and with experiential and spiritual fervor.

I am sorry to say that the opportunity that pulpit Bible reading offers is sadly neglected in many of our branches, and seriously noted and commented upon by visitors to our Sunday service. It seems to me it may and should be made one of the most impressive and helpful features of our church service. Careful thought should be taken to make the selection of the Scripture as to its appropriateness to the rest of the service, and as to the results to be attained. Then the rendition of it should be as carefully prepared for effectiveness as the sermon itself is prepared. For it is certainly not less important. And there is no reason why the preacher should not have as good attention while he reads the Scripture as while he preaches. The preacher should bear in mind that he has as strong a relationship with the audience while he reads as while he preaches, remembering that he is the mouthpiece of a great message which is for the people and reading it as unto them. Strong directness will thus be given the voice, which is a great factor in getting and holding attention.

Let me hold Jesus up as a model reader of pulpit Bible reading. Let us imagine we are a part of the congregation assembled in the synagogue of Nazareth. See the young Rabbi enter the pulpit. We hear many whispering: "This is Jesus, the Nazarene." Now turn to Luke 4:17, and note what Jesus did when he entered the pulpit. You will find Luke saying: "He opened the book and found the place where it is written," etc. This shows previous thought. Jesus knew which Scripture he wanted for the occasion. And when he had read and closed the book, Luke tells us that "the eyes of all that were in the synagogue were fastened on him." It was evident that he had not only given thought to what he read beforehand, but keenly realized its importance at the time he read. Such quality of reading that brings such results as to have the eyes of all the congregation fastened on one, may well be most earnestly coveted and sought after. Jesus made the prophet's message ring again with life. The truth of it was born again in his great soul and came forth through his expressive power. That is what gripped his congregation. And that is what is needed to grip our congregations to-day, and make the Sunday service in our branches more deeply impressive with spiritual meaning.

The first requisite for good Bible reading is to have the thought on the written page well in mind. This may require a careful analysis, and exegetical study of the portion to be read. Otherwise important points are likely to be missed, and groups of ideas may not get their proper inflection so as to relate themselves truly with each other. For example, I refer to man, the instance where the rich young man, yearning for eternal life and seeking it of Jesus, called him the good teacher. (Mark 10:17.) Now Jesus' reply is frequently read, "Why callest thou me good?" placing the phrase accent upon "me" which implies, "I am not good." Jesus certainly never thus denied his goodness, for he himself declared his quality and oneness with the Father. What he evidently wanted to teach the young man was, that if he recognized him as good, he must admit him as the One sent of God, the Messiah, and was accordingly given a call to follow. So Jesus simply asked him the question, "Why callest thou me good?" placing the phrase accent upon "good" as much as to say, "Only God is good, and if you see that in me, you are right. I can tell you how to obtain eternal life."

Now as to the relative importance of ideas, I refer for example to the instance in Luke 1:9, where Jesus said: "Ask and it shall be given you." This passage is invariably read with the rising inflection upon "ask." The rising inflection always causes anticipation. It is an index in the voice pointing to that which is ahead. Therefore, by thus rendering this we cannot impress our hearers as we should with the importance of asking. For the rising inflection upon "ask" makes it subjective in sense. But it really is imperative. Hence the word should receive the downward movement of voice. This always lends weight and will make the importance of asking more impressive.

For an example of the rising inflection I quote from Matthew 18:15: "If thy brother sin against thee, go show him his fault," etc. Here the anticipation is clearly directed to one's duty in such a circumstances, rather than upon the party sinned against, or upon the one who did the wrong. Hence, the rising inflection comes upon the pronoun thee. I could bring forth many such examples from the New Testament, but these, I believe, are sufficient to show the importance of the relation of ideas in their expression for coherence and unity of thought. And if we fail to get this relation, we are most certain to misrepresent the author's thought.

I have cited the foregoing examples because they show some fundamental principles of expression that certainly should be observed in the reading of the Bible from our pulpits. But that which is no less necessary is the principle of adapting one's style of reading to the style of the author. When he is poetic, the reader must not be prosy; when he is stirred, the reader must not be calm; when he is descriptive, the reader must not be scientific. It may be possible even with an accurate understanding of his thought, to fail in representing his feelings. We must not only express his thought by proper phrase accent, but also his feelings, through proper tone color. And this is only possible through a thorough appreciation of the author's situation, feelings, and purpose. More is required than a mere intellectual knowledge of his thought. Tone is the language of the soul, and not until there is an experience within, similar to that which the author had, can he be rightly interpreted before an audience. Without the experience the rendition will be devoid of that tone quality. The utterances of the inspired writers glow, not only with loftiness of thought, but also with the warmth of intensest feeling. And no one, I care not who he is, has the moral right to read for an audience the glowing messages of Isaiah, or the heart-searching words of Jesus, or the stirring discourses of Paul, as if reading the newspaper. I care not how brilliant in intellect a man may be, mere intellect will never appeal to the heart. It must be nothing short of heart quality itself.

But attention must not be given to the tone of voice while reading. That will make the tone itself the object of attention and the reading will be artificial. The intellect knows too little to determine the tone of voice through which the soul experience is to be expressed. The part the intellect has to play here, is to bring the organs of speech under such training and control that there will be a free and subconscious response of those physical organs to the demand of the soul. And when these organs are thus free from all strictures, and there is clear understanding of the thought, it should be meditated upon, "brooded over," or mused upon until the "fire burns." This will stimulate the imagination and arouse true feeling. An author's thought and feeling must be in a sense born again in the human soul through the understanding and imagination while he reads, before it can be made to live. The greatest need of Bible reading in our pulpits is not so much in thought and feeling while in the study, but while before the waiting congregation. Let it be remembered that God speaks through the personality of his messengers as well as through their lips. They must be the incarnation of what the page represents—literally charged with its meaning. They must be moved by the actual spirit of the author in the passage read, telling it with all the wonder of a new story. Under such conditions the experience of the soul will come through a flow of tone that will reach the hearts of men. Yes, let me close this article by saying: I have dealt with a subject of great importance. Such rendition of the inspired message from the open pages of the Bible, and such a yielding to its eloquence will be a large factor in the ministerial education of our priesthood.

AUGUSTINE DWYER.

---

LIGHT

---

"The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth."—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6.

Light manifests itself in at least two different ways; that is, to supply with light, to brighten, as that which comes from the sun, moon, and stars; and in the way of intelligence, or enlightenment of the mind. It matters not, however, which way light may manifest itself; it emanates from the same source—God.

In the beginning, God said, "Let there be light," and there was light, that is with reference to this earth. Light, however, existed before the earth was. It existed with God, the source of all light.

In the Doctrine and Covenants, we read:

And the light which now shineth, which giveth you light, is through him who enlighteneth your eyes, which is the same light that quickeneth your understandings; which light proceedeth forth from the presence of God, to fill the immensity of space. The light which is in all things; which giveth life to all things; which is the law by which all things are governed; even the power of God who sitteth upon his throne, who is in the bosom of eternity, who is in the midst of all things.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 3.

Here we see that the light which shines to enlighten the eyes, and the light which quickens the understanding, is the same, and comes from the presence of God, to fill the immensity of space. The life-giving and law-governing power of all things.

Again, we read a part of paragraph 7, section 83:

For the word of the Lord is truth, and whatsoever is truth is light, and whatsoever is light is Spirit, even the Spirit of Jesus Christ; and the Spirit giveth light to every man that cometh into the world; and the Spirit enlighteneth every man through the world, that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit.

In this statement we see that the word of the Lord, truth, light, and Spirit, are one, even the Spirit of Jesus Christ; and this Spirit gives light to every man that comes into the world. Even though the unbeliever may deny the existence of God, yet at the same time he is indebted to God for all the light that he has, that he ever did have, or that he ever will have; and this light is the Spirit of Jesus Christ, which gives light to every man that comes into the world.

This scripture says further: The Spirit enlighteneth every man through the world, that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit. That is, after a person has received the light that is given to every man that cometh into the world, the same Spirit (which is the Spirit of Jesus Christ) will continue to enlighten every man throughout the world, that will hearken to the voice of that Spirit, bringing more light and intelligence to that individual as time goes on, or, in other words, it is the effect of the Spirit of light and truth upon the Spirit which is in man, which called forth the statement found in Job 32: 8: "But there is a spirit in man; and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." But on the other hand, the individual who will not hearken to that Spirit, will not continue to be enlightened, but will remain in ignorance, or a condition of darkness.

In this connection, let us read again:

That which doth not edify, is not of God, and is darkness: that which is of God is light, and he that receiveth light and continueth in God, receiveth more light, and that light groweth brighter and brighter, until the perfect day.—Doctrine and Covenants 50: 6.

What a wonderful promise; and how we can see it being fulfilled in those that hearken to the voice of the Spirit of light and truth; not only among those of the church, but among honorable men of the world also, who are hearkening to that Spirit of light and truth so that they become instruments for good, and the advancement of the cause of righteousness, or preparing the way for the gospel message to go to the world.

Failure to hearken results in darkness. In Saint John's gospel we read:

I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life.—John 8: 12.

Again:

And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil.—John 3: 19.

And also from Paul's letter to the Corinthians:

In whom the God of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them.—2 Corinthians 4: 4.

It is quite evident from these scriptures, that those who fail to be led by the light, and whose deeds are evil, will have their minds blinded, or darkened, by Satan, who is called the prince of this world, and whose object is to keep men from the light of the glorious gospel of Christ.

As a result of this failure upon the part of man to heed the light, Isaiah prophesies of a condition that would overtake the world, in the following language:

For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people.—Isaiah 80: 2.

Again we have it spoken of as a "spirit of deep sleep," a time when there would be no prophets and seers. (Isaiah 29: 10.)

Micah portrays the time in the following language:

Therefore night shall be unto you, that ye shall not have a vision; and it shall be dark unto you, that ye shall not divine; and the sun shall go down over the prophets, and the day shall be dark over them. Then shall the seers be ashamed, and the diviners confounded; yea, they shall all cover their lips: for there is no answer of God.—Micah 3: 6, 7.

In this scripture we have the time referred to as night, or a dark day, when there should be no vision, the lips of the prophets and seers should be covered, or sealed, so that no spiritual instruction should fall therefrom; and there would be no answer or communication from God.

We look back upon the time spoken of by these prophets, and call it the Dark Ages, a result of man's failure to hearken to the Spirit of light and truth. But there came a time when man began to hearken unto the Spirit of light and truth, which resulted in many great and marvelous changes taking place. The first individual I wish to mention in this connection, is Columbus, who, the Book of Mormon says, was wrought upon by the Spirit of God. Moving out under the influence of this Spirit, and following the light, resulted in the discovery of America in 1492, at the very time when God designed that this continent should be brought to the knowledge of the world; which up to this time had been hidden from the world, for a wise purpose in Him. At this time the light of the dawning day—after the long, dark night—began to send forth its rays, which were destined to fill the immensity of space.

Shortly after this, we find what is called the "Reformation" beginning to show itself. This "Reformation" manifested itself in one reformer after another, who being led by the Spirit of light brought more and more light into the world.

Now we come to another very important part in the history of events as the light of the day advances;

we often hear it spoken of as the "Spirit of '76." In this connection let us read from Doctrine and Covenants with reference to this Nation:

And for this purpose have I established the constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood.

Here again we find men hearkening to the Spirit of light and truth, and the day grows brighter and brighter as the sunlight of God arises.

Coming down to 1830, we find the prophets and seers are uncovered, the seal upon their lips is broken, and there is an answer, or revelation from God; and the greatest light of all breaks forth, in the form of the "glorious gospel of Jesus Christ." With reference to this, we turn again to Doctrine and Covenants and read:

And when the time of the Gentiles is come in, a light shall break forth among them that sit in darkness, and it shall be the fullness of my gospel.—45: 4.

And even so I have sent mine everlasting covenant into the world, to be a light to the world, and to be a standard for my people and for the Gentiles to seek to it, and to be a messenger before my face to prepare the way before me.—45: 2.

Contemporaneous with the restoration of the gospel, is the beginning of the great age of inventions, which has increased by leaps and bounds ever since; and the end is not yet. About this time there was also a noted change in the attitude of some of the leading nations toward the Jews, in granting them greater liberties. This light, too, has grown brighter and brighter until the present day.

The next important date I wish to note is 1860—the culmination of the slave question, which had been agitating the minds of the people for many years; the coming of young Joseph to lead the church; and Abraham Lincoln as leader of the Nation, which introduced another flood of light in the advancement of the gospel, the freedom of the slaves, and many other important events which followed in quick succession.

Coming now to the present epoch, we have Frederick M. Smith to lead the church, and Woodrow Wilson to lead the Nation, ushering in another flood of light, causing a great awakening in the church, the Nation, and the world. New laws being enacted for the benefit of mankind; autocratic power is being destroyed; the liquor traffic and other vices being curbed; a great effort on the part of the leading nations to bring about the brotherhood of man; and the way opening for the gathering of the Jews.

THE LORD PREPARES THE WAY FOR THE PREACHING OF HIS GOSPEL

Going back now to the days of the beginning of this Nation, we find the Pilgrim Fathers setting out from England to find a place where they can worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience; and in the establishment of this Nation, we find civil and religious liberty as one of the main principles in the foundation of the Government, making it the only nation in which the ensign of the "restored gospel" could be planted in 1830.

I wish now to call your attention to two more important passages of scripture:

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people.—Revelation 14: 6.

And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations.—Matthew 24: 14.

That these scriptures might be fulfilled, there must be established in these nations, governments that will insure civil and religious liberty to its citizens, and afford protection for the gospel while it is being preached to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people. Such a movement is now on foot, to make possible the fulfillment of the words of Jesus: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, I give unto you to be the light of the world; a city that is set on a hill cannot be hid" (Matthew 5: 16, Inspired Translation), and the ushering of the greater, grander, more glorious light of the millennium.

It is true, we must admit, that we are living in perilous times. The powers for evil are strengthening their forces upon every hand, preparing for the final great struggle. At the same time the forces for good are fortifying their strongholds to withstand the evil power. And in this the church must play an important part.

OUR DUTY AS INDIVIDUALS

How shall we as individuals be prepared to assist in carrying on the work of enlightening the world? In connection with the signs of the times as we have them presented by the Master, we read:

And when the light shall begin to break forth, it shall be with them like unto a parable which I shall show you; ye look and behold the fig trees, and ye see them with your eyes, and ye say, when they begin to shoot forth and their leaves are yet tender, that summer is now nigh at hand; even so it shall be in that day, when they shall see all these things, then shall they know that the hour is nigh.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 5.

Here we have the fact revealed, that as the shooting forth of the leaves is a sign of the near approach of summer, even so, the breaking forth of the light of the gospel, along with other events spoken of, is a sign of the nearness of the end of the age, and the dawning of the bright millennium day.

Now turning to section 103: 2, we read:

And again, verily I say unto you, The coming of the Lord draweth nigh, and it overtaketh the world as a thief in the night; therefore, gird up your loins that you may be the children of the light, and that day shall not overtake you as a thief.

Here we are admonished to be children of the light, so we shall not be overtaken like the world. Then we have Paul's advice to the Ephesians:

For ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of light.—Ephesians 5: 8.

Also 1 John 1: 7:

But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.

Now in summing up, we refer again to the text used in the beginning of this article, "The glory of God is intelligence, or in other words, truth and light." Ever since the first ray of light reached the earth, until now, the glory of God has continued to manifest itself in the intelligence of light and truth. No matter through what agency light and truth has reached us, it originated with the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning," and is but the glory of God manifesting itself in intelligence; for which the world in general has failed to give credit to whom credit is due.

Thus has the light increased, or decreased, according to man's willingness to hearken, or not to hearken to the Spirit of light and truth.

The light of the glorious gospel has sent forth its rays, which have touched the hearts and mind of thousands, and which will increase in splendor until the perfect day, until it fills the immensity of space, like the little stone cut out without hands, is to roll forth until it fills the whole earth; and we reach the time when the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. Then when the final consummation is reached, the hosts of heaven and earth shall burst forth in one grand harmonious song of light and truth, "And crown him Lord of all."

ELWYN R. DAVIS.

---

BOOK OF MORMON SUPPORTED BY ARCHÆOLOGY

---

To some of our people it may be more or less irksome to listen to something on archæology and what it has to do with (the contention it supports) the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon. This is due probably to several causes, among them the following: 1. Lack of knowledge of the book itself. 2. Not having read enough on archæology to compare it with the contents of the book, even though the Book of Mormon has been read many times. 3. The desire for divine proof of the Book of Mormon not being strong enough to exhaust all energy in endeavoring to prove it from every standpoint.

To people not acquainted with our work, this archæological research and discovery amount to nothing more than any other early history, except for the curiosity of discovering the odd structures and inscriptions on the buried buildings and edifices and compare them of ours to-day and wonder "who"

the people were and why such things are found under the ground and above all why it is that well-educated persons spend a lifetime in the pursuit of "something new" in this line.

As stated, this is due to a lack of knowledge of archæology. To one who is familiar with the Book of Mormon, and more especially the description of the temples, towers, and buildings of different descriptions erected by the people of Nephi and who has read Baldwin's history of Ancient America, this becomes a very interesting study, more especially if it is the intention of the reader to establish proof that our book is true as compared with the discoveries of archæological experts in North and South American Continents, especially South America and Central America.

Now in the first place, for some reason or other, there is a great desire on the part of these archæological experts to establish the exact identity of the people, who inhabited these two countries before the discovery by Columbus, and the origin of the Indians who inhabited the country of North America at the time of the discovery in 1492. This has ever been a problem.

Present-day history does not make it clear who the Indians emanated from, except to infer they were "Norsmen" who probably inhabited the country 1,000 years before discovery, but as to their immigration and ancestry the whole thing is a matter of conjecture. Archæology, however, has come to the rescue in the past fifty years (none to amount to anything having been done before in this country) and has proven that these early inhabitants were of Jewish descent, because inscriptions and engravings have been found on the stones and edifices underground, intact, that showed such things as Moses and the cane with the snake. Jewish inscriptions have been found on the stones, or rather inscriptions in the Hebrew.

It has been a hard problem for some of them to connect the Indian who was present when Columbus discovered America with the Jewish people of Europe, but according to things found under the ground the truth has been established that they (the Indians) were of Jewish origin and had Jewish customs among them, even up to the time of discovery by Columbus. A figure of Adam and Eve has been found engraved in stone under the ground. All this would indicate that those early people had a record of the old books of the Scriptures which Nephi in our book states they brought over with them and this makes it plain to us that the theory is correct.

The battles we have been reading about of late in the Book of Mormon were fought in different cities which were fortified with large ridges of earth thrown up on or against a network of wooden supports, and Baldwin's history describes cities as having been discovered under the ground in ruins that had such a fortification, and the large towers, mentioned to serve as a "lookout" for the warring nations, were evidently constructed of stone and made strong, and these too have been discovered and mentioned as towers, but the purpose not definitely known.

I have talked myself with the district foreman of the Pulman Company of this city who has been in Mexico and Central America and he has seen many of these mounds resembling pyramids in shape and stated that upon digging into one of them, stone structures would be found, and said among the people down there it was very common to look upon the ruins, but no one knew the history of the people who lived there and erected the buildings.

While some of these discoveries have been made above the ground the most of them are found under the ground, some of them at a great depth. Our book also accounts for this fact. At the death of Christ an earthquake of great intensity and occurring over the whole land made such changes on the face of the earth that those who survived would hardly recognize it, and some cities were buried deeply, while low places were made high and in some places in the sea became high and dry. Rocks prior thereto were not broken and in seams as they are to-day. So these fine cities found under the ground are none other but those described in our book and built and inhabited by the Nephites and Lamanites and destroyed at the time of the death of Christ.

In Ohio, also in Iowa, in digging at depths of from 90 to 200 feet, stumps of trees have been found with marks of iron instruments on them as shown by rusty objects found, yet the stumps appear to have been buried immediately after the tree was cut down. These things were buried suddenly and they have been preserved as they appeared on the face of the earth at the time of the great upheaval. Engraved names have been found on stones that compare almost exactly with similar names found in the Book of Mormon. The language is in the Egyptian, while the customs of the people indicate the Hebrew. Nothing could be plainer to us than that, because Nephi said he was learned in the language of the Hebrews and of course had their customs since Lehi emigrated from Jerusalem, but their writings were of "Reformed Egyptian." To us, this accounts for the archæological discoveries of Egyptian inscriptions and things that would indicate the population had Jewish customs among them. I think a further study of the Book of Mormon and archæology will reveal much to us that would further interest us and be well to add to our store of knowledge.

W. O. ROBERTSON.

If you want a thing well done, don't do it yourself unless you know how.—Boston Transcript.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

EPISCOPAL COMMISSION INDORSES FAITH HEALING

["This clipping may be of interest. The Episcopalians seem determined to incorporate the Emmanuel movement as a permanent feature of their work. I recently ran through the greater part of the history of the faith healing movement, and found that the modern wave of interest in it apparently arose about the time of the Restoration, 1830.—L. F. P. Curry.]

(By Associated Press to Gazette Times.)

New York, August 17.—Radical changes in the sanctioned practices of the Episcopal Church are provided for in a report made public here to-night of the Church's Commission on the Revision and Enrichment of the Book of Common Prayer to be submitted to the general convention of the church in October.

The report makes provision for faith healing, anointing with holy oils, requiem, communions, and prayers for the dead, reservation of the sacrament and intinction—the use of a dipped wafer instead of the common communion cup. There are a score of radical proposals, and bitter controversy is looked for over them on the convention floor.

The commission, constituted in 1913, is a joint body acting with the authority of both the House of Bishops and the House of deputies of the Episcopal Church.

The recommendations for changes in Episcopal Church practices include:

Elimination from the marriage ceremony of the word obey from the bride and with all my worldly goods I thee endow from the groom.

A prayer for the dead.

Change Whitsunday to the day of Pentecost, and all Sundays from then until Advent to read as Sundays after Pentecost.

Abbreviation of the Ten Commandments for the option of the clergy (their language not altered) but certain explanatory or opposite statements eliminated.

After the order for administration of the Lord's supper in its designation to read: "The divine liturgy, being the order for the Lord's supper, or holy eucharist, commonly called the holy communion."

New prayers for the President of the United States and the army and navy.

Prayers "for special justice" and "for every man in his work."

A special office for Independence Day.

Proposed new service for the admission of deaconesses.

LESS TALK--MORE APPLICATION

Large problems face the world to-day. But they may be wonderfully simplified and permanently solved if Christ's teachings are applied. But less talk and more application is the need of the hour.

We understand Christ's teachings to present the following program for world redemption: (1) Social reform by individual regeneration. (2) Everyone having equal opportunity to do his best; to do his best for the good of all. (3) Love the dynamic. (4) Righteousness the principle. (5) Justice the basis of social relationship. (6) To organize such men and women into the kingdom of God. (7) To provide all with suitable means, which with their talents become their stewardships. (8) Each one being brought to the task he is best able to perform, the product to be distributed so that none has less than is needed, and no one has more than can be used.

Is not this program worthy of your careful study and hearty support?—Elder M. A. McConley, in Hilo (Hawaii) Daily Tribune, July 27, 1919.

THE "GO SLOW" METHOD

Not long since it was discovered that the riveters in a shipyard had adopted the "go slow" method; that, while formerly each riveter drove two hundred and ninety-five rivets in an eight-hour day, the number had now dropped to seventy-three. It took seven minutes to drive a rivet that formerly was driven in two minutes, and nearly four times as many men to complete the work in a given amount of time.

In this incident, duplicated in many an industrial establishment, is seen an illustration of how the adjustment of wages to the cost of living may become a mere game of rainbow chasing. When wages are increased to lift the earner within the reach of high cost, high cost may be lifted by lowering the rate of production.

Similar tactics are being pursued in some of the industries, by manufacturers who cut down their production and raise prices correspondingly on the decreased stocks. Theoretically there is no possible end to this round, for both the laborer and the manufacturer may lawfully refrain from producing as long as they choose. Investigation of the high cost of living may gather this information, but law cannot make an unwilling man work.

There is a natural law that settles accounts of this kind through the clearing house of a general panic. America experienced one of these drastic settlements less than a quarter century ago. It is still fresh in the memory of many business men, and need not now be repeated, if America will but take counsel of experience.

If there is to be a permanent better era in this world, there must be a general willingness to give value for value in goods and labor. There must be a condition in industry that will induce the laborer to "put in his best licks" voluntarily and cheerfully; and a disposition on the part of the retailer and the manufacturer to take no more than is due them from their customers.—Minneapolis Journal.

PLEASING PUBLICITY

[By the kindness of Elder George Wixom, we are in receipt of several clippings concerning addresses by him and Brother Rushton, made within the past month. The San Bernardino Daily Sun gives many items, first of announcement, and then a synopsis of the sermon. At Santa Ana, the First Methodist Church was readily secured extending a special invitation to the Book Review Club to hear Elder Rushton. The following, announcing a lecture on July 18, is from the Santa Ana Register.—EDITORS.]

There will be a noted lecturer to-night in the First M. E. Church on the most tense world discussion. Any light that can be thrown on the strained relations of capital and labor will add to an intelligent solution of this international problem.

John W. Rushton is an English orator of real power and has an international reputation as a speaker and thinker. During the war he gave much time to the strengthening of the ties between this country and England and understands the political situation on both sides of the Atlantic. He is well posted on the labor question and will lecture to-night on "The moral message of freedom to capital and labor."

As a moralist Mr. Rushton has few superiors on the platform and his discussions of popular topics are thoroughly progressive, sane, and enthusiastic. He lectured in San Bernardino for the high school, Rotary Club, and for different churches where he was much appreciated. In fact it is not difficult to get a crowd where he is known, and doubtless Santa Ana will give him a good hearing this evening.

A splendid audience greeted Mr. Rushton last night, which seemed to thoroughly appreciate his wonderful message.

GREAT SPEAKING TOUR

Mr. Rushton will leave the United States for a two year's speaking tour the latter part of August, going by way of New Zealand, Australia, and other foreign countries, probably closing his tour in Europe.

To-day is the last time Mr. Rushton will appear before a San Bernardino audience for some time.

THE STAFF

Edited by ARTHUR H. MILLS
1514 West Short Street, Independence, Mo.

Should the Chorister Select the Hymns?

Usually the duties and prerogatives of the branch chorister are so well understood and clearly apparent that but little reference to them need be had. Sometimes, however, there are found situations where these are not properly understood. Often a branch may exercise unwise jurisdiction over its chorister and unduly restrict his privileges. Occasionally a chorister may have an exaggerated sense of his place and importance, taking unto himself unusual privileges and interpreting his duties to suit his own notions. To all such this article may be found timely and pertinent.

First, it should be understood that the chorister of a branch is not only a servant of, but an officer of, the branch. It is true that he is not ordained to this office by the imposition of hands, but he is an officer, nevertheless, doing the service of the branch in his capacity just as much as the elder or deacon in theirs. He should, therefore, on the one hand receive the respect of the branch as one of its servants, and on the other hand he should have for himself a true appreciation of his position as an officer and the obligations he has assumed.

When there is a proper understanding on the part of both chorister and branch as to the mutual relationship each bears to the other, then "the service of song in the house of the Lord" will be had with greater "unity of spirit in them that sing and them that hear."

We think that a careful examination of the duties of the chorister will reveal that they are all embraced under the one term: he is in charge of all the work of music in the branch as it is employed in the service and worship of God.

The chorister may be properly regarded as an assistant (and an important one) to the presiding officer of the branch. That individual primarily is responsible for the successful conduct of the services of the branch and a well-conducted song service is of great help in any hour of public worship. Therefore a chorister may prove to be a very helpful "right hand man" to the presiding officer. He may by his skill and discrimination deliver his services in such a way that their influence may produce a real spiritual uplift in the congregation; or he may by his lack of these qualities actually tend to confuse and dispel the true spirit of worship. In this regard every chorister should heed the exhortation of Paul to Timothy, and study to show himself approved. The hearty spirit of cooperation should be had at all times between presiding officer and chorister.

One important feature in which the prerogatives of the presiding officer and the chorister may overlap is in the selection of the hymns for the services. Usually this duty is relegated to the chorister as being properly a part of his work. As a consequence some choristers have conceived it to be their particular privilege to be enjoyed by them exclusively, and have resented any encroachment or even suggestion from president or laity of other than hymns of their own choosing. Such choristers lack the true spirit of cooperation, a most necessary one in the service of God.

The chorister should at all times be ready for each service with a selection of suitable hymns for the service, unless otherwise provided for. But he should be willing at any time to receive a suggestion as to hymns for any particular service, occasion, or subject. Sometimes a speaker may have a particular subject dear to his heart, teeming with a message he seeks to deliver and he may wish to accentuate that message with hymns appropriate in sentiment. At such times the chorister should stand ready to lend his cooperation and render the desired hymns. He will in this way render his services all the more efficiently.

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

Learn the New Hymns

Not long ago we received a letter from Sister — of — (name and address deleted by censor) asking our advice upon a matter that was weighing heavily upon her.

The burden of her complaint was this: The branch of which she was a member was afflicted with a chorister of the nonprogressive type. This chorister persisted in adhering to the same few old hymns for any and every service, as if her soul's salvation would be endangered if she should chance to stray from the well-beaten paths of the old stand-bys. From our sister's description the situation must have been very unenviable; the same set of old, time-worn hymns had been used over and over again from a time when "the memory of man ran not to the contrary," until the congregation longed with a most fervent longing for a change. The chorister had been sought, importuned, implored, begged, plead with, and threatened in the effort to induce her to choose some new hymns, all to no purpose; for to all overtures that tended to induce her to forsake the old hymnal landmarks she was as "sot" as the Rock of Gibraltar.

There are, in our hymnal, some hymns that have proved their value through time and have been engrafted in the grain of our structure. These hymns have come up from the experiences and sufferings of the church and voice the church's ideals and aspirations. Everybody knows them and generally everybody loves to sing them. There are also in this same hymnal other hymns, not so well known, but which also voice the sentiment and aspirations of the church. "Redeemer of Israel," "Hail to the brightness of Zion's glad morning," "All hail the power of Jesus' name," "Oh, for a faith that will not shrink," and a number of others of like character, are grand, noble hymns that have earned their station immortal; but are they not often used too much to the exclusion of other hymns of equal merit, but not so well known?

There is one real danger in the too frequent use of these well-loved hymns: their excessive use tends to render them commonplace. They are used so often that the people become habituated to them, singing them automatically, and interest in them in a large measure consequently lapses. They are so often sung as a matter of habit and not as an expression of sentiment. "Familiarity breeds contempt" is a true saying, and it applies in its proper sense to many situations in life. We may sing these noble old hymns so much that we naturally first lose active interest in them, then sing them passively and finally engage in them mechanically and unthoughtedly.

A hymn is more than a musical accompaniment to a service, or even a musical adjunct to it. It has both a musical and a sentimental place in the service. Take, for examination, any one of the hymns in our Hymnal and read it through carefully and analytically. It will be found an excellent, intelligent expression of praise and spiritual emotion. Each hymn is a sermon in verse, expressing true religious sentiment. It should therefore be sung in the spirit of the sermon, serving its sermonlike purpose just as fittingly as does the spoken message from the pulpit. But what would we think of the speaker that would preach the same set of sermons over and over? Yet this is in essence what is done when the same few hymns are repeatedly sung at all services.

We sometimes think this is not merely a matter of indifference, but is oftentimes a matter of laziness; a shirking of the effort required to practice new material; a mere moving along the lines of least resistance.

Choristers should constantly endeavor to enlarge the branch's stock of usable hymns as much as possible. A larger repertoire of hymns increases the possibility of properly accompanying the sermons with suitable hymns. Then, the singing of fresh new hymns will greatly enhance the interest in the song service.

Let us enlarge; it will pay.

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

The Ultimate Threshold of Music

DOES THE ULTIMATE THRESHOLD OF MUSIC OPEN TO A REALM OF PURE REASON, OR A REALM OF PURE FEELING?

[The following excellent article by the former editor of The Staff, Sister Audentia Anderson, is worthy of more than one careful reading. We have enjoyed it greatly ourselves and heartily commend it to all our readers.—EDITOR.]

Must it be the one or the other? Can we conceive of either without the other? It is like the old query, "Which creature is the most necessary, the man, or the woman?" Feeling, unattended, undirected, and uninterpreted by reason would be too primitive to be a factor in the contemplation of music's ultimate glory and development. It might be illustrated by the differences in the mental states of the mother who sings a lullaby, and of her babe who listens. The latter feels, and is soothed; the mother feels, but also knows. She knows, for instance, that it is the soothing lullaby which is needed; she would not think of shouting a drinking song, or becoming enthused over a martial air at that particular moment.

Everything in the world is influenced by the upward tendency of all creation, whether consciously so, or not. The person who listens to a classic, or sees a master's canvas, is influenced thereby for good—whether he listened or beheld to scoff or admire does not matter. Someday, sooner or later, when experience has woven the varying lights and shadows into his life's picture, he will remember and be grateful for the uplifting ministry of that which he saw or heard.

Concede the truth of this position, it must follow that only that is transcendently beautiful which most nearly approaches the transcendently good. Any art which seeks to interpret life into terms of the divine must of necessity partake, to some degree, of the nature of the divine. This embraces, supremely, the power and will to love, to feel! Frail humanity is not content to worship an "All-Wise"; he must also be the "All-Good"!

Music to reach its divinest plane, and to enter the realm of its highest destiny then, must be something more than intellectual. A devotee of music should give himself wholly to beauty of life and beauty of thought if he would be redeemed from the commonplace. It must emanate from the good, and minister unto the good, since it is the language in which we seek to voice the eternal.

Cold, intellectual "music," desecrates the name. An apostle of such form should properly be termed a "technician," only. At best, music is but a vehicle; the thought's the thing! One who is but expert with the vehicle is only a mechanician, ordinary or extraordinary, as the case may be.

All beauty is spiritual. It is dependent entirely upon inward states. "To the pure, all things are pure." If the inward state be not in harmony with the infinite, be sure the would-be "sweet" bells will "jangle out of tune." A mother filled with unlovely thoughts, with rancor, hate, rebellion, despair, cannot sing her babe to sleep; nor can a child be soothed or comforted by a song from one whom he fears or dislikes. Love and protecting care must be in the heart of the one; love and trusting confidence in the heart of the other. Technic and tone may be perfect; lacking the feeling it is a pitiful failure.

Only those truly minister who have suffered with the universal woe, or shared in the world's transports of joy. A bachelor who has never loved, seldom touches another with his art, unless it be that he is one of those rare and gifted souls who, through intensest insight and sympathy are able to put themselves in the places of those who have passed through the fire of experience. A passionately-worded love song on the lips of a child is a travesty, for the reason that these words are not vitalized by the magic touch of truth. How can a happy, carefree lad sing of sorrow, or interpret intelligently the varying moods of human life? Who has not noted the exultant joy, the underlying throb of understanding and sympathy, the deep, embracing tenderness and longing which creeps into the voice of the young mother? No matter how perfect her technic before maternity's crown was pressed upon her brow, after that hallowed event, there is that which has enriched, broadened, exalted, glorified, until she sings her song with new meaning, for has she not glimpsed new and wonderful vistas of experience, drinking deep at the very fountain of life itself?

On the other side of the equation, it is equally important that life and its experiential lessons shall have been learned, and impressed upon the mind and memory, before the message of the emotions can be received. A definite perception of the meanings of those experiences, their relations to the divine, and our ultimate identification therewith, must be chronicled before we can hope to either receive or give, anything of real or eternal value. A canvas before a Hottentot is a daub of unmeaning color. The swine has no appreciation of the pearls. A Chopin nocturne means nothing to the hog—human as well as otherwise! Some beauty must be in the soul of the listener in order that external beauty may be perceived. The pure whiteness of soul of a little child makes it supremely responsive to pure beauty. However, it is a response unattended by reason. He feels; he is touched; he weeps, he knows not why. Give him forty years' experience in life, forty years' of passion, sacrifice, grief, joy, struggle, reward, devotion, worship—he will know why! He can then unite feeling and understanding.

He feels his unity with all life; he understands, as well, that it is his to utilize, to become a start to his soul in its upward progress. It also becomes a light and a lift to the others struggling at his side. All beauty becomes alive to him. He sees his God in the wayside flower, or hears him in the majesty of the storm, or in the song of a little child. His soul opens to the vivifying forces from above, and through his knowledge, and his love—both divine heritages possible for every earthly pilgrim to obtain—he is able to detect at all times the divine melody of life itself!

Therefore, can we separate these two governing forces of the universe, which, with a third, combine the majesty of the Eternal?

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

The man is best served who has no occasion to put the hands of others at the end of his own arms.—Rousseau.

Some Musical Bon Mots

A chorus is a true democracy—all sorts and conditions of people joining together for the single purpose of bringing to life the inspiration of gifted composers.

Never frown on toy musical instruments. Let the children have their whistles, kazoos, toy pianos, jew's harps, mouth-organs, etc. They are only forerunners of something better.

Give music a definite place in your home. Let the little ones chatter their little songs. Teach them motion songs. Turn their games into musical games!

Stop thinking of music as something only associated with a teacher and hard practice; with trained singers and high-priced concerts. Revive the old custom of having a sing every evening that it is possible.

Our duty is to see to it that the rising generation shall absorb a real love for good music. Urge them to hear it whenever possible, but urge them still more to take part in it, for in the making of music lies its greatest joy.

Are We Our Mothers' Keepers?

We hope every reader of our column has read, or will read, the article in the Pictorial Review for September, entitled, "The rough road to motherhood," by Bell Bayless. The author has spent many years among mountain and rural women, and has seen their dire need of help as the burden of maternity is laid upon them. The distances of our rural mothers from the centers of help found in cities or towns, renders their situation most grave, as they face confinement without adequate help in their homes, or even ordinarily efficient care through their physical ordeal, or afterwards. It is enough to wring our hearts in pity as we contemplate the "crowning glory of womanhood" being placed upon a woman in such conditions, and the time has come when our pity is not enough. We must couple it with action.

Figures will not lie, it is said, and we learn that for every 154 babies born alive, in the United States, one mother makes the "supreme sacrifice." We also learn that 300,000 babies under one year old, die in our country each year, fully half from causes that are needless: one death out of every five in our country from all causes, is a baby under one year old! Will not proper care, proper education, proper protection afforded to prospective mothers, quickly reduce this dreadful percentage? And who is to give that care, that education, or provide that protection if not the state, the community at large, to whose most vital interest it is, that its young, in whom is its future hope and glory, shall have the best possible chance of life?

"The United States Government spent over half a million dollars to stamp out disease in cattle and as much more to purify the swine of the country. Is the life of a mother of less interest, of less value?"

We are sure each one is asking himself, "What can I do to help in this matter?" Here is what you can do, and what brings the responsibility right home to your door: you can write your Congressmen, those men whose sacred duty it is to rightly represent you in the legislative halls of this democratic country, and ask—nay, demand of—them to vote for the maternity bill which has been presented to them there. Now that we women have the vote, men will pay more attention to our wishes and demands than in the past. Therefore, our responsibility has vastly increased, not only in the vote itself, but in exercising the power and influence its possession has given us. "These are questions you women must answer," says one writer. "You must face your responsibility. It is your problem, and while you are solving it, never forget that every hour you delay, two mothers are laid in their graves!"

In every community there are women's clubs. The General Federation of Women's Clubs to-day numbers over two million five hundred thousand members, to say nothing of the thousands of smaller clubs which have never affiliated with that organization. Every one of these clubs should send instruction to its legislative representative, and, not being content with that, should actively interest itself in seeing that local conditions are improved, that the public mind about it is being educated to the grave need for action in these matters, and the public conscience quickened to definite and adequate procedure.

"You women must see to it that mothers get at least as much governmental care as the stock on the farms!"

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Minimum Standards for Public Protection of the Health of Mothers

(Submitted by the Washington Child Welfare Conference, May, 1919.)

1. Maternity or prenatal centers, sufficient to provide for all cases not receiving prenatal supervision from private physicians. The work of such a center should include:

a. Complete physical examination by physician as early in pregnancy as possible, including examination of heart, lungs, abdomen, and urine, and the taking of blood pressure; internal examination and pelvic measurements before seventh month in primipara; examination of urine every two weeks after sixth month, and more frequently if indicated; Wasserman test, when indicated.

b. Instruction in hygiene of maternity and supervision throughout pregnancy, through at least monthly visits to a maternity center until the end of the sixth month, and every two weeks thereafter. Literature to be given mother to acquaint her with the principles of infant hygiene.

c. Employment of sufficient number of public health nurses to do home visiting and to give instructions to expectant mothers in hygiene of pregnancy and early infancy; to make visits and to care for patient in puerperium; and to see that every infant is referred to an infant welfare center.

d. Confinement at home by a physician or a properly trained and qualified attendant, or in a hospital.

e. Nursing service at home at the time of confinement and during the lying-in period, or hospital care.

f. Daily visits through the fifth day, and at least two other visits during second week by physician or nurse from maternity center.

g. At least ten days' rest in bed after normal delivery with sufficient household service to allow mother to recuperate.

h. Examination by physician before discharging patient not later than six weeks after delivery.

2. Clinics, such as dental clinics, venereal clinics, for needed treatment during pregnancy.

3. Maternity hospitals, or maternity wards in general hospitals, sufficient to provide care in all complicated cases, and for all women wishing hospital care; free or part-payment obstetrical care to be provided in every necessitous case at home or in a hospital.

4. All midwives to be required by law to show adequate training, and to be licensed and supervised.

5. Training and registration of household attendants to care, under the supervision of physician or public health nurse, for sickness in the home, and for the home during sickness.

6. Education of general public as to problems presented by maternal and infant mortality and their solution.

Mother

It has aptly been said: "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." This statement of course refers to "mother," and the impression left by her upon her children. As, therefore, the characters of men and women are largely attributable to the influence of mothers, all, especially young mothers, and those with the prospect of motherhood, should, to a considerable degree at least, sense the sacredness of the trust committed to their care. A worthy woman is eminently fitted for her high and holy trust by an all-wise Creator who endowed her to a high degree with the divine virtues of love, gentleness, long-suffering, and patience. No trial, however severe, seems to impair these heaven-born attributes towards her children. Adverse ordeals in the discharge of her parental duties but reveal these virtues in greater loveliness.

Such a woman only is worthy the name "mother," and blessed indeed is the child that has such a guardian. She will never forsake nor leave him, but hold him to her heart by those ties of love that neither time nor misfortune can eradicate. Time may demand that mother, having fulfilled her allotted days, must take the "long, long trail, awinding," but she will have passed on to her children those divine gifts of heaven's love which will shine after her as the summer sun, bathing the earth with his beneficent rays of warmth and light, sinks in glory in the golden west. Mother, with heaven's approbation, passes to her rest amidst the glory of her life's triumphal career.

In the later years, when our life is ebbing, how sweet is the memory of a good mother! How it invites us to sweet reverie, where in spirit, we revisit the old home and relive those vanished, happy days! In all our troubles—and there are many incidental to child life—we always knew we could, with perfect trust, go to one ever-kind, loving, and forgiving friend—mother! How she would spend her time and comfort for our benefit! When we were happy, she shared our joy; when sad, she was sad too, but always found the silver linings to our clouds.

It is pathetically pleasant to recall now, the poem learned in childhood:

"Who ran to help me when I fell
And kissed the place, to make it well;
Or would some pretty story tell?
My mother.

"When pain and sickness made one cry,
Who was it sang sweet lullaby,
And wept for fear that I should die?
My mother.

"When sleeping in my cradle bed,
Who sat and watched my infant head,
And tears of sweet affection shed?
My mother."

None this side the heavenly home will ever sense to its fullest extent, the depth and richness of a mother's love. The Holy Scriptures chose it as the highest type with which to compare God's perfect love. Surely we can bow at the shrine of motherhood in sweet adoration and with all the energy of our soul's affection, pray God to bless all mothers!

We deem it fitting to close this paper with a brief glimpse at the noble career of a mother who figured conspicuously in the early days of the restored gospel. Emma Hale Smith, wife of the martyred Prophet, was indeed a mother in Israel, in the dark days of the church. She was driven from her home, with four young children, her husband was in the ruthless hands of an infuriated mob. In her flight from Missouri she had to cross the Mississippi River on ice, taking refuge with her helpless children in the free State of Illinois. How she clung to those children, sheltered them, and comforted them!

Later on, her husband joined her and for a short time they lived happily in Nauvoo. Satan, the arch enemy of truth, soon incited his emissaries to renew the persecution against God's chosen people, and on June 27, 1844, the "elect lady," after three attempts, and fainting three times, stood in the presence of her martyred husband! Alone, with her helpless children, in the presence of her dear, dead companion, under the most pathetic and trying conditions! The picture baffles our imagination! Hear her, as she tenderly places her hand upon her husband's cheek, exclaiming, in depths of unspeakable agony: "Oh, Joseph, Joseph! Have they taken you from me at last!" Try to picture the mother's emotions as she beholds her eldest son, Joseph, not yet twelve years of age, falling in his grief upon his dead father's face, wailing "Oh, my father, my father!" There was a trial, my friends! Few indeed have been called upon to drink from so bitter a cup.

Added to this, Emma Smith witnessed the church, for which her husband so freely suffered and died, led away into wrong paths. True to her God and her motherhood, she scorned to follow any of the deflections from the truth as taught by her husband. She knew that young Joseph was to be his father's successor in the prophetic office, and so, with confidence in God she remained in Nauvoo, bringing up her children in righteousness and truth as she saw it.

In 1860, when her son Joseph in obedience to a revelation from his heavenly Father went to Amboy to take his father's place, his mother—true and unchanging mother—accompanied him! What peace and joy must have invaded that mother's heart as she saw her son take up the work of his father, and witnessed that work confirmed by divine blessings! She was subsequently permitted to tarry nineteen years and to see three sons carrying to the world the gospel for which her husband so nobly gave his life. With what sweet peace and consolation must this mother have closed her eyes when her earthly probation was ended on April 30, 1879.

At the great union, when the church on earth will meet the "general assembly and church of the firstborn," surely one of the sweetest words of greeting will be "Mother!"

ELDER R. McLAUGHLIN.

Why should we think that the character, the health, the happiness, and salvation of the humblest, lowest person is beneath our dignity or beyond our power?—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

Character as Well as Physical Wants

A young mother recently related an occurrence which had repeated itself on several occasions in her home and which she had found most trying. She said, "My children go and get their clean stockings and tie knots in them in connection with a game they play, and often when I start to dress the children I can't find a single stocking that hasn't been tied tight several times. One hot summer afternoon, I lost patience. 'Anne,' I exclaimed to the eldest, 'Why do you cause me such annoyance, day after day?' 'What are mothers for?' she asked, and I saw that she was right."

I gravely asked this thoughtless mother if it would not have been better for Anne to aid in the task of untying the stockings, being led, by sharing the toil, to feel grateful for the many times her mother's patient hands had done it for her.

"Oh, she couldn't untie them," she answered, with a shake of her head.

"Had she tried, and found it impossible, she might, of her own accord, have stopped knotting the stockings," I replied.

"But I wanted to take the children to pay a visit, and there wasn't time enough to let her try!"

"Then oughtn't she to have forfeited the pleasure of going with you?"

She stared aghast; then, with a pitying look, burst out: "It's easy to see that you are not a mother! No mother could do that—her mother-heart would not let her!"

I was silent for a moment, then remembering that physical and spiritual motherhood are not necessarily embodied in the same person, explained without impatience the effect such indulgence would have on the child, and pointed out that the most loving mother takes as great pains to train her children's characters as to provide for their bodily wants, and that the greatest love is that which is most far-seeing. But to the end the mother stoutly held to her conception of the "mother-heart."

A scene observed at a later hour in the day revealed this mother, regardless of her "mother-heart," in a fit of ill temper administering a violent shaking to the said Anne.

"Nora," complained a mother to her sister, "your name-sake spoils all of our rides in the new car. She just will go, and then she wants to come home immediately, and kicks and screams all the way. Sometimes we set her out on the road and ride on, but she knows that we will have to come back, so that doesn't do any good! You're a kindergartner, Nora, you must break her of it."

"Leave her at home until you know that she understands that she should not spoil the enjoyment of others," advised the aunt. But this the mother flatly refused to do, and the miserable rides continued.

Some time later the mother went on a visit and the aunt was left in charge of her refractory niece. I saw her riding in the automobile several times without the offender. Then one day the small figure sat in its usual place and in the aunt's arms was the two-year-old brother. They called at the door. "Are you having a pleasant outing?" I asked little Nora. "Yes," she beamed. "I used to spoil our rides; now I'm showing little brother how to make everybody have a good time."

"We had to go without Nora for a few days," remarked the aunt quietly, "but now she is trying to think of others as well as of herself."

In this case the aunt was more truly the mother than the child's own parent. For she understood that mother-love should be something more than the gratification of a passion, and this gave her the courage to face the child's passing disappointment for the benefit of her future welfare.

What seems of slight importance at the moment assumes a quite different aspect when considered in the light of its future results.—Miss Harriet Frances Carpenter in bulletin from United States Bureau of Education and National Kindergarten Association.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Spirituality and Education

Things in Oklahoma are in some respects very similar to what they are in other parts of the country; people are marrying; children are being born; people are dying; some are loafing; some are working; a few have an interest in the gospel; many are bent on pleasure that does not enrich the soul; it is hot in the daytime and cool at night; it is dry and dusty; some of the crops have been good, some have been only fair, and some poor.

So I will try to express a few thoughts on spirituality and education. It is very evident from the teachings of the scripture and the experience of the ministry that very little can be accomplished in gospel work without God's Spirit to assist us. Jesus told the apostles to tarry at Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high, and after the great endowment at Kirtland the ministry went forth with great power and accomplished a great work in the next eight years. It is evident from what we read in the church papers and what we sometimes hear in private conversation that some of the brethren are fearful that because the leading men of the church are interested in education that there is grave danger of a departure from the faith of our fathers. Wherein lies the danger of a trained mind and hands and a store of useful knowledge? Is it in its possession or the use we make of it? A shot gun in the hands of a fool is a dangerous weapon, but can be very useful in the hands of a careful person. Power in the hands of an autocrat is a dangerous instrument. We can destroy a church or a nation. Wealth in possession of a covetous and selfish person can oppress the poor and add heavy burdens to the one who toils for his daily bread. Is there not a possibility of a misuse of every good thing in the world, because some unwise person puts his trained mind to an improper use, or a degenerate abuses the power in his hands, or a possessor of wealth puts it to unholy purposes shall we deny those powers to others who will make proper use of them?

Nephi said "to be learned is good, if they hearken unto the councils of God" (2 Nephi 6: 61). In these latter days the Lord said, "Seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning ever by study, and also by faith" (Doctrine and Covenant 85: 36). Joseph Smith and the elders in the early days of the church paid heed to the instruction given, and in Kirtland Temple a school was opened. The winter months were spent in study, and not only did they study the scripture but the Hebrew language under a competent instructor (Church History, volume 1, pp. 524, 530, 539, 553, 606). This work of preparation preceded the endowment that was given in the springtime of 1836.

Joseph Smith is accused by the enemies of the church of being an ignorant man, and the same lie is peddled around by some of his not well-informed followers. It is a foul slander on his fair name. He was an ignorant boy like all boys that only had the advantages of a country school for two or three months a year, but he was not an ignorant man. By patient and persistent study he became the equal of many who had in their younger days better advantages than he. Lincoln had faced the same conditions in his young life and in the same manner overcame them and became one of the master minds of our Nation. Sometimes the language of Paul is quoted as a justification for remaining in ignorance, "Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the things which are mighty" (1 Corinthians 1: 26, 27). Let us try to analyze his words. After the flesh is to be carnal, "the carnal mind is enmity against God," and "they that are in the flesh cannot please God." He does not use many of that kind of men because they are not willing to repent and lead clean, pure lives, "Not many mighty, not many noble." He does not say he does not call any of that kind of men. Not "many" he says. Why is it only a few are called? Because there are so many men who when they get learning, power, or wealth get the big head so bad that God seems to them very ignorant of the world's affairs, hence they must begin to enlighten him and tell him how he ought to manage things. If men come up to the standard given by our heavenly Father—"humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity," (Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4) their learning and wealth will not be a hindrance to them.

Admitting that there is danger of being led away from the faith of our fathers under the conditions stated above, what about too much ignorance? Is there any danger from that source? Will not ignorant men misrepresent God and his doctrine and his church and so prevent people from entering the kingdom? We are ever in the midst of danger, and some fall after spending most of their life in the Master's service. Our heavenly Father has advised us to seek learning by study and by faith, and because we seek to be obedient children will he withhold his Spirit? The young men and women who have entered Graceland College and are trying to heed that instruction and to be trained under competent teachers that are endowed with the holy priesthood with the purpose in view that they might become efficient workers in the Lord's vineyard—are they not right in believing that the Holy Spirit will assist them, and their teachers? If not, why not? Am I in the faith with the above sentiments?

Your brother in gospel bonds,

TERLTON, OKLAHOMA.

EDWARD RANNIE.

Why Talk Against Recreation?

While reading the HERALD of August 13, "A warning regarding education and recreation," we thought of the many letters of this kind we have read in the HERALD and Ensign. Though I appreciate our brother's ideas very emphatically, yet do we really say we want to establish athletics, swimming pools, etc., in order to keep our young in the church, or in places of spirituality? I do not think that our church authorities really mean that. Are these things not done rather with the idea that our young people might have the proper means of physical exercise and recreation for the necessary development of body and mind, without having to mix in environments detrimental to spirituality? Surely we would not have our young people do without these things. We all know that without recreation, mental and physical, our lives are not as efficient as with it. My own personal experience proves this to me. Recreation only keeps us in better trim for making our lives useful.

Are we not trying to interest our young people spiritually and teaching them to seek inspiration from God in all they do? I believe we are trying to create an interest in them for the work of the Lord. Prayer meetings, especially, for young people are encouraged. In the boy and girl movements in our church "Service" is always the motto, and the things that are taught are conducive for good, that they might be taught to steer their barks safely past the snares of Satan. Isn't this spirituality in its very broadest sense? What is spirituality anyhow if it isn't service.

How could athletics and recreation create as our brother has said, a desire for more of the things that are carnal when these themselves are not carnal? I understand anything that is carnal is not recreation, at least for God's people. Recreation is something which freshens and relaxes us after the strain of work, enabling us to do more work. If many of the parents who go to church and attend prayer meeting could only have their eyes opened to some of the miseries and heartaches and mistakes the most of their children have had to go through because they were left to find their own recreation (if I might be permitted to call it such), when their parents should have provided them with the right kind of play—useful play, they would be willing to walk barefoot in order to raise the funds for suitable recreation for the young. No one, either old or young can work always and not play, and when we think we can, we are merely prematurely wearing ourselves out and wasting our playtime and will be held responsible before God.

Why should we think providing recreation is not the Lord's work. Surely we would not want to be told everything in an audible voice. Sometimes the Lord has spoken to me of things I have desired to do merely because I lacked initiative. I knew myself it was right and merely lacked initiative, and if we do the thing we think to be right and do it in faith, if it is not right, the Lord will check our effort—then he will speak.

Right here may I take just a little more of your space and time to speak of "mixed bathing." As a church we have never taken a stand for or against it, but the Chatham District Saints last reunion, I understand, desired humbly and earnestly to know the Lord's will concerning it, and were given to understand God would bless them more fully if they did not indulge in mixed bathing, for the sake of the weak ones or those who had not been properly instructed. Thinking this to be only for last year, they went back to mixed bathing this year, and the words of the Spirit during this reunion were always of the one thought, something like this: Will you do my will or will you not; you do not have to keep my commandments if you do not wish. If you will heed the instruction you have been given, I will pour out more and more blessings upon you. Always in such a pleading voice. Surely what is good for one branch is good for the whole, and why should we wait to be told everything?

In regards to spending money for a building for recreation, if we had been told to build the temple, it would be fine to spend money on this, but if not, and if Saints are willing to sacrifice some of the less necessary things that they may have means for this very necessary thing—proper recreational means for the young—then why not have it? Personally I have always looked forward to the erection of a building for this purpose. I do not see how anything could be needed more than recreation, in the right sense of the word, for our young.

With you for truth and light,

LEAH VEALE.

---

Discontent is the source of all trouble, but also of progress in individuals and in nations.—Auerbach.

The Bishopric Advocate
for 1919

Every Member a Tithing Payer

---

A brother who was liberal in contributing for special purposes of the church was shown in a dream that tithing was a debt and should be paid before offering a gift to the Lord. He was asked, "Why do you offer me gifts when you owe me a debt?" One tenth of your increase belongs to God.

A certain man would not join this church because we taught that one tenth of our increase belongs to God. Poor fellow! Could he not see that whether he came into the church or remained on the outside that he still is in debt to the Lord? We are held responsible for the keeping of the law of the Lord from the time we become acquainted with it. God has no profit and loss account into which he throws uncollectable accounts. They are carried on his books. We can settle them now and have a clean slate at the judgment day.

Paying tithing develops thrift, economy, and the saving habit. The more you do for God the more you have for yourself.

Contrast the drawn, pinched features of the miser with the bright, cheery countenance of the liberal man. One lives for self. One lives for others. When we pay our tithing we are living for others—our harvest is love, joy, peace, happiness, contentment and a consciousness that we please God.

A grain of wheat has power to save a human life but only when thrown together with many others. Your tithing, though it be but little, will, when thrown together with others, have power to save the souls of men. God has wisely provided for this gathering together of money through the bishops and their agents. Think of the joy that will come to you in eternity when you see the good that you have done by paying your tithing.

---

Des Moines Reunion

As the Des Moines District reunion passes, we pause in a retrospective survey. Perhaps at no time have difficulties confronted the reunion as this year, because of the tie-up of freight shipment, and it was only by hauling the tents overland from Des Moines that the reunion was possible.

Located in the town of Runnells, the grounds, a natural grove, were all that could be desired. The church basement, about two blocks distant, furnished a good dining room.

The district presidency with U. W. Greene, presided over the reunion. The daily order of service was as follows: Priesthood meeting at 8 o'clock, at which time addresses were given by U. W. Greene, F. M. McDowell, and O. Salisbury; prayer service 9:15; choir practice at 10:30; preaching, 11:45, and again in the evening.

One afternoon the Woman's Auxiliary gave a playlet written by Margaret Davis of Des Moines, "Women's work—a vision of past, present, and future," which contrasted the aid society and Woman's Auxiliary and gave a splendid object lesson of women's possibilities in relief work. A. E. Warr, in the interest of the Sunday school, lectured upon "The modern Sunday school—its curriculum." Other afternoons were devoted to recreational and social activities. Volley ball and swimming proved the favorite sports this year. Hikes, weenie and corn roasts, marshmallow toasts, picnic suppers and a taffy pull were included in the social affairs.

On the last Saturday evening a pageant was given on the restoration of the gospel, taking the story from the time of Israel's dispersion through the days of the reformers, Luther and Wesley, the presentation of the plates by Moroni, the visit of Harris to Professor Anthon, Oliver Cowdery's visit to the Indians, and Israel's return. It was given on the lawn with natural settings.

One special feature was the boys' camp separated from the main camp. Under supervision they cooked and lived in regular camp fashion. This was a success from both financial and social standpoint.

The music was in charge of the district chorister. Special numbers were provided in solos, duets, quartettes, and anthems. One very enjoyable part of this work was the congregational sings and camp fire sings which demonstrated the love our people have for song.

We were pleased to have with us Apostle U. W. Greene, Patriarch W. A. McDowell, Floyd McDowell, and J. S. Roth, in addition to the local force. Brother Greene's lectures on Palestine, and Brother F. M. McDowell's talks to the youth were especially helpful in the special services provided for the young. It gives inspiration and instruction to meet these men of experience and broad vision, whose services exhibit the spirit of helpfulness.

The reunion has given an impetus to district work; the association of Saints has been pleasant and profitable.

Sincerely,

NEVADA, IOWA.

ROY CHEVILLE.

Northern California Reunion

The Northern California reunion held at Irvington has closed, and is considered by many the best ever. It certainly was a good one in many respects. Largely attended and a variety of speakers. No disturbing element such as factional tendencies, jealousy, or anything of that nature was discernible. It seemed to be a gathering together of a happy band of Saints from all over the district.

Of course, critics inclined to be severe could find room for suggestions for improvement, which is conceded.

Financially it exceeded the expectation of many. Although there were nearly three hundred dollars expended in improvement of the grounds, the committee was able to report a balance in the treasury.

It being so much like other reunions it seems unwise to take space for a detailed write-up. So many names that might be honorably mentioned come to my mind and suggest a long sheet of paper. Perhaps wiser not to mention any rather than discriminate and mention a few. Not even the

PRESS COMMITTEE.

Lowbanks Reunion

The Lowbank's (Toronto) reunion was a pleasant surprise to all of us. It exceeded, in every way, our fondest anticipations. There were many more campers than we expected. Every tent was crowded. We were compelled to store our people away in surrounding farmhouses. The attendance of nonmembers exceeded that of any previous year. Everybody was happy. The work of the reunion was systematically organized, each department having specific functions. The spirit of freedom was in the air. Some who came with hesitation are now enthusiastic boosters. All have learned that we can run a reunion better without some people than with them. The church work is bigger than any man. On every hand we heard the exclamation, "This is the best reunion we ever held."

The speakers were Joseph Luff, George E. Harrington, George W. Robley, John W. Wight, Joseph H. Yager, Grant St. John, David Pycok, and Thomas W. Williams. Patriarchs John Shields and Archibald Angus were present and rendered valuable assistance. The local priesthood was well represented.

The reunion was a success in every way. The Saints are delighted and happy. A better feeling obtains among nonmembers than in former years. The name Latter Day Saint stands higher in the estimation of the people of Lowbanks and the surrounding country than ever before.

One night was given over to a concert in which nonmembers and members participated. The Saints are to be congratulated over their achievement. I am proud of the Saints of Canada.

Sincerely,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

Northern Wisconsin Reunion

The Northern Wisconsin reunion for this year is a matter of history and one, the memory of which, we trust, will bring pleasant thoughts to all who attended.

The attendance was the greatest in the history of the district. The spiritual feeling of peace and good will the best, and with the least amount of unexpected happenings to mar the perfect pleasure of the gatherings.

Preaching was by Apostle William Aylor, Patriarch F. G. Pitt, J. B. Wildermuth, Irvin Lenox, and A. L. Whitaker. Sister Pitt accompanied her husband and rendered valuable assistance as pianist and gave an interesting lecture on their travels and work in foreign lands; she is a favorite and greatly appreciated by the young people.

The reunion association is now out of debt and is already looking forward to next year to making the gatherings larger and better than ever. Saints of the district please take notice. Keep your plans well formulated a year ahead and be sure to be present with us at the reunion next year.

Sister J. A. Gardner, representing the Woman's Auxiliary, was with us two days and gave interesting and instructive lectures representative of the department.

Young people's prayer meetings made a distinctive feature and were well attended. We are glad to note the interest the young are taking in church work.

The writer feels himself a modern "Rip Van Winkle" in the district. We spent much of our first two years of missionary work in this district but had been absent for twenty years until we came to the reunion, and while we were met and greeted by many familiar faces and old friends, we have looked around in vain to see many known and loved by us who have gone the way of all the world. We are glad to learn that they were firm in the faith to the end. May God grant that blessing to all his.

CHETEK, WISCONSIN.

J. B. WILDERMUTH.

Method is the hinge of business, and there is no method without order and punctuality.—Hannah More.

The greatest homage we can pay to truth is to use it.—Emerson.

Some Advice to the Elders

And now that the prophecy is about to be fulfilled regarding the gathering of the Jews, do not delay their Christianizing by preaching the persecution of the Savior. They should be dealt with in love and forgiveness.

The Jew of this age has nothing to do with the sins of his forefathers. He is law-abiding, respectable, industrious; believes in God and a coming Savior; intelligent, progressive, clean, and lacking in the narrow-minded prejudice towards God's people, that the sects of the day abound in. I speak from experience.

If you don't want them rebellious, or to drive them from the investigation of the gospel, do not allude to the crucifixion in their presence. Take it home to yourself and see how you would feel in like circumstances. They all say that the Gentile makes a mistake in saying the Jew crucified Christ; for while they did not believe him to be the Son of God, it was the Romans who crucified him. They were then ruling. The Jews are God's people, and therefore our brothers and sisters.

Another matter I wish to speak of that has been carelessly dealt with by some members of the church, there are among you, merchants, working people of all classes, and professionals. Saints should deal with them as far as their circumstances allow, instead of going to outsiders who often behind your back ridicule your religion, while they smilingly take your hard-earned money and build up man-made doctrines.

How can the Saint who is a professional artist, musician, or anything else, pay his tithes, support his family, or get ready for the gathering to Zion unless we obey the command to love and help one another, using charity at home first? A true Latter Day Saint has to struggle in this world of prejudice. It matters not what knowledge he is capable of disseminating. At least give your brothers and sisters a trial to the extent of their ability before employing outsiders, if circumstances permit, and maybe, by this means you will be delightfully surprised in the talent or knowledge or fair dealing your brother will deal out. Besides you will help him help himself to higher rounds of the ladder, and also keep him, or her, in your church services, so that they will not be obliged to seek strange fields for a livelihood; perhaps in places where there are no Saints to lend encouragement by their presence occasionally.

The Saints have the same opportunities in this progressive age of free libraries, etc., of being up-to-date the same as the sects of the day who help one another—a lesson to the Latter Day Saint who has every reason to progress, as the command is to make use of talent, etc.

One who tries to be

A LATTER DAY SAINT.

FLINT, MICHIGAN, August 10, 1919.

Editors Herald: The work in Second Branch we believe is at an upward trend here. We have a good spiritual man at the head of our branch. The newly elected officers seem to be cooperating with him.

Recently three were called and ordained to the priesthood. It does us good to see them respond when called upon to do their part. "Where duty calls or danger, be never wanting there." We believe in their motto.

Some of our number are attending the Kirtland reunion. We hope they may return with a store of spiritual food for we who are unable to attend.

Elder Matthew Liston, our city missionary, is holding services in the north end of town in the tent. The outlook is good. Brother Matthew is an energetic young man and we are proud to have him represent God's work. He is kept very busy. "Cast thy bread upon the waters; for thou shalt find it after many days."

All who attended the Erie Beach reunion reported a spiritual feast. The gifts were manifested in wonderful power. The burden of the gifts given was pleading to God's people to come up higher. When are we going to hearken to his voice?

PEARL HERBST, Correspondent.

BAYARD, NEBRASKA, August 12, 1919.

Editors Herald: I wish to avail myself of the only means provided for communication with the people of the church. I have been isolated from church services for over three months, and coming from a branch where we had about three good sermons a week, there is no need to tell you it is lonely indeed, especially on the first Sabbath of the month. I miss more than ever the "communion with Saints."

One thing we still may do from which I derive much satisfaction and spiritual benefit is the payment of tithes and offerings, for which the Bishop and the Lord himself are constantly calling to the church. And this is not only a duty but a sacred privilege; not only to "say our part" but to "pay our part."

I am told there are scattered Saints all along the valley (North Platte Valley), but it seems difficult to get in touch with them, many living at a distance.

I have communicated with the secretary at Tryon, Nebraska, with the intent to attend the reunion there August 1 to 10, but was called on a case where I am still busy, though the reunion has gone into history. But the sick must be cared for, and contact with these things make us aware that we must improve our time while we have opportunity. Was much disappointed, however, as it was the first meeting anywhere near, and that was over one hundred and fifty miles away.

I am endeavoring to live that I need not shrink from telling others that I am a member of the church of Christ, and when the revival of the work begins here I may be of assistance. Some one is sadly needed here to waken the interest of all, and to hold the Saints together.

I wish to say to every local Religio secretary in Central Michigan that though some distance away, I am trying to keep up my work as district secretary until the fall convention, and wish every one would send me their report at the given address, not later than September 10, that I may have opportunity to summarize and report to the convention.

Trusting that each will assist me, and with greeting to my friends in Michigan and elsewhere, I am,

Your sister,

EDITH A. SMITH.

MINATARE, NEBRASKA, Route 2.

BEAVERTON, MICHIGAN, August 26, 1919.

Editor's Herald: We will tell of our very successful two-day meetings, held here August 23 and 24, about three hundred Saints from different parts of the district being here; also Saints from Flint and Detroit.

Friday evening a short program was given and a good time was enjoyed. Saturday morning, prayer service was held and a good spirit was manifested. At the Sunday morning prayer meeting the good Spirit still prevailed, and God was pleased to speak words of encouragement to us, and all were blessed.

Good instructions were given by all the speakers and we all, I believe, have a greater desire to do our part, whatever it may be, for the Master's cause.

During our two-day meetings we were all delighted to see seven more precious souls going forth into the waters of baptism. Surely it does our hearts good to see young men and young women taking up the work of the Master.

My humble prayer to God is that we may all be faithful, and with the redeemed of earth be able to stand when our Master comes.

Your sister in the conflict for right,
MAUD ORTON, Correspondent.

HONOLULU, TERRITORY OF HAWAII, August 17, 1919.
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY, Independence, Missouri; -

Dear Brethren: We arrived here on the 12th and are now settled in our mission home. A very homelike place it is, very neat and comfortable.

The Saints have given us a royal welcome and it is greatly appreciated we assure you. The sisters had a fine dinner prepared for us at the mission house. We had our first taste of poi, also many other new dishes. Some one is here almost always bidding us welcome.

Brother Waller is a grand man; no wonder the Saints here love him so. He is indeed the "father" of this mission. He has given us words of encouragement, also words of advice. We are very thankful that he is here at this time. His support means much.

I spoke both this morning and this evening, with fair liberty. The size of the audience was encouraging and the attention was excellent.

I know we will like it here and trust that we may be instruments of much good in the Lord's service.

Yours in bonds,
V. B. ETZENHOUSER.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE CRIMINAL (Continued from page 884.)

this basis of computation, assuming that we give the normal men common school training, the State of Iowa has confined in her penitentiary and reformatory millions of dollars' worth of potential energy which, under favorable conditions, ought some day to be productive in field, mine, factory, or office. . . .

It costs the State more by far in the end to permit her charges to relapse into crime, thereby incurring the expense of repeated conviction and imprisonment, than to give at least a common school education with industrial training, even at considerable expense.

We would emphasize above all else that this is in accordance with Christianity, and represents religion. "Am I my brother's keeper?" The answer is made, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Again, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Example of the good Samaritan is another instance. In fact, it is strange, after the continued attack made by such men as Nietzsche upon Christianity, because it encourages, cares for, and develops the weak, to have an attack now made on the ground, that it is too harsh to the "under dog." A consideration for our fellow men, even though a defective, even though a criminal and an effort to remove him from that class are in accordance with the best principles of Christianity.

Further, it is noteworthy that at a time when the world at large was building prisons as places of torture, and of punishment; when the world held it was decidedly wrong to make prisons interesting or pleasant in any sense of the term, for criminals should be made to suffer for their wrongdoing, Joseph Smith, the founder of this church, came forward frankly urging the right method to be one of cure, of love, of fair treatment, of giving them an opportunity to work out doors, of turning them out in this sense from the prison, not turning them out free to run wild, but evidently to release them under parole, then to care for them, and see that they secured proper opportunities for work in the prison and after their release. Then, when the man is out and has finished his term, extend a helping hand and say, "Go thy way, and sin no more," and lest he stumble again go part of the way with him, and see that his feet are firmly placed.

No church as such has stood so strongly for the industrial aspects of religion, for the care of the weak, and for such principles as are here set forth, for we believe that it is indeed another expression of Christianity.

S. A. B.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Conference Minutes

NORTHERN SASKATCHEWAN.—With Minnesota Branch (near Vanscoy), July 26 and 27. District president, W. J. Cornish in charge, assisted by Daniel Macgregor and J. W. Peterson. Secretary's statistical report did not arrive in time for conference. Bishop's agent reported: Receipts since last conference, $4,951.18; expenditures $4,274.08. Item of interest was the advisability of publishing a mission paper for Western Canada; the matter was laid on the table, the general tendency being against it. The invitation to meet in a joint reunion with Alberta District was accepted. Officers elected: President, W. J. Cornish; vice presidents, J. A. Beckman, C. E. Diggle, secretary, Eva Land; treasurer, C. E. Diggle; librarian, Sister Bessie Cornish; Bishop's agent, C. E. Diggle; president Woman's Auxiliary, Lottie Diggle. Time and place of next conference left with the district presidency. Eva Land, secretary.

LAMONI STAKE.—At Hiteman, Iowa, June 12-15, 1919, Lamoni Stake and auxiliaries met in conference session, presidency of the stake in charge. C. E. Wight chosen to act as secretary in the absence of stake secretary. Orrin Moon was elected by unanimous vote as second vice president of the Religio to have charge of the Boy Movement in the stake. C. E. Wight was ordained a high priest and set apart as a counselor in the presidency of Lamoni Stake. Recommendation from stake presidency that a branch be organized at Creston was approved, and referred to stake presidency for execution. Recommendation that branch presidents hereafter be nominated by the stake presidency, and that elections in the various branches be annually, the term of office in each instance to begin January 1, was adopted. G. W. Blair was elected as auditor to audit the various accounts of the stake, including those of the auxiliaries. Various topics of interest were discussed during the conference and benefit derived therefrom. Time and place of next conference left to the stake presidency. Cyril Wight, secretary pro tem.

The Presidency

To the Saints of the Little Sioux District: Brother Amos Berve having been appointed to the Eastern Iowa District, Elders Joseph Lane and Fred Fry, who were his counselors, will carry on the work of the district presidency until the convening of the fall conference.

ELBERT A. SMITH,
For the First Presidency.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 3, 1919.

Conference Notices

Utah, in Salt Lake City on October 4 and 5. All branches and local officers should send in their reports. It is desired that a good representation be had, and the Saints are urged to be present. Send reports to L. G. Holloway, district president, 336 South Fourth East Street, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Des Moines, at Nevada, Iowa, October 10, 11, and 12. Bess Laughlin, secretary, Rhodes, Iowa.

Southeastern Illinois, at Bellair, Illinois, October 10 and 11. Those going by railroad please correspond with L. M. Edmonds, Bellair, Illinois. Send all reports to W. E. Presnell, secretary, Xenia, Illinois.

Fremont, Iowa, with the Bartlett Branch, October 4, 11 a. m. Conventions will open Friday, 2:30 p. m. as usual. The question of permanent reunion grounds will be up for consideration, and we hope for a full representation from all branches. T. A. Hougas, president.

Convention Notices

Northern Michigan Sunday school and Religio, at Boyne City, September 19. Religio at 9:30 a. m. Sunday school business session at 1:30 p. m. C. N. Burtch, president and superintendent.

Detroit, Michigan, Religio and Sunday school, at the First Detroit Branch, Corner Fourth and Holden Streets, September 20 and 21. All district officers urged to report their labors fully. Please have all expense accounts in the hands of secretary not later than September 17. Mrs. S. A. Thiel, 514 Rix Street, Flint, Michigan, secretary Religio.

Northeastern Nebraska Sunday school and Religio at Walthill, Nebraska, October 5 and 6. Jay Leeka, secretary.

Addresses

V. M. Goodrich, 821 North Tenth Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri.

Married

POWELL-MCMILLEN.—At the home of Brother and Sister L. W. Powell, at Kirtland, Ohio, on the 15th day of August, 1919, Brother Lorenzo D. McMillen, of New Philadelphia, Ohio, was married to Miss Alice E. Perry, also of New Philadelphia, Ohio, Elder L. W. Powell officiating.

Reunion Calendar

Florida, Alafloa Church, eight miles north of Brewton, Alabama, October 3. (878.)

Our Departed Ones

BULLARD.—Mary Ellen Bullard was born in Knox County, Illinois, May 3, 1842; died Sunday, June 15, 1919. Married to Albert M. Bullard, June 6, 1857. To them were born 5 daughters and 3 sons. She was baptized December 9, 1872, at Kewanee, Illinois, by Elder J. D. Jones. She leaves 5 children, Sisters Nancy A. Tabor, Belle A. Roush, Emma E. Willis, Sarah E. Wolfe, and Charles A. Bullard, her husband and three children having preceded her. She was laid to rest at Creston, Iowa, funeral sermon by J. Charles May at Wray, Colorado. Though blind for many years she had a faith that did not shrink, though pressed by every foe, that "did not tremble on the brink of any earthly woe."

GOODMAN.—Cora Goodman was born at Camden, Missouri, January 29, 1874. Died August 30, 1919, at Independence, Missouri. Married Marshall Goodman in 1899 at Lexington, Missouri. To them were born 7 children, of whom 6 survive. Baptized July 9, 1911, by G. W. Talley and was a true Latter Day Saint; patient and enduring with her family and all that were associated with her. A true mother, never speaking ill of anyone. She suffered with a cancer and for 7 months was confined to her bed. About 2 months ago she was removed to the Sanitarium. Funeral from Lexington undertaking parlors, conducted by E. A. Davis. Interment in Macepalak Cemetery.

WASHBURN.—George D. Washburn was born May 9, 1849, at Brighton, Ontario. Baptized May 15, 1888. Ordained a priest in 1892, and labored as a missionary for several years. Ordained an elder in 1902 and did efficient service for the church. Baptized nearly 600 into the church. His work has been widespread in Michigan and many will mourn his departure. Died at Flint, August 29, 1919, of apoplexy of heart. Services at his home near Bellaire, C. N. Burtch officiating. Interment in Central Lake Cemetery.

HICKFORD.—Fannie Hickford was born January 11, 1862, at Louth, Lincolnshire, England. Sister Hickford was a member of the Church of England for many years, taking her sojourn to South Africa, then to Australia, coming to this country, she finally located with her husband in Detroit, Michigan. She united with the Reorganized Church July 13, 1919, being baptized by Joseph Luff. Died at Independence Sanitarium August 25, 1919. Leaves to mourn husband, 3 sisters, with a number of relatives and friends. Services from Stone Church in charge of I. N. White. Sermon by Joseph Arber. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

TANNER.—Flora Binder Tanner was born March 22, 1893, in Macon County, Missouri. In 1912, married Charles Tanner. Two children blessed this union. Passed away at the home of her parents in Macon, Missouri, on August 25, after a lingering illness of eight months duration. She leaves to mourn, husband, 2 children, father, mother, one sister, and 3 brothers. Funeral services from the Presbyterian Church of Macon, in charge of Charles Edmunds, sermon by F. T. Mussell.

FOREMAN.—Rae Marie, the little daughter of Clarence and Lillian Foreman, was born in Lamoni, November 2, 1917. Passed to her rest August 29, 1919. The father, mother, two sisters, Lucile and Dorothea, and many other relatives and friends mourn their loss in the passing of this little one. Services in charge of H. A. Stebbins. Sermon by D. T. Williams. Interment in Rosehill Cemetery.

"THINK"

The annual of the Latter Day Saint Sales Association comes to us this year entitled "Think." O. Salisbury is editor, and has succeeded in getting together some interesting material. The association has a most commendable ideal in seeking to make its members better salesmen, not only in the record of goods sold, but in the general methods employed. And they insist with truth on their side, that "we are all salesmen. We are—or should be—engaged in selling the gospel. It behooves us, then, to improve our qualifications and to develop them to the highest pitch of efficiency, that our efforts may be put forth winningly, and the results be worthy of our subject. God does not want—cannot use in this day of critical analysis—untutored representatives," quoting the words of H. T. McCaig, associate president. Barring an inexcusably large number of typographical errors, it makes an excellent piece of literature.

"WHAT'S GOING ON"

We learn from a recent sheet headed "What's Going on," that Elder Albert N. Hoxie, general Church Chorister, will take up a new department of musical work this winter, or rather enlarge upon the musical work he has been doing heretofore. Brother Hoxie was formerly director of music at League Island Navy Yard, and is declared to be America's foremost exponent of community music, as well as conductor of the Liberty Chorus in Philadelphia. His new work will be community singing with a symphony orchestra, in a series of ballad concerts under the auspices of the university extension society. Prominent soloists are expected to assist, while the orchestra will also render works of the world's greatest composers. This is not a departure from community singing, but an effort to show that community singing can attain a real record of artistic achievement.

Our Eastern Colorado District reunion is now a matter of history. Registrations showed about two hundred visitors present. Of the general ministry Brethren Ammon White, Ellis Short, J. R. Sutton, C. W. Prettyman, Swen Swensen, J. D. Curtis, W. M. Self, James A. Thomas were present. The press of Fort Collins treated us courteously. Doctor Lorey of the State Agricultural College, and Mayor Stoker of Fort Collins addressed the Saints during the reunion, which was held on the beautiful college grounds, the meetings being held in the college chapel. The Saints and friends of Fort Collins, also the district officers deserve mention for their untiring efforts put forth to make the reunion a success, which efforts were not in vain. Reports show that we have now about twelve hundred members in this district. See detailed account of reunion and the conference minutes later.—J. Charles May.

DEDICATION OF COLUMBUS CHURCH

Sunday, September 15, 1919, the First Columbus Branch will dedicate their church, which was erected four years ago and opened for services on September 12, 1915. This building was erected under the direction of Elder Arthur Allen, now president of the Nauvoo District, at a cost of $6,500, and in four years the entire debt has been paid.

The church has a seating capacity of about 350, with basement that can be used for Sunday school work and other auxiliary meetings. It is located at Tompkins Street and Medary Avenue, just across the street from a large public school, and ranks among the best buildings of its kind in the State. It is located on a hill and in one of the best residential districts of the city. It is expected that one of the First Presidency will be present at the dedication, also the Bishop and Elder Arthur Allen.

The Saints in Columbus, under the direction of the building committee, have done nobly in their efforts to pay for this edifice. The money has been raised and as they look back, there is no one who can tell how they ever did this, as always before the attempt was made, it was quite an effort to raise ten to twelve dollars a month to pay expenses for rent of a hall over a picture show, and now they have not only paid for the church but are maintaining a mission in Clintonville, about three miles away, at a rental of nearly as much as the original hall where all met together. It is expected that many Saints from a distance will attend the dedication. Elder Harnish, of Dayton, Ohio, also assisted much in the erection of the building, as he donated his time at carpenter work freely. There is a membership of 165, and Elder C. W. Clark is the present pastor. This branch is the home branch of Apostle G. T. Griffiths.

GRACELAND OPENS AUSPICIOUSLY

On Friday morning, September 5, Graceland College had its formal opening, with the usual exercises. The speaker of the day was Professor George S. Dix of the State De-

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor.
The official organ of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Published every Wednesday by the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. Entered at the post office at Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

PRICE, $1.75 A YEAR IN ADVANCE

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words.

CONTENTS

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| EDITORIAL:   |     |
| Square Blocks   | 881 |
| A Time of Proving   | 882 |
| Christianity and the Criminal   | 882 |
| ORIGINAL ARTICLES:   |     |
| Bible Reading in the Pulpit, by Augustine Dwyer   | 885 |
| Light, by Elwin R. Davis  | 887 |
| Book of Mormon Supported by Archaeology, by W. O. Robertson   | 889 |
| OF GENERAL INTEREST:   |     |
| Episcopal Commission Indorses Faith Healing   | 891 |
| Less Talk—More Application  | 891 |
| The "Go Slow" Method  | 891 |
| Pleasing Publicity  | 892 |
| THE STAFF  | 892 |
| Audentia Anderson.  |     |
| WOMAN'S AUXILIARY  | 894 |
| R. McLaughlin.  |     |
| LETTER DEPARTMENT  | 897 |
| Edward Rannie—Leah Veale—Roy Cheville—T. W. Williams—J. B. Wildermuth—Pearl Herbst—Edith A. Smith—Maud Orton—V. B. Etzhouser. |     |
| MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT   | 901 |
| FROM HERE AND THERE  | 902 |

partment of Education, at Des Moines. He was formerly professor of education at the Iowa State College and has recently been president of the State Normal School at Kearney, Nebraska. He delivered a masterly address. The usual speeches of welcome from the heads of various local organizations were offered. While the college faculty are overwhelmed with the rush of registration, and hence are not able to give accurate figures, they estimate that the enrollment in the collegiate department is fifty per cent greater than ever before. And the other departments are likewise well filled. Conversing with Professor McDowell, we learned that he had seventy-five pupils in psychology, divided into three sections. The class of twenty-three or thereabouts who are taking the religious education course are doing most of their work separately and have an intensive course.

PRESIDENT SMITH TO WASHINGTON

President Frederick M. Smith was in the East the first week in September, being called to Washington on business for the church, including securing passports properly vised by the various British and French consuls involved in the trip of Apostles John W. Rushton, Paul M. Hanson, Bishops George Lewis and A. V. Karlstrom. The preliminary steps have been taken, and these brethren, also Sister Karlstrom, sailed September 8 on the steamship Maona for the South Sea Islands, where Bishop Karlstrom will be located and where the others will labor for a time. They expect to remain there several weeks, then proceed to other points on the way to Australia via New Zealand, reaching that distant land by the first of the year, which is summertime there. This means that it will be approaching reunion time, which is held approaching our spring, and in their autumn season.

Our Help Problem

A Message from the Manager

Last week we advertised for two men for our press department. The replies to date have not been in satisfactory numbers. Kindly allow us to explain our situation:

The Herald Publishing House employs around thirty men and women in its various departments. Some of the work is highly specialized and can only be learned by years of experience. Each of the tasks offers a special opportunity to serve the interests of the church and at the same time bring the employee into a community of Latter Day Saints.

Those who qualify in our institution are in a position to compete, if they desire, with the best in similar establishments elsewhere. The equipment and working conditions are first class, and we have recently inaugurated a new wage scale which will enable us to assure our employees their just wants and needs will be met.

We need some help now in various departments, both skilled and apprentice. There will be a constant demand for more, to fill vacancies caused by the usual shifting of help. We want to get in touch with young men and women who have ideals as well as natural ability. We will see that every opportunity is offered for advancement.

Young men and women should understand that the mastering of the printer's profession in all its branches is an education in itself. For instance, a conscientious proof-reader who really studies and applies what he is compelled to learn becomes an expert speller, proficient in grammatical construction, and will soon be conversant with the names of every leading person in the church. Most of our proof readers have learned the touch system of type-writing as a part of their work and some have found their ability to do expert stenographic work later on an excellent acquirement. The best proof readers become the most dependable copy-editors—the literary physicians of the institution—and if of a creative disposition, make excellent editorial timber.

In the book bindery one learns a trade of unusual interest and value. To feel that one's ability not only to bind the books used all over the church in the best possible manner but to be able to impart an artistic element is but an indication of the possibilities in this line. Our brother Elbert A. Smith began his career in the trade in this department, and what he learned directly as a book binder and by association with the other departments contributes largely to his literary success. He knows how to get what he wants—and to want what he knows can be had.

The linotype operators absorb a great deal that is helpful in a literary way in addition to the mechanical knowledge. Fred W. Smith, one of our well-known writers, is at present a linotype operator and profiting much by the experience. J. H. Anthony, author of "Birds of a feather," soon to be issued in book form, is an expert linotypist and now in charge of the composing department. We might multiply these instances many times over. So in all departments, there is abundant opportunity to learn something directly and indirectly useful to individual and the church.

What we want is this: We want to hear soon from our people all over the church who feel the Zionie impulse. We want to help such people to attain some of their ideals. While we need some experienced workers, we can use a number who are willing to learn. It is not expected we shall find all these among the unemployed. We merely want those who come to feel they are justified in making a little sacrifice if necessary, to fit themselves for service to the church in a special capacity.

Write to us fully, stating your previous training and experience in the line you wish to take up. If you have had none, tell us the schooling you have, and in general your qualifications. And also tell us what you will expect in the way of salary. This will all save time and help us to get a working understanding established.

We want fathers and mothers to see the advantage of letting us help train their children for a life work of moment. We want young men and women to realize that in the church we have institutions worthy their very best efforts. We want trained specialists to feel sure that any possible sacrifice they might be asked to make—if any—will be in a cause absolutely justifiable.

Are we not right in such an ideal? Let us then begin a cooperative effort that will throb with life and pulsating possibilities. We are planning for to-morrow as well as to-day.

J. A. Koehler, Manager.
Herald Publishing House
Lamoni, Iowa.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

Volume 66

Lamoni, Iowa, September 17, 1919

Number 38

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

UTAH FORGETS

Some time ago the following clipping appeared in the Deseret News, but was apparently overlooked at the time:

A pioneer subscriber of The Deseret News writes commending the article in this paper describing the march of the several regiments through the streets of Salt Lake on Monday last, but he adds: "Are you not mistaken in saying that it was the largest assemblage of troops that ever marched through the streets of Salt Lake at one time? Have you forgotten the entry of Johnston's army?"

By no means. Incredible as it may seem to those not posted on Utah history, Johnston's army only numbered 2,500 men. Its historic march across the plains and its entry into Salt Lake fifty-nine years ago this summer, comprised one of the strangest events in the history of our country. But for the fact that it was dwarfed by the opening of the great Civil War soon after, in which General Johnston met his death, it would have received much more attention from writers of the day than it did.

The historian of the future doubtless will shed some illuminating light on the causes which led to the sending of that army against an inoffensive people, of its narrow escape from disaster, of its peaceful march through the deserted streets of the city and of the inglorious end of that memorable Utah campaign.—Editorial, September 20, 1917, Deseret News.

There are still living some who remember the conditions actually existing when Johnston's army came to Salt Lake Valley, and the efforts made by way of resistance; who also remember how difficult it was to get out of the valley, even as late as 1865. The associate-editor has heard some of the older women tell how they escaped under the protection of the United States soldiers, as late as the sixties.

In regard to Johnston's army we notice the following, from the annual message to Congress, December 6, 1858, by President Buchanan. This gives us something of the impression of the time.

The present condition of the Territory of Utah, when contrasted with what it was one year ago, is a subject for congratulation. It was then in a state of open rebellion, and, cost what it might, the character of the Government required that this rebellion should be suppressed and the Mormons compelled to yield obedience to the Constitution and the laws. In order to accomplish this object, as I informed you in my last annual message, I appointed a new governor instead of Brigham Young, and other Federal officers to take the place of those, who, consulting their personal safety, had found it necessary to withdraw from the Territory. To protect these civil officers, and to aid them, as a posse comitatus, in the execution of the laws in case of need, I ordered a detachment of the army to accompany them to Utah. The necessity for adopting these measures is now demonstrated.

On the fifteenth of September, 1857, Governor Young issued his proclamation, in the style of an independent sovereign, announcing his purpose to resist by force of arms the entry of the United States troops in our own Territory of Utah. By this he required all the forces in the Territory to "hold themselves in readiness to march at a moment's notice to repel any and all such invasion," and established martial law from its date throughout the Territory. This proved to be no idle threats. Forts Bridger and Supply were vacated and burned down by the Mormons to deprive our troops of a shelter after their long and fatiguing march. Orders were issued by Daniel H. Wells, styling himself "Lieutenant-General Nauvoo Legion," to stampede the animals of the United States troops on their march, to set fire to their trains, to burn the grass and the whole country before them and on their flanks, to keep them from sleeping by night surprises, and to blockade the road by felling trees and destroying the fords of rivers, etc.

These orders were promptly and effectually obeyed. On October 4, 1857, the Mormons captured and burned on Green River, three of our supply trains, consisting of seventy-five wagons loaded with provisions and tents for the army, and carried away several hundred animals. This diminished the supply of provisions so materially that General Johnston was obliged to reduce the ration, and even with this precaution there was only sufficient left to subsist the troops until the first of June.

Several accounts of this have been written. In Americana, September, 1913, is the chapter ninety of the history of the Mormon church, by Brigham H. Roberts, historian of that church. This includes the proclamation of the governor, declaring that Utah is invaded by hostile forces, namely the army of the United States. He forbids all armed forces of every description coming into the Territory. All forces in the Territory are ordered to hold themselves subject to his direction and he declared martial law.

These as well as other records apparently concede that the Mormons raided the camp of the United States soldiers, drove off and used their cattle, burnt their wagon trains, tried to hinder them. From Bancroft's History of Utah it may be gathered that Parley P. Pratt had been killed shortly prior to that, for the alleged sealing with the wife of one Hector McLean. This was followed very shortly after by the Mountain Meadow massacre. There was difficulty concerning a mail route from the Missouri River to Utah. Also concerning some of the territorial district judges.

In addition there appeared a disposition to carry things with a high hand, though Bancroft is usually very friendly to the people of Utah. Still he states rather clearly that there was rejoicing during the winter of 1857-58, and many songs concerning the yoke of the Gentiles, and against the United States soldiers. In addition to this the speech of Heber C. Kimball that they had now their ten years and were now ready for anything.

It would seem clear that there existed defiance of the United States Government. Brigham Young is quoted as saying, Give us ten years of peace, and we will ask no odds of the United States. (Bancroft page 504.) Also of saying to Captain Van Vliet: "If the Government dares to force the issue, I shall not hold the Indians by the wrists any longer." "If the issue comes, you may tell the Government to stop all emigration across the continent, for the Indians will kill all who attempt it." (Page 543.)

It would appear from Bancroft that there were some reasons upon the other side, for the Mormon people in Utah feared that this meant really a repetition of previous persecution. But it seems quite apparent that back of it all was this spirit of defiance, for a time at least. And hence a need for Federal action to uphold the Federal courts and territorial officers.

S. A. B.

---

AN OPEN FORUM

---

In the current issue there appear two articles concerning nominations to office which are worthy our careful perusal. They were written independently, neither writer having knowledge of the other's production. This is in part the carrying out a plan of free discussion in the HERALD, in the nature of an open forum, in which individuals express their own opinions, and the church is not thereby held responsible.

But as a matter of fact, this is true of all of the HERALD as it appears to-day. Joseph Smith, when editor of the HERALD, repeatedly emphasized that he was expressing his own opinion, and not attempting to bind the church thereby. He considered he had a right to his own opinion, and a right to express it. But by his actions he showed himself open to conviction. And when the body ruled, if it ruled contrary to his own opinion, he acquiesced, and went to with might and main to carry out the orders of the body.

There is much published in the HERALD to-day with which the editors do not agree. That is not at all an editorial test. There is also much printed which we do not believe represents the teaching of the church, but does present a point of view which may lead to further thought and be worthy of present consideration.

We wish to see the HERALD made more and more a forum for the discussion of disputed questions, as thereby we shall become as a body better informed on the work and problems before us. Naturally the test of literary merit will be applied to the manuscripts received by this office, and those which appear to be the most carefully thought out will be given the preference, as impartially as possible.

As before indicated, direct replies to articles or an attack upon the position of others is hardly advisable. But a new discussion presenting a different point of view, or throwing additional light upon a question affirmatively is welcome.

In connection with the articles appearing in this number, we would respectfully suggest that while principles do not change, there are many questions of administration which are open to a new interpretation and reconsideration from time to time. There are many questions arising in which it is now possible to work more nearly in harmony with the letter and spirit of the law, than has been the case in the past. There are many details of administration in which more effective methods can be secured, and should be without violating principles.

In the case of the general officers of the church, nominations are made without previous action by the people. We believe it is done by inspiration. It is only nominations which are given by inspiration and for the good of the work which are entitled to be considered as final and conclusive. But even then the people have the right to vote upon acceptance or rejection.

For the general officers, this is done by General Conference, which includes the choosing of the First Presidency, the Twelve, the Seventies, the Presiding Bishopric, all bishops, and all high priests. It is true also of General Conference appointments.

In a stake, officers are likewise nominated, especially the president of the stake and the bishop. But the people have the right to accept or reject.

It would seem certainly to follow that in a nomination to a branch, the right resides with the people by common consent. They may vote to accept or reject. Whether wisdom is so exercised of course remains an open question.

S. A. B.

COURT DECISIONS

We note every once in a while a misstatement concerning the decision of the courts of the land concerning titles to real estate in which the church is interested.

It is well, therefore, that all should remember that the suit for possession of the Kirtland Temple was decided by the Ohio State Court of Common Pleas for Lake County, Ohio. The suit was brought by the Reorganized Church against certain ones who held title and against the church of Utah.

But in the decision the court states: "This case coming on for hearing, the plaintiffs appeared by their attorneys, but the defendants appeared not, but made default."

Yet despite their nonappearance, since it was an equitable action, the court proceeded to take testimony and to decide the case accordingly. Opportunity was given for these parties to appear, but apparently they did not do so.

In what is called the Temple Lot Suit, the case came on for trial before Judge Philips in the United States Circuit Court for the Western District of Missouri. The defendant was the Church of Christ, sometimes called the Hedrickites. A defense was put up by the church of Utah; testimony was taken in Salt Lake City; in fact, this constitutes a large part of the testimony in the case, and an effort made to prove the allegations concerning the doctrine of the original church, founded by Joseph Smith, and concerning the personal practices of Joseph Smith.

The decision by Judge Philips reviews all of this testimony. The only finding that is made in the case is on these questions. After this decision was rendered, it was taken up before the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Judge Thayer rendering the decision. This decision was based solely on the question of laches; or it was decided that the church had delayed too long in bringing the suit. Since the original Temple Lot included a great deal of additional territory, ten times as much as that included in the present Temple Lot, a decision in favor of the church for possession of the lot, it was claimed, would cast a cloud on the homes of innocent people.

There were over sixty acres in the original lot purchased for the temple, and much of it had been built up with private residences. The court was not informed of the fact that the church and church members had purchased the larger part of the original lot outside of that part, which was set aside specifically for the temple. It might have modified the decision if the court had fully understood this particular portion of the case.

But it must be remembered in any event that the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals did not modify the decision of Judge Philips concerning the teachings of the original church, the true succession to the original church, the practices of Joseph Smith, and the fundamental right to the land. Possession alone was permitted to be retained on account of the passage of time, and the cloud that it would presumably bring upon the title to other lots in the vicinity. Only that one factor of laches was considered; and only that part of the decision was modified.

By the writ of certiorari the case was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, but was not considered there at all, on the grounds that the amount involved was not sufficient to warrant the case being taken up from the Circuit Court of Appeals.

So it will be noted that the decision in the case of the Kirtland Temple was apparently rendered upon default of the defendants, though evidence was taken to establish the prima facie case and decision rendered.

In the case of the Temple Lot a serious defense was made on behalf of the Utah church and others; and all the essential points of the continuity of the church, that this church is identical with the original church and is the same church, the apostasy of those who followed Brigham Young, the character and teachings of Joseph Smith, the fact that though title was held by Bishop Partridge, and later transferred to the children of Oliver Cowdery it was for the benefit of the church, were all decided in favor of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints as the original church.

The right of possession was also determined by Judge Philips but this last factor, the right of possession, was modified on appeal, on account of laches.

S. A. B.

COUNTY RELIGIOUS SURVEY

In the SAINTS' HERALD of August 10, 1919, reference was made to the survey of churches about to be made in California. We did not then state the fact that this is a part of a world-wide survey, being made by the Interchurch World Movement, which will be made both in America and outside of America. The United States has been divided into seven great groups, each with a regional director. The State council is formed by a clergyman and a layman of each denomination, and representative of all the other interests involved. Then in each county the religious leaders are associated in a county council, to make the survey in a most critical and intimate way.

The investigators are to be those satisfactory to all of the churches. The object is to obtain an impartial and complete summary of all the facts relating to the condition of every church in the county.

as to its finances, its membership, whether increasing, decreasing, or stationary, resident pastors, what families are included, how often its people are visited, and what families in the county are without pastoral oversight.

The surveyors will report upon church grouping, conflicts in boundaries, areas without Christian influences, community centers and social buildings, such as lodges and granges, and upon any other matters that will throw light on the problems of the churches.

It is expected in time that the Interchurch World Movement will have a map of every county in the United States, which will show every railroad, trolley line, road, village, hamlet, church, lodge, school; and farm house; and how it stands in relation to some church or other religious center.

The data gathered for the county will be consolidated for the State and for the whole United States.

It is not a movement for organic church union. It is a cooperative effort of missionary boards, church extension, and benevolent agencies of evangelical churches for a unified Christian program.

After a systematic study of what is to be done, constituent bodies will get together and agree upon the part of the work each is to undertake.

The movement was started in the fall of 1918, by the foreign missionary board of the Presbyterian Church, South. A meeting was held of 135 representatives of various missionary societies in New York, then in May, 1919, a conference of 500 delegates from 200 organizations.

Hence this survey is being made, not as a final end, but as a means to an end of better Christian work at home and throughout the world. S. A. B.

---

THE METRIC SYSTEM

---

A great deal of argument is being brought forth to secure the general use of uniform units of measurements based on the decimal system. This system is usually called the metric system. A meter is one ten millionth of the great arc from the pole to the equator. It is a little less than one and one tenth yards.

A kilometer is about five eighths of a mile and is a thousand meters. The measurements of length, area, and volume are determined by the same units. A decimeter is one tenth of a meter. A cubic decimeter is a liter, which is about a quart.

A gram is the weight of one thousandth of a liter, or of a cubic centimeter of water. A liter of water, therefore, weighs a kilogram, which is equal to about two and two tenths pounds. Electricity is already measured in terms of watts, based on the decimal system.

The C. G. S. unit of measure of force is the force sufficient to move one gram a distance of a centimeter in one second.

A watt is equal to ten million C. G. S. units of power; seven hundred and forty-six watts equal one horse power. In electrical terms of measurement, it is the energy expended in one second by one electric current of one ampere in resistance of one ohm. A kilowatt equals one thousand watts. A kilowatt hour means a force of one kilowatt exerted for one hour. A 25 watt, 60 candle power tungsten lamp should burn forty hours to equal one kilowatt hour.

The metric system is used practically all over the world except in America and the British Empire. It is used in these countries in all scientific units, but not in ordinary business measures.

A surprising statement is that made by Lord Kelvin, that "Not one of the accurately standardized gauges at present in use in British and American engineering workshops will need to be changed when the metric system is adopted." S. A. B.

---

CONFIDENCE

---

Just recently we ran across a story which illustrated well what we mean by the confidence we should have one in another, and how carefully we should maintain our own integrity as ministers for Christ, and as members of his church.

As the story goes, a minister wishing to put to a test his teaching extended his closed hand, and assured the pastor of a certain church, on his word of honor as a Christian brother, and as a member of the same church that he held in his hand a silver dollar, and asked him if he would be willing to risk his life that his word was true. The other pastor was not willing, nor was the pastor's wife.

Then holding his closed hand above his head, he addressed the congregation, repeated his assurance as a Christian, and asked how many would be willing to risk their lives, but received no response.

Again holding his hand over his head, he assured, "I do not know how many members of a certain organization are present, but if I assure you as a member of that organization, that in my hand I hold a silver dollar. Would any of you risk your lives on that?" The hand of every member of that organization went up.

That is the story. We do not vouch for its accuracy, but have we that confidence in one another? If we have, it is well. If we have not, why not? It surely should be our especial task to deserve that confidence and to assure that confidence to our brethren. We should be so careful of our honor as a Christian, or as a member of his ministry that our word in either capacity will be at once accepted by those associated with us. We should extend the like confidence to our brethren. S. A. B.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

PRESERVING THE RIGHTS OF THE PEOPLE

According to reports, from time to time, we hear of some district president asking for the right to be given him to nominate the other district officers of the departments of church work; and also on down to the local officers.

The question is, Is this a safe method to follow? Will it ultimately be for the best in the establishing of the kingdom of God?

This is not the first time in the history of the church that men in official positions have asked for the right to nominate the officers under them. In the year 1892 the Decatur District passed the following resolutions:

1. That all presidents of branches should be nominated by the president of conference or district and missionary in charge, in harmony with Doctrine and Covenants 120: 1, and if more than one nomination is made or name presented, each name shall be voted on by ballot, the one receiving the highest number of votes to preside.

2. That all nominations to office in the respective branches be made through the presidents of those branches in harmony with the president of the district and missionary in charge.—Journal of History, vol. 11, p. 98.

Lamoni being located in the Decatur District, and at that date it was also the seat of the "Presidency" of the church, the passing of those resolutions created some stir. Since no notice had been given that such resolutions would be presented to the conference, which should always be done in such important matters, those presenting the resolutions managed to get them passed by the district conference by a vote of 34 to 16.

Of this action the president of the church, Joseph Smith, the senior editor of the SAINTS' HERALD, wrote:

The members of the Decatur District have a right to make a rule of the kind named, if they see fit to do so; but a rule so at variance with the long standing custom, ought not to have been adopted until such publication of the resolution had been had in the district as would have served the notice to all necessary to obtain the intelligent consent of all. As it now stands, no notice that such action would be asked for, or such resolution presented was given. . . .

It may be said that the law says that "the elders" are to meet "from time to time" to do "whatsoever business is necessary" to be done. But this quotation is inapplicable in the case, as no such business was "necessary." It was an innovation upon the custom of the church, and being that should not have become a rule until time had been given for an examination of it; and then an opportunity afforded for those desirous voting upon it to be present with the knowledge that it would be acted upon.—SAINTS' HERALD, July 16, 1892.

It is needless to say that at the next district conference they rescinded their previous action by a vote of 67 to 15.

President Smith, in that same editorial, enters further into the merits of the case and contends that such a procedure as those resolutions called for is fundamentally wrong and dangerous to the progress of the work. Since principles never change, was President Smith right? He says:

The right to primarily name the candidate to be chosen by the branch to fill the various offices in it, does not inure to any one or more persons, by virtue of the office they or he may hold; the right of "voice and vote" in the branch attaching to every member alike, by virtue of membership in the church, and not by virtue of office. The right of "voice" in the deliberations of the branch, includes the right and the privilege to name persons as candidates for any and all office in the branch. . . .

The "common consent" of the church demands that the right to express a choice for any one or more of the candidates to be presented be guaranteed to every member, such choice to be affirmed or denied by vote of all.

I have heard branch presidents, when presenting the name of some brother to be ordained to the priesthood, say to the members: Now is the time for you to vote for or against the candidate; that was where the common consent for the members of the branch came in. In the light of the above facts if President Joseph Smith was right then such a position is wrong.

President Smith continues:

The common consent of a branch may be ascertained and secured, when nominations to offices in the branch are made by the missionary in charge, or district president, if it be conceded that the members of the branch are at liberty to vote either for or against one so nominated; but, if it be held that either of these officers has the only right to nominate, and that the branch should ratify the nominations made by him because of that right, then the common consent cannot be obtained, because consent so enforced is not free, and cannot be freely accorded to all. . . . Any method of procedure that does not afford an equal chance to all to express in freedom of speech the freedom of choice would be a mistake, and would be liable to gross abuse of the liberties of the people.

Does the same principle hold good to-day, or was President Joseph Smith mistaken when he said that "any method of procedure that does not afford an equal chance to all to express in freedom of speech the freedom of choice would be a mistake, and would be liable to gross abuse of the liberties of the people"?

If President Smith was right, then common consent is not common consent unless the members have the right of "voice" as well as "vote," voice to nominate; that ratifying of nominations to office is not common consent, for it "is not free."

Those who use the argument that where the nominations are left with the people unscrupulous men, or those unfit for the place, are sometimes elected to office, and that such trouble would be eliminated if nominations were left to superior officers, President Smith answered as follows:

It is possible for a few unscrupulous or ambitious members of a branch to take the lead of affairs and by being first in their nominations to secure control of affairs, not always to the good of the branch. This if urged as a reason in support of the rule referred to is not good; because the same objection will lie against an ambitious, or unscrupulous missionary in charge, or district president of similar character. The objection is not good for another reason, and that is, that in a branch where such ambitions are known to exist the members can by other nominations of good and conservative men counteract, or prevent altogether the evils to be inflicted by such a course; provided that the members are left free to make such other nominations, thus affording the better element an opportunity of selecting such a man as will properly conserve the good of all without injury from his own ambitions.

Those who use the argument that since the nomination to office of some of the general officers of the church does not rest with the people, then the rights of the people are not infringed upon when the same method is carried into other departments of church work, President Smith answered:

There is a difference between the officers in the church in its general form and officers in the branches and districts, and other organizations, . . . and there is not an absolute necessity that the method employed in one should be made to control in the other. As for instance, the officers in the church in its general form are, it is believed, designated by the Spirit of revelation, . . . while the officers of a branch or a district are selected from among those already known to hold the priesthood, and the choice of the people is made with a view to their understanding of the fitness of the individual to fill the office. . . . Another difference between the two classes of officers is that the officers of the church as a body hold their offices for life, or during good behavior; while branch officers hold for a time specified by the will of the people, obtained by proper common consent.

In another editorial, written a few months after the above, probably by President W. W. Blair, under the caption, "Calling, appointing, and ordaining," we find some splendid thoughts, upon the question under consideration. One of the first premises laid down in the article is:

No Latter Day Saint, if well-informed, will question the right and authority of the Lord to call and appoint persons to office, and direct their ordinations, and do all this by immediate revelation and commandment. But in the absence of such immediate direction, all should move calmly and wisely, for it remains a question with some as to who may nominate, appoint, and ordain certain officers.—SAINTS' HERALD, December 17, 1892.

We extract further from the editorial:

We now go to the Bible for information, and we will find that when a successor was chosen in the office from which Judas fell, the matter of choosing was referred by the Apostle Peter to the "hundred and twenty" saints then present, and they selected two of their number, prayed God to show which of these two he had chosen, then "they gave forth their lots, and the lot fell upon Matthias." (Acts 1: 26.) In this case neither an apostle nor the entire quorum named or called or chose the candidates, but these matters were left to the one hundred and twenty present to determine after Peter had first described the essential qualifications needful for the successor, as see verses 21 and 22.—Ibid.

In speaking of the choosing of the men in Acts 6: 2-6, the editor continues:

In the above case Peter, as formerly, was the spokesman; and here, as in chapter 1: 21, 22, he describes the qualifications needed by the men about to be chosen and appointed over these financial and secular concerns of the church in Jerusalem. But he places the duty and responsibility of calling and choosing them upon "the multitude"—"the whole multitude." . . . Doubtless their frequent appointments of officers afterward, throughout the entire church, was accomplished in the same or a similar manner, except in cases where special revelation pointed out the candidate, and even then it is probable, as in cases cited, that the body of saints present had their voice as to whether they accepted and chose such candidate. . . .

That the voice of God's people had to be consulted in matters of government, civil and religious, in the times of the Nephites, is very clear from the Book of Mormon, though the methods then in use to obtain it are not so fully explained as some may desire. Whoever will examine Mosiah 10: 1; 11: 2; 13: 4; Alma 1: 7; 2: 5; Helaman 2: 13, etc., will see at once that to the people were reserved the rights and powers securing them against intrigue, domination, deception, and oppression, from any source.

In Mosiah 10: 2 we read the solemn charge of Alma to the Saints, saying: "I desire that ye should stand fast in this liberty wherewith ye have been made free, and that ye trust no man to be a king over you; and also trusting no one to be your teacher nor your minister, except he be a man of God, walking in his ways and keeping his commandments."

From the above it is seen that God requires the people to judge and decide as to who should be their teacher and minister. But as to the methods by which this was to be done the Book of Mormon is silent, as least as to details. But the Doctrine and Covenants is not; and the Bible is not entirely so, as we have heretofore seen. All teach that the people, under God, are sovereign. Herein is security against priestcraft and other wrongs.

In treating of the rights of the membership—"the people of the saints of the Most High"—it is safe to say that all the rights not clearly delegated by commandment of God to the ministry, nor prohibited by it to the people, are reserved to the people, and that therefore their voice is made essential in the government of the Church of God. And this is upon the principle that the Lord will have the people learn to govern themselves under the law, and from the fact that, "it is not common that the voice of the people desireth anything contrary to that which is right" (Mosiah 13: 4), and from the further fact that men are sometimes inclined to use their authority, opportunities, and powers, under the promptings of blind ambition, selfishness, or other evil motives such as have corrupted some leaders in the past and thereby brought blindness, reproach, and ruin upon the people.—Ibid.

If Presidents Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair were right in their position, respecting the nomination of officers that when "all the rights not clearly delegated by commandment of God to the ministry, nor prohibited by it to the people, are reserved to the people," then those who are asking for the exclusive right to nominate officers of the different departments of church work, without a direct revelation appointing the one they so nominate (and even in that case the people have the right under the law of God to judge the revelation), or where the law given by revelation does not give them that right, they are wrong, and such method will work injury to the church. And if the president was right in the above editorial then such a method will destroy the sovereignty of "the people, under God"; and there will be no "security against the priestcraft and other wrongs." It will also allow those who are "inclined to use their authority, opportunities, and powers, under the promptings of blind ambition, selfishness, or other evil motives," to bring upon the church "blindness, reproach, and ruin upon the people."

Now, Mr. Editor, it seems peculiar that in this period of the world's history, and especially in the "democratic" United States of America, that some district presidents and branch presidents will arise in the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and ask for the exclusive right to nominate the officers of the different departments of church work that come under their jurisdiction. By so doing they must consider their wisdom superior to that of the members of the district or members of the branch. Democracy is the spirit of the day; and the most terrible war known to history has just come to an end where the question was settled as to which should be supreme, in the government of the nations, autocracy or democracy; democracy won.

It is a notable fact, to mention at this juncture, that "self-determination" of the nations, great or small, is one of the fundamental planks upon which the peace treaties are being formed. There can be no enduring peace without such being the case. The right of initiation must rest with the peoples of the different nations to bring about a universal reign of peace between them. The civilized nations of the earth have awakened to the fact that the people, the whole people, are sovereign; that there are no favored classes in governing.

Now, shall the church reject the wisdom of the age as being manifested by the civilized nations of the earth, and go back to the wisdom of the mediæval age and establish autocracy?

If the kingdom of God is ever established it will be done by men who are men, and women who are women. God will not be satisfied with a people wherein the few, who may be termed leaders, do all the thinking and the majority poll-parrot-like say, "Me too," or "amen." Progress can only be made where there is responsibility, and responsibility that tends toward progress can only be had where there is the right of initiation. Slaves do not progress from the fact that they do not have the freedom of choice in the acceptance of responsibility. The right of sustaining only, as was shown in the writings of President Joseph Smith, is not common consent, or the right of initiation.

Take the history of the different districts and branches of the church and it will be seen, in the majority of cases, that the best material the church had in those places found its way into the offices and all by the "voice" as well as "vote" of the people. Natural law has governed in the church, where the right of common consent had been granted, the same as in all democratic bodies: the "fittest" have survived.

The history of the past also reveals the fact that where responsible positions are filled by the "voice of the people," that in a case of emergency the right man is in at the right time, for examples, a Lincoln, a Woodrow Wilson, and a Lloyd George. Where is there a man, or a dozen men that could have selected better men to have guided their countries through the trying scenes that these men did? On the other hand, where the "voice of the people" did not place the man in the position, we find a William Hohenzollern (Kaiser Bill), or a Czar Nicholas.

In the light of the above facts we offer this question: "Are we in the faith"? We believe we are in the faith as taught by Presidents Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair in the year 1892 if not in accord with the positions of some to-day. B. L. MCKIM.

---

WHO SHALL NOMINATE?

---

With the inauguration of the coordination principle, outlined quite specifically in the report of the coordination committee to the conventions and conference of 1918 at Independence, grew up a strong sentiment in favor of nominations for offices in the Sunday school, Religio, and Woman's Auxiliary.

In fact the principle was established then, so far as the general organizations were concerned, "that the directing heads of the several departments of church work be hereafter appointed by nomination from the Presidency of the church, approved by the General Conference, insofar as their appointment may not already be provided for in articles of incorporation under which they may be working." In conformity with this plan, the "directing heads" have been nominated by the authority indicated, and the nomination made an election.

But right here let us call attention to a feature which should not be lost sight of in the whole discussion of the rights and privileges of making nominations. (And please do not confuse nominations with elections, or final choice, for nominations are really only official suggestions.) From the first, the conventions, through an undisputed ruling of the chairman occupying at the time, have allowed and even entertained other nominations from the floor. The Presidency have even nominated two men for the same office. It is true that no test case has ever arisen over the election of anyone not nominated by the Presidency, but the presumption is that if a nomination is in order, the election would be as well.

The experiences in the general operation of the "Coordination plan" have brought out the question in many stakes and districts and even in local organizations as to the advisability of having nominations for the various auxiliary departments made by the presiding church authority, district or local. And with this has been the question, Why not have the district or stake president, or the branch president, nominate not only the auxiliary officers, but the officers of the branch as well? In other words, why not have the district president or stake presidency nominate the presidents of branches? The old question of the propriety of the branch president nominating the other branch officers is largely dissipated in the new status of the rule of their being any presiding priests, teachers, or deacons. We refer to the action of the 1918 General Conference, which suspended the Book of Rules procedure on that matter until such time as the whole matter could be restated and in a new Book of Rules indorsed by the General Conference.

In 1892 the Decatur District (now Lamoni Stake), in conference assembled, took action whereby they resolved—

That all presidents of branches should be nominated by the president of the conference or district and missionary in charge and in harmony with section 120, paragraph 1; and if more than one nomination is made, or name presented, each name shall be voted on by ballot, the highest number to preside. Resolved, that all nomination to office in the respective branches be made through the presidents of those branches in harmony with the president of district or missionary in charge.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 39, p. 435.

In a later issue of the HERALD (July 16, 1892) appeared an editorial on the subject presumably from the pen of Joseph Smith, and two articles, one for and one against.

The objections raised to the procedure were chiefly to the effect that the rule of common consent had been violated, hence the legislation was unwarrantable and illegal.

The assumption was that there was no provision whereby any other nominations could be made, and with that interpretation—which, on the face of the situation seems the only one to be arrived at—we should grant that it was a seeming infringement on the rights of the members in the common consent principle.

A cursory reading of the report from the Coordinating Committee would indicate that there had been no provision for any other nominations than those from the presidency, but the idea that democracy was the dominant element in our dealings with each other was so prevalent that it was taken as a matter of course.

The subject is of wide application when we consider that it may finally touch the most remote group of Saints. When a small Sunday school is organized in a little branch, who shall nominate the officers? Most certainly the members effecting the organization—unless they delegate the authority to some one else, in which case the rule of common consent still prevails.

A stake Sunday school association in one of the large stakes wishes more efficiently to carry on its work, and seriously considers the selection of the very best officers to serve for the coming year. Who shall nominate them? Most certainly the members of the convention—unless they delegate the authority to some one else, or may have done so at a previous session.

But what if they have done this, and asked the stake presidency to nominate their officers? Are they required to vote for those nominees only? At this point—the crucial one in the minds of many—our God-given democracy asserts itself, and we all say most emphatically, no. In other words, we have appointed a committee to serve us in this important matter. We have confidence when we select them, that they will make a wise choice, based on a much deeper and more comprehensive consideration than we could give it as individuals. But if their choice indicates that they have not given the matter the necessary thought, it is our right as an association and as members, to place in nomination and argue for those whom we think better qualified to serve.

Can there be a more consistent demonstration of the principle of common consent than this? And since common consent is but a fundamental in the securing of efficiency in organization, it has served the organization a really good turn in assigning certain duties to smaller groups better qualified than the general organization.

It should be a matter of general usage, that the initiative in these matters should always arise in the bodies to be served. Christian ethics would prohibit a stake president (or any other person) from seeking the honor of making an official nomination. In fact, those most insistent regarding what they call their right to nominate are often the least competent to perform this important act.

Quoting from the editorial from Joseph Smith, to which we referred:

It should be remembered that there is no specific rule or law defining whose duty it is to take nominations to the various offices in a branch organization, and none creating a privilege to thus name such officers.

The problem then up for solution pertained only to the nomination of officers for the church. To-day it has expanded in scope to include those and more. But the principle is the same. There are arguments urged on both sides of the subject, and precedents quoted in which it is shown that the general body has made some excellent nominations—which proves nothing at all. Some individual had to make the nominations; he may have spoken for himself alone, or for a group of people who had thought of the consequences, but it was the vote of the majority that decided the matter, which is still and should always be the rule. The difference in the new method somewhat in vogue is that we spend more energy in the nominations and supposedly the same as usual in the final vote.

The report of the Coordinating Committee to the recent conventions and conference included this statement:

We recommend that the nomination of district and local department heads be a matter for cooperation between the departments.

Naturally, without cooperation, each organization would continue in its own path, regardless of the policies or plans of the other. But with cooperation, it is often possible better to distribute the work, and enlist the energies of some who might not otherwise be employed.

We believe that better results in the assignment of nominating privilege will be attained in the stakes and more closely organized districts where cooperation is more convenient because of more compact location and closer organization. But when other districts come to value cooperation, as they no doubt will, coordination will ensue as a natural corollary. To ask a stake or district presidency via a conference assembly, to nominate the branch presidents will seem but a natural thing when it is found that the stake or district officers are alertly at their posts of duty. When such nominations are made, and indorsed by the branches, it is to be presumed that the official nominating will use his utmost power to help the one chosen to succeed. When that is so, and he has the support of the branch, no one should require more, for God's indorsement of righteous efforts can always be assumed.

Because from years back some have abused power they had literally taken to themselves, in the nomination of officers and the rejection of others, we should not hastily condemn the good in the principle involved. It is true that some most curiously ridiculous situations have been developed by men who were under the delusion that with the priesthood authority great arbitrary powers ensued. It is also true that because of these isolated cases some have become greatly prejudiced toward any seeming relinquishment of the rights of the body. But we want to reassert that since any good rule may suffer from violation, we should be careful that our discrimination is wise. Our observation has been that in the present tendency toward coordination, the result has been excellent, where the people have taken the initiative. In a few recent instances, an occasional unwise person would assume nominating powers, to the exclusion of any others, and the results have been disastrous, and could not otherwise be. It is not an inherent right, but rather a sacred privilege, intrusted after confidence has been established. For this reason, we are glad no blanket rule has been established that all districts and locals must assign the nominating privilege to any man or set of men.

Properly understood, whether specified or merely taken for granted, the extending of the privilege of nomination to officials in the church, no matter what their direct official relation, should result only in good. When those officials are in touch and keeping pace with the progress of the work, they are in a better position to nominate than most any average individual otherwise situated. And we most certainly would expect that no nomination thus officially presented would be made without due consultation with the nominee and a complete understanding of the rights of the people to accept or reject. If the body wishes to make other nominations and follow with elections, it would be perfectly proper to do so, and should not be counted a reflection on the character of the nominee or the nominator. It may be considered a case of poor judgment, with the possibility of either one being right.

A body of people intelligent enough to know their needs and properly elect men and women to serve them acceptably will not submerge but rather accentuate that intelligence in the act of asking their chosen church leaders to assist them in finding the very best material for official positions. Not an iota of their rights have been curtailed, but their efficiency greatly promoted.

To us the situation seems perfectly clear and wholesome. It is only beclouded when some persist in directing our attention to some perversion of the correct procedure to the exclusion of the normal and proper methods. This should not be done, but rather in our glorious and God-given freedom should we rejoice that we may adopt the very best methods conducive to our growth.

EDWARD D. MOORE.

---

The end of life is love to God and man manifested in the form of an exalted and helpful service to humankind. What have you done? Have you fed the hungry, given drink to the thirsty, welcomed the stranger, clad the naked, visited the sick and the imprisoned? That is the simple but severe test.—Samuel F. Halfyard, in Cardinal Truths of the Gospel.

MAGNANIMOUS

The fruits of the lips and hands reveal the tree of the soul. My claim to magnanimity would be promptly disputed by my words and deeds, yet I strive on for the mastery. It is an ideal that I have admired in others and coveted for self, ever since those days that my mind first conceived ideals.

"Father, forgive them for they know not what they do," was uttered when Christ was supremely magnanimous. We all love him more dearly for that expression.

The owner of a fine orchard invited a friend to see the ripened fruit one day. He looked over the trees critically. Finally he paused under a large apple tree and, pointing to a high branch, said: "I see a rotten one up there." People who talk about the rotten fruit in the orchard of human kind, overlooking the good in "the worst of us," are like carrion flies, which pass over fields of roses to feast on some putrid carcass. Leave it to "him that is without sin" to cast the first stone.

To be able to recognize even the smallest degree of merit in others, and to be able to magnify those virtues by a sincere and gracious expression is magnanimous.

Debaters soon learn the value of paying due respect to the strong points in their opponent's arguments. Lack of frankness in this regard challenges the sincerity of your own statements. An honest recognition of the good in another's opinion disarms your audience of suspicion of unfairness in your expressions. It will also beget confidence in your judgment, for notwithstanding you appreciate the truth advanced by the opposition, yet when supplemented by the greater evidence supporting your side, there is but one logical conclusion.

I once heard of a good brother who felt it his religious duty to say a few words of appreciation to the speaker at the close of each sermon. Upon one occasion his charity conflicted with his conscience, so he compromised with the compliment: "That was a good text you had this morning, brother."

A traveling elder once gave it as his opinion that more of our young ministers would become discouraged by too little praise than would ever be "spoiled" by too much of it.

It did me much good to see the depth of response in tribute which came with the passing of the historian of the church. Many whose lives had been brightened by the service he rendered would have dropped a convenient flower upon his grave, but so few are there who gladly pluck from the richness of their garden an enduring tribute like these, which, when chiseled into the imperishable rock of history, shall never fade.

Paul was magnanimous when he told the weeping saints of Cæsarea: "I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus," and again when he said: "If meat make my brother to offend; I will eat no flesh."

Occasionally some one spreads the false doctrine that it is a virtue to "say just what I think," regardless of whom it offends. "A bitter fountain never brings forth sweet water," and words spoken in harshness and haste never show forth the gospel discretion of "milk for babes." Those who say spiteful things, calculated to reprove, but given in an offensive spirit are like the Chicago lady who had an eighteen-foot fence built to keep her neighbors from peering into her windows. It accomplished its purpose at the cost of spoiling her lawn and keeping the sunshine from her home. So it is with those who purposely say things which injure another's character. As William George Jordan has well said: "The instrument used to attack the character of another becomes the boomerang of your own."

Occasionally we meet a beautiful type who has been baptized into Christ, and put on Christ and is showing forth his stature in the fruits of the gospel. They go among us "with charity for all and malice toward none." Oh, how refreshing it is to make living contact with such souls! Like the "rain tree" of Colombia, which absorbs great quantities of moisture to shed forth in the heat of the day when most needed, so a magnanimous character refreshes those near it on life's dusty road.

"Suffereth long and is kind; envieth not, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity but rejoiceth in the truth,"—these are elements of soul greatness or magnanimity.

A few weeks ago I became acquainted with a dear brother who impressed me as possessing the quality of magnanimity to a wonderful degree. His spirit is an ointment for the weary—an holy unction from above. He sees something of worth in all of God's creation and is artful in picturing that which he appreciates so that it is desirable. He is very generous in sympathy and kindness. From the luxury of extensive travel, his big heart has been trained to admire and love the good, the esthetic. He creates his environment. It is one in which you love to linger. It is health to the soul.

These tributes are not so much to the man, for I see beyond to the power that made our brother divinely gracious. He has walked and talked with Him who is "altogether lovely," our blessed Redeemer.

When you and I relish the good and grand all about us we recognize God, for he is the author of all good. If we hate our brother whom we have seen, and glory in his weakness and vice, we do not love our Creator.

Wishing for Zion will not bring about our ideal. We must be magnanimous,—“great of soul.” Mrs. Ella Wheeler Wilcox has given us a verse that is apropos here:

Do you wish the world were better?

Let me tell you what to do:

Set a watch upon your actions,

Keep them ever straight and true.

Rid your mind of selfish motives;

Let your thoughts be clear and high—

You can make a little Eden

Of the sphere you occupy.

C. B. HARTSHORN.

---

GONE TO A HAPPIER SPHERE

---

(Funeral sermon of Sister Jessie Harriet Case preached at Spokane, Washington, by Presiding Patriarch Frederick A. Smith.)

It is with great sadness and yet with gladness, that I am able in a small way to assist in this hour of trial and trouble, for one whom I have known since boyhood. While we can do nothing, as far as our sister is concerned, yet we will be satisfied, if we can give some comfort to the living members of her family.

Mrs. Jessie Harriet Case was born November 6, 1875, in Iowa. She was married July 24, 1894. To this union four daughters were born. She was killed in an automobile accident June 27, 1919. She leaves besides her husband and four daughters, her father and mother, two brothers, one sister, and a host of friends.

Oh! the consolation of knowing that all of life is not to live here on earth, but that there are better things than this; we have a greater hope than this. Jesus has said, “I am the resurrection, the light, the way, and the truth.” We see his power all around us. For example, he raised Lazarus from the dead. Everywhere we look we see the power of God. Why then should we look upon death with such fear? It is not fear of death that makes us sad; it is only the separation that makes us sad. It is only for a little season and then we shall meet our sister. The grave shall give up its dead and we shall all be together again. When we think of it, my friends, we do not sorrow without hope. Why should we look upon the resurrection as impossible when we think of the power of God? I have never looked upon it with an uncertainty that God should raise the dead. Can there be a greater mystery than the creation of the body? Yet we believe in it though we do not understand it. In these sad times the consoling thoughts come to us that they shall live again.

When we look at the great power of God and of the great work he has done we think not of doubting the resurrection. Let us look around us at the fields of corn or wheat or oats. They are all planted in the same soil, and yet each yields its own fruit. Again, the great forest is planted in the same soil, watered with the same rains, and yet they too bring forth their own kind. Is this not the power of God that rules all of this? Yet we pay little attention to the power that has been required to produce all of this. If God can do all of this why should we doubt that this same God can give us back this form that we loved so well.

Let us not feel rebellious my friends that our sister has gone to her home. When my father died, I did not have the privilege of seeing him before he was buried. At first I felt very rebellious over the matter and grieved a great deal about it, for my father and I were the best of pals. I always went to him with all my troubles, joys, and any matters upon which I needed advice.

One night as I sat in my room thinking about my father a messenger came to me and said, “You are in trouble, come with me.” He took me by the hand. Suddenly I felt myself floating in space. We went up higher and higher until we finally came to the most beautiful place I have ever seen, a regular city. The houses were of marble and of the most wonderful architecture the mind could imagine. They were surrounded by beautiful lawns and flowers. The streets were wide and spotlessly clean. I looked up the street and I saw my father coming toward me. I rushed toward him and was about to put my arms around him. Instead, I pushed back from him, and gazed at him. He was not as stout as when I had last seen him, but was of medium build. He was well-dressed and looked well. I asked him if he was happy. He said, “We have no worries here, no trouble; everything here is peace and quiet.” He certainly had the most contented look on his face I had ever seen.

Coming down the street I saw several more people and they all had the same contented expression. Then the messenger came to me and said, “It is time to be going.” I then felt myself going down to earth again.

From that time on I was perfectly happy for I knew my father was happier than he had ever been while on this earth. Dear friends, again I say let us not rebel, but be happy that our dear sister too is happier.

There is a part of man that does not die. Our sister is not dead; it is only the body that is dead. She has gone back to God who gave the spirit, there to rest in the paradise of God. I almost envy some of those who have gone back when we consider the lives they lived. Our gentle sister was a loving wife, a kind mother, and a true friend to all whom she knew. She was strong in her belief and died firm in her faith. She is at peace, and her habitation is far more beautiful than anything we can comprehend. Hence, we shall not sorrow as those who have no hope. Her life was clean and pure, and Jesus has said such shall be placed in his kingdom. We sorrow not for our sister but for those who are left behind her so sad and lonely. I have no fear now. I look with trust to my God to do as he has promised.

We shall not feel rebellious to God though we have lost a companion whom we all loved, but shall realize that death is the opening of the portals to the paradise of God. Shall we be selfish and want to deny this paradise to our sister? She has been taken in the prime of life and we realize she has done a good work and this work entitles her to this reward.

Yes, dear mourners, look to God for the peace that is yours and be not disturbed. Death is one of the things that we do not understand, but oh, God, bless these that are left and comfort them, as you alone know how to comfort and give them strength, in Jesus' name.

---

IS THE WORLD GROWING BETTER?

---

(From a sermon by Elder A. C. Barmore.)

As the basis for my remarks to-night I call your attention to the words of Paul recorded in 2 Timothy 3:1 which reads as follows: "This know also that in the last days perilous times shall come."

To get at the meaning of this language we must discuss the time referred to first. To begin with, "the last days" is an expression which has two meanings which are not far removed from each other. In the first place it signifies the Christian dispensation as a whole. In the second place it means that period of time immediately preceding the second personal advent of Christ. In the second chapter of Joel the return of the children of Israel to their own land is clearly foretold, an event which is now on the eve of its fulfillment, and will occur as one of the results of the great world war. Joel's prophecy is quoted by Peter in Acts 2, on the day of Pentecost, and the period predicted is called by this apostle "the last days." The language of both of these inspired men is such as to indicate the times which are now dawning on the world. In fact we may say that in their incipency they are already here.

DANGEROUS TIMES

The apostle says, "perilous times." A "peril" is a "danger." His language is, therefore, equivalent to "dangerous times." When we consider the efficiency of the modern weapons of war in their destructiveness of both life and property, we must admit the force of his words in their application to present-day conditions. When we weigh, too, the various risks incurred by the adventurous in other lines of life we must admit their propriety. Again, in regard to this same period Isaiah says: "If one look unto the land behold darkness and sorrow." (See fifth chapter.) The darkness there mentioned is evidently spiritual density, for the darkness resulting from abnormal conditions of the heavenly bodies is referred to in the same verse in this way, "and the light is darkened in the heavens thereof." "Sorrow" would be the inevitable result of such a state of society. Even such evil as the late war has wrought would not be the least of the disasters. In Matthew 24:6-8 Jesus says:

And ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars: see that ye be not troubled: for all these things must come to pass, but the end is not yet. For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places. All these are the beginning of sorrows."

There has been much tendency among a certain class of religionists to use the great war as one of the immediate signs of the end of the world. In this way, apparently, it was used as the means of frightening people into the church. Regarding this it is only necessary to say that Christ never referred to war as the certain and final indication of his coming. There has been more or less tendency for the last century, or thereabouts, throughout the Christian world to exaggerate its importance in relation to the end of the world. Some fanatics saw in the Napoleonic wars, which ended more than a hundred years ago, the certain harbingers of the Savior's return. Practically every war since has been used in a similar way by the religious enthusiasts of the world, and I may add that this country has been more prolific than any other in the production of this class.

CHRIST AS A PROPHET

Please observe closely the language of verse 6. Jesus says distinctly, "See that ye be not troubled." He further assures his disciples that "the end is not yet." He says the very opposite of what he has been supposed to have said. He really says in substance: "you are living in a fallen, sinful world. War is one of its common calamities. Do not be excited into thinking, because of its occurrence, that I am soon to come." His words on this part are mandatory. "See that ye be not troubled." Following this declaration, however, he grows more emphatic. He predicts another and a worse war. Some may consider verse 7 as a further elucidation of verse 6, but if such critics will return to Luke 21:9-11 they will see that Jesus there gives these events separately, which is also the sense in which they should be understood as given by Matthew. Referring to wars, etc., in one survey he adds: "All these are the beginning of sorrows." The terrible wars that will deluge the earth are only a commencement of a series of disastrous events. Even the Spanish influenza was, in some respects, worse than the war. It took more lives, especially considering the time limits of its occurrence, in the world generally.

PAUL'S REASONS

In prophesying of "perilous times" in our day Paul gives reasons for so saying. He says, "For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous." Note the terseness of his description of the greed for wealth so generally prevalent. Again he says, "Disobedient to parents," which also prevails. He also says, "Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." Here he is charging the church. Professing Christians would have a spark of love for God hidden away in the far corner of their hearts but they would love the pleasures of the world "more." The last indictment is, for the churches, the severest of all. It reads: "Having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof," by which it is indicated that religion would be reduced to outward ceremony.

It must be admitted that in some measure there has been improvement in the way of reforms of various kinds. Slavery has been abolished, the liquor traffic prohibited, and graft, by such methods as the referendum, initiative, recall, and the direct primary greatly reduced. Despite these advances the interest in religion continues to decline, and from the standpoint of the gospel, largely, the writers of the Bible prophecy. The few who are preparing themselves spiritually for coming events are growing better, while on the other hand, the world is, in its treatment of Christianity, becoming worse. There must, however, come a change for the better; of this, including the cessation of war, the Scriptures also foretell. This revival, nevertheless, will not perceptibly decrease the world's wickedness although it will improve the condition of the church.

Recently in examining the World's Almanac for 1919; we are interested to note the figures given concerning university graduates. In this almanac no statement is made as to the number in attendance the previous year. Figures are given for July 1, 1918: Number of living alumnae, 296,619; number enlisted in the United States Army and the world war, 64,890. That would be a little over 16 per cent. Graceland reports total number of graduates 325, of whom 72 were engaged in the war. This is slightly over 22 per cent, in fact, about 22.7 of all graduates.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

WHO WERE THE MOUND BUILDERS?

The remarkable discoveries, recently unearthed by the exploring department of the Ohio State Archaeological and Historical Society, in the Hazlett Mound, Licking County, revives the unsolved query. Who were the people who erected these mysterious earthen structures? They must have been a populous and vigorous race, for their forts, walled enclosures, and isolated mounds, no less than half a century ago in Ohio, if placed in a single straight line would have reached from Cincinnati to Cleveland. With no mechanical means of assistance, these numerous artificial earthen and stone productions must have required the population, if sparse, a very long period of time for completion of the works, or a countless number of people must have simultaneously occupied the territory and engaged in the work.

More than ever the problem arises, Who were they? It surpasses the riddle of the Sphinx. The Mound Builders, so-called for want of a better name, had no written language and left no inscriptions, hieroglyphics, symbols, or records of any time save the earthen temples, graves, village sites, and forts. The Ohio Mound Builders seem to have belonged to the neolithic or later stone age giving evidence to some extent of representing the mesolithic period—the twilight zone between the two—a transition age from pure stone articles to the most primitive use of metal, for while no iron implements are found, some beaten copper ornaments and utensils are discovered.

Until a generation ago the general opinion of the archaeologists was that these peculiar workmen were a distinct and separate race from the American Indian and that the skillful and ingenious architects of these earthen structures inhabited the country previous to the red men, or at their coming, and perhaps were conquered and driven out or exterminated by the latter. More recent, thorough, and scientific investigations, conducted in part by the National and State governments, of the mounds and their contents, have led the archaeologists and ethnologists to revise their former theory and to-day they largely favor the theory that the Mound Builder was the ancestor or remote progenitor of the American Indian, the remoteness of the relationship, however, being undetermined. This progenitor theory is supported by the similarity of the artifacts, found in the prehistoric mounds, to the implements made by the historic Indian. The reply to this undoubted resemblance is the fact that the first products of man's primitive handiwork are much the same the world over. The peace and war stone implements exhumed by Schliemann from the ruins of Troy, cannot be distinguished, when placed side by side, from those found in the mounds of Ohio.

The historic Indian, that is, the post Columbian aborigine, rarely built mounds, though they used those built by others for burial purposes; intrusive burials they are called, hence the common name, "Indian Mound" given these earthen sepulchers. There is no evidence that the Ohio Indian tribes retain any traditions even, much less knowledge, of the origin or history of the mounds that could throw any light upon the obscurity of the subject.

If the Indian ancestral theory be correct, it must be admitted that the historic Indian, who was discovered by the invading European, must be a deteriorated and unworthy descendant of his distant forebear, who built the mounds. "A broad chasm is to be spanned before we can link the Mound Builders to the North American Indians," says a leading scholar on the American races, "for the Indian, as we know him, never displayed an engineering or architectural talent, an artistic ingenuity, or a trait of industry at all comparable to those characteristics so unquestionably the possession of the Mound Builders."

Speculation has run riot, and many volumes have been written, on the identity of the Mound Builder. Arguments have been advanced to the effect that he came from the lost tribes of Israel; the Book of Mormon is largely founded upon the narrative of the overseas transportation about 600 B. C., of two lines of emigration to the Western Hemisphere, respectively from Palestine and Babylonia, the precursors of both the Mound Builders and the Indians in North America. Other authorities trace him back to the dawn of ancient history, in Japan, China, and other oriental centers; few regions of the earth escape the claim of being the cradle whence sprang the stock producing the Mound Builders; so to speak, every race has aspired to the honor of being the forbear; ethnologists also attribute his ancestry to the Toltecs, whose children went north, up the Mississippi and the Ohio, and the Scioto, and as they passed built the mounds; on the contrary scholars there are who maintain the Toltecs were the descendants of the Mound Builders, who originating in the north and traveling south became more skilled, as generations came on and produced the monumental structures of the high civilization of ancient Mexico; again that he was the kin of the Aztecs, with reversal geneological termini; and very late discoveries in Mexico suggest the origin in that country of a race finally developing into the Mound Builders. To put it ir-reverently, the Mound Builders, like Topsy, just grew up in North America without parentage. It is a case of when doctors disagree, who shall decide? Perhaps the best guess is that the Mound Builders and the American Indians are collateral descendants from a common, very remote origin; certain it is that the two peoples, whoever they were, have a decidedly different culture and civilization, so far as modern knowledge goes. At present the Mound Builder's identity as to whence he came, the length of his sojourn, and the whither he went, all belong to the realm of the unknown, all of which adds to the romance and fascination of the subject.—The Columbus Dispatch, September 2, 1919.

---

JUDICIAL REFORM

---

In the Journal of the American Judicature Society to promote the efficient administration of justice, June, 1919, there appears an excellent article on the need for a criminal court. That is, a court which tries all criminal cases, and which is under the administration of a competent judge, who devotes his time to that work.

We note in the early part of the article such suggestions as the following:

The new court will not be willing to blunder along without a psychopathic laboratory, for its principal aim will be to prevent recidivism. Recent studies of the inmates of prisons in several States have revealed the high percentage of defectives among criminals. . . . It is now established that our correctional institutions, though wisely conceived, have largely failed because they have received indiscriminately three classes who should never be permitted to live together, namely: the normal, the feeble-minded and those afflicted with defects of the affective centers. The normal are capable of reforming—of reacting to corrective and educational treatment. The feeble-minded need more than anything else a protective environment. The third class, those affected with dementia praecox, constitute the great problem. Though frequently bright and likeable, they can never be depended upon. They corrupt the other two classes to such a degree that segregation is necessary. They bring parole and probation into disrepute. The doubly unfortunate, who are feeble-minded on both the intelligence and affective sides, are certain to defeat all efforts for genuine reform. They should be always under observation. It is this class that is responsible for the particularly crass and brutal crimes for the prevention of which our existing system of courts and prisons has proved wholly and frankly unfit.

It is hoped that this will do away with the existing scandal of the police court, and of the inefficiency of having criminal cases tried by such different judges in different degrees of preparation and responsibility.

We fail to recognize how largely it is a problem of administration, how largely it is a problem requiring personal experience by the lawyer, the physician, and the psychiatrist. We fail all too often in all of our courts to realize that a judgment is after all one of the easiest things to arrive at. What society needs is a cure.

The article concludes with the following paragraph:

The fact is that control of crime is nine tenths an administrative problem, rather than a procedural, legalistic, or legislative problem. Administration calls for adequate machinery, and if archaic machinery stands in the way of progress it should be cast into oblivion.

There is much in this effort to promote the efficient administration of justice, which should be of interest to our readers, in the connection with our church courts.

In the same magazine there is an able article on "Family courts," urging that all matters concerning the family, whether it be between husband and wife, or the welfare of the child, whether the case be civil or criminal, concerning itself with maintenance, with divorce, with adoption and guardianship of children, with delinquent children, bastardy cases, or desertion and nonsupport, should all be considered by the one court, instead of by several different courts, as is the case at present.

Naturally the plea is for equitable procedure, and for an investigation which will ascertain the underlying facts, and secure a reconciliation wherever that is at all possible, having the good of both parents and the children at heart.

Evidently in our church organization, we have but the one set of courts. The factor that we need to consider is the necessity for efficiently trained men for such a work. This would seem to be rather clearly provided for in the law in that the bishop is declared to be a common judge and the high counsels are standing courts of appeal.

---

SCIENTIFIC EVIDENCE OF SURVIVAL

---

Now, certain men have said that they have evidence of survival, and some of these men are scientists—even scientists by profession. If they have the evidence which they say they have then it is going to be possible to establish, before very long, the most important fact that can affect mankind. There is no doubt that these men believe the evidence; and their critics, unable to assail their sincerity, attack them upon the point of gullibility. But this leads a person of open mind to suspect the critics of a gullibility of their own; that is, they may be gulled by their prejudices. They are, indeed, thus gulled if they declare Sir Oliver Lodge to be gullible, because Sir Oliver claims to receive messages from a dead person. To show Sir Oliver Gullible the critics must prove the messages to be fraud or delusion. They prove only their own superstition who say, by implication: "But spirits do not do this-and-so; they do not speak thus-and-so."

No doubt, serious investigators have been gulled; that means nothing of importance; secret service men have had lead quarters passed "on" them. The question is, whether or not the investigators have ever found true metal—if it were even a centime! Most of them believe they have and therein is a circumstance of such significance as may give us strangely to think, if we will take leisure to note it—of all the men professionally of science who have seriously and persistently investigated and studied the alleged phenomena of "spiritualism," the overwhelming majority have drawn the conclusion, as a result of their patient researches, that there is personal survival of death.

Only levity sneers at them now—at these patient men who have sought truth in the dust heap. They have not yet failed; neither have they shown the truth—if they have found it—so that all men may see it and know that it is indeed truth. Their task is heavy, but it is the greatest one, for it is the task that must be done before civilization can begin. To lift the burden of the unknown from the human soul—to destroy the great darkness; that is the work which engages them. Man cannot be sane in the daylight until the night becomes knowable.—Booth Tarkington in the New York Evening Telegram, August 24, 1919.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Malnutrition

From three to six millions of American children are not getting enough to eat. These are the children whom parents and teachers often speak of as "delicate" or "ailing" or "lazy" or just "plain ornery"; but Miss Lydia Roberts, the dietitian, who has just written for the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor a pamphlet called "What is malnutrition?" says they are hungry, or, in technical phrase, "malnourished." Some of these children literally do not get enough to eat; more, perhaps, do not get enough of the right sort of food; some are unable, as a result of physical defect, properly to assimilate what they eat.

According to Doctor Josephine Baker, more than one-fifth of the school children of New York City are undernourished. The percentage for the entire United States is even higher. Doctor Thomas Wood places it at from fifteen to twenty-five per cent. Since this takes no count of the malnourished children under school age, in the "neglected period" between the ages of two and seven, when malnutrition usually has its beginning, from three to six million hungry American children is probably a conservative estimate.

Many of these children are going hungry, says Miss Roberts, because their parents cannot afford to buy a sufficient amount of suitable, nourishing food. Thousands of American families are to-day living on an income which does not permit of an adequate diet. But poverty is not the sole cause of malnutrition. Many mothers do not know how to spend their money to get the best return in food value, or how to plan healthful, nourishing meals for their families. Many others have not sufficient control over their children to induce them to eat the right things and to take the sleep and rest necessary to development. They take pride, Miss Roberts points out, in having a "delicate" child. They do not realize that the undernourished boy or girl is peculiarly susceptible to disease, that "the listless, inactive, malnourished child, who is constantly tired, who leans against the schoolhouse while his comrades play, is father to the man who is handicapped because of low vitality and a poorly developed body—is the inefficient adult, the rejected army recruit."

One of the most effective ways of seeing that the starving children of America are fed, the pamphlet points out, is the malnutrition clinic or the malnutrition class, where children are gathered together for instruction in diet and health rules. Mothers are urged to come to the class and the homes of the children are visited to engage the cooperation of the parents. Boston, Chicago, and New York are among the cities that have such classes. They report great improvement in the children attending them. The school lunch is another important factor in reducing malnutrition.

Medical supervision for all children until they are through the growing period Miss Roberts regards as the fundamental requirement in bringing America's millions of malnourished children up to normal health and strength. Such supervision should mean the prompt recognition of undernourishment, the correction of defects that may contribute to it, and the instruction of the child and his elders in healthful living.—Children's Bureau.

Bills of Fare for Growing Children

BREAKFAST

Orange (juice only for the youngest children).
Farina with milk.
Bread and butter.

Apple sauce.
Oatmeal with milk.

Baked pears (pulp and juice only for the youngest children).
Milk toast.
Cocoa.

Stewed prunes (pulp and juice only for the youngest children).
Cornmeal mush and milk.
Toast and butter.

Grape fruit (juice only for the youngest children).
Milk toast with grated yolk of hard-boiled egg.

Apple (scraped for very little children).
Hot milk.

In each case enough milk should be given to make up the required daily amount, which is about a quart.

DINNER

Meat soup.
Egg on toast.
String beans.
Rice pudding.
Creamed potatoes.
Green peas.

Stewed plums with thin cereal-milk pudding.

Roast beef.
Baked potato.
Asparagus.
Bread and jelly.

Baked halibut.
Boiled potatoes.
Stewed celery.
Boiled rice with honey or sirup.

Lamb stew with carrots and potato.
Twice-baked bread.
Tapioca custard.
Broiled meat cakes.
Grits.

Creamed carrots.
Bread, butter, and sugar sandwiches.

In each case enough milk should be given to make up the required daily amount which is about a quart.

SUPPER

Baked potatoes, served with cream and salt, or with milk gravy.

Cookies.

Bread and milk.
Apple sauce.
Sponge cake.

Potato-milk soup.
Twice-baked bread.
Marmalade sandwiches.

Graham crackers and milk.
Baked custard.

Milk toast.
Stewed peaches.
Cup cake.

Celery-milk soup.
Toast.
Floating island.

Is Detroit in the Lead

We consider this report of activities among the sisters of Detroit to be unusually fine, and we are wondering if any other group can show up equally well. If so, we are quite willing to publish the summary of your work done. How many locals will enter for a contest of this nature? Don't all speak up at once, but just scan your records and see how they compare with this one, and send it on, for our encouragement, and that of the many hundreds of other groups which are working hard for the strengthening of the church interests in their localities.

A. A.

From January to August 1:
Meetings, 24.

Average attendance, 12.

Made 6 comforters, 9 quilts, 5 quilt tops, 53 aprons, 100 pounds carpet rags sewed (36 pounds sold), 1 centerpiece, 1 pillow top, 29 holders, 5 caps, 4 dinners, 2 ice cream socials, 50 magazine subscriptions.

Total receipts, $642.12.

Expenditures, $217.12.

Paid on church debt, $425.

For the month of August, we have made 12 aprons, quilted 2 quilts, gave a musical, and paid $50 more on the church debt, and we only met three times, besides an auxiliary picnic.

V. B.

Music an Elemental Part of Life

Dear old Mother Goose, the patron saint of children's music! How much the children of our family owe to her jingles. I can very distinctly remember my father playing with us and trotting us to the rhythm of "Ride a trot horse," "To Boston, to Boston, to buy a penny bun," and "Little Bow-wow to the mill."

No child, thoroughly imbued with these rhymes, will have any trouble in comprehending three-and-four-part rhythms with their varied subdivisions and accents. How much more delightful to have all this rhythmic instinct grow up unconsciously from happy playtime, than to have it left until a child is old enough to be conscious of his lack in this respect and has to go through exacting and tiresome drills to overcome it.

Happy the child whose lot is cast in a joyous musical atmosphere! There is thus implanted in his inner being a something which will help him to go through many trials with a brave heart and an unconquerable hope and faith that this is after all a good world.

We constantly hear mothers say, "No, my children have no talent for music and I shall not bother to have them learn anything about it."

If I could feel that I had in all my life made a few mothers, a few teachers, understand the difference between music as a performance and music as a life element, and thereby gained for a few children this power which more than any other stirs the vital forces by which we live, I should feel that my share of life's troubles were a small price to pay.

A like misapprehension in the domain of art would banish from home and school the beautiful pictures and art forms which awaken a love of all that wonderful world of beauty revealed to the seeing eye and the appreciative mind, because, perforce, so very, very few children have any talent for drawing, painting, or modeling.

One of the first steps in rousing a feeling for music is to lead a child to listen. How much stress is laid in our scheme of education upon teaching a child to observe, to see; how little upon teaching him to hear. The eye is made to dominate in all things and we lose much enjoyment which a trained sense of hearing might bring us. God made the birds beautiful, but he also gave them songs, so tender, so thrilling that the very breath stops that we may listen, as we sit at twilight near the home of woodthrush or songsparrow.

To the open ear is not the gentle, silvery murmur of the brook as it calls through the forest, as keen a delight as its crystal shimmer in a setting of green, when we have followed its call and found its home?

Let us not forget that the morning stars sang together, and that He who created them meant his children to hear their music in the melodies and harmonies of all his great creation.

The child brought up in the city hasn't the beautiful sounds of nature from which to get his first lessons in listening, but mother and kindergartner can make use of what they have. Even the scissors-grinder and ragman help us out here. One of my little pupils, the daughter of musical parents, gained her first ideas of imitating sounds correctly from a ragman's call. As we were having our lesson one day we heard this song come, I was going to say float in at the window, but the ragman's tones are rather too strenuous to be called floating tones: "Rags, rags, rags, any old rags or bott's." The tune can be written thus, do se la sol sol sol do do, but no words can describe the quality of the tones. At once I imitated the theme and little Frances to my great surprise imitated me exactly, whereas before this she had hardly been able to get one single note correctly. His tune was unique and it appealed to her.

Lead the children to listen in every way you can think of. Tap on different substances, wood, glass, silver. You may find a lampshade that gives forth a definite musical pitch. Play tunes on tumblers, tuning them to musical pitches by varying the quantity of water in them and striking lightly with silver knife or spoon. This device I found most useful in arousing interest in music in a boy who seemed to have no musical instinct whatever.

A writer says, "The greater part of children's time is spent in elaborate impersonation and make-believe, and the entire basis of their education is acquired through this directly assimilative faculty." This applies most forcibly to music and gives to those who have the care of children almost unlimited opportunity for developing musical expression.—Mrs. Jean N. Barrett, in Bureau of Education Bulletin.

Have You a "Child" Library?

One of the most helpful books on the management and understanding of the child is Miss Elizabeth Harrison's A Study of Child Nature.

Other good books are Poems Children Love, by Coussens (Dodge Publishing Company, New York, $1.25); Mother Stories and More Mother Stories, by Maud Lindsay (Milton Bradley Company, Springfield, Massachusetts, $1 each); Emilie Poulsson's Finger Plays (Lothrop Lee & Shepard Company, Boston, $1.25); and books illustrated by Leslie Brooks. Some of these are The Tailor and the Crow, The Truth About Old King Cole, by G. F. Hill, $1; Johnny Crow's Garden, $1; Johnny Crow's Party, $1; The Golden Goose Book, $2; The Nursery Rhyme Picture Book, $1. These are all published by E. Warne & Company, New York.

If the mother can play or sing, she should purchase a few good songbooks. These will afford both the children and herself much pleasure and profit. Songs not only increase the musical sense, but also enlarge the child's vocabulary and imagination, and develop community feeling. Emilie Poulsson's book, Song of a Little Child's Day, with music by Eleanor Smith (Milton Bradley Company, $1.50), is good for children four years old and over. The children would also like Children's Singing Games, Old and New by Mari Hofer; A. Flanagan & Company, Chicago, publishers, 50 cents.

To take the bread the Master breaks himself,
And give to famished ones, who wait
In scattered groups on the green earth.

Let us be wise, and graciously divide
These crumbs unto the chosen ones:
Lest some go hungry through our grudging gifts,
And never taste to see the Lord is good.
#or like disciples in the olden time,
To some of us is granted privilege

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Parable of the Leaven

In the HERALD for August 27 I see a question on the parable related by Jesus as recorded in Matthew 13: 32, Inspired Version: "The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, until the whole was leavened."

The mistakes some have made in the interpretation has been in concluding that the meal must necessarily be in one mass; also that this was the usual amount taken for one baking. But families are not all of a size, so the batch would be of a different quantity.

Some years since I had studied considerably on the statement of a definite quantity, as expressed in the parable, but failed to get a satisfactory answer, until one day when reading in the Book of Mormon.

It will be remembered that in John 10: 16 it is stated that Jesus when addressing the multitude said, "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice, and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd."

When speaking to the Nephites as recorded in 3 Nephi 8: 4 and 7: 16-25, he said that it was they to whom he referred, but the Jews for lack of faith failed to understand, and he goes on to state that there is yet another group of Israelites, whom he has been commanded by the Father to visit, undoubtedly for the same purpose—that of planting the gospel leaven therein. As he was not sent save to the house of Israel, he here, as the woman, hides the kingdom in these three groups of Israel, thus fulfilling the parable of placing it in the three measures of meal—one in Palestine, one on this continent, and one to that group whom he refers to as the lost tribes in chapter 8; verse 4.

J. CHARLES JENSEN.

The True Church Is the World's Friend

The Presbyterian general secretary of the New Era Movement gave a "keynote address" at their late conference, and said "some people are prejudiced against the term 'social service.' Christian service, when it is sincerely done, is the noblest kind of humanitarianism. To build and endow hospitals, to enter into the arena of economic and social injustice, and by the persuasion of moral principles, and the force of righteousness to change improper conditions, to make its supreme business the meeting of every human need, is a part of the business of the church that wins."

The sectarian world is, to a large degree, retrieving itself by this broad way of abandoning—if only for a time—the old path of cant and pretense, and adopting the philosophy of the humanitarian instead of the traditionary custom of the presbyter, and his recital of the apostles' creed.

The precepts of men are taking on a freer way of reaching souls; but the less frequented path was the organizing and the planting of guide posts by the angel who spoke the word, "This is the way; walk therein."

In the reconstruction of the religions of the world that mankind is seeking at this crisis, must it not begin to build from the foundation up, and not still follow the antiquated though worldly reformers who only abridged the pagan and popish doctrines of the apostate church of old.

The true church has a work of sacrifice before it, to show the fullness of the gospel and declare Him who is to the darkened world, "the unknown God."

The Nation says "we used to feel flattered when called the 'big brother' of the oppressed of the world, but the practical side of the position shows a responsibility that we must decide whether we want to assume or not."

But our missionaries are not faint-hearted men, and they believe in the declaration by Emerson:

"And ye shall succor men;
'Tis nobleness to serve.
Help them that cannot help again;
Beware from right to swerve."

ABBIE A. HORTON.

The Bishopric Advocate

for 1919

Every Member a Tithe Payer

If you are suffering from an overdose of prosperity, consult your bishop. Obedience to the law of tithing and consecration is the surest way to secure immunity from Jeshurun's ancient complaint.

On three square meals a day it is well enough for us to insist that "man cannot live by bread alone"; but, deprived of these, we should soon become acutely conscious that without bread man cannot live at all.

Hence divine providence is discoverable in the institution of the financial law, so that the cries of the body as well as the soul may be satisfied.

The degree of my interest in my brother's spiritual and moral well-being may be consistently measured by the degree of my interest in his temporal well-being: commensurate, of course, with my capacity to help him.

The gospel of Jesus insists that in the actual affairs of life no man lives to himself, that we are all members one of another. Human society is such a closely woven fabric that another cannot suffer without involving me in his suffering. Every self-sacrifice, therefore, is at the same time self-preservation; because both giver and receiver are all one in the deeper spiritual unity of the brotherhood of humanity.

The ideal of brotherhood implies not only that we refrain from doing injury to others, but that we actively do them good. This is made possible by paying of your tithe.

WORCHESTER, ENGLAND, August 20, 1919.

Editors Herald: Our first annual reunion of the British Isles Mission was held at Birmingham from August 3 to 10. It was, I consider, a success, and it gave us some new experiences which will assist us in further projects of the kind.

I feel that the reunion has done us all a great deal of good, both from the spiritual and physical experiences, and although all our plans did not materialize, we are truly glad of the association we had with our brothers and sisters from all parts of England and Wales, and are looking forward with keen anticipation to our next gathering, which we have agreed to hold at London, and feel sure that our first attempt has been invaluable for planning the future reunions.

Thousands of tracts and bills were distributed, large posters displayed and some newspaper advertising done, with a view to "boosting" the work locally.

The resident and visiting ministry ably assisted Brother Abel Hall and myself in the open-air work, both in speaking and tracting, and judging from the crowds who listened, good interest is aroused.

The Saints showed their true colors on every hand and were not "ashamed of the gospel of Christ."

We had some "Bull Ring" fights, in which all had good openings to show their mettle, and I may say that some of our young men (and sisters, too) quite eloquently upheld the faith. The "Bull Ring" is a large square in the center of the town where the several religious bodies "hold forth." Some with long hair, others with a brass serpent, atheists, skeptics, socialists, Jews, and Gentiles, in fact none are excluded with the exception of the "Brighamite Mormons" who are denied this privilege.

This "Bull Ring Arena" is not altogether Athenian, but a sort of disorderly, Socratic, free-lance institution. It is a splendid training camp for anyone who is troubled with a short temper, and I venture to assert it will either "kill or cure" him within two weeks. It reminds me of an experience Brother G. Leggott relates he had once, at Manchester. While preaching on the street a man aimed a blow at him but missed, then later half a brick came floating along which also fortunately missed. When asked what he did then, he replied, "Kept on preaching"! That is what we did in the "Ring." Various phases of the work were presented, including "That Book of Mormon," "Old Joe Smith," "The Gold Plates" and the book of Mormon and Covenants were freely used by us, to disprove assertions made on the marriage question. Also the fact that a newspaper campaign is hot against the Brighamites made it lively for us, and we were not slow to take full advantage of the opportunity offered.

We "kept on preaching" when we could be heard, and if I was not doing so myself, some other brother or sister amongst the crowd was, so it was all right anyway.

One night we were given the loan of one of the local "orators" rostrums (i. e., a wooden barrel with top and bottom missing). Paddy (the aforesaid orator) regularly took this each night from a local saloon, and used to let the part of the world that listened to him know all about his political, religious, and other grievances, flavored with no small amount of Irish wit and poetical acumen, and his crowd of sympathizers donated fairly well to help Paddy to ease the terrible torment he suffered from the malady of a hot, parched, and thirsty throat, from which there was evidently no other remedy than pint after pint of "brains ale" or beer! The writer felt grateful to Paddy for the use of his stand, and as a token of undying gratitude presented him at the end with a throat lozenge, which poor Patrick mistook for a sixpenny piece! The next night he opened fire on us by denouncing us as Mormons, etc. "Fancy," he said, "they are no Christians, they ain't. Why, he pinched my stool last night, and then he gave me something closed up in his hand, which I thought was a tanner [sixpence], but when I opened my hand near the light, I found he had given me a blooming peppermint! That ain't Christianity." And his crowd roared with laughter.

Still "we went on preaching," but our pulpit was truly an improvised affair. It was narrow and the strips across the top were all too narrow, but the "Elders of Israel" stood upon it. As I mounted its summit, I was forced to remark as it wobbled, "We must have a sound foundation, otherwise if we fall we shall negate that well-known hymn, 'How firm a foundation ye saints of the Lord.'"

Well, I must not encroach too much upon your time and space, but I am thankful for the opportunity our reunion afforded, and am certain good has been done and all benefited, and I trust the brethren at Birmingham are really going to stick to the "Bull Ring," as it is considered by some to be the equal of the forum of ancient Rome.

Praying for the advancement everywhere of God's work and his blessings on his people.

Your brother,

THOMAS JONES.

GROESWEN, BARBERS HILL, GREAT MALVERN.

MADISON, WISCONSIN, September 1, 1919.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY, Independence, Missouri.

Dear Brethren: I have not sent in my weekly letter for two weeks as I have been so busy with reunion work that I have not had time to write. I am all alone on the committee this year as we have not had a reunion for three years and the old committee was not available, so I have done the whole thing, manual labor and all; of course, some helped set up their own tents after they got here, and some stayed and helped to take them down again, but I have been on the jump from before daylight till after eleven o'clock at night for the last two weeks, so I am all worn out, but for all that I feel well repaid, for we have had by far the best reunion we ever had in the district, both as to attendance and the spiritual blessings enjoyed. I never saw the Saints leave a reunion feeling as good as they did this year. Sister Flint was a wonderful help to me as she took full charge of the dining hall and did the buying.

Quite a number of the Chicago Saints were in attendance and were indeed a help. They are a live bunch—this district will long remember their cheerful and efficient work. God bless them!

The speakers at the reunion were W. M. Aylor, Ward L. Christy, P. Muceus, C. H. Burr, James Davis, C. B. Hartshorn, L. Houghton, and myself. It has been a great reunion and I believe the amount of good done can hardly be estimated. We used a city park that is equipped with auditorium, dining hall, and everything necessary for our work and all gratis, and our association has been so pleasant with the park board of the city council that we have had an invitation to make this park our permanent annual meeting place, so we have stored our camp equipment here in the dining hall and there will be no storage charges.

Hastily your brother in bonds,

B. C. FLINT.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, September 2, 1919.

FIRST PRESIDENCY, Independence, Missouri.

Dear Brethren: The Nauvoo District reunion is an experience of the past. In its flight it has left many valuable presents, such as the renewal of old acquaintances, the forming of new ones which has enlarged our view of life, beautiful lessons in teaching and example, an increase of faith, and greater determination.

The spirit of peace prevailed from the beginning to the end and many say it was the most spiritual reunion ever attended. Members of the church at Montrose report that nonmembers have expressed a desire that our reunion be held again at that place next year. The work in that vicinity is beginning to show new life, apparently as a result of the efforts of Brother P. R. Burton.

Brethren G. T. Griffiths and J. W. Wight who were the main speakers delivered some excellent sermons. This is not a lack of appreciation of others, for all were splendid. We regret very much to see age leaving its physical marks in many of our brethren of such ability, for it reminds us of the fact that we can enjoy the benefits of their experiences and association only for a short season longer. However, our hearts receive courage when we hear such men as Heman Hale Smith and others who are ready to enter into, and continue the labors of their fathers. May the Saints hold up these men in their confidence, and our heavenly Father bless them in their efforts.

As I meditate upon the growth of the church as I have seen it in the past twenty years, I am made to know that God's hand is guiding and we need not fear, unless we be found not doing the work assigned us.

Your brother in bonds,
D. J. WILLIAMS.

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA, September 3, 1919.

Editors Herald: The Spirit of God can abide only in purity and cleanliness. If our hearts are filled with wrong desires and evil, the Spirit cannot live there. We should have the desire to cleanse out all the wrong and evil from our hearts and build them up into strong, pure, clean temples where the Spirit can dwell and reign in supreme power.

The girls and young women of our branch are quite interested in this and have formed an organization of Temple Builders. We realize that the erection of a material temple cannot save our souls; that the redemption of Zion can be accomplished only when our hearts have first been redeemed from uncleanness and are made into temples fit for a dwelling place for the Spirit.

The Lord designs, we all know, that Zion shall reflect his glory, and be a light unto the world. Zion cannot do this if the intelligence of her children is not greater than that of the children of the world. So the aim of the organization is to advance and fit the young women of the church for the greatest possible efficiency, not only for individual benefit, but to answer the call of the church for trained and qualified women in special lines of service.

We have our meetings every Friday evening; and our program is quite interesting. First, we open with a hymn, then we repeat the Lord's Prayer in unison, which is followed by our class work. When that is completed we have the benediction. Before going home we spend a short time rehearsing some good music studying a good drama, or playing basketball.

The first two numbers on our program, the hymn and Lord's Prayer, help us to get ourselves in the religious attitude which is necessary to accomplish our class work. As class work we have been studying a course in public speaking in order to help us in explaining the gospel to others, to help us in giving clear, concise testimonies in prayer meeting and to help us to get rid of the habit of hesitating and halting in our speech when we stand before a gathering of people. Now we are about to begin a study of personal hygiene. Of course these two courses are not the only ones we intend studying. We have just begun, and it takes time to accomplish all that we want to undertake.

The pleasures of the Temple Builders are also being looked after; for our leader took the class away to a bungalow along the Perkiomen Creek. There the girls had a whole week of canoeing, rowing, swimming, and cooking. It has also been arranged to have a party for them once a month.

Everyone knows that we should take a great interest in the young people of the church, for they are the ones who will fill the places of the older ones as they are removed from active service. So if we want this work to advance and we do, our children and young people must be cared for and trained to be intelligent and efficient in all lines of work and study.

We need culture of the truest type. Ignorance must be overcome; for it is no disgrace to have been ignorant; but it is to remain so. So step by step, we intend to build up our temples—ever upward in beauty and worth, and always toward that joyous time when sin shall be no more.

Your sister in the gospel,
EDNA M. STARZMANN.

ROCK ELM, WISCONSIN, September 3, 1919.

Editors Herald: In perusing the pages of this paper it has been food for thought, and we have been made to rejoice that many are being gathered into the fold, and to see this work of God advancing.

We have a branch of thirty-seven members here, but last Sunday there were only three families of Saints represented. But with all discouragements that may come, we know our cause is right and we must "carry on" and strive to arouse an interest. It seems the elements of this world and its pleasures are now drawing many in "by and forbidden paths," but we feel to pray God to bring them back, and distill in each Saint to protect the moral interests of his people, and those whom we are associated with, so that when that call shall come to gather to Zion, we may each be clothed in that beautiful garment of righteousness.

Since living here I have had the primary class in Sunday school, and in the small class of seven or eight, I have been made to feel very thankful that four have accepted Christ's plan of salvation, and trust that the seed sown will spring forth and bear much fruit. May He remember the ones who have not yet obeyed.

We expect to locate in Chetek, Wisconsin, this fall, and I will remember each of my class here with a tender love that only comes from the God who has many times been merciful to me in teaching his plan to them.

For the first time in six years, we (Brother Clark and I), were not able to attend our Northern Wisconsin reunion which has just closed, but we feel that God has been good and this is one sacrifice we were to make on account of the responsibilities of life. But we are living in a day of sacrifice, and we felt it more keenly when war was raging and the lives of our loved ones were at stake; we felt it a duty to be present and unite our prayers with those of like faith for the protection and care of our heavenly Father to be over them. I have lived to realize my prayers were answered, and feel I must work more zealously now, that when disaster comes again I may have a right to merit other blessings at his loving hand.

This gospel is so much more than anything this world affords. The cup of pleasure is full to overflowing, but oh, how sad will be the day if we should realize that we had indulged to freely of this world's pleasure and neglected to keep God's commandments and improve the beautiful opportunities that should be improved.

May that peace and love abide with this church, and may we "fight the good fight of faith" and each one be loyal to the service of the army that wages war against sin and unrighteousness.

I have been requested many times to write letters to the HERALD, but feel my weakness and this has been my first attempt. I will use this means of greeting many who were of our number and have moved to Missouri. We remember them and hope when we merit the final reward it will be a grand reunion with them and all the Saints of God.

Ever praying for Zion's welfare,
LAURA LAFFERTY CLARK.

A man cannot be generous if he is not just.—S. Richardson.

DAVIDSON, OKLAHOMA, September 4, 1919.

Editors Herald: Though I have been silent for some time, I have not been idle. Quite to the contrary, I have, as it were, entered into the silences that my mind might be given the greater room for meditation and expansion. For years I have tried to acquire a clear knowledge and therewith an adequate means of expressing the gospel. As I grow older, and my experiences are more varied, I see the greater need of thoroughness. How true it is that "no one can assist in this work except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things."

To me the truly educated man is he whose life is properly poised; whose character is so fully developed that he is equal to any emergency. It means that his physical, intellectual moral and spiritual aspects must be properly balanced. If we would learn to serve as Christ served, we must not only pray but we must work. We must make possible the conditions for which we pray so far as it lies within our power.

The letter in a recent HERALD, written by Brother Augustine Dwyer from the Northwest was read with much interest; it was filled with noble thoughts, and its language was such as would tend to inspire hope and courage within the soul of the reader. But that for which I desire to express especial appreciation is the article entitled "The school of the prophets" by Brother Dwyer, appearing in the July Autumn Leaves which just came to me a couple of days ago. To me that article is sublime. It conveys the proper ideal, and I believe expresses the truth that sooner or later must be acquired by us if we are to bless the world of mankind with the restored gospel that has been committed unto us. How great is our privilege! How noble is the service unto which we have been called! Are we improving our opportunities and thus creating greater ones, or are we simply leaning on our oars? How many of us are prepared, and willing, to pay the supreme sacrifice for the good of the church? I mean by that how many of us are ready to lay our all upon the altar of service, that the world of mankind may be enriched and ennobled thereby?

There is no way open to us whereby we may get something for nothing. Compensation is the law. We must pay the price, therefore he who would achieve nobly must sacrifice greatly. I see no short cuts to success, no byways to victory. If we are to accomplish our part in the regenerating of the world we must learn to rid ourselves of our selfish propensities, and unreservedly give the best there is in us for the success of the gospel.

Hopefully,
J. E. VANDERWOOD.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Conference Minutes

WESTERN MAINE.—At Little Deer Isle, Maine, August 30 and 31. There was a good representation of each branch except one. The sermons were of a high order. Luff and Bullard excelled. T. T. Billings, George H. Knowlton, H. A. Koehler assisted materially. Next conference to be held at Vinal Haven, November 8 and 9. H. A. Koehler, president.

The Bishopric

UTAH DISTRICT

Owing to the many pressing demands made upon Brother C. A. Smurthwaite, who has been serving as the Bishop's agent for the Utah District for a number of years, he has felt under the necessity of resigning his position in this capacity. Brother Roy H. Hewes, 969 Hudson Avenue, Ogden, Utah, is hereby appointed as his successor to take effect October 1.

Brother Hewes is a young man deeply interested in the work and because of his business experience is well qualified to represent this department. Those who know Brother Hewes recognize in him one worthy of their trust and confidence and to others we commend him for their loyal support.

Those who love the Lord's work and desire to advance its interests can do so in many ways, among which is the supporting of the Lord's work by the payment of our tithes and offerings.

We trust that the Saints in Utah may avail themselves of this opportunity to help.

Sincerely yours,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

KIRTLAND, OHIO, DISTRICT

We hereby appoint as Bishop's Agent of the Kirtland, Ohio, District, to become effective October 1, 1919, Brother L. H. Lewis, R. F. D., Willoughby, Ohio.

Brother Lewis has been acting for a number of years as Bishop's agent in New York and has proven himself a very worthy and efficient servant of the church. To those who are acquainted with him, he needs no words of commendation, but to those who are unacquainted with him we present him as worthy of your fullest confidence and esteem and trust that in his efforts to support this department of the Lord's work that he may have your loyal support.

It has been said that where our treasure is there will our heart be also and those who support the Lord's work by imparting of their material possessions will find an increased devotion as a result.

We trust that the blessings of the Lord may attend the Saints of the Kirtland District.

Sincerely yours,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

Conference Notices

Holden Stake (church and auxiliaries) convention and conference with Knobnoster Branch, 11 a. m., October 24, continuing over Sunday. Send reports to secretary of respective departments: Mrs. Anna Fender, Holden, Missouri, secretary Holden Stake; Miss Pearl Redfield, secretary Sunday school; Miss Blanche Christensen, Warrensburg, Missouri, secretary Religio. D. J. Krahl, stake president.

Spring River, at Nowata, Oklahoma, October 18 and 19. John C. Virgin, secretary.

Convention Notices

The Woman's Auxiliary, Central Michigan, at Whittemore, during conference, September 27 and 28. Let all come who can, prepared to assist. E. L. Pringle, organizer.

Spring River Sunday school, at Nowata, Oklahoma, October 17. John C. Virgin, assistant superintendent.

Quorum Notices

To the First Quorum of Priests, Eastern Michigan District: As we have but one annual conference now, I desire to notify each member of the quorum to be present October 4 and 5, at Crosswell. We will have a business session during the conference, and it is very urgent that all be present. Some very important matters are to come up. Make out your reports and mail at once to Fred W. Cadow, secretary-treasurer, 418 Huron Avenue, Port Huron, Michigan.

Addresses

Elder T. W. Williams, 94 Crawford Street, Toronto, Ontario.

Important Notice

TO ALL MISSIONARIES UNDER CONFERENCE APPOINTMENT

The Quorum of Twelve request that, in sending in your monthly statistical reports the first day of each month, you give a brief report of where you have labored and the results following under the heading "remarks." This is necessary to assist us in making our report for the members of the Joint Council. Some neglect to send in the weekly letter called for; we trust that each one will be prompt not only with the weekly letter but with the monthly report as well.

On behalf of the Quorum of Twelve.

U. W. GREENE.

Notice to Brethren under General Conference Appointment

The ruling under which tracts are to be supplied for free distribution provides that all orders must be approved by either the First Presidency or the general Bishopric. In order, therefore, to avoid delays, will you kindly anticipate your wants and send your requests to the General Church Offices at Independence, Missouri, to be approved.

This will involve a delay of only twenty-four hours and may save you some disappointment. It will be well for you to specify which tracts may be sent as substitutes in case the ones you desire happen to be out of print. Your requests when O. K'd will be given immediate attention.

Sincerely yours,
J. A. KOEHLER,
Manager.

Church Recorder

Branch, District and Stake officers and all ministers in the church please take notice: As a preliminary step toward a change in the method of assembling the items in this department, we request all branches, districts and stakes to immediately suspend the issuing of letters of removal. Letters which have already been issued may be received by the respective branches or stakes not later than October 10. If presented for record after that date, send same to this office without recording.

Ministers who baptize are requested to report all baptisms to this office, sending the regular certificates here. Branch and stake secretaries are requested to record no more baptisms. If a baptism certificate is handed you, please send it to this office without entering upon your record. Those forwarding certificates to us are asked to be sure and give the address of the candidate on the reverse side of the certificate. Also see that the name of the branch is indicated, and, if possible, the name and address of the president or secretary. Further explanations and instructions will be issued at an early date.

Above instructions apply to the United States and Canada only. Further provisions will be made for foreign missions at an early date.

FRANK A. RUSSELL,
Church Recorder.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 12, 1919.

Our Departed Ones

BAUER.—John N. Bauer was born in Germany, July 25, 1841. Came to America when a boy, and in 1870 married Louise Gabriel. Was baptized by T. T. Hinderks, October 9, 1895, at Burlington, Iowa, and later ordained to the office of deacon. He continued a faithful member till he passed away peacefully September 3, 1919. Leaves wife, 3 sons, 3 daughters, 2 sisters, and 5 grandchildren. Services at the home in Burlington, by D. J. Williams. Another beautiful character has gone to enjoy his reward.

OLSON.—Martin Olson was born in Norway, November 25, 1884. Died August 26, 1919. Was severely injured in the coal mine at Chariton, Iowa, causing his death. Married Louise Evans of Lucas, Iowa, September 3, 1911. Leaves wife and other relatives to mourn. There was a very large attendance at the funeral. Funeral services at the Saints' church by Parley Batten and E. B. Morgan.

PEATIE.—James William Peattie, son of William and Mary. Born in Canada, September 9, 1858. Died at his home in Oklahoma City, August 31, 1919. Leaves his wife and one son, many friends and other relatives to mourn. Sister Peattie is a sister of Sister S. K. Sorenson, deceased. Brother F. W. Kueffer had charge of funeral, Hubert Case preached the sermon.

MOORE.—Samantha Ellen Riggs was born April 17, 1847, at Marshville, Holmes County, Ohio. Married William Shepard Moore soon after the close of the War of the Rebellion. Lived for awhile in Ohio, then moved to Iowa, Missouri, and Nebraska, successively, settling on a farm in Keyapaha County in 1883. She with her husband united with the church in 1889 under the ministry of W. A. Smith. Her house was always a home for the missionaries who were in her neighborhood. About twelve years ago they sold the farm and moved to Ainsworth where Brother Moore died a couple of years later. Soon after the death of her husband Sister Moore removed to Ralston, Wyoming, where she died August 12. Buried by the side of her husband at Ainsworth,

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor.

The official organ of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Published every Wednesday by the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. Entered at the post office at Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

PRICE, $1.75 A YEAR IN ADVANCE

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL: *

|                         |           |     |
|-------------------------|-----------|-----|
| Utah Forgets            | - - - - - | 905 |
| An Open Forum           | - - - - - | 906 |
| Court Decisions         | - - - - - | 907 |
| County Religious Survey | - - - - - | 907 |
| The Metric System       | - - - - - | 908 |
| Confidence              | - - - - - | 908 |

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

|   |           |     |
|---|-----------|-----|
| Preserving the Rights of the People, by B. L. McKim | - - - - - | 909 |
| Who Shall Nominate, by Edward D. Moore              | - - - - - | 911 |
| Magnanimous, by C. B. Hartshorn                     | - - - - - | 914 |
| Gone to a Happier Sphere, by Frederick A. Smith     | - - - - - | 915 |
| Is the World Growing Better, by A. C. Barmore       | - - - - - | 916 |

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

|                                 |           |     |
|---------------------------------|-----------|-----|
| Who Were the Mound Builders     | - - - - - | 917 |
| Judicial Reform                 | - - - - - | 918 |
| Scientific Evidence of Survival | - - - - - | 919 |

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY - - - - - 919

LETTER DEPARTMENT - - - - - 922

J. Charles Jensen—Abbie A. Horton—Thomas Jones—B. C. Flint—D. J. Williams—Edna M. Starzman—Laura Lafferty Clark.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT - - - - - 925

FROM HERE AND THERE - - - - - 926

August 15, Elder Gamet officiating. Two children survive. M. E. Moore of Ralston, Wyoming, and Mrs. Millie E. Bates of Meadville, Nebraska.

MCCLAIN.—Sister Mabel McClain was born at Knoxville, Tennessee, December 21, 1877; died August 22, 1919. She came to Colorado with her parents when about one year old, spending most of her days at Trinidad. Married William A. McClain December 5, 1899. To this union 3 children were born. Leaves husband, 3 children mother and 2 brothers. Baptized May 20, 1917 by O. E. Sade. Lived a faithful Saint to the end. Funeral services at home, in charge Evan Edwards. Sermon by James Watson.

AMOUNT OF LOANS BY THE RELIGIO TO COLLEGE STUDENTS INCREASED

On account of the increase in tuition and other expenses of students attending Graceland College the executive committee of the Religio have increased the amount which worthy students may borrow on recommendation of the president of Graceland College to $100 per annum instead of $60 per annum as heretofore. These loans are made on notes bearing no interest until maturity and the Religio is very glad to assist worthy students. We hope that many will take advantage of this offer. G. S. Trowbridge, General President.

On the 14th the executive council of the General Sunday School Association assembled at Independence, Missouri, to complete their work regarding the general editorial and business policy affecting the Sunday school Quarterlies. Other important business items were also on the calendar. Editors Burgess and Moore, being on the council, were in attendance from Lamoni, as well as G. R. Wells, superintendent.

A LYCEUM COURSE FOR DES MOINES

From the September number of the Des Moines District Dispatch we quote the following: "At our recent business meeting it was voted that we favor the maintaining of a lyceum course during the fall and winter months, and a committee of five was selected to arrange and promote the course. It is expected to have the best talent available in the church, consisting of the leading men and some of the Graceland faculty. Detailed announcement will be made in the very near future, so that all branches in the district may avail themselves of the opportunity to attend."

Elder Benjamin Bean, formerly of California, has written an article on "Who are the Latter Day Saints?" which appears in The Church Outlook for August, 1919. The article is one column long and contains an announcement of the church services in Topeka. It contains several pertinent statements which should help to correct wrong impressions concerning the church.

THE JOURNAL OF HISTORY

Possibly some have overlooked our recent announcement that single copies of the July Journal of History were available for those who wished to secure some most excellent biographical material concerning the late departed Heman C. Smith, historian of the church. There should be at least a thousand orders for this number alone if it were generally known that these items could all be secured in our one publication. The Journal of History is one dollar a year, 25 cents for a single copy. Order the July number if you cannot afford a year's subscription.

The Evening Index, of San Bernardino, California, reports that the celebration of Labor Day in that city was a notable event, and gives considerable space to the details. Among the items we quote the following concerning the president of the Southern California District: "Elder George Wixom closed the speaking program in a very eloquent plea for equal rights for labor. He declared that the churches stood for the laboring man and believed the day was coming when they would receive that justice which is deserving the men who create all the wealth by the sweat of their brows. His speech was greeted by a perfect storm of applause."

CHURCH DEDICATION AT BROWN CITY

The dedication of the Saints' church at Brown City, Michigan, will occur October 11 and 12. Good speakers will be invited. Meals served in the basement at these prices: Breakfast, 25; dinner and supper, 35 cents each. All are invited. Edward D. Weaver, branch president.

President Elbert A. Smith was in Denver Sunday, September 7, to dedicate the new church building in that city. We are not informed how long he will continue in that vicinity.

A letter from Elder George Wellington Robley informs us that he is having an interesting time at Rochester, New York, and is meeting with a great deal of opposition and prejudice. He is determined to stand firm and meet the issue. One form of opposition is the confusion of our church with the church of Utah. Brother Robley spoke on this subject August 31, and secured a good summary of his address in the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle for September 1. The Rochester Democrat and Chronicle has certainly given a very fair presentation of his address, pointing out the differences between the two organizations.

Following his trip through the Yellowstone National Park, Augustine Dwyer returned to Bozeman, Montana, and entered on his seventh week in that place with a series of lectures in the large Presbyterian church, repeating the series he gave in our church some weeks ago.

Rufus Culp, of Coopersville, Ohio, requests the prayers of the Saints that he may be relieved from his present affliction. If some in the vicinity would be willing to appoint a day of fasting, he would be glad to join with them.

Sister Dorothy Brown, of Laranimas, Colorado, who is seventy-five years of age and isolated, having only the church papers to help her keep alive to the work, desires the prayers of the Saints.

Sister M. J. Floyd, who has resided in Montana for the past five years, sailed on August 30 from New York for Jerusalem on the Savonia, after a delay in that city of six months on account of difficulty in securing passports. She has property at Jaffa and is a descendent of the Adam's colony who made a settlement there about fifty years ago.

CHANGE IN PRICE OF NAMES ON BOOKS

A charge of 25 cents will be made for putting your name in gold on any book. Same name on each additional book, 15 cents.—The Manager.

A note from Vinal Haven, Maine, tells us that Elders H. A. Koehler and Joseph Luff are having good meetings at that place. On the evening of the 7th there were over 200 in attendance, with good interest. Some have been baptized and more are to be soon.

SOME INTERESTING FIGURES

We asked President Briggs of Graceland to furnish us some comparative figures as to college attendance, and he has reported the following, evidently based on the enrollment of the first week in the years past as well as this year:

|            | Resident |      | Nonresident |      | Total |      | Increase |
|------------|----------|------|-------------|------|-------|------|----------|
|            | 1915     | 1919 | 1915        | 1919 | 1915  | 1919 |          |
| College    | 13       | 32   | 9           | 67   | 22    | 99   | 350%     |
| Academy    | 11       | 7    | 25          | 56   | 36    | 63   | 156%     |
| Commercial | 10       | 7    | 7           | 17   | 17    | 24   | 41%      |
| Studio     | 22       | 24   | 9           | 7    | 31    | 31   | same     |
|            | 56       | 70   | 50          | 147  | 106   | 217  |          |

- Students from 25 states, 2 foreign countries.
- Resident students 32 per cent of total.
- Nonresident students 68 per cent of total.
- Comparison between 1915-16 and 1919-20 to date. Four years since Graceland organized a Junior College:
- Increase in college attendance 350 per cent.
- Increase in academy attendance 156 per cent.
- Increase in commercial attendance 41 per cent.
- Studio department, exactly same.
- Increase in nonresident college attendance 640 per cent.
- Increase in resident college attendance 145 per cent.

Doctor Floyd M. McDowell was taken rather seriously ill with nervous indigestion a few days after Graceland College opened, and suffered considerably from the attack. It was evidently brought on by continuous nerve strain and a lack of respite from the work of several reunions and the usual rush of college registration. Last year he had a similar attack. He now seems to be recovering with normal speed and will soon be back at his duties.

An Offer of Special Merit

A Real Saving in Subscription Costs

By a fortunate arrangement with the publishers, we are able to offer our readers a specially desirable combination of our church periodicals with the Youth's Companion, at a considerable saving in price.

The Youth's Companion is one of the best-known and universally-liked family papers, each weekly issue containing something of interest and profit to the entire family.

We will accept new or renewal subscriptions for any of the papers listed, including the Companion, but be sure to state which it is, and if changing address, to give us the old one as well as the new.

If you are already a subscriber to any of these, your subscription will be dated a year ahead of your expiration date.

|                                       |        |
|---------------------------------------|--------|
| Regular price of Saints' Herald ..... | $1.75 |
| Youth's Companion .....               | 2.50   |

|                          |        |
|--------------------------|--------|
| Total .....              | $4.25 |
| Our price for both ..... | $3.75 |

|                                      |        |
|--------------------------------------|--------|
| Regular price of Autumn Leaves ..... | $1.25 |
| Youth's Companion .....              | 2.50   |

|                          |      |
|--------------------------|------|
| Total .....              | 3.75 |
| Our price for both ..... | 3.25 |

|                                      |        |
|--------------------------------------|--------|
| Regular price of Zion's Ensign ..... | $1.25 |
| Youth's Companion .....              | 2.50   |

|                          |      |
|--------------------------|------|
| Total .....              | 3.75 |
| Our price for both ..... | 3.25 |

Send us your orders now before the busiest season overwhelms us with work.

Herald Publishing House
Lamoni, Iowa

This is the season of the year to provide for your reading matter.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8:31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2:36.

Volume 66

Lamoni, Iowa, September 24, 1919

Number 39

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

WHAT SHALL THE QUORUMS DO?

During the past ten years there has been a general reorganization of the quorums of the church. Prior to that time, there had been several general organizations of the standing ministry, but in the general readjustment, it was sought more closely to affiliate the various members of the priesthood of like grade so that greater efficiency might ensue.

Since the change has been effected, a question of perennial interest with each of the quorum organizations has been, What shall we study? True, the world is full of interesting subjects, but just what shall characterize our meetings to make them different and distinctively profitable to the individual members?

Our observation has been that to this day the average quorum of deacons, teachers, priests and elders is finding it difficult to maintain a course of study and plan of operation which is conceded to be essentially perfect. The average quorum is made up of men of various occupations and tendencies; it contains old men, middle-aged men, and young men. It has men of studious habits, and those who learn mostly by absorption and experience. Sometimes there are college-bred members closely associated with others who have had very limited schooling. The perplexing problem is not so much to avoid conflict of opinion from such varying types of individuals, as to carry out a program that will interest and instruct the majority of the members.

It does not take many sessions to exhaust the general propositions outlined as the duty of the various officers, found in the church books. It is possible to incorporate the specific duties of the various grades or branches of the priesthood into a very small compass. When these are covered, what next?

It is not the province of this article to determine this, but rather to suggest some possibilities afforded. We realize that there are certain men who are not satisfied with a discussion of the scriptural aspects of our problems, but want to go farther afield for material. Then there are those who cannot feel at home except in the discussion of the three standard books of the church. If there is a profitable happy medium between these types, it seems to us it should be sought and utilized.

When a quorum desires to study doctrinal subjects, there are some excellent textbooks by our own writers, such as The Instructor, The Interpreter, The Compendium, etc., but in the personal application of many of these subjects we begin to grope in the dark, lacking adequate texts and experienced teachers to show us the way. It may be we will finally crystallize the need and have it supplied. It is a field in which one could find some most excellent material and supply an already strong demand for the product of consecrated literary effort along that line.

As a case in point, let us suggest the problems recently before the Lamoni Quorum of Priests. They are a local quorum, mostly young men, with a young president. They have gone over the customary grounds and decided they wanted to follow a definite outline in what might be termed extension work. It was suggested they take up the Knox book on salesmanship, entitled, Business Efficiency. The idea was to utilize the principles only, as it was urged that every principle of true salesmanship was synonymous with the principles and methods of efficient work as a priest. They discussed the matter and finally decided to pursue that course. Now, with this plan, as in any other, the success of it is largely determined by what the president or leader makes of it. It is possible, indeed, for a bright, alert and tactful person to apply the principles of a good cookbook and really make it instructive and profitable—but most of us would shrink from the task.

But some of the quorum we mentioned felt a sort of a submerged sense of dissatisfaction with the situation. They urged that no matter how good a man the author of the text was, and no matter how excellent his book, he did not know the spirit and genius of our work, and consequently to study his work in detail would tend to emphasize the commercial, to the detriment of the spiritual, no matter how good the intentions of the quorum.

Finally one of the members evolved a method of adapting the principles and the application of them in a human-interest manner, without the necessity of devoting attention to the details of business practice. In presenting the outline herewith we are doing so as a suggestion to others who are trying to meet the same difficulty, i. e., applying the best there is in any plan, whether it be a book, article, lecture, or elaborated idea in any form, without diverting the attention of those less practiced in discriminatory study from the actual goal.

For instance, a quorum of elders, under the new tendency of group pastoral work, might become especially interested in pastoral lines of duty. Lacking an adequate text of our own, some one might present an excellent book—there are such—on the subject by some outside writers, but which included erroneous deductions. Not every mind is capable of going straight through such a work and selecting the points of value and special merit and application to our peculiar work. The logical method, then is for some person or persons to go through the work carefully, select the dominant features, outline them, and elaborate and elucidate according to the special needs of the quorum. It saves time and engenders efficiency, without doing violence to the text. The more schooling one has the easier this will be, but any keen mind, with something of an analytical bent, can accomplish much in this line. The practice is good for anyone.

Having such a book in our own library, we have picked it up during the writing of this article and hurriedly formulated the following outline on general pastoral work as applying to our church, and believe it would be more profitable for our pastors to study it with the book suggested and any others available as supplemental aids than to devote many meetings to the book itself.

SOME ASPECTS OF PASTORAL WORK

Pastoral Work Includes—

1. Preparation—
  - a. By prayer.
  - b. By study.
  - c. By development of personal enthusiasm.
2. Acceptance of Responsibility—
  - a. Outlined in church doctrines.
  - b. Toward community and mankind.
  - c. In full development of personal character.
3. Leading of a Flock—
  - a. By example.
  - b. By personal and individual solicitation.
  - c. By public and private precept.
4. Increasing Audiences and Membership—
  - a. By sermons that inform and move.
  - b. By inducing a decision from the hesitant.
  - c. By development of best methods of publicity.
  - d. By intelligent cooperation with auxiliary organizations.

Then we want you to study the following outline, both for its value as an example of outline application, and for its internal worth. The suggestion is to study Knox or any other author whose work helps to vivify the various aspects of the subject.

OUTLINE FOR STUDY FOR EFFICIENT WORK AS A PRIEST

- A. Knowledge of the priest's business:
  1. Knowledge of priest's duties.
  2. Local questions.
    - (a) Civic betterment.
    - (b) Problem of young people.
    - (c) Church attendance.
    - (d) Prayer meetings.
  3. General knowledge:
    - (a) Knowledge of laws pertaining to redemption of Zion.
    - (b) World conditions.
    - (c) Conditions in the church.

Be Optimistic.
- B. Knowledge of the Home Conditions:
  1. Temporal conditions.
  2. Business affiliation. (Have a speaking knowledge of his job.)
  3. Conditions of their association with church, locally.

Note: If new members of branch, see about their membership letter.
  4. Their moral condition.
  5. Their spiritual condition.
- C. Development of Personality.

What qualities are needed?

  1. Devotion and earnestness.
  2. Love.
  3. Confidence—in church—in God—in local affairs.
  4. Physical development.
- D. What is the Object of Visit?
  1. To the good, active member.
  2. To the good, inactive member.
  3. To the "poor" ignorant member.
  4. To the willfully bad member.
- E. Method of Approach.
  1. Previous advertising.
  2. Previous social visit. (Take your wife along.)
  3. Meeting on the street.
  4. Approach for a desired end (see D.)
- F. How to Follow Up.

It is possible to outline and arrange the teaching points of most any phase of our work which needs special attention. Ofttimes there ensues a confused result from trying to arrive at clear-cut conclusions after looking over we will say a long list of scriptural references alone. We all realize that we lack the original setting, the local color, and consequently may wrongly apply. Hence the need of a constructive outline upon which to base our study. The outline is not likely to be perfect, but it gives us the added value of being visual, hence allows a more comprehensive study and encourages permanency of retention.

There is one aspect which we wish to urge for the consideration of every quorum, and that is timeliness. What happened thousands of years ago is of interest—but does it apply to us? has it a bearing on our present needs? If in answer to our eternal why concerning our program we may say that it concerns us vitally now or will in the immediate future, we should go straight ahead. If we cannot but feel doubtful and restrained, something may be the matter.

In all our quorum work, we should be careful yet resourceful; we should be studious but wise; we should aim at a goal, yet clearly discern its nature. And what applies to our quorum work applies as well to all our organized activities. It is a day of progress. If we are not progressing, it is time to find out where the trouble lies.

E. D. MOORE.

---

FUTURE STUDENTS OF OUR COLLEGE

---

In a recent editorial an approximate estimate was made of the number of students that could be expected in a junior college under ordinary circumstances, with such a church membership as we have at present.

This is a question that has received some considerable discussion of late. Taking the average for the whole country, we would expect about 170 to 180, attending college in any one year. But this includes all the collegiate work, and probably a limit of 110 to 120 taking junior college work.

But on the other hand, it is probable that there are about 7,000 young men and young women in the church of a suitable age to attend college. That is, figuring on a four-year course, and each student remaining to the end.

But this is in many cases financially an impossibility and will continue to be so unless the church, as such undertakes to give them an education.

Further than this, the rule is that many drop out from year to year, and only a relatively small percentage finish the college course. Part of the reason for this may be, and doubtless is, economic. Another part is because all are not capable of receiving a college education with the largest benefit to themselves and society. Nor is this remark by any means reflective. There are many elements to the problem which tend to reduce the number who can be counted upon.

While one in forty is the average of graduates from high school, still that is altogether too low. We should have and expect a larger percentage than that; (it is close to seven and eight per cent in Independence and Lamoni,) but we must still remember that the percentage will be low under almost any possible conditions at present, or in the immediate future.

We think we are quite justified in desiring and securing the education of many young people, even though it be at the expense of the church, and then expecting from them service for the church. But before there can be any marked increase, we have to consider not only the occasional urging of young people to take advantage of their educational opportunities, but we have also to consider how best they may receive such opportunities, and fit themselves for life service. But above all, we must consider the need of utilizing the services of those who have been specially trained. This is far more important just now than too much of preliminary urging.

Our young people doubtless understand clearly that the figures that are given of greater efficiency, of a greater earning power, do not mean that they will receive such large salaries in the service of the church. On the whole they are quite ready to dedicate themselves and their lives to the service of the church, at a very much diminished remuneration.

But they have the right to expect ample protection, and above all else, an opportunity to serve. Young people should be shown in a practical way, that it does mean increased opportunity, as well as increased ability for service.

The denial of a reasonable remuneration limits the extent to which preparation can be made. We can normally expect but few to make such preparation where there is so little opportunity to meet the expense, either before, during, or after making the special preparation.

We can expect relatively few to make the sacrifice, when there is so little opportunity given for service, and so much simply of restriction and limitation. We hope for and should have more than the average number attending college, and should as a body prepare for it in a reasonable way.

Still another matter to be considered is, that many will, as a matter of course, attend colleges near their own homes, especially where an institution of learning of high character is to be found in the immediate vicinity.

The percentage of college graduates and college students, in the United States is high, compared to the world at large. Yet we believe that our average should be yet higher, and that there is a larger number that could with profit receive special training. We hope to see the day, when in an organized way provision may be made for such work, so that those who can worthily and with benefit to themselves and the church receive better educational preparation, shall not be prevented. S. A. B.

---

COLLEGE DAY, OCTOBER 5

---

General Conference has provided that one day in each year be set apart, to be known as College Day, upon which offerings, in the manner of collections shall be taken up in all districts and branches throughout the church, to aid the College work, the same to be forwarded to the undersigned. The first Sunday in October is the day which has thus been set apart.

Graceland College is growing and is accomplishing a good and necessary work for the church. We solicit the assistance and support of the membership throughout the church to the end that the college may continue to grow and broaden its mission.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

---

CORNISH TO EVANS

---

Elder J. J. Cornish now of Saskatchewan, has spent much of his missionary life in Canada and is well acquainted throughout the Dominion from Ontario to British Columbia.

He has baptized many there, including R. C. Evans. As a result he has received many letters of inquiry both from Canada and from the members in the various States.

He decided therefore to publish a copy of two of his letters written recently to R. C. Evans as a reply to these various inquiries.

This leaflet is now printed, and at his request, a copy has been sent to each HERALD reader and a few others. Realizing that extra copies may be desired the Herald Publishing House has printed a limited number of extra copies, which can be secured at 3 cents each or 10 for 25 cents.

This leaflet is a powerful, terse review of the situation and yet kindly as a father. It should be read by everyone interested. Orders should be sent in early as the supply is limited. S. A. B.

---

THE CHURCH IN ENGLAND

---

We learn through a letter from Bishop Roderick May that there has been considerable published in the press of England in recent months concerning "Mormonism," that is against the church in Utah. Some papers in this country have quoted extracts from some of the London papers, ignoring, however, this important distinction.

One result of the agitation was that Bishop May was called before the United States authorities, but was able to satisfy them perfectly as to his standing and position.

Not content with that, Bishop May communicated with the First Presidency, and as a result a memorial was prepared and submitted to the Department of State in Washington, and by the Department of State, forwarded to the United States ambassador in London; and by him the memorial was presented to the British Foreign Secretary. As a result, Bishop May has received the assurance of the British Secretary, that he is at liberty to promulgate his religion with equal rights and protection afforded to all other churches in the United Kingdom.

Bishop May also has prepared a letter stating the above facts, and inclosing a pamphlet which is a copy of the memorial presented to the British Foreign Secretary, omitting, however, for diplomatic reasons, the title and name. He wrote thirty-nine London editors in one day. He also sent a letter and pamphlet to the leading newspapers throughout Great Britain.

We think that this is of interest to our readers as we should know that the distinction has been clearly made and recognized by our Government between the two organizations, and that the British government has been fully satisfied that Mormonism so-called does not include the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and that this church constitutes no parallel. It is only right that this church should be recognized as fully Christian and evangelical, recognizing as it does the one name only by which man may be saved, that is, Jesus Christ, and holding firm to the Christian ethics in all particulars. S. A. B.

---

THE WORD OF WISDOM

---

At regular periods a question seems to arise in regard to the interpretation of some part of the Word of Wisdom. But it states that it is adapted to the capacity "of the weak, and the weakest of the Saints, who are or can be called Saints." Evidently then the interpretation is to be a simple, plain interpretation, and not one that is far fetched.

Thus we find it has been repeatedly pointed out that "hot drinks" means just what it says—"hot drinks." Tea and coffee of course would be included; other hot drinks are also included.

In the case of meat, we must remember that at that time meat was used very freely, much more so than to-day. The statement is made that it should be used sparingly, and it was pleasing if it were used only in winter, cold, or famine. Then the later statement is made in regard to wild beasts, "these hath God made for the use of man only in times of famine and excess of hunger."

Modern science would agree with both of these constructions. But we must remember, all are to be used with prudence and thanksgiving.

S. A. B.

---

AMERICANS AT OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE

---

We note in The Outlook of June 25, that eight thousand from the armies in France applied to the British universities, but of this number only two thousand came and were admitted; twelve hundred men, eight hundred officers. Fifty per cent of these students have graduated; seventeen per cent have already received post graduate degrees; while thirty-three per cent have not yet taken their first degree.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

AMBASSADORS PLENIPOTENTIARY

(Sermon by J. F. Garver, February 16, 1919, at Lamoni, Iowa. Reported by Winsome Smith McDonald.)

Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation; to wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God.

We have read from the fifth chapter of Paul's second letter to the Corinthian saints, seventeenth to twentieth verses inclusive. The particular words of his scripture we wish to consider this morning are these: "We are ambassadors for Christ."

THE GREAT AMBASSADOR

In this text Paul refers to the ministry of Christ, the greatest of ambassadors, laboring upon earth to the end that mankind might be reconciled to God.

The apostle would include also in this consideration all the things Christ did to the end that man might be reconciled to God.

He would remind us that God in this work of reconciliation passed by the folly of men "not imputing their trespasses unto them."

Adam had fallen away in the garden; and as a consequence of his evil, sin had fallen upon all men. Before man could be brought again into the presence of God some power outside himself must be exercised for his deliverance. So Christ came and lived his life of example upon the earth; he entered actively into his ministry; he gave his blood upon the cross in this the effort of God to reconcile man to himself: not imputing unto man his transgressions, as says the Apostle Paul—not reckoning his evil unto him.

And so God gave the best he had for man's redemption.

The favor of God reaches down even to us to-day in the person of Jesus Christ his Son, through whose sacrifice and ministry we may be reconciled to the Father. Through Christ we are again restored to the Father, each child born into this world being through the work of Christ born guiltless of the first sin, and in the state of innocence of his first parents before the fall, altogether worthy to be received in the kingdom of heaven, for indeed of such is that kingdom of God. And through Christ is there offered means of forgiveness in case of individual sin.

Now that there might be yet upon the earth authority to represent heaven, Christ before his departing commissioned men to represent him among the people and in his stead, it being the part of these men to continue the work of reconciliation. As God did not impute unto the people their transgressions, so it devolved upon these men to represent God in the stead of Christ, without regard to the infirmities of the saints to exercise themselves to the end that each man who might be reclaimed through their ministry might preform that perfect work which would make him worthy of the kingdom of heaven.

AMBASSADORS PLENIPOTENTIARY

We have seen how Christ gave himself in his work, not imputing unto men their infirmities; and how the ministry of his early church in like manner labored for mankind. So must the ministry of this church in this dispensation—if they would qualify—so must they carry with them daily the infirmities of this people; and regarding not their weakness and sin, so must they labor to the end of their reconciliation to God.

Referring to the text we note the statement, "Now then we are ambassadors for Christ." The Apostle Paul—or the translators, or both, very happily for our purposes this morning makes use of the word ambassadors. This term is used among the nations in referring to the highest order of international representatives. So are the ministry, representing God upon the earth, "ambassadors for Christ."

The highest appointment God makes to the end that the people of the earth may be reconciled unto himself is this appointment to serve in the ministry. If I be permitted to compare the several appointments of this ministry, if one appointment be more distinguished than another, the appointment to serve in the Melchisedec priesthood is the highest in rank of all divine ministerial appointment. In this sense then, as ambassadors with full power to represent God, are these men sent in among the people.

Now we have for the purpose of this occasion given to this discourse the subject "Ambassadors plenipotentary." Borrowing the term from world usage we make it to serve in an analysis of the work of the ministry of the church. One appointed to represent his country abroad as an ambassador plenipotentary enjoys the greatest distinction that can be placed upon him in a ministerial capacity. He is vested with full power to represent the state, even to the entering into and signing of state treaties. I say, borrowing the term for the sake of example this morning, we apply it to the Melchisedec priesthood of the church. And as earth's ambassadors plenipotentiary represent states appointing them, so do we define these men of the Melchisedec priesthood sent under God's holy and divine appointment and authorized to represent him in the carrying out of the terms of peace imposed by the heavenly country, and for all time open to each man willing to subject himself to the same. Signing or sealing these terms upon earth, these men hand up to God the agreement, who adds the seal of his divine approval and Spirit.

IN THE STEAD OF CHRIST

Now we only lead up to this point that we may drive home if we can the lesson to the minds of the priesthood in our hearing; and to commit them before you to this divine appointment.

Christ could not remain here always. Could he have stayed it would not have been possible for him to minister to all men personally. In the stead of Christ, then, has God instituted in the church the processes by which before the people men shall be set apart as his ambassadors.

Would that we were able to so impress this divine call that it might be so indelibly stamped on the minds of these men, that never again would a single one of them for a single moment forget his duty under the same.

In the stead of Christ! Brethren, are we conscious of all that means?

How many of you men, when you are called into the sick chamber where life seems to be ebbing away, and where at the request of the family, rising from bended knees you lay your hands upon the fevered brow—how many of you are conscious you stand there in the stead of Christ?

Are you conscious every time you are so called you occupy in the stead of Christ?

When you go into the water and raise your hand to heaven in the act of baptism, saying, "Having been commissioned of Jesus Christ," are you conscious you stand there in the stead of Christ?

When you go into the homes of the Saints to pray with them and to encourage them in the good work, are you conscious you occupy in that sacred capacity in the stead of Christ?

As you move in and out among this people, performing the daily tasks that devolve upon you as the head of a house, as the director of some business institution, or as one employed in such institution, do you carry with you every day and every hour the consciousness that moving among your fellow men it behoves you to stand as in the stead of Christ? to move and act as Christ would do under the same circumstances?

Oh, that it might be so of each of us!

BE YE CLEAN

We turn to the scriptures for some particulars with reference to this appointment; and in the 24th Psalm we read: "Who shall ascend unto the hill of the Lord?" (We may not determine just what was in the mind of the man of God. It may be, however, that to emphasize the need of worthiness he was recalling the sanctity of Sinai.) Who shall ascend? whom shall we send up to receive for this people? "Who shall stand in this holy place?"

There comes ringing down the corridors of time to us—and would that each one of the men vested with the authority of the ministry—would that each might comprehend the import of this the answer of God, direct, commanding and full potency: "He that hath clean hands"!

He who is in all of his work, in the things seen of his fellow men, he to all outward appearance clean and wholesome, he who in person and act is above reproach, he it is who may ascend unto God in behalf of the people.

But hold! Again God speaks: "And a pure heart"!

Pray him, may we mark this great essential, for a clean and wholesome exterior cannot long endure out of an unclean heart. The seat of every man's success lies in the processes and purposes of his own heart.

The men then who shall ascend to that holy place from which they may break the bread of life unto this people, these are men who are first clean within, clean in thought and in purpose, for only such can long be clean without, and only such can achieve unto God's rugged hill; only such may stand in the place of his holiness.

STUDY

The Apostle Paul, the author of our text, helps us further in our analysis when writing to the young minister Timothy, he says "Study."

Now a man may be ever so clean, but if that man has taken to himself no information he cannot be an able minister, because he has no fund of information from which he may feed the people who look to him for succor. So the apostle says: "Study to show thyself approved, a workman who needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

Paul must have included in this instruction not only that Timothy must study the word of God: He must have intended also that he study other good books; even as we are told in the Book of Covenants that we should study all good books.

Timothy must also set himself to determine in his own mind the best way or means of setting into operation on behalf of the people the information he would take to himself. In other words, Timothy must eventually, if he would be successful, become a man not only informed, but also able to convey this information to the people. He must minister not only the letter, but also the spirit of the law; for in the processes of their daily vocations, in the various avenues of life, as a minister he must, if fully successful, be effectual for good among the people. Interpreting to the Saints the spirit of the law, impressing them with the lessons of life's school, helping them over places stony, warning them of danger, encouraging them to every righteous purpose and effort—this was the mission of Timothy. He must then be an able as well as a clean workman.

DILIGENCE

So in order to effect the work of reconciling on the part of the people to God, our ministry must be cleaned and informed. They must also be diligent.

Christ very early in his life set the example of diligence when in answer to the troubled heart of his mother as she returned to Jerusalem to seek him, a lad only twelve years of age, he said, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

These three things then of necessity must enter into the qualification of every man: He must be clean. He must be informed and he must be diligent. Without either one of these he will be a failure as a minister. Qualifying in all three points, it shall be his privilege to receive the things of heaven necessary to the end of his success, for so do we read in this 24th Psalm: "He shall receive the blessing from the Lord, and righteousness from the God of his salvation."

He shall receive in addition to that which he has been able to take unto himself, in addition to that which he has developed within himself, the righteousness of God: the right reasoning; the right divine power of direction; all things necessary God will add unto him in the day of his qualification. Hence he may become indeed a power in the ministry of the church in the reconciling of mankind to God.

THE RECKONING

Now God will require of every man the work to which he has been assigned. God forces no man to work; but in the day of final reckoning he will require at the hand of every man the work for which on earth he was or might have been fitted. In other words, if a work has been faithfully performed that man will receive the plaudit "Well done." If it has not been done, God will require of him an answer to the question, Why did you not labor under your appointment? God in his divine purposes has put into the making of every man under his appointment the capacity to do the particular work to which he has appointed him, and it becomes his divine right to require that work at the hands of that man either in time or in eternity.

We hear sometimes the complaint from ordained men, "You have given me an assignment I cannot perform, it is not in my line." We shall not be able to make that answer before the Lord. In Doctrine and Covenants 17:12; we are told that men are called according to the gifts of God unto them. And also in the 16th section, verse 5:

Behold, you are they who are ordained of me to ordain priests and teachers to declare my gospel, according to the power of the Holy Ghost which is in you, and according to the callings and gifts of God unto men.

God only asks a man to perform the work which by nature he is able to qualify to do. Hence in the eternal world that man, be he whomsoever he may be, who has not responded to the responsibilities laid upon him—a reckoning will be required of him: He will be required to answer why he has not done that which was asked of him under divine appointment.

OUR IDEAL

We come to this point to speak of our work in Lamoni Stake. We have certain ideals for our brethren here. We have been very frank with them, as they might testify to you, and in this regard have not hesitated to declare unto them our whole counsel. It occurs to us the time has come when we may go just a little further, and before you people commit these men more fully to their responsibility as servants of God.

Our ideal is this: That every man shall qualify. We feel to exact this not because we would be hard, but because from the deepest recesses of our hearts we are this day conscious that no other than a qualified ministry can ever lead this people to victory.

We have insisted with these men that every man shall be clean in all that term implies. The time has come when we may go further than this, as I may cite later.

We have insisted that every man shall acquaint himself with his appointment in the ministry; with the things he needs to know as such minister; with the people and their peculiarities among whom he is assigned to labor; and with the best ways and means and methods to minister to these people under his appointment.

The time has come when we feel to require more than this. We have insisted that these men make themselves clean; that they make themselves informed. We are come now to require that they be diligent, that each man be earnestly engaged in the task to him assigned.

To be sure, we must be considerate. There are men in this audience who if they had courage to bear witness could say we have been considerate.

Indeed, my conscience sometimes has all but said to me that this consideration has been allowed to go beyond all reasonable bounds; and as a consequence of this leniency there are men to this day serving among you who are unworthy to do so.

Let it be remembered, however, that the end of our appointment shall not have been reached until we have first exhausted every resource, and our patience to the breaking point, if need be, to the end that perchance we may reclaim such men as may not now be worthy to represent God among us under divine appointment. So far as your presiding officer is concerned, he would rather come under the charge of being too easy than under the charge of being too hard with these men.

Of course you cannot always persuade the man you are dealing with, that you are right. And why not? Because he stands in the dark, that is why. He applies his clouded reasoning. Holding it to be reasoning after the love of Christ, he pleads the mercy and ignores the justice of the law. Thus concluding that his superior officer is either in error or wicked and black at heart, or both, and urging that he himself is without offense and above the law, he nurses his grievances and continues in his disqualification.

THE WEEDING OUT PROCESS

We feel that we have come to the time to be frank with you. We propose then that we enter upon this regard; for we have already disciplined a number of our ministry, and in several instances we have felt required to recall commissions imposed by the church, and have done so. I believe as your presiding officer you have reached the time in your development when you will permit us to do this. I believe a great many of you are insisting that we do this. The work I anticipate as I have just indicated is the weeding out of the unworthy, the unqualified men.

I have stood in this pulpit from time to time and have made statements which to you no doubt have seemed very, very inconsiderate. Putting in jeopardy my reputation among you as a man who ought to be charged with wisdom, I have from this pulpit made what at times must have appeared to you to be wild thrusts. And why have I done this? For at least two purposes:

In the first place, I wanted the men under infirmity to know what the consequences of their weakness might be. And I bear witness to you to-day, in the fear of God, that I have looked down from this pulpit into the faces of men who at critical junctures in my discourses have turned as pale as death, and I have known I have hit the mark. I have done this to warn these men. I have labored to the end that when I have found it necessary to approach one and ask, "Are you still using tobacco?" he might be able to say:

"No, I have seen the light, and have discontinued the use of the weed."

Or when I were required to ask another about some other disqualification he might be able to say, "No, I have withdrawn from that thing."

The other purpose was this: Of necessity before we shall have been able to apply our ideals among you with reference to these men, we must first have developed a public sentiment which would allow that thing to be done. Are you people ready? Are you people of Lamoni ready to-day for the weeding out of the ministry? For the cleansing of these ambassadors of Christ? Are you ready that those who will not first be clean, second be informed, and third be diligent—are you after these years of waiting for this ministry of cleanliness, of ability, and of diligence—are you ready to concur in the weeding-out process?

I am prepared to say to you without the least degree of hesitation, without a single reservation, that as your presiding officer I am ready to continue as never before the process of weeding. I say it not from a stony heart, but because as I have before remarked, I have become conscious—and that too out of the silent watches of many lonely hours, out of the terrors of many sleepless nights—I say I have become conscious of this: That never, worlds without end, can this people be led into Zion if there goes before them a stumbling ministry. Then it devolves upon me as your presiding officer to move on without fear, without favor, without hesitation, in the work in this regard which I believe before God devolves upon me to perform. I believe you are ready. I believe you as well as God require this work at my hands.

Now, there is not a single man under the sound of my voice, there is not a single man whose name is upon the records of Lamoni Branch to-day, who can this morning say he has not been warned. Time after time, sometimes when worn in body and hardly able to bring myself to this building, I have come before these men in their priesthood meetings, and I have plead with them to come up higher. All but on my bended knees I have besought them to respond to their various appointments. I can do no more. I will not say that I will not try to do more; but I am constrained to say I do not think there is a single man among all these ordained ones who can conscientiously require me to do more.

You people cannot appreciate what this task has meant to me. You cannot know what it means to me now. I am not here to boast of good works; God Almighty knows I feel my infirmity. But I can say this to you and say it truthfully, if this piece of work were again set before me, if I were required to go through again what I have gone through in behalf of these men, I would rather ten thousand times over suffer any torture of the flesh than again suffer the anguish of the spirit this effort has cost me. I say, I would rather ten times over die the death of the flesh in any form than subject myself to the spiritual anguish incident to my ministry in this regard.

SHALL WE NOT PREVAIL?

Let us read again the text, "Now then we are ambassadors for Christ." Oh, my beloved brethren, are you conscious of this divine appointment? Are you conscious of what you ought to be as ambassadors for Christ? As the men who stand here in his stead among this people? Are you conscious of the things for which you should be willing to spend yourselves? Are you conscious of the mark of the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus which is set before you as you stand here in his stead?

I am glad to be able to witness to you people this morning that many of these men are struggling to know and to do these things. These are the men who are writing to me letters which put fire in my very bones. These are the men who are reaching you in the house to house visiting. These are the men who are making the effort to glorify God under this holy and divine appointment. These are the men who are measuring up to their present assignments. These are the men who are qualifying for a greater work.

Shall we not be full of courage? What stands between us and the achievement of our hopes? Nothing save our own infirmity.

I think I made the statement to the conference yesterday that the thing that concerns me most in the work of Lamoni Stake is this: Indifference on the part of some individuals, including some of the ministry, some families, and some branches. I am not concerned about the work we shall be required to do. I am not greatly exercised concerning what may come against us if we are qualified; for as our Savior has said, and as is recorded in the sixteenth chapter of Matthew, No power shall be able to stay us, not even hell itself, if we are qualified and diligent.

Elaborating the figure, and that for all time the church and the ministry might be impressed with his promises in this regard, Christ referring to the church says, not even the gates of hell shall prevail against his faithful ones.

The Savior speaks here of hell as if it were a walled city. Now in every walled city of necessity there must be gates by which the people may enter. The gates of the walled city were the places of special protection and fortification. The greater strength, the braver soldiers, the greater number of men are brought together at the various gates of the city, the places of weakness, the places where are the openings in the wall, and where must be placed the strongest protection that the enemy approaching these weaker points shall not force the gates. Using this striking figure, Christ would assure us that standing upon our dignity and qualifying, not even the strongholds of hell, not even the very gates thereof shall prevail against his holy church. And even these very gates shall she in time force, wresting from darkness and despair all who may yet be found worthy of deliverance.

I say again, it is not that which may arise on the outside, but that which may come from within which we have greatest reason to fear. Above all let us put away the spirit of indifference. Let each man and each woman in his place and in her place go to with might and main. Let us qualify. Let us perform faithfully the works set before us unto the end of Zion's redemption, unto the end of man's reconciliation to God and his holy order.

Then will it be that the church rising on the wings of her matchless dignity shall carry herself forward in the processes of her development, even until finally she shall lift herself to the bosom of her Lord and Master, when he shall appear, to join him in the clouds of glory.

As an ambassador for Christ, and in his stead, I beseech of you this morning to make every man himself ready, so that as a qualified and a united ministry and people we shall have answered the ends of our necessary effort in this community, that we may have our part in the working out of Zion's ideals, and that finally being of the bride we may have our place in the redeemed earth.

---

BE YE PERFECT

---

I am impressed with the thought that we fail to sense the wonderful importance of the message which the Son of God brought to the children of men. Mankind in general has been too much inclined to make light of the words which Jesus uttered while here, selecting what best pleases them as being essential, and what does not please them as being nonessential, notwithstanding the statement of Jesus, as recorded in Matthew 24: 35, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Also, John 12: 48, "He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words hath one that judgeth him, the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him at the last day." Again, 1 Peter 1: 25, "But the word of the Lord endureth forever, and this is the word, which by the gospel is preached unto you."

To the writer, these expressions of the Scriptures are very significant, in that they prove the immutability of the word of God; or in other words, the commands of Jesus. He said, "If ye love me keep my commandments." (John 14:15.) The Scriptures teach that Jesus came here with a specific formula or prescription, which if complied with in its every detail, will accomplish the salvation of the human family. In proof of this read the words of Jesus, in his beautiful prayer for his disciples, as recorded in John 17:8: "For I have given them the words which thou gavest me; and they have received them, and have known surely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou didst send me."

From this it seems there were certain words given to Jesus, to deliver to the people. He was a messenger with a message; hence the statement: "The word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me." (John 14:24.) This proves that Jesus was a messenger with a message from the Father, and his plea to the people is to believe in him. This, of course, included the message he brought. Through this comes the knowledge that Jesus came out from the Father, and as a consequence, we know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or Christ spoke of himself.

In connection with this thought is God's unchangeability. "For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed." (Malachi 3:6.) Also: "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." (James 1:17.) This combination of conditions, proves to the writer that in order to be successful in the Christian life, we must comply with every jot and tittle of the teachings of Jesus our Lord. I am aware that some of his teachings, to the natural man, seem to be impossible, especially those precepts given in his Sermon on the Mount.

It seems to us it requires more than simple goodness to attain to the standard which Jesus set up. By this I mean it requires more than honesty, truthfulness, or refraining from doing wrong. This, of course, is necessary, but the gospel of Jesus the Christ, requires deeds that are noble. It is more than being simply good, to love our enemies, to bless them which curse us, to do good to them that hate us, and pray for them that despitefully use us and persecute us. I have heard men, and sometimes even Saints, make the sarcastic remark, "Yes I would turn the other cheek; I would hit him back again."

Now I want to impress this thought. If you want to be a successful follower of Jesus, you positively must obey these very precepts; and if you don't, you will fail to qualify as disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ. I can imagine some one saying, "But this is impossible. I can't love a person when I hate him. I haven't power to control my feelings." Is there a solution to this problem? This reminds me of the fact that the gospel of our Lord is an education. (I think that some of us do not sufficiently value the thought expressed by Paul in Romans 1:16: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth." There is that virtue which comes to us through our obedience to the same, that will enable us to live to every requirement therein contained.)

When we went to school we had knotty and difficult problems to solve, and sometimes we despaired of ever finding a solution to them; but those who have passed through the experience know that there was a solution to every one of them. Paul tells us that the "law [we understand this to be the law of Moses] was our schoolmaster, to bring us to Christ." (Galatians 3:24.) When we are brought to Christ, then what? Jesus said, "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me." (Matthew 11:29.) Now we have Jesus for our schoolmaster, and I want to say, there is no problem in all his teachings but the solution to each and every one is gloriously possible; in fact they are easy if we only know how.

For example, we will suppose that a man has an enemy. He would naturally feel bitter against him. Jesus says, "Come unto me." So he comes and with an honest heart, lays the whole matter before him, and prays that God will have mercy upon him, (that is, his enemy), and change his heart, and make a better man of him. He has now done his part, and God will do the rest. His hatred will be changed to tender pity and love. This, to this man, will be a most glorious discovery, and when once this change takes place, to his infinite delight and future satisfaction, he will find that the change that has taken place in his heart is permanent. He will never have the disposition to hate any more. To accomplish this blessed result entails the sacrificing of all our desires for revenge, and subordinating our will to the will and precepts of God. If we are willing to do our part, God is more than willing to do his, and will come more than half way to help us.

Now I want to remind you that Jesus said: "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (John 8:31, 32.) Here is the great secret of our success; we positively must obey. Every Latter Day Saint should study the fifth, sixth, and seventh chapters of Matthew, and never rest satisfied until their lives are in complete harmony with the precepts therein contained. This of course, includes the forty-eighth verse of the fifth chapter, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

How often we hear the expression: "There is none perfect; we all sin; we all do wrong." Why don't we quit doing wrong? In Isaiah, the Lord through the prophet, entreats his people to cease to do evil, and learn to do well. (Isaiah 1:16, 17.) That was the burden of John the Baptist's message: "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." (Matthew 3:2.) The primary purpose of the gospel is that we cease to disobey and learn to obey. With all God's love, and tenderness, and indulgence—and he is indulgent to those who love and obey him—he has said: "I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore, with loving-kindness, have I drawn thee." (Jeremiah 31:3.) Also, "Since thou wast precious in my sight, thou hast been honorable, and I have loved thee; therefore I will give men for thee, and people for thy life." (Isaiah 43:4.) Again, "Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? Yea, they may forget, yet I will not forget thee." (Isaiah 49:15.)

Notwithstanding all those assurances of God's love, he is very strict and requires that we shall yield him implicit obedience. It was just one act of disobedience, in the Garden of Eden, that brought the terrible curse on the world. Because of disobedience, man was shut out from God, and when we have learned to obey, we can then be received back into favor with him again, and by and by live with him in his glorious home. The whole trouble commenced in the Garden of Eden. At this time there was only one forbidden fruit. But now, there are thousands on every hand, and our great lesson is to let the forbidden fruit alone.

I admit, that because of our depraved nature, we cannot accomplish this in a day, or in a week. It may take years to graduate in the school of Jesus Christ. But in this, as in everything else, we must keep on practicing until we are perfect. The poem in our beautiful hymn says:

Yield not to temptation,
For yielding is sin;
Each victory will help us
Some other to win.

There comes another thought which we should heed, and that is, we fail to use the facilities which Jesus gave us, to the extent we should. We are told to "pray without ceasing" (Thessalonians 5:17); to "watch and pray lest we enter into temptation" (Matthew 26:41); also, "Watch ye therefore, and pray always" (Luke 21:36); again, "pray that ye enter not into temptation." (Luke 22:40.) The disciples heeded this admonition, and afterwards, when the Grecians murmured because their widows were neglected in the daily ministrations, the apostles suggested that certain men should be chosen to attend to this business, making this statement, "But we will give ourselves continually to prayer and the ministry of the word." (Acts 6:4.)

Jesus frequently went out into the mountains and spent whole nights in prayer. These passages speak in tones of thunder to the writer, emphasizing the great necessity of prayer. To my mind there are at least three kinds of prayer. One is the sweet communion we have with our heavenly Father as we go about our daily vocations; second, the prayers we offer in public and at our family altars—and here I am unalterably opposed to long prayers. Long prayers in public are wearisome; especially when we gather our children around the altar at home; the children become bored, and the family altar becomes distasteful to them. Our public prayers, whether in church or at home, should be short and to the point—just asking for what we immediately need.

There is a time when long prayers are in order, and this is the third kind of prayer. Jesus said, "But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and shut thy door; pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." (Matthew 6:6.) This is the time when you can pray as long as you please. An hour spent in this way is the most profitable way an hour can be spent. Here is where we get our spiritual strength renewed. Here is where we can get an interview with our heavenly Father. Here is where we get his blessing and benediction. "But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount upon wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint." (Isaiah 40:31.)

There is another faculty which Jesus gave us, which has been to me of the most inestimable value, and that is fasting.

Moreover, when ye fast, be not, as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance: for they disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to fast. Verily I say unto you, they have their reward. But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thine head, and wash thy face; that thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly—Matthew 6:16-18.

There have been times in my own experience when, notwithstanding all my prayers, I felt as though I had come to the end of my resources and could never preach another sermon. I have been discouraged and dispirited for no apparent cause. When I have set aside a day for fasting and prayer, the result has been wonderful. I have felt as though I had taken a new hold on life, and everything was before me. I sometimes liken the Saints to plants in a garden, and prayer to the beautiful sunshine; but notwithstanding the sunshine, there are times when the plants will droop and wilt. What is the matter? The plants need a shower of rain. So with fasting, it is like a beautiful, refreshing shower on a drooping plant.

May God help us to see the necessity of using these grand principles for our spiritual development; the life of a Saint is a progressive life, and our progress will not stop "till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." (Ephesians 4:13.) Again, as plants in a garden we will blossom, and bear fruit to the honor and glory of God.

But in order that we may so develop, we must separate ourselves from sin. Again the objection is raised, we cannot be freed from sin, because it is written there are none perfect. There was a man once who was perfect and upright. "And the Lord said unto Satan, hast thou considered my servant Job, that there is none like him in all the earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God and escheweth evil?" (Job 1:8.) Now this is true, because God said it, and he said it to the accuser of the brethren, and if there had been any fault in Job he would have told it at that time. So you must agree with me, that at that time, Job was a perfect man. Now if it is possible for Job to be perfect, on the same hypothesis, it would be just as possible for others to be perfect; and because there was none like him in all the earth, then more shame to the rest of the world. I think we are altogether too satisfied, in one excusing another with these words, "We all do wrong; we all sin; there is none perfect," etc. My prayer to God is that he will help me to live as perfect as Job lived, and I think it is only a reasonable request, and I am simple enough to believe that he is pleased with such petitions as these, and will answer them in the affirmative; especially when we supplement such petitions with the proper amount of effort on our part, to use the utmost of our power to purify ourselves by watching and prayer.

Again the question, What shall we watch? Watch every thought that enters our mind, and when an evil thought presents itself, pray to our heavenly Father to help us to expel the same. By practicing this, we will be most agreeably surprised to learn how soon we will have control over our thoughts. If our thoughts are pure, our life will be pure, "for as a man thinketh, so is he." And if our life is pure, our hearts will be pure. "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God." (Matthew 5:8.) Then if our hearts are pure (which is the mainspring of action), pray what is there to separate us from God? The great wall, or partition, (sin) has been removed, and like Enoch, we can walk with God.

Therefore, whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him to a wise man which built his house upon a rock: And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock. And everyone that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which build his house upon the sand; and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it.—Matthew 7:24-27.

THOMAS NEWTON.

---

THE NEW BIRTH

---

Ye must be born again.—John 3:7.

These are Christ's words to Nicodemus, and I want you to notice that it is a clear, definite statement. He does not say, ye should, ye ought to, or, it would be better if you were, but "ye must be born again."

You will find that most of Christ's statements are clear and definite. There is no need to be in doubt as to what he meant by them. We will examine a few more of them as we go along, but first I want to look at the statement from a scientific point of view. Science has made great strides in knowledge of late years, and it is coming more in harmony with the religion of Jesus Christ. The scientists are coming to see that after all Jesus Christ was a true scientist.

Science believed at one time in the theory of "spontaneous generation." That is, they believed it was possible for life to be generated, or begun, by the accidental or otherwise coming into contact or intermingling of two or more minerals or other substances that had no life in themselves. And they have been working on that theory for many years.

But now, Sir Oliver Lodge, in an address to the British Science Association, of which he was president at the time, made the statement that, "Science affirms creative power," and scientists have proved conclusively that the theory of "spontaneous generation" is wrong, and that life can only come from antecedent life, or previous life. This theory they call "biogenesis." I have not space to go into the matter fully, even if I had the ability, but I will try to explain in a few simple words the main points of the theory, leaving out as far as possible the hard, scientific words.

To go into the matter more fully I would suggest that you read carefully Natural Law in the Spiritual World, by Professor Henry Drummond. You will find in that book, that the scientists have discovered that the laws that govern the universe are continuous; that the "laws of nature" are "the laws of God." They have classified the substances or material of which the universe consists into two great subdivisions, organic and inorganic. The organic are those which have life; the inorganic those without life. Then they have classified the organic kingdom into two subdivisions, vegetable life and animal life. They tell us that the bodies of plants, animals, and human beings contain the same substances as the inorganic kingdom, thus coming into harmony with what God said to man in the beginning, "Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return."

They have found that as we go higher up the scale of life, from the plant which has to stay where it is put, to the insects and birds that have power to move about, the capacities enlarge until we reach man, who is the highest form of natural life, and through the same law runs through all, yet it expands as it gets higher in the scale.

As the mineral cannot know much about the vegetable life, so in like manner, the vegetable cannot know much about the animal, and so on; and as the mineral cannot have life until the plant or animal reaches down and lifts it up, so the natural man cannot have spiritual life until a power above him lifts him up to it.

What is the difference between the natural man and the spiritual man? Let us see the difference between the organic and the inorganic, between a crystal and a plant; they have much in common; both are made of the same atoms; both display the same properties of matter; both are subject to the same physical laws; both may be very beautiful; but besides possessing all that the crystal has, the plant possesses something more, a mysterious something called life. There is nothing at all like it in the crystal, not even the first beginning of it.

When from the vegetable life we rise to the animal life, here again we find something original and unique, at least as compared with the mineral. From the animal life we ascend to the spiritual, and here also there is something new, something still more unique. He who lives in the spiritual has a distinct kind of life added. The natural man belongs essentially to the present order of things; he is endowed simply with a high quality of animal life, that is not life at all. He that hath the Son hath life.—Natural Law in the Spiritual World, by Professor Henry Drummond, pp. 81, 82.

Jesus says, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly," and it is of that more abundant life I want to speak now. How can we obtain it? By being born from above, in the same manner as the mineral has to be born from above. All through the natural world, the lower can only come into the higher sphere, by the higher reaching down for it. So when Jesus made the statement, "Ye must be born again," he was stating a scientific fact.

We ask with Nicodemus, how can we be born again, and Jesus tells us, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee except a man is born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God."

We have seen from natural law that knowledge of things above can only come from things above, and Paul says, in harmony with this, that "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." (1 Corinthians 2:14.) So that to understand the things of the Spirit, we must be born again; we must receive the new birth from above; and in harmony with science, we must look for the method of birth from above.

Jesus says, "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and these are they which testify of me." (John 5:39.) Paul says, "All scripture is given by inspiration from God, and is profitable for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." (2 Timothy 3:16, 17.)

Peter, to the devout Jews out of every nation, on the Day of Pentecost, when they asked him what they should do, said:

Repent, and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. [The new birth.] For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.—Acts 2:38-39.

That text reaches down to the present day. Christ himself was baptized before he started his ministry. (See Matthew 3:13-17; Mark 9:1-11; Luke 3:21, 22.) God commanded John to baptize. (John 1:33.) Christ commanded it. (Matthew 28:19; Mark 16:15, 16; John 3:5.) John Baptized. (Matthew 3:5, 6; John 3:23.) Jesus baptized. (John 3:26; 4:1, 2; 3:22.) The apostles baptized. (Acts 2:41; 4:4.) Philip baptized. (Acts 8:12, 13, 36-38.) Paul was baptized. (Acts 9:18.) Cornelius and his friends. (Acts 10:48.) Paul baptized. (Acts 16:14, 15, 30-33; 18:8; 19:5-7.)

Notice that last quotation shows the necessity to be baptized by one having authority. These twelve young Ephesians had been baptized before, but by one not having authority at the time, so Paul baptized them again. Notice they were not only born of water, but also of the Spirit. See also Acts 8:17, how those whom Philip had baptized received the baptism of the Spirit.

As the instruction how to obtain the new birth comes from above, so must the authority to perform the ordinance. Paul says, "No man taketh this honor [the priesthood] unto himself, but he that is called of God as was Aaron." (Hebrews 5:4.) And Jesus said to the apostles, "Ye have not chosen me but I have chosen you and ordained you." (John 15:16.) And in his prayer to the Father he says, "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world." (John 17:18.) See how Paul was called and ordained. (Acts 13:1-5.)

God has restored the gospel in these the latter days with all its gifts and graces. He calls his servants in the same way as he did in former times.

Investigate the message his servants proclaim, not in your own wisdom, for the natural man cannot understand the things of God; but ask God for wisdom from on high.

James says, "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not and it shall be given him." (James 1:5.) God is no respecter of persons. He is the same, yesterday, to-day, and forever. Christ is unchangeable and his gospel is the everlasting gospel. It is that gospel which we preach, and we ask your earnest investigation, for it concerns your soul's welfare, your eternal life, and Jesus said, What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

Don't answer this matter without hearing it properly, for Solomon says, that is a shame and a folly. (Proverbs 18:3.) But judge it by the law and the testimony. (Isaiah 8:20.)

W. DYKE.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE GREAT RECORDS OF ETERNITY

Millions of years from now a perfect picture of you reading this newspaper will be floating out through space. It will be in the form of a moving picture, a complete record of your whole life, extending on forever as it travels farther and farther from the earth into the neverending distances of the universe. That is something to make you think—that there is no death, that time and space are delusions, mysteries, which the brain of man cannot solve. Doctor C. S. Brainin, the great astronomer of Columbia University, tells about it in long scientific words. Yet it is very simple to understand. Just as you hear a cannon's boom seconds after the shot, so may you see a thing happen seconds, years, centuries afterward.

Have the telescope man point out the giant Alpha Centauri, the star nearest our earth. It is so far away that four years are required for its light waves to reach us. You watch it blinking; what you see is the star as it existed four years ago. If it vanished now, you would continue seeing it, it would be four years before its light would vanish to eyes on this earth. Polaris, another famous star—116 years for its light ways to reach us. If the man on Polaris has a good telescope, he is now watching what happened on this earth 116 years ago. It will be the year 2030 before he sees, like a moving picture, a half-witted youth in Sarajevo fire the revolver that started the World War. Then the man on Polaris will call the reporters in and say, "Boys, I have made a great discovery. A war has broken out on Friend Earth."

Suppose that the people on Mars or the billions of stars in the Milky Way have progressed to the point where they really have such wonderful telescopes. As they swing those telescopes toward the earth they are seeing, according to their distances away, thousands of toiling workmen building the pyramids, Noah opening the door of the ark and scowling at the mud, a Spanish queen hocking her jewels for a supposedly crazy man named Columbus, the giant dinosaur trampling forests beneath his feet. The light waves that make possible the seeing of any happening travel on forever. Nothing in the universe is so ancient that it is not still alive and vital—somewhere in space. Light waves are eternal and forever they carry onward at the rate of 186,000 miles per second the picture of everything that ever was or ever will be.

It is the great book of mysteries with seven seals, the perpetual moving picture recording for all time your every movement. The universe recognizes no secrecy. The story of your life is recorded indelibly on the great records of eternity. Know this fact and leave a record clean, for there is no concealment possible in the endless universe of God.—Hilo Daily Tribune, July 27, 1919.

TEACHING WHICH IS OF VITAL IMPORTANCE

1. The barbarity of which humanity is still capable furnishes abundant proof of the imperative need of humane education, and this country should set the example of having it systematized in all schools. There should be no more question of giving a child humane education than there is of teaching him to read.
2. It should begin in the kindergarten and continue throughout the entire period of school life.
3. It should be one of the topics at all teachers institutes, so that teachers may become interested—and qualified.
4. Articles on the subject should appear from time to time in educational journals and so far as is possible, in the public press.
5. The discussion of it should be encouraged at meetings of parent-teachers associations.
6. It should be on the program at annual meetings of the National Teachers' Association.
7. All school libraries should contain books of reference to assist the teacher in making the subject attractive to the pupils and by showing how to save time through correlation with other studies.

Humane education laws do not generally provide that this instruction should continue throughout the entire school course, and it is because legislators are usually blind to the fact that true humane education, although it begins by teaching sympathy with, and justice and kindness toward our little brothers of the animal world, by no means ends there, but develops or should develop into the cultivation of the highest ideals of justice, mercy, the protection of the weak, in a word, the realization of our correct relation toward our fellowmen the evolution of our primal egoism into the higher altruism.—Humane Press Bureau.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

What We Offer

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY IS A DEPARTMENT OF THE CHURCH FOR EVERY WOMAN AND GIRL

"The object of this organization shall be to study and promote the welfare of the home, child, community, school, and church; to encourage the organization of women into classes, etc., that they may better prepare themselves to cooperate in all work tending toward the building up of Zion."

President: Mrs. D. J. Krahl, Holden, Missouri.

Secretary: Mrs. A. Morgan, 1221 South Noland Street, Independence, Missouri.

"The advancement, up to this time, of the women of the church personally, their more intelligent care for their families, and their organized assistance to the church, has helped to hasten the work, until Zion ceases to be a far-away vision and becomes a near possibility in the minds of many of our people.—Mrs. Frederick M. Smith.

HOME AND CHILD WELFARE BUREAU

Supervisor, Mrs. Lydia Wight, Lamoni, Iowa.

1. [Theoretical]

A. Mothers' and Teachers' Problems.

A course of lessons in child study and child training.

B. Home Economics. [Monthly Lessons.]

A complete course in foods; Their value and preparation; Household furnishing and management.

C. Hygiene and Home Nursing.

An elementary course in home and personal hygiene and home nursing.

D. Home Study Series in Child Development. [Weekly Readings.]

E. Psychology.

A course of lessons from the text, Mind and Its Education, George Herbert Betts.

2. [Practical] Activities.

1. Registration of births.
2. Prenatal instruction for every mother.
3. Adequate care by doctor and nurse at confinement and afterward.
4. Weighing and measuring of all children under six years of age.
5. Children's conferences and clinics.
6. Public health nurse in every community.
7. Guarding the milk supply, that every child may have his share of clean, pure milk.
8. Neighborhood playgrounds supervised.
9. Swimming pools and athletics; games.

10. Active interest in regulation of wages.
11. Instruction in thrift; careful spending.
12. Pensions for widowed mothers.
13. Compulsory schooling, and prevention of child labor.

RELIEF AND SERVICE BUREAU

Supervisor, Mrs. Henry C. Smith, 701 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

1. [Theoretical]

A. Sociology.

Text Books, Sociology and Modern Social Problems, Doctor Charles Elwood; and Social Pathology, Samuel George Smith. Typewritten lessons furnished on these subjects.

B. Preparation for Relief Work, Immediate and Permanent.

The social visit.
Thorough investigation.
Judicious treatment.

2. [Practical]

A. Socials; Bazaars, on a Business Basis; Service to Mothers, Sewing, etc.

READING COURSES

Mrs. D. J. Krahl, Holden, Missouri.

A. Current Topics.

B. Woman in Affairs.

1. Woman in business.
2. Enfranchisement of women.

C. Parliamentary Law.

YOUNG WOMAN'S BUREAU

Supervisor, Mrs. Alice Burgess, Lamoni, Iowa.

A. Temple Builders.

1. Ideals: Self-discovery; self-development; service.
2. Lines for study and development.
  1. Character.
  2. Personality.
  3. Beauty.
  4. Physical fitness.
3. Lines of work.
  1. Personal hygiene.
  2. Literature or dramatics.
  3. Vocational study.
  4. Home making.

B. The Orioles. (From 11 to 15 years.)

Director, Miss Grace Thompson, Lamoni, Iowa.

1. Praise; service.
2. Beauty; personal health and hygiene.
3. Home building; training in care of home, children, garden; methods of cooking, serving, sewing, home amusements.
4. Industry; vocational training.
5. Field and forest; knowledge of the outdoor life; trees, flowers, animals, etc.
6. Loyalty to the Oriole Girls, church, home, and nation.

The elect are those who will, and the non-elect are those who won't.—Beecher.

Much talent is often lost for want of a little courage.—George Eliot.

No one is useless in the world who lightens the burden of it for anyone else.—Charles Dickens.

A Message from Our President, Sister Krahl

To the General Auxiliary: The arrangements for carrying on our educational work this year have not been entirely completed, but we feel safe in saying that it will be prosecuted more intensely than ever. Please continue in the study courses already begun, until further notice and announcement shall be made through this column.

Bishop B. R. McGuire has been requested to act as treasurer of the organization. All matters of finances, however, please address to our new financial and recording secretary, Mrs. A. Morgan, 1221 South Noland Street, Independence, Missouri. Our former secretary, Mrs. H. S. Salisbury, has been compelled to resign because of ill health.

Mrs. Morgan has also been appointed official stenographer of the Woman's Auxiliary, by which appointment we feel we have added to our Board a member of high ideals, and splendid capabilities.

The collection taken at the evening reception of the Auxiliary, at the late General Conference, for the war orphans of France, has, upon the advice of President F. M. Smith, been retained. By action of the executive committee it has been made a nucleus for a fund to provide playground equipment for our own orphans at the Children's Home, in Lamoni. If there are no objections to this money being thus diverted, it will be used for this purpose.

Several of the members of the executive committee have been going to near-by and distant points, attending various reunions in the interests of our work. Mrs. Madison did some excellent work in the South, while Mrs. Gardner went through Illinois and Wisconsin, as far north as Chetek, and across to Minneapolis and was able to do some inspirational work. Mrs. Siegfried's trip to Nauvoo, and my own to various points will also add to the sum of our accomplishments and we expect full reports of all these efforts will soon be forthcoming for the readers of our column. We hear fine reports from the Lamoni reunion and at Pertle Springs a most spiritual and intellectual feast was enjoyed.

Now that the reunion season is about over, let us take up our activities with greater enthusiasm and earnestness than ever before. Those who attended reunions this fall, without doubt feel that they received valuable information and instruction, and they should be in positions to push along the work in their localities with greater efficiency. The outlook for the Auxiliary is the most encouraging I have ever known, and we may reasonably expect God's approval if we exert every power we possess to further the special interests he has intrusted to this branch of his work on earth.

Sincerely,
MRS. D. J. KRAHL.

You Are Willing--But Are You Ready?

To help the poor and needy, not in their poverty, but out of it?

The church spent $35,000 last year for the poor.

Do any of the members in your branch receive of that sum?

What are the conditions causing the need?

Is a thorough investigation always made of the situation?

OR

Is material aid given indiscriminately with no view of constructive relief?

Is it possible that a trained observer would find your poor being pauperized by such relief?

When missionaries, pastors, visiting officers go into homes, especially where there is sickness, is the only need spiritual ministrations?

OR

Is there also a need of having at hand trained social workers, especially women, who could investigate existing conditions—foul air, sewerage, flies, polluted water, milk, improper food, wrong budget, etc.;

Who could help solve the problems of these homes, keep records of their development, fortify against sickness and want,

That such people could get help through personal guidance, individual or group study, to learn the fundamentals of successful homes?

Do you know that the Woman's Auxiliary is anxious to supply you with suggestive outlines, charts, printed matter for such work?

Some of the topics studied by relief and service workers:

1. Attitude towards relief.
2. Thorough investigation.
3. Record keeping.
4. Outside sources:
  - (a) Relatives.
  - (b) School.
  - (c) Doctors.
  - (d) Employment.
5. Follow-up work.
6. What you should know about your own community.
7. Cooperation with other agencies.

MRS. HENRY C. SMITH, Supervisor.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 701 South Fuller Avenue.

Be Faithful in Little Things

When Brother Roberts was holding meetings in our branch recently, he gave us a short talk on the "Word of Wisdom." For years that subject had been deeply interesting to me, and I had found it hard to keep the suggestions contained therein, especially that part referring to the habit of meat eating in hot weather. I had gradually taken pork from my home table, until now it has been more than eighteen months since we have butchered a hog, and have bought but very little pork.

While we were in Canada, wild game was so plentiful we did not miss the pork, but since coming to Missouri it has been a real trial to me. I have always tried to make it a rule, that when I know a thing to be wrong, I will try, if possible, to eradicate that thing from my life. The thought came to me, strongly emphasized, that if I cooked meat and placed it before my family, I alone was primarily responsible for their failure to keep the law.

An article I read a few years ago helped me wonderfully. I believe it was Brother Elbert who wrote it. He said his boys might play cards, use tobacco, and such like, but they were not going to do it in his house, with his knowledge. So I made a resolve that if my family used meat in hot weather they wouldn't do it in my house.

One difficulty I encountered was that my husband thought we should have meat for company. For his part, he liked eggs and cottage cheese as well as meat, but he felt ashamed to ask other people to sit down to a table without meat. I remained firm, however, telling him what we ate all the time, others could eat once in a while. Now we do not even explain, or apologize, concerning the absence of meat from our menu.

When we women of the church sense the great responsibility that rests upon us as helpers in this great latter-day work, and as exponents of the best it represents, things will move more rapidly Zionward. Recently I noted a statement that the Boy Scout work could not go on as successfully as desired among our church boys until some of the selfishness of the women was removed, to the extent that they would allow their husbands to take up the work, study for it, and qualify themselves for active service with the young. That department of the Lord's work on earth may not be the only one to be handicapped in the same way.

A number of years ago, I read an article written by Sister Burgess for this column, entitled "Let us be different." It made a deep impression on my mind, and I have never forgotten it. She, with others, was coming out of church after hearing a most inspiring sermon on charity and love. A nonmember remarked that it was ideal but no people living now practiced those virtues in that way. She was about to reply that our church members did, that they were different from the world in that regard, when an incident occurred which disclosed the fact that two sisters, right in her own branch, were not on speaking terms with each other! It hurt her deeply, and she was made to reflect, "Are we then, so very different from the world, after all?" Since reading that article, I have truly tried to be "different," to be my own honest self, true at all times to the best light I had, and to pattern after none.

Before coming to this country, I thought, since I was coming among strangers, I must get a lot of new clothes; but a small voice whispered, "Don't get any new clothes until you need them. You can soon tell who will care for you regardless of your apparel." I heeded that voice, and many a person I can now call friend, I know does not seek me for my fine clothes.

In 1 Peter 3, Inspired Translation, we read: "Likewise, ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands; that, if any obey not the word, they also may without the word be won by the conduct of the wives . . . whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or putting on of apparel; but let it be the . . . ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price."

There are countless ways in which we women can help in the work of the Lord. Sometimes, when we have little ones and there is much work to do in the home, it is hard to always go to church, but we can do good in other ways. We can send flowers to friends in trouble, visit the sick, give a lift here or there to discouraged ones, brighten some life that is neglected—forgotten in this mad rush of trying to do something big in the world. EFFIE J. DENTON.

"I Was Wrong"

When I hear a woman admit that she was wrong, the blame I might have felt for her vanishes like the morning mist. "I was wrong" seems like the sun itself shining through a murky cloud—and the cloud disappears altogether.

It isn't easy, at first, to say you are wrong—it sounds so much bigger to be right—but, after all, it is the small, narrow, mean persons that admit only their virtues.

There is character back of "I was wrong." There is egotism back of "I was right."

Have you ever been angry with a woman and then have her sweetly tell you she is sorry that she is wrong? Why, it makes all the difference in the world! It turns dislike to friendship; it dissolves every bit of peevishness and, if you don't watch, you will be throwing your arms around her neck and telling her that she wasn't wrong; in fact you will believe that perhaps she was partly right after all.

But, oh! the woman who thinks she is always right! The woman who believes that her opinions are the only correct ones. The woman who brags that she never admits being wrong, who misses no opportunity to boast of being right, with "I told you so," is the most impossible creature, so far as love goes, that we ever meet.

Admitting that you are wrong shows an open mind. It is proof enough that you are developing and learning. It is a mirror through which the public can see a clean soul.

The woman who thinks she is always right is always wrong, because of the principle from which she draws her conclusions. She is not seeking knowledge or light; she is vain, with no foundation for her vanity; she is dishonest, first with herself and naturally with everybody else; she is the woman who must be whipped to be taught.

Give me the woman who does wrong and admits it; who errs and sees it; who messes up things in general (occasionally) and comes out of it with a smile, just a wee bit wiser; who throws false pride to the wind when honor is at stake; who values her self-respect more than the impression she is making.

In such a person there is true womanhood, honesty, and character; there is a friendship worth cultivating and a target worth while.—Selected.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Toronto Reunion

It may interest some HERALD readers to hear that the Toronto (branch) reunion was not called off again this year. Notwithstanding attempts to frustrate it and predictions that the branch could not legally hold one in the Lowbanks reunion grove, the reunion was held on the dates and at the place announced in Reunion Calendar.

It was a success spiritually, socially, numerically, and financially, exceeding the expectations of the branch.

Campers, visiting Saints, and the surrounding community were unanimous in pronouncing it the best ever held at Lowbanks.

It was supervised by the following committee: T. W. Williams, chairman; G. E. Harrington, J. A. Wilson, A. F. McLean, A. J. Leslie, and E. G. Law.

The speakers were Joseph Luff, J. W. Wight, T. W. Williams, G. E. Harrington, G. W. Robley, E. K. Evans, David Pycock, S. G. St. John, and Joseph Yager.

A local paper reported: "In all their sermons the speakers gave evidence that they are men of education and refinement. Their language was clean, forceful, and elevating."

The daily program was prayer service from 9.30 to 10.30 a. m. From 10.45 to 12 a. m. the time was occupied with institute work or programs by the auxiliaries. Symposiums and lectures on "Public speaking," "Memory and self-confidence" were given by T. W. Williams. Lectures on "Right living" and "Sanitation" by G. E. Harrington. All of these were of a high order, educational and profitable. The afternoons were devoted to recreation—hikes, games, bathing, etc. One afternoon E. K. Evans entertained a large number in giving reminiscences of his missionary experiences at Lowbanks twenty-six years ago.

Preaching services were at 8 p. m. and at 11 a. m., 3 and 1:30 on Sundays. Large crowds attended on all three Sundays.

The young people held three early morning prayer meetings which were arranged for by the head committee.

After preaching on week nights, there were bonfires, song-feasts, weinie roasts, or short programs in the meeting tent, one of these being a very interesting debate. One whole evening was taken up with a concert with which the neighbors were especially well pleased, some of them contributing to it.

Many complimentary remarks were heard from the campers upon the courteous and agreeable manner with which the chairman and other members of the committee supervised the work. All was done systematically, promptly, and without a jar. One sister said, "Once I read a novel without a hero, at last I have seen a reunion without a 'boss.'"

The spirit of love and peace reigned, all worked together, there was no favoritism and no jealousy, the aim of all was to do their best for the enjoyment of others.

G. E. Harrington was in charge of the tents, needless to say this work was attended to thoroughly.

A. J. Leslie was purchasing agent and treasurer. Everything necessary in kitchen or dining hall was provided for without stint and regardless of the H. C. L. A nice balance will be reported when all bills are paid.

Sister Mabel Clark supervised the meals and merits the great praise given by all who enjoyed the excellent menu she provided.

Sister J. A. Wilson was in charge of the store which was well patronized by campers and visitors.

S. G. Clark was musical director as usual, and made this part of the reunion very enjoyable.

One new feature was a camp newspaper, The Argus. Floralice Miller, editor; T. W. Williams, M. J. Crowley, assistant editors. Four issues were published.

The prayer meetings were well attended and spiritually profitable. The gifts of tongues and interpretation and of prophecy were manifest. Five were baptized.

The Toronto Saints rejoice over the success and good derived from this year's reunion and are planning for a greater one in 1920.

Unavoidably this report has been delayed.

FLORALICE MILLER, Reporter.

Eastern Colorado Reunion

The annual reunion and fall conference of the Eastern Colorado District held at Fort Collins, August 21 to 31, was a spiritual feast to all in attendance. District President J. R. Sutton was in charge. The services were held in the chapel of the Colorado Agricultural College. The neat buildings, the well-kept lawns and extensive flower gardens were a fit setting for the worship of the Lord. One sister remarked that the beauty of the surroundings recalled to her a vision of the millenium. We were accorded the best of treatment by the college and city officials and representatives of the press.

The last three days were occupied by conventions and conference. Afternoons were left open for recreation and sight-seeing and on most of these several drove to the country or to the mountains and spent their time in prayer and testimony. It was the inspiration to the missionaries and others to see the young thus seeking the Lord when on pleasure bent.

Those preaching were Wilbur Savage, J. R. Sutton, J. Charles May, Swen Swenson, C. W. Prettyman, James A. Thomas, W. M. Self, J. D. Curtis, Bishop Ellis Short and Patriarch Ammon White. Excellent addresses were given by Doctor Lory, head of the college, and Judge Stover, mayor of Fort Collins.

At the beginning of the conference Brother Sutton made a plea for the exercise of wisdom and the spirit of unity, which plea met with a good general response. Provisions were made for the organization of a branch six miles south of Laird, Colorado, and for the disorganization of the Second Denver Branch and continuation of the work there as a mission under the direction of the First Denver Branch. The basis of representation in district conferences was made one delegate for each six members or majority fraction thereof.

I. N. DeLong was ordained a teacher, George Fletcher a deacon, and provision was made for the ordination of A. C. Shupe and R. B. Linscott to the office of priest. The conference approved the action of the General Conference committee on boundary lines in adding to the district Dundy, Chase, and Perkins Counties of Nebraska. It also granted the petition of the Monte Vista Saints to unite with the Western Colorado District.

It was voted to hold the next conference at Trinidad, Colorado, and the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: president, J. R. Sutton; vice presidents, A. E. Tabor and E. J. Williams; secretary, C. E. Willis; member of library board, Ellen Brown; member of gospel literature board, Sister E. E. Conway. It was voted to sustain E. W. Fishburn as district chorister.

Three baptisms were performed by Elder Freeman E. Bullard.

It was unanimously voted to hold a reunion next fall.

J. CHARLES MAY,
JAMES A. THOMAS,
Press Committee.

Fruits in Season

I have just read the article "Fruits in season" in HERALD of August 27. While I hesitate to take exceptions, I feel that my opinion and experience might not be amiss. For several years I have kept still, although there has been many times, when I have desired to express my opinion on this subject.

Do you know the way so many of our people, the priesthood included, try to get around that term, "Fruits in season"? This reminds me of the way the sectarian churches try to get around the sixteenth chapter of Mark.

The one convincing proof to me that we, as a people, are not observing the "Word of Wisdom" is, that the blessings promised, do not follow. Let God be true and every man a liar. We have accepted the Word of Wisdom as inspired and no private interpretation can stand against it, no matter from what source it may come.

We are told that the way is so plain that the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein. It seems reasonable to me that God would use language we could understand. I believe the term "Fruits in season" is used in the generally accepted meaning of the term. I think we could learn much if we would ask several disinterested persons who didn't know the reason for our asking, when peaches or berries are in season. I have noticed an advertisement on a calendar: "Fruit for sale in season." I don't believe any of us would go there to buy canned fruit. Just a few days ago I heard one of our merchants remark to another, "The season for those is about gone." We so often hear people say, "I don't like rhubarb or gooseberries." I am satisfied that if they did not have their canned peaches or other choice fruit, they would like them in their season.

The Word of Wisdom was brought to my attention shortly after joining the church and for several years I was always asking the elders the meaning of the term. I disliked giving up my canned fruit and especially my preserves. With few exceptions they told me to do so. Still I was not satisfied and finally made up my mind to take it as it read. Since then it seldom enters my mind only when I am called upon to deny my appetite or some one else brings up the subject.

I am reminded of an incident that happened twenty years ago. It was my first summer in the church. A few of the scattered Saints had gathered at a little country schoolhouse, bringing their lunches in order that we might attend the services both in the morning and afternoon as well.

The morning sermon was on the Word of Wisdom, meat and tobacco being the points of attack.

There was an old gentleman present not being a member of the church but seemingly a very conscientious Christian. When all were in readiness to partake of the meal, noticing the chicken, sausage and other meats, the old gentleman looked at the elder and asked, "Is anything here forbidden?" The elder replied very emphatically, "No, sir; this is all right." In answer to this the gentleman said, "You will agree with me Mr. — that fat meat is not healthful in summertime because of its tendency to produce heat." I will use this same argument against summer fruits, in that they are too cooling for winter use.

I had great respect for the old gentleman and hoped to see him join us, but he saw the inconsistency and judged the elder insincere.

I fear my letter is rather lengthy but hope the editors will bear with me. I am an isolated Saint and the HERALD is always welcomed. I do not see how a Saint can live spiritually without it, especially the isolated one.

I long to see the Saints come up higher and for the time when His Spirit shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. It seems as though we are living much below our privileges. The ideals of the church are simply grand, but it seems the Lord has such poor material to work with that I sometimes almost wonder if he will ever be able to accomplish his purposes. Yet, I know he will for his word has gone forth and will surely be fulfilled although we may fall by the wayside.

May I be able to abide the day of his coming.

Your lonely, discouraged but struggling sister,
VALE, OREGON. MRS. O. W. PROPST.

---

The Bishopric Advocate
for 1919
Every Member a Tithe Payer

---

EMPHASIS

Some salesmen can prove to you in thirty minutes or less that the world is a bad world, while another fellow in half the time can prove that the world is growing better. Neither man can change the facts—but he can say which facts he desires to emphasize.

You cannot change the fact that your partner in business, God, has demanded one tenth of your increase. We cannot change the fact, either. We are only trying to emphasize it, that God may receive from you his portion, the tithe.

THE TEST

President Wilson said: "The supreme test of the Nation has come. We must all speak, act and serve together!"

Is not that the supreme test of our church also?

We must not only preach tithing, but we must also pay our tithing and thus be serving our fellow man and through this service, acceptably serving God.

GETTING POWER

Many a man—many a business—is running on two cylinders and buying gas for six. Why not overhaul the engine and get all the power you pay for?

How about the Lord's business? Such as taking care of the poor. Are you trying to do it yourself or are you letting the Bishopric do this work. Overhaul your theology and get all the power you can out of your tithe by paying it to the proper office.

---

ELK CITY, OKLAHOMA, September 7, 1919.

Editors Herald: I have truly enjoyed reading the letters of others in the HERALD, and if my letter will help, I am glad to send it in. I am an isolated Saint, and it is only through the HERALD that I get to hear the gospel. I am a member of the Durango, Colorado, Branch. I left there one year ago the first of July, and how I did hate to leave those Saints. Brother Farley baptized me. He was the pastor of that branch, and if he sees this letter, I wish he would write to me. I want to send in some tithing.

I would be glad if some of the missionaries could come to Elk City. My little girl wants to be baptized. Besides, I think some good could be done here. The people seem to know nothing about the church. I have heard some two or three that have said they would go to hear him if they ever had a chance to know of a Latter Day Saint preacher in the community. I just read of the Curtis-Chism debate and it made me think of a debate I heard Brother Curtis have with a Baptist preacher. I thought it was the best I ever heard. It surely was a victory, for Brother Curtis is a fine debater. I would love to hear another one just as good. There were ten baptized, afterwards.

Dear Saints, who live close to a branch, do you realize what trials the isolated Saints have to undergo? I don't believe you do, as I know I did not. Sometimes I feel as though I was thrown out where I could not have the privilege of meeting with the Saints so I could fully know how to sympathize with others. The Bible says that whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth. We must endure it if we are to be his children.

While in the Durango Branch I had a dream that the Devil wanted to get all the Saints scattered. Of course he does, for he knows how much harder it is for them to live right and keep the faith and many times the weakest ones fall. Dear isolated Saints, don't give up, for the victory will be ours if we do our best and fight.

Your sister,
MILLIE LOFTON.

---

DELISLE, SASKATCHEWAN, September 4, 1919.

Editors Herald: These past two weeks, I have been visiting at what I always term my "Latter Day Saint Home," a branch of the church known as The Rabbit Foot Lake Branch (Northern Saskatchewan District). Brethren Perry Leach, priest, S. L. Bowerman, teacher, and Henry Fisher, deacon, are the officers, and a more humble class of Saints would be hard to find. Being invited, I occupied at two Sunday preaching services there. In the same schoolhouse they now occupy, I accepted the gospel, under the influence and teaching of a very humble and uneducated brother, and because of the good influence which emanated from the Saints there, I have never regretted the step I took at that time, although it has been my lot to see men rise and fall, but through it all have discerned the hand of God working among his people. And so in visiting my old associates in the branch where God designed I should preside for a time, my heart rejoiced when looking around the schoolroom, I saw the old faces, shining through tears of gladness, because of what the gospel meant to them. At the close of the service we retired to the river, about three miles from the schoolhouse, where I had the pleasure of baptizing two fine subjects for the kingdom, who I believe will be a great help to the Saints there.

But oh, what a call for missionaries. Even at such a busy time, the writer could have been busy presenting the gospel, as we believe it, every day. For I find that since the war closed, men can see that the old religion, once good enough, is not sufficient for to-day, hence the need of the primitive order of things.

Sister Tordoff is sick at present, at the home of Brother William Cheesman, of Delisle, so I find it impossible for me to be away from her excepting Sundays and we have but two missionaries for this great country, and as I write here, there are calls from the north, south, east, and west, for elders, that the people might hear our side of the question.

Brother Daniel Macgregor will bear me out in this: What is the church going to do? We hear calls for missionaries for foreign lands, truly a most needful and necessary part of our work, but can we let those be neglected, even at our doors? right here in our own land?

I shall go back to Viceroy, desirous of passing on to others the blessings I have received while here, and feeling stronger to meet trials which may arise in my present field of labor, praying God's work will continue, and that all the Saints will observe the day of worship more, for unfortunately we find many Saints dilatory in this regard.

This is the day the Lord hath made,
A day most holy to his name;
Wherein our vows should all be paid,
And not a thought our hearts invade
That could create one blush of shame.

A day when we should strive to meet,
In meekness and humility,
Our Father at his mercy seat,
Confess our sins, and him entreat
To pardon our iniquity.

A day when all his children dear
In love should meet around his throne,
A gracious Father's voice to hear,
Each heart overflowed with filial fear,
Making his august will our own.

WILFRED D. TORDOFF.

MILTON, FLORIDA, September 4, 1919.

Editors Herald: Since leaving home on July 17, I have attended the reunion at Paris, Tennessee, also the one at McKenzie, Alabama. The Good Spirit was with us and good was done, and the Saints were encouraged to live better lives. Since then I have labored in Alaflora, Berrydale, and Coldwater Branches, and have been kindly received by the Saints, and the Lord is blessing me in my labors.

Have had the pleasure of laboring with Brother T. C. Kelley until last Monday. He left me to answer a call in Alabama. I am busy at work so have not time to get very homesick. I am pleased with the HERALD and time only will tell the great good it is doing. God bless you in your noble work.

In bonds,
M. M. TURPEN.

KINGFISHER, OKLAHOMA, September 9, 1919.

Editors Herald: One week ago last Sunday Brother Dillon and I met about one thousand Indians in camp at Clinton, Oklahoma, where they had met to celebrate the return of the soldier boys. We also visited a larger camp at Watonga. After visiting with them and doing private fireside missionary work I preached to a big crowd at 11 a. m. Sunday. I feel very greatly encouraged over the present outlook for the work.

Visiting Tulsa conference, we met many of the Saints. Our attendance was very large, and I feel that it was an excellent series of meetings. Brother F. W. Kueffer and a Brother Harper were ordained elder and priest respectively. Brethren Rannie, Trowbridge, and Case did the preaching. All went home rejoicing in the good work of the Lord, and many young people felt the spirit of consecration of God-given talents.

Many and urgent are the calls for work among the Lamanites.

Your coworker,
HUBERT CASE.

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI, September 15, 1919.

Editors Herald: I arrived here August 12, and found A. V. Closson, H. E. Winegar and the Saints making preparation for a reunion, so I gave all the assistance I could along that line. Our reunion was quite a successful one although the attendance was small. The preaching was of a high order, Elders Lee Quick, A. V. Closson, H. E. Winegar, H. Sparling, George Davis, J. T. Davis, Baker, Mannering, and myself being the speakers. The forenoons were devoted to prayer services and preaching and the afternoons to round table work and recreation.

We had a good turnout of strangers living in the vicinity of the reunion grounds. At the close of the reunion Brother Winegar and I continued on with the meetings for a week preaching to a tent full each night. We held baptisms four Sundays in succession, baptizing fourteen people.

The work here is in somewhat of a rundown condition, but there are a lot of good faithful Saints who have been laboring to keep the branch together and carry on the good work. My wife arrived on the 9th and we hope that we may be able to build the work up, and help spread the gospel in this place.

Every praying that the Lord will continue to bless us in our work, I am,
Your coworkers.

B. B. BROWN AND WIFE.

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, August 25, 1919.

Editors Herald: I have long ago felt that I should like to write a few lines of appreciation to your columns of how I have been much blessed by various articles that have appeared from time to time. It is with great interest one delights to read them, and how inspiring the noble sentiments of the minds of the writers in the great work of God, and what has been truly described as a marvel and a wonder in these latter days.

Those of us who have by the mercies of our heavenly Father been spared to see the end of the greatest war that the world has ever seen, should be more than ever confirmed to see the vindication of the restored and everlasting gospel in these last days.

It would, I think, be a help and a stimulus to those who in any degree have allowed themselves to become lethargic and despondent in the progress of the work if they were to refresh their minds by the reading of the first section of the Book of Covenants to realize that we have just seen the fulfillment of the revelation of God by the passing of the great war.

The writer, at all events, has great cause to rejoice from the blessings of a bounteous Father both to himself, wife and seven children, all enjoying at present the precious gift of good health and strength. We also rejoice to know how God has been pleased to restore my mother after a severe illness of the influenza and pleurisy. The doctor who attended her at the time, declared it was a marvel and a wonder that she lived. The prayers of His people were of much avail and His promises were ever faithful and sure. Hence, we, who believe in the everlasting gospel, do not wonder so much about the doctor's amazement in her recovery.

Our dear brother James, an elder in the church, and his wife, Minnie, gave unstinted service in the nursing and my hard working father did much.

During the war, the question as to the recognition of the church as a religious denomination was very much to the fore. The question, as to whether its ministers were exempt under the military service rules, was decided in the civil courts and our standing to all the rights and privileges as laid down by the law indicated.

The wide circulation through the press commands, I believe, a greater respect for our church than ever before, making the distinction more clearly that we have nothing in common with the so-called "Mormons" or Utah people or polygamy.

The annual conference and reunion of the British Isles was held at Birmingham and a great time was experienced there. Brethren May, Jones, and Judd, the committee in charge, made what promises from the first attempt and rightly developed to mean for doing much good in furthering the kingdom of our heavenly Father.

Great disappointment at the nonappearance of the President of the church from the States was felt among all. Many came to conference to give a welcome to him. I trust that the circumstances which caused the disappointment will be fully removed and the delayed welcome will be quite loyally carried out at no distant date.

Hoping and wishing for the success of the great work in which all are engaged.

Yours in the gospel,

18 Heather Street, CLAYTON.

ROBERT SCHOFIELD.

MOUNT VERNON, ILLINOIS, September 12, 1919.

Editors Herald: Apostle J. F. Curtis and the writer remained for a week longer at Brush Creek after the close of our reunion. The reunion was among the best held in this district, from every viewpoint. There were five baptized during the reunion and Brother Curtis and I baptized seven more the following week. The expenses were raised very easy, and the missionaries were not forgotten. The amount collected in tithing by Bishop Becker during the reunion and others following the reunion ran close to the nine-hundred-dollar mark. That to the mind of the writer is as the negro preacher said: "A sign of an indication."

At the close of our week's meeting, Brother J. F. and I came to this point. J. F. preached three nights and we organized the Saints here into a branch to be known as the Mount Vernon Branch. The officers were already here and the branch starts out under very favorable conditions.

The Saints here already have a meetinghouse and it is about paid for. We have four of the brethren here in the grocery business. Two of them, C. Lowry and Johnny Fugua are already past the experimental stage in their business and have a fine trade each. We trust the other two by the same honest dealings will also prove successful.

Brother Curtis left me, Thursday, for other fields. I will remain a while longer. More calls by far than we missionaries can keep going. Several new points are awaiting us, but we cannot fill them at present. The work is moving along. Many of the local eldership are doing real good work.

Already two new branches have been organized, Centralia and Mount Vernon. We have another to organize at Marion where we also have quite a number of live Saints who have already bought a church building, and are fixing up the same.

With best wishes,

HENRY SPARLING.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Conference Notices

Eastern Michigan at Crosswell, October 4 and 5. Robert H. Huston, secretary, Port Huron, Michigan.

Little Sioux, Magnolia, Iowa, October 12 and 13. Branch statistical reports should reach the secretary before this time. Ada S. Putman, secretary.

London, Ontario, October 18 and 19. The church is on Maitland Street between York and King Streets. One of the apostles will be in attendance. Lucy Yerks, secretary.

Eastern Maine, at Jonesport, October 11 and 12. Business meeting the 11th at 2:30 p. m. John P. Sheehy, president, Jonesport, Maine.

Pottawattamie, conference and conventions at Hazel Dell, Iowa, October 3, 4, and 5. Auxiliary work, Friday. Prayer service, 9:30 a. m. Prayer meeting Saturday, 9 a. m. Business session 10:30. Elsie Lapworth, secretary.

Gallands Grove, at Denison, Iowa, October 4 and 5. All reports should be sent to the secretary by October 1. Wave Cross, secretary, 1811 Eighth Avenue North, Fort Dodge, Iowa.

Far West Stake, with Alma Branch, Lexington Junction, Missouri, October 11 and 12. Those intending to be present should address L. F. Ferguson, Hardin, Missouri. R. S. Salyards, president.

New York, Sherrill, November 8 and 9 at which time the church opening of the Sherrill Branch will take place. It is also expected that Joseph Luff will be in attendance. Anna M. Brothers, secretary, 36 Tremont Avenue, Buffalo, New York.

Toronto, at Toronto, Ontario, October 10, 11, and 12. Conference opens 10 a. m. with temporary organization. According to the coordinating system the auxiliaries will follow, Religio to organize at 10:30 a. m., Sunday school at 2 p. m., Woman's Auxiliary at 4 p. m. with a view to organization. At 7:30 p. m. Religio and Sunday school will hold a joint session, rendering a miscellaneous program. Regular business session of conference at 10 a. m. Saturday. Reports from branches, branch presidents and ministry are requested in before October 1. It is necessary that all credentials from branches and locals should be sent before October 8 to G. E. Harrington, president; Floralice Miller, secretary, Toronto, Ontario, 1526 King Street West.

Convention Notices

Gallands Grove Sunday school, at Denison, Iowa, October 2 and 3. Everyone come with a prayer in his heart and a song on his lips. Alta Mae Schafer, secretary.

Detroit Religio with First Detroit Branch, Fourth Avenue near Holden. Take any "Hamilton" car north to Holden and walk 2 blocks east to Fourth, or any "Woodward" car to Antoinette Street and walk 4 blocks west. G. S. Trowbridge, general president, is expected to be present. Mrs. S. S. Thiel, secretary, 514 Rix Street, Flint, Michigan.

Pastoral

To the Saints and Friends of the Northern, Central and Western Michigan Districts; Greeting: Having been appointed by those in authority to supervise the missionary arm of the Lord's work, in the above-named districts, we solicit the hearty cooperation of all those that love righteousness.

We would be pleased to have the Saints inform us of places where new openings may be effected and we will try and look after them.

We believe there is great need of evangelistic work in many of the branches and would admonish the missionaries

A Real Saving in Subscription Costs

By a fortunate arrangement with the publishers, we are able to offer our readers a specially desirable combination of our church periodicals with the Youth's Companion, at a considerable saving in price.

The Youth's Companion is one of the best-known and universally-liked family papers, each weekly issue containing something of interest and profit to the entire family.

We will accept new or renewal subscriptions for any of the papers listed, including the Companion, but be sure to state which it is, and if changing address, to give us the old one as well as the new.

If you are already a subscriber to any of these, your subscription will be dated a year ahead of your expiration date.

Regular price of Saints' Herald .....$1.75
 Youth's Companion ..... 2.50

Total .....$4.25
 Our price for both .....$3.75

Regular price of Autumn Leaves .....$1.25
 Youth's Companion ..... 2.50

Total ..... 3.75
 Our price for both ..... 3.25

Regular price of Zion's Ensign .....$1.25
 Youth's Companion ..... 2.50

Total ..... 3.75
 Our price for both ..... 3.25

Send us your orders now before the busiest season overwhelms us with work.

Herald Publishing House
 Lamoni, Iowa

when laboring in branches to work in harmony with branch and district officers, and advertize extensively.

Let us all work together in love and unity, and thus help to follow the great work of the Master toward a final consummation.

Trusting that the rich blessings of the divine Master may attend all of our labors, I remain

Your colaborer,
 SOUTH BOARDMAN, MICHIGAN, Box 45. W. D. ELLIS.

Our Departed Ones

WILCOX.—Mona Wilcox was born July 19, 1903, at Bently, Michigan. Died September 3, 1919, at place of birth. Baptized June 27, 1915, by Mathew Umphrey. Leaves to mourn, father, mother, one sister and one brother. She was secretary of our Sunday school and will be greatly missed by all. The remains were taken to Canada for interment.

RUPE.—Nancy Ann Rupe was born September 22, 1843, at Galion, Ohio. Died September 13, 1919 of general decline. Baptized by I. N. White, September 22, 1893 and lived a good consistent life. Leaves to mourn husband, 6 children and a number of grandchildren. Funeral services at the home near Osawatomie, Kansas. Interment in Osawatomie, Cemetery. Sermon by Joseph Arber.

DILLON.—George Riley Dillon, died at Des Moines, Iowa, September 13, 1919 at the age of 57 years, 4 months and 19 days. He was the youngest son of J. P. Dillon, formerly of Amboy, Illinois. Baptized in 1871. Soon after the family came to Decatur County, Iowa. Married Susie Atkinson, February 5, 1891. Of 5 children born, 3 remain to comfort their mother, James, Gracia, and Riley. Also 2 brothers and one sister are living. The body was brought to Lamoni, Iowa, and laid to rest after services by H. A. Stebbins and Peter Muceus.

ELSWICK.—Marion Frances Elswick was born January 17, 1856, at Wheeler Grove, Pottawattamie County, Iowa. Died September 12, 1919 at his home near Carson, Iowa. Death being the result of an accident in falling from a tree where he was gathering grapes. He leaves to mourn, his wife, 3 sons, 2 daughters, 3 brothers and 4 sisters besides other relatives and a host of friends, whose esteem he had gained by an honorable and exemplary life. Was presiding elder of Carson Branch, which place he had occupied for more than 20 years. Funeral sermon in the Saints' church, at Carson, by H. N. Hansen, assisted by Joshua Carlile and J. A. Hansen.

SKILES.—Sister Lucinda E., wife of James R. Skiles and daughter of Brother G. L. and Sister Nannie A. Gifford, was born March 31, 1870, at Oak Island, Texas. Baptized September 30, 1888, by I. N. Roberts. Married James R. Skiles, September 24, 1895 at San Antonio, Texas. To them were born 4 children. Died July 21, 1919. Taken sick while visiting relatives in San Antonio and lived only a week. Leaves husband, 3 sons, one daughter, 4 sisters, one brother and a host of relatives and friends. She was an isolated Saint but lived as a faithful member. Funeral services in Saints' church at San Antonio, Texas, by John Harp. Interment in the Mission Park Cemetery.

FROM HERE AND THERE

In The British Columbian (of New Westminster, British Columbia) for September 9, Elder S. S. Smith has an open letter addressed to one Evangelist Brown, who has evidently been misrepresenting our church. In the letter, Elder Smith challenges Mr. Brown to debate church propositions, each affirming his own organization as to origin, organization, doctrine and practice. In the issue of the 12th Brother Smith answers a pamphlet by Mr. Brown and effectively refutes many misrepresentations contained therein.

SAN JOSE DEDICATION

E. S. Chase, president of the San Jose Branch, invites the members and friends concerned to attend the dedication of the church at Grant Street and Spencer Avenue, San Jose, California, September 28, 1919. Evangelist F. A. Smith and Apostle F. M. Sheehy, with others of the ministry will be present. A large attendance is hoped for.

NEWS FROM THE GERMAN MISSION

A card from Elder Alexander Kippe, dated August 14, 1919, says: "I have tried to do whatever I could during the war to hold the standard of King Emmanuel. We had some increase in several branches, and some loss by way of death, only a few brethren were killed by war, but a good deal wounded, and some are still prisoners in foreign countries. An impulse is among the Saints to get soon to Zion. When will be the time to realize such wishes? For the present the way will be blocked up, but when will the Lord open it again?"

We would like to know how many of our Saints have had trouble in getting mail orders filled for conference pictures taken last spring, by the Des Moines firm. One brother, at our suggestion, ordered one of them and has been unable to secure even a reply. We also wrote with the same result. Possibly we did not get the correct address.

THE GRAPHIC ARTS BUREAU

A LATTER DAY SAINTS ART GALLERY. WHY NOT?

The Creator has implanted within us a love for the beautiful. This instinct reflects a divine attribute. We see around us evidence of God's love for the beautiful.

Like all other gifts, an appreciation of beauty should be cultivated. I believe an effective and wholesome way of doing this is to own a camera, get out in the open and seek for the beauty of sea, sky, mountain and dale. Too often the "kodak" is used in a jocular spirit only. Pictures which preserve groups of friends in more or less amusing poses, "snapshots," etc., of human interest all have their place, but serious work should also be undertaken by every owner of a camera. A cheap "Brownie" in the hand of an intelligent operator, has within it wonderful possibilities.

At the last General Conference, the "Graphic Arts Bureau" was organized. One of the objects of the bureau is to encourage the amateur photographers of the church to look for the beautiful. When prints of merit are obtained, the bureau solicits the donation of the negative or an enlargement. These will be placed on exhibition at the conferences and may in time form the nucleus of a church art gallery. Small prints can also be used. These will be preserved in albums.

At Graceland I believe they are gradually building up a museum. In Doctrine and Covenants 107: 10 provision seems to have been made by the Lord for the Nauvoo Temple to be the depository of "antiquities. Who knows but what the Lord has preserved the ark of the covenant, the tables of stone, and with the Book of Mormon plates, the Urim and Thummim, etc., may eventually find a place in some sacred edifice?

We have a church library and a museum in process of formation, why not an art gallery? I believe the Graphic Arts Bureau will furnish the material from which will eventually develop a depository for the product of the talent of the church in photography, water, oil and china painting.

Get in touch with the bureau and send on prints and enlargements or negatives to the secretary, Albert Knowlton, 622 South Crysler Street, Independence, Missouri.

C. EDWARD MILLER.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND, 742 Broad Street.

"An all-day tent meeting was held Sunday September 14 at the little village of Snover, Michigan. The Spirit of God was present and a peaceful and profitable time was spent in the service of the Master. Love and unity were predominant. Among the speakers were Elders F. S. Brackenbury and William I. Fligg. Much valuable instruction was imparted by these worthy brethren. About two hundred were in attendance."—Orval L. Thompson.

SEPTEMBER AUTUMN LEAVES

"The September number is the finest thing that has come to our desk in many a moon," writes an admiring friend from Kansas. Then he enumerates some of the articles that especially pleased him, including "The autobiography of a nurse," "Book of Mormon evidences," "What I saw of some manuscripts at the Vatican," etc. The first-named is from a nurse who has spent years of service in the Independence Sanitarium and writes of her impression in a most fascinat-

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor.

The official organ of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Published every Wednesday by the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. Entered at the post office at Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

PRICE, $1.75 A YEAR IN ADVANCE

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

- What Shall the Quorums Do? - - - 929
- Future Students of Our College. - - - 931
- College Day, October 5 - - - 931
- Cornish to Evans - - - 932
- The Church in England - - - 932
- The Word of Wisdom - - - 932
- Americans at Oxford and Cambridge - - 932

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

- Ambassadors Plenipotentiary, by J. F. Garver - 933
- Be Ye Perfect, by Thomas Newton - - 937
- The New Birth, by W. Dyke - - - 940

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

- The Great Records of Eternity - - - 942
- Teaching Which is of Vital Importance - - 942

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY - - - 943

- Mrs. D. J. Krahl—Mrs. Henry C. Smith—Effie J. Denton—

LETTER DEPARTMENT - - - 945

- Floralice Miller—J. Charles May and James A. Thomas—Mrs. O. W. Propst—Millie Lofton—Wilfred D. Tordoff—Hubert Case—B. B. Brown and wife—Robert Schofield—Henry Sparling.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT - - - 949

FROM HERE AND THERE - - - 950

ing manner. The article on the manuscripts of the Vatican is by Augustine Dwyer, and has a strong appeal for those who have thought concerning the transmission of sacred manuscripts and their messages to our time. The Book of Mormon evidences are in the series of eleven articles on this marvelous book, written by Elder C. W. Clark especially for readers of Autumn Leaves who had not already become conversant with those facts—a series for the youth of the church but of interest to the majority of our members. "The call at evening," the serial by Jessie Ward is unique in that one can read the chapters on doctrinal phases of the church and find in them a special satisfaction because of their completeness. The number also contains a good story by Fred W. Smith, "The new game warden," and a large number of other articles, making the number one of unusual value to its readers. The editor assures us the October number is equally good.

A letter from Glenn Ingleright reports that the two-day meeting held at Midland, Michigan, on the 13th and 14th was well attended and the weather proved exceptionally refreshing after a shower on Sunday evening. The speakers included Elders Orton, Doty, George Bailey, George Burt, Paul Bellisle, Matthew Umphrey and John McDonald. The sermons were good and well worth heeding, especially the instruction to be temperate and not forget the words of wisdom God has given us that we may escape the sickness and death that may pass over the land. The prayer meetings were comforting and educational. Two sisters were baptized. The brother believes that all who attended left with a firmer determination to live better lives and hopes the Midland Saints may be repaid an hundred-fold for their sacrifices.

Our Book Service Department

It has long been the custom—and a very good one, too—for publishing houses to give their patrons the special service involved in supplying books on various subjects which are not printed by our presses nor carried regularly in stock.

We believe very much good has been done in this special way, and much more should be done in the future as our people come to value the possession of good books. The inspiration and information our own books and periodicals provide can never be complete; there is always to be had the product of brilliant and specially-trained minds, an acquaintance with which can but be educational to studious Saints.

We realize that our facilities for ordering books and locating titles and authors is much superior to those of the average church member. It is a pleasure to make these facilities of benefit to our growing church membership.

But there are a few things we must urge, in order to secure satisfaction to you and allow us to function in this capacity.

We ask of you only two special things. We will do the rest. We are willing to put in considerable time and even forego all the slight profits involved if we can feel that we are doing good but we want to avoid useless expenditure of time or money or both.

To save our time and insure your satisfaction, please observe carefully the following:

1. We must have the name of either the publisher or the author of the book you want.

If you are not sure about the title, but can give it approximately, we can find it by having the name of the publisher or author. If you know the title, be sure to state it.

It is unfair to us and yourselves to expect us to look through thousands of titles and names in a library of catalogues to find the name of a book you are not sure of when we have no clue to guide us.

2. We must have the money with the order.

If you are not sure about the price, send sufficient, and we will promptly refund the balance. We have to pay the publishers for the books and will not be responsible for orders that say, "Send me the bill and I will remit." The cost of keeping all these accounts totals a large amount, and we cannot afford it. In many cases the order means a positive loss in money to us. Remit with your order.

Most of the books will be sent you direct from the publisher to save postage. Some of these books bear the imprint of the former price. We must charge you according to present prices and postage rates. In no case will we "profiteer," but we must have the privilege of protecting ourselves.

The same rules apply to all our own church publications. We do a strictly cash business and must insist that cash be sent with all orders.

If our customers will observe these simple requests, we are sure we can help them very materially and be glad to do so.

J. A. Koehler, Manager
HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE
Lamoni, Iowa

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8:31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2:36.

Volume 66

Lamoni, Iowa, October 1, 1919

Number 40

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

THE SPALDING ROMANCE THEORY

A very pretty "theory," and somewhat ingenious, but where is the evidence to support it?—D. H. Bays.

Barring the question of the hearsay character of the evidence, I believe that a case can be made out much stronger than the circumstantial evidence upon which many a man has been hung.—A. T. Schroeder.

This may be true, but it must be borne in mind that many an innocent man has been hung upon purely "circumstantial evidence." . . . I need not remind an experienced attorney that there is a vast difference between "hearsay evidence" and "circumstantial evidence." . . . The former Greenleaf peremptorily excludes. . . —D. H. Bays.

In his effort to explain the book of Mormon, the Reverend Bruce Kinney had recourse to the old Spalding romance theory. He was aware of the existence of the famous Solomon Spalding manuscript in Oberlin College, and the fact that it bears no resemblance to the Book of Mormon; but being unwilling to abandon the old, worn-out theory, he concluded that there was a second manuscript, an imaginary, enlarged revision of the first, which has never been discovered, and which served as a basis for the Book of Mormon. In this idea he joins a few others who of later years have tried to make it appear that there were two or even three of these Spalding manuscripts, and who probably would enlarge that number indefinitely, if necessary to bolster up their cause.

Briefly stated, the Spalding theory is to the effect that Solomon Spalding, who died in 1816, wrote a story about 1811, which he submitted to a publisher in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, some time prior to the close of 1814, and that Sidney Rigdon either stole or copied this manuscript, or that Joseph Smith stole or copied it after it passed from the hands of the publisher, according to the fancy of the one defending the theory, imagination not being hampered by facts or rules of evidence in this matter. (The widow of Spalding, who is put forward as a leading witness, says the manuscript was copied by Rigdon, and the original came back into her possession and was later given by her to Doctor Hurlbut—See Smucker's History of the Mormons.) The theory then runs to the effect that from this manuscript the Book of Mormon was concocted.

ORIGIN OF THIS CANARD

The Spalding theory was first exploited in 1834, in a book entitled Mormonism Unveiled, by E. D. Howe. Howe was a "Mormon hater" and was assisted in his work by Doctor Hurlbut, who was seeking revenge for having been excommunicated from the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints for indecent conduct. (See Church History, vol. 1, p. 294.)

Hurlbut at the time was so vindictive that it was necessary for the civil courts to put him under bonds to prevent him wounding or killing Joseph Smith. (See court records of Court of Common Pleas, Geauga County, Ohio, 1834.) A murderer at heart, foiled in his purpose to do physical injury, he found no means too foul for his use in assassinating character. Yet the results of his work are implicitly accepted by many writers of to-day.

Doctor Hurlbut secured the Spalding manuscript from the widow of Reverend Spalding and turned it over to Howe, as is shown by his testimony and the testimony of the widow. But Howe did not see fit to publish it, although to have done so would have been the surest way to have exposed the fraud, providing, of course, that his theory was correct. The fact that he did not do so was fatal evidence of the weakness of his position.

Instead of publishing the manuscript he contented himself with publishing affidavits from John Spalding (a brother of Solomon Spalding), Martha Spalding (John's wife), Henry Lake, John Miller, Aaron Wright, Oliver Smith, and one or two others who testified that they had heard the Spalding romance read and later heard the Book of Mormon read and discovered a striking resemblance between the two.

THE "MANUSCRIPT FOUND" COMES TO LIGHT

For many years the Spalding manuscript was lost sight of; but in 1885, Mr. L. L. Rice, who over forty years previously had purchased the Painesville Tele- graph from E. D. Howe, and had transferred the printing department, with type, press, and manuscripts to Honolulu, discovered this manuscript while going over old documents, in connection with his friend, President Fairchild, of Oberlin College.

They read the manuscript carefully and reached the very just conclusion that it could never have served as a basis for the Book of Mormon. The manuscript was delivered into the care of President Fairchild and was placed in the library of Oberlin College. Mr. Fairchild prepared under his own supervision an exact copy of this manuscript, which was published, and may be obtained from the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

This manuscript bore the following indorsement, signed by D. P. Hurlbut:

The writings of Solomon Spalding proved by Aaron Wright, Oliver Smith, John N. Miller and others. The testimonies of the above gentlemen are now in my possession.

Mr. Kinney claims that this manuscript does not bear the title of "Manuscript Found" on the title-page. Others have made the same criticism. This is explained by the fact that Spalding's widow says that the publisher urged him to make out a title-page and he refused. But in the very introduction of his work the author says that he translated it from manuscript found in a cave. This at once suggests and acknowledges the name by which it was known to the family and friends, so this trivial objection is removed.

DUBIOUS BUT "WILLING" WITNESSES

Thus we have traced the manuscript into the possession of E. D. Howe, among whose effects it was found by L. L. Rice. When Howe came to examine the manuscript he did not publish it, giving as an excuse that it did not read as he expected.

How, then, do we account for the fact that relatives and friends of Reverend Solomon Spalding testified that the Book of Mormon resembled his manuscript story?

Sometimes the human memory is treacherous. We have heard men and women of undoubted veracity in important cases before the civil courts squarely contradict their own testimony given at a preliminary hearing one year previous. A judge of one of the superior courts says that this is a common experience. It must be remembered that these men and women whose affidavits Howe used were testifying concerning a book that they had heard read more than twenty years before they testified. How many of our readers are competent to give accurate testimony regarding a novel that they casually heard read twenty or twenty-three years ago,—especially when there was nothing to lead them to think that they would ever be called upon to bear witness as to its character, and so did not particularly charge their minds with its contents?

They testified to the appearance of exactly similar names in both books. How easy for one who had heard Spalding's manuscript read twenty-two years previously to imagine that the word Mormon, appearing in the Book of Mormon, was identical with Mammoons, found in the Manuscript Found, especially as some of these witnesses remembered these names by the initial letter only,—as they declared that Spalding made peculiar initial letters.

Again, witnesses whose memory has been made hazy by the lapse of time can be very skillfully directed in their testimony, if they are properly handled by an unscrupulous attorney. These people were bitter enemies of the Saints. They hated the Book of Mormon and desired to destroy it. They were plastic witnesses. They were questioned by men who were seeking revenge and were very skillful in directing them in their testimony. This was brought out by an answer given by Mrs. McKinstry in an interview. She was asked:

When did you first think about the names in the Book of Mormon and the manuscript agreeing?

My attention was first called to it by some parties who asked me if I did not remember it, AND THEN I REMEMBERED THAT THEY WERE.—Braden-Kelley Debate, p. 82.

Thus by skillful questioning and careful direction, Hurlbut and Howe were able to get the kind of testimony that they wanted from these people who were trying to remember the contents of a manuscript that they had heard read more than twenty years before. They were obliging but unreliable witnesses. Upon such a flimsy basis does the Spalding romance theory rest.

NO MANUSCRIPT BY SPALDING COULD SERVE AS A BASIS FOR BOOK OF MORMON

One has but to read this manuscript to be convinced that it never served as a basis for the Book of Mormon. Nor will it do to think that any revised copy of that manuscript by the same author might have served for such a basis. The personality of an author appears in every book that he may write. Those who read this Manuscript Found will soon conclude that no book ever written by Reverend Solomon Spalding could possibly have served as a basis for the Book of Mormon.

Anyone with brains enough to work Solomon Spalding's writings over and produce such a book as the Book of Mormon would not have needed any help from Spalding's pen in the first instance

MEN WHO HAVE ABANDONED THE SPALDING THEORY.

Really intelligent and careful students of the question have completely abandoned the Spalding story. David Utter is reported to have said:

No one who has ever carefully read the Book of Mormon could fail to see that it never in any part was written for a romance. . . . Now, at last, the Spalding manuscript has been found, and it rests secure in the library of Oberlin College.—The Latter Day Saints, by Kauffman, p. 29.

Reverend D. H. Bays, who studied the question for forty years, and was hailed by our Christian friends as a "child of Providence," whose book, they assured us, was absolutely reliable as a textbook, says:

The long-lost Spalding story has at last been unearthed, and is now on deposit in the library of Oberlin College at Oberlin, Ohio, and may be examined by anyone who may take the pains to call on President Fairchild, of that institution. . . .

The Spalding story is a failure. Do not attempt to rely upon it—it will let you down.

The entire theory connecting Sidney Rigdon and the Spalding romance with Joseph Smith in originating the Book of Mormon must be abandoned.—Doctrine and Dogmas of Mormonism, pp. 24, 25.

President Fairchild, of Oberlin College, says:

The theory of the origin of the Book of Mormon in the traditional manuscript of Solomon Spalding, will probably have to be relinquished. . . . Some other explanation of the origin of the Book of Mormon must be found, if any explanation is required.—Manuscript Found, pp. 5, 6.

And last, but not least, comes the new Encyclopedia Britannica (11th edition), in which we read:

It was a contention of the early anti-Mormons, now HOWEVER DISCREDITED, that the Book of Mormon as published by Smith was rewritten with few changes from an unpublished romance, The Manuscript Found, written before 1812 by Solomon Spalding. . . . There is no actual proof that Rigdon lived in Pittsburg, or was employed in a printer's shop there as early as when Spalding's "copy" must have been left with the printer; and there is NO EVIDENCE THAT RIGDON KNEW ANYTHING OF MORMONISM UNTIL AFTER THE PUBLICATION OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.—Encyclopedia Britannica, vol. 18, p. 843.

D. H. BAYS ON THE IMAGINARY SECOND MANUSCRIPT

The new fangled theory that there were two or three manuscripts is perhaps best answered by one of the ablest of our opponents, Mr. D. H. Bays, who in the Christian Evangelists for November 2, 1899, in reply to one A. T. Schroeder, one of his own yoke mates, but an advocate of the "three manuscript" theory, wrote as follows:

I was, at the time my book was written, fully aware that such assertions had repeatedly been made, but as I have never been able to obtain the testimony of a SINGLE WITNESS in support of the claim, I have unhesitatingly dismissed it as an IDLE SPECULATION.

You assure me that the first of these manuscripts "simply outlined the story and is the one now in Oberlin." The second, you assert with equal gravity, "was prepared for the printer," while in the third "the plot of the story changed as to place from which Indians came here and the names changed to suit the change in the plot"; and this, you assure me, is the one which furnishes the basis for the Book of Mormon." This is a very PRETTY "THEORY," and SOME-

WHAT INGENIOUS, but WHERE IS THE EVIDENCE TO SUPPORT IT? . . .

I confess myself not a little surprised that an attorney, trained in a school of justice to weigh and determine the value and admissibility of evidence, should ask a candid public to decide so grave a matter upon the bare assertion of an INTERESTED PARTY, without the SHADOW OF EVIDENCE to support it.

If "three manuscripts" ever existed, why not produce the evidence to prove it? Why not induce that library of "over one thousand books and pamphlets" to yield up some of its hidden treasures of knowledge upon this point, and settle this mooted question once for all? Mormonism for more than half a century has been demanding the production of the Manuscript Found that it might be compared with the Book of Mormon. Since the discovery of that now historic document, and the further unquestionable fact that it bears not the slightest resemblance to the Book of Mormon, the wonderful discovery has been made that Solomon Spalding wrote "three manuscripts!" While you affirm very dogmatically, as others have done before you, that Spalding wrote three manuscripts, yet like your predecessors, you offer not a SINGLE FACT in support of this claim. In the face of these significant facts, you with characteristic pertinacity assert:

"If you had made any investigation worth mentioning, you would have found that the absolute identity of the very unusual names in the Book of Mormon with the second Spalding Manuscript was originally one of the principal evidences of the connection between the two."

Here we have the assumption that a "second Spalding Manuscript" actually existed, and from this assumed premise you jump to the conclusion that the names were "absolutely identical" with those in the Book of Mormon. My objections to this statement are:

1. The existence of a second manuscript is assumed, not proved.
2. If such manuscript really existed, no proof is offered to show the "absolute identity" of the names with those in the Book of Mormon.

Hence, until you establish the alleged fact that such "second Spalding Manuscript" had a bona fide existence, and that the "very unusual names" found in the Book of Mormon are "absolutely identical" with those found in the so-called "second Spalding Manuscript," a fair-minded, just public will reject this new-fangled "Spalding Manuscript theory" AS THE MEREST VAGARY OF A PREJUDICED MIND, AND WHOLLY WITHOUT THE SLIGHTEST FOUNDATION IN FACT. I do not say that the "three manuscripts" had no actual existence; but I do say that if such manuscripts ever had anything more than an imaginary existence somebody knows it; and if somebody knows it, why not have that somebody step upon the witness stand and boldly testify to the fact? But why pursue this question further, since you admit that it is only a "theory"—a theory, too, supported by such a class of evidence which, as a lawyer, you well know would BE REJECTED BY ANY COURT IN THIS BROAD LAND OF OURS. Acknowledging the fact you say:

"I can not establish these facts except by hearsay evidence, which Greenleaf would bar."

In concluding this paragraph you remark that:

"Barring the question of the hearsay character of the evidence, I believe a case can be made out much stronger than the circumstantial evidence upon which many a man has been hung." (Italics mine.)

This may be true, but it must be borne in mind that many an innocent man has been hung upon purely "circumstantial evidence," and it is a principle of law from which there is no deviation that a guilty man may better escape the punishment due to his crimes than that an innocent man should suffer the extreme penalty of the law. Hence, juries are always instructed to give the prisoner the benefit of a doubt. But, of course, I need not remind an experienced attorney that there is a vast difference between "hearsay evidence" and "circumstantial evidence." The former Greenleaf peremptory excludes.—Journal of History, vol. 2, p. 94.

A SPIDER'S WEB OF SUPPOSITIONS

The extremely tenuous nature of the Spalding romance theory in its present form is best shown by permitting it to be stated by its own opponents. Mr. Charles Shook, who was advertised just recently as the man destined to shake our work to its foundation, may have that honor. He admits the existence of the Spalding manuscript in Oberlin College, but thinks there may have been another one enlarged and "polished" up. Hear him:

It is POSSIBLE that Spalding, in polishing and finishing his story, REWROTE IT, and that it was the story rewritten which was submitted to Patterson and which fell into Rigdon's hands; while the old manuscript MAY have been placed in a trunk, with other papers of Spalding's, which was sent, after his death, to the home of his wife's brother, W. H. Sabine, in Onondaga County, New York. Smith worked as a teamster for Sabine in 1823, and some have CLAIMED that he either copied or stole this manuscript. The first is very unreasonable, the second is POSSIBLE IF SUCH MANUSCRIPT WAS IN SABINE'S POSSESSION.—Cumora Revisited, by Shook, p. 28.

Grover Cleveland would call these men "ifists." According to him the "ifist," lost in the woods without fire or food, said, "If we had a fire, and if we had some eggs, we would have ham and eggs, if we had the ham."

Mr. Shook argues that IF Spalding ever rewrote his manuscript, and IF he submitted it to the publisher, Rigdon MAY have stolen it; and IF this did not happen, Smith MAY have copied it while in the possession of Sabine, and IF he did not copy it, he MAY have stolen it, IF, last of all, SABINE EVER HAD SUCH A MANUSCRIPT.

These men have gone back to the original Christian or Campbellite proposition, "IF we have authority to preach we have authority to baptize."

We can not too heartily thank Mr. Shook for his very ingenuous statement of the case.

REQUIESCAT IN PACE

Mr. Bays very nicely demolished this spider's web of guesses. His was the conclusion of a very close student of the subject, who certainly was not prejudiced in favor of the Book of Mormon; in fact he was eager enough to defeat the Book of Mormon, but in this instance he was more fair, or perhaps less desperate than those grave robbers who would violate the peaceful and well-earned repose of the dead and long-buried Spalding romance theory of the origin of the Book of Mormon.

Gentlemen, it has been dead too long, and, unlike Lazarus, never having had Jesus for a friend, it can not hope for a successful reincarnation.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE RIVER MORONI

The following clipping from The Denver Post of July 30, 1919, is of interest to our readers because of its incidental reference to the Moroni River in Dutch Guiana. We note that this river is spelled "Marowynne" on Rand-McNally's map, 1908. In the Encyclopedia Britannica, however, eleventh edition, volume 12, 1910, it is plainly spelled "Maroni." This river apparently rises in French Guiana, and then forms the border between French and Dutch Guiana. This probably explains the securing of concessions from both France and Holland.

"Sailing with $1,000,000 worth of machinery and a party of fifty mining engineers and workers, Mr. and Mrs. Perry Tiffany, prominent in New York society, Tuesday left for Dutch Guiana to retrieve a gold deposit Mr. Tiffany said he discovered on the Moroni River eighteen years ago.

"The secret of the discovery has been carefully guarded pending the obtaining in France and Holland of concessions giving him mining privileges for 100 miles along the river, Mr. Tiffany said."

CANNING IS RECENT

In connection with the Word of Wisdom, an article which appeared in The Literary Digest for July 5 is of interest, for it states that the tin can was not developed until 1810, but as stated by The Exporter:

No very great advance was made in the canning industry in the United States prior to 1855, attention being given principally to sea food, which in a fresh condition could not be transported inland with safety. At that time the cities were small and fruits and vegetables of all kinds were grown in their immediate vicinity and delivered fresh by wagon. There did not exist then the demand for something out of season or from other lands that has since developed; but aside from this, living conditions were not such as to compel the use of foods in concentrated form and free from waste.

It was toward the close of the Civil War, 1861-5, that the superiority of canned foods over those which were dried, salted, or pickled began to be appreciated. The soldiers in the detention camps and in hospitals, though only meagerly supplied, learned of their excellence and value and subsequently carried the information home with them into every section of the country. Domestic and commercial canning at once began to increase.

From this it should be evident that when the Word of Wisdom was given, there was no such a thing as canned fruit; and as we have pointed out before, there was in fact very little preserved fruit, either dried or otherwise. This should naturally be

(Continued on page 973)

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

"ELIJAH" AS THE RESTORER

Such a proposition as is here suggested seems to fill the ordinary mind with a decided negation—even to the point of rejecting or ignoring the wonderful promise given by Christ himself to his three disciples on the Mount of Transfiguration, as recorded in Matthew 17; and to use a phrase that is commonly used by would-be evangelists of to-day, "There is nothing else to be done, for Christ finished it all on Calvary." This, to such otherwise well-intentioned people, constitutes the sum and substance of the "faith once delivered to the Saints."

This perverted view of the gospel of the kingdom was brought to my notice quite recently in the city of Glasgow, Scotland, when I had the opportunity of taking the platform in the Tolbooth Hall, (headquarters of a nonsectarian mission) for four occasions in one week. Once I occupied for the whole time, and thrice shared the time with a preacher of the Open Brethren, who gave utterance to the foregoing sentiments.

"Elias truly shall first come and restore all things as the prophets have written," is plain and terse enough to rivet the attention of any seeker after truth. And yet the generality of Bible students have either misstudied or not studied this vital point at all. It is a vital point in the interest of Bible truth, as much to Latter Day Saints as to others, for it is the central point connecting its prophetic aspect and its actual fulfillment.

The Prophet Malachi, as the mouthpiece of God, says:

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me; and the Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant whom ye delight in; behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth?

This evidently cannot refer to the first advent of Christ, for everyone then living abode the day of his coming, and stood when he appeared; proving there was to be another appearing in the flesh.

This is further amplified by his last utterance, as if to dispose of the matter finally, in the words:

Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord. And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse.

Now the mission of Christ was to reveal to mankind the Father's pleasure concerning his kingdom, then and in the latter days. The Jews themselves were in hourly expectation of their own kingdom being reestablished. But just as Malachi describes, the priests and rulers of the whole house of Israel had departed from their first love, had forgotten the covenant made with the wife of their youth. The true worship of the God of Israel had given place to idolatry, superstition, and priestcraft. So that in order that the ancient covenant might still be made good, it was necessary for the unchangeable God to send his messenger before him, to prepare his way and make his paths straight.

The first path which led to Calvary was heralded by John the Baptist, whom Christ declared had come as, or in the spirit and power of Elias. He was a man sent from God; a fiery messenger sent from the realms of glory to inhabit the body of clay prepared for him in a miraculous manner, through the agency of Zacharias and Elizabeth. And we read, he was holy from his mother's womb.

Truly a messenger of light, for as Elijah was caught up into heaven in a chariot of fire, descriptive of both light and power, so did the voice crying in the wilderness, "Repent ye for the kingdom of heaven is at hand," burn like fire in the souls of those who resorted to him, and with such power as to make them heed his message even to the point of repentance and baptism.

But when he whom he had heralded actually came, priestcraft reasserted itself, and they did unto John "whatsoever they listed," and persuaded the people that it was impossible for their Messiah to come in the person of the son of a humble carpenter. And although he did establish his kingdom amongst the scribes and Pharisees, together with the true Melchisedec priesthood, it was all lost again in the great apostasy which supervened, and so it became necessary for a restoration, and for a messenger to come again and restore all things.

Whatever God has found and declared necessary to do in order to fulfill his plan and purpose, that he has always done and will do. But his words, "Elias truly shall first come and restore all things," leaves no room to doubt that something was going to be lost which would be restored again.

The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent seeketh to take it by force from the day of John the Baptist until now, is significant in itself, without his and the apostles' prophetic warnings of the same. The 1260 years sojourn of the woman, kingdom, gospel, and priesthood in the wilderness, was indeed accompanied with darkness over all the earth, and gross darkness in the minds of the people—a great famine not of bread and water, but that of hearing the word of the Lord.

The people groped in darkness, and prayed for the light, fire and power of truth. Sick and tired of the strong delusion that God had sent upon them that they believed a lie, also to their undoing. But through all that terrible period of darkness, God was true; his purpose unchanged as it always was; and Christ's promise that "all things should be restored" by Elijah the prophet was fulfilled by that glorious angel flying in the midst of heaven having (bringing back again, restoring) the everlasting gospel to preach to all the dwellers upon earth, and to every nation, kindred, tongue and people, crying with a loud voice, "Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him who made heaven and earth and the fountains of water."

Can anyone doubt that his judgment has come? Are not the terrible scenes of bloodshed on the battlefields of Europe, the gross departure from the common laws of decency, the corrupt practices permeating every class of society, the excessive love of pleasure, the cry of the poor and downtrodden, and the widows and orphans, a sufficient indication that as it was in the days of Noah so it is also now in these days?

And then, what? Simply, that the Lord whom we seek shall suddenly come to his temple. But who shall abide his coming, and who will stand when he appeareth? Surely not those who reject the prophet's warning, the burning, fiery message of the restoring angel, whom Christ declared would be Elijah the prophet.

It is fitting that Elijah should be chosen of God to be the actual messenger, for, "He maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flaming fire." Both Moses and Elijah had some experience of flaming fire. Moses when God appeared to him in the burning bush; and Elijah in the chariot and horses of fire. Consider also, how he caused fire to rain down from heaven, and the other miracles attending his ministry as a prophet of God; the raising of the widow's son to life, the cruse of oil failing not, being fed by ravens, the waters of Jordan parting by smiting them with his mantle, and the positive knowledge that he was about to be taken up into heaven from Elisha, and finally his appearance with Moses in the Holy Mount as a spirit being.

It is no small wonder that Elijah prayed for a double portion of his spirit and power to fall on him, such spirit and power could only be identified with a true prophet and minister of God, and so John the Baptist came in the spirit and power of Elias, with the scorching rays of the baptismal door into the kingdom searching out the hearts and consciences of men, especially they of a proud and rebellious spirit.

What more natural then, if all this spirit, power and authority, being lost to mankind, even after its confirmation and ratification by our Lord and his apostles, should need to be restored again, in order that the ancient covenant, as well as the new covenant should still be consummated; Israel's Messiah acknowledged as king, the priesthood reestablished as ministers in ruling the nations with a rod of iron, and the church triumphant?

The effect that the angel message was to have upon the faithful in heart, was to cause the fathers to turn their hearts to the children, and the children to their fathers.

The fathers of Israel, like Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the holy prophets and patriarchs, had their vision enlarged, which enabled them to see the advent of Christ and the restoration of all things.

Paul assures us that all who believe with faithful Abraham are counted as children of promise, the seed of Abraham, children of adoption, and joint heirs with Christ in his kingdom. Such children do indeed turn their hearts to their adopted father, and look forward with rejoicing hope to the time, now not far off, when they will meet them, and fall upon each others' necks and kiss each other, and dwell forever as the pure in heart—even Zion.

It is very certain that if this condition of things did not obtain amongst the very few of earth's children, the reverse would be manifested, and God would smite the earth again with a curse. Thank God for Elijah, who was instrumental in turning aside the curse, and bringing to us a blessing instead, by reason of which, in spite of, and in the midst of such awful visitations now on the earth, we are able, if we wait upon the Lord, to renew our strength, and mount up with wings as eagles.

It appears then, that as God's kingdom has been set up again and a plan of salvation formulated, and an effectual door opened by way of admission into that kingdom, as Christ declared, there is still a work for everyone to do. He finished his own work, or rather that part which he came to earth to do in such an efficient manner. He is still working for us as a meditator with the Father, and in preparing places for those who are accounted as the seed of Abraham, by reason of their obedience and observance of those "good works" which prove and make manifest their faith, just as Abraham, by the work of offering up his son Isaac, manifested his faith.

Then according to his own prophecy, while we are working while the day lasts, and just prior to his second coming, Elijah has a work to do by visiting this earth and restoring all that has been lost. So that it is safe to assert with all reverence, and having a due regard to the efficacy of the cross, that our Lord did not "finish it all," thereby leaving nothing for us to do but just believe; for if that were so, the devils would be justified, for they believe, yet they tremble, just as the nations will tremble when they realize the result of the work performed by Elijah, the prophet and the restorer.

WILLIAM MOORE.

THE PLEA OF A PROPHET

(Sermon by Elder S. S. Smith, delivered at Spokane, Washington.)

The lesson of the hour is found in the prophecy of Isaiah, in the fifty-fifth chapter, and from the first to the fifth verses, inclusive:

Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price. Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness. Incline your ear, and come unto me; hear, and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David. Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and a commander to the people.

The text will be the first verse of this lesson:

Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price.

The subject for the morning is the plea of a prophet. The word of Isaiah here chronicled in this lesson and text were uttered at a time of great perplexity when the national life of Judah as well as the religious life was at a very low ebb. The reference here given from the prophetic impulse of the prophet, which so beautifully carries away the mind has reference to the gospel and the coming Redeemer, and no one need be at a loss in applying at least some things he has said in his book, to the mission, character, and events in the noble life of the Son of God. Isaiah, the prophet of high dignity, whom we rate as the prince of Jewish prophets, here extolled the excellencies of the plan of salvation as given by Christ. This text is characteristic of his entire prophecy which abounds in transcendent dignity, and affords the finest models of poetic imagery. He is sublime, forceful, and ornamental, with which he unites dignity and variety. His sense of true religion is revealed in the happy remedy by which Judah may be soothed, cheered, and their thirst assuaged in the midst of their national distress. In the metaphorical allusions here given we see a portrayal of the gospel light that was to come like a bright star that was to ascend at a time of universal and intolerable darkness. The chapter gives promise of Christ, and here calls backslidden Israel to faith and repentance, and gives promise of pardon, and speaks of the ultimate joy and blessing that will come to them and their land. In the discussion of this text, which we attempt this morning, we will make three classifications: First, the catholicity of the address; second, the commodities announced; and third, the benevolent invitation.

THE CATHOLICITY OF THE ADDRESS

That the gospel is a universal one the prophet here seemed to indicate, for it is stated it is to "every one that thirsteth." It could hardly apply to the Jewish government and the Mosaic law, for that government and law were restricted in their operation to the distinct blood of Israel. (Here Genesis 17: 7-14; Leviticus 20: 24-26; Deuteronomy 7: 1-4; Exodus 19: 5, 6, and Ezra 9: 2, were read.) The gospel is different from this, and is a free message of grace to all who will take advantage of its privileges, for there was no restrictions to any nation, kindred or tongue, in fact the commission was to "all the world" and to "every creature." (Matthew 28: 19, 20; Mark 16: 15; and Acts 10: 34, 35, were here read.) We cannot doubt the Prophet Isaiah in the text read made reference to the gospel which is the revelation of the grace of God to fallen man, and we shall properly apply it that way. The statement of the text we believe applies to all who feel the need of Christ and his salvation.

The prophet here uses the term thirsteth as applying to those in need and desiring the gospel. Thirst we define as a painful natural sensation, occasioned by the absence of moisture from the physical system. It is a sensation that is attended by a vehement desire to partake. The term is often used in scripture in a metaphorical sense expressive of any strong mental desire, and this desire, like the sensation of thirst is accompanied with pain.

Now I verily believe a sense of guilt and sinful perversity before God causes mental distress, and under its dominion our true enjoyment ceases, fear possesses the mind and the life is embittered. In this condition we sense our true state, and our heart seeks repentance, and "thirsteth" after righteousness. When the heart laden with guilt commences to seek favor, and repent, it many times is accompanied with vehement desire, God's mercy will be earnestly solicited, the soul will earnestly entreat, and "as the hart panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God." As thirst is a sensation of pain, so also a sense of sin is many times a state of great mental distress. Sin is a disease; in fact it truly has been compared to the "leprosy of the soul." Sin makes life wretched, and brings it into a state of captivity, and many times the shackles of this bondage is as bands of iron that bruise the flesh, and gladly would we be free from its servitude.

The heinousness of sin is made apparent by the fact it is a violation of God's injunction, "thou shalt not"; but it is also that which is in antagonism to the true instincts of the soul itself, and when its domineering sway is permitted we will see a loss of power, decay of love, enfeebling of the will, and an atrophy of the soul.

This address is made to all those without previous station or character, in fact it is to "every one that thirsteth." No matter how unworthy or debased we may be, no difference from what rank, age, or clime, or what color, people, or tongue, the statement is, "every one that thirsteth." We are of the opinion it does not prevent one's salvation, how deep the individual may be found in sin when the gospel reaches him; so long as he makes a commendable effort, there is a possibility of the salvation of that man. The statement of Isaiah is, "though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." (Isaiah 1:18.) Christ the great Shepherd, says, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled with the Holy Ghost," (Matthew 5:8) and "God so loved the world, that he gave his Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish; but have everlasting life." (John 3:16.) Christ asserted the primary object of his great mission was not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance, and let me say this, the truth of Christianity and the redeeming grace of God that has made its benefits possible to us, are in unison, and they must work in and through humanity.

My effort is not made so much to the just, as to the unjust this day. The worst offenders before God are not those who give an occasional outburst of gross transgression, forming an exception to the ordinary tenor of life, bad and dismal as such a wicked person really is; but the worst and most fatal sinners are those who perform the small continuous vices which root underground and sap the soul. A little spark many times causes a great conflagration, just as the little sins are the pioneers of hell, and will lead to the downfall of the individual. We should remember the old adage, "white ants can pick a carcass clean sooner than a lion will."

COMMODITIES ANNOUNCED

The commodities announced according to the text, are, "water," "milk," and "wine." We will attempt an exposition of each of these terms and show the fitness of the metaphors. First, the invitation is given "come ye to the waters," and this we believe is becoming appropriate as applying to the gospel. I desire to call your attention to several scriptures that voices this sentiment:

But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in a well of water springing up into everlasting life.—John 4:16.

In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink.—John 7:37.

For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them into living fountains of waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.—Revelation 7:17.

As water is essential to assuage thirst of the physical man, and without it he will die, so also we need the true waters of life to sustain and quench the thirst of the spiritual man. In vain shall we attempt to attain to personal holiness while we are indifferent to the water of life. Then another thing, water is the medium of purification, and when used on the outer man it has a cleansing effect, and also it is used as the liquid through which we must pass when the cleansing of the body is desired through the act of Christian baptism. Early there was "a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness" (Zechariah 13:1), and I am persuaded the privileges of that fountain are still open to-day.

"Milk" is a commodity recommended in the text, and by it we are to understand it refers to the nourishing features of the gospel, and Paul justifies this conclusion, for he compares some of his disciples to "babes in Christ," and he said of them, "I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it neither yet now are ye able." (1 Corinthians 3:2 and Hebrews 5:12.)

Peter, too, exhorts the faithful, "As newborn babes desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye might grow thereby." (1 Peter 2:2.) We would understand the simplest forms of declaration, and interpretation of the gospel, which are calculated to convert the sinner, can be referred to as the "milk," but as the judgment of mind becomes more mature, and the reasoning powers must be employed to think and judge on the more profound questions of the gospel, then we are in that condition that we need "meat."

The metaphor of "a land flowing with milk and honey" refers to a land of excellent fertility and productiveness, and the term, "suck the milk of the Gentiles" refers to the fact they were to have given to them the sustenance of the Gentiles. Anyway, the metaphor of the text is very fitting and signifies how the soul of man is to be thus nourished and strengthened.

"Wine" as referred to in the text, "buy wine and milk without money and without price" metaphorically refers to the animating and inspiring influences of the gospel, by which we are filled with consolation, felicity, and even rapture. Particularly is this true when we meet to partake of the bread and wine, emblematic of the body and blood of our blessed Lord. (Genesis 14:18; Mark 14:25.)

By this same Prophet Isaiah it is stated, "and in this mountain shall the Lord of hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined." In no sense because this metaphor of wine is used does it give justification for the use of strong intoxicating wine as a beverage, for in that sense "wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging: and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise."

We then have portrayed in the text that which is life, food, and felicity, and all this means safety, comfort and happiness for God's children. In the gospel we believe is all this, for it is truly life, food, and felicity, and the eternal glorification of spirit and body in the glorified earth.

THE BENEVOLENT INVITATION

The invitation is stated thus, "come to the waters" and "come buy wine and milk." This water, milk and wine when assimilated by us, will make us "wise unto salvation," and delightfully acceptable to God. These commodities we will find in the Holy Scriptures, and in a preached gospel, and the word God will speak through his legitimate channel through his prophet to his church from time to time. It is the word of our salvation. They flow out through the divine ordinances of the gospel, and in coming to them we must come humbly and truly repentant, and knowing there is no help elsewhere. In partaking we will experience a change of character and grow into the divine likeness, and by reason of such transformation and growth, we will become children of God and of the household of faith, heirs of God and joint heirs of Jesus Christ. When we come let us trust in the precious name of Christ, for there is no other name under heaven whereby we can be saved.

We are here told, "come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk." The invitation "come" is here extended three times in the text. The noble words here expressed are tantamount to saying, we must legitimately secure the truth, and then assimilate it, and make it a part of our daily lives. We must really and truly possess and enjoy in our very nature the great blessings of truth, in fact we are told to "buy the truth, and sell it not," for the very moment we dispose of it the bargain is bad. It enjoins us to surrender to the holy service, for the word says, "My son, give me thy heart, and let thine eyes observe my ways" (Proverbs 23:26) and "if any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me" (Matthew 16:25), and again, "Come, for all things are now ready." (Luke 16:25.) What an appeal to the human heart, and who can resist it?

The true man is the great wise man of duty, who is armed with truth, and is supported by the smile of God. He meets life's perils with fortitude, yet with a trustful spirit. The way of duty is often rugged, but it is a king's highway, and always leads to promotion and power.

Sin is the great destroyer of the lives and happiness of men, and the greatest need of the world is salvation from it. A large part of the poverty and suffering of the times is due to perversity of God's ways. We know no one will ever turn from a course of evil so long as he loves sin better than righteousness. As ministers it is our duty to lead by teaching men to hate sin and love righteousness. Some are deterred from wrongdoing merely by the fact of the fear of punishment. This is not an ideal motive to prompt men to right doing, but the motive of righteous living should be the genuine hatred of sin, and a real love of righteousness for righteousness' sake itself. It is for this reason we have need to heed the great invitation and take this food, of water, milk, and wine, and thus nourishment and strength will be realized. It might be well to here leave the realm of metaphor and consider the real and practical truth of the ancient faith, that our duties be specifically defined, that we may clearly know the terms of salvation more definitely.

THE TERMS OF SALVATION

Our coming to Christ implies obedience to him, and if we accept him as our Lord and master we must do what he says and obey his commandments, for, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" and "Blessed are they that do his commandments." If we come to Christ acceptably, with a broken heart and a contrite spirit, with a heart changed in its affections and purpose, turned from the love of sin to the love of God, we must place ourselves under his government and do his will. Before we come to Christ in obedience we must know how he would have us come, for no man was ever permitted to come to God in his own way. Men are not permitted to elect their own methods of approaching God, and in every age they have been admonished to approach him in faith; and if in faith he must come as directed.

Theory is one thing and practice is another, just so faith is one thing and works is another. The statement of James is, "Faith without works is dead," so we know by this that the two are inseparable. All human actions have some end, as well as some knowledge of the end sought, and of the means whereby it may be attained. Unless a man believes, and is persuaded that a certain thing is good for him and consequently desirable and suitable, and the intended means which he proposes to use are likely to bring the result, he will sit still and do nothing. Without faith it is impossible to do anything, for he that believes nothing, (if there could be such a one) will do nothing. Faith is the spring of much human happiness. It is the dynamo of human activity, and it moves nearly all the machinery of life.

What is it that leads the farmer to harness his horses and hitch to his plow, and commence to follow the frost-laden earth, when there is no bud bursting that manifests life on the naked trees, or no spear of grass or tender flower that bespeaks animation and life, or no song bird is singing in the hedge rows or frosty skies? I will tell you, it is the faith he has in the regularity of nature's laws, and the ordinances of an Omnipotent Mind, and he believes nature is not dead but sleepeth; and he thus plows and sows with a strong expectation that he will yet reap, and the bare and sear fields will yet be green with growing grain, and will be happy in autumn with the horn of bounty gathered by the sun-tanned reapers. The farmer is a man of faith, and so is the miner, the explorer, and the seaworn mariner. Think of the latter who ventures his ship on a trackless sea plowed by many a keel, yet without a road upon its bosom, with neither a star nor landmark to guide him, yet he has no fear. When the last green hill of his native land passes from sight and he is alone on the mighty deep, he is still and composed, for he has faith in the compass, and his vessel may roll and toss and plunge, the compass needle still points true to its magnet. So it is in the Christian warfare, faith leads us to the good works of the law of the gospel, and we still see with a vision of faith the glorious harbor in the bay of safety.

Since the will of God is conditional, we should be deeply concerned to know the conditions. Suppose your rich uncle should die and leave you by will his large estate, how would you proceed in court in regard to it? If that will were conditional, would you not be very careful to know the conditions and to conform to them? Would you comply to some of them and let the other conditions go, and then claim inheritance? It would be the height of presumption on your part to claim the inheritance while even one of the conditions upon which it was bestowed was not honored. Would you go into court and urge that some of these stipulated conditions were nonessential? You know you would not. It is strange that so many are unconcerned to the conditions on which God gives the great inheritance to his children. I hope we will not treat our heavenly Father as we would not treat our fellowman. The stipulated terms upon which salvation is predicated we find are, faith, repentance, baptism, and the laying on of hands, together with a knowledge of the resurrection, and eternal judgment. (Hebrews 6:1, 2.)

FAITH

The divine philosophy incorporates the principle of faith, and thus the way of salvation is the way of faith. Faith in Christ is made a condition of salvation, hence a condition of the great inheritance. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned"; and "God so loved the world that he gave his Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish; but have everlasting life," and "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved," and "without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." These and many other scriptures show conclusively that faith in Christ and God the Father is a condition of salvation.

Salvation is not to be learned by reading through huge piles of books, for if the gospel consists of a huge mass of learning, how could the ignorant and unlearned be saved. This is not to be considered an objection to education, for education is very desirable, and the more we have of the right kind the better we will be; but the thought is, education and scholarly learning if lacking, does not prohibit us from gaining acceptance with God. Yet, ignorant we might be, there are these plain principles of the gospel we must know, and a wish to comply thereto before salvation is assured.

Faith differs from presumption in that faith is based on "assurance" (Hebrews 11:1) while presumption is confidence without sufficient warrant. Faith in God carries with it belief in God's declarations and the evidence that prove his existence. This may refer to what has been declared in the past on divine authority (Hebrews 11:3), or to the transactions of the present (Hebrews 11:6), or the promises yet unrealized (Hebrews 11:7-10). Faith in Christ is the reliance on him for the redemption promised, founded on the declarations he has made in the past, those of the present, and those relating to the future, pertaining to the revealed plan of salvation.

In respect to its reality and efficacy it may be called a "living faith" or a "dead faith" as the case might be. Dead or unproductive faith, is different from the truth, in that it has no works to demonstrate its potentiality, while a "living faith" has works of action that show it is alive. "Saving faith" is that faith that has respect to the commandments, and has executed these requirements, and has received the joy of blessing in confirmation. To "live by faith" and to "walk by faith" is to have the life governed by the doctrines of the gospel, and the influences of the Spirit abounds and regulates his judgment, his affections, his conduct, and brings a living knowledge of his acceptance with God. We are to have faith in God, in Christ, in the gospel, in the promises of the gospel, and I might include, faith in one another, or the great brotherhood.

REPENTANCE

"Repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost," and "the times of this ignorance God winked at, but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent," and "except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish;" these statements and many others given by inspiration ought to satisfy the most exacting mind that it is a condition of salvation.

Repentance defined, is that deep sorrow of mind and soul which comes from a sense of sins committed, or the realization of vicious habits contracted by continued sinning, arising from a remorse of conscience, predicated upon a conviction of guilt, which produces a desire for deliverance. It is needless to say repentance requires a genuine change of life in reformation by an observance of all the gospel commandments. It means to stop doing wrong, and to turn around and look back at the errors committed in the past, and then to retrace the steps to the place where we were conscious we commenced to wander, or to entertain false views of God's rule. It is in fact an absolute change in the whole man in purpose of heart from his former ways of wicked life. It is such a change as changes him in purpose, and desire, from all sins, and that will readily make amends in restitution so far as it is possible for the sins of the past. There is no forgiveness upon the part of our heavenly Father until there is sorrow for sin, and a genuine reformation of life, and an obedience to the other principles of the gospel.

BAPTISM

The believing world generally concede that faith and repentance are terms of salvation, yet they deny a like position to baptism. The word is as clear on this principle as the other. Christ says, "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved," and Peter declared in boldness, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins," and again, "Baptism doth also now save us."

Baptism by immersion is for the remission of sins, and in mode it has no other meaning according to the original Greek only to dip, to plunge and submerge. It is a holy, symbolical act, performed in the name of Jesus Christ the glorified Lord of the church, by an authorized representative, to a truly penitent candidate, by which the one who receives it in faith gains a forgiveness of and a purification from sin. Our first and chief want is a forgiveness of our sins, and baptism is the sacrament of cleansing and unites in covenant with God. It is one of the initiatory rites that leads to citizenship in the church of Christ, and is founded on the Lord's express command, and preceeded by the call to repent, and believe, and the result remission and full pardon. God cannot approve of the image of the wicked one in us, for he hates sin and cannot look upon it with the least degree of allowance, and it is only when he sees his own image reflected in us that he can smile upon it and pronounce it very good. By this initiatory rite we are "baptized into Christ" and thus "put on Christ," and then "if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature."

LAYING ON OF HANDS

The "birth of the Spirit" is as essential as the "birth of water," and the action by which this is brought to man is through the laying on of hands of an authorized minister. The mode by which spiritual influences act upon the normal agent is through this ordinance. This ordinance is declared to be one of the principles of the doctrine of Christ (Hebrews 6:2), and if we have the perfect law (James 1:25) in operation to-day, we cannot evade the responsibility of this principle. The ordinance, however, which we regard as a means to an end, is not so important as the gift of the Holy Spirit itself.

"Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost," and again, "when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them," and still again, "Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of hands of the presbytery," and these and other passages show conclusively that this principle like all the rest is a principle that cannot be discarded with impunity.

The Spirit of God in its operation on the mind of man does not create new elements of mind, and no new principles of mental action, but it is the divine Spirit that transfuses itself through the natural operation of human intellect, of human sensibilities, and of human will, so gently yet so potently that the mind is quickened and the understanding enlarged, and thus "the mind of God" is in us.

The principles of the resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment, are to be believed in; but in no way do these principles become a part of the initiatory rites, only so far as a status of belief is concerned, for nothing in these principles require obedience thereto, but is a part of the eternal transactions of the future.

OTHER COMPARATIVE TERMS

When the text compares the gospel to water, milk, and wine, we think of other metaphorical representations where the gospel is compared to other matters. In John 6: 35, 49, 51, Christ says of himself, "I am the bread of life," or the "living bread," and the spiritual blessings of the kingdom are compared to a feast or a "great supper" (Luke 14: 15-23). Now what benefit is this "bread" or this "great supper" if we do not partake and assimilate. In Psalm 107: 20 the Lord compares his word to medicine, "He sent his word, and healed them, and delivered them from their destruction." What benefit would medicine be to a sick man if he would refuse to take? When we are sin sick, and diseased with wickedness, the medicine of the word I am sure would be an effectual remedy for any ill of life. We have in Psalm 119:105, 130, references where the word is compared to light, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path," and "The entrance of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple." Such will not benefit us however if we persist in living in the darkened recesses of unbelief and sin. In Jeremiah 23: 29 the word is likened to fire and a hammer: "Is not my word like as a fire? saith the Lord; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces"? If we are not willing to let ourselves go through the refining process of the fire, and come under the hammer's beat, that we may be as burnished gold, and our souls purified of every dross, I fear we will never be benefited by them. In Isaiah 55: 10, 11 the Lord there compares his word to rain and snow, yet if we persist in living in a region of perpetual drouth and desert, do not complain my friends if the blessings of fruitage in harvest will never come.

In Jeremiah 2: 13 God is compared to a "fountain of living waters," and as water is one of the essential things of life, and often made as the emblem of spiritual blessing, for a fountain has a spring within itself and supplies from its own source, so is this a fitting comparison that God is the great source of all good which man needs, or that can possibly enjoy, in the present life or in the life to come. Everything comes from this source. Christ the mediator of salvation came from God, thus God gave his Son, sent him forth, anointed and delivered him. The "glorious gospel of the blessed God" which publishes God's love, and mercy, and grace, to a lost world, this stream of gospel privilege takes its rise in the fountain of Jehovah. The Spirit of salvation flows from it, too; it proceedeth from the Father. The blessings of salvation are the streams issuing from this fountain. All dignity and bliss of heaven flows from him and in his presence is "fullness of joy," and at his right hand "pleasures forevermore."

How vain then to seek an habitation in the glorified earth unless we merit it by works. The way of salvation is open to all, and all are invited and will be made welcome.

A GODLY LIFE

By complying to these initiatory principles of the gospel, faith, repentance, baptism, and the laying on of hands, we become the adopted children of God and belong to royal family, but this glorious inheritance is not yet secure. It is yet conditioned on a saintly and diligent life. We must add to our faith the virtues of God's appointing (2 Peter 1: 4-9), for the inheritance is conditioned on continuing faithful to the end. If we are God's dear children his Spirit will be in us, and there will be manifested in our lives love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, patience, and faith. We are to keep ourselves free from the contaminating influences of sin by continually imploring forgiveness at the altar of prayer, and by keeping ourselves in the love of God we are enabled to stand.

"Ho, to every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters" which are the blessings of salvation. This salvation is variously estimated as the treasure to the poor, a robe to the naked, medicine to the sick, food to the starving, and here as the water of life to the perishing, thirsty sinner. We need this supply to-day; in fact we will perish without it. We may well thank God and take courage and march on, when we know the pillar of cloud by day and the fire by night are set fast in the divine order to guide us on our way. Perfect peace will come at last, and order and perfect joy. The glory of our message has come through the thick darkness and surrounding gloom, and will be still more potential when we confide more fully in the commandments of God. Let us be sure that all is well whatsoever comes, while we trust and stand fast and strive. Hopeless and rightly hopeless too, will we be when we want what we are in no wise willing to earn. The glory and dignity of life comes by right living—we should remember that, for in that "we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory even as by the Spirit of the Lord."

It might be expected that I should now make a recapitulation, but I have none to make. Let me say this in conclusion, however: the life to be revealed in due time will be glorious indeed when all cold shadows here shall melt away, before the ascending glory of our Redeemer's presence, and we shall be, not unclothed, but clothed upon, and mortality shall be swallowed up of life.

Hail then the day, when the powers of the soul, immortal in their nature, in a more perfect atmosphere will expand until they become Godlike in very reality; and when memory will not be limited to the events of a day, but will seize all its past in one comprehensive grasp, and come into its own. Thank God, your great benefactor, then, for the privileges of to-day in taking the refreshing water, the nourishing milk, and the rejuvenating wine, that gives strength and alacrity; and in the partaking we accumulate divine strength, to move on to this ultimate destiny, and perchance if faithful to the holy cause, you will yet with rapturous eyes behold Him who is now invisible, and see the sublime glories manifested in an earth redeemed.

---

THE GOSPEL OF THE PRODUCTIVE LIFE

---

Modern religion, like most human institutions, is a question of alternatives. We count the cost of a proposed procedure as against some other possible activity open to us. Just now the religious world is becoming saturated with a mystifying philosophy of liberaism in opposition to a small minority of churches which have devotedly nursed the old sectarianism. Naturally, the question of the relative virtues of the two philosophies has arisen in the minds of our people. We are beginning to experience a new type of persecution at the hands of religious liberalists because we have insisted upon the maintenance of a strict compliance with what we conceived to be the letter as well as the spirit of the law.

The justification of our position depends, in large measure, upon whether our religion functions by merely giving a kind of ephemeral, emotional satisfaction, or whether it functions as a dynamic factor in the social and economic progress of our people. We must decided which type of philosophy will act more powerfully as a stimulus to endeavor or more effectively in directing human energy productively.

RELIGION AN END OR A MEANS?

Here confronts us, another alternative, limited largely by our choice in the former. If we are liberals we are very apt to believe that religion is an end in itself, in which case its sole function is to stir our jaded emotions and fill us with revivalistic enthusiasm. On the other hand if we are sectarians, we are apt to believe that religion is a means to an end, an agency in the harmonious development of man until he might indeed, become a counterpart of the image of his Creator.

Does the music master restrict the use of his compositions so that they may be heard only by his immediate friends and within the confines of his studio? Does he not rather contemplate the magnitude of his service to society because of the souls of men who shall be blessed under the inspiration of the delicate harmony? If he be a real artist, he will take new zeal in the hope that his production may be an ennobling factor in the lives of those who hear it.

Or is the man of letters, upon whose manuscripts is photographed his very soul, to be an effective member of society if he permits his poem or his prose to remain unpublished to accumulate the dust of his attic? The monks did some of this kind of literary work, (not all of which was valueless of course,) principally as a matter of sanctimonious discipline, with the result that the world was not particularly enriched.

This same question of ends and means may be raised in connection with our religious experience. Do we live to be religious, or does religion exist to serve humanity? Whether we accept the one philosophy or the other will depend upon our interpretation of values. Whether religion is to be a philosophy of emotionalism or a doctrine of pragmatism will depend not upon any peculiar grouping of tenets, but rather how richly such tenets are able to endow those who accept them and are guided by their inherent authority and power. We shall always have religious fanaticism as well as religious conservatism; but that religion only will merit perpetuation which acts most powerfully in aiding its devotees in the everyday competitive struggle for existence.

THE ACID TEST

The religions of the world are in the crucible. They are being stripped of their gaudy tinsels, that men may not be deceived. Great changes have been made in the last few decades. Time was when the religious world settled back in its self-satisfied egotistical conservatism and held about it such an impregnable reserve of dignity, that it was the rankest heresy even to question its policy and aims. Now scores of periodicals are merciless in their attacks upon modern so-called Christian institutions. So radical have been some of our modern iconoclasts that they have seriously considered the effect of the abolition of the church as a religious institution and of transforming it into a community playhouse, social center or what not.

The reason advanced for this extreme view of the matter is that it has failed to function and like the parabolic branch of the fruit tree must be cut off. Just what some individuals expect of religion is not always clear, but what public opinion expects is never obscure. It may have nothing to say about baptism, laying on of hands or the eternal judgment, but it will be quick to detect evidences of success or failure reflected in the lives of those who have adopted it as a code of human behavior. It does not matter if a religion is surrounded by a formidable maze of poignant prejudices, if its constituents are conspicuously successful in a practical way, men will press into it with a divine imperishable ardor.

The acid test of any religion then, lies in its ability to provide satisfactory answers to the following questions: Does it bring practical success or ignominious failure to its adherents? Does it vitalize or enervate its devotees? There is much truth in the old adage of Zoroaster who is reputed to have said, "He who sows the ground with diligence and care acquires a stock of religious merit which he could not possibly gain by the repetition of ten thousand prayers."

ULTIMATE VALUES AND THE GOSPEL OF PRODUCTIVITY

When we think of such terms as "practical success" and "vitalization" in connection with religion we of course have in mind the individual as one of a group having common ideals and beliefs. Religion is judged according to its influence in producing surpluses of human values. How valuable is this man to his group? What part of the increase in his value is directly attributable to his religion? Economic theory explains that the value of a productive agent to society is dependent upon the margin between this agent's product and the cost of its maintenance. Carver uses the following example which illustrates this point. A horse whose daily earning power is exactly equal to the cost of keeping himself, is worth exactly nothing. Likewise the horse whose cost of keep is one dollar per day and earns a dollar and twenty cents is worth twice as much as another horse whose cost of keep is the same and earns a dollar and ten cents a day.

A question which always provokes considerable discussion among students of political economy is, "Do men produce in order that they may consume or consume in order that they may produce?" Do we eat to live or live to eat? One is the Epicurean philosophy, which in its various forms, amounts to saying that the end of life and industry is enjoyment. We produce in order that we may consume, though our consumption may be gross or refined, may consist in filling our bellies or in tempting our souls. The utilitarian philosophy on the other hand, teaches that the fruits of industry are not to be used for enjoyment, but to sustain life and energy for further production.

The classic treatise on this subject is to be found in the "Word of Wisdom" which lays the basis of the productive life in a most complete and exacting manner. Unfortunately it seems that wisdom is frequently sacrificed to convenience and tastes, in spite of the fact that scientific discovery is confirming the formula given by revelation. When we reflect that the orthodox Jew lives under the direction of a rigid dietetic law we wonder if this may not be some explanation of his marvelous power as a wealth accumulator. Power is a prerequisite of productivity, but power in the physical sense is dependent upon wise consumption and discreet conservation.

THE PARABLE OF THE TALENTS

To practically every man is given the power to do some job well. There are, of course many men who have the same gift but with varying degrees. With whatever degree of efficiency the individual utilizes his talents he must understand that he is a member of a group and responsible to it.

The Biblical statement: "For unto every one who hath obtained other talents, shall be given, and he shall have in abundance. But from him that hath not obtained other talents, shall be taken away even that which he has received," is the excellent rendering of this point in the Inspired Translation. Theoretically this is what the great law of supply and demand is supposed to do under active competition; but practically there is no such perfect adjustment as the law indicates. This does not mean that has been an over-development of talents in certain cases; it rather signifies that some talents are underdeveloped or are starving because of lack of opportunity, and are thus prevented from functioning in society.

The question of the unequal distribution of wealth therefore merges into the question of the distribution of talent, which is not really an economic question at all but one for the specialist in education to solve. On the economic side we are then still vitally interested in production, though attention has been forcibly directed toward the distribution phase by the numerous writings of reformers and propagandists. It is not so much a question whether every man is getting all that he produces, as it is whether he is able to produce enough to support himself and his family. Conceivably a man might be given all that he produces and still be poor. When these two conditions are found then one of two things may be done, viz, increase his productive power through education or make him an object of charity. It ought not take long for the church to decide which of these policies it will accept.

The Lord has clearly indicated that it is his wish that his people shall be happy and contented. Happiness, if not really a measurable economic quantity, is directly dependent upon economic considerations. It is difficult to imagine how a healthy morale can be maintained in an abject condition of poverty; it is still more difficult to imagine the redemption of Zion by a people economically dependent, and inadequately prepared. The framers of the policy of the church have sensed this for many years, though untoward circumstances have intervened repeatedly to retard the crystallization of such plans as would make the "hastening time" something more than a mere stock-word used in evangelical exhortation.

THE CHURCH AND THE FUTURE

Let us not deceive ourselves by thinking that, because the gospel has been restored and we have been made the custodians of that divine charge, we thereby have a monopoly upon it. There is danger in the state of mind that leads us to reason that the church, being of divine origin and having become identified with it, we are bound to be carried with it in its triumphal success. It is possible to place too great stress upon the importance of origin rather than upon the question of outcome. Jesus was always willing that his philosophy should be tested in the light of its results. The church of today as well as of to-morrow must have similar results to show.

In the fair and open competition, that church will succeed whose people have been taught to rely upon scientific knowledge of the laws of God's universe, and upon the observed operation of God's will. His infinite power and glory then becomes a reality, within the grasp of the mind of man.

To the truth-seeker therefore, such a church offers the one best way—best because it has actually worked; it offers the association with a people who are efficient because there is no waste due to dissipation and because their resources have been intelligently husbanded; it offers the boon of mutual service in a group whose first law is obedience to God and his revealed will; it offers the inspirational companionship of a people who study to show themselves approved; and it offers plenty of hard work, a simple life seasoned with discipline, and a part in the great conquest of territory now under the pall of ignorance, indolence and superstition.

A YOUNG ELDER.

---

EDUCATING THE MIND

---

The Lord has said, seek learning from all good books, and by study, but he who in his course of study, maintains the closest walk with God, takes the surest and best means to make his study a success. He is more likely to excel in mental improvement, in strength, in vigor of understanding, and ability to think.

Nothing is so well suited to draw out the mind as to bring it into intercourse with him who is the great source of mind. His presence alone felt and enjoyed will quicken, illuminate and enlarge the mind, more than all the other influences besides.

We have learned by experience that by keeping company with a person of superior education and intelligence, we soon feel the effect in our manner and bearing. If this is true in mixing with the human, how much more by continually having intercourse through the spirit with him who is the ideal of all that is purest and mightiest of all life. The life of the mind like that of the body, depends for its growth on receiving suitable nourishment and attention, it must be first cared for and fostered by others and when it reaches a certain stage it needs to depend upon itself in order to retain its just stature and strength.

But it needs culture, and there are few points of improvements which any sound mind, should despair in reaching, but without going to extreme it may be confidently said that any one that gives himself to cultivating the mind, finds limitless scope for intellectual success. Of course no mind is proof against idleness, who can tell what may be accomplished if we set out minds with a fixed determination to accomplish that which we have set out to reach.

To be self-active is the property of life. The mind of man has the highest kind of life, every living thing that increases at all does so by the working of its own life, thus grows the plant, the living body, and every other thing that lives and grows.

Can it be otherwise as to the mind of man? Our minds cannot be exercised by reading alone, but by reflection and comparison and analysis.

We should pause to consider the how, the why, and the wherefore of what meets our thought, we should muse, and pry, and seek to penetrate into unexplored recesses of truth, and thereby get the matter fixed in our minds, and above all we should have patience to endure so difficult a method of cultivating the mind.

They must move slowly who would move up the hill of knowledge. Converse with books will not suffice, knowledge cannot be read into it, the mind must draw it in and digest it by deep meditation and reflection. Again we must not look to other minds for aid alone, we must exercise our own faculties, and develop our own gifts, not forgetting that a great mind is a humble one, which is conscious of its own mental imperfections, as humility lies at the bases of all solid improvement.

So we conclude by saying the mind is a wonderful thing and can be trained and developed to a wonderful extent. Do nothing as if it were a trifling thing, but do everything with an earnestness of purpose and with a fixed determination to make it a success and in everything have but one aim, heaven.

EDWIN H. DAVIES.

---

A child of God should be a visible beatitude for joy and happiness, and a living doxology for gratitude and adoration.—C. H. Spurgeon.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE SANTA FE TRAIL

The town of Franklin, from which Becknell had started, was recognized as the eastern end of the Santa Fe Trail; but by this time the boats from St. Louis had begun to land freight more or less cheaply at the new town of Independence, a hundred miles to the west of Franklin. That meant the saving of a hundred miles or so of bad spring roads across the upper part of the state of Missouri. St. Louis, capital of the early fur trade up the Missouri, never was capital of the Santa Fe trade. Franklin claimed that title first, and lost it to the raw village on the Missouri.

Once through the straggling frontier streets of Independence passed all the great tide of the early Westerners. The land trail up the Missouri, the trail up the Platte, the trail up the Arkansas—each began here. This was the outfitting point for the fur trade of the near North, for the home seekers of the Oregon Trail, and for the ancient and honorable company of adventurers who traded into Santa Fe.—Saturday Evening Post, July 5, 1919.

ZIONISTS WOULD ESTABLISH JEWISH STATE

[At the convention of the Zionist organization of America, in session recently at Chicago, the following recommendations were made by the committees, as reported by the Kansas City Journal of September 17.—EDITORS.]

The committee made the following recommendations:

Purchase lands on an extensive scale by the Jewish national fund, the Zion Commonwealth, inc.; and other land purchasing corporations of the Zionist movement.

A campaign against malaria to be waged vigorously in advance of any extensive immigration.

Afforestation to prevent the encroachment of sand, to stabilize the rainfall and to provide a timber supply.

Irrigation to promote agriculture.

Financial support for the Hebrew university.

"Palestine can eventually contain a large population," the report said, "and the lines of development should be agricultural, industrial, and commercial."

The committee called on all classes of Jews to subscribe financial support to the movement.

The report declared that political discussion should cease, as the principle of Zionism had been sanctioned by the public and official opinion.

A resolution was adopted to-day providing for the transfer of all the central administrative and financial institutions and activities of the Zionists' organization to Palestine after its political status has been established.

A report to the Hadassah, the women's branch of the organization on relief work in Palestine, showed that two hospitals have been established there and extensive relief work is in progress. More than 60,000 garments, including thousands of shoes, have been shipped from America to aid the population of the new Jewish homeland, Mrs. A. H. Fromenson of New York told the women.

WHAT TO THE TITHE

[Under the above heading there appears the following verses in the Church Outlook for August 1919. This paper is published in the interest of the young people's work, the federation of churches, and all religious activities of Topeka, Kansas. It shows that others are thinking on this important subject.—EDITORS.]

WHAT TO THE TITHE

One tenth of ripened grain,
One tenth of tree and vine,
One tenth of all the yield
From ten tenths rain and shine.

One tenth of lowing herds
That browse on hill or plain,
One tenth of bleating flocks
For ten tenths shine and rain.

One tenth of all increase
From countingroom and mart,
One tenth that science yields,
One tenth of every art.

One tenth of loom and press,
One tenth of mill and mine,
One tenth of every craft
Wrought out by gifts of thine.

One tenth, and dost thou Lord,
But ask this meager loan,
When all the earth is thine,
And all we have thine own?

Jesus the Christ was of course the greatest exponent and exemplar of tolerant, patient, and amiable leadership of thought, though he, possessing perfect knowledge, spoke with authority, and could and did on rare occasions cut short to the very root of things in a manner that clove clean through and lacked nothing in the way of incisive and demolishing rebuke. His leadership and guidance did not bear great, immediate results. For the most part of the world scorned him, but it did so because he was wholly right and the world was largely wrong. By the inscrutable wisdom of his choice of method, however, he did what he could not otherwise have done.—Robert S. Doubleday, in The Public, July 26, 1919.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

Three Ships

Three ships have I that sail Life's sea,
Their names—Faith, Hope, and Charity;
Long years ago they sailed away,
To me they will return some day.

For Heaven's strong winds will blow them home
Across the ocean's waves and foam;
Rich cargoes will they bring to me—
My ships—Faith, Hope, and Charity.

My Faith has come down through the years,
Undimmed by failures, trials, and tears;
It only has the stronger grown
By all the sufferings it has known.

My Hope still lies in God that Man,
Throughout the length and breadth of land,
May learn to know and love each other
And be as brother unto brother.

And last is Charity or Love,
That gift which cometh from above;
All good deeds done in years gone by
Will be repaid by Love on high.

And so I wait for their return,
Content each day to live and learn,
But, Oh, how very rich I'll be
When all my ships come home from sea.

—Detroit Journal.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5929 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Have Your Eyes Been Shut?

A few weeks ago we asked the readers of this column what they had observed in their life's experience in regard to the mistakes of parents, and invited everyone to send his or her observations and deductions to the editor. Within a week we received two splendid replies, which encouraged us very much, until succeeding days have failed to bring more, and we have wondered if it is possible that only two readers of this column have had their eyes open to what is going on around them in regard to the training of children, or were sufficiently interested in what they saw, to write us about it!

This surely cannot be a true estimate of the interest Latter Day Saint mothers and fathers take in the care and instruction of children. We would prefer to believe that these two were a bit more responsive, a bit more willing to take time to add their mite to the sum total, for the benefit of others.

May we not make another appeal? Read Sister Thoman's thoughtful reply to our questions, and see if you consider her experience and conclusions valuable. See if they tally with yours. If they do, and you have been given light additional to that which she reflects, will you not show the same readiness to help, by sending it on to us? If you think your experiences have proven her plans or ideas inefficient or incorrect, will you not write and tell us why?

Let us analyze our work as mothers. Is obedience the primal factor in training a child? What of these modern child-students who say the child should unfold from within, from the impulses of nature, which cannot err? What of these who tell us, as does Marie Montessori, the famous Italian child teacher, that obedience is not an early child virtue, but one which in older children springs naturally into being, following the formation of his will and his mind?

And again, how would you proceed to develop this willing obedience? Do mothers, as a rule, consider thoughtfully these matters? Or do they usually attempt to force obedience, or punish for the lack of it?

One psychologist finds little children specially disobedient, "or, rather," he adds, "their resistance, by the time they are four or five years old, has become so great that we are in despair, and are almost tempted to give up trying to make them obey!" But stop and think! Is not resistance a most desirable and valuable asset in a child's character? Without it could he walk uncontaminated through the world of to-day? Could he keep his virtue? Would we, as mothers, not be wiser could we more intelligently analyze the motives and powers of our children, and call things by their right names? Shall we not make the acquaintance of this "resistance," and not call it disobedience?

It is not the only thing we mistake. We remember, with gratitude, the very great help given to us once when we spoke rather sharply to our little son as he went out slamming the door. Our dear father, who was present, said nothing for a little, but waited until we had resumed our seat to continue our reading aloud. Then he reached across, gently touching our knee, and said: "Daughter, you must not be too harsh with the children. You must learn to distinguish between a lack of judgment, and an act of disobedience!" Dear soul, how many times have we blessed you for that little word of counsel! Like an illuminating flash, we saw clearly that the little fellow, in the excitement and exuberance of his play, had simply failed to use good judgment in closing the door, and not that he had, with intention and deliberation, meant to slam the door and cause annoyance!

In like fashion we have sometimes heard mothers deplore the fact that their children were developing the habit of lying, when the truth of the situation was only that their powers of imagination were being developed and stimulated—powers without which none of us would press onward to heights divine.

No, let us rather, as parents, study our children, and study about them. Let us learn how to guide and direct aright, and then these wonderful, unfolding possibilities of our little ones will not cause us uneasiness, but we will be able to turn everything to the salvation of the child,—his development into a "man in Christ Jesus."

In order to continue our discussion of these matters in this column will not every reader consider this a personal invitation for her, (or him) to contribute her mite of experience to our round table, bringing her offering and taking away some crumbs of thought or encouragement with her? In this way we will each be glad to have met in friendly examination of the problems which lie nearest our hearts in the work of reclaiming the world for the Master.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Truth

"There danger dwells where dwells not Truth;
Nor gold, nor gems, nor rosy youth
Shall friendly be when she hath fled;
The soul that knows her not is dead."

What I Have Observed

In answer to our Editor's query, I will try to give some of my observations, and the conclusions I have drawn therefrom.

In my experience, the most common error made by mothers in caring for their children is in not teaching them to obey. A mother does not have to be an ogre or a scold to have an obedient child. In fact, the more loving, the more gentle and self-controlled the mother, the more obedient will be the little child, if only that mother takes pains to see that it is so.

The most vital error made, in my opinion, is in turning children loose to do as they please without any oversight. I do not mean that a child should not have freedom. Give it the freedom of the backyard if you wish, but do keep your eyes and ears open. Know always what the child is doing. When my eldest became six years old I knew he must soon go to school. I thought over the matter for a long time. Then I deliberately allowed the freedom of the yard to those boys with whom I knew he would soon come in contact at school. They were mostly boys who had grown up in the street, and the various new things which sooner or later come to the attention of all children were thus brought to him under my observation. I used different ways and means to counteract the effect of these undesirable suggestions. I could not have done this had these things happened at school, for I would have been ignorant of the occurrences. Thus the boy had the advantage of his mother's advice and help in meeting new obstacles and temptations. When he started to school he was well prepared to go, and fortified to a great extent against evil. Now, in our pride and joy in his noble young manhood, do you think I regret one moment of the time spent in training and guiding my boy?

With the second boy, of course, things were quite different, as, having come in contact with the playmates of his brother long before school age, he was more gradually prepared, and, too, he had the advantage of the help of an older brother. Still, I did not relax my vigilance with either, nor did they know I paid attention to them while at their play. They know it now, and thank me for it.

Parents most often neglect the spiritual training of their children. It would be a great help if Latter Day Saint mothers could be awakened to the necessity of studying their own children and meeting their needs in a common sense way. Some parents who recognize needs in their children, do not study out a way to meet them. If the majority of mothers were capable of properly caring for the bodies, minds, and souls of their offspring, we would have more healthy, intellectual, and spiritual young people than we now have.

Such instruction as mothers need in this particular, comes, naturally under the direction of the Woman's Auxiliary. Of course, study classes and books reach some, but the best way I can think of to reach those who most need it, would be through the service of the trained social worker.

Fathers are equally responsible with the mothers for the welfare of their children. Sermons often reach the fathers, but we see no reason why fathers should not study these things for themselves. A fathers' study class would not be out of order. Round table talks and instructions too, might work admirably in this line.

The parents are the custodians of the child's spiritual development; the church covers or corrects their mistakes. The parents are the custodians of the child's mental progress; the state simplifies matters for them, and provides materials. The parents are the custodians of the child's physical welfare; here the community should also help, to insure the highest success, as in the case of mental and spiritual training.

I believe in social medical oversight, a school nurse, frequent examinations by experts, and an intelligent community interest in the general well-being of children. "Let us think," yes, and let us act, "for therein lies our salvation"!
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS. STELLA E. THOMAN.

Tell Us

1. Are children, by nature's endowment, good, or bad? Why your conclusions.
2. Do morals have to be taught and practiced to become ingrained in character? If so, how?
3. Must parents wage a campaign against evil in order to safeguard their children? Why? Is a positive teaching of virtue sufficient? Why?
4. How may children learn to discriminate unerringly between good and evil?
5. Can children be taught to love the right for right's sake? How?
6. At what age can a child begin to distinguish spiritual values from material ones, and how taught to appreciate them more highly?
7. How should children pray? How many parents help to establish a real correspondence between a child and its Maker?
8. How may a child be enabled to distinguish between truth and falsehood, and learn to love the one and despise the other?
9. What punishments are allowable in training children, and how, when, and by whom, administered?
10. To what extent should children attend church services? Which ones? How shall the rest of the Sabbath be spent?
11. Is the gospel of "don'ts" ever allowable in training children? If so, when, at what age, and in what instances?
12. Do you have a well-defined objective to reach in training your children? What is it? What is the plan upon which you are working to that end? What difficulties have you encountered—what overcome? What helps have you received, and how have they worked out in your experience?

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, 5020 California Street.

Fit Your Punishment to the Child and to the Act Committed

A child of four years who was in the habit of pinching her neighbors was asked by her kindergarten teacher; "Would you like to have Alice pinch you?" "No." "She doesn't like it either, Dorothy, and will not care to sit by you if you continue."

But the talk did no good, for the little tot went on repeating her offense. Then the teacher quietly took her handkerchief and wrapping it around the offending member, said: "Suppose we cover up this little hand, and not let it be seen until it can remember not to pinch."

After a few minutes the child came over to the teacher to say that the hand could take care of itself now. Smilingly the teacher unwrapped it and said: "I am glad."

A mother for a similar offense, was seen to slap her child's hand and jerk his arm. Which do you think the better method to follow?

In a kindergarten room of 40 children, the story hour was in progress. The room was small, hence the attention of all was a necessity. Two boys, half listening, half playing, were continually rocking their chairs. The teacher's efforts to gain their complete attention proved fruitless. She stopped long enough to say: "Those who cannot sit quietly on their chairs must sit on the floor." One of the boys immediately gave perfect attention, but the other continued his noise. When the teacher reached over to take his chair he resisted, then went off by himself in a distant corner.

Knowing the disposition of the boy, the teacher let the matter pass until the next day when he asked for some work which he especially liked to do. Then she replied: "I will be glad to let you have it, John, after you have obeyed about sitting on the floor."

For three days the boy rebelled, and for three days this teacher of 40 children did not forget the individual problem, refusing all of John's requests for the thing he desired, always however, in a pleasant manner.

The fourth day a dramatized story was on the program and the boy longed to be "the old troll." "May I be?" in his enthusiasm he asked. "I am sure you would make a fine troll if you would first obey your teacher." He looked at her, smiled, and slid down onto the floor.

Too much attention devoted to a simple act? Not when a child learns thereby that disobedience is not worth the price of forfeited companionship, and that to be an active and desired member of the school group he must comply with its necessary laws.

In some cases a child may be talked with and his sense of honor and dependableness aroused, while another child for the same offense must be dealt with more severely to awaken him to better action.

Study the nature of the child with whom you have to deal, and although it may take many months of patient study, and perhaps much experimenting, work out the best approach for a permanent lesson with him.—Selected.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Concerning Revelation 17 and 18

Two years ago my companion and myself were baptized. That coming winter we devoted entirely to a study of the doctrine of Christ, and to getting acquainted with the Bible, to which we had only had a formal introduction up to that time. During that winter of study the eighteenth chapter of Revelation had a strange fascination for us. We read and reread it, and each time it became more interesting, more impressive, more pregnant with meaning. We studied it in every detail, and prayed over it often, but still it remained an unsolved mystery. Suddenly one day while meditating thereon, a light seemed to flash through my mind, and in an instant all was as plain as daylight. So clearly did it stand out, that it seemed it must be blazoned around the world. In the light of this new knowledge, my companion and I studied and pondered over it anew, and the more we thought of it, the deeper we delved into the substance of it, the surer we felt that we were right. If the church has an accepted interpretation of this chapter, I have never heard nor read of it, and so submit this one to the readers of the HERALD with the hopes of hearing comments thereon from other Saints.

As a church we hold that Revelation 17 refers to papal Rome. We are all well acquainted with the character of the typical Roman. He was born to be a warrior, trained from childhood to serve his country, from very boyhood his blood throbbled with the desire for military glory, and in his youth his whole soul yearned for military honors. The labor of Rome was done by slaves captured in war, even to such an extent that their own poor had to be fed, even to such —fed with food obtained chiefly through bloodshed. Yes, the world agrees that the dominant spirit of Rome in her prime, was, war. So the power called Babylon in Revelation 17 was made up of a people, who, history teaches us were warriors by birth.

Let us now examine Revelation 18 and learn if we can, the characteristics of the people who compose the Babylon here spoken of. From verses 11 to 19 we gather that she was a mighty sea-trading power. From verse 22 we learn that she was a nation of musicians, of craftsmen, and of millers. Verse 23 implies a love of home and simple, pure, family life, and emphasizes the fact that she was a nation of great merchants.

So chapter 17 tells of a power called Babylon which was made up of an aggressive, warlike race. Chapter 18 tells of a power called Babylon composed of a seafaring, mercantile people, a people of musicians, of craftsmen, of millers, a people with a love of simple, pure home life. Widely different are they not, and yet can we find evidence to the effect that they are very closely related?

Comparing Revelation 17: 6 with Revelation 18: 24 we find that both are guilty of the blood of the saints and prophets.

Comparing Revelation 17: 2 with Revelation 18: 3 we find the same moral qualities ascribed to both.

Revelation 17: 5 and Revelation 18: 2 tell us that these two powers are called by the same name. At first glance we might think that Revelation 18: 2 referred back to the Babylon in Revelation 17. Upon closer thought we find this cannot be true, for the latter part of Revelation 18: 3 reads, "and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies." This statement never could have referred to Rome. But it does plainly refer to the rich mercantile power spoken of in Revelation 18 as can readily be seen by reading the complete chapter.

Examining Revelation 17: 5 we find that the name "Babylon the Great" is written upon the forehead of the woman and not upon the beast upon which she is seated. Verse 18 makes this statement, "And the woman which thou sawest is that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth." So the name, "Babylon the Great" applies to Rome, the city which the woman represents and is only ascribed to the power the beast typifies when that power unites itself with the power of the woman, and thus takes upon itself her name. This being the case, let us substitute "Rome" for "Babylon" in Revelation 18: 2 and this is what we have. "Rome is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird." This statement then would plainly mean that Rome though fallen was not destroyed, but was changed into a very den of devils, and foul spirits, and a cage of carrion birds (or men desiring to feed upon their fellow men).

Now, how did Rome fall? For answer let us turn to profane history, and, quoting from one of our Quarterlies, this is what we find, "Rome was weakened by excessive luxury, by vice, love of pleasures, slavery, by weakness of home attachments, and by lack of religious principles, when the Germans took from their hands the sceptre of power they were no longer able to wield. The conquerors, while they were not without vices, chief among which were drinking and gambling, had capacities and virtues, which made it fitting that at this stage in the world's development they should take the place of the worn-out Roman Empire. Among the Germans the family life was pure; there was no polygamy among them; a deep love of personal freedom prevented the presence of slavery; their forest life had fostered a simplicity in sharp contrast to the life of the Romans which is described to us as dreadful in the extreme in the depths of its wickedness.

"When the German tribes took possession of the lands of the Roman Empire in the west, bringing in their own virile life, they learned many things to their benefit. The German meeting the Roman, learned of him how to govern, how to read and write, to cultivate ground, to build cities and to live in them, to put aside his old religion and to take that of the conquered Roman."

So history teaches us that Rome, rotten at the core and tottering, was overrun and conquered by the Teutonic tribes, who afterwards so commingled the Roman customs, habits, and knowledge with their own simple life that an entirely different people were evolved. The power then that succeeded Rome was Germany according to profane history. Can this be proved from sacred history? Let us see if it can.

First, as we have already seen, the nation spoken of in Revelation 18 was a mighty seafaring people, a great mercantile power, a nation of musicians, of craftsmen, of millers, a people with a love of home and simple, pure home life. Could you describe the German people better?

Revelation 18:4 makes the statement "come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and receive not of her plagues." Is it not a fact that we were doing no missionary work whatever in Germany at the time war was declared?

Verse 7 tells us that the power spoken of "saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow." Was this not the exact attitude of the German government before the war?

Verse 4 makes the statement that "the fruits that their soul lusted after are departed from thee." What did German militarism lust after? Was it not for possession of the earth? and are not the spoils of the earth which she lusted after departed from her forever?

Again in the latter part of verse 23 we read "for by thy sorceries were all nations deceived." Was this ever true of any nation as it has been true of Germany?

Verses 10, 15, and 17 tell us that the merchants and all those who trade by sea, "stood afar off for fear." John the Revelator saw in a vision this great sea-trading power being destroyed and connected in some way with her destruction, was some terror which caused all ships to "stand afar off" weeping because they dared not go near enough to trade with her. Does this not recall to our minds the dread German submarine, the ships of the world standing "afar off" in fear, and the merchantmen wailing because they could no longer be made rich by the German trade?

Then again examine the judgment meted out to Babylon in verses 6 to 8. Is this not the fate of Germany? And even as verses 21 to 23 tell of the utter destruction of this wicked power, even so has Germany as a nation "been thrown down and will be found no more at all." (Verse 21.)

Maybe I am a visionist, a dreamer, and perhaps I am wrong, but to me Revelation 18 is no more nor less than the destruction of the German power as seen by John the Revelator.

LOST LAKE, MONTANA.

ENNA JAMES.

How it comes to us in silent hours that truth is our only armor in all passages of life and death.—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

Central Oklahoma

The conference and conventions of the Central Oklahoma District held at Tulsa, September 5, 6, and 7 had the largest attendance by twenty per cent of any since I have been in the district. A profitable time was had, a committee was appointed to provide for a reunion for next year they to report their preliminary work at the conference of February, 1920. There was a measure of disappointment because those who prepared the program could not be present to carry it out, one because of sickness and the other because being transferred to another field. It was necessary to make changes in the program and provide substitutes and they filled the places in a creditable manner so that our first disappointment was overcome by the efficient service rendered. The Oak Grove Branch at Morrison was disorganized and provision made for the secretary to issue certificates of transfer to the members in the manner prescribed in the law, to the nearest or most convenient branch. The request is hereby made of all members of said branch, or of any who know of the whereabouts of any, to write to Mrs. Pearl Greenwood, Terilton, Oklahoma, who is secretary of the district, and inform her of their present place of residence, and if sisters have changed their name to give the new one and the date of marriage.

Your brother,

EDWARD RANNIE, President.

Sowers Sowing Seed

This morning since I have awakened, I have felt such joy thrill me through and through, that now I will write a letter to the Saints in general, that maybe I can encourage some one who may be discouraged, and their faith decreasing in themselves. I will entitle this article or letter "Sowers sowing seed."

Our mission as Saints of the Most High, especially the priesthood, is ministering to the wants and needs of, first, the Saints or the household of faith, then to the children of men who do not know of the priceless treasure given us to unlock our way to eternal life, and a life tolerable to live while we are here in this life.

Our Master has said that "It is more blessed to give than to receive," so it behooves us to impart our knowledge of the angel's message to the children of men, to all of those with whom we associate, that we may be the children that we were baptized to be. We should judge no man, woman, or child concerning their fitness to hear, or the way and manner in which they receive or reject the everlasting truth. So if our lot falls among vile infidels and sinners, or on the other hand, among the more just, we should use no partiality.

When I read the history of the early years of our church and the persecution of the Saints when the Lord withdrew his protection from them on account of disobedience, and hear of the different factions that were started under different leaders in different parts of the country, principally the one set up by Brigham Young, I understand how trying and difficult it may look to some of the young Saints to loudly preach the gospel. The Comforter we enjoy helps us in our efforts to tell the gospel story and when we dedicate our efforts to the welfare of those whom we teach, and to the glory and honor of God, our Comforter helps us and confirms what we say, which help no professors of being God's servants have, except us.

We should as young Saints, have no fear whatever of telling the gospel story. I am confident that if we are faithful that men will have no power over us and unless it is God's will for our good or some one else's good, we will never be afflicted or put into prison for the sake of the gospel, but as the disciple Nephi, in the last days of the Nephites, we will be helped in every time of need, until the Gospel is preached to every nation and people.

A brother and I had our first open discussion with some representatives of the Brighamite church, and we explained to them the source of their creed or what Brigham Young taught and practiced, and they were unable to make any denials, and until the crowd got so large we blocked the street, we told the people of Brigham Young's deceptions. We expect to do more here in Detroit. The missions and branches are all growing in the gospel. We all want to do more here than was ever done before in the spreading of the gospel and the baptizing of many precious souls. Three were baptized last night.

We can see the members of our church, the Saints, being troubled over the insincere actions of many of their brothers and sisters, especially those oftentimes who hold offices in the priesthood. Still we must remember that all men are equal and other men's failures will never exempt us from stepping aside to the right or the left. We should understand what God wants better by witnessing the mistakes made by others, and profit by every mistake we see in ourselves and in others, and thus become more useful in our service to help others in the conflict over ourselves and sin.

Hoping and praying that we may "see ourselves as others see us," as the Scotch poet said, but more especially as our heavenly Father sees us, I am

Your brother in the everlasting gospel,
DETROIT, MICHIGAN. GLENN INGLERIGHT.

The Bishopric Advocate
for 1919
Every Member a Tithing Payer

Doctrine and Covenants 28:9: "Not at any time have I given unto you a law which is temporal . . . for my commandments are spiritual."

Tithing is a spiritual law and will produce spiritual effects in us.

Adam, when asked why he offered sacrifice, answered, "I know not, save that God has commanded it."

A splendid reason to justify us in the paying of the tithing. "Behold this is a day of sacrifice and of the tithing of my people."

To be actuated by the sordid desire for increased material possessions in the paying of our tithing is to put up the bars that prevent God from intrusting us with such. Love should be the dynamic of every act of obedience. "If ye love me ye will serve me and keep all my commandments. And behold thou wilt remember the poor and consecrate of thy property for their support."

He that hungers and thirsts after righteousness shall be filled with the Holy Ghost. A prerequisite to the continued enjoyment of this rich blessing is the observance of every known law that God has given. Placing one tenth of our increase in his storehouse is a fundamental law.

Which would you rather have? One tenth of your last year's income in the bank or

Have God's favor and protection in the present year's effort?

"Choose ye this day whom you will serve,"

God or Mammon.

Which needs come first and are emphasized most in your mind?

- Self.
- Home.
- Business.
- Pleasure.
- God's Work.

or is it

- The Kingdom of God.
- Home.
- Self.
- Business.
- Pleasure.

"Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God."

CANNING IS RECENT
(Continued from page 956)

taken into consideration in connection with the term "fruit in the season thereof."

We have suggested before that there is a probability of food being of greater value at the time and where it is produced fresh, but its food value certainly is not so limited, and where it is used with wisdom, it may do much to prevent what otherwise would constitute a famine. Our canning fruit and vegetables is a matter of the last generation, and dates back practically to the latter part of the nineteenth century, so far as being done on a large scale is concerned.

S. A. B.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

The Presidency

By concurrence of First Presidency and Twelve, Elder E. D. Finken has been appointed as missionary to the Southern Ohio District for the balance of the conference year.

Elder Willard M. Parkes at his request has been released from missionary appointment. THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Conference Minutes

CENTRAL OKLAHOMA.—At Tulsa, September 5, 6, and 7, Edward Rannie, Ed. Dillon, and Hubert Case, presiding; F. W. Kueffer, for the Religion and Sunday school. Eight of the ten branches reported. Priesthood reporting: 20 elders, 7 priests, 3 teachers, 3 deacons. Eighteen baptized by local brethren. F. W. Keuffer was ordained an elder, S. A. Harper a priest. A committee was appointed to take preliminary steps for a reunion for 1920. Pearl Greenwood, of Terlton, Oklahoma, was elected secretary, and Edward Rannie and Ed. Dillon the presidency. Adjourned subject to call of the presidency of the district.

MOBILE.—Escatawpa, Mississippi, September 5, 1919. Business meeting at 10 a. m. with district president in chair. T. C. Kelley and A. G. Miller chosen to assist in presiding. Sunday school convention at 11 a. m. In the absence of the district superintendent Brother Miller presided over the convention. The religion convention at 3:30, with Brother Miller presiding. A session of institute work was held Friday evening. Saturday morning, 9 a. m. prayer meeting. Business opened at 10. Officers reported. Presidents of branches made written reports of the work of the priesthood. Their reports give elders reporting; 9, priests; 5, teachers, 4, deacons, one. A. G. Miller, missionary, reported. Reports of branches; Bay Minette, 355; Escatawpa, 195; Mobile, 113; Vancleave, 181; Theodore, 71. Auditing committee reported financial reports correct. Resolutions of respect and sympathy ere adopted in behalf of Sister F. M. Slover and family on the death of Brother Slover. Adjourned to meet at Mobile on Friday before the full moon in January, 1920. Edna Cochran, secretary, Moss Point, Mississippi.

NEW YORK-PHILADELPHIA.—At Archbald, Pennsylvania, August 30, 31 and September 1. District presidency, Ephraim Squire, H. A. Cunningham and Henry Carr in charge. Reports read from all officers. Secretary's report shows net gain of 37 in the district. Enrollment of branches, First Philadelphia, 404; Brooklyn, 244; Scranton, 163; Elk Mills, 125; Broad River, 56; Second Philadelphia, 55; Archbald, 45; Bloomsburg, 29; Girdletree, 18; Second Scranton, 8. A reunion committee was elected, composed of the district presidency, Walter H. Lewis, Edmond J. Gleazer, Daniel T. Shaw, John R. Lentell, W. F. Hawkins and Richard J. Hawkins.

Also the following were elected as a committee to investigate the size, cost, etc., of a tent for the district for missionary work: Charles Thumm, First Philadelphia Branch; Charles H. Franke, Broad River Branch; Emma Carter, Elk Mills Branch; George Potts, Sr., Brooklyn Branch; Earl V. Wagner, Scranton Branch; Fred Treat, Archbald Branch; Mary Fowler, Second Philadelphia Branch; H. A. Cunningham, Bloomsburg Branch; Charles Maddux, Girdletree Branch. The committee were authorized to solicit funds, and to report their work to the next conference. The following ordinations took place on Sunday August 31: To office of elder: Earl V. Wagner, Albert H. Lewis; Office of priest: Albert J. Dixon, Ernest Davies, William B. Hartley, Forest O. Redfield; office of teacher: Charles Thumm, Albert E. Lewis.

Ira Humes to the office of president of the quorum of priests. Robert McKinley to the office of counselor to the president of the quorum of teachers.

Next conference, Philadelphia, February 21 and 22. Elizabeth Teal, secretary.

Convention Minutes

MOBILE.—Sunday school at Escatawpa, Mississippi, September 5, 1919. A G. Miller presided. Officers reporting: superintendent, secretary-treasurer, home department superintendent. Amount in treasury $4.20. A budget of $4 allowed for expenses till next convention. The superintendent given privilege to purchase a duplicator for use in his work. Schools reporting: Vanleave, Escatawpa, Three River, Mobile, and Bay Minette. Adjourned to meet sometime during the next conference. Edna Cochran, secretary, Moss Point, Mississippi.

Ministerial Conference

At Providence, Rhode Island, October 11 and 12, 1919. Subject "A Digest of the Temporal Law." Everybody invited to be present. W. A. Sinclair.

Conference Notices

Eastern Iowa, at Davenport, October 11 and 12. Amos Berve, president.

Western Maine District, at Vinal Haven, November 8 and 9. Speakers will include Richard Baldwin and A. B. Phillips. Autos will meet you at the boat wharf and carry you to your stopping place and to and from meetings. This is a new place. Let everyone come and boom the work. Inform your branch president or Herbert Raymond of Vinal Haven of your intentions of going. Also what boat you will arrive on from Rockland or Stonington. You can go to North Haven or Vinal Haven by boat. In any case inform the above named men. H. A. Koehler, president.

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District institute of Sunday school, Religio and Woman's Auxiliary, October 17, conference October 18 and 19, in Lyon Street Church of Christ, Grand Rapids, Michigan. From Union depot take a car going north, transfer to Lyon street car, get off at Barclay. From either Grand Trunk or Interurban depots take Lyon Street car to Barclay. C. E. Buckley, Secretary, 726 West Main Street, Battle Creek, Michigan.

Two-Day Meetings

At the Limbarker Schoolhouse in Brant, Michigan, October 11 and 12. Trains will be met at St. Charles, Friday and Saturday morning. Bring your baskets. All are invited. Matthew Umphrey, president.

Pastoral

Dear Brethren: One year ago a system of reporting was adopted by the district conference for all the priesthood in the district. While many have observed the new requirements some probably have failed to understand and consequently do not report. The time has come again for reports to be sent in and we wish the brethren to note that every man holding the priesthood in any office in the district should report all items of labor as indicated on the general report blank, from July 1st to September 30th, sending the same to the secretary of the quorum to which he belongs immediately after September 30th, or if he belongs to no quorum then send to the district secretary, Elder John C. Virgin, 114 South Roane Street, Webb City, Missouri. For your encouragement the district and quorum secretaries have sent you blanks, and if you have not received one by September 30th send to the district secretary or your quorum secretary who will forward you one.

A tabulated report is made up for each quarter in which is listed all the names of the priesthood. As your reports come in the items are entered after your names, and if you fail to report, your name remains with a blank record after it. These tabulated reports are for the use of the administrative officers of the church, the district conference, and are kept as permanent records, so we urge upon the brethren the necessity of reporting fully and promptly at the end of each calendar quarter for the previous three months, neither more nor less. Let no man think his labors are not worth reporting however small they may be, or if he has done no labor he should report his circumstances.

The need and demand for gospel labor are great and we hope that every man called to labor will be aggressively active, laboring in faithfulness and wisdom in which he is assured peace and joy. Praying that the Lord's blessing may attend all.

Permanent address, 1225 West Hayward, Independence, Missouri.

CHARLES FRY, President of District.

This is to notify all who may be concerned that I am now permanently located at 1285 Poplar Avenue, Fresno, California. Anyone writing me will please send letters to this address. My missionary labors are to be confined mostly to the San Joaquin Valley between Modesto and Bakersfield. If any of the Saints in this locality know of an opportunity for doing some missionary work I would like to hear from them, as well as any others who care to write to me.

D. AMOS YATES.

To the Saints and Friends of the London and Chatham Districts: Having received notice from the Joint Council of my being appointed in charge of the missionary work in the above districts, I take this means of soliciting your cooperation in the work that is intrusted to us all.

Our laborers were never fewer than now, making it impossible for the missionaries to reach every place, where their services are needed; so we appeal to every local man who can spare a little time without interfering with his local duties, to push out and open up the work in the near-by places. Some of our men can give a few hours on Sunday, while others, especially those with cars, could go for the week-end.

Write and tell us what you are doing or can do.

Any of the missionaries will be pleased to help you to either start or continue the work.

We request the branch presidents of those branches, which contemplate holding a series of special meetings during the coming winter, to please notify us early in case they want the services of a missionary, and we will try to supply them, if possible.

My permanent address is Box 20, Humber Bay, Ontario.

Sincerely your brother,

JAMES PYCOCK.

Our Departed Ones

ADAIR.—S. A. Douglas Adair was born at Woodland, Decatur County, Iowa, August 5, 1861, died September 12, 1919, at the home of his brother, Joe Adair, Leon, Iowa. Married Flora Sherrard, February 24, 1885, at Maysville, Missouri. To this union 8 children were born, 4 of whom are living: Orion B., Walter H., Mrs. Mable Cole of Wyoming, and Lester E. Also 5 brothers and 2 sisters survive him. Baptized at Davis City, Iowa, in April 1902. Brief services were held in Leon, and the funeral was held at the home of C. H. Blakesley, Lamoni, Iowa. Sermon by C. Scott. Burial in Rosehill.

JOHNSON.—Sister Augusta Johnson, whose maiden name was Larson, was born January 14, 1861, at Malmo, Sweden. Came to America when about 19 years of age. Married Alfred Lindell in 1883 and to this union 6 children were born. Two have preceded her. Married Calvin Johnson, January 13, 1906, at Traverse City, Michigan. Baptized October 2, 1910 by W. D. Ellis, and lived a faithful, devoted Saint until death September 18, 1919, at Traverse City, Michigan. Funeral at Saints' Church in Traverse City, in charge of W. D. Ellis, September 21, 1919. Interment in Traverse City Cemetery. She leaves husband, 4 daughters and 9 grandchildren to mourn. She will be greatly missed by the Saints of the Traverse City Branch, as she was an angel of mercy among them.

FROM HERE AND THERE

YOUR OPPORTUNITY TO STUDY

How many times you have wished that you could attend Graceland, so that you might better prepare yourself for life's service! How often you have longed for the opportunity to study! Perhaps you have been denied this opportunity, or perhaps you did not take advantage of it when it came to you. It comes to you now from your own educational institution—Graceland College. You cannot afford to lay aside this great opportunity to prepare for more effective service.

What subjects do you need most—grammar, composition and rhetoric, English, mathematics, penmanship, foreign language, psychology, or public speaking? These and many more are offered you by the Extension Department of Graceland College. You will receive full credit for your work by correspondence. If you wish, you can take preparatory and academic subjects which will enable you to graduate from Graceland Academy by taking only one or two years of resident work.

Who may take these home study courses? Ministers, Religio and Sunday school workers, business men and women, EVERYONE interested in preparation for efficient service. Are you not included in this number? Write today for bulletin describing the subjects in which you are interested, addressing The President, GRACELAND COLLEGE, Lamoni, Iowa.

CHILDREN'S HOME QUARANTINED

The first few days of September, scarlet fever developed at the Children's Home, and some six children were taken sick. The Home was immediately placed under quarantine, and the cases isolated and especial pains taken to prevent a spread in the Home. As a result no new cases have developed in the past three weeks, while those who were ill had mild attacks, and are making good recovery. One unfortunate factor is that the sickness developed the Sunday prior to the opening of schools, and as a result all of the children, with the exception of one who had not been at the Home the previous month, were placed under quarantine. However, Father and Mother Chase took immediate steps to secure the lessons day by day from the school teachers, and to see that the children held their regular classes, and studied the regular lessons, so as not to fall behind.

BISHOP YARRINGTON ILL

Shortly after the middle of September, Elder A. J. Yarrington, who has been carrying the burden of the work of the Bishopric of the Lamoni Stake since General Conference, was taken ill, and has been placed under quarantine. We are glad to be informed that the attack was a light one and that he is making good recovery.

At a convention of the British Isles Mission Sunday school association held on August 5, attention was called to the fact that according to the constitution there was no provision for

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor.

The official organ of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Published every Wednesday by the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. Entered at the post office at Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

PRICE, $1.75 A YEAR IN ADVANCE

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words.

CONTENTS

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| EDITORIAL:   |     |
| The Spalding Romance Theory - - - -                           | 953 |
| The River Moroni - - - - -                                    | 956 |
| Canning is Recent - - - - -                                   | 956 |
| ORIGINAL ARTICLES:                                     |     |
| "Elijah" as the Restorer, by William Moore - -                | 957 |
| The Plea of a Prophet, by S. S. Smith - -                     | 959 |
| The Gospel of the Productive Life, by A Young Elder - - - - - | 965 |
| Educating the Mind, by Edwin H. Davies - -                    | 967 |
| OF GENERAL INTERESTS                                   |     |
| The Santa Fe Trail - - - - -                                  | 968 |
| Zionists Would Establish Jewish State - -                     | 968 |
| What to the Tithe - - - - -                                   | 968 |
| HYMNS AND POEMS - - - - -                              | 969 |
| WOMAN'S AUXILIARY - - - - -                            | 969 |
| Stella E. Thoman. - - - - -                                   | 971 |
| LETTER DEPARTMENT - - - - -                            | 971 |
| Enna James—Edward Rannie—Glenn Engleright                     |     |
| MISCELLANEOUS - - - - -                                | 973 |
| FROM HERE AND THERE - - - - -                          | 975 |

a mission association. The consequence of this situation was the name was changed to the British Isles District Sunday School Association. Resolutions were adopted looking toward efforts to set the mailing date of the Quarterlies ahead so that they might be able to receive them in time for use on the date intended. We are glad to be able to assure the brethren of the British Isles as well as others that this is rapidly being accomplished and no doubt within the next two quarters the Quarterlies will be mailed at least six weeks before the date of the first lesson in the Quarterly. At their election of officers, Elder J. A. Judd was continued as superintendent and Abel Hall as secretary.

Very extensive reports of the all-day meetings held at Allendale, Gull Lake, Michigan, and Lansing, Michigan, have been received. From the items we glean that the meetings were successful and full of special interest to the local Saints especially. Elders S. W. L. Scott and F. F. Wipper of the missionary forces were in attendance. Elder G. A. Smith, president of the district, is the moving spirit in these all-day meetings, and finds his efforts in this direction especially appreciated.

OHIO DRY CAMPAIGN

The liquor interests of Ohio have had enacted some laws which tend largely to abrogate the effect of the prohibition amendment. To counteract this, the friends of prohibition are conducting an intensive campaign to keep the State dry. We note that Brother C. W. Clark, our pastor of the First Columbus Branch, is in charge of the sixteenth ward there, and is to supply the speakers for sixteen churches every Sunday till election. The Saints of the State should be sure to go to the polls to register their votes on this important question. The liquor interests always count on a victory, because of the indifference of the dries.

Getting What You Want

ANOTHER CHAT WITH THE MANAGER

If each of our patrons could sit beside us of a morning during the opening of the office mail and really know the situation as it is, this little message would be superfluous. But since this is impossible, we want your attention long enough to say a few things about ordering supplies.

Now the little act of ordering supplies of any kind from a publishing house is a very simple one. Anyone can do it successfully if he will observe certain little rules. They are easy to learn, often soon forgotten, but very important.

You all know that to give you the service you desire, we must have—

Your name. Exercise special care in writing proper names, and always give your name.

Your post office and street address or rural delivery address. If the latter are unnecessary, very well, but if they are, we must have them if your mail is to be delivered without delay. Only yesterday we had an order to send something to a sister in Chicago—just Chicago, mind you.

The name of the State in which you live. It's surprising how many leave that out. Often the postmark is blurred, and we have to imagine which of the eleven Huntsvilles (for instance) listed in the postal guide is yours. Our imagination does not set us right sometimes, and your mail goes astray or is returned to us, and you are disappointed. But we cannot write you to let you know because we did not receive your address.

A list of what you want. Day before yesterday we had a letter from a sister wanting "two Quarterlies for the third quarter, as I lost mine and want to finish the lessons," etc. Of course we could only guess at what she wanted. When we guess wrong you are disappointed.

Be careful to give the numbers and items of the articles you want. If you cannot find the catalogue numbers, give us the correct name and description.

We know you are not satisfied with our present skeleton price list, and are going to issue a complete descriptive catalogue as soon as possible. It will help you and help us.

Then there is the matter of Quarterlies for Sunday schools and Religios. These are usually ordered by the secretary of the school or society. That is the correct procedure, but that secretary must keep us informed of any change in address or change in office. Many times we get complaints that certain Quarterlies have not been received, when investigation shows they were sent to the old address, we not having been informed of the change. Moreover, all Quarterlies should be ordered at least a month in advance of the mailing date. This is second-class mail and is often sidetracked or miscarried, and arrives at destination only after long delays.

One secretary sent in a large order with no address. We sent them in care of her employer, on whose stationery she wrote. There was not time to wait. Well, it took three telegrams and about as many weeks, with a number of letters and a lot of time and worry to get that straightened out. Keep us informed as to any change that will in any way affect the receipt of your supplies, so that we may give the service you desire.

Our object in taking the space for all this is simply that you may understand the importance of attending to the little things. It is not at all difficult. We are not asking that you spend any extra hours in being over-careful, but we do plead for the work's sake and for your sake, that you be as careful as possible in stating what you want, then expect us to do our part. We are very anxious to reduce our causes of complaints to the smallest possible minimum. You should be able to order what you want and be sure of getting it promptly. It is our first aim to make that possible.

When you want to order supplies about which you are not sure, tell us your needs and we will let you know what is to be had in that line. True service is our ideal, and if we may count on your cooperation, we think our publishing house will become of great value to you in many ways, not only in promptly filling orders for what is in stock, but in constantly adding those things you will need in your work.

J. A. Koehler

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE
Lamoni, Iowa.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

Volume 66

Lamoni, Iowa, October 8, 1919

Number 41

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

HAS THE WORLD GONE MAD?

Events are happening in the world that cause grave anxiety and apprehension. A gentleman who has spent some time in the East in touch with educated and thoughtful men, particularly at a big university club, says that a very common remark to drop from the lips of brainy university men is simply this: "What in hell are we coming to anyway?" The language may not be scholastic—we quote it verbatim so that it may not lose any of its sulphuric directness and force. Others remark in more tempered language that they fear civilization is breaking up.

A chill seems to be running up the spine of the civilized world. No man knows where the next awful and unexpected departure from ordered and sane ways may occur. As an example: Sunday, September 28, the writer spent the day with the Saints of Omaha. Sunday evening, while we in the little church were singing, "A calm and gentle quiet reigns to-night," or some similar hymn, quite appropriate to the feeling among the little flock of Saints, the city about us was convulsed with a reign of lawlessness and terror.

A negro who was supposed to be guilty of the "usual crime" against white womanhood had been confined in the new court house building for safety. For hours an enraged mob battled for possession of this negro. Finally with utter disregard for human life they set fire to the courthouse endangering hundreds of deputies, policemen, and prisoners—the jail being on the fifth floor of the courthouse.

Ultimately they secured the negro and hanged him; but not until a horrible thing had happened.

The mayor of the city appeared and begged that law and order might have their sway. With insane fury the mob siezed him, threw a rope about his neck and hanged him to a trolley pole. He was twice cut down by the police, and was finally rescued, but very nearly died as a result of his injuries.

That the chief executive of one of our greatest cities should encounter such treatment while in the very act of performing his plain duty is appalling. During the great war unctuously we took to ourselves the thought that ferocity in this twentieth century was purely Germanic. It is time we awoke and cast off that cloak God told us a generation ago that we little knew the hearts of men in our own land. Clearly there is no atrocity that has ever been committed in any land or time that may not be repeated of pious hypocrisy. at this late day—and

It Is Written

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, . . . and prove me . . . , saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it.

For this reason the Bishopric advocate for 1919

EVERY MEMBER A TITHE PAYER

in America, or any other of the "civilized" nations.

Some will say, "But why ask good white men to sacrifice their lives in defense of a dirty negro guilty of an awful crime?" But the mayor and police were doing their simple duty. They were not defending a negro—they were defending the right of every man to trial by jury. Men struggled for centuries to secure that right. Thousands of men died for it. If one man is not sure of that right to-day, no man is. And the very event chronicled above proves that point. The same senseless lynch law that executed the negro without jury trial also hanged the chief executive of the city in the very shadow of the building where even-handed justice is supposed to sit—and his crime was that he pled for an orderly execution of the law.

This is but one incident. It impressed us particularly because we happened to be in the city at the time. What happened in Omaha may happen anywhere. Not the same thing in detail, perhaps, but something similiar, for no one can predict what will happen next. The prevalence of lawless disorder is but one of the sinister manifestations of the day. The steadily growing preparation for bitter warfare between organized forces within society is another.

As we write, Great Britain is in the midst of a rail-strike which threatens starvation to her people. The common citizen is caught between labor and capital in this war which breaks out now here now there, in Petrograd, in London, in Boston. He has no right that he can stand upon. Neither party to the conflict considers him or his foolish pleading that he has certain rights under constitutional law. Constitutional law is becoming a joke. His babies may starve, his daughter fall to the mob while the police make war elsewhere or themselves go on strike. There seems no remedy or redress.

We have always believed in the fundamental right of labor to organize. Indeed, labor has no choice but to organize. In the struggle between labor and capital our sympathy has been with labor; for labor represents humanity—flesh and blood. But all that does not blind us to the fact that labor may become obsessed with the madness that seems to be prevalent.

Those who have power to-day use it to the limit—and in most instances for entirely selfish ends. It is quite possible that the vast power now falling into the hands of organized labor may become a menace rather than a blessing. It may be used to destroy constitutional government. The will of the majority may quite easily be set aside by the will of a well organized class. In any event the struggle is becoming more than anything that was foreseen when we argued for the right to strike—it is war, war within society—civil war. And the ordinary citizen does not know when it will hit him and his home and his family just as ruthlessly as war hit the Belgian family when Germany began her rush toward Paris.

From a worldly standpoint the outlook is ominous. As a church we have foreseen these things, even if we have been slow to prepare. Tradition might lead us to exaggerate the seriousness—but now we observe university men shaking their heads and voicing the question, that we have quoted—and university men are supposed to have no prejudices, no superstitions, and few religious traditions. Hope is found only in the promises of our Lord and Master who so faithfully predicted these things, that at the last he will come to reign over his own kingdom and usher in an era of justice, order, and righteousness.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

FOREIGN APPOINTMENTS AND PASSPORTS

Not all the difficulties to be encountered in going abroad were foreseen by the members of the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric last spring in making the appointments for foreign mission and church work, but evidences of these difficulties were not long in forthcoming. Some account of these difficulties and the efforts entailed thereby will doubtless be of interest to the members of the church who are alert to the developments.

It will be remembered that several foreign appointments were made as a move, it is hoped, towards taking advantage of the opportunities for missionary work following the close of the great war. Brother Passman and wife were appointed to Palestine, as the nucleus of a group it is hoped to have at work in due time. Brother Karlstrom and wife were appointed to the South Sea Islands. Brother and Sister Jacob Halb were appointed to Switzerland to assist in developing the work started there by Brother and Sister Roos. Besides this, Brethren Rushton and Hanson of the Twelve were by the Presidency asked to go to Australia and New Zealand, going by way of the South Sea Islands and returning by way of Samoa and Hawaii Territory.

One of the first problems was transportation. Prewar schedules have not been resumed. Sailings are irregular and uncertain. Bookings can be had only on evidence of satisfactory arrangements for passports, etc. Tentative bookings for passage were, however, duly made by all the brethren, and the details of securing passports were entered upon by the persons concerned, through the usual channels, though this entailed quite a bit of official correspondence, certification, and other work. These details, however, are usual in cases of foreign travel, though, of course, the war condition had made many details and requirements rigid and demanded the observance of punctilio sometimes slighted in times of peace. In all cases the necessary passports were secured, but in seeking the necessary visas some unlooked for complications arose which affected the appointments to Palestine and to Australasia. Communications by wire and letter from Brother Passman, who had gone to New York, indicated that special procedure was demanded in all cases where missionaries or church workers expected to go to any of the British provinces. On receipt of Brother Passman's communication, I wired the British Embassy at Washington saying we wished permission for Mr. Passman and wife to enter Palestine in the interests of our work there. In reply to this telegram, the following was received, dated at the "British Embassy, Washington, August 19, 1919":

We are in receipt of your telegram of 18th August regarding your desire to send missionaries to Palestine, and I would state in reply that the general question of admitting missionaries to Palestine is now under consideration by the authorities in England, and it is not possible for us to give permission for the present. Meanwhile, you might furnish this Embassy with full particulars as to the nature of your organization and the work which it carried on previous to the war in Palestine.

This communication was signed by the secretary of the Embassy.

This indicated the advisability of going to Washington to get in personal touch with the British Embassy, and I was fortified in this decision by rather rapid developments of the cases of Brethren Rushton and Hanson, from whom I received wires saying it was necessary for the Presidency to secure permission from the British Embassy for them to enter Australia or New Zealand. I then sent another wire to the British Embassy, saying these men were supervising officers of missionary work, and that their travels in Australia would probably occupy two years or less, and asked the necessary permission. From the Embassy the following reply by wire was received, dated August 26:

Regret we have no authority to let your delegates go at present. They must apply for permission under ordinary missionary procedure, for which purpose we send forms by mail. Permission may take several weeks to obtain.

The last sentence of this telegram was responsible for a telegram I sent a couple of days later to Brother Rushton. On the 28th, he wired me as follows, from Los Angeles:

"If any doubt regarding permission, cancel steamship berths at once, otherwise forfeit money for passage."

They had secured passage on a boat to sail September 1. To his telegram I replied by wire as follows: "Securing permission by September 1st doubtful. Suggest cancelling berths."

I felt at the time of sending this that the element of delay in securing permission was likely to be so large that it would be best to wait further information before sailing.

A telegram sent by Brother Rushton on the 29th did not reach me, for I was enroute to Washington, and though delayed, was not delivered in Washington where addressed, and mail copy reached me too late to act on it. In that telegram he said they would secure visa of French Consul at San Francisco and proceed to Papeete and there await receipt of British permission. This decision may result in a rather long wait at Papeete.

I reached Washington on Monday, September 1, having spent Sunday, the 31st, with the Saints in Brooklyn, speaking to a small number in the morning. Most of the Saints were at Scranton attending district conference.

Labor Day is observed in Washington as a holiday and most offices were closed; but I found the British Embassy open and secured information which caused me to wire Brother Passman at New York to join me in Washington. I felt that there would be advantage in having him personally meet the representatives of the Embassy. He came and we began the necessary process of "red tape" following. In each individual case application must be made on furnished form. This "form" will be of interest. It reads: "Form of Application to be Filled in by Persons Other than British Subjects desiring to undertake Missionary or Educational work in India" [or other provinces of Great Britain except Canada]. The form was by error made out to include India only, but the form covers all other provinces as well. Below the foregoing heading occur the following "notes."

1. Owing to circumstances arising out of the war, persons other than British subjects who are desirous of proceeding to British India to undertake missionary or educational work, are required to obtain permission from the Indian authorities to enable them to enter on such work.

2. Application for the permission should be made on the Form below, which, when completed and signed, including the Declaration overleaf, should be sent to His British Majesty's Representative in the country in which the applicant resides.

3. A Married woman, accompanying her husband, should use a separate form.

4. His Britannic Majesty's Representative will cause the Applicant to be notified as soon as the desired permission has been obtained, but some time will necessarily be occupied by the communications with the Indian Authorities.

5. Arrangements for the journey to India should not be made until permission has been received.

In cases where application is for permission to enter Palestine it is the authorities (military) of Egypt whose consent must be obtained, the channel being through the Embassy to London, from London to Cairo, from Cairo to London, from London to the Embassy, etc. The channel in the Australia cases will be, Embassy to London, London to Sydney, Sydney to London, London to Embassy, Embassy to First Presidency, First Presidency to Brethren Rushton and Hanson.

Information must, according to the "form" be given in the following items: Name in full; parentage, that is, father's name in full, mother's (maiden) name in full; present address; date of birth; place and country of birth; nationality; whether holder of passport from his government; if male, whether applicant has served in the armed forces of his country, and if so, how long; whether previously in the country to which it is desired to go, and if so, places of residence, with dates, name of mission or school where applicant will work; place and province where it is desired to work; names and addresses of three persons who will furnish information as to applicant, if applied to. Then follows a "declaration": "I hereby undertake to do nothing contrary to, or in diminution of, the authority of Government as by law established in British India" [or other province], and place for signature follows.

This form must be filled out in triplicate, and filed together with certificate from the head of the society with which the individual is connected. These forms were at once sent to Brethren Rushton and Hanson, and Brother and Sister Passman filled out theirs, which I duly filed together with letter of certification. These details took several days in the working out. The applications all duly filed, etc., we were told that returns thereon could not be expected under three months, with the probability that it would take longer, and that in case of Palestine there was a probability that the permission would be denied, though it is in our favor that we were active in Palestine before the war.

It is probable that at least one reason underlying the rules of the British Government in these matters is the desire to guard against German propaganda. It will be noted that the restrictions cover educational as well as religious workers, and in the case of Palestine, permission may be denied all societies, who were not there previously to the war. The outcome, of course, is of great interest to us.

It is not unlikely, too, that in this case as in several others, we have been made the victims of the usual confusion in the minds of many between us and the Utah organizations, and this necessitates still further action. Fortunately, our work in this direction is made easier, because of my previous visits to Washington, when situations growing out of this confusion made it necessary to make this distinction clear to several of the European governments. This matter is being followed up.

In the case of Brother and Sister Passman, seeing the likely delay in securing the permission, I decided to advise them to proceed on their journey as far as Basle, Switzerland, and there join forces with Brethren Roos and Halb, and work there till permitted entrance to Palestine. This necessitated securing amendments to their passports to include Switzerland, which was done, and they expected to leave New York on the 17th, but were compelled to change to the 2d of October.

Up until I left Washington on the 18th of September, I was in more or less regular touch with the British Embassy, having my last interview with the secretary on the morning of the day I left, in which interview I secured information valuable to us, which will be followed up.

The "between-times" were used to advantage, securing information from several quarters, some of which will later be presented to the Saints at large. I secured and read while there much literature on the Indian questions, had interviews with committeemen and department men, and bureau men, on this and other subjects of interest and value to the church. Incidentally, I improved the opportunity on a few occasions to hear the Senate on the Treaty consideration, though I was compelled to leave about the time the debate was well started.

The kind of work I was doing in Washington, is not spectacular, and much of it may appear unnecessary to many of the church members, and much less desirable than attending conferences; but it is of great importance, and the personal contact is at times necessary. Even office men have their functions and may be useful, if not valuable. So I have not hesitated to use my judgment on the work to be done there and to spend the time necessary to do it, knowing its important bearings on the work of the church, and having my chief interest and objective centered in the welfare of the church. To make my last trip to Washington, I was compelled to change plans I had tentatively made to attend several district conferences, and changed the plans only because I felt it wise and necessary. Without doubt good could have been accomplished in attending the conferences, but the emergency had to be met.

Of my experiences in meeting with the Saints at Brooklyn, Philadelphia, and Washington, I shall write in another column.

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

---

EXISTING TREATIES FOR PEACE

---

The Commoner for August, 1919, contains an able article by James Brown Scott, on "Treaties for the advancement of peace," giving a list of thirty treaties signed by the United States in the fall of 1914 alone. And of these, twenty-eight treaties were ratified by the Senate of the United States in the fall of that same year. All of these treaties provide for a submission of all questions for investigation and for most questions to arbitration. The important features are declared to be substantially the same in each of these treaties.

---

Would the birth of Jesus, the character of Jesus, have been possible unless there had been the virginal and expectant soul of such a woman as Mary, ready to welcome his coming with her song? "My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Savior." Does not the advent of a higher manhood always wait for the hope and longing of a nobler womanhood?—Henry Van Dyke in Out of Doors in the Holy Land, page 39.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

It Is Written

In connection with the work of teaching the law of tithing and receiving the tithes of the membership, we hear and read many testimonies of how the Lord blesses those, who earnestly endeavor to live by every word that God has given for the direction and benefit of his believing children. Occasionally, however, are cited instances wherein the expected blessings do not follow and disappointment and discouragement are expressed as a result. The following cases are illustrative of the latter experiences:

Brother A states that while he put forth an earnest effort to comply with the tithing law, his business went down and threatened to prove a failure, but became quite profitable as soon as he ceased to pay his tithing.

Brother B, his neighbor, highly resolves to tithe a certain branch of his business and while he does so the profits decrease thereon and he is confronted with failure in this portion of his business.

In analysing such experiences it is well to bear in mind the following principles:

BROTHER A

1. God requires that man observe not only the letter of the law, but the spirit of the law also.
2. If the mere act of tithing the profits of the business would insure greater financial returns, all shrew business men would pay tithing.
3. God has not promised to bestow his richest blessings upon those who run well for a season. On the other hand we are admonished not to become weary in well doing for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not.
4. Neither are the blessings of God promised upon the payment of tithing alone. Jesus said to the Pharisees, "Ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done and not to leave the others undone."
5. "Teach them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."
6. "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say ye have no promise."

In the case of Brother A it would be unfair for us to try to point out his failures to keep the whole law, which resulted in the blessings being withheld.

Throughout the scriptures, however, we are assured that full and continued obedience to his laws brings to us the favor and protection of God and the granting of that which is for our best good.

BROTHER B

1. The foregoing principles may also be applied in an analysis of Brother B's experience.
2. In addition it is interesting to note that the promises made in Malachi were based upon the bringing in of, not a portion, but "all the tithes into the storehouse."
3. If the other branches of Brother B's business yielded profits, tithing should also have been paid thereon. The payment of tithing should not be treated as an experiment to see whether God will bless that portion of the business which is tithed, above that portion that is not being tithed.
4. Surely God is not pleased with an effort towards a partial obedience on the part of one who knows his will. Latter Day Saints would not think of repenting in part, nor being partly baptized, so why expect the blessings of heaven to follow a partial application of the principle of tithing?

"The promises of God standeth sure," briefly sums up the entire matter. So we may safely teach mankind to observe "all things" whatsoever God has commanded with the full assurance that the promised blessings will follow complete and continued obedience.

Tithing is a part of Christ's law governing temporalities and a proper observance thereof brings the sweet consciousness of having done that which God has commanded and makes us "laborers together with God" in carrying on the gospel work unto the blessing of mankind, spiritually and temporally.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

Presiding Bishop.

---

AFTER DEATH, A SURE RESURRECTION

---

(Funeral Sermon of Heman C. Smith. By Elder Joseph Luff.)

For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." —2 Timothy 4: 6-8.

The 27th verse of the 9th chapter of the Hebrew letter reads:

"It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment."

Lastly I turn to the words that are to be found in the 26th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, the 8th verse:

"Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?"

Before proceeding further I wish to ask Brother Rushton to read the testimonial authorized by action of the General Conference to be prepared by a committee, and which was afterwards adopted by the body, in relation to our departed brother, and containing an obituary:

To the General Conference; Greeting: Pursuant to the action of the General Conference, April 18, 1919, we the undersigned, as your committee, herewith present the following letter of condolence and sympathy in reference to the death of Elder Heman C. Smith, the Church Historian:

Heman C. Smith was the third son of Spencer and Anna C. Wight-Smith. He was born September 27, 1850, near Fredericksburgh, Texas. He was baptized on the 7th of October, 1862, by William H. Kelley. Confirmed the following day by Elders W. W. Blair and James Blakeslee. On the 14th of March, 1874, was ordained to the office of elder and immediately entered the ministerial field as an appointee of the district. In the autumn of that year, was selected by Joseph R. Lambert, of the Twelve, as his colaborer. In 1876 our brother was ordained to the office of seventy under the hands of James Caffall. In 1885 was ordained one of the presidents of the quorums of seventy. On March 30, 1888, he was ordained an apostle in which office he served until April 19, 1909, when he was released from active duty in the Quorum of Twelve to devote himself exclusively to the work of Church Historian. On June 2, 1886, he married Vida E. Smith, oldest daughter of Alexander H. Smith, to whom four children were born, one son, Hale; three daughters, Inez, Erlita, and Beth, the latter preceding him to the better land in 1914.

Our brother has been engaged practically all of his life in church work, traveling extensively as a missionary in the United States. As an apostle he has been in charge of many fields, including the European Mission over which he presided during 1897 in company with Elder F. G. Pitt. In all of these duties his work has been characterized by a thoroughness and care for which he became known throughout the entire church. Since 1897 he occupied in the office of Historian and has displayed a remarkable devotion and efficiency in this department, his ability being recognized not only in the circles of the church but by several State and national historical societies of which he was an honored member. He also was a member of the Board of Trustees of the Children's Home of which he had been the first president, and always an enthusiastic worker in the interests of that institution. Besides these varied activities he was a member of the city council of Lamoni, Iowa.

His health which had been extraordinarily robust until about a year ago, when it began to fail, did not keep him from his customary steady and faithful work and his report to this conference reveals the wide and intense interest he showed in the events which could in anywise affect our organization. His collapse came in almost tragic suddenness, and on the date of our assembly in General Conference a gloom settled upon all as the news of our brother's serious illness became known. Each day the bulletins issued by his friend and colaborer of many years, Doctor Joseph Luff, were listened to with grave anxiety, hoping against hope for good news of his improvement. However, last night the news of his passing became known. He died at the Independence Sanitarium surrounded by the members of his family as the light of the westing sun went out.

In the death of Brother Heman C. Smith the church has lost one of her most stalwart and honored sons, a powerful and fearless protagonist, an eloquent and powerful preacher, a writer and author whose works have become standard texts to the ministry. Not only has he been a prolific contributor to our church papers, and produced many tracts, for many years being the editor of the Journal of History, contributing many articles to encyclopedias, magazines, and papers, he found time to produce several controversial books dealing with the differences between the organizations growing out of the latter-day work. However, he probably produced his most enduring work in collaboration with the late President Joseph Smith in the several volumes of church history which are a testimony to the thoroughness and completeness of his analytical processes.

As a man our brother was an example of that type peculiar to the latter-day work. He had strong convictions, a comprehensive mind, a clear logical method of reasoning; and while denied the peculiar grace of an academic training, nevertheless evidenced a vast fund of knowledge, a mental poise, and brought to bear upon all features of his work the splendid training and a minutiae of information which witnessed to his untiring zeal in his work.

Outwardly he seemed to be rather insulated in his life, not easy of approach, but to those who knew him, a tender heart, a real sense of brotherhood and a wide sympathy were wrapped up in his life. He had splendid judgment and balance by which he won the confidence of those who were associated with him either officially or personally. In conference sessions and in quorum work he proved himself a master in debate. In the many conflicts in which our church legislation has been evolved, and inevitable to the church progress, our brother was for many years one of the most impressive and influential of her illustrious leaders. In this connection we mention his contributions to the statutes of our ecclesiastical code; for he held the position as secretary of the Quorum of Twelve for many years, and the different records bear witness to the mind and power of our brother's association with that work.

In his family life, which was largely hidden from the public gaze, there was wrapped up an idyll in which the strong passion for his home and wife and children assumed the sacredness of worship. He loved deeply and reverently that little circle and found therein amid the fret and tempest of official life his shrine of abiding pleasure and solace in a very real sense. It may be well said of him that home and church made the polar extremes of his life and work.

In his death the church has lost a worthy champion whose life was dedicated to the defense of her fair name and the advancement of her highest and best interests. Without compromise he stood for what he believed to be right; he made no apologies for any results which might have been developed in his straightforward course to that objective. He temporized with no devices nor expedience in his endeavors to define the ideals, to outline the policy, and to build up that kingdom which he believed was of God. Today the community, the church, and the home are poorer, inestimably so, in this irreparable loss of brother, minister, and friend; and while reverently bowing to this manifestation of the divine will, believing in the inscrutable wisdom of Him who doeth all things well, in whose unfathomable love all of us hope and trust, we join with the grief-stricken family in deepest sympathy, earnestly praying that God will sustain and comfort all in this sad hour.

May the glad hope of the gospel which our brother so strongly believed, so ably advocated, light up the dark valley of shadows through which they pass and bring to them the solace which they need.

On behalf of the general church,

JOHN W. RUSHTON,
T. W. WILLIAMS,
J. W. DAVIS,

Committee.

LAMONI, IOWA, April 18, 1919.

This presents in better form than any statements of mine could have done, an obituary, and an expression in testimonial from the church; and I want to say to you, to those who may not have been present at the time of its adoption by the body, that it does not express merely a desire to observe a customary formula, but was a spontaneous outburst of the conference heart, and I shall try to-day to avoid as much as possible any personal reference further to my brother and his virtues. First, for the reason that I knew the man. I knew him well. And could I consult him to-day I am certain that it would be his desire that I should refrain from any unnecessary reference to him personally, or in eulogy of his character or work, and confine myself to the presentation of that which might better contribute to the anchorage of the hopes of the children of men and to rivet their faith in the mission of Jesus Christ. And second, for the reason that I desire to keep under control as nearly as I can, my emotions.

A certain king, of whom you have read in the book of Chronicles, received boastful communication from another king at one time, to the effect that on the morrow his territory and kingdom would be invaded, and predicting the desolation and fall and the entire subjugation of his territory. The king sent back this answer: "Tell him, 'Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off.'"

Solomon, who is accounted as a wise man, has written, and it is here recorded that "It is better to go to the house of mourning, than to go to the house of feasting," and the day of a man's death is better than the day of his birth.

Away down in Texas, sixty-nine years ago, or thereabouts, a little habitation rang with the joyous sound: "A man child is born." And I think I see the mother in that home, as that child nestled in her arms and was pressed to her bosom, breathing out a prayer, as she thought with feelings of suspense of what the future might mean for her boy, that the Infinite God would take such interest in him as to preserve him and his character, and direct him in usefulness that would make for his peace with God, and the good of humanity. To-day my ears catch the sound that I think is resounding and reverberating through the chambers, and the corridors of a place that we call paradise, and it runs to this effect: "A man has graduated, has received his diploma, has been promoted, and with that as a passport has been admitted into our elysium. The harness has been put off. The probation is ended. The fight has been fought. The course has been finished. The faith intrusted to the man has been kept. Hosanna, Hosanna, to the name of the Lord." That mother's prayer is answered.

But in order that this might happen, what confronts us here now has also to happen. I look upon the beautiful flowers that express so much, being placed where they are to-day, and as I catch the fragrance and behold the beauty, I am solemnly reminded that in order for these to be here to-day something had to die. I take the ear of corn in my hand and view it with admiration and wonder, but in order for this to have existence, something had to die. And I look and turn my eyes where I may, there comes the echo and the re-echo of that same thought in its repetition.

One of the poets has said:

Look nature through: 'Tis revolution all;
All change; no death. Day follows night, and night
The dying day: Stars rise and set and rise.
Earth takes the example. See the summer gay
With her green chaplet and ambrosial flowers,
Droops into pallid Autumn: Winter gray—
Horrid with frost and turbulent with storm,
Blows Autumn and its golden fruits away,
Then melts into the Spring: Soft Spring, with breath
Favonian, from warm chambers of the south
Recalls the first. All to re-flourish, fades;
As in a wheel, all sinks, to reascend;
Emblems of man, who passes, not expires.

Again he says:

And can it be
Matter immortal, and shall Spirit die?
Above the nobler shall less nobler rise?
Shall man alone, for whom all else revives,
No resurrection know? Shall man alone—
Imperial man! be sown in barren ground,
Less privileged than grain on which he feeds?

The language of one portion of my text says: "It is appointed unto man once to die." Don't make a mistake. Once. Once to die. Not twice. This is the divine appointment. If he dies more than once that is his fault. So far as the appointment of God goes, it is that he shall die only once. Do you remember, or ever stop to think, that because of that appointment for you, and that appointment for our departed brother, and that appointment for me, Jesus said to God thousands of years ago: "Put me down under the same appointment." That is why he came, and why he died. Did you ever stop to think about that?

I may here call your attention to the statement to be found in the Book of Mormon. I think in Third Nephi. When he was leaving those whom he had made his apostles, Jesus turned to them and said: "Behold I have given unto you my gospel, and this is the gospel that I have given unto you. That I came unto this world to do the will of my Father which sent me. And this is the will of my Father that sent me, that I should be lifted up on the cross. And that after I had been lifted up on the cross I should draw all men unto me."

You and I have been appointed unto death, and all that was implied as a consequence of that appointment was in the mind and conception of Jesus Christ when he had it arranged with his Father, that he should be put upon the same level. You know when he talked with his disciples on this earth as recorded in the 6th chapter of John, he wanted them to understand something in regard to this, and he told them that except they ate his flesh and drank his blood they could not have his life in them, and they said, "This is an hard saying. I can not listen any more," and some turned and left. And turning to Peter and others he said: "Will you go also, because you do not understand me fully?" Peter answered: "To whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life, and we know and are sure that thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

Jesus said, "I am the bread that came down from heaven." Understand that this body you are thinking about, that was born in the womb of the virgin, never came down from heaven. "I am the bread which came down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof and not die."

Turning now to the tenth chapter of the Hebrew letter, we find that Jesus said: "Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me), to do thy will, O God."

In the Book of Mormon as I have shown, an announcement is made as to what was the will of God as he understood it beforehand, and you know, that it was impossible for him to have performed that part of the will of God referred to in my recital from the Book of Mormon, as he was when he came down from heaven. He brought nothing from heaven that could be nailed to the cross. Therefore, for this reason he said, "A body hast thou prepared me."

I do not know what that "volume" is that he thus referred to when he said "in the volume of the book it is written of me," but over in the Book of Revelation, the 13th chapter, there is a mention of some events to transpire in latter years in connection with which it is said that people should follow after a certain power. All would do so except those whose names were written in the Book of Life, of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

I think that must be the Book which was in the beginning written when God and Jesus together planned the program of Christ's missionary service in the interests of human redemption, Jesus knew its contents and here implied his readiness to meet all its requirements. Let a body that can die be prepared for me, and I will discharge all its obligations in such a way that men who are appointed unto death shall have hope—a hope that shall anchor the soul and stay it in the hour of dissolution with the knowledge that this thing called death is only an incident connected with the life program, and need not be feared.

Do you understand what Paul meant in his writing further in the Hebrew letter when he said, because of this, or "for as much as the children were made partakers of flesh and blood (and necessarily must come under this appointment—once to die) he himself likewise took part of the same." What for? That through death—"through death"—he might destroy him that had the power of death, . . . and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage."

O blessed be the name of that matchless One, who, out of consideration of conditions such as confront us to-day, said in the beginning: Put me under the same rule, that by reason of my voluntarily undertaking it and abiding its necessities, I may dissolve the world's gloom, and lift mankind into a condition of joyous hope that would otherwise have been impossible for them.

He took on him the nature of Abraham, and as he took that nature he must come under the appointments of the law of that nature, and he took it for at least a threefold purpose:

First, that he might fulfill the law that related to the sacrificial obligations men were under by reason of the sin that had entered into the world.

Second, that he might demonstrate in the flesh the power of that gospel he came to teach, and leave flesh without any excuse; in that what it had done for him it could do for them.

And thirdly, that as man was appointed once to die he might pass under the conditions of this appointment, and by reason of his going as they were required to go, and arising therefrom, he might bring forth the evidence of his conquest, and by holding in his hand the keys of death and hell thereafter, he might thus banish forever their fear of death. That they might know that these keys were thereafter to be in the hands of their friend, hence there was nothing to fear, for as he said: "I am he that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth and no man openeth." I have wrested the keys from your enemy, and in the hands of your friend they will remain evermore. Every door that I open as a consequence is for you to enter in; every joy that is to be unfolded, every glory that is to be exhibited is to be with a view to your participating and partaking under the provisions that I have made, and death is but the corridor through which you pass to heaven.

I fancied as I lay upon my bed last night, that I could see my Brother Heman, shaking hands with Jesus and Alexander and Joseph and some of the others. I almost envied him the enjoyment of the privilege without me. I wished in my heart, that I might be assured of the privilege that it seemed to me he was enjoying. It is appointed unto men once to die; and if we have the right view of the lesson of Jesus Christ, and the gospel that has come to us, we are justified in believing the words of the wise man, that it is better to go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting. Better the day of a man's death than the day of his birth. The harness is laid down. Calculation and speculation and apprehension are ended, and the fruition of straggling hope is his.

The testimony left by our brother gives evidence to us that the promises were his by title and are being realized. His last words were in reference to his work. He wished to know, if he ought to make a later report to conference, and he seemed to be mentally engrossed with the obligations of his office and with the ambition to discharge them worthily.

I remember thirty-nine years ago, when in association with him we traveled over what was then the Indian Territory, now Oklahoma, and some of the things that transpired in connection. With food at times unfit to eat, and many times getting our meals by picking the berries out in the woods, yet without a word of complaint, without anything to indicate that he was unwilling to undergo any inconvenience, that he might carry forward the work intrusted to him, he cheerfully executed his mission, and labored to bless everybody. I can almost hear his voice now ringing in my ears, as when the people met to hear him sounding the message of this blessed gospel. Willing to sacrifice all of life's luxuries and even comforts or necessities, that he might give to others the benefit of that which was in his possession—the truth of God. Surely the Spirit of the Master actuated him, and to me he was an exemplary companion, the influence of whose life will remain co-equal with memory.

I remember once years ago when in the town of Kirtland, things pressed upon our minds with reference to the church and the duties our position in the Quorum of Twelve imposed upon us, how he and I, burdened with thought retired alone to an upper chamber. I will never forget how he poured out his soul that day. "O Lord, is there anything in me that needs changing: is there anything I have left undone? Is there anything, O Lord, that I should revise in my course, to put me in a position where I may be entitled to that greater measure of light that seems to be demanded to meet the issues crowding upon the Church?"

It was the burden he felt upon him to properly present the gospel, and represent God in the Church, and it showed the spirit of the man, the disposition of the man and his concept of his mission in life. I have often looked upon his strong form and wished that I might be as strong; little thinking it would fall to my lot, as it does to-day, to speak at the funeral of the man I so loved.

In regard to the hope that he extended to men, of the future life, often have I heard him speaking from texts that gave suggestions along that line to me. Not that he presented them in the exact form that I do, but his sentences were sermons in themselves often, and were like seed-truths that bore fruit within me. And the resurrection of the dead—so mysterious without light, was cleared and made more comprehensive by the aid of the expressions that fell from his lips as a result of his study and inspiration. Often I had asked, How can it be?

A few years ago our church purchased ground for a graveyard in Independence. I had purchased elsewhere, years before, a large lot and had allowed a dozen persons—Saints—to be buried in it, and I was anxious that all should be removed to the new cemetery, and so I engaged a man to exhume the bodies, and out of probably half a dozen of the bodies that had been buried there, there was not matter enough left to fill a fire shovel. As I saw these men at work transferring those remains, I thought, "O God, this resurrection of the dead! Is it a fact? These bodies have disintegrated, dissolved, and gone to the elements again. Can it be?" But the help I obtained from this man and others has with further inspiration brought me out of my former dilemma, and it no longer taxes my reason or faith.

The Scriptures declare that "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. . . . All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made," and I see Jesus in my imagination, in association with the Father, looking out upon the chaotic condition before him, and the darkness that covered the face of the deep, and I hear his command: "Let there be light," and light appeared. What was necessary in the way of chemical combinations of atoms or elements in order to produce what that meant I do not know, but accepting the word as true, the evidence that confronts me to-day proves that the results materialized, and whatever that combination was, whatever was necessary, in that association that was demanded occurred, and at his bidding there was light.

I hear that voice again saying: "Let the earth bring forth of its kind, and let the sea produce, and let this or that in its own place become fruitful," and I see a condition beginning and continuing until this world is teeming with animate beings. And in these facts I discern that God means something that answers all the requirements of the resurrection. It is no more surprising that man should live again than that he ever lived at all. Not a bit more. God, whether alone, or as "manifest in flesh," means the creation, and also the "resurrection and the life."

If you remember the occurrence as told in John, 11th chapter, when Jesus approaching the grave of Lazarus was addressed in words that indicated strong anxiety by Martha, and he said, Why Martha, "thy brother shall rise again." "I know," she said, "he will rise again . . . at the last day. But, Oh! I think I hear him saying:

"Martha, will I ever be able to make you understand? Will the world ever learn the lesson I am here to teach. I am Immanuel. "I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth on me though he were dead, yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." It is not a question of to-morrow or the next day, or the last day. Martha, it depends on me. I am all that you are looking for, it depends on me and my Father. And I am here, I am the resurrection. I am he that spoke all life forms into existence.

He started to give that ocular demonstration, and commanded that they take away the stone from the grave. Then she said, "O Jesus, he has been dead four days; don't you know that decomposition has set in? Don't you know that his remains are now offensive?"

Then he gave her such a look, and said, "Martha, can you not comprehend?" What matters that to the Creator—the Christ of the universe, that gave Lazarus his first breath of life—his entire being. What if the elements there gathered together be scattered, gas to gas, atom to atom, element to element, what matters it? Think of me as Immanuel. God with us.

Then he cried out: "Lazarus, come forth!" And he that was dead and clothed in his grave clothes, stepped out. It was simply a God revelation.

Did you ever stop to think of the miracle recorded in the Scriptures where the disciples came and said, "Jesus, look upon this great multitude. They are hungry. Send them home." But Jesus said: "No, feed them." "But," they said, "we have nothing here, but just five loaves, and two fishes. That would not feed twenty, and there are five thousand of them, besides women and children, probably twelve thousand people." He simply said, "Let them sit down," and they sat down, and they brought the basket with five loaves and two fishes, and he blessed them. "Now," he said, "give these to the multitude." And when the feast was all over they gathered up probably twelve times as much as they started with.

Did you ever stop to think that in order to get bread, grain must be raised in the ground, and that it takes months. The grain has to go to the mill, and to be made into flour, then kneaded and put through certain other processes and then submitted to that element called heat to be properly cooked and prepared. Fish must be generated, then grow to a certain size suitable for eating, and then submitted to these other elements to become fit food for the human body. That requires years, under the operation of natural law. Yet all of this that was necessary Jesus did in the performing of that miracle, instantly—in a moment. Ten or twelve thousand people, probably, were fed.

Who that believes in that miracle can doubt or question the resurrection? What matters it whether the elements that compose this body fall into disintegration? What matters it where they are or what they are, to the accomplishment of the purposes of the great God. "In the beginning—God," and that was sufficient for a world's creation. In the resurrection—God—that's enough for all demands. God with us. Immanuel.

When I think of this appointment once to die, and how with that fear before men, they were robbed of the satisfaction and peace of life and felt always the fear of the coming disaster, and then think of what Jesus did that required his being subjected to the same estate—the taking upon himself of the same kind of body and the passing through this ordeal of death, simply and solely that we might have this hope—this anchorage—and be delivered from the torturing fear of uncertainty and apprehension, and be permitted to see through this avenue of promotion into the realm, towards which all God's creations and purposes relating to us pointed, I can scarcely restrain my heart's outbursts of admiration and love, and I feel a thousand times honored and blessed in the privileges of my discipleship. We try to contemplate God as the center and soul of this blessed work.

I know what this event means to some, and I think of the feeling of lonesomeness of those nearest and dearest to this man, from the fact that part of their life has gone out from them, yet I seem to see his hand extended from the paradise to which I know he has gone, and if I could reach this frail hand to grasp it, and my voice could reach his, I would say, "Heman, congratulations."

When I think of his former home, and of the places he has occupied, and the offices he has filled, and what this removal means of separation and loneliness to each and all, I would offer condolence to those he has left, but congratulation to him. Tears for them, but smiles for him. No word of mine can assuage the grief felt by those who have been so closely and intimately connected with him, but I thank God that he gave Brother Heman C. Smith to the church.

I praise his name for the memory of the man, which shall last while memory holds at all, and I hope his grace shall enable us to emulate his goodness, and to commit ourselves unto the performance of the work intrusted to us, in such a way that in the end when the appointment made is to have its execution as to our flesh, and death's summons is heard, we can look up and say, "I am ready to be offered. I have fought a good fight. I have finished my course." I never dodged a duty in it. I met life's demands, whether pleasing or painful. I met them as they confronted me. I have finished my course. And more than all, blessed be God, I have kept the faith. And now Lord, I have your word for it that there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which you as the Lord, the righteous judge, have promised to give to me, and not to me only, but to all those who love and serve you, and having served as best I could under life's conditions, I am ready to be offered up. Into thy hands I commend by spirit.

I am trying, brothers and sisters, to include myself as one that loves his appearing, so that when the execution of that appointment shall have its effect upon me, and I shall be transported from this stage to the other, I may be placed side by side with this man, who with me entered the Quorum of Twelve in 1887, and with me went out in 1909, with whom I spent some of the most pleasant days and had some of the most blessed experiences of life, and who has left to me as a legacy a memory that is imperishable.

Oh, that I may be found worthy—not only of this, but still better, of companionship eternally with Him who gave to both of us this hope through the mercy of His magnanimity. May we have the grace to rightly estimate the good that in this life has been intrusted to our handling—this gospel of bliss—and may we eventually be granted an entrance into the realm toward which it points and to the environments to which it furnishes an adaptation. So abiding, death can bring no terror. It has no sting, and the grave can have no victory.

---

RESTORATION

---

Joseph Smith was not a reformer of any existing religious organization.

He was a restorer of the ancient order and faith of the original Church of Jesus Christ.

The church organized through his agency, then, conforms to the apostolic pattern.

The faith, doctrine, and practice are in full accord with the New Testament Church.

This prophet of the latter days reemphasized the divinity of Jesus Christ, unchangeability of God and the fulfillment of all his promises.

He was the recipient of the angel's message promised in Revelation 14: 6, 7.

Every religious denomination has a founder who is held in precious memory as a servant of God. The Baptist has Williams, the Methodist has Wesley, and these men were great reformers, but in no full sense were they restorers, and they did not claim to be.

Wesley, though dead yet speaketh, in his Sermon LXXI: "The times which we have reason to believe are at hand (if they are not already begun) are what many pious men have termed, the time of "the latter-day glory." God's arising to maintain his cause, and set up his kingdom over the earth!"

Williams, of Baptist fame, left the church he founded in 1639, and lamented the fact that authority to administer in the ordinances was not here and he looked forward to the day when God would "send forth new apostles to plant churches anew." Read any Baptist History, especially Knowles, page 172.

Many of these reformers paved the way for the restoration of the gospel in its fullness. (Read Acts 3: 21; Matthew 24: 14.)

Robinson, one of the men that founded Congregationalism, urged his followers to be willing to embrace the fullness of truth. He said: "I am confident that the Lord has more truth yet to break forth out of his holy word." (See his sermon in Pilgrim Hall at Plymouth, or Rupp's History, page 195.)

Thus we discover that the work of Joseph Smith was in accord with these views of reformers, and it is lamentable, as Robinson said, that many people to-day are willing to live in the dim twilight when they might enjoy the fullness of God's light, as reflected in the restored gospel of Christ.

Find this old path and walk therein, for there is peace.

R. W. FARRELL.

---

CHEERFULNESS

---

To be cheerful does not mean to be noisy or boisterous. I have met individuals of our church who never had much to say, but when asked a sensible question, they willingly and cheerfully replied, and their personality seemed very attractive. They who study the law of God should not forget that this is a time of warning; not a time of any unnecessary words. In rendering service to God, he requireth a willing hand; he loveth a cheerful giver.

The Lord has come that we might have life, and that we might have it more abundantly. If we desire to be partakers of that more abundant life (which I believe is partly enjoyed in this earthly existence) we must have implicit faith and confidence in God. And, we must also have confidence in ourselves that we can keep his commandments.

A brother once said to me, "It seems to me that nothing pays." If our only hope is set upon the things of this world, we might meet with disappointments; but there is one thing that will pay us, and never fail; that is, serving God in spirit and in truth.

We may not always be able to comprehend God's dealing with us when disappointments and sorrow meet us. But as General Pershing said to his soldiers, "Hardships will be your lot, but trust in God will be your comfort." When hardships meet us if we could only pause for a moment and cheerfully look up to God, put our trust in him, the abiding Comforter will come to our rescue, and do for us what human help cannot do.

There is a saying, "A pleasant, cheerful wife is as a rainbow set in the sky." What would God's children be likened unto if they could be cheerful in their service to God? A child of God should be a visible beatitude of joy and happiness. Nothing is so certain to bring genuine smiles to our faces as to watch such smiles grow on the faces of others, as a result of our sympathy, our gentle words, or helpful deeds. Our life should be a living doxology for gratitude and adoration. The true way to be happy is to make others happy. Character consists of little acts honorably preferred.

One has said, "If poverty had wings like riches, we wouldn't always have the poor with us." But happiness does not depend upon great wealth so much as it does upon independence and intellectual and moral culture. It depends infinitely more upon personal habits that are absolutely controlled by our wills. No income is large enough for the man who spends 105 per cent of it. Neither the President nor the wheat crop can help anyone on this particular phase of the living problem.

Money and laws have only a little to do with happiness. Personal habits have much to do with it.

A. JENSEN.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

SERBIA, THE GREATEST SUFFERER

Every ill to which human flesh is heir, save only the ailments resulting from gluttony, to-day afflicts Serbia. The latter is a sin not possible now.

A life insurance statistician, sent by the American Red Cross to report on conditions in the countries liberated by the war, declared that 75 per cent of the Serbians are starving. He also said that 10 per cent of the population died off each year of the war, and as a result, the population to-day numbers one and one-half millions less than it did in 1914.

In some areas only one doctor ministers to 75,000 persons, among a population 75 per cent of which is in a sub-normal condition from starvation, suffering and distress.

There is nothing outside of the actual soil of her country (and that must be refertilized) which Serbia does not lack.

Colonel Homer Folks, head of the commission sent by the Red Cross, who recently returned to this country, declared that Serbia is a country paralyzed, except as to spirit.

"When I left Serbia not a bank was doing business, no schools were open for the children, there were virtually no doctors or hospitals. The stores having nothing to sell except food supplies locally produced. No factories were in operation and almost no fuel was to be had. No labor was available, and there were no means of transportation—no horses, no mules, no automobiles, no trucks and but few oxen.

"Food must be rushed to Serbia at once, and to some extent this is being done, but it will be hard to fill her hurry orders until her transportation is repaired. From Skoplje on the south to Belgrade on the north, there is not a decent roadbed in Serbia. Her railways must be rebuilt. When I left, that half from Skoplje to Nich had been put in fair condition and the remainder will soon be repaired. In conjunction with this must be sent rolling stock, automobiles, gasoline, horses, mules, and oxen. Immediately she must have garden tools, seeds, and agricultural implements. She must have cattle, hogs, and poultry. When these things have been accomplished Serbia will be able to feed herself.

"This winter Serbia must have more clothes, shoes and more especially material for clothing—thread, buttons, and cotton cloth. Given these things, little by little her wheels will begin to move, and she will again become an organized community."

CHILD LABOR STANDARDS

Minimum standards for the health, education and work of American children were drawn up in tentative form as a result of the three days conference on child welfare standards which has just completed its sessions at Washington, District of Columbia. The standards will be further discussed at the regional conferences in nine cities, which will be held in the next three weeks under the auspices of the Children's Bureau, United States Department of Labor.

The standards drawn up set sixteen as the lowest age at which children can go to work in any occupation during the months when school is in session. Nine months' schooling, either full or part time, for children between 7 and 18 years of age is proposed as the minimum educational standard. A child of 16 cannot go to work unless he has completed the eighth grade. Education beyond the eighth grade is to be provided for employed children between 16 and 18 years old by attendance at day continuation schools.

The working day of minors shall never be longer than 8 hours and for children between 16 and 18 shall be less than the adult's working day. Night work and employment in hazardous occupations shall be prohibited. Minors shall be paid at a rate which, for full time employment, would yield at least the "necessary cost of proper living."

A central employment agency for children should be established, offering occupational advice and supervision during the first years of employment.

The section on employment certificates sets forth uniform requirements as to proof the child must furnish of age, education and physical fitness. The child cannot secure an employment certificate until he proves that he has definite promise of a job. The State shall supervise the issuance of employment certificates and the enforcement of school attendance laws.

The education of the public in all that concerns the child and its mother is, according to the conference, essential in raising health standards.

Public protection of maternity as defined by the conference embraces prenatal care, trained attendance at childbirth and adequate nursing and domestic assistance for the mother after confinement. Maternity centers should be placed at the service of all expectant mothers. Hospital care or skilled care at home during confinement should be available for all mothers. The State should regulate the training of midwives and supervise their practice. Household assistants should be furnished so that the mother may have a chance to regain her strength before resuming her household duties.

To protect babies and small children the conference recommends first of all the passage of laws requiring that births be registered within three days and that adequate treatment be provided for the eyes of the new born infant. Health centers should be established to supervise infants and children and to give advice as to their care and feeding. A public health nurse for every 2000 of the population is needed to give advice to mothers in their own homes.

The health of the school child is, according to the standards adopted by the conference, to be safeguarded by the provision of proper school houses, and of adequate facilities for recreation and physical training. Children in need of some form of special instruction because of mental or physical defect or retardation should have special attention in open air classes, nutrition classes and the like, and are to have, if necessary, rest periods at school and additional nourishment. Schools should be provided with a school nurse to teach the children the essentials of health and to do follow-up work in the home. They should also have a physician, full or part time, to examine the children and discover early departures from health and to control communicable disease.

Adolescents, whether in school or not, should be given opportunity for complete physical examination from time to time with advice and instruction as to their health needs, including sex instruction. Ample facilities for play and wholesome social life are not to be overlooked in the public protection of the growing child.

The State's particular responsibility for those of its children who are in need of special care is emphatically set forth in the resolutions passed by the section on "Children in need of special care." The conference urged the importance of home care and the necessity for adequate family income. The principle was stated that "no child should be removed from his home unless it is impossible so to reconstruct family conditions or build and supplement family resources as to make the home safe for the child, or so to supervise the child as to make his continued presence safe for this community." The need for State supervision of all institutions and agencies caring for children was emphasized. The principles governing juvenile court organization were set forth. More social work in rural communities was urged.

Emphasis was placed on the need for special attention to the mental hygiene of the child. The State should secure data concerning the extent of feeble-mindedness and subnormality and should provide for the care of handicapped children. The need for more scientific literature dealing with the child in need of special care and for periodic revision of child welfare legislation is emphasized. The appointment of State child welfare commissions or committees is recommended.—United States Department of Labor.

---

TAKING CARE OF YOUR HEALTH

---

When one has been overworking, undersleeping, overdrinking, overeating, and underexercising, germs multiply rapidly because the "white wings" of the human system are too tired to clean them out.

A long illness follows.

Some day we will tell the truth in the death certificates and the reports will be made out like this:

"Died after thirty years of overeating."

"Smothered himself to death. Worked and slept in unventilated rooms."

"Burned out. Slept only six hours a night."

Good health is a luxury which all of us can enjoy if we are willing to play the game on a long law of averages.

Eat lightly, drink lots of water, breathe fresh air night and day, get plenty of sleep, keep clean inside and outside, and Father Time will pass you by.—The Fortuna Magazine.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5928 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Motherhood--the Most Wonderful Thing in the World

Hilda and Josephine grew into womanhood as fast friends. Hilda married a poor but honest man, and Josephine married a man of large estates who builded her a princely house. He took her to Europe and they visited all the great cities that she might purchase rare treasures for its furnishings. When all was put in place at home Josephine sent for Hilda and showed her through every room.

But as often as she finished explaining the figures on the carpets, the graceful folds of the draperies, the rich carvings of the furniture, the meanings of the pictures and the statuary that the masters had painted and chiseled, Hilda would say with a smile, "It is indeed beautiful, but there is something more beautiful than that."

In her disappointment, Josephine asked, "Hilda, what could be more beautiful?" Hilda slipped her arm into Josephine's, as of old, and said, "Come with me."

They soon reached Hilda's humble home, with its plain but scrupulously clean white walls and doors.

Little finger marks were seen on the door frame as they entered, and a glad laugh greeted them from a ruddy faced babe in the cradle. Hilda turned and said, "Josephine, there is nothing in all your grand home so beautiful as those finger marks on the door, and the merry prattle of my sweet babe!" Tears started to Josephine's eyes as she folded her friend to her breast and said, "Hilda, you are right."—After Eugene Field.

Are you interested in the growth and development of your child from infancy to manhood?

Are you aware that much depends upon your intelligent understanding of the child rather than the guidance of blind Providence?

Childhood is sacred, and great responsibility rests upon parent and teacher.

Mothers' clubs, composed exclusively of mothers are being formed everywhere for the study of the child.

The ideal condition in education is to be realized when intelligent teachers and intelligent mothers are cordially cooperating in the training of children.

Mothers' and Teachers' Problems: F. B. Forbush's "Child and Child Training." MRS. MAUD PARHAM.

1038 West Electric Street, Independence, Missouri.

Other Ideas Concerning Child Welfare

In my opinion, the most common mistake made by mothers in caring for their children, is that of failing to see the importance of "living with" them. Too much importance is given to household cares, and time and energy thus exhausted in discharging those minor duties.

The most vital error is in losing the child's confidence, and it is spiritually that the most neglect is manifest.

A systematic course of study through the Woman's Auxiliary, with the personal attention and interest of a "mother in Israel," would be the most valuable help that could be given young Latter Day Saint mothers.

Sometimes it seems as though none of us have knowledge enough properly to care for the bodies, minds, and souls of our offsprings, or to train them properly for useful living. I do believe however the majority of Latter Day Saint mothers can make themselves capable by study and prayer. I look for a special course of study for mothers to be offered through the efforts of the Auxiliary.

Mothers who could not, or would not, make the effort to meet together for study could be reached by a consecrated sister giving them the instruction, something along the plan followed by the Home Department of the Sunday school.

If interest is aroused, nearly all the mothers in the church will read. A social worker would be of great service in arousing and stimulating this interest.

Fathers, equally with the mothers, are responsible for the welfare of their children, only in a different way. They can not be with the children as much as the mothers, but it is their duty to provide for the home and family in such a manner that the mother may give needed time and energy to the training of the children. These fathers are another problem for the women of the Auxiliary to consider. Auxiliary members should receive instruction which they pass on to their husbands, in order that they may work unitedly for the welfare of their children. Fathers might also receive instruction through lectures at conventions, reunions, and the like.

The parents and the church are the custodians of the child's spiritual development. The parents and the state are the custodians of the child's mental development. The parent, the state, and the church are the custodians of the child's physical welfare.

I am very anxious for social medical oversight in all communities, a school nurse, examinations by experts, and a general and particular interest in the well-being of all children. I will use my influence and support to bring these things to pass.

BEATRICE ROGERS.

Training Little Children

DIRECTED HANDWORK IN THE HOME

We often hear mothers lamenting the fact that there is no kindergarten in their neighborhood. They know what a benefit a kindergarten training would be to their children, but are not aware that some of the methods used in the kindergarten may also be employed in the home.

This is particularly true of kindergarten hand-work, which composes a sort of elementary manual training course.

For hand-work in the home it is not necessary to expend much time, labor, or money for materials; indeed, they may nearly all be obtained in the home.

Plastic clay may be used to advantage. The child can model balls, cubes and cylinders, reproducing simple objects he sees about him, or he can create from his own imagination. Give the clay into the child's hands and let him do what he pleases with it. He will find plenty to do and greatly enjoy this occupation, besides unconsciously expressing something within himself which it will be valuable to know.

Paper-folding is simple, and an occupation which the child can easily manipulate himself. Give him a small, square piece of colored wrapping-paper, have him bring opposite edges together, and then fold through the center, once. This will make a book which he can play he is reading or singing from, or he can call it a scrap-book and paste pictures in it. Folded twice, the piece of paper makes a nice little square handkerchief which has just been ironed and is ready to put away. Next the paper may be opened out, and it will be seen that the two folds cross at the center. The corners may be folded to this center, one at a time. When three corners are folded in, it looks like an open envelope; after the last corner is folded in, the envelope is closed, and the "letter" is ready to mail.

With a little ingenuity many other objects may be made by folding paper in different ways.

Cutting pictures from old magazines is one of the joys of childhood. To be able to do this well, the child must learn to use his eyes and his hands skillfully. It is splendid training, and cultivates patience and concentration as well as skill.

Painting is also a joy to the child. Through this medium the different colors can be taught and appreciation for color developed.

For weaving, colored wrapping-paper again comes into play. A piece about 10 or 12 inches square should be cut in half-inch slits from one side to within a short distance of the other. Half-inch strips of another color are then to be woven in and out the slits. A needle specially designed for paper-weaving can be obtained at small expense. In selecting the papers to be woven, colors should go harmoniously together.

For sewing, cut out a piece of cardboard about 8 inches square, and draw a circle on it within an inch or two of the outer edge. Holes as big as the end of the little finger should be punched around the circle about an inch apart. A shoelace is the best material to begin sewing with. Then as the little hands acquire some skill, yarn and blunt-pointed kindergarten needles can be used, smaller holes punched, and the outline varied to the square or oblong. Holes should be punched in these every inch both across and up and down, and may be sewed along the vertical lines, the horizontal lines, and diagonally. Simple pictures may also be outlined for sewing. With some of the cards the child should be allowed to sew whatever he chooses.

Different colored yarns should be used for each card, to hold the child's attention.

Drawing becomes a source of great pleasure and profit to the child. Suggest that he begin by drawing something with which he is perfectly familiar. In the kindergarten the little child generally wants to draw a ball, which he can make with a simple rotary motion. It very soon occurs to him to make two balls on his piece of paper, perhaps two large balls, or one large and one small one. Because the ball he plays with has a string attached to it, he next adds a string to his drawing. Then some one discovers that it is possible to use different colors, one for the ball and one for the string. And, a marvelous discovery, turned upside down the balls with their strings are like flowers on stems. It is not surprising to see the next step quickly follow, of adding little leaves to the stems. After this perhaps a bird or butterfly may be included in the drawing, and so on.

Stringing beads, buttons, seeds, spools or anything else which can be strung will always hold the child's interest, and familiarize him with color, form and number, separately and in combination.

With a little time and ingenuity spent in getting these various occupations started, any mother can direct the activities of her child into many educational channels, and supply the imperative need which the child feels for self-expression.—Mrs. Stella Clapsaddle, in Government Bulletin.

---

Kindergarten Helps for the Parents

---

Have you ever learned as much in any other six years of your life as in the first six? Of the heavens above you and the earth about you? Of your own body and soul? Of elementary, social and economic relations? Of fundamental qualities of things? And of the activities of life? And in what other period have you made so many important beginnings in action and in bodily control and care?

Try to enumerate the knowledge gained and the beginning made in these years.

Was not the sweet-souled Bishop Comenius right when he said that everything one ever knows or can do has its beginning in these years? And Jean Paul Richter, when he claimed that the child sees more new things in these six years playing about the door of its village home than the man can see traveling around the world, and learns more from mother and nurse than it will afterwards learn from tutors and professors in college and university?

Was not Richter right again in his belief that the most important thing that can come into the life of any individual is a happy, joyous, active childhood? No fortune, he thought, of material wealth which parents might leave their children could ever compensate for the loss of such joyous activity in their early life.

Rousseau and Pestalozzi were right in their new conception of education as growth and development through self-activity rather than the storing of the memory with forms and phrases of knowledge.

And Froebel was equally right in his estimate of the value of socializing the life of little children through the proper organization and direction of their spontaneous plays and other activities. Since he discovered the kindergarten thousands of men and women have worked out its technique far beyond his ability, until it has come to be regarded among thoughtful educators as one of the most valuable parts of our system of education. The kindergarten is good for children of all classes, for the rich and poor; for black and white; for native and foreign born—for many reasons probably more valuable for the children of the foreign-born among us than for any others.

The growth of the kindergarten in this country has been greater in the last 10 years than in the 40 years preceding, but still only one tenth of the children of kindergarten age are in kindergartens—about one fourth of those who live in cities and towns. Wherever there is a kindergarten the children attend gladly. No compulsion is required. The happiness and the joy of it are sufficient.

Then why not provide kindergartens for all? The only excuse is economy. But, is it good economy to save a few dollars at the price of neglect of the children at this most important age?

Is your community awake to its responsibility? Is it doing its full duty?

Are there kindergartens in all your schools?—P. P. Claxton, United States Commissioner of Education.

---

Sails

---

One ship drives east and another drives west,
By the self-same winds that blow;
'Tis the set of the sails,
And not the gales,
Which tells us the way to go.

Like the winds of the sea are the ways of fate
As we voyage along through life.
'Tis the set of the Soul,
That decides the goal,
And not the calm or the strife.—Selected.

---

"A little sunshine now and then is relished by the best of men."

"It takes a mighty good mixer to combine business and pleasure."

LETTER DEPARTMENT

League of Nations Compared With the Gospel

On September 12, President Wilson spoke in a large tent at Coeur d'Alene, Idaho. He was amazed that "some men wanted to reject the league of nations altogether." That is the way of the infidel. He not only wants to find fault with the church, and its many and varied features and obligations, but he rejects God himself by ignoring his very existence. America saved the world at nearly the very close of the war with Germany by sending at a great loss and hazard, her doughboys to the front, and now what the nations need most is a period of peace. Mr. Wilson said, "if the spirit of selfishness is going to prevail, where are your programs? How can you carry a program out where every man is looking out for his own selfish interests?"

The sacred book declared that "among the Gentiles, their folly and abominations shall be made manifest;" also, that "there are none that doeth good except those who are ready to receive the fullness of my gospel, which I have sent forth unto this generation."

So President Wilson and no one else need be amazed at the present condition of affairs.

The climax of opposition against the league is apparent when we hear men everywhere, even in the true church, speak concerning it as "a scheming plan for harm" and that its protest should be "like the roar of a gathering storm drowning the siren's whisperings of the covenanters," "that it should be discarded." Surely only a few of us believe thus, but it only takes time to prove that ever the right comes uppermost and ever is justice done. Clemenceau agrees with this thought; and at the end of a conflict with some one at the peace conference said, "Be persuaded that I shall not take ill a vote against the Government, but shall go down among you with a good heart, and take you by the hand." He spoke in advocacy of right and justice and at the same time stood for the pure principles of peace.

The world, surely, is at work at its program, for the newest Methodist church of Kansas City, can now say "Secularism matters little," but said the Bishop Quayle, "the fact that this church represents the authentic voice of God matters a lot." This church is the spiritual force which judges nations. Kingdoms are crumbling, and so will democracies if they do not measure up to the judgments of the Lord.

What is true of nations is as true of churches, and plain folks like you and me.

The Reverend Birkhead, Unitarian, said on last Sunday, "the ecclesiastical, domestic and traditional phases of Christianity are being neglected." The Lutheran minister said his primary doctrine was "to steady and encourage the young." One said, "this is no time for the church to consider saving itself." Reverend McGinley who was not long ago the minister at the Presbyterian Church here, told his group that "religious men and women now are not out and out wicked, and not out and out good either, as they professed to be."

We may be pardoned for listening to what our neighbors have to say on religious matters and they would be very welcome to hear what the Reorganized people talk about.

It strikes us that Doctor Gray of the Grand Avenue Kansas City Church, is a plain citizen, about right, when he declares "the only democracy that can survive the present storm in America will rise, when parties, corporations, organizations, universities, and all else, cease their struggle for advantage, and set themselves to their responsibilities."

Those of the Latter Day Saint ministry who were within hailing distance, especially those at the Stone Church said to their congregations something specifically pointing to the doctrine of Christ as interpreted in the light of present revelation from God, "the word of God to-day, to the world, and to his peculiar and chosen people."

Elder Walter Curtis said last Sunday: "Revelation from God is necessary, and the angel message had to be sent according to the prophecy." The witnesses spoken of were Paul, Job, and Jeremiah, and the Prophet Joseph Smith in our day.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Far West Stake

The late reunion was far and away in advance of any reunion the writer has ever before attended in the stake. The order on the grounds was excellent. The young people were especially commended for their general deportment. They were quiet, attentive and orderly in their demeanor. They were blessed in their young people's prayer meetings and acknowledged and commended in the manifestations of the gifts. About seventy-five tents were erected. Those present were mostly Saints, though some others came. The church people were brought together and became better acquainted, to their mutual good. Preaching, prayer and other services were good. The auxiliary department work was planned and executed by Sister Anna Salyards and Minnie E. Dobson, assisted by a number of good workers, and was well executed. The people were glad to see President Elbert A. Smith, Bishop and Sister McGuire, Brother and Sister Siegfried, Brother J. W. Wight, and others of the general working force appointed to labor in the stake.

Brother R. D. Weaver, of the misionary force, is preaching at Mirable, adjacent to Far West. He reports attendance and interest good and everything moving quite satisfactorily.

Brother Samuel Twombly is ill again with rheumatism at his home near Fanning, Kansas. We hope for early recovery as his service is valuable and much needed.

Brother E. F. Robertson is holding a series of two-day meetings at Pleasant Grove, DeKalb, Maple Grove, and Stewartville branches. Brother J. W. Roberts has been preaching at Guilford and Fortescue and has visited Langdon, Missouri, looking up conditions there.

Brother Salyards, in addition to his work in First Saint Joseph Branch, has held two-day meetings with the branches at Edgerton and South Saint Joseph. He reports encouragingly and feels assured that steady, reliable progress is being made.

While indifference, worldliness, and other evidences of spiritual and moral decadence are prevalent in the world, it is a pleasure to note that God has reserved everywhere those who are not at all disposed to forget him in the mad rush for pleasures and sensationalism. Sometimes our work seems to develop very slowly, but we believe the church is far ahead of what it has ever previously been, in general development; that the forces that stand for stability, intelligence, and steadfast allegiance to God and his work are firmly planted in determination to stand in holy places and labor and patiently endure until Zion becomes more fully established. It is the Adversary's work to beguile, to dishearten, and to "wear out." The prevalence of so much indifference and lack of spiritual and moral power in the world is at times very trying; but the good Lord is not dead, "nor doth he sleep." "The wrong shall fail, the right prevail." The faithful servant, the prayerful "doer of the work," find renewed spiritual power in the direct inspiration which assures him of the strong hand of God overruling all. The Lord has said to the church in recent days: "So be ye encouraged and press on to the consummation designed of God for his people—unity, honor, sanctification and glory. Amen."

Where shall the people go if not forward? We believe we are rapidly approaching days of great upheaval and trial, which must necessarily require great faithfulness and much blessing to endure. "Blessed is he that waiteth and keepeth his garments ready." The arm of flesh will fail us, we cannot trust even our own. The Lord will be a sure refuge to all who serve and look for protection in him. It becomes us to heed the warnings being given generally throughout the church. This is not a word of gloom, but a statement of fact. Labor, social and general conditions are looming up ominously. We believe the people of God should be united and stand together in unity and peace. Conditions arising in the world will soon make obvious to all the need of united faith and fuller consecration.

Brother H. W. Tilden, for years superintendent of Zion's Star Sunday School of the First Saint Joseph Branch, resigned such position because of impaired health and pressing business demands. He was tendered a vote of thanks for his effectual services and an expression of good will by the school. Sister Ruby Hitch was elected to succeed in the office of superintendent. She is well qualified for such work, is devoted to it, and will be sustained by a body of active workers.

We regret to report the loss of several families from the First Branch: Brother and Sister H. M. Cochran, to South Dakota on account of Brother Cochran's impaired health; Brother and Sister Evan P. Hopkins and Brother and Sister Robert Lewis to Kansas City; Brother and Sister G. W. Best to South Saint Joseph. The last named will not and must not desert the First Branch, however.

Brother V. M. Goodrich is filling appointments in various pulpits in the stake. He has spoken at the Saint Joseph Branches of late, also at Fortescue, Guilford, and at the reunion. He is a cheerful and willing helper among the Saints.

The fall conference of the stake will meet at Lexington Junction with the Alma Branch, October 11 and 12. Write Brother L. F. Ferguson, Hardin, Missouri, if you expect to attend. Let everybody go forward confidently. "Saints should be cheerful in their warfare that they may be joyous in their triumph." We are destined to t-r-i-u-m-p-h! As the Graceland boys say, "That's the way to spell it!"

A BROTHER.

Southeastern Illinois Reunion

The Brush Creek reunion of the Southeastern Illinois District, which closed a week ago, was considered by all who attended, as the very best reunion ever held in the district.

The ministry and members seemed to have attended, having no other object in mind, than to do their best to make the reunion a success, and it was a grand success.

J. F. Curtis, of the Twelve was in attendance most of the time, and of course delivered some strongly inspired sermons and gave good counsel for the advancement of the work.

Joshua Carlisle, the patriarch was all that his office required of him to be, and worked his way into the righteous regards and affections of the Saints. As a man of God he will be remembered by the Saints of the district that were privileged to attend the reunion.

Henry Sparling the Englishman, thoroughly filled his place with his English wit and fun, and best of all his splendid sermons and wise, fatherly counsel.

W. H. Kelley, the Irishman, known as the man from Southern Indiana, did well his part, and was noted for his jovial disposition and a way all of his own of telling his experiences while out on the firing line, in the varied fields of labor he had figured in. His sermons too, were of a high order and much appreciated.

Bishop Becker of Independence with his family and Sister Parker came to this reunion in two automobiles from the Kirtland reunion and were present most of the time. Brother Becker's timely discourses on the financial lines of his work were well received and greatly appreciated. His daughter and her associate entertained at and between the services the people with their violin and piano.

Well, F. L. Sawley, called himself the necessary nuisance because of being a sort of a fill-in for departmental work, song services, and doing his share of preaching and delivering one lecture in explaining the value of the departments of the church to the branches and district work.

The chairmen of the reunion did well their part, but great praise and credit is justly due to the sub or local committee who worked ungrudgingly to make and keep everything just right for the comfort and entertainment of all.

It was unanimously voted to hold another reunion at the same place next year to begin on Friday at 10 a. m. on or before full moon in August.

Suggestions were made that we consider the practicability of making Brush Creek a permanent place for holding the reunion each year.

Elder R. H. Hanson, president of the district and Elgin Presnell, clerk of the district were elected as two of the reunion committee for next year and they were given the privilege to choose a third person to act with them as reunion committee.

Ye scribe is surely pleased for a year's provision for the next reunion and am hopeful that continued preparations will go on, and that the success of next reunion will be constantly agitated till it will be as it should be, a successful up-to-date reunion in every way.

May the God bless his Saints to work to this end is our earnest desire, and we expect too, to work to the end.

XENIA, ILLINOIS.

F. L. SAWLEY.

Dedication of First Columbus Branch

After a conference of Ohio District held at First Branch, Columbus, Ohio, on September 13, 1919, the following day (Sunday, September 14) was devoted to dedicatory services as previously announced in the HERALD. The day was very beautiful, and everything seemed to favor the auspiciousness of the day.

The morning services were opened with sacrament service in charge of Apostle G. T. Griffiths, Bishop J. A. Becker, and Patriarch J. E. Matthews. The manifestations of the Spirit were a source of much encouragement to the Saints and particularly to some of the missionary forces. Brother Jacob Halb who soon leaves for Switzerland was given special words of encouragement.

Preaching services followed at ten-forty-five, Elder C. W. Clark in charge, President Elbert A. Smith being the speaker and all felt much encouraged by the counsel and advice given. At twelve o'clock the services adjourned until three p. m., and in the meantime meals were served in the basement of the church.

At three p. m. the services reconvened in charge of Elder D. R. Winn, who was the chairman of the building committee. President Elbert Smith again addressed the assembly, plainly drawing to the minds of those assembled some of the most salient points of church history. This was immediately followed by the dedication service in which Elder Winn delivered the documents showing the church free from debt, together with the keys to Bishop Becker. This was followed by the dedicatory prayer, by Apostle G. T. Griffiths, after which adjournment was had until evening.

At seven-thirty the meeting was again convened with Elder H. E. French, president of Second Columbus Branch, in charge. The evening sermon was by Elder Arthur Allen, through whose influence the necessary enthusiasm was started which resulted in the opening of the church just four years previously. The Saints in Columbus can look to this day as a landmark in their history.

Many beautiful solos were rendered and the music was very inspiring. The church was crowded all day, many coming from a distance to be present, and all expressed themselves as well repaid for their effort. C. W. CLARK.

---

New York and Brooklyn

---

Editors Herald: Such interesting events have been transpiring here of late we feel sure your readers will appreciate a knowledge of them. On September 14 we had Brother T. W. Williams with us and he preached to good crowds at both morning and evening services. His evening discourse on the mission and atonement of Christ was a masterful effort indeed. Quite a few were present not of our faith and all expressed themselves as appreciating the effort very much.

Brother Williams is an able, forceful speaker and demonstrates the value of the public speaking course of instruction now being given through Graceland, which we understand is still under his supervision. The return of his son, Dr. Williams from overseas was the occasion of his visit here.

September 21 was our annual reunion and rally day of the Brooklyn Branch. Brother C. Ed Miller of Providence, Rhode Island was advertised as our special attraction.

We were surprised and delighted when President F. M. Smith came into our midst on Saturday. He permitted himself to be pressed into service, and at 11 a. m. and 2:30 p. m. presented to a large gathering of Saints and friends his views and ideals in a pleasing and emphatic way. This was the first opportunity the most of our Saints ever had to hear our Fred M. and I am pleased to report that he captured their hearts as well as appealed strongly to their intelligence. We have frequently heard in the past the older Saints speak of "our Brother Joseph," and now we hear as well "our Fred M." Many of the branches of the church have missed a rare treat when they have not come into close personal touch with our spiritual leader on earth.

I am in close touch with the Saints here and I have not heard one criticism of his thoughts as presented. Truly he has had a wonderful vision of the necessity of a great work of preparation before the church now.

He also addressed the Women's Auxiliary on their needs as he sees them, and gave a good talk to the Religians on choosing a special work and being the best in that line. Pretty good record, four addresses in one day.

Brother C. Ed was all that he had been advertised. His evening sermon was unique and edifying. While his audience was weary after a strenuous day, he kept them at a high pitch of interest and enthusiasm. His illustrations and witticisms kept his hearers in good humor, while he drove home the gospel lessons none the less surely. On Monday Fred M. borrowed a car of Brother W. E. Nichols and invited

Brother C. Ed Miller, Elder Daniel Joy and wife, and ye pastor to see New York under his guidance.

If we ever doubted the courage of our President we never will again after seeing his exhibition of driving a high-powered, strange car through the congested traffic of this great city. We drove through Central Park along Riverside Drive where stand the mansions of our plutocrats, and then to Saint John's Cathedral. I wish all the Saints could see this wonderful piece of architecture. The famous Bishop Potter served here many years, and is buried in the cathedral.

While truly inspiring in its magnificence now, our guide informed us it would probably be one hundred years before its completion. We wondered if our temple will be as beautiful.

President Smith then escorted us to Columbia University and introduced us to a member of the faculty. We learned that in common with all universities Columbia has the largest enrollment in its history. In the extension department alone they have registered over 2,000. It is noticeable that Hebrew, Japanese and other foreign students are very numerous.

Brother Miller preached again Monday night on his ministerial experiences, which are interesting and varied. Brother Joy preached Tuesday night on Christ's work in the latter days, presenting some new thoughts on inheritances. Our rally was a great success.

Among our visitors was Missionary E. Gleazer on his way to Connecticut. The music was excellent under the supervision of chorister LeRoy Squire, whose engagement to Sister Ethel Jack, our branch correspondent was recently announced.

Our instruction classes are starting this week and we are expecting a better attendance and interest even than last year when they were well attended.

Elder Harry Passman and wife leave New York on October 2 for Switzerland there to work until they obtain permission from the British Government to enter Palestine.

CALVIN H. RICH.

---

The Bishopric Advocate for 1919

Every Member a Tithe Payer

---

DEPENDABILITY

Are you dependable? That is the question the whole world is now asking.

Dependability breeds confidence, and confidence means more and greater responsibility. It spells success in the business world. Why not this be just as true in our relationship with God? If we fail to pay our tithing can God call us dependable? What think you?

---

[A letter to the Presidency]:

HOLDEN, MISSOURI, September 6, 1919.

It is my pleasure to report to you that the reunion at Pertle Springs was a successful meet. This is not gathered from my own feelings but from the testimony of those who had the privilege of attending. By the circular of information issued you perhaps have noted that the effort this year was to make it of benefit to the entire family. We were very fortunate in securing workers who were qualified to give attention to the special department of work. This arrangement fully came up to our expectations. The expression made by Evangelist I. M. Smith in his sermon on the last Sunday morning as to the value of the reunion work is worthy of mention. Brother Smith stated that during his forty-two years of ministry in the church the reunion just closing was the best one he had ever attended.

There was, perhaps, more stress put upon educating the Saints than usual. This was done, we believe, with no decrease in the spirituality in consequence, for our prayer meetings were among the best held at any reunion heretofore. Aside from the gifts of the Spirit which were not outwardly manifest and which were present, there were tongues and interpretations. At one service the voice of the Spirit was delivered by eight or nine different individuals. The expression of the Saints was for more efficient work, and their efforts to be better equipped for service, were in evidence. One of the new ventures this year was the issuing of a daily on a mimeograph. Sister Alice M. Smith was in charge of this work and her services were greatly appreciated by the campers. We believe that from this reunion more can go with the feeling that they have received real benefit than at any reunion heretofore held in the Stake. For the children were cared for and given something to do which was of real benefit to them.

We heard some objection on account of the afternoon being entirely given to rest and recreation, some feeling that there was valuable time being lost. The committee was not of that opinion, but it may be that in outlining the work for the afternoon that there was a class of people who could have been given something along the line of recreation and it was not provided. Brother Hopkins's main work was with the young people. The older folks seemed to forget that they are entitled to part of the playtime of life. Next year we hope to have our arrangements so perfected that we will have everybody enjoying the recreational part of our reunion. . . .

Very sincerely,

D. J. KRAHL.

[A letter to the Presidency]:

BEARDSTOWN, ILLINOIS, September 8, 1919.

While on my vacation this summer I was near Kirtland and dropped off and made a few snapshots. Am sending you by to-day's mail a few prints.

I also took some negatives of Joseph's' Hyrum's, and Sidney Rigdon's homes there, but did not know whether you would care for them.

Brother A. E. Stone was quite an expert in showing us through and describing the temple from top to bottom. We had a nice view of Lake Erie from the cupola, or tower.

Brother Eben Curry has given the interior a complete coat of white enamel. Things surely look clean and nice in there now. If the Saints get themselves as clean and white as Curry has their place of worship, they will have to go some.

May the Lord give you his Spirit with great measure is my prayer.

Hastily and very sincerely,

M. R. SHOEMAKER.

SENLAC, SASKATCHEWAN, September 13, 1919.

Editor Herald: Just returned from the far north around Shellbrook and Canwood where three years ago I had such good success as reported in the HERALD, and reprinted in the Autumn Leaves for July, current year. Many who were then interested have moved away, others died of the influenza and some have joined the Nazarinians or Pentecostals, a kind of holiness society which believe in all the gifts of the Spirit especially speaking in tongues. Many points of their doctrine resemble the New Testament faith as understood by ourselves. Hence their early conversion to that society after becoming interested in our message. None of them would come to my meetings, fearing, I think, to compare the two systems. Consequently my meetings were very poorly attended. Some few became more fully convinced and expect to be baptized later. I think I could have overpersuaded them, but preferred to wait the proper time for the Father to "draw" them. Jesus said: "No man can come to me except the father who sent me, draw him."

A premature spiritual birth is as deleterious as a premature natural one.

Am arranging for some meetings among the Indians on a reservation fifteen miles from Shellbrook. Most of them were off the reservation when I was there but would soon return.

On my way south I stopped over at Saskatoon to see the future king of Great Britain. The prince's full name is Edward Christian George Andrew Patrick David Stuart.

"While the prince is a young man of very democratic spirit he has a long and imposing list of titles. He is Prince of Wales, Prince of Great Britain and Ireland, Duke of Cornwall and Rothsay, Earl of Chester, Carrick and Dublin, Baron of Renfrew and Lord of the Isles, Great Steward of Scotland, Knight of the Garter, Knight of Saint Patrick, Knight of the Grand Cross of the Bath, Knight of the Elephant of Denmark, Knight of the Golden Fleece and Knight of the White Elephant of Siam, and Baille Grand Cross of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem; Privy Councillor, Field Marshal, Colonel-in-Chief of three regiments of Household Cavalry, Colonel of the Tenth Hussars, Captain General and Colonel of the Honorable Artillery Company, Military Aide-de-Camp to the King; Honorable Captain of the Royal Naval Reserve, Colonel of the Orford, the Cambridge and the Middlesex Civil Service Corps and Rifle Volunteers, of the Royal Aberdeenshire Highlands and of the Sutherland Highland Rifle Volunteers; Elder Brother of Trinity House; Grand Master of the United Lodge of Free Masons of England, Barrister at Law and Bencher of the Middle Temple, President of the Society of Arts, D. C. L. Oxford, LL.D. Cambridge, Trinity College, Dublin. He has also been decorated with the Grand Cordon of the Legion of Honor and the orders of the Golden Fleece of Spain, Elephant of Denmark, Saint Olav of Norway (with chain), Italian Order of the Anunziata, the Russian Order of Saint George, Military Order of Saint George, Military Order of Savoy, Siamese Order of the House of Chakkri and Roumanian Order of Michael the Brave."

He is really a very democratic appearing young man and quite unconventional. Most of the programs handed to him on this trip are torn up with a good-humored smile or remark and then he proceeds to act natural and sociable. A report circulated among the crowd at Saskatoon, was, that while he was at Winnipeg he slipped away from the crowd and the detectives, having previously challenged a young man to play golf with him. The young man had ordered a taxi, into which they secretly entered, going some miles to the golf grounds. He was soon missed and a hum of "kidnapped" surged through the crowd while the detectives and police were scouring the town and countryside for the captured prince. During which time he was having such a jolly time on the golf grounds that the cabdriver who was ignorant of whom he had driven and was watching the game, remarked to him: "I'll bet that tired prince in town would rather be out here enjoying a game like this than doing all that king stuff." The prince remarked: "Undoubtedly he would." The papers of course publish a different account.

When I saw him in Saskatoon, he listened very reluctantly to the address being read by the mayor. He stood first on one foot and then on the other, looking at the pavilion, the flags and bunting, and smiling at the babies crying, as much as to say: "I don't blame you, I am bored myself." The address was engrossed on the finest parchment and bound in the costliest work of that art and placed in a casket made of one hundred silver dollars. He merely ran his fingers over it with a quizzical look as much as to say: "A casket (coffin, aside) is a good place for it." However he read a short reply in king's English, which I was anxious to hear. His tone of voice and manner of expression much resembles that of Brother Rushton.

A program was handed him, which he put in his pocket and made a break for the crowd, shaking hands with first the soldiers and then the sailors, the children and everyone, young and old, near him. The crowd went wild to see him so common and sociable. At Winnipeg the crowd broke down the guard railings, overran the police guards and he became one with the people.

While in the army many of the boys did not know him from their comrades. One day, while eating and joking with a crowd of soldiers, he was recognized by some one who had before seen him, and he said to him: "Aren't you the Prince of Wales?" He quickly remarked: "Aw, forget it."

I thought to get a good view of his uniform and decorations, but he wore a rather cheap, gray, large plaid suit of custom-made clothes, a gray hat, low shoes and rush cane. Not a decoration of any kind and no jewelry that I could see except a cheap silver wrist watch, with guard crystal. In such regalia he seemed to enjoy himself, and the people admired his simplicity. Canada breathes much easier. America, I presume, will see him in full dress uniform, for it is the boast of Canadians that Britain is more democratic than the United States.

I expect to remain in this northwest country until cold weather and then go south to the Northeastern Nebraska District to which I have lately been assigned.

Very kindly,

J. W. PETERSON.

[A letter to the Presidency]:

ATTLEBORO, MASSACHUSETTS, September 15, 1919.

Last Sunday was one of banner days in the church in this place. Eleven of our members were in the war. They have all returned in safety to their homes.

Corporal Peter Whalley joined the British army at the beginning of the war, he served four and a half years in the British Artillery. He saw service on all the fighting fronts, France, Belgium, and Macedonia. He contracted the Asiatic fever in the Balkan country, and had it return on him fifteen times, until he was ordered back to England, where he recuperated sufficiently to be able to come to his home in this city. Sunday morning he spoke in the church to a household of anxious hearers. His vivid description of experiences in the war held his audience spellbound.

On the 27th of this month, the church will hold a reception and banquet to the returned boys, of which there are nine in this place and two have been transferred to another branch. Two of this number were in the priesthood, viz, Peter Whalley, a teacher, and Nathaniel Moore, a deacon. Brother Moore had three brothers with him in the war, all members of this branch. [A former letter from Brother Hull says a prophecy had been given that all our boys of that place should return—which has been fulfilled.]

This city holds a reception and parade on October 6 in honor of the boys of Attleboro that went to the war. All business stops on this day, everybody takes a holiday. The slogan is, "The world peace."

We as a people believe that there will be no lasting peace until Christ shall come and set up his kingdom on the earth. We often ask the question, "What are we doing to help bring about this much-desired condition, that we call Zion?" I do not believe that we can be transformed immediately from one condition to another and feel at home. If we want to have Zion in Zion, we must have Zion now in our hearts. We cannot begin too soon, and we must continue to hold fast to this condition until the call comes to repair to the cities of refuge.

All the various departments of the work here are progressing nicely. We expect to have other special days in the near future.

Sincerely,

E. B. HULL.

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA, September 17, 1919.

Editors Herald: The conference of the New York-Philadelphia District was held at Archbald, Pennsylvania, on August 30, 31, and September 1. We believe it was the best attended conference ever held in this district, every branch being well represented with the exception of one.

When the Saints of Archbald invited us to hold the conference there, they assured us that we would be made welcome, and we surely were. Not only the Saints, but also their friends opened their homes to us and made us feel perfectly at home. The Archbald Branch is small—having some forty members—and yet they entertained around ninety visitors, not counting those from Scranton. The meals were served and the cooking done in tents on the ground next to the church. It is the first time many of the Saints of the district had visited Archbald, and everyone was pleased with the church building, erected some three years ago. We are sure it will not be the last time we will visit Archbald.

We made two steps forward in our work as a district, viz, the election of a reunion committee and provision for a district tent. Many of the Saints in the district, and especially the missionaries, have felt the need of a tent in which they could hold preaching services in towns where halls were either too dear to rent or not available. A committee was elected, composed of a member from each branch, to solicit funds for this tent. We hope that at our next conference when they are to report, they will have sufficient money on hand to buy a tent, so that it can be put into use next spring and summer.

A wide-awake reunion committee was elected, composed of the district presidency and six other members. Everybody in this district feels the need of meeting together oftener and longer than we are able to at conferences, and we are sure that this committee will scour the whole district until they find suitable grounds for holding a reunion.

It had been planned to hold sacrament service from nine until ten on Sunday morning, but the Saints were enjoying the service so much that it was continued until noon. Several prophecies were given. Everyone felt amply repaid for their efforts in attending conference when they attended this service. Afterwards eight ordinations took place, and in the evening two other ordinations.

Sunday afternoon was devoted to quorum and institute work, and in the evening there was a song service and preaching by Brother Lentell of Scranton.

On Monday the Sunday school held its business session, and after that a baseball game was played between the Archbald and New York-Philadelphia men. We believe the score was 1—1.

Quite a number of the visitors enjoyed a visit through one of the mines; it was a new experience to most of us.

The conference is to meet in Philadelphia on February 21 and 22, and as one of the Philadelphia Saints, the writer extends a hearty invitation to all members of the district to be present.

ELIZABETH TEAL,

District Secretary.

A liar should have a good memory.—Quintillian.

NEW WESTMINSTER, BRITISH COLUMBIA,

September 19, 1919.

Editors Herald: Evangelist John Edward Brown of Si-loam, Arkansas, was holding revival services at this place. During his campaign he gave a series of lectures on Mormonism, Eddyism, and Russellism.

Before his first lecture I called at his hotel and asked him if he made any distinction between the Reorganized and the Utah churches. He replied that he did, but when I attended the lecture he said: "There are three factions of Mormonism, and there is a representative of one of them in this meeting who is very anxious that I shall make a distinction between them and the Utah Church, as they do not believe in polygamy—which is true, but before I get through I shall prove to you that they all believe in old Joe Smith and the Book of Mormon."

He then proceeded to slander Joseph Smith, calling him a drunkard, liar, horse thief, etc., and told the old story of the Spalding Romance. He also has written a book called In the Cult Kingdom.

We sent for Elder S. S. Smith of Bellingham, Washington, who helped us very materially by having the true facts regarding Joseph Smith and Book of Mormon, etc., published in the newspaper. The result has been most gratifying. We feel that Brother Smith has succeeded in reaching more people this way than he would have in a number of sermons.

We understand that Mr. Brown's next campaign is to be at Whittier, California.

SAMUEL POPE.

HONOLULU, T. H., September 15, 1919.

Editors Saints' Herald: Acting under the authority received from the First Presidency, Elder McConley and the writer took the initiative in bringing about the organization of a district of the church in this mission. A meeting of the delegates of the Honolulu and Hilo branches was called for this purpose on Wednesday, September 10th. Elder M. A. McConley called the meeting to order; Elder G. J. Waller was elected temporary chairman and the organization of the district effected. Elder V. B. Etzenhouser was elected president by a unanimous vote, thus having the honor of occupying as the first president of the district of Hawaii.

The presence of the Spirit in a marked degree at the prayer meetings preceding the conference was a testimony of the Master's approval of that which was being done.

Business matters requiring my attention brought me back to Honolulu on June 11. The affairs of the San Francisco Branch were left in the hands of Brother E. E. Hartsough and other executive officers who, I am pleased to learn, have been doing excellent work during my temporary absence.

During my visit I have assisted in church work during my spare time and it was a pleasure to find the branch, which had been so faithfully and ably presided over by Elder C. E. Miller, so well taken care of by the members of the local priesthood, under the direction of a Hawaiian brother, Elder I. H. Harbottle. It is needless to say, that I have had many happy experiences in my renewed association with the officers and members of the Honolulu Branch.

The development made by the Hawaiians under gospel influences is certainly pleasing and encouraging, and furnishes additional evidence of the divinity of the latter day work and of its establishment under the Master's direction on these islands of the sea.

In witnessing the development of these children of Manasseh, I have often been reminded of Nephi's words, found in 2 Nephi, 12:83-84, where in speaking of Lehi's posterity at the time when this work should come to them, he said: "And then shall they rejoice; for they shall know that it is a blessing unto them from the hand of God; and their scales of darkness shall begin to fall from their eyes: and many generations shall not pass away among them, save they shall be a white and a delightsome people."

The following in section 49, paragraph 5 of the Doctrine and Covenants, given through the Latter Day Seer finds application in the change being wrought in these people: "But before the great day of the Lord shall come, Jacob shall flourish in the wilderness; and the Lamanites shall blossom as the rose."

The extension of the work in these islands, as it was evidenced to me in the conference, where I had the pleasure of looking into the faces of the many delegates present, fulfills a prophetic promise given in a revelation to myself through our late beloved president in the year 1896, which was as follows: "Be faithful, as thou art earnest, and thy work shall be blessed to thyself and to many."

With a branch of the church established in Honolulu on the Island of Oahu, and one in Hilo on the Island of Hawaii, and with the work opening up on the Island of Maui under the missionary efforts of Elders McConley and Punchau, the church has every reason to feel encouraged and gratified over the prospects before it.

I was pleased to be here to welcome on August 12th Elder Etzenhouser and his companion, on whom the responsibility of the work in Honolulu was placed by the post-conference.

The city of Honolulu, situated as it is at the cross-roads of the Pacific, has had its importance as a seaport emphasized by the recent visit of Secretary of the Navy Daniels, for the purpose of opening a drydock at Pearl Harbor, which is capable of accommodating the largest war vessels and merchant steamers afloat.

The importance of Honolulu from a missionary standpoint has been alluded to by me again and again in my church correspondence, and I trust the day is not far distant when there will be not only branches made up of Hawaiian Saints, but also of Chinese and Japanese, who form so large a part of the population of these islands.

During my visit here I have been called upon to perform the marriage ceremony of two Koreans and two Chinese, all nonmembers. The presence at one of the ceremonies of a number of young Chinese impressed me with the possibilities there are for missionary work amongst the rising generation of the Oriental population on these islands, who, under the influence of American education are developing so rapidly. The thought that we had no mission yet established among these people brought, too, a feeling of regret.

However we are hopeful for the future and trust that in response to the invitation issued by our able and far-seeing president to the young men and women of the church, to take up the work of preparation as outlined recently in our church papers, ere long it will be possible for capable, consecrated young men and women, who have availed themselves of the opportunity extended, to come here and take up the important work awaiting our church.

I feel that in Brother and Sister Etzenhouser, we have capable and consecrated Saints, who are taking hold nicely of the work and who, under the development of the Spirit, and through experience will make valuable missionaries and do good service.

Elder Etzenhouser shortly after his arrival was made President of the Honolulu Branch and Sister Etzenhouser is ably supporting him by working in the auxiliaries and elsewhere as opportunity offers. They are both well liked by the members and apparently love their work and appreciate the welcome extended to them and the provision made for the enjoyment of home comforts at the Mission House where they are living.

Sister McConley is here waiting for an opportunity to leave for home, either via San Francisco or Vancouver, just as soon as she can secure transportation. This sister has done good work in this mission, often under great difficulties on account of poor health. She was especially adapted for work amongst the Chinese with whom she was a great favorite, as is evidenced by the number of old pupils, who have called upon her during her stay in Honolulu. The affection shown by these former pupils as well as by the Saints generally should certainly be comforting to her as she sails away from the shores of Hawaii, leaving behind her beloved and faithful companion, to continue without her support and help the work assigned him in this mission field. Truly this is a work of sacrifice.

In gospel bonds,
G. J. WALLER.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Conference Notices

Western Montana, at Deer Lodge, Montana, November 1 and 2. E. E. Eliason, secretary.

Clinton, conference and conventions (Sunday school and Religio) with the Coal Hill Branch, November 7, 8, and 9. Branches and members of the priesthood send reports to Zora Glick, El Dorado Springs, Missouri. Sunday schools and Religios send reports to their respective district secretaries. H. E. Moler, president.

Northern Wisconsin, at Porcupine, Wisconsin, with the Frankfort Branch, November 1 and 2, 1919. All are invited to attend. The Sunday school convention will be held in connection with the conference. Those who come on train, stop at Durand. Notify S. E. Livingston. A. L. Whiteaker, president.

Convention Notices

Southern Nebraska Sunday School and Religio, at Fairfield, Nebraska, 2:30 p. m., October 10.

The Far West Stake Sunday School Association will hold its business session in connection with the stake conference, at the Alma Branch, Lexington Junction, Missouri, Saturday evening, October 11. E. J. Armstrong, stake superintendent.

Reunion Notices

Commence planning for your vacation in 1920, at the Kirtland Reunion, Kirtland, Ohio, August 12 to 22. Services held in the historic temple. Meals furnished at reasonable rates. Tents: 10 by 12, $3.00; 12 by 14 with 3½ foot walls, $4.00; 12 by 14 with 4 foot walls, $4.50. An additional charge of 50c for setting up and taking down tents. For further information write J. D. Lewis, secretary, Route No. 2, Willoughby, Ohio.

Quorum Notices

The First Quorum of Elders of the Spring River District will meet at Nowata, Oklahoma, the evening of October 17, 1919. S. G. Carrow, secretary.

The annual meeting of the Ontario Quorum of Elders will be held at London, Ontario, Sunday, October 19. A special order of business will be the dividing of the quorum into two divisions, to be known as Eastern and Western Divisions of the Ontario Quorum of Elders. Every elder in Ontario should attend. Frank Gray, secretary-treasurer.

Convention Minutes

SOUTHERN OHIO.—At Columbus, Ohio, September 13, 1919. Brother F. J. Ebeling, district president, chosen to preside, assisted by G. T. Griffiths and Elbert A. Smith. Sister Sarah Batchelder chosen as secretary, assisted by Sister Imogene Clark, and Sister Hazel Campbell. Statistical reports received from Vinton, Limerick, Wellston, 2d Columbus, Midletown, Nelsonville, Shawnee, and Creola. On Sunday, September 14, the new church at Columbus was dedicated and a very enjoyable and profitable time was spent by all present.

Time and place of next conference left to district presidency. Sarah E. Batchelder, secretary.

CHATHAM.—At Kimball, Ontario, September 27 and 28. September 28, 1:30 p. m., business; district presidency in charge. All branches reported except Ridgetown. Membership 1527. There were 59 baptisms, 18 deaths, 10 ordinations, and 16 marriages during the past year. There is a total priesthood of 98. Bishop's agent's report showed: total receipts $8266.16; total expense $7764.77; balance $501.39. The following officers were elected: President, John C. Dent; first vice president, Stewart Lamont; second vice president, Leslie Brown; secretary, Anthony Hewitt; treasurer, J. H. Tyrell; member library board, Brother Leverson; member good literature board, Fred Brown, chorister, J. H. Tyrell; Brother Tyrell sustained as bishop's agent. Conference to meet at Glenrae, last Saturday and Sunday in September, 1920. William Andrew and James Pycock, press committee.

Pastoral

PITTSBURG AND WHEELING DISTRICTS

Having been appointed to supervise the missionary work in the above districts, will the missionaries please take notice, and let me hear from you, that we may keep in touch with each other, and labor where the very best results can be obtained. Will branch presidents also report to me where evangelistic services are desired, so that arrangements can be made ahead for thoroughly advertising. Will isolated Saints also let me know of conditions in your locality; we will do our best to help you. Let us work and pray, and by a co-operative effort upon the part of all, our work will be a success.

ALMA BOOKER.

136 Park Avenue, DuBois, PENNSYLVANIA.

Requests for Prayer

Sister Nancy Bucy requests the prayers of the Saints. She fears that blood poisoning has set in and this is causing her considerable suffering.

Sister Lizzie Beckstead is sick with cancer of the stomach, and suffers a great deal. She wishes the church to remember her in prayer. She is blind, but is a faithful Saint, always doing her part in behalf of the work.

Our Departed Ones

CLASBY.—Muriel Alice Clasby was born May 13, 1910, at Kansas City, Missouri. Died September 24, 1919, 4 a. m., after a brief illness. She leaves father, mother, a twin brother, and a number of other relatives to mourn. Services from Central Church. Burial at Independence, Missouri.

MAYNARD.—Albert Maynard was born at Viola, Illinois, February 19, 1909. Died September 17, 1919, death being the result of an accident in falling from a runaway horse. Leaves to mourn his parents, 5 brothers and 3 sisters. Funeral in charge of George Sackfield. Sermon by O. W. Okerlind.

MERRICK.—William C. Merrick was born in Canada. Died at the age of 73 years, September 1, 1919, at Fresno, California. Survived by wife and one brother, I. J. Merrick. He lived in the gospel, and died in the faith of a glorious resurrection. Funeral sermon by J. B. Carmichael.

LEWIS.—Henrietta Lewis, wife of Brother Daniel Lewis of Lowell, Arkansas, who was born at Grandview, Arkansas, April 9, 1887; died August 4, 1919, after a long illness of consumption. She married Brother Lewis February 15, 1904, and with her husband was baptized into the church in 1910, living as a faithful, active member until the time of her death, doing much to assist him in his ministry and in maintaining the church locally. A large funeral marked the esteem in which she was held in the community. Sermon by Charles Fry.

BUTLER.—John Wesley Butler was born at Tipton, Iowa, April 20, 1868. On February 16, 1890 he married Jennie Gorley, at Pleasant View near Pittsburg, Kansas, near which place they lived until within about two weeks of his death, which occurred at Independence, Missouri, July 27, 1919, to which place they had just moved. Five sons, Lester, Abraham, Theodore, Frederick, and Henry, and 2 daughters, Saydie and Emma, are living, 6 children having died. He was a miner, upright and industrious. He united with the church soon after his marriage and for many years held the office of priest. His widow, mother, and other relatives survive. Services held at Weir, Kansas. Sermon by Charles Fry assisted by William Bath.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor.

The official organ of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Published every Wednesday by the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. Entered at the post office at Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

PRICE, $1.75 A YEAR IN ADVANCE

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words.

GIRL WANTED
For Mailing Room and Bindery
HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE
LAMONI, IOWA

FROM HERE AND THERE

"SEEK LEARNING BY STUDY"

The church has been counselled, "seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom. . . . Seek learning by study." In order that this counsel might be carried out the church college—Graceland—was founded. All are aware of Graceland's steady growth. Each year brings a greater number of young people to its halls of learning. Not all, however, find it possible to attend Graceland. So for the majority of the church membership, which is unable to leave the necessary duties of life in order to attend an educational institution, Graceland offers a series of correspondence or home study courses, whereby instruction in over twenty-five subjects is given by mail.

Every person in the church should study good books. Many are studying good books, but effective study cannot be accomplished without systematic direction and supervision. The Extension Department of Graceland College—your college—is prepared to help you study efficiently at a low cost to you, only enough to pay the expense of handling your lessons. Everyone should take advantage of this opportunity and immediately write for information regarding the subjects they desire to pursue. Address the President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

THE NEW COLLEGE BUILDING

Henry C. Smith, the church architect, has been in Lamoni for the past ten days, the end of September and first of October, considering plans for the erection of a new college building.

THE BISHOPRIC IN LAMONI

Bishops B. R. McGuire and Mark H. Siegfried, also Elder R. J. Lambert of the Lamoni Stake Bishopric, were in Lamoni Friday and Saturday in connection with the college building and the various church institutions. They left Saturday evening for Independence.

RALLY DAY AT OMAHA

The local Sunday school and Religio workers of Omaha, together with the branch officers, developed plans for a big rally day, and the event materialized on Sunday, the 28th. Excellent local program numbers were given. President Elbert A. Smith addressed the priesthood in the morning and preached at night. E. D. Moore talked to the Sunday school and occupied at the eleven o'clock hour, as well as at the Religio hour. Dinner and supper were served at the church. Bad weather the previous evening which continued to threaten on Sunday, cut down attendance, but the number

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
 Has the World Gone Mad? - - - 977
 Foreign Appointments and Passports - - - 978
 Existing Treaties for Peace - - - 980

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
 It is Written, by Benjamin R. McGuire - - - 981
 After Death, a Sure Resurrection, by Joseph Luff - - - 981
 Restoration, by Ralph W. Farrell - - - 987
 Cheerfulness, by A. Jensen - - - 987

OF GENERAL INTEREST:
 Serbia, the Greatest Sufferer - - - 988
 Child Labor Standards - - - 988
 Taking Care of Your Health - - - 989

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY - - - 990
 Mrs. Maud Parham—Beatrice Rogers

LETTER DEPARTMENT - - - 992
 Abbie A. Horton—F. L. Sawley—C. W. Clark—
 Calvin H. Rich—D. J. Krahl—M. R. Shoemaker
 —J. W. Peterson—E. B. Hull—Elizabeth Teal—Samuel Pope—G. J. Waller.

MISCELLANEOUS - - - 998
FROM HERE AND THERE - - - 999

present was encouragingly large, and the day a real success. Sacrament service was held at 3. p. m. with a good spiritual meeting.

PRESIDENT SMITH RETURNS

We learn from a recent letter from the East that President Frederick M. Smith has been meeting with the Saints in Philadelphia and New York and has been an inspiration to our people there. We are not informed at present what other branches he visited in the East, since the trip was primarily undertaken to Washington, D. C. to straighten out certain matters of passports for our missionaries. He returned home September 27th, after attending to this and several other matters of importance to the church in the East.

INDEPENDENCE RELIGIO

John M. Lloyd, as president of the Independence Religio has sent out by mail 450 Religio invitations, to those who do not usually attend, but who should do so, together with a copy of the leaflet "The Mission of the Religio" by T. W. Williams. The invitation is most urgent, and includes a statement of the program to be given on October 3. This included a discussion of the League of Nations by two of the Religians. The invitation also includes a statement of the various classes held. There are twenty-five classes in the Book of Mormon, adapted to all ages. In addition, Walter W. Smith has a class in church doctrine; Richard J. Lambert in Church History, and Thomas J. Sheldon, in the Doctrine and Covenants. The invitation ends with the motto: "So-ciability is the Religio's first principle."

Cornish to Evans

This tract contains two letters written by Elder John J. Cornish to R. C. Evans, since Mr. Evans left the church.

Elder Cornish baptized R. C. Evans, has been closely associated with him in his work, and writes in these letters with all the kindness and good will of a father, yet standing firm for the truth which is entrusted to his care. It is a remarkably clear, concise, and emphatic reply, written in a humble way, and yet with decision and inspiration.

As the tract is printed at the direction of Elder Cornish, the type has not been preserved; when this edition is exhausted, it is doubtful if it will be reprinted. The price is placed as low as is possible, and those interested should secure copies without delay. They can be secured now four cents for one; twenty-five cents for ten; or two dollars for one hundred.

Order to-day while the supply lasts, from the

The Mission of the Religio

The Coordinating Committee in 1918, recommended that the Religio become a department of recreation and sociability. This was adopted by the General Conference and the various conventions. During the past year and a half the general executive officers, and especially the first vice president, Elder T. W. Williams, of Toronto, Canada, have been busy working out the details.

He has prepared, as a result of his study and observation, a leaflet, which with the approval of the general officers of the church is now printed under the title, "The Mission of the Religio." Everyone interested in the welfare of our young people should read this leaflet.

They are on sale at the Herald Publishing House; one for four cents; two for five cents; and one and a half cent apiece in lots of ten or more. The labor of mailing is as great for a single copy as for a large number, and the postage is only small for a large order, hence it will pay you to purchase a sufficient supply for your local at one time. Several locals have done this. It is a case of "first come, first served."

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

LAMONI, IOWA

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

Volume 66

Lamoni, Iowa, October 15, 1919

Number 42

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

A VISIT TO THE BISHOP'S OFFICE

A few weeks ago when we were in Independence to attend a Sunday school executive meeting, we were privileged to visit the Bishop's office and have an interview with him. The visit was necessarily brief, because of the accumulation of work before him.

He took time to show us how he is getting his work thoroughly organized, according to departments. There are two vaults in the office building, and in one vault he showed us in particular how all of the abstracts were separately filed and indexed, so that any one of them could be readily found and examined.

In the real estate office all of the deeds have been gone over carefully one by one, and where corrections were needed they have been made. This has necessitated a few hundred new deeds, but it assures us that every title is in excellent shape.

Bishop McGuire himself had given time especially to real estate corporation law before he undertook his present work. This work is now immediately in charge of R. T. Cooper, who was so successful in real estate work in Los Angeles.

Not only is every deed indexed, as to State and locality, not only is each title carefully gone over and corrected to be sure it is in the best possible shape, but attention is also given to the insurance policies.

A card index has been prepared showing expiration date for five years in advance; each drawer for one year; each drawer then separated into months, and the months into days. On the cards is given the date, location and nature of the property, the company in which it is insured, the amount for which insured, and the premium and agent.

All of the data is immediately available. It is planned that the various departments will continue to take care of their own insurance, but at the bishop's office there will be a complete file, so that any department having a policy expire may have its attention called to it, to avoid any possible loss through lapse.

We may remember that the bishopric were authorized at the last General Conference to work out a plan to take care of our own insurance, especially of church buildings. This matter is also under consideration, but apparently has not yet been placed upon a working basis.

In another file there are by States a complete collection of deed blanks, including not only warranty deeds, but contracts of sale, mortgages, and quit claim deeds. Pains has been taken to secure every form of real estate conveyance, that we are at all likely to need.

There is still in another large file, descriptive matter indexed by States, stating the nature of the soil, climate, nature of crops, geological survey; such pamphlets in fact as have been issued by the various State governments or by the United States Government, giving information of value for various parts of the country. This is important not only in connection with the minerals under the soil, and how deep they are, and how best reached, but also it involves such questions as wells, artesian wells, character of the subsoil, and the character of the water to be found at various levels.

It Is Written

None are exempt from this law who belongeth to the church of the living God.

For this reason the Bishopric advocate for 1919

EVERY MEMBER A TITHE PAYER

In fact each detail is fully worked out and then indexed and filed in a way to be readily found, concerning every piece of real estate in which the church is interested; because there is a church building thereon, or because it has been received by way of donation or offering, or because it is held for department needs, or for any other purpose.

At a later date we may write concerning other parts of the department work in that office.

S. A. B.

---

THE BATTLE OF ARMAGEDDON

---

It is one of the significant factors of the war, concerning which we have seen little comment, that a battle was actually fought at Armageddon. Not only is this true, but it happened to be one of the most decisive battles of the whole war.

After General Allenby had captured Jerusalem, he continued northward with his forces and finally achieved one of the most brilliant, if not the most brilliant, military exploits of the whole war. He took his cavalry down by the Mediterranean Sea, and forced their way to the north, completely surrounded the Turkish armies and defeated and captured them. This meant that a third Turkish army in Mesopotamia was cut off.

This very decisive battle fought in the Holy Land was fought in the Valley of Megiddo, or as it is called in the Hebrew tongue, Armageddon.

This battle was decisive for the capture of Palestine, and drove the Turks entirely from the Holy Land. It was a brilliant exploit, and final in its effects.

But as is above indicated, it not only resulted in the capture of the two Turkish armies in Palestine, but it cut off a third Turkish army in Mesopotamia, and forced its surrender; and thus destroyed the power of Turkey and forced her suit for peace. She was out of it as a combatant.

It is true that the war was being pressed elsewhere, and that a short advance in Macedonia had brought about a Bulgarian defeat, and a surrender just prior to the time when Turkey sought an armistice. But it may be readily inferred how large a share the defeat of the Turkish army had in bringing about the surrender of Bulgaria.

Turkey being out of it, and Bulgaria also, opened the flank of Austria, and she was then forced to sue for peace. Even though Italy had not yet regained the ground lost in the disastrous defeat of a year earlier, Austria's defeat was certain and was recognized.

With Austria also out of it, Germany could no longer continue, and sought an armistice, which was signed the 11th of November.

It is true the American soldiers had made a wonderful advance to the south of Sedan, and towards Metz. It is true that this pressure upon the flank of Germany in the west with the assistance of the allies, brought a great retreat before the British and French forces to the north, and this had resulted in bringing the German forces into a very nearly hopeless position.

But it is also true that the whole series of defeats was closely related to the final defeat of Turkey on the plains of Megiddo, or as called in the Hebrew term, Armageddon.

Now follows the restoration of the Holy Land and the Jews to their home. The land at last after many generations has been opened for their return and for the building of the waste places of Palestine.

With it has come the victory of democracy over aristocracy and a greater recognition than heretofore of the rights of peoples in an economic sense, as well as in a political sense.

With it there has come a broader recognition of the Jew as a citizen in many nations of eastern and central Europe.

Surely the Lord makes the blunders of men to praise him.

S. A. B.

---

HOME STUDY

---

There is an old school saying "You can lead a horse to water but you cannot make him drink—drink—drink; you may send your boy to college but they cannot make him think—think—think."

The real progress that is made in college is personal and through a personal effort. It is not made alone through listening to lectures, so much as it is by personal thought and research. The schools undoubtedly perform a most valuable function in teaching us how to find what we want and how to study, but those who have not the privilege of attending an organized institution of learning may still possess most excellent opportunities at home.

There are many night classes throughout the country. Even conservative universities are now giving extensive courses in night classes, in special class work, and in correspondence work. They are coming to realize that it is not enough to train a few, but the level of the nation must be raised in a democracy, if progress is ever to be achieved.

It is quite in accordance with this movement that Graceland some years ago organized the extension institute, and that our college has now taken this important work directly under the supervision of members of its faculty, thus insuring that accredited work will be done.

We are living in an age when the value of preparation is appreciated as never before. There is but little real opposition towards education, realizing that it means natural development and preparation for service. Yet some are at a loss for the time and cannot leave their daily work to attend an institution of learning for a few years.

Some, while they endeavor to use their evening hours, are at a loss what to study. Extension work meets this need by giving specialized advice and suggestions.

Home study increases our enjoyment of the world in which we live. It increases our understanding of it, and hence insures a more vivid response. If life is "response to environment," we are able more fully to live.

The hours spent over the newspaper, light novels, or magazine fiction can be used for personal profit and service. The hours spent in entertaining ourselves can be utilized, if we will, for intellectual recreation.

S. A. B.

---

HELP FOR ARMENIANS

---

There has come to our desk rather an unusual call from Armenia. Most of the appeals from the Old World are for money, but this appeal is for help of another kind. It is for defense against the Turks and Tartans.

Three cablegrams from Mr. Aharonian, President of the Delegation of the Armenian Republic to the peace conference are combined in one. The help they desire is for ten thousand soldiers to be sent immediately, and men from America to organize their government and defense. They want civil and military advice; but they want immediately troops for police duty and to help them to defend themselves against Turkish invasion.

The appeal is, that every minister of the gospel write to the President and senators of his State, asking that necessary steps be taken to save Armenia; and that all ministers of the gospel bring this subject to the attention of their congregations and ask all the men and women to write to the President and senators, so that Armenia may be saved. Such money as is needed they ask for only as a loan to be repaid to the government, but they urge that immediate action is necessary if Armenia is not to be wiped out.

This is one evidence of the present serious conditions in the world. We may remember that it was an American who very recently attempted to prevent the Turkish invasion.

It may be remembered that it was proposed at one time that America accept a mandate for that part of the Near East, including Turkey and Armenia, simply for the purpose of helping Armenia to get on her own feet.

This appeal is made to America on the grounds of her disinterestedness. America is not looking for what she can get out of it.

---

THE VALUE OF MUSIC

---

It is worth while keeping before us from time to time the value of music, not only in our services, but in daily life as well. We have recently run across several ably written articles dealing with this theme; the value of music in commercial institutions in speeding up the work; in securing better work, and more of it, and yet with less fatigue.

Music soothes the nerves and helps neuroses (or cases of nervousness). It not only soothes the wild beasts, but if it is the right kind, soothes and helps the cure of the insane. While for the normal it is a permanent source of joy and inspiration.

Music should be something more than just a listless standing up and mumbling at the opening of the service. Such singing is but little better than the turning of a prayer wheel; just going through the motions, but without the spirit. We should have earnest, devoted prayers, backed up by faith, but we should also have our music backed by faith.

It was recently our privilege to attend the sacrament service in one of the large branches. And to us the most spiritual part of the whole service was the way in which the one who had charge of the singing threw his whole soul into it. To him it was evidently a prayer to God; not merely a form or duty; not simply leadership; but that he was leading the people in prayer and in a communication, which he expected to be heard on high.

The same man has made several earnest appeals for better congregational singing, and growing out of that we have community singing. This young man happens to be just one out of several, but he is one who is gifted not only with a love of music, but also with leadership.

We have referred several times to the work of our national director, Albert N. Hoxie, because we have received so many clippings from the East concerning his work, how he happened to take up the work with the boys of the Navy Yard, and how remarkably successful his meetings were; how this then developed into community "sings" and liberty "sings," and "sings" in other cities.

Now that the war is over, with victory "sings" plans are being made for various organized musical programs in the vicinity of Philadelphia. A recent article in the Ardmore, Pennsylvania Record closes with:

All honor to the man who has done his work of bearing his message of song to the nation, and bringing us all nearer to the Infinite One who has made song a means of praise."

But while we refer frequently to Elder Hoxie's work, we are not blind to the splendid work being done by others; by the assistant national directors, by the leaders of our various choirs, by our choir members, who devotedly week after week attend practices in order that they may add to the Sunday service. The preacher is undoubtedly the vital part of the service; yet we do not find our speakers taking off an evening a week for better preparation.

It is true that some individuals are so engaged and take more than that much time. Yet the choir does it week by week, year after year. There are others who have spent much time during the week in community sings in addition to the regular choir work.

But after all, all who can sing in the church services should do so. The singing should not rest in a few good solos, which we listen to for the sake of enjoyment; nor should it consist in solos and in anthems by a picked choir large or small.

All honor to the effort they make by way of preparation; and all honor to the time and money they spend to get ready. Yet we have, as a church, too greatly neglected their proper recognition. We know of able musicians, children of our missionaries, who possess talent in this way, and yet have desisted from pursuing their studies, because they can see no future in it.

Expense looms large. The returns that they would receive seem small. It certainly seems a most profound pity that such should be the case. It certainly should be a cause for mourning, that we have not yet given sufficient encouragement to talent and to preparation to justify those who possess ability making special preparation. Yet those who have talent should develop and devote it to the service of God.

But there still remains the larger message. Singing with earnestness, with depth of feeling, by the congregation itself; singing in which each one takes part; singing in which none are suppressed or excluded, yet none alone dominate. If that singing is led by those possessing exceptional ability and talent, as by a competent chorister or leader, every part is blended to secure the whole, a unity of devotion and of feeling, a united prayer of thanksgiving and of praise unto God.

S. A. B.

---

THE DEPARTMENT OF STATISTICS

---

The attention of our readers is particularly called to a notice in this issue by the church recorder in the department of statistics. We are giving this immediate publication as it is of interest to all of our readers.

We note the desire of our general church recorder that all original items be sent to him, and that he then makes what provisions he deems necessary for the branch and other records. Items should be sent in promptly to keep the records as accurate as is possible.

It will doubtless take some attention on the part of all of us to make this plan as successful as it should be. We ask on behalf of Elder Russell a careful reading of this notice, and then a careful effort to carry it into effect.

---

THIRD RED CROSS ROLL CALL

---

On November 2, and continuing till the 11th, the American Red Cross will again solicit the aid of the American people in maintaining its work. Relieved of much of its war work, the organization is now devoting its attention to home service work, including aid to those in need following the war service, campaigns against tuberculosis and other preventable diseases, and relief of suffering from unlooked-for calamities.

Following the recent disaster from hurricane and flood in Texas, the Red Cross went immediately to the scene and at Corpus Christi cared for the four thousand homeless people, furnishing food and clothing. Many lives were saved, and incalculable suffering prevented by the prompt work of this relief society.

The work of the Red Cross is worthy the liberal support of every person, old and young. All they ask is a general renewal of annual memberships at one dollar each by those holding such memberships, and the enrollment of new members.

---

KEEP OHIO DRY

---

The liquor interests of Ohio propose by initiative petition to repeal the constitutional amendment for state-wide prohibition adopted one year ago, and to add a further amendment allowing sale of beverages with two and three fourths per cent alcohol.

These will be presented to the voters of Ohio on November 4, in two separate ballots. The liquor interests count on the indifference of the friends of prohibition in a campaign of this kind.

The church has always urged prohibition from the early days of its establishment. It is the duty of our members in Ohio to go to the polls on November 4 and vote.

To uphold prohibition one should vote "No" on both of the initiative petitions; and should vote "Yes" on the two referendum petitions, thus ratifying the action of the State legislature.

There was much talk at one time of submitting to all of the States having the initiative and referendum the matter of ratifying the eighteenth amendment to the federal Constitution providing for national prohibition, but so far as we are advised Ohio is the only one that pushed this action.

---

We fail far more often by under-daring than by over-daring.—David Grayson, in The Friendly Road.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

It Is Written

It is to the tithing of the surplus that reference is made in the text quoted. There are two kinds of tithing; first, the tithing of increase, which is always one tenth; and second, the tithing of the surplus, which may be any amount. To those who have a surplus and who keep the whole law, acting as stewards over their own property, the paying of the tenth of their increase and the consecration of their surplus, or in other words the tithing of their surplus, when done simultaneously, would represent the beginning of tithing. To those who have no surplus, the paying of one tenth of their increase represents the beginning of tithing. The tenth is the Lord's and is required by his law whether we have accumulated a surplus or not.

Some have been confused by a reading of section 106 and have reasoned that, until we have a surplus, we have no tithing to pay. This is not correct. Let it be remembered that the elders have been instructed to teach the law as it is found in the Bible and Book of Mormon, both of which teach that one tenth of our increase is God's.

Again the church, prior to the giving of section 106, had been observing this law of tithing the increase. The church had also been taught the principle of consecrating their surplus in section 42 but had been slow to heed, and elsewhere were rebuked in the following language: "Behold they have not learned to be obedient to the thing which I require at their hands . . . and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted. . . ." This rebuke came in June, 1834, following their expulsion from Jackson County in December, 1833.

While trying to establish themselves at Far West in 1838 and remembering that the distress that they had suffered was due, in part, to a failure to impart of their substance, they asked the Lord what he requires of them for a tithing, note the language, "a tithing," not tithing, and then the Lord proceeds to give us a definition of tithing, "Behold, I require all their surplus property. . . ."

After having tithed of our surplus property, we continue to set apart one tenth of our increase to care for the poor and carry on the gospel work and as we accumulate additional surplus, it also is to be consecrated or turned into the Lord's storehouse.

From this law we are told none are exempt that belong to the church of the living God.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

---

A MORAL MESSAGE TO CAPITAL AND LABOR

---

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

With the signing of the terms of peace by Germany the late war has officially closed, and we can now look forward to the work of reconstruction with inspiration and clarity of vision. The coming of peace involves also the adoption at least, of the ideals of the league of nations. Though there may be some sincere doubt and disagreement as to application, scope, and method, apart from the sinister political partisanship, which is disgracing the records of at least some of the public men of our time, there is none as to the great end in view. This, in the language of Doctor J. W. Diggle, Bishop of Carlisle, England, is:

To extend the bonds of common interests and brotherly fellowship beyond the internal limits of separate nations, so expanding them as to include many nations in one internationality for their mutual advantage.

The spirit of the league is shown (1) by its decision not to attempt to intervene in the internal affairs of any nation—its forms of government, its laws and their administration—but only to claim a voice in the determination of such policies as touch the welfare of other nations; (2) by its recognition that every nation is, or ought to be, a member of the universal family or brotherhood of mankind; (3) and that when national affect international interests they must be treated internationally, that is, as part of an invisible whole, and not separately.

THE PRINCIPLE OF LIFE

At least, this means official recognition of the fact of racial solidarity, expressed by Paul—"no man can live unto himself." National boundaries are geographical accidents and must not be allowed to disintegrate the consciousness of mutual interests and the interdependency which is the foundation of our social structure of to-day. This is not the discovery of the war. Rather, the war was the result of some of the unitary parts trying to ignore this consciousness, and acting from a purely nationalistic motivation they sought to secure purely nationalistic ends. Or, in other words, it was a desperate attempt on the part of "individualism" to assert itself against the growing consciousness of national federation and interrelationship.

It was a reactionary movement in which suicidism and altruism engaged in deadly conflict to determine whether the evolution of the race should progress along the line of the higher powers of mind and spirit, or should stop with the attainment of might of muscle.

In the triumph we celebrate it is realized that the individual interests can best be conserved by each working and sacrificing for the well-being of the social whole. Any nation, community or person living for the pursuit of merely individual ends either consciously or otherwise is identified with the spirit of the Teutonic power.

In the new orientation which is taking place, all departments of life must be adjusted in their activities to the new facts which have been visualized. These new facts will perhaps, be appreciated by a consideration of the principle which underlies them as stated by Maeterlinck in his Life of the Bee:

The aim of nature is manifestly the improvement of the race; but no less manifest is her inability, or refusal, to obtain such improvement except at the cost of the liberty, the rights, and the happiness of the individual. In proportion as a society organizes itself, and rises in the scale, so does a shrinkage enter the private life of each one of its members. Where there is progress, it is the result only of a more and more complete sacrifice of the individual to the general interest. Each one is compelled, first of all, to renounce his vices, which are acts of independence.

This is the law of progress in life accepted by science, philosophy, and religion; and expressed in the saying of Jesus Christ: "He that would save his life shall lose it, but he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it."

Also summarized by John Mason Tyler in his The Place of the Church in Evolution:

In progressive evolution life is always manifesting itself in higher powers of greater capacity and efficiency. The higher power never crowds out or displaces the lower, but stimulates it to fuller development. It unifies the work of the lower functions in the higher and more complex organisms. Conformity to a larger environment means a broader and deeper life. The most difficult problem . . . is not how to survive or to get food, or even to provide for the young, but how to keep open the door to permanent progress. This can be attained only through the steady and persistent exercise of the highest powers.

THE SOCIAL PROBLEM

Among the problems which are pressing upon us to-day with insistence, it will not be doubted that the various questions included in the economic and social catalogue are the most urgent. We mean the questions of the proper application of labor, the just share in the produce of that labor and the wise conservation of the results of labor. These are the vital features of the modern science of economics.

In the light of the new conditions which are arising it is quite germane to ask: "Shall the economic world be included in the general life of man and can the problems be solved by the application of the same principles governing other social relationships?" Also, does the responsibility of internationalism, interdependency and interrelationship apply to the problems of labor and capital? Or does this department of life come under the influence of other forces and is it controlled by quite another set of rules?

In a casual study of the evolutionary course briefly outlined in history and science it is seen that the development of the physical life falls into three groups:

First, that of digestion and reproduction.

Second, that of muscle.

Third, mind.

In a general way each individual and each generation recapitulates this course. It is now admitted however, that in all things mind is supreme. Even Lester Ward, one of the most radical of American materialists writing of sociology says: "Sociology as a whole rests upon psychology."

This means that the structure of society is the result of the mind and justifies the pedagogic aphorism: "What you wish to see in the nation's life to-morrow you must put into your schools of to-day." Whatever affects the menal processes will have inevitable reaction in the societal structure. With the developing appreciation of this fact has grown up what Eucken in his Truth of Religion calls: "the philosophy of the wholeness of life." This is not essentially new and has been the burden of the prophets and teachers of both Old and New Testaments. But still we have not habituated ourselves to thinking in terms of the whole, but always in terms of self. Not, What can I do? But, What can I get?

ONE MORAL CODE IN LIFE

We still practically divide our life into watertight compartments calling these departments by various names as: Religious, social, political, domestic and commercial. What is still worse we have a separate moral code for each, though we remember the Latin proverb: Labor est Orare, labor is worship. We accord to the Old Testament ethic announced by Micah: "The Lord hath shewed thee what is good, O man. To love justice, to love compassion and seek to walk humbly with thy God." We believe it was Jesus who said that in the eternal judgment Almighty God would evaluate our worth according to the quality of social service which we had rendered.

We appreciate the ideal which our Lord had of the church that it should become the Kingdom of Heaven, a working state and ordering of the social life in all departments under the conscious rule of God. We have read time and again of the repudiation of Israel because of social sins and economic injustices until we must agree with Rauchenbusch that the nature and essence of sin is selfishness in which the individual puts his interests above the social rights of the whole. The catalogue of the sins of society in Isaiah's day would not be an anachronism if used as the indictment of modern society.

THE CAUSE OF LABOR

The light of hope which we have to-day is in the renaissance of the social consciousness of religious people witnessed in the growing bibliography dealing with the social and economic aspects of religious responsibilities. The open championing of the cause of labor by churches and daring enterprises of different men and institutions on behalf of social and economic rights of the people; of which perhaps the most impressive in the United States is the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ consisting of thirty-six Christian bodies, and which on July 13 of this year issued a declaration that the state "should attempt to secure to the worker an income sufficient to maintain his family at a standard of living which the community can approve." This council repudiates the idea "that churches are concerned only with religious, educational and charitable enterprises. They are or should be vitally concerned with civic, economic and other social interests."

They also set forth the rights of the working man to share in the control of industry:

A deep cause of unrest in industry is the denial to labor of a share in industrial management. Laborers must be recognized as being entitled to as much consideration as employers and their rights must be equally safeguarded.

The living wage should be made the first charge upon industry before dividends are considered. Wage levels must be high enough to maintain a standard of living worthy of responsible free citizenship in a democracy.

It declares that resolute use must be made of the graduated income and inheritance taxes, as "a just method for placing the heavier burdens upon those most able to bear them." And that the church stands for a living wage for industrial women and equal pay for equal work.

This splendid stand taken by the council is one that all Christian people will rejoice in and back up to the very limit of their capacity. For surely the kingdom of God can never be realized while the injustices of the present system impose the burden of distress and hardship upon women and children and rob men of their just share of their own labor's produce.

GREAT BRITAIN'S AWAKENING

In Great Britain a similar awakening has been in process. Beginning perhaps with the splendid achievement of Hugh Price Hughes, who literally gave his life for the establishment of the London mission which led the van of Wesleyan missions throughout the country. In these missions the church championed the cause of the downtrodden and oppressed not merely as eleemosynary devices, but as instrument for demanding justice and right to all. Perhaps the most widely known of this group of activities is the Manchester and Salford mission under the leadership of Samuel F. Collier and his corps of workers.

The Salvation Army has justified itself after a long and painful struggle against the sectarian spite and brutal ignorance of those who did not appreciate the gospel of social regeneration preached and practiced by the late General Booth and his devoted followers. However, to-day the Salvation Army has won for itself a place in the affections of the people of all the world because it has made religion a means of economic and social deliverance and given fresh life to the program which our Lord announced at the beginning of his ministry: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach good tidings to the poor: he hath sent me to proclaim release to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord."

Then the church army under the direction of Doctor Carlyle is evidence of more than merely academic interest in this social gospel by the Church of England.

I need scarcely say that whatever fault may be found with Christian Science or the Latter Day Saints, both of them distinctly American religious organizations, the former makes religion a real help in time of physical need and stress and has popularized the teaching of the New Testament that "the Spirit helpeth our infirmities"; the latter that the kingdom of God and the Zion of the Old Testament are literal organizations of human beings who actualizing the will of God in social and economic life can submerge the barriers between man and God, time and eternity, earth and heaven and blend all things in one through Jesus Christ our Lord.

HARDIE'S RESOLUTION

Perhaps one of the events which was a forerunner in Great Britain of the colossal changes which have taken place in this present generation, culminating in the elevation of the protege of a Welsh cobbler to the highest position within the gift of the greatest empire history has ever known, was the act of the late James Kier Hardie who was elected as labor and socialist member for Myther Tydvil in 1900. On April 23, 1901, at twenty-five minutes to twelve Mr. Hardie arose and moved the following resolution:

That considering the increasing burden which the private ownership of land and capital is imposing upon the industrious and useful classes of the community, the poverty and destitution and general moral and physical deterioration resulting from a competitive system of wealth production which aims primarily at profit-making, the alarming growth of trusts and syndicates, able by reason of their great wealth to influence governments and plunge peaceful nations into war to serve their interests, this house is of the opinion that such a condition of affairs constitutes a menace to the well-being of the realm, and calls for legislation designed to remedy the same by inaugurating a socialist commonwealth founded upon common ownership of land and capital, production for use and not for profit, and equality of opportunity for every citizen.

Since that day with what deadly emphasis this resolution has been vindicated in terms of blood and fire and vapor of smoke. Stripped of its rather hackneyed socialistic phraseology, we can see that the last five years of woe are directly traceable to the selfishness and suicidism of the individualistic system, which acted in its own way to secure its rights and profits without any regard to the obligations it was under to others, and now upon an innocent world the enormous sorrow and debt is placed and the future generations are mortgaged as well.

What a terrific condemnation will be ours unless we move definitely and heroically to make it forevermore impossible that such a bloody crime shall be reenacted. We owe this to the memory of those hosts of martyrs from every allied country, we owe it to ourselves and to the generations yet to come, and at least we may esteem the league of nations as our pledge that never again shall brute force be used by insensate selfishness to steal the rights of mankind for personal and national aggrandizement.

THE PRESENT ECONOMIC PROBLEM

Let us now consider the problem of the present economic situation and see what can be done to eliminate the evils which have grown out of the present system and how we can bring to bear the benefits of the recent victory upon the bread and butter side of life.

As has been pointed out by many writers, perhaps the most striking change during the last one hundred years or so, is the vast increase of wealth, with the result that life is now of great variety and complexity. This increase of wealth and quest for comforts and ease in life is explained largely by man's having entered into intelligent and sympathetic partnership with nature.

But in spite of all this increase of wealth and comforts in life, happiness is still as elusive as ever. Proper distribution is a vexed question. It seems to be agreed that there is no lack either of raw material or manufactured commodities, for Nature, generous mother that she is, has supplied enough and to spare, while man's intellect has invented all sorts of ways and means of applying power to do for him, what he was not able to do for himself, making the very forces which once had terrorized him the docile servants of his will.

In spite of all, hunger, squalor, vice, and crime, if not increasing, are at least much more accentuated. Though there never was a time when wealth was so plentiful, never has poverty trod with more truculent and widespread power. It is also as well to keep in mind that desirable as it is to have better wages, more sanitary and convenient housing, a minimum scale of hour to work leaving more time for recreation and culture, and increased facilities for education and even compulsory education, the real solution of the economic and social evils seems not to have been found. It is so clearly impressed upon the minds of those who are eagerly and earnestly looking for a way of escape from these conditions, that something more and deeper is required, than mere adjustment and readjustment of external and environmental conditions and things.

Men go to the devil when rolling in money. The upper four hundred can descend to the lowest depths of iniquity, and the educated classes are by no means paragons of virtue. Poverty and squalor are not able to quench the idealisms of human faith and the slums have their pageants of heroisms and idyls of loving sacrifice equal to anything which the world has ever known.

It seems to be accepted that "Things can never make a life, but a great life can give meaning and value to the smallest things." (J. M. Tyler.)

Hobson has shown us that "value" depends more upon the moral qualities in the one who has and uses the "thing" than in the thing itself. This war is the last word on the moral and spiritual factors in the equation of "value," without which neither numbers, equipment nor material advantages can gain headway.

Doctor G. Stanley Hall has stated this in his philosophical analysis of history when he said "there can be no moral progress unless we have faith that the eternal powers are always on the side of right." And again: "History is the great judge and vindicator of the ways of God to man." The inward consciousness of being right and the passion for right will make giants out of pigmies and create a wealth of spiritual heroisms out of gray and monotonous commonplaces.

In the moral world as in the material, the greatest and most enduring values are those which are the by-products rather than the main and direct effort. Carlyle once said: "It is not so much what is done, as the spirit in which it is done that counts."

THE ROOT EVIL

I think that the root evil in our present economic and social structure is as R. H. Tawny of Oxford expresses it:

The right to the free disposal of property and to the exploitation of economic opportunities is conceived by a large part of the modern world, and in particular by the most socially influential part of it to be absolute. . . . To-day this doctrine is still the practical foundation of social organization.

In practice this principle means that every man who is so fortunate as to have property, or talent or position or opportunity inwardly believes that he has the right to use such means, talent or opportunities for the furtherance of his own personal interests and so becomes the center of his own universe. Under such impulses Professor Tawny reminds us "men do not become religious, or wise or artistic for religion, and wisdom and art imply the acceptance of limitations."

As we have seen, the improvement of the race can only result from the personal limitations which the individual accepts in the interest of the social whole. To such people or communities freedom consists in the "absence of obstacles between opportunities for self-advancement and those whom birth or wealth or talent or good fortune has placed in a position to seize them." Then when men believe that "economic rights" are independent of "social functions," two results are noted by Professor Tawny, namely:

The creation of a class of pensioners upon industry, who levy toll upon its product, but contribute nothing to its increase, and who are not merely tolerated, but applauded and admired and protected with assiduous care, as though the secret of prosperity resided in them. There is no principle of discrimination between incomes which are payments for functions, and incomes which are not, all incomes merely because they represent wealth stand on the same level of appreciation, and are estimated solely by their magnitude, so that in all societies which have accepted industrialism there is an upper layer which claims the enjoyment of social life while it repudiates its responsibilities. . . .

The second consequence is the degradation of those who labor, but who do not by their labor command large rewards, that is, of the great majority of mankind. . . . Wealth becomes the foundation of public esteem, and the mass of men who labor, but who do not acquire wealth, are thought to be vulgar and meaningless and insignificant compared with the few who acquire wealth by good fortune or by the skillful use of economic opportunities, and come to be regarded, not as the ends for which alone it is worth while to produce wealth at all, but as the instruments of its acquisition by a world that declines to be soiled by contact with what is thought to be the dull and sordid business of labor.

A society ruled by these principles is a victim of inequality and consequently social war. This is inevitable because "its teaching is that each individual or group has a right to what they can get, and denies that there is any principle, other than the mechanism of the market, which determines what they ought to get."

STEWARDSHIPS

We are needing to change our ideas about capital and labor through and through. Instead of capital and labor being regarded as the means to secure personal interests they must be regarded as a stewardship in which both shall function for the well-being of society. Those who serve the best and bring the greatest amount of happiness to the race shall be esteemed as the most honorable and valuable members of the group. Not what am I worth, but rather what can I do. Not how do I get out of the job, but what function can I perform for the social good. To quote again Professor Tawny:

If society is to be healthy, men must regard themselves not as the owners of rights, but as trustees for the discharge of functions, and the instruments of a social purpose. . . .

The transference of emphasis from rights to functions would result in industry being considered primarily as a social service; and, however the principle that industry is a social service may be interpreted, there are at any rate three implications which are involved in it. The first is that it should be conducted in complete publicity with regard to both costs of production and to profits. The second is that the primary consideration in its organization should be that the community should be offered the best service technically possible at the lowest price compatible with adequate payment to those who render it. The third is that, when all the charges necessary to the supply of a service have been met, any surplus which remains should pass to the public. . . . A functional society would extinguish mercilessly those forms of property rights which yield income without service.

COOPERATION

Already the nationalization and municipalization of public utilities and the development of the cooperative methods of production, manufacture and distribution are moving in this direction, and the history of such methods in the old world especially in Great Britain reads like a romance.

Surely this was the state of which John Stuart Mill dreamed when he said:

The form of association, however, which, if mankind continue to improve, must be expected in the end to predominate, is not that which can exist between capitalist as chief and workpeople without a voice in the management, but the association of the laborers themselves on terms of equality, collectively owning the capital with which they carry on their operations, and working under managers elected and removable by themselves.

This great end has been achieved in many lands and is a monumental success, where ever the principle of stewardship and functioning for the social weal has been honored. The time must come when this vast republic shall be rescued from the predatory interests who look upon her limitless resources as the incontestable right to those who can get and hold, and they shall become the possession of all the people to be controlled by the people and for the good and benefit of all people.

This is not the wild dream of socialism, bolshevism or anarchy, for in Britain corporation and municipalization were established factors in the redemption of the nation long before socialism had any place in the political life of the people. But it can only come when the people think more of the commonwealth than they do of their own personal interests, and then shall it be said:

The few shall not forever reign;
The many toil in vain.
The powers of hell may rule to-day,
But Christ shall reign to-morrow.

J. W. RUSHTON.

TERRESTRIAL HELL--WHO OCCUPIES?

[The following article presents rather a unique viewpoint. Others have different ideas on the subject. We would welcome a few good articles discussing it. It may be noted that this earth is to be purified and used for divine purposes, and that men on this earth have seen heaven.—EDITORS.]

Is hell only another name for earth? Are the terms earth and hell identical in meaning? Are we, the denizens of earth, actual residents of the hell the Bible tells us so much about?

There is a place of banishment from God where devils and unredeemed men dwell, a place where the spirits of wicked men after death, and possibly before birth are located. It is called in the Greek tongue "Torturus and Gehenna." (2 Peter 2: 4.) It is called in the English language "the bottomless pit" and by its more familiar name, hell. Where is it located? What are its meets and bounds? Who occupies it? What relationship do they sustain to the denizens of earth? Finally, who are we, anyway? Where did we hail from? Are we in any way responsible for being here? Momentous questions indeed.

The author does not presume that he can give a final answer to them. He is seeking a correct solution of these questions and therefore, solicits aid, comment, and criticism.

WHAT THE SCRIPTURES SAY

The scriptures are the only source of information that most people will recognize. To them we must go for light. And from them we read that Satan was once the "son of the morning," a "day star" in heaven. (Galatians 14: 12, see marginal reading.)

Satan developed a spirit of greed for authority which lead into competition for power and possession. (Genesis 3: 5, Inspired Version.) He converted a third part of the angels to his abominable doctrine. (Revelation 12: 4; Doctrine and Covenants 28: 10.) Competition brought on war in heaven when Satan was vanquished and cast out. "And his angels were cast out with him." (Revelation 12: 7-12.) These are "the angels which kept not their first estate but left their own habitation," whom God "hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day." (Jude 6.)

The great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him.—Revelation 12: 9.

God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell.—2 Peter 2: 4.

Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea: for the Devil is come down unto you, having great wrath.—Revelation 12: 12.

Jesus called Satan "the prince of this world." (John 14: 30.) But John said that Satan "is the angel [or prince] of the bottomless pit." (Revelation 9: 11.)

If earth and hell is not one and the same, how can we harmonize these texts?

To accept the inevitable and acknowledge that hell, earth, and bottomless pit are only different names for the same place, is the only chance we see to avoid a contradiction of terms.

The language of "he that liveth, and was dead," to the churches of Ephesus and Pergamos strongly fortifies this position as follows: "I know the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews, and are not, but are the synagogue of Satan." "I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is. . . . Antipas was my faithful martyr, who was slain among you, where Satan dwelleth." (Revelation 1: 18; 2: 9-13.)

We learn from this that Satan who was "cast down to hell" and "reserved in everlasting chains" established his "synagogue" his "seat" and the place where he "dwelleth" upon this earth.

To make sure that there is no mistake about this matter, we compare seven translations with the following result. The Inspired, King James, and Douay versions all three say that Satan's "seat" his "synagogue" and the place where he "dwelleth" are on this earth.

Weymouth's and the Revised versions testify that Satan's "throne" his "synagogue" and the place where he "dwelleth" are situated on this earth.

The Emphatic Diaglott affirms that Satan's "throne," "assembly," and dwelling place are all to be found upon this planet which is named earth. The Twentieth Century New Testament has it that Satan's "throne," "congregation," and where he "willeth" are each and all situated upon our earth. These seven versions all agree that Jesus called Satan "the prince of this world." The same is also true of Ephesians 2: 2 where Paul refers to Satan as "the prince and power of the air."

Let us stop here and sum up the counts already noted.

First. When Satan and his angels were "cast down to hell" they landed upon this earth.

Second. John says that Satan is "the angel of the bottomless pit" and Jesus confirms the statement, or repeats it in different words by saying that Satan is "the prince of this world."

Third: Satan's "seat" his "throne" or place of business is mother earth.

Fourth: The Devil's "synagogue," "congregation," "assembly" is with mortal men upon this planet.

Fifth: The place "where Satan dwelleth," his home if you please, is pointed out to us by our Savior through John right here with us in our own mundane sphere.

The "seat," the "synagogue" and the dwelling place of "Babylon the Great" is also the "throne" the "congregation" and the home of the Devil.

Another fact worthy of prayerful thought is found in Revelation 9. When John saw a fallen angel (closely related to the kaiser) open the bottomless pit, which vomited forth the smoke of gas and liquid fire and plagues more to be feared than death itself, and saw loosed the dogs of destruction with their death-dealing devices who killed "the third part of men." It was all seen to take place and vent its fierce, vicious fury in no other region or place than our own mundane home.

It was upon this earth where the Lord God cursed the serpent (Genesis 3:14) and all the enmity "the confusion the strife" all the bruising and counter bruising was to occur on earth among mortal men.

The great christening when the enemy of all righteousness fell heir to such high-sounding titles as "angels of the bottomless pit," "prince and power of the air," "prince of devils" or "prince of this world," was staged nowhere else than on earth.

Satan's scheming with Eve in the Garden, his torturing of Job, dissension with Moses, visiting of Joshua, provoking of David, tempting of Jesus, his opposition toward the gospel, his entering into Judas and various other individuals, his camouflage as "an angel of light" and all the rest of his "lying wonders" have been and are to be staged nowhere else than here among mortal men in the Devil's own home.

God shows us where hell is situated in Deuteronomy 32:13-25. He says of Jeshurun: "They sacrificed unto devils." "I will hide my face from them." "For a fire is kindled in mine anger, and shall burn unto the lowest hell, and shall consume the earth with her increase and set on fire the foundations of the mountains."

What is to occur when the fires of the lowest hell are kindled? Answer: The earth which is "the foundation of the mountains" shall be consumed "with her increase." The text shows in detail how "the earth with her increase" is to be consumed and what the fires of the lowest hell are: They are twofold in their nature. First, Jeshurun consumes "the increase of the fields" by profiteering upon all the necessaries of life, such as "oil out of the flinty rock," "butter," "milk," "honey," "sheep," "wheat," "wine," etc. "But Jeshurun waxed fat, and kicked . . . he forsook God which made him. . . . They [the people] sacrificed unto devils, not to God." The people blindly sacrificed "the increase of the fields" to devils and let their own children go hungry, ragged and ignorant. "And when the Lord saw it he abhorred them." And he said, "I will provoke them to anger with a foolish nation. They shall be burned with hunger and devoured with burning heat, and with bitter destruction. . . . The sword without and terror within, shall destroy both the young man and the virgin, the suckling also with the man of gray hairs."

Thus we see that the consuming, devouring, destruction of the fires of the lowest hell reeks its vengeance upon mortal beings while they remain upon earth in this life.

"And Moses began to fear exceedingly; and he saw the bitterness of hell." (Revelation to Joseph the Seer, see Inspired Version.)

When David had violated the laws of decency until the severe penalty of the sex law rested heavily upon him and noisome and grievous sores ate his flesh as it were fire (see Josephus) he wrote as follows: "The sorrows of hell encompassed me about." (2 Samuel 2:56) And "the pains of hell got hold upon me." (Psalm 116:3.)

Along the same line Solomon wrote that the guests of a foolish woman "are in the depths of hell." (Proverbs 9:18.)

Isaiah wrote to similar characters who were still living, "Thou didst debase thyself even unto hell." (57:9.)

"So is the tongue among our members, that it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature; and it is set on fire of hell." (James 3:6.)

Thus we have the witness of our heavenly Father through Moses, Isaiah, David, Solomon, the Apostle James and the Palmyra Seer testifying that the fires of hell do get hold of, and burn mortal beings while yet they live on earth; and do not need to leave this earth, nor leave our mortal bodies before we may be burned by the fires of hell; nor do we need to leave the church of the living God to get badly singed thereby.

Again we find earth and hell most closely related in the following:

And they were thrust down, and thus became the Devil and his angels; and behold, there is a place prepared for them from the beginning, which place is hell; and it must needs be that the Devil should tempt the children of men, or they could not be agents unto themselves.—Doctrine and Covenants 28:10.

The hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth, and the Devil shall have power over his own dominion.—Doctrine and Covenants 1:6.

Now tie all these depositions into one snug bundle and multiply them by another fact equally as stubborn, namely, a careful search of all scriptures, old, ancient, new and more new, or modern shows only two places where Satan has occupied, heaven, and earth and all his future work is confined to earth. This seems to leave but two locations for hell; it must be this earth or the airy realm of imagination; and the actuality of its existence among us does not favor the latter at all.

Just where the spirits of the wicked are corralled after death may be on open question with some; still every intimation found in scripture ties them hard and fast to this mundane sphere.

PESSIMISM AND OPTIMISM—THE CURSE OF TWO EXTREMES

We have a class of extreme optimists who close their eyes and ears to the miseries of this visible, tangible hell; they refuse publicity of our nation's great crime of poverty and illiteracy, and try to keep the suffering millions ignorant of our economic conditions.

This in no way counteracts the truth; in no way does it mitigate the wretchedness of the denizens of hell; they prolong our misery by deceiving themselves and others.

On the other hand it is extreme folly to lose heart, become sullen, sour, bitter; it only intensifies the flames that torture us. We cannot afford to be pessimistic. If it should happen to be a fact that we are none other than the fallen angels ourselves; if some time in the mystic future the weird news shall come that the fallen spirits who were cast down to this terrestrial hell are the only ones allowed to quicken our mortal bodies, and the more wicked ones who are held back, becoming impatient viciously contend for possession, if this is why wickedness increases in the last days, and why seven devils crowded into Mary, and whole legions into the man of the tombs, if this is why our very natures are so deeply ingrained with Satan's gospel of competition that we can not tear loose from it when we know it to be a wrong, and why so many confused mentalities are confined in our asylums, if "all nations, kindred, tongues and people, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond," without a single exception were converted by Satan while yet we were citizens of heaven and were for that reason thrust down to this mundane hell, if this grewsome supposition should all prove to be true, abasing us to the lowest conceivable humiliation,

WHAT THEN?

Even then pessimism could serve no other purpose than to add fuel to the fire that burns us, while undue optimism helps keep the great molten furnaces of hell in repair.

No matter if upon awaking we find ourselves responsible in any way for being here or not; the fact remains that we are here; and our only sane course is to hold up our heads, make the best of our lives, be glad of the chance to do right. If we do all we can to renovate the hell that consumes us in this life, our presence will not be welcomed in hell after death, but if our attitude prolongs and intensifies the flames in this life, then of course we will be hail fellow well met in hell over there, whatever it may be. Nothing can be more natural than that.

So let us put our shoulders to the wheel and redeem our souls by pushing forward the great propaganda of truth, the fullness of the gospel of cooperation.

Come, let us unite our forces and depose the great autocratic prince of this world; toss him overboard with his generals, the Kaiser and the Czar, and help the mighty angel fasten the divine shackles upon him. Always breathing the blessed refrain, Come Lord Jesus and help us break fealty with the gods of greed. Come and reign forevermore.

D. R. BALDWIN.

The Choirs of Ancient Israel

It is indeed unfortunate that the historical records of ancient Israel contain but meager accounts of the music of the chosen race. Mankind, especially the Christian world, would gladly know concerning the development and use of the art among the Jewish nation; but practically all the few important data at hand come from the Old Testament accounts.

It is quite evident that from the first both Hebrew poetry and Hebrew music were largely associated with and used in the worship of Jehovah. In spite of their many wanderings the Jewish race were preeminently a nation of worshipers and they chose to enrich their devotions to the one true God by the use of their arts and attainments.

But little can be ascertained as to the style and characteristics of the music of Israel and many things can only be conjectured. It is certain that in a large measure they were imitators and adapters of art, borrowing many of their ideas from other races with whom they came in contact. Like all facile adapters they inevitably improved upon and developed the things they borrowed.

It is believed that music among them attained a high degree of excellence and unquestionably later exerted a marked influence upon the early Christian church, which impulses continued down to and through the persecutions of the early church.

As in all the ancient races, where instruments of music were comparatively inefficient, the Jews had recourse to the first great instrument of nature, the human voice, and they brought vocal and choral music to a high state of development. However, although primitive and imperfect, the Hebrew instruments were very numerous. In the one hundred and fiftieth Psalm nearly the whole Jewish orchestra is enumerated. Verses three, four, and five catalogue them very plainly: "Praise him with the sound of a trumpet: praise him with the psaltery and harp. Praise him with the timbrel and dance: praise him with stringed instruments and organs. Praise him with the loud cymbals: praise him with the high-sounding symbols."

It is not known when the first Jewish choir was had, but it is reasonably certain that choral music was largely used in the first temple of Israel, built about 950 B. C. But in the construction of the second temple, about 520 B. C., it was employed in elaborate measure. David, during his lifetime, prepared and perfected the musical accompaniment to the temple service, bringing it to a high state of efficiency. It was indeed fortunate for the race that David was born with so rare a gift of music. Under his direction and royal patronage the service prospered greatly. His wondrous gifts were exercised for the exaltation of the musical rendition of the temple service. Himself a musician of no mean attainment he was able to select those who should direct such energies. Thus, he had a leader, or supervisor, over the choral service and likewise one over the instrumentalists, as well as a chief musician over all. The Psalms are nothing less than poetic effusions, directed to the worship of Jehovah and which, set to music, were used in the temple service. Some of these he personally inscribed "to the chief musician"; oftentimes to those chief musicians in other parts of his realm.

The services of the choirs in David's time were doubtless both elaborate and comprehensive. Large bodies of singers, accompanied by picked bands of instrumentalists, officiated in these services. The singing was to a large extent antiphonal; that is, alternating and responsive in its character, as may be found in some of the churches of to-day. It might vary between priest and congregation; precentor and choir; or between two groups of singers, as in a divided choir. This is very apparent in many passages of scriptural poetry, especially the Psalms. For example, the thirty-eighth Psalm, which consists entirely of responsive lines, was probably rendered about as follows:

Priest (or precentor): "O Lord, rebuke me not in thy wrath: neither chasten me in thy hot displeasure."

Congregation (or choir): "For thine arrows stick fast in me, and thy hand presseth me sore."

Priest: "There is no soundness in my flesh because of thine anger; neither is there any rest in my bones because of my sin."

Congregation: "For mine iniquities are gone over my head: as an heavy burden they are too heavy for me"—and so on through the entire Psalm.

Psalms like the twenty-third ("The Lord is my shepherd") would not lend themselves so well to the antiphonal treatment, and were probably rendered entire, in their individual beauty, by an undivided choir.

In order to appreciate the effect of the choirs of that age we must resort to our imaginations and in fancy picture to ourselves the elaborate choral service in David's day, and in the temple that Solomon reared after him. Let our fancies image the closing scenes of the day. It is eventime. The sun is sinking behind the range of hills westward from Jerusalem and the robed and mitered priests are busying themselves with the altar sacrifice. The smoke of burning incense mingles with the smoke of the sacrifice, and fills the air with its pungent, spicy fragrance. As the prayers of the priests are intoned and the odor of the incense is borne heavenward, there is wafted on the breeze the chant of the gowned and surpliced choir; and as the melody floats outward from the temple walls, there is heard the sublime sentiment of "O come, let us sing unto the Lord: let us make a joyful noise to the rock of our salvation. Let us come before his presence with thanksgiving and make a joyful noise unto him with psalms."

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

Foundation Stones

I would like to impress upon those individuals of our choirs who have been granted only a penny, figuratively speaking, the place of great importance they hold in our choral development. How often you will hear a choir member say, "I don't think I will sing in the choir this morning, my voice is so small it doesn't do any good anyway." For shame! If you are considered worthy of a membership in the choir, it is your duty, as much as it is the duty of the chorister or organist, to be in your place on time, ready to do your bit.

The foundation and body work of any great and beautiful building is never composed of fancy brick or polished marble, but rather of uncut stone or rough brick, so placed because of its reliability and powers of endurance. The pretty, glazed brick and polished marble is saved for the upper structure, and so arranged, according to the plans of the architect, that the building may embody the beautiful as well as the substantial; that those who behold it may give expression of admiration.

Just so is the relative place of our ordinary undeveloped singers and our cultured soloists. Without the foundation the building cannot stand, nor could it have been erected. I am safe in saying that if our directors of music had to depend entirely on accomplished soloists, or "polished marble" we never would have been able to erect the beautiful choral structures that have been had in the past, such as "The Messiah" and "Elijah."

So if you are of the foundation stone variety, don't become indifferent or discouraged because of your less conspicuous place in our choral structure, but rather enthuse; for upon you depends the success of our work. Without you we will not be able to reach the honest-hearted of the world through our music, but would have to do so through some other channel; and I do not believe that we could find anything to take the place of music.

It is "up to you" individually; you can, by doing your part, influence others to do theirs, and so by a whole hearted, concerted effort, bring the music of our church to such a high level that all will be attracted by its beauty and spirituality.

Don't let yourselves be crumpled by the wear and tear of adverse criticism. Weatherproof yourselves with charity, that by your stability a building of wonderful height and beauty may be erected upon you. Don't let anything discourage you from your duty, but continually boost your choir.

L. EUGENE CHRISTY.

Are Musicians Versatile?

Musicians in general are considered specialists in their own particular field, men and women who know a great deal about their own subject, but who are hopelessly ignorant of anything else. However, there are many noteworthy exceptions to this widespread belief.

Paderewski's recent election as the first head of the new Polish republic caused a great deal of excitement in the musical world. But he is only one of many musicians who have had "more than one iron in the fire". Thus Giuseppe Verdi, the famous composer of "Il Trovatore" and "La Traviata" was a successful farmer. He did not treat farming as a joke, either. He rose early, worked hard, and used the best agricultural methods and machinery on his estate. The King of Italy made him a senator but he never was actively engaged in politics.

Rossini, the composer of "William Tell" and "Stabat Mater" was an exceptionally good cook. He also dabbled in farming.

Paganini entered upon a by no means praiseworthy enterprise. Aside from being an excellent violinist, he furnished capital to start an elegant gambling house.

MUSIC AND ASTRONOMY COMBINED

The discoverer of the planet Uranus was a professional musician, Sir William Herschel. Saint-Saens, one of our contemporary musical lights, though no discoverer, has written many valuable essays on astronomical subjects. He is also a successful business man, being an active partner in a large musical publishing house in Paris.

A great many musicians have engaged in literary pursuits, when not making music. Wagner not only wrote his own librettos, but also wrote short stories and essays on all sorts of subjects. Lieutenant John P. Sousa, American composer and bandmaster, is not only a champion marksman, but is also author of several good novels. Sidney Lanier, the poet, supported himself as flute player in the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra while James G. Huneker, the brilliant musical critic, is an ex-piano teacher of New York.

Life is a Well-Strung Lyre

