Life is a well-strung lyre,
And I a wandering note,
Struck from its cunning chords, and left alone
A moment in the quivering air to float;
Then without echo die,
And upward from this earthly jarring fly,
To form a truer note above,
In the great song of joy and love,
The neverending, neverjarring song
Of the immortal throng.—Bonar.

The Power of Music

Music the fiercest grief can charm,
And fate's severest rage disarm.
Music can soften pain to ease,
And make despair and madness please;
Our joys below it can improve,
And antedate the bliss above.
—Pope (Saint Cecilia's Day).

Music Corrects Juvenile Delinquency

Delinquency and crime were formerly considered evils which had to be beaten out of the miscreant's system. Progressive people the world over are rapidly substituting the removal of the cause and incentive of the wrong deed for the former ineffective punishment of the wrong doer. One of the most potent corrective forces in doing this is music, as pointed out by a prominent sociologist.

Doctor William A. McKeever, one of the best known sociological writers of the country, believes firmly that music can effectively be employed in cases of juvenile delinquency, thus aiding greatly in preventing a young wrongdoer from becoming a hardened criminal. While good forces in human nature should be encouraged and stimulated, the evil ones should be provided with adequate substitutes. And here, ac-ording to Doctor McKeever, is where music comes in to play a large part in modern corrective work.

CORRECTIVE VALUE PROVEN IN SCHOOL

He tells how all the "badness" was taken out of some boys in a school out west, merely by sending them into the class of a happy singing teacher. Their evil tendencies were readily corrected through the influence of music. "In this school four or five of the unruly, truant type of small boy are practically under an agreement to be amenable to the discipline of the school for the privilege of staying with the special music class," said Doctor McKeever. "In this case it is very easy to understand why 'music hath charms to soothe the savage breast'. Her radiance, rhythmic energy and appealing voice as she conducts the singing produce a wonderfully electrifying effect upon the boys and girls."

Build Spiritual Foundations

To my mind, there is not room for even a shadow of a doubt, that the errors most fundamentally serious for parents to make, are those of a spiritual nature. The foundations of the character of children must be right, must be solid, or the superstructure is never to be trusted, and it will go down when the storms of life beat upon it. And is not that foundation simply the love of God, shed abroad in the hearts of man? If this love is the foundation upon which the life, or character, of the parent is built, it will permeate the atmosphere in which a child lives and moves from day to day, to such an extent that evil will appear so evil, so much to be avoided, so opposed to every element of love, light, and truth, that it will not have power to attract.

Errors or sins committed against the mental or physical nature of the child, are greatly to be regretted and deplored, but, to my mind, they are small indeed, in comparison with errors or sins against his spiritual nature. Understand me, that what I wish to embrace in the term "spiritual" has no reference to doctrines or creeds. I would not by any means, ignore the doctrine of Christ when I say this, for his gospel as he and his apostles taught it, is fundamental. I am referring, however, to one of the eternal verities of that gospel, without which, though we have all the others, we are, as Paul tells us, but "sounding brass or tinkling cymbal." So many of us fail to win the good we seek, because we put so much stress upon having obeyed the "doctrine," as enunciated by Peter on the day of Pentecost in answer to the question: "What must I do to be saved?", and fail to understand without we cultivate the virtues Paul tells us are the attributes of charity, we are failures—are nothing. Are not these attributes of charity, or love, the attributes of God himself? And is not the possession of them, that which is to make us like him?

May God baptize each day anew, the mothers of the church, for the work which he has intrusted to them—so much needed in both church and world to-day.

Spiritual Motherhood

Woman's power to nurture the good has been a theme for the poets of all times. Dante saw Beatrice but once, yet it was she who sent him on his way singing the greatest song of Christendom—the anthem of redemption from pride and selfishness. Wagner's Brunhilde suffered her goddess nature to give place to the lowly limitations of human weakness that she might save the heroic Walsungs. Goethe's phrase, "the eternally womanly, leading men upward and on" is familiar to all.

Froebel also not only pointed out the spiritual nature of womanhood, but upon it he builds his world of hope for the advancement of humanity. In the nurture-power of woman he sees the means of solving the moral problems of the race; of strengthening its spiritual life. It is his aim to lift motherhood to its highest plane, to see that chance plays a comparatively small part in the educative processes of humanity—that certainty encompasses the life of the children. He sounds the call to women for a higher unselfishness, courage and insight. Because of their universal love for things weak and helpless, he claims that all women have the right into the fostering care of children, whether their own or others.

"I wish I belonged somewhere," pouted the hotel-bred child of wealth and luxury, yearning for a real home and a real mother. To cure his ennui his physical mother sent him to a kindergarten around the corner. "I'd like to stay here," he said to the kindergartner one day at parting, "all the time—eat and sleep—all day and all night,—I wish you were my mother!" he finished in a climax of aspiration.

No child, however, rich or poor, should be deprived of the spiritual influence of real motherhood, by means of which alone his powers may be developed and without which lives have often been blighted.

What fitter task could Froebel realize for women than for her to follow the path which she has more or less instinctively chosen through the ages? Yet it is with some fear, and much instruction that he urges her on her way. Not lightly does he send her forth, but weighted with the greatest burden of responsibility that woman has ever borne. Why not trust her to do her work uninstructed, unconscious of the part she is playing? Her sympathy is undoubtedly great and spontaneous. But sympathy is not enough to insure wise discipline of the unruly tendencies of the human child. Misguided, sympathy fosters dependence, and encourages weakness and self-indulgence. Untrained, it deals but vaguely with the practical problems of life. Moreover even in woman sympathy is often undeveloped. "Did your father whip you, as I wrote him?" asked a cross-looking teacher of a small, cringing Italian in the second year of public school. The same child came under observation in a fourth-year class some time later. He was listening with rapt attention to the immortal story of the "King's Children," told by a normal school practice student. The comment, "How alive Pedro is to the story," brought out the irritable response from the teacher in charge: "Oh, yes, he'll listen to stories, because he likes them, but he's a bad boy!" Feeling that there must be something worth finding behind a face lit with enthusiasm for a tale so noble, the observer visited the home (so-called) of the unfortunate Pedro: a drunken father and mother, a girl of twelve earning the living, the boy hungry for food and comradeship—it was all comprehensible in a moment. Pedro was transferred to an instructor possessing insight and spiritual power. Like a dog he followed her everywhere, until she transformed his love into acts of service, and he became the most useful member of the class.

Even when the intentions are of the best many are the pitfalls that surround the unenlightened experimentalist. "I have to whip him," a father gravely asserted of his sensitive, highly imaginative boy, "because then he stops doing the thing. He does something else, though," he added lamely feeling, but not understanding, that he was not reaching the cause, but only the particular act. Had the child been less strong and buoyant in temperament he might, no doubt, have crushed him into submission; as it was, he only confused him.—Harriet Frances Carpenter in Government Bulletin.

What of the Day?

At the close of the day the mother might ask herself questions like the following to make sure that she has taken into account the things to which her attention has been directed:

Did the child take about a quart of milk in one form or another?

Have I taken pains to see that the milk that comes to my house has been handled in a clean way?

If I was obliged to serve skim milk for the sake of cleanliness or economy, did I supply a little extra fat in some other way?

Were the fats which I gave the child of the wholesome kind found in milk, cream, butter, and salad oils, or of the unwholesome kind found in doughnuts and other fried foods?

Did I make good use of all skim milk by using it in the preparation of cereal mushes, puddings, or otherwise?

Were all cereal foods thoroughly cooked?

Was the bread soggy? If so, was it because the loaves were too large, or because they were not cooked long enough?

Did I take pains to get a variety of foods from the cereal group by serving a cereal mush once during the day?

Did I keep in mind that while cereals are good foods in themselves, they do not take the place of meat, milk, eggs, fruit, and vegetables?

Did I keep in mind that children who do not have plenty of fruit and vegetables need whole-wheat bread and whole grains served in other ways?

Did each child have an egg or an equivalent amount of meat, fish, or poultry?

Did any child have more than this of flesh foods or eggs? If so, might the money not have been better spent for fruits or vegetables?

If I was unable to get milk, meat, fish, poultry, or eggs, did I serve dried beans, or other legumes thoroughly cooked and carefully seasoned?

Were vegetables and fruits both on the child's bill of fare once during the day? If not, was it because we have not taken pains to raise them in our home garden?

Did either the fruit or the vegetable disagree with the child? If so, ought I to have cooked it more thoroughly, chopped it more finely, or have removed the skins or seeds?

Was the child given sweets between meals, or anything that tempted him to eat when he was not hungry?

Was he allowed to eat sweets when he should have been drinking milk or eating cereals, meat, eggs, fruit, or vegetables?

Were the sweets given to the child simple, i. e., unmixed with much fat or with hard substances difficult to chew, and not highly flavored?

Was the child made to eat slowly and chew his food properly?

A young child may be considered well fed if he has plenty of milk, bread, and other cereal food; an egg once a day or its equivalent in flesh foods; a small portion each of carefully prepared fruits and vegetables, with a small amount of sweet food after his appetite for other foods is satisfied. If there is too much or too little of any of these, his diet is one-sided.—Farmers' Bulletin 717, United States Department of Agriculture, Foods for Young Children.

Teach Them to Pray

How should a child be taught to pray? By having family prayer in the home, in which each member takes part. At one time, our family prayer service was carried on by myself and my two little boys. It came about, just naturally, that when I had finished, the older boy would take his petitions to the Lord, and the younger one follow him.

My husband, coming into the room at one time, was so touched by the appeal of my second boy, then five years old, that he stood at the door and cried. It was several years before he cast his lot with us in that respect. Then there were four of us. Just when little Grace added her childish petition, I do not remember, but it was only the other day that our baby girl sought to pray at the family altar. She had long before learned to ask the Lord, in private, for what she desired.

No, I do not teach my little ones a formal prayer. I have no objection to them learning the little "Now I lay me," for its beauty, after they have first learned to talk to God as they would to anyone else. Too, we consider the offerings of the blessing at the table, too sacred a matter for some child to repeat a few formal words, and be done with it. My husband asks it, when he is present. If he is not here, I usually call upon the eldest child present. Sometimes, if that one happens to be out of harmony with the universe, I call upon a younger one.

The first time I asked my daughter to ask the blessing, she said: "What shall I say, mamma?" I said, "If my little girl has nothing she wishes to ask, or thank, God for, mamma will just ask Him to bless our food." I offered up a very simple little prayer aloud, but a fervent longer petition in my own heart. The other day, at lunch, she prayed such a long prayer the other little girl commented unfavorably upon it, but was answered: "It wasn't any longer than other people have prayed other places, was it, mamma?" I assured her I did not think she had asked anything amiss.

When children arrive in this world, they are, by nature, good. They early show their appreciation of harmony and quiet. They know no evil, and one of the very first instincts of a little child, is to please its mother. It likes to see those about it happy. The first time it discovers it has done something wrong, it is heart-broken,—wrong, meaning, to the child's way of thinking, something its mother does not approve. As soon as it is old enough to learn a little about God, and his Son, Jesus, it is just as anxious to please them as its mother.

Because a little child learns so rapidly, it does not take long for evil to come into its life. Before it is out of long clothes, it hears cross words from one person to another. Did you ever see the wondering, questioning, almost frightened look a little baby will have when it hears its first harsh words? If it were only frightened, it would probably cry. Instead, it is listening, learning, placing those sounds. It has always seemed sad to me, that little ones ever have to come in contact with that which is not good, and that it comes so soon after they enter this world. But it is comforting to know, that while they learn evil so quickly, the good is so naturally a part of them, they must cease to be children before they cease to love good better than evil. Thus it is the most natural thing in the world for a child to pray. Just give it a chance to take part with you in such service, and it is glad to do it.

Never embarrass a child if you can avoid it. The very desire he has to please, causes him to be easily embarrassed and discouraged. And, too, a child may be wearied by too much prayer about things he knows, and cares, little about. Why not take such petitions to your heavenly Father in your secret closet, and only make, at the family altar, those requests in which the children can unite? Wisdom is ever a jewel, and nowhere is it more needed than in dealing with a child's soul.

The Kiss That I Forgot

I'm sorry for the many things
Unkind that I have done;
Each day new aches my memory brings
By starlight and by sun.
Ah, could I live again my years
'Twould be the dearest bliss
From eyes I loved the falling tears
To wipe, and tell them this.

But, oh, the things I did not do
That easily I might—
They haunt me, yes, they haunt me, too,
From morning until night;
And, in the dark, wet-eyed, I sigh,
Yet naught can white the blot—
I cannot give, until I die,
The kiss that I forgot.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Dedication of Church at San Jose, California

The activities of the whole day of Sunday, September 28, at San Jose, California, among the Saints were of an enjoyable nature. It was the occasion of the dedication of their beautiful, commodious church.

This church has been finished and occupied some little time, but until recently there were some unpaid bills or some such encumbrance outstanding. It now stands clear of debt, a monument to the thrift, energy, sacrifice, and good judgment of the noble band of Saints composing the San Jose Branch. Elder C. W. Hawkins, the chairman and principal actor of the building committee, and perhaps the leading spirit of the whole project, was closely followed, however, by the whole willing band.

Many of the members who reside at distances of from twenty to seventy miles, such as the Holts, Waters, Rosses and other families whose names we cannot now recall were present, with visitors from San Francisco, Oakland, Irvington, and Stockton. The interior was tastefully decorated with flowers and plants arranged in a happy combination of color effect.

The Sunday school under the superintendency of Sister Hattie Burgess, gave evidence of wisdom and application. The Religio of long time under the presidency of Sister E. Bates, now presided over by Brother Harris, showed unmistakable signs of life and progressiveness.

The dedication service was in charge of the pastor, Brother Chase. Evangelist Frederick A. Smith preached a fine, instructive, inspirational sermon from the text "Feed my sheep," etc., after which Brother Hawkins of the building committee gave a brief history of the building of the church and turned the key over to Bishop Edward Ingham, who responded with appropriate and well-chosen remarks, presenting the key in turn to the deacon of the church, young Brother Hawkins.

Brother Sheehy preached a much appreciated sermon in the afternoon, upon a subject of light and truth being in Christ, using section 90 of the Doctrine and Covenants. There was also a preaching service in the evening, Brother Cady in charge.

May the good Spirit be continually with the San Jose Saints in all their future endeavors.

Every Member a Tithe Payer

ADVERTISING—CONVERSION

They say that real advertising is "making people want your goods instead of trying to sell them."

It strikes us that this is a fairly good definition for true conversion.

It makes a fellow want to pay his tithe instead of coaxing him to do so.

LEADERSHIP

"Leadership in any field of endeavor is conceded to that organization which has set for itself the highest standards and has maintained them."

Our church as an organization should be the leader in exemplifying the philosophy of the Master.

One of the things he told us to do was to pay our tithe. By so doing we shall be emphasizing one of the things that will make us leaders.

Northeastern Illinois

To those interested in the doings of this district, I would say, that this has been at least an average year with us thus far, and in some respects above the average. Judging from the financial arm of the work, the Saints of this district are deepening their love of the truth, as the tithes and offerings are gaining from conference to conference; and still there are many who should be on the tithing and offering list who are not, but with the improvement shown from time to time, we are encouraged to believe, that many more will soon be more fully alive to the privilege and duty thus afforded them to assist in the Lord's great work, of pruning his vineyard for the last time.

Selfishness never makes one happy, but the privilege of giving to the Lord's work, especially, where we have such good, earnest, honest men in charge, as are presented in the Presiding Bishopric and Order of Bishops, ought to stimulate all to action. I, as one of the missionary appointees of the Church, wish to say, that as a family, we sincerely appreciate, the substantial increase made in the family allowance. While the high cost of living demanded such an increase, still were it not for the tithes, offerings, and consecrations, of the loyal Saints, laboring in the affairs of men, it could not have been possible.

May great wisdom be given to all the Saints, that we do not make unwise use of that, which the Lord has blessed us with. I love and appreciate the kindly and timely instruction of the Lord as given in Doctrine and Covenants 130:7; "And both in private and public expenditure carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants." We all ought to remember, that when Jesus blessed the loaves and fishes, as recorded in St. John 6:12; he said: "Gather up the fragments, that remain, that nothing be lost." From the above instruction, how careful we all ought to be to see that nothing is wasted.

Relative to our district reunion, held at Plano, August 29 to September 7, I would say; that not having a reunion for two years, it took some more energy, to get things started. A few had found other ways of spending their vacations, and when the date was changed a week later, on account of the Chautauqua at Plano, it made it hard for some, who had their vacation dates set, but after all we had a good turnout and thirteen were baptized.

Financially we went ahead, with the understanding, that whatever gain we had should go toward a permanent reunion grounds. A committee of five were elected to locate such grounds and report to the December conference to meet in Chicago; committee as follows: W. L. Christy, J. O. Dutton, F. G. Pitt, W. A. McDowell, and J. H. McGuire. We hope the committee will be successful, and that by the time another reunion rolls around, a dining hall will have been erected, where flies will not be permitted to enter!

The committee this year were some of them hindered, Brother C. B. Hartshorn, being one whose vacation was set. The remaining members W. L. Christy, and J. O. Dutton, filled the vacancy by the appointment of Brother J. A. Daer who made the best kind of a committeeman. Brother Christy, responding to a call to attend the Madison, Wisconsin reunion, left but two of us, but several of the local men of Plano did valuable service and some of them not very strong bodily, among them Milo Ewing and L. O. Wildermuth. Brother Wildermuth not being in good health at the time, Charles Wildermuth, J. M. Blakley, and son Kenneth, also O. T. Hayer and C. Classon of Mission assisted in setting up the tents.

In the work at the close, beside those of Plano we had W. F. and Benjamin Hardy of Buckley, Illinois, Brethren Martin Anderson, Elmer Anderson, C. Classon, Ernest Williamson, and O. T. Hayer of Mission. Ask these last five if there is any work to a reunion, and they will tell you the truth. We began with $60.00 in the hands of the committee and closed with $171.85 to the good. This resulted from special donations from several of the branches and individuals, also two very good offerings at the reunion and some profit of the dining tent.

Sister L. O. Wildermuth as head cook did her best, under the conditions in which she had to work, and with her two helpers, Sister John Moore and Mrs. Mollie Warby, should have much credit for the success of the dining tent. The sisters present aside from these, were organized into separate divisions, with one sister in charge, and they came on in rotation to assist with special work at the dining tent. The men also had a "gang" to peel potatoes. (Ask Bishop George Lambert.)

Speakers during the reunion were: L. O. Wildermuth, W. L. Christy, G. T. Griffiths, F. M. Cooper, W. A. McDowell, F. G. Pitt, C. H. Burr, F. F. Wipper, and the writer. We had a very pleasant surprise by the arrival of Bishops Benjamin R. McGuire, George Lambert, and M. H. Siegfried, each one speaking once. Come again brethren.

Brother Oliver A. McDowell, (deacon) oldest son of W. A. McDowell, was called to the office of elder, and following a unanimous vote of the reunion, was presented to the First Presidency and approved, and on the night of September 24, was ordained at Plano, Illinois by Elders J. O. Dutton, W. A. McDowell, F. M. Cooper, and J. M. Blakley.

The Spirit of the Master was present throughout the reunion and we believe much good was done. The auxiliaries were represented by F. F. Wipper; Sister J. A. Gardner arrived in time to assist very much.

By direction of the Presidency of the reunion, G. T. Griffiths, J. O. Dutton, W. L. Christy, and J. A. Daer, Brother Christy was placed in charge of the activities of the young people, and good reports followed. Several young people's prayer meetings were held and much recreation enjoyed.

The order of meetings was as follows: Auxiliary work 8.30 to 10 a. m.; prayer service 10.30 to noon; preaching 2.00 p. m.; song service 7.30; preaching at 8.

One afternoon following the preaching service there followed an hour wherein Gomer T. Griffiths and F. G. Pitt and wife told some of their experiences in travel. One evening following the preaching there was had a "quiet hour" which was much enjoyed by all. Several missionary experiences were related and the audience otherwise entertained. Brother Fred St. John was elected secretary of the reunion and district chorister W. L. Christy chorister of the reunion. Much was added to the reunion by good music and special numbers.

Onset Reunion

Noticing that others have written their impressions of our various reunions, I feel impressed to do likewise concerning the reunion of the Eastern Mission held at Onset, Massachusetts, July 19 to August 4.

I am certain that all who were permitted to be present there, even if for only a few days, will agree with me in saying that it was one of the most enjoyable and spiritually profitable gatherings ever held by the Saints of the Eastern District.

The Saints of this district are indeed fortunate in the possession of such an excellent location for their camp grounds, some fifty acres, I understand, of shore and grove land on the waters of Cape Cod just inside of Buzzards Bay.

Many of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island Saints have erected permanent cottages there, in which they spend not only the days of the reunion period, but most of the summer months as well.

The weather man was very good to us, sending us weather that was almost ideal; other localities during the same period suffered seven or eight days of continual rain, while we had only a day or two of bad weather.

Camp conditions in general were excellent; everything was clean and orderly, and so far as the writer knows not a case of any kind of sickness developed that could be ascribed to camp conditions. One will realize that this is indeed a blessing when he learns of the unfortunate experiences through which reunions of other denominations have passed during the summer. At the Connecticut Chautauqua held at Plainville on the Methodist camp grounds there developed such an epidemic of typhoid fever that the authorities had to close the grounds. To date eighteen cases have been traced there, one of which is the case of the wife of a friend of the writer. In view of such instances we are led to feel that the Lord truly watched over us.

One of the splendid features of the reunion was the unanimity of purpose which prevailed and the entire absence of those things which often mar our gatherings. Dissension, disorder, faultfinding and adverse criticism were almost entirely absent, everyone accepting things as they were without complaint. Even the mosquitoes we felt inclined to forgive, though they did make their presence known occasionally.

But the outstanding feature of our gathering was undoubtedly the presence of the Spirit in our morning prayer meetings. Words of warning and encouragement were given to the body, as well as individual prophecies concerning the work of various members of the priesthood. Many of us felt the presence of the Holy Spirit to such an extent that it was difficult to retain our composure. We were made often to know that God was with us and that he was pleased with the efforts we made to get closer to him.

Several of the sisters were spoken to; words of comfort were given to those who had suffered the loss of loved ones and words of encouragement and instruction to those who had little ones to bring up. But to the writer the most impressive of these manifestations of the Spirit was the beautiful testimony of Brother Richard Baldwin assuring those who feared otherwise that the laughter of the little tots and the play of the children were not displeasing to our heavenly Father. Brother Baldwin is an earnest, spiritual man, and his testimony was one which will be remembered by all those who had children on the camp grounds.

Our other meetings, too, were very helpful, especially the institute work which was in charge of Sister Lucie Sears and Brother Yerrington. From this source we received a great deal of instructive information pertaining to child-welfare and pedagogy.

Brother Gomer Griffiths usually occupied a part of the time and his illustrated lectures on the priesthood and dealing with the erring were especially good. Brother Griffiths has the happy faculty of presenting his subjects in such a simple and kindly way that there is never the least difficulty in understanding him. His long years of experience in many lands has given him a wealth of anecdote that makes his talks extremely interesting. The writer enjoyed many conversations with this good brother and received considerable good advice and encouragement which he prizes highly.

After the institute work and social services were over the balance of the day was given over to recreation such as bathing, boating, crab fishing, ball games, quoit pitching, etc., and it would be difficult to find a spot more suited to such purposes than the camp grounds at Onset. The water for bathing was clean and just the right temperature and nearly everyone on the grounds took advantage of it. The writer cherishes pleasant memories of many happy hours spent there in play with missionaries and Saints from many parts of the country, none of whom were too old or too dignified to take part.

In the evening came preaching service and these were of a very high order, many good speakers being with us. Among these were Brethren Griffiths, Baldwin, Koehler, Sheehy, Hull, Gleazer, and Sinclair. Bishop Bullard held a round table in which matters pertaining to tithing were discussed. Bishop Lewis of Australia gave us some interesting sketches of his experiences in the land of the laughing jackass and the prolific rabbit; of the latter the Bishop solemnly assured us there were "millions of them." Brother Gleazer, our missionary to New York and Philadelphia District, surprised many by his ability in declaring the word; he also preached on the streets to large crowds of interested listeners. Brother Joseph Luff also gave us one of his old-time sermons which was well received and favorably commented on.

One evening Brother Griffiths treated us to a performance somewhat out of the ordinary; he dubbed it a "Missionary experience meeting" and the idea was, briefly, that each missionary present would be allowed fifteen minutes in which to relate some unusually interesting or amusing experience met with in the course of his missionary labors.

Brother Griffiths told of his sojourn in the Holy Land and some of his experiences there were indeed interesting. Brother Hull told of being appointed to one of our large branches and of his chagrin when the Saints thereof refused to receive him. Brother Koehler gave an account of some of his experiences in his Maine field, how he had been obliged to walk twenty-eight miles through ten inches of snow in order to keep an appointment in another town and of the serious results of a cough contracted during the exposure. Brother John Sheehy of the same field told of his experiences during the influenza epidemic at Jonesport, wherein he was called on to minister to the sufferers in various capacities such as minister, undertaker, doctor, nurse, dishwasher, etc., often going for several days at a time without sleep or rest while the scourge raged. Brother Richard Baldwin told of instances wherein he had narrowly escaped from those who sought his life because of the unpopularity of his message. Brother Luff related an instance which occurred during the early days of his ministry in Canada wherein the Lord had supplied him with the necessities of life, when he had reached his extremity. There were other such experiences related which convinced the hearers that the life of a missionary is not always a bed of roses.

Following the evening service the mail was usually distributed by our genial postmaster Doctor Sinclair. Then came the evening games under the leadership of Bishop Lewis and John Sheehy. These were participated in by old and young, and it did one's heart good to see the grown-ups playing childhood's games again and enjoying themselves royally.

After the games came the evening singing in which all took part and to the writer's mind the good old songs of Zion never sounded so good as they did when sung out there under the trees by the Saints of God whose hearts were in earnest accord with the sentiment of the song. In fancy the writer can hear good old Brother Griffiths asking for his favorite, "The old, old path," which he never failed to do.

Then as a fitting climax came the evening prayer, thanking our heavenly Father for his goodness to us and asking that his protection might continue over us during the night. Like a lot of happy, tired children, we sought our Father with hearts full of gratitude for the blessed privilege of such association with his Saints and people. Some of these evening prayers were indeed beautiful and such that those who heard them will long remember; one of these prayers in particular remains in the memory of the writer which was voiced by Brother Baldwin and which so fittingly expressed the feelings of our hearts that there was many an unspoken amen at its close.

The writer and his companion made many acquaintances among the missionaries and Saints of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island District and their hearts were indeed heavy when it became necessary to say good-by; they desire to thank these good Saints for the many kindnesses shown to them as visitors from outside the district and to assure them that they will enthusiastically boost the Onset reunion whenever the opportunity presents itself.

In gospel bonds,

BRIDGEPORT, CONNECTICUT.

WILLARD I. NEWMAN.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 25, 1919.

Editors Herald: Our reunion at Joplin in August was another of the good ones though the attendance of campers was lighter than usual due largely to industrial conditions. Brethren U. W. Greene and J. A. Tanner gave excellent and valuable help in making it a success, and Bishop McGuire came in to help us on the last Sunday and delighted the Saints with his pleasing personality and fine sermon.

The first Sunday of the reunion witnessed the departure of Brother and Sister A. V. Karlstrom for their mission home in Tahiti but not until he had been privileged to baptize his aged father and mother and several nephews and neices, which added joy to the regret of leaving them. The Saints showed their deep interest and love for them and many a prayer followed them on the way.

The always-to-be-depended-upon local missionaries, Brethren Lee Quick, A. C. Silvers, and William Bath did their full share in making the reunion a success, while Brother Sidney N. Gray who was busily preparing to leave for his mission in the West, and Brother A. V. Closson, who ran over from the Southern Missouri District for a few days, gave valuable help, as did many of the local brethren. The Woman's Auxiliary took a leading part also with Sister J. A. Graves president of the district Auxiliary and Sister D. J. Krahl general president in charge. All expenses were met and a balance left to begin next year's reunion.

We note progress at Mulberry, Kansas, where the Saints have secured a nice lot and a suitable building in which to worship. This fills a long felt need. The Saints at Arma, Kansas, have also paid for a desirable lot and have just finished the erection of a church building, having been assisted in their plans by Brother Harry Smith, the church architect. These two branches will be in much better position to carry on their work than before, and the houses of worship will be fully appreciated.

A recent visit to Parsons, Kansas, shows that the Saints there are adapting themselves to their new responsibilities since their organization in June. Brother Daniel Gray is in charge, being loved by the Saints. There are indications of growth. We held meetings for ten days in Nowata, Oklahoma, where Brother A. C. Silvers has been stationed as pastor, and found the Saints working energetically together to carry on the work. Many rural points were visited in an effort to help the scattered Saints, who do not have the privilege of attending meetings. The membership is increasing at Miami, Oklahoma, and the work developing, so that we are in hopes of organizing a branch there before long. Several rural branches which have long been on the decline will be disorganized this fall.

Since the removal of Brother Karlstrom, the district has been without a Bishop's agent, but we hope the Saints will not let this condition cause them to lessen their faithfulness in paying their tithes and offerings. The solicitors in the branches can receipt you just the same, and where there is no solicitor Saints may send directly to Bishop B. R. McGuire, Box 256, Independence, Missouri, mentioning that you are in the Spring River District. We are in hope that soon one will be found, who can be appointed agent for the district.

There is need for more workers in every line and the field of activity is open to every member for the accomplishing of much good. The opportunity is not far away, but immediately at hand, and is readily revealed to those having willing hearts and ready minds. We are grateful for past blessings and desire to be worthy of the future. CHARLES FRY.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, September 24, 1919.

Editors Herald: As it has been some time since I have written anything for the pages of our official church organ I will attempt to tell you some of the happenings that are taking place here in the valleys of the mountains.

There has been several changes in the personnel of the missionary force here and in Idaho, and we think we have some of the best men sent out by the church as our representatives here. The only thing we have to regret is that we do not have as many as the needs of the field requires. In Idaho we have Evangelical Minister Ammon White who is located in Boise. We have also Brother R. C. Chambers who is located in Minidoka. These brethren will labor in different parts of the district in work pertaining to their respective departments. We hope to see them accomplish a good work.

In Utah we have Brother M. A. Etzenhouser who will look after the needs of Salt Lake City. He will be assisted in a very large measure by Sister Etzenhouser. They are starting out with a determination to see the work succeed. From present indications I am sure they will see a fulfillment of their ambitions. During the brief time they have been here they have endeared themselves to all the Saints and we hear many who are very much encouraged by their presence. Brother Etzenhouser has been assisted by Brother S. S. Holm in trying to locate some of our lost members. Brother Holm enters the field as one of our new men and we are sure will make a good record for himself. For some time Brethren Fulk and McKim have been actively engaged in their missionary work among the members of the dominant church. They have succeeded in arousing considerable interest in each place where they have labored. In some of the small towns crowds estimated at three hundred have come out to hear them. In my experience in Utah I do not think I ever saw the time where there has been as good an attendance and interest as there has been in the recent past. We think this is an indication that some are becoming interested in our work and in due time we will reap the result of the sowing of the gospel seed. Some times the fight is a most bitter one as some of the priesthood of the Utah church are very aggressive in their opposition against our work. With such men as Brethren Fulk and McKim representing our cause we have nothing to fear.

It was my privilege to attend the Idaho District reunion and conference. The attendance was fair and in my opinion the reunion was the best ever held in the district. The preaching was by Bishop James Keir, J. F. Garver of the Lamoni Stake Presidency, Evangelist Ammon White, Willard Parkes, R. C. Chambers, A. J. Layland, J. L. Benson, and L. G. Holloway. The sermons were of a high order and all seemed to profit by them.

In the prayer services a good spirit prevailed and the gifts were manifested to the encouragement and instruction of the Saints. The call of the Spirit to come up higher was felt by all present. Many spoke and declared their intention to heed that which was given and make ready for future service in the church. Twenty-two were baptized during the reunion and one ordained; Brother Edward Haas to the office of a priest. By unanimous vote a reunion was provided for next year and we hope it will be even better than the one just past.

I would like to say to the Saints of Utah, Idaho, and Eastern Oregon that I have been selected by the appointing powers as one of the group supervisors in charge of missionary activities. As such I am anxious to do all I can to reach those outside the church. If any desire to have the gospel presented in their respective localities if they will manifest a sufficient interest and let me know of their needs, I will gladly attempt to make provisions so that meetings may be held and the people warned, and the gospel presented to those who are now in darkness. If you desire this, you can address me at 336 South Fourth East Street, Salt Lake City and I will see to it that your wants are supplied.

We are looking forward to the time when the work of the Lord will be carried to the uttermost parts of the earth and a people prepared for the coming of the Lord. To this end I shall labor and pray

In the faith,

ROCHESTER, NEW YORK, September 26, 1919.

Editors Herald: When last I took up space in your paper I was at Saranac Lake, N. Y. where the beauties of "mountain and dale," are certainly emphasized, and nature does not need to be adorned to be startling. I went from Saranac Lake to Malone, where I was made welcome at Sister McDonald's. Held two services while there and did some visiting, then returned to Saranac Lake for a few more meetings, and then left for Sherrill.

At Sherrill I found our good district president hard at work, not on some abstruse psychological question, but on the substantial, and beautiful little church that the Saints of Sherrill are building. What was I to do with such an example before me? I followed the lead for the time I was there.

I stopped at Brother Whitehead's in East Syracuse for a day, and then went to Buffalo where I preached for the Saints twice on Sunday. Monday Doctor Weeger shipped me on the train for Canada. I got off at Low Banks, and looked around for the city. I found a mail carrier who was going my way and he offered to give me a ride. I thought that beats the U. S. anyway, and when I left him he would not take any pay for the ride, another score for Canada. I was received very kindly by the committee at the reunion, and everything possible was done for my comfort, and better than all that was done, was the spirit back of the kindness shown.

To give a description of the reunion and the things felt would be impossible, one would have to be there on the grounds to fully appreciate it, you might approximate to the feeling by imagining yourself in jail, with all of its impending horror, and then suddenly being released from that condition. That is about the way the Saints felt at that reunion. Joy was unconfined and the Spirit of God was everywhere and in every service. The camp was beautiful, the lake was beautiful, even the homeliest man in camp was beautiful. May God bless the good Saints of Toronto for their hospitality.

Brother Pew of Lowbanks rather insisted on the writer remaining with them after the reunion closed, so I remained with them for a week, and enjoyed my stay very much. The Saints remembered my temporal wants, and did the best they could in attending the services that we held. From Low Banks I came to Buffalo, and then to the "Falls" preaching in both places.

While in Buffalo I met Brother Baldwin, and through a suggestion given by him came to Rochester. I had a few addresses of people who lived in Rochester, but those that I tried to find had moved, until I found Brother Harry Alden, and through his kindness and a little effort on my part we located the rest of the Saints in the city. Like all cities our people are scattered some, and some of them did not know that there were any others of like faith in the city.

Well, we tried to get them together, and start meetings again, as there had not been any services held in the city for some time. I succeeded in locating twenty members of the church, that live in Rochester. I appointed services in Brother and Sister Alden's house, and then hired a hall near the center of the city for Sunday services.

The first week that I advertised my Sunday services one of the leading papers in the city inserted the advertisement under the heading "Mormon." I interviewed the editor, and he said that he would correct it, which he did in the next issue of the paper. Then he sent a reporter to write up my sermon for Sunday night, and the reporter gave us a very good report. The next week I advertised again, and the same thing happened as the first week, only a little meaner in the way of manipulation. Again the reporter visited me, and another article was the result. I quit advertising in this paper, but continued with the other papers in the city, as they were fair in their way of doing, and put the advertisement in as one gave it to them.

Our Brighamite friends came to hear me the first Sunday night, no doubt thinking that by reason of the notice in the paper that I must be some kind of a Mormon. But they learned some things, at least one of the ladies, who was present, so informed me. Now they have hired a hall two doors from our hall, on the same side of the street. I do not know whether this is by accident or design, and I am sure that it ought not to make any particular difference to us whether it is or not.

I am working against some peculiar things here, but with faith in God, and the help of the Saints, we shall be able to move forward, and accomplish something of a permanent character I trust.

Brother Bishop was with us for a day and gave timely advise to Saints, and friends. Brother George F. Robley was with me for a week, and presented the gospel story on two occasions. It seems to me that the Devil has a special regard for the State of New York, and the nearer we get to the Hill Cumorah the more apparent this becomes. May the day soon come when a greater endowment of divine power may come to the elders, that they may more effectively, and effectually do the work assigned them.

Pastoral

Saints of the State of Kansas: Having been appointed by the Quorum of Twelve to take the oversight of the missionary work in the State of Kansas, I wish to get in touch with all the missionary force and also all scattered members and those who desire to have meetings held in their localities. I hope and pray that you will feel free to write to me, as this is the only way I will be able to get in touch with the work in some places. My field address is Alexander, Kansas; home address 308 South Grand Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

T. W. CURTIS.

INDEPENDENCE AND KANSAS CITY STAKES MISSIONARY ARM OF THE WORK

In accordance with the appointment made by the Quorum of Twelve, and for the purpose that we may fully discharge our responsibility, we are now asking the cooperation of all, and more especially those holding the priesthood. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature" is preeminently the work of the church to-day, as much, if not more so, than in past ages.

Are you interested in missionary work, and in warning your neighbor? Have you ever felt that you have done your full quota? We wish to hear from all who feel that they can spare the time to distribute tracts and help in choral work, for there is a great need for this work at the present time. We will greatly appreciate your help. Sister Bernice Griffith is doing a noble work as our Kansas City chorister, and will welcome more singers.

Brethren George Jenkins and William H. Mannering are our collaborators and busy in a series of meetings. The latter is also to open up the work to the Mexicans as there are a number of them in and around Kansas City. There are still other appointments awaiting the coming of some faithful elder. Who will respond? Write the undersigned at 1517 West Maple Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

We shall be pleased to be kept in touch with any opportunity for the opening of new places, and will reach you just as early as possible, as we are reminded the harvest is truly great but the laborers few. Your brother in Christ,

JOSEPH ARBER.

To the Saints and Missionaries of Toronto and Owen Sound District; Greeting: By action of the Quorum of Twelve, I have been appointed to supervise the missionary work in the above-named districts, and we solicit your cooperation in this worthy cause.

We will endeavor to get in touch with those under General Conference appointment as soon as possible and trust that we may hear from scattered Saints, branch officers, and district presidents, advising us of the opportunities for holding missionary services throughout the two districts.

We would be glad if the local ministry would reach out from the branches as time and means will permit, and do the missionary work. In so doing, we would advise that you work in harmony with your branch and district officers.

The Bishopric

Owing to the death of Brother Charles C. Hoague, who has served the church for a great number of years as Bishop's agent in the Southern Wisconsin District, we are under the necessity of appointing another in his stead. We are glad to commend to the Saints of this district Brother E. J. Smith, Gay Building, Madison, Wisconsin. Brother Smith is a man well qualified to handle this work, being employed as manager in the office of Tanner, Gilman & Ellis, Certified Public Accountants at Madison, and who has a deep and abiding interest in the Lord's work. We feel that the Saints of the Southern Wisconsin District are fortunate in having a man of this type to look after the financial interests of the district. We trust the same loyal support which has been rendered to Brother Hoague during his lifetime may continue under the direction of Brother Smith. This appointment becomes effective from November 1. Branch solicitors and scattered Saints will kindly forward your offerings to Brother Smith after that date. Respectfully, BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

SOUTHWESTERN OREGON DISTRICT

Owing to the removal of Brother William Smith from the above district it has been thought best to amalgamate the financial work of this district with that of the Portland District. Scattered Saints and branch solicitors of the above district will, therefore, in the future kindly send their tithes and offerings to Brother L. B. Shippy, care of Northwestern Steel Company, Portland, Oregon.

B. R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Church Recorder

We had hoped ere this to have a letter of explanation, detailing our plan for gathering items of information for the general record, in the hands of each missionary, and each district, stake and branch president, but owing to the amount of detail work to which special attention had to be given, we were necessarily delayed in the preparation of such letter of explanation. We therefore take this opportunity of supplementing our former notice in the HERALD and Ensign with the following:

This department, henceforth to be known as the Department of Statistics, will undertake to provide forms for reporting items desired for record. These forms will be supplied to all church officials, both local and general, and each official will be requested to use same in reporting to this department direct. In order that we may have original information for the purpose of making up the permanent records of the church, we are requesting each ordained man henceforth to report direct to us such items as, when recorded, will give a faithful record of his official acts. This will mean that all certificates of baptism, confirmation and blessing, reports or ordinations, marriages and deaths, and new organizations and disorganizations will hereafter be sent directly and immediately to this office instead of being given or sent to a branch clerk as heretofore. Upon the receipt by this office of a certificate of baptism, the name will be numbered and registered and enrolled with the branch indicated on the certificate. The name and all items will be carried to our complete historical record of members, and the certificate which the minister sends in will be filed. We will then prepare an individual page for each name that is received, carrying identification items for branch use. This, together with a certificate of baptism will be forwarded to the president of the branch concerned, the page to be filed by the clerk in a standard loose-leaf binder provided for use in all branches throughout the church, and the certificate to be handed at the first opportunity to the person baptized. Members without branch enrollment will receive their certificates direct from this office. Thus we hope to largely avoid the delay and frequent errors encountered in the old system in having these items reach us through the branch and district reports, if indeed they ever reached us at all.

Our plan will enable this department to secure the information direct instead of waiting for it to be transcribed by various branch clerks, then to be sent to a district conference, there to be held up for correction by the district secretary.

TRANSFERS. When a transfer of branch enrollment is desired, the clerk of the losing branch shall forward to this department an approved "request," (form to be provided). Upon receipt of same, transfer will be made upon the general church records, individual page be forwarded to the receiving branch for its record, and notice sent to the losing branch that transfer has been completed. This procedure will render unnecessary what is now known as branch statistical reports since the information formerly contained therein will now reach us direct.

For the purpose of assisting ministers and others in supplying us with items sought, we are preparing "information" blanks to be used in reporting items of ordination, marriage, death or expulsion. When these items reach us from sources other than president or clerk of branch concerned, we will notify said branch of changes indicated in this "information" report. This will be necessary in order that the branch clerks may be in possession of the items of value for their record, which they otherwise might not obtain.

District itemized reports as at present constituted, serve small purpose other than causing trouble for the recording department, and it is intended to discontinue the same. In place thereof the district officers will be encouraged to prepare a list of names and addresses of those especially under their jurisdiction and entitled to their direction and help by virtue of living within the district and yet too far from branch meeting places to be in attendance at the various services. Such a list will constitute the district roll. In order that the district conference may be acquainted with the numerical strength of the district, the various branches constituting the district may very properly make a report of the gains and losses to the district conference, but since these items of information would already be had by us, such report need not be sent any farther.

If stake or district officers desire a complete list of names of members of branches in their respective districts or stakes, same can be furnished by the various branch clerks, although we cannot see sufficient value attached thereto to justify the work required. This matter, of course, can be left to local disposition.

While the burden of reporting items for record rest primarily upon the one officiating, yet all should assist by securing and reporting marriage and death items. Even then we fear that many such will never reach us. The records in this department depend largely for their completeness upon the faithfulness, promptness and accuracy upon the part of the ministry of the church in reporting their official acts. In our desire to make the records to be of real service it must be remembered that we can give out only such information as is given in. Every ordained man should feel the responsibility of reporting his official acts instead of leaving it for another. Be especially careful about dates in all information sent, and both first and last, be very certain that your writing and figures are legible. Never send a report without carefully checking your items, for the various forms which you fill out and send to this department enter the permanent records just as they are prepared by you.

In the foregoing we have not attempted to do other than outline our future plans. Many details must be worked out as we proceed, but we feel that sufficient has been set forth to enable the readers to have a general idea of what we are undertaking. The changes are made solely in the interests of just such a record as this church desires and ought to have, the very best obtainable. The methods to be employed in the preparation of such records are necessarily determined by existing circumstances and conditions. Cooperation on the part of all will mean: An up-to-date general record; elimination of multitudines of errors; elimination of unnecessary duplication; development of other essential lines of work in this department; real service records in branches, districts and stakes; and, last but not least, when fully established, a decided saving financially.

The above instructions apply to all branches in the United States and Canada.

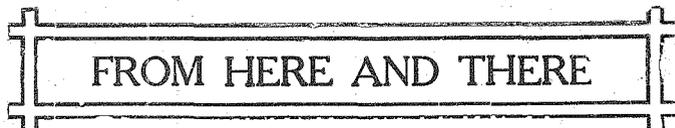

The following is in our hands from the First Presidency:

"The Presidency expects the ministry of the church, general and local, to make consistent and painstaking effort to comply with the request of the Church Statistician, Brother F. A. Russell. The changes in method introduced in that department are with the full approval of the Presidency, and the wisdom of the changes introduced will, it is fully expected, be duly apparent to all. To make our Department of Statistics most useful, each official should do his part carefully in furnishing reliable information. (Signed) Frederick M. Smith."

Respectfully submitted,

FRANK A. RUSSELL.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 10, 1919.

Brother Lonzo Jones, dean of the boys' dormitory at Graceland, seriously injured in an auto accident recently, was for a time thought to have pneumonia from a punctured windpipe, but is now recovering nicely. Those acquainted with the circumstances feel that his escape from death was nothing short of miraculous.

After visiting Omaha in the interests of Sunday school and Religio work, E. D. Moore stopped at Pisgah, Iowa, in the Little Sioux District, where he delivered a lecture under the auspices of the Graceland College Lecture Board on "The growing pains of the church." Calls were made for lectures at near-by branches, but the weather and roads were so bad it was thought best to defer action. From October 2 to 5 he was in attendance at the Gallands Grove conventions and conference, delivering a number of lectures, conducting institute work, addressing special groups of workers and the priesthood in attendance twice. On the way home he stopped at Perry, in the Des Moines District, and by special request lectured on "The development of leaders."

NEW BUILDING FOR GRACELAND BEGUN

On the morning of the 8th occurred a simple ceremony at Graceland College which means much for the institution and the church. As a part of a simple program in which G. R. Wells offered the dedicatory prayer, G. N. Briggs spoke for the college, F. M. McDowell for the instructors, and Ray Whiting for the student body, ground was broken for the first building in the extension of Graceland College. The new building is to be a part of a large quadrangle of modern fireproof construction. This building will be 65 by 105 feet, two stories and full basement. The estimated cost is $75,000. For a time it will be used as library and for class rooms, but later it is expected to use it for class rooms exclusively. This building is to the south and a little west of the present building. It is hoped it will be completed in time for the opening of college next September, and completed for dedication at Graceland's twenty-fifth anniversary next year. Henry C. Smith, church architect, has drawn the plans and will doubtless maintain general supervision of the construction.

Elders J. W. Davis and G. E. Burt are holding meetings at Marshall, Ohio, and report splendid interest, the whole countryside turning out to hear the gospel.

Mrs. J. D. Collins, of Mapleton, Iowa, desires the prayers of the Saints in her behalf.

POULTRYMAN AND GARDENER WANTED

Mr. Floyd T. Lesch, manager of the church institution farms at the Saints' Homes, Children's Home and Graceland College at Lamoni, would like to secure the services of a poultryman and also an experienced gardener to work on the farms. Those in a position to accept positions of this character should write at once to him at Lamoni, Iowa.

OPPOSES REED SMOOT ON LEAGUE AND BOOK OF MORMON

An elder writes from Salt Lake City: "President Wilson was here yesterday and Salt Lake certainly gave him a rousing welcome, it was estimated that fifteen thousand heard him in the tabernacle and that twenty thousand were turned away. President Heber J. Grant set the people right on the covenant [league of nations] last Sunday in a tabernacle speech, and unqualifiedly endorsed it so the people knew how they stood by the time Wilson arrived. Mr. Grant stated very emphatically that the covenant was not out of harmony with the books and whoever so stated was in error, and I am wondering how Reed Smoot will extricate himself from a bad situation."

AN ERROR

Thomas G. Whipple, of Groton, Connecticut, has called our attention to an error in his letter printed on page 804. As printed it reads: "One letter received by him [John Zahnd] from R. C. Evans contained ten cents." This is an error, as the amount was ten dollars, as Brother Whipple now informs us. The error was probably made in copying the original letter for publication.

A letter from Treasa Nowack, of Pana, Illinois, tells of the recent Central Illinois conference at that place. The conventions were held prior to the conference with appropriate program. It was decided to hold a ten-day reunion next fall, at Taylorville. It was a successful conference. The speakers were J. W. Paxton, C. E. Harpe, and Walter Daykin.

PRIMARY QUARTERLY EDITOR

Superintendent Wells of the Sunday School department wishes it to be known by all who use the Primary Gospel Quarterly that the wrong name has appeared, the last two issues, on the title page. The name should be, Miss Ruby M. Williamson. Please write it in.

Reports from Australia are to the effect that the government authorities have refused to admit other Utah Mormon elders to replace those called home.

Soaring Prices

We are sorry to be compelled to inform our readers that prices on all of the supplies we handle for their convenience are rapidly advancing. For instance, we just recently received notice from the publishers of Eilers maps that their No. 1 set which has been retailing at $4 is now $9.50, and the No. 2 set raised from $6.25 to $13.50.

This situation applies to a large number of maps and books that we list in our catalogue. In the near future we shall issue a revised list of prices on our own publications. We will attempt to fill orders sent us for supplies other than our own, and when necessary to protect ourselves, send a debit slip to our customers. We trust this will be fully appreciated by our patrons and that all will observe common business courtesy in remitting the balance due us on such orders.

PRESIDENT F. M. SMITH'S VISIT TO THE EAST

As noted in a previous issue, I had occasion on August 28, to leave Kansas City for Washington, District of Columbia, on church business connected with foreign missions, and other matters. Going by way of Chicago, I reached New York in the evening of the 30th.

I had wired some of the brethren to meet me, for I wished, even though I had but a little time there, to learn what I could of the work in New York and Brooklyn.

Brethren Passman and Rich and Sister Passman were at the train, and from them it was learned that most of the Saints of the district were at Scranton, Pennsylvania, attending the district conference. A telegram had been sent me in care of the train, which failed to reach me, telling me of the conference and suggesting I stop off at Scranton. On discussing the situation with the people named, it was decided it would be well to spend at least part of Sunday with the Brooklyn Saints—the few who had not gone to conference. So, cared for by the hospitality of Brother and Sister W. E. Nichols, I stayed over, and met with the Saints at eleven o'clock, in their chapel on Schenectady Avenue.

Of course, I talked to them about Zion and some of our problems connected therewith, our hopes and aspirations. For one to keep his mind off Zion these days seems impossible, when everywhere are the signs of distress prophetic warnings have pointed forward to, and the need of a place of safety is becoming clear. Why shouldn't one talk about Zion? Well, that was the theme, and I left Brooklyn with the conviction that my hearers had a better understanding of what the president of the church is trying to accomplish.

In Washington there is an interesting and interested group of Saints, whose usual meeting place is the home of Brother and Sister William R. Davison, and on Sunday, September 7, I met with the group there. It had been planned to spend the day at the home of Brother and Sister Froyd, at Barcroft, Virginia, near Washington. Before leaving the home of Brother Davison, where the Saints met, Brother Davison and I blessed two of his grandchildren, children of Brother and Sister Lambert, of Alexandria, Virginia.

With their baskets the Saints went by electric cars to Barcroft, and there were met by Brother Froyd in his motor car and taken to his home in the beautiful Virginia woods. The day was very warm, but it seemed greatly enjoyed by all—the common meals (lunch and dinner) the prayer meeting, the speaking (at which Zion was again the theme), and the chats on gospel and church themes which continued until well into the night. At the prayer service the son of Brother and Sister Franklin Jones, of Washington, was blessed. The little fellow is the grandson of Sister Fannie Jones, now of Chicago, formerly of Lamoni, well known to many HERALD readers, and of Sister Fike, of Arizona. I felt well in blessing the boy.

On Wednesday evening, the 10th, the Saints met at Brother Davison's home for prayer meeting, which all enjoyed. The Saints in Washington are struggling along under disadvantages, but their earnestness and zeal is apparent and it is to be hoped that such help as they need may at least occasionally be sent them. May God bless and prosper them.

THEREFORE—

For this reason the Bishopric advocate for 1919

EVERY MEMBER A TITHE PAYER

On the 13th, I left Washington temporarily for the purpose of spending Sunday the 14th with the Philadelphia Saints. At North Philadelphia Station, I was met by Bishop Zimmermann and son William, and taken to their home, where I spent the evening talking over church matters with Bishop Zimmermann and Chorister Hoxie.

Sunday was a busy day. Brother William Osler, the recently appointed pastor for the First Philadelphia Church, had arrived shortly before, and partial plans had been made, but such modifications as were apparently necessary to meet conditions were readily made. At the morning hour, I was the speaker, and Brother Osler and I divided time in the evening. Again Zion was the theme, and I found the audiences fully sympathetic. I called a priesthood meeting for the afternoon, which was attended by those holding the priesthood in both branches, and in which were discussed the problems of the work in Philadelphia.

Many of the younger members of the branches at Philadelphia had been absent during the war, giving service to the country. Most of them are now back home, ready to resume work in church and auxiliaries, and with the new pastor installed, there is reason to believe that the work will gather new impetus in Philadelphia. The choir was out in force and followed Brother Hoxie's baton with their old-time zeal. Brother Hoxie, too, is freeing himself from the many phases of war and community work which have demanded so much of his time, and is once more planning a vigorous campaign in the interests of church music. This will be good news to our musicians.

All things considered, when Brother Zimmermann and son Albert took me to the Broad Street Station for the 9.40 p. m. train to Ridley Park where I expected to spend the night at the home of Brother Wayne C. Blair, and wife, I felt that the day had not only been a busy one, but was one which held promise for better things for Philadelphia and our work there.

On Monday, the 15th, I returned to Washington, to finish the work which had taken me there. I left Washington on the afternoon of the 18th, for New York, expecting to go West that evening or the next day; but I yielded to the pleadings of Brother Rich to stay over Sunday for the Brooklyn Rally Day, the 21st, and stayed.

It was another busy day. Church, Sunday school, Religio, Woman's Auxiliary, and choir meetings kept everyone busy, leaving only time for the meals at noon and evening, served in the basement of the church. I was pressed into service for speaking at eleven o'clock a. m., 2.30 p. m., and short addresses to the Woman's Auxiliary and the Religio in the evening. Brother C. E. Miller was the speaker for the evening. He seems to bear out his reputation for being inimitable. His audience enjoyed him, at any rate. Brother Daniel Joy, of Providence was also in attendance, and he and Brother Miller held meetings Monday and Tuesday evenings.

I greatly enjoyed my sojourn with the Brooklyn Saints, and feel that with such workers as Brethren Rich and Squire with their able helpers, the work there is not likely to lag.

I left New York on Wednesday for home via Chicago. In Chicago I was in touch with Brother C. E. Irwin on matters which will eventually prove of much interest and value to the church, I am sure. I reached Kansas City Saturday morning, the 27th, after an absence of one month, glad indeed once more to be welcomed by loved ones at the haven of rest, home. It is good to be made to feel that you are needed by those who are dear to you.

On Monday, the 29th, I returned to the routine of office work, for it is quite apparent that the church needs its office men, its plodders, as well as its brilliant and zealous missionaries. May God bless and strengthen each for the tasks imposed.

What a pile of mail awaited me, and what a variety of matters demanding decisions and actions—some weighty, some light, some sad, some merry, and some—ridiculous! Let me present an amusing as well as ridiculous one. Among the "personal" letters lying on the desk unopened, I found the following:

"On the night of July 14 last, I had a dream. I realized the presence of a personage. I did not see him. He asked me what D. D. stood for. I answered Doctor of Divinity. He replied it meant Damnable Despotism, and gave the name of Fred M. Smith in connection. I was shocked, and forgot his interpretation. The dream was repeated twice, in all three times the same night, without the slightest variation. I knew it was a spiritual dream. 'Old men shall dream dreams'. Please give the interpretation. What are the facts in the case?"

It is amusing. Evidently the dreamer thought I had the degree of D. D., and the messenger knew no better. He made a bad guess, for of the degrees bestowed upon me, that is not one. If the messenger came to bestow a degree, he should have brought his credentials with him to show what educational institution he represented. He should, too, have made it clear whether he meant the "new" degree for the dreamer or for me. The dream probably reflects the dreamer's attitude toward me. He is to be pitied.

Speaking of degrees: some seem disturbed that I should have them, while others—the majority—value them for what they are. Degrees add nothing to a man's real worth, but are evidences of work accomplished, and have distinct values in circles where their significance is duly appreciated. At any rate, I have yet to learn of where disadvantage to the church has resulted from the degrees held by me, but, on the other hand, I do know where the church has repeatedly benefited by my right to use the degrees where and when recognition of them was of advantage. And I have rejoiced that the efforts made and work done to secure them has brought reward in benefit to the church in my work as an officer and one of its servants.

"I AM IN THE LAND BUSINESS—"

A glowing letter came to us this morning. It was from a brother who wants the Saints to come to his community. He will do all he can to find them good places. He is not a bishop nor a bishop's agent, but frankly closes his letter: "I am in the land selling business and have some good bargains."

We appreciate his frankness. We are not questioning his motives. It is entirely possible for one to make a living buying and selling and yet have the interests of his brother and sister at heart. Good salesmanship involves a transaction which is mutually beneficial. And the mutual part of it should not be overlooked.

But we are not printing the letter. It will go into obscurity as have many of its predecessors. It is different from other letters only in its frankness. Invariably the letters emphasizing special advantages of certain communities are from persons who would in some way be benefited if the Saints generally responded. Sometimes it would be only a matter of having friends of like faith in the community; sometimes they are from an exaggerated idea of the possibilities of missionary work in the locality, but almost invariably one must conclude that it is very easy to become over-enthusiastic about something in which we are personally interested.

The gathering of the Saints is a specific part of our gospel plan. It is plain and insistent. It has not been abrogated but rather, emphasized. The injunction that it "be not in haste nor by flight" is but a warning to prevent disappointment. The further suggestion that we work in harmony with the advice of the brethren chosen to administer in the temporal affairs is a constructive suggestion and not intended to restrict nor curtail.

The aim of this article is to urge the Saints to be wise in their enthusiasm. Things are not always all they may seem. For instance, a certain brother in the East during the war wrote us many letters for the Saints, urging that they move to a certain mushroom city where he was located. Wages were exorbitantly high and help scarce. But when the war closed, the town collapsed and the brother is now in another city out of work.

Some farming and other projects as well may seem safe beyond question, yet a few years of stressful conditions drive every new settler out.

These are times when the difference between being in favor with God from having observed his commands, and being out of favor with him because of our own folly may mean very much.

It is urged that the bishops of the stakes, for instance, are not as progressive as they ought to be so the Saints might know the various advantages of the central places. Possibly they have not used printers' ink as much as they should. We as editors are going to make it most convenient for them to use that medium for the sake of those who are interested. And in the meanwhile a personal inquiry to any of them will bring you unbiased advice and information which if observed may save many a heartache and possibly prevent severe disappointment later on. None of us can afford to be confused nor help to confuse others in the true purpose of the gathering. When we help to scatter the Saints to distant points we hinder the Zion ideal from being accomplished.

CONDITIONS IN GERMANY

We are printing in this issue a letter from Sister Kippe, the wife of Brother Alexander Kippe, of Halle, Germany. This letter was written as indicated to Sister Roos-Vollmer, in Switzerland, and has been forwarded to us.

It presents quite a graphic picture of conditions in Germany during the war and now, and some of the hardships through which one family at least has passed.

Elder Kippe has recently been appointed a missionary to Germany and so they will now doubtless receive the necessary support from the church in America. The trials through which they have passed seem to make our troubles here to be indeed small and scarcely worth mentioning. It is no wonder that the faith of this mother was tried, until she was tempted, even to give up her religion, if thereby her children could be fed.

We are also in receipt of a letter from Sister Vollmer stating that the Swiss Government has required the departure of the Germans; and that they have now been asked to leave on the grounds that Elder Roos has no appointment and so has no adequate means of support. Since he has been giving his time devotedly to missionary work, the latter is by no means surprising.

We trust the difficulty may soon be adjusted and they may be able to continue their earnest efforts throughout Switzerland. Their presence there should prove a considerable help to our missionaries, Elder Halb and wife, Elder Passman and wife, even though the latter remain but the necessary months until they secure passports to Palestine.

HOW THE HERALD IS PRINTED

If you examine your HERALD closely, you will find that there are twenty-four pages. A printer would have no difficulty in discovering that the inside sixteen pages are printed separately. The editors are all the time reading articles, matters of general interest, and letters, so that they have a supply on hand in the first two classes, though we usually try to publish the letters as soon as possible after they are received.

Each week the early part of the week the manuscript is received for the Woman's Auxiliary columns, and once a month for the Staff. Each Thursday, as a rule, twenty thousand words are turned in under the above headings to furnish material for the inside sixteen pages. It is very rarely that anything is added to these pages after Thursday morning.

If a holiday comes in the following week, beginning from Thursday morning till Wednesday, this material is usually turned in one day earlier. By Saturday composition work has usually been completed and the proof reading done. By Monday morning we are ready for the make-up, and to send the inside sixteen pages to the press.

In the meantime, on Friday afternoon or Saturday morning, the editorials are turned in, and not later than Monday morning various items of miscellany, obituary, and here and there items.

Announcements to be made in the HERALD should reach us by the end of the week, but unless they are in the first mail Monday morning they will probably be excluded unless the conditions are extraordinary.

By Tuesday the make-up for the front four and the back four—the outside eight pages, are made up, and sent to the pressroom, so that by Wednesday the HERALD is ready for mailing and is sent out Wednesday night. Then Thursday morning new material is turned in for the inside sixteen pages of the next week's HERALD.

This is important for our readers, because a letter will very rarely appear until at least a week after it has been received; that is, if it is received on Wednesday, it will be turned in Thursday, and may at the earliest appear the following Wednesday. If it is received any other day it can not appear for over a week.

Announcements of conferences, reunions, and other miscellany must be in our hands not later than Monday morning. It is useless to mail it Monday and then request that it appear in this week's issue.

If our readers will take this into consideration, it will help both us and those interested in seeing that proper announcements are promptly attended to.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

It Is Written

Once upon a time a number of enthusiastic Latter Day Saints were gathered together discussing their attitude toward the church in its various problems, which, of course, included the question of finance, both local and general. One good brother was full of suggestions as to how the church could make money by doing thus and so; one was profuse with advice as to how the local church could raise money to meet its needs; another said he did not fully understand the law which requires the giving of one tenth of his increase to God; a fourth, who considered himself well grounded in the faith, said, "The law of the Lord is perfect converting the soul." I believe in tithing in a general sense, although I have not paid any to the bishopric or their agents. I give for local expenses, to the Sunday school, and for the Christmas offering. I never let a missionary go from our branch without giving him something toward his personal expenses. The missionary is God's servant and has to spend nearly all his life away from home. I always want him to feel at home in my house so I invite him to dine and lodge with me. I think by the time I have done all these things I have about given one tenth of my increase."

"Whoso receiveth you receiveth me, and the same will feed you, and clothe you, and give you money. . . by this you may know my disciples." By thus assisting the missionaries and otherwise contributing to the Lord's work the brother has done well, but his interpretation of the law of tithing has been faulty.

Tithing is a debt due the Lord and should be paid in the manner he has prescribed. All offerings including local expenses, assistance to missionaries, and Christmas offering, should be paid from the nine tenths remaining after the payment of the tithe.

God is a God of order and system. Unless properly authorized so to do, no one can officiate in the ordinance of the sacrament, baptism, laying on of hands, etc. Neither are the membership in general authorized to act as custodians of and expend the Lord's tenth which he claims for assisting the poor and needy and the promulgating of the gospel.

The bishopric are made the custodians of that portion of the increase thus set aside for the special work of the church. "For this cause pay ye your consecrations unto them, for they are God's ministers attending continually unto this very thing." The individual is the steward over the remaining nine tenths. The law says, "Every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property . . . answerable both in time and in eternity." The bishopric are made the stewards over the Lord's storehouse—the funds of the church.

"The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." Its purpose is to perfect the Saints. This can only be accomplished by a full observance of the law in letter and in spirit.

"For if ye will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world ye must prepare yourself by doing the things which I have commanded you and required of you."

" . . . it is my purpose to provide for my Saints . . . but it must needs be done in mine own way; . . ." It is our privilege to set aside one tenth of our increase but it should be done in God's way.

THE MEASURE OF A CHRISTIAN

(Summary of sermon by Floyd M. McDowell, Lamoni, Iowa, September 7, 1919.)

It has been my privilege to attend a number of large reunions during the past summer. Ninety-five per cent of the sermons emphasized the need for the redemption of Zion. There is an opportunity for missionary work in the world as never before.

In the near future there must grow up in our midst great industries and social organizations, for Zion young men and women must be trained to do the utmost, then be willing to use that training for the sake of Zion.

There are two aspects. First: The personal salvation, which is individual. Second: The organization of the industrial order which is social. If Zion could have been redeemed without personal salvation it would have been done sometime ago. And to-night I want to take an inventory of the extent to which that personal cleansing has gone. We sing: "Thank the Lord for the plan he has given, which will render us pure as a child."

Are we as pure as a child? As a church we are too prone to boast that we have complied with the gospel law. The gospel plan, though but a means, yet is essential. Are we as pure as children to-night? If not, why not? Are we cleansed of selfishness? If not, why not?

Are we ready to take our individualism, enter into a state of social reconstruction such as the world has never seen?

Our educational institutions are crowded. Is it not a good time at the beginning of our school year to take our inventory? Are we one hundred per cent Latter Day Saints?

A recent writer says, whatever exists, exists in some amount and can be weighed or measured. Too often we are afraid to measure our religion.

To what extent are we pure? To what extent are we sanctified? We learn that we can measure intellectual attainment, mental capacity, and I wish to submit to-night that we can measure Christianity, and see just how sanctification has had its work. Why wouldn't it be good to take a test to-night? To take an inventory individually to see how far we have progressed?

Doctor Frank Crane wrote a recent article, in the American Magazine, "Ten ways to test the fineness of a man." I think these are ten ways to test our Christianity, and wish each one to test himself. But first I am going to read to show you that according to Christ and the Bible, what the right tests are.

Christ gave us here a test, and said, "by their fruits ye shall know them." We cannot gather figs from thistles. We see men who are outside the church to-day, because of the fruits they saw in the Latter Day Saints. This is not a test for your neighbor; this is a test for you. You can add it up; just ten points; if you get perfect on every point you get ten. If on no point, you get zero. Sometimes it may be a minus quantity.

To what extent are we superior as Latter Day Saints? Have we attained to it?

Test an individual by what he likes. First: Does he love spiritual things over earthly, temporal, or bodily things? Would you be willing to give up bodily comfort, of food or clothes for prayer service? Do you like the halleluiah chorus or a jazz band the more? Do you enjoy mental life—meditation? Do you like mental things? Are you ten on that, or zero?

Second: The superior man loves simplicity, whether it is in architecture or in clothing. The more of real culture a woman has the less she likes fancy clothes; the more she abhors clothes which are flashy and attract attention. If you enjoy those things you are just common.

Third: The superior man loves to serve. He who is not willing to forsake his home, his children, his wife, everything, is not qualified. The common herd likes to be waited upon. The common man likes to have his feet washed. Christ washed the disciples' feet.

We heard the other day of some people who came to town who had to have a lot of negro servants. The superior man is devoted to the service of others.

Fourth: The superior man is bigger than his pleasures, his work, etc. Can you forego a cherished position, forego even life itself for a principle?

The superior person enjoys his pleasures—good meals, good games. But no matter how keen his enjoyments, none of them is bigger than he is. He uses them to desirable ends, but is not controlled by them.

Fifth: Superior people are never bitter; are not pessimists. They do not feel that the world is going to the bad, and that no man is true; and can smile in the presence of disaster. Friends may betray; authority may oppress.

Sixth: The superior person is clean. He may be dirty but he does not like dirt. He may have to soil his hands in the mine, or get his clothes greased at an engine, but at his first opportunity he cleans up. He loves to be clean, both in mind and body. Dirt does not stick to him.

He does not remember slanders for they offend him. He avoids lying, deceit, profanity. He is free of pettiness, pride, and duplicity. His thoughts are full of sunshine. His passions are honest. His words are wholesome. It makes you feel clean to be with him.

How do you stand on that? Are you clean in body, in mind, and in soul, words, and in deeds?

Seventh: The real superior person does not like to show off. He does not want people to think him better or wiser than he is.

The multitude likes to put forward its best foot, make a good impression, be flattered, and be thought more witty and clever than they really are. We cannot say it is bad. It is common. It is only the hundredth man that wants no such thing. It pains him to be over praised; flattery humiliates him.

He conceals his virtues. If he is discovered in piety he blushes. If elected to high places he feels the responsibility and it sobers him. Neither your praise nor your blame can swerve him.

Eighth: He is gentle. Gentleness is an attribute of strength, not of weakness. The baby screams because its conscious feebleness threatens. The man with defective vocabulary swears. It is "the half-faith that lights the fagot."

The silent sun is mightier than the whirlwind. The noisy loom is so feeble you can stop the shuttle with your fingers, but the huge engine in the basement would crush you like an eggshell were you to get in its way.

That is a true picture of the omnipotent, when the Lord revealed himself to Elijah in the mountains. (1 Kings 19:11, 12, beginning however with the second sentence, "And behold the Lord passed by, and a great and strong wind rent the mountains.")

The superior young lady speaks low. No gentleman blusters. This is a most striking characteristic, the superior one is quiet.

Ninth: They are also humble and humble minded. Pride has its place; the ninety-nine all have it; the Kaiser had it; most potentates have it; the workhouse idiot has it; all the ignorant and uncouth have it; and when a man gets drunk he has it tremendously.

The less one has to be proud of as a rule, the more pride he has. It is not those who actually achieve that swell with pride. It is the little soul that comes by accident into the reward of achievement that struts. On the stone that marks the last resting place of that mighty man of letters, Thomas Carlyle, there is inscribed one word "Humility." There lies one of the earth's great souls.

Humility is teachable, but pride learns nothing. Pride is a beggar, seeking its alms of praise. Humility is royal, and walks free of fear and favor. He who is childlike at heart has at least some of the makings of superiority.

Tenth: With the superior man, familiarity does not breed contempt. How is it with you? Count over your friends and acquaintances. What proportion of them will stand the test of intimacy? Or with how many would you want to spend thirty consecutive days in summer or winter? With how many would you want to take a trip to Europe? You tire of most people, for with intimacy pettiness appears. But there are a few—you may possibly count them on the fingers of one hand, of whom you think more highly the more closely you associate with them. That is at least one mark of superiority.

Therein does the work of a master differ from the commonality. His work grows upon you. You can hear Beethoven's Ninth Symphony a thousand times, and the thousandth time you will love it the more. But you weary of "Good morning, Mr. Zip, Zip, Zip," when you have heard it a half-dozen times. Once or twice is enough to see the lurid picture on the billboard; while new beauties can be found on the walls of the Boston Library every day. The Parthenon or the Cologne Cathedral become more fascinating with the centuries, while Mr. Newrich's flamboyant house speedily becomes an eyesore. The central element of superiority in man or the works of man is the lasting quality.

How is it with you? Do you wear well? Do your qualities grow with longer acquaintance?

And there we have a possible test of our fitness. It may not be the only one. It is not the only one, as the Apostle Paul has given us one in the fruits of the Spirit, but here is a practical test by which you may gauge yourself. If you have none of them, your mark is zero; if you have all, your mark is one hundred per cent.

COLLEGE DAY ADDRESS

[By Roland Kapnick, of Michigan, delivered in Brick Church, Lamoni, Iowa, October 12, 1919. Brother Kapnick is a member of the class organized for the first time this year in religious education, and we are sure his address will be read with special interest.—EDITORS.]

To me this is a great privilege to stand before you in behalf of Graceland College to express a few words of appreciation. I realize keenly my inability to express in words my feelings, as I represent the students, expressing their feelings, sentiments, hopes, and aspirations in respect to Graceland College.

My acquaintance with the college, so far as its activities and opportunities to students are concerned, has been of short duration, but I have always believed in Graceland College and had faith in it, although I have lived in Michigan, and have not had the opportunity to understand Graceland intimately, still I had faith to believe that Graceland College had a mission, and that she was fulfilling that mission just as rapidly as the church could appreciate it, or cooperate with it in working it out.

If I were to tell you of the history of the college, and her accomplishments in the past, I would be but repeating those things you know more intimately than I, but there is one class organized within the last year in which I am especially interested, and that is the class in religious education.

You remember at the late General Conference action was taken by the church, looking toward the organization of such a class, and a short time after this a call was sent out to all the church for young men and women to volunteer. You might think it peculiar that there should be a class organized composed of volunteers, but this class is different from any other class organized. It is different in many ways, and yet very much like every other class, in that this class, like all others, is simply one to be used in preparing the young men and women for the work of the church. This particular class has to do with the preparation of young men and women for the work in foreign missions, the mission of carrying the gospel to those who know it not. If we were asked why such a class, we would simply answer in the words of the Master in his great commission to his apostles, when he told them to go into all the world to preach the gospel to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people. This is the reason why this class has been organized, that there might be young men and women fitted to fulfill that commission, and carry out that command of the Savior that we should go into all the world and preach the gospel.

We might ask, Why not go without this preparation? I can better answer that by telling you what we are doing, or the line of work taken up. We are studying history, for instance, particularly with the thought in mind of preparing ourselves that we may be acquainted with the nation to which we plan on carrying the gospel. We study the history of those nations that we might understand them better. We know every nation and every people has its traditions and its history. It is not only the written history, but it is expressed in their lives and in their ideals. Their life to-day is just simply the sum total of their history, of their life of the past. So if we understand the history, the traditions, the ideals of a people we are better able to arrive at their religious conceptions and better able to take to them the gospel, and to bring them the thing they need most at this time. I believe we can all see that without further argument.

In teaching this history then, it is made a practicable course. It is not just simply the learning of many dates, and the names of the men and women who stood out above their fellows, nor an account of battles with their heroes, but we deal with history more from an economic, social, and religious standpoint, that we might better understand the people with whom we expect to labor. When we study French or Norse, as those are the languages taught this year, we study French not that we may speak it for the sake of talking nor of writing or for the sake of reading French as a mental accomplishment, but that we might be able to go to the people who speak French and who read French, and worship God in French, and talk to them in French, and tell them the gospel story in French, or Norse, that as we fulfill the mission as commanded by the Savior we may speak to these people in their own language intelligently. We study French or Norse that we might read their literature with them, their religious teachings, and doctrines, and study with them, and on a common ground begin to preach to them the gospel of Jesus Christ. I believe we can see sufficient reason for the study of foreign languages.

We have some women who have volunteered for this work. They are not to preach the gospel as ordained ministers and officiate in its ordinances. Their work will be in the homes, and among the housewives of the nations to whom they may go. Their work is made of a practicable nature also, in order that they may go into the homes of these benighted nations who know not God, and show the mothers and the children the light of the gospel.

Those of us whose forefathers came over in the Mayflower, or who have descended from a long line of American citizens, I believe are not able to comprehend the need of the gospel in these foreign nations as well as those of us who are but a step or two from those countries. I remember hearing my father, who was born in Germany, tell of hearing his mother tell of her having to work in the fields at labor that would have required a strong man to have done. She was widowed, and in that country where there is so much social and economic injustice, she was forced to work in the field in order to provide the necessities for her little family. There is in those countries darkness in things spiritual as revealed through the gospel. They know not God. They are but a step from the Dark Ages. They know nothing about God as we know him. When I hear my father tell about those things, and see how he sits in darkness and knows not God because of the traditions of his fathers, there is born in me a desire that I might prepare, that I might learn the language of the nations, and that we might as a church send young men and women filled with the spirit of God to those people, to tell them of the restored gospel.

Surely we can see the need, when we read the daily papers, see the unrest, and study the conditions in these countries to-day, and realize that the gospel can bring into the lives of these people rest and joy, of telling them of the ideal of Zion established on Joseph's land, and the gathering here where Zion can be redeemed and where they can live under conditions conducive to the higher life. Surely it is a wonderful ideal for this class. We are only human, as we all are. We shall make mistakes, and no doubt each succeeding class will be better able to carry out its work than the class of this year. But this is the ideal of this class, that we might go into all the world and preach the gospel; not alone faith, repentance, and baptism, not alone the church in its organic form, but the principles of cleanliness, of home economics, and in fact everything of social and economic justice that we understand is made possible through the gospel. What a wonderful thing it would be if they could see these things, even as we see them. Surely the work of this class is worthy of support. I trust you may be interested in it and support it with your finances. Do not support it for the sake of the class as an end but for the sake of the work they are preparing to do. Not for the sake of the student body—that is but the means, but ever keep in mind the ideal of the gospel of Jesus Christ being preached to all nations, kindred, tongues, and peoples, and the ideal of gathering out from all those races those that love God, and of their reign in Zion when Christ shall come.

We are, as young people in the college, ever trying to keep before us the ideal of the gospel. We desire not to become so engrossed with the means that we forget the end.

I might tell of other phases of our work, but for the fear of wearying you will tell you of only this one thing. Each morning before beginning our work we meet in the northeast room on the third floor of the college, that we may have prayer as a class, and ask God to be very near as we meet in the different classes for the day. We pray earnestly for him to inspire us, that we may see in our lessons those things that will be needful for us in the work of carrying to the world the important message of the gospel of Christ. In this class are twenty men and women, each one having a mind of his own. It is impossible to turn out from Graceland College a class that will all see everything alike in every particular. God has given to each a personality, and that personality is not lost, but is fashioned by the process of study and enlightenment of the Holy Spirit until it can more perfectly express itself as an instrument for good. I say this because some have entertained fear that we would have a sort of theological seminary and as a result the graduate student would have no thought of his own, but reflect the thoughts of others.

I will leave then this thought with you, that we are trying to do what we can in preparing ourselves to carry to the nations of the earth the message of peace. How wonderful it will be for us to go there with a message of peace, for it shall be done, and to teach them the ideal of Zion, something they never have heard of. I trust we shall grasp this opportunity with all the fervor of our souls and subscribe of our means to the limit that the gospel may be carried to these peoples.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

IDENTIFIED BY BIBLE

Many a man has found himself through his Bible. A striking instance of the establishment of the identity of a shell shocked soldier by means of his Testament was recently disclosed by a Red Cross worker.

A letter came into the Bureau of Communication at Washington, from an anxious mother in Oklahoma begging for information regarding her son, of whom she could learn nothing except that he was in some hospital in this country. Careful searching of the records of various army hospitals did not reveal the name of the soldier. At length a Red Cross Visitor was dispatched to a hospital where mental cases were treated. A man by the surname of the soldier sought was discovered, and although the first name differed the searcher decided to see him.

Tall, blond, and clean-cut, the youth who was ushered into the receiving room at first appeared quite normal, but upon conversing with him the visitor discovered that his mind wandered perceptibly and he could give little definite information about himself. Collecting his possessions to show his caller, the boy brought forward, among other things, a well-worn Testament. On the flyleaf was a name identical with that of the soldier sought.

The Red Cross worker begged the young man to loan the Bible to her, and he willingly complied with her request. She immediately dispatched the precious packet to the mother, asking if it belonged to her son. By return mail came a letter full of thanksgiving and praise of the Red Cross. The Testament was one which the Oklahoma boy had treasured from early childhood.

FIXING THE STANDARD OF LIVING

Is the average American worker on a basis of the "decent standard of living" mentioned in the United States Department of Labor reports?

The answer will depend somewhat on what is considered a "decent standard." It could not mean less than all the necessities of life—including not only food, clothing, and shelter, but medical attention, educational facilities, amusements, recreations—all that goes to make life worth living.

But it is doubtful if all these things were contemplated. More likely the officials figure the standards on the basis of food, clothing, and shelter.

At the packers' investigation at Chicago a pork millionaire gave it as his opinion that a child would be well provided for if two pairs of shoes were allowed a year; a worker's wife had two dresses a year, and the worker himself one suit of clothes. He thought if the family went to a motion picture show twice a month it would have sufficient amusement. His other estimates were correspondingly generous when he hears a "decent standard of living." He thinks of a lot more of the things needed to make life bearable.

The War Labor Board recently decided that the minimum which an unskilled worker should receive per week in order to provide a decent living was $34.80 a week.

The United States Department of Labor believes $1,800 necessary for a decent standard of living.

Doctor Royal H. Meeker, at the head of the Bureau of Statistics of the department, declares the average family falls far below that mark and as a consequence is forced to adopt a standard so low that it threatens the health and the lives of the members of the family.

Time was, and not long ago, when $1,800 would have kept the average worker's family in comfort. Now it means pitiful skimping, especially if the family is large and there are children to educate.

The difficulty comes because of the increased and constantly increasing cost of living. Wages do not keep pace with this rising cost. Never has and never will keep pace. Cost goes up first and wages slowly and reluctantly follow, but follow far in the wake. Then, when things reach a point of readjustment and a recession comes, wages start down first and prices slowly and reluctantly follow.

There is an answer. There is a remedy: A system of establishing a wage in every industry that shall be relative to the cost of the necessities of life.—The Railway Conductor, April, 1919.

SEEK PROOF OF LOST CONTINENT IN PACIFIC

Search for evidence supporting the theory of a lost Pacific continent is being prosecuted in the Hawaiian Islands, the South Seas, and along the West coast of South America.

Professor Douglas R. Campbell of the botany department of Stanford University thinks that in certain specimens of ferns found on the island of Hawaii he has established the fact that at some period there was land connection between the Hawaiian group and to the islands to the south and west through to the Malay Peninsula. Professor T. A. Jagger, jr., in charge of the federal observatory at Kilauea Volcano, agrees with Professor Campbell's theory, asserting that there are geological indications that the islands of the Pacific were once connected.—The Omaha Bee, October 10, 1919.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5920 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Is the World Ripening in Iniquity?

The rioting which occurred in our city a few weeks ago, while greatly exaggerated in the newspaper reports sent out, was a most disgraceful affair. It has caused many people to indulge in very serious thought, trying to determine, both the causes which led up to such proceedings, and the results which must follow in their wake. It is difficult to arrive at any conclusions which bring, to any degree, peace of mind. If citizens of any commonwealth can wantonly destroy public property,—that particular property which, more than any other, represents the majesty of the government,—in their efforts to punish in their own fashion a supposed criminal, not even stopping in their mad fury, short of attempting the life of the city's chief representative of law and order, we begin to wonder where, oh where, is our boasted freedom and protection? Such madness as possessed that mob spells nothing if not "anarchy and terror," as mentioned in warning in Doctrine and Covenants 112. It is only an outward demonstration of the "enmity" between man and man, which shall cease in the day when "all things shall become new." God tells us, in the same connection, that he is soon to pour out his indignation upon all nations, when "the cup of their iniquity is full." It would seem, in the light of occurrences throughout our own country, as well as in others we have deemed less enlightened, that that hour is almost here.

One of the first statements made by the governor of our State, when called by the racial trouble, to our city, was that he deemed parents, to a large degree, responsible for the fact that the mob was composed mostly of youths and young men. He says the principles of law and order are not being taught in the homes and the schools of the land, as they should be if peace and loyalty are to prevail against disorder and lawlessness. From the pulpits of the city, too, there has gone up a similar cry. Our pastor says: "Disobedience to parents, insubordination to authority, and lack of proper home training and teaching, is one of the causes of the present wave of crime that is sweeping over the country."

Another said: "Those youths of seventeen and nineteen years, who led the mob into the courthouse and, in the lynching of the negro, have left a black blot upon the fair name of our city which will not be erased during your lifetime or mine, were the product of un-Christian education."

Still another preacher declared that "instead of the youths who participated in the rioting being sent to reform schools or pententaries, their parents should be prosecuted for permitting them to be running the streets, and for failing to keep them under control, thus preventing their getting in with the wrong element." Another says: "Youth ran rampant—without moral teachers or good example!"

Does it not cause us to turn our thoughts backward over the past, and ask ourselves, each, the questions: "Am I bringing up my child in 'light and truth'? Am I teaching him to distinguish, unflinchingly, between righteousness and evil? Am I sowing in his heart a true love for all mankind, a charity which forgives, which sympathizes with the wrongdoer while hating the wrong? Am I implanting in his breast a sense of proper loyalty, of regard for authority, of appreciation for those principles of law, order, and tolerance upon which our government is built? Is he patriotic at heart, willing to do his share towards carrying public responsibility, true to high and honorable conceptions of the common good, and determined to defend, with his life, if necessary, the principles of righteousness and integrity as taught by the greatest of all Rulers—Christ, whose 'government shall be without end'?"

In our love for our children, let us not be so lax in our control that we allow them to run about, exposed to dangers and temptations, for which they are, as yet, illy prepared. Let us teach them to "pray" that they may "not faint" in these perilous days when "men's hearts shall fail them for fear."

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

"Come, Let Us Live with Our Children"

When I was a girl, I looked forward to having a real, live baby of my own. I believe all women who are true to their best selves, have the mother-instinct. Some there are, who kill it through some jealous or selfish motive. Some women do not want to give up the good times they are having. Others pretend to be afraid they will lose some of their husbands' love by sharing it with children. This latter is very foolish, as observation has taught that a husband's love is increased when there are children in his home. Sometimes, it happens, that through illness on the part of either the mother or the father, some homes are childless. Usually you will find such men and women very tender and thoughtful towards all children.

To me, it has always seemed a very great and sacred privilege, to be permitted to be a mother, to take a little child from the very beginning of its earthly life, teach it, train it, and see it through to the very end. We should begin this training as soon as we become aware that a little life is to be intrusted to us. During pregnancy we often pass through very trying times, often discouraged and ill. We should strive earnestly to cultivate a quiet spirit, a mind at rest and confident, happy and contented. We should take care of our bodies, inside and out. We should consult a good, reliable physician, and follow his advice. We should read some good literature, which will inform us about these things. Through clinics, and women's magazines, we may often obtain much of value. Let us try to give our babies the right kind of a start, with red, healthy blood, and strong, beautiful bodies. With these assets, they will come out conquerors in many a battle with disease.

The greatest mistake made by mothers and fathers, in my estimation, comes through what they deem their love for their children. They pet their offspring, giving in to whims and notions and tears. It sometimes seems hard to refuse a child who is coaxing for something, but giving in against our better judgment is a great mistake in training. It weakens our authority, and deprives the child from learning the great lessons of self-denial and self-control.

Another mistake is made in promising a child something, and then failing to keep that promise. A child soon learns that he cannot depend upon us to keep our word, and thus we lose both the child's respect, and his confidence. And if a child cannot trust his parents, how may he be taught to have faith in God, or anyone else? Long before a child can read his Bible, he can be taught faith in his parents, and, as he grows, from this foundation he may be taught faith in God, to whom he may go with his troubles, asking for guidance and help.

We need not lose our child's confidence if we instill in his mind when young, that we are his confidante and loving counselor. As he grows older, he comes to us still, with his worries and troubles. But woe to that mother who betrays a child's confidence! Not long ago, we had supper at the house of a friend, the mother of six happy, healthy children. At the table, a mother spoke up to her husband, saying: "Say, do you know that Freddie has a girl?" The boy only said: "Mother, you said you wouldn't tell!", but oh, the look he gave her! His childish confidence, which should have been sacredly guarded, was thus thoughtlessly betrayed, and it is doubtful if he can ever give it freely again. A child's confidence should be treated with great respect and diplomacy. Otherwise a great mistake is made by the parent, and an injustice to the child.

In my experience in this city, I have found that many children are not properly fed. Many people who are capable of having children are totally unable to take proper care of them. In very good homes we often find a dull child. In almost any school we can find a child lingering along in the lower grades, owing to improper physical care. One child in every three is underweight. A careful physical examination will show some defect—perhaps an abscess at the root of a decayed tooth, adenoids, diseased tonsils, or the beginnings of curvature of the spine. Wax often gathers in the ears, causing the child to appear deaf. When defects are found, the child should be taken to a good doctor, and the best of care taken to correct them? If they cannot always be cured, at least they may be kept from getting worse. Less than this is not justice to the child. Children should have at least one medical examination each year, or, better still, every six months. If there should be bad teeth, have them out or filled; if adenoids or diseased tonsils, have them removed, for these defects are at the bottom of many childish ailments. A child with impure blood is lifeless, cross and dull. He does not make a good playmate, and is usually disliked and avoided.

It would be a very great help to those who are not able to read and learn what should be done for their children, if our church should have a trained nurse in the different districts, who could visit the sick, or the homes of the needy, and teach and show the people how to care for the unfortunate ones. They could "go about doing good," as our missionaries do. I know of instances where nurses have told mothers what to do, how to prepare food for their children, how they should sterilize all articles in connection with this food, and keep everything entirely free from dirt. They were not able to get this knowledge from reading. They needed some one to show and demonstrate the principles to them, that they might properly feed their young.

I think fathers should have as much responsibility as the mothers in caring for the children. Their love for their children is as great, and their interest should be equally so. Let us have good lectures for both fathers and mothers, and demonstrations to the older girls of how to keep house, and take care of their little brothers and sisters, that when they grow up, they may be better qualified for shouldering the burdens of a home and family, than their mothers have been. Here in Regina we have a "Little Mother's Club," where the foreign girls from six to sixteen, go to learn to do all kinds of housework, prepare the meals for the family, and, best of all, how to wash, dress, and make food for the babies. It is easier for them to learn by seeing a thing done, and doing it themselves, than by reading or hearing about it.

While we are teaching our children to be strong and healthful, we should train them to go to church. If a father and mother gets a child started on the "right and narrow way," the church will assist very materially, in its religious education. But we must, in addition to this live good and useful lives ourselves, if we want our children to be good. Children are great imitators, and if a mother and father are loving and kind, you will see their children showing the same characteristics to their dolls, their dogs, and playmates.

One great help in our public school to-day, is the trained nurse and the service she renders. In our city we have free baby clinics, where children may be examined, and instructions to parents given. I only wish our church could send out similar efficient help to the Latter Day Saints who are isolated or living far from these city advantages.

Mothers, let us have great patience with our little folks. As I close there comes to my mind a poem once read before a mother's meeting. It has a tender and uplifting sentiment:

"A little elbow leans upon your knee—
Your tired knee that has so much to bear;
A child's dear eyes are looking lovingly
From underneath a tatch of tangled hair.
Perhaps you do not heed the velvet touch
Of warm, moist fingers holding yours so tight,
You do not prize this blessing overmuch:
Almost you are too tired to pray, to-night!

"But it is blessedness! A year ago
I did not see it as I do to-day;
We are so dull and thankless, and so slow
To catch the sunshine 'til it slips away.
Now it seems surpassing strange to me
That while I wore the badge of motherhood
I did not kiss more oft and tenderly
The little child that brought me only good.

"And if some night, when you sit down to rest
You miss this elbow from your tired knee,
This restless, curly head from off your breast,
This lisping tongue that chatters constantly;

If from your own dimpled hands had slipped,
And ne'er would nestle in your palm again,
If the white feet into the grave had tripped,
I could not blame you for your heartache then!

"If I could mend a broken cart to-day,
To-morrow make a kite to reach the sky,
There is no woman in God's world could say
She was more blissfully content than I.
But ah, the dainty pillow next my own
Is never rumped by a shining head;
My singing birdling from its nest has flown—
The little boy I used to kiss is dead."

Wise Motherhood

A mother who had taken a course in kindergarten work made a call at the school where she had studied.

"I cannot tell you of what value my training has been, but I wish I could have more," she cried wistfully; "the problems a mother has to meet are so many. For instance, my little girl has long, curly hair, and when I take her to the shops, the clerks comment upon it before her. I fear she is becoming very vain. Only the other day she said, as she posed before the mirror: 'I have pretty hair, mamma!'"

"What did you say?" asked the kindergarten trainer.

"I replied as calmly as I could: 'It looks very well when you keep it neatly combed!'"

This answer showed that the mother had grasped the core of Froebel's idea when he wrote: "Mother, let your behavior be such that your child may early learn to realize that your approval is given not to his small, visible person, but to his true self. . . . Whether the child strives for being, or appearance, for what is temporal, or eternal, rests upon the power of the mother to guide his aspiration. . . . That the bond between mother and child may not deteriorate into a purely physical one, she must be a mother not only in feeling, but with the insight, and assured, deliberate deed."

Such a mother finds no drudgery in her task. Rather has she the feeling of the artist, for joy is her ruling motive, not joy in selfish possession, but joy in conquests and achievements. She is ready to pause for a song on the way, is not impatient at the length of the journey and, genially following the long zigzags of the steps hewed by nature's own slowly unfolding methods, she guides the child up the path winding hither and thither, of the mountain of life.

Wise is the patient care of this guide, knowing no fear, even when the child errs; for has not the great Goethe told us that while man has aspiration he cannot but err? Has not the newer poet-dramatist, Ibsen, for all his grave sense of human culpability, shown us Solveig, the mother, waiting at the cross-roads till Peer Gynt learns that he has chosen the wrong path, patient through all the years for him to come to her in his old age to purge his soul of dross and fill it with the truth?

"Where was I?" he asks as he kneels before her, dazed by his sense of failure, the man rich in world's success, but barren in things of the soul. "Where was I as myself, the whole man, the true man?"

"In my faith, in my hope, in my love," answered the eternal woman, undaunted in her belief in the final outcome.

"The boy has been resting on his mother's lap.

They two have been playing all the life day long.

The boy has been lying close to my breast,

All the life day long.

The boy has been lying close to my heart,
All the life day long.

I will cradle you,

I will watch over you."

"Wife, mother, sister art thou," answered the newly inspired Peer, seeing her for the first time as she was, the woman not of flesh alone, nor of intellect, nor of this world, but the spiritual mother of the race.—Miss Harriet Frances Carpenter, in Government Bulletin.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

A Letter from Germany

[The following is a letter written by Sister Kippe, the wife of Elder A. Kippe of Halle, Germany, to Sister RoosVollmer, of Basil, Switzerland. Sister Vollmer has kindly translated the original letter, and has sent it to us for correction and publication.—EDITORS.]

Your letter and Leaves reached me and I feel very thankful for them. You had to struggle hard and to suffer much, and yet you continue straightway your path. As for me, to reach this steadfastness much tribulation was needed, for when I saw that very much had to be given up, I longed to return into the all-forgiving and all-allowing state church. But it did not come to that; severe illness, thanks to the Lord, prevented it.

My whole family is against me, because of my "faith." The more tolerant of them say: "They have totally lost their senses," and my brother, on the occasion of a burial half a year ago, gave me the advice to come back suddenly, not wait till I should have to go begging. He said that we deserve all we have to suffer. We do not deserve more.

Afterwards I heard that I had been disinherited by my mother through the machinations of my brother profiting of the low spirit in which she was. It was a bitter cup to give up all those whom I love and everything I liked. But now it is done and I have ample compensation in the sisters of the church.

When we were last in Einbeck-Hamburg, we enjoyed such beautiful services, winning two young dear members, and from the lips of one of the priests came so heartily the deeply felt words: "After this nothing better can be found on earth." Such experiences compensate richly for much misery.

In Einbeck there is still a grand field of activity, and after Silesia, where my husband is going tomorrow, new work will be undertaken in Einbeck-Hamburg. In Berlin, too, we have some openings. The work will be harder, but will prove a great work and what joy in consequence. In Halle we have little satisfaction. Yesterday the sarcastic invitation was sent to us, that if my husband should like some weeks in an asylum, he had but to apply. What a variety in characters!

The one hundred marks you sent us by the sister of Mr. Roos in Freudenstadt Württemberg reached us. We hope to be able to return them soon. Debts are a terrible thing to me; they disturb my night rest and leave an uncomfortable feeling. A part of these one hundred marks will be necessary for the journey to Silesia; by means of them he can undertake the journey to-morrow. Very often the money for the journey is provided to him, but not always. He cannot require it and that shall not be; he would rather return to Halle walking.

You see that we are compelled to have faith and to believe in wonders; our whole life depends on it. In a fortnight the house rent is to be paid; in ten days state duties. What would a man of the world do without our outlook in such times? And we want to return these one hundred marks first of all, and therefore prayer, faith, and due economy are needed every day.

Every day's want weakens utterly the body brought so low already by four years' hungering. One herring costs one mark to 1.20 marks, etc. If you add a naught (0) to every former price, you know about the cost of everything to-day.

I do not know if you heard of the dreadful famine in Germany, and if you heard of it, remember that we belong to the poorest. To write about it would sound like tales, simply incredible. Only the love of the sisters who helped us in the direst of calamity without our asking for it, preserved us from dying from starvation. Many of the brothers and sisters are self-sustaining, possessing more than we, and heard through the newspapers of the famine in the great cities, and of our need.

We never begged, but tears of joy often fell upon the food sent to us, and joy and thankfulness towards our heavenly Father which cannot be described filled our hearts. But it has happened that the children wept from hunger. Our sixteen-year-old daughter has become a skeleton. The children are no more able to go up the stairs, because of a long time spent in bed with constant diarrhea, and one with jaundice, and my husband without income, myself weak so as to be scarcely able to keep myself upright.

To whom can one apply in such circumstances if not to God? One day believing heartily: "To-day all will come right, let us once more pray all together," do you know what came? The executor, announcing that he was sent to sell our furniture for taxes, the gas collector, announcing that he could wait no longer. The director of the poor law was called to decide. He made a speech, that it was imbecility to wait for money from America; that my husband to him was only wind; but finally he said that he would help us, only for the sake of the children and myself, but soon showing bad intentions with regard to me. Oh, all is corrupt here, all is rotten, usury, lying, etc. Vice governs the country.

Now, dear sister, about the Leaves you sent me. I have studied them diligently. They are interesting me very much. I am suffering from great anemia, and am therefore very nervous. Formerly I was always in the hands of the physicians, and so I am poisoned through and through. . . . I will try to live quite according to what you write; that is, as far as it is possible in Germany. Milk, good soap, oil, fruit, wine without alcohol are things quite unknown here, and fruit is too dear for us. . . . Very fortunately we shall get after years' waiting, one hundred grams of oil for each one. The physician who came for my daughter who had jaundice, ordered her also to take crusts of bread, because the bread contained seven parts which he would rather not name, only that they are poison. Nice prospects!

Potatoes have been our chief food, and roasted carrots as coffee [fortunately roasted carrots are an antidote replacing by the grace of God, the poisonous "hot drinks," coffee and tea.—J. R.], and with the said bread a little of margarine and meat; oftentimes oats or macaroni containing meat in the form of worms.

One number of your Leaves was sent by me to a sister in Einbeck, who by confinement was brought near to the grave, and who lost half her blood. She looks quite yellowish, coughs, but obtains milk, eggs, vegetables, fruit, good bread, and toast with her coffee, so she will be better able to overcome her debility.

And now, dear sister, I wish you very good success, and many souls who will devote themselves to help you in this task, for I believe that I understand you already enough to know that you feel very happy in fulfilling it. I shall rejoice greatly when you write me again, if you find time for it, for this is my recreation and my joy, when I receive news from sisters in the church. I am greeting heartily you and your dear husband.

Your sister in Christ,

ALICE KIPPE.

Sanitarium News

"I am particularly anxious that no young person get a wrong idea of what our profession is, and I am persuaded that some have permitted themselves to be restrained from entering this fruitful and entrancing field of work because they have not sensed its enticements and have overestimated its sacrifices and unpleasant situations."—Florence Nightingale.

One morning recently the nurses of the Sanitarium fasted and had special prayer services for an afflicted one of their number. The service was in charge of Brother Aylor and a good spirit prevailed.

Ina May Cockerton, R. N., leaves on the 16th for Saint Louis, where she enters Washington University for special laboratory work.

There should be no misunderstanding regarding what the training school for nurses is doing and can do for the young women of the church. Those desiring to take up this line of work will find us happily located in our nurses' home, 1215 River Boulevard, with our motherly matron, Sister Dora Griffiths in charge, who gives us every consideration. Indeed, we wonder how she gets to us all, but we always find her a capable mother for our big family of twenty-six.

Our school is an accredited school of the State. The training covers a period of three years, giving a very thorough course in the different departments required. Our graduates are in great demand because of their efficient work, several of them have and are preparing themselves for special work, taking post-graduate courses in some special line of work in different hospitals. A nurse overheard a doctor remark to several other physicians not of our faith: I don't care if this is a Latter Day Saint institution, they have a spirit here that does not exist in other hospitals: the spirit of service."

Our nurses train with the view to being the personification of the verbs nourish and serve. Nourish suggests tenderness, patience and humility. Service is the keystone of our profession. Even the divine Master could find no better way of describing himself, and his works than to say: "I am among you as he that serveth."

On this subject, let us further quote from Florence Nightingale.

"I give a quarter of a century's European experience when I say that the happiest people, the fondest of their occupation, the most thankful for their lives, are in my opinion engaged in sick nursing. In my opinion, it is a mere abuse of words to represent this life, as is done by some, as a sacrifice; it is engaging in an occupation the happiest of any.

"Nursing is an art; and, if it is to be made an art, it requires a devotion, as hard a preparation, as any painter's or sculptor's work; for what is the having to do with dead canvas or cold marble, compared with having to do with the living body—the temple of God's Spirit? It is one of the fine arts; I had almost said the finest of the fine arts."

The class work for nurses at the Sanitarium began October 1 with a great interest manifested. Our instructors for the first half year's work are as follows:

Tuberculosis: Doctor G. L. Harrington.
 Surgery and Bandaging: Doctor J. R. Green.
 Eye, ear, nose, and throat: Doctor Joseph Mather.
 Anatomy: Doctor E. Braun.
 Obstetrics: Doctor Charles Keown.
 Pediatrics: Doctor Charles Nickson.
 Bacteriology: Doctor Paul Rannie.
 Chemistry: Mable Elder, Ph. G.
 Ethics and History of Nursing: Sarah M. Rodgers, R. N.
 Practical Nursing: Elizabeth Jane Paxton, R. N.
 Massage: Gela Cook Mormon, R. N.
 Hygiene and Sanitation: Drusilla Messenger, R. N.
 SARAH M. RODGERS, R. N., Superintendent of Nurses.

The Need for the Word of Wisdom

---

Occasionally, we see in our church papers articles on the word of Wisdom.

To our mind none of those writings on the subject mention one of the vital points of this valuable and timely revelation to the church.

"In consequence of the evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men." This is plainly the reason for God giving this Word of Wisdom to the Saints. We are not prohibited from using the things mentioned therein, only insofar as conspiring and wicked men have had a chance to adulterate or otherwise make the things mentioned unfit for use, except those wherein it plainly states they are not for the body or the belly or are not good for man. We believe God gave it to cover all time future from the time he gave it, and that he plainly says which do and will, which means at that time and the future, which covers the present and future and that he knew then what men would do in the future from that time, to render those things unfit for use or at least dangerous to health. Thus if we use good fruit put up by ourselves, or those where it has passed from these evil men, we are not forbidden in the Word of Wisdom to do so. The statements of the latter part of paragraph 3 in reference to health, we do not understand to mean that we can escape sickness entirely, but we will not continue to be sick and afflicted nor that we will not die. God will not permit the destroying angel to take us by destroying our bodies or die before our time. If we die it will be his will and the destroying angel has no hand in our death.

We know from experience, the benefits that may be had by a determined and continuous effort to live for the blessings promised therein. If we fail to get the blessings promised we always find some failure on our part. If we earnestly seek for guidance we will not be misled or deceived as to our duty and the meaning of the revelation.

Dedication at Delhi, Ontario

Sunday, September 28, was a memorable day for the Saints of Delhi Branch, London District when our church was dedicated. The local and many visiting Saints had been diligent (rising early and some riding far) to be at the morning prayer service. Throughout this meeting there was a good spirit. It pleased the Lord to speak in the gift of tongues and interpretation. He expressed pleasure in the efforts the Saints had made but urged his people to humble themselves and to keep the law of tithes and offerings, renewing his ancient promise to Israel of abundant temporal blessings if they would do this. Brother Clarence Weeks was called to the office of priest. He and Brother John Sommers who had been previously called as a deacon, were ordained at this service.

The dedication sermon was preached by Elder Grice, district president, at eleven o'clock. This was followed by prayer by Elder Burger.

The day was so delightfully bright and warm, and the crowd so large, that the afternoon service was held in Brother Barham's grove beside the church. Elder Burger, Bishop's agent, was the speaker and explained in a clear and forceful manner the law of tithing. A collection was taken at this meeting to aid the London branch in wiping off the debt on their church property.

Dinner was served at noon at tables in the grove, when over a hundred and fifty enjoyed the feast provided by the sisters.

Saints of London under the direction of Brother Ridley were in charge of the music. This is not the first time they have given us such a treat and we hope it may not be the last.

EROS, LOUISIANA, October 5, 1919.

Editors Herald: I have been afflicted for ten months with a dreadful lung trouble and have been given up by doctors. There is one thing that gives me great consolation that there is a God who can heal all diseases if we will live faithful. I am trying every day to place my trust in him. I ask the prayers of the Saints everywhere as I desire to live for my children. I have three little ones. I have prayed earnestly to God to spare me to raise them but his will must be done. I have suffered more than my tongue can express and still suffering. Saints, pray for me.

We have a good branch of Saints here. Have preaching every Sunday and also Sunday school. All seem to be interested in the Sunday school but on account of my sickness I am not able to attend all the meetings. We had with us last Sunday, Brother Jim Phillips, but bad weather prevented his preaching.

Your poor, afflicted sister,

JESSIE WILLIAMS.

[The above request for prayers is also emphasized in a separate letter by a daughter of Sister Williams.—EDITORS.]

ARMY OF THE BLACK SEA, September 5, 1919.

Editors Herald: I am pleased once again to write you, and am pleased that I have had the Herald sent to me, for it has kept me acquainted with the work of the church, which I am proud to see is progressing.

The country I am in has not yet signed the peace terms, but I presume soon will do so.

I am sure the steps taken with regard to foreign missions is a fine one. My experience in these countries has taught me that they are greatly in need of the gospel. What I can see of the so-called religion is mere form, as the majority of the people are far behind in civilization, and are led to follow the ways of their priests.

I am ever thankful to God that I have been brought through this war safely; that in my three years and nine months service I have been blessed with good health. The words of the last sermon I heard have always been with me, especially when I was in the front line trenches, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I fear no evil."

I deeply regret to see so much industrial unrest. I feel certain if Christianity existed in the world, it would be impossible. It is certainly heartbreaking to see so much sin. Dear Saints I need your prayers.

Trusting God will continue to bless and further the cause,
I am, Your brother in bonds,

F. C. BEVAN.

Second Garrison Battalion, Kings Liverpool Regiment.

HONOLULU, HAWAII, July 10, 1919.

Editors Herald: On the 6th of last month I was seventy-one years old, and I desire to give God the praise, for I am still able to work and earn my living and to do my bit financially towards the redemption of Zion. What a glorious work the Lord has called us into, not only the building of our own characters, but having the privilege of bringing the same precious truths to the notice of those who know not of this work that we are engaged in.

I was about sixty-seven years of age when, through the instrumentality of Elder G. J. Waller, the gospel for this time was brought to my attention, and I never have regretted my acceptance of it, for the Lord has graciously blessed me, and has given me to see the truth of the same. For many years I had been praying to know the way and the truth, for there were such a babel of voices sounding in my ears, "Lo, here, and lo there," therefore, I prayed mentally all the time, "Lord help me and direct me." And sure enough the Lord heard my cry and brought me to these islands, where I met with the Saints and especially with that man of God, Elder Gilbert J. Waller, who instructed me more perfectly in the way of the gospel.

On the 11th of June, Brother Waller arrived here from San Francisco. I had heard of his coming, so was on hand to meet him. How glad I was when he stepped off the ship onto the wharf, where I could grasp his hand once more, and look into his kindly face, for to know Brother Waller is to love him.

All the Saints of the Honolulu Branch send their love to all the Saints elsewhere, and pray God's blessing to be with all the people of God everywhere.

Your brother in the gospel,

THOMAS CLANCY.

RACE TRACK, MONTANA, September 25, 1919.

Editors Herald: Having been appointed to take charge of the missionary work in the Spokane, Eastern and Western Montana Districts, and as it is impossible to write all of the people in said districts, I take this method of reaching them.

We earnestly ask the help and cooperation of all the people in the three districts, in disseminating the truth.

I know by experience that many of our people come into Montana, take up a homestead, and sometimes it is months and years before we can locate them. Now to my mind that is hiding our light, and this Jesus said we should not do.

If there is no opportunity to preach, let us hear from you anyway, and if possible we will visit you. We have six missionaries in the three districts, and I know all are anxious to spread the angel's message, and you can be of wonderful help if you will write us and let us know the conditions and opportunities for preaching in your community.

Not in my six years in Montana has the opportunity been for doing a good work like it is at the present time. People in some parts are real anxious to hear, and the Saints generally speaking are waking up more fully to their opportunities which in all is very encouraging.

While it is true that winter is coming on and we may not be able to reach some of you who are a long way from the railroad, yet we will remember your needs and come the first opportunity.

So let me urge you to write at once for you have the information we need to make our work a success.

GEORGE W. THORBURN.

RACE TRACK, MONTANA, home address.

FISHER, ARKANSAS, October 2, 1919.

Editors Herald: We have a real nice branch here at Fisher, with some eighty members, and have our own church building where we can worship at any time. Have just organized a Religio through the help of Brother G. S. Trowbridge, who was with us the second Sunday in September. We had a nice crowd last night. Of course we do not expect so many when the lessons start.

I would like to hear from some of the Saints living in Denver, Colorado, or Seattle, Washington, as we are thinking of changing location this winter. Would like to hear from some who do work around machinery, or in garages.

Hoping to hear from some one, I remain

Your brother in gospel bonds,

A. E. ZIEGENHORN.

BALD KNOB, ARKANSAS, September 28, 1919.

Editors Herald: I wish to avail myself of the opportunity to testify in regard to the very successful meetings we have just had, Elder J. F. Riley, being the speaker. He is a fine man and a forceful speaker.

He had the privilege of baptizing eleven souls into the kingdom, for which we are very thankful. He opened a new place with good interest and many expressed themselves, that the services were the best they had ever heard.

At the close of the meetings Brother Riley and wife left for other parts of the field. Hoping the Lord may bless the seed that has been sown and the church continue its progress, I remain your brother,

THOMAS EMDE.

EVANSVILLE, WISCONSIN, September 20, 1919.

Editors Herald: I see that my weekly letter to the Presidency containing a report of our recent reunion at Madison found its way into print in the HERALD for September 17. Now that letter was written in a hurry amid the hustle and bustle of dismantling a reunion and was never intended for publication, it was a bare outline without details, and while I am not adverse to its appearance nor have any apologies to offer, yet as it stands, without explanation, it looks rather egotistic for me to say that I did the whole thing, manual labor and all, of course I was speaking of the committee, I was alone on that and did its work.

It goes without saying that I didn't do the cooking and many other things that would be included in the manual part of it. Furthermore, I do not wish to appear ungrateful to Brother P. Muceus who was in Madison at the time and while very busy with his work, rendered assistance that I feel should be recognized, also Sister Pearl Gittins of Milwaukee, who was visiting at our home during the week preceding the reunion and she and Sister Flint came up on Wednesday before the reunion began and they got busy with that pile of dirty dishes that had stood for three years. This also I should have mentioned had I gone into a detailed report of the reunion, also those who had cars at the reunion were very kind to meet trains and run other errands for the reunion when needed.

Now I hope that you will publish this to go with the other, as I certainly do not wish to appear in any light other than that to which I am justly entitled. Anyhow, my main thought in writing that letter was to inform of the splendid spiritual feast that had been enjoyed at our reunion, and the sequel that I had not had time to arrange at that time is that we have a balance on hand of nearly one hundred dollars to begin next reunion with. This is something that has not happened before in all the years I have been on reunion committees.

Your brother in bonds,

B. C. FLINT.

BEETOWN, WISCONSIN, September 26, 1919.

Editors Herald: Beetown is a little town located in one of the small, narrow valleys of southwestern Wisconsin, located originally by the lead miners building their small log homes along the rippling spring brook. Many tons of lead ore were mined in an early day in this part of Wisconsin.

It was here my father's father and mother finally located about the year 1840, after their long journey from near Preston, England. They had heard the great latterday message through Orson Hyde and others, and had been baptized in the land of their childhood. Some few years later they began their long journey to America, coming by way of New Orleans and Saint Louis, up the Mississippi River by steamboat, past the beautiful city of Nauvoo, and on up the river to the little lead mining town of Potosi in southern Wisconsin; thence on by land about fifteen miles up the little valleys to the new mining vicinity called by the miners Beetown.

At Saint Louis they had parted company with some of grandmother's brothers and sisters, some of whom later migrated across the plains to the valleys of the West.

Fifty long years passed by and grandmother had not heard a sermon nor seen a Latter Day Saint. During the time grandfather had passed to the great beyond. Their children had grown and were most of them married.

At this time, about the year 1890, Brethren W. S. Pender and J. W. Peterson came through here in missionary work. Grandmother thus in her old age was glad to again hear the story that had been so dear to her in early life, which she had never lost faith in, and over which she had often meditated during the long years of isolation, trials and discouragement, as she had only heard of the breaking up of the church, and the work in Utah.

It was from grandmother, when a small boy, I first heard the gospel story. How she delighted to tell of the wonderful spiritual meetings experienced by her and the early Saints in that far-off land in the days of her girlhood and in the circle of her father's family and others.

She often tried to describe the joy of the Holy Spirit's presence, when those endowed with its power would speak in prophecy and in unknown tongues, as they often did then.

Twenty-three years ago I left this vicinity and the home of my childhood and began, an inexperienced boy, in missionary work. Since then I have labored in Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and by the new appointments made in June, I am now back to the place of my early experience in gospel work.

I have many relatives and old acquaintances here, many of whom in years past had little interest in the faith of the Saints. But I am glad to note that time, with its varied experiences, has brought a change, and many with whom I have been visiting the past two weeks in this vicinity, are looking with favor and interest on our faith. I am hoping and praying the kind Master in heaven will continue his good work till many will be baptized.

After the General Conference, I began work in the Northern Wisconsin District, where I have labored the past five years, and where my home now is. I labored in June for a time in Wyeville, where we have a few Saints and other good people whom I trust will in time be baptized. Also held meetings in Sparta and Greenwood. In August I began my work in the Southern Wisconsin District, at Soldiers Grove, falling in company for a little time with Brethren B. C. Flint and P. Muceus. I do not know if the Saints there enjoyed having such a supply of missionaries all at once or not, but we enjoyed the event.

The Saints there are striving to keep in line with the progress of the great Master's work, and as their small church, built a number of years ago, has become too small, they are planning on building a new one.

Later I spent a week in the little city of Readstown, where we have a small branch of Saints. I baptized four while there, all earnest good men and women. I have not spent a more pleasant week in mission work for some time than the one spent in Readstown.

Next comes my experience traveling in an automobile from Soldiers Grove to Madison to attend the reunion, in company with Brother and Sister Montgomery, and Brother and Sister Davenport. It took most of the day to make the journey. But we surely enjoyed the ride, and the chicken dinner by the wayside. Also the several other good things in the sisters' lunch baskets.

The reunion was much enjoyed by all. The brethren of the missionary who assisted in the preaching seemed to be greatly blessed in their efforts. The auxiliary services were fine, ably conducted by a small delegation of Chicago Saints. Their work was much appreciated, and we hope they may be able to assist us the coming year.

The prayer services were the most spiritual the writer has attended for several years, the Lord speaking several times by the Spirit to the Saints.

After the reunion, the writer remained in the city of Madison for a week or longer, and was pleased to get more fully acquainted with the Saints there, and to see the earnest, willing efforts of some to help build up the work of the church.

In these strenuous times the Lord is blessing the earnest, diligent ones, preparatory for greater work, while Satan wages his warfare as never before.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

LEONARD HOUGHTON.

CHETEK, WISCONSIN, home address.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, September 29, 1919.

Editors Herald: Having read and received much comfort from the letters from my brothers and sister which were published in the HERALD, I thought that I too would like the Saints to read of the many ways God has blessed me since obeying the fundamental principles of his gospel.

I first left my home in England seven years ago last March. I was only a youth and had not really grasped the seriousness of life. My one desire was to travel to see America. At that time I was a member of the Church of England, and of course thought it was the only true church on earth. I had a desire to pray often as I was always taught the worth of prayer.

My mother died about a year prior to my departure from England, and it seemed that with her life went all my hope and love as a boy. How well I remember the day the steamer left Liverpool docks and how the tears filled my eyes as the folks on the dock sang, "God be with you till we meet again." And, oh, how I prayed that night to God to be with me and help me. But my troubles were only starting.

On arriving in Canada I was classed as a "sparrow." Having arrived from the old country I started work on a farm and suffered very great hardships, as I had never farmed before. But all this time I never forgot to pray. Many, many times as I would lay my head on the pillow after a hard day's work I would pray God to take me away from it all, but God had a work for me to do, and after three years of hardships I went to Detroit, Michigan, and there, thank God, I met Brother Ingleright (in a factory). We immediately became "chummy" and after a frank introduction on both sides we were friends.

The following Sunday I invited him to church and he came, and on the next Sunday he invited me to church. On entering the church I was disappointed at not seeing a more stylish and larger pipe organ, etc. I was told it was the Latter Day Saint church, and I had never heard of the name before. On leaving the church that evening I felt less lonesome, and I had to admit I enjoyed the meeting, but the sermon was strange to me. (On looking back, how well I can see God's almighty hand leading me.)

As weeks passed by, we made it a habit of attending the Saints' church regularly, and there seemed to be something changing my life. I felt tired of worldly things, and the Church of England doctrine began to look ridiculous in my sight, and many times, much to my surprise, I would find tears in my eyes at the words an elder would be speaking.

Well, after a few months of investigating and reading I was baptized by Brother B— in the basement of the Detroit Number One Branch. I was tempted very sorely shortly afterwards, but God in his tender mercy saved me from falling, and now I am happy. I no longer feel homesick, although I would like to see my people in England, but I have brothers and sisters here who love me and I love them, and above all I have God's spirit to comfort me.

My prayers have been answered repeatedly, and just a few months ago God called me, through Brother P— in Midland, into his priesthood.

Dear Saints, it is impossible for me to tell you what blessings I have received, and what comfort and help I have had from different Saints. My one prayer is that we will never lose faith and always do our part to spread this beautiful gospel among mankind, that they too may share God's blessings and meet with those whom God has chosen to enter the celestial glory.

Let us never forget to pray, especially when we are tempted, and God will help us. My prayers are for you all, and I hope you will remember me that I may be successful with God's help in spreading the gospel to my folks in England.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

BERT COOPER.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, September 29, 1919.

Editors Herald: Our pastor, Brother D. J. Williams, attended the Eastern Iowa reunion at Muscatine, by invitation, as one of their speakers; hence was absent from Burlington August 10 and 17. The first Sunday, Brother P. R. Burton made an unexpected visit here, and spoke morning and evening, the morning theme being "Perfect love casteth out all fear"—a strong forcible presentation of the subject. In the evening he presented some new and convincing phases of the restoration.

The following Sunday, we were fortunate in having with us Brother Heman Hale Smith who lectured in the morning on "The church and education," in the evening on "The league of nations." Brother Smith's work needs little comment to those who have heard him, his able presentation and masterful delivery recalling something of his father's manner and ability as a speaker. He won a welcome, and we hope for a repetition of the visit.

Some twenty or twenty-five Burlington Saints were among the eighty or more campers at the Montrose reunion August 22 to 31. An enjoyable time was reported by all. We will not trespass on the rights of the press committee by reporting reunion features.

The branch has sustained a very real loss in the death of Brother John Bauer, probably our most aged member; and who had served faithfully as a deacon for many years. The funeral services were held September 6.

Brother C. E. Willey of Lamoni was in Burlington Sunday, September 14, and spoke for us at the evening service.

The purchase of the lot next south of the church has been consummated recently, with a view to larger building later.

The Religio prayer service Sunday evening was one to be long remembered, inasmuch as a message of admonition, council and assurance, with abundant promise attached was given to one of our number, and to the young people collectively.

CORRESPONDENT.

BRIDGEPORT, CONNECTICUT, September 30, 1919.

Editors Herald: In order that those who in former years have labored in the Broad River Branch, Norwalk, Connecticut, and who are still interested in its welfare, might know of its present condition, the following brief account is given.

We feel that we can justly say that those who spent months and years here endeavoring to build up the work, did not labor in vain. While it is true that the work here has at times been at a very low ebb and has suffered considerably from the lack of oversight, yet we feel that the past few years have brought us blessings that we can truly feel thankful for.

We have lost some through death, others through removal and desertion, but the Lord has raised up others to take their places and the work moves along unchecked. Since our last report our good Brother Judson Cable, who for years had been priest of this branch, has passed on to his reward; and that that reward will be ample the writer has no doubt for he gave the best that he had to the work and was faithful and diligent as long as he had strength to work. The duties of the priest's office are now being cared for by Brother Charles H. Franke, one of our new members who was baptized about a year ago and called to the priesthood six months later. He is a lifelong resident of Norwalk and so well known there that his conversion has drawn attention to our work in numerous instances.

Another acquisition to our priesthood is Brother Wesley Webbe, of New Canaan who was ordained to the office of deacon under the hands of Elder Edmund C. Gleazer and the writer at our chapel last Sunday. This office has long been unfilled and the work has suffered, but we trust that our brother will take up the work in the spirit of his calling and we know the Lord will bless him in so doing. Brother Webbe is a son-in-law of Elder A. E. Stone, who was for years president of this branch and who is now in charge of the Temple at Kirtland.

The work of the teacher's office is being cared for by Brother Julius Cable, who labors as opportunity offers and who is making preparations to be even more useful in his office.

So we feel to look forward rather than behind and believe that we are now in better condition to work than we have been for years past. Our last report for six months showed a net gain of five and we trust that the work may continue to grow and prosper and that others may be led to see that we have the truth and to accept of it.

In addition to our work in Norwalk we have made a slight opening in New Canaan which we hope will be permanent; we have held preaching services there and have others scheduled for the near future.

During the past six months we have received considerable assistance from outside, all of which we deeply appreciate. Brother Calvin Sears of Brandford, Connecticut, whom we met at our district conference at Brooklyn, New York, six months ago, visits our branch occasionally and preaches for us; his efforts to break the bread of life have been well received and favorably commented on, and we trust that he will continue to visit us as the opportunity may present itself.

Elder Harry Passman and wife, our missionaries to the Holy Land, also were permitted to spend some little time with us while held up awaiting their passports. Elder Passman preached a number of good sermons to interested audiences and expressed himself as quite favorably impressed with the excellent prospects for the future of our work in this place. Brother Passman is an earnest and efficient representative of the work and we trust that his mission in Palestine will be successful.

Elder Edmund C. Gleazer, our young missionary to the New York and Philadelphia District, has done considerable work in this branch during the past year and to his excellent work in preaching the word and visiting the people is due the present condition of the branch. He is at present conducting a two-week series of meetings, the first of which was held in our chapel last Sunday evening. He was greeted by a practically full house and his sermon was listened to attentively by Saint and stranger alike. He has placarded the neighborhood in the locality of the chapel and intends to do considerable visiting and tracting among the nonmembers living there. He has had two notices in the Norwalk papers and we have hopes that they will run a daily synopsis of his sermons also. The press of Norwalk has generally been favorable to our work and we hope that this instance will be no exception.

So the good work moves along, slowly at times, yet surely progressing. Those who have looked over the ground are optimistic that there is a work yet to be done in Norwalk and vicinity and we pray that the Lord will keep us humble and prayerful that we may do our part in this work as it unfolds before us; and that we may become useful and willing servants, doing all we can to advance the interests of the great latter day work which has been intrusted to our care. Praying for the success of the work universally, I am,

Sincerely your brother,

WILLARD I. NEWMAN.

Editors Herald: We are pleased to say the work is moving onward here. Three have been baptized this year so far, and others are near.

Our soldier boys are returning one by one, four out of seven having returned. One, Brother George Wright, may never return. He has been missing three years. He was a bright, promising young man.

Our branch is quite interested in Religio work. They meet every Monday evening and take up the Quarterly lesson. Once a month they have a social gathering. The Sunday school also is doing what it can to instruct the young.

We rejoice at the outlook of the work and hope to continue to do all we can to get the gospel before the people. Our minds are turned toward the gathering place, and we hope the way will soon be clear to take the journey.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

WILLIAM ECCLESTONE.

BARTH, FLORIDA, September 31, 1919.

Editors Herald: I have long ago felt that I should like to write a few lines to your columns. I can truly say that I am yet striving to enter in at the straight gate, as I feel the time is approaching fast for Jesus to come back to earth again. I long to see the Saints come up higher and for the time when his Spirit shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

But, dear Saints, let us remember that the Spirit of God only abides in purity and cleanliness. If our hearts are filled with wrong desires and evil, the spirit cannot live there. We should have the desire to cleanse out all the wrong and evil from our hearts and build them up into strong, pure, clean temples, where the Spirit can dwell and reign in supreme power.

This gospel is much better than anything this world affords. The cup of pleasure is full to overflowing, but oh, how sad will be the day if we should realize that we had indulged too freely of this world's pleasure and neglected to keep God's commandments and improve the beautiful opportunities that should be improved. May that peace and love abide with this church, and may we "fight the good fight of faith," and each one be loyal to the service of the army that wages war against sin and unrighteousness.

Dear Saints, as I grow older and my experiences are more varied, I see the greater need of thoroughness. How true it is that "no one can assist in this work except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things." If we would learn to serve as Christ served, how much better condition this world would be in to-day. There is no way open where we may get something for nothing.

I ask all the Saints that read this letter to pray for me, as I feel I stand in need of your prayers. Pray that I may become meek and lowly. I am only fifteen years old, and my health is very poor and has been for four years. I ask the Saints to pray for me that my health may be restored if it be the Lord's will.

Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, and his blessing on his people.

Your sister in the gospel,

IDELLA BOOKER.

SAN BERNARDINO, CALIFORNIA, October 3, 1919.

Editors Herald: We are pleased to report through your valuable columns that the work in this district is moving along nicely, considering that we have but few to help push the gospel work; but we are pleased to say that those who are engaged in the good cause are making a good showing. Last year Elder N. T. Chapman labored as a missionary in this district with whom I was closely associated and we regretted very much that he was transferred to another field. He is a very congenial missionary companion and made friends for the cause wherever he labored and his many friends are asking when he will be returned to this field. Come again Brother Chapman; you are welcome.

Our reunion this year was well attended and those who were privileged to meet returned to their homes with renewed courage and confidence. We were greatly favored by the presence and counsel of Brother Frederick A. Smith and his stenographer Elder W. R. Dexter.

We regretted very much that our genial brother, Elder David E. Dowker was ill during our reunion and was not able to assist us as he would have liked. The speakers were: F. A. Smith, J. W. Rushton, W. R. Dexter, A. Carmichael, N. Carmichael, J. B. Carmichael and G. H. Wixom. The following elders made short addresses at the afternoon service: Jesse Simmons, D. E. Dowker, A. E. Jones, F. W. Burton, D. C. White, F. B. Van Fleet and L. Hemenway. We all enjoyed having Bishop Carmichael with us again and to hear his voice again in behalf of Zion's cause. We were pleased to have Sister Carmichael with us and to note her improvement in health. We are also thankful to our heavenly Father for his kindness in restoring Brother Peter Kaufman to life through the administration of the laying on of hands. The ocean beach is near our reunion grounds, and one morning quite early this brother in company with others went into the ocean for a swim. He was caught in a rip tide which carried him under the big wave and out far away; and after he became unconscious another wave carried him to shore. An effort was made to revive him, but to no avail. A messenger was dispatched to the grounds and I was called to come to his assistance. I called Brother Rushton to assist me and we were soon by his side, and just as soon as we placed our hands upon him he began to revive.

He was carried to his tent and Doctor Mather of Independence, Missouri, was called in and it was thought that pneumonia had developed, but through the Lord's power this trouble was removed and our brother was soon around again. Some of the nonmembers present remarked that this was surely a miracle of God's power.

The Woman's Auxiliary was well represented by Sister Dora Glines. The Woman's Auxiliary of the district had charge of the cafeteria, which department was well conducted. Our good sisters are deserving much credit for their untiring efforts and their self-sacrificing spirit that others might be cared for and made comfortable so they could enjoy the many good meetings of the reunion.

The district conference passed off without a jar. Brethren Rushton and Smith were associated with the district president in presiding. This being the time for the election of officers, Elders N. Carmichael, David E. Dowker and the writer were nominated for district president. The latter was declared elected; after which Elder N. Carmichael was elected vice president, Sister Anna Crum was elected secretary and Brother H. F. Backer, treasurer. The new reunion committee was elected as follows: Mrs. Vada Pankey, Anna Jasper, John Van Fleet, F. B. Van Fleet, and the writer. The conference adjourned to the call of the district presidency, they to set the time and place of the next conference.

The conference approved of the ordination of Brother Will A. Boren of San Bernardino to the office of elder and the matter was referred to the San Bernardino Branch for their approval. The branch gave their hearty approval and on August 30, Brother Boren was ordained by the writer, assisted by Elder A. E. Jones.

Upon invitation I was permitted to attend the Irvington reunion in company with Brethren F. A. Smith, W. R. Dexter, and J. W. Rushton. This reunion was well attended and every detail for the comfort of all present was provided for by the reunion committee under the direction of the district president, C. W. Hawkins.

It was a real treat to meet with this fine crowd of Saints and to meet those whom I had not met for a number of years.

I was asked to assist in the activities of the young Saints on the ground and I can assure you I was kept busy. The early morning prayer meetings were the special feature and I was pleased to note their interest and zeal. At the first early prayer meeting that was held there were forty-eight present, and on the last Sunday morning there were seventy-five present. May God abundantly bless this army of young people and prepare them for service in his great work.

Due to the urgent need of my presence in the home district I did not stop to visit the northern branches as I would have liked.

Our district has been favored by the presence of Brethren F. M. Sheehy, John Garver and Bishop Carmichael, who have been visiting among us and we have used them to the best advantage possible by keeping them busy. The San Bernardino papers gave us a very favorable notice of the coming of Bishop Carmichael to that place and a synopsis of his sermon appeared in two papers.

We are glad to report that Brother Dowker is much improved in health and is again doing his part and ready to welcome any of the traveling elders who may come his way. We are pleased to welcome Doctor Teel of Glendale, into our midst again, having just returned from the United States Army in overseas service. Doctor Teel is an elder in the church, having been called and ordained just before he went overseas. He reports that he has had a great experience and was able to assist the needy to a greater extent because he was a servant of the Master, and comes back to us with a deep desire in his heart to use his time and talent to the glory of God and the good of His great work.

A reception was given by the Los Angeles Branch in honor of Brother Teel, and a very pleasant time was spent together. A very interesting program was rendered by the young Saints present after which addresses were made by Elders John Garver, D. E. Dowker, Doctor Teel and the writer after which refreshments were served by the sisters of the church.

I was called to Los Angeles yesterday to meet Brother F. A. Smith who had just arrived from the north and has consented to visit through our district before going on his way. Accordingly we have announced him to speak next Sunday in San Bernardino, Tuesday and Wednesday at Long Beach, Thursday and Friday at Ontario, Sunday morning in Santa Ana and Sunday evening in Los Angeles. Thus you can see we do not intend to give him time to rest, but if he will promise to come again we may be more considerate of him next time.

We were pleased to meet Brother Booker in Los Angeles on September 28, who stopped over while on his way to his mission in Alabama in company with his wife, to see his old friend Brother David Dowker; and while there consented to preach, his sermon being much appreciated by all present.

I am anxious to have every member of our district, buckle on the gospel armor and do his best. I can assure these workers that the harder they work and the more they give out and the more they sacrifice in the interest of the cause of Christ and their fellow men, the happier they will be and the Lord will pour out his Spirit upon them in proportion to their needs.

I am happy in the thought that there is no room for jealously in this great work. There is plenty to do so all can keep busy and not get in the other fellow's way. There is always a great demand for men and women with real talent and power. This gives every member an opportunity to make all the development that he is possible of making. If I notice that my brother is making great development by which he is able to go far ahead of me, I shall rejoice because of his success, for his success in this great work means my success; for he is assisting to move on the same work that I am trying to assist. I thank God for the men and women in this church who are making good and who are letting their light shine out to all around them. I love this great latter-day work for it is the hope of the world, for in it is God's wisdom made manifest. The two great forces at work to-day in the industrial world are wasting their time and money in trying to solve their vital problems, while they are both blind to the only plan that will bring lasting and permanent peace.

If there ever was a time when we should lay aside all selfishness and every hindering cause, and become fully alive to the needs of the hour it is now. May we heed the call of the bishop, for every member to become a tithe payer? Are we willing to get under the load and lift with all our might? Are we willing to consecrate all our surplus property, all our time and all our talents to the furthering of God's great work?

May this be our program in every branch in the district: A job for every member and every member a worker.

In the language of J. G. Holland, let us plead:

"God give us men. The time demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith and willing hands;
Men who have honor; men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue
And damn his treacherous flatteries without winking;
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty and in private thinking!
For while the rabble with their thumb-worn creeds,
Their large professions and their little deeds
Mingle in selfish strife; lo! Freedom weeps!
Wrong rules the land, and waiting Justice sleeps!"

Your brother in Christ,

G. H. WIXOM.

PARRIS ISLAND, SOUTH CAROLINA, October 5, 1919.

Editors Herald: I enlisted in January, 1919, to serve for a period of four years. That may seem a long time and in fact it is. It may also seem strange to some why I enlisted after peace had practically been declared. All that I can say to that is that nobody on earth knows how I tried to get into the service during the great conflict, and probably no one ever shall. But One does know all things and He knows what was in my heart and how I tried but failed to succeed in getting in the service in time to participate in the conflict. After numerous attempts I succeeded in passing the required physical examination and became a United States marine. I do not regret it as yet and I am proud to be one of the corps as any fellow who endeavored to get into the service with all the earnestness of his heart, as I did, and would say the same thing. I have enjoyed nearly all the time I have spent here although it isn't the finest place on earth by any means. I was unfortunate enough to be taken from my recruit company upon completion of our recruit training and was transferred to the office of the commanding officer and detailed as a clerk. I can say that I have enjoyed my work and I have learned a good deal of the inside of military life and I also have received some very valuable experience. I was rewarded for my work by being granted a fifteen-day furlough just in time for the Kirtland reunion. I am a member of the Wheeling Branch and I certainly am proud of it. We surely did enjoy the Spirit at all meetings and I felt well repaid for the long journey which I had to make to get there. I am certain that everyone present enjoyed the Spirit of the Lord to some extent. We were spoken to on numerous occasions and I was very thankful that I once more had the opportunity of hearing the Lord reveal himself through his servants and handmaidens. I am also thankful for the privilege I had of attending several young people's prayer meetings. One especially was the one that was in charge of Apostle G. T. Griffiths. Although he is not a young man in years he is at heart and anything which he can do for the young people he is willing and ready to do. We had a fine prophecy given us in that special meeting through one of our young sisters. It has given me added strength and courage to face the temptations and trials which befall the young people of the church. I hope that in the future I may look back upon this reunion as being a starting point in my life. I have been deprived of attending the meetings of the Saints but my heart is always at the meetings which I know are taking place at home. I have not availed myself of the opportunities I had as I should have done, but no one hardly knows the sweet part of life until he has partaken of the bitter. I see now the folly of staying away from the meetings for no reason at all other than having a good time. I have had many good times in my life but none are so dear to my memories as the hours that I have spent in Sunday school or other meetings which I used to attend. It seems as though one does not appreciate home and loved ones until he has been deprived of their presence and the surroundings of home. I have it much better than most men here. I have a good bit of time to myself and I am striving hard to make use of it to the best possible advantage.

There are many more things that I would like to write about but as this is my first attempt at writing your valuable paper I suppose I had better close. I would appreciate hearing from any of the Saints.

So hoping that I may have the prayers of the Saints in my behalf and trusting that I may be favored with a reply, I am

A brother in Christ,

LOUIS C. SERIG.

PARIS ISLAND, Training Camp, Headquarters Detachment.

BEVIER, MISSOURI, October 6, 1919.

Editors Herald: Brethren Arch E. McCord, and F. T. Mussell, closed a three-weeks preaching services here Sunday the 5th. Eight persons were led into the waters of baptism by Brother McCord, making a total of fifteen since Brother McCord came into this district; seven at Macon and eight at Bevier.

Brother McCord occupied most of the time with a series of chart sermons. He is a fluent and forceful speaker, and held the attention of the good audiences which greeted him during the series. The meetings were the best attended held here in a number of years, and attracted people who had never been inside our building before.

Brother Mussell is devoting most of his labor among the Saints, especially those who have been inactive for some time. Being acquainted with all the Saints he should accomplish much good.

Sunday the 28th was Rally Day. A heavy rain fell the night before and continued most all morning, which greatly interfered with out-of-town attendance. We expected a good crowd from surrounding towns and country, but the rain made the roads impassable for cars. A few who came in the day before and a few by train with a good local attendance made the day a decided success. In the afternoon prayer, social, and sacrament meetings the Holy Spirit was present in a marked degree, and words of comfort came to some in need of the same. Dinner and supper were served in the basement.

At 6.30 in the evening the service flag demobilization took place with appropriate program.

From here Brother McCord will go to Huntsville, the county seat of Randolph County to open a series of chart sermons and continue as long as interest lasts. A large storeroom has been secured by the few live local members there, the meetings have been well advertised in advance and we expect to hear of good reports from there.

Elder John Davis arrived here on the 5th, and will visit other points in the district in the near future.

Several young men of promise were added to our membership in this series of meetings, some of whom will be heard of later.

We are glad to see in the church papers that the work is "Onward and Upward."

LAMONI, IOWA

With the whole world in commotion, we do not know what a day may bring forth. We are surely living in the perilous times, when the hearts of men shall fail them.

J. L. WILLIAMS.

SHERRILL, NEW YORK, October 10, 1919.

Editors Herald: We inclose printed matter regarding our Sherrill church opening. Though our branch membership numbers forty, there are but sixteen in this place—the others being at East Syracuse, Malone, and Saranac Lake.

Ground was broken for the church in June. The lot—a good liberal one in a good location—was given us by the company for whom Brother Mesle, our branch president, works. The plans followed were drawn by our church architect, Brother Henry Smith, and have been pleasing.

We hope our friends from near and far will pay us a visit on this occasion. They may not get hotel fare, but we will do our best. We have some good friends here who will help us out. We do not want our little church—and it isn't so little after all—to be known for being the one that "nobody goes to," so hope to start out with a good crowd. We do not expect to get the crowds later, but to interest further numbers who have already shown an interest. We are located in a splendid community from more than one standpoint, in a beautiful section of country. Brother McGuire made us a flying visit last year and expressed himself as satisfied with our choice of lots. Brother Loveland of Fulton has been the contractor on the job, and has been very free with his extra time after hours which he gives us. Brother Whitehead of Syracuse helped us on the mason work.

We have been pleased to have Brother Bishop with us a number of weeks to help us, he going and coming as necessary to fill appointments in other branches. We need the presence and help of Saints who can come and we hope it will be possible to come together in the Spirit of the Master that we may have a conference long to be remembered. Satan has tried mightily here as elsewhere to overcome the Saints by indifference and other ways. We are delighted to be able to have Brother Luff with us.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

MARY LEWIS MESLE.

NOTICE CONCERNING RAILWAY CLERGY RATES FOR WOMEN

By understanding with the clergy bureau at Chicago, all applications for reduced rates to our church men and workers, are sent to the First Presidency for approval or disapproval, before final action is had by the bureau. Under certain conditions women church workers can secure the benefits of reduced rates, but the rules under which they can do so are strict and limited. In all cases, therefore, where any of our women church workers contemplate making application for such rates, we advise and strongly urge that the application be sent to our office first. This will save time and possible embarrassment. FREDERICK M. SMITH.

The Bishopric

Owing to the resignation of Brother C. W. Prettyman as Bishop's agent of the Western Nebraska and Black Hills District, we hereby appoint W. A. Teagarden, of Chappell, Nebraska, to serve as his successor. After November 1, the branch solicitors and scattered Saints may send their tithes and offerings to Brother Teagarden.

It is the purpose of our heavenly Father in the operation of his law to perfect his children, and we trust that the Saints may realize the value of the financial law, as, in this respect, nothing will help us to overcome the spirit of selfishness as will the imparting of our substance for the benefit of others.

Respectfully,

B. R. MCGUIRE,

Presiding Bishop.

EASTERN MONTANA DISTRICT.

Having received the resignation of Brother B. D. Stratton we herewith appoint Brother J. W. Vail, Andes, Montana as Bishop's agent of the above-named district. This appointment to become effective November 1. Branch solicitors of the scattered Saints may send their tithes and offerings to Brother Vail after that date.

The response which the Saints of this district have made in the past in complying with the financial law, I trust will be shown to Brother Vail by your consecrated efforts.

Sincerely yours,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,

*Presiding Bishop.Pastoral

To the Saints and Friends of Eastern Michigan and Detroit Districts; Greeting: Having been appointed to supervise missionary work in the above districts, I earnestly request your cooperation in this very, very important work.

We are short of laborers and the field is white unto the harvest, therefore it is necessary, that every one who can get outside of the precincts of this branch, without doing injury to the local work, thrust in his sickle and reap.

The call for laborers, in a missionary sense, is greater than we can hope to be able to supply, but shall try and give special attention to the branches which seem most in need.

Will branch presidents report to me early where the services of a missionary are desired, and we will try to supply your needs. We wish to labor to your interest and it is necessary that we have sufficient time to thoroughly advertise the meetings we expect to hold and also to get in touch with the musical talent and arrange for their part of the program. A truly cooperative effort will spell success.

Will the missionaries please keep me posted as to your location, from time to time, that we may make our efforts where the best results can be obtained.

Wishing to be a true colaborer, I am,

Sincerely your brother,

JOHN R. GRICE.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN. Permanent Address 1164 Fourth Avenue.

Notices of Silence

To All Concerned: This is to serve notice that Brother Daniel E. Hough, high priest of the Kansas City stake, has been placed under silence. He has also been dropped from the personnel of the stake high council. His ministerial licenses have been requested, but to date he has declined to turn them in. He preaches at times at the public market square, but let it be understood he is not representing the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

J. A. TANNER, Stake President.

It having lately been brought to my attention that one J. W. DuBoise, who has been silenced for cause, has been preaching, I hereby notify the Saints and friends that he is no longer a representative of the church.

AMOS T. HIGDON,

President Western Colorado District.

THE UNDYING FIRE.—By H. G. Wells. Mr. Wells has taken a great spiritual conflict as the theme of his novel. This he has made vivid and compelling through characters drawn with his usual penetration and insight and through incidents of a highly dramatic nature. Job Huss is as commanding a figure as has appeared in any of the author's books. Unreasoned faith and agnosticism alike fail to move him; and in the end, like Job of old, he is rewarded. Man must fight and move forward because there is some God-given thing in his heart that impels him—this is Mr. Well's message back of his story. Published by the Macmillan Company, New York City.

BETTER SUNDAY SCHOOL QUARTERLIES

Although the general officers of the Sunday School have said little about it, they have realized the need of more and better illustrations in the Sunday School Quarterlies, side-lights on lessons, blackboard helps; also a good teachers' quarterly to raise their efficiency and impart confidence in their work which would react in more real school work and better taught pupils. While the new graded course of lessons was being constructed, the matter could not be delivered far enough ahead to permit of the preparation of these much needed helps. But the course is now nearly all written up, and the executive council at a recent meeting made arrangements for the final revision under one editor, and a consulting board to advise on the various points of revision, this board to take the place of the revising committee. By next convention the superintendent expects to report some real progress in this direction. It is expected that all Quarterlies will be delivered several months in advance before next conference convenes, thus reaching the outlying fields and foreign countries in good time.

MOVEMENTS OF THE CHURCH LEADERS

At the stake conference in Independence, on Sunday the 5th, President Frederick M. Smith spoke in the afternoon and President Elbert A. Smith in the evening. Apostle William Aylor was with the Saints of Wichita, Kansas, on that date. The dedication of the church at Colorado Springs, Colorado, occurred on the 12th of this month, with Elbert A. Smith as speaker. Apostles J. F. Curtis and Gomer Griffiths are in the East, and will tour the Southeastern States.

President Frederick M. Smith spent Saturday and Sunday, 18th and 19th, with Elder Hubert Case in a meeting with the Indians at Tekamah, Nebraska.

Apostle J. A. Gillen was in Omaha on Sunday, the 19th, en route to Michigan and Canada where he will labor for a time.

A HOME COMING DAY

R. A. Lloyd, the general treasurer of the Religio Association is also superintendent of the Zion's Hope Sunday School of Saint Louis. In this latter capacity, he has had prepared a number of convenient vest pocket folders, inviting everyone to come out to a home coming day of the Sunday school, September 28. These little folders were distributed September 21. The Sunday school workers and teachers each took a supply, and disposed of them among their friends. The result was a record crowd of about double the average attendance. On the back of the vest pocket program folders, there was printed a roll of honor of the young men, who had enlisted for service in the late world war.

There was held at Marion, Michigan, on September 7 a special gathering, beginning with priesthood meeting under the direction of the district presidency at 7:30 a. m., followed with social and sacrament service at 9 o'clock; baptism at 1:30; preaching at 10:45, 2:30, 3:45, 4:45, and 8 o'clock. A time of refreshing is reported.

Bishop C. J. Hunt and wife, of Holden Stake, left recently on an auto trip to Boise, Idaho for a visit with his brother.

Sister May Brumfield, Mahomet, Illinois, Box 135, would like to hear from the Saints in Eldorado Springs, Missouri. They live ten miles west of Champaign, on the Big Four. Any Saints near, please write her.

WIRELESS RESTRICTIONS REMOVED

The United States Navy Department has announced the removal of restrictions on amateur radio sending and receiving, effective October 1. The stations of the L. D. S. Radio Service will therefore be reopened shortly and radio communication will be resumed between Independence and Lamoni. When stations were closed down at the entrance of the United States into the world war upwards of twenty messages a day were being handled between the Lamoni and Independence stations.

The future for radio telegraphy has never been brighter than it is to-day. The demand for radio men far exceeds the supply. Exceedingly high salaries are being paid radio trained men. Commercial operators who have just finished training step into positions at $125 per month, besides having their expenses paid. The necessary training for radio operators can be secured at Graceland College in eighteen weeks' time.

A movement is on foot to organize for effective service all the radio experimenters and operators within the church. Everyone interested should write Arthur B. Church, Grace-land College, Lamoni, Iowa, for information.

Sister Dorothy, of Alameda, California, requests prayers of the Saints, as she is suffering severely from muscular rheumatism.

On October 3, the Stone Church at Independence had a very interesting opening up of the winter season for the Religio. A goodly number of special classes have been arranged so those who attend may study church doctrine, Book of Mormon normal, Doctrine and Covenants, as well as the regular Quarterly lessons. The Independence Religio is recognized as the largest and at least one of the most progressive if not the best, Religio societies in the church. It should be universally patronized by those living in that community.

Following a series of meetings at Woodbine, Iowa, Elder Daniel Macgregor attended the conference at Magnolia (11th to 13th) and began a week's series immediately following at that place.

CENTRAL MICHIGAN HONORS RETIRING PRESIDENT

Upon the retirement from office after serving as president of the Central Michigan District for eleven years, the Saints of the district drafted and adopted resolutions of appreciation in honor of Elder George W. Burt, of Beaverton, Michigan. When he took charge of the district, it numbered but 16 branches with 1,093 members, and now has 31 branches and 2,100 members.

What Does Printer's Ink Mean to You?

How often have you thought, "Oh, if I could only preach, how zealous I would be in telling the good news"?

How often have you prayed, "Oh, Lord, give strength to thy servants and hasten the day of thy coming"?

How often have your souls been wrought with the feeling, "Oh, if people but only knew the gospel of righteousness, how gladly would they forsake their unhappy ways"?

Why need these thoughts and prayers and impulses go up in vain? Do you see no way to give voice to your belief; to give answer to your prayers; to give strength and purpose to your faith?

The means is at your hand. You have a powerful ally. All the powers of publicity are at your command. The Church press can give word to your message.

Printer's ink means publicity! Publicity means the power of an idea multiplied!

You ministers, let the church press multiply your effort a thousand fold. You members of eager soul, yet bound tongue, give voice to the message of your brother.

Printer's ink can speak in any tongue. It is tireless, respected, accepted into any home, and read by all the millions. It needs only gold to send it to the ends of the earth.

Think you the Lord cannot bless the printed word?

Make the church press your preacher. Where you cannot go, send it. What you cannot say, let it say for you. What you cannot do, it can accomplish. Give it a chance.

Follow these advertisements if you would know how to help and what to do.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

DO YOU READ THE "HERALD"?

Every member of the church should be a reader of the HERALD. For the past few years the editors have had in mind and have discussed with the management the aggressive pushing of the HERALD to secure a larger subscription list, their primary purpose being to reach as many members as is possible.

Unfortunately the conditions existing during the war prevented any extension of our subscription list, and also prevented such plans as the manager of the Herald Publishing House and the editors had in mind for a possible increase of space in order to take in matters of general interest, book reviews of special interest to our members, current events, or happenings in the world. Fortunately many of the hindrances of the past in this respect are now removed.

We want to make the HERALD distinctly the official organ of the church, making its special appeal to our own members; discussing those matters fairly from every viewpoint in which our members are interested. Especially we desire to take up the immediate problems concerned with Zion and its establishment; and make the HERALD particularly the paper of our church people, as has already been indicated in the issue of September 17. We should have something in the nature of an open forum, in which moot or disputed questions can be discussed.

It must be remembered, however, that what is there written does not purport to be the action of the church, except as such may be directly indicated; nor necessarily the action of the leading officials of the church. It is for the information of our people, to show the viewpoints held by different men, and also to assist, through our discussion and consideration of these problems, to a better understanding of the details of the work before us. In fact, this statement is true, and has been true of the HERALD as a whole.

It may be said, as an official organ it is necessarily authoritative. As the official organ it should be the primary medium of communication between the general church officers and the church. It should present the ideas being held by the church membership. But we must remember that the church has held continually for independent thought, and has attempted only in the most necessary cases a formal declaration.

We prefer to urge rather independence of thought and the intellectual and spiritual growth which is thereby rendered possible, recognizing at the same time that while there are certain fundamental truths, our understanding of those truths does and should change, in that it comes to a better understanding of their meaning, as time passes.

Some have criticized the signing of our editorials and the lack of an editorial tone. The reason is that the assistant and associate editors do not desire to attempt to commit the editors in chief, or the church, farther than their own view may achieve that result. President Joseph Smith, while editor of the HERALD, though the head of the church, repeatedly stated that he was expressing his own opinion rather than attempting to commit the church or even the eldership of the church as a whole.

Much of the above and more the editors have had in mind for sometime. Conditions existing the past few years prevented these ideals being carried into effect. Fortunately, in the last six months these conditions have been changing, so as to make possible that which we have long had in mind.

It is only fair to say that the recent manager of the Herald Publishing House, Bishop Albert Carmichael, has favored the carrying out of these ideas, as soon as it was practicable.

We are very glad to state that the new manager, J. A. Koehler, comes thoroughly imbued with very much the same ideals that we have had in mind and offers enthusiastic support, so that we move forward with a lively hope of making the HERALD even more responsive to our interests than has been the case in the recent past.

We propose to put this plan in effect as rapidly as possible and will welcome contributions on live topics of interest. We will send out a number of special requests, but we hope our readers and thinkers will not wait for that. The HERALD as your organ should represent you as nearly as possible, and should be an instrument in the hands of the church for self-education and for the advancement of the work intrusted to all.

ARMY INTELLIGENCE TESTS AT GRACELAND COLLEGE

Last spring Professor Floyd M. McDowell of Graceland College used the army intelligence tests on his various classes, and then extended his investigation to all the students of Graceland College.

He also extended these tests to the various schools in the county, especially the high schools, though we have not the figures for his results with them, nor for any part of the Graceland students except those in the junior college.

This year he tested all of the students in the course of religious education. They came a week before the college opened, and he tested them at the onset of their work.

There were naturally wide individual differences, but after he had compiled the figures it was noted that those who on enrollment stated that they had had collegiate work, made a better average than those who had only high school work; while the high school graduates did better than the grammar school graduates, on the average. Of course there were many individual exceptions, and the tests were not such as to show so much the amount of knowledge, as they were to show the mental activity and ability.

Shortly after the opening of Graceland College he examined the new students in the freshman class.

It is interesting to note, as Professor McDowell points out, that one large university is using these tests for admission to the undergraduate department, while others are using them in part to supplement the former examinations.

We have requested these figures several times, thinking that they would be of interest to our readers, and submit them as compiled by Professor McDowell.

The highest average made by the new students this year was by a young man in the department of religious education; a young man who has been devoting much time recently to church work and auxiliary work. The average of the men taking the course in religious education is above the minimum for "A," as is also the average of the college men for 1918, and the new college men in the freshman class of 1919.

Much interest is being shown at present in the possible use of the standard intelligence test used by the United States Government in the various training camps of the country during the recent war. One of the leading universities has adopted this test as a basis of determining college entrance in lieu of the usual entrance examinations. Many other institutions are finding the test at least an administrative agent when used to furnish a basis for advice to students. These tests have been in use in Graceland College during the last year. The following is a general summary of the results showing how that institution ranks with other institutions of the country. The score given represents the median or average score of each institution. The total possible score is 212 points. No one is expected to make this amount however.

ILLITERACY IN THE UNITED STATES

One of the surprising developments of the late war was the high percentage of illiteracy found among men of army age, in some States of the South especially.

Illiteracy took two forms. First: the inability to read or write English. Second, the inability to read or write at all. It is quite right that we should consider the necessity that the citizens of this country should be able to read and write English. But this form of illiteracy may be met with comparatively little effort, because it represents those who are able to read and write in their own tongue, and so represents only a partial illiteracy. In many instances it is coupled with brilliant ability. Unfortunately it means in many other instances a rather high degree of ignorance, which includes a number from Europe who can read or write any language only poorly. It should be corrected.

Second, the even more serious illiteracy is of those, some of whom were born and raised in this country who cannot read or write at all. Some jump to the conclusion that it is because of the commercial organization. But the highest percentage of such illiteracy is to be found where men are freer in the mountains.

It was natural that the Government should at once set to work to correct this defect, in those drafted to the army. But we should recognize the fact that this is not simply one central government, but that our Government is a federation of States, and that all powers not specifically given to the Federal Government nor prohibited to the States are reserved to the several States, and the people. (United States Constitution, Amendment 10.) Among these are such local provisions as schools.

It is a well recognized fact that some States have made entirely inadequate provision for education. There is a wide diversity between such States as Massachusetts and South Carolina, and in the amount per capita expended for educational purposes.

Hence it naturally follows that there is a wide discrepancy in literacy and illiteracy. Yet primarily it is a question for the States, and not for the Federal Government.

But we have awakened to the fact that illiteracy in our midst means greater danger to all, in times of peace or of war.

Hence in pursuit of the common welfare the Federal Government is making a decided effort to correct this lack. (United States Constitution, article 1, section 8, clause 1.) The school system still remains primarily a matter of State organization and State provision; and is such under our constitution. We mention this because some are losing sight of the vital fact.

Congress provides schools in the District of Columbia, in the territories of the United States, in Alaska, the Philippines, and Congress has done so in past years in territories not yet made into States. But in times of peace its authority is limited in the various States of the Union. S. A. B.

PHYSICIANS ON ALCOHOLIC DRINKS

A great deal of attention has been paid in the newspapers to a resolution adopted by the Allied Medical Association with regard to beer and wine. But it seems only a few papers, comparatively, have published the fact that a few days later the association rescinded its early action.

However, we should remember that the American Medical Association, with over 80,000 members who represented the ablest physicians of the country, has gone on record decidedly against the use of alcoholic beverages. In 1917, in their session in New York City, Doctor Frank Billings, Chairman of the Council of Health and Public Instruction of the American Medical Association, introduced the following resolution, which represented the unanimous sentiment of that council:

It is the unanimous sense of the council that alcohol is wholly without drug value either as a tonic or stimulant or in any other therapeutic way, that it has no food value and no value in the treatment of disease, that its only permissible use in medicine is as a preservative or in the preparation of pharmaceutical products.

At the same session Doctor Charles H. Mayo, of Rochester, Minnesota, when he was installed as president, made a strong appeal for prohibition.

We must aid in all that will elevate the general standard of and conserve the American citizen. Prohibition is a war measure, the value of which is beyond discussion. Medicine has reached a period when alcohol is rarely employed as a drug but is displaced by better remedies. Alcohol's only place now is in the arts and sciences. National prohibition would be welcomed by the medical profession.

Also the house of delegates, which is the authoritative body of the American Medical Association adopted the following resolutions:

We believe that the use of alcohol as a beverage is detrimental to the human economy, and its use in therapeutics as a tonic or a stimulant, or as a food, has no scientific basis. Therefore, be it,

Resolved, That the American Medical Association opposes the use of alcohol as a beverage; and be it further,

Resolved, That the use of alcohol as a therapeutic agent should be discouraged.

But as early as July 14, 1914, the alienists and neurologists who are the specialists in nervous and mental diseases, including insanity, in their convention in Chicago, adopted the following:

Whereas, In the opinion of the alienists and neurologists of the United States, in convention assembled, it has been definitely established that alcohol when taken into the system acts as a definite poison to the brain and other tissue; and

Whereas, the effects of this poison are directly or indirectly responsible for a large proportion of the insane, epileptic, feeble-minded and other forms of mental, moral and physical degeneracy; and,

Whereas, The laws of many States make alcohol freely available for drinking purposes, and therefore cater to the physical, mental, and moral degeneration of the people; and,

Whereas, Many hospitals for the insane and other public institutions are now compelled to admit and care for a multitude of inebriates; and,

Whereas, Many States have already established separate colonies for the treatment and reeducation of such inebriates, with great benefit to the individuals and to the commonwealths; therefore be it

Resolved, That we unqualifiedly condemn the use of alcoholic beverages and recommend that the various State legislatures take steps to eliminate such use; and be it further

Resolved, That we recommend the general establishment by all States and territories of special colonies of hospitals for the care of inebriates; and

Resolved, That organized medicine should initiate and carry on a systematic, persistent propaganda for the education of the public regarding the deleterious effects of alcohol; and be it further

Resolved, That the medical profession should take the lead in securing adequate legislation to the ends herein specified.

Doctor A. M. Corwin, Secretary, Chicago.
 Doctor Charles F. Read, Chairman, Chicago.
 Doctor W. S. Lindsay, Topeka, Kansas.
 Doctor Tom B. Throckmorton, Des Moines, Iowa.
 Doctor Theodore Diller, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania.

This action of the American Medical Association was again affirmed in June, 1918, with 7,000 doctors in attendance.

The above is taken from The American Issue for June 28. It is probably a well-known fact that leading scientists and physicians all over the world recognize that alcoholic beverage is not a good beverage, and has very little, if any therapeutic value. In leading hospitals its use has very greatly decreased in recent years.

EDITORIAL SELECTION

O Thou, the contrite sinner's Friend
 Who loving, lov'st then to the end;
 On this alone my hopes depend,
 That thou wilt plead for me!

When I have erred and gone astray
 Afar from thee and wisdom's way,
 And see no guiding, glimmering ray,
 Still, Savior, plead for me!

When the full light of heavenly day
 Reveals my sins in dread array,

Say, Thou hast washed them all away—
 Oh, say, Thou plead'st for me!

The conference ratified the work done by the reunion committee and passed a resolution in favor of conducting the reunion conjointly with the Little Sioux District. Brother Barrett presented a brief talk to the conference, outlining the work as accomplished and advis-

The Times, the Church, the "Herald," and the World

That these are troublesome times, no one will deny. The world is passing through a crisis. The outcome of all this turning and overturning, no one knows who has not the prophetic eye, or who has not been enlightened by prophetic utterance. This much we do know, the world has cause for great concern; small and great, rich and poor, saint and sinner—all are compelled to take some part in a terrible conflict of opposing interests that is wasting the resources and throwing out of adjustment the organizations, national and constituent, of the nations of the world.

Is this the prelude to the day "that shall burn as an oven," when "all the proud and all who do wickedly shall burn as stubble"? Is it?

The "church" is in the world even if it is not of the world. If the material well-being, and, in some measure, the spiritual well-being of the Saints (if we may separate the two) is measured by conditions in society at large, of which Saints are a part, then we, too, have cause for concern. Beyond question saintly interests have been and are affected by conditions in general. It would be foolhardy to lull ourselves to sleep with that delusive and sometimes intoxicating hallucination that we need only to wait and see the salvation of the Lord. "Work out your salvation" is the message of the hour to this people.

The latter-day "work" has a mission. This church was brought into existence for the express purpose of saving mankind. We have a trust; we are under a responsibility; it is our business by individual and collective conduct to effect our own salvation and in this way make clear to the understanding of the world its only possible hope of redemption. Will we do it?

or shall we betray our trust? Will we save ourselves as we try to save others, or shall we waste our opportunity and share with the world the fruits of its folly? These questions await your answer.

The HERALD is the official organ of the church. This statement is not intended to in any way or manner minimize the importance of our other publications. What we want to do is to emphasize the fact that no person can be up to date in this church who does not get the message of this very excellent magazine. The HERALD is a means especially provided for the special work of conveying to the membership at large the questions of importance that arise in our work from time to time. How can a person be alive to the work of the church and at the same time out of touch with what the church is doing?

A BIGGER AND BETTER HERALD

I may now confide to you a matter concerning which the editors, from modesty, may not speak. Here it is: The HERALD is to be a bigger and better magazine than ever. An elaborate program is now in process of evolution which will make it the most powerful means of internal development that the church has at its command. The editors have set themselves to the accomplishment of this task; there is no question about it, it is being done.

But we must broaden the field of usefulness of our publications; we must increase the size of our subscription list; we must interest a wider circle of peoples. And right here is where you may call to your service the most powerful ally available just now for giving expression—effectual expression—of your devotion to the cause of Christ.

It Is Written

"Should children pay tithing?" has frequently been asked. It is an important question and worthy of careful analysis in the light of God's word.

In Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4, parents are admonished that they should teach their children to understand the principles of the gospel, to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord, and if they fail to so teach, "The sin be upon the head of the parents." It has been said that this applies only to Zion and her organized stakes, to whom the revelation is directed, so that outside thereof the law does not apply.

Immediately following the foregoing admonition, we read in the same paragraph, "And the inhabitants of Zion shall also observe the Sabbath Day to keep it holy." The same method of reasoning would free the Saints outside of Zion and her stakes from observing the Sabbath Day and keeping it holy. Obviously such reasoning is fallacious.

Parents throughout the church should therefore teach their children to understand and obey the gospel of Christ in its fullness. The principle of tithing is a part of Christ's gospel. It is one of the means designed of God to enable the church to carry on its missionary work and to assist the poor and needy. In the observance of this duty is developed the qualities of soul that fits us for celestial environment.

Children are not barred from complying with the other principles of the gospel, provided their parents do not object, so why should an exception be made in tithing paying?

Teach children to honor the Lord by observing the financial system revealed in the Scriptures, "and when they are old they will not depart from it."

To give one tenth of what we possess to the Lord does not work a hardship upon anyone—young or old. Those who possess much can well afford to give the tithe, while those who possess little have proportionately less to give, and all have nine tenths left with the joy of having paid their debt to the Lord and the promise of his added blessings.

Let the children know that when they pay their tithing, they are carrying the gospel to the nations as does the missionary who goes forth with the message because tithing makes it possible for the missionary to go. A lifelong interest and devotion are thus awakened to the cause of Christ.

If we want the children to be interested in the work of preaching the everlasting gospel to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, together with the working out of the economic program connected therewith unto the blessing of mankind, surely we should not deny them the happy privilege of taking part and contributing to its success.

IS THE CHURCH A SUCCESS?

Aristotle says in his philosophy: "To fulfill the purpose for which a thing is made is a success." That life, and only that life, which fulfills the purpose of its divine creation is a success. This is a truth conceded by every Christian scholar, no matter what his creed or shade of belief. The primary teaching of all Latter Day Saint doctrine is "Holiness unto the Lord." Now, holiness must be a success, for God is holy. A life hidden in Christ is holy, because it is Godlike. But is the Latter Day Saint movement, and are the Latter Day Saints of the Reorganized Church, as a people, a success? There are two places, it seems to me, where this test may be put. First, as to character, and second, as to influence.

We ask first, Has our church produced characters such as are pleasing to God? Are the lives of the members of our church a fulfillment of the divine purpose of human life upon earth? As a convert to the church, and as one who has observed closely, I answer boldly in the affirmative. If this is not true then there is no movement and there are no people on earth who are a success. In all my experience, with Christians of various denominations, I feel I can truthfully say, take them as a whole, there is no group of people who are cleaner, purer, truer, more honest and sincere, or try harder to live just right than our people. I have studied them in the various branches and sometimes under sore trials and grievous temptations, and while there are some who are far from what they ought to be, all who make sincere profession of the gospel will stand any test, that is using Christ and his doctrine as the rule of judgment.

I acknowledge that this is a strong statement. Had I been born and reared in the church, a fitting modesty would forbid me making it. But being as I am, I feel I can do so without violating any sense of propriety. The statement may require an explanation when made to those outside the church, but the explanation will not change the conclusion. The Reorganized Church has received many a thrust, has been subjected to many a reproach, but continues in its work, and where given a chance continues to produce excellency of character. I have been laboring for eight weeks in two of the leading and most prosperous towns of Montana. In both of them I found a Latter Day Saint honored and esteemed and ranked high among the leading citizens because of integrity of character.

I do not for a moment, close my eyes to the fact that we have many in the church, who either through downright indifference or wrong living reflect no credit upon us. We have many who have been convicted of the truth, but have not been converted to it. "By their fruits ye shall know them." There are many who have been born in the gospel, some who have embraced it by conviction, and who continue in it, and have never experienced its blessings in their lives, because they have not surrendered to it. I have found a few, only a few, thank God, hypocritically professing its blessing. But again: "By their fruits ye shall know them."

There are some in the gospel rejecting its teaching in their lives and resisting its power to build character. They are failures, but their failure is in no way chargeable to the gospel. Then there are those who have been in the church for a time with a real experience of the blessings of the gospel, and have built true character, but have been overtaken and have stepped aside into more or less grievous sin and have brought reproach upon the cause. Sometimes the injury they have done the church is far-reaching.

Imagine my surprise when one of the professors of the Missmea University, Montana, from which place I am writing this article, confronted me with the scurrilous book of R. C. Evans. The professor, though broad in his convictions, had based his opinion of our church upon that book, and because of it, held out in his prejudice against me. Let me say, to his credit that before I got through with him, I saw him tear that book to shreds, and in disgust throw it into the wastebasket.

The sad downfall of men like the author of that book cannot be charged to the gospel. Such a downfall can only occur by a neglect and rejection of the teachings of the gospel, and the exaltation of the ego. Again it cannot be charged to any teaching of the church. Such apostasies—thank God, they are very few—are in spite of rather than the result of the teaching of the church.

Some have turned aside because of sin and not because of heresy. The church, like a true mother, has according to their own statements to me, dealt leniently with them as soon as they showed a humble, penitent spirit, and brought forth fruits worthy of repentance. I have the privilege of knowing a few of them and I know, by their lives that whatever their sin may have been, they have been recovered by the gospel, and have developed characters that are beautiful and strong.

In dealing with such the church does not exact more of them than God does. David stepped aside grivously but when righteous was a man after God's own heart. I know of no church, in all Christendom, that offers to poor, suffering, erring humanity greater and grander redemption, recovery, and character building than does our church. In one town in Montana I found a member of our church who is universally regarded as a miracle of grace. He had been reckoned among the vile, had served a term in jail, but is to-day on his feet, a model husband and father, a good citizen. All this came about by his joining our church, and rendering himself to the blessed influence of the gospel. Those outside the church, in that town, have said to me, "There certainly must be something in your Latter Day Saint gospel to do what it did for that man. It is almost incredible. I could hardly believe it unless I had witnessed it."

When I was leaving the town there was talk, in the branch, of making that brother president. I hope it will be carried out. If I were a member of the branch I would vote for him. In his degradation he was not despised as was Levi, the hated publican, yet Jesus called him to high office, and he wrote the beautiful gospel according to Saint Matthew, one of the most precious documents upon earth. What can stay the zeal of a truly converted man? No power of earth or of hell, or both combined.

I confess there is that which needs explanation in connection with the outward lives of many in our ranks. All of us fall short of the ideal the gospel holds up to us, so frail are we. But no outward action can be correctly tested aside from the inward motive and spiritual light. While men look and largely judge from the outward appearance, God looketh upon the heart. If there are other religious bodies that produce more ideal outward lives, it is because of their intellectual advantage rather than superior goodness. Goodness is the real test of character, and the seat of this is in the heart.

In spite of the many faults of the Saints, owing perhaps to what the world would call lack of culture and education, I venture to say, no religious organization in the world produces greater goodness. When I read and hear of the saintly characters and the heroism of some of our early missionaries I cannot help expressing a doubt as to whether we are now producing such characters. It is hard to resist what is in the atmosphere everywhere about us. It is hard to avoid being affected by it in some way. There is among us, as among all other religious bodies, an over-yielding of the rigidness of outward life to the styles and methods of the world and to the commercial and secular spirit of the age, to the neglect of spiritual culture. While this is greatly to be deplored, yet as we look at other religious organizations we feel we have no reason to change our conclusion as given above.

I am perfectly honest when I say that I believe after three years of the closest observation, that no religious body in modern times has produced a cleaner, purer, and better motived people than the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ. In this, I say, emphatically the church has been a success and is a success, and the Latter Day Saints, as a people, have been a success and are a success.

But it grieves me to say neither the church nor the people have been the success they should be in producing strength of character, holiness, and refinement, and the finest adaptation to the true affairs and the proper niceties of life. There has not been among the members—and this is most evident—the development of brotherly love, kindness, mercy, consideration, charity, thankfulness, appreciation, meekness, gentleness, patience, radical honesty and truthfulness, and loyalty to conviction, that there should be. When I say loyalty to conviction, I don't mean stubbornness of personal opinion.

Further, I ask, is the church a success in its influence upon others in winning them to the truth of the gospel? Personally, I must say, I cannot answer this question with the bold assurance I did the former! I fear we have not impressed the world about us, our neighbors and our friends, as we should, and that we are not now doing so, even to as great an extent as we should. We must be up and doing, even on the alert, to counteract the injury some who have gone out from us are doing the church to-day.

Influence, we must remember, does not depend solely upon the character. Character does exercise a sure, silent influence, but probably words and actions are the most telling here. The heart conditions may be much better than the example we set. Our Savior's words are searching. Figs do not grow on thistles, and by the fruit we shall know the character. But poor apples—according to the words of a farmer here in Montana—will indicate an apple tree, but will not make that tree very desirable.

Have we borne the fruit in our mingling with others in the everyday life of business and society such as to make the tree desirable and create in others a desire to know our interpretation of the gospel, or, at least, reflect credit and honor upon it? Are our lives the reproof of sin, the producers of conviction and the example of the believer they should be? Do we give confidence to what we profess to believe and draw others to it? Are we succeeding in impressing the world as the Master admonished us to do? We can never expect the gospel to become popular in this age. It is the antithesis to the worldliness of the age. For it to become popular in this sense, and lose its reproach, would be for it to cease to be the gospel. Nevertheless, it should be our supreme passion to clothe it with honor by our lives, and remove from it the stigma with which false teachers have branded it.

Now let us look for a moment to our Latter Day Saints homes. This, I admit, is a sensitive subject. I feel I would be false to the spirit that prompted me to write this article, were I to omit some reference to the home. Where are our children? Are they following in the latter-day work or are they ashamed of it? Do they evade it when question of social standing is at stake? We confess, with very great alarm, basing our knowledge upon our own observation, that hundreds of them are not what they ought to be. I know cases where they professed ignorance of the church, and signed themselves as belonging to some sectarian denomination. So long as the present stigma rests upon the church, so long will Satan use this sharp weapon in his assaults against the faith living in the hearts of our young people.

It seems to me, Latter Day Saint parents should be the best parents and have the best united homes in all the land. But too often we see even leaders in the church failing to win their own children. I do not mean to say there is ground for censoriousness here, but there is good ground for some deep thinking and earnest praying. May it not be well for our parents in the church to search their hearts as with a lighted candle and ask themselves the question: Are we a success in home influence as home influence? In many of our homes, I am told, there is no family altar, and but little respect for grace at the table. There is no government as to the company kept, places frequented, style of clothing or literature read. At other times there is an over-strictness, such as makes no provision for social life and recreation.

In this way the church is made to appear undesirable and our young people go out from it. Some of our parents have an abnormal desire that their children should be popular. They are willing to compromise with the world to gain this end. They do not regard the children in their local branch, up to the world's standard, therefore they will not allow their children to associate with them.

We thank God for our successes, let us pray him to teach us our failures and help us to apply the remedy.

AUGUSTINE DWYER.

So many men in the world are going nowhere in particular that when one comes along—even though he be amusing and insignificant—who is really (and passionately) going somewhere, what a stir he communicates to the dull world! ## CROSSED LINES

Much has been written of late on the topic of "Education and the church" and the inference seems to be held that the membership largely are opposed to the principle of education. Surely, this cannot be. Why, all around and about us and on every hand we hear from every conceivable type and class a lament for their lack of education above and beyond what they have.

This at least is my opinion and seems to be warranted by my experience. Whether it is probably right or undoubtedly wrong an expression of it may at any rate serve to strengthen the true and weaken the false.

When I was soliciting students for a well-known correspondence school I found among the workers in the great industrial establishments a majority, it seemed to me, who readily acknowledged the value and importance of education, whether technical, commercial, or academic. And whilst only a small percentage could be induced actively to begin courses of instruction it was not that the others were in any sense opposed to the principle involved but rather, if my observation was approximately accurate, because of habits of carelessness and procrastination, or because the pressure of economic conditions, from their point of view, was such as to make it difficult, in some cases, to assume the added cost and, in others, to give the necessary time and strength.

I feel assured that the percentage of active response to the call of education is higher within the membership and appreciation of its value perhaps more extensive.

It is quite true there are the inevitable exceptions to the rule, but it seems to me nevertheless that opposition to education, in these days, is confined to a very meager minority, even in the "Knobs o' Tennessee" (where once there lived a class that had no use "Fer larnin") or even among those who go down into the bowels of the earth for coal; or those who "Sail out into the western sea as the sun goes down," for fish. Certainly I think there can be little or no opposition to the principles of education among the church members.

May I not suggest that the nature of the question—if indeed there be a question—to some extent has been confused by misunderstanding and a failure to comprehend each other's thought.

It is not probable that what appears to some as opposition to the fostering, by the church, of education is after all but an instinctive resistance to what seems, in the vision of some members, a substitution of the rostrum for the pulpit, of the philosopher for the preacher? Here I think is food for thought, because if this indeed is true, then no extensive argument is needed to convince them of the value of education and attempts along this line for the most part are in the nature of charging windmills.

The men of discernment within the church no less than the men of foresight without the church have come to realize as never before the paramount importance of education, but is it not possible that some of the ministry, in their laudable zeal and enthusiasm for the cause of education, have contributed in a measure to the crossing of lines of vision by falling into a common error peculiar to the times—the error of unscientific specialization?

The past two decades have been years of strenuous campaigns, smashing drives and stimulated enthusiasms and the inclination in all these has been to extremes. This inclination has made itself felt in business and politics, in education, and religion, and affairs of state until there has appeared a very prevalent tendency to specialize, largely, by exclusion rather than to specialize and exclude. I mean by that there is a tendency to concentrate on a given purpose or doctrine of the hour by excluding other considerations and the fitness of things, whereas one ought more properly to concentrate on a selected subject or activity, or cause, or doctrine by increased intensity and more frequent recurrence of application together with discriminate exclusion of only certain other considerations, and at the same time have due regard for the fitness of things.

This error seems to have had its foundation in the questionable precept, "The end justifies the means," which in fact is neither more nor less than the ugly thing which compassed the undoing of a recent strong empire, that for many years has unscientifically (in the broader sense) specialized in militarism by excluding other finer considerations of national interest. Also it was this same undesirable thing, on the brighter side of the fence, which all but wrought the downfall of altruistic civilization because certain nations for years had unscientifically (in the broader sense) specialized in optimism to the exclusion of other vital considerations of national interest.

This "not-wisely-but-too-well" inclination just as surely will tend to the undoing of any organization that has a diversity of interests.

Now it is possible for a preacher to grow so enthusiastic in the dissemination of educational propaganda that he will come to exclude that interpreting of the gospel, that expounding of the scriptures and that exhorting to spiritual endeavor which, after all, is more intimately associated with his calling. And if he does this, he is falling into the error of unscientific specialization.

This is not to say that the preacher may not properly take live interest and part in educational, social, or other activities which have points of contact with the welfare of his flock any more than to say that the teacher may not properly take interest and part in other activities which have points of contact with the welfare of those intrusted to his care for a definite purpose. But, upon reflection, it will appear that spiritual culture is the consummation towards which the preacher's efforts should tend.

Whilst it no doubt is correct to say that all true education is spiritual culture yet, in the general notion, there is a finer though less definable spiritual culture which comes only in the communion of saints and the inspired or at least inspirational exhortation of one who is "sent."

Being conscious of the exquisite glory and enlightenment of this finer exaltation, the God-desiring mind no doubt would feel loss if, for instance, the expected sermon on the Lord's Day prove to be instead a lecture or dissertation on a topic more or less distinctively related to the activities of every day. And this even though the speaker be exceedingly brilliant and well qualified to handle his subject, and notwithstanding the very obvious fact that true religion must and will effect one's conduct in all circumstances and on all days.

Now right here perhaps is where the lines of vision would be crossed and the vapors of misunderstanding arise, because an ambiguous expression by the membership of this sense of loss would lead some to suppose they were in opposition to the movement for the extension of education, when as a matter of fact they may have a very lively appreciation of its value.

May I suggest that those set aside to minister to the flocks strive to untangle the crossed lines of vision and discern the true thought of the membership; that they avoid the error of the times referred to above and that the members for their part clearly express themselves and thus brush aside the vapors of misunderstanding.

Finally may I venture thus to express my thought in the matter. By all means let us foster education; by all means let us have a school of preparation, where the men called to the ministry may thoroughly learn the science of the gospel and acquire the art of presenting it gracefully; by all means let us encourage the pursuit of learning, especially among those who show a willingness and a desire to study the books of the church, for such will make the better use of added knowledge. By all means let us do all this but—let us have "church" on Sunday!

When the minister undertakes to preach repentance and to feed the flock with that spiritual food which cometh down from God, he has a goodly task upon him and he can ill afford to assume in addition the work of encouraging and supervising educational activities, except in a strictly subsidiary sense.

It would seem that the time is at hand when we might have a department definitely set aside for this work. Surely we have enough thoroughly qualified men who might travel according to their gifts and callings, maintaining contact with the membership by a series of lectures and demonstrations and also by personal consultation with parents and students. In this way they could be of great assistance in advising and helping in the selection of studies. There is need for this because we have known some to choose certain branches who had no more natural qualifications for their selected callings than barbers with cold hands. It is dangerous to make of zeal a thing by itself.

We still have faith in the "foolishness of preaching" and a lively hope for the full and complete consummation of "Zion, the perfection of beauty," out of which God will shine, though many may fall away.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

LOVE, NOT REVOLUTION, IS CURE

After an exhaustive study of social conditions in the United States, extending over months and in which more than 100 church leaders collaborated, the Council Churches of Christ of America issued a report of New York City to-day finding that "profound suffering and unrest" exist throughout the civilized world.

The report takes up a variety of subjects, dealing principally, however, with the social and industrial unrest in the working classes, and deplors the tendencies to violence but concludes with the significant warning that if conditions are not bettered then the people themselves with indignation and bitterness will take their destiny and that of the world into their own hands.

"The Church," says the report, "finds itself in the midst of profound unrest and suffering. The entire social fabric of some of the most advanced nations is in chaos and their people menaced by starvation, while other powerful nations, of which the United States is one, have experienced loss of life, material and capital in the great war, and serious industrial disorganization and unemployment. It is, moreover, a world suffering from overstrain, agitated by conflicting programs of reorganization.

"Surely this hour which puts supreme obligations upon every social institution is one which calls to the church to give its utmost both of the ministries of personal religion and of unselfish public and social service.

"In some respects the most urgent question before the world at the present time is the method of social reconstruction; shall it be by constitutional and peaceable methods or by class struggle and violence?"

"The supreme teachings of Christ are of love and brotherhood. These express themselves in a democracy in the cooperation of every citizen for the good of each and all. The doctrine of the class conscious struggle is opposed to this ideal. It is reversion of earlier forms of competitive struggle. The dictatorship of the proletariat in practice is now absolutism in the hands of a few men, and is as abhorrent as any other dictatorship. The hope of the world is in the cooperation of individuals and classes in the brotherhood of a Christian society.

TENDENCIES TO VIOLENCE

"Class consciousness and the use of violence are not confined to revolutionary groups. The possession of health and education tends to the formation of classes and industrial ownership and management by a class conscious ruling group. We observe also with regret and deep concern numerous resorts to mob action in which returned soldiers and workmen have sometimes participated, frequently without police restraint; the continuing incitement to riot by certain public officials and periodicals, especially the partisan press, with its misrepresentation and inflaming spirit, and the unfortunate and dangerous tendency of many State and municipal officers to deny fair hearings to radical offenders, and to use unnecessary and provocative brutality during strikes.

LABOR'S SHARE IN MANAGEMENT

"A deep cause of unrest in industry is the denial to labor of a share in the industrial management. Controversies over wages and hours never go to the root of the industrial problem. Democracy must be applied to the government of industry as well as to the government of a nation and as rapidly and as far as the workers shall become able and willing to accept such responsibility. Laborers must be recognized as being entitled to as much consideration as employers and their rights must be equally safeguarded.

INDUSTRY AND SERVICE

"The Christian and modern conception of industry makes it a public service. The parties of interest are not only labor and capital, but also the community, whose interest transcends that of either labor or capital. The State, as the governmental agency of the community, with the cooperation of all involved, should attempt to secure to the worker an income sufficient to maintain his family at a standard of living which the community can approve. This living wage should be made the first charge upon industry before dividends are considered. As to excess profits, after a just wage and fair salaries, interest upon capital and sinking funds have been provided, we commend the spirit and the conclusion of the twenty British Quaker employers in awarding the larger part of the excess profit to the community, to be devoted voluntarily to public use or returned by taxation.

"Unemployment is one of the tragedies of the present industrial order, which the war has demonstrated can be controlled, or at least effectively reduced, by the government and cooperative voluntary agencies.

DEMOCRATIC RIGHTS OF WOMEN

"The importance of the democratic rights of women is not as yet comprehended by public opinion. Their freedom, their right to political and economic equality with men are fundamental to democracy and to the safety of the future. The church stands also for adequate safeguards to industrial living for a living wage, the eight-hour day as a maximum requirement, prohibition of night work, equal pay for equal work, and other standard requirements of industry.

A NEW SOCIAL MORALITY

"The church has also certain manifest functions and duties in the cooperative effort which is being organized for the public health service for sex morality and the control of venereal diseases. Its most important function is the instruction of children and young people in the spiritual ideals of love and the relations of the sexes; the training of the young men to be good husbands and fathers as well as young women to be good wives and mothers; personal watchfulness by pastors, teachers, and leaders of clubs over young people, especially over those who manifest tendencies to indiscretion, educational assistance to parents in the training of their children.

SUBSTITUTES FOR THE SALOON

Following the discussion of such questions as "Paying for the war," "Justice to the Negro," "Housing," "Menacing social facts," "Americanization," and "A new social morality," the statement deals with "Substitutes for the saloon" as follows:

"Prohibition has now become a part of our basic law. That it should fail of enforcement through apathy or in consequence of the influence of special interests, is inconceivable in a democratic country. Whatever vigilance is necessary to make the law effective will surely not be lacking.

"The passing of the saloon, which, with all its pernicious influences, was yet a social center to a multitude of men, creates a new obligation to replace it with wholesome equivalents. Community centers, the church as a social center, fraternal orders and private clubs, public recreation, education in the leisure time, all these should be developed rapidly and with great power and attractiveness.

THE CHURCH IN THE SOCIAL MOVEMENT

The concluding section on "The church in the social movement," deals in detail with the part the church is to play in bringing about the needed reforms indicated in the earlier part of the document. The recognition of the church as a new social force is called for, as the fact is pointed out there are "in the United States 135,000 ministers, priests, and rabbis in charge of congregations who minister to 42,000,000 actual communicants. In the Protestant churches there are 115,000 ministers in charge of congregations, 28,000,000 communicants, an influential religious press, a great system of educational institutions, and large numbers of social agencies such as hospitals and child-caring foundations."

CONCLUSION

The conclusion of the statement follows:

"It must not be forgotten that in social reconstruction we are dealing with matters that vitally effect the welfare and happiness of millions of human beings, and that we have come upon times when people are not submissive to injustice or to unnecessary privation and suffering. They are deeply and justly in earnest. As has been said, we are laying the foundation of a new world. If those who are the actual industrial, political, and social leaders of the nation will not act upon the principle that the greatest shall be the servant of all, then the people themselves, with indignation and bitterness, are sure to take their destiny and that of the world into their own hands. The social question cannot be dealt with casually. People who are born with unusual ability, of whatever kind, or who receive special advantages, are given them for unselfish service. Large holdings of property can be justified only by devotion to the common good. We are entering upon an era in which the absorbing concern of the world will be for the social justice and the greatest well-being of the greatest number. This will animate the religious spirit of the future—a spirit which has found its supreme expression and example in Jesus Christ.—Omaha Bee, October 10, 1919.

SUMMER COURSE AMONG THE CLIFF DWELLERS

Professor Byron Cummings, Dean of the College of Letters, Arts, and Sciences and Director of the State Museum, University of Arizona (Tucson), left Flagstaff July 1, with a large party of students on what is believed to be the first field course in American archæology ever undertaken by a western university. The class visited the prehistoric cliff ruins of Sagie and Nitsie Canyons in northern Arizona, studied old pueblo groups on the mesas and in the numerous canyons of the region, and excavated an ancient pueblo known as the "Red House," near Navaho Mountain. The academic work consisted of mapping sections of the country, drawing plans of pueblos, studying excavations and identifying and classifying the materials uncovered. Each student will submit a report of some particular phase of the summer's work; collegiate credit for the course will vary from two to six university units, in proportion to the amount of work completed by each individual.

The summer course continued six weeks and upon its conclusion the party made side trips from the main camp to the top of Navaho Mountain, to the famous Rainbow National Bridge, to Sagie Canyon, Kayenta, and Monument Valley. Many of the students also visited Oraibi and other Hopi villages to see the Snake Dance and corn festivals.

In view of the increased interest in archæology among students of the university and even citizens from distant parts of the State, Professor Cummings expects to repeat this summer's course next year. At that time an effort will be made to accommodate a limited number of non resident students interested in Southwestern archæology. During the past two years Dean Cummings' classes in anthropology have taxed the capacity of the museum lecture halls, and there is already a movement on foot to build a larger museum at the State institution.—Editorial in Art and Archaeology, October, 1919.

PERIL IN "RACE SUICIDE"

Within the last half century it has become known that the birth rate could be kept down by artificial means, and, as in the ancient allegory, woman once more has eaten forbidden fruit from the tree of knowledge. But this time, also, it was the fruit of death.

In short, what is called "race suicide" has begun. At first this practice was confined to the upper classes, but now it seems to be spreading gradually throughout the whole community in every western nation and in one of them—France—it is in full operation with the result that the death rate exceeds the birth rate, which continues to fall.

It is not right and it was never so intended that civilized women should be a mere breeding machine. But I believe if she is able to do so without injury to her health and in advance of other special circumstances, a married woman, in the course of her life, should enrich the world by four or five children.

The average in the classes mentioned is now only two and one third, although among miners it is slightly higher.

Great Britain would be a more comfortable place in which to live were the population about four million. But what would happen to them in the event of war?

The indications are that in the homeland the population will continue to decrease while in the dominions overseas, without the aid of immigration, it will not at the present rate increase greatly, at least from accretion of British stock.

With the exception of Russia and perhaps Germany, the prospects also are disquieting throughout the Western world, while in America there is anxiety at least as far as the original stock is concerned.—Kansas City Star, quoting Sir Rider Haggard, October 21, 1919.

HOW ABOUT YOUR BROTHER? HOW ABOUT YOUR NEIGHBOR?

Is their poverty, or is their lack of appreciation to stand between them and the message your soul delights to hear? Are you interested in these to the amount of the price of the HERALD or some other good church publication? Can you afford to spend a small portion of your time or resources or both in placing the literature of the church in other hands? Do you care about spreading the "glad tidings of great joy" to all peoples?

COME NOW, if you are, here is your one best opportunity. Locate some who have strayed away from the fold and inform us of their whereabouts and put us in a way to send them matter that may cause the gospel fires to burn anew in their lives.

Again: Do you not know some one to whom you can afford to send one or more of our publications?

IS A MAN'S SOUL WORTH RISKING A FEW DOLLARS TO SAVE? If you can't find the man, send us the money and we will find the man and make the money do double service. Of course our publishing interests must have our support; it is our doing and our giving that will win the day. Are YOU with US?

ATTENTION, PRIESTHOOD

You men of God everywhere; in the field, in the office, in the branches; are you ready to work with us in this publicity campaign? Do you care about multiplying the effectiveness of your labors an hundred or a thousand times? Is it of any consequence to you whether you have an audience of ten or a hundred, or of tens of thousands? If you are you will answer the call that we are sending you by personal letter in a short time.

WATCH THE HERALD FOR ANNOUNCEMENTS

Don't let us miss you; we need you, you need us; the whole world needs our combined efforts. We must make good. Come now, time is short; demands are many; laborers are few; but such as there are we hope will set themselves diligently at the task of developing the work intrusted to us.

Yours for the work's sake, and in behalf of the Herald Publishing House,

"Liberate the Forces of Good"

We Omaha Saints were favored this week by the ministry among us, of two prominent church officials. Apostle Gillen delivered one of his forceful sermons in the morning, and President Frederick M. Smith paralleled the effort in the evening. These brethren left decided joy in their wake, and the encouragement and spiritual vision they gave, will be of influence and power among us for many days.

Among the many splendid thoughts expressed, one which impressed itself strongly was the plea to line ourselves up with the positive forces of good, to "liberate the forces of encouragement and spiritual life" which are all about us if we will but recognize and utilize them. There is so much to be done, before we can understand at all clearly the meanings of life. We are but gropers, all of us; some have found peace along with their groping—have found that Source of all strength and life, and are thus feeling that their feet are upon the royal pathway. From them we do well to accept the torch of spiritual light, and attempt to ascertain our immediate position, our goal, and the path which must be traversed between.

"Let us liberate the powers of good which are among us." Can we have a greater or more blessed mission? Faultfinding cannot do that; destructive criticism cannot do that. Discouragement follows in the wake of harsh rebuke, if not, indeed, positive rebellion. With our children it is much better to show the light and the right, than to chastise for wrong and stumbling. Poor strugglers, how else can they pass through life, except as we all do, stumbling, and getting up again, mistaking and correcting, displeasing and craving pardon? But, with all the correcting, the pardoning, and the guiding that is ours to do with these young unfolding lives about us, shall we not try to keep our great love in the foreground? Is it not the most beautiful and wonderful thing in life, anyway, and does it not deserve the center of the picture? If we but love enough, it will be impossible to judge harshly, impossible to dishearten where we should build up and strengthen.

Brother Elbert, in a recent sermon to us, reminded us of the great power of God, which enables him, through his great wisdom and his great yearning for the good of man, to put into operation those stimuli which will touch people's hearts, and turn them unto him. The task of "winning the world for Christ" often seems such a big job to us that we stagger under the very thought of it, and the great burden and responsibility well-nigh weigh us to the earth. In our worry, however, we forget that the task is dearer to the heart of the Father than it can possibly be to ours, and He will find ways and means for its accomplishment. He touched a multitude on the day of Pentecost and he can bring to the church, through the ministry of ever so humble instruments—howbeit they are consecrated and valiant—those great in-telleets and influential personalities which will plead our cause with victory before the world.

If we all could realize the wonderful power contained in thought, and the possibilities which lie in right thinking, none of us would be content to go jogging along without following some definite and conscious line of constructive thinking. Whenever we give expression to an unlovely thought, to an ugly mood, to a harmful suspicion, or a hasty judgment, we are adding to the sum total of evil in the world—increasing the mass of handicaps with which mortals struggle, and hamper, not only others in their race, but materially retard ourselves in our progress towards Eternal Light. On the other hand, every time we give expression to a loving thought, to thoughts of peace and harmony, of trust in God, and confidence in our fellow men—every time we center our thoughts upon good, upon the things of the Spirit, by just so much are we bringing ourselves nearer to a complete understanding of the Divine Love which governs the universe. How can we seek to understand that which is transcendently lovely and loving, when we harbor unlovely thoughts, resentment, or “ruffled” feelings?

Let us set free the great power for good which is within us. Let us try never to discourage others, nor be discouraged ourselves. Discouragement opens the door to the spirits of “don’t care,” “no use trying,” “nobody cares, anyway,” which spirits will be our undoing. Hope and confidence, and above all, love, are the magic keys which unlock closed doors, untangle seemingly hopeless difficulties, and bring us to the feet of the blessed Elder Brother, who trod the path before us, in order to smooth away its roughness for us.

We are thankful for the good which comes to us, when precious seeds of immortal truth are dropped upon our common table. We are grateful for the rains and the sunshine, both of which are meant for the nurturing of the noble seed, and we are grateful that opportunity is given every one to assist in the harvesting of that which God has planted in these latter days. Let us not be found inefficient or unwilling. If we make mistakes, let them be those due to human limitations, rather than those of indifference or lukewarmness, a condition which caused even the Master to despair. Energy, even if formerly misused, can be turned to God’s glory; slothfulness, never.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Are Our Brothers Interested, Too?

[We are glad to give our readers the following little contribution from a brother, who, for obvious reasons, wishes his name withheld. Because of the little lesson which may be drawn from his experiences we feel sure the article will be of influence for good.—A. A.]

From my experiences and observations, I believe the most vital error made in training children is in not keeping their confidence. After you lose a child’s confidence, you have also, in most cases, lost his respect for you. He may still obey, but respect is gone.

I once knew a father of boys. I worked for him, several years. He was quick-tempered, and very worldly. He expected and demanded instant obedience, and would never reason with his boys. He doubted their veracity, never permitting them to explain, or defend themselves when taken to task. Thus he lost their respect and confidence at the very time when they had most need of his counsel. In dealing with outsiders he was known to be a man whose honor and integrity was never questioned, but because of his injustice, his own children found he was not to be relied upon. He was not consistent in his demands. While using profane language himself, sometimes bordering upon the obscene, he still expected his children to be modest, virtuous, and self-controlled.

Another error often made (and I have met Latter Day Saints who have made this mistake) is in failing to explain to children the vital facts of life, of sex relation, and the pitfalls which are especially open to the feet of youth. Parents leave their sons and daughters to the mercy of their associates, to older playmates, or to evil minded servants. This is most fatal to spiritual life, and no parent who wishes to fulfill his divinely appointed duties, should be guilty of neglect in these important matters.

From a father who has been a neglected son.

Wide Awake

Reading your query, “Have your eyes been shut,” prompts me to tell you what we of the Central Michigan Auxiliary did with those questions you submitted. We held our annual meeting in connection with our district conference, at Whittemore, Michigan, September 27, 28. One Sunday, at 7 a. m., while the priesthood was in session in the church, and the young people’s prayer meeting in the hall, the Woman’s Auxiliary went to a private house, where, by previous arrangement, a number of the sisters had come prepared to discuss some of those important questions.

The discussion was led by the question: “What, in your experience, is the most common error made by mothers in caring for their children?” The general discussion was very lively, and a most spiritual meeting was the result.

At eleven o’clock, the conference having granted us the hour, five of the brethren gave talks on others of those questions touching upon the work of the Auxiliary. These talks were led by the question: “Are the majority of mothers capable of properly caring for the bodies, minds, and souls of their offspring?” When those brethren were through with their spirited talks, if there were any present whose eyes had been shut, truly they must have been opened. None of these talks was reported for publication, yet with that audience of nearly four hundred, we feel much good was done, and valuable interest stimulated in the words of our Auxiliary.

The Child Is Not a Possession

Many parents fail to realize that the child born to them is not a possession, is not a thing to mold according to their own desires, their own personal ambitions, or their own social aspirations. We must rid ourselves from the very start of this sense of ownership and begin from the cradle to look upon the child as an individual being, whose sacred right it is to unfold his own self with the help, care, nurture and love due him.

What definite means can the home adopt for the best development of the child in the first six years of his life? First, with regard to the things which surround the child—furniture, pictures, books, toys, clothes, and ornaments. In how far may these lend themselves to his development?

In the room in which the child spends most of his time indoors, the furniture ought to be plain enough so that he can do no great harm in playing freely about. A small kindergarten chair and table to work on are almost indispensable in the child’s room. Kindergarten materials can be obtained from Milton Bradley Co., Springfield, Massachusetts, or E. Steiger & Co., 49 Murray Street, New York. Both companies send free catalogues upon request. A good blackboard should be hung securely on the wall, for from the hour he can toddle, the child will delight in chalk markings, and these even then will have value because of the muscle development afforded the arm and hand.

The pictures on the wall in the child's room ought to be distinctly for him, and hung low enough so that he may take them down and handle them whenever he chooses. Every child likes color and delights in the "story picture," the picture which has a story connected with it.

The child may be taught to discriminate between his own things and those belonging to others by being allowed to visit the family living room where mother's and father's books and their pictures and furniture are used with care and caution. In this way it will also be possible to lead him gradually into an appreciation of the adult's standard of art in pictures, music and literature.

The value of good music in the home cannot be overestimated. Fortunate the child whose ear is accustomed from the cradle to beautiful sound and melody. And yet even more fortunate the child who is accustomed to hearing the singing voice of those about him. Children love to hear songs, children's songs, big people's songs, and folk songs. They love to hear the songs of long ago when mother was a child, and the lullaby grandmother used to sing. The child loves especially a bed-time song, sung at the crib before the final "good-night."

As to books, there are the standard ones, the Mother Goose Nursery Rhymes, the simple animal story books, and the fairy tales in simple form. A helpful list of modern books, picture and story books, has been carefully reviewed and listed by the Federation for Child Study and may be had upon application to the secretary, Mrs. Thomas Seltzer, 219 West 100th Street, New York City, for 30 cents. The Bureau of Education also has suitable lists of children's books.

Story-telling is a great art, and the mother or father who has this gift can give their children unbounded joy and fill them with fond memories of the story-hour that will never be forgotten.

As for moral influences in the home, it is the words the child hears us speak, the things he sees us do which will have the greatest effect on his nature, such as respectful care and tender affection toward the grandmother, the grandfather, the aunt, the uncle; our attitude toward those in our employ, etc. Family festivals will make ever glorious impressions on the child's mind.

The spirit of charity should permeate the home. The little child is too young to know how to help the less fortunate, but he will imbibe the home spirit and with his growing understanding adopt the ideals by which he is surrounded.

Above all other influences the most telling is that which the parents create by means of their relationship to each other. If peace reigns supreme and father and mother live as one having a deep, true, earnest affection for each other, facing together the joys and sorrows, and supplementing each other's strength at every turn, there is no greater legacy parents can leave their children than the influence and memory of such a home.—Mrs. Bertha Goodkind.

Some More Michigan Activities

Sister Emma Volz, of Minden City, Michigan, in sending in a report of the Auxiliary work done at their late district convention says:

"I know that this department of God's work has an important niche to fill in the redemption of Zion. I had always loved this much-needed work, but never saw its breadth and depth as it dawned upon me when reading our auxiliary Year Book for the first time. I was thrilled with the spirit of inspiration, and realized as never before that the pioneer workers among our women, as well as those who have taken a leading part in re-forming and planning the work in the late past, were moved upon by the Spirit of God. I felt thankful that there were those among our number who could be so used.

"We can see that this work is moving, step by step, forward, and we realize that the possibilities for service in the Master's cause, are not yet all discovered. They will gradually be unfolded to the minds of those who are humble and faithful in the discharge of known duty and willing to move onward and upward. The fields of knowledge are truly broad and inviting.

I have greatly enjoyed the editorials and articles in our church papers, and wish continued and increased success to all engaged in writing for the papers in the interest of this work."

REPORT OF WOMAN'S AUXILIARY OF EASTERN MICHIGAN DISTRICT

Annual meeting was held at Crosswell, Michigan, October 4, in connection with the district conference. Mrs. E. Plato Whitford, district organizer, presided. Mrs. Gilbert Booth, of McGregor, was elected secretary. Mrs. R. Brown of Port Huron, treasurer, and Miss Emma Volz, correspondent. Mrs. Whitford announced her resignation as organizer, to take effect after next general convention, her time being demanded for other lines of church duties. By vote, Mrs. Oscar Ingel, 810 Tenth Street, Port Huron, was recommended as her successor.

After the business session a short heart-to-heart talk was given by Sister Pringle, organizer of Central Michigan District. She emphasized the great need of women's work in connection with the redemption of Zion, and the fact that, without the assistance of the women, it could never be fully carried out. "Woman's important work in this department, lies in the home," she said, "with the family, and in the community. She can also assist the branch much in financial work, relieving the brethren, that they may give more time for other lines of church work. The priesthood can assist materially in helping the women perform their work in this department Brother Joseph Smith assisted in the first women's organization in the church."

We cannot hope to convey the personal touch and influence which was with the sister in her speech, that rendered it so impressive. We are thankful to report that the interest in the Woman's Auxiliary is slowly growing in the district, and we hope and pray for continued success,

Your sister in Christ,

EMMA VOLZ.

Resolutions Adopted at the Indiana State Convention of the Farmer's Union

Whereas, In 1918 the farmers were appealed to in the name of patriotism to do their utmost to increase the production of food, that the war might be speedily won—

And again in 1919 they were appealed to, to produce a still greater supply of food, that the world might not starve—

They responded to these appeals nobly—

Adding hours of labor to hours that were already too long—

With the women and children working side by side with them, toiling long hours, often at work too heavy for their strength—

And any class of people working until work becomes a drudgery—

Denying themselves time for recreation and self-improvement, and a day for a Sabbath—

Will soon become inferior to other peoples around them—
And whereas we know the need for leisure that we may secure the better things of life—

Therefore, be it resolved—That we favor a one fourth decrease in the acreage to be planted in 1920.

Furthermore, be it resolved—That always and under all circumstances we will discourage the idea of women working in the fields, as the peasant women of Europe are compelled to work.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

President Smith Visits the Omahas

The Walthill conference (of the Northeastern Nebraska District) was held recently on the Omaha reservation. A large attendance greeted the missionaries, part of them the Indian Saints. The writer continued the meetings one week, driving each day over the hills among the Omahas and Winnebagoes, visiting and talking the gospel to them. Two meetings were arranged for. Friday and Saturday nights among the Indians, the one on the south end of the reservation and the other at the north end.

Having received a letter from President F. M. Smith regarding important work he wished to do for them due to his recent trip to Washington, we wired him of the meetings, and he came up. His message was well received. He made many friends to our cause. The Indians responded with the usual "Aho! Aho!" They did it very enthusiastically, too. They feel that they need a friend who can and will help them at the present time. Brethren E. E. Long and Jay Leeka were with us and enjoyed the meetings very much, as they may say later, in the church papers.

During Saturday night the meeting lasted all night, and at intervals they pray, after a number of songs. They would call on one of us to pray and speak. President Smith spoke two or three times and so did some of the other brethren. We will have more to say of this later.

Your coworker,
HUBERT CASE.

Dedication at Colorado Springs

The Saints living in Colorado Springs, Colorado, wish every member of the church, especially those who have occasion to pass through our city, to know that we have a little chapel dedicated to the worship of God. It is located at 513 North Prospect Street.

Sunday, October 13, was a day enjoyed by every local member. At 10.45, after a few well-chosen words in prayer by our aged Brother W. T. Bozarth, Brother Elbert A. Smith gave us a real feast. In his mild but forceful way he showed how much more desirable even one truly dedicated life would be than any building we might erect.

Following this was an exposition of the Christ, and so visible was the picture it seemed as though it had been our first glimpse of our divine Savior. All who beheld must surely bow down in adoration to such a character.

The dedicatory prayer by Brother Elbert A. Clark was an impassioned appeal to the Saints, that they be able to sense the bigness of our gospel, without narrow prejudicial interpretations, and that our eyes might be opened to see how many avenues God uses to try to bring his creatures into a nearness with himself.

There was a brief history of the branch, by the branch clerk. Brother Smith again addressed us in the evening, with a sermon instructive and uplifting.

MRS. E. E. CONWAY,
Branch Clerk.

Cultivate the Gift of Music

ANNOUNCING A PRIZE CONTEST

The Independence Stake Religio is making extensive preparations to entertain the young people of the church who will attend General Conference next April and also to establish more firmly than ever before the necessity of other districts and branches taking advance steps to look after the interests of their young people. Programs are now being prepared to accomplish this purpose.

Attention is now called to music writers.

The Independence Stake Religio will give for the best original musical composition in one of the following forms:

- A. Vocal solo and piano accompaniment.
- B. Piano solo.
- C. Full Orchestra selection.
- D. Violin solo with piano accompaniment, the choice of the following prizes:

- Inspired Translation of the Bible.
- Doctrine and Covenants.
- Book of Mormon.
- First Volume of Church History, to be the best binding flexible morocco cover.

Compositions must be in by February 1, 1920. Judges: Albert N. Hoxie, Arthur H. Mills, Audentia Anderson, Paul N. Craig, and Robert T. Cooper.

The winning compositions will be performed at some suitable occasion during General Conference by either the authors if present or as directed by the judges. The four prize-winning compositions are to become the property of the Religio, the titles of which are to be named by the judges and dedicated to the Religio.

We sincerely trust that a hearty response will be made by all music writers. We want to circulate copies of the winning numbers throughout every local in the church so that all may know that the Religio is on the "Onward and Upward" march.

For additional information address John M. Lloyd, 619 North River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri, president of the stake.

Toronto Conference

The Toronto District conference convened in Toronto, October 10 to 12. It was a success in every way. The attendance was much larger than anticipated. All parts of the district were represented. Quite a number of people were present from the Owen Sound District, also from the Western New York District.

The general good will was contagious. The discussion on questions before the conference was amicable and respectful although the widest latitude of expression was granted speakers on the floor. Legislation having far-reaching consequences was passed with almost unanimous assent.

The conference was called to order at ten o'clock on Friday. After preliminary organization the Religio department was allotted the remainder of the morning hour for business, and the Sunday school department occupied the afternoon session. The evening session was devoted to a combined program under supervision of Religio and Sunday school. J. T. Thompson gave an address on "Teaching;"

G. E. Harrington conducted a round table on "Coordination"; and T. W. Williams gave an address on "Recreation." The district choir rendered several numbers which elicited universal praise. Some time prior to the conference the Toronto branch chorister, Brother Samuel Clark, generously asked the district chorister to take the lead of the choir in order to practice for conference. Brother Thomas Seaton, the district chorister, has demonstrated his ability and fitness for the position. The execution and technique was of an exceptionally high order. Some of the girls in the Sunday school classes displayed exceptional talent.

The three sessions on Saturday were given over to conference business. The last session continued until eleven o'clock p. m. The important legislation embraced the following:

District secretary to notify every official of the district of his election; district president to see that each officer so elected discharge the duties of his office; in case of failure or refusal he was directed to call for the resignation of said official. The right to fill vacancies thus incurred to inure with the district president. Provision was made for two vice presidents. G. E. Harrington was elected president; James Wilson first vice president and Fred Long second vice president. J. T. Thompson of Hamilton was selected as superintendent of the Sunday school department and Floralice Miller as president of the Religio department.

A permanent budget system was inaugurated and a permanent budget committee elected. This was a marked departure from past procedure and elicited spirited discussion. The budget committee canvassed the needs of each official of the district and recommended the amount and character of expenditures. Herewith the salient points:

- (a) The adoption of the budget system.
- (b) Election of a permanent budget committee to pass upon the expenditures of all district officials as well as that of the district.
- (c) District officials debarred from expending money in excess of the budget adopted by the conference except by the consent of a majority of the budget committee.
- (d) No funds to be expended by district officials not provided for in the budget.
- (e) A per capita collection to be taken up by the various branches to cover the amount of the budget.

The budget committee made the following recommendations:

For district president $490, as follows: Traveling expenses, $200; personal expenses, $200; typewriter, $75; letter file and stationery, $15.

For district secretary $73.50 as follows: Records, $5; stationery, $2.50; postage, $3; blanks, $3; personal, $25; typewriter, $35.

For district chorister $10.

For gospel literature board $50.

An excellent prayer meeting Sunday morning. At eleven a. m. the district officers were in charge. A. F. McLean occupied most of the time and gave a very lucid and illuminating address on church finances. Elder Harrington followed with a general statement as to the function and work of the district and its officers. At 3 p. m. J. T. Thompson gave a very fine sermon on the theme, "God is love." In the evening T. W. Williams spoke on the "Law of Christ." One critic commenting on the two efforts said the afternoon sermon was an appeal to the heart—the evening sermon an appeal to the head. However, heart and head were pretty well combined throughout the entire conference.

Brother Lockyear's Sunday school class conducted a lunch counter throughout the conference and netted $92 to swell the Christmas offering. The collections throughout the conference were large, totaling $160. The Sunday morning oblation was $28.47.

On Monday morning the Toronto Saints generously donated their cars, and a sightseeing trip was made around town for the benefit of visiting Saints. In the afternoon the young people inaugurated a "ramble." About a hundred took advantage of this and walked until all were ready to take a car for the return trip to the church, where a generous supper was provided. Thus ended one of the very best conferences ever held in the Toronto District.

Sincerely,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

TORONTO, ONTARIO, 42 Castlefield Avenue.

Reasons Why I Am for Graceland College

First: That at no educational institution in the world is Bible doctrine taught so correctly as at Graceland.

Second: That for spiritual development it cannot be excelled. Some years ago my work brought me in contact with colleges and universities of two different States, and to me, it seemed that their religious efforts seemed too much like a farce and mockery.

A young lady, a cousin of mine, who had graduated from one of the largest and best State universities said to me years ago, "I surely wouldn't want my sister next year to spend the first year of her schooling career at this university for it would be bound to be her ruin." These two ladies were two of about four children in this family, who, thanks to a liberal and farsighted father were graduating from high school and each in their turn were permitted to graduate from State universities or colleges. This young lady saw the undermining moral influences at work in the university life.

If fathers and mothers who are not members of our church realize Graceland's advantage in these respects, and send their children to our college, we surely ought to be equally loyal ourselves.

Third: It ranks well as an educator. I am only a high school graduate myself, with an additional eight months at a Bible school, but if I were to live life over again, I would add on at least four more years of schooling. Many children stop school when they get through the eighth grade; they start to work, and almost invariably it means small wages for a lifetime, with the majority.

Statistics show that the best educated men and women have captured the highest salaried positions, and have gained the most prominence in the world. With the majority, the schooling acquired in youth is the bulk of the education used in a lifetime.

Most of us, I hope, appreciate the hard, earnest, faithful efforts of Frederick M. Smith, the president of our church, in acquiring an education. I hope he is the best educated man in the church; and I will go further. I wish he could receive the distinction of being the best educated person in this whole world.

We would all love to see him the most spiritual man in the world, and if we all offer many a prayer for him, that will help wonderfully towards such a result.

If we had reason to feel proud of Graceland College in the past, we can gratify ourselves all the more now with a president who is not only well educated himself, but whose work with the government on educational matters have peculiarly fitted him for his present duties.

Fourth: I am for Graceland because I am positive that the Lord is pleased with the results of the college as a whole. Never did I feel God's spirit more forcibly than a few years ago at the General Conference at Independence, when Apostle Wight and Elder John Garver advanced arguments in behalf of Graceland College.

Many a father and mother have said, "I'd give everything in the world to save my boy or girl." With proper educational and spiritual advantages they will not need any saving. They will nearly all make good and you will be proud of them.

H. L. RUSHFELT.

PORT HURON, MICHIGAN, October 8, 1919.

Editors Herald: There will be some who will be glad to read some news from dear old Michigan, especially Eastern Michigan District. We have just had our first annual conference as we have always had semiannual heretofore. It surely was a large gathering held at Croswell. The branch there secured the opera house, a fine large hall. A good crowd gathered for prayer meeting Saturday morning before business session. We were driven from the hall by a terrible noise caused by men repairing the roof. We repaired to another place but were deprived of a spiritual feast, for by the time we became settled again it was time to start the business session. All went along fairly well. We had a good prayer meeting Sunday morning. Four or five gifts of the Spirit were given. Some in the way of rebuke and others for encouragement. One of the important things said was that there were some withholding their tithing but were told to keep it if they wished although it would be the means of eating their soul like a canker, and in the day of judgment they would be found wanting.

Elder O. J. Hawn, an Eastern Michigan product, recently appointed to Ohio, was the speaker Sunday afternoon. The hall could not begin to hold the crowd. He was wonderfully blessed with a powerful message from God. Our quorum was in session at that time but we heard of it. Some of the men of our quorum were ordained elders, one at the conference, so we are made to realize God is marshaling his army for the rescue of his truth.

We moved here from dear old Cash Branch not knowing what the outcome would be but we have been wonderfully blessed by coming here. We had a missionary experience last winter and were blessed in our efforts. We had two or three places of appointments in the city where we called at private homes and talked to outsiders. We felt some seed had been sown that will eventually bear fruit. Port Huron Branch is growing as we have ten or eleven elders, also a number of priests, teachers and deacons, there being seven or eight of each. We have recently opened a little mission in North End which bids fair. We felt loath to leave dear old Cash Branch where we first heard and obeyed the gospel and spent our boyhood days which were very enjoyable ones. Those bygone days were not all sunshine. While there we seemingly had our hardest trials passing through deep troubled waters and were made to realize the expression of Paul, that he had been in perils of wild beasts, in perils of false brethren and in perils of the sea, he being shipwrecked. I passed through like experiences, which almost shipwrecked my faith and confidence in some but never did I lose faith in God and his work for I had fully learned the law of the Lord is perfect and if there is any flaw in the church, my dear brothers and sisters, it is the wrong administration of it. Paul said, "For we know in part, and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away. . . . For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face; now I know in part; but then shall I know even as I also am known."

The church is undergoing a test and it is affecting you and me individually. Shall we stand the test or will we be weighed in the balances and be found wanting? Big men are falling who were once considered strong, stalwarts of this work. This is only an evidence of the nearness of the end. This is not all for many things will transpire in the next few years that will try our faith. Every man's work, no matter of what sort, will be tried. If it be wood or stubble it will burn. That is to say, if there is anything in our lives that is not the pure love of God, it will have to go. We are told no one can assist in this work unless he is humble and full of love. It would be well to read the 13th chapter of First Corinthians, only say love instead of charity. While we are passing through the trials of life, may our hope of eternal life grow brighter and brighter that there may not be a shadow of doubt or fear in our hearts and that we shall be able to say, "I know my Redeemer lives and I know by the evidence God has given me that if I am faithful when the archangel shall sound the trumpet that time shall be no more and the dead in Christ shall rise, that I shall accept my place in the kingdom of our God."

What a joy it will be when we will stand side by side with that blood-washed throng who have come up through many tribulations and have washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb. From the supreme heights of those celestial hills we shall be permitted to look back over the valley where our feet once bled. Then in the clearer light of divine interpretation, see that the rocks of human extremity which once seemed so barren, cold and cruel, were the spots where God stood closer than at other times. The soul from thence took on immortal fatness while fed on manna fresh from heaven. Those times and places will then challenge higher glimpses and we can scan the map of our mundane pilgrimage. I believe that whenever the eye shall fall upon those Gethsemanes we shall dwell more lovingly and praise our God more fervently. Each day and year brings its new experiences. Shall we abide the hour or shall we yield and fall by the wayside? Nay, verily nay, let us keep the old camp fire blazing in our soul. This can only be done by constant, earnest praying (don't say your prayers) but pray a prayer which will unlock heaven's door everytime and bring down each day the blessings of God. This makes me realize more fully the scriptural injunction, to pray without ceasing, for yourself, the church and the men of God whom he has chosen to lead latter-day Israel in the land of promise.

May God abundantly bless all. I hope to prove true to the end so whether in this life or beyond the tomb I can come forth singing this grand coronation hymn, "All hail the power of Jesus name let angels prostrate fall, bring forth the royal diadem and crown him Lord of all."

I am your brother and colaborer in the one true church of Christ.

FRED W. CADOW.

WELLSVILLE, NEW YORK, October 15, 1919.

Editors Herald: To-night I thought I would spend a little time in writing a few lines to your valuable paper, and send in renewal of subscription again.

I have been a reader of the HERALD two years and feel well blessed with it. As we do not have church privileges, I would be lost without this splendid paper, because it always comes to us full of spiritual good, and we look forth to it each week, that we may have the true word of God, even if it does come through a silent preacher, and trust that we will live nearer to our dear Lord and Master, and I pray that our lives may be such as will meet his approval at all times.

We have a small Sunday school, but do not have church privileges as we would like. We are coming fine in our Christmas offering and hope to have a nice sum to send in by Christmas.

We are taking the Church History and reading it Sunday evenings and find it very interesting.

The last of September we had the pleasure of having Brother George F. Robley here with us about two weeks, and held some meetings in our home which we enjoyed very much. On October 5 we took him up to Greenwood, where he is holding meetings at the present time. We spent the day there at Greenwood and attended Sunday school and also enjoyed a good, spiritual prayer and testimony service.

We desire the prayers of the Saints that we may be faithful and do much good in helping to build up the kingdom of God.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

NETTIE E. POTTER.

LONDON, ONTARIO, October 21, 1919.

Editors Herald: Leaving my field for the first time this summer, I arranged to motor to the central Michigan District conference to be held at Whittemore. Brother Fred Newsom, of Ubyly, met me and with his wife, we started early in the morning of September 26, reaching the conference in time for part of the afternoon session, Friday. I met quite a number of Michigan Saints. Was kindly cared for at the home of a Mr. and Mrs. Leslie. I enjoyed the business sessions, and by Sunday fully five hundred Saints had gathered in that little town. Many were looking for our President, F. M. Smith.

Sunday afternoon at two o'clock all the seats were arranged on the lawn and the host of cars were parked behind them and the writer occupied and spoke from the church steps. For the first time, we heard Elder O. J. Hawn and enjoyed his masterful address. At 3.30 Brother Ellis was the speaker, giving timely and wise counsel to the Saints. It was a busy day, nine sessions in all. The meals were splendidly arranged for in the basement of the church. We were pleased to meet Brother Doty again, who has been so helpful to our London District. Monday we started for Bay City and were in time to take in some of the sights of that pretty place. Spoke for the Saints at night in their cozy, clean and well located building. I was the guest of Brother Hawn.

Tuesday we started for Ubyly and the ride was all one could wish for through the great farming country of Michigan and with one of nature's noblemen at the wheel, Fred Newsom.

The work of our Eastern Michigan conference loomed up before us so we started for Croswell to prepare, knowing we would have a large crowd and in hopes our president would make his appearance. Friday night, I had charge of the program, a number from the different parts of the district, taking part. Saturday morning and afternoons we had business sessions, which showed the need of a lawyer, well trained, to thrash out some business measures brought before the conference.

Saturday night, Brother Matthew Liston gave us a wonderful discourse on the future of our faith and its demonstration to the world. Sunday morning at 7.30, the young people's prayer meeting was held, with about 80 in attendance. From 8.30 until 11.45 we enjoyed as grand a prayer meeting as I ever attended. It proved to be a very enjoyable one, as several manifestations of the Spirit were given. Two were called to the ministry. We were told that angel bands were in our midst although we saw them not. About seven hundred were in attendance, which reminded us of a General Conference. At 2 o'clock, Elder O. J. Hawn was the speaker, his name being a household word throughout Eastern Michigan. The opera house was packed, and as Brother Hawn was leaving for his field in Ohio, it was somewhat of a farewell sermon. Elder Leverton occupied at 3.45. During the afternoon, Elder J. R. Grice gave the priesthood in attendance, some valuable counsel on local and missionary efforts. There were about 70 in attendance. At night Brother J. R. gave us a very forceful discourse in the thought of Paul, "To the unknown God." After this we closed what was said to be the best conference held in Eastern Michigan.

Monday morning a carload bound for Port Huron sang the songs of Zion under the leadership of Matthew Liston. We stayed in Port Huron a day or two, then to Brown City to dedicate their church. Saturday, the crowd was somewhat small, but held two preaching services and Sunday school session. Sunday was bright and clear and a large crowd in attendance. Brother Clark Russell was advertised as being the speaker of the dedicatory sermon, but Walter Bennett of Pontiac, filled his place, Brother Russell being detained at Independence. The house was crowded to the full. At night we spoke on "Mormonism, what is it?" We were again greeted with a full house. So ended another busy day in the interests of the work and the encouragement of the Saints.

Now, comes the event of all. I was going home to do forty jobs my better half had been writing about, and attend the London District conference. We enjoyed the conference that has just passed. Brother George Harrington was one of the speakers, and our old-time Saints of the 75 and 80's were all glad to see him. We are hoping some day to have an old boys' reunion when the Luffs, Cornishes and Harringtons can meet and have a jubilee. Brother William Grice, our district president, was again sustained and is accomplishing splendid work among our Canadian Saints.

Two were called during our prayer service, Sunday morning. Four elders and one priest were ordained. The gift of singing in tongues and interpretation was enjoyed. At the close of the meeting two babies were blessed.

Now comes the news that the Tories of the Ontario house have been buried by the election returns of yesterday. Wednesday and Thursday, London is going to entertain the Prince of Wales, so when will I get my many home chores finished?

Faithfully yours,

WILLIAM FLIGG.

TORRINGTON, WYOMING, October 15, 1919.

Editors Herald: Following my return home from General Conference last spring I acquired American citizenship and made final proof on our homestead of three hundred twenty acres. Would have naturalized long ago except for the fact that I was subject to almost annual mission changes whereas two consecutive years residence in the State of application ere citizenship is granted.

On July 5, after a quiet Fourth at home with Margaret and Lorne, I started out into the new and unknown, particularly of Wyoming, determining to look up the scattered Saints and doing what I could for them, become better acquainted with my field, and, by the way, take in Yellowstone National Driving Park, which comprises thousands of square miles.

Our car runs on clear kerosene, which reduced somewhat the expense of travel, but not so much as might be expected, for in the north kerosene was not far behind gasoline in price at some places. But, having a one ton capacity we were able to hold our own by provisioning for some weeks in advance, for which we had ample room.

Wyoming is largely rough, much of the land being yet unentered and untaken, the only compensating feature being the minerals and the oil and gas which exist in unimaginable abundance—the rich things of the ancient mountains and the precious things of the lasting hills. It is noteworthy that some of the most rugged surfaces and tracts are redeemed by their rich deposits beneath. So some of the ugliest faces are redeemed and even made pretty by an exceptional brain behind them.

En route on the long Yellowstone Highway we passed Hell's Half Acre. We paused to view this most striking and singular gash in the breast of nature. In the bottom of that scary hollow which has taken ages to fashion and to fathom is to be found, so it is said, no form of life, not even an insect—an empty, deathly and lonesome still. When we had driven on for possibly forty miles we pulled up beside an old-fashioned covered wagon occupied by a man, wife and child on their way to Oregon. I asked if they had seen Hell's Half Acre. Promptly responded the lady: "We haven't seen anything else so far."

The commercial club is perfecting a work which makes it very convenient for people abroad as we were by setting aside some park or location in the different towns and cities where motorists can enjoy free camping sites, sometimes furnishing gas and water. Cody, the home of Buffalo Bill, provided good facilities. While there I called on and had a very pleasant interview with Mrs. Cody, the surviving widow of the old scout. She showed me many interesting relics and pictures including the scalp of Yellow Hand which Cody when a young man took from the big chief when he had fallen him in the duel to which the chief had challenged him. I did not withhold from her my church affiliation, nor yet some literature in presentation of our faith. Her appearance is quite in her favor. She has an article of romance running through the Ladies' Home Journal.

Thus far on our journey I had baptized four and preached a number of times. While in Yellowstone the tourists took up my challenge, built a big fire, surrounded it in the cool eventide and I told them many things about God and his plan which might—who knows?—set their wheels a-buzzing. "Something to do for the Master each day." If we see nothing to do in our common pathway "Let us find something to do."

Journeying through southern Montana we passed through the Crow Reservation. The long drouth had crippled them for pasture and feed, so I understood that the Indian agents had ordered many of the Indians to kill their horses in order to conserve feed for cattle much more needed than horses. The drouth was general this year in the plateau west, many in the unirrigated regions finding it necessary to dispose of their stock, sometimes at a pitiable sacrifice, rather than starve them the coming winter. Still, land values ascend. Many are coming from the east where land is out of their reach to buy the twenty and thirty dollar land here. There are many cases where the Saints abroad would do well to accept the booming prices, for they will not always soar. Who knows but what a few years may witness the nationalization of the land, believe it or not? When we are swept with revolution the most unlikely things happen.

But to return. We visited the Montana side of the historic Custer battlefield, where General Custer made his last stand and fell with his two hundred fifty or more men. There is a marker where each soldier was found, sometimes giving his name. It was a massacre because the Indians were victorious! When the whites had the best of it it was always a battle!

On the Wyoming side, close to the line, is the Mormon town of Lovell. Mormons homestead and settle in companies. They go ahead and get the best. Lovell has a sugar factory and a carbon plant where they turn the gas from the strongest well in the world (was) into lampblack. Gas is 25c per 1000 feet, so that wood and coal—their room is more than their company.

To cut my story off without another page which would take more time than is now at my command and possibly more space than you have at my service, let me say that we motored on over mountain and through valley until about September 26 when we reached our prairie cottage once more, glad to arrive, but not tired nor wearied, for we were snug and comfortable and took our time because we were out to do good. I baptized four in a watering tank, one in an irrigation ditch and two in Donkey Creek near Gillette.

Three nights following our return home we took a dash down to Fort Collins, Colorado, and got our winter supply of apples and met with the Saints there in their midweek prayer session. Cheyenne is on the way where we now have several members who are claiming attention. We returned in time to spend Sunday with the Albin, Wyoming Saints from whom we had been absent for about a year. They are a good, generous band, waiting for the promise of the fathers. They are looking toward the southeast, many of them, and some of them will probably soon come, but not by haste nor by flight.

We will probably return to Independence this fall or in the spring. I say return, but I dare say that if life and health permits I will be a globe-trotter for twenty years yet and comparatively little of that time in Independence. My time and talent is for God and his people. ALVIN KNISLEY.

SWANTON, VERMONT, October 18, 1919.

Editors Herald: I ask the prayers of the Saints on behalf of Brother Archie Watson of Peterboro, Ontario, Canada who has been crippled for many years and now is unable to leave his bed and cannot even read the church papers or write. Lately he has grown very weak and is unable to talk much while he suffers terribly from pains in his limbs and head. This brother knows his time of departure is not far distant when he will enter into a work beyond the vale and he prays his passing will be painless and soon. Please remember him, dear Saints.

Sincerely, in gospel bonds,

MOLLY BLANEY.

LANGLEY FIELD, HAMPTON, VIRGINIA, October 17, 1919.

Editors Herald: I am again in the service of Uncle Sam, and in the part of the United States where I am not acquainted.

My motive for writing you these few lines is to get the names and addresses of Saints living in the Eastern States; those living in this vicinity especially. Washington and Baltimore are not far from here.

There are great revivals in progress in and around here in the Protestant churches at Hampton and Newport News. The people are very religious, or at least appear to be. Perhaps it is like when our church had its beginning; I have thought of that several times. However, I do not believe the gospel has ever been preached here. There is no place of meeting advertised either in the city directories, or in the papers. And there is where I look when I go to a new place. I think the Saints should at least think enough of the work to see that it is advertised both in the papers, and their city's directory.

If any of the Saints near here read this, I would be pleased to hear from them, because I am alone. Other meetings do not satisfy.

Hoping to hear from you, and as many of my brothers and sisters that care to write.

Your brother in bonds,

Detachment A. S. F. S.

Pastoral

We are now settled at Davenport, Iowa, 1706 Iowa Street. And to ye wondering missionary, Come and see the place prepared for you to rest; our home is your home. And to the Saints of Eastern Iowa District, I am now prepared to render such assistance as lies within my power if you will inform me of your needs, I will do my best to reach you as soon as possible. AMOS BERVE.

To the Saints of the Florida District; Greeting: If there ever was a time when we should give heed to the commands of God, it is now.

Living as we do in "the dispensation of the fullness of times," (Ephesians 1:10) and in the last days when perilous times shall come. "For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy." (2 Timothy 3:1,2.)

It is very necessary that we learn our duty and act in the office in which we are appointed, in all diligence.

"He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows not himself approved shall not be counted worthy to stand."—Doctrine and Covenants 104:44.

"Again, all are called according to the gift of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—Doctrine and Covenants 119:8.

The elders are instructed by Paul (Acts 20:28) to feed the church of God. The elders shall see that the law is kept.—Doctrine and Covenants 4:2.

The priests are to visit the home of each member.

The teacher's duty is to watch over the church always, and be with, and strengthen them, and see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness . . . nor evil speaking; and see that the church meets together often, and also see that all the members do their duty. . . . And is to be assisted always, in all his duties in the church, by the deacons, if occasion requires.—Doctrine and Covenants 17.

Peter instructs the elders to "feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre but of a ready mind." These commands and all others bearing on our duty as ministers teach us to be active workers in the church, and there is so much to be done and the laborers are so few I hope that the presidents of the branches will see to it that the officers in the branches do their duty and that all elders and priests living away from the branches will report to me—giving me their addresses and let me know of the chance for labor where they reside. Let members who live away from branches feel free to write me concerning the work where they live.

May the Lord bless you in all your labors with his Spirit in my prayer.

My mission address is Jay, Florida, care W. West rural route. M. M. TURPEN, District President.

Book Reviews

MAKING THE FARM PAY.—By C. C. Bowsfield; 311 pages, $1.25. Forbes and Company, Chicago. This book was first published in 1914, but has been so thoroughly revised and rewritten to meet conditions since the war that it is practically a new book. It is well-written, in a way to interest the average reader, and makes its especial appeal to the farmer, and the city man who is interested in a return to the land. Every phase of agriculture is considered; the raising of vegetables, fruits, poultry, and stock, intensive farming, and diversified farming, the care of the soil, treatment of farm diseases, the use of by-products. Yet it is not a dry book, as each subject is taken up in an interesting way to show how farming can be made profitable. The use of lime, the value of different farm interests, how to interest the young people, bigger egg production, the dates for planting vegetables, fertilizers to be used, sugar beets, and ducks, are among the many topics discussed, a few pages to each one. Recommended by many leading authorities as the best book on the subject.

JESUS AND THE YOUNG MAN OF TO-DAY.—By John M. Holmes. Macmillan Company, New York. $1. Written by a young man who for a number of years has been in close touch with boys and young men in Y. M. C. A. work. Introducing the work, the author says: "The logical way, then, to study the acts and teachings of Jesus, is not to try to harmonize the three gospels but to use Mark as a basis, and study in Matthew and Luke the material which Mark does not contain. This plan is followed in this book." There is much helpful matter in the book. It is divided into studies of seven days each, the seventh reviewing the other six. The type is small enough so considerable material is used. Those accustomed to reading the Bible in the light of latter-day revelations, which means acceptance rather than a tedious explaining away, will study the book with reservations and amendments. For instance, on the miracles of Jesus: "The writer does not believe, however, that Jesus actually walked on the water, that five thousand people were physically fed with only five loaves and two small fishes, that the tempest was quieted by a word; but he does believe that the lame walked, the deaf heard, in some cases the blind saw, and 'demons' were cast out, just as such cures are effected by natural psychological causes to-day. But we can appreciate the difficulties the writer had in treating such subjects, in the light of the restrictive ecclesiastical traditions which evidently have tied him hand and foot.

CHILD'S GARDEN OF VERSES.—By Robert Louis Stevenson. J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia. $1.50. One of the "Stories all children love" series, so popular with the juveniles. This book of poems in its bright colored jacket and pretty red-and-white cloth cover, all profusely illustrated in color, furnishes many a delight for childish hearts. There is a rhythm and movement to Stevenson's poems that children appreciate almost as much as Mother Goose, and they are vastly more humane and inspirational. We are glad to see Lippincott's put these juvenile classics in such attractive form, for it means much to a child—and more to us older folks than we like to admit.

Our Departed Ones

DUTHRIDGE.—William D. was born at Bald Knob, Arkansas, February 15, 1877. Married Maggie Harden, March 18, 1900, and six years later both united with the church, J. W. Jackson officiating. The March following he was ordained a teacher, which position he has faithfully filled according to his physical ability. He was a patient sufferer for years, but passed peacefully to rest, September 21, 1919, leaving a wife, 4 children, and one sister to mourn. Funeral at Saints Church, Douglas, Arizona, E. R. Davis in charge. Sermon by S. D. Condit.

HUFF.—Laura Ellen Driskell Huff, born near Burlington, Iowa, June 3, 1849, came to Nebraska with her parents when five years old, married James Huff, at Council Bluffs, April 6, 1869. Baptized June 21, 1881. Died September 24, 1919, in Omaha, Nebraska. She leaves to mourn husband, Elder James Huff, two sons and three daughters; Lee Huff, May Hardesty, and Lilia Huff of Omaha, Dennis B. Huff of Ord, Nebraska, and Mrs. Cora Congrove, Cario, Nebraska, a brother, L. W. Driskell, and sister Mrs. E. J. Saling. Several grand and great grandchildren. Funeral services in charge of Carl T. Self, interment in Graceland Park Cemetery.

OCTOBER JOURNAL OF HISTORY

The October Journal of History just issuing from the press contains a continuation of the "Official statements of Joseph Smith." This article deals with that period of church history between the years of 1873 and 1890. It will be interesting to those who have followed the history of our relationship with the Utah Church at the time of its trouble with the Government and the history of the church during the attempts made, place it on record in favor of a creed. The Journal contains also a continuation of the article by Mr. Britton on "Early days on Grand River," and excellent discussion of the Mormon trouble there now being run in the Missouri Historical Review, and contains five cuts of scenes familiar to Latter Day Saints history readers, as well as the beginning of a series of articles on "Memories of Elder John Shields of Canada" and an "Autobiographical sketch of Elder J. C. Crabb." In this issue begins a new department entitled "With the exchanges" which is a review of articles published in other journals of interest to Latter Day Saints, as well as the opening editorials of the two editors, Walter W. Smith and Heman Hale Smith. We believe this number is of interest to a great many Latter Day Saints who are not now subscribers of the Journal. Until December 1 the price is $1 a year—after that $1.50.

OCTOBER AUTUMN LEAVES

The current number of our magazine for the youth of the church has an exceptionally pleasing aspect. It is surprising to note the array of talent from our own church writers. "Jerusalem the golden" is the leading article, by Augustine Dwyer, and accompanying it is a new, full-page picture of the author as he looks to-day. "That expanse of blue" is a pretty little essay inspired by the scene at Lowbanks, Ontario. G. Wellington Robley is the author. "The power of prayer" is a missionary experience by Ernest N. Burt. "The red scourge of the Rockies" is a description of the devastation wrought by forest fires in the West, written by D. R. Baldwin. "The wandering Jew" is the title of a Graceland College oration by May Hunter. The two serials, "Book of Mormon evidences" and "The call at evening" are exceptionally interesting, the former concluding with this issue. In the three departments devoted to Temple Builders and Orioles, Religio, and Sunday school, some most vital information is given. In fact we cannot understand how any of our members may hope to be really progressive and not read these valuable contributions written especially for those interested in those organizations. We appreciate each visit of Autumn Leaves to our desk.

OMAHA TO HAVE NEW CHURCH BUILDING

For some time the Saints in Omaha have had trouble over the gradual moving in of colored population in the immediate neighborhood of their church building. In fact the center of the Negro population of the city is now invariably spoken of as Twenty-fourth and Lake, which corner is just one block from the church building. Rather recently the Saints sold their church building to the colored people and are to give possession May 1, 1920. They have bought two excellent lots at Thirty-sixth and Burt Streets, on which they expect to build a modern, commodious building. The plans submitted by the church architect, Henry C. Smith, and which are now being considered, call for the erection of a main part of the building at a cost of about $50,000 and a final addition to complete the plan, at about $30,000 more. The new location is well situated, with excellent car service on three convenient lines.

INDEPENDENCE RELIGIO OFFERS PRIZES

In our letter department this week is a notice of a prize contest of special interest to our musicians. It should be given serious consideration. We are informed that the Independence Religio is also featuring a class in church doctrine at the Stone Church. Brother Walter Smith will conduct a course covering practically the same ground as is covered under that same heading by the class in Graceland College, as may be seen in THE SAINTS' HERALD for July 2, page 633. This particular course at Graceland is accompanied by lectures by a number of different individuals. We are not yet informed whether the same persons will lecture before this class in Independence, or whether Brother Walter Smith will conduct the whole course.

ASSISTANT CHURCH HISTORIAN BUSY

On October 11, Heman Hale Smith, assistant church historian, attended the centennial of the first white settlement in Nebraska Territory, held at Fort Calhoun, north of Omaha. He represented our church in the gathering. Among the speakers were Albert Watkins, historian of Nebraska and Colonel Atkinson, grandson of the original commander of the fort. On Friday evening Brother Smith lectured on "The league of nations," at Woodbine, Iowa, and on Sunday afternoon on "The new Zion" at the Little Sioux District conference at Magnolia, where there was a large attendance. On the 23d Brother Smith lectured at the conference at Chariton, Iowa, then on Friday and Sunday evenings following lectured at Saint Joseph, Missouri.

The Conference and conventions of the Lamoni Stake were held at Chariton, Iowa, October 23 to 26. Thursday evening the assistant church historian, Heman Hale Smith, spoke on "The league of nations." Friday morning, social service and woman's auxiliary programs. In the afternoon general superintendent G. R. Wells spoke on "The little Sunday school," and conducted a round table. In the evening, Professor F. M. McDowell lectured on "The problem of the ages." Saturday morning was taken up with social service and conference business. The afternoon was devoted to the scout movement, in the home, the school, and the church, followed by a young people's get-together meeting. Elder C. E. Wight spoke in the evening, and Sunday evening, Elder J. F. Garver. The other Sunday services were Sunday school, communion service, priesthood meetings, and a musical concert for thirty minutes in the evening. Co-

"A COLLEGE FOR EVERYONE"

When you read the above heading you immediately thought of Graceland. But have you considered how Graceland can be "a college for everyone"? With the organization of the extension department this slogan has come to have a deeper and more significant meaning, for now truly Graceland is open to everyone. Even when the goal of two thousand resident students is reached, the great majority of the church membership will not be able to be in attendance, but everyone who desires can be a Graceland student! The home study courses offered by the extension department are thorough, practical, and give the training necessary for advancement.

Are you one of the number preparing for more efficient service? Are you taking advantage of your opportunities for advancement? Have you written for information concerning the subjects you desire to master? If you have not, write to-day, addressing The President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

SPALDING ROMANCE

On the question of the Solomon Spalding manuscript we may refer our readers again to the address delivered by President Fairchild of Oberlin College before the Western Reserve Historical Society in 1886. This was printed in the SAINTS' HERALD for October 21, 1918, volume 64, page 818, from the original printed report.

Who Would You Have Pay the Bill?

The church publishing house has but one possible source of income. That is from you, its subscribers.

As you know, all too well, everything has gone up: Food, clothing, books, magazines, wages, and commodities, all have advanced from fifty per cent to one hundred per cent.

Now for years the church publications have been kept at a low price, partly because not meant to sell at a profit, but mostly because our printers, as their sacrifice, devoted their services away below scale.

It is impossible to keep going at the old rate any longer. Bills must be paid; our workers must live. You would not shift your obligations to other shoulders. We know you are willing to pay for what you get.

If we carried commercial advertising we could make it pay the increased expense, but even newspapers have doubled in subscription rates—not having any advertisers we can only advance our subscription

HENCE

Beginning December 1, prices will be advanced on all church publications.

This is a matter of necessity only and if possible it is hoped conditions may permit returning to the old prices without great delay.

WHAT JESUS CHRIST THOUGHT OF HIMSELF

(Sermon by Elbert A. Smith, at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, October 5, 1919. Reported by Howard W. Harder.)

I. ON THE HUMAN SIDE

This address may be more of a lecture or a study, perhaps, than a sermon, as it will be necessary to review a number of texts.

My mind was first directed to this theme while reading a book bearing the same title and written by Anson Phelps Stokes, Secretary of Yale University, in 1916. I found his outline so interesting that I will follow a part of it, but will use my own line of argument and some of our own peculiar ideas.

Jesus evidently felt a degree of curiosity concerning what others thought about him. At least he was interested in knowing what others thought of him, for on a certain occasion he said to his disciples, "Whom do men say that I, the Son of Man, am?" And when they answered, Jesus pressed the question a little further and asked them, "But whom say ye that I am?" (Matthew 16:13-15.)

If it was of interest to Jesus to know what others thought of him, certainly it is more interesting to us to know what he thought of himself, because thus we get a self revelation that will be more authentic than any revelation of his character made by some other individual, even though this might not apply with equal force in another case. Paul wrote very voluminously concerning what he thought about Jesus; others of the apostles wrote less. Hundreds and thousands of preachers and writers of all classes have expressed their ideas about Jesus, but the question to-night is not what Paul thought about him, but, What did he think about himself?

A consideration of his life and character naturally comes into two divisions, the human and the divine, and I shall take these up in the order mentioned, considering the human side first.

1. HE PERCEIVED HIS OWN LIMITATIONS

Jesus sought to identify himself in every way possible with humanity, and in order to do so he took on himself flesh and the attributes of humanity. In doing so, apparently he limited himself and circumscribed the realm of his knowledge and his power. There used to be an old theological doctrine, I believe, called the doctrine of Kenosis, the word meaning an emptying out, and the idea being that Jesus, when he took on humanity, divested himself of some of his power and attributes, or

"... he that is tithed shall not be burned at his coming."

For this reason the Bishopric advocate for 1919

emptied them out.

So we note first of all that Jesus thought about himself as having limitations on the human side of his nature. One or two illustrations will prove this.

You will remember how when the sons of Zebedee came to him and, being prompted by their mother, desired that when he should come into his kingdom they should be permitted to sit with him, one on the right and the other on the left. Jesus replied, "That is not mine to give, but it shall be given them for whom it is prepared of my Father." (Matthew 20:13.)

This indicates that there were some things that it was not his province to determine—there was a limit to his power and his jurisdiction, even in such intimate matters as concerning who should sit next to him in his kingdom.

And again in regard to that well-known statement of his concerning the time of his second coming, he says, "But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father." (Mark 13: 32.)

There was one thing at least that intimately concerned him and which was beyond the range of his knowledge. He frankly said, It is not known to me nor to the angels in heaven; that knowledge is reserved in the bosom of the Father.

Jesus was more restrained in his claims than are some individuals. I heard a preacher on the streets on one occasion say, "You may ask me any question under heaven and I will answer it," but here was one question that Jesus Christ himself said he could not answer, because he did not know.

In John 14: 28, he said, "My Father is greater than I." In his memorable prayer in the Garden of Gethsemane he prayed that the cup might pass from him, but he concluded, "Not as I will, but as thou wilt." (Matthew 26: 39.)

He recognized two distinct wills, his own will and the Father's will. The Father's will was superior and, realizing his own limitations, Christ dared not oppose his will against the will of the Father. He desired that they might be one in their wills.

I mention this, among other things, because from a reading of certain passages in the Book of Mormon, particularly in the 8th chapter of Mosiah, it might be possible to form a wrong conclusion, from the statements made to the effect that God, the Eternal Father, came down and suffered on the cross, and a number of kindred statements, which might lead to the conclusion that the Father and the Son are one, in the sense that they are one individual.

I believe that the oneness of Christ and his Father consisted in oneness of spirit and purpose; but not in unity of personality. Jesus said, "I and my Father are one." (John 10: 30.) They were two individuals, but one in spirit and purpose. I think that Jesus revealed the secret of that in his prayer when he prayed for his followers and said, "Father . . . that they may be one, as we are one."—John 17: 11. No one would contend that the entire church be merged into one personality. Each man and woman maintains an individual entity, but they may become one in spirit and in purpose; and in that sense God and Christ are one, for the Master in his prayer said, "even as we are one."

And I submit that in forming our conclusions about the Christ, what he thought about himself along those lines, is of much more importance than anything that Mosiah or anybody else may have thought. Also those Book of Mormon passages must be interpreted in harmony with the great body of scripture.

As I have already quoted, Jesus distinctly said, "My Father is greater than I," and "not as I will, but as thou wilt."

The same thought is carried out also in the Book of Mormon, Nephi 5: 12, where Christ appeared to the Nephites and said to them, ". . . I have drunk out of that bitter cup which the Father hath given me, and have glorified the Father in taking upon me the sins of the world, in the which I have suffered the will of the Father in all things, from the beginning."

So we might set down, then, as one of our conclusions that Jesus recognized and thought of himself as a separate and distinct entity, circumscribed and limited by the humanity that he had taken on himself; and he thought of God the Father as one entity and himself as another, and to the will of the superior being he always wanted to bow in submission.

2. CONSCIOUS OF DRAWING ALL FROM GOD

In the second place, it is evident that Jesus was conscious of receiving all that he had from God. That was in harmony with the statement of John, that God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son. The one who gives the gift must be greater than the gift, otherwise it would not be within his province to bestow the gift. Jesus was a voluntary gift; nevertheless, God gave him. Right in harmony with that, the Master, in Luke 10: 25, says, "All things are delivered unto me of my Father."

He also said, "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me." (John 7: 16.) He did not even claim to formulate or devise the doctrine that he promulgated, though we have reason to believe that he did have part in formulating that doctrine.

On another occasion, he said, "I am not come of myself." (John 7: 28.)

His habitual use of the word "Father" is one thing that reveals his mental attitude toward God. He was the one who introduced the term "father" into religious terminology. He used the word in his first recorded utterance: "I must be about my Father's business"; he used it in his last recorded utterance: "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." He used that term, it is said, one hundred fifty times, at least we have it that many times on record. And about the significance of this—we must remember that Jesus grew up in a Jewish household. The Father in the Jewish home was very much more than the head of the house in everything than he is today in the modern American home. The will of the father was supreme; his commandments were law, even when the children had grown to years of maturity. And so when Jesus used the term "father" he used it realizing its significance—he was the Son, and God on high was his Father.

3. CONSCIOUS OF SUBORDINATION IN PRAYER

In the third place, we find that in his mental attitude he was always subordinate to God in prayer. Jesus approached every crisis in his life with prayer. He was praying on the occasion of his baptism (Luke 3:21); the statement is made that following his baptism while he prayed the heavens were opened and the Spirit descended on him in the form of a dove. He was praying at the time of his transfiguration (Luke 9:29.) He prayed all night before he called the Twelve (Luke 6:12, 13), the first and perhaps one of the greatest of his acts in building his church; he prayed in the Garden of Gethsemane, as we have already noticed; and he prayed upon the cross.

As we read these prayers, we are compelled to conclude that Jesus Christ was not praying to himself or in any mysterious sense to some "better self." He was distinctly praying as you would pray or I would pray to the great eternal God on high. He prayed to a supreme will, "Not my will, but thine be done." He agonized in prayer in the garden until he sweat drops of blood, as it were, that he might come into accord with God.

II. ON HIS DIVINE SIDE

Perhaps that is enough for the first division of the theme, so we will pass to the second division, that of the divine side of Christ and his conception of that part of his mission and his being. Jesus said, "For this cause come I into the world that I should bear witness unto the truth." (John 18:37.) Pilate answered this with the query, "What is truth?" Our definition of truth as we have it in modern revelation is of interest along this line. Truth, we are told, "is knowledge of things as they are, as they were, and as they are to come." (Doctrine and Covenants 90:4.)

That is, when we have knowledge of things as they are, as they were, and as they are to be, we have a complete circle of facts—we have the truth. If we have simply a knowledge of things as they are in the world, there is so much confusion, so much inexplicable suffering, so much that is indefinite and uncertain that we cannot form any correct conclusion. When we have a knowledge of the past and use it in connection with our knowledge of the present, we may form a guess as to the future, and if we guess correctly we will have the truth; however, we are, as a rule, very poor guessers. But Jesus came to bear witness of the truth and he therefore in his being came in contact with the past, with the present, and with the future, and his range of knowledge, such as was vouchsafed to him on the divine side of his nature, embraced all of these.

1. CONSCIOUS OF FULFILLING THE LAW AND THE PROPHETS

We shall consider him first as Lord of the past, fulfilling all of the glorious promises and prophecies that had preceded him, and we find that he thought of himself exactly along that line, for he told the Jews when they were talking about Moses, "Had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me, for he wrote of me." (John 5:46.)

He told them also, "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." (John 5:39.)

In the lesson that we read at the beginning of the discourse you will remember that he came into the synagogue of Nazareth, his home town, and was invited into the pulpit. Turning to the book of Isaiah, he read that beautiful language, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted," and so on, and closing the book he said to them, "This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears." (Luke 4:14-21.)

He then thought of himself as fulfilling the law and the prophets. Not only that, he thought of himself, in a certain sense as superseding the law and the prophets; he came not only fulfilling, but doing away with the law that had preceded him. He felt that in his own person the old law and the old covenant came to an end in his person the new law and new covenant and the new order of things had their beginning.

One of his statements is significant as betraying that attitude of mind. Repeatedly he is quoted as saying, "Ye have heard it said by them of old time" so and so, "but I say unto you" so and so.

Also you might notice his attitude toward the many ceremonies and traditions that had become a part of the Jewish law as he found it. He seemed to feel in himself that he was superior to the law, that he did not have to observe those things unless he wished to; so we find that the Jews complained that he did not fast as John had done, and that he did not wash his hands just according to the law.

He found them with thirty pages of "Mishna" devoted to the single topic of the purification of vessels; yet when he dined with the Pharisee he said unto them, "Ye make clean the outside of the cup and of the platter, but within they are full of extortion and excess. Cleanse first that which is within the cup and platter, that the outside of them may be clean also."

He found them observing all the minutia of their law governing the Sabbath Day, but he and his disciples, when they were hungry, went out and plucked corn on the Sabbath Day; and when the Jews questioned him about it, he said, "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath."

(Mark 2: 27.) They had come to think, apparently, that man lived for the soul purpose of magnifying the Sabbath, but Jesus thought the Sabbath existed that it might help man to live. And then he added this significant language, "The Son of Man is Lord also of the Sabbath." (Mark 2: 28.)

He felt that he, as the Son of Man, was greater than the Sabbath—greater than the law that controlled the Sabbath, and defined how it should be observed.

We note also that in relation to the past he thought of himself as the Messiah of the Old Testament—he was conscious that he had come as the Son of God. On six different occasions he directly or indirectly confessed himself to be the Son of God, the Messiah for whom the Jews had looked so long.

Perhaps the most notable of these occasions was that already referred to when he said, "Whom say ye that I am?" And Peter said unto him, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Jesus answered him and said, "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven."

Here was a direct and explicit confession that he was indeed the Son of God.

On the occasion when he was arraigned before the ecclesiastical council and the high priest acted as his inquisitor, the high priest evidently desiring to have an explicit and direct answer on which to base a decision (the decision already having been made in his own mind, evidently), said to Jesus, "Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed?" And he got the definite answer that he wanted, "I am." (Mark 14: 61, 62.)

Also when he stood before Pilate, and Pilate said to him, "Art thou the king of the Jews?" Christ said to him, "Thou sayest," which is generally accepted as a tacit confession that he was the king of the Jews.

2. AS MASTER OF THE PRESENT

Taking up next his thought of himself in relation to this present life, we note first of all that Jesus Christ was conscious of complete righteousness in himself. In that regard, he was quite different from the Apostle Paul, for instance, who complained bitterly on many occasions that he was not worthy to be an apostle, who lamented his weakness, his past errors, who complained that whenever he wanted to do good, evil was always present, and that he was conscious of a continual warfare in his members. Jesus was different from Paul, and from all other men, apparently, in that regard; because the best of men, realizing how far short they came of complete righteousness are frequently led to lament their mistakes and their shortcomings. Like John Wesley when he said that he had converted others and now had need that some one should convert him.

Jesus was perhaps the first and the last man grown to maturity conscious that he had never done wrong. He was not egotistical, but he had the perfectly natural, normal attitude of an individual who had never done anything sinful. In that, perhaps he was absolutely unique, and the only individual who could say, as he did on one occasion, "Which of you convicteth me of sin?" (John 8: 46.) Certainly the Jews could not give out any such challenge, because when he told them, "Let him that is without sin cast the first stone," there was not a single individual who had within himself this consciousness of absolute purity, so they all went away and left him alone with the accused woman.

He was conscious, also, evidently, of the absolute right of leadership. His familiar invitation was, "Come, follow me!" Apparently it was more of a commandment than an invitation. "Take up thy cross and come and follow me!" It was the language of an individual who felt within himself that it was his right to lead humanity, and who thought of himself as being "a leader, a witness, and a commander," as Isaiah said. And he did not think this particular leadership should be shared with any other individual, because he said on one occasion that no man could serve two masters; he realized that the human mind could not entertain two dominant passions at the same moment. The magnet cannot respond to two lodestones at the same instant. Christ thought of himself as being the supreme leader that would draw all men unto him. As a revelation of that attitude of mind, he said, "One is your master, even Christ."

He is quoted as saying, "Ye call me master and lord and ye say well; for so I am." (John 13: 13.)

Evidently Jesus also was conscious of authority, and his hearers noticed this early in his ministry. They said that he did not talk like the scribes, but he spake as one having authority. To a certain extent this authority proceeded from the consciousness within his heart that he was absolutely without sin and so entitled to be a leader—this in connection with the commission that he had received from his heavenly Father.

He was conscious also of power over nature and nature's laws. He moved out serenely to help lepers, restore sight to the blind, turn water into wine, and even raise the dead, through the consciousness that the same power that he exercised over men was also his to exercise over the material things and over the common laws of nature.

Perhaps most striking of all, he thought of himself as having the right and the authority to forgive sin. You remember the occasion when the woman come with the alabaster box of ointment, how she washed the Savior's feet with her tears and dried them with her hair. The Jews knew that this woman had been a bad woman, she was notorious, but Christ said to her, "Thy sins are forgiven." And the people marveled and said, "He forgiveth sin also?"

Much the same appears in the case of the woman taken in adultery, "Neither do I condemn thee; go thy way and sin no more." This was equivalent to a forgiveness of transgression, without a trial, without the sitting of a court, and without the hearing of evidence—it was the Son of God sitting in judgment and pronouncing forgiveness on a human soul.

Perhaps most important of all, he was conscious of his unique sonship. Jesus was conscious that in a unique sense he was different from all other men who had ever lived, or ever will live, in that he was the Son of God. Other men may become sons of God, in one sense, but in some unique and special sense he was the one begotten of the Father. This is revealed in his frequent use of such titles as "The Son of God," and the very frequently used title, "The Son of Man," and also, of course, in his response to Peter when Peter said to him, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

It is also revealed in a striking manner in his parable of the vineyard, recorded in Mark 12: 6. You remember the nobleman had sent his servants one after another to collect the fruits of the vineyard. One had been killed and another had been stoned and all of them had been maltreated; finally and last of all the nobleman sent his "one son, his well beloved" and they slew him also (Mark 12: 6). If human language can reveal thought it is evident that Jesus thought of himself in this parable as being the "one" son—the one "dearly beloved" Son of God. Others had preceded him; the prophets had been killed and maltreated; now he came, the "one dearly beloved son" of God, sent in the person of Jesus Christ.

3. AS LORD OF THE FUTURE

Coming last of all to his thought about himself as pertaining to the future, it is quite evident that he never thought his work would end on the cross or in the tomb. He thought of himself, indeed, as being the Lord of the resurrection. You will remember that on one occasion he said to the Jews, "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up." (John 2: 19.)

The disciples said he referred to the destruction of his body and his resurrection.

More definitely he stated concerning his own life, "I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again." (John 10: 18.) And quite definitely to Martha, when he was approaching the tomb of Lazarus, he said, "I am the resurrection, and the life; he that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." (John 11: 25.) He thought of himself as having in his own person power over death and being the Lord of the resurrection and the Lord of life, thus connecting himself with God, for with God "are the issues of life and death." Jesus was conscious of having on his divine side power over both life and death, and he demonstrated it almost immediately in the resurrection of Lazarus.

He thought of himself in regard to the future as coming again to reign over this earth. He told the disciples, "If I go away, I will come again;" and on several occasions he is quoted as saying that the Son of Man should come in clouds of glory with his angels.

But perhaps the most illuminating are the conversations recorded in Matthew 24 and Luke 21 when the disciples came and asked him concerning the sign of his coming. He took it as a matter of course. Without doubt, they had been taught that he would come again, and he proceeded to give them the signs that would mark the approach of his second coming. He thought then of himself as coming to reign over the earth where once he had been rejected.

He thought of himself, also, and his mission, not as being limited to the Jews or to three years of ministry. He thought of his mission as extending to all nations and continuing through all time. This is rather remarkable when we consider his upbringing from a human standpoint. Many of the current traditions and teachings, as well as his environment, tended to make him a narrow-minded Jew, limiting his mission and his teachings to Jewry. But we do not find any traces of the effects of these traditions, teachings, or environment in his work.

Read the Sermon on the Mount and the Lord's Prayer. They are universal. Anyone, any time, any place, can understand them; and I have often said that when the prophets get to talking in riddles, like Daniel and John, I immediately secure a transfer and take the straightest line to the Mount of Olives, because I can understand the Sermon on the Mount.

Finally, when he came to give his last great commission to the disciples, he revealed in it his own concept and his own thought about his own mission and work in the world. "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations," as Matthew has it; or as Mark has it, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." This was not to the Jews alone; indeed, on one occasion, he said, "Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold," and the Book of Mormon tells us that he came to the western world to fulfill this purpose, "Them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice, and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd." (John 10: 16.) So he came to this land, and told the Nephites that he would also visit the lost tribes.

JUST WAIT A MINUTE—LET'S SEE

Some of the authorities of the Brighamite church (the so-called Mormon church with its headquarters in Utah) have evidently become boastful, and seem to smile in their supposed, and almost apparent, security from legal prosecution or physical persecution.

For the latter safety, the freedom from physical persecution, we are glad for the Mormon people, for only bigotry of the vilest form manifests itself in the use of unlawful means to bring about desired ends. But we do not rejoice in the fact, that the strong arm of the law did not fall heavily on its violators, at such times as when Joseph Fielding Smith and others of the Utah institution were living in adultery under the more euphonious term, to them, of plurality of wives.

We lament the fact that our Government, which would send officers over the entire United States to bring to trial men guilty of bigamy, did not even turn out of its tracks to convict a double bigamist in the person of a Utah Mormon church president, who confessed before the United States Senate that he was living in sexual relation with five women he called "wives." In the sight of the law of his country only one of these living women could be his wife, and in the sight of the law of God to live in such relation with more than one woman was to be a committer of abomination.

Let us cite the proof, before going further into the discussion.

Before me is a Government document entitled, "Protest in the matter of Reed Smoot, senator-elect from the State of Utah." The investigation took place in the Senate of the United States. Joseph Fielding Smith is the star witness. Listen to a few of his answers. Questions by Senator Burrows:

"Why is it necessary to continue to have issue by five wives in order to support and educate the children already in existence? Why is it necessary?"

Mr. Smith commits himself in these words: "It is only to the peace and harmony and good will of myself and my wives; that is all." (Page 334.)

But let us read further concerning this self-confessed transgressor of God's holy law.

The chairman: "Then you could educate your children and clothe them and feed them without having new issue?" Mr. Smith: "Well, yes; I possibly could, but that is just exactly the kernel in the nut."

The chairman: "Yes."

The witness: "I have chosen not to do that, Mr. Chairman."

"You have chosen not to do that?" queried Mr. Burrows.

"That is it," said Smith, "I am responsible before the law for my action."

"And in not doing it, you are violating the law?" questioned the Senator. "Yes," answered this culprit.

Senator Overman then queried: "Is there not a revelation published in the Book of Covenants here that you shall abide by the law of the State?"

J. F. Smith answers: "Yes, sir." (Page 334.)

And the iron is pressed home when the legal and justified inquisitor, Senator Overman, asks: "If that is a revelation, are you not violating the laws of God?"

And this wonderful example to the flock in Utah, who claimed he was not preaching the doctrine of polygamy, but admitted that he was living and cohabiting with five women, to his eternal shame and the confusion of his followers replied: "I have admitted that [his violation of the laws of God and the State] a great many times here." (Page 335.)

We read of the same fatal admission made by Francis Lyman, apostle in the Mormon congregation, when on the witness stand at the Smoot investigation. Senator Hoar submits to him the following question: "So that you say that you, an apostle of your church, expecting to succeed, if you survive Mr. Smith, to the office of which you will be the person to be the medium of divine revelations, are living and are known to your people to live in disobedience of the law of the land and of the law of God?" And the man said, "Yes." (Page 430.)

After this terrific grilling—a grilling which, in many respects has no parallel in the world's history—Joseph Fielding Smith returns to Utah, to the bosom of his families, and receives the sympathy and flattery of his people. But no amount of sophisticated effort could erase the confession of sin and crime which stood recorded in public records of the best-known Government on earth—the United States of America. The sins committed in secret were being shouted from the housetops.

The word of God given through the Prophet in Ohio, November 1, 1831, received a literal fulfillment: "The rebellious shall be pierced with much sorrow, for their iniquities shall be spoken upon the housetops, and their secret acts shall be revealed." (Doctrine and Covenants 1:1.) Thus did these pseudo-apostles fulfill the words of the Prophet they claimed to uphold.

One of the most marvelous things which has occurred in this age is that investigation at Washington called forth by the Smoot incident. In the great capital, toward which to-day the eyes of the whole world are directed; the place where Webster successfully upheld the Constitution; where Clay pleaded for justice and where Abraham Lincoln smiled from a broken heart, the Book of Mormon was allowed to speak for itself and reveal the purity of its teachings. Here, also, was read in its entirety, section seventy-six of the Book of Covenants, giving an account of the vision received by Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon concerning the state of the dead, the great plan of God touching the future of man. (A Methodist minister stated in confidence to a friend of the writer that this document was the greatest exposition of the wisdom and justice of God ever given to the world.)

But we are almost leaving the main theme of the story. Joseph Fielding Smith returned home and in due season died, and was gathered to the bosom of his fathers. Where the place may be, does not concern us, so far as the facts of this article are concerned. In an overflow meeting held in Assembly Hall, in Utah, they assembled to eulogize his name. Hyrum Smith, patriarch, speaks:

"Years pass [after the Smoot investigation] and then President Smith went back to Washington. The vice president of the United States greeted him that time with these words, 'Mr. President, I am delighted to see you. May I take you to the football game this afternoon?'" (Deseret News, June 2, 1919.)

Here the Brighamites are led to rejoice at this change in sentiment on the part of the politicians. But what brought it about? Surely no good works on the part of the Utah institution, for it still believes in the doctrine of plurality of wives, and must continue to do so till it denounces the teachings of its leaders, who, from Brigham Young down, have sustained one another in practicing the abomination which God thundered against through the Prophet Jacob in his sermon in the temple. (See Book of Mormon, Jacob 2.)

Listen to the wail which came from the mouth of the president of the Utah church, on the day the manifesto was read: "I thank God that I have seen with my eyes this day, that this people have been ready to vote to sustain me in an action that I know, in one sense, has pained their hearts." (Proceedings at the semiannual conference of the Brighamite church, October 6, 1890.)

It pains my heart to read of the idea of a God so inconsistent that he would reveal "a new and everlasting covenant" to bless a handful of people, and then allowed it suddenly to be annulled by a constitution which he (God) had raised up men to create. (See Doctrine and Covenants.)

Listen while we quote from that document which came suddenly from the secret drawer of Brigham

Young—the notorious "revelation" on plural marriages, paragraph 4: "For behold! I reveal unto you a new and an everlasting covenant; and if ye abide not that covenant, then are ye damned; for no one can reject this covenant, and be permitted to enter into my glory."

Then, in less than forty years, that same Lord (?) speaks through another prophet of the Utah church and commands the children of the "new and everlasting covenant" to cease from observing it.

What is the secret of this hodge-podge of Utah ecclesiasticism? Is it that the god of politics is stronger than their God of heaven? Or did the Brighamite god reveal that convenient doctrine of polygamy simply for the blessing of Brigham and his immediate followers? Or was the Lord mistaken when he inspired the framers of the Constitution in not making above question a phrase protecting a man in his practice in polygamy? Truly, this is a perplexing matter, for the church so vitally concerned to clear up.

I think it is a case of the "cat coming out of the bag," a revelation of the "nigger in the woodpile." The thing can be briefly summed up in this sentence: The Brighamite church tried to foist on the world a teaching, in the name of God, and of God's prophet, Joseph Smith, jr., which was abominable to God, and it tumbled to the earth, just as every other abominable teaching, in the name of God, is falling or will soon fall to earth.

You can fool some of the people all of the time, you can fool all of the people some of the time, but you can't fool all the people all of the time.

I made use of the word "boastful," and applied it to some of the Utah elders. It is well to submit evidence to justify the charge I make. Coming from the East, where the "Mormons" (as the world calls them) make many protracted efforts to reach the people with Mormonism, I have the right to speak from the viewpoint of personal contact.

I have visited their meetings, and have heard them many times as they preached on the streets. Therefore, when I take up their mission paper, Liahona, and read of their glowing reports of success in the eastern country I know that they have overstated facts. In Boston, Providence, and even in Saint Louis, where the workers for the Utah faith have been busy many years, the membership is so small in numbers that the visitor looks twice to determine whether he has entered the right hall. And as for interest—well, there is interest and interest. What kind of interest does the scribe of these glowing accounts refer to?—and interest in what?

Surely no decent person can be interested in the fact that Abraham had a concubine and that Solomon had many more. Surely if the Utah elders are honest they would not baptize a convert without letting him or her know where the church stands on belief of polygamy. It is not a question, to the convert, necessarily, as to whether or not the church teaches the plurality of wives doctrine; the real issue is, does the Utah church still believe that doctrine? A sincere convert must ask, What is the belief that I must give my allegiance to?

This being the case, we ask again, What is meant by "a good interest is manifested by the people here?" It seems to me that the Liahona editor must constantly use two pencils, when fixing up these mission reports for publication; one pencil is the blue and the other is the "camouflage."

On the other hand, though I have stated facts, such of themselves do not prove that the church is not increasing rapidly in membership. Small audiences in a hall or church do not indicate that the cause represented there is false.

But let us quote again, from the Deseret News of June 2, 1919. The report to the general conference of the Utah church, furnishes us with the following information: During the year 14,761 members entered the Brighamite church through baptism; but, there were 15,963 children blessed that year, and this statement helps us to see where many members of the church come from, for when a child is eight he is eligible for baptism.

In the same paper we read that Joseph F. Smith was "clean, pure, and wholesome." And that he "was a great success in life although he was not a wealthy man."

It is with a sigh of relief and pleasure unspeakable that we turn for a moment to consider the life of a really great man, who was the legal successor to the prophet Joseph Smith, jr. I refer to the late Joseph Smith, president of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, who died at Independence, Missouri, in December, 1914. This man spent his life upholding the banner of the true God, and with voice and pen opposed the evil doctrines of the Brighamite church. He, too, died and was gathered to his fathers, and the church he had served so long and faithfully, was not obliged to eulogize his name with sugared discourses based on falsehood. Men outside the faith volunteered their tribute of praise, and the Associated Press scattered the encomium to the far corners of the earth. As a sample I quote an editorial printed in the Kansas City Journal, for December 12, 1914:

In the ecclesiastical dogmas which made up the denominational belief of the late Joseph Smith the general public has no particular interest. But in the death of the late venerable head of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints the country loses an interesting and useful citizen. Joseph Smith was considerably more than a powerful churchman into whose keeping had been committed the destinies of one of the great denominations of the world.

Those who ignorantly confounded the Reorganized Church with Mormonism, in the objectionable acceptance of that term, will not appreciate the theological distinction between the two nor understand that nothing was more hateful to Joseph Smith than the doctrines of Brigham Young, with their polygamous teachings and all the other features which make Utah Mormonism obnoxious in the eyes of the average American.

But all who ever came in contact with Joseph Smith could readily appreciate the broad charity of his tenets, the untarnished private life he lived, the unswerving devotion to duty which he always displayed and the simple modesty of his relations toward his church and the world at large. To his church he was the prophet whom all its communicants revered, but he was also the unostentatious leader who constantly practiced the virtues which he enjoined upon his followers. To the world he was the blameless citizen who walked before all men as an example and whose interest in the movements that made for the welfare of the community always had his heartiest support.

Perhaps nothing could give a clearer insight into the character of Joseph Smith than the directions which he issued shortly before his death in respect to his funeral. Disliking nothing so much, next to sham, as ostentation, he directed that his funeral should be conducted with the utmost simplicity, without any of the elaborateness which his followers would otherwise have provided in order to testify to the honor in which they held him.

He was the prophet, but first of all he was the Christian gentleman and the good citizen. As such he lived, as such he died, as such he will be remembered by all outside the household of his faith. His followers themselves can have no legacy of remembrance more honorable than his appraisal of the people among whom he lived and labored so many years.

Kindly, cheerful, loyal to his own creed, tolerant of those of others, standing for modesty, simplicity, good citizenship, embodying in his private and public life all the virtues which adorn a character worthy of emulation—such is the revelation which Joseph Smith leaves to the world, as the real interpretation of an ecclesiastical message translated into terms of human character.

In the foregoing we have a difference with a striking distinction, and were we disposed to go into comparisons, there might be unfolded a tale which the church in the salt land would not care to hear. But more important matters confront us, just now.

One is a statement made by James E. Talmage, in an address delivered at the eighty-ninth semiannual conference of the church in Utah, and published in the Liahona for March 18, 1919. He thinks doubtless that he forever settles the matter, for the "Mormons" at least, when he makes this remark concerning the Reorganized Church:

A reorganized church of Christ impossible . . . the concept of a reorganized Church of Jesus Christ is unthinkable. . . . Such a thing cannot be. It would mean that the Lord had changed his word, and that when he said this, the restored church or kingdom of God should never more be thrown down, He spoke falsely; that after all these are not the last days; that this is not the dispensation of the fullness of times; that this is to be another restoration. Such contradictions in terms my mind is altogether too feeble to comprehend. This church will never be reorganized. There never will be a reorganized Church of Jesus Christ upon the earth. There can be none such, except as man misuses names.

Of course this ipse dixit of Apostle Talmage settles the matter for time and eternity. But in his attempt he forgets one great and vital thing; that is, God's Word. He also commits the very offense he accuses others of—the misuse of names.

To reorganize the restored church, under certain circumstances, is thinkable, is possible, is plausible. But to re-create, to renovate (in the sense of make new) is open to question. Mr. Talmage cannot be ignorant of the meaning of the term reorganize. The simple definition given by the Century Dictionary will suffice: "To organize anew; to bring back into an organized state; as, to reorganize a society or an army." This term reorganize in no sense carries with it the meaning that the things with which a reorganization is effected were destroyed or annihilated. The army reorganized was an army organized before. A certain army in France might have lost its general, captains, and many other officers, and thus become disorganized, but the power that organized the army, in the first place, can take of the remnant, big or small as the case may be, and reorganize that army. In the interim it did not cease to be, it existed in a disorganized condition. And this is true of the Church of Jesus Christ.

I presume that Mr. Talmage referred to the words of Daniel, the prophet. We are glad to have this Daniel come to judgment. Let him speak: "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." (2: 44.)

What are the facts in the case when this statement of Daniel is analyzed in the light of events which transpired after the death of Joseph Smith, jr., as well as before? They are these:

The perfectly organized kingdom of God, or Church of Jesus Christ, is composed of three things—laws, subjects, officers. It cannot exist in a complete sense without the proper relationship of the three, and in case of disorder, or partial disorganization, by the interruption of this perfect relationship, decay sets in and in time, if not stopped by a restoration of order, or by a reorganization, death would result to the body itself.

However, to argue that because certain members, or parts of a body, cease to function, that the body as a whole is destroyed, is to argue fallaciously; and to argue that this depleted body could not be reorganized by a restoration of those paralyzed parts and still remain the same body, is also to argue fallaciously. Yet the Utah church makes use of a position which is not logical and crumbles when touched by truth.

The Reorganized Church does not claim that divine authority departed from the earth when the death of Joseph Smith, jr., took place. Neither does it claim that the members of the church ceased to exist. With these existing, including the laws of the kingdom, one could hardly claim that the kingdom was destroyed; but with the death of the members of the first presidency and the transgression of over two thirds of the members of the second presidency, these quorums ceased to function and were disorganized, if not destroyed. Though God suffered thus far the work of the enemy, he would not allow the kingdom to be destroyed or given to another people, and the body was saved from ultimate death by the reorganizing of such parts of the kingdom as had undergone disorganization. The Quorum of Twelve Apostles was reorganized, or restored to organic form, in that a new president and members were chosen to occupy; the first presidency, likewise, was reorganized. Other adjustments took place. Thus the church was reorganized.

This reorganization was effected by the faithful members of the kingdom, or church, established in the days of Joseph Smith, jr.; the kingdom was "never given to another people"; it was never destroyed; and "it shall stand forever." The "rebellious" cast off into the "salt land" (Jeremiah 17: 5) and other places, had no hand in the work of preserving the church, which was "bleeding Zion" from 1844 to 1860. William Marks never broke his gospel covenant by embracing that "new and everlasting"-ly abominable covenant of plural marriages. Neither did Young Joseph, who was twelve years old at the time of his father's death, forfeit his right to the direction of God.

It might be well to state here that of the direct descendants of Joseph Smith, jr., which number over two hundred, only one ever affiliated with the Utah church, and she left it and united with the Reorganized Church. The sons of the Martyr, Joseph, Alexander and David, in public and private life, denounced the doctrine of polygamy, even writing tracts against the abomination. They died holding full membership with the church which had been proved before two courts of the land and before thousands of intelligent listeners, to be the true church in succession.

Our friend Talmage positively states that such a thing as a reorganization could not be. Evidently the Lord did not agree with this idea, for he said: "I grant unto you a sufficient time to build a house unto me. . . . and if you do not these things at the end of the appointment, ye shall be rejected as a church with your dead, saith the Lord of hosts." (Section 107.) As to the possibility of this tragedy occurring we have the statement of the Lord against that of Mr. Talmage. Allowing that this thing, this particular rejection, did occur, what would be the step necessary to preserve the kingdom which was not to be destroyed or given to another people? Simply a reorganization by the people who held authority in the first organization. This took place.

To prove that those people, to whom the Lord spoke at that time, did not build the house (temple) and consequently were rejected as a church with their dead, we have only to quote from Utah history itself. One Hundred Years of Mormonism, by John Henry Evans, edition of 1909, page 310, contains this significant statement: "It [the temple] was not finished till after the prophet's death." Ah! Light breaks! Let another Utah publication speak: The Millennial Star, December 1, 1845 (volume 6, pages 195, 196) informs us that on October 5, 1845, a conference of the members met in the Nauvoo Temple. The account states that there were "temporary floors, pulpits and seats." And on the next day, October 6, it was "unanimously resolved to move en masse to the west."

It is almost unnecessary to proceed. A closing comment may not be out of place. The building was not completed, the work commanded was not finished in the time proscribed. I do not see how any sane man can consistently deny this fact. Those people who were guilty of neglect of duty were "rejected as a church with their dead." Baptisms for the dead ceased. That temple was never completed. Since that day no temple has been built, by command of God.

It is true that they found time to erect a large and expensive Masonic Temple (the travesty of it!) which was dedicated just three months before the death of the Prophet. It is true that to-day there are members of the church who are paying their money into secret order rather than into the Church of Jesus Christ, and are wasting; yea, worse than wasting their time loafing around lodge rooms and never attending their church services as they should.

We have learned, then, that certain elders of the Brighamite church are wont to boast; that they write glowing reports to their mission papers, but that in all cases these reports are not well-founded. That their one-time president, Joseph Fielding Smith, acknowledged, before one of the highest tribunals on earth, that he was guilty of breaking the law of the land and the law of God. That some of the splendid truths of the latter-day work were also emphasized and sent broadcast to the whole world.

We have learned that a patriarch of the Brighamite church said that Joseph Fielding Smith was "clean, pure, wholesome, and not a wealthy man." We learned that judging from our code of morals, none of the above terms could be truthfully applied to that man.

We have learned that a reorganization was possible and that it took place; that God's word was fulfilled; that mistakes have been made, but that the greatest one is the persistent attitude on the part of the Brighamite church to refuse to recognize the true Church of the Lord, which is known among men as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

In the development of man he passes through several stages.

First, that of pleasure and pain, when the child does that which gives him pleasure and refrains from that which causes suffering.

Second, that of reward and punishment when his activities are determined by the benefits to be gained or the penalty which shall attach.

Third, that of praise and derision when he is actuated by a desire for the encomiums of his companions and fears the contempt that would follow failure.

Man's highest development, however, is reached when he does things because they are right, regardless of the consequences.

To be actuated by fear of impending punishment in the payment of our tithing would be to acknowledge that we occupied a low stage of development and would drag our service to God down to the level of that of the heathen who thinks that the wrath of his god may be appeased by his offering.

Love, nor fear, should be the dynamic which moves us in the payment of our tithing. The payment of tithes alone will not save us from future punishment. It is only when we have kept this commandment in connection with every other one that we shall be secure.

The true spirit of giving is manifested in the following letter which we have just received from a crippled brother who states that after coming into the church he began paying one tenth of his increase. It had not occurred to him that he should have paid a tenth of his net worth to begin with. He says:

"Brother — and Brother — came here to organize a branch, and they explained the law of tithing to us. This was the first time that I fully understood it. I felt badly. My situation was like this: I am a cripple; I had about $6,200 capital and twenty acres of timber land. I intended to make this timber land my home if the world did not use me right. My living and church expenses required nearly all my income. I prayed for a way to pay my tithing and for the right nature that would make me happy in paying it. It was hard to think of parting with this land at

ARE WE ANTI-CHRIST?

The bishop of Oxford did some plain talking at a church conference at Leicester, England, the other day. He is thus reported in a London dispatch:

The bishop said it is not only that those who positively hold the Christian faith are in the minority, but there is a widespread revolt against the principles of Christian morality. Except in the vaguest sense Britain cannot be called a Christian country.

And the bishop goes on to say it would not astonish him to witness a real reign of anti-Christ, so many anti-Christians are there in this modern world. The bishop of Peterborough followed and offered an alternative to the 2,000 delegates: "The choice before us now is between hell and Utopia." These two church magnates no doubt weighed their words in these two expressions regarding the state of Christianity.

And can America be termed vaguely Christian as England is? Is it anti-Christ, too? Well, it is not so bad, wicked, and corrupt as one might infer from being anti-christ, but it is very far from what it ought to be, and there is a great deal of anti-Christ visible in all its varied life. This is seen in the lack of spirituality everywhere evident, and the dissension, unrest, enmities, corruption, and arrogance that permeate all of its society.

MAY BRING ROCHDALE PLAN TO AMERICA

[The following press dispatch emanating from the Detroit, where the Protestant Episcopal Church is in general convention, is of special interest to our readers. The establishment of cooperative societies and their successful operation is a crucial point in our church work.—EDITORS.]

If the Protestant Episcopal Church introduces into America the Rochdale Cooperative societies of England it will have started a movement which has a following of more than 2,500,000 over there now.

The church has taken up the problem of the high cost of living, and investigation of the Rochdale movement by the house of deputies is a result.

There are about 350 cooperative stores in the United States. The customers receive an equal share of the profits. That originally, was the plan of Robert Owen, the English woolen merchant of the early nineteenth century, which later developed into the famous Rochdale movement.

FLANNEL WEAVERS ORGANIZE

This movement began with the organization of flannel weavers of Rochdale, England, in 1844, for cooperative buying for their own consumption. From twenty-eight members with a capitalization of $140, the society grew in twenty-five years to a membership of 5,560 and a stock of $406,160. The small store expanded into numerous shops and factories, a hospital, reading rooms, a library, and classes in arts and sciences.

Now there are more than 1,500 of these societies in England with a membership of 2,500,000. The value of cooperation came home to them especially during the war, when prices were kept down to their lowest possible limit, and the profits of profiteers were practically eliminated.

At first members served in the stores without salaries, but later officials were employed. After paying all expenses, part of the balance was allotted to the educational fund and the rest equally apportioned among the members.

The New England Association of Farmers and Mechanics in 1831 is the earliest known cooperative movement in America. But this and many others were short-lived.

The first large cooperative society was the Workmen's Protective Union of America, which disappeared with the coming of the Civil War. Farmer's alliances sprang up after the war, but it was not until late in the nineties that the system of cooperative stores spread among other than farmers.

OFFICIAL ESTIMATE OF LIVING COSTS

Official estimate for a "health and decency" budget for Government clerks place the minimum annual expenses of a family of five at $2,262, an unmarried woman at $1,083, and a single man at $1,000.

These figures were made public to-day by Doctor Royal Meeker, chief of the bureau of labor statistics, in connection with the investigation of federal salaries by a congressional committee.

The food item in the family budget amounts to $778.93. The clothing bill for the year is $513.72, of which the husband is allotted $121.16, the wife $166.46, 11-year-old boy $96.60, the 5-year-old girl $82.50, and the baby (2 years) $47. Housing, fuel, and light are placed at $428 and miscellaneous expenses at $546.82. A total of $2,262.47.

If the wife was especially competent in the art of shopping, did her own sewing, and practiced all household economies, the budget might be reduced, it was explained, to "rock bottom minimum" of $2,025.56.

The bureau, in compiling these estimates, makes a hat allowance for the wife of one and a half hats a year, $10 for a winter hat and $5 for a summer one, the winter hat to be worn two years. An item of $9.40 is allowed for a newspaper, held by Doctor Meeker to be a necessity. The family amusement appropriation is set at $40, which also includes magazines, although in general such luxuries as the latter, it was pointed out, are to be enjoyed at the public library.—Kansas City Star.

EDUCATION AND ATHLETICS

It is better that the American idea of a well-educated man should be a robust athlete than a pallid grind. There is more hope for an ideal based on vigor than on pedantry. But it is not necessary to choose an unbalanced type as an ideal in order to avoid another still more unbalanced. On this, as on so many other points, Theodore Roosevelt has left a clear expression of wisdom. It is recorded in the recently published volume, Theodore Roosevelt's Letters to his Children, in a letter to his eldest son, then at school, he wrote:

"I am delighted to have you play football. I believe in rough, manly sports. But I do not believe in them if they degenerate into the sole end of anyone's existence. I don't want you to sacrifice standing well in your studies to any over-athleticism, and I need not tell you that character counts for a great deal more than either intellect or body in winning success in life. Athletic proficiency is a mighty good servant, and, like so many other good servants, a mighty bad master. Did you ever read Pliny's letter to Trajan in which he speaks of its being advisable to keep the Greeks absorbed in athletics because it distracted their minds from all serious pursuits, including soldiering, and prevented their ever being dangerous to the Romans? I have not a doubt that the British officers in the Boer War had their efficiency partly reduced because they had sacrificed their legitimate duties to an inordinate and ridiculous love of sports. A man must develop his physical prowess up to a certain point; but after he has reached that point there are other things that count more. In my regiment nine tenths of the men were better horsemen than I was, and probably two thirds of them better shots than I was, while on the average they were certainly hardier and more enduring. Yet after I had had them a very short while they all knew, and I knew too, that nobody else could command them as I could. I am glad you should play football; I am glad that you should box; I am glad that you should ride and shoot and walk and row as well as you do. I should be very sorry if you did not do these things. But don't ever get into the frame of mind which regards these things as constituting the end to which all your energies must be devoted, or even the major portion of your energies."

THE FORUM

The Forum is intended as a department of free discussion of most questions. It does not purport to represent the decision of the church or of its leading officials, except as their names may appear to signed articles. It represents the view of the writer.

In fact, articles and even editorials published in other departments of the HERALD, either now or in the past, have represented as a rule simply the position of the writer. There is no intention to commit the church to a position which it has not taken.

The HERALD is the official organ of the church. As such it should have departments of general interest, and should receive the communications of the general church officers which are authoritative. It should have the regular reports, as of the Bishop, and all official information. It should also have the movements and activity of the general church officials. Even the general officials may desire to write at times without committing the church, that is, presenting their own views for what they may be worth, conceding the same right to others.

There is hope that this department may be a means of education to all of us, and inform us what others are thinking of, and that it will prepare us better to meet the problems lying before the church. This is indeed the purpose of all of the HERALD.

No personal articles will be accepted, nor any whose primary purpose is to attack the position of some preceding writer. Each one should present his views affirmatively. We are governed in this by the action of General Conference, as follows:

"The committee to which was referred the resolution . . . relative to the adoption of certain measures which shall govern in the publication of articles through THE SAINTS' HERALD, submit the following:

"1. That in its opinion, the enforcement of ironclad rules and arbitrary decisions by persons who were not governed in their work by broad and liberal principles of toleration, as is shown by the history and societies in the past, has had such a tendency to subvert the liberties and retard the progress of the race as to make the enactment of any set of rules to be followed under all circumstances of doubtful propriety and final good.

"2. That in our opinion there is a just and proper line to be drawn between the positions of permitting a fair hearing of the views of any and all through the church paper, and the abuse of the sacred principle of toleration and freedom adhered to by the church by using to excess the columns of the church paper, in making a series of attack upon the life of the body, or an undue effort to enforce personal views upon the people, when they are clearly in part antagonistic to the accepted faith of the body; and that the responsibility is upon the editor and Board of Publication to see that this line is truly made in their discrimination, the improper exercise or abuse of such discretion, or agency, to be remedied by the selection of such persons for these positions as will fill them in wisdom and fairness to all.

"3. That where radical differences of opinion occur between leading representatives of the body, the discussion of them should take place in quorum capacity, and not through the columns of the HERALD.

"4. That in our opinion in the acceptance of articles for publication through the HERALD, the parties doing the same should exclude all such as make special attack upon the supposed private views and character of the dead, or that impugn motives and question the integrity of the living; there being neither sound argument nor wisdom attained by such methods.

"5. The committee has not deemed it within its duty to pass judgment upon the right or abuse of the exercise of privileges in the extended controversy of the past few months, but to point out the proper steps to be taken in case the rights of the body are left unguarded in the future:

"J. T. KINNAMAN.

"J. W. GILLEN.

"C. SCOTT.

"G. T. GRIFFITHS."

"6. Resolved, That it is the sense of this body, that any man who accepts appointment and ordination as a representative of the church is under obligations to teach, sustain, and seek to establish the faith of the church; and no one, be he whosoever he may be, has any right to attack the divinity of the faith in part, or as a whole, as said faith is set forth in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants.—Conference Resolution 298.

It is our desire to make the HERALD and this department of the forum, the immediate field for the discussion of the questions before us.

A United Consecration

(Synopsis of a sermon by S. A. Burgess, at the Lamoni, Stake Reunion, August 9, 1919.)

[We realize in discussing the subject involved in the following sermon that our remarks may possibly be misconstrued, though that does not seem to us to be sufficient reason for refraining from discussing matters of importance to the church. We have very recently been informed that some did consider the original sermon based primarily on personal matters.

We trust that our readers will be wiser than that, and will see that the personal element is purely incidental. The principles involved are vital, persons can be eliminated or disregarded. There are broad principles involved in our work; a necessity of unity in our efforts; a necessity that we recognize the law of the church, and that to all it become a matter of consecration and sacrifice. But sacrifice after all means practically the same things as consecration as it literally means "to make sacred." If we dedicate our service to God, in a primary sense we offer our bodies a living sacrifice. The law of the Lord is very clear, and cannot be built on the basis of selfishness or of greed for money.

But the principles involved apply to all and not simply to a limited class. We firmly believe that our ministry and men of the church should labor on the basis of personal sacrifice and of economy, eliminating all unnecessary wants, and consecrating their service and means for the benefit of the household of God. It is the withholding more than is meet that leads to poverty.—S. A. B.]

THE KEYNOTE OF OUR WORK

If one were seeking, as we are, for the keynote of the divine plan, he can find it in that wonderful prayer of the Master, just before his great sacrifice, when he prayed with his disciples before entering the Garden of Gethsemane. It is found in the 17th chapter of John. It would be well to read all of it, but tonight we will only read from the 9th to the 24th verses:

"I pray for them; I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me; for they are thine. And all mine are thine, and thine are mine; and I am glorified in them. And now I am no more in the world, but these are in the world, and I come to thee. Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are. While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name; those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition; that the scripture might be fulfilled. And now come I to thee; and these things I speak in the world, that they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves. I have given them thy word; and the world hath hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil. They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth. As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world. And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth. Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; That they all may be one; as thou, Father, are in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one; I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me. Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me; for thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world."—John 17: 9-24.

From this part, applying it to the church, we gather: first, He is praying not alone for those who are with him, but for all who may believe on their word. It is a continuous prayer for the benefit of the children of God.

BE ONE

Second, he does not pray that they shall be taken out of the world, but that they may be kept from the evil. "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." Now in what are they not of the world? The thought that is emphasized over and over again, is his earnest pleading and desire that they may be one. We find this in the 11th verse, in the 21st verse, and again in the 22d verse, and yet again in the 23d verse.

After they had partaken of the sacrament, his last great prayer with them and for them, is that they may be one, even as God and Christ are one. According to Doctrine and Covenants 64: 2, they were not always united, but they were like people in other ages of the world. There arose jealousy and friction, and they forgave not one another in their hearts.

We might here emphasize the fact that we may be one as he and the Father are one. Evidently this does not mean a fusion of identity; it does mean a unity of purpose. Nor does it imply a fusion of identity of the Father and Son, but rather a unity of purpose. It does mean to prefer one another in righteousness. (John 4.) It does mean that we should not only love God, but also love our brother as ourselves. The commandment he gives us anew, though it is from the beginning, is, that we love one another. (John 13: 34, 35.)

Nor is it even narrowed to a limited Zion of a few, as we are told by the great apostle to the Gentiles, that we should do good to all mankind, but especially to those of the household of faith.

THE PRIMITIVE GROUP

Students inform us that primitive man and children project themselves into all nature and feel themselves one with all their surroundings. The fact that a man was a member of the tribe was more important than his individual existence. The needs of the tribe prevailed over the wants and rights of the individual; man was part of a glorious whole in the tribe and in the universe. But not only did he feel himself one of that primitive group in a sense that we scarcely realize to-day, but he also projected himself into the universe and felt himself one with all nature, and with the very heavens.

This, which was only partly apperceived, undeveloped thought, having passed through a cognative period, comes in a better sense to apprehension of the more fully developed man, so that the great students of to-day recognize that the superman is not the individual, who crushes others in order to rise himself. But he is rather the one who lives in the most complete sense for humanity and his group, to bring about the redemption of humanity.

THE MODERN GROUP

The air is full of this theme of service, of cooperation, the group, the unity of effort. But with the added thought that it is not the merging of the individual into the group, that is desired, so much as it is the widest possible individual or personal development, and that development turned back again to be used for the common good.

Yet these seemingly modern themes in the regions of sociology and social problems which are coming to be so clearly recognized, as the truth concerning the coming man and race, is declared in the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and was among the first of the modern revelations given to the church, as early as 1831.

It was not until 1844 or 1845 that the Rochdale weavers first formed an organization which has so wonderfully developed in Great Britain into a chain of retail and wholesale stores, together with farms and factories.

Prior to the time that the world recognized its need, these principles were laid down by divine revelation for the guidance of humanity. The church should lead in practical demonstrations. Zion for safety, not only from war, but also from industrial strife; an example to the world of economic unity and of justice.

Somehow as the years pass the speaker is coming to doubt the idea of everything being turned over to the one organization and no man owning anything. It is clearly contrary to the law of the land, and as we understand it is also contrary to the law of God. We are stewards indeed, under God. It takes a higher spiritual development to recognize our moral obligations and year by year do our duty, than it does to make the one supreme sacrifice, give everything, and henceforth have nothing. We are told that there shall be no poor in Zion. Such a plan, suggested by some would make all poor in Zion.

A JUST REMUNERATION

Then that splendid passage in Doctrine and Covenants 81:4 that every man shall receive "according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just," should be associated with Doctrine and Covenants 42:19, that every man should receive "a just remuneration for all his services." Just means in accordance with the law, and is related to justice. It is not the adverb merely or barely. It means giving to every man his dues; it means righteousness between man and man; that which is equitable.

We have had at different times emphasized the spirit of sacrifice as shown by our ministers. That is right. We have a ministry who do not preach for money. That is right.

The man whose ideal is what he can get out of it, will fail in the work of God.

But the declaration of the law is wider than the ministry. It is wider than the men of the church. The passage is, "The laborer in Zion." The laborer, the person who works. "The laborer in Zion who labors for money shall perish." (2 Nephi 11:109.) You will note that that is broad enough to include the farmer, the merchant, the manufacturer, the banker, the doctor, the lawyer.

The spirit of sacrifice is a splendid thing, but it is only right that the church should consider the justice of the law, and also what we can afford to leave undone. It is a curious thing that you will search the books in vain to find the passage that states that the minister's family shall make or do all the sacrificing; that the minister's family shall be the poorest of the poor. That is only an erroneous assumption that we have made. The teaching of our heavenly Father applies to the whole church; to all of us.

After all, it is not the minister who goes out who has had the hardest time in the past. It is the family that has had to stay at home. Because of our neglect, because of our failure to support the church financially with our tithes and our offerings, there are women and children lying in quiet cemeteries, whose lives have been cut short because of our neglect. If there is any law for it, we do not know where it is to be found.

WITHOUT PURSE OR SCRIP

Those passages sometimes referred to that the minister should go out without purse or scrip do not uphold this old idea. We have to remember that they were laboring in a country that a good walker could walk across in a day or two. It has been done; from Jaffa to Jericho in one space of twenty-four hours, that is, starting in the morning, and reaching Jericho the evening of the same day. It is but a few days' walk from north to south, and a warm country in which excessive clothing was not needed, and near a warm sea, and hence not as liable to the sudden changes we have in the center of this land.

But above all, note the fact, that teaching, why should they not take with them purse and scrip? Because the laborer is worthy of his hire. They should work and should work energetically; they should be willing and very willing to do their part. There is no provision to give support to the idle in Zion, or on behalf of Zion. There are many texts to the contrary. But when he labors, he should receive support. He should not be required to provide his own purse and scrip, but should be provided for. This is found not only in the gospel, but also in the Corinthian letter by Paul. (Matthew 10:9, 10; Mark 6:8; Luke 10:4-7, 22:35, 36; 1 Corinthians 9:1-14.)

A careful examination shows that in each of these passages is the idea in force that the workman shall be provided for. It seems astonishing that from these passages people have inferred that he should starve.

THE VOW OF POVERTY

Thought it is true that therein resides a splendid ideal, when one takes the oath of poverty and thus states clearly that he is not seeking a material reward, whether we take Saint Francis, whether we take the founder of the Benedictine order, or such a one as Buddha, we seem in every instance to find a throwing off of family ties and responsibility, then an absence of bodily movement and meditation. There is something to be learned there. Meditation at proper times and under proper circumstances is good for the soul and intellect of man.

We can see in our own past history that the result of the policy pursued produced men who willingly gave their all. It may be there were some men who were slow of movement. This is a reasonable consequence. It is quite logical that tie and even collar were sometimes omitted, and that the growth of hair supplied the deficiency. You cannot expect men to wear clean linen collars when a celluloid collar or none permits their family to eat. All honor to these men who denied themselves everything possible for the sake of the work. We have no criticism to make of them. But we have of that policy of the church that required and produced such conditions.

This spirit of self-sacrifice and self-denial is a wonderful thing; the great idea that a man gives up all material reward and devotes himself to a purpose. Logically it will mean a slowing up of his activity. It was so with the beggars of the east. It gives time for meditation, but it also develops some wonderful truths for our consideration.

A man has the right to make such self-denial himself, but it is a query in our mind, How far has he the right to make that self-denial for his family, and require them to starve for him? Especially when the brunt of the burden falls upon them, and not upon him. It is not without meaning, that we see in every instance those who have taken such a vow have deserted their family and left them to shift as they can.

Surely the benefits of meditation can be secured without demanding such a sacrifice on the part of those who should be near and dear, and who should receive our first protection.

It is true that a man worth while has interests that are bigger to him than life itself, or than the fear of death, and that mean more to him than his personal pleasure, great as it is to be with his family. "He who loveth father or mother, wife or child, more than me is not worthy of me." Yet we find this wonderful fact that in loving him, it is not necessary to love our loved ones less, and the very law that requires this devotion requires also that consideration for others, and especially those who are nearest and dearest. "But if any provides not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel." (1 Timothy 5:8.)

The spirit of sacrifice is good, and is right, and is well expressed in insistence upon service and working for the common good. But it does not show wisdom when we permit these men to go out and make the sacrifice and leave women and children to give up even life itself. We need them to live and work for the good of that work entrusted to all.

WORKERS TOGETHER

Doctrine and Covenants emphasizes the same thought, both in the 42d section and again in 119:8: We are workers together; we should work as one. When we set up the ideal that the minister and his family should do all of the sacrificing; that the minister and the minister's family should have nothing, are we willing to accept the necessary corollary to that, that before the Great Judge we shall say to them, "We shall give to them the reward of their work and their sacrifice, while we, who have made less of effort, so much less of sacrifice shall receive a lower state"? Logically, reasonably, we must expect it. If they alone are to bear the burden, if they alone are to set the example, if they alone are to do the sacrificing, if they are to receive just barely enough to keep body and soul together, in the Great Day that is yet to come, they alone should receive the reward.

The plan of the Master is much broader. We are workers together. Each man, each woman, has the like duty and the like responsibility to labor according to the gifts and callings of God unto them, and to make the like sacrifice.

The trouble is that we have confused that spirit of devotion, and have attempted to adopt it as a working basis for a small part of our membership. We hear on every hand of such stories, as a woman expressed surprise that a minister had a base burner in his home. "Why, have you a base burner?"

"Why not?"

"I supposed that the minister was to sacrifice."

The brother in that instance pointed out that he was sacrificing, that he was not at home with his family, while her husband was granted that privilege. But we should not lose sight of the fact that the minister had a warm base burner to sit beside. He was there in another's home. It was his wife and children who would have gone cold if he had not seen that a base burner was provided in his own home.

EVERY MEMBER A TITHE PAYER

Every issue of the HERALD for several months past has included the heading "The Bishop Advocates for 1919 Every Member a Tithe Payer." Have you read that? It is good advice. "Every member" includes the minister and his family. If they are to be kept on the basis of extreme poverty, as some have thought, we may well ask the question: Tithing on what? They should be taught to sacrifice, to deny themselves and assist in the work, and so should every member, and work for the one common ideal.

The tenth belongs to the Lord. Every man, every woman and child should pay his or her tithing. But when it comes to that, we are bought with a price. All that we have is his and we are but stewards. Then being such, he asks that we may be one. We should on right principles work together to the common end, to accomplish the work intrusted to all.

These are matters concerning which we should think, and think most seriously for the result depends upon us, upon the members of the church as to how the law shall be administered. What will we uphold with our faith and prayers, and with the fruit of the work of our hands? There are men who are particular about paying their ordinary debts to a man; how about our debts to our heavenly Father?

Always and invariably the ideal of our administration should be but one—the kingdom of heaven and to establish its righteousness. Our aim should be alone the carrying on of the work of God.

FREEDOM FOR SERVICE

We are coming to see the necessity and value of preparation. A mowing machine is better than a hand scythe; a threshing machine than a flail. Depending on the work and its character, there are times when powerful machinery is still more economical.

We are seeing the necessity of education, which is after all in its right analysis, but the development of the natural abilities of the individuals in order that he may devote his ability to the service of the common cause. We are living in an age when the trained man is a necessity. And our effort should be to secure that training for more effective work.

But while we have done much in this line, we still have failed to see the need of using these men and women who have been called of God and who have been trained, and utilizing their training. Very much of our work is still in the status it should be if we attempted to harvest with a hand sickle alone, and then to thresh with a flail. It is useless to prepare men for efficient service and then to give them such archaic instruments.

We are in the same stage in much of our work we should be if the Presiding Bishop attempted to carry the finances of the church in his head, and went back to a pine table. We are very glad to see that the bishopric are providing for their work with modern office furniture and with clerical help, in order that their efficiency may be increased, and that they may be able to do more for the cause of our heavenly Father, day by day, and month by month.

But a few years back you might note this much of preparation being made. We see now further preparations in providing more efficient equipment for other departments of work. It makes us very hopeful that as a church we may yet come to see the value of utilizing so far as is possible, the ability of those who have made and are making special preparation for service, that they be not forever hindered and prevented.

Much remains yet to be done. Much remains to be arranged with a clearer and better understanding, on the part of one another and of the church as a whole.

NOT FOR PERSONS BUT FOR THE CHURCH

We make no plea for personal privilege; we do, however, plead for that breadth of view that will permit without jealousy each man to do his most effective work for the common cause intrusted to us by our heavenly Father.

It is not for the sake of individuals that we make our plea, but on behalf of the church itself. That the preparation made for service shall not be lost or thrown away.

We hold strongly for the ideal of personal sacrifice, a consecration, a dedication to God. But it is a principle which should apply to every member of the church. We do not plead that our ministry should be paid what they are worth. But if they are to give their best service, there must be at least reasonably adequate provision for these men and for their families. And added to that, reasonable assurance that there will be provision for old age and protection for the loved ones when the man himself is no longer living.

If the remuneration is to be such as will at the best, meet living expenses, (if it will do even that), allowing no possibility for a family saving, then there should be the care of the aged who have devoted their time to the service of the church, and of their loved ones when they are left bereaved, as a matter of right and justice; not of humiliating charity.

When young men see old men who have given their time and best work through a dark and trying time, not only laid on the shelf, but given alms, and when they see young men who have laid down their lives in the service of the church, leaving their families illy provided for, and the aid given their families presented as alms, it is then difficult to give their time whole-heartedly to the work we all love.

It is the problem of the church. It belongs to each one of us, that we shall be laborers together to accomplish the work intrusted to all, none receiving undue recompense, none seeking for a material reward, but all adequately protected.

To our mind there is an effective ideal of a ministry whose hands are free for the service of our Lord, and who consider themselves honor bound to devote their time and energy, not one day a week, but every day in the week to the work before them, and that they be an example of thrift and care in the use of the funds they receive. Yet we may concede to them, as well as him who engages in the affairs of business or of work, the right to one day of rest each week. The test is that we should have the highest efficiency, using it to secure the greatest and best results for the common cause and good, taking into our consideration our means, and our personal ability to utilize. We should be workers together, with God, and with one another.

In Proverbs 11:24, 25 we read: "There is that which scattereth and yet increaseth, and there is that which holdeth more than is meet, but it leadeth to poverty. The liberal soul shall be made fat. He that watereth shall be watered also himself." There is a great truth in that, and it applies to the church as well as to individuals. There is that which scattereth and yet increaseth; there is that which holdeth more than is meet, and it tendeth to poverty.

CHURCH, STATE, AND PROPERTY

The Roman Catholic Church taught many of its followers the vow of poverty. But the church itself waxed rich. It was for that reason the statute of Mortmain was passed in England. It is because of that, France has been accused of being irreligious, because she broke the concordant between the church and state. It is because of that our law forbids the church to hold more than a limited amount of property.

But we respectfully submit that idea is based upon a wrong construction of the Savior's plan. The divine plan from the very beginning was one of free agency, not of compulsion, as we can see from the third chapter of Genesis in the Inspired Version.

It is against the direct declaration: "There shall be no poor in Zion." With this passage from Proverbs, we may well associate 2 Corinthians 9:6, 7:

"But this I say, He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully. Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver."

A UNITED SERVICE

Also 2 Corinthians 8:11-15:

"Now therefore perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance also out of that which ye have. For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not. For I mean not that other men be eased, and ye burdened; but by an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want, that their abundance also may be a supply for your want; that there may be equality. As it is written, He that had gathered much had nothing over; and he that had gathered little had no lack."

To this end his spirit pleads with us that we be one, and each in his every service, work to the common end, to accomplish the common purpose. Each man according to his several talents, and ability; each one according to the gifts and calling of God unto him, each with love for his brethren, bearing his share of the common burden, that we may be one, even as the Father and the Son are one. Being one with each other, we then become one with them and lo, Zion at last will be in our midst.

first, but after much prayer and thinking about it, the right nature gradually came until it has become a pleasure to pay it, and now it is one of the greatest satisfactions I have. When I paid my tithing I paid a great debt to God."

Surely such a life need have no fear.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5920 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Industrial Zion

How do those words affect us? What images are called up in our minds? Do we have definite and clear delineations of what industrial Zion will be—the place of brick and stone, of whirring machinery, of soil and harvest? Or do we just lazily tuck the words away in some dark hazy, mazy, corner of our consciousness, dismissing them with the thought that somehow, some way, by some one, some time, some place, it will all be worked out? If you will analyze carefully, however, you will find that, while we are apparently willing that it shall all be worked out by some one else, we always figure ourselves in, as the beneficiaries of the scheme! “When we get to Zion”; “when Zion is established, we will do so and so”! Always the “we” then, but let us stop a moment to ask, why not the “we” right here and now?

Following the inspirational discourse our church president, Frederick M. Smith, delivered recently in our city, upon this topic, we heard an elderly church member say: “Some way, President Smith’s sermon didn’t mean very much to me. I am getting too old to take any active part in the things he talked of, and I have little or no money to spare to help, and so I felt it did not apply to me and I had little interest in it.” This sister was frank, to say the least. If we could see revealed, as through a glass clearly, the thoughts which flitted through their minds as they listened to the same sermon, perhaps they would be running something like this: “This is fine, and I hope they (notice the third person!) will work it out!” “A splendid plan, and some day, when I make a little more money for myself and family, I may send a five or a ten to the bishop to help buy lands in Jackson County!” Or, “If I felt sure they would give me a job as soft and well-paid as the one I have here, I might consider coming down to Independence and showing them how to run things, in order to redeem Zion right away!” Or perhaps, “I feel the touch of inspirational enthusiasm; I feel sure that our church has the right solution to the world’s great problem, but, I don’t feel as if I could do anything YET. Some day I will be able to do it, and come to Zion with a big bank account to my credit, and be able to do something which will be worth while, which will make everybody ‘sit up and take notice.’ Until then I will just plug along here, and let the other fellows work it out.”

How hard it is to be honest with ourselves! Honesty in our dealings with the world and each other is immeasurably simpler and easier than honesty with ourselves. Perfect truth with its imperishable and unclouded light, turned in upon our souls, might reveal some startling things. For instance, some of us would have to admit that we are selfish to the core, willing to keep to paths of ease while others struggle with the ax to blaze and clear the way. Some of us are vain, and hug to ourselves the present positions of power or renown rather than to relinquish them, and take a humble place in the active work of “industrial Zion.” Some of us are indolent, and do not take kindly to the thought of the downright hard work, mental and physical, which is before the pioneers of “industrial Zion.” Some of us are only mentally lazy, and prefer to jog along in the old ruts, than to make the effort to study out our opportunities, our niche to fill in the redemption plan. We are too lazy to welcome a new thought, to look it squarely in the face, examine it thoroughly, tabulate it, and store it away in our mental consciousness where it may be available for use—for external application to practical things. Industrial Zion will have to become something more tangible than many of us have viewed it, something more material, more like our common, everyday life, if we are to bring it to a successful demonstration.

In no wise is this material aspect, this common, close-to-us aspect, to detract from its spirituality. On the other hand, it will take the most spiritual of us to sense constantly that it is only in outward form, and to the casual observer, that it is material at all! God himself has said, “Never at any time have I given you a law which was temporal. . . . My commandments are spiritual.” If we sense this great fact, everyday things and happenings become glorified and clothed upon with meanings new and eternal.

A mother, toiling from early day to late night for the ones she loves, sometimes, in the stress of the burden, becomes dulled to the spiritual meaning of her life and its privileges. She grovels along on the low plane of complaint, of discontent, keeping her eyes fixed upon her sacrifices, her hard toil, her aches, and self-denials. She is in darkness, with eyes hidden from the real beauty and triumphs of her existences.

Another mother, toiling just as many hours a day, with just as many trials and discouragements, refuses to let them blind her to the real joy of her service. She goes about her daily work with a prayer in her heart, a song of thankfulness on her lips. She realizes that nothing else life has to offer can compare in richness and beauty with the blessings of love which crown her lot—love of a noble man who toils at her side, love of children—gifts from the very Eternal, from whom she learns more than she could ever teach others, whose very presence in her home spells sunshine, and who bring her closer to her God than can any other influence life has to offer. She finds beauty in everything; service is illumined by the light of love, intelligent loving. She turns her back upon discontent, envy, and the long train of unlovely thoughts, and dedicates her mind to those life-giving forces, thoughts of health, of joy, and of usefulness.

This is the kind of women who will build up the industrial Zion, because they are the “pure in heart.” “None can assist in this work except they be humble and full of love.” This kind of women will work in an obscure corner with as great joy as if in the “public eye”; she will realize the value of efficient service, knowing that, whether the work assigned to her be great or small, brilliant or humble, in the eyes of the Father it only matters that it shall be “well done,” that she be counted a “good and faithful servant.”

Time was when anyone feeling burning within his breast that spark of divine desire urging him to place himself at the service of the church was allowed expression of that desire in only one avenue. He was duly ordained, and sent out to preach. Perhaps that was the vital thing then, in order that the way might be blazed for the definite work now immediately before the church. But now, (and how we all should rejoice in that fact,) none is exempt from service. No matter what our talents may be, no matter along what line expressed in the past, the time has come, the hour is at hand, when God asks that that talent be expended in his service! Industrial Zion has need of all the variety of experts we, as a people, can muster! Industrial Zion not only needs us, but we need it, in order that what efforts we spend in the workaday world shall be placed where results are eternal in their nature. That will happen in Zion, for there we shall be imbued with the knowledge that it is not the thing itself which counts most, but the thought behind the thing. The manner in which and the purpose for which work is done, as much as the work itself, are things which will determine its spiritual and eternal values.

A common workman, toiling as a drudge for weary hours daily, weekly, yearly, with no thought above the petty necessities of his labor, no vision of its relation to the universal need, no yearning for it as an expression of himself and his progress towards God, is not a good illustration of the workers this latter-day industrial Zion must have to reach the heights designed for it; but a workman, no matter how small or obscure his assigned part, who vitalizes it with a thought of consecration to a great and divine idea, visualizes in his labor a well-designed and well-executed corner of a great common fabric, who feels that he is a necessary and integral part of a great unit, who wills that however humble, his work shall be a work of beauty through its perfection and finish—such a workman is typical of the corps of “laborers together with God” who shall “redeem Zion.”

Is the picture far-fetched? Is it vain imagining? Not so! God is preparing the soil, all over this splendid church of ours! Hither and yon, in ways not always anticipated, but all evidencing the continual workings of God's will, there are being found those qualified and consecrated men and women who will carry this plan through to glorious culmination. They will have learned the lessons of service, of efficiency, and, above all, of that humility and love, without which, “none can assist in” this great task. The elimination of self, the placing of individual power to the God-appointed task of demonstrating to the world the precepts of the Master, the learning to live in love and peace and harmony with each other when all the world is in turmoil and at enmity, to hold thoughts of loyalty and service when every man's hand shall be against his neighbor, and to feel running through it all the sustaining Spirit of God, which holds and binds together in unity and with central thought and purpose—this is the ideal for “industrial Zion,” and the time for its expression is right here and now—“not to-morrow, or next week, or next decade” as our young president so forcefully urged, but at once, and to the extreme extent of our powers and possibilities.

To illustrate how God is working in strange and diverse ways, may we repeat one remark overheard at the close of President Smith's discourse? A young man trained as a youth in the mills with his father, as a maker of tin plate, grasped the speaker's hand, and said, “When you are ready to start up that tin plate mill, to make cans for your canning factory, you can count on me for all I'm worth.” He meant his special knowledge value as well as financial, and it is heartening to know that the church is rich in the possession of many such young, qualified men and women.

Just how, by the way, do the words “industrial Zion” affect you? AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

From Within or Without?

The questions that especially gripped my attention among those which our editor lately submitted, were: “Are children, by nature's endowment, good or bad?” and “Do morals have to be taught and practiced to become ingrained in character?”

A perfect seed planted in soil perfectly prepared, and given perfect conditions under which to grow, would undoubtedly develop into a perfect plant, bearing a perfect blossom, and subsequently, perfect fruit. But of how large a percentage of all the seed sown annually in the earth, can this be said to be true? Surely much good seed is sown, but how much of the soil is in the right condition to receive and nourish the seed? Given well-tended soil, there would still be the element of imperfect conditions of sun and rain, with which to contend. The result is a yield of seed a large percentage of which is imperfect, and which would require special nursing and care to bring forth fruit up to standard, even though given well-tilled soil and proper sunshine and rain.

The same logic holds good with the child. Given parents of perfect mental and physical condition, and perfect environment in which to develop, a child would, without doubt, contain the germ that would generate spontaneously into virtues. But we must all admit that a large percentage of the men and women who become fathers and mothers, would fall considerably below par in both a physical and a mental examination; and surely every one must concede that the social conditions of the world to-day have departed far, far from the standards of perfection. Herein lies the fallacy of the system of Marie Montessori and others who advocate the theory of children unfolding “from within, from the impulses of nature which cannot err.” This is indeed a beautiful dream, a fantasy, or, let me say in terms that only a Latter Day Saint can fully appreciate, a vision of Zion conditions.

According to this theory, a seed containing a germ of life would develop into a perfect plant, regardless of whether that germ be strong or weak, whether or not the soil be properly tended, or whether there be sufficient sunshine and rain. (I may say right here, that the homesteaders of Montana absolutely disagree with such a theory, and with just reason, too!) As life is fundamentally the same in all its phases, the above theory would of necessity hold good with the child. We hear a great deal for and against hereditary transmission of good and evil tendencies. How far this can truthfully be carried, I do not pretend to know; but this I do know, being a mother, that the mental and physical condition of the mother during pregnancy, as well as the nature of her surroundings, does have a great influence upon the nature of the child. This statement is based upon personal experience, and all the squabbles of scientists upon the question cannot alter the facts as I know them to exist.

Take a babe containing within him the germ that would develop into a perfect man, and place him not only under adverse circumstances but under evil influences, and it is a safe conclusion that he will fall short of what he would have become had he developed under favorable conditions. Likewise, it is unreasonable to expect that a child containing an imperfect germ of development, even though placed in the best of environments, would attain a standard of excellence unless wisely directed, guided, and controlled in such a way as to overcome the weaknesses latent within him.

By this I do not mean that the child of a drunkard would naturally become a drunkard unless the appetite for liquor be overcome. On the contrary he may in fact have an absolute distaste for spirits of any kind. But I do mean that the drunken father would not be in a condition of mind, nerve or body to give to his child the vitality, the resistance, that is his due. Neither would the wife of the drunkard be living under conditions that would be conducive to the mental peace and quiet necessary to give her child his rightful share of nerve and mental force. Perhaps she has not even had enough wholesome food, that her own body and subsequently, that of her child, be properly nourished. Would it be reasonable to suppose that her offspring would “unfold from within, from the impulses of nature,” without error? And if the mother, in her love, sees the weaknesses of her child resulting from no fault of his, surely it would be her duty to try to counteract these, and in their stead, plant seeds that might, by careful tending, germinate and develop into strength and virtue!

Is it possible that in the midst of the polluted social conditions of to-day, parents can question the necessity of teaching morals to their children, of doing their utmost to implant such firmly in their characters while young, that the dangers of contamination and of being overcome by evil shall be at a minimum? Even as I write this, footsteps sound on the walk but a few steps from our door—the footsteps of a little girl of thirteen years of age. A slim, dark-haired, dark-eyed little maiden she is, whose soul shines forth in her face, pure, innocent, and wholesome. She is on her way to the dance hall, to take part in that amusement which to-day has become so vulgar, so rotten, that it is a pollution to the very eye to look thereon! And yet this little girl, in but the sixth grade at school, is on her way thither, with others no older than herself, to indulge in this unholy pastime, probably with a man much older, but much less pure and innocent, as her partner in the giddy whirl!

Suppose that other forces of nature begin to unfold within her—forces she hardly understands, much less knows how to control, would she need to have been taught, warned, to have had, firmly ingrained in her character purity, virtue, modesty? Yea, verily, and even then, the chances are great that her virtue would be at stake.

A little boy, clean, pure, innocent, is playing with his train of cars on the kitchen floor. A caller comes, and as the little fellow gazes at the stranger, he may well wonder, judging by the transparency of waist and hose, if this woman was going back to the first habiliments of "Mother Eve"! Our older boys are meeting girls similarly attired, on the street, in the office, the store, the street car, everywhere, light of manner and of speech as they are of dress! Surely it behooves us, as parents, to teach, to train, to drill into the characters of our boys, purity, virtue, and honor, that they, at no time, shall forget that they are gentlemen.

Perhaps this is taking the question in its extreme meaning, but the same theory holds good in any case. Because our son has within the last year or so developed a desire to sulk and becomes surly when things do not quite meet his approval, should we allow this habit to continue to "unfold from within," until he becomes a veritable grouch? Whatever the cause of this habit, it is our duty, as his parents, to see that it is overcome, and a cheery disposition developed instead. Because another boy from very babyhood would stop and argue whenever asked to do anything, should we allow this trait to "unfold from within" until it would become a struggle to get the child to do what he should? No, it is our duty to overcome this trait, which, in all probability, is but the misuse of a power which, properly directed, will be of great value and service to him.

Many seemingly undesirable traits in children are but a lack of wisdom in the use of some gift or talent, which must be wisely developed and directed, in order to be a blessing and not a curse. For example, a child may become addicted to telling falsehoods. While a child should not be punished severely for this habit, he certainly should be taught where, how, and when to use his imaginative abilities. For the average child it would most likely be sufficient to show him the annoyance, trouble, and grief which his falsehoods cause others. While not an immediate cure, this will, in most cases, bring about the desired results.

Another common error into which children fall is that of taking small articles, often pieces of money, which do not belong to them. Hardly would I call this stealing. It comes, more likely, from a desire of possession, a lack of ability to resist temptation, and how would such a child fare, if this were allowed to "unfold from within" for very long? Here again, the child should not be punished as a culprit, unless such punishment becomes a last resort. Rather teach him that he can only possess when he has given in return equal value, either of work or money, impressing on his mind that money merely represents labor value.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

The Episcopal Assembly

There are several things taking place at the Protestant Episcopal Triennial Convention, now being held at Detroit, Michigan, that should be of great interest to Latter Day Saints.

Prominent among these things are following three:

First: The cooperative system.

Second: The gift of healing.

Third: The divorce question.

In the first of these, the convention considered the advisability of adopting the cooperative system on the same successful plan that the workers of England have.

In the second, as a result of a visit of J. M. Hickson, of England, on a mission of healing, the Reverend Doctor William F. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, New York, introduced a resolution for the appointment of a joint commission to "consider the fuller recognition of the ministry of healing in the church, and the need of its revival under proper sanctions and safeguards." This commission to consist of three bishops, three presbyters, and three laymen. The commission was appointed and requested to report "as soon as practicable."

The third of these questions produced a long and bitter fight. Under Canon 40, an Episcopal clergyman can marry the innocent party in a divorce, after the expiration of one year. The amendment to said canon provided that "no marriage shall be solemnized in this church between parties either of whom have a husband or wife still living, who has been divorced for any cause arising after marriage." It was this amendment that was the sorely contested point.

The Reverend Doctor Edwin A. White, of Newark, New Jersey, chairman of the commission on canons, reported that the commission "deemed it inexpedient" to make the amendment to the canon.

Foremost among the champions of the amended canon was Judge Vernon M. Davis, of New York Supreme Court. He said, "As it now stands the canon of the Protestant Episcopal Church is a recognition and an encouragement of divorce, even an invitation to it.

"The present conditions of divorce in this country are a rotten spot on the national life, a menace to the national life. The action of our church in granting the right of remarriage to so-called innocent parties in divorces obtained on the grounds of adultery, is founded on the flimsiest sort of evidence."

He further said:

"The one ground on which we permit remarriage is the evidence of the divorce court. All who have been associated with these courts know that nothing can be depended upon with less assurance. They are filled with perjury and collusion. We have reached an alarming condition of affairs regarding the spread of the divorce evil. It is a rotten spot in the national life—a national menace."

Here are his statistics:

"In every decade since 1867, the number of divorces have increased at an average of seventy per cent, reaching the tremendous total in ten years from 1896 to 1906, of 942,848. In the same period, the increase in population was less than twenty-five per cent."

Another champion was the Reverend Doctor William F. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, New York:

"We have arrived at the point where marriage is no longer regarded as a permanent relation, but one terminable at will. Our position is an open scandal before the world. No other country, except Japan, has such a record as has the United States where one marriage in every nine is dissolved; and in one State, one in every four. Let us take our stand squarely on the proposition, 'once married, married till death.'"

The Reverend C. Malcolm Douglas, of Newark, in defending the present canon, said that if the church passed a rigid law against remarriage, the church would lose many of its members; while Doctor Randolph McKim, a leading low churchman, said that the proposed change was "contrary to Holy Scripture and to the eternal principle of justice."

The amendment lost, leaving the old canon as it stood.

It is perhaps well to notice that at the last convention held at Saint Louis, this same proposed change was defeated by two and one half votes, the laymen being responsible for its defeat. In this convention, the clergy vote against the change was forty-one, in favor, twenty-six and three fourths, with five dioceses divided. The lay vote against, forty-two and three fourths; in favor, thirteen and three fourths, with seven dioceses divided, showing that the opposition to the proposed change is on the increase among the clergy.

Yours in the gospel,

FRANK P. SWEETMAN.

Moving Pictures

At the joint meeting of the executives of the Religio and Sunday school departments of church work, I was appointed to supervise the department of moving picture development. I am therefore issuing the following suggestions.

1. The moving picture has come to stay. Its utility and versatility is conceded. Its educational power has only just commenced. Introduced primarily for amusement and entertainment, it is now becoming one of the greatest instruments for disseminating information and unifying the activities of the people.

It is only the matter of a short time when the moving picture machine will become a permanent feature in religious and educational institutions. This is inevitable. It may meet with opposition. It may have to combat prejudice, but it will win.

Many churches throughout the country have already adopted this means of reaching the people. In every instance it is proving a success. Representatives of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States have adopted resolutions recommending the use of the moving picture in general church work.

The church of the future will avail itself of this excellent opportunity for propaganda. The church which does not possess this wonderful asset will fall behind. It will make its appeal to the ear of the public, while the successful church will appeal to eye as well as ear.

2. I do not see one reasonable objection to the use of the moving picture machine as an auxiliary in all of our general church work. What tangible objection can there possibly be to the moving picture as a prelude to a Sunday evening service or for a week night meeting, provided the picture deals with matter, which will conserve the spirit and purpose of the occasion—what? Any argument used against the moving picture machine can, with equal propriety, be used against the organ or piano or any other reed or string instrument.

I can see no harm in the rightful use of such an agency in the promulgation of the gospel. If we could have a concerted and general movement to this end all over the church, it would be possible for us to develop our own pictures, or to secure the preparation of pictures suitable to our work. We could, and should, have a board comprising representative men and women of the church to pass upon all such pictures.

3. I therefore suggest that each branch with its coordinate departments, that each district or stake with its coordinate departments, give this matter serious, deliberate, and prayerful consideration; that an endeavor be made to secure all the available information which will throw light on this question.

Where there is general agreement, I suggest that a trial be given with a view of determining whether this is a good thing or not; that when either the branch or district has acted, that all the membership unite to make the effort a successful one.

It is much better for the local church, Sunday school, Religio, and women's departments to unite in this work. In the ordinary church or district the machine will serve the purpose of all.

4. The very best and simplest machine for portable and semiportable use, either in motion pictures or for slides, or when using the combined machine, is the Victor make. There are quite a number of these machines in use now throughout the church. One is being used in Graceland College to very good advantage. There is one in use in Canada. The Victor machine has stood the most rigid test in comparison with other machines and has maintained its reputation.

Inasmuch as Brother A. W. Smith, 2903 Sullivan Avenue, Saint Louis, Missouri, is in a position to supply these machines at considerable discount, I recommend that all those desiring to purchase machines correspond with him before purchasing.

I am also asking all those now having any kind of a machine (moving picture or slide) to report the fact to me, with a statement as to your experience with same.

The Model 2 Victor Animatograph, complete, with lantern slide attachment, lamp, one set of lenses, hand drive is $225. With the discount this can be secured for $175 or less.

I would like to hear from everyone who may be interested in this subject, both for and against, with a view to collaborating these answers for future use. We have no desire to force this matter on the people. We do not wish to do so, if wrong will ensue, but it is a matter which should be decided and that soon. Other churches will adopt and make use of the machine. If it is a good thing, is it not better for us to take up the matter now rather than come in at the rearward and ape the others?

BIBLE PRICES INCREASED

We have received notice from the Oxford University press that all prices on Oxford Bibles have been increased about thirty-three and one third per cent, to take effect immediately. In accordance with this notice, we will be compelled to raise our prices accordingly, as we keep a very limited stock on hand.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

I am asking the workers everywhere thoroughly to discuss this phase of church work. If you desire information write me; I will try to supply. We cannot ignore this matter. If this is a good thing we cannot move too quickly. If it is a harmful departure (?) then the sooner we know this the better. We cannot ignore it. It is up to us to become informed, and then, with the assistance which the Spirit of God can give, decide upon a course of action, and follow it with vigor and concerted purpose.

I may say in conclusion that I am unreservedly in favor of the use of the machine as an aid to the dissemination of the gospel. I am not in favor of its use for mere pastime or entertainment. It is our province to make our worship and propaganda pleasing and entertaining. What is your opinion in the matter? Write and let me know what that opinion is, and why.

In the meantime let me urge that the matter be not dismissed without action. Take the matter up in your respective organizations and come to one or the other decision. I await your action.

I would like to let some of my old friends know how I spent my vacation. I had fourteen days due me, and as I had to go alone, thought I would try a little missionary work, so I made up a bundle of tracts and took volume 3, Church History, Instructor, Doctrine and Covenants, Book of Mormon and Hymnal. My first stop was near Palm Beach, I came to a fishing camp. They were about to make a haul, so I helped them and they landed two thousand pounds, mostly bluefish. They wanted me to spend the night with them and have a fish fry. I stayed and enjoyed it very much.

During the evening, I told the old story to them and left a collection of tracts. They urged me to spend more time on my return, which I did. To finish up, they told me they could secure a union church if one of our elders came that way. Later, I was thinking some of our people might not fancy being with those rough men, then the words came to me, Who did Jesus visit and work with?

My next stop was at Stewart. I have a small grove there and did a little work, but stayed with a neighbor. None of these people had heard of the Reorganized Church, but they have now.

I had the Ensigns, containing articles by Brother I. M. Smith. At noon or evening would read one of those sermons or explain our doctrine and they would argue, but at the finish would always say, "That was fine."

I left them a good collection, including A Marvelous Work and a Wonder. They said at my parting, they had a home for one of our preachers any time and would like very much to hear one.

I expected to find some Mormons, so was ready for them. There was one lady, I think, wanted to call me one, but I told her that if anyone did, they had a job on their hands right then, for I wouldn't stand for it. She said my tracts were just like theirs and she had seen lots of them. I had Angel Message number 9 and read most of it to her and asked her if they had anything like that. She had to own up then, but didn't want to do so. Then I got volume 3 of Church History and showed Brigham up, that he stole the name "Latter Day Saint" and that he organized his church, not Christ's church.

I have ordered the Ensign for one family and think they will enjoy it. I passed out over fifty tracts.

I enjoyed every minute I was gone and came home ready for the coming year feeling my vacation was well spent and thought if a few of our people could do the same, I know they would enjoy it. The Father would bless them I am sure. We do not know how much good it would do. The seed sown may take root and after many days come forth. Our reward is sure anyway, if we do the best and all we can. If I get into a tight place I cannot call on brethren of much experience to help me out, and I come in contact with many different faiths. I always try to keep the good will, then always have the second chat or at least am invited back. I thank all who have assisted me and those I have not answered, keep letters on file and will when I want help.

To-day I saw the man who was a Mormon and he is so grateful that we met him and had the chance to see his mistake before it was too late.

Brother E. C. Shelley was with us a few weeks. We tried to assist him all we could, but it seemed hard to get many out. We were in Miami a short time, but had to have meetings on the street. With so much noise, it was hard work.

We visited the Indians and were invited to hold meetings but the tribe was mostly out. I think there will be an opening there.

Mrs. Smith is much better than when we left Michigan but is not very strong.

The Spirit is with me much and the Father is blessing me and has given me promises if I am faithful, which are very dear to me. I ask to be remembered by all that I may withstand the powers of Satan and reap my reward.

Editors Herald: We have no branch here, but we have our Sunday school and prayer meeting. We have no preacher here to teach us the gospel. Brother J. C. Chrestensen was here in July, stayed a week and preached some good sermons. He organized our Sunday school. If any elders can come and assist us, we surely would be glad to have them do so. We need some assistance for old Satan is working on every side.

A NEW SERIAL IN "STEPPING STONES"

In an early issue of Stepping Stones, the popular Sunday school weekly, will begin a new serial by Fred W. Smith, entitled "Nipmuk."

This is an Indian story and brings the reader into a closer personal sympathy with the Lamanites. The theme is so typically Latter Day Saint in its uniqueness, and the development so pleasingly rapid that one's interest will not lag a minute.

Continuing, he said to the disciples: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (Matthew 18: 19, 20.)

We have here a revelation in the language of Jesus himself of what he thought about the extent of his mission as it pertained to the future, reaching every creature of all nations and continuing until the end of the world; and even to the new era, the new world, because there shall be no end to his dominion and the increase of his government.

Let us try to sum up that which we have attempted to cover under some difficulties. Of course, we have only touched upon a few of the many lines of thought that could be traced out, and that you may follow out if you care to continue this study independently yourselves.

We have noticed that on his human side Jesus recognized that he had limitations as to his knowledge and his power. He recognized his separate entity as one cooperating with God under his direction. On his divine side, he believed, as touching the past, that he fulfilled all the glorious hopes of all the prophets that had spoken, from Adam down. As touching this present life, he believed that he was the Lord of the resurrection, and the leader of men. He would not tolerate a divided allegiance. As concerning the future, he thought that he was destined to come forth in the resurrection and that presently he would reign over his people and his message would go to every quarter of the globe and to every creature of every nation, continuing through all time. Peter even tells us that he went down and preached to the spirits in prison, but that, of course, is a little foreign to our line of thought which has been limited strictly to Jesus' opinion of himself as manifested in his own conversations and actions.

In a word, evidently he thought of himself as being in all things the Christ, the Son of God, the Savior of the world, the only hope of humanity, and we will make no mistake, if we accept him at his own evaluation.

FROM WITHIN OR WITHOUT?

My article is getting more lengthy than intended, so shall conclude by saying that the conditions existing in the world to-day are hardly favorable for allowing our children to just "unfold" without constant supervision, direction, and prayerful attention to the special needs of each child.

Kansas City Stake, November 15 and 16, at Central Church, Ninth and Lydia Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri. Business session 2.30, 15th. A final summing up of all branch statistical reports will be had. In connection therewith, all branch records should be turned over to the stake officers. The Sunday session will be as the order heretofore. Preaching at 11 o'clock; social meeting 2.30 p. m.; Woman's Auxiliary and priesthood meeting at 4.30 with a Sunday school and Religio institute beginning about 6.15, to be followed by the night preaching service at 8 p. m. As light luncheon is usually served by the ladies' class for dinner and supper, we trust all the Saints will make it a special point to come prepared to spend the entire day. In this connection, we mention, it is not a time of feasting, making merry by eating and drinking, but a time of looking forward to the more wholesome spiritual uplift that comes through devotion and sacred consecration, seeking to do the Lord's will and have his spiritual blessings as a result. Our conferences have been improving and the spirituality of the people has been greatly on the increase. We delight in this, and as your stake officers, trust all will avail themselves of this opportunity, coming prepared in heart and mind, also in faith and prayer. Kansas City stake presidency, T. J. Elliott, secretary.

The Presidency

It has been deemed advisable to transfer Elder W. P. Bootman from the Saskatchewan District to Idaho and Eastern Oregon for the balance of the conference year.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.Quorum Notices

Will every brother in the Eastern Michigan District who holds office of priest and is not a member of a quorum, please write me, giving name and address of any priest that you know who does not belong to any quorum. The First Quorum of Eastern Michigan District is now full and we are desirous of having another quorum organized. One of the apostles will make a tour of these parts and we wish to be prepared to have a new quorum organized. Please write me at once. Fred W. Cadow, 418 Huron Street, Port Huron, Michigan.

FROM HERE AND THERE*WINTER INSTITUTES

We are pleased to announce that the Winter Institutes of last season will be repeated this winter. The plan is to select three team workers in each district or stake who shall prepare themselves to hold three-day institutes in every locality calling for it, the traveling expenses to be prorated. The main phases of the work of Woman's Auxiliary, College, Religio and Sunday school will be presented thoroughly.

Our aim is to inform, enthuse, and train more workers in every branch—everyone is welcome to these institutes. By linking up a chain of appointments much can be done in a short time at a minimum of expense because it is shared by many. Come along and help practice cooperation; we talk enough about it.

The director of this work this year is Brother A. W. Smith, 2903 Sullivan Avenue, Saint Louis, Missouri. Write him. By his assistance, your team will be selected and trained for service by outlines prepared by each auxiliary and by special instructions. They will then be routed for you to the best advantage—if district officers and others interested locally will cooperate and be prompt. After their appointment, team workers must be given several weeks to prepare for this voluntary service of love. Brother Smith's time was already fully occupied. He is straining a point—sacrificing, to serve you. When he writes, respond promptly. You need not wait, write him now if you want this special opportunity to come to your branch or district. Those who had it last year want it again. And so will you once you try it out.

In behalf of the auxiliaries,

GOMER R. WELLS.

We are glad to note that Elder A. J. Yarrington, acting member of the Lamoni Bishopric, is released from a quarantine of about six weeks and able to resume his duties. He contracted smallpox from some unknown source, and since his wife was taken sick soon after his recovery it lengthened the period of their seclusion. There have been no other cases of the disease in town that we know of.

At the homecoming day of the Toledo Branch, November 9, a full day is planned, beginning with a priesthood meeting at 8 a. m. The work of the various auxiliaries will be presented.

WANTED

A boy scout in each branch to sell Religio pins. Good profit. In applying please inclose a signed indorsement from the president of the branch in which you expect to work. This will be a good way for one to earn Christmas offering, or get extra funds to support the Boy Movement.

Address F. M. McDowell, Lamoni, Iowa.

THE GRAPHIC ARTS BUREAU

A "YOUR PICTURE" NIGHT AT THE RELIGIO

If your branch has a stereopticon you can occasionally have a very interesting program at Religio which will get a crowd.

Solicit negatives of personal and "human" interest from camera owners in the branch. Get negatives of the branch officers, the young people, babies, anybody in the branch.

Anyone who can do their own developing and printing can make a lantern slide. Instead of printing on paper you print on a piece of glass.

Here are some simplified directions: Have the room entirely free from white light. Use a safe ruby light to work with. A 4x5 printing frame with glass front for holding the negative is best, but a 3¼x4¼ will do. Purchase the lantern plates at any supply house. Use Eastman's Hydrochinon developer which will give black tones. An acid fixing bath is put in half-pound boxes.

Place the negative in the printing frame, lay a lantern plate with the dull side next to the negative, close the frame and lay on a shelf or against a wall. Light a match and hold it about a foot away from the frame. The average negative requires three or four matches for the proper exposure. Take out the plate and develop in the solution. Bring out the image good and black, rinse and place in the fixing bath until free from all yellow appearance. Wash in running water if possible for half an hour. A cover glass can be placed over the plate when dry, but where the slide is only to be used a few times it is not necessary. You can make slides at a cost of from six to ten cents each, so an evening's "Your picture" entertainment can be produced at very little expense.

For information regarding photography, lantern slide making, etc., write to the secretary of the Graphic Arts Bureau, Albert Knowlton, 622 South Chrysler Street, Independence, Missouri.

C. EDWARD MILLER.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND, 742 Broad Street.

An elder with business ability who wishes to move into a good territory near the central places would do well to correspond with Elder H. H. Hand, Perry, Iowa, president of the Des Moines District. Brother Hand says there are abundant opportunities for a combination of branch work and remunerative employment.

In the article by Roderick May, in the HERALD of August 27, page 841, the words "network of revelations" should read, "network of relations."

Who Would You Have Pay the Bill?

The church publishing house has but one possible source of income. That is from you, its subscribers.

As you know, all too well, everything has gone up: Food, clothing, books, magazines, wages, and commodities, all have advanced from fifty per cent to one hundred per cent.

Now for years the church publications have been kept at a low price, partly because not meant to sell at a profit, but mostly because our printers, as their sacrifice, devoted their services away below scale.

It is impossible to keep going at the old rate any longer. Bills must be paid; our workers must live. You would not shift your obligations to other shoulders. We know you are willing to pay for what you get.

If we carried commercial advertising we could make it pay the increased expense, but even newspapers have doubled in subscription rates—not having any advertisers we can only advance our subscription

HENCE

Beginning December 1, prices will be advanced on all church publications.

This is a matter of necessity only and if possible it is hoped conditions may permit returning to the old prices without great delay.

LOVING AND LEARNING

"I have loved to learn; and I have learned to love."

These words we caught from the lips of an aged man during his last illness. We refer to President Joseph Smith. As he uttered them they were riveted upon our attention.

Many could repeat the first article of this simple confession: "I have loved to learn." A passion for learning burns deep in the human heart. This passion is the incentive back of all exploration, physical, mental, spiritual.

This passion led Columbus to cross the stormy and unchartered Atlantic. It led Balboa through the wilderness to the Pacific; Magellan into the far northwest; Nansen and Peary into the frozen north, and Scott and Shackleton into the frozen south. This passion leads the mathematician through the labyrinths of the higher calculus. It fires the heart of the astronomer, as with telescope he penetrates far stellar spaces, weighs planets, catches star dust in his hands and analyzes it.

It is godlike to know. Given other necessary qualities, we become godlike as we learn. To love to learn must meet with divine approval, for we are commanded to "seek learning even by study, and also by faith."

Jesus himself voiced the invitation, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me." And it was said of the disciples that men took notice of them that they had been with Jesus and learned of him.

Our people should be intellectually active. It is perfectly proper for them to "love to learn." Our young people are justified in their ambitions along that line, and will be blessed in their studies, providing they retain a consecrated purpose and fail not to learn of Jesus, with all their learning. President Joseph Smith himself set a splendid example as one who loved to learn.

A brother who was about to enter upon pastoral work asked us, "Do you not think it especially necessary that a pastor should study all the time?"

We replied, "Yes, he must study all the time or move all the time." And we added, perhaps crudely, "It is a case of dig in or dig out." But how about the people? As is it with the pastor, so should it be with the people. There should be a high level of intelligence. That level is not attained without labor. As Longfellow says:

It Is Written

"And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations and then shall the end come."

For this reason the Bishopric advocate for 1919

EVERY MEMBER A TITHE PAYER

The heights by great men reached and kept
Were not attained by sudden flight,
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upward in the night.

Yes, there are many who can say, "I have loved to learn." How many can add, "And I have learned to love?"

John was the apostle of love. He who at one time leaned on the bosom of the Master caught the very heart throbs of the man of Galilee. And it is said of John that when he became very old, so that he could no longer preach, the Saints at Ephesus used to carry him into the church in a big chair and place him before the altar. Lifting his trembling hands above the audience he delivered himself ever of this one exhortation, "Little children, love one another."

As he grew old and approached death, or his change, whatever it was that awaited him, all other philosophies faded away into the dim background. This one philosophy of love endured: "Little children, love one another."

So with this aged apostle of love and charity of these last days. On his deathbed his confession was, "I have loved to learn; and I have learned to love."

This is a compound sentence. Neither part is complete in itself, so far as the Christian philosophy is concerned. There must be a dual development—that of brain and of heart. Neither alone is sufficient.

Scholasticism is prone to become cold, exclusive, select, bookish. Little feet must track the study floor. Little fingers must disarrange the books and tangle themselves among the heart strings. The love of some good woman must paint rosy dream pictures before the printed page to the confusion of habitually well-ordered mental processes. True friendship must light the altar fires of the soul. Pity for the poor, the sick, the distressed must break up the fountain of tears. Possibly personal bereavement must break the heart.

Perfect love casts out all fear, declares John. It also casts out mean selfishness. It is true, as Tennyson says:

Love took up the harp of life, and smote on all the chords with might;
Smote the chord of self, that, trembling, passed in music out of sight.

Not until love take up the harp of life can we make divine melody. And at the first stroke the chord of self vanishes. For those whom we truly love we willingly die; more sublime sacrifice, for them we daily expend our lives in service, forgetting self.

In this church we have at times perhaps become contemptuous of sentiment. We have been disgusted with the cheap appeals of false evangelism to morbid emotions. We have sounded forth a gospel that appeals to the brain. That is as it should be; but we must not go to the other extreme.

Without true sentiment life would be barren and arid. We must stir the hearts of men. Appealing to their intelligence, we must not forget their emotions.

We can defeat men in argument on the first principles, using scripture texts as a bludgeon. But it is better to win them with acts of love, courtesy, service, simultaneously with the appeal to their brains. Logic and love are a strong team.

In all of our church work this principle should prevail. The pastor must love his people. The priest must go from house to house in pursuit of his priestly vocation with love in his heart. The teacher must feel the same Christlike impulse when he goes forth as a peacemaker to settle difficulties—"no one can assist in this work except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity."

The fellowship, love, and confidence of the Saints is one of the most valuable and blessed inheritances that we can cherish here below. It should not be lightly forfeited.

To some, like the writer, the good Lord did not see fit to give brothers and sisters. Others know what it is to gather about them a large family circle of brothers and sisters. That sweet privilege is denied us. But there is a remedy. They have not been given us, so we must go out and seek for them. This course is open to all. Thus Jesus found John, and Lazarus, and Mary.

Doing this we can eventually complete the circle of development and come to say with our departed president: "I have loved to learn; and I have learned to love."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE HEALING OF THE SICK

---

We have published a few items from time to time concerning the healing of the sick, by the different organizations. The Episcopalian Church, in the Emmanuel movement was one of the first of the so-called orthodox churches to observe even in part the commandment of James 5: 14, 15, and they do not even yet consecrate the oil.

Some other churches have followed their lead, because they are coming to recognize the value and validity of that blessing, and that it is a divine promise.

There are organizations founded almost entirely, if not entirely, on this one principle; for instance, Christian Science. At least it is this part which makes its appeal to most people, as they do not inform themselves with regard to the real meaning of its philosophy.

Modern students attempt to explain it in terms of suggestion.

As we read the word of God, we note in the Old Testament that the prophets of the Lord healed many, and even raised some from the dead; as for instance, the healings by Elisha. It would seem from a careful study that this method was practiced for the healing of the sick; that they prayed over them, and that the prophets of the Lord had the power to heal. A variety of methods were used, as, for instance, when Naaman was commanded to go and dip seven times in the River Jordan.

Also with the coming of the Master, we note that he healed many sick people, according to their faith, and that his disciples returned, declaring, "Master, even the devils are subject unto us." (Luke 10: 17.)

We note in Habakkuk 3:3, 4, "God came from Teman, and the Holy One from mount Paran. Selah. His glory covered the heavens, and the earth was full of his praise. And his brightness was as the light; he had horns coming out of his hands; and there was the hiding of his power."

Also, Jesus laid on hands, as may be seen in Mark 8:23-25; Luke 5:12-13; Luke 4:40; Luke 13:11-13; Mark 6:5.

We also note that the apostles laid on hands for the healing of the sick. (Acts 5:12; 14:3; 19:11; 28:8.)

And the elders were commanded to do the same. (James 5:14, 15; Acts 9:17; Mark 16:17, 18.)

After the church had gone into apostasy we still find this healing of the sick, as is shown in the Catholic Encyclopedia. But little by little the rite was lost, and what little remained was closely allied to superstition, the touching of relics and the visiting of certain places. Then the Reformation had tended to undermine even this small amount, that was left of a once glorious rite.

When the gospel was restored in 1830, we find emphasis at once placed upon these passages of Holy Scripture, especially James 5:14, 15, and Mark 16:17, 18. This ordinance was at once restored. We find several messages in the commandments to the church concerning the healing of the sick.

For many years this church stood alone in its emphasis on faith as a therapeutic power, and that the commandment of God was also the declaration of a law of healing. "The prayer of faith shall heal the sick; the Lord shall raise them up."

For many years the church was attacked for presenting this doctrine, but in the passage of time this doctrine has been more than vindicated.

After some years of practice on the part of the church, we discover certain other organizations taking it up, as the Spiritualists. There also appeared other so-called divine healers. The theosophists organized in this country, about 1875, brought out about ten years later, a book in which they declared that the healing of the sick was possible by the spirit of a man, and that when certain ones healed the sick they did it by placing their own spirit on the afflicted; that it was a dangerous practice on this account, because it was an exercise of human force which was by no means clean; so that while the body was cleansed, the soul was injured.

Still later the Church of Christ, Scientist was formed, and based its healing on the idea that there is no matter, but only mind. But this same theme has been covered in several books, including medical books, the value of suggestion, the value of faith as a healing power. That is, medical books inferred, at least faith or confidence in the doctor. Certainly Christian Science cannot claim originality for any of the ideas put forth, but it is based largely on one branch of new thought and represented an aspect of this emphasis of the control of mind over matter.

Undoubtedly there is a great deal in this theme of mind over matter. Certainly these two are closely related, and our mind controls our body, but the conditions of the body also affects the condition of our powers of thought. At present, at least, there is an interaction, not a parallelism, and each is mutually affected by the other.

Again, inside of the last fifteen years the Emmanuel movement has developed and grown, and has affected several others of the Christian churches.

But we should remember that this church was the first in modern times to teach a return to the promises of Holy Scripture, the anointing with oil, and the laying on of hands for the healing of the sick. And for nearly the first half of the first ninety years, this church was alone in its insistence upon these promises. Even though they existed in the Middle Ages and later incidental cases of faith healing.

We have also to remember that while men have studied critically the power of mind over matter; while they have studied and have put into practice, as far as they can ascertain its laws, the power of one mind by suggestion to bring healing to the body, still there is a radical difference of methods.

There is a similarity of mechanism, for the human body and the human mind is the same in every case. No doubt similar laws come into effect in the influence of mind and faith in the healing. Yet one rests upon laws so far discovered by man; the other rests upon a divine promise as well as a divine declaration.

Then we have also to remember that it is undoubtedly true, that one can impress his will by suggestion or by silent force upon the mind of another, and may to that extent affect another more or less. But in the divine plan, there is no exertion of the human force. There is an earnest seeking on the part of the administrator to place himself in communion with his heavenly Father. His desires reach upward, not downward; and his prayer is to his heavenly Father that his Spirit may be present, that faith may be manifested and increased, and thus healing brought about through the Spirit of God. "Not by our wisdom, not by our strength, but by thine."

Whatever question there may be of the influence of the spirits of any other man over us in any such attempted healing, there can be no question but that the Spirit of God not only heals the body, but also cleanses the soul. There is no evil aftermath and no possibility of an evil aftermath and of defection. Hence we read in James that significant statement so often overlooked, "And if he has committed sins they shall be forgiven him." The Spirit of God cleanses and heals the body at the same time it cleanses and heals the afflicted soul. S. A. B.

PALESTINE

Our readers may be confused by the daily newspapers as to the situation near Palestine. They have learned that something is amiss, but have not discovered just what. There has been emphasized the agreement of England to permit a return of the Jews to Palestine, and to permit them to establish their own government.

We have also noted the agreement of the other allies for Great Britain to assume in general a protectorate over that land for the present, assisting them, as she has with other colonies, to become fully established.

But we have not had so clearly emphasized the agreement of Great Britain on behalf of the allies with the Arabs early in the war, to secure for them independence and a right to their own government. They have heretofore been under the dominion of Turkey.

Great Britain, with the assistance of the Arabs, has released the Holy Land from the dominion of the Turks, and also Arabia, Syria and Mesopotamia. But in the meantime in 1916, the Sykes-Picot agreement was made between Great Britain and France, which agreed that the Syrian coast from Tyre to Alexandretta, Cilicia, and most of southern Armenia should be under the control of the French. A later agreement was to the effect that they would "encourage native Governments in Syria and Mesopotamia, and, without imposition, to assure the normal working of such government as the people shall themselves have adopted.

The Arabs quite naturally desire outlets to the sea, and there has arisen some misunderstanding between France and Great Britain, which has caused confusion; especially as Great Britain has made itself responsible to the Arabs for the carrying out of engagements entered into by them on behalf of all the allies. Diplomatic honesty requires that she carry out these agreements.

The middle of September, Lloyd George and Mr. Clemenceau came to a provisional understanding, and straightened up most of the difficulty, and through this the British will turn over or vacate the territory situated to the north of Syria-Palestine frontier. The French will not occupy Damascus or other cities specified. Of course the final determination will rest with the peace conference.

These factors are incidental. The fundamental facts still remain that Palestine has been freed from the Turks and plans are being made for the establishment of a Jewish state. But the Arabs have also been granted independence, and a kingdom of their own. It is probable that both Syria and Mesopotamia will be organized as their people choose.

One serious element of the problem is the desire that the United States should accept a mandate for Armenia and for Turkey. It is because of these minor differences and because it is well known that the United States has no ambition to secure or hold territory in the near East that it would seem that the allies are willing to trust to her this most difficult part of the problem. And it would seem that among enlightened thinkers there is quite a disposition to urge and hope that the United States will not be found wanting, but will assume this responsibility in the interest of the peace and good of the world.

THE COAL STRIKE

After the declaration of the coal strike, the Government took a hand in the department of justice, securing an injunction against the leaders of the coal miner's union, placing eighty-four of them under restraint. It is doubtful if an injunction will help the situation, as it will naturally tend to arouse opposition on the part of the miners.

The strike is a very grievous thing at the opening of winter. Many think that the Government will be justified in intervening to see that the coal is mined and is distributed to the people; and also to see that a just agreement is entered into and protect the real interest of the miners.

These two things should be accomplished, the needed coal supplied, and neither industry nor the people unnecessarily suffer.

Second: That a just provision be made to care for the interests of the miners and to remove the causes of the strike, considering the rights and interests of each party.

The arrangement to prevent profiteering and fixing of maximum prices would seem to be an excellent one. People should not only have coal, but should receive it at a fair price.

We are so confoundedly infallible in our judgments, so sure of what is good for our neighbor, so eager to force upon him our particular doctors or our particular remedies; we are so willing to put our childish fingers into the machinery of creation—and we howl so lustily when we get them pinched!

"Why!" I exclaimed, for it came to me like a new discovery, "it's exactly the same here as it is in the country! I haven't got to make over the universe: I've only got to do my own small job, and to look up often at the trees and the hills and the sky and be friendly with all men."—David Grayson.

BE PERFECT: KEEP THE LAW

(Sermon by Bishop J. A. Becker, delivered at Walnut Park, Independence, Missouri, May 18, 1919. Reported by Mrs. A. Morgan.)

And, behold, one came and said unto him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life? And he said unto him, Why callest thou me good? There is none good but one, that is, God; but if thou wilt enter into life, keep his commandments. He saith unto him, Which? Jesus said, Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness. Honor thy father and thy mother; and, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. The young man saith unto him, All these things have I kept from my youth up; what lack I yet? Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come and follow me. But when the young man heard that saying, he went away sorrowful, for he had great possessions. Then said Jesus unto his disciples, Verily I say unto you, That a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven. And again verily I say unto you, It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God. When his disciples heard it, they were exceedingly amazed, saying, Who then can be saved? But Jesus beheld them, and said unto them, With men this is impossible; but with God all things are possible. Then answered Peter and said unto him, Behold, we have forsaken all, and have followed thee; what shall we have therefore? And Jesus saith unto them, Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundredfold, and shall inherit everlasting life. But many that are first shall be last; and the last shall be the first.

The statement made by the Master to the young man, and his answer, or rather, his answer of the question of the Savior, is what I want to call your attention to this morning. You will notice that the record states that it was a good young man who came to Jesus. We want to bear that thought in mind in the examination of the conversation that took place between the Master and the young man.

THE LAW OF THE LORD IS PERFECT

He wanted to know what he should do to have eternal life. The Savior answered him; enumerated some of the things he was not to do, as well as some things that he should do, and after patiently hearing the Master present these statements to him, the young man said, All these things have I kept from my youth up. What lack I yet? And Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect—that's the thought

I want to impress upon your minds—if thou wilt be perfect. In connection with that, read the statement found in the 19th Psalm, 7th verse: "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul; the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple." Let us repeat it: The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul; the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple.

The thought of perfection is held out here to the children of men. It is a question that has demanded the consideration of the children of God in all ages. Back in the days of the Psalmist he saw it was necessary to tell them what the law of the Lord would do; that it would convert the soul, and make wise the simple, it being a perfect law.

Some years ago, only just previous to my leaving this country for a foreign field in the interests of the church work, I stored my household goods in the town where my wife's people lived. The freight agent, knowing the nature of the work I was engaged in, wanted to know something of our doctrine. He was a very religious young man himself. After I had conversed with him some little time he very appropriately asked:

"Do you believe in perfection?"

I answered, "Yes, sir; I do."

Then he came back with this question. "Well, can you point me to some individuals now alive, with whom you have been acquainted, or with whom you are acquainted, whom you think are perfect?"

Of course he didn't want me to go back to the life of Christ. He was willing to admit that Christ's life was perfect, but any other individual I had ever known about; could I tell him of a man with whom I had come in personal contact, any individual whom I thought was perfect. Now I could not, but I could tell him this: that I knew people that were better than other people. I knew some people that were more nearly perfect than other people were, and if Brother A was more nearly perfect than Brother B, it was just possible that Brother C might be more nearly perfect than Brother A, would it not? The same logic would hold.

So it reveals unto us that there is a possibility of progression toward perfection, and if that progression is continued it is bound to bring the desired result. So we find every evidence surrounding us that this admonition that was given by the Savior and which has so often been repeated in the word of God can be realized. We can become perfect in service, and there never has been given to the children of men any work, but what God would make it possible for them to comply with that requirement.

This morning I do not desire to make an individual application of this thought of perfection. In connection with that, of course it would be necessary for us to make a personal examination of ourselves, and in doing so, we would naturally try to determine wherein we were still short of having fully complied with the word of God, which would bring perfection.

But I desire more especially to make an application of it in a general way to the whole church, and yet even in that application we must realize that the church is composed of individuals. That unless you and I and every other individual who has placed his name upon the church record as a member of the church of God, unless we would admit that requirement there would be no church; so in the final analysis we must remember that after all it is an individual work, and the work of the Lord, the success of the work of the Lord depends upon the effort you put forth to become perfect in service.

LOVE THY NEIGHBOR AS THYSELF

It is true that the Lord can get along without any single individual of us, but we cannot get along without the Lord, but after all, the Lord must have human agencies through which he is going to work, and for that reason he has given unto us laws, a detailed law, so that each might make an application of it, and become perfect in service.

This young man no doubt felt just like a great many of us feel to-day. There are those here this morning who have, ever since their early childhood, been trying to serve the Lord, while others of us, probably, were not so religious in our younger days; were not so fortunate as to have come in contact with this work until more mature years, but I am confident of this one thing, that there is not a person here this morning who feels fully satisfied with the position he is occupying to-day; that is fully satisfied with the degree of development already made. Such are just like this young man, thinking that they have kept these commandments; have been baptized for the remission of their sins; have had hands laid upon them, which entitled them to the reception of the Holy Spirit as an abiding Comforter; yet like the young man you feel like asking yourselves, What lack I yet? There's still room for godliness; still room for development, just as there was in the life of this young man, to whom the Savior said, "If thou wilt be perfect, go sell that thou hast."

He didn't tell him to sell all he had and give it to the poor, did he? He didn't tell him to do that, but he did realize that there was one point in the law of God, which this young man had not yet fully understood. When the Savior said unto him, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, the young man said, I have kept that commandment from my youth up, according to his understanding. Yet, he hadn't. He hadn't loved his neighbor as himself, because there were poor among them. There were flaws in his theology, and if we rightly interpret that conversation that took place there, this young man had not comprehended the part that he had in that line, and the result of that was, denying himself; now notice, denying himself of the possibility of becoming perfect in service. I want you to look at it in that light this morning. Not that this young man made somebody else suffer. That's not the light in which I want you to look at it this morning. Of course that's essential; that's really the spirit that man should give is because of the desire he has to give the lift he has for mankind, and to see that every man shall have equal opportunity with him; yet we must also consider this thought, that by his failing to realize his opportunity along that line he has simply placed himself outside of the avenue through which he must pass to go on to perfection.

There is a possibility that as children of God that we may get just so far and then stand still. Or apparently we stand still, but in reality there is no such thing as standing still in the service of the Lord, for this reason, that the work of the Lord is a work of progression. The church is growing, developing, and going onward and upward, and if you stand still, what will be the result? The church will move on ahead of you, and after awhile you really have fallen behind. You are cast out and fallen back so that you cannot possibly keep up with the work of the Lord unless you continue to make progress with it.

Now the Lord saw the necessity of emphasizing that principle upon the mind of this young man in the day when he labored among the children of men. When we go back into the Old Testament days we discover that the Lord back there realized the necessity of giving unto the children of men a mind which would cause them to be interested in the welfare of their brothers and sisters. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.

Have you ever analyzed that statement? Have you ever tried to really grasp the meaning of the statement, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself? To what extent do you love yourself? To that extent, at least, that you want to be comfortable; you want to enjoy a healthy body and sound mind, and you want to enjoy the comforts of life, so that there may be some pleasure coming to you; some satisfaction in living here, and I think that's a God-given desire. I don't believe that the Lord intends that as his children they shall so deny themselves of everything that be pleasing. No. If we are to enjoy that which has been given unto us, then the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof; the cattle upon a thousand hills are the Lord's and he has created these things for the use and the benefit of man; for his enjoyment; for his comfort, and that as a result of the using of that which God has placed in his hands and under his control, he may develop, and become a perfect man.

Not only did the Lord see the necessity of teaching the children of men in the early day, but when we take up that which has been given unto us we find him directing the church, telling us just how we should observe these commandments that the Lord gave to the children of men in the early day; and we discover that in the inspiration of the gospel we learn that the Lord told them, If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments, and thou shalt remember the poor and consecrate of thy abundance to their support. In Doctrine and Covenants, 70 we find this law given to us as a people in this day.

Wherefore a commandment I give unto them, that they shall not give these things unto the church, neither unto the world; nevertheless, inasmuch as they receive more than is needful for their necessities, and their wants, it shall be given into my storehouse, and the benefits shall be consecrated unto the inhabitants of Zion, and unto their generations, inasmuch as they become heirs according to the laws of the kingdom. Behold, this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, even as I, the Lord, have appointed, or shall hereafter appoint unto any man. And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God, yea, neither the bishop, neither the agent, who keepeth the Lord's storehouse; neither he who is appointed to administer spiritual things, the same is worthy of his hire, even as those who are appointed to a stewardship, to administer in temporal things; yea, even more abundantly, which abundance is multiplied unto them through the manifestations of the Spirit; nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld.

Now what did he mean by that? That which you give for the support of those who had been less fortunate than you should be given freely and willingly, and not with a string tied to it, that you can come back to the church and say, Here, I have paid so much tithing to the church; I have paid so much in offerings for the church, and I have paid this and that, and I think I am entitled to a little better consideration; that there is more coming to me. Do you suppose you gave it in the right spirit if you gave it in that way? There's a spirit of selfishness underlying that individual's act. That's the very object of this law, is to remove selfishness from the hearts of the people, and we have made the statement many times, and I am satisfied it is true, that the children of God cannot become perfect, cannot be entirely free from the spirit of selfishness, until they have completely complied with the law of God according to temporal things.

WE EASILY DELUDE OURSELVES

The individual who says to himself, Well, I owe the Lord something, but just at the present time I feel that I would like to use it here; I have a splendid opportunity here, and I would like to use that money for right now, for I can buy a lot right next to me, or a little land next to me, to my farm, and after awhile when I get that paid off I will pay tithing, the whole thing, to the Lord. That's a good ambition, isn't it, but isn't there really just a little selfishness there, in the heart of that individual after all? Why does he want to buy that piece of land? Because it is a bargain: The bargain is for him, not for the Lord, and his desire to get and to hold is what prompts him to do that, and it is also dangerous. My experience among the children of men has proven that there is danger in that.

I remember one case in southeastern Ohio. We were just a small congregation; very few Saints lived there, but there seemed to be an earnest desire on the part of the membership to try to live by every word proceeding out of the mouth of God, to observe every commandment, and we were taught in that way that the law of tithing, the command of God, meant one tenth of our income, and I paid ten cents on every dollar I made. Every two weeks when I drew my pay, I took out ten cents of every dollar and laid it aside as tithing.

PAY THE LORD WITH OTHER CREDITORS

A young man, ordained as teacher the same day I was, observed it the same way I did, but one brother, a priest, said, "That's not the law. The law of the Lord is one tenth of your increase, not your income," and he was right in that, but here's where he made his mistake; he said, "The Lord doesn't ask me to pay my tithing until I have paid my neighbors. He has said, I should owe no man anything." He did say that, but he didn't tell you to contract the debt, either, did he? That's the trouble. That's where the mistake was made, in contracting the debt to start with, and of course he said, I must pay my neighbor what I owe him. He had bought a house and lot, and he thought he must pay for them first, and then, he said, when I get all of that paid off I am going to pay tithing; and so he followed that rule, and was very successful. He was within a few hundred dollars of having cleared his place, when a man who owned the lots next to him said, "I have to raise some money and I will sell these lots to you for so much"—and it was a bargain. The brother said, "I believe I will take them;" so he increased his indebtedness again. He would have nothing to pay to the Lord until he met this new debt, and his tithing was put off again. Do you see what the result would be? He would keep up that policy and never owe the Lord a cent. Never a dollar's tithe to pay. Do you know what happened? That's where the danger comes in. This man's health broke down before the lots were paid for. He was working with all his might and strength to lift that indebtedness, but before he could accomplish it his health failed him completely, and just a short time after that I was called to preach his funeral sermon. He hadn't fully completed his obligation to his neighbor, and his obligation to the Lord was unmet. He contracted pneumonia and died.

Do you see the danger of taking such a position as that? All that the Lord asks of us is that we shall pay ten cents of our increase. That much belongs to him as a debt you owe, and you should pay it just as readily and willingly as the debt to your neighbor, and I believe that if you follow that course, you will get along much better than this brother did who pursued the other course.

THE LORD WILL REWARD IN HIS WAY

I will give you an example that came under my observation. It was in northwestern Pennsylvania. I was talking to the Saints there along the line of their duty in temporal things, and I told them they ought to pay their tithing. One young sister who had been working as a domestic said, "I never paid tithing, but I feel that I should. I am just making $2.50 a week. Of course I have my board and practically all my expenses, so virtually this $2.50 is an increase to me."

"Well," I said, "if you believe that it is, then you owe the Lord twenty-five cents tithing." So after that, each week when they paid her $2.50 she took out twenty-five cents, and paid it as tithing. It was only two or three weeks after that that the people with whom she had been working for several years for $2.50, said, "Agnes, we will just pay you $3 a week for your services after this. You have been faithful and we will increase your wages to $3. What was the result? She took out thirty cents, and still had twenty cents more than when she made up her mind to pay tithing to the Lord.

A GRADUAL DEVELOPMENT

I think that's the way the Lord wants us to work. He has said the heavens were filled with blessings, which he wished to pour out upon the children of men greater than they were able to bear, almost, and yet we should realize that we should not pay our tithes with the thought in mind that we are going to receive more in return. That's still selfishness—the very thing we must eradicate from our lives if we are going to be successful in accomplishing the thing desired. You must do it, because you feel it a pleasure to give to the work of the Lord because of the good you will be able to do some one else.

Take it in your own family. You watch your children to see the little one as he first starts to walk; what a joy and comfort to see that child take its first step. How you watched it, as it moves around from one chair to another. It is gradually developing, and some of these days will be a young lady or young man. What a satisfaction to view that child because of the development you see in it. Just take into consideration that the family of God, as we are all one family of God, that that interest would be in the unfoldment of its members the same as in your own family, and then you begin to realize the opportunity that is held out to the children of God.

Now when the work was first established the Lord emphasized this thought in the first revelation given to the church after Joseph Smith, our late president, accepted the leadership of the church. It says that the church should observe the law of tithing, in order to place the church in position to carry on the promulgation of the gospel, and as a means of fulfilling the law, the Twelve were to work in connection with the Bishopric to see that the law of tithing was kept. Why were the Twelve appointed to help to see that the law of tithing was observed? The Lord told us some years after that, that the reason he made this obligatory on the Twelve was that the one who had been called, chosen as a leader, had not yet qualified himself. Young Joseph had not yet prepared himself before the body or the membership, and the Lord told the Twelve to assist in this work, so the means that came into the hands of the Bishopric could be rightly expended as the law directs; and so, through the revelations that came through the late president you will notice that thought there, that we should prepare for Zion conditions by observing this law in connection with the other commandments the Lord has given. Why? For the purchase of lands; for the redemption of Zion, and this is necessary for the redemption of Zion. If Zion could be redeemed, if perfect conditions could obtain without that principle, that law, the Lord would never have given it, but it is absolutely essential, just as necessary as baptism for the remission of sins.

THE GATHERING A POTENTIAL DANGER

But there's another thought in connection with this that it brings before us, and that is the question of the gathering of the children of God, and you may think it is rather foolish for me to talk to you who are here in the central place, the central stake, about the gathering, and yet I will tell you why before I will go away, and probably you will notice why I want to mention it to you who are here now. The Lord has told us just what should obtain before we should move to the regions round about. It is stated that we should have all things prepared ahead. Having made an inventory of your possessions and placed this in the hands of the Bishopric, so they may know just what you are worth and the condition you are in, then it says also that these should carry a certificate from three elders or the bishop where you reside, to the bishop in Zion, so it may be known just what your standing is, and that he may not only know what kind of a life you have lived where you have formerly resided, but that as a result of your inventory, filed with him, he may know just how successful you have been in life, and with the Questionnaire, will not only know how much tithing you have paid and how successful you have been as a farmer, a clerk or mechanic or whatever you have been, but he will know the success that has attended the efforts you have made.

Now, the gathering is on and that's why I want to talk to you this morning about the law. During the short time I have been here, I have been alarmed over some conditions. The minds of the children of God are directed toward Independence and the stakes, and they are longing to locate in the regions round about. During the few months I have been here I have found quite a number of families coming here, having made no preparation. If there is any family here that came that way—I am not telling you this to scold you this morning, but for some other purpose—they have not complied with the law I have mentioned. They came; they located, and as a result some of them are discouraged. One brother and his wife came into the office one day this winter, having no more than landed until they took the influenza. Then one little girl had double pneumonia afterwards. At the present time the man is so sick he cannot work, and the doctor says that unless some unforeseen thing transpire, he will have but a short time to live. He is very much discouraged as a result. Why? He came here without making any preparation whatever. He was successful where he had been, at least so successful that he was enabled to provide for his family. He had the necessary means to sustain life. He hasn't been able to do so well here. Would it not have been better for him to remain where he was for the present, until we had so far developed our Zion idea that when the time should have come, that we would have been able to say to him. Here, brother, is a place where we can use you, and enable you to gain a livelihood for yourself and family. We are trying to arrange for this, but it takes time and means to do it.

That's not the only family that has come in this way, but many others, and I have been compelled to notice that there were so many coming from one district, and that worried me. I wondered why it was that so many were coming from the one district. I made inquiry and thought surely the missionary in charge must be an unwise man, going out there and preaching the gathering to those people, and they came in here and have no preparation made. When he came to Independence, I spoke to him. I said: "What do you mean preaching the gathering to these people and getting them to rush in here without any preparation beforehand?" He denied having done this. He said he had mentioned it of course; had talked about it to them, but nothing more than that. He had tried to emphasize the fact that they remain there until they had all things prepared beforehand, so that they could know what was going to happen to them when they got to Zion. I was perplexed again. I wondered, why is it that these people, so many of them, are coming in this way. Just recently a sister called me up over the telephone. She said, "Brother Becker, I have a cousin here, staying with me. I would like her to have work as a domestic. She is only sixteen or seventeen years old." I asked: "What's her name?" She gave me her name. Then I made up my mind.

"You call this girl Smith?" (Smith doesn't mean anything in Independence.)

"Yes."

"Sister Smith, did you all come from the same district?"

"Why, yes, sir."

They were all related too to this other family, and then I found out why these families had moved to Independence. This good sister was telling in glowing terms of the wonderful meetings we were having at the Stone Church, and the glorious opportunities; what a wonderful thing it was to be in Zion, and of course they all wanted to be in Zion. So they came; they gathered to their sorrow.

The only reason why I tell you this is this. You may have relatives living throughout the world whose eyes are turned towards Zion but I want to emphasize the fact in your correspondence with them, don't make this break without having all things arranged and prepared beforehand—having paid their tithing and offerings, and filed their inventory and made all this ready. The result of this promiscuous gathering would be a condition that would be deplorable. Consider that one third of the amount of money spent for the whole church last year in the way of aid was spent for the membership of the Independence Stake—$8,000 spent in Independence alone as aid to the Independence membership, it is just about one third of what was spent for the entire church. Why? Not because these people who were compelled to receive it were entirely dependent. No, but because conditions existed that made it impossible for them to take care of all their needs. Numbers of them just moved in here without consulting anybody. Now if too many were to do this what would be the result? Starve, wouldn't they? We want to provide something for them to be able to do when they come, some means of livelihood; we are working toward that end, and we want your help along this line. So in order to do this rightly we must observe the law that the Lord has given to have all things prepared beforehand.

EVERY MEMBER A TITHE PAYER

The church has set a slogan this year, Every member to become a tithe payer. I remember some years ago when Bishop Kelley was visiting us in the Ohio mission. He made this statement at one of our meetings, that the majority of the membership were with him in observing the law of tithing. That is, he meant the membership of the church believed in the law of tithing. He was very optimistic as to the result. Well, now, to-day, we don't need to emphasize that fact at all. The entire membership believes in the principle of tithing. They may not all be observing it, but that's a slogan for this year. Every member of the church pay their tithing.

You may think it is impossible for every member of the church to be a tithe payer. What does tithing mean? One tenth of your increase above your needs for your living. You may say, I have nothing above my actual needs. Well, now, if you think that we want you to do something this year, just simply procure a family record book, and set down your purchases, and I am satisfied you will be surprised how many things you buy that you do not need. In this connection the bishopric is preparing a little book, a record book for the membership. They will put it in your hands for a small amount. You cannot procure one elsewhere for less than fifty cents, and in some places they are even two dollars. Each day of the week, each week of the month, each month of the year write down just what you are spending. How much you are going to spend to-morrow; how much you spent yesterday: groceries; light; clothing; shoes and everything you spent yesterday, record it. Keep up that record for a month and if you have never tried this, just try it for one month alone, and you will be so astonished at the end of the month, and will say, Is it possible I have spent that much money during this last month? I am ashamed of the amount of money, and then you will find you will have some tithing to pay before the end of the year, because if you have saved up a dollar at the end of the year ten cents of that belongs to the Lord.

I have had people come to me and say, "Here's a dollar for offering. I have no tithing."

"Where did you get this dollar?"

"Oh, I saved it out of my salary."

"If you have saved a dollar out of your salary, one tenth of that is tithing. You ought to pay ten cents tithing, and ninety cents as offering."

Some people have said to me, "If in your report it shows I have paid $90 tithing they will say to me, Where are your $900 assets?"

Now that doesn't mean that you have to save that amount, and have it on hand to pay a tenth in as tithing. If you have $900 on hand you are still selfish. The Lord says in Malachi, pay in your tithes and offerings, and in the doing of this you are blessed. Of course your grocer would be very glad to have you pay your bill, but if after you have paid him, you say, Brother Smith, you have taken such good care of me I will make you a present of another dollar, he would feel doubly good toward you, wouldn't he? That dollar would be an offering. The bill belongs to him anyway, but the offering is an expression of good will on your part.

Now these blessings only come to the children of God when they observe the laws, purge their hearts of the spirit of selfishness, which must be banished from the hearts of God's children before they can make good servants. I want you to carry home this thought this morning, this slogan, that during 1919 the church, every member of the church, shall be come a tithe payer, so that when the end of the year comes, every individual who holds membership in the Independence Stake, at least, has paid his tithing.

I have given receipts for one cent tithing, and the time it took me to write the receipt cost the church five times as much as that, but the thought is here, that when you are observing the law to the best of your ability, whatever that is, big or little, you have become a more valuable member of the church, more unselfish and more a child of God. A child who is taught in his childhood to pay in his pennies as tithing, grows up to manhood or womanhood grounded in the law, being obedient to it. When we all do this Zionie conditions will obtain. May God help us.

It Is Written

It is apparent to observing people who have been students of the Bible that we are living in the last days. As predicted, the gospel has been restored by an angel; the priesthood has again been committed to men, and they are authorized to act in the name of God in performing the ordinances of the gospel.

The command given in Christ's time to his apostles, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," has been renewed and the part that every Saint shall play in making this possible, is clearly marked out: "In order to place the church in a position to carry on the promulgation of the gospel and as a means of fulfilling the law, the Twelve will take measures in connection with the Bishop to execute the law of tithing. . . ." From this obligation none shall be exempt in the day of judgment. "If any man will take of the abundance of the things which I have made and impart not his portion according to my gospel unto the poor and needy, he shall with the wicked lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment." Caring for the poor is a concomitant of the gospel work.

This language is not used to frighten any into paying their tithing, for such an offering would not be acceptable to God; but to impress us with the thought that unless we are willing to keep the financial law, it may indicate that there is in our lives either selfishness or covetousness or greed for filthy lucre and these conditions would unfit us for celestial glory.

The stupendous work of carrying this gospel to all the world will require not only the consecrated lives of the missionaries, but we who follow the plow, who hammer at the anvil and work in the office, will have to make the kingdom of God the thing of chief concern in our lives. This is what Jesus meant when he said "Seek ye first to build up and establish the kingdom of God."

This can be done in two ways; by personal righteousness and by paying your tithing, thus making it possible for the ambassadors for Christ to go.

Doors of opportunity are opening everywhere. The world is demanding a practical religion, they are not satisfied with the promise of future reward. We have, by the grace of God, that which will satisfy their hungry souls and as a servant for Christ, I plead with you to heed this call to duty, and if you know of any who are not giving one tenth of their increase to the God who so richly blesses us, see to it that you acquit yourself before God by talking the matter over with them.

A brother came into the office recently to pay his

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Two Notable Lectures

As previously announced, Heman Hale Smith, assistant historian, and professor of history at Graceland College, and Doctor F. M. McDowell, dean of the college of liberal arts, and vice president of the General Religio and leader of the boy movement were among the speakers at the Lamoni stake conference.

Their addresses were different in being lectures instead of sermons, and evidently were very well received.

Both of the Chariton, Iowa, papers, the Leader and the Herald-Patriot, took note of the conference, and expresses in excellent tone the endorsement of the league of nations passed unanimously by the conference and these two lecturers. The following is an extract from the Leader:

"On Thursday evening there was a lecture by Professor H. Hale Smith, on the league of nations, and he did not hesitate to come out strongly in behalf of the covenant. He is connected with Graceland College, and has a most wonderful knowledge of history in all the ages of time and aptly drew upon the past and found lessons from the annals of time. He was forcible in his manner, strong in voice and passed from climax to climax with the ease of the habitual public speaker and became oratorical only when word painting would not obscure the general thought, finishing his sentences roundly and putting up his gaps well, so that no misapprehensions might occur. It is not often that a Chariton audience has the privilege of hearing a like scholarly and instructive address. On Friday Doctor F. M. McDowell lectured on "The problem of the ages," and well did he portray them. We are living in an age of strife and contest. Two radical extremes are confronting each other and neither is willing to make concessions. The benevolent side of humanity is obscured and all struggle is for advantage. The refinements and equities of life for the time being are obscured and the great majority of people would not be satisfied in a veritable heaven, so warped is the public conscience. Right is on neither side, though there may be a mistaken ardor. What the world needs is reformation, a soul renovating, a change of desire, and more brotherly love. This was the trend of thought, though we would not pretend to imitate the words of the speaker. He talked understandingly and was comprehensive. It was meat for the thinker, a revelation to the student, and an admonition to all. The church is doing a great service to society when it sends men like these out in the universal pulpit, for, after all, we must take an optimistic view of situations, for they will grow better by and by. And right thinking men do their part in bringing the better conditions about."

ENCOURAGING STUDY OF CHURCH HISTORY

Brother Edward Rannie, president of the Central Oklahoma District, is sending out a circular to the members of the district, suggesting an hour a week for four months be devoted to the study of our own church history. As texts he suggests one of the following: Church History, volume 1, price $2; Young People's History, volume 1, price $1; or the tract "The latter-day glory" (a brief history of the church) price 10 for 35 cents. He urges that in using the latter, the other nine copies purchased be given to friends. At the end of four months he desires a letter as to the amount of good received.

Contributions for the Forum

Some of the immediate questions which we expect to have discussed in this department are those concerning Zion and its establishment, such as tithing, consecration, stewardship, inheritance, the storehouse, the Order of Enoch, and their relations to the spiritual activity of the church.

This will also involve a consideration of such problems as the economic conditions and social relations of the world; the problems of capital and labor, and what we can learn from researches made in sociology and economics; such movements as that of the Non-Partisan League, and of the co-operative society of Great Britain.

This does not mean that the editors are expressing personal approval of any of these movements, let alone trying to commit the church. It does mean that we should consider what has been done, and what is being done, and what is proposed by others, in order that we may the better understand our own procedure. It may even include a review of the development of the law governing churches, including the law of Missouri, which is important for our understanding of our own problems.

But it is not planned that our consideration shall be limited to financial questions or the temporal law; such questions as who shall preside, the rights of various officers, moot questions of procedure, or of the interpretation of the law, questions of live interest concerning the family and social life may also be discussed.

In some instances, when possible, articles will be secured on the opposite side of a question, and published simultaneously, without either writer making reference to or knowing what the other writes, but each presenting his views affirmatively for the consideration of our readers.

Hell, Pit, Prison

These terms are used in scripture, meaning the same thing; and in this sense they will be used in this article.

When I say scripture, I mean Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants.

That one may suffer the "pains of hell" while yet in the flesh, is true, but to argue from that that there is no other place called hell is not true. (See Psalm 116:3.) "The sorrows of death compassed me, and the pains of hell got hold upon me; I found trouble and sorrow." Note, "trouble and sorrow."

"And his soul began to be harrowed up, under a consciousness of his own guilt; yea, he began to be encircled about by the pains of hell."—Alma 10:41.

But to argue from the above that the place hell is upon the earth; we could as well argue that heaven is on earth. "And thou Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shall be brought down to hell."—Matthew 11:23.

We learn from the above that the "pains" of hell are largely a condition of mind; yet there is a place located, called hell. "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God."—Psalm 9:17. Note, "into hell."

"And it came to pass, that Adam being tempted of the Devil, for, behold, the Devil was before Adam, for he rebelled against me, saying, Give me thine honor, which is my power; and also a third part of the hosts of heaven turned he away from me because of their agency; and they were thrust down, and thus became the Devil and his angels; and, behold, there is a place prepared for them from the beginning; which place is hell."—Doctrine and Covenants 28:10.

PLACE

Inside the earth, not on the outside. Read Ezekial 32, the whole chapter, in which are these sayings; "Unto the nether parts of the earth . . . with them that go down to the pit." "The strong . . . shall speak to him out of the midst of hell . . . whose graves are set in the sides of the pit, and her company is round about her grave—gone down into nether parts of the earth."—plainly, the inner parts of the earth.

The above statements are plain as to location, and need no comments.

"And I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years. And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled."—Revelation 20:1-3.

"Place prepared," (Doctrine and Covenants 28:10.) "Bottomless pit." Could we grasp the idea of bottomless in any other way, than to think of it as being in the interior of the earth? The earth is continuous in its revolutions, and thus being on the inside to they who are there, it is indeed a "bottomless pit."

PIT

Is anything called a pit that does not go into the earth?

Is there more than one condition in hell? Deuteronomy 32:22 says: "Lowest hell."

"Delivered my soul from the lowest hell."—Psalm 86:13.

"Ye shall receive the greater damnation. . . . How can you escape the damnation of hell?"—Matthew 23:14, 33.

WHO GOES TO HELL?

"The Devil and his angels; and, behold there is a place prepared for them from the beginning, which place is hell."—Doctrine and Covenants 29:10.

"Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized; shall be saved but he that believeth not shall be damned."—Mark 16:15, 16. Psalm 9:17.

"And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall punish the hosts of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth that are upon the earth. And they shall be gathered together as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited."—Isaiah 24:21, 22.

"For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just, for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit. By which also, he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which sometimes were disobedient, when once the long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah."

It is the spirit, or inner man, that goes to hell. Because, while in the flesh, he rejects the gospel.

The spirit of man was created out of the Spirit of God; and existed before it entered the body, and can, and does exist when leaving the body. (Matthew 2:15; Genesis 1:27, 28; 2:1-7.)

"Now this is the state of the souls of the wicked, yea, in darkness, and a state of awful, fearful, looking for, of the fiery indignation of the wrath of God upon them; thus they remain in this state, until the time of their resurrection."—Alma 19:47.

Thus we see that those who rejected the gospel in the days of Noah went to prison. Those who rejected the gospel, from Noah to Christ, no doubt received the same fate. While those referred to by Isaiah, will in point of time come in from the first, to the second coming of Christ; and they will receive the same fate, for the same reason. For "they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinances, broken the everlasting covenant." (Isaiah 24: 5.)

Thus they brought about the necessity for the restoration of the gospel, through Joseph Smith and others. Which said gospel has been and seems likely to be largely rejected. And those who do so, will receive the same fate, as God is no respecter of persons.

In summing up, note that it is the spirit of man that goes to hell; that hell is somewhere in the interior of the earth, and if we take it for granted that the earth's crust is only forty-five miles in thickness, there will be plenty of room for those to occupy who reject the gospel.

J. C. CRABB.

Where Is Hell, and Who Occupies It?

I suppose nothing better can be offered as a definition (and it also answers three of the questions), than an answer to the above question given in the Ensign Round Table for January 1, 1914:

"Answer.—Hell is a condition and also place; any being who is altogether out of correspondence with God is in that condition, and his place to him is hell."

By that we see the ones out of correspondence with God, occupy; and they are the ones in the condition; and where they are at the time is the place.

In the elucidation of the subject, two planes must be considered: the spiritual and the material; two laws; the spiritual law and the law of physics. The mundane does not behold the things of the extramundane system. There is the spiritual man and the natural man; the mind of the spirit and mind of the flesh. (See Romans 7: 8; Corinthians 15: 44.)

I will first take the question:

WHAT ARE ITS METES AND BOUNDS?

To confine it to the surface of the earth would certainly be incorrect, though all have seen conditions obtain on this mundane sphere to justify the application of all the name signifies. We learn from the laws of mechanics that all things in the universe are controlled by temperature and pressure, and four thousand miles below the surface of the earth is a place of statics. No doubt all element, either spiritual or temporal, is controlled by gravitation, and its metes and bounds are the limits of gravity. But the spirit, the intelligence, is independent of, and controlled by another law than the law of element. (See Doctrine and Covenants 85: 9, 10.)

"For intelligence cleaveth unto intelligence; wisdom receiveth wisdom; truth embraceth truth; virtue loveth virtue; light cleaveth unto light; mercy hath compassion on mercy, and claimeth her own; justice continueth her course, and claimeth its own."

There is a poem something like this:

"Our thoughts are things, and their very wings
Are swifter than carrier doves;
They follow the laws of the universe,
Each kind must create its kind;
They are swift on their track to bring us back
Whatever goes out from our mind."

I do not think that the surface of the earth stands for the bottomless pit. Jesus said:

"For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." (Matthew 12: 34.) This is a similitude. (See Jonah 2.) Jonah called it hell, and the belly is centrally located, not a desirable place to be, and very suggestive of a prison. And the fish went down deep.

Paul said, Christ descended into the lower parts of the earth. (Ephesians 4: 9.) Peter said he went and preached unto the spirits in prison. (Peter 3: 19.) Jesus said, those who were dead would hear his voice, and come forth. (John 5: 25; 28: 29.) David prophesying of Christ said: "For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." (Psalm 16: 10.) Peter, in recounting it, said: "Because thou wilt not leave my soul in prison, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." (Acts 2: 27.) And in the 31st verse, he said: "His soul was not left in hell." Ezekiel said the pit and hell are in the nether parts of the earth. (Ezekiel 31: 14-18; 32: 18, 21, 24, 27.)

We have the history of the rich man and Lazarus, which shows of a place other than the surface of the earth, which is hell and a prison. Lazarus and the rich man were not able to go to each other, suggestive of prison. The one is a place of rest and comfort; the other of torment, away from the surface of the earth, as the rich man wanted to send to warn his brothers that they did not come to that place. (See Luke 16: 24-36.)

That the wicked who die, having had a chance of the gospel, also the Devil and his angels have a prison away from the face of the earth, is evident from Revelation 20. A chain is put upon Satan; he is locked in a prison, in the bottomless pit, and a seal set upon him for a thousand years.

I will give a passage of Scripture which would be conclusive to me, if none other, that there is a place below the surface of the earth where the wicked go and are confined. (See Numbers 16: 30-33.) Verse 30 says:

WE WANT TO HEAR FROM OUR YOUNGER WRITERS, TOO

The bulwark of strength in the church is the fine body of devoted and consecrated men and women who have given their lives in its service. They have known of the standing invitation of the HERALD to become contributors to its pages.

But the younger element among us—those who but yesterday were lads and lassies among us—we want to hear from them as well. The church is full of people with ideas and ideals, some new and untried, some tested and reliable. Let us hear from all—a short, crisp article, comment, letter, or poem—and it will help very much in inspiring the rest of us.

Record your impressions now, while they are fresh; to-morrow you will have a new crop. Send them to EDITORS HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa. We thank you.

"But if the Lord make a new thing, and the earth open her mouth, and swallow them up, with all that appertain unto them, and they go down quick into the pit, then ye shall understand that these men have provoked the Lord."

ARE WE RESPONSIBLE FOR BEING HERE?

I understand all spirits are anxious to take a body, and that spirit and element are eternal, and separated they cannot receive a fullness of joy, and the work and glory of God is to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man. And the fifth principle of the gospel (the resurrection of the dead), comprehends the uniting of the spirit and body, and quickens that union into life which changes the mortal to immortal. Every perfect work must have a perfect reward, and the only ones who are not benefited are those who sin against the Holy Ghost (deny the Son after the Father has revealed him, to deny and defy the power of God, after having received the knowledge).

J. H. JOHNSTON.

The Earth Is Not Hell

With all due respect to the author of an article in October 15, HERALD, entitled "Terrestrial hell—who occupies?" I wish to say that "hell" is not another name for earth; the terms earth and hell are not identical in meaning, and we, the denizens of earth, are not actual residents of hell.

Numbers 14: 21 says the earth is to be filled with the glory of the Lord. Psalm 37: 9 says, Those that wait on the Lord shall inherit the earth. Isaiah 66: 1 calls earth the footstool of the Lord. Matthew 5: 35 says the earth is the Lord's footstool. Matthew 5: 5 says the meek shall inherit the earth. Revelation 5: 10 says we shall reign on earth. In Doctrine and Covenants 85: 6 we read that the earth abideth the law of the celestial kingdom, for it filleth the measure of its creation and transgresseth not the law; wherefore it shall be sanctified. In 94: 3; "Kingdom of God is on earth." The above citations shows the mission of the earth.

Queries: If earth and hell are identical, what reward will it be for the faithful to inherit hell? How could the Lord use hell as a footstool with any advantage? Will it profit the meek to inherit hell? Will we enjoy reigning in hell, after we become righteous? How can hell possibly abide the law of the celestial kingdom? Above all, is it not unreasonable to say that God's kingdom is hell?

Now, then, a few quotations, locating where hell really is: Psalm 63: 9: "Those that seek my soul to destroy it shall go into the lower parts of the earth." Notice, it says lower parts of the earth, not on top. Psalm 71: 20: "Shalt bring me up again from the depths of the earth." Ezekiel 31: 16: "I made the nations to shake at the sound of his fall, when I cast him down to hell with them that descend into the pit, and all the trees of Eden, the choice and best of Lebanon, all that drink water, shall be comforted in the nether parts of the earth." Matthew 12: 40: "For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." The heart of the earth would hardly be on top of it.

The brother uses as proof that earth and hell are the same in the following: "Thou did debase thyself even unto hell." (Isaiah 57: 9) The sorrows of hell encompassed me about." (2 Samuel 2: 5, 6) and "The pains of hell got hold upon me." (Psalm 116: 3.)

These quotations may be, and in fact are, answered in this quotation from the Book of Mormon, Mosiah 1: 83-85:

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

A Mother's Ideals

(We commend to the reader's attention, the following truthful article. The writer has had the experience of being the eldest of six children in the home of her parents, and the further valuable opportunity of six years work as school-teacher. Now, with a home and child of her own, she has very practical and exalted ideas of the heights she wishes to reach in the development of their possibilities. Would that all mothers had as definite and carefully-planned methods as Sister Davis. Fewer children would come to maturity like the proverbial Topsy—having "just growned!"—A. A.)

I read over the first list of questions given by our editor and thought out the answers but I didn't send the result for publication because I thought others would write who had wider experience and were more accustomed to committing their thoughts to paper. The second appeal, however, seemed to be a personal invitation to me to "do my bit."

In my experience, the most common mistake of mothers, and fathers too, is that of teaching by precept rather than example. A father may severely punish his son for swearing, but if he swears in that boy's hearing his son will do likewise. I could give other instances, but you can recall many from your own observations. Let us be careful of our actions, parents, remembering always, that children are born imitators.

The most vital error is to regard children as a piece of personal property rather than one of God's children entrusted to us for early care and training. We cannot command a child's respect and trust as we can manipulate a piece of machinery. We must merit it and train the child to that attitude. Just the other day I heard a woman say that her husband had quit college because his father insisted upon his taking a course in agriculture instead of engineering. God sent each child into the world with talents for some particular work, and we as parents should only train and guide, not try to make that life. Read the account of Christ in the temple, at the age of twelve, his mother's question, his answer, then ponder over it and see if you can find any suggestion in it for you.

The spiritual training of the child is most neglected. We only need to look around our own community to see that the majority of mothers have not made themselves capable of properly caring for the bodies, minds, and souls of their children. To often they stress the care of one to the hurt of the others.

The Woman's Auxiliary is the proper department of the church to give the needed instruction. I fear a trained social worker could not reach the ones who most need her help unless she were a woman of rare tact and winning personality. Perhaps the best way would be to make the Oriole and Temple Builder organizations so helpful to the girls that, as they grow up and go into homes of their own, they will naturally look to the church for instruction. The ladies' aid could devote a part of each meeting to the study courses of the Auxiliary.

Fathers should be equally responsible with the mothers, for the welfare of their children. A sermon devoted to the problems of child training would be a good thing occasionally. I agree with Sister Thoman, that fathers could with profit arrange classes to study these problems.

The parents are the custodians of the child's physical, mental, and spiritual welfare, but the church, state, and community must assist in the work or a great deal of our training will be nullified. No matter how careful you have been, if some one sends her child to school with the measles, or a worse disease, your child will probably contract it. And there are countless other dangers that one mother or father, alone, cannot combat.

I am thoroughly in favor of social medical oversight, a school nurse, frequent examinations by experts, and community recreational centers.

Children born of defective parents are naturally more susceptible to evil and we read that Charles Guiteau, assassin of President Garfield, was always an unbalanced, criminally disposed boy because of prenatal influences. But children born of normal parents are by natural endowment neither good nor bad. Their future life depends greatly on their environment, as can be seen by observing a family, separated while the children are small.

Morals, do indeed, have to be taught and practiced thoroughly to become ingrained in the character. If you want a child to be unselfish, see that he shares his toys, candy, etc. with his playmates. If you want him to be courteous, have him practice the forms of politeness and be courteous to him. I use him in the generic sense.

Parents must wage a campaign against evil in order to safeguard our children, for no man lives unto himself. They must come into contact with people and conditions around them. A positive teaching of virtue is not sufficient. Suppose you wanted a child to go some place by a certain path but there was a deep hole in it. You would tell him to follow the path but watch out for that hole. There are some pitfalls along life's highway, of which children must be warned or they won't know the danger until too late to avoid it.

A child may be taught that if he feels he wouldn't want his father, mother, or teacher to know a thing he does that that particular act is wrong. As he grows older he may be taught those things of which he feels God would approve are good.

I think the easiest way to teach children to love right for right's sake is by the use of ethical stories and poems. But don't tack on the moral. The children will do that for themselves.

I think children should be taught to regard God as a kind, loving Father and then allowed to pray spontaneously and naturally. Of course the wee ones will learn "Now I lay me down to sleep" and the older ones, the Lord's Prayer.

The punishment of children should be the natural result of the act, and should be administered while the deed is still fresh in memory. Anyone who has the child in charge at that particular moment should correct him. But this should never be done in anger. When my little girl takes a tantrum, I go away and leave her until the worst of the storm is over. Then I pick her up and rock her until she is in a good humor or falls asleep. Isolation is an effective punishment in many cases. But first of all, make sure the child needs punishing.

I think children should attend Sunday school from infancy, and from the age of four or five they should occasionally stay for the morning sermon during the next two years. Of course, some mothers must take their children to all the services or miss the meetings themselves. It would be a splendid thing if each branch could provide two good storytellers to keep the children interested during the preachnig service, one for those under five years, and one for those older. Several might take up that work so the work would not fall too heavily on anyone. The rest of the day should be spent in quiet study or pastimes. I think Brother Wells gave a list of books and games in a late HERALD. Ex-President Roosevelt's practice of taking his family for a Sunday afternoon walk seems to me an excellent one.

I think one must sometimes say "Don't," especially to a child too young to reason. We must say "No, no," to them when they reach for some things or when they begin to climb or go places they should not.

My aim for my baby is to have her become a Christian woman with a healthy body, a well trained mind, skilled hands, and a heart attuned to the Master's touch. She is only twenty-one months old so I haven't met and overcome many difficulties yet. I have trained her to regular hours of sleep and I am careful of her food. She almost lives outdoors when the weather is fit.

And I shall begin her religious instruction as soon as she can comprehend a story. My mother so thoroughly taught all of her six children that we were each baptized into the church before we were eleven years old and we were isolated from church privileges most of the time. Father did not join the church until the fifth one of us was baptized.

O Mothers! We may wield a mighty influence for good in our children's lives if we will. But we must study, read, and work out these problems, then go and live with our children. If you, a Christian mother, consecrated to your task, are your son's chum, your daughter's confidante, that boy or girl will not go far astray.

What of the Comic Supplement?

In response to our invitation, to let the readers of the Auxiliary column have the benefit of anything we have learned of value about the spiritual care of our children, I wish to contribute a few words.

Our little boys, aged seven and ten (like many other children of Latter Day Saints, I regret to believe), had been accustomed to reading the comic supplement of the Sunday paper. Not often, I am glad to say, did they find it in their own home, but a good-natured neighbor always called them to the fence and gave it to them.

I noticed them becoming very rough in their talk, fond of using such words as "ding-busted," etc., but days went by without any serious remonstrance on my part. When I did gently check them in their language, I did not stop to consider the source from which they learned such words, but just supposed they picked them up from playmates.

One day an old and valued friend of mine, who belongs to the Methodist Church, and who knew me when I was a girl and a member of that same church, was having a visit with me, the first one in six years. She was admiring my little boy, then six and a half years old. She said: "And what are you going to be when you grow up, little man?" He said: "A loafer." After the general laugh which followed she said: "What's a loafer?"

"Oh," he returned, "a man that plays cards, and bets, and never has to work!"

In the night which followed, I slept very little. I knew in an instant where he had gotten his ideas—my little boy, whom we still called "the baby"!

The next day I laid the case before my husband, saying: We take our boys to Sunday school and among other things they are taught truthfulness, obedience to parents, respect for age, etc. Then they are allowed to read the "funny paper," and there see just the opposite of these virtues, sees those pictures so attractively and so comically that they are impressed, and the result must be that they think these things are smart and desirable. How shall their unformed minds understand why father and mother and grown-up friends laugh when they see the pictures of other children doing such things, and yet punish their own for imitating them? If, as those who have studied the child mind tell us, anything that appeals to the eye has such a quick and lasting effect upon the childish mind, how shall we measure the far-reaching effect on the ideals of a little child when he looks at these pictured atrocities? His little mind is fast becoming familiar with many kinds of vice: drinking, gambling, card-playing, dishonesty, trickery, husband and wife lying to each other, children deceiving their parents, etc.

That evening we had a talk with our boys. Their father took the "funny paper" and laying it out before them, read each page, mercilessly exposing the wrongdoing or absolute silliness of each page in turn, saying, "Now, I don't see anything smart or anything nice about that, do you?" When they agreed with him, he said, "Now, boys, let us just cut all this out, and not bother with the silly, vulgar stuff any more! You have each your Sunday school papers and the beginning of a good library and Harry can join the public library, and get to read children's books that are really worth reading."

They agreed, and I felt better satisfied every day, that we took the course we did. If there be others among the mothers who read this column who have permitted the comic supplement in their homes where there are little children under their care, I pray that they may weigh what I have here said and see if they do not think I am right!

Working at the Roots

"Nearly all the criminals of the future, the thieves, burglars, incendiaries, and murderers, are now in our public schools, and with them the greater criminals who commit national crimes. They are in our public schools now, and we are educating them. We can mold them now if we will. To illustrate the power of education: We know that we can make the same boy Protestant, Roman Catholic, or Mohammedan. It is simply a question of education. We may put into his little hands, as first toys, whips, guns, and swords, or may teach him, as the Quakers do, that war and cruelty are crimes. We may teach him to shoot the little song bird in springtime, with its nest full of young, or we may teach him to feed the bird and spare its nest. We may go into the schools now with book, picture, song, and story, and make neglected boys merciful, or we may let them drift, until, as men, they become sufficiently lawless and cruel to throw our railway trains off the track, place dynamite under our dwelling houses or public buildings, assassinate our president, burn half our city, or involve the Nation in civil war.

"Is it not largely, if not wholly, a question of education?

"I am sometimes asked, 'Why do you spend so much of your time and money in talking about kindness to animals, when there is so much cruelty to men?' And I answer, 'I am working at the roots.' Every humane publication, every lecture, every step, in doing or teaching kindness to them, is a step to prevent crime—a step in promoting the growth of those qualities of heart which will elevate human souls, even in the dens of sin and shame, and prepare the way for the coming of peace on earth and good will to men."

"Standing before you as the advocate of the lower races, I declare what I believe cannot be gainsaid—that just so soon and so far as we pour into all our schools the songs, poems, and literature of mercy towards these lower creatures, just so soon and so far shall we reach the roots not only of cruelty but of crime."—From an address by George T. Angell.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Kirtland Is Going Forward

Elbert A. Smith; Dear Brother: I enjoyed a feast sitting among so large a gathering as the temple accommodated this morning.

I can write and work from my new workroom looking over the fields to the Kirtland Temple a half mile away. I am laboring to bring attention to this spot and be here on the ground as developments occur.

It is wonderful to sit back in my chair and from out the large north light of my workplace see the fields and cattle, the white ribbon of cement road, the orchard and groves, and the stately temple tower; and up above the fleecy clouds a great bird-like object humming its way from New York to Chicago with Uncle Sam's mail almost as regular as clock-work. One of these bright days my camera will "get him" and there will be another picture for your collection.

Speaking of pictures, I am getting in touch with a "movie" house who ran up a film of our recent reunion. If all goes well, a film or two may be gotten for use of our own people. We have a projector (animated) here.

I want to send to the First Presidency's office a large picture of the crowd at 1919 Kirtland Reunion, I should say about half the crowd. Hope there will be a place for it on your walls to remind you that Kirtland is an institution and going forward.

Winter Institutes

Letters are being forwarded to all district presidents of the church, district Sunday school superintendents, and district Religio presidents, asking their cooperation in securing good and efficient workers for the institutes to be held this winter. If you feel that you are qualified to assist in this work, report to your district officers, for they may not know whether you can spare the time for this work. It will require two to three weeks, at least, of your undivided time. The crying need is for efficient workers. If you are one of these, do you not feel that you can spare a little of your time in assisting others to become more efficient in this good work, even though you may have to sacrifice a little to do so?

We would like to have each district give this matter careful consideration. The district officers should get in touch with every local and urge that institutes be held. We realize that many locals will be unable to hold these sessions. If your local cannot have a session of the institute, can you not, and will you not, arrange with one or more of the other locals to combine with your local and have the institute where all can attend? In many places it may be practicable for the entire district to join together for this work. The expense is prorated among all the locals where institutes are held, hence the expense is very small.

"Our success or failure to-morrow depends on the service we render to-day."

In these institutes you will be offered opportunities that will assist you to greater and more efficient service in the work of the Master. We should take advantage of this opportunity. We desire to have at least one session in every district, but this will be impossible without your cooperation. You can help, as a member, or as an officer in your local you can assist by agitating the movement and urging these sessions. Get in touch with your officers to-day. Let us get action—enthusiastic action—service.

Mr. President and superintendent, do not wait, get busy right away. Let your district officers know that you would like to take advantage of this opportunity and have a session of the institute in your local, or that you will join in with the district for a combined session.

District Officers—will you get together right away and confer regarding those you will recommend as capable of assisting on the teams to go out on this work. We would like to hear from every district and local before November 15; sooner than this if possible.

When writing, always give full name and address, and be sure to state what district you are in.

This is your opportunity! It is our privilege to offer you this chance to assist in this great work—the responsibility now rests with you.

Yours for greater efficiency,

ARTHUR W. SMITH,

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, 2903 Sullivan Avenue.

Lamoni Stake

The recent conference at Chariton indorsed the league of nations, and sent a memorial to that effect to Congress.

The organization of a branch at Creston is imminent. The addition of several good families to their number has made a very favorable situation for carrying out the provision for effecting such an organization.

In Lamoni the Sunday school superintendency recently recommended that the branch presidency nominate the general superintendent of the school, and that the one elected and the branch presidency nominate the rest of the elective officers of the school. By almost unanimous vote the recommendation was indorsed. The Religio took a similar step last year. So far the arrangement has been made from year to year. In each case it is thoroughly understood that other nominations than the one officially made are in order.

The Religio sessions on Friday evenings are not so well attended as they were when held at 6.30 on Sunday evening. The evolution of the society in providing social and recreational features as the primary things is making some difference in the personnel of the attendance; then the fact that the schools and college center their social features on Friday evenings also makes the local situation especially difficult.

The Christmas offering of the Sunday school is about $766 to date—about a third of the aim.

1918 Christmas Offering

Early in the present conference year we sent to every Sunday school, whose name and address we had, a card asking for certain information. From the information furnished on these cards we desired to make up a list of the schools averaging over a certain amount per member.

Following this article will be found a list of the schools which averaged $4 and over per member for 1918. This list is made up from the cards mailed back to us by the schools, hence, if your school averaged this amount and is not listed it is quite possible that your card has not been returned. We will greatly appreciate your taking an active interest in this and advise us if your school is not listed.

The greater number of members, in a school the harder it is for that school to make a high average pro rata. We believe those schools which gave $500 or over, regardless of the number enrolled, should be mentioned. In a later issue, possibly the next, we will publish a list of these schools.

It is our hope and desire that every Sunday school in our organization be listed among those working diligently in the support of the offering this year. Where are you to-day? What are you doing in support of this good movement? We hope you are with us and that you are working hard for the offering.

Early in the year we received a letter from Brother McGuire in which he stated:

"The Order of Bishops recommended that this year's Christmas offering be used for the purpose of purchasing land for the creation of inheritances and stewardships, that our less fortunate members might be given the opportunity to purchase their inheritances under favorable conditions: this was adopted by the General Conference. During the past two years we have practically been clearing away the debris and are now ready for constructive work. I feel that the program before us is a laudable one and should appeal to every wide-awake Latter Day Saint who appreciates the stress of the present economic conditions and the need of setting in motion the Zion program which will eventuate in equality."

Surely, as stated by Brother McGuire, this is a "laudable program," one that should have the support of the entire membership of our Sunday school and church.

The Christmas offering is and should be first and last a "freewill offering" and should never be considered as a tax or assessment.

God has designed that certain work should be done by his people. This cannot be done without the support of the members in a financial way. I cannot but feel that every Sunday school and every individual member of the church desires to be of real help in the building up of Zion, morally, spiritually, and in a monetary way. Surely we all desire to support that which God has designed should be. God never designed that his church should be in debt—it was through the failure of mankind to live up to our opportunities and privileges that caused us to become involved to the extent of approximately $325,000. By living up to our opportunities—at least some of us—we wiped out this incumbrance in the short space of two years. God was very pleased with our efforts, our sacrifices, and we were blessed accordingly.

Some have expressed the thought, "the debt has been paid now and we need not support this offering movement." I know that you do not feel this way about it. We have just been getting ready to do what God wants us to do. Shall we withhold our support of so worthy a cause? Shall we hinder the progress of the church by failure to support the financial department? If there is any church on the face of this earth that should support the progressive and constructive program it is the church whose name we have taken. Just so long as we fail to support these movements, just so long will we remain in the background and fail to receive of the abundance of the blessings and privileges promised the faithful.

There has never been a time in the history of the church when we have had such doors of opportunity opening to us as now. The cry everywhere is for more missionaries. The conditions existing between capital and labor emphasizes the need of a new order of things. The remedy is revealed to us in the law of stewardships. It is for the purpose of establishing the divine system that the Christmas offering is to be used this year.

Some have taken the stand that their conditions are different, that they cannot help in the general movement because of local conditions. Think this over. We belong to the whole and should support the whole. We cannot but gain by helping and supporting the general church. What do we gain, even if our own little local flourishes, if we fail to support the general church? The church can only be as strong as its weakest local. Let us work together for the building up of these weak spots that we may become strong as a whole.

Did you ever stop and figure what it would mean if every man would give one day's wages to the offering? What would be the result if every one of our automobile owners would give the price of just one tire? We spend with a free will that we may have a good time. Let us give with a free will that God's work may be built up.

The privilege and the opportunity is ours—shall we embrace it? Our aim for 1919 is $150,000. Think what it will mean to the church, in its constructive program, if we will rally to this cause and give to the Bishop this year the full amount of this aim. It has been my privilege to bring this matter to the attention of our members, the obligation and responsibility rest with us—let us meet them.

May God bless and direct the efforts of all that we may be prospered in the church work.

Most sincerely yours,

A. W. SMITH.

A Visit to Mauna Loa

---

A party consisting of the branch deacon and his wife and four others, including myself, left Hilo about 2 p. m. Monday, the 6th, by auto en route to the eruption of the volcano Mauna Loa which had then been on for about a week. We passed the volcano Kilauea thirty-one miles south of Hilo and on to Waiohinu about seventy-five miles distant where we had supper at the home of some friends. We then proceeded to the lava flow, some twenty-five miles distant, remaining until midnight when we returned and went to bed at about 2 a. m.

The lava has covered a strip of country from a quarter to half a mile wide and probably 15 to 20 feet deep, for a distance of perhaps 20 miles from the split in the side of the mountain where it begins until it runs into the sea. The outer edges of the flow then cooled, only a stream in the center about fifty feet wide continuing to flow. It was a veritable river of fire rushing down the mountain, similar to our mountain streams in the Rockies.

On Tuesday we returned for a look by daylight and finally returned to Hilo where we arrived about 9 p. m. Tuesday evening. We had an exciting experience on Tuesday, and I took several pictures and think I will write up the trip and send to Brother Moore for publication in Autumn Leaves, if he sees fit. It was the greatest sight I have yet seen in my missionary travels.

Eastern Michigan Conference

At Crosswell on October 4 and 5. Was one of the best and most spiritual conferences ever held in the district. The business was transacted very harmoniously and the new conditions that were adopted showed the upward trend of the church to a higher and more perfect condition. The reports from the different branches of the district showed that the spirit of progression was in our midst. The same officers of the district were sustained for another year.

Brother William Fligg of London, Ontario, is our president and has labored earnestly and diligently since he has been associated with the work in the district.

Provision was made for the purchasing of grounds near Port Huron on which reunions could be held each year. Every member in the district feels the need of meeting together oftener and longer than they can at the conferences.

Brother Matthew Liston of Flint delivered a very able address. A young peoples' prayer meeting was held at 7 a. m. Sunday. At 8.30 sacrament meeting convened—one of the best and most spiritual meetings the writer was ever privileged to attend. There were four manifestations of the Spirit. O. J. Hawn gave an able address on "Have faith in God," at 2 p. m. after which Arthur Leverton of Minden City delivered a very interesting discourse. The afternoon was taken up in priesthood and quorum meetings. John R.

Grice gave the closing address in the evening, it being very interesting and instructive. We were glad to have with us Brother William Grice who was for a number of years president of our district but now is laboring in the London Branch. The Crosswell Saints are to be commended for the able way in which they took care of so large a gathering.

No "Pleasant Weather" Saints Here

The weather here Sunday was cold, disagreeable, and threatening. In spite of this fact there were five adults and three children at the union Sunday school six miles northeast of Akron. The adults were all Saints (all there are in the neighborhood), each an officer or teacher, and came a distance of two to six miles. In the afternoon Brother and Sister Reno Auld and Brother and Sister Ralph Vincent drove from Otis, a distance of seventeen miles, picked up Sister Mabel Auld at Akron and spent the afternoon at the home of Brother and Sister E. A. Parker in Religio home class study with a prayer meeting following. A very profitable day was spent and all felt well repaid for having faced the storm. Ten were present.

A special effort is being made by the Saints here to keep alive in gospel work. This is especially hard to do in the absence of preaching services. There are many in the neighborhood who have become interested in this latter-day work, and we feel that if we could have a sermon occasionally much good would result. Is it not possible that members of the priesthood passing through Akron late in the week could arrange to stop off here for Sunday services? We would like to extend an invitation to anyone who can favor us with a sermon at any time to do so. If you fail to find the writer at his home in Akron telephone to Brother John F. Sill, who lives in the neighborhood of the school above mentioned, and he will gladly meet you in Akron, will see that you have a home while here and will announce meetings.

Special appeal was made in our prayer meeting yesterday for a way to be opened in order that a branch might be organized here. It seems that if we but had a shepherd for the little flock that a branch might be organized and much good might result.

A group of Saints from Akron drove twenty-five miles south a week ago, to be in attendance where Brother J. C. May and Brother J. A. Thomas are holding a series of meetings. We found the little schoolhouse literally packed, many were standing and others sitting on the floor. The interest is splendid and the attendance has been similar to this throughout the series. Wednesday evening a pie social was given to help the boys in defraying expenses. Forty pies were sold for a sum of $89, and a good program was enjoyed. The Akron Saints also attended this meeting, and some have made the trip half a dozen times during the series. One young lady, Sister Florence Phelps, was baptized Thursday morning of last week, and it is hoped that a number will enter the kingdom before the meetings close this week.

Brother May expects to begin a series of meetings at Cope, in the extreme south end of the county, and Brother Thomas will go to his new field in Northeastern Kansas. We regret very much to have these brethren leave this locality, but we realize that they, too, like the Savior, must preach the gospel to those in other places also. Your brother in Christ,

Every Member a Tithe Payer

There is a wide difference between thinking about a course of action and actually making the effort to put it into execution. The individual who thinks right but never acts, is maintaining a cold storage plant instead of a power house. Moral: It is far more essential to pay our tithing than to merely think about paying it.

Do you know the man who is paying his tithing is sticking closely to the absolute truth?

As we begin to distinguish values and learn the relative importance of things, it becomes clearer that the manner and time of paying our tithing is of vast importance.

EFFICIENCY

is nothing more or less than to be able to do your work in the very best possible manner. It is effort intelligently directed.

Do you wish to be efficient for your partner, God—then do your work in the best way possible. One of the marks of efficiency is to pay your tithing, God says so. Do you believe him?

OAK CREEK, COLORADO, October 23, 1919.

Editors Herald: I am living on top of a mountain, one of the Rocky range in Colorado, away from all society of any kind; no church, no Sunday school, just once in a long time a trip to town to buy a load of groceries.

We are dry farming on a homestead (Government land). We are in a comparatively unsettled part of the country, except for a few coal mines, about two hundred miles west of Denver.

It is a beautiful part of the world, but lonely and wild as all new places are; short summers and long winters. After the harvest has been gathered, my husband goes to the mine, thereby leaving myself and baby of six years, alone most of the winter. Of course he comes as often as he can, but after the heavy snows come, traveling is very difficult, and must be done on snowshoes or skis.

Baby and I have our Sunday school from "our own" Quartermen and we enjoy ourselves, and also believe that many times the Spirit is with us, in our efforts to worship without a teacher.

We enjoy the coming of the mail with papers and magazines telling of the news of the outside world: also there comes the Autumn Leaves, sent by my niece and I am especially interested in "The call at evening."

We are very comfortable and well pleased with our new home except as all others are who have been brought up in the church and used to the communion of Saints and the privileges that are given those who strive to keep the faith. We long for a life among the people of God and firmly believe that God will direct our paths in such a way that before very long we will again be within reach of companionship of the Saints. I realize that I am only a drop in the ocean but if God has a place for me I would like to find it and fill it, and ask the Saints sometimes to remember me in their prayers.

May God bless all of those who are trying and especially the weak and tempted.

EFFIE MATTHEWS.

FARMINGTON, KENTUCKY, October 21, 1919.

Editors Herald: After more than three weeks services in our church, Oakland, we feel it would be an injustice if we did not acknowledge, through your pages, our gratitude to God and Brother J. F. Curtis.

For two weeks each evening, except one, he preached the "gospel as taught in former years, with its blessings all so full and free," and indeed, it was a feast to our souls, for we have so little preaching here of late years. Then for six days he was in discussion with Judge J. F. Hight of Illinois, who is of the Christian faith, each disputant affirming the church, of which he was a member, to be the Church of Jesus Christ, in origin, organization, doctrine and practice. Elder Hight's moderator, Elder Overby, from Murray, Kentucky, after moderating one day went back home. I heard that he said Elder Hight didn't have a shadow of a chance against our man, and that is one point upon which I can truly agree with him. I also heard that one of the members of the Christian church said their man never made a single point.

Elder Hight actually denied being a member of the Christian Church. He never even attempted to establish his church, and could scarcely stay off of our proposition, when he should have been affirming his own. Then, when Brother Curtis affirmed our church, Elder Hight attacked the character of Joseph Smith, using such witnesses as are published by the Utah church, and that was his main argument and theme, throughout the remainder of the discussion, though he failed to prove a single statement against him.

Putting it as mildly as possible, he was very unfair. Folding his arms across his chest, he asked Brother Curtis to strike him blind. Brother Curtis told him he was "already blind as a bat, that he would rather get some of the scales off his eyes, so he could see."

I wish every Latter Day Saint in this district could have heard the discussion, for I am sure they would have been built up and strengthened in the work. I knew we had the truth before I heard it, but oh, I never dreamed of such an able defender as we have in Brother Curtis. It was simply wonderful. He was ready, with his foot from under the table, to spring up at once, and always come up talking. In several speeches, the Spirit was upon him in power.

We read in Acts 22: 3 of Paul "being brought up at the feet of Gamaliel," but Brother Curtis plainly shows he, like Mary of old, (Luke 10: 39) had chosen that good part, and sat at Jesus' feet and heard his word.

He baptized six into the church, two on Sunday before the discussion, four on Sunday following; one more has given his name for baptism and others convinced of the truthfulness of the work—hence the end is not yet. Had a lovely prayer meeting Sunday afternoon previous to the baptismal services. So, the Lord has not forsaken his own, and we are made to rejoice in this "marvelous work and a wonder," which the Lord has established the second time.

Brother Curtis preached his last sermon for us, on Monday evening. It was grand. He was to preach in Louisville the following evening, going from there to Georgia.

Had a splendid sermon Sunday morning by Brother L. M. McFadden, and a fine sermon Sunday evening by Brother J. F. Overcast, who was moderator for Brother Curtis. Brother Overcast has only been in the ministry a short time, but is fast becoming an able defender of the truth. I feel that we have much for which to be thankful. I hope to accomplish much good, for I desire to be a doer of the word.

Please pray for me, dear Saints, that I may be able to accomplish much good yet.

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. N. ELLA ADAIR.

WATERFORD, ONTARIO, October 23, 1919.

Editors Herald: The conference held at London, Ontario, October 18 and 19, opened with a prayer service at nine Saturday morning. The Woman's Auxiliary occupied with an interesting program with stereoscopic views on Friday night.

The sessions of the day were not largely attended. We presume many were waiting to come in their cars on Sunday as that day's attendance was very large, the weather during all the time being all one could wish for.

A tent for missionary purpose is to be purchased. The district officers' expenses to General Conference are to be defrayed. The conference urged the necessity of our holding two-day meetings under direction of the district presidency, that our meetings may not conflict, giving a chance to attend all.

Other items were two petitions sent to the First Presidency that a high priest be sent to labor conjointly in the cities of London and Saint Thomas, and that more missionaries be sent to labor in the London District.

Tithes and offerings receipts amounted to over six thousand dollars for the year.

Saturday evening was occupied by the Woman's Auxiliary with an excellent program.

A young people's prayer meeting was held at 7.30 a. m. Sunday. Prayer meeting at 9 was in charge of conference presidency and Frank Gray, president of London Branch. This service was one in which the power of the Spirit was in attendance. Besides the many testimonies and songs, two special gifts of the Spirit were given, one through Elder Burger, he singing in tongues, and giving the interpretation in song. (The song can be obtained of Elder Burger as soon as he can get it in print.) Elder Shields spoke in tongues and interpretation; counsel, admonition and cheer were given. During this service, four brethren were ordained to the office of elder and one to the office of a priest.

The brethren were A. W. Borbridge of Corinth, D. J. Moore of Ellice Branch, Amos Smith of Listowel and W. A. Hardy of London. Bert Hill of Ingersoll was ordained a priest.

L. O. Pearson was called and provision made for his ordination to the office of elder. Sacrament was served. This service closed a little after twelve o'clock.

The usual preaching services were held during the day, with the usual good addresses given. Elder George E. Harrington occupying at three p. m. and Elder James Pycock at seven.

The elders' quorum met at close of afternoon session.

We take pleasure in mentioning how splendidly the London Saints entertained ourselves and friends. Meals were served and those abundantly in the basement of the church. We breakfasted at the homes where we stayed for the night.

Conference closed after evening preaching service with the dear, old familiar hymn, "God be with you till we meet again."

Yours in gospel bonds,

LUCY YERKS.

AMHERSTBURG, ONTARIO, October 6, 1919.

Editors Herald: I have enjoyed reading the letters from the brothers and sisters in the HERALD, and will write of my own experience, hoping to encourage some by so doing. I may say that I was influenced to do so by reading the letter from Brother Bert Cooper, of Detroit, in the issue of October 22.

Born in London, England, of godly parents, on July 11, 1886, I was raised a Methodist until the age of seventeen, when I was baptized and joined the Methodist Church.

Leaving England on April 14, 1910, and spending some thirteen days on the water, I landed at Halifax, April 29. I spent the next three years in Walden Township, an adherent to the Methodist Church, no branch of the Baptist being in that district. I purchased a farm in Anderson Township, taking possession, and getting married the same day, December 4, 1912.

In November, 1916, Elder R. D. Weaver came to the home of Brother Wismer in this district, and held meetings, which I would not attend until I read Talks on Book of Mormon, being strongly opposed to the work I had witnessed in England of the Utah people. In company with another young man (now Brother Fryer and secretary of the branch), I listened and became interested, returning night after night, until on December 14, I asked for baptism, with three others.

This ordinance was performed by Elder Weaver in the font of the Windsor Church, after which I was confirmed by Elders Brown and Weaver. I shall never forget the appearance of Brother Weaver after the baptismal service, and I can only describe it as being like the face of Moses when the glory of the Lord was upon him.

The Amherstburg Branch was formed on July 27, 1917, by Apostle J. F. Curtis, and numbers about forty-eight members to-day. I was called and ordained to office of teacher, under the hands of these two brethren on the same date. We have a Religio of about twenty-five members, a Woman's Auxiliary, and besides these, the usual services keep us busy in the Master's work.

Sister Airriess was baptized December 30, 1916 and we are seeking to bring our children up in the fear and admonition of the Lord, and to live that our lives may be living epistles known and read of all men.

To this end we ask your prayers, and ours are ever for the work.

Your brother in the gospel,

A. E. AIRRIESS.

A paper, "Redemption of Israel," was given by E. A. Webbe, followed by an interesting discussion which brought out many good points. Attendance very small owing to railway strike. Brethren F. Henry Edwards, Frederick Schofield, and W. B. Arrowsmith gave short discourses. Priesthood meeting in charge of district president. It was a short but very interesting conference and was enjoyed by all who attended. W. B. Arrowsmith, secretary.

Pastoral

To the Missionaries and Saints of Northeastern Ohio, Kirtland, Youngstown-Sharon, and Southern Ohio Districts: As the season for tent and street work is past, we must now prepare for our winter campaign in the missionary work. We are advised to hold special protracted meetings in our local organizations where possible, therefore I respectfully request that the presidents of the branches comprising these districts take up the matter of holding special missionary services in their respective churches or localities, and communicate the prospects to me as early as possible. I would especially appreciate the cooperation of the district presidents in this most important work.

We of the regular missionary force are urged to fill up the winter months with the most intensive labor within our power. On account of the number being so small, we will find it difficult to meet the demand for preaching. Wherever there are local men who can devote any part of their time to missionary work we would like them to hold themselves in readiness to assist wherever opportunity is afforded.

Saints who are isolated and can assist the missionaries in effecting openings where they live, please write me and we will do our best to supply workers.

I pray that our combined labors will bring a bountiful harvest in this and all other departments of church work.

Yours for service,

J. W. DAVIS.

Group Supervisor.

Notice of Appointment of District Choristers

To Whom it May Concern: The Saints of the Territory of Hawaii have recently been organized into a separate district, and at the first conference of this newly constituted district Sister Bernice Kahanamoku was chosen and recommended to us for appointment as chorister of said district.

This is a very interesting event for the General Choir movement, for it evidences the fact that the progress of the church's musical work has gone abroad, even "unto the islands of the sea." All choir workers of the church will feel a degree of pleasure in noting this.

We take sincere pleasure in appointing Sister Kahanamoku to this office, and we earnestly bespeak for her the hearty and zealous support of all in the new district of Hawaii; praying that in the cooperation thus had the church's musical work in this new portion of God's vineyard will be richly prospered. Sister Kahanamoku's address is given us only as Honolulu, but she may be reached at the mission address, 1863 H Miki Lane.

tithing. He told me of another brother who had become offended at some things that he saw in the church that he did not think were right and who had said he would not pay any more tithing. This grieved the first brother, for he felt this was not the proper view to take of it, for, he reasoned, because some one else fails to do right, is no reason why we should do wrong. So he pleaded with his friend not to carry out his intentions, but without avail. He then went to God in earnest prayer and prayed, "Oh God! let not this my brother, and thy child, do this thing; cause him to see the error of his way, that he may continue to support thy work." And says he, "Brother McGuire, you cannot imagine the joy that came to me when God answered my prayer, for in a short time this friend came and laid before me a tithing receipt from you, a thing he had never done before." With an army of workers thus actuated and moved by such a splendid spirit, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations," though all the forces of earth and hell be arrayed against it.

Confidently yours,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,

Presiding Bishop.

"Therefore, if that man repenteth not, and remaineth and dieth an enemy to God the demands of divine justice doth awaken his immortal soul to a lively sense of his own guilt which does cause him to shrink from the presence of the Lord and doth fill his breast with guilt and pain, and anguish which is like an unquenchable fire whose flames ascendeth up forever and ever. And now I say unto you that mercy hath no claim on that man; therefore his final doom, is to endure a never-ending torment."

From this we see it is possible to suffer the pangs of hell here on earth because the principle of eternal judgment allows us to suffer here for our transgressions. But to the rebellious whose suffering here fails to subdue, will come the command to go into the prison house, hell, or pit, all meaning the same. Revelation 20: 3-7; Ezekiel 31: 16-18; 32.

Our points then are:

1. Hell is below us, in the lower parts of the earth.
2. The earth is God's footstool, the place where his kingdom is, hence it is impossible for hell to be located on earth, for darkness and light cannot abide together.
3. The earth abides the celestial law, hence shall be a celestial body.
4. The righteous are to inherit it. God would not allow them to inherit hell, hence earth and hell are not identical.
5. The principle of eternal judgment allows us to suffer the pangs of hell to help us to overcome that which is wrong, but the actual hell is reserved for the wicked.

Hell is in the heart of the earth, not on top of it. The argument is produced that Satan tempting Eve, torturing Job, David, tempting Jesus, opposing the gospel, entering Judas are to be staged no where else than here among mortal men in the Devil's own home. To this we say: as well argue that Christ is on earth at present, influencing the righteous to do good; for we are told that every good impulse comes from God, and that which is evil comes from Satan. If, then, Satan's home is here because he tempts so many, then it is just as logical to reason that Christ's home is here, because of helping so many to do right.

We all have much to learn, and this earth is just the kindergarten. Some day our great Teacher will help us to all see alike, for truth will be supreme, and error will be in chains. May God speed the right.

MRS. CORA M. REYNOLDS.

FROM HERE AND THERE

The coal situation is not affecting Lamoni so seriously as many other places. The college has enough to run several months, though they did not receive their full order for the season. The Saints' Home has sufficient for some six weeks, and the Children's Home will get along for perhaps three weeks, but Liberty Home will not have enough for a week's supply. Fortunately, there are some forty or fifty tons at the Brick Church, which can be utilized temporarily for the more needy institutions. The electric light plant, which supplies power and heat for the Herald Publishing House, and heat for the high school building, has enough coal to last a month. The local dealers were energetic during the summer months in inducing the consumers to lay in their winter's supply, and as a result most families have sufficient, and no real suffering has been reported to date.

Elder U. W. Greene, who was in charge of the Palestine Mission prior to the world war, is announced to deliver a lecture, "From Nazareth to Calvary," at Des Moines, November 7. The lecture is to be illustrated with slides. Elder Greene is also announced to be the principal speaker at the annual Home Coming of the Des Moines Branch, November 9. Apostle Green will go from Des Moines to Chicago, and Cleveland, Ohio, at which latter place he will be associated with Apostle Peter Anderson for work. From there they will doubtless go to other points.

During the absence of Brother Greene from the office, Apostle William Aylor will take care of the routine work of the Twelve.

Apostle F. M. Sheehy is ill with pneumonia, but we are glad to add, is not in a serious condition.

Bishop McGuire is still in New York. He expects to return sometime this month, with his wife, who was called East by the sickness of her mother.

We have recently learned that Elders J. E. Yates and J. W. Peterson are to be associated with Elder Hubert Case in work among the Indians. Elder Frank Dillon of Oklahoma

City is laboring locally in their interest. We are pleased to note the increasing interest in this work, and trust to see it make a strong development in the near future, under the direction of these men.

A note from Washington informs us that Mrs. Gurley-Kane was one of the guests at the time King Albert and Queen Elizabeth of Belgium were presented to the Congress of the United States. She is sending to Graceland College a souvenir of the occasion. Mrs. Gurley-Kane is a daughter of Zenos H. Gurley, and their home was formerly in Decatur County. They have resided of recent years in Washington, District of Columbia.

Elder J. H. Yager is well pleased with his new mission field and has so far found very fine people in both districts, with plenty of work to do and the best of support. He is now holding services about twelve miles northwest of Reddickville Branch (Ontario) in a schoolhouse, and has a good interest. He is being ably assisted by the brethren with their autos and the local talent in the musical line. Brother W. A. Smith, of Independence, Missouri, is also rendering valuable assistance while visiting his wife's relatives at that place.

Upon their leaving Woodbine, Iowa, recently, Brother and Sister S. B. Kibler and family were tendered a large reception by the local people, including the commercial club. These worthy people have exerted a powerful influence for Good in Harrison County, and in removing to California, it is hoped they will find peaceful rest in their old age. They go to Whittier, California. Brother Kibler served as president of the Woodbine Branch twenty-one years, and as solicitor under Alma Fyrando, bishop's agent, twenty-two years.

The Finest Endowment of Them All

The millions of Rockefeller are given to endow his institutions, and the wealth of the world is thrown into the hands of science if she will but find a specific against death.

Infinite good has been done and will be done for the amelioration of pain and the healing of broken bodies.

Of the good we would partake, of the skill we would profit, but after all we must live a life apart, and we respond to a different call.

No millions are at our command; no such endowments are ours to spread our name—we are but plainly equipped for the exacting duties that our institution must perform.

Yet we have the finest endowment of them all. The best of science is ours, the essential equipment, the building, the staff—and back of all this, we have the mandate of the Father, and a mission which is distinctly our own.

In our institution every patient is accorded an honest, scientific, faithful care and treatment and is surrounded by the influence at once wholesome and friendly.

Even though you live far away you can come here as to the house of your friends, and be assured no effort will be withheld from your service.

Ours is the endowment of a consecrated purpose and a service made effective by careful training—it provides what money cannot always buy the devotion of those who can and will.

PEDAGOGICAL ARRESTS AND PECULIARITIES

One of our missionaries in the East has sent us a brief review of an article on Pedagogical Arrests and Peculiarities, by N. Triplett, and published in the Pedagogical Seminary, volume 12, pages 141 to 157. The subject matter of this review should prove of interest to many of our readers.

Our brother requests that it be printed simply on the grounds of its being of general interest, not ascribing personal credit to him. The review is as follows:

Notwithstanding the keen interest in arrested development, which is manifested by the large amount of literature on the subject, most of the interest is directed to studies of abnormal states and very little is said about the child ability and desire to make progress in the subjects of the school's curriculum.

Doctor Harris has spoken of the danger of arrest caused by poor teaching, resulting in the overdevelopment of the sense-percepts in the tender years, and mechanical thinking which may destroy the life of the soul.

After using the different methods in the investigation of 700 cases, most of whom ranged from 20 to 25 years, Mr. Triplett found that the majority had some phase of defect or so called arrest.

"One hundred and ten individuals assert that map drawing or map study has produced inability to image places on the earth, a map is called up instead."

It seems that the arrest lies in seeing the map instead of visualizing the subject of the map; or manipulating symbols instead of realities in their relations.

Peculiarities in orientation also result from poor teaching.

Authorities like Walker, Professor Patrick and President Eliot have called attention to the fact that arithmetic is taught too early and too much emphasis is placed on that subject.

Arithomania results, not always from poor teaching but from giving arithmetics too early or too intensely. Arithomania is the pathological condition where the subjects have their mind filled with numerical relations and quantitative ideas to the exclusion of causal and qualitative ideas.

The child should not be made too language conscious the first three or four years of his school work, but by unconscious imitation in oral story and nature work should learn to use correct language forms. "Children dislike the picking apart process and the abstractions of word relations." Too much emphasis on parsing at the wrong time results in a dislike for that kind of work at the right time, and a distaste for good literature. This arrests progress and perhaps is one of the most serious defects which comes from the death of an interest.

An abnormal result of parsing is stated as follows, "I am always picturing the words on red lines of a diagram and not getting the thought of the poem." A common confession is that of directing attention to the speaker only to discover awkward expressions and grammatical errors [italics mine].

Arrests in history, in music and religion may be traced to poor teaching. Poor teaching is evidently mistaking the means for the end.

Social arrests which are manifested in timidity, bashfulness, lack of ease in the presence of others often result from poor teaching. The most serious fault found by the author, in regard to schools, is the failure to arouse initiative in the child.

There are two classes of the precocious type, first, those possessing unusual ability and a long period of plasticity—the Gladstone type; second, the flash-in-the-pan type—bright in the morning of life, but becoming stupid or worse later.

The above theme is one which vitally concerns us in our educational work, whether it be in a child's early years in the home, in the public schools, or in collegiate work.

Much of the discussion and much of teaching practice is based upon the assumption that a child is simply a child, and each requires the same treatment. There scarcely could be a greater fallacy. Individual peculiarities loom large, not only because of environment, but in spite of environment.

Society is learning how to handle such cases of idiocy and imbecility, of which there fortunately are few.

In most of our larger cities, we are coming also to recognize the needs of the backward child and some of the physical causes back of mental delinquency, such as bad teeth, adenoids, eye trouble, lack of nourishment, and other physical deficiencies. For the sake of other children, and for the sake of backward children, separate schools are being organized to care for this special class.

Education is not a matter of committing every child to the same size bed. It must be the development of the individual capacity. Economic reasons, that is the amount of funds which can be used for school work, have brought about like treatment as the easiest way. But we must recognize that there is every gradation of intellect, from those who are entirely deficient, to those possessing the most brilliant ability.

Those who can do a thing, if given sufficient time, but who are slow, will still achieve marked results; but intellectually they are not naturally so able as those who are quicker. We assume too often that going to college is simply a problem of means and of time; but such is not the case. There must be fitness, a capacity for the work. The Doctrine and Covenants makes the declaration of those who receive the celestial glory, that those who receive it will receive the glory of the same, even a fullness thereof. But some of our speakers have called attention to the fact that it takes more to fill some than others, according to the size of the vessel.

So in our school work, there are some who can receive a grammar school training with profit to themselves, but not a high school training. There are some who can receive high school work with benefit, but not college work. It is a question of capacity and ability.

At the same time many who are not able to take up collegiate work with profit to themselves, can take a mechanical course and in a machine shop render excellent service to society.

There is the secret of the whole problem. It is not necessarily a limit of capacity or ability. For only a small percentage are unfit for advanced work, probably not even as much as twenty per cent. All cannot receive scholastic work with equal benefit, because there is difference of quality as well as of quantity. No man excels in every line of ability.

There still remain some very grave problems to be met in our school work. Fortunately manual training schools and domestic science schools are being introduced into many of the grammar schools, and a wider choice is being allowed. At least from the seventh grade, and through high school and college is this true. But much yet remains to be done, as is pointed out in the article reviewed above.

Many of our most able teachers state that parents should not push their children or incite them in the early years. That those years are needed for physical growth; the less of mental development there is, the greater will be the ability in later life. Some even urge that children should not be placed in school till nine or ten years of age, but should be permitted to play outdoors as much as possible. The amount of knowledge conveyed in the eight years of grammar school is not so great but that it can be quickly acquired in a few years. We know of one boy who was kept out of school until his tenth birthday, yet after one year of schooling, started his second year at school in the final room of twenty-eight-room school.

But we may note, according to Mr. Triplett, that all are not of the kind that early intellectual growth means a flash in the pan. There are some of the type of Gladstone, who show early intellectual power and yet a long period of continued growth. Unfortunately there appear to be but few who retain their intellectual plasticity or openness of mind to new ideas into their sixtieth and seventieth year, but there have been a few. All too many end their period of intellectual growth, either in or shortly after adolescence, then are inclined to despise the thinkers who keep on going to school. They do not care for study or clear analysis.

The desire to study is one essential; financial support is a second essential. A third essential is the native capacity or ability. A fourth essential is openness of mind. A fifth is right methods of pedagogy.

IS THE FOUNDATION GONE?

Our attention has been called to an article in the Central Christian Advocate for August 27, 1919, under the title, "The foundations of Mormonism gone." Assuming so broad a heading, it is rather surprising to find that the argument is based exclusively on the Book of Abraham printed by the Utah Church in The Pearl of Great Price.

As our readers may well know, The Pearl of Great Price is accepted as one of the sacred books by the Utah Mormon Church. It was not so included by the original church in the days of Joseph Smith, the founder of the church, nor is it so accepted by the Reorganized Church. Only a few of our readers are aware what this book is, and of what its story consists, and so will be much surprised to learn that one would suppose that an attack upon the Book of Abraham should have the slightest effect whatever on the foundations of the church. In fact, it has none.

We do not find any evidence that Joseph Smith himself claimed inspiration or revelation for the translation of the Book of Abraham. The story is simply told in the first volume of our Church History. A man came with mummies to Kirtland, and around the mummies were wrapped a papyrus. Joseph Smith purchased the mummies, and translated the writing on the papyrus.

After the foundation of the church, and hence some years after the translation of the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith studied ancient Hebrew, and took considerable interest in oriental languages. At that time there was still a very limited knowledge of Egyptian, even though the Rosetta Stone had been discovered some thirty years earlier. There is even today much speculation over the meaning of certain pictured scenes; there was much more of uncertainty then. By virtue of his study, Joseph Smith attempted to translate this papyrus. It was a scholarly act. It could in no way effect his work with the Book of Mormon.

The assumption apparently made is that a prophet is always a prophet. And if he translated at one time by the inspiration of God, that all of his translations must be in the same class; and that if any act of his can be challenged, his whole work falls. But that is not true. A translation by inspiration from God is very different from a translation by the learning of man, even though that man be called of God as a prophet. A prophet is not always a prophet, but only when acting under the inspiration of God.

We can see this in the lives of the prophets of olden times—Abraham, Jacob, and Moses. All communed with God, yet at times did things contrary to his will. Modern students plainly declare that we can see the mind and will of the prophets as well as the inspiration of God in the Bible. (Encyclopædia of Religion and Ethics, "Bible.") Peter plainly declared that holy men of God wrote as moved upon by the Spirit of God. (2 Peter 1:21.) That does not say that they had no intelligence or will of their own.

The Apostle Paul states that, prophecy is a gift of the Spirit. 1 Corinthians 12:7-14. Joseph Smith is reported to have plainly stated: "This morning I read German and visited with a brother and sister from Michigan who thought that a prophet was always a prophet. I told them that a prophet was a prophet only when he was acting as such." It is a plain statement which is confirmed also by the statement of his wife, Emma Smith, that he was a prophet only when acting under the inspiration of almighty God. At other times he was much as other men, except that he was always a good man. (See memoirs of W. W. Blair.)

It is only that which is presented to the church as revelation and accepted by them as such that binds the church. So far as we know, Joseph Smith never at any time presented the Book of Abraham as a revelation to the church, or as a sacred book. He translated it and was interested in his translation, but as a scholarly act.

But we have to remember that in the late centuries before Christ, books of apparently religious character were written and ascribed to holy men of the past; though not written by them. That there exist two books of Enoch, the oldest of which was probably written in the second century B. C., neither of which by any possibility can be traced to the seventh man from Adam, or as being based in any sense on his writings and sayings. There also are two books of Jashar, one of which is generally considered to have first come into existence in the eighteenth century in England, and for which there exist two books of Enoch, the oldest of which was Hebrew original, but with no probability of great antiquity. These are but a few instances of the many which might be cited.

It is quite reasonable then that there should be a manuscript called the Book of Abraham, and yet possessing no probability to have been seen by Abraham, the father of the faithful, the man who was a friend with God. This manuscript being in existence, to translate it was the act of a student, and has nothing to do with the work of Joseph Smith as a prophet of God.

The plates which appear in The Pearl of Great Price, before the Book of Abraham, are evidently of Egyptian origin. This, the article in the Christian Advocate affirms, and that writer further affirms that he has found other illustrations from Egyptian manuscripts in the British Museum, and in other museums which are very similar, and some of which are nearly identical with some of the illustrations copied in The Pearl of Great Price. This we do not question at all, for similar scenes are to be found in the writings of various other men who have made a study of ancient Egypt. Their close similarity to recognized specimens of ancient Egyptian writings would tend rather to confirm the claim that the original was an Egyptian manuscript.

As to the interpretations offered, Bishop F. S. Spalding, in the pamphlet he wrote on the Book of Abraham, gives several interpretations offered by different Egyptologists, all of which are different. We might have added to this the explanations given by other Egyptian students, which also differ from each other in detail, and differ from those which he offers.

There are certain similarities in these interpretations, and they bear a family relationship also to that given by Joseph Smith.

In the light of the knowledge of that time, as a scholarly piece of work, it possesses marked interest and value. Joseph Smith as well as any other man had a right to offer his explanation.

But whatever may be our opinion of the value of the Book of Abraham, or of the various explanations offered, this factor should not affect, even in the slightest degree, our opinion of the work done by Joseph Smith in connection with the Book of Mormon. And even less should it effect the foundations of the church, since the church is not founded upon a belief in his infallibility, nor in that of any other man, even though he be a prophet of the Lord, but rather is it founded on Christ Jesus and him crucified.

There have arisen many prophets in the various ages of the world, but our faith is not in Moses, in Isaiah, or in Jeremiah, but is rather in the Lord Jesus Christ.

The writer in the Central Christian Advocate states that he will show that the Book of Mormon is entitled to no more weight and is no more credible than The Pearl of Great Price, but this he does not attempt to do, nor can he do. Still he is in error in stating that the Book of Mormon is made the norm, the ultimate oracle, and canon of faith. So far as our personal observation goes, the norm and ultimate oracle and canon of faith, so far as the written word is concerned, is in the Bible, especially the New Testament. The Book of Mormon is recognized by the church as the translation of the record of the people of God who lived on this continent, and so goes to confirm the Bible; the book of Doctrine and Covenants as revelations given to us in this day and age of the world. If a distinction is to be made between the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, it is quite probable that if anything a little more weight is given to the latter, that is the book of Doctrine and Covenants. But these three books do stand in a class quite apart from anything else, which is or has been published by or on behalf of the church.

While the article is evidently concerned primarily with the church of Utah, still it does incidentally refer to the Independence, Missouri, branch, in connection with a tribute to the Kirtland Temple: "He had caused to be built a temple of certainly most superior workmanship (I have rarely ever seen a colonial stairway or window so exquisite). The building is now owned by the Independence, Missouri, branch of the Mormon religion."

The statements of members of the church of Utah as to the validity and value of The Pearl of Great Price are statements made by them years after the death of Joseph Smith, and do not bind him or us.

Now we come to another factor. The writer inserts a parenthesis, that many years ago he was permitted to read Egyptian books by Rawlinson, Wilkinson, Brugsch, Renouf, etc. This was evidently before 1893, when he took charge of the Rocky Mountain Christian Advocate, and so came in touch with Utah. Yet despite this claimed knowledge of Egyptian hieroglyphics (he claimed he used them to make notes which he did not wish read by others), in this article he attempts a comparison between the characters copied from the plates and given to Martin Harris and Egyptian hieroglyphics, while the most cursory and trifling inspection would show that these characters do not even purport to be hieroglyphs.

As our readers are fully aware, the Egyptians in carving on stone and in their primitive writings, used hieroglyphs. Later there arose linear hieroglyphics; still later they used the hieratic (principally used by the priests), and still later a still simpler form, the demotic, came into use. This is much more cursive, and was used by the people.

These latter were used on parchment and papyrus.

The Book of Mormon purports to have been prepared in a comparatively recent modern period. In fact its characters purport to have been written several hundred years after Christ. It does not even claim to be pure Egyptian, but reformed or modified Egyptian characters. If anything, it is rather surprising to find how many similar forms are to be found in the later Egyptian writings, as may be seen from any good table, some of which are published in the better dictionaries and general encyclopedias.

It would be about as fair to compare old English or old German script with the modern English printing, as it would be to compare the early hieroglyphs with the modified Egyptian cursive writing of the third or fourth century, A. D. A better illustration, considering the changes between historical hieroglyphs and late demotic, would be to compare ancient Greek characters and modern English.

Some one utterly uninformed might have made the mistake. Is it possible that one informed in Egyptian could have made such a mistake innocently?

Is then the foundation gone? The foundations which are "the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone," are not even touched. Nor is the work of Joseph Smith as a prophet of God.

SNUBS

Some people delight in showing their "superiority" by snubbing those they deem inferior or with whom they are offended. And some are easily snubbed, or readily imagine they have been.

Bishop Quayle of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, once made a neat point in asking, "What do you suppose an angel would do, if you snubbed him? What would an angel straight from the courts of glory do, if you passed him by and would not recognize him or speak to him. Why he'd just giggle!"

That is an odd way to express it. It is hard to imagine an angel giggling. Yet it expresses the thought in ready human terms. An angel could not be hurt by your cutting him, so far as personal vanity is concerned. He might and probably would be sorry for you because you suffered such feelings, but would go right on doing his duty, and would help you when he had the chance.

Nothing you could say about him would keep him from doing right and taking care of his share of the work.

Those who have the Spirit of God do likewise. Those full of the Spirit of God are not snubbable, and are not easily slighted, nor do they permit their efficiency thus to be impaired.

CHURCH DECORUM

(By Augustine Dwyer, delivered at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, during the General Conference, April 14, 1918. Reported by Mrs. A. Morgan.)

Hear what the Lord, God of Israel had said unto his people: "Ye shall reverence my sanctuary." The Psalmist cries out in the exultation of the reverence in his soul: "I was glad when they said unto me, I will go unto the house of the Lord." Jesus said: "My house shall be called a house of prayer." Paul wrote to his beloved Timothy: "These things write I unto thee that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God."

I have been earnestly requested by the authority of the church—our worthy President—to speak to you during the serious days of this conference upon the subject of church decorum. It is because of his solicitude for you, as God's people, and because of the awful responsibility God has laid upon him as Chief Shepherd of the flock, that he has asked me to do this. I am not here through any desire of my own to speak upon such a subject. If the request had not come from authority I would never have elected to do it myself. Human nature does not like to be told of its faults, and I am sorry to say that the lack of church decorum is a serious fault among the Saints. We like the flattering unction of those who tell us things that please us, but mark you, I am not here this afternoon posing as a critic. I have no use for a critic. Neither have I any use for a man who criticizes because he wants to air his superior knowledge or superior training. Surely, you will not accuse me of that. What motive could I have in it? But there is a criticism without which there would be no progress in the church or in the state, or in the home, and that is constructive criticism.

The friend who points out to me the defects in my character in order that I might rectify them, the friend that tells me these things which are hindering my progress, that friend, in the words of Shakespeare, I want to "grapple to my soul with hooks of steel," and never let him go. But the friend—I shall not call him friend—the man who flatters me, tells me things which he does not mean, to please me and knows otherwise—that man is most dangerous to my welfare, and I want to avoid him.

Let me explain my position. I am not a preacher. I have no call to preach. I have no authority to preach; but I have taken the words of the Lord God as the foundation of my message. In all that I shall say to you this afternoon, I am only exercising a privilege which belongs to every child of God, to honor the precious name of his adorable Son, and to be jealous of the honor of that name. So do not interpret me as assuming an office, which is not my right. It is my right to speak on this subject. If it were not, the Presidency of this church would not have asked me to do it.

The Saints have done many admirable things. When I read the history of this church; when I read the bitterness of the opposition, the obstacles that seemed almost insurmountable, I marvel that the church has accomplished what it has accomplished, and unless the Lord God was guiding it, it could never have done it. But mark you, it seems never to have entered into the minds of some Latter Day Saint mothers to teach their children to reverence the house of God.

Now, let us look at that beautiful virtue of reverence. On account of my physical condition I have not been able to attend many sessions of this conference. I have heard but few sermons, which I sincerely regret, but I thank God I was able to attend every prayer meeting. I thank God that I was privileged to listen to that paper, so well read and so well composed, by the worthy brother from Providence, Rhode Island. That, I believe is the most needful utterance that has been uttered in this conference during the time we have been together. God sent him here with that message, and I trust that the authorities of this church will have that message published and it will find its way into every Latter Day Saint home; and every Latter Day Saint father, and every Latter Day Saint mother will steep their minds in it and establish a family altar.

If we have reverence in the home we will have reverence in the church. It must begin with the home. That paper made such an impression upon me I wanted to rush up and grasp the dear brother's hand. It was the most needful message, in my opinion, that ever came to this people.

What is reverence? It is the most lovable, the most beautiful virtue that can adorn the human soul. There is nothing that can make up for it. If you remove it you have unattractiveness and uncouthness in their worst forms. What is it? I cannot tell you, and no man can tell you; I can feel it in the private depths of my soul. I can only feel it when I think of my utter dependence on my heavenly Father and my need for his care and grace every hour. When I come into his sanctuary I want to see the beauty of his face and pour out my heart in praise and thanksgiving.

I have sat in this church here, in Independence, while the organ was sending out its appealing strains to invite the people to prayer and devotion, and women about me were gossiping. They were talking the cheapest shop talk one could hear. Did they come into the house of God to worship? Were they glad when they said unto me, we will go unto the house of the Lord? I want to tell you here this afternoon, that if you think you can look upon these things indifferently, then come and let me show you the letters that have come to me from Christian people who have attended my lectures and have told me the irreverence they have met in the churches of the Latter Day Saints, and they have been people of account.

I have consecrated my life to God in this gospel because I believe in it with every drop of my blood. For me it is this or it is nothing. A writer in the Atlantic Monthly, one of the most serious magazines published—a writer, no less than the pastor of a great church in Poughkeepsie, makes the startling announcement that the Protestant ministers of the sectarian churches have lost their leadership and claim upon the people forever. Are we to stand by and be indifferent to them?

There are a few words in the gospel of Matthew applied to Jesus that could be applied to us as well: "They watched him!" and we are being watched. I have given my life to this work in a special manner that as God helps me I may deliver this church from the cynicism, the ridicule, and the derision that has been hurled at it and is being hurled at it, not by unbelievers, but by men and women who accept the Lord Jesus Christ as their Savior, men and women who have been misinformed regarding our doctrines and our interpretation of the gospel. When they come into our churches and see the irreverence we manifest, they go away believing all the evil they have heard hurled against us.

Where there is true reverence for God, surely it ought to be shown in buildings consecrated to his service. "Our actions speak louder than our words" is a truism which can be applied to church decorum. We are creatures of emotion. God has made us such. Never has any man been converted by an appeal to the head. You reach a man's conviction through his heart. What is the Sermon on the Mount but an appeal to the emotions? Reverence is an emotion of the soul. A skeptical world gets glimpses of God through those who believe in God. Reverence is the outward expression of our belief. It is a virtue that makes a strong appeal to the heart of the onlooker. We are admonished by the greatest voice that ever spoke on earth, to let our light shine before men, that seeing our good works, which means also our behavior, they might glorify our Father in heaven.

We had a sect in Boston called Unitarians. Their appeal was to reason. The home of that sect was the cultured city of Boston. It had behind it some of the ablest and most learned men of the day. It also had wealth behind it. I once heard its great champion, Edward Everett Hale, say: "I thought Unitarianism would convert the United States, but I am disappointed." Unitarianism made an utter failure in its effort in the foreign mission field. Its cold appeal could not move the hearts of people. It has no power to meet those who were spiritually afflicted and heal them.

If the gospel were an appeal to the head we would not see illiterate men, filled with the power of Pentecost, bringing men of education to the foot of the cross. Think of the work done by Brother Cornish. Then dwell upon the story which he tells of his own life and marvelous way in which God led him.

Divine faith is something so powerful in the soul that it must pour itself out in a reverent attitude toward God. What then is reverence? If you look in the dictionary you will find reverence defined as a combination of honor, respect and esteem. But that does not define it, and no dictionary can define it. Reverence is an emotion of the soul. It is honor, respect, and esteem carried to their highest altitudes. We raise our hat to a woman and also to our superiors. That is a mark of respect. But we read of many who approached Jesus kneeling and prostrating at his feet. Such attitudes are not attitudes of respect; they are attitudes of reverence.

What an example of reverence Jesus was himself! One day his disciples said to him, "Lord, teach us to pray," and Jesus uttered the great prayer of prayers. When you pray, say: "Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name." Before you ask for your daily bread, before you ask to be delivered from temptation, hallow the name of God. Where should we hallow that name more reverently than when we are in the house of God! Our neglect in this respect is often a serious cause for scandal to strangers who enter our churches.

Only yesterday a business man of the neighboring city, whose wife and family are Latter Day Saints, wrote me: "I went out to that church in Independence with my wife and family, to hear the choir render the Oratorio of Elijah. We were given seats in the gallery but could not enjoy the singing because of the disorder going on. Young men and women were carrying on flirtations. On every side there was whispering and giggling and laughing. People kept coming in and going out during the rendering of the oratorio. I was glad it was over. It was a relief to get out and feel nature's reverence for God, which was so sadly lacking in his creatures."

That man is doubtless telling others his experience, for impressions are what people talk about today. If you, Saints in Independence, can stand that, then I do not understand you. It seems to me it should awake you to vigilance. You should instruct your ushers and officers to be on the lookout for those who conduct themselves in an unbecoming manner, and if after having their attention called to their conduct, they still persist in it, they should be asked to leave the building.

I want to say a few words to you about the order of the communion service. When I was a new convert in the church I made a visit to Lamoni. The Sunday I was there was sacrament Sunday. I don't think I will ever forget that communion service in Lamoni and the impression it made upon me. It was the most impressive communion service I have ever attended in the Latter Day Saint Church. The very atmosphere seemed charged with the spirit of reverence. The hymns rang with the faith in the hearts of the people. In my heart I said: "Lord, it is good to be here." It was for me a mount of transfiguration. Never can I forget the dear Saints of Lamoni because of that communion service.

A communion service I witnessed last Sunday morning, I am sorry to say, was of quite a different order. I am sensible to the truth that comparisons are odious, yet I must make a comparison. I sat, under that gallery, during that communion service and was so shocked at the careless and irreverent manner of some of the officiating ministers, I had to close my eyes to keep a spirit of reverence during the administration of that most blessed and most solemn ceremony. I saw two of the officiating ministers take the plates containing the consecrated bread in one hand, and then with the other hand direct and guide the other ministers how they were to distribute the elements to the people. I saw them chew the sacred element, instead of allowing it to moisten on the tongue and then swallow it. I saw them lift the bread and the wine to their mouths in the most thoughtless manner. Indeed, most of them when they received the elements, made no reverent pause, as if they were sincerely doing it in remembrance of the Lord. These things do not affect you, my dear people, because you are accustomed to them. But let those who have been trained differently come in and see this lack of reverence and it becomes almost unbearable.

"Do ye this in remembrance of me" are the Savior's words. We should do it in a manner that would express our thoughtfulness of the divine command, not hurriedly, nor in a distracted manner. Indeed, we should conduct ourselves at this ceremony with the profoundest reverence. Jesus, in his gospel, has taught us to do many things, but this is the only thing he has taught us to do in remembrance of him.

When you lift the sacred elements to your lips you should do it reverently and thoughtfully. After receiving them you should bow the head for a few seconds at least. The sacrament should not be received standing. It should be received kneeling or sitting. The officers should be divided into two sets when they partake—one set should administer to the other.

Now as to the communion table: No matter how superior the material of which the table is made, it should always have a covering of snowy white linen. It should be of the best quality.

This sacrament was instituted on the solemn night of the Passover feast. It is only in keeping with the ordinance that we follow the ritual of that feast as our Lord did. Some of you have lived in the Holy Land. If you observe the Jews in their religious ceremonies you must have seen the preparation for the passover feast, as well as the celebration of it. Among the orthodox Jews in Palestine it takes place in the synagogues and may be seen by tourists who happen to be there at the time of the Passover. A covering of the fairest linen was on the table. It was without wrinkle and without blemish. The whiteness of that linen was intended to symbolize the purity of heart with which the Jew should approach the Passover table. Surely, we should imitate them in their scrupulous care for the cleanliness of the Lord's table. We should surround this sacrament with everything calculated to inspire reverence. The linen covering should not only cover the top of the table, but it should come to the floor in front. In some of our branches it is shocking, painfully shocking, to witness the careless, slovenly manner in which the communion table is prepared.

In all that I am saying do not think that I am branding the Saints as an irreverent people. Nothing could be more foreign to my thought and opinion. The irreverence is not willful. It is a result of a sad lack of right training. Indeed, I doubt if there is a people anywhere who have a more real reverence in their hearts for God than Latter Day Saints. During the past week I have had many opportunities of witnessing the faith that burns in the hearts of the Saints. I have listened to testimonies that came up, burning with Pentecostal fire, from believing hearts. There were moments during these morning prayer meetings when it seemed as if two thousand years had rolled back, and I was living in the ages of faith and could again hear the exultant cry of the Son of God: "I have not seen such faith, no, not in Israel."

There are Latter Day Saint homes in which I have met some of the most Christlike characters it has been my privilege to meet anywhere. These Saints have expressed themselves to me as ashamed of the lack of reverence manifested in our churches. They were seriously concerned as to how it might be corrected. This is a healthy sign. It is a clear indication that the Saints are on the upward way. I sincerely believe that the cynicism, and the derision hurled at the Saints by those who have a false impression of them, will change. It must change if we are to measure up to the requirements of the gospel. I believe the day is coming when membership in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ will mean a man of profound reverence for God and for the things of God. Already the good work in this direction is on the advance.

My thoughts, at this moment, go back to the dear Saints of Iowa and the days I spent with them. The order and cleanliness one sees in their churches make them an honor to the church. They seem to be keenly alive to the admonition of Paul: "Let all things be done in decency and in order." And what I say of the church I can say of the homes. I don't think you could find cleaner housekeepers anywhere than the Saints in Iowa. So pure and sweet is the cleanliness of their homes, that entering the humblest of them is like getting a cool breeze from the sea on a hot summer's day.

Take the Latter Day Saint Church in the lovely town of Magnolia! I do not think you could find dust anywhere in it. When you see a church so neatly kept, you cannot help feeling a deep sense of respect for the Saints who worship in it. Their refinement, too, was refreshing to me. Not the refinement of the world, which is all false and artificial, but the refinement of the heart, which is true and genuine.

In some branches I visited I found the very reverse of what I found in Iowa. The Saints seemed to glory in the confusion and disorder apparent not only in the churches but in their homes. The two are so closely linked I cannot help referring to the home in this discourse.

While at a certain branch, I need not name it—those of you present who are members of it will recognize it before I have spoken five minutes. While at that church I attended a morning preaching service. I was booked to speak in the morning but arrived too late. When I entered the church the preaching had begun. The dear brother who was preaching made a favorable impression upon me the moment I looked upon him. The light of God was in his face and his voice expressed the zeal burning in his soul. He had made a careful preparation of that sermon and was trying to preach it. I say trying, for it seemed to me impossible for any preacher to preach with such distraction going on all over the church. Boys were going through various antics around the pulpit railing. The mothers looked on with amused expressions, as if what their children were doing was a very clever thing.

After the service I went forward and greeted the preacher, asking him as I did so how he could preach with so much distraction. He answered: "Oh it tries my very soul. I have tried and tried to stop it but there is no use. If I become severe the mothers become indignant and show their ill-will by keeping away from church. If you can nail it while you are here, nail it." The members of that branch know that I nailed it. There was no such conduct during my stay. I was pleased to learn, during conference, that there is a great improvement in that branch.

Now another word—a word to mothers: I will yield to no man in respect and consideration for Christian motherhood. There is nothing more divine upon earth than motherhood. Even the Romans, who were pagans, honored it. We are told during the days of the Roman empire, when a citizen of Rome met a mother with her babe in her arms, no matter if she were clothed in rags, he bowed low before her, because she was a mother. God never made anything more beautiful than a Christian mother. I like to see mothers bring their little ones to the house of God. But they should use judgment. When a baby cries and disturbs preacher and congregation the mother should retire with it. That is the proper thing to do.

I cannot close without saying a word about the consecrated oil and how it should be kept. No one who has ever felt the healing power of the church can fail to have a sense of reverence for the consecrated oil. I am perfectly sincere this afternoon when I tell you I know the blessing of recovery from sickness wrought by the administration of the elders. I must, therefore, respect the consecrated oil and feel a concern that it be kept in a decent manner. I have sat on platforms in our churches and have seen a bottle of consecrated oil thrown on a shelf in the inside of the pulpit, among dust clothes and pages from torn hymn books. This is a disgrace! After the oil is consecrated, it seems to me, instead of being kept in a bottle with the grocery store label, it should be kept in a plain, neat vessel of silver. What is spent one week in some of our branches upon moving picture shows, might be denied for once, and the vessel bought. The administration of the holy oil is a solemn ceremony and we should make it as impressive as we can. The oil should not be poured upon the sick from a bottle. If a vessel of glass must be used then let it be a cruet of cut glass—plain and neat—and always clean.

Sometimes onlookers are so deeply impressed by the ceremony of the administration of the consecrated oil that they are stimulated to inquire into the gospel. A Presbyterian lady who witnessed the ceremony by a mere accident, wrote me: "In all my Christian experience I never witnessed a more impressing ceremony. I seemed to receive help from it myself, and I know the sick man who received the administration did. I was so impressed with it I spoke of it at prayer meeting in my own church. Surely you Saints have the correct Scriptural view of this doctrine."

And now, dear Saints, before I close, let me express the hope that you receive all I have said here this afternoon in the spirit that moved me to say it. If I did not feel concerned for our welfare before the censorious world, if I did not love you with all my soul, if I did not believe sincerely in this gospel, do you think I would have spoken as I have this afternoon? Do not think it is a pleasure for me to stand here and point out these things to you. If you think I am here to air a superior training, you do me an injustice. I am here at the request of the President of the church. If, in the course of this lecture, I have made any utterance that does not accord with the teachings of the gospel, then go to him and make it known.

It is sometimes hard for a man to keep his politeness when he has to listen to the excuses which some of the Saints offer for the irreverence in our churches. They argue that the Saints are a sociable people, that they are so glad to see one another when they meet that they must express it. The excuse is not worthy of consideration. Other religious bodies are sociable, other religious bodies are glad to see one another, but good sense dictates that there is a time and place for all things. We come to church to worship God. Loud talking, laughing, and joking, yea, gossiping, make a poor preparation for divine worship. The still, small voice cannot be heard in the midst of tumult and confusion. To excuse it by saying the Saints are different from other people, in the sense that they are more sociable is equivalent to saying that the Saints when they come together in the house of God have especial exemption from the requirements of reverence, and they have special permission to violate the rules of ordinary good breeding and good manners.

I repeat what I have already said, if there was more reverence for God in the home, we would have more reverence in the churches. Our brother from Providence in his prayer exhorted the Saints to have the family altar in every home. When I go to some Latter Day Saint homes and see the children go to school, go out to meet the temptations of the world, the father and mother going to their cares and responsibilities without a word of prayer offered, I wonder if they have a true conception of this gospel. Let me say, however, that this is not general. Let me say that in the most of the Latter Day Saint homes I visited I found the family altar.

I am thinking now of one home in particular, in the city of Omaha, where for nearly two weeks I was a welcome guest. The atmosphere of that home seemed filled with the peace of God. I never met a mother that measured up higher to the Christian type of mother. Her example and her training showed themselves in the conduct of her two children. Such a Latter Day Saint home in any community ennobles our church in the eyes of those who are not members of the church.

Our church papers should find their way into every home. We cannot keep our hand on the pulse of the church unless we read the church papers. Moreover, in the SAINTS' HERALD we have a church paper of which we need not be ashamed. I am proud to send it to my friends in other denominations. Some very complimentary things have come back to me in letters from those who read it, and who are qualified to judge the merits of a church paper. I never fail to boost the HERALD in all the branches where I lecture.

Friends, I thank you for the attention you have so generously given me this afternoon. We are living in the most remarkable age in the history of the world. The fight is on, not only in the political world, but in the religious world. There is to be a victory or a Waterloo for this church. If we are to have the victory we must put on the whole armor of God that we might be able "to withstand in the evil day, and having done all to stand." Mark, the whole armor of God includes reverence for God and for the things of God. I pray that he, in his infinite goodness and mercy, may lead us, as a people, to understand the importance and meaning of reverence, for if we honor God, God will honor us. God bless you every one!

Before I close I want to read you the following instructions taken from a card which hangs in the vestibule of William E. Gladstone's Jewish Church in England. These instructions were written by Mr. Gladstone himself. They are worthy of our attention and study.

ON YOUR WAY TO CHURCH

"On your way to the Lord's house be thoughtful, be silent, or say but little, and that little good. Speak not of other men's faults; think of your own, for you are going to ask forgiveness. Never stay outside; go in at once; time spent inside should be precious."

IN CHURCH

"Kneel down very humbly, and pray. Spend the time that remains in prayer; remember the awful presence into which you have come. Do not look about to see who are coming in, nor for any other cause. It matters nothing to you what others are doing; attend to yourself. Fasten your thoughts firmly on the holy service. Do not miss one word; this needs a severe struggle; you have no time for vain thought. The Blessed Spirit will strengthen you if you persevere."

OF GENERAL INTEREST

The Junior College

There has recently been issued by the United States Bureau of Education, in the Department of the Interior, Bulletin for 1919, No. 35, The Junior College, by Floyd M. McDowell.

Professor McDowell makes a critical analysis of his problem, considering the origin and early development of the junior college, influences tending to further its development, the present state of the various types of junior colleges, progress in the accrediting of junior colleges, and present problems of the junior college.

Professor McDowell has majored in education at the University of Iowa. He did graduate work there in the summer school for several years. He then spent one year at Clark University, taking as his special theme the present status of the small college, urging that the logical solution of the difficulties lay in the junior college.

Returning to Lamoni, in 1914, he was at once placed in charge of the recently organized junior college there. Through his efforts, and those of President Briggs, the idea of a junior college was accepted in Iowa, and Graceland was accepted in 1915 as the first accredited junior college in that State.

Professor McDowell has had five years' experience as the dean of a junior college, in addition to three years' work as an instructor. Added to this, he has had an additional year of study at the State University of Iowa, 1917-18, when he prepared this dissertation for his degree as Doctor of Philosophy. This treatise is the final result of his study and experience.

The junior college is one which gives the first two years of college work. There are a few organized in the large universities; for example, at the Chicago University. High schools have been urged to offer this additional two years of work, thus constituting a public junior college. Joplin, Illinois, was the first to do so, in 1917. There are now nineteen. The normal schools and small denominational colleges add an additional fifty six.

The bulletin is well written and makes easy reading. Copies can be secured from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, District of Columbia, at twenty cents a copy. This is the charge fixed by the Government printing office, to meet part of the expense of printing.

The recommendations are as follows:

"(a) That if the junior colleges are to justify their attempt to offer the first two years of standard college work they must secure better trained faculties. Fully fifty per cent of the junior colleges studied need to raise their standards in this respect.

"(b) That at present the junior colleges, especially the private institutions, do not meet the needs of the comparatively large proportion of their students who do not intend to enter the university upon graduation. These institutions should offer more and a greater variety of vocational or finishing courses of college grade.

"(c) That public junior colleges should encourage the movement which seeks to make them a definite part of the State system of public education.

"(d) That private junior colleges should seek to cooperate with each other and with the State universities in their respective States to the end that a better organized and more economical system of higher education may be established.

"(e) That private junior colleges should endeavor to secure permanent endowment of at least $100,000 for each institution, and they should at all times limit the amount of work which they attempt to offer to that which can be conducted with a maximum efficiency.

"From the study of the various attempts to standardize the junior college we may conclude that the following minimum standards should be met by any institution attempting to offer the first two years of college work:

"(a) Requirement for admission—Graduation from an accredited high school or at least 15 units of credit in standard secondary school work.

"(b) Requirement for graduation—At least 60 semester hours of college credit in advance of the 15 units of secondary work.

"(c) Equipment—(1) Library—At least 2,000 volumes carefully selected with special reference to college work.

"(2) Laboratories—An equipment valued at least at $1,000 to $1,500 for each science taught.

"(d) Teachers—(1) Number—At least five heads of departments. (2) Training—At least one year of graduate work in advance of the bachelor's degree, with special training in the subject to be taught. (3) Amount of teaching—No more than 20 periods per week (60-minute periods). (4) Character of instruction—Must in all cases be strictly of college grade.

"(e) The high school or academy operated in connection with the junior college must be fully accredited.

"(f) Limitations—(1) The institution must prefix the term junior when applying to itself the name college.

"(2) No junior college should confer a baccalaureate degree."

War Risk Insurance

The Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury has made more liberal conditions for reinstatement of lapsed or canceled insurance formerly secured by soldiers and sailors in the recent world war.

At any time within eighteen months from the date of discharge reinstatement of insurance can be secured by the payment of two months previous; that is, to pay for the one month the Government carried the insured beyond the period for which he had paid; the second months to be insured. Men out of the service are permitted to reinstate within three calendar months following the month of discharge without making statements as to their health.

After three months following the date of discharge, a statement from the applicant must be made to the effect that he is in as good health as at the date of discharge, or at the expiration of the grace period, whichever is the later date.

To give all former service men a chance to reinstate, including men out of service eighteen months or more, a special ruling allows all ex-service men to reinstate their insurance before December 31, 1919, providing that each applicant is in as good health as at date of discharge or at expiration of the grace period, whichever is the later date, and so states in his application.

Further, all service men who reinstated their insurance by the payment of all back premiums prior to July 24, 1919, when the decision requiring only two months' premiums went into effect, may upon written application to the Bureau have any premiums paid in excess of two applied toward the pay-

THE FORUM

The Delinquent Boy

(Based on an address delivered by J. Adams Puffer of the National Public League of Kansas City before the Decatur County Teachers Institute.)

The following review of an address by J. Adams Puffer on the "Delinquent boy" will, in the opinion of the writer, be of special interest and value to the Saints. Of all people we should be most interested in any movements which look to the betterment of mankind. The statement of the Master: "Ye are the light of the world" is, or rather should be, especially applicable to us. And yet how often do we find ourselves following in the wake of great movements, which have as an aim the betterment of mankind. Sometimes one might be justified in concluding that we only function as a "tail-light" the chief duty of which is to keep other people from running over us.

From each individual who claims the name of Saint as well as from each community that is influenced by the Saints there should radiate light, truth, beauty, and righteousness. In a word, from such an individual and from such a community God should shine. This to the writer does not mean a passive attitude toward the world and its problems but rather a life consecrated and devoted to the cleaning up of the world and the elevation of humanity. The world should be better, freer from sin, crime, and vice of every form for the life of each Latter Day Saint who is worthy of the name. This cannot be done without an intelligent understanding of the nature and causes of these conditions. Such an understanding the following address endeavors to give. The pity of it is that we are under the necessity of going to the outside world for this light.

Doctor Puffer's analysis of the causes of delinquency among the boys follows.

1. The first cause is the inheritance of poor ability. According to recent intelligence tests we have found the distribution of intelligence among American citizens to be about as follows:

- 5 per cent very superior.
- 10 per cent superior.
- 20 per cent high.
- 25 per cent average.
- 20 per cent low.
- 15 per cent inferior.
- 5 per cent very inferior.

From the lowest 20 per cent, the inferior and very inferior classes, comes the following defective classes:

- 30 per cent of delinquents.
- 30 per cent to 50 per cent of criminals.
- 50 per cent of the paupers.
- 50 per cent of the prostitutes.
- 20 per cent to 30 per cent of the insane.

Hence nearly half of our degeneracy and crime is furnished by those people who have defective mentality. For such there is no hope. They must be segregated in institutions and absolutely prevented from propagating their kind. If allowed to marry their descendants soon outnumber the children of normal parentage and thus endanger the entire social order. If we would remove from our communities crime, immorality and delinquency "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." We now build hospitals to take care of those that have fallen over the cliff. Why not build fences at the top of the cliff to prevent these unfortunates from falling over? We need sane eugenics laws and above all we need doctors and lawyers who are first, last and all the time "MEN," to enforce these laws.

2. The second great cause of delinquency is inefficient environment. This accounts for the 50 per cent which comes from those of normal intelligence, and it is here that we can do the most effective work in prevention.

The first factor in this inefficient environment is the inefficient home. According to Doctor Puffer 20 per cent of parents lack the ability to be parents and 10 per cent are immoral, while 7 per cent of the homes have been deprived by death of one or both parents. Only 33 1-3 per cent of the homes are efficient enough to insure against delinquency. There is not one case out of a thousand known personally by this speaker, but what the home was in some measure responsible.

The second factor of this inefficient environment is the public arena. Under this heading comes the following agencies:

1. The public street. This to-day is usually very indecent and a prominent cause of juvenile crime. No man has a right to make the street, which belongs to all, the hotbed of crime and immorality. What man does not shudder with horror at the very thought of what his innocent child must hear for the first time as it passes the loafers on the street corner. The public street must be cleaned up if we would eliminate the social vices of to-day.

2. Billiard halls. Not one in ten are clean. Only clean ones, if any, should be allowed. The benefits of the game can be preserved and the evils entirely eliminated by cleaning up these halls and absolutely controlling them in the interests of the public.

3. Dance halls. The most dangerous of modern institutions. They are the hotbeds of sensuousness and vice. (In this indictment Doctor Puffer included both the public and the private dance.) More girls were pushed into the wrong road by the dance hall during the war than by any other cause. It is practically impossible to clean up the modern dancing school to say nothing of the public dance hall.

4. Moving pictures. This has more influence over boys of 12 to 16 years of age than any other educational factor. It very frequently helps in the wrong direction. A large percentage of the pictures shown are at least careless, if not openly vicious and criminal. Since seeing is five times as efficient as hearing as a means of education, the great danger to morals brought by such pictures can hardly be overestimated.

The reader's attention is here called to the fact that the element which makes the moving picture a great danger namely, the bad pictures shown, is an unnecessary element. There is absolutely no reason why all agencies which are working for the moral uplift of society should not use this most effective educational agency by keeping before the youth to-day in picture form the beauty of truth and virtue. If seeing bad pictures tends to make our youth bad; then seeing good pictures should have the opposite effect. There are thousands of excellent pictures available to-day, and if these are not enough let Christian peoples get to work and make more. Why is it that Christian people sleep on their job most of the time, allowing the forces which are working for evil to do the voting, and hence maintain the control of most of our recreational organizations? If the world is ever to be redeemed the average church member, including the Latter Day Saint, must change his tactics. He is now asleep on his rights.

Doctor Puffer's suggested cure for the moving picture evil was a threefold censorship. First; state censorship. Second; local censorship. Third; a local committee of parents and teachers whose duty it would be, not only to pass judgment on the pictures shown, but also to be on the constant lookout for the best pictures available. When good pictures come to town this committee tells everybody. When bad ones come, they tell nobody. The effect of such a procedure is easily apparent.

In concluding his remarkable address Doctor Puffer emphasized strongly that the standard for determining the values of life must change. Heretofore it has been almost impossible to remove the vice-breeding factors in the community, because the dollar has been the standard. Recreation and amusement has been in the hands of men who care not how many souls they send to destruction, so long as they can line their pockets with "thirty pieces of silver."

This must change. If Christian peoples would clean up their towns, they must insist that morals not dollars shall be the criteria of all social and recreational activities. (Will the Latter Day Saint reader kindly ask himself, how much he has done within the year that is past to help in his community to take from commercialism all agencies which have to do with the training and education of our young. If he has done nothing, is not his light hid under a bushel?)

Finally, the writer desires to call attention to the fact that although Latter Day Saints may not entirely agree with the suggestions of this noted lecturer, such does not relieve them from the necessity of taking some positive stand to-day in their respective communities by insisting that morality be substituted for commercialism; virtue for vice. This cannot be done by our present policy of negation. Conference resolutions which condemn theater going, card playing, and dancing are not sufficient. Our young people, as any young people, will have social and recreational activities. The only question that remains is: Shall we furnish such under proper control or shall we continue to permit the commercially minded to traffic with their souls? F. M. McDOWELL.

Order of Enoch, or the United Order

There seems to be quite a number of different opinions as to what the Order of Enoch is or should be. Some have the idea that it is a condition such as prevailed in the time of Enoch where they "were of one heart and one mind and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them." Others hold to the opinion that it is an organization in the church, and that every member should join this organization or they can not be saved in the kingdom of God. While still others think the Order of Enoch should be an organization of certain officers of the church to do a specific work.

Personally we strongly favor the latter idea. The first mention we find in the revelations of anything pertaining to this order we find in Doctrine and Covenants, section 77, portions of paragraphs one, two, and three:

"The Lord spake unto Enoch, saying, Hearken unto me saith the Lord your God, who are ordained unto the high priesthood of my church."

Remember he is speaking to those who are ordained to the high priesthood.

"The time has come, and is now at hand, and, behold, and lo, it must needs be that there be an organization of my people, in regulating and establishing the affairs of the storehouse for the poor of my people both in this place and in the land of Zion, or in other words, the city of Enoch."

I think it will be conceded without argument that the regulating and establishing the affairs of the storehouse belongs to the work of the bishops of the church.

"And now, verily thus saith the Lord, it is expedient that all things be done to my glory, that ye should, who are joined together in this order; or in other words let my servant Ahashdah, and my servant Gazelam, or Enoch, and my servant Pelagoram sit in council with the saints which are in Zion—wherefore a commandment I give unto you, to prepare and organize yourselves by a bond or everlasting covenant that cannot be broken. And he who breaketh it shall lose his office and standing in the church, and shall be delivered over to the buffetings of Satan until the day of redemption."

Now let us remember these men held the high priesthood, and if they broke this bond or covenant they were to lose their office and standing in the church, so they were officers in the church.

Now turn to section 81: 4. Here we have these same three men mentioned in connection with six others and the Lord says:

"It is expedient that they be bound together by a bond and covenant that cannot be broken by transgression except judgment shall immediately follow, in your several stewardships, to manage the affairs of the poor, and all things pertaining to the bishopric, both in the land of Zion, and in the land of Shinehah."

We see by this that the very purpose of this organization was to manage the affairs of the poor and all things pertaining to the bishopric, both in Independence and Kirtland. Nothing more or less than the work and duties of the bishops of the church.

Now turn to paragraph 5, same section:

"This order I have appointed to be an everlasting order unto you and unto your successors, inasmuch as you sin not; and the soul that sins against this covenant, and hardeneth his heart against it, shall be dealt with according to the laws of my church, and shall be delivered over to the buffetings of Satan until the day of redemption."

The Lord is here speaking to these nine men and tells them this shall be an everlasting order unto them, and those who should afterward take their places in the organization, their successors; this could not apply to the whole church membership. Now turn to Section 89: 1:

"Verily thus saith the Lord, I give unto the united order, organized agreeable to the commandment previously given, a revelation and commandment concerning my servant Shederlaomach, that ye shall receive him into the order. What I say unto one I say unto all."

To show that this organization actually existed in the church of latter days, as well as in Enoch's time, we quote from the history of Joseph Smith, published in the Millennial Star, volume 14, page 421. Joseph Smith here says:

"For your satisfaction I here insert a revelation given to Shederlaomach on the 15th of March, 1838, constituting him a member of the united firm."

Now turn to Doctrine and Covenants 93: 2:

"And again, verily I say unto you, it is wisdom, and expedient in me, that my servant Zombre, whose offering I have accepted . . . Verily I say unto you, it is expedient in me that he should become a member of the order that he may assist in bringing forth my word unto the children of men; therefore ye shall ordain him unto this blessing."

Now we quote again from the history of Joseph Smith published in the Millennial Star, volume 14, page 1437: "And Zombre was ordained by the conference to the high priesthood, and admitted according to the revelation." This man had to be ordained to the high priesthood before he could become a member of the order.

In Section 101, about two years after they were told to or-

The Recreational Side of Choir Work

"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," is a trite saying surely and applies equally well to the business of choir singing as to the commoner things of life. We do not have to imagine a condition of things wherein even so attractive a thing as choir work becomes monotonous, for we have seen such in verity. When choir work takes on the same sober hue of non intermittent and unvaried service then it is apt to become dull and uninviting to those who engage in it. Even the best of us find service (which is but another name for work) palling on our sensibilities if it is unrelieved by some of the lighter things of life.

Our choirs should be universally imbued with the spirit and desire to serve and each member should be filled with the appreciation of the sacred nature of his work. Were this actually the cause (alas! that it is not) our service of song would be more constant, more effectual, more spiritual. But even in the midst of serious choir work there must come moments of relaxation, times of rest, periods of recreation, when the saving graces of pleasure may palatably season the dry morsels of drudging service.

Every choir rehearsal should be seasoned with the salt of seasonable relaxation. When actually practicing the work under preparation the choir should energetically and persistently drive straight to the mark—the perfection of the thing being practiced. Then, interspersed among the regular work, there should be moments when the tension should be relieved by pleasantry and relaxation. These vary what would otherwise prove a monotony; they add color to the drabness of pure service; they serve to render pleasant a time of work that would otherwise be found burdensome.

To illustrate: The time for choir practice is at hand and the members have assembled for the duties of the evening. Leader, accompanist and singers are in their places and the work begins. The composition practiced should then be energetically gone over and perfected until results of efficiency are attained. Then a brief period of rest should be had in which members may exchange little tidbits of social intercourse and enjoy their mutual relations. The leader may relate for their relaxation some interesting experience or incident pertaining to choir work, or he may even seize the opportunity to impart to them some timely admonition, or give them some vision as to future plans and ideals.

But it should always be borne in mind that the prime object of choir practice is to practice, and these periods of relaxation should never be allowed to usurp the principle object of the practice; nor should they be permitted to become the purveyors of ribaldry, revelry or the interchange of gossip.

The recreational needs of choir members may be met and gratified in many ways outside of the regular work of the choir. The choir should have its gatherings at which work is laid aside; where the members are not expected to "talk shop" and where social enjoyment is the prime object. The choir should have occasional socials, evening parties, receptions, where social intercourse and relaxation are had and where the members may get together and cultivate acquaintances and exercise their mutual tastes and attachments. These social functions may not only be the occasions of enjoyment, but may embody some features of educational value to the great profit of all.

One of the most enjoyable choir social functions that ever came under the writer's observation was a "choir picnic" on a certain Labor Day. The members of this choir met in a body and repaired to a cool, shady grove, where big native forest trees lent their charm and dignity to the occasion. Here the choir found ample preparations had been made for their enjoyment. Games and sports had been planned, original in their character, to which all gave enthusiastic participation, and which everybody heartily enjoyed. Then, in due course of time came the "eats," which the choir members themselves had provided, and which were served in a most unique and original style. Exercise in the open air, enthusiastic response to the games and sports, congenial surroundings, all added zest to appetite, and everything was eaten up. In fact we have grave doubts whether the ones who served the provender succeeded in saving back enough for themselves.

The members of the branch can materially assist in the happiness and well being of the choir, by showing it some kindly attentions. Let those of the branch who are able and disposed extend to the choir some social favors and kindnesses. Let them "entertain" the choir occasionally and minister to their social well being in such ways as can be devised. In this way can members of the branch extend and express their appreciation of the choir's services; and we should always remember that appreciation is always necessary to the success and perpetuity of any choir, for without it no choir will always continue to exist. A word as to the fitness of showing the choir proper social favors. Many of the Saints are always glad to show kindnesses to the ministry; to take the visiting elder home to dinner, or in other ways manifest their regard for the servants of the church. But is the choir not just as truly a servant of the church?

Relaxation is always necessary to the work of any choir, for no choir can enjoy its work without it; and no choir can be content that does not enjoy its work. It should be the aim therefore, of every choir to render its work in cheerfulness before God.

The Orpheus Society of Los Angeles

While engaged in ministerial labors in southern California we were partly instrumental in organizing and developing a group of the young people of the Los Angeles branch into a singing club. Under the inception of Brother David E. Dowker, the pastor of the branch, this enthusiastic and ambitious group of young saints, some forty and more in number, started in for the development of their talents in chorus singing, believing that some genuine profit and real pleasure could be had from such work. In this they found their conclusions were not mistaken.

The writer agreed to go down to Los Angeles twice each month to superintend their practice. They met at the different homes of the members for their work. The first portion of the evening was devoted to serious practice of the work in hand, after which the balance of the evening was spent in social enjoyment.

In course of time search was instituted for a suitable name for this club. Many and various were the titles suggested for this thrifty little society, ranging from the serious down to some ridiculous little skits that were evidently intended only to evoke merriment. Out of the potpourri of these suggested names the one offered by the writer, in commemoration of the Greek mythological deity of music, was selected; and the society does not seem to have suffered from the imposition of so classical a name.

And now we learn that the plant we assisted in placing in so fertile a soil is still thriving and is beginning to bear fruit. From Brother Dowker we learn that they will resume work during the coming season, and they are so mindful of their need for substantial progress that they have resolved upon employing a good instructor to train them in the serious work of chorus singing. Good! we say. Further, Brother Dowker informs us that many of the members of this society, realizing the church's need, have banded themselves into a choir and are now serving the church in that valuable and spiritual capacity. Again we say, Good! This is as we hoped it would be, for we had the vision of seeing this body of worthy young Saints merge into effective service in God's cause.

Our heart is with the young people of this society. In them we found some real companionship and much response to our labors in their behalf. Our pleasure in working for them and with them was keen, and we relinquished that work and parted from them with deep regret.

May Heaven guide them into pleasant and profitable paths and may they find the real enjoyment that comes from true service.

Some Experiences as Chorister

(NOTE: The following narrative of personal experience is from the pen of one of our choristers who occupies as such in one of our districts composed of rural branches, mostly. Her experiences will not only be found interesting, but profitable; and will serve to show how God's blessings may be given to those who are earnestly trying to do his work among the humble choirs of the church.—A. H. M.)

About eight years ago I was prevailed upon to act as chorister. I decided to do so with a great deal of fear and trembling. I did not want to shirk doing my "bit" nor did I feel in any way elated that I had a chance to do something.

At the business meeting where I was nominated for this office I kept saying to myself, "I hope I don't get it; I hope I don't get it;" but get it I did. That was the beginning and I have never been able to get away from that line of work since.

The first time I arose to take charge of the song service my knees shook, the notes of the music danced a cake-walk all over the page and my baton felt like a piece of lead instead of a very light stick of wood. I thought I would never get through that first song. My voice had suddenly acquired a very marked tremolo, and altogether I was doing everything but enjoying the situation. The next experience was similar, although not quite so bad and it was some time before the notes of the music stopped dancing over the page. But it gradually became better; but never to this day can I arise to lead a song service without a feeling of timidity. I often think that when we are at times criticised for something we may do unthinkingly, that if the ones criticizing knew the state of our feelings they would withhold their criticisms. I have felt like offering them the baton and asking them to occupy.

At times I have thoroughly enjoyed the work, while there have been times when I felt like giving up. At one time I was afflicted with a severe cold and for weeks was unable to sing at all. I felt discouraged and heartbroken. I was beginning to think I would never be able to sing again. This would have been a hard blow, as I love to sing. I called one of our visiting elders to administer to me. I said nothing to him concerning my worries, but the Spirit of God was there in abundance, and without my requesting it he anointed the afflicted part and prayed God to restore health to the diseased organs, that my voice might return to me. God was merciful and told me through his servant that as my work had hitherto been pleasing to him, if faithful he would continue to bless me in this department of his work; and he has been true to his promise.

On more than one occasion, as I have arisen from my place and taken charge of the opening exercises, I felt the Spirit of God envelop me like a mantle; and as the music began it seemed like the very angels of heaven were blending their voices with those of the choir. At such times I could scarcely keep back the tears. On one occasion I spoke to the elder who was to preach, asking him what his text was, that I might select hymns suitable to it. He replied, "The gospel." I silently prayed God for divine direction in selecting the hymns, that perfect harmony might be had. My prayer was answered; the brother spoke of it in his sermon, saying that he did not know for certain whether the text he had chosen was the one most needed to be given to his audience at that time or not, but that confirmation came with the opening songs. I have not always been given this light, but sufficient times to know that it is the proper course to pursue. At another time, at camp meeting, we used hymn 92 in the Hymnal ("All hail the power of Jesus' name") and though the sentiment of this song may not bring tears to the eyes as a rule when sung, yet that night few eyes were dry when we had finished singing it; and when the minister began speaking his voice trembled with emotion as he stated that he heard angels singing it with us. These are some of the grand and good experiences I have enjoyed, and many more could be related. It is always good to work in the service of the Lord, but especially so when we feel his spirit near. Although I have done this work for eight years, and during that time have tried to improve as much as time and money would allow, I feel like a babe in the first year of its schooling, and long to know more. I wish it were possible that those who are so fully qualified might be able to come to us who are not so well qualified and teach us more of the things we need to know.

There are many different ways of conducting a choir; some leaders have a very fast tempo, others slow, others medium; and when I go into a branch as I am sometimes asked to do, I have to spend some time getting acquainted with their manner of doing things, and then try to get them to do them a better way. And at times my patience and theirs is about exhausted. I am hoping for the time when we can have a choristers' school of instruction, if such a thing is possible, so that there will be unity among choristers in methods of conducting choirs.

An event has recently occurred that will be of interest to all workers in the choir service of the church. The Saints of the Territory of Hawaii have just been organized into a separate district of the church, known as the District of Hawaii, and at the first conference of this newly constituted district recommendation was sent to the general church chorister for the appointment of Sister Bernice Kahanamoku to the office of district chorister. Approval of this appointment was promptly made by Brother Hoxie, and the formal papers of the appointment have been sent to the First Presidency for their approval and subsequent publication, which has been done.

The executives of the choir movement greet the appoint-

Right Living

"And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them."

"Righteous; doing that which is right."—Webster.

Sometimes we are prone to give words a meaning in harmony with our sluggish thought (or lack of it) concerning them. The effort to apply one's mind to an idea, view it from all angles, consider it in different phases and under different conditions, and follow its development to a logical conclusion seems, to many people, to present a task out of all proportion to its importance. Mankind is proverbially more lazy mentally than physically. One recent writer says: The weakness of our will, which shows itself in our distaste for effort, especially for persistent effort, is the cause of almost all our failures and misfortunes. . . . The desire for effort diminishes from year to year. . . . Ruts are thus formed in the mind, the intellect becomes deadened for lack of exercise, and with it, the attention, the reflective faculties, and the power of reasoning . . . and one cannot avoid the gradual stupor which will steal over one's energy."

Sometimes it would seem, from the heedlessness and indifference which prevail in the world to-day, as if all humanity had said good-by to mental exercise of all kinds, to reflection, meditation, or any sort of conclusive or constructive thinking. This, of course, is apparently true of the multitude only. Here and there, thank God, there are stalwarts in the psychic realm, who stand out as the pillars which mark the progress of human thought and achievement. Latter Day Saints, of all people, should not be lulled into any false sense of security or indifference in regard to their relations with eternal forces, but should, on the contrary, be alert and keenly sensitive to the impressions and advanced knowledge which attend study and meditation.

Latter-day revelation of God's will concerning his people informs us that Saints should "seek out of the best books, words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith." (In connection, it is well to remember what kind of faith is pleasing to God—the living faith, the one that expresses itself in action! "Faith without works is dead, profiting nothing.") We are also told to "acquaint ourselves will all good books, and with languages, tongues and people." Can we do this if we are mentally indolent, mentally slothful?

Let us look at the word righteous, for a moment. Have we not a mental picture, many of us, of some sanctimonious creature, with long face and mournful eyes, who is continually holding before others the thought of his own superiority, and their inferiority? Christ himself referred to the "righteousness of the Pharisees," evidently recognizing this false but popular conception of the word. "Right living." Can one live right by simply asserting his "righteousness"? Does not "right living" imply an understanding of its laws? Does it not imply first an ideal in the mind, noble enough to demand all one's best powers in an effort to attain it, and an intelligent application of the steps necessary to that end?

Living right involves in it, the exertion of positive powers enlisted in the cause of good. It includes a knowledge of the reaction of other minds to our stimuli. It implies a conception of the laws of being, of their operation in regard to others as well as ourselves, and of the methods most effectual to divine purposes. None of us can live unto ourselves alone, and be found "doing that which is right." The "doing" always involves others, and in recognizing this principle only are we upon the right road to a successful, and "righteous" life.

In harmony with these conclusions, do we not, all of us, sense the great importance of studying those particular "good books" which will help us to find our proper places in the scheme of the universe, help us to establish between us and our fellow men that proper relation which will enable us to fulfill the whole law, and to do it in a manner which will liberate the most efficiently those forces for good which are in each of us? Too often our attempts at good are fruitless, because we make them in ignorance of their relation to law. Too often we become discouraged because what we designed for good, has worked an evil.

Thus it is that many noble attempts to relieve suffering and want in the world have fallen short of producing the good designed, and have thus become matters for discouragement and dismay to their makers. The charity doled out in money, is often misspent and misapplied, and the receiver, instead of being helped to a better and more wholesome attitude towards life, is but the more firmly established in his demoralizing processes. Is it not high time that the church as a whole should spend its efforts "for the poor" in that manner which will bring them up out of their poverty, and into the light of individual freedom Christ, that incomparable "light" which reveals the mistakes and delusions, and illuminates the pathway to higher planes?

Can this be done in a day, or a week, or a year? Nay, it must come about through the slow processes of education, of enlightenment, of greater sensitiveness to the working of the divine spirit, and a greater consecration to the "right living" of the principles of life. If we could but analyze the "right living" of the Christ, if we could but see that at no time did he relieve temporal want without at the same time supplying the "bread of life," if we could but follow in his footsteps, leading as they do into paths of service to humanity along the lines of humanity's greatest needs, no more would we cast the penny in the beggar's cup with careless indifference to his soul's poverty! No longer would we witness the "gift without the giver," which is barren to the soul, indeed! No longer would our conception of righteousness be limited to a certain ability to live without actual sin, unless the sin of omission shall, indeed, be counted as grave as that of commission!

Let us arouse to the thought that "life is action." It is not embraced in the simple word existence. Without action, the man is "dead while he yet liveth." How many generations shall it take us to sense this fundamental law! Sometimes it would seem that no one is expressing Christianity to-day except those consecrated souls who "go about doing good." Even those humble workers, who, with fife and drum, attract the despairing ones of the city streets to a casual attention, and then follow up the fragile opportunity with sympathetic interest, with material help, with human encouragement expressed in deeds, might almost be said to be the only true followers of the Great Physician extant to-day! Surely an offering such as theirs will be rich compared to that most of us will have to give—those of us who simply go to the church building on the Sabbath, arise in testimony, give money in tithes—God's property, after all is said and done—but who never leave the safe shelter of our homes in search of those who need ministering care, comfort, and counsel!

Saints, let us awake to a newer vision of what it means to be Christians! Let us understand that our duty is not done, our privileges not enjoyed, until we study to "acquaint" ourselves with people, and learn how to extend to them the help so sorely needed. Sometimes the most needy are those who have plenty to eat and wear. Sometimes it is the rich who are sunken in the direst poverty. "And there were no poor among them." Why? Because they dwelt in right living, "each man seeking the good of his neighbor," in intelligent understanding of the conditions about him, and in loving consecration to the task of helping him to become free in Christ, free to develop the divinity within, free to exercise human rights, free to follow his best aspirations, and to unfold into a semblance of the "perfect man in Christ Jesus"!

The new vision of our work and its possibilities as a "light set upon a hill," to attract all men unto it, is throbbing in the hearts of many of God's chosen people. "Humble and full of love," they are heeding the call to "assist in this work," and gradually there is being crystallized a line of study which shall put into the most practical shape for use in our own church and to the solution of our own problems, much of that which the world has dug out through its years of research and steady application of known principles. We were reminded once that the "children of the world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." Shall we still lag so far behind, or, rather, shall we not grasp what they have to give, make it our own, and move out upon the promises of God, qualify ourselves for service, and say, with entire consecration, "Here am I, Lord; use me for thy glory and the succor of thy creatures"?

Give Sister Smith's article a thoughtful reading. Bring the subject up in your homes. Talk it over with your friends of the household of faith. Examine the history of past dealings in the church with these matters. Discover, if you can, why many methods tried in the branches for the relief of the poor—and the needy—failed, if they did, or succeeded if they were successful. Determine, if you can, who are the "needy," and what your responsibilities in regard to them may be. Ask yourself the questions: "Do I understand the principles of real charity? Do I know how to meet fully my duty in this line? Is there a need for study, for preparation, that I may be counted among the 'righteous,' i. e., those who are 'doing that which is right,' doing, mind you?" If you can answer "yes" to all these questions, then the church needs you. Zion needs you. God needs you. It is time to lay your life on his altar, that those who are awaiting your ministry may receive the life-giving light, be shown the path to spiritual emancipation as well as temporal freedom, in order that ultimately there be "no poor among them."

"The Gift Without the Giver Is Bare"

In times past we all remember when some good person, supposing us to have such and such a physical ailment, zealously shared some pet cure with us, with the assurance that she knew that it would certainly remedy this trouble, for she always used it on all the members of the family, and it worked wonders with them. A case comes to mind of a dear sister who was taken ill on exposure to cold. She patiently submitted to three very different cures from members of the family, and a visiting friend. The case was a complicated one. Giving a few sugared pills was inadequate to relieve the serious condition. The benefactors had satisfied, after a fashion, the impulses of a compassionate nature, but, in reality they did not do a thing for the sick one. They only made matters worse by not having checked the development. You will admit that the thing to have done in that case was to have consulted a doctor at once, some one who knew how and what to do.

That is all very plain. Now, suppose our compassion is aroused, as it has often been, especially with us who are relief workers among the poor of our church. Can we not again recall instances of where some apparently unfortunate one came for help, telling, for example, how her husband was out of work, and that there was no food nor fuel in the house? Have we not known that home to be furnished with all manner of food and supplies, merely upon the story of the needy one? Perhaps we have found later that the husband was shiftless, and there was a reason for his being unemployed. Then, as in the case of the one physically ill, would we not realize that it was a complicated problem? The good friends, meaning well, were not sufficiently skilled in medical science to correct the illness, so that the one giving relief may realize that social science and relief work require skill and training.

Merely to give, out of the goodness of our hearts, will not suffice to-day. The time was, in early days, of life in small villages, towns and the country, when charity was simply the helping hand of a neighbor extended to the unfortunate neighbor by his side. This could be done then, for society was not so complex; people knew one another; knew when they were in trouble and needed help, whether they deserved it or not. To-day, under modern conditions, life, especially in the large cities, has become too complicated to deal with our fellow men in that simple friend-to-friend way. As a substitute for the individual ministrations, organized charity and relief societies are found all over the country. As a part of the complex world we have found the need of such an organization in the church, not only to deal with the poverty-stricken and helpless, but also with those not at all poor in material things, but poor in knowledge, courage and energy in solving their own problems. It is this second class—poor in knowledge—which usually develops into the first class which we call poor and needy. The greater our advice and guidance to the poor in knowledge, the less will be our task to overcome poverty in materials.

As in other organizations, so we, too, feel the accompanying need of having trained workers for this work. As such workers, we must first of all be willing to "do good," as we may be accustomed to term such service; and then prepare to "do good." Our willingness is closely allied with our love for such work. Without that love, we might undertake it in a cold, mechanical manner. Instead, we should be the friendly visitor among the poor, bringing sunshine, courage and employment. Nothing defeats our aims so much as that spirit of patronage, alms-bringing and self-consideration on the part of the relief worker. We should bear the burdens of the poor on our hearts as did the Master who so mercifully uttered, "Blessed are the poor." "Come unto me, all ye that are heavy laden." "Ask, and it shall be given unto you."

That which "shall be given" is what requires preparation on our part. If relief were merely giving out food, clothes or money, the task would not require special training. The difference between scientific treatment and mere giving is like that between the doctor's office and the drug store. At the drug store you expect nothing to accompany your purchase of drugs, but at the doctor's office you expect advice and counsel, and perhaps a prescription that you may take to the drug store. The experienced doctor takes pains to prescribe as few drugs as he can. He is afraid of getting people into the drug habit; and the wise relief worker is just as cautious in giving out financial aid, for he is afraid of getting people into the alms habit. Such habits result in leaving people just as poor at the end of the year as they were at the beginning, to say nothing of their loss of self-respect and unwillingness to do honest work.

In our helping the poor we shall find that judicious and timely advice is the most helpful thing we can give. In order that the relief and service departments all over our church may give that advice, may be able to go to the heart of a person's trouble, seek out the cause and cure it, we are anxious to supply relief workers everywhere with the information that is so much needed: How to make thorough investigation of the case, not only getting the individual or family story, but getting certain facts from relatives, schools, doctors, health agencies, other social agencies, employers, previous residences, churches and from others who have viewed the family from different vantage grounds. It is necessary not only to gather information, but to get suggestions for, and help in, carrying out a plan for betterment.

Just as a physician needs to know what are the physical defects of his patient, what caused them, how they are related, what there is in the habits of life or family history which will explain them, and whether their care calls for special diet, exercise, an operation, hospital care, change of environment or the use of drugs—just so the relief worker, in order to restore the poor and needy to normal, must know the causes of their poverty, what there is in the family history and habits of life that will explain them, what resources there are, physical, spiritual, financial, to help in the treatment of the case, and whether this calls for medical care, education, employment, better environment or a combination of these.

Some of the points to study are: When to interview the various sources for all this information; the order in which to interview them; how to interpret the data obtained. Treatment follows investigation just as treatment follows diagnosis in the case of physical illness. A plan of treatment to be successful, must include ways of winning the cooperation of the family itself, and of the forces in the community and church; all should work towards the same end; to help the poor out of their poverty and not in their poverty, to do with the family and not for the family.

As a relief and service bureau, we can not hope to adequately take care of our poor by remaining apart from all other outside forces. We must cooperate in various ways. For example: we may find a case where it may be necessary to secure employment for the oldest girl, to arrange for a course in domestic science for the wife, to secure the cooperation of the truancy department for the willful boy who shirks school, to ask the aid of the health department in abating a bad sanitary condition in or near the home.

To work them out in the best possible way obviously requires cooperation on the part of all concerned. The drain on the coffers of the church to supply the needs of the poor is great. May we feel that we should make every effort to help eliminate poverty from our midst, that the needy will be restored to a normal life of health, education, employment, recreation and spiritual development? May we make such preparation that in word and in deed it may be said of us, "He took him by the hand and lifted him up"?

MABEL KNIPSCHILD SMITH.

In Church

I go to church with mother 'cause
She says she loves to have me there.
She says my eyes are big and round,
And that there's sunshine in my hair—
She says I make it twice as sweet,
And that I fill her heart with prayer.

The people sit so very still,
With sort of sleepy, stary eyes;
They rustle, yawn or look through books.

They look so stupid or so wise,
I wonder God delights in them
When He is looking from the skies.

But mother's eyes have little lights
That make her different and dear;
She often smiles down just at me,
As if to say, "I'm glad you're here."
And takes my hand so warm and snug,
It makes my heart feel sort of queer.

And once I told her that my church
Was just the bit of bluest sky,
And dancing leaves the window shows,
The little window we sit by—
I told her that I loved that best,
And she said, "Darling, so do I."

AFTER SERVICE

"A social time and an exchange of greetings are permissible. Let us be careful of our talk, or the world will soon slip back into our hearts. Let us remember him we have worshiped, what we have heard. Resolve and try to live a better life."

ORDER OF ENOCH, OR THE UNITED ORDER

ganize, seven of these eleven men were given their stewardships; some had broken their covenant by covetousness and with feigned words, and a very sore and grievous curse was pronounced upon them, but not another man named as a member of the order. If any besides these eleven men were admitted into the order, I have failed to find any account of it.

Seeing that these men held the high priesthood and were called by revelation, and their duties and the object for which they were to organize so plainly stated, I think we are safe in saying that they were practically an order of bishops. I do not claim that they were all ordained to the office of bishop, but as they held the high priesthood they could do the work and perform the duties of bishops.

ment of a chorister for this new district with pleasure, for they believe that it marks a distinct step in the progress of our musical work. It is indeed momentous to them and to the church in general that the musical impetus now being felt in the church has extended itself even "to the islands of the sea." May it succeed there and may it further spread to other remote lands, bearing its valued fruitage.

Sister Kahanamoku does not enter the work of her new office without experience. She is a native of the race to which she will minister, and up to the time of her selection for this work she was in charge of the choir of the branch at Honolulu, and was already using material recommended to her by others interested in the choir work. We regret that we can give no further account of this sister, for the advance notices concerning her do not enable us to do so. But, success in ample measure to her.

General Secretary.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

The Religious Education Class at Graceland

I have felt for some time that perhaps many of the readers of the HERALD would like to hear a word or two from some of the members of the new class, which was started this year at Graceland College; namely, the class in religious education.

I do not pose as the one best qualified to accept this responsibility, in fact I am one of the poorest ones, and my only excuse for writing is, that I desire to show my appreciation of the blessings I enjoy.

I have been the recipient of a great many blessings from the Lord in my life, the greatest one undoubtedly is, that I was born to godly parents, who taught me the ways of the Lord from my early childhood. The next greatest blessing is the opportunity to prepare for service in the church of God.

The Lord watched over me and led me all through my life. Last spring when the call came from the President of the church for volunteers, it found me in Graceland College, trying to prepare for efficient service in the Master's work.

I had tasted of the Spirit of God to the extent that I was filled with the desire to serve him, by going out into this sin-cursed world and telling the story of peace and salvation. So when I saw the call in the HERALD, my whole soul longed to respond. It looked to me like the grandest opportunity which could come to man.

I took the matter to God in earnest fasting and prayer for several days, that I might be guided aright in this matter. All this time the desire to enlist kept increasing and the burning in my breast never ceased.

One evening, I picked up my Inspired Bible and opened to the eighth chapter of Mark, and read from the 36th verse to the end of the chapter. As I read I enjoyed one of the grandest experiences of my life. The 37th and 38th verses seemed to come out and meet me. They just burned themselves into my very soul, until I realized as never before what Jesus meant when he said, "But whosoever shall be willing to lose his life for my sake, and the gospel's, the same shall save it." I felt at that time that I would be willing to make the sacrifice. The next morning I made application for the course, and, thank God, I was selected as one among a number of others, to spend a year in training and preparation in Graceland College with a view of service to the church in foreign fields.

I do not believe it would be out of place to say here that every student in this class is heart and soul in the work, and is looking anxiously for time when they will be intrusted with a mission in the church.

Our greatest aim at present is to make a success in our work at Graceland. Whether we are measuring up to what is expected of us, is not for me to say, but I can say that I am not at all discouraged. We are carrying a heavy course, but it is all very enjoyable. Our class periods are interesting and inspiring. The good Spirit is often felt in our midst, which is an encouraging feature.

I would like to say a few words in behalf of our worthy instructors. I fear that as a church, and as students in Graceland, we do not appreciate, as we should, the men and women we have in our college. F. M. McDowell, C. E. Wight, Heman H. Smith and others have given years of time, a great deal of hard work, and all the money they could get, in order to qualify themselves that they might continue to sacrifice, that the young, especially of the church, might have an opportunity to learn.

They are great men; they are doing a great work; and they will receive a great reward.

May God continue to bless them and the work which is nearest their hearts, is my prayer, in Jesus' name.

RAY WHITING.

The Work of the Schools

Dear Coworkers: We believe that all the good Sunday school workers will agree that those schools who worked so faithfully and devotedly for the Christmas offering last year should have mention in the church papers. We did publish the names of all the schools who responded with $2 per member and over, but we did not tell you of the many schools who gave double this amount and over. We believe they should have special mention.

Huntsville, Missouri, carried off the honors in 1918, with an average of 25.01 per member. You must all agree that this is a remarkable record, one that Huntsville can be proud of, and we all congratulate them for their most earnest and devoted effort. Next in line comes the good school of Kimball, Ontario, with an average of $20 per member. You will all remember this good school as being the one in which the members worked together and planted a patch of potatoes. Then follows Vinalhaven, Maine. They were the leaders in 1917, and in 1918 they beat their 1917 average, which is surely a commendable record.

No one can doubt but that God has abundantly remembered these good schools which have done so nobly, and we feel grateful for the splendid manner in which our schools rallied to the support of this movement.

Following is a list of all schools (which reported to us) averaging $4 per member and over.

Who is to be at the top in 1919?

SOMERVILLE, MASSACHUSETTS, November 1, 1919.

Editors Herald: Perhaps some of your readers will be interested to learn of my movements since I said farewell to the hundred or more Saints who gathered at the depot to bid me godspeed in Philadelphia. The very warm place in my heart which remains for the Philadelphia Saints is made precious and lasting by our two years of pleasant associations. They are so many I could not well name them all.

After a short visit at home I went to Connecticut and held meetings in Groton and New London at the homes of Thomas Whipple and Rose Tourtellot, who always welcome the missionary and help to make his work a success. A few years ago I was the innocent subject of a controversy that resulted in the breaking up of a mission in the latter place. Some of its supporters wanted me to preach there, and when those in charge refused to permit this some of them withdrew their help and opened their homes for me to preach in. Since then they have remained my friends, and at some future day I may see further results, perhaps.

While here I baptized the daughter of Brother and Sister Crandall, my neice, and blessed the grandchildren of Sister Merritt, whose faith and staunchness in the latter-day message has been well tested and proven. The families of the Saints in this part of the State are much scattered and some have come up through that tribulation which presages the heavenly reward promised the white-robed throng. The watchful eye of the Father is surely on them for good, to be some day revealed.

This is the homeland of my people—near this town and in it—and of the Rogerine Quakers of whom my mother was one. It was one of her ancestors who designed the machinery of the first steamboat to successfully ride the waters. It is also the place of the old-time witchery superstitions that are still held in traditional story in this vicinity. One of these enterprising old-timers, having purchased the first clock ever seen by his neighbors, was compelled to take it into his field and bury it because they felt sure it must be possessed of a devil, else how could those hands creep around the face of the clock so mysteriously! The silent weights that made the clock go did not lessen the puzzle to them.

In Westerly, Rhode Island, we have some faithful Saints, and in the home of Brother Wilkes I administered the sacrament of communion, and also the word to a few who assembled. May the future bring its reward to these steadfast souls and others see their delight. We have a few friends of our message here also. Brother Gates has faithfully visited the little flock here and I am sure that he will find his reward.

Of my next trip, to Maine, I hope to write at a later time.

Editors Herald: Kewanee district has just held another conference at Dahinda, Illinois, a little town only a few miles away from Galesburg, where the beginning of this district was had, back in the very early 60's. Kewanee is the oldest district in the Reorganized Church. One hundred and eighty-five times has the district assembled in conference. Many, many of the church's ablest men labored and took part in these sessions. Varied and difficult the questions which have engaged their deliberations.

As we look back over the records that show their transactions, we cannot fail to be impressed with the growth in some directions and the change in others. Whether the changes all indicate growth, time only can tell. But we are moving! And as was suggested at this session, we make changes with the hope that we are bettering our condition. Our methods must be adapted to present-day conditions, and surely we should study to meet God's approval upon our efforts.

But the past is gone. To-day another generation carries on the work of the Lord in this district. But God blesses these as he did their fathers. Their testimony is like unto those who have gone before.

Rain and other reasons kept many away so that the attendance was not as good as of late years. Not all of the branches were represented. But we had Brother F. G. Pitt and Sister Pitt with us as well as the Kewanee missionary force, Brother J. W. Smith and Brother Okerlind, to help make the meetings a success. Brother C. I. Carpenter, who was sent by the joint council to preside over the district, was in charge.

The order of the meetings was changed and the business session of the church was held on Friday afternoon. Saturday was occupied largely with Sunday school and Religion matters.

Brother and Sister Pitt and the Dahinda Saints furnished some very good music. The Dahinda Saints did exceptionally well in caring for the Saints and a very good and kindly spirit seemed to prevail throughout. We trust that good was accomplished.

At the round table discussion questions submitted by the members were considered. Will mention a few that you may see the trend of the thoughts of the Saints. No "arguments" were had, but many good points were brought out and suggested:

"How can we raise money to carry on the district organization of Sunday school and Religio?" "In cases of differences of opinion in branches regarding any matter, what shall be the attitude of the minority?" "Answer (which seemed to be accepted), submit to majority and wait for time to vindicate your position, or carry it to the next higher authority until satisfied or until the church decides, and then if it be against you submit and realize that you must be in the wrong."

"How can the priesthood, especially the local men, better qualify to preach the gospel?" Also the matter of expulsion and excommunication were explained by the one in charge.

Many other matters were spoken of briefly. It seemed that considerable light was given and quite a degree of interest shown.

The desire seemed to be to improve the detail work as well as better qualify spiritually.

Editors Herald: Brother W. W. Chrestensen has just closed a short meeting at our schoolhouse a few miles distant. In fact it did not last a week, only six sermons in all, but my! they were fine. He surely knows how to present the truth forcefully and rightfully dividing the word of truth. He had such a short stay with us on account of other pressing engagements. He led four down to the water's edge, where the sacred ordinance of baptism was administered. On Sunday, November 2, and at the night service five babies were blessed. This was the first time we had ever seen that beautiful ordinance at this place. We had good crowds and good interest each time, but Satan was on the job as usual and tried to stir up confusion one night after church, in the form of a Campbellite gentleman talking and trying to get a debate between their belief and the Saints. He became very angry but Brother Chrestensen had remarkable patience with him, insomuch he gained many friends, thereby. The people are not prejudiced against the work here so much as they formerly were. They all seemed to want Brother Chrestensen back again in the near future and we surely hope he may, for we believe there are several others very near the kingdom. We have the assurance that the world has not yet received the true gospel.

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI, November 7, 1919.

Editors Herald: Southern Missouri held their quarterly conference at the Pleasant Hope schoolhouse Saturday and Sunday, November 1 and 2. On account of the high water in the rivers and creeks there was a very small delegation present, but as Elder H. E. Winegar had been holding meetings there the previous week the conference was well advertised throughout the neighborhood, and there was a good turn-out of nonmembers to each meeting.

Three instructive and inspiring talks on Sunday school work were given by F. A. Gale, H. E. Winegar and B. E. Brown. The sacrament was administered. Will meet at Tigris, the Saturday and Sunday nearest the full moon of February. Preaching by F. A. Gale, B. E. Brown, and Benjamin Pearson.

BRUCE E. BROWN.

EROS, LOUISIANA, October 26, 1919.

Editors Herald: I have been a subscriber to the HERALD for four or five years, but I have been a reader almost all my life, as my dear old father and mother have received the paper for many years. It has been a source of comfort to us, as it helps us to strive onward in the Master's cause.

I am very glad I heard and obeyed the restored gospel, though many times I have erred from the straight path. The Lord has helped me in the recent sickness and death of our darling baby, who died from croup.

I was ordained to the office of priest last spring. I have preached a few times and have done some other work in the church. I hope the Lord will make known to me the cause for taking our only child. I am willing to give my baby to the Lord, but would like to know why he was taken so soon. I hope some one will answer the question soon.

Yours for the cause of Christ,

ERWIN PHILLIPS.

BLOOMSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, November 1, 1919.

Editors Herald: Sunday, October 26, 1919 will go down in the history of this branch as an important day. Our building is now free from debt and was dedicated by Bishop McGuire and Bishop Zimmerman. Brother McGuire preached the dedicatory sermon and Bishop Zimmermann made the dedicatory prayer. Brother Ephriam Squire and Brother A. D. Angus presided at the sacrament service. At this service Brothe Alma Angus was ordained to the office of deacon. Brother Edmund J. Glazer preached Sunday evening and was to conduct services during the week. Elder R. J. Hawkins who assisted in the opening up of the work in this town was also present. Elder H. A. Cunningham is in charge of the work here and we feel with the cooperation of the membership that he will establish the work firmly in this town.

ment of future premiums. This means, that if a policy had lapsed for six months, and a man reinstated and paid six months' premiums instead of two months, he may secure credit for four months' advance premiums.

This provision for reinstatement, however, does not protect a man until he actually reinstates. Also he must be in as good health as he was at the time of discharge. Hence the advisability of prompt action.

The World Labor Conference

Delegates from thirty-two nations were present at the first meeting in Washington of the World Conference on behalf of labor.

W. B. Wilson, United States Secretary of Labor, was chosen as chairman, and accepted it as an honor paid to the American people. In his opening address he lays down the proposition, that two great problems confront mankind.

First: Production. But the inventive genius of man has solved that question to a large extent. The people of the world can produce sufficient for the material comfort of all born into it.

Second: Provided, however, that there is an ample opportunity to work under proper safeguard, and that the things are distributed equitably and justly.

The solution of this latter problem will mean the achievement of the greatest material ideals that we have before us at present.

As it is a world problem, Germans and Austrians will be admitted on the same footing as other participants.

NEWS AND COMMENT

The National Wholesale Druggists Association, in their convention in New Orleans resolved not to sell alcoholic liquors for any purpose, and also to discontinue the sale of preparations which could be made to serve as intoxicating beverages. In the future the only way in which they will handle alcohol will be in the preparations which cannot under any circumstances be used as beverages.

The government of Italy and the Papacy are nearer together than they have ever been before, since Italy won her independence. It is noteworthy that every Pope for nearly four hundred years has been an Italian. But this was not the case prior to the early 16th century, as other men of Western Europe were called to that important position. But at present, at least half of the cardinals and the Pope are Italian; and those having active charge of the work of the Papacy are almost without exception, citizens of Italy, native born.

The press reports that many of the parsons in England are almost in revolt, as they are paid less than is the unskilled worker. The war pension committee besought help of a clergyman to make certain inquiries in his parish, but he replied that the clergy was suffering more than any other class.

One thousand union retail clerks are striking in New York for a nine-hour day, and thirty dollars a week. At present they are paid from eighteen to twenty-eight dollars, and work from ten to fourteen hours.

General Pershing, when called before the Senate committee, insisted that the army plan is too big. Three hundred thousand men, raised by voluntary enlistment should be the outside figure for a standing army, and that anything undertaken in military training should be plainly based on a democratic basis, by having general educational work combined with it, and military discipline being somewhat relaxed. They also consider that the request for two hundred and thirty-one general staff officers as being excessive. This is of great interest providing we find it necessary to resort to militarism. The less we can have of it, the better.

In the Los Angeles Times, October 19, appears a curious article concerning a theory by a Portland student, that Adam and Eve made their first home in Missouri, where was the Garden of Eden. They and their descendants then proceeding westward, where Sodom and Gomorrah were located where Utah is now; and the city of Jerusalem was near Los Angeles; Mount Whitney was Sinai, and that Moses lies buried at its base; Noah's ark settled in southern California, and the Israelites went southwest from Salt Lake, to California, and that the Pacific coast reaching down somewhat into Mexico was the promised land. If this were the case, Egypt was not, as is ordinarily supposed, along the Nile, but the Egypt from which they fled was in the American Desert. The article does not disclose the reasoning on which he (Mr. L. B. Larsen) bases this.

Alcoholic beverages were a factor in the causation of insanity of nearly every male patient admitted to the Independence. Iowa, State Hospital during the months of February and March, 1919.

LOST WITH LIEUTENANT PIKE.—By Edwin L. Sabin, 315 pages. Price $1.35, J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia. Another chapter is added in this book to Edwin L. Sabin's historical stories of adventure for boys—stories that are as delightful to read as they are instructive. Real American boys, who love and are proud of their native land, will follow with close interest this story of Lieutenant Pike and his helpers in winning the West; and of how from the Pawnee village the boy named Scar Head marched with the young American chief clear into the snowy mountains (Pike's Peak was one of their discoveries); how in the dead of winter they searched for the lost river and thought that they had found it; and how the Spanish soldiers came upon them and took them down to Santa Fe of New Mexico, where another surprise awaited them. Those were great days, and those were great men who adventured into the unknown West; and this is a good time to remember and honor them, for the mortality among soldiers and explorers then was as great as among the heroes of the Great War just ended, and they bore hardships even greater! This is a splendid story of splendid adventure.

FROM HERE AND THERE

Elder William Sparling has been holding a series of meetings at Dunn Center, North Dakota, during the past week. On Saturday, conventions and apparently conference business meetings were to be held at the same place.

A letter was received recently at the Presidency's office, dated October 6, announcing the safe arrival of Bishop A. V. Karlstrom and wife at Papeete, Tahiti. They had a pleasant trip. Sister Karlstrom suffered from seasickness but Brother Karlstrom experienced no trouble. The HERALD editors have received a letter from J. W. Rushton, of the same party, who states that he and Brother Hanson are well and sound. His letter will be published next week.

In connection with the course in religious education at Graceland College, Elder J. A. Koehler gave two lectures before the class recently. The general subject was, "The agency of man." The first lecture was on, "Man a self-conscious being," the second on "Conduct." These lectures given on various subjects at stated times by representative men of the church are of inestimable value in broadening the mind and development of original thought.

We have heard of various localities who have organized information bureaus among the local priesthood, so incoming members might receive reliable information and assistance in getting located. We have a letter now from Elder J. E. Benson, of 1233 East Dennison Avenue, Davenport, Iowa, stating that in that city the priesthood had so organized and call themselves the Latter Day Saint Information Bureau. Anyone interested in that locality, which include the Tri-Cities of Davenport, Rock Island, and Moline should take notice.

Quite frequently people write to us for a history of all the church periodicals. As nothing of this kind has ever been put into print (that is a complete statement) we suggest that such inquirers will find much of special interest in lesson one of the Junior Religio Quarterly for the present quarter. One whole lesson is devoted to this topic and contains information worthy of preserving as well as for present information.

PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT ACT

The passing by Congress of the Prohibition Enforcement Act over the President's veto, shows an enforcement of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution. The enforcement code fixes the maximum alcoholic contents at one-half of one per cent, and provides heavy penalties for violation.

The liquor forces evidently intend a severe and prolonged fight.

A GOOD CHRISTMAS EXERCISE

To Superintendents and Program Committees: We have secured from Sister Alberta Lake an original exercise for girls taken from the Book of Mormon prophecies of Christ's coming and the signs given to this continent. It was given in the Boston school two years ago and pronounced fine by the Saints there. You will find it in the last issue of Stepping Stones for November. Watch for it. Get the parts assigned early and have something that will be an honor to the Christ. It is better than impersonating Santa Claus.

G. R. WELLS.

The last of October Bishop James F. Keir, and the church auditor, R. B. Trowbridge, spent several days on church business in North Dakota.

The church auditor spent a few days in Lamoni November 8th-11th in connection with his office work.

THE INDEPENDENCE ORCHESTRA

We learn from The Holden Progress that the Liberty Orchestra of thirty-seven pieces, under the direction of the Religio of Independence, was to be in Holden November 9 and 10. Saturday's concert was given at the auditorium of the Old Folks' Home, and a sacred concert was given Sunday afternoon at the church.

Anyone having copies of the Autumn Leaves for March, April, and May, 1919, which they will to part with, please communicate with Professor T. J. Fitzpatrick, Bethany, Nebraska, who wishes to secure copies of these issues.

Bishop A. Carmichael and wife returned recently to Lamoni from California, Sister Carmichael much improved by her stay in the West, though not in normal health.

Word has been received from Brother Harry Passman, that he and wife have arrived at Basel, Switzerland.

THE STUDENT IN THE MINISTRY

Is He a Menace? Does He Presage Authority?

(Sermon by Elbert A. Smith, at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, Sunday, October 26, 1919. Reported by Howard W. Harder.)

I. THE COMMISSION

Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain. . . —John 15:16.

In connection with the text that I have just read, I desire to talk on the subject of priestly authority. I presume that when we begin to talk about the question of authority, right at the start there may develop differences of opinion, but they will probably be concerning definitions rather than essential features. Some perhaps would argue that authority arises out of a man's spiritual development and that it is recognized rather than conferred by the commission received from God and the church; while I would be disposed to argue that authority is conveyed by the commission, but that our ability and power to move out under the authority committed, depends on many factors, among which are mental and spiritual development. I would argue that so far as priestly authority is concerned, all elders, for example, are equal, all priests are equal, all high priests are equal, but obviously ability to move out and exercise under the terms of the authority differs greatly.

I would contend that with the restoration of priesthood in the latter days authority did not spring out of the personal righteousness of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery and others, but that something was committed by angelic hands that came from God and is handed down to other men by the process of ordination. You will notice there is a very interesting point right there if we want to draw the line between authority and power. Where shall we draw it? I am not prepared to say, but you may think about it—it will be good food for thought.

We would all agree, perhaps, that in a general way the authority of the priesthood comes under the general commission to the church and the priesthood, which includes the injunction to preach the gospel in all the world, to feed the sheep, to build up the Saints —in a word, to perform any and all functions of a priestly nature contemplated by the commandment to build up the kingdom of heaven, and that it includes also the individual call and the individual ordination. I do not propose to pause to argue long on this last question. We are all committed to the thought that before a man can represent God as a minister he must be called of God and receive his ordination.

I am addressing a people who believe in the principle of priesthood. Our books trace it back as far as Adam, as you will see by reading section 104 of the Doctrine and Covenants. We believe it was lost during the Dark Ages and restored again. Our belief in that marks us as unique and different from all other people, and certainly there we have something that other people do not have or else we deceive ourselves and others.

I will pass, then, to the second division of the subject, upon which there may be more differences of opinion, and to which we may find it necessary to give greater consideration, that is the ability or the power of the individual to move out and occupy under the terms of the divine commission. I believe this depends, first, upon divine blessing from on high; second, upon the natural talents and abilities of the individuals; and, third, upon his acquired ability, and that one may acquire ability through experience and through study.

Concerning the idea of the divine blessing, an example in point is the commandment of the Master to the apostles of old, "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." These men had consorted with Jesus Christ for a number of years; they had talked with him intimately; they had imbibed his teachings; and, more than that, they had received their commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel." Each one had been called and each one had been ordained, for the Master said, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, . . ." And yet after all that, they were commanded to tarry and wait until they were endowed with power from on high. A similar commandment was given to the early elders of this church.

This is a principle that we must never lose sight of, because if any individual believes that he can move out in his ministry without receiving power from on high, his ministry is doomed to failure.

II. ABILITY TO OCCUPY UNDER THE COMMISSION

The ability to occupy under the terms of the commission will depend also somewhat upon individual talents and capabilities. It is obvious that men differ vastly along those lines. We may say that all elders are equal in point of authority, but send two of them out into the field together and one of them will reach more people, he will influence more lives, he will cover a larger area, he will leave a bigger thumb print on the pages of church history. And there are reasons for that.

It is obvious that among the apostles of old, Peter and Paul, for instance, were more capable than some of the others. I do not know which of the two was by nature the more able. Evidently Paul had acquired more ability along some lines and had an advantage by reason of his vast learning and his great experience. Now, mark this, Paul was not only willing, he was able to become "all things to all men." While Peter could reach some classes, Paul could reach all classes. It is true that Paul said to the Corinthians, "I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified"; but when he talked to the Romans and the Athenians it was evident that he knew a great many things. Evidently we must take that saying to have a local meaning, "I determined not to know anything among you," or else the term "Jesus Christ and him crucified," was meant to have a broader application than we have sometimes thought.

Some of Paul's greatest arguments were based on his knowledge of Roman law. As for instance his arguments on the last will and testament of Jesus are based on his thorough knowledge of Roman law on wills and testaments. Also when he met the cultured and refined Athenians on Mars Hill, he was able to quote from their own poets, "as certain also of your own poets may have said, 'We are also his offspring.'"

I do not suppose Peter knew anything about the Greek poets, or cared to, but Paul had that knowledge and he used it to help win an audience on Mars Hill. He was able to consort with sailors and help them to bring their ship out of the tempest, and yet with equal composure he was able to go into the courts of the day and reason with kings, and meet them as their peer, if not their superior in point of culture.

I do not believe that one man should receive more credit than another because he is naturally more talented, and one man ought not to be blamed because he has less natural ability than another man. But the principle is that each man should take the talents that have been given to him, be they few or many, and seek to improve upon them and increase them so that he may receive other talents. And so far as that is concerned, if all are equally diligent, all are equally honorable.

Passing by, then, the question of natural ability, we come to the question of acquired ability, which I have said may be obtained through experience and through study.

We all recognize that experience is one of the greatest of teachers. We do not need to argue that question. But when we come to the question of study, it raises in turn the question of education, and on that there seems to be a diversity of opinion. It is said that on one occasion an act was passed by the British Parliament entitled, "An act to prevent differences of opinion." Evidently it did not work in England, and I presume it would not work among our people. I do not think we need to be too greatly concerned, either, if there are differences of opinion, providing the argument is clean and honest and square and Christ-like, and I do not care to indulge in any other.

I have heard it said that people are tired of hearing about education from this pulpit. Well, I have not bored you often with that subject. But I have no wish to avoid it, because it comes along logically in the outline of my sermon; also, it seems to be a live question. If it is talked about on the streets and in the stores, why should it not be discussed from the pulpit?

Let me state my position on education among the ministry. I believe that our men must be filled with a burning fire, an all-pervading conviction that they have a message that no other ministers have and that God has called them and sent them out to preach it. Given this prerequisite, I see no reason why our men should not have a broad and liberal education: I see many reasons why they should have such an education, and the broader the better.

Right on that point I wish to quote from the editorial pen of the late President Joseph Smith. He is arguing for a college, as this was before we had one. He says:

An institution of learning, such as a college will be, is clearly needed by us as a people; for while we may not believe in a college-bred ministry, we do believe that, other things being equal, the educated man has the advantage in every vocation, that of a minister included."—HERALD, volume 41, p. 97.

Of course, we do not believe in a college-made ministry. Graceland College cannot make ministers for God; we cannot make them by any process. We cannot make preachers in Graceland College, and if our men ever get the thought that by going to Graceland, learning a few facts, and going through a certain prescribed course, they can become ministers for God, we may as well close up shop—we will have left only cold altars, dying embers, and traditions of a glorious past. God must call and endow them, but I agree with President Joseph Smith that, all other things being equal, the minister who has an education has a decided advantage. We will suppose that you send two men to France in 1921, equal in spiritual fervor and in zeal: the one of the two who goes there with a knowledge of the French language, French law, French history, French customs, and French thought will have a distinct advantage. Send two men into any field, the men being equal in all other things, equal in their consecration and zeal, the one of the two who has the broader range of knowledge will be the better servant of the church.

I want you to bear in mind the prerequisites that I have named, as I proceed with my talk about education. I had a little conversation with a brother one time. I will not attempt to quote him, but the general run of his talk was that he was tired of our preachers studying. He said they ought to go into the stand empty and let the Lord fill their mouths. Well, that may have its advantage, perhaps of a limited nature. A colored preacher once said, "These men what writes out their sermons, the Debbil looks right over their shoulders and knows ebery word what they is goin' to say; but when I gets up to preach, neither God, man, nor the Debbil knows what I is goin' to say!"

While I would not argue for written sermons, there are too many indirect sermons that do not start anywhere in particular, do not get anywhere in particular, and do not pass anything of interest on the way. When I hear a man preach, I like to hear one who has some sort of notion where he is going and what he is going to talk about.

Finally, I said to this brother: "Will you name your ideal preacher?" He thought a moment and then refused. Then I asked him to name two or three that to his mind most nearly represent God in the ministry to-day. He again declined and said that I was not going to catch him in a trap. The chances are that if he had named one he would have named a student, and he knew it and I knew it, so he avoided the trap.

I am going to ask you the same question this morning. You don't need to stand up and name your ideal preachers this morning, but who are they? Well, I imagine some one says J. J. Cornish. I have reason to believe, however, that from the day that Brother Cornish began studying assiduously that he might read his own texts, until to-day, he has been a student. Some one may name T. W. Williams, but from the day he laid down his pick and shovel and came up out of the coal mine and went into the ministry he has been a keen student of a great variety of subjects. The same would apply to Heman C. Smith in a different way.

Would you name John W. Rushton? From the day when he quit rolling pills in an apothecary's shop and went out to serve the Great Physician he has been a student. He has been accused of memorizing the dictionary and then inventing a few words of his own. Would you name Paul Hanson? He has been so much of a student that he took time from his ministry to take a course in law. Would you name E. L. Kelley? He was superintendent of public instruction in Mills County before he entered the ministry.

Some one has named W. W. Blair as an unlettered representative of God, but I am told that his son David has a shelf of books from Brother Blair's old library in which are found books on ethics, philosophy, and psychology, the most up-to-date works that W. W. Blair could obtain in his day. Would you name Gomer T. Griffiths? I once heard a little story on Brother Griffiths; I do not know as to its accuracy, but it is said that on one occasion he took a shot or two at education and when he came down from the pulpit his good wife said to him, "Gomer, you ought to be ashamed. Don't you remember the many long winter evenings that we spent studying grammar together, so that you would be able to preach the gospel?" I myself heard him say that he once spent the greater part of one night learning to pronounce the word "spurious" so that he could use it in his sermon next day. In his own way, he was a student.

Would you name the late President Joseph Smith? Perhaps he is nearest the ideal of many. Do you not know that he accumulated a rather remarkable private library, that he studied and read hundreds and thousands of books on the greatest variety of subjects, and that he, more than any other man, was the founder of Graceland College? I myself saw him with his own hand lay the corner stone, and heard him with his lips dedicate the finished structure. Shall we bless the father who founded the college and damn the son who would make it useful? Shall we sing the praises of Joseph to the very tune of the anvil chorus that we hammer out on the cranium of Fred M.? Let us be consistent.

I might go on and name many others in the leading quorums of the church whom I have heard preach and in hundreds of their discourses I have noticed that they went out in the realms of literature, history, philosophy, science, and archæology and brought back arguments with which to reinforce their discourses, as Joseph Luff did the last time he preached from this stand, when he brought many of his arguments from the school of medicine.

But here is the point I want to make: Not one of these men, or any other man, having wandered in all these fields through all these years and brought back gems with which to adorn his sermons and weapons with which to drive home his arguments, has a right now to put up the bars and say to the young men, "Keep out! I had brains enough and spirituality enough to go through all these studies without injuring me as a minister for Christ, but we cannot trust you." That would be pitiably futile, because there comes on an army of vigorous young men who would brush us away together with the bars we erect, and go in. So far as I am concerned, I say, Let them go in. May they search further and dig deeper than we have ever done. And every time they go out and bring back a diamond of truth and hold it up to the light of the gospel, it will flash back the serene rays of truth; and every foolish bauble that they pick up will be exposed.

I want to tell you of my own experience. Not that I class myself with these great preachers I have named: that list is finished and we go on to another argument.

If I were prejudiced, it would be against higher education, because I never had an opportunity to attend college, or even high school. When my father became incapacitated for his ministry, when I was less than five years old, my mother and I were left to our own resources. The church very quietly and very persistently left us quite alone, and I never had a dollar from the church to aid me in securing my education. Do not understand me to complain about the church—its hands were full. This is the point: I saw very early that if I would overcome the handicap placed on me I must educate myself. I contend that I have always been a student, and I always expect to be a student. I do not say this to boast, because I realize now that my achievements have been meager and that there are many ragged holes in my education due to a lack of direction in my study; but I do identify myself with the student body of the church.

I have said that I have aligned myself with the student class, and the mere fact that one brother may study under a college roof and another under a university roof, while I study under a cottage roof makes no difference, so far as I know, in the sight of God. The principle is the same.

I have heard it said more than once that perhaps we are approaching an apostasy. We are told, "The church has been rejected once and it may be rejected again," in connection with this idea of education. If the growing student body of the church must be classed with Brigham Young and his foul doctrines that brought the church into that apostate condition, then I, with others of the student body, ought to be impeached. But whoever rises to unfrock me, let me serve him this notice, that he must be a man who has limited himself strictly to the standard books of the church, or I will impeach him by the same evidence that he brings against me. If he has so much as looked into Webster's Dictionary to find the definition of a word he has gone to a "worldly and carnal" book which draws its definitions and illustrations from every known source of worldly learning. If a man will draw the line, let him take the three books and leave all else out.

It is reported that in one of our western pulpits a brother stood up and said, "Thank God I am ignorant so that the Lord can use me." It seems to me that betrays a total lack of comprehension concerning the relation of the minister to his God. Even if the preacher is only a tool, it is a poor illustration. I have an old, rusty, dull ax at home, but I never say when I am using it, "I thank God this is a dull old ax so that I can use it." But God doesn't look at us as inanimate tools. We are colaborers. We are his partners. I never saw a partnership that was made stronger because one member of the firm was ignorant.

I must hasten on. I believe that my position in this matter is confirmed by three things: 1, By my conscience. I do not need to submit proof for that. 2, By the books of the church. 3, By the historic precedents of the church.

I will read just briefly from the books of the church, first from a section in Doctrine and Covenants. I do not wish to garble or distort, but, obviously I cannot read the whole section, so I will take only the part that bears upon the theme:

And now, verily I say unto you, I give unto you a commandment, that you continue in the ministry and presidency, and when you have finished the translation of the prophets, you shall from henceforth preside over the affairs of the church and the school; and from time to time, as shall be manifest by the Comforter, receive revelations to unfold the mysteries of the kingdom, and set in order the churches, and study and learn, and become acquainted with all good books, and with languages, tongues, and people. . .—87: 5.

I know it will be charged in reply that this was addressed to Joseph Smith and his counselors; but shall we assume that these men as leaders and exemplars to the eldership are to move out and obtain a knowledge of all good books while their followers are to be checked at the very threshold? Shall you confine yourself to the three books and to such dribbles of knowledge as you may catch when the Presidency turns the spigot? There would surely be an insurrection if that were the argument of the Presidency, but it is not their argument. If I may study all good books, and languages as well, any deacon in the church has the same privilege.

Of course, we concede that the best books are the books of the church, those which contain the scriptures, the word of God, but the commission is a very broad one. It includes all good books. Professor Larkin says that ninety per cent of the books of the world are obsolete. That may be true, but thank God that leaves enough good ones for me to read for a long time. This revelation and instruction did not say "obsolete" books, it said "good" books. Moreover the fact that a book is obsolete to-day does not mean that it did not help men ten, twenty, or thirty years ago—it is a stepping-stone left behind.

In section 85: 21, we read:

Also I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall continue in prayer and fasting from this time forth. And I give unto you a commandment, that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations; and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms, that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again, to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you, and the mission with which I have commissioned you.

You see how broad that commission is. Let us notice: a study of "theory and principle and doctrine," doctrine and theology, if you please; "all things that pertain to the kingdom of God"; things "which have been," history; "things which are," current events; and things which "must shortly come to pass," prophecy; "things which are at home and abroad, the wars and perplexities of the nations; things which are in the heavens and in the earth and under the earth."

Why, that ranges all the way from geology to astronomy, from earth to heaven, from the historian to the seer: it opens a door for the theologian, the lawyer—any man who thinks.

The argument may be presented that this applied to the school of the prophets. I presume it did, but the principle remains the same; if these things are good, they are good; if they are bad, they are bad. Moreover, these men by no means confined their studies to the school of the prophets. They studied before the school existed and after it had ceased. I want to read you three items from the Journal of Joseph Smith, the Martyr, taken on three consecutive days in the year 1835:

Monday, 21. Spent this day at home, endeavoring to treasure up knowledge for the benefit of my calling.

Tuesday, 22. At home. Continued my studies. O may God give me learning, even language; and endue me with qualifications to magnify his name while I live.

Wednesday, 23. In the forenoon studying the Greek language.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 625.

These are three typical days from the life of Joseph, the Martyr, not in the school of the prophets, but at home. If he could study the Greek language at home from textbooks published by the world, and instructed by a secular professor hired for that purpose, you or I can study the French language at home or in Graceland College.

But let us pass for a moment to the historic precedents of the church. I have noted five of them. In Kirtland as early as 1836 a class of forty elders was formed with Joseph Smith at the head, and they hired Professor Seixas to come from the Hudson Seminary to teach them, and paid him $320 to give them seven weeks schooling in the Hebrew language. Other classes were formed and they continued this work for a number of years. I am thoroughly in sympathy with the idea set forth in the Doctrine and Covenants that the elders are sent forth "to teach and not to be taught." So far as that applies to the doctrines of the gospel of Jesus Christ that have been committed to our care, the world has not taught us a single item, but we have taught the world many things and they have accepted some of the doctrines we first promulgated and now teach the same things themselves. But outside of that realm the world has a great deal to teach us. It had to teach those early elders Hebrew by the hands of a "worldly" professor hired for that purpose.

The Saints moved from Kirtland and finally settled in Far West, and here is a little item from the History of Caldwell and Livingston Counties, pages 120 and 121, published by the Saint Louis Historical Society:

In the fall of 1836 a large and comfortable schoolhouse was built. . . . The Mormons very early gave attention to educational matters. There were many teachers among them and schoolhouses were among their first buildings.

They were driven from Missouri to Nauvoo and one of the first things they did as soon as they were in a position to do so was to found the University of Nauvoo. It was in actual operation before they were driven out. And in the church as reorganized we but followed the historic precedent when, in 1895, we laid the corner stone of Graceland College.

Finally, and last of all, I want to read a report of the action taken by the joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric in this city, this year, June 27. It will show you that there is no contention between the quorums, as quorums, on this subject:

The following motion was offered: That this joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric look with favor upon the general scheme of providing a curriculum for the training of men and women with a view to preparing for ministerial and social service work in behalf of the church in domestic and foreign missions; and further, that the tentative curriculum submitted by the committee appointed by the President of the church be indorsed by this council.

That is the action of three of the leading quorums of the church within the past few months, representing the president of the high priesthood, the president of the Aaronic priesthood, and the Twelve Apostles so far as a representation could be obtained at that meeting. I do not want to misrepresent anything in any way along that line. The notation in the joint council record says that this motion was adopted unanimously; however, my recollection is, that here was one member who did not vote. There were seven members of the Twelve present when the discussion began. One member retired, leaving six. One member did not vote, which left five members of the Twelve who voted for this resolution: Gomer T. Griffiths, John W. Rushton, Paul M. Hanson, J. F. Curtis, and William Aylor. Two members of the Twelve who were not able to be with us, for various reasons, namely, Brethren Greene and Gillen, have since expressed themselves as heartily in favor of this resolution. So I have noted an expression of support from seven members, at least.

III. AUTHORITY IN RELATION TO PERSONAL CHARACTER

There is another division of this theme that I wanted to note, but I have given a great deal of time and attention to this one part, because of its controversial nature. The other part of the theme was the relation of the authority of the minister to his own private, moral life. My opinion is that in the execution of the purely formal rites and ceremonies these are made neither more nor less sacred by reason of the personal, moral life of the individual. I mention this for a purpose, because some have raised the question. One girl raised the question not long ago. She had been baptized by a man who at the time was living in transgression, but it was not discovered until later. Is her baptism valid? I think it is, so long as the man was yet sustained in his standing by the church.

We go to a communion service and ten priests pass the emblems. All are equally blessed. One does not receive a greater blessing because one priest is a little more righteous than another. Ten men are sent out to baptize—all baptisms are equally valid; ten men are called to administer, and the case is the same. We must presume that so long as a man is sustained in his office, in the purely formal ceremonial observances of the church his work must stand.

Another division of this subject is, What of the effect of the minister's work upon the lives of men? The greatest work of Jesus was in changing men's lives by his personal influence and example. Jesus went about doing good. He said, "The works that I do shall ye do also." But this line of work depends entirely upon a man's individual righteousness. We cannot lead men to God, unless we are men of God; we cannot open the heavens to men, unless we have seen into heaven ourselves; we cannot lead men to live righteous lives, unless we ourselves live righteously. A man's authority in this line of work will avail him only to the extent, that he is in touch with God. So the admonition continued in the book of Doctrine and Covenants, that no man can assist in this work except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope and charity, is absolutely true.

Imagine the knuckles of a clenched fist, extended toward the south: That is the site of Jerusalem, impregnable (at least in ancient warfare), from all sides except the north, where the wrist joins it to the higher tableland. This northern approach, open to Assyria, and Babylon, and Damascus, and Persia, and Greece, and Rome, has always been the weak point of Jerusalem. She was no unassailable fortress of natural strength, but a city lifted up, a lofty shrine, whose refuge and salvation were in Jehovah—in the faith, the loyalty, the courage which flowed into the heart of her people from their religion. When these failed, she fell.—Henry Van Dyke.

A TRIP AMONG THE OMAHA INDIANS

In my father's library was a two-volume work by the Reverend J. G. Wood entitled, Uncivilized Races of Men, which quite struck my boyish fancy for reading, and there were few chapters in that work which were not read repeatedly by me. Then, too, I remember well that Harper's Magazine, which came regularly for many years to our home library table, contained many articles on the American Indians, and many rainy day hours were spent by me lying on the library floor poring over the illustrated articles on the red men. Hence, because of a taste for ethnological topics formed by this early reading, when in Clark University I was searching through many tomes for information on ecstatic states in primitive religions, it is not surprising that I lingered over this part of my research work.

It is not surprising, either, in the light of this, that when my attention was directed by Brother Philip Cook to the question of peyote religion among the American Indians, I found keen interest in reading everything I could find on this subject. And in the last two courses of reading, I took many excursions into ethnological subjects not immediately connected either with ecstatic states or peyote religion.

From the foregoing it can easily be gathered that I was quite likely to enjoy my trip into Oklahoma a couple of years ago to visit the Cheyenne tribe, when Mrs. Smith went with me and we both went through the peyote ceremonies which lasted from sundown to sunup. I not only enjoyed the trip and experience, but gathered information I believe to be valuable.

So, when Brother Hubert Case, on October 15, called by telephone from Decatur, Nebraska, to tell me there were some Indian meetings on the Omaha Reservation for Friday and Saturday, the 17th and 18th, he did not have to urge me very hard to get my consent to go there. Two forces were operating towards the decision to go, viz, the desire to enlarge my general knowledge of the Indian question in the interest of church work, and because I had a special object in going, about which we may write later, and which was connected with a part of the work I recently did in Washington, District of Columbia.

On the night of the 16th I left Kansas City for Omaha. Reaching there about eight o'clock a. m. and the train for Tekamah leaving about two o'clock p. m., I got in touch with Brother R. W. Scott, branch president, who used his car in making some calls on various persons in the interests of church work. He also took me to the train for Tekamah.

At Tekamah I was met by our missionary to the Indians, Brother Hubert Case, and by motor car was taken to Decatur, an "inland" (off-the-railroad) town. Be assured we had plenty to talk about, enroute, because of our common interest in the work among the Indians.

At Decatur we went to the home of Brother and Sister Case, parents of Brother Hubert Case, where we were for supper. The meeting we were to attend that night was on the farm of Pete Blackbird, about eight miles west and a little north of Decatur. The roads could not be called smooth, but we reached the place without mishap. Decatur lies at the southeast corner of the Omaha Indian Reservation, so when we reached the farm of Pete Blackbird we were well into the Reservation. The Blackbird farm is quite typical of the Omaha's. A good farm house, well painted, with good farm buildings such as corncribs, barns, granaries, with plenty of wagons and farm implements (to say nothing of the motor cars everywhere apparent), all bespeak prosperity, and show little to distinguish these farms from farms of equally prosperous whites, except that in many of the yards may be seen an Indian tepee, used by the youngsters and occasionally by the older ones. It is a convenient additional sleeping room when company comes.

Not far from the farm house of Pete Blackbird, in a grove of native trees near a creek flowing through the farm stands a "lodge" building, a frame structure, octagonal in ground plan, door to the east, the entrance being a short vestibule. Ventilation is adequate through means of side windows and a cupola at the top. Evidently the designer of the "lodge" had in mind the typical Omaha tepee. The diameter of the building is perhaps twenty or twenty-five feet. The floor is earthen. It is not seated, for Indians need no chairs. A folded blanket on the ground, or a spot on the ground itself, is sufficient. They sometimes kneel and sit on the floor, or sit cross-legged, and can maintain the position for hours if necessary without apparent inconvenience.

No bridge being across the creek, we alighted from the car, and for a time stood and chatted, till from across the stream came a low but distinctly heard, laconic question: "What you want?" When we replied that we had come to attend the meeting, the answer was a short "come over." This was our invitation from the Indian in charge to cross over the plank bridging the creek. We did, and shortly were at the fire in front of the "lodge" where, in a large kettle, was cooking the food for the feast to follow the meeting. It was dusk when we entered the grove, and in the dim light we were introduced to the various men present. There seemed only a few. The meeting was a lodge meeting, to be followed by a feast. We had been expected, with quite a degree of interest, we had been informed, yet there was not the slightest evidence of excitement. We could see Indians coming and going in the grove, could hear an occasional mirthful laugh, but never a loud voice. The conversation was in low, softly modulated voices—always is. We saw some going into the lodge house, but when we were approached by the leader and he said to us quietly, "We are ready, come in," it was a surprise to see the house nearly full, all quietly seated on the floor, men and women sitting separately, while some of the children played around. How they all entered the "lodge" so unobserved by us was the surprise.

On the way out to the camp we had met a machine in which we recognized Brethren E. E. Long and James Reilley. They turned around and went with us; so when we entered the tent there were three of us representing the general ministry of the church—Brethren Case and Long, and myself.

The meeting was turned over to us. We sang one of our hymns, prayer was offered, then Brother Case spoke for several minutes, telling of the gospel we had for them, one had by their forefathers. He introduced me as the leader of the church and I spoke in a general way of how our traditions ran together with theirs back in Book of Mormon times. Then I told them of what had more directly brought me into their midst at this time—of the proposed legislation on peyote which would affect them in this religion. I told of my experiences with and readings on this subject, that I knew there was in the peyote religion that which strongly appealed to the Indian nature, but eventually that religion would give way to one which would appeal to them more strongly, when the grandeur of the gospel of Jesus Christ was more fully comprehended by them. I told them, too, that our church believed in a God who spoke to his people, and that prophecy had warned us of troublous times to come, against which time we had been commanded to prepare a place of safety, to which the chosen people could flee in times of great danger, and that the prophetic voice had also said the Indians (Lamanites) should help build that place of safety, and therefore we were interested in helping them to be prosperous, so they could help, when the time came.

Many of those present could understand English, but an interpreter was used, an elderly woman, who spoke excellent English, and who at the close of my talk spoke somewhat lengthily to her people, commendatory of what we had said, and urging them to cooperate with us in our efforts to help them.

A splendid spirit pervaded the meeting, and several of the Indians made speeches following our talks, some speaking directly to us concerning what we had said.

We closed our meeting with prayer, and left, though cordially invited to remain for the feast—and dance. How long the Indians remained in the "lodge" to talk over the events of the evening, I do not know, for we drove back to Decatur for the night, to the home of Brother and Sister Case. Brother Long and I "bunked" together—and were peaceful—for we had found another point of contact—our mutual interest in the work among the Indians.

Saturday morning, October 18, Brother Jay Leeka drove to Decatur from Omaha, for the purpose of taking Brethren Case and Long and me on to the Omaha Reservation, and we left Decatur about noon. Between noon and supper time, we visited several Indian homes—farm homes of Hiram Mitchell, Alfred Blackbird and several others. I had my camera with me and made photographs of several of these fine farm buildings, where thrift and industry were everywhere in evidence. A very distinct purpose underlay this photographing. And let it be said in passing, that the possession of a very fine lens (bought by money presented to me for that purpose) permitted the securing of some pictures which could not have been had with a lens of poorer grade.

About the middle of the afternoon we reached Macy, where we met one of the best known of the Omaha Indians, Mr. Hiram Chase, an attorney whose life has been one continuous battle for the rights of his people. A vein of bitterness was apparent in his talk, especially when he spoke of his efforts to secure rectification of the maltreatment of his people at the hands of the "grafting" whites. Yet he manifested a noble determination to fight off this bitterness. "I know I ought not to feel bitter," said he, "and I try to keep sweet."

But there was a tone of sadness as well as resignation in his voice as he thought of the disregarded treaties between the Omaha "nation" and the United States, of the restricted territory now within the boundaries of the Reservation compared to the broad expanse of rich lands once owned and roamed by his forbears. We were strangers to him, we had come into his country, and as his keen but really kindly eyes scrutinized us, we could easily read the interrogation therein, though unexpressed, "Why are you here?" And perchance he may even have said to himself, "I wonder what their 'graft' is?"

Who can blame him for being suspicious, if he had suspicion! Justice has not always been an attribute of the whites in dealing with the Indians, and we fear that the errors and failings of the Indians in trying to measure up to a higher standard of civilization have been more than matched by graft and moral turpitude of many of the whites who posed as friends of the Indians.

In the few moments we talked with Mr. Chase at Macy, we heard fall from his lips in his quiet even tones that which has since afforded material for much meditation.

From Macy we drove to Walthill, and went to the home of William Springer. He is an Omaha Indian, a real estate dealer. His wife and several of the children are members of the church. There we stayed for supper, and there we met quite a number of the Saints, who quietly dropped into the Springer home, and we enjoyed chatting with them. From Mr. Springer we elicited by questions much information on the Indian question generally, and the Omaha situation specifically. The hospitality extended us in this splendid Indian home was genial and genuine, and fully appreciated.

After supper we left the Springer home, bound for the farm of Mr. Ed Mitchell, where a peyote meeting was to be held. This farm is about three miles southeast of Walthill. Quite a gathering of Indians were there. Among the Cheyennes these meetings begin at sundown, but the Omahas begin later. So, previously to the peyote meeting, the Indians and such of the Saints as were there, gathered in the parlor. Indians prefer to sit on the floor, or stand, so the only chairs in the room were the four placed there for the white "missionaries." The meeting was turned over to us, and after a prayer offered by Brother Leeka, and a song by the four of us, Brother Case spoke briefly, and then introduced me. I spoke for several minutes, Mr. Alfred Blackbird acting as interpreter, though many of those present understood English. I spoke briefly of the belief of the church in God, in inspiration, in revelation, in the Book of Mormon history, and of the prophecies indicating the coming of troublous times and the preparation of a place of safety, and that the same voice of prophecy indicated that they as descendants of the Lamanites would have part in building up that place of safety. We were, therefore, interested in seeing them prosperous and happy, and wished to help them, that they in turn might help us. I then told briefly of some of the proposed legislation at Washington, aimed at the peyote religion, and something of what I thought ought to be done, etc.

Mr. Blackbird, the interpreter, spoke at some length to his people, concerning us, and then to us. I was touched by his speech to us, for through it ran a vein of despair. They needed help, he said, for their enemies were strong. He felt sure of ultimate defeat or failure. "We are doomed to failure," said he, "for our enemies are too strong for us." Mr. Chase also spoke, but he was guarded in his speech, though through his talk ran the thread of despair and bitterness before spoken of.

After about an hour, the meeting was dismissed through prayer by Brother Long.

Mr. Ed Mitchell, who was giving the peyote meeting, gave us a cordial invitation to attend it, an invitation we gladly accepted. The tepee was erected about a hundred yards from the house. It was somewhat crowded, for more attended than were expected. Several left in about an hour and a half, however. The meeting lasted till morning. We went into the meeting between nine and ten, and it was a quarter to nine Sunday, the 19th, when we emerged from the tent.

The meeting throughout is religious, and one who knows Indian natures can see much in the symbolism of the ceremonies, which makes a strong appeal to the Indian heart.

At several different times during the night we were called upon by the leader of the meeting to take part. We spoke to them, and prayed, though we took no part in the singing which played a very prominent part in the ceremonies. In my talks I told them more about the legislation mentioned above and my experiences with the committee on Indian affairs at Washington, and more of our beliefs, etc. Mr. Chase acted as interpreter, and once he was directed by the leader to address the "white brethren." He did so at length. Among many things he said we were impressed by this: We had said we wished to be of assistance to them by promoting their prosperity, etc. He said they welcomed any who came to them to help them, "For," said he, "The Lord knows we need help! But," he added, "those who come into our midst to help us must bring justice with them."

What a splendid slogan this is for our Indian missionaries! Let us labor to help the Indians towards higher and better things, religiously, morally, ethically, industrially, socially, but see to it that an ever-present factor in our dealings and intercourse with them is justice. To do that demands a keen knowledge of Indian affairs, their past history and present condition, an understanding of Indian nature, Indian ideals, Indian traditions, so that the beautiful and valuable in their tribal life can be preserved. It is useless to attempt to substitute for their beliefs, traditions, and religions, those things which are not better. We are in position to do a splendid work among the Indians. Let us do it, but make especial effort to emphasize in a practical way the demands of justice.

About nine o'clock Sunday we left the home of Mr. Mitchell, and drove to Decatur, and to the home of Brother and Sister Case. Here we had lunch, and here Brother Jay Leeka and I left Brethren Hubert Case and Long, to drive to Omaha, some sixty miles or more. The latter part of the drive was a sleepy one for me, but I had such confidence in Brother Jay as a driver that I nodded peacefully at times while he piloted the Jordan six along at a 40-mile clip.

About two o'clock we reached Brother Leeka's home, where I was permitted to go to bed for some much needed sleep, but aroused at a quarter to six, to have supper before going to the church for a priesthood meeting. At the evening hour I was the speaker to an audience which seemed greatly interested in the aspects of Zion I presented.

After a night of restful sleep at Brother Leeka's home, Monday was spent making some calls on branch officials, and others. The Omaha Saints anticipate building a new church building, and there was much that the committees and officers wanted to discuss with "the president," and we found the day a busy one. The last visit was at the home of my sister, Mrs. B. M. Anderson, where we were pleased to meet a number of present and past citizens of Lamoni: aged Brother and Sister A. K. Anderson on a visit to their son, Sister Anna Dancer, and Harry Nicholson and wife.

When Brother Leeka left me at the depot about ten-thirty o'clock, for a Kansas City train homeward, I felt the day had not only been a busy one, but a profitable one to the church, and that the whole trip, while somewhat unusual, was one which held promise of being valuable to the interests of the church.

Tuesday morning we reached home and after a visit with loved ones we went to the office—a return to routine. No degrees this time.

THANKSGIVING DAY

November 27 has been declared by proclamation of President Wilson and of the governors of the various States to be the day set apart for national thanksgiving.

This has become one of the great national festivals, gradually developing since that early day when the Pilgrim fathers thanked God, despite famine, despite affliction, that things were as well with them as they were. It combined the ancient harvest home with the devotion of the Puritans. It is a time that should be celebrated as much by our attendance upon divine worship as by the harvest feast.

For what have we to be thankful? We have to be thankful for a year of peace, and that our boys are coming home, even if the Peace Treaty has not yet been signed. We may be thankful for the disposition towards a League of Nations, even though the earth must be purified. Even though the Bible declares that grievous times will yet come upon the earth; nevertheless, we are commanded to preach peace and to lift an ensign of peace. Mankind must desire better things, with his fellow men, peace with the nations of the earth, before there will be a people prepared for the millennium.

We should be thankful for the signs of progress being made; deeper consideration is being given than ever before to the needs and rights of the laboring man, and to justice between man and man. The world is in a state of uncertainty and of agitation. Serious times confront us. Yet we are told to rejoice for these are signs of the day of the Lord, so we should stand in holy places and seek to live more nearly in accordance with the commandments of God.

As a church we should be thankful for the blessings of our heavenly Father to his people; for the outpouring of his Holy Spirit; for the opportunity to worship in spirit and in peace. We should be thankful for the progress being made towards the establishment of Zion.

Some look back with sorrow to realize that this day there will be one less around the family table than there was a year ago; one more who has passed to the other side. Yet how thankful we should all be for the divine promise of a resurrection through Christ Jesus, and that death does not end all.

As we count, we will find many private blessings, personal to ourselves, that we can count over with profit. Despite the late spring, the year has been one of bounty. There has been suffering in some places, but on the whole an outpouring of the good things of earth.

But above all, we should be thankful for the Spirit and blessings of God to us and all people, and the opportunities which confront us. S. A. B.

RED CROSS SEALS

The Red Cross drive for membership having been completed, they now announce the Red Cross Christmas Seal campaign to open December 1. Their aim is to sell six hundred and fifty million penny seals, thus providing $6,500,000 for carrying on the work of the association.

At present there is more tuberculosis in the country than has ever been supposed. Part of it is an aftermath of the influenza of a year ago. One hundred and fifty thousand is the present annual death toll, with one million afflicted. This is one of the ways in which we can help as members of the community.

It is a phenomenon worthy of consideration by all hardened disbelievers in that which is miraculous upon this earth that when a man's heart really opens to a friend he finds there room for two. And when he takes in the second, behold the skies lift, and the earth grows wider, and he finds there room for two more!—David Grayson in Adventures in Friendship.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

"To withhold what is due" is one of the dictionary definitions of the word rob, and it is evidently this sense in which the word is used in the introductory quotation.

The payment of tithing and offerings is provided for in the scriptures to obtain the means to carry on the work of preaching the gospel and assisting the poor and needy. The Saints are admonished to exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants in order to make possible the accumulation of tithes and offerings in the Lord's treasury. If the portion thus provided for is withheld or spent in some other way, surely the Lord is being robbed.

All are debtors to God as we have been "bought with a price." Men may pay this great debt by living "by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

An honest man rejoices when he has paid a debt he owed to another. On the other hand, men often shrink from meeting those from whom they have taken possessions or purposely withheld something due.

All should, therefore, faithfully and honestly adjust their affairs before the Lord and thereby avoid any sorrow or regret when John's vision shall be fulfilled, "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which are written in the books, according to their works."

JUDGED BY HIS ENEMIES AND OPPOSITION TO IMPROVEMENT

The Library (or Encyclopedia) of Universal Knowledge, under head of "Mormonism," says of Joseph Smith:

There is the most satisfactory evidence—that of his enemies—to show that from an early period he was regarded as a visionary and a fanatic. This fact is of the utmost importance as affording a clew to his real character, as an explanation of that otherwise unaccountable tenacity of purpose and moral heroism displayed in the midst of fierce persecution. A mere impostor, . . . would have broken down under such a tempest of opposition and hate as Smith's preaching excited."

Of the cause of this persecution, it says:

Smith was fiercely attacked by the leaders and preachers of the other religious denominations, but he kept his ground stubbornly. . . . If the orthodox preachers, however, could not baffle him in speech, they knew how to inflame their hearers with the most ferocious animosity against the new sect.

Of the Mormon settlement in Missouri this cyclo-pedia says:

Everywhere was visible a spirit of industry, sobriety, order and cleanliness. It is only fair to the Mormons to state these things. Account for it how we may, they were in many important respects, morally, socially, and industrially, far in advance of their neighbors.

Now let anyone be judged by such "satisfactory evidence" as "that of his enemies," and what would be the verdict? By such evidence was not Jesus, and each one of the old prophets, "regarded as a visionary and a fanatic"? And as a rule, the better the man, and the more good he has done, the more enemies he has made, and the greater animosity he has aroused among the envious and evil-disposed, if he was outspoken in his convictions against evil. For their craft was in danger, and the Devil was aroused and alarmed at the opposition to his works.

George Williams said, in "Public Pulse" in the Omaha World-Herald of December 6, 1918:

As one of our great writers says in a recent article, "There is a streak of human nature that insists on throwing mud at any great and conspicuous figure." Washington, Lincoln and Grant had plenty of good haters. Let Mr. Wilson cheer up.

This alluded to President Wilson and the good work he was trying to do to prevent future wars. It seems that every man who seeks to do a good work in this world, under present conditions, must have enemies.

He who has mingled in the fray
Of duty, that the brave endure,
Must have made foes. If he has none,
Small is the work that he has done.

And some poet has also said:

'Tis better thus, for that is understood,
That all good men should love the man that's good;
And further to confirm his worthy state,
That he incur from all the bad their hate.

The following humorous and truthful hit at a weak point in human nature, from Scribner's Monthly for 1875, will also apply here:

To be a good man and a successful man is offensive to the world at large. . . . To hear a man warmly praised is sufficient usually to make us hate him; and it is only necessary to have the praise repeated often enough to make us desire to shoot him. Praise is one of the articles we would like to have distributed a little—not that we want it, but the object of it is not the best man—if we know ourself. Virtue is a good thing, temperance is a good thing, genius is not a bad thing altogether; but no man is to be mentioned as often as ten times as having either of them in possession without making his name a stench and an offense in the nostrils of a sensitive world. The true way of getting along well in the world is not to make one's self offensive to our friends by excellence of character and habits of life, by success, or by doing any thing praiseworthy. . . . What right has a man to be better than his neighbors?

The Poet Saxe says:

Thus little minds regard the great
With silly scorn and stupid hate,
And in their ignorance dispise
The larger vision of the wise.

If the Latter Day Saints of Missouri were better than their neighbors, as this cyclopedia claims, and if that sometimes gives offense, this might be one reason for the trouble that they had there. I am tempted here to copy a little from a letter to my brother-in-law, Thomas Fuller of Grinnell, Iowa, from William E. McLellin, M. D., who was one of the first twelve apostles in the early church. Mr. Fuller asked in his letter why the Saints were driven:

INDEPENDENCE, JACKSON COUNTY, MISSOURI,

July 9, 1877.

Mr. Thomas Fuller: Your letter addressed to P. M. of this place was handed to me by him this morning. I came to this place in 1831. I moved here with my family in 1832, and remained here until the fall of 1833, then had to leave because of mob violence.

Joseph Smith visited this place in 1831, but never lived in Jackson County. The church was driven from this county in the fall of 1833. It would be hard to tell all the causes that caused that driving. The people here were mostly slave holding or in that interest, and the members of the church were mostly from the free States. Much prejudice was got up by designing men against the free State men. They feared the consequence of their immigration and accumulation of numbers. Many lies were circulated. Many of the Missourians were very illiterate, and consequently easily influenced by demagogues. And some of the church members may have been and probably were imprudent in their conversation. But I know that most of the church members were good, law-abiding citizens, and it was mostly prejudice and wrath that drove them away. Had they obeyed the law of God they never would have been driven. At first the members of the church would not resist evil, but peaceably bore their persecution. But word came from headquarters (Kirtland, Ohio) for them to stand in (their) own defense. Soon a battle was fought, and that aroused the country, and out they drove them!

This McLellin was yet, in 1877, a firm believer in the Book of Mormon as containing the word of God and as being the sacred record of the peoples of ancient America, as our Jewish Bible is the sacred record of ancient Palestine. He knew familiarly and for years, all the men connected with the coming forth and translation from the golden plates, of the Book of Mormon—the eight witnesses who saw

The Non-Partisan League

[We note a paper mailed by Brother Sparling with the following article, states plainly that the bank at Fargo was closed by the action of the attorney general, and that the action was taken at a time when the state bank examiner was absent. Upon his return the state bank examiner found the bank solvent, so that he filed his petition in the supreme court for a temporary injunction, which later was made permanent. The decision of the supreme court by a majority opinion of three to two, clearly held that only the bank examiner had the right to close a bank; so that the bank board may only act upon his recommendation; that the action of the attorney general was contrary to law, and hence was beyond his power.]

The court also held that the basic reason against foreclosing the bank was incorrect, as post dated checks are negotiable instruments like bills of exchange, and hence good security. The court also found that some of the more objectionable loans had been repaid, and hence turned over the bank to the state bank examiner with full power not only to reopen said bank, but also to release possession to its officers, when he deemed such action proper. Judgments for cost and disbursements were ordered against the attorney general, secretary of state, and the assistant attorney general as individuals, as well as officials.—EDITORS.]

In your issue of October 29 I noticed your request for articles on current developments, and as we have a movement here in North Dakota which has attracted considerable attention throughout the whole United States, and as I have been a resident here for thirty-seven years and watched the developments of both North and South Dakota since territorial days I thought perhaps my observations might be of interest to some.

WHY THE LEAGUE WAS ORGANIZED

In all great movements, and radical changes from established usage and custom it is well to endeavor to ascertain leading causes. The Nonpartisan League of North Dakota sprang from an almost universal feeling of discontent on the part of the agricultural population, brought about through low prices on their products, high rate of interest on loans, both real estate and personal, and political abuses of party leaders, the State in general being largely Republican.

In the later eighties it took the form of the "Farmers' Alliance" and expressed itself politically in what was known as the Populist party. The Alliance was a supposedly secret order and no one was eligible as members except actual farmers and their wives. Methods of better farming were discussed, but there was an undercurrent of political agitation throughout it all. Free coinage of silver was advocated as a remedy for the prevailing low wages and extreme low prices of farm products.

ITS POLITICAL TONE

While it is true the movement ended in division and disintegration the germ of a new political thought had taken root, and farmers no longer voted the straight tickets at the beck and nod of the party leaders. The result was a Democratic governor and many other lower officers, terminating finally in the "Progressive Republicanism" movement as opposed to the "Standpatters."

Wheat growing being the principal industry of the State it naturally followed that the sale, prices, grading, including dockage (which means a certain percentage of deduction for light weight, inferior quality, and foul seed), was a vital matter. It can certainly be accepted as a fact that some of the great elevator companies took undue advantage of the farmers.

However, here was also often a shortage of storage, which finally led to the idea of State-owned terminal elevators. The proposition was finally put to popular vote and carried with a large majority. In the following State legislature there was an attempt ostensibly to carry out the amendment as adopted by the people, but the appropriation for the purpose was so inadequate that the so-called farmer Governor himself vetoed it.

"GO HOME AND SLOP THE HOGS"

Charges of treachery against the old party managers grew stronger, and when the farmer representatives presented what they considered their just claims, in harmony with preelection promises, their statement is they were told to go home and slop hogs. It may be doubted whether such a statement was ever made, but once used and repeated time and again from almost every platform, it had the desired effect.

THE LEADERSHIP OF TOWNLEY

Under the fiery denunciation of A. C. Townley and his assistant organizers the whole State was thoroughly canvassed. Mr. Townley is a fluent speaker and possesses a genius for leadership that has enabled him to retain that position without question up to the present time. Most bitterly assailed by his enemies (right or wrong I do not presume to say) he still seems to retain the confidence of his followers, and is looked up to as the great emancipator of not only the farmers now, but the bulk of the union labor in this State, who are now joining forces with the league.

Lynn J. Frazier, the league candidate and governor of North Dakota, voiced the sentiment of his party, the past week when he made a proposition to the striking coal miners to continue at work pending negotiations, pledging the honor of the State that they shall receive any increase that may be finally awarded.

THE STATE BANK

Many great and important changes have been inaugurated during the last two sessions of the legislature. The old-time political leaders profess to see nothing ahead but bankruptcy for the State. As an onlooker not an adherent of either one, I do not fully share either the optimism of the one nor the pessimism of the other. It is easy to see that the creation of a State-owned bank with its proposed low rate of interest as compared to the extremely high rates which have prevailed in the past, will hurt some one in a very tender spot.

PACKING PLANTS

And that two independent packing plants, one at Grand Forks and another at Fargo (the former not running as yet but the latter in full blast with far more business than it can possibly take care of), State flouring mills, and large terminal elevators in nearly every town in the State, will hurt some one else.

That there has been and will be mistakes made from time

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Big Business and the Background of the Townley Trial

I am not writing for the benefit of the Nonpartisan League. That healthy young giant is very well able to care for itself. North Dakota is the only state I know of where the people are actually in the saddle and a constructive program worth worrying about is being realized. Nor do I write from hearsay or reading. I have campaigned North Dakota three times and have just returned from a referendum election in which the folks put over a $17,000,000 economic program—of, by, and for themselves. I know the leadership and the rank and file from the state capitol to the remotest sod huts on the prairie. It is a demonstration that the American people can get what they want if they quit being cowards, organize, and vote.

Exactly why does Big Business hate Townley so?

That is what the editor wants to know. Why does a remote county in Minnesota spend thousands of dollars to hang a jury verdict of "guilty of disloyalty" on a man whom officials of the Federal Government have been thanking for his aid in helping win the war?

Why the flaring headlines everywhere—always hostile? Whence come the tons of pamphlets informing people from Maine to California that the leader of a farmers' organization in the Northwest is a "crook" and his league "Pro-German" and "Bolshevist"?—stuff so cleverly written as to deceive even the elect into the belief that something must be wrong.

The trouble with Townley is that he has committed the unpardonable sin of putting over something real. To write a pleasing platform is good politics; to write a radical one is visionary; but to carry an election is disloyalty, and to carry five in succession is treason. The farmers are all right but they are hypnotized by Townley. The present system is ordained of God or nature or something—anyhow it can't be changed—in our time. If God gave us the brains and the best of the deal we are not to blame, and the farmers are fools to monkey with providence. They would be contented save for this agitator; so we must destroy his reputation. "Get" Townley, the league will go to smash, law and order will prevail once more. So ran and so runs the reasoning of the Minneapolis and St. Paul Chambers of Commerce, and all who follow their lead in the Northwest.

The first onslaught against Townley fell flat. In one grand chorus they yelled, "Townley is a Socialist and an I. W. W." The farmers and workers just laughed, and kept on voting and signing up at sixteen dollars per—meantime remarking, "See who's yelping."

Then resort was had to finding Townley "guilty" of something or other in a court of justice. That surely would settle it. Anyhow, "indictments" made just before elections would be useful for orators and newspapers in campaign times.

The makings of a suit were at hand. Townley was one of the many thousands of pioneer farmers that had gone through bankruptcy. Get a creditor to sue. Spread the story that he was rich from salting away thousands of dollars stolen from league funds. Go into the organization and funds of the league as a matter of legal procedure. Good politics. Good business. So Townley was sued by a $1,200 creditor. Thousands of dollars were spent on lawyers, detectives, accountants, by some one. No one knows how much or by whom. The case lasted from the fall of 1917 until April, 1919. All the time the people of the nation and of the Northwest in particular were being informed about this "indictment" which was to show up the vast sums Townley was stealing from those poor deluded farmers. The real purpose of the trial, as well as its outcome, was frankly stated in his decision by Judge Amidon, of the Federal Court at Fargo.

"At the time the petition in bankruptcy was filed," said Judge Amidon, "A. C. Townley had been for three years the leader of the Nonpartisan League. His examinations before the referee and later before the court have had to do, not with his private estate, but with the funds of the league and the agencies which it has created to carry out its program. . . . The search [for hidden funds] has been pursued not only with the zeal of creditors intent on collecting their debts, but that of political adversaries seeking to discredit a party. Detectives were hired to ingratiate themselves with the wife of the bankrupt. As the result of months of following up these clues by the trustee, the creditors, and their detectives, counsel for the trustees stated frankly on the argument at a recent hearing that no secret deposit or specific property held upon trust had been found. The conclusion is justified, and the court so finds the fact to be, that the reason why this hidden treasure has not been found is that it does not exist."

Those who have had doubts as to the Nonpartisan League and its president must give serious heed to these words. Agree or disagree with the league policy as you may, the fact stands forth that the most searching probe that the keenest legal brains of the opposition could engage, backed by unlimited money and with plenty of time, utterly failed to find anything against the honesty of Townley or any indirection in the management of the league's affairs. Tried before one of the ablest and fairest judges in the entire Federal judicial system, the result was complete vindication. Amidon is a jurist, not a politician.

Coincident with attacks on Townley's honesty came assaults on his "loyalty." He and several league leaders were indicted for seditious utterances, but all failed until the recent jury verdict in Jackson County, Minnesota. A hurricane of abuse from Big Business patriots has swept every western State in which the league is organizing—Minnesota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Montana, Idaho, Washington, Colorado, Wisconsin, and the rest. There was no discussion worthy the name of the league's constructive economic program aimed at old abuses; no answer to their charges that profiteering and plundering were impeding the prosecution of the war. The reply was, We are patriots, you are traitors. The police power of the State was invoked everywhere against the league by politicians in control. Time will show that the use of this power by Governor Burnquist, the State Safety Commission, and other State and county officials makes one of the blackest pages in Minnesota's history. Reputable farmers were dragged out of their beds at night by town mobs and tarred and feathered, organizers were hunted down like criminals, meetings of farmers were broken up by sheriffs, and at some of these the only thing being done was listening to a reading from President Wilson's "New Freedom." All this to win elections.

Why all this? What actually was at stake that caused men to forget their Americanism, to trample in the dust our ancient constitutional guarantees of free speech and free assemblage?—Judson King, Executive Secretary National Popular Government League, in The Public, November 15, 1919.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

"Let My Army... Become Fair as the Sun"

In pondering over the experiences of the children of Israel, as they abode in the wilderness for so many years, it becomes clear that God recognized that it is practically impossible to change the character of the minds of people who have become aged in certain lines of thought and action. Israel had been in bondage, oppressed, ground down, resentful, rebellious, suspicious, so many long, weary years, that even when the power of God strove mightily with them, their eyes were holden from seeing it in its true magnitude, and their hearts were still far removed from the great love that protected them.

When it came to the test of their faith, and they realized enemies were before them, their confidence in their Deliverer vanished as the mists of morning. Ten representative men of the nation were for turning back, contending that there was no use in attempting to take the land before them because of the host arrayed in its defense. Only two sensed the great Power that would be enlisted on their side in the imminent struggle, and expressed confidence in that Supreme Ally by insisting that, God with them, nothing could withstand them. Two out of twelve, only.

Despairing of gaining the full allegiance and demonstrated faith of his people, God immediately consigned them to a weary life of waiting and "wandering." Waiting—for what? Evidently for the old to die off, and the coming into power of a newer generation, which from the years of its plasticity, had been made daily conscious of the great and protecting care of the Father. Of the older generation, only Caleb and Joshua were to be permitted to enter the choice land of inheritances—the two staunch supporters of their divine Leader, believers in his word and promises, and humble servants of his bidding.

Character is but the sum total of experience, the record of life's thought and action. The poor Israelites are not so much to be blamed that the nature of their minds was such that God found them unprofitable and unwilling instruments in the working out of his will. They were what they were because of the conditions in which they had developed, and the inherited "blue prints" which had come to them from ancestors also oppressed, restricted, rebellious, hard-hearted. Even the many direct evidences so freely given them, of the immediate presence of God with them, were not sufficient to change to any appreciable extent the character of their minds, the intrinsic quality of their natures, and it thus became necessary that God should begin with fresher material—begin at the beginning, and, in an environment of greater piety, greater recognition of Divinity, prepare a people qualified to enter into, and redeem the land chosen as the cradle of the coming King destined to demonstrate to a benighted world, the principles of light and truth.

With these thoughts in mind, how seriously should Latter Day Saints consider and contemplate the task that is before the parents, and teachers of our young! Are we imprinting upon their plastic minds, not only those principles of morality recognized and practiced by the "honorable ones of the earth," but, in addition, definitely preparing them for the special work which is to fall to their lot—that of entering into, and redeeming the land of our inheritances? If not, why not?

Not many of use older ones, mayhap, are, at the present time, in possession of that peculiar and necessary quality of mind, which is able to eliminate entirely thoughts of self, and self-interest, and center its activities and aspirations along channels of the common good, "one, the servant of all." Not many of us, perhaps, have been able to visualize the real Christ in his ministry, nor catch the full significance of his statement: "Whosoever shall lose his life for my sake, shall find it." We are still slow to comprehend, still slow to obey, still slow to give our full confidence and allegiance to the divine Guide! Perhaps it is not for us to see the full completion of the "good he bringeth in the latter days," because of our sloth, our selfishness, and our unwillingness to step out upon the promises.

But what of these fresh young Saints about us, to whom modern events are bringing a much more forcible demonstration of God's dealings with humanity than our own youth experienced? What of them? Are they being taught to trace God's hand in history, in advancing civilization, in inventions, human research, human gropings after the "mysteries of the kingdom," in the study of times, and peoples, and national movements? Are they learning to apply principles? Are they grasping the idea that our "gospel" is but the architectural design from which spiritual structures are to be erected? Do they connect themselves up with the objectives of the church? Are they being prepared to become not only the citizens, but the pioneers of Zion, ready to hew out paths, build bridges, industries, shelter? Are they sensing that only the "pure in heart" can inhabit there—only the humble and loving be of assistance in the great work? Have we implanted in their breasts a firm and abiding confidence in God, and in his promises, that they may move forward unafraid, as did the younger Israelites?

These thoughts may well cause us, as parents and teachers of the young, to ponder long and seriously. Pondering alone will not bring us peace however, and it behooves us to see that our meditations and prayers are to some avail—that they result in a clearly-defined and well-accented program for our future attitude and action, one which will bring us well along the long trail we must travel with these tender and trustful young souls.

In youth we find the most supreme sense of devotion to an ideal. We find intense yearnings after high achievements. We find an ardor and zeal impossible for older minds to imitate. Are we using this ardor, this enthusiasm, this aspiration, recognizing these elements as preeminently valuable soil in which to develop the eternal seeds of truth? Can crops grow without a seedtime? Can they develop without nourishment, without sunshine and rain and warmth? Can Zion's ideas blossom into full fruitage unless there has been a time of careful, thoughtful planting, of intensive cultivation, of prayerful watering, and encouraging, warming sunshine?

As we look into the faces of our children, or those clustered weekly about our knees in the Sabbath school, shall we not say to ourselves, "I am looking into the faces of the men and women who shall redeem Zion, whose precious and cherished duty and privilege it shall be, to work harmoniously in a city of Saints, bent upon preparing a people for their spiritual King. These young souls are the ones whose great ideals and consecrations shall fit them to receive that King, to be his helpers in restoring perfect law and order in a disordered world. I see before me those in whose hearts must dwell perfect love, perfect purity, whose every thought and impulse must ring true, whose purposes and motives must be clear as a mirror, reflecting only the best and highest attributes possible to man. Am I doing what I can to establish these conditions in these minds?"

The army of the Lord must become "very great." It must become "sanctified before God." It must be "fair as the sun, and clear as the moon," that its banners may witness to a despairing world that the "kingdom of Zion is indeed the kingdom of God and his Christ." And there is the most significant statement of all: it must have learned to become "subject unto" the "laws" of that kingdom! Can any be intelligent subjects without knowledge? Are these "soldiers" of Zion's army, who are just now under our tutelage, being made acquainted with the laws which shall govern them when they march under that victorious banner, that banner which shall strike terror into the hearts of the ungodly? Are we doing all we can to bring these things to pass?

What Does a Child Cost?

Various authorities reported the results of their inquiries in this field. Miss Florence Nesbitt, institute instructor in dietetics for the American Red Cross, stated that in cities such as Chicago and Cleveland "it costs approximately $1,500 a year to buy the essentials for maintaining the average family of five—father, mother and three children—at what we might consider a normal standard." Miss Nesbitt indicated the conclusion that only a minority of those comprehended by her investigations have as much as this minimum income.

Professor William F. Ogburn presented the results of his investigations made for the National War Labor Board and for the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the United States Department of Labor. Professor Ogburn reckoned that in rearing a child from birth to sixteen years of age $1,325 is added to the family budget. Both he and Commissioner Royal Meeker of the Bureau of Labor Statistics concluded, however, from the budgets they studied, that in order to rear children the average working man and his wife must economize seriously. Commissioner Meeker said, "with the increase of the family every item of expenditure, except food, declines not simply in percentage but in absolute amounts. This means, of course, that comforts and even necessities must be sacrificed to meet the most pressing need—the need for food."

Dean S. P. Breckinridge of the University of Chicago described the national consequences due to incomes insufficient to purchase the minimum essentials of family life. She emphasized the increase in the infant death rate generally found as the income of the father goes down. Dean Breckinridge reported the conclusion that wage levels have not increased commensurately with the rise in prices. She recommended the fixing of an economic level below which, for the sake of the national well being, no family be allowed to sink.

Early Habits

From the instant a mother hears that first significant cry which proclaims to the world the birth of a new life, she is confronted by a problem which increases in complexity with the passing of the years.

If she is a busy mother, and most mothers are busy, she will soon realize that upon the early habits of her baby will depend her ability to fulfill her many duties. She can train the baby to be entirely dependent upon her during his waking hours, and thus let him become the spoiled child who later develops into a family nuisance, or she can begin even when he is in his tiny crib to sow the seed of self-reliance which will make of him the responsible and desirable citizen. She would not be guilty of pulling up the sprouting plant to see if it was growing; why carry her baby about in her arms or hold him in her lap when he can kick and crow so much more freely in his own bed?

The baby who is bathed, fed, given his nap regularly, allowed freedom in which to grow, and not hampered by too much attention, will develop into a healthy, happy, helpful child and be a joy to his parents and a pleasure to their friends. The Children's Bureau at Washington furnishes upon request bulletins relating to the food, general care and physical training of the infant.

As baby's mind develops, he will need diversion and amusement. For this purpose toys are useful which do not have sharp edges and which can be washed and kept sterile. A bell or rattle for the baby to kick may be hung from his crib or carriage, but it must be hung at an angle which will not produce eye-strain.

From earliest infancy the child displays a spirit of investigation which it is well always to gratify. If possible, never leave his questions unanswered. If you lack the information, say that you do not know but will find out and tell him; and keep your word. Few parents realize that they typify to the child the spirit of omniscience which God typifies to them, and that it behooves them constantly to strengthen such faith. The child who finds that he can depend upon what his parents tell him is less apt in his turn to deceive them, and the seed of mutual understanding and confidence is thus sown, to sprout and bloom for all time.

The spirit of investigation often leads children into the habit of touching every object they see. This is not always naughtiness and should not be so stigmatized. A baby's attention can be diverted from one object to another, while older children will desist from investigation as soon as their curiosity is satisfied. But if they are told unqualifiedly that a certain object must not be touched, they seem impelled by an irresistible force to handle that object in preference to all others. It is well to keep in mind the advantage to be gained by positive suggestion. Divert the child's mind by mentioning something which he may do, rather than strengthen his determination by a peremptory command as to what he may not do.—Bulletin from Bureau of Education.

Growing Older

A little more tired at close of day;
A little less anxious to have our way;
A little less ready to scold and blame;
A little more care for a brother's name;
And so we are nearing our journey's end,
Where time and eternity meet and blend.

A little less care for bonds and gold;
A little more zest for the days of old;
A broader view and saner mind,
And a little more love for all mankind!
And so we are faring a-down the way
That leads to the gates of a better day.

A little more love for the friends of youth,
A little less zeal for established truth,
A little more charity in our views,
A little less thirst for the daily news;
And so we are folding our tents away
And passing in silence at close of day.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

From the South Sea Islands

[The following is the first letter that we have received from Elders John W. Rushton and Paul N. Hanson, of the Quorum of Twelve, since they left this country. We are glad to print this deserved tribute to Sister Ellis, and add it to that already printed in the HERALD of last year, and in the Journal of History.—EDITORS.]

We find that Brother Clyde F. Ellis is a most exceptional young man, and the death of his wife last December, it seems to me, is an unwritten chapter in the church martyrdoms. These young people came out here in 1914, following their marriage; indeed if I am not mistaken they were married in order that they could take the mission as requested by the joint council of that year. She was a most amiable and splendidly qualified young woman, and made a fine companion for her husband. They both worked assiduously in the mission, and she devoted herself as unsparingly as her young husband and became very proficient in the knowledge of the language, so that when Brother Ellis was absent she was able to interpret the sermons of Brother Brown, who came over here with his wife some years later. She took active part in the Sunday school work and training the young people in playing and singing, and also in preparing the printed matter for the mission.

Testimony of her efficiency is left in the two young ladies who now play the two organs for the church here in Papeete, and the very much modified way of singing, which distinguish our congregation from other gatherings of the natives in their "himines." There are others of whom we have heard scattered throughout the islands, in whom the life and grace of our sister is continuing its influence. And not only through these means, but in the still more difficult and disappointing work of trying to sweeten and purify the lives of the young girls and women, who are surrounded with dangers of a vicious nature, which none but those who have spent some time in these islands can understand. Of Sister Clara Ellis it can be said in a very literal sense, "She being dead, yet speaketh."

Yesterday Brethren Hanson, Karlstrom, Brown, and myself visited the little cemetery of Papeete which is situated in a narrow ravine in the midst of dense and luxuriant tropical foliage. Graves bearing names of many people dot the place, and two large mounds terraced with concrete testify to the deadly ravages of the epidemic of influenza which attacked these islands late in 1918.

The stories of the sufferings and conditions of that time are very sordid, and do not reflect credit upon the government of the island. It is generally admitted that had it not been for the few British and American people here things would have been much worse. We stood finally at the tomb of our sister, and as we noticed the beautiful simple lines of the tomb, which had been prepared by Brother Ellis and Brother Brown, in sorrowing affection, our hearts were filled with deepest compassion, and we thought not only of the heroic sacrifices of our departed sister but of the dreadful days and nights of anguish, when all the little colony of missionaries were sick in bed with the dread disease after having gone among the native Saints as they were stricken down, until they themselves fell victims to its malign influence; of the inability to help each other, and of those who cried for water and none could carry it; of death stealing into the little company and leaving a gap which could not be filled; of the awful loneliness of the young husband; of his ruined dreams and hopes; of his brave determination still to carry on the work, bearing with him day and night only the treasures of memories to stimulate and bring their sorrowful joy as recompense; of the constant vigils and tender care expended upon the quiet and hallowed sanctuary enshrining all that was left of his earthly love.

We also thought of the home far away, far beyond restless billows of the blue Pacific, beyond the fair valleys of the Golden State, and the arid wastes of Nevada and Utah, where, in the hearts of America's pastoral land, our sister had been reared and had graced home and community, and also had spent her energy in teaching, making a name for herself of which one may well be proud. We thought of the terror of those days when news came of sickness and then of death, and it was impossible to reach her or whisper words of affection, or soothe the tired hands and quiet the fevered spirit. We stretched out hands and hearts and breathed a prayer for them, as we stood reverently beside the sacred spot.

In the solitude of the cemetery away from the noise of the city, we bared our heads and had a prayer service in which God gave his spirit and we left with chastened and sorrowful hearts, but believing that he, who counts the hairs of our heads and notices the sparrow's fall, would surely treasure this great gift of love paid so uncomplainingly and ungrudgingly by her, whose dust we hope shall be made fertile with many possibilities for good in the years to come.

The church cannot value too highly the services of the brave men and women, who, leaving the nurture and comforts of the homeland come out here among strangers to a strange land and encountering all sorts of evils which threaten body, mind, and spirit, work for years to bring the light of hope and the power of redemption which are the hidden treasures of the mercies of Christ. The list of the church's heroes in these islands is a long and honorable one and not least among them will be those of Brother and Sister Clyde F. Ellis, Brother and Sister Alva H. Chrestensen, and Brother and Sister Robert Brown.

We find that the natives have an abiding affection for all who have labored here, and have a habit of extracting the good things which men and women have done among them, and building up their estimate of them around these memories, and forgetting the unpleasant and unworthy. So the brothers and sisters who have labored here are immortalized in the minds of these simple people, to whom love and sympathy mean much more than theological and ecclesiastical efficiency.

We are expecting to leave here Monday evening and make a tour through some of the islands. Our destination is the Island of Takapoto, where about eight hundred of our people are engaged at this season in diving for shell. We are hopeful of doing them good and look forward with pleasure to meeting them. So far our experiences have been very pleasant. The natives are very clean, and in the homes where we have stayed so far, we have not had any distaste, but a real sense of comfort. The Saints seem to enjoy our association, and in a very charming manner they offer their gifts to show how pleased they are to see us.

In making their gifts the occasion becomes rather a religious sacrament, and all the missionaries, and even their wives, share in the bounty. A little speech is made in which we are all greeted in the name of the Lord, and the gift is then presented and response is made.

I also notice a very commendable spirit of reverence in the church. All wait after service until the ministers leave. While we do not understand the language used, we are impressed with the quietness and impressiveness of their prayers. I also notice that even little children are taught to be quiet and orderly during the service, and the preacher is materially helped in his work by the attention that is paid to what he has to say.

I found it rather trying to have to wait to be interpreted while preaching, though I presume some of my friends will quite agree that I should have had an interpreter long ago. I find, however, that it does not take long to get used to this process, and it has advantages also. A man is forced to think out his ideas, so that the interpreter can get the completed thought, and then the preacher can get his next thought ready while the interpreter is presenting the one already given. Brother Ellis is very competent, and with surprising fluency translates the message of the preacher as quickly as it is spoken, and the native Saints seem to appreciate his rendition. He has a reputation among those who are qualified to speak upon the matter of being very accurate in his translation.

By the way, reverting to the epidemic which affected this island of Tahiti, it is said that between 2,500 and 3,000 lost their lives on this island alone, with a population of not over 6,500. Our church here lost about thirty-five members and friends.

Our hearts have been made happy indeed as we checked over the many cards returned to us showing the total of last year's offering. How we wish that every Sunday school had returned their card to us with all the information filled in, but there are still some 300 missing cards that we would like to have. Will you who read this article please make it a part of your duty next Sunday to inquire whether or not your school received a large clock for displaying offering status? If they have not, it is because the card mailed to your school asking for certain information was not filled out and returned to us. Surely you want one of these clocks and we will only be too glad to supply one if you will write us about it, giving us the name and address of your superintendent.

Recently we published a list of the schools having the highest average per member offering, and I am sure many of us were agreeably surprised to see some of the very excellent results obtained by our schools. We are proud of them, and we know that God has been well pleased with their humble efforts.

Some of the good schools have already passed their last year's offering total and they still have two months ahead of them, and for most of the schools these last two months are the most productive. The point is this: What is your school during this year? What are you doing? What are you going to do to help your school "Over the top" with an average of $2.50 per member? Are you willing to be judged according to your efforts? Do you feel that you have done your part along with the other good workers? If you feel that you have, I pray God to help you to do even more so, that our average will reach a high mark. Be serious about this; talk it over with God; seek his help, his blessings.

The following list comprises the schools who gave $250 and over, with Independence at the top and ranging down in proper order. (If your school sent in an amount equal to $250 or more and does not appear on this list it is because you failed to send in the card we sent you.) Write us about it, please.

Is this not a splendid record and are we not proud of these good workers who made such a report possible? Some of these schools because of large membership could not reach the high average per member, but the grand total of their offering helped us very materially in nearly reaching our high aim of $100,000 last year. Without these larger schools and their large offering we would have fallen far short of our aim so we make special mention of these schools because some of them did not appear in the high averages published recently.

Among those schools who worked faithfully and humbly for the support of this offering movement are the good schools in England, Australia, Society Islands, and Hawaiian Islands. The Honolulu Sunday school with an enrollment of 114 came very close to getting in the $250 class, and deserve special mention because of this fact. This year they have set their aim at $300, and we feel proud to tell some of our American schools of this good record and what they proposed to do. The Hilo Sunday school averaged a little better per member than Honolulu but their school is smaller. They averaged $2.17 per member. Stop and think what a good work our missionaries are doing in these far away islands of the sea, what sincere efforts they must be putting into their work to receive such splendid support. How faithfully those dear little Sunday schools have responded. No doubt the same could be said of many of the other schools in the far away Islands and of English and Australian schools, but we do not have their reports and cannot mention them separately. We do thank them for their support and co-operation.

Next week we will publish a list of the schools who have reported to us as having passed the $2.50 per member mark this year. You are going to receive some surprises in this report. I will not tell you at this time what schools went over the $2.50 per member mark first, but I will tell you that some of them passed this mark way back in February, and the first school to report to me stated that they had raised their amount through CONSECRATION.

From now on we desire to hear from all the schools telling us of their standing. Tell us all about your work—not for selfish reasons for you would not care to report if for this purpose, no, but for the encouragement it will give to the other workers. Write us to-day—do not wait. May God bless your efforts.

Sincerely yours,

A. W. SMITH.

Some Northern Weather

Brother Birch Whiting writes from Swanton, Saskatchewan, under date of November 11, to the First Presidency. "I stated in my last that I was going to Vonscoy, but was called here to preach a funeral sermon for some people not belonging to the church. Though it is 20 below and blowing snow till you can't see a quarter of a mile, yet I have preached four sermons this far, commencing Saturday with the funeral sermon. I expect to be at Vanscoy for Sunday. If I could stand it and weather would permit I could preach every day for the next four months. I tell the Saints that I am going to preach 100 sermons yet before Conference. Of course, I may fail, but there is room for work here, and I expect to go to the limit of my endurance."

ON BOARD R. M. S. Mauretania, October 8, 1919.
PRESIDENT F. M. SMITH, Independence, Missouri.

Dear Brother, I am writing aboard the Mauretania and will mail this letter at Cherbourg. We have experienced one of the most violent storms that has visited the Atlantic in the past thirty-five years. It lasted three days and nights. Four of our lifeboats were torn from the davits on the third deck. Several porthole fittings were smashed. The sea

You Have Only Three Days More!

Time flies! Two months ago we warned you our prices must be advanced, and now only three days are left.

But, three days are enough; three minutes will do, if you sit down now and send in your subscriptions or renewals.

Think of the pleasure and instruction and good in 52 numbers of the Herald!

Think how little $1.25 is for a year's subscription to Autumn Leaves!

You can't afford to be without any of the church papers. Can your children or your friends afford to miss them?

Subscribe for yourself and for another. Give some one else cause for thanksgiving. Do a little missionary work with your money.

The Herald will be bigger and better—new writers and editors are busy on the Leaves and Journal. They are yours for the year at a small cost. Don't delay.

looked like a series of mountains and valleys. S. O. S. signals were sent out frequently by other vessels. The Mauretania was thrown from top to bottom of huge waves and listed to a degree that made it noncontrollable. In spite of the impending danger, all seemed calm. Ninety per cent of the passengers were ill during this three-day period.

To-day we are experiencing a calm, clear day and enjoying it—in fact, it is the first pleasant day since we came aboard. We expect to arrive in Cherbourg about twenty-four hours late. We will write after we arrive in Switzerland.

Your brother of like faith,

HARRY PASSMAN.

PARIS, FRANCE, October 12, 1919.

PRESIDENT F. M. SMITH,
Independence, Missouri.

Dear Brother: We arrived in Cherbourg, France, October 9 at 4 p. m. We asked the baggagemaster when our trunks would be in, as we depend on lighterage to land at Cherbourg, and he stated that all trunks would be shipped to Paris and baggage must be claimed there.

We stood in line one hour at Cherbourg to purchase a ticket to Paris, then we waited on this train until 11.30 p. m. (These coaches were German, turned over to the French as rolling stock. They are divided into compartments accommodating five persons—one enters from the outside and each room has a separate entrance.)

On the Mauretania, we made the acquaintance of two young people from New York who spoke French and English, and two French officers just returning from Japan. One of these officers went out and purchased a can of chicken, French bread, boiled ham, and we had a banquet. We arrived in Paris at 7.30 a. m. (No sleepers on this road from Cherbourg to Paris.) The young man from New York, Mr. Frank, went out with me to locate a hotel. We inquired in about six of them before we found one that had any accommodation, at twenty-five francs per day, not including meals. A fair meal costs from eight to ten francs. A high class hotel charge per day is one hundred fifty francs.

Wife remained at the depot until I engaged the room, then I returned for her and we went to the depot (Cour de Rome) for baggage. You never saw such confusion in all your life. There is a room about 300 by 50 feet with trunks piled halfway up to the ceiling and if you want a trunk you have to promise one of the men a tip of from ten to twenty francs. (They soaked everybody seven and one half francs for one trunk if you had a railroad ticket and twenty-five francs for each additional trunk.) It took me two days to get my trunks, while some people lost theirs. There is seemingly no head to anything here at the present time.

We are certainly having some fun. Nobody here can speak English. We cannot speak French, and when we go out we have a time. The other evening we entered our room and locked the door. Afterwards when we attempted to open it, it would not unlock. I rang the bell and up came the bell boy. I was on the inside and he on the outside of the door, and to save my neck I could not make that fellow understand what I wanted. Finally he left and went downstairs (I suppose), thinking I was crazy. As luck would have it, I had purchased a small French-American, American-French dictionary that afternoon, so I took it and wrote on a paper, Serrure casse clef non ouvrir. I then rang the bell and when the boy came up I yelled this through the key hole—and all was well. He brought up another key and it threw the bolt all right.

The American Express Company wants $44 to ship two of my trunks to Basle, Switzerland, and they claim that the railroad company (Gare de C'ost) will not take more than 30

AT THE OFFICE

We have a promise of a supply of paper with which to print our new Descriptive Catalogue in time for mailing within ten days.

The paper shortage is giving us some concern. We placed an order for fifty thousand pounds in September that we cannot get until about January first.

Birds of a Feather, one of our new books, is now in the bindery. We are making haste to get it ready for mailing.

Ten morocco skins for book bindings recently received cost nearly $600.

The Herald Publishing House is your business. We are simply managing it for you. If you help boost it we'll prosper better.

Lamoni has about used up its coal supply for industrial purposes. Our power house supply will not last more than two weeks. No use to pray for more unless the miners are willing to dig.

We have secured some most satisfactory responses from our recent appeals for consecrated help. Those who really understand the proposition become enthusiastic over the possibilities. There are a few places yet in which we could use some good, intelligent young men and women with the necessary qualifications.

kilos on one ticket and 30 kilos (extra charge) excess. I went over to Gare de C'ost and offered the agent through an interpreter 20 francs if he would get that baggage through reasonably. He told me to bring our railroad tickets over and he would see what he could do for us. Everything is graft here. The Americans are amateurs as compared with these fellows when it comes to graft.

Things are very high here. A suit of clothes such as we pay $50 for is 600 francs here. (A franc at present is anywhere from six and one half to eight for one American dollar. Sugar, cream, butter, and soap are not to be had. Coal is very scarce. There is no heat in the hotels and it is very cold. I have not seen smoke rising from a single chimney since I came here. I am told that the coal mines are flooded with water and it will be another year or two before they can be used. Wine is plentiful here—everybody just pours it down. There are tables on the sidewalks in front of the restaurants and people sit there and drink wine. They use it for breakfast, dinner, and supper. I am told that they even pour it in their soup. In spite of this I have not seen one drunken person since coming here.

A large percentage of the people here are in mourning. Women, refined looking women, dressed neatly, are sweeping the streets; also blacking shoes, driving cabs, and doing almost every kind of work imaginable. It seems strange to see women sit on the streets drinking wine, and in some of the restaurants they sit at the table smoking cigarettes.

If all goes well, we will leave here October 15 for Basle, which is a twelve-hour ride. We are feeling good and enjoying these new experiences.

Your brother of like faith,

HARRY PASSMAN.

JUDGED BY HIS ENEMIES AND OPPOSITION TO IMPROVEMENT

and handled the golden plates, and the three witnesses who were shown them by an angel, and who at the same time received divine evidence that they had been correctly translated by Joseph Smith, by means of the gift and power of God as he relates in a second letter to Mr. Fuller. He lived at Kirtland a number of years; and he kept a high school there for a time, and then they hired a Hebrew teacher and he and Joseph Smith and about eighty others of the elders studied the Hebrew language. And he went on preaching tours and missionary trips with the other elders and with leading men of the church.

Dr. Frank Crane has truthfully said:

Whoever thinks to make an improvement in this world finds the cohorts of bourbonism fighting mad and drawn up to oppose him. If you think the mass of men are in favor of reform you are mistaken. The mass does not want to go on; it wants to stand still and be let alone. Go ahead and push the world up a bit if you desire, but know that the grey wolves will get you if they can. They poisoned Socrates. They crucified Jesus. They burned Bruno. They shot Lincoln. The ingenuity of man is a hundred times more facile in finding objections than in finding reasons for trying a new thing. . . . The abolition of human slavery was once exceedingly unpopular, and those in favor of it were called fanatics. . . . The doctrine that a man has a right to think as he pleases about religion was long considered subversive to society and the state, and its advocates were hunted as criminals. . . . Universal education of the masses was long considered dangerous and on a level with treason and anarchy.

C. W. LAMB.

A little more leisure to sit and dream,
A little more real the things unseen,
A little nearer to those ahead,
With visions of those long loved and dead;
And so we are going where all must go,
To the place the living may never know.

A little more laughter, a few more tears,
And we shall have told our increasing years,
The book is closed, and the prayers are said,
And we are part of the countless dead.
Thrice happy, then, if some soul can say:
"I live because he has passed my way."

THE NON-PARTISAN LEAGUE

to time goes without question. These laws can be altered and amended from time to time as experience may demand as nearly all laws have been in the past.

WEIGH CHARGES MADE

The sweeping charges of the enemies and opponents of the league should be received cautiously. First of all let it be borne in mind that the bulk of the membership of this new party are the pioneers and builders of this great northwestern State, hardworking and industrious; they subdued the prairie sod, enduring suffering and hardship only comprehended fully by those who have had the experience, and finally succeeding in erecting homes of comfort and beauty. Mistaken they may be, probably doomed to a certain amount of failure and disappointment but not wild-eyed anarchists. They are men who love their homes, their family, and loyal to American institutions.

CLOSING THE BANK

A few closing lines in regard to the closing of the bank at Fargo. Perhaps it is too early now to judge and estimate correctly conflicting statements. Whether or not it was done unlawfully through spite and malice, the farmers have rallied around it with evidently an honest intention to make it good. The highest court in the State has reopened the bank. A special session of the legislature is called. Undoubtedly all these questions will be aired. No doubt the truth will finally prevail.

This new departure in State government ought to be interesting to Latter Day Saints, without being wildly enthusiastic about it, knowing that we have a better thing in the gospel. As an experiment in political cooperation, it is an attempt on the part of worldly wise men to help each other, and as they affirm to make the whole of mankind more kind and just to one another.

WILLIAM SPARLING.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS

At the time we go to press there is prospects of having to close the power plant that furnishes power to run our machinery and supplies heat for the building, so it may be that there will be a suspension of the periodicals till coal is secured. If this happens, our subscribers may be assured that the time of their subscription will be extended to cover the time lost in this way.

It is likely we will be able to attend to orders for all books and supplies in stock with usual promptness, and we will be glad to care for subscriptions as usual, subject to the necessary delay on account of present conditions.

NEWS AND COMMENT

In a number of instances, municipalities are taking up the problem of living costs. In most cases, the principal effort is the handling of farm produce prices through public markets. The methods employed to reduce prices are studied with much interest by competing merchants who are apparently as anxious to reduce prices as is the public to have it done.

An economic congress with delegates from nine different nations, including America, opened in London on November 4. The purpose is to fight the dangers of famine and to disclose the conditions actually existing economically in each country.

The Iowa State Teachers' Association, at their meeting November 1 approved the teaching of favorite credited Bible studies in the school. They also favored the League of Nations and speedy ratification of the Peace Treaty, and they agreed to urge legislation requiring mental and physical examination of school children each year.

Despite the difficulties through which Mexico has been passing, her trade with the United States has increased to a marked extent during the past ten years. And this is especially true during the past three years, during which it has much more than doubled. About ninety per cent of the trade of Mexico is now with the United States.

The religious survey in New Mexico has discovered a district of five hundred square miles without religious services of any kind.

We learn that the Chamber and Senate of Italy have adopted by secret vote, a bill conferring upon women the same electoral rights for political and municipal elections as those enjoyed by men. It is, however, deferred until the next election but one, which at the most will mean a delay of five years. The reason for this is the practical difficulty of preparing the new register of some eleven million women voters in time for the next general election, one year hence.

The Young Women's Christian Association in Saint Louis is remodeling a building in the business section of the city, furnishing it attractively, with a big open lot attached to it for outdoor recreation. While we are not informed as to the exact location, from our knowledge of the city of Saint Louis we are inclined to infer that it is probably on Washington Avenue, between Eighteenth and Nineteenth Streets. There has been located at this place for the past twenty or twenty-five years at least, a home for girls. It is convenient to the Union station, and much good work has been done there in the past. This is part of their work continued from the war, in an effort to secure suitable social centers in a vicinity where many young women are employed.

The labor congress meeting in Washington found itself again confronted with the question of the eight-hour day. Increased production is necessary, and the speakers favored this, but urged that as much could be done in an eight hour day as in a longer period. Objection was made to the factor that the laws of Japan legalize twelve hours work a day for girls under fourteen, which may be increased to fourteen

O. P. Austin, of the National Industrial Conference Board states that the cost of living has increased from July, 1914 to March, 1919, 61.8 per cent; while the hourly wages of men have increased from 74 per cent to 112 per cent in the eight leading industries of metal, cotton, wool, silk, boots and shoes, paper, rubber, and chemical manufacture. The weekly earnings show an increase from 62 per cent to 110 per cent; wages now running in March, 1919, from $17.10 per week in cotton goods, to $29.35 in rubber. Women's wages are not so high, ranging from $12.24 to $15.10 a week; and from 29.2 cents an hour to 32.8 cents an hour.

Southeastern Illinois District. Upon the recommendation of the district conference, we have arranged for Brother L. M. Edmunds, Bellair, Illinois, to act as Bishop's agent of the above district, beginning December 1, 1919, thus relieving Brother F. M. Davis, who has long served faithfully in this capacity, but owing to his increasing years it was thought that he should now be relieved of this burden. We trust that the Saints throughout the district shall sense the needs of the Lord's work and also appreciate the wonderful blessings which our heavenly Father is daily bestowing upon us, and will consider it a privilege to be laborers together with us in the great work of the gospel, and sensing these things shall be willing to assist in a financial way. Such a response will be encouraging to Brother Edmunds in his newly appointed duties.

We feel that in the selection of Brother Smith, the Saints of this district are fortunate in having a man with his splendid business experience which will now more fully contribute to the success of the Lord's work in this district, and we trust that he may have the support of the Saints and that they may be blessed in their temporal affairs; and being blessed, that they may have a desire to assist in the Master's work.

Toronto, opened the winter's campaign in the Allen Theater, on Sunday, November 16. The attendance was larger than the opening night a year ago. Intense interest is reported, with the audience responsive, and the speaker even better informed than usual. The church membership is lining up solidly, and they write: "We are trusting in God and solicit the prayers of God's people everywhere."

THE SANITARIUM

We are pleased to note the efforts of the authorities in charge of the Independence Sanitarium to give sufficient publicity to the institution, its aims, and its needs. They are asking their friends to make Thanksgiving Day Sanitarium Day. The following items are mentioned as being acceptable: Money, vegetables, winter fruit, bed linen, old white clean cloths, canned fruit, canned vegetables, winter vegetables, table linen. A number of these may be shipped from a distance.

On the 15th Elder G. R. Wells was operated on at the Sanitarium for affection of the mastoid process and resulting ear trouble. Though it is a serious operation, it was skillfully consummated by a specialist from Kansas City and Brother Wells is recovering nicely. With favorable conditions, he will be able to return to Lamoni by Christmas.

Heman Hale Smith, assistant historian, is at this time in Iowa City, Iowa, in conference with Doctor B. F. Shambaugh, of the State Historical Society, regarding the proposed History of the Mormons in Iowa, which is to be written by Brother Smith and edited by Doctor Shambaugh, and put out by the State Historical Society.

Elder W. R. Dexter has been holding a series of meetings in a schoolhouse two miles south of Lucas, in the Lamoni Stake. He was supported by the local brethren of Lucas and the attendance of the Saints. One was baptized and there are prospects for others.

“As the Lord Hath Prospered You”

This has been a goodly year; peace has returned to the land and the rains have come, and the sun has warmed and all have labored without let or hindrance and have sat down to the feast of plenty which the rich land brought forth.

In time of war and in time of want we are not slow to seek God and implore his grace and protecting care; but God is found not alone through storm and cloud, but he loves to be sought in the beneficent sunlight and the quiet calm as well.

“The earth is the Lord’s and the fullness thereof”—all that we have, all that we are, we owe to his grace and goodness. He delights to bless and would draw men to him by his blessing rather than from their own dire needs.

This has been a goodly year; in health, in wealth, by degree or in measure large and small, we have all received at his hand. This is the day of thanksgiving. Have we naught but words to offer?

W. E. LARUE VERSUS THE COURTS

In the October Christian Statesman appears an article by W. E. LaRue, B. D., entitled, "The crusade against Mormonism," and with the subtitle, "The court decisions." The author gives his attention to the court decisions from which we so often quote, namely, those rendered in the Kirtland Temple case and the Temple Lot suit.

It is a little singular, but the average ecclesiastic who takes up the cudgels against "Mormonism," after prodigious research (all of them have made prodigious research), will retire to his study, pen in hand, and, after a few hours spent in a deep fog of thought, emerge with the statement that two and two make seven and nine eights. This conclusion he maintains should convert any "intelligent" Latter Day Saint. To reject it is an evidence of astounding stupidity.

THE KIRTLAND TEMPLE SUIT

In the article in question, the Reverend LaRue takes up the Kirtland Temple suit first. Of it he says:

The first one was given by Judge L. S. Sherman, court of common pleas, Lake County, Ohio, February, 1880.

The Reorganized Church brought suit before this court in order to secure title to the old Mormon Temple at Kirtland, Ohio, that had been dedicated there in 1836. When the Mormons left Ohio they abandoned this temple and it was roughly used for many years. It was advertised for sale by the Mormons in The Hancock Eagle, June 26, 1846 (Illinois) but no one offered to buy it.

Finally, after the Reorganized Church, which came into existence in 1860, began to grow somewhat, it was thought to be a good policy to obtain clear title to this old landmark. The Utah Church did not appear to contest the case and the evidence presented was ex parte and the decision of the court was on the basis of the evidence submitted and title to the property went to the Reorganized Church. . . .

Had the temple at Kirtland, Ohio, been sold in 1846 as a result of the advertisement there is no question where the proceeds would have gone. The Reorganized Church would not have received the proceeds, for it was not in existence.

The first objection, as regards the Kirtland Temple suit, then, is that the Utah Mormons did not appear to contest the case. But that certainly did not in any way invalidate the decision. They were duly notified of the suit by legal process. The fact that they did not dare or did not care to support their claims openly in court does not negate or even weaken the force of the decision. The Utah people merely showed remarkably good judgment at that particular time.

The second contention is that had the temple been sold in 1846 we would have lost the title. The mere fact that W. E. LaRue presumes—merely presumes—that the courts would have recognized the right of the church in Nauvoo in 1846 to hold or convey title to the temple, is held by W. E. LaRue to be sufficient to offset the fact that the court did hold that the Mormon Church in Salt Lake in 1880 had lost the right to either hold or convey said title.

The Reverend LaRue should be reminded that Nauvoo was not Salt Lake City, and that many things happened between 1846 and 1880—very many notable things. He should have discovered that fact in his researches in the great New York library of which we have heard so much. The court took cognizance of some of those things and set them forth in the decision, as follows:

That the church in Utah, the defendant of which John Taylor is president, has materially and largely departed from the faith, doctrines, laws, ordinances and usages of said original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and has incorporated into its system of faith the doctrines of celestial marriage and a plurality of wives, and the doctrine of Adam-god worship, contrary to the laws and constitution of said original church.

And the court do further find that the plaintiff, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is the true and lawful continuation of, and successor to the said original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, organized in 1830, and is entitled in law to all its rights and property.—Decision Judge L. S. Sherman in court of common pleas, Lake County, Ohio, 1880.

So in the Kirtland Temple case it is merely a matter of W. E. LaRue versus the court. But the court happened to be the one empowered to bring in the decision, and it is a very good decision, indeed. Of course, on appeal to most any Baptist preacher the decision might be reversed—but, fortunately, appeals in the civil court do not go that way.

THE TEMPLE LOT SUIT

Concerning the Temple Lot case in the United States Circuit Court and the decision of Judge Philips, the Reverend LaRue has this to say:

In this case the Utah Church did not appear as a contestant. The evidence presented regarding the origin of polygamy was wholly ex parte. The decision of Judge Philips has been regarded by the Reorganized Church as a great vindication of its position. The effect of the repeated publication of extracts may be seen from the following statement which appeared in THE SAINTS' HERALD, May 21, 1919.

The courts of the land also, after hearing Brigham's people and us, decided that the Mormons of Utah had departed from the faith as taught by God's inspired servants, but that the Reorganized Church had continued in the faith and was entitled to all properties belonging to said original church.—Page 500.

The fact is that no court has ever heard "Brigham's people and us," or, in other words, the Utah Church and the Reorganized Church, present arguments to verify their respective contentions. As we have pointed out, the evidence has been ex parte. The Utah Church has shown little or no interest in the proceedings.

The first objection in this case, then, as in the former, is that the Utah church was not represented before the court. But in this instance the statement is not true. The Utah church may not have been present openly and in name, but she was present in fact, and was the real contestant opposing the Reorganization. Judge Philips himself is our authority for that statement. We quote him:

While the respondents are wary of claiming alliance with this Salt Lake Church, it is evidently "the power behind the throne" in the defense of this suit.—Decision of John F. Philips, Judge, in the Temple Lot Case, page 21.

Did the Reverend LaRue know about this statement by Judge Philips when he made his assertion that the evidence was entirely ex parte, the Utah church not a contestant, having shown "little or no interest," etc.? If he did not know of it, did he presume that readers of the Christian Statesman would not know of it, and so would not detect him? We do not wish to lay such a charge against a Baptist clergyman—more especially when we remember that he was once one of our own ministers and so should have imbibed many teachings concerning honor and justice.

Th only alternative is to suppose that he did not read the decision which he attempted to review and reverse. This is rather a pitiable plight, and humiliating to all of us, in view of the fact that he was once one of our ministers and should have been taught to be more thorough. Apparently he has read only that portion of the decision quoted in our "Open letter to the Clergy" (from which he quotes). The extract appearing there is a very good extract so far as it goes, but one should read the entire decision before going into print on the subject in such a notable journal as the Christian Statesman.

WAS IT AN EX PARTE EVIDENCE?

Again the allegation is repeated that the evidence repeated before Judge Philips was entirely ex parte (from one side only). As a matter of fact, the Utah Mormon Church furnished many of the principal witnesses, including its president, Wilford Woodruff, the president of the quorum of Twelve, Lorenzo Snow, and the following named witnesses, all of Utah: Melissa Lott Wiles, L. O. Littlefield, J. C. Kingsbury, Mercy Rachel Thompson, Bathsheba Smith, Emily D. P. Young, Joseph B. Noble, Lucy W. Kimball, Mary Ann West, C. H. Whelock, Samuel W. Richards, and Priscilla M. Staines. Their depositions occupy more than one hundred pages in the Abstract of Evidence in the Temple Lot Suit. What more could the Utah Church do to get her side heard?

To be more explicit: The Utah church furnished fourteen witnesses, including the presidents of the two leading councils—while the Church of Christ or "Hedrickite" people also furnished fourteen witnesses. With perhaps one or two exceptions the Utah witnesses all testified concerning the origin of polygamy, on which point LaRue is very particular to say the evidence was ex parte. The testimony of the Utah Mormon witnesses occupies one hundred and two pages of the one hundred and sixty pages furnished by our opponents.

In his decision Judge Philips mentions the testimony of Woodruff and Snow in particular and repeatedly comments on the claims of the Utah church as they were urged before his court. In one place, for example, he says:

It is charged by the respondents, as an echo of the Utah church, that Joseph Smith, "the Martyr," secretly taught and practiced polygamy; and the Utah contingent furnished the evidence, and two of the women, to prove this fact.—Decision of John F. Philips, Judge, in the Temple Lot Case, page 25.

The Judge gives his decision later that the Utah witnesses failed to prove the thing they sought to establish—but they were heard at great length by the court. So much for Reverend LaRue's statement. It is again LaRue versus the court, and the appeal did not lie in that direction.

Again, the question arises, Did the reverend LaRue knew about the numerous witnesses that appeared to present the Utah side of the question, when he made the assertion that the evidence was entirely ex parte? We must conclude as we did before. But surely it is too bad that he did not find somewhere in that great New York library a copy of the transcript of evidence in the Temple Lot Suit. This does not look at all well for a noted student of "original sources" whose new book is now being heralded by our opponents.

JUDGING BY A LOOK

But there is one thing more. The Reverend LaRue goes on to say that he, in person, called upon the venerable Judge Philips in Kansas City in 1914, and submitted to him certain evidences which he believed to be out of harmony with the judge's decision, and that the judge seemed "much perturbed;" but remarked that he had decided on the evidence before him.

The judge is not quoted as saying anything that could be used to discredit his decision, given ten years before—no; he just looked perturbed. But you know it is so hard to introduce a "look" in evidence. And then, ought a decision carefully given from the bench after the hearing of a great amount of evidence pro and con to be set aside by a perturbed look appearing on the judicial countenance ten years later and reported by one LaRue? This is a very nice point, indeed. But it all comes in through the process of adding two and two together to get seven and nine eighths.

Also, how good a judge of perturbed looks is the Reverend LaRue? May it not have been a look of weariness? Did the judge by any chance yawn, or shuffle his feet, or look at his watch? These are interesting questions. But further than that perturbed look and the laconic reply of the judge deponent sayeth not.

Well, there the matter stands. It is clearly a case of LaRue versus the courts. And the courts heard the evidence. In the one instance they heard the evidence on both sides of the case. They heard all that the Reorganized Church had to submit and all the Utah Mormons had to submit—and the Utah Mormons scoured the earth for evidence to convict

Joseph Smith of polygamy, and failed. Some things LaRue thinks good evidence they knew to be worthless and withheld them. On the other hand, the Reverend LaRue did not hear the evidence, and apparently has not even read the decisions—or, having read, has forgotten some very important matters contained therein.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE NEED FOR A MORE EARNEST EFFORT

"Speak unto the people of Israel that they go forward."

There have been several sermons from this text, but much yet remains within it to be considered. If we are to go forward, it is going to take much more earnest effort than has yet been exercised.

This might be illustrated by a story from Alice in Wonderland. She was running hand in hand with the queen, who was going so fast that Alice could hardly keep up, but the Queen continually cried, "Faster, faster!" Finally between gasps of breath, Alice asked, "Are we nearly there?" The queen then let her rest awhile, against a tree. Alice looked around and remarked, "Why, I believe we were under this same tree the whole time. Everything is just as it was." "Why of course it is," replied the queen. "How would you have it?" "But in our country, you generally get somewhere else if you run very fast for a long time as we have been doing." "A slow kind of a country," said the queen. "Now here you see it takes all the running you can ordinarily do to keep in the same place. If you want to get somewhere you must run twice as fast."

That is worth thinking of. At the ordinary rate of progress we have been going for the last fifty and eighty years, we are likely to find ourselves fifty years hence under the same tree. If we are to get anywhere, if we are to go forward, we shall have to put forth twice the effort.

THE GREAT FEAR

In the Christian Work for November 1, the editor, Frederick Lynch, rather surprises us with an article on "The great fear." Ordinarily the great fear is taken to be death. Evidently he does not think so, for men are not afraid to lay down their life for a good cause. Also he says it is not war, because men will rush into it. It is not hunger, for men make no more provision against it than against war. Sickness and pestilence were once great fears, but the world is no longer greatly concerned over plagues.

So he says that the really great fear is the fear of taking the next step. It is the fear of going forward, leaving old customs and old orders. So fearful is humanity of going forward, that they will put to death the man who urges it.

They talk sometimes of putting to death the men who start war, but they rarely if ever do so.

When the Constitution of the United States was proposed the men were there to oppose it, and showed in every line of their speech the fear of going forward.

When a league of nations is proposed, again do we find this same class, urging now the sovereign rights of a nation rather than the sovereign rights of states. It is still the fear of going forward, the fear of passing from the old order to a new, from a tried custom to one untried.

It was for this that their fathers slew a prophet; they would drown his voice so they would not have to go forward. It was for this that Jesus of Nazareth was put to death, because he would have had the Jews leave their national provincialism. It is for this that other great leaders have been martyred—because of the dread of facing the real issue and taking the next step forward.

We can see it in the church, the frequent, if not in some instances continued opposition to every new suggestion. We have known men to set up a bogey man and declare it to be some proposed new move, then when the move was simply explained, they were unwilling to accept the explanation because it was not a "bogey" man, and their opposition therefore became worthless.

THERE MUST BE A CHANGE

We must remember that for many years we have wandered in the wilderness. We have talked of Zion, but have not established it. We have talked consecration, but have not made it. We have talked of the school of the prophets, but have not seen its establishment. We have talked of many things, which if we are to do, instead of simply discuss, we must move forward. There must be a change. But first there must be preparation.

"It is always the unprepared who are afraid."

There is a basic statement of importance to us. The unprepared are afraid. Evidently, then, it is the time for preparation. It is the time for discussion, that we may define and understand the limits of our problem.

"Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward." But if they are to go forward, rather than to turn against their prophets, they must first be prepared, and then go forward with faith and energy.

S. A. B.

The Conference for workers in the community surveys as part of the International World Movement for Iowa will be held in Des Moines November 8-10. This will consist of a number of fifteen-minute addresses, followed by forty-five minutes of open discussion. A series of these conferences will be held in every State in the Union by or before December 20.

JAPAN ON AMERICAN CHRISTIANITY

Nearly one hundred years ago Joseph Smith said that the Lord told him Christianity had fallen into a bad way, the professors of religion drawing near to him with their lips while their hearts were far from him, the creeds all wrong, and so on.

He was roundly abused, and is yet, for making such an assertion. Every pious clerical who feels his churchly dignity assailed by such remarks brands them as blasphemous. But did Joseph Smith miss the mark so far then? Or have times changed?

The Literary Digest for November 1, 1919, has this comment:

Missionary societies especially and church people of all creeds and denominations in America "can find material for thought," says the Detroit Free Press, in the statement by Bishop Tucker, of Kioto, that Japan sent a special commission to the United States to study the influence of Christianity on the lives of the American people. Their report on their return was that "while education, commerce and industry have been developed to a wonderful degree, there is little evidence that the Christian religion is regarded as important by most of the people." The Free Press giving the layman's view of the matter, adds some reflections of its own:

"This is a judgment by a presumably honest and thoughtful body of outside observers. And it would be a courageous man who would undertake to prove that the Japanese investigators were profoundly in error in their conclusions.

Evidently there has been "a man among us taking notes"—the astute little brown man. His conclusions are not particularly flattering to modern Christianity—and one of our own papers thinks it would be a courageous man who would challenge the Japanese verdict.

Has this decline come about since 1820? Or was Joseph Smith right? Was his statement indeed a diagnosis? Or was it a prognosis? Even if only the latter, he must have indeed been something of a prophet!

E. A. S.

"AUTHENTIC INFORMATION"

The branch at Sherrill, New York, of which Frank C. Mesle is pastor, has issued a four-page leaflet the title-page of which states that it is "Authentic information concerning the teachings and standing of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." It is neatly gotten up in pleasing style and commendably free from error. The few typographical errors are not so glaring as in some other samples we have received lately. We wish our people could understand how important it is to give attention to the style and detailed appearance of these bits of printing, for the church is often judged by such things, and there should be no occasion for wrong impressions. Very often they could be improved a hundred per cent by the simple expedient of having some one who knows how go over the manuscript before printing.

Elder J. F. Garver recently delivered two lectures at Grace-land College on "The atonement," to the class on religious education. These lectures are much appreciated and form an important part of the training of this class.

SYNOPSIS OF SERMON ON TITHING

The Interpretation and Rendition of the Law

I am going to read the whole of the twentieth chapter of the Acts, as it tells of the Apostle Paul's wonderful service for others, and that is a part of what I intend to talk about this morning. (The reproduction of the chapter is omitted here.)

Now I want especially to call your attention to the 35th verse, just read, as follows: "I have showed you all things, how that so laboring ye ought to support the weak, and remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive." Paul reminds them that Jesus said, It is more blessed to give than receive. Don't forget that.

A new world is being rebuilt from the wreckage of the old world of which we are a part. In saying a new world, I do not mean that the physical formation of this world has been disrupted and thrown into the chaotic state again, to be rehabilitated and reconstructed by Him through whom the worlds were made. But I mean that the organized world forces which make for society and business, for laws and governments are now in the act of being reconstructed—that which has been disorganized and put out of working order.

There was what was known as the reconstruction period following the great Civil War, and now we are entering on the reconstruction period following the great World War on a much bigger scale.

I have read that the biggest thing in this world is man, and that the greatest captain is the captain of one's own soul. If that is so, then the greatest work of that captaincy is in conquering the soul and in leading it in service for others. The reconstruction of the world can be brought about in no other way.

By service to others we build characters and lay foundations for the benefit and happiness of future generations. By service to others, selfishness is dethroned and altruism is enthroned. Man being the biggest thing in the world, he dominates its activities, and he has dominated the activities by selfishness, consequently reconstruction is made necessary.

GOD'S COMMANDS IN FORCE

The pure gospel of Christ knows no selfishness and consequently needs no reconstruction. It is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. The Lord's commands are not abrogated. All of his commands are for our good, and we are promised rewards if we obey them. He has commanded us to repent. He has commanded us to be baptized. He has commanded us to do no evil, but to do good.

He has commanded us to live by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

He has commanded us to pay our tithing. Oh! Yes, that is one of his commands just as much as the one to be baptized. Will paying tithing save us? No; nor will being baptized save us unless we live right. We might be baptized a hundred times, but if we lived wickedly the baptism would avail us nothing. Do we have to pay our tithing? No; nor do we have to be baptized; but it is to our interest to comply with both.

THE BISHOP'S LETTER

The Bishop has sent letters out to the missionaries and to branch presidents. I have received two, and I thought it time I get busy, consequently this sermon this morning, and now I am going to read a part of one of the letters I received, as follows:

Every branch officer should have a vision—an ideal of what the church of five or ten years from now should be.

We should double in membership.

Our missionary force should increase yearly.

We should have in operation hundreds of stewardships by which we might demonstrate to the world that righteousness, temporal equality and the religion of Jesus Christ go hand in hand.

The undertaking before us is colossal, but God will make us equal to it, and our success will be measured by the courage with which we approach the task, and the amount of mental and physical energy that we expend in the prosecution of our work. It will not be difficult for each officer to figure out what he must do in order to accomplish these results. In the words of President F. M. Smith, all must "speed up." We are living in the hastening time and unusual activity should characterize our efforts.

Particularly do we sense this need in the work of the Bishopric. No great forward movement of the church can take place unless the advance agents have paved the way by having on hand finances with which to do the work.

Now note the next two lines, as they should effect you and me and all of us:

"The slogan for this year is:

"Every member a tithe payer."

"Every member a tithe payer." How does that sound? Say! Why cannot every Saint on Enoch Hill get in line and have his name put on the Bishop's books? Some of you already have your names there, but there are going to be more. "Every member a tithe payer." That means every one of us here this morning. Well, if not all of us, there will be a big majority of us who will have our names on the Bishop's books this year. I don't believe any of us wishes to be the one who will fail to show up on the books. I don't, and God helping me I will not be.

Notice that the beginning of this excerpt I have read says: "Every branch officer should have a vision," etc. That does not simply mean the president. Let us all get busy and see that Enoch Hill is not lagging in the effort to have "every member a tithe payer."

WHAT IS SURPLUS?

I will read something from Doctrine and Covenants 106. Note that this is in answer to an inquiry as regards this subject of tithing. Here is the inquiry:

"In answer to the question, O Lord, show unto thy servant how much thou requirest of the properties of thy people for a tithing."

Now, here is the answer:

Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion, for the building of mine house, and for the laying the foundation of Zion, and for the priesthood. . . . And this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that those who have been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them forever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord.

Now what is surplus? If you have more than you really need of anything, it is surplus, isn't it? Suppose a man has a nice, prosperous business in town that makes him a good living—he and his family have all they want to eat and wear. We will say that he keeps a car and has all the comforts that anybody need desire. Anything more than that would be superfluous, or surplus, would it not? Well, in addition we will suppose that he has a farm worth twenty-five thousand dollars. He really does not need that, does he? Then it should be given to the church as surplus. But, we will suppose that he has the ability to manage such a farm or a factory which he might own, he could act as a steward over the same and the increase from his stewardship go into the storehouse for the benefit of the church.

In 1901 Andrew Carnegie sold out his interest in the steel business and he was said to be worth two hundred and fifty million dollars. Now he did not need but a little of that amount, and he knew it. He said it was a disgrace for a man to die rich, and he was going to give away his wealth. Did he do it? He could have consecrated to some one or more worthy cause all but an inheritance and enough to provide for his needs. When he commenced giving away his wealth he had a quarter of a billion. He gave away fortunes, but the "interest annually," using the word in the revelation, amounted to a good deal more than he gave away, although the amount given is said to be three hundred and fifty millions, and still it is said that at death he was worth five hundred millions, so he did not quite succeed in dying a poor man. Add the amount given away to what he was worth at the time of death and the interest on that given away would have made him worth something like a billion dollars had he not given any away. I have a newspaper clipping here which shows that the inheritance tax on what he left is $144,181,000. The Federal Government gets all of this except twenty millions which goes to the State of New York. That is a pretty big tax. Bring it down to small figures it would be over one hundred and forty-four dollars on five hundred dollars. That would ruin a poor man.

THE RENDITION OF THE LAW

Now, as to the next part of this quotation from the Doctrine and Covenants. You will note that after we have paid the surplus we should pay one tenth of all our interest annually. Here you will observe that it says, "Interest annually." In Deuteronomy it says "all the tithe of thine increase," which means the same thing. (See Deuteronomy 14: 28.) I will read it: "At the end of three years thou shalt bring forth all the tithe of thine increase the same year, etc."

There are some who interpret the law of tithing differently from what the Bishop does. I want to show you that in so doing they are doing wrong. I refer you to section 129 and paragraph 8. It is a long paragraph and I will not read all of it. It starts: "The Spirit saith further: The attention of the church is called to the construction of the revelation, given in answer to earnest supplication, with regard to temporal things." I think that refers to section 106 which I have just been reading. Then along down in the paragraph we find these words: "The church has been directed to accede to the rendition of the bishopric with respect to the temporal law."

Is that not plain enough? "The church has been directed to accede to the rendition of the bishopric with respect to the temporal law." I believe I am in harmony with the bishop in teaching the law of tithing. If I am not I am out of line.

WHO SHOULD PAY?

Who should pay tithing? Everyone. I know that there is not a person on this hill but what can pay something. The Bishop thinks so, too, because he has sent out this slogan: "Every member a tithe payer." Say, right here I want to make an application of a sign I used to see. It was on the billboards, a few years ago, in big letters, and all it said was just these words: "Get the habit." This continued perhaps for months, and I, and perhaps hundreds of others, wondered what it meant. Finally another word appeared under the first three, and it was the word cigar. Then we knew "Get the habit" was the name of a cigar. Let us get the habit—not that habit, but the habit of paying tithing, and we will feel "blessed," more so than in receiving.

In April I spoke on this subject, and I took up the question of who should pay tithing, answering some objections I have heard from people who have property that is not clear of debt. I then explained that no one could pay tithing on what he did not own; that if a person had a home that cost three thousand dollars and there was a thousand dollars against it held by another party, that such a person would not have to pay tithing on the whole three thousand, but simply what was his equity in it. In the last Ensign and HERALD is an article from the Bishop right in harmony with some things I told you when I spoke on this subject last April. I will quote from the Bishop's article, as follows:

If last year we found upon making an inventory of everything we possessed of value, we were worth $1,000; after paying one tenth, or $100, we had left $900. If now our inventory would show our net worth, $1,100, the increase would be $200, one tenth of which would show the tithing now due, or $20.

In my April discourse I explained what would be the proper course should either husband or wife be not a member of the church, and in that I harmonized with what the Bishop has to say on that point, which is as follows:

Question: My companion is not a member of the church; How should I figure my tithing?

Answer: A husband and wife should consider themselves as partners in life, each owning one half of their possessions. The Saint should pay tithing in full upon net worth at the time of marriage and upon one half the amount accumulated after marriage which is the result of their combined efforts. This should be done with the full knowledge and consent of the companion; to do otherwise would only serve to do harm, bringing discord in the home and creating prejudice against the Lord's work.

Here is what he says in regard to inventories:

Question. Who should file inventories?

Answer. Every member of the church.

Q. Why have children to do this?

A. Because the thought in the child's mind that they have done what God's law requires will have a very wholesome effect in tying the child to God through his church.

The Bishop supposes a man who had belonged to the church for five years, who had five hundred dollars on which he had paid no tithing and finally lost all of it, and asks if he owes any tithing on that five hundred dollars which is gone. The bishop says that was a debt and still stands a debt until it is paid.

"Every member a tithe payer," says the Bishop. It is easy; the easiest thing in the world. We have to pay our taxes every year, and we have to pay on what we do not own. If we have two thousand equity in a place and owe two thousand dollars on it we have to pay taxes on both every year. Not so with tithing. We pay only on what we own, and that only once, not every year. The taxes are for the support of the public institutions and the tithing is for the support of the church. Both are necessary.

TITHING A MOST JUST ARRANGEMENT

Tithing entails no burden on anyone. If a man's increase is fifty thousand dollars, five thousand of that will not hurt him a bit. If his increase is only five dollars, fifty cents will not hurt him a bit, either. It is the most just thing ever conceived. Wise men of the world have said so. They have said that if the municipal, state, and national governments were run on that kind of taxation and all would honestly comply with it the burden of taxes would be light. We are compelled to pay our taxes. We cannot escape them. But it is different with the tithing. The church will not levy on our property, nor has anybody been disfellowshipped for not paying tithing, that I have ever heard of. But we will be respected and honored by both the church and the Lord if we keep his commandments.

"Every member a tithe payer." I would feel good if I knew that every member on Enoch Hill was going to be a tithe payer this year. I heard of a case of a brother who said the Lord had blessed his family by healing the members through administration and that in return he was going to pay his tithing, but he evidently forgot it. This is awful. He had better have said nothing. We should keep all our pledges and resolutions, and especially the ones we make with the Lord. I know a man who was sick near unto death with typhoid fever. The elders administered to him and he promised that if the Lord would heal him he would be baptized. He got well, but he forgot his promise and went from bad to worse. Let us keep all our promises, but especially the ones we make to the Lord.

According to the Apostle Paul the dear Savior said that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Try it out and you will know that the savior knew what he was talking about. Don't forget the Bishop's slogan—"Every member a tithe payer," and each one here help make it come true. May God bless us and help us that we may keep all of his commandments is my prayer.

As for a boy or a girl it is one of the sorriest mistakes to talk down to them; almost always your lad of fifteen thinks more simply, more fundamentally, than you do; and what he accepts as good coin is not facts or precepts, but feelings and convictions—life.—David Grayson.

A guilty conscience is an unquenchable fire. Conscience outraged scourges the soul as with a whip of cords. Sin ever rises up to confront the evildoer and to fill him with remorse and gloom. The guilty sinner is haunted with a constant fear.—Samuel F. Halfyard, in Cardinal Truths of the Gospel.

It Is Written

Private property is defined as being the exclusive control over valuable things by private persons. Ownership implies the right of excluding other persons from the employment of a thing. This right of ownership is not absolute but conditional. It is purely a human arrangement for the protection of society. No man is free to do as he pleases unless he pleases to abide by the civil laws.

The law provides that society may levy a tax upon all real estate and personal property for the maintenance of government and that if the owner fails or refuses to pay the tax, the state may sell such property and his right of possession ceases and another occupies. In other words, he must "render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's." This service is compulsory.

The tax imposed by civil government must be paid even though you may have operated your business at a loss, but herein is the justice of God manifested, in that you are not required to pay the tenth unless you have had an increase.

God deals with his children not by force, but by persuasion and love, though the requirements of his law are equally as rigid—"and unto God the things that are God's." In the payment of tithing as in the requirement of every other command of God, man is left free to exercise his agency. He may choose to keep the commandments of God and reap the benefits or he may refuse, as did Israel of old, and suffer the penalty of a broken law.

God has first claim upon the earth: "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof," yet we are permitted to occupy and enjoy of its riches while he sends the added blessings of rain and sunshine and many other forces which puny man cannot supply. Out of the increase and for the purpose of financing his work among the children of men he requires, "Honor the Lord with thy substance," for one tenth of the increase of the field or of the flock or of the herd belongs to God.

It is made plain that God requires an accounting of every member in his temporal affairs. "Every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property." This accounting is to be made to the Lord's servants in this life and also before God at the judgment bar, in the life to come; "for it is required of every steward to render an account of his stewardship both in time and in eternity, for he who is faithful and wise in time is accounted worthy to inherit the mansions prepared for them of my Father." From this responsibility none shall be exempt. Let no one deceive himself that he shall not account for his stewardship unto me."

An Affirmative Gospel

A Vivid Testimony of One Who Changed His Methods

Experience, it is said, is a costly school, but the unwise will learn by no other. There is a measure of truth in this statement which causes me to have a desire to present a few thoughts, in connection therewith that might tend toward the betterment of others. I take it that it is not necessary for all to err, just because I have erred. For I think it quite possible for others to profit by my mistakes. That is to say, I think others will be wise enough to avoid my errors when their attention has been drawn to them. To this end I pray that he who reads may have the grace to enable him to understand what I seek to convey.

A DEPLORABLE CONDITION

About nineteen years ago I was awakened to the fact that my condition was deplorable. I had not been privileged to go to school, as had others of my generation; consequently I knew nothing. This of course was no excuse for ignorance. I might have improved myself by careful and persistent study, but I had not. My good father had at times pleaded with me to read good books, but I thought it was only a foggy notion father had; that the reading of such books was useless so far as I was concerned. But that they might properly have a place in the life and pastime of old men.

However, I awakened at this period of my life to the fact that I knew nothing, and that if I should ever amount to anything in this world, or that which is to come, I must begin to bestir myself, and day by day apply myself to study.

Accordingly I began to devote my evenings to study, feeling assured that a persistent, earnest effort would not and could not go unrewarded. My progress was of necessity very slow, because as before stated my schooling had been very limited, and my help along the line of study was not visible. I read poorly and therefore had to reread a sentence many times before I was able to arrive at anything like an understanding of it. My efforts for a while seemed almost a failure, but I continued to try.

I had not long studied of evenings until I learned to take God into confidence and I, day by day, laid my case before him.

I had quite a vivid recollection of hearing mother read the language of Paul in our family worship, wherein he said that he was not taught the gospel by man but by the revelation of Jesus Christ. I concluded, that if Paul could be taught in that manner, it was possible for me also to be taught by that means, at least, if God had not changed.

AN EFFORT TO PRAY

I remembered too that my father used to pray, and I, myself, had seen many of his prayers answered. This of course gave me courage and assurance, and I went to my room in solitude and tried to pray. The effort was a difficult one, and like many others, my prayer was petitionary. However, after the effort I seemed to feel better, and could study with greater ease. Thereafter I made prayer a part of my study.

It was not long, however, until I learned to take God into partnership as it were. I learned to love the hour of prayer and also the period of research. I also learned early in my experience to pray: "Lord, lead me that I may discover and learn the truth, that thereby I may become more useful in this world; that I might become an honor to God and a blessing to mankind." At times the Spirit of God would rest upon me, and I would weep under its penetrating influence as I sat in the quiet of my room and studied my book. Each day I was given greater courage, and thus I struggled on until I was able partially to understand the gospel law. What a pity it was that I could not have realized the importance of these things earlier in life.

THE CALL TO THE MINISTRY

Under conditions of this kind I was called to the ministry, a boon to anyone who will qualify for such an arduous and noble service. Think of the privilege extended unto man to become a partner with God in the saving of the race. Like most young men I was ambitious and zealous in my work. I wanted to tell the story of Christ and his gospel to every one; but like many others I permitted things of minor importance to intervene and obscure the greater things of the gospel.

Like many others I concluded that the success of my work as a minister was to be measured by a destructive rather than a constructive method. So instead of studying the superior aspects of our gospel, that I might become the better qualified and able to cause mankind to see its beauty and grandeur, I applied myself to discover the weaknesses of other religious bodies; thinking, of course, that when I could destroy the claims made by them I had scored a point. I thought that if I could demolish their craft, I would be a hero. Strange as it may seem, it was nevertheless a fact, I thought people ought to see that I was right if I could only convince them that they were wrong. I, of course, didn't have sense enough to see that if I would and could convince them that I was right, they would be wise enough to know that theretofore they had been mistaken.

THE WAY OF AN ICONOCLAST

Being by nature a controversialist I took a delight in crushing everything that didn't seem to correspond with my external conception of the church of Christ. With such iconoclastic ideas and methods, I, for years, pursued my course, quite unconscious of the fact that in many instances I misrepresented rather than represented the meek and lowly Jesus. It causes me to blush with shame now, when I think of being so shortsighted. But like the sons of thunder I wanted, as it were, to call down fire from heaven to destroy those who differed from us. I had failed to comprehend the answer of Christ to those men which says: "Ye know not what spirit ye are of, for the Son of Man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them."

We are born into tradition, and though we may congratulate ourselves that we are free from the traditional ideas and notions with which other people are circumscribed, we are nevertheless afflicted with certain traditional notions. One of the traditional notions to which I fell heir, was the idea that I must challenge to public combat every fellow, who dared to differ from me; and by reason of my traditional notions I was more anxious to prove myself right. To be real truthful about it, I was so shortsighted that I thought the proving of the other fellow's wrong would necessarily prove me right. At this ignorance Lucifer and all his imps might have a just occasion to laugh. For so shortsighted was I that I never stopped to think that I might successfully prove the position of another wrong, and yet fail to cause him, or for that matter anyone else, to see that my philosophy, and my theology were correct.

I wondered often how other people could be so dense as to be unable to see the beauty of our gospel, when in reality I had given them only a picture of their own weaknesses. I was too shortsighted to see that I had omitted entirely the constructive work that rightly belongs to the gospel of our Lord.

During this period I enjoyed reading negative works; such as sought only to point out the weaknesses, and reveal the failures of other religious bodies. It is therefore quite evident that when I tried to preach I was obliged to put out what I had been taking in. I failed, too, to realize that often an hour's time could be taken up in decrying the philosophy of others and not a word be said to vindicate our cause.

THE CHANGE TO AFFIRMATIVE METHODS

That method might have been followed by me until this good hour, had it not been for the goodness and mercy of God. That I may be better understood, permit me to say that I quite early learned to pray, "Lord, lead me that I may discover the truth, and thus become the better fitted for service in the church." By reason of my shortsightedness I, to a degree at least, prevented that prayer from being answered, because I was quite determined that I would forbid all the right to speak in the name of the Lord, who followed not with us. I could give good reasons why I could not believe the position of the other man, but it was much more difficult for me to give good and sufficient reasons why I should believe as I did. In fact the only reason I could give those days was that the others were wrong, and of course that was no reason at all.

God in his goodness however, saw fit to lead me out of my error, and caused me to get a clearer vision than I had hitherto received. Like Saul of Tarsus while I was on the Damascus road the good Lord appeared to me. His form and countenance defy all description, and the gentleness of his voice which spoke to me pierced like a two-edged sword. He said to me: "Why do you persist in your traditions when I have bidden you to follow me?" I paused, and in my shame I hid my face, and wept because I was unable to answer. He said unto me: "Arise and gird yourself with truth, for you shall yet be my witness unto men and nations; but remember you must conquer yourself." I bowed my head forward in submission and he said to me: "Henceforth you shall teach men the truth, if you will learn to follow me; but remember truth gives life unto men and does not seek to destroy them. Therefore, my son, remember you are required to build and not to destroy; you must learn to present my truth in a way that will win mankind rather than to drive them away from you; for I came not to destroy the lives of men but to save them."

THE NEW TESTAMENT TEACHING

This lesson was so impressed upon my mind that I shall never forget it. I may falter it is true, but one thing is certain, and that is: if I am unable to bring men into the church through the spirit of love and kindness, I will be perfectly willing that they may remain where they are. I don't care to try to coerce or in any way force the human mind.

In a measure, at least, I have learned the excellence of the New Testament teaching which says: "By me if any man shall enter in he shall be saved, and he shall go in and out and find pasture."

I have been intuitively led to the discovery of books that have supplied the thing I needed most. I am grateful to God, and have reason to rejoice in the fact that I have, in a measure, learned the goodness and love of God which passeth all understanding. My appeal therefore unto all people is to accept truth because they love that which is beautiful and lovable. He who tries to accept truth because of the fear he has of future punishment is cowardly. Fear has torment, but perfect love gives life and peace unto the one who possesses it, and it gives joy and courage to others.

Personally I am willing to grant others the privileges I ask for myself. I trust, too, that each day may reveal to me the lessons it has in store, that thereby I may become proficient in the service of life. That by reason of gaining a knowledge of the laws of love, I may become an honor to God and a blessing to mankind.

WHY DRIVE AWAY?

The only purpose I have in presenting this treatise is that it might be of assistance to others, especially in dealing with the world of humanity. For what virtue is there in scoring a point in argument if thereby I drive people away from me rather than to draw them to church? Our mission then is not to be able to transcend others in argument only, nor is it to get people into the church only! No; it is rather to make the church a means whereby we may bring mankind to a knowledge of God, and hence to the unfolding of a Christlike life and character. If I cannot cause another to understand and accept all I understand and accept, let me assist him to get as much of it I can, and not try to destroy his hope in Christ because he cannot see just as I see.

It is recorded of Christ that he was kind unto the unthankful and the evil. Can I afford to do other than that? No, verily, for since we are required to represent Christ, and cause our fellowmen to understand his message of love and life we must be kind to them; we must win them through kindness, patience and love. We can never hope to cause men to see a resemblance between us and the meek and lowly Jesus, if we are harsh or unkind in our manner of dealing with them. We may very successfully draw the line between true and false religion without being either harsh or unkind, and we need never become personal in so doing.

My appeal, therefore to all mankind is, that the only legitimate means at our disposal, in dealing with mankind, is that of absolute justice and right between man and man. We should never seek to claim for ourselves that which we are not willing to grant to all mankind, and we should never impugn the motives of any man. Only by and through the philosophy of Christ which says: "Bless and curse not" are we able to remove sin and establish peace on the earth.

Theocracy and Democracy

Some Pertinent Observations on Present Tendencies

We hear so much in these days about democracy it might be a wholesome relief to listen awhile to something about theocracy. In some corners there is so much said about the rule of the people, about "common consent" in the church, about the voice of the people being the voice of God, about what we want and what we must have, that the onlooker must conclude that the church is nothing but a man-made institution.

We have carried the "joke" too far, in my humble judgment. Rulers and prophets and leaders have become empty terms, and the "power of the priesthood" has been minimized, both in theory and practice, and this great gospel which came "not in word only but in power and the Holy Ghost and much assurance," is holding place in some persons' minds simply as an orange from which the juice has been squeezed. "It is a tale told by idiots, signifying nothing."

In touching on this question of theocracy, I entertain no fear of swinging the pendulum too far to the other side of the subject.

DEMOCRACY DEFINED

Democracy is briefly defined thus: "Government by the people. A form of government in which the supreme power is retained and directly exercised by the people." Granting this definition to be correct, we see that the church of Christ is not wholly democratic.

Theocracy is defined thus: "Government of a state (or a church) by the immediate direction of God." This statement suffices our purpose. Inasmuch as the people of the church have the right to say whether or not they are willing to be governed by the direction of God, the church is not fully theocratic. Hence we see that the church is a theocratic-democratic organization; it is both divine and human, and to ignore either one of these factors in our carrying on is to defeat the purpose for which the church was organized.

To speak of unlimited democracy is to speak of anarchism in its wild form. Every group of people must be governed by rules, or laws. We speak of the rules of the game, the rules of the camp. There are certain rights to be respected, certain things which may and may not be done. This holds true in the unit of all governments, the family. It is true in church groups. No man is a law unto himself. It takes two or more persons to work out the principles of altruism, which is religion. These rules of group conduct must be taught. People do not know them at the start of life. They must be taught by persons who know: these instructors are teachers, and by virtue of their knowledge are leaders.

In the church these leaders are called ministers, and God has reserved to himself the right to call these men into his service. "You have not chosen me," he said, "but I have chosen you, and ordained you." Paul makes it very plain that no man is to take upon himself this honor but he that is "called of God as was Aaron."

DEMOCRACY LIMITED IN THE CHURCH

Thus, at the very beginning we see a limit placed upon democracy in the church. It is true that "common consent" can say, "We will not have this man preside over us," "But this privilege is indeed an empty one when we consider the consequences of rejecting God. It is somewhat like the case of "You may eat or not eat, but if you eat you shall surely die." A man may have the power, or free agency, to do a thing and at the same time not have the moral right to do it. I have the power to curse God, but I have no moral right to do so. I have the power to vote yes or no in a business meeting, but I have no moral right to vote against the direction of God. I can oppose the direction of branch, district, and general church leaders, but I should not lose sight of the fact that I may be opposing the will of God. I am sure that this truth is often lost sight of, and many a branch business meeting has become drunken with what is called the right of franchise and has retarded the work of God by unwise procedure which demonstrated the terrible danger of ignoring the fact that the church is theocratic as well as democratic. When a body reversed the divine and natural order by seeking to lead the leader it is time either to select a real leader or discipline the body. It seems to me that there is far less danger to result from a leader leading than from a body leading.

THE BODY CANNOT LEAD ITSELF

However, the real crux of the matter is, that the body, as such, never did lead itself or anyone else. In all branches where there are factions, these factions are the result of would-be usurpers of leadership. We watch the business meetings and find that people divide in thought because of the arguments made by certain officers, as a rule. The memberships are waiting at the wing for the cue. When certain persons oppose the branch president the division is large or small according to the state of mind of the auditors and the influence of the opposers. The branch business meeting manifests the would-be head or heads of the branch. It is thinkable that this opposition has been going on through the weeks past, more or less under cover. At the business meetings these oft-times mischief makers have to show their hand, or take chances on losing their coveted votes. We may state then that without leadership there would be no divisions in branches.

Therefore, the question arises, as a voter, for which side should I vote? And in this arena of controversy a terrible tragedy is often enacted; for the people are influenced by prejudice, relationship, "reason," spite, doubt, or haste. The business meeting degenerates into a people's forum, a debating society, where subjects are considered in heat and passion. Democracy may have its perfect sway, but the principle of theocracy is completely lost sight of. And the fatal step is taken.

AID DOWNTRODDEN BY EXECUTION OF LAW

The thing I am trying to emphasize here, is that in this age of reacton, Bolshevism is stalking through the land and creeping into the minds of people, who should be proof against such lawlessness. I refer to church members. No one is more in sympathy with the downtrodden than I am. I want to be the first to protest against tyrants; but I know that the only wise way to actively protest is to execute the power of the law; nothing is gained by burning and plundering and shouting. This is the method of the man whose brain is surcharged with blood. In the church we do not use the fagot and the gun, but there are lawless persons who stab with the tongue and kindle fires that burn up the souls of men. This thing unchecked results in reigns of terror. The church had one in Nauvoo, one in Independence in 1833. We need not come nearer in time than those days.

In a careful study of the Book of Covenants one can read the sad and painful history of the church. Faithlessness and disobedience, on the part of the membership in particular, were the predominating causes of the troubles which came as scourges on the church. As early as 1831, the "stiff-neckedness" of the Saints at Thompson made it necessary for the Lord to revoke a commandment given to Griffin and Knight. (Section 56: 2.)

THE PENALTY OF REJECTION

The Saints were commanded to assemble at the Ohio to receive the law by which the church was to be governed. In less than thirty days this promise was fulfilled; the law was given to govern the church for all time. It is a wonderful document, worthy of the study of everyone. (See section 42.) And especially is impressed the statement that condemnation would follow the rejection of the commandments given.

Let us look into this law. The ministers shall teach the principles of the gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon. The members are commanded not to kill, steal, or lie. The Saints are commanded to consecrate of their properties for the support of the poor. The idler is condemned. Vanity is rebuked. Immorality forbidden.

In August of the same year the elders gathered in the land of Zion. A revelation came from the Lord to the Saints there. It contained this beatitude: "Blessed is he that keepeth my commandments, whether in life or in death; and he that is faithful in tribulation, the reward of the same is greater in the kingdom of God." (Sec. 58:1.) And then came this solemn declaration: "My law shall be kept on this land." (58: 5.) And the instruction which followed was right to the point: "Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land;" (58: 5.) Then followed direction to Martin Harris: "It is wisdom in me that my servant Martin Harris should be an example unto the church in laying his moneys before the bishop of the church. And, also, this is a law unto every man that cometh unto this land, to receive an inheritance, and he shall do with his moneys according as the law directs." (58: 7.)

On August 7, 1831, follows another revelation. Statements of the law are repeated, and emphasis is laid on keeping the Sabbath day holy. (59: 2.)

PRINCIPLE OF THEOCRACY PERSISTS

The foregoing commandments are of God given through the prophet he had called and the people had sustained. They are not man-made laws. Here we face the principle of theocracy again. God spoke. He asked the people to do only those things which would redound to their uplift and eternal good. God was never a fanatic, and only a fanatic sees fanaticism in his teachings. Democracy says, We may or we may not keep these teachings of Jehovah. But Jehovah says, If you keep them you will be blessed; if you reject them you will be damned. And history tells us that the people chose to reject the commandments of God, and were damned. Let us read:

From a revelation given in September, 1832: "And your minds in times past have been darkened because of the unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written, that they may bring forth fruit meet for their Father's kingdom, otherwise there remaineth a scourge and a judgment to be poured out upon the children of Zion; for, shall the children of Zion pollute my holy land? Verily I say unto you, Nay." (Section 83: 8.)

Did God allow them to pollute the land of Zion? Verily, he did not, for he suffered the enemy to drive them out. And of this happening, he spoke in a revelation given in December, 1833, in this language:

"Verily, I say unto you, concerning your brethren who have been afflicted, and persecuted, and cast out from the land of their inheritance, I, the Lord, have suffered the affliction to come upon them, wherewith they have been afflicted in consequence of their transgressions . . . there were jarrings, and contentions, and envyings, and strifes, and lustful and covetous desires among them; therefore for these things they polluted their inheritances." (Section 98:1, 3.)

The fulfillment of God's word followed close on the heels of its giving. We had democracy (?) rebelling against theocracy. God had spoken through his prophet but the people did not heed. And the consequence was disaster. Even the old Saint Louis Republic of the year 1833, records the shame of this rebellious people. That the citizens of Missouri transgressed the law when they whipped the Saints, burned their homes, and drove them away from Jackson County, no one denies, who understands the facts, but that the Saints broke the law of God in their "jarrings, contentions, envyings, lustful and covetous desires," we know, for the Lord has so stated. It is probable that some of us have not looked at this side of the picture enough. In speaking of the mistakes of ancient Israel, the Bible says that such things should be taken for our warning.

HISTORY REPEATING ITSELF

And what of to-day? Is history repeating itself? Certainly so in some corners. Lawlessness is rampant. Listen to Colonel Henry Watterson, a veteran newspaper man, in an interview published in the New York Herald, in speaking of Prohibition:

"The laws of the United States will not be enforced, regarding Prohibition. Constitutional prohibition may never be rescinded, but like the Fifteenth Amendment in the Southern States, it will become inoperative, and as an old Mississippi friend of mine says, it will be just as easy to get a drink as to keep a nigger from voting."

And Doctor Frank Crane adds: "Here you have the gist of the matter; having been defeated in a fair fight, the liquor interests instead of gracefully acknowledging the corn, propose to defy the law of the Nation exactly as certain portions of the South defy the law of the Nation in regard to negro suffrage."

Priest John L. Belford, of a Brooklyn Catholic church, expresses a common sentiment in these words, as reported in the Word and Way, February 20, 1919: "The Prohibition amendment is an unjust law. No one is bound to obey it. No one should have the least scruples about breaking it or defying it. . . . Smaller things than this have brought on revolutions."

And in the church, what? In some instances, indifference; in others, lawlessness. Men say, "Shall I not, do as I please with what is my own?" But do they not forget that the very dust of their bodies belongs to God, and that if they are not stewards they are nothing in his sight. Others cry out, "Here is the heir, come let's kill him." And still others say, "As for this man, Moses, he takes too much honor to himself; we will not brook it." Others cry out in the perverted words of Patrick Henry, "Give me democracy or give me death." And if they rule God out, they get both, for man without God dies spiritually. Likewise a branch or a church of branches.

PROVISIONS FOR THEOCRACY

Ofttimes—not always, of course—the man who cries the loudest about heresy is himself the biggest heretic. If I read the history of our church correctly, I discover that the Lord was rebuking certain ones again and again because of their opposition to Joseph Smith, jr., the prophet, seer, and revelator. It is well to refresh our memory:

"If ye desire the glories of the kingdom, appoint ye my servant Joseph Smith, jr., and uphold him before me by the prayer of faith." (43:3.) "My servant Joseph shall be appointed to preside over the conference by the voice of it, and what he saith to thee, thou shalt tell." (27:4.) "If they receive thee not, I will send upon them a cursing instead of a blessing . . . and it shall be given thee, in the very moment, what thou shalt speak and write; and they shall hear it, or I will send upon them a cursing instead of a blessing. . . . Be patient in afflictions, for thou shalt have many; but endure them, for lo, I am with you, even unto the end of thy days." (23:2, 3, 4.) "Wherefore, meaning the church, thou shalt give heed unto all his words, and commandments, which he shall give unto you, as he receiveth them, walking in all holiness before me; for his word ye shall receive, as if from mine own mouth, in all patience and faith." (19:1.) "No man shall be appointed to receive commandments and revelations in this church excepting my servant Joseph Smith, jr., for he receiveth them even as Moses." (27:2.) "None else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him." (43:2.)

THE BAN OF DECEPTIVENESS

The foregoing statements provide for a theocratic government in the church. Not that it should be supreme, or worked independent of the people of the church; but that it should be upheld in exactly the light that God wants it to be upheld. To do less is to displease God and defeat our success in the church. (By the word our, I mean those who fight law.) We read between the lines, which I have quoted from the revelations, of a repeated occurrence which was the very ecstasy of pathos: the Prophet was continually misunderstood by the people he was giving his life to serve. It was his fate. He was called to lay the foundation of Zion, and the ignorant could not comprehend always the methods he employed. Why should they expect to walk without faith? God reveals his secrets to his servants the prophets. Some of the pseudo Saints extolled the prophet in public and condemned him in private. It is so to-day. I did not intend to make any direct application. David Whitmer tells us that because Joseph Smith introduced high priests into the organization of the church, and taught a few other things not mentioned in the Book of Mormon, a great wrong was committed, and apostasies took place on the right and the left. John Bennett came into the church, and when he found he could not use the Prophet for a tool he left. Likewise others. Those dirty Laws and Fosters, who confessed their guilt as shown in the investigation minuted in the Nauwoo Neighbor, resorted to the coward's trick and tried to drag the name of Joseph Smith into the mud to cover their own black tracks. The church was not free from the depressing shadow of slander, criticism, and unbrotherly conduct. There were people who, like serpents, bit the hand that fed the food of the Spirit. And God listened to this storm of abuse till his righteous indignation poured itself out on the heads of the rebellious and they were cast out. And that spirit of lying and abomination went to the salt land with the man whose heart departed from God, and it has been a curse to Utah since. (Jeremiah 17:5, 6.)

This leaven worked in the church of the first century. "Of your own selves shall men arise speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." (Acts 20:30.) It is working in the church to-day. Men arising and teaching perverse doctrines. They draw away little groups. We must expect this. We must be on our guard. Satan is not dead. He is alive, and it seems to me ought to receive some kind of reward for his great activity. Doubtless he will.

The church to-day faces two great perils. They are: Lack of activity on the part of priesthood members; lack of faith on the part of both official and nonofficial members. The idle man is the Devil's plaything. The man or woman who has no faith, no confidence, is paralyzed, a victim of fear. If they have no confidence in men whom they have seen how can they expect to have confidence in God whom they have not seen? After all, it is a day of lack of confidence, even of man in himself. So what can we expect? But at least let us try to be consistent.

MALLOCK ON DEMOCRACY

Lest we lose sight of the theme altogether, I will close with a few statements dealing directly with the subject of democracy. Mr. W. H. Mallock, in his recent work entitled The Limits of Pure Democracy, has spoken the last word on the subject. To the student he will be extremely interesting. Referring to the philosophy of Marx and George, he writes:

"The point, however, which mainly concern us here is that Marx and George alike exercised a profound and disturbing influence on the judgment and temper of the multitudes, and that they did so by a process of education, the practical object and the practical effect of which was to create the popular belief in the actuality of an alleged statistical fact, the alleged fact in each case a preposterous falsehood." (Page 320.)

Page 330: "It is for the sake of social intercourse that men are, as Aristotle says of them, 'gregarious or political animals.'"

Pages 374-377: "It may seem, therefore, at first sight a self-evident truth that the millions, if they object to any order issued by the one or the few, whether a king or otherwise, may if they are substantially unanimous, issue for themselves to execute them. Thus it is constantly said today, not by Socialists only, that the people are sovereign in the sense that their power has ultimately no limit at all. How and why is this supposed power illusory? How does the illusion arise? It arises for the following reason, that persons who argue thus have in their mind a picture of the people as engaged in one species of corporate action only—that is to say, in action the object of which is to obstruct or to destroy. Now if we limit our view of the power of unanimous numbers to powers of this negative kind, it is quite conceivable that, any positive government being given, the people could, were they all so minded, destroy it. But a nation cannot live by obstruction or destruction only. [Neither can a church.] It can indulge itself in these processes for not more than brief and rarely recurring moments. Unless it is to die of anarchy, cold and famine, its normal life-process must be one of continuous production and construction; and as soon as any nation returns from destructive activities to constructive, the unlimited power which is claimed for the mere force of numbers, as arrayed against authority external to themselves, disappears. The first thing which masses of people do, when they are hoarse with proclaiming their freedom to do as they like, is to cringe to authority which enforces on them the continuous production of food, and dictates the primary terms on which alone food can be produced. This authority is based on two things, against which a million wills are as powerless as the will of one, the first being the needs and the structure of the human body, the second being the constitution of nature, and in particular of the earth's surface. The primary business which is thus imposed on men, and from which there can never be more than brief intervals of cessation, is that of following the plow in good weather or bad, or bending over the spade or sickle, no popular will could abolish the business of agriculture, or radically change its character; and if the power of the people is thus limited in respect to the production of necessities, it is limited no less stringently, though in part for a different reason in respect of the production of superfluities. In proportion as nations experience the comforts and luxuries of civilization, the things—things such as these—on which their keenest desires are concentrated, are things the production and multiplication of which are possible only through the action and knowledge and intellect which achieves an effective force in the persons of a few men only; and it is only on condition that the people obey these few that such superfluities can be either produced at all, or produced in sufficient volume to satisfy the appetites of the multitudes who are all clamoring for a share of them. Thus, whatever the powers may be by which masses of human beings are compelled to perform productive work, these powers are not primary, but derivative. So far as the production of necessities is concerned, these powers represent a pressure put upon men by nature—by nature which, with various degrees of severity according to soil and climate, flogs them into labor of some simple and orderly sort, as the sole alternative to death. So far as the production of superfluities is concerned, the powers represent the monopolist possession by a few of the rare directive capacity, obedience to which by the many alone renders an abundance of such superfluities possible, and which compels the many; as the price of obtaining them, to obey. The authority, in short, of industrial oligarchy has its basis in the simple fact that, unless the many submit to it, they extinguish every chance of gaining what they are determined to lose. The same argument applies to political government and war. The power of governmental oligarchy, whether in war or peace has its basis in the fact that, unless the many submit to it, even the simplest industries are paralyzed, the higher are made impossible, and the wealth, the welfare, the freedom, the lives of all, will be at the mercy of any foreign aggressor whose armies, vitalized by obedience, put them to flight, or make them sane by enslaving them. . . . If reason should prove insufficient to bring home a certain lesson to the masses, there is another schoolmaster always lying in wait for them, who will teach it to them with rods of iron, this schoolmaster being experience. The lesson to be taught is this, that every civilization, in respect of wealth, government and self-defense, is due to the cooperation of unequals—of the few who lead and give orders, and of the many who follow and obey; that this fact reflects itself in the general configuration of society; and that in proportion as the masses of any country neglect it, they will, as a whole or sporadically, lose what they have in their effort to seize more."

It is a long quotation, but one that is worthy of careful study. Mr. Mallock shows plainly the limits of pure democracy. Nothing said in this article is directed toward the innocent, and only the desire to help Zion arise and put on her beautiful garments, has been the intent of the writer. I do not fully agree with Mr. Mallock's use of the word unequals.

RALPH W. FARRELL.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, 4826 Labadie Avenue.

A twenty-page statement issued by the Government rather clearly indicates that every possible effort is being made to care for men who were in the United States Army. They have been delayed, but they believe that this is now past. Every case that comes to their attention is thoroughly investigated, and an effort made to correct wrong physical conditions.

The referendum in Norway on prohibition resulted in an overwhelming majority against the sale of spirits and strong wine. This is regarded as a victory in large part by the votes of the women over the men and the press which is controlled by the men, as the best conducted and most widely circulated papers were anti-prohibition.

The vote was a surprise, as it was expected that it would be wet, or a very close vote, but instead the votes were about two to one in favor of prohibition. It will be noted that this does not affect beers and mild wine, but so strong a prohibition vote will no doubt have its effect in dealing with these milder intoxicants.

Bohemia before the war owned 4,451 public libraries, and 2,139 society or lodge libraries. It is perhaps therefore not surprising to learn that the new Czecho-Slovak Republic has passed a law requiring every village to have a public school and also to maintain a public library. There are practically no illiterates in that land now. Popular opinion favors spending public money for educational purposes.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

The Movie into Church

At a business meeting at the Stone church last night, at which eight hundred people were present, the question of having motion pictures in the church during the winter, again was discussed. The majority voted to have pictures of a strictly censored sort. Drama will be excluded, but pictures that will serve as aids in illustrating lectures and sermons, scenic films and archiological pictures will be used. Nothing at all like the ordinary picture show will be admitted. The Rev. Walter W. Smith, Bishop J. A. Becker and George Hulmes were appointed a board of censors to have entire control of the kind of pictures to be shown. A rather large minority voted against having pictures in the church at all.

At a similar meeting a month ago, when a vote on a proposition to use the motion picture in the Stone Church was debated, a considerable majority voted no, although most of the leading officials of the church voted in favor of the proposition. In the meantime, the friends of the motion picture as a means of education have been active, and the vote last night was a decisive victory for them.—The Jackson Examiner, November 7, 1919.

The Future of the World

The Toronto World for November 17 gives a summary of Elder T. W. Williams's address at Allen's Theater the evening before, of which the following is an extract:

"The future of the world is greater than its past. All the centuries of invention and progress are converging to an ultimate realization. The wonderful achievements, the scientific triumphs, the mechanical developments, the great works of art and music and literature will not be lost.

"As savagery paved the way for barbarism, as barbarism made possible the day of feudalism, so this age of commercial enterprise and purpose is but the precursor for a still higher order of society.

"Christianity presupposes the final elimination of evil and sin and pain, the ushering in of an age when right will prevail, when love will be the dominant force, when selfishness will give place to selflessness, when men will live not for self but to conserve the common weal.

"The industrial and social troubles through which the world is now passing are but the birth pains of the new age. It is impossible to pass from one stage of life to another without such experiences. The great danger lies in the fact that men will forget their corelation, and in the trying days of this transition lose sight of the ultimate goal.

"Man cannot live of himself alone, neither can one part of society live without every other part. There is nothing to cause men to become disquieted. 'All's well with the world.' There is no occasion for men to become pessimistic, to lose faith, to take the law into their own hands, to become desperate. God rules. The right will triumph. The time is soon coming when the kingdom of this world will become the kingdom of our Lord and Christ."

This nation can only meet this grave situation by removing and strengthening its spiritual life, by turning away from materialism and implanting in men's souls the principles which Christ taught.—Robert Lansing.

Pensions for Aged Ministers

We learn from The Literary Digest of November 8, the Methodist Church has fully organized to provide for its superannuates. These statements are presented by Joseph B. Hingeley for the Methodist Board of Conference Claimants to the Congregationalists of Boston. They have raised a fund of over fourteen million for this purpose, and expect to increase it to twenty million. About 1908 six hundred thousand dollars have been distributed annually; in 1918 it was one million four hundred thousand. They lay down as one of the essential principles the claim for a comfortable support inheres in the ministry. It is not a super-added gift, gratuity, or charity, and such claim is not invalidated by retirement. If a minister dies his claim goes to his wife and dependent children.

Books Prices Ascend

One very grievous effect of the printers' strike will be the increased cost of books. It seems that one publisher alone has cancelled the publication of sixty books intended for this fall. Each year the number of different books published will run up into several hundred. This is not very serious from the point of view of the public, though it means a serious loss to the author.

But the public is concerned with the fact that the cost of books is likely very soon to be doubled, according to advanced information.

It may interest many to be reminded that Samuel Gompers, the president of the American Federation of Labor for so many years, and still holding that position, is a Jew. He came to this country at the age of ten years, so poor that he was put to work in a factory. He came from Whitechapel in London, and was one of the poorest of the poor. He has been called in international labor councils, and has shaken hands with various kings of Europe.

What started out with every appearance of being a mob to break up a temperance meeting, addressed by W. E. Johnson of England, proved to be a frolic, into which Mr. Johnson entered, and as a result has won much sympathy for his work, and interest as well. Although the winning of the students is a personal matter, still it illustrates how sometimes opponents may be won instead of antagonized, and a good deal of trouble to others avoided. Unfortunately he accidentally suffered an injury to one eye.

Do your work cheerfully, heartily, and effectually, and be ever prepared for the place higher up.—E. H. Taylor.

The "Quick" Meeting

How the Webb City Saints Advertised a Series of Meetings.

The dream of the series of meetings, with Brother Lee Quick of Mapleton, Kansas, as the chief attraction, has been realized, and the successful effort has gone down in history as a pleasant reminder of what can be accomplished when we all pull together, for as the Master Superintendent has told us, "If ye are not one, ye are not mine." We feel that in applying the above excellent injunction, to our effort, we have been enabled to place the message before many who would not otherwise have had the opportunity apparently, of knowing of the existence of such a thing; hence, we feel that the meetings were a success and that much has been accomplished.

We had been planning for the meetings for several months, and the services of that excellent champion of the "latter-day" message, Brother Lee Quick, were secured and the date for the commencement of the meetings set for October 26.

Anxiously waiting that date to arrive, we set to work getting ready, and consequently, an advertising committee was appointed, who set to work giving the matter as much publicity as was possible to do.

The committee decided to have the following plan put in operation: One thousand long envelopes, known as "official envelopes," were taken to the printer who was instructed to print in large red letters the following glaring sentence on them:

"A QUICK MESSAGE"

We secured one thousand of the folders, entitled, "A nineteenth century prophet and his work," and with the following letter, printed in typewriting effect, and printed by the Herald Publishing House, both placed in a large envelope:

"AN OPEN LETTER CONCERNING "THE LATTER DAY SAINTS (REORGANIZED)"

"Dear Friend: The accompanying tract, 'A nineteenth century prophet and his work,' contains some most valuable and important information concerning an organization about which you may have heard. It is not lengthy nor tiresome, and it gives a comprehensive idea of our real position in the religious world. It may possibly clear up some false statements that have been made about us. We are sorry that because of so much misunderstanding we are compelled to discuss practices such as exist in other organizations, and which we have always consistently opposed.

"But a careful perusal of the tract we are leaving will leave you with a working knowledge of our organization. We trust you will do that much for yourself and us.

"Beginning October 26, and continuing two weeks or more, we are holding a series of preaching services at our chapel at Oronogo and Second Streets. One of our most forceful speakers, Lee Quick, of Mapleton, Kansas, will present not only general principles, but detailed facts as to the harmony of our doctrine with the New Testament plan as Christ taught it. You will be interested in the comparison.

"We bring you an important message and cordially invite you to hear it. Come with your Bible and an open mind. (Continued on page 1190.)

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Building for the Future

Do we often enough consider the future happiness of our children as well as the present? Do we too frequently say: "Let the future take care of itself"? If we could be permitted to see our children as they will be when grown up, we might realize how gravely important is the right kind of teaching and training for them now.

Sometimes mothers are so busy with affairs of society that they have little or no time to give to the real needs of their children. Others make the mistake of shutting themselves up too closely in their own homes, neglecting to cultivate and improve their minds by mingling with other people of the right sort. We must find and use the happy medium between undesirable extremes.

There is no duty more important than the proper rearing of our children, and no avenue of effort which should be more attractive. Habits formed when young will never be forgotten, and helping children to form good ones will make for their soul's happiness.

Children can begin to learn at a very early age. When first learning to walk, a child can be taught that there are some things it must not touch. This is far better for the child, than to have everything put out of its reach. Then, very early they can be taught to pick up their own playthings. It may seem hard, and many mothers do not begin teaching this lesson in time. A child who is old enough to get the playthings out, can surely put them away.

Then came the trying times of school days. Some children enjoy going to school, while others rebel. We can help them by letting them know we are deeply interested in their school work. We can hear them read their lessons, and oh, how those little tots do love to read to us that first story! We can help them by teaching them to love and respect their teachers. Many mothers make fatal mistakes right here! They often listen to stories about the teacher, presented by a childish mind unused to analysis, and they start condemning the teacher with the result that the child soon learns to dislike and disrespect her. This reacts upon the child immediately, for his lessons will be harder because of his unlovely attitude toward the one who guides him. Instead of listening to these tales about the teacher, we should go to the school, and get acquainted with her. Let her feel your interest in her, and in the school, and take for granted her interest in your child. She will welcome your intelligent cooperation, and together you can work out many difficult situations. Invite her to your home occasionally, and the social bond so established will do wonders towards eliminating any fancied trouble. We should not seek to curry favors, or expect a teacher to show favors, for she should not do this, but the child, becoming closer to her by acquaintance, will not so often misunderstand or misjudge her, and will be more anxious to please. I know it is not always easy for mother's to make the effort to go to the school, but the gain is so great she is well repaid for the trouble. She will always find the teacher ready and willing to meet her halfway, and to cooperate in every possible way for the benefit of the child.

Then, as parents, we have to consider the Sunday school, and its value in assisting to teach and train our children. Valuable as this help is, none should leave all the religious teaching to the Sunday school teacher who is often very young and inexperienced, although trying to do the best she can. Cooperation here is very helpful and necessary. We should help our children get their lessons and learn the memory verses, for the teacher cannot do it all in the hour on Sunday, and in years to come, these lessons and verses will be a very rock of refuge in time of trouble. Little ones are anxious to go to Sunday school if they have a prepared lesson, and will not soon forget what they have learned.

Another very vital thing, in our training of children, is to get and keep their confidence. Never send a child away when he has something to tell you. A child that is told to "keep still," "do not talk of such things," or "Mother hasn't time to listen," will soon quit telling his little secrets, and sooner or later a day of regret will come for both parent and child. It may not always seem important, what they have to tell but it is to them, and they love to tell Mother every little thing that interestss them, if only she will love to listen. She has gained something of great value, when she possesses their complete confidence, and as they get older, they will come to her with greater stories, and she will be glad to know they have trusted her, and have found in her a source of strength and guidance.

We must never cause our children to be afraid of us, afraid to tell us where they go, what they do, or who they are with, for if we do not know these things we can never teach them right from wrong. When they do that which we do not approve, we must not get angry, or show irritation or disappointment, but try to talk to them in a kind, gentle, and hopeful manner, helping them to see the better way. This will do more good than the worst scolding we could give them. At times we may have to punish, but if this is done while they are small it will not be necessary later.

Always keep your promises to a child. Think twice before you promise, but never let anything keep you from fulfilling a promise once given. When a child comes to you with a request, think before you reply, and then abide by your decision. Many children who do a great deal of teasing for things or privileges, are trained into it by parents who say "no" at its first mention, but who change their minds after a child teases. "No" must remain "no," if we have thoughtfully considered the matter and think "no" is best. Then children will not feel that they can get mother to change her mind, and they will quit teasing.

It is truly a great work we mothers have, and a great responsibility, but we must ask God to help us, since he gave us the task. Let us try to keep in mind what will be for the best good of our children in the future years, what we want them to be, what ideals we wish them to have. Then, when we have thought it all out prayerfully, let us act now, before it is too late, and act definitely, towards the desired end. We may be inexperienced, but opportunities to study and learn are all about us—in the child welfare work of the Auxiliary and the Nation. Come, let us study together!

Mothers' Pensions

Remarkable progress has been made in legislation providing mothers' pensions since the first mothers' pension laws were passed in 1911 by Missouri and Illinois. According to a bulletin entitled "Laws relating to mothers' pensions," just issued by the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor, 39 States, Alaska, and Hawaii now have some public provision for mothers left with young children to support, and in at least five of the remaining States mothers' pension laws have been under consideration. Canada, Denmark, and New Zealand also have passed legislation providing aid for mothers. This rapid spread of legislation in so brief a period is indicative, says the Children's Bureau bulletin, of a widespread and deep rooted conviction that no child should be deprived of home and a mother's care because of poverty alone.

Generally speaking, all mothers' pension laws provide for the payment of a stated weekly or monthly sum for each child under a certain age to mothers who are dependent upon their own efforts to support their children and are morally and physically fit persons to bring up their children. There is considerable variation in the laws in force in the different states. Some states provide pensions only for widowed mothers; others include women who are divorced or who may have been deserted by their husbands, or those whose husbands are in prison, in state asylums, or who are otherwise incapacitated. In three states, expectant mothers may receive mothers' pensions; and in a number of instances the mothers of children born out of wedlock come within the scope of the law.

The age up to which an allowance may be made for a child varies from thirteen to seventeen years. Only one state has a thirteen-year-maximum, but this state allows an extension to sixteen years if the child is ill or incapacitated for work. Sixteen years is the maximum in the greatest number of States. One State and Alaska give seventeen as a maximum and one other state with a sixteen-year limit for boys makes seventeen a maximum in the case of girls.

The amounts of the allowances vary greatly in the different states; they range from $2 per week per child, to $25 a month for one child and $15 for each additional child. In many states the amount is far too low to maintain a decent standard of family life particularly in view of the greatly increased cost of living. It is encouraging to note, however, that the newer laws and more recent amendments, with a few exceptions, are in the direction of making more liberal allowances and of raising the age limits of the children who may be aided to keep pace with advances made in child labor and compulsory educational laws.

The bulletin contains the complete text of the laws concerning mothers' pensions in force in the United States, Canada, Denmark, and New Zealand, together with rules and regulations issued in connection with their administration and the forms of application used in various localities. It also contains a list of references on the subject of mothers' pensions. An introductory discussion gives a succinct history of mothers' pension legislation and briefly summarizes the provisions of the laws in force in the United States.—Department of Labor, Children's Bureau, Washington.

Love and Patience Accomplish Most With Children

People often remark that my children do not seem to annoy me. Of course they do at times. I find, however, that it is the way I feel and not the child's naughtiness that is the cause. Do you ever stop to think that to-day you scold your child for something that yesterday passed unnoticed? It was a wise person who said, always count ten before beginning to scold. That gives you a chance to think who is in the wrong, and how much he is in the wrong.

I have just finished reading an article by Thomas L. Mason, the subject of which was, "Can parents and children get together?" This question was answered in the few words; "Yes, through love and patience." The article showed that parents as well as children need bringing up; that the child is not only what he makes himself, but what he makes himself plus what the parents make themselves. Therefore parents need to watch themselves, in order to understand their children better, not develop in themselves the qualities they wish to appear in their offspring.

We say, "Come let us live with our children." Children without knowing it say, "Come let us live with our parents." Where is the little girl who does not want to make cookies like mother, who does not enjoy having an apron and cap to put on when she dusts? Where is the boy who is not proud to have a box of tools like father's? Bob said to me the other day, "Mother, when can I have collars and neckties like daddy's?" In all things our children copy us. What a responsibility for us!

It is a great thing to have kindergartens in the public schools, so that we can share our responsibility with the teachers. When we send our children to kindergarten we are placing them for a few hours each day in the care of someone who has been trained through years of hard study to give to them mentally, morally and physically just what they need. Perhaps all mothers do not know how to live with their children. It is a great thing then that their children can go to kindergarten and come in touch with some one who can live with them. A well-trained sympathetic teacher will do more for a child than an unsympathetic mother. Teachers also have a perspective on a child, while mothers have only the close view. As soon as mothers realize that they can learn from many sources, there will be better boys and girls in the world.

Send your children to kindergarten. They will come home and tell you what they did. Some day the teacher will call on you and invite you to go and see the children in the kindergarten. Accept the invitation and I am sure after spending a morning there you will understand what a valuable gift Froebel gave us when he started kindergartens.

While I was teaching, mothers would come and ask how John or Lucy behaved. When I said splendidly, they were most surprised. They could not understand it, for their child was so naughty at home. I found that the fault was mostly with the mother. She was not sympathetic with or interested enough in her boy or girl. In kindergarten the child was allowed more freedom to express himself, and his interests were carefully observed and fostered.

Another experience I had while teaching was with a child who did not want to come to kindergarten. For three days I used all my persuasive powers; he would come as far as the door and no farther. The fourth day I got him into the room, but he would not sit down. The next day he took his chair, and after that, little by little he became a part of the kindergarten. In the end he was one of my most helpful pupils. When I went to call on his parents I found that he lived over a saloon and that both his father and mother were heavy drinkers. He had been brought up with whippings, and that was the reason for his extreme distrust when he first came to the kindergarten.

Many persons have said to me, all that children do in kindergarten is to play. I always answer by asking if they have ever been in a kindergarten and almost always the answer is no. Then I tell them to go and visit one and after that I will talk to them.

Of course children play in kindergarten. What ought children from four to six years of age do? The play, however, is so carefully selected and guided that throughout it all, the children learn many things. They learn from pictures, games, blocks, etc. My Bobby, though only four, knows the simplest forms and shapes—the sphere, cube and cylinder, and the circle, square, oblong and triangle. Direction is also taught in the kindergarten. Through plays, pictures and games the children learn about the various trades and their benefit to us. These are only a few of the things they learn and I wish I could go on and tell all. But even if I had the time I could not do so for I do not know all myself, each day bringing forth something new.

In closing, let me add that we as mothers, though we think we are doing everything possible for our children can always find room for improvement and the kindergartens will help us every time. The good work we start they will carry on. Let us never be like the mother who said her boy was not interested in anything. For the boy's teacher when she called noticed that he had a box which he seemed to take great care of, and it was not long before she learned that it was a collection of caterpillars. Yet the mother said that her boy was interested in nothing. The teacher at once showed her pupil that she too was interested in his collection. She learned from the boy many things about caterpillars that she did not know, and in turn taught him things he did not know. Teacher and boy became great friends; through this common interest others sprang up and the boy changed from a sullen inattentive boy to a broad-minded, wide-awake man. If the mother could only have shared her boy's interest, how much more helpful they would have been to each other.—Mrs. Ethel G. Young.

Friend O' Mine

Friend o' mine of long ago,
I would reach across the years
To the days we used to know,
To the laughter and the tears;
Fain would find the songs we knew—
Brave old songs, they were in truth!
Strains that cheered for me and you
All the golden paths of youth.

I would journey back again
To the parting of the ways,
Journey from this world of men
To the wondrous other days;
I would find the meadow lands
Odorous of mint and musk,
Find the fields where shadow hands

Trailed the draperies of duck.
Friend o' mine that used to be—
Ho, the world is long and wide!
You have fared afar from me,
Stout of heart and eager-eyed;
I have journeyed here and there
'Neath the palm tree or the pine.

But each spot had been more fair
Were you with me, friend o' mine!
What, though are the stretching miles
What the darkness of the night
When each of the golden whites
Glimmers in the friendly light
Of the memories we hold
Of the days when field and tree
And the meadow lands outrolled
Were the world for you and me?

Friend o' mine, I blindly reach
Till again I touch your hand—
Thoughts we cannot put in speech
Come to me. You understand!
Friend o' mine, I fill the cup
To the past of you and me—
Pledge it, ere we drink it up,
To the days that used to be!

—Toledo Blade.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Baker-Arceneaux Debate

Brother A. M. Baker of Koshkonong, Missouri, representing our church, and Elder Early Arceneaux of Houston, Texas, representing the Church of Christ held a debate at Hickory Nut School house from November 13 to 19.

In the beginning series of meetings, Brother Baker proved his affirmation that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is in harmony with the New Testament Church in origin, organization, doctrine and practice. In one discussion he read an authentic account from the Hayden's History of the healing of a certain Mrs. Johnson who had come with a number of others to one of the meetings of the Saints desiring some sign that the Divine Spirit can and does work miracles. Mr. Arceneaux here asked for a sign, whereupon Brother Baker removed his coat, quoted Matthew 12:30 and asked him to get upon the table. At this and the expression of sincerity on Brother Baker's face, Mr. Arceneaux appeared nervous and declared he was not ill.

In the last series of meetings, Elder Arceneaux affirmed that the Church of Christ is in harmony with the New Testament Church in origin, organization, doctrine and practice, however he was unable to overthrow Brother Baker's proof that it is inadequate to the true gospel as taught by Jesus Christ. In one reply to the affirmative speech Brother Baker remarked that whatever wing of the church Mr. Arceneaux belonged to, every feather must come out of it, at which the members of the congregation manifested their mirth audibly and were mimicked loudly by Mr. Arceneaux himself. On another occasion Mr. Arceneaux deliberately took up Brother Baker's affirmative side of the discussion, when he should have been on his own and replying to the negative. This caused a disagreement between the moderators. There being but two, the question could not be settled, consequently it became necessary to submit it to a vote of the house. This was done, Brother Baker receiving about seventy-five per cent majority.

After the debate closed, Brother Baker remained with us for a few days, preaching three sermons and having a good attendance at each meeting. He baptized Thomas Elvin Smith, Mrs. Lantha M. Horsley, and the one whose name you may find signed at the close of this letter.

We should like very much to get in touch with the missionary of our district, for there are others here who are very near the water's edge.

Asking the prayers of the Saints for our little band here I am a sister in Christ.

WETUMKA, OKLAHOMA.

MRS. LORA KEM JOHNSON.

The Bishopric Advocate

Every Member a Tithe Payer

The redemption of Zion is not so much dependent upon miracle or magic as upon the ability and readiness of the Saints to yield full obedience to the law which God has revealed for its accomplishment. The only way out of the present economic problems and difficulties confronting the church is through them; and you can help materially in this by discharging YOUR OBLIGATION TO THE LORD ALONG FINANCIAL LINES.

Toronto Meetings

We opened our winter campaign in the Allen Theater on last Sunday, the 16. Our audience was considerably larger than on the opening night of last year, and the interest was more intense. I never felt better in preaching than this fall and believe that we are going to have a successful campaign.

I have determined to shorten the services considerably. We were through with the lecture and the questions and the meeting closed promptly at 9 o'clock. I am sure the people appreciated this. My theme was the "End of the world." The Morning World and the Evening Telegram and Star carried reports of my lecture. [I am inclosing the article which appears in the World. The heading is somewhat misleading but considering that we are not responsible for this I think it a good report.] The other papers carried short reference to the meeting.

I was in doubt as to the wisdom of opening the theater services this winter due to the fact that we had succeeded in drawing so many outsiders to the church, but I think we have made no mistake and the members of the church are all lining up for the theater meetings. They have organized an "Allen Club" which is to comprise parties who are willing to pledge so much per week to meet the rent. We will have no trouble in raising the money. The winter's campaign last year cost us $1,500 and it will cost us more this year.

It will be my studied purpose to make the whole series of meetings tend towards the upbuilding of the local church and giving publicity to our cardinal teachings. It is difficult to conduct a theater meeting on exactly the same lines that we would conduct a church meeting. I will be under the necessity of advertising themes which will draw the crowd together. To illustrate, my theme next Sunday will be "Lord, speak again!" Now I will deal with the question of continuous revelation but if I had announced my subject "Continuous revelation," I would not get the crowd that I will with the subject as stated above.

I shall be pleased to receive any suggestions which you may offer along any lines calculated to facilitate our work here. The branch is moving along as well as can be expected. On the whole there is general good will. The matter which I wrote to you about shortly after I returned has shaped itself up nicely and I find the people responding nicely to the real position of the church. With care and wise administration Toronto will not be one whit behind the other local churches throughout the land.

Reverting to the inclosed extract, I will say that I took the position that there was nothing in the word of God which justified the thought that this old planet was to go out when Christ came; that the time spoken of by Peter when the elements were to melt with fervent heat was after the millennium when the earth would be made new; that we were only justified in the belief that evil and wrong and evil men and women would be destroyed at the coming of Jesus Christ and that all the achievements of the ages would be conserved and become the heritage of the people of God on the earth.

[From a letter of T. W. Williams, November 19, 1919.]

There still remains undetermined necessary protection for the Near East, for Armenia and Turkey. Indirectly the United States could do much to secure the firm establishment of Palestine and the Jewish states by undertaking the mandate for this neighboring portion of the Near East.

From Alberta

We are having winter weather since about October 15 and it has been zero weather most of the time since. The snow is about twelve inches deep.

I have been in Alberta almost five years, and this is the earliest winter there has been in that time. But two years ago was a long cold winter, thermometer registering from twenty to sixty degrees below zero for three months.

I have had some very pleasant times here. Some were not so pleasant. But I have enjoyed my work very much.

I have made some mistakes, but hope to profit by them in the future. I can truly say at times I have been greatly blessed in presenting the gospel. I have baptized over sixty since coming to Alberta. That is not very many but some places we go to are very thinly settled, and we have to preach to small congregations. In most of the places, the spirit of indifference seems to rule the minds of the people.

However the last few months, there seems to be a disposition arising among the people of some localities to think and act for themselves, and no longer be governed by the thoughts of one man, whose mind is not the mind of Christ. And it is such people that we find more willing to accept the gospel. We had an experience of this kind at the place I am writing from, when ten honest people who had been members of the Lutheran Church for years, became dissatisfied because they did not find it in harmony with the scriptures, and there was not that warming influence with it that was promised in the scriptures; and it was only a cold form, although very little cold water was used.

There are many fine Saints in Alberta, and many of them, too, are striving to abide by the law. I have found them a whole-hearted people, and have been treated very kindly since coming to this field.

I read with pleasure the action of both Congress and Senate in regard to the prohibition act; and when it becomes law, I hope that transgressors will be punished to the full extent of the law; in a stricter sense than they are in this country; for there are plenty of intoxicating liquors to be had here now. Still there are many arrests made here. But the fines are too light, for distilling and bootlegging continue.

But let me say one thing in praise of Canada, among the many good things that I might say. In the five years, (or almost five years) that I have been here; and I have kept in pretty close touch with the papers, too, I have not found nor heard of one case of lynching, and only two cases of mob riot; and that was during the second year of the war. It was done by soldiers to some Austrians; and I learned later that the Austrians had said some unpleasant things about the government of Canada. But since the lynching in Omaha, Nebraska, I have seen in the papers accounts of two other cases of lynching, and we frequently read of such cases in the Southern States. The Sunday law in Canada is far stricter than in the States.

In five years' preaching in Missouri, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas, I had seven different mobs threaten my life, because I was preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ to them, and those mobs were at most composed entirely of religious people. In the five years of labor here in Alberta I have not met one mob or anyone to willfully misrepresent our work, but one man, a minister of the Presbyterian Church. I called on him at his home and found him so grossly ignorant of the gospel of Jesus Christ and the history of our church that I could not have any ill feelings towards him, but pitied him.

I cited him to Matthew 25: 31-40, and informed him that he could not stand this cold climate, neither could he be among those the Lord loved, as long as he wore that goat-skin. I invited him to our church where he could find the warm, woolen gospel garments.

I will leave here for my new field about the twentieth of this month stopping at home for a couple or three weeks. My address until further notice will be Deer Lodge, Montana.

I thank all the Saints for the kindness that they have ministered to me for I have been treated very kindly. May God bless them is my prayer.

Hopefully,

METISKON, ALBERTA.

W. P. BOOTMAN.

Some Successful Schools

Early in January we wrote all the schools, advising that we would like to hear from each one as soon as they reached the pro rata of $2.50 or over per member. We have not heard from very many of the schools thus far and wonder if they have forgotten this suggestion.

January 27 our heart was made glad indeed when we received a letter from Brother V. D. Ruch of Huntsville, Missouri, advising that their Sunday school had $2.51 per member on February 26. You will remember this is the school that took first place in 1918 offering with $25.01 per member. Looks rather like they are going after that first place again this year, does it not?

We have received a number of letters from the schools who have already passed the $2.50 per member mark and we will publish extracts from these letters following this article. Read them, every word, for they will cheer you on in your efforts.

We desire to receive letters from all the schools from time to time telling us of their efforts. We need your letters, they are helpful to us and they will help the other schools in their efforts to build their offering. We do not want you to feel timid about reporting for any reason whatever. In the past some have not reported because they felt that other schools would think they were boasting. This is a wrong idea. Other schools will not feel this way about your efforts. They will look with pride on your good record and will thank God that you have been so earnest and sincere and that you have been successful. It will give them hope and enthrust them to greater and more consecrated effort. Let us hear from all of you.

The year is fast departing, only one more month is before us, and oh, so much to do in that brief time. Where does your school stand? Where do you, individually, stand? Have you been faithful in your offering gifts, and have you helped others that they might understand the work better? Let us spread this offering spirit by talking it and encouraging it. No better use could be made of the money than to give it to the church for the purpose suggested by the Bishopric in our recent letters published in HERALD and Ensign: "Purchase lands for creation of inheritances."

I pray God may bless the good workers who are now making and who have made the burdens of the church lighter by their earnest cooperation and assistance. How grateful we are for your good wholesome support and good will. May God continue to bless you and prosper you in this glorious work that we may all grow together for the advancement of good upon this earth. The following schools have already gone "over the top." Let us hear from you as soon as possible.

ARTHUR W. SMITH.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, 2903 Sullivan Avenue.

The school at Huntsville feared they might discourage others in reporting their success as early as January 26, but we think it ought to be an incentive, don't you?

On February 2 the school at Gaylord, Michigan, went "over the top." The superintendent of the school was asked to preach for the people of another church, and they insisted on paying him five dollars a sermon. He finally consented to accept, and thus helped the offering considerably. Then Brother Dirk Schreur has each year duplicated what the school has done.

The school at Allen, Nebraska, reported on February 24 their success in going "over the top."

Deer Lodge, Montana, reported on February 25, their success. They have an offering box and each member marches by it each Sunday and drops in his offering.

On March 23 we heard the good report from Wellsville, New York.

As early as March 24 we heard from the Central Oklahoma District and of their most progressive plans. At that time Oklahoma City had reached considerably more than the $2.50 mark. We'll be interested in the final results from that district, with their aim to be the best district in the church and raise $3,000.

On March 30 Orion, Michigan, had $2.57 per member.

Mallard, Iowa, went over the top before the first of April.

Alamo, North Dakota, had gone over the top on April 4.

A telegram from the Sharon, Pennsylvania, school dated April 20, carried the glad tidings of over the top. They later explained that they were using a large chart to stimulate interest, and sent us some pictures of it. Evidently it had its effect.

Youngstown, Ohio, had passed the mark on June 9.

Middletown, Ohio, reported success on July 1. Rally days were the means of creating more than two fifths of their offering.

SAULT SAINTE MARIE, ONTARIO, October 13, 1919.

Editors Herald: The Soo branch is still growing. Although some of the Saints have moved away, still there are more being added to our number.

We enjoyed a visit of three weeks in October by Elder D. B. Perkins, who preached interesting sermons nearly every night in our little church. Before leaving here he baptized four into this true work. Brother George Walsh was ordained a priest.

We have had some very spiritual meetings, one being a week ago Sunday, when Elder M. H. Brown our branch president spoke through the gift of prophecy, calling Brother Holmes to office of Deacon and Brother Salo to office of priest. We also have had Elder R. D. Davis preaching Sunday evenings in the Orpheum theater, with very good and interesting crowds.

We are pleased to have Brother A. Tomlinson back with us again. We also have Brother Burt Edwards, who was at the firing line for four years, safely with us again, and taking active part in the work.

Elder Brown baptized Brother Hong Yee Mow, Sunday afternoon. Elder Perkins is leaving for his home to-day.

In gospel bonds,
MOLLY BLANEY.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND, November 10, 1919.

Editors Herald: Providence has not been heard from through your columns for a long time, but we are still on the map. The city where Roger Williams was greeted with the words, "What cheer" (meaning welcome) by the Indians, recently welcomed Evangelist Richard Baldwin, he never having been here before. He came for a series of meetings holding them over three Sundays, and to say that they were successful is putting it mildly. From the first we had fine interest. The Saints rallied finely, as they always do in every effort made here, in attendance and in the distribution of advertising matter, and many strangers heard the gospel in all its plainness with convincing force and telling arguments. The only cause we had to complain of was that our church building was not large enough to hold larger crowds. On Friday night of the second week the church was packed to the doors, Brother Baldwin's subject being "Mormonism Under the X-Ray." A fine impression was made and much prejudice allayed. Never has an effort been made here that has made us so many friends, and a number of strangers are very much interested, some being very near the door of the kingdom. The Spirit is working among the young here as never before, which is attested to by the fine attendance at the young people's meetings, where the gifts are manifested and even the children ten years old and up are taking part.

Brother Baldwin gave twenty blessings while here, mostly to young people, and spoke to them through the Spirit at their meeting on Sunday morning. At the noonday set aside as a rule for Sunday school work we all gathered around and like a large family at a family gathering listened to the counsel and advice of a father. The wonderful counsel and the loving spirit in which it was given made all feel that he was indeed a father over Israel trying to look after his children. Hardly an eye was dry when he finished. May God bless him in his ministrations, and may others come in contact with the wonderful spirit that he manifests.

We are expecting another treat as he has promised to come to us again in the early spring. We expect C. Ed. Miller here with his lantern slides soon to start the work that we want to do of a social character in our branch.

We believe the words of Elbert Hubbard are true wherein he says, "Men only succeed as they work together," and as we are a unit in the work here at present and are working together for the building of the work of God we feel it will be a success.

D. F. J.

SYKESTON, NORTH DAKOTA, November 12, 1919.

Editors Herald: As we are among the isolated ones, we wish to express our thankfulness for the good cheering letters, sermons and articles which come to us through the church papers, which we wait anxiously for each week. They are our only regular missionaries and help to keep us in the faith and encourage us to move forward.

This place has been visited by many of our noble missionaries. People seemingly have rejected the restored gospel and are pleased to be filled with empty words. I do not think they are much different here than many other places.

I would like to have the Saints of Wichita, Kansas visit my sister, Mrs. Charles Schuler, 3058 East Douglas Avenue. She belonged to the church in her younger days and is still friendly with them. She is listed among the scattered members, and although her hearing is almost gone she enjoys having people visit her.

Brother C. J. Spurlock's letter in the Ensign for October 30 is worthy of consideration. Saints, read it over again and see which class we are in. If we are not where we should be, let us start anew, and do our duty. Not what we think is right, but what the Lord says is right. Our works shall be tried. Will it endure the test, or will it be as chaff? By the help of God we can all endure if we only trust him.

We ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that we may live firm in the cause, which we have espoused.

MR. AND MRS. M. RASMUSSEN.

MANDAN, NORTH DAKOTA, November 17, 1919.

Editors Herald: We thought perhaps some Saint might like to know where we are and what we are doing. We have positions at the North Dakota Training School. Mrs. Twyman has as enthusiastic a Sunday school as you wish for, composed of 24 boys from 9 to 15. She uses Latter Day Saint literature exclusively, and I feel sure she has planted seed that will yield a good harvest.

Mandan is named for the great Mandan Indian tribe, which furnished the guide for the explorers, Lewis and Clark, who led them safely across the Rocky Mountains.

There are a few thousand of these Indians on reservations in North and South Dakota, and several hundred in the city of Bismarck, where an Indian school with two hundred students is located. They are progressive; many of them are wealthy, and should, I think, be visited by our traveling missionaries.

We are arranging to quit the school work and settle among some of our own church people. We would like to purchase a place with a few acres of land in or near some town, with a Latter Day Saint branch, and devote more of our time to church work. We have the means to buy a bargain, if you will but tell us where to find it, and also give you our thanks and the advantage of such talent as we may possess.

Thanking you, I remain

Your brother,
G. W. D. TWYMAN.

NEWS AND COMMENT

Secretary Baker has ordered the withdrawal of all war work organizations from the camps because of friction. This includes the Y. M. C. A., Knights of Columbus, etc. He says quite truly that this war work should be undertaken and carried on by the government directly.

New York City is considering the municipal control of the buying, transporting, selling, and delivering of milk and milk products. This is partly on account of the milk strike by consumers, and partly growing out of existing conditions.

The wartime prohibition act is before the Supreme Court of the United States on three appeals, two from New York, upholding the act, and one from Kentucky declaring it unconstitutional. It is rather expected that the decision of the Supreme Court will be handed down in the course of two or three weeks.

The League of Nations, and with it the Treaty of Peace with Germany, has been defeated in the United States Senate after many months of discussion. We have seen many assertions but no real reasons given as yet for this action, nor for their long opposition to Article X.

Ten thousand children were killed accidentally last year, and the greater part of them by motor cars of different descriptions. This seems rather a large loss due to carelessness and incompetent drivers.

In the Christian Union Quarterly for October, there appears the statement that of the two hundred and four sects listed in the national census, two thirds of them are small and inconsequential, and that another seventy odd are subdivisions of the eight larger and more or less homogeneous communions.

As the winter comes on an important consideration is fire prevention. With overheated pipes, and with old rags lying around, or carelessness in the use of kerosene, let alone gasoline, starts many a fire. Also dropping a match head. A house kept clean and in good order is much less likely to take fire.

According to the London Economist, wholesale prices in the London market, used as an index of world prices, show the following changes: As a basis, there is taken an average price from 1901 to 1905. On this basis cereal prices were 113 by July, 1914, but had advanced to 280 by September 1919. Other foods had increased by July, 1914 to 115; and by September 1919, to 292½. Textiles had increased by July, 1914 to 123; but by September, 1919, to 392. Minerals, which had increased to 118 by July, 1914, were 262 by September, 1919. Miscellanies show a similar increase. They were 269 last September. The total shows, July 1914, 115.9 per cent; September 1919, 299.4 per cent. This latter is the highest figure indicated at any time for the period of the past twenty years as the index for all commodities was 282.6 for November, 1918; and 277 for December, 1918. This would indicate a continued increase of prices ever since the armistice was signed.

to office of deacon was referred to the district presidency, with power to act. Next conference with Santa Rosa Branch Saturday, 10 a. m. before the first full moon in March. E. N. McCall, secretary. Brewton, Alabama.

Silvers, elected to fill the unexpired term of secretary. Voted to leave the matter of disorganizing the Wheatland Branch with the district presidency to investigate, with power to act and report to next conference, at Nevada, Missouri, February 20 to 22, 1920. Mrs. A. C. Silvers, secretary.

EASTERN WALES.—At Gloucester, June 7, 1919. District president, Elder E. J. Trapp was in charge. Gloucester reported a net gain of four. Very interesting meetings were held on the Sunday, June 8. A number of visitors were present including a soldier brother from Australia, Brother Craig. The following officers were appointed: President, Elder E. J. Trapp, vice president, A. Jones, treasurer, J. H. Smith, secretary, the undersigned. Cardiff Branch was declared disorganized as from June 7, 1919. R. T. Sims.

HAWAII.—A conference of duly elected delegates from Hilo and Honolulu on September 10, 1919, and effected the organization of a district, to be known as the district of Hawaii. The following officers were chosen: V. B. Etzenhouser, president; L. A. Moore, first vice president; I. H. Harbottle (Hawaiian) second vice president; Mrs. V. B. Etzenhouser, secretary-recorder; Charles Lee, (Chinese-Hawaiian) treasurer; Bernice Kahanamoku (Hawaiian) recommended—and later ratified—for chorister. M. A. McConley.

LITTLE SIOUX.—At Magnolia, Iowa, October 12 and 13. Presided over by J. W. Lane and Fred A. Fry of the district presidency, assisted by Daniel Macgregor. Statistical reports from all branches received, showing net gain of 44. Bishop's agent's report from June 1 to October 1 showed receipts of $4,569.54. F. R. Shaefer secretary of the Little Sioux-Gallands Grove joint reunion, submitted a report of a business meeting held at which time the committees organized for the 1920 reunion. This report was adopted. The recommendation of the joint reunion committees regarding uniting permanently the Gallands Grove and Little Sioux districts for reunions, was laid on the table, subject to action of the conference at some future time. In the absence of a district president, since the removal of Amos Berve to Eastern Iowa, J. W. Lane and Fred A. Fry his assistants were empowered to act in that capacity until the regular election. Speakers during the conference were, Charles J. Smith, J. C. Crabb, Heman Hale Smith, F. M. Sheehy and Daniel Macgregor. Adjourned to meet in Woodbine in February, 1920. Ada S. Putnam, secretary.

BRITISH ISLES MISSION.—August 3 to 10, 1919. At the Saints' chapel, Priestley Road, Birmingham, England. R. May, T. Jones, J. A. Judd, the conference reunion committee, in charge. This was the first conference reunion held in the mission, and was so uplifting a gathering that already we are eagerly awaiting the next one. Members of the priesthood from various parts of the country were present, and the preaching was of a very high order indeed. G. W. Leggett, J. A. Judd and J. W. Taylor, being the ministers at the chapel, and A. Hall, T. Jones and R. May at the special services held in the Midland Institute (a hall in the center of the town.) Bishop R. May also gave a most instructive exposition of the duties and responsibilities of his office. Among the chief items of business was the appointment of R. May, J. A. Judd, A. Hall, Pearl Crick, T. Jones, and E. J. Trapp to investigate our resources for a mission paper, and, if practicable, to at once commence its publication, in which case the aforementioned will constitute the board of publication. J. W. Taylor, R. May, T. Jones, were appointed to consider and revise the constitution and by-laws of the mission conference, and to report at the 1920 reunion; a notice of motion also being given to alter the constitution and by-laws at the 1920 gathering. Expression was made by the assembly of the keen regret felt at the impending loss to the mission of the services of our late secretaries, W. Worth and F. Lewis, who are emigrating to America in the near future. A meeting of the Seventh Quorum of Elders was held on August 6, under the presidency of J. E. Meredith; and of the priests' quorum, under the presidency of Bishop R. May. With the latter met the teachers and deacons present, and

The flood of mail this week has kept the office force busy at high speed and long hours—but they are glad to do it.

We are mailing the new book, Birds of a Feather. Get your order in for a copy. $1.50, postpaid.

A recent letter said: "Autumn Leaves is one of the best magazines I have ever had the pleasure of reading," and it is one expression of many we get.

The new descriptive catalogue for which you have been waiting is on the press as we write, and will be ready for mailing the last of this week. We will be glad to send you one of them.

Is this you? This week's mail included a number of remittances for renewal that gave no clew whatever as to the names or addresses of those remitting. What can we do about it? Nothing, except hope to hear from the writers again.

The returns from our Braden-Kelley Debate offer have exceeded our fondest expectations. We must bind a new lot to supply the demand. The offer is still good: One copy of the large book, Braden-Kelley Debate for five new subscriptions to the HERALD.

THE "QUICK" MEETING

The meetings begin at 7.30 p. m. Congregational singing.

"In the service of a never-changing God,

"F. L. FREEMAN.

"F. H. COWEN.

"For the Local Committee.

"WEBB CITY, MISSOURI, October, 1919."

These were given to different willing workers of the Sunday school and Religio, and distributed to the houses in different parts of the city. While everyone to whom was given the advertising did not attend, we feel that we were amply repaid for the effort, and that the seed sown will result in an intelligent investigation, and ultimately, a rich ingathering of honest-hearted, God-fearing people in the abundant harvest which will come in the due time of the Master's will.

Many good sermons were given to the people, and Brother Quick appeared at his best in every effort, and gave us much new thought.

On the evening of the last meeting announcement of the subject, "The final destiny of man" was quite freely circulated, and the result was a fuller house and good order throughout the meeting. Most of the time one could have heard a pin drop in any part of the room.

At the close of the meeting Brother Quick gave some "saintly" advice to the membership of the church, urgently imploring them to "live their religion," and telling them they could preach much better sermons this way than in any other way. This talk was very impressive to the outside attendance.

At the close of the service a collection was taken up for the incidental expenses of the minister, and was liberally responded to, after which Brother Quick gave a short explanation of the manner in which the church dealt with the financial side of its missionary's work. The choir and audience then sang, "God be with you till we meet again."

Thus, ended the "Quick" message of three week's duration.

FRANK H. COWEN,

Secretary for Advertising Committee.

steps were taken toward their organization into quorums. The auxiliaries were well represented. Sunday school met on several occasions, and among other progressive work done was the organization of the hitherto somewhat irregularly constituted British Isles Mission Sunday School Association into the British Isles District of the General Sunday School Association. Officers elected were, Superintendent, J. A. Judd; home department superintendent, J. Schofield; normal superintendent, F. Henry Edwards; librarian S. E. Harris; treasurer, Bishop R. May. A Woman's Auxiliary was also organized. The officers elected were: President Sister P. Crick, vice president, Sister B. Edwards, secretary, Sister G. Edwards. A meeting of those interested in the Boy Movement was held. The appointment of J. A. Judd as field worker was ratified, and a preliminary organization was affected by association with him J. W. Taylor and F. Henry Edwards. Special hymns had been selected and practiced for some time prior to the reunion and under the able direction of our chorister, Sister P. Crick, and with Sister A. Smith at the organ, the singing contributed very largely to the spirituality of the gathering. The songs of Sister P. Crick, G. Edwards, S. Jenkins and Thomas Jones, with the violin accompaniment of Isaac Jones, were special features of the meetings, and were greatly appreciated by the Saints. Election of officers resulted in the choice of R. May, T. Jones, and J. A. Judd as conference reunion committee. F. Henry Edwards as mission secretary (J. H. Sykes being unable to accept nomination). I. Jones, assistant secretary; Bishop May, treasurer; W. R. Armstrong, mission historian; E. J. Trapp, mission librarian; R. May and J. E. Meredith, members library board. Next year's conference will be held at London, August Bank Holiday Week, 1920, full programs being sent out by the committee three months prior to that date. F. Henry Edwards, secretary.

MILLER-HAMMER.—Miss Leota May Hammer and Mr. Burr Oliver Miller, both well-known and popular young people of Creston, Iowa, were united in matrimony Thursday, November 20, 1919, at the home of the bride's parents. A beautiful ring ceremony was conducted by Elder W. E. Haden, missionary in Lamoni Stake. The ceremony was attended by relatives of the bride and groom. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Hammer, well-known throughout the Lamoni Stake, and the groom recently became affiliated with the church and is taking a very active part in the work. They will be at home at 406 North Birch Street, Creston, Iowa, on and after November 24.

STEPHENS-POWELL.—Mr. Roy Stephens and Sister Lena Powell were united in bonds of matrimony November 15 at the home of Elder Ralph A. Harder, 602 Taylor Street, Flint Michigan, in the presence of the bride's father, and Sister Katie Harder as witnesses. The party returned to Brown City, Michigan, where they have lived for a number of years, and where they will be at home to their friends. We join with all in wishing them a very happy and prosperous lifetime together.

Book Reviews

THE LITTLE LAME PRINCE AND OTHER STORIES.—One of the Children's Classics series published by the J. B. Lippincott Co., Philadelphia. It has eight illustrations in color, by Marie L. Kirk and sells for $1.50 net. These enchanting little histories prove that Miss Mulick knew how to tell a story so as to reach the child's heart. Besides the story of the Little Lame Prince it contains two other stories, The Adventures of a Brownie and Poor Prin, both equally as interesting as the first. It has large print and handsome binding and will be eagerly welcomed by all. It makes a delightful gift and will keep any young person amused and in good humor for hours or more.

AVERAGE AMERICANS.—By Theodore Roosevelt, jr. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. The war experiences of the author. The preface is largely quotations from letters written by the late Theodore Roosevelt to his son, the dominant note of which is the unpreparedness of this country for conditions of war. In the narrative, the tragedy of unpreparedness is emphasized. Being among the first to arrive in France and seeing a great deal of active service at the front, Mr. Roosevelt is able to narrate considerable history affecting the division with which he was connected. His style lacks the vigorous forcefulness of his father's, but is frank and sincere.

WHERE IS CHRIST?—By an Anglican priest in China. Houghton Mifflin Company, New York. This book was written during the war (in 1916) and the question was raised over the manifest failure of the churches to unite in love the vast area of segregated idealisms in Christianity. Though the writer has given thoughtful consideration to his question, the reader can but feel that his appeal is but the cry of a lost soul who would not undertake the answer if it should come. Denying the power of God to speak in these days, a revelation of Christ's whereabouts would rebound from minds obscured and dulled by centuries of tradition. Most anyone can charge the Christian churches with failure, but the unpopularity of the recipe for success is exemplified in the general rejection of the principles of Christ's teachings whereby he can restore and can reveal himself in all comprehensible ways. How long will blind leaders lead the blind into deeper darkness?

FROM HERE AND THERE

The Des Moines Register of November 3 reports the death of Bradley McCord, the son of Alexander McCord, a one-time missionary of the church, who came to western Iowa in 1846. The title given the article is, "Hater of polygamy. Son of moral Mormon passes away in Iowa." The item, though brief, states clearly that Alexander McCord was a hater of polygamy, and on two occasions was sent by the Iowa branch of the church to Salt Lake City to protest against the practice of polygamy in Utah. This was done with no little danger of personal violence.

Brother Joseph Arber reports pleasing results in missionary work in Independence and Kansas City stakes. Extensive tracting is being done, going from house to house, and quite a large number have been baptized. His method is to hold and have held cottage meetings in the various groups, which has resulted in the attendance of many non-members, in fact a larger percentage than in meetings in one central place. He has just closed a successful series of meetings near one of the large branches, with some baptisms. He reports that the Kansas City Stake conference recently held was an important gathering, with excellent services. At the preaching services the building was filled to capacity, while the Spirit of liberty was greatly in evidence in dispensing the word. One elder, one priest and one deacon were ordained.

A letter from Knoxville, Indiana, says that there is probability of S. W. L. Scott moving his family to that place at least temporarily. Elder J. B. Prettyman is branch president, and alert to duty though in his eighties. He recently had Brother Scott hold a ten-days' series of meetings at that place, with fair attendance.

J. D. Proffit writes from Trenton, Missouri that they have been greatly favored by the visits of various of the church officials, including Bishop Richard Bullard, R. D. Weaver, George E. Whitehead, E. L. Kelley, B. R. McGuire and R. S. Salyards. The ladies of the branch recently served a supper which netted $65, to be applied on church expenses. Brother Proffit held preaching services on October 12, with Brother and Sister John Rains, south of Jamesport, to a full house. Any desiring to locate at or near Trenton are invited to correspond with Brother Proffit, who is president of the branch, and well acquainted with real estate possibilities.

Dear Sirs: As I have had many inquiries as to why I left the Church of the Christian Brotherhood I have thought it was wise to ask you if you would publish my resignation in your paper. There are hundreds of people that know that I have been closely associated with Bishop R. C. Evans for years and I feel assured that my resignation to that church in your paper will let them see the facts in that matter. I will now give you a copy of my resignation:

TORONTO, October 22, 1919.

BISHOP R. C. EVANS, 51 Ozark Crescent, Toronto.

Dear Sir: I have decided to tender to you my resignation to the church over which you preside. Knowing your life as I do I can no longer believe the angel story that you told, but I pray that God will forgive you for that and also for your cruel and unjust treatment to me and others. I know that even if I do not get fair play here I will yet stand before a just God and then we will know who has tried to serve him. My prayer is that he will forgive you.

ADVANCE THE BALL

The football season is over, but it may not be too late to borrow an illustration from the gridiron. We sometimes wonder what our keen young football players think of our team work in the church, and particularly in the ministry.

In a well-organized football eleven every move of every player is designed to advance the ball. Every player supports the team. Every player supports every other player. All try to make the goal. One man may have the honor to carry the ball forward for a gain—but all others help him to make the play. Some may run before or beside him for "interference"; but they do not interfere with him, they protect him and interfere with his assailants. All obey the signals. There is discipline and order.

Suppose that in a certain team, after the lineup has been determined for the game, after the whistle has blown and action is on, two or more players decide to oppose each other. Or suppose they decide to oppose the captain or quarter back, to "rough" and "foul" their own fellows in the scrimmage, to defy the orders, and ball up the signals. What will happen? The opposition will go right through them and around them and over them.

What would you think of such a team? Reverse the question. What do you suppose a good football team would think of some of the things we do? If two players on an eleven should decide to fight each other, that would leave nine to meet the enemy. If four should become thus involved, seven would be left. If five should decide to oppose the remaining six, one would be left to oppose the enemy. The same principle holds good in branch, in a stake, or in the general church.

Here is an incident not so unusual that one may say it never happened: a certain branch, or district or stake, has its regular business meeting or conference. Policies are discussed. Officers are elected, or sustained, as the case may be. The lineup for the team is decided upon. But almost immediately when the work is begun, some of the officers get at outs and spend the rest of the time trying to defeat one another. Or perhaps they get at outs with the branch president, or the district or stake president, as the case may be, and spend the rest of the year trying to make him unhappy and to balk his plans. Or possibly those on the side line get upon the field and endeavor to kick the ball about. What would you think of such a branch? Obviously, Methuselah would not live long enough to see it make even a ten yard gain. It is impossible to advance the ball. While the struggle goes on few are left to meet the enemy—and he goes right through our line.

Is the picture overdrawn? Since this editorial was begun a letter came to the desk of the Presidency from a brother in a rather large and important branch. He says:

We have a wonderful opportunity here to build up an organization that will be a power for good in the church, but every effort is being made to frustrate all progressive movements; in fact the past year as I view it has been devoted to defending the policies of the church against those who insist that it is being led to destruction.

According to the report of this brother, who by the way, is in position to know what he is writing about, at least one large branch has accomplished little constructive work during the year. Every effort has been balked. The branch has worn itself out in factional fights and has had no strength to meet the opposition or to do real progressive and constructive work. The ball has not been advanced.

For this reason the Bishopric advocate for 1919

Why not line up and play the game? Let our objections be registered at the proper time by voice and vote in conference and business meeting, and at elections. But when the majority has decided the lineup for a team, let us get busy and advance the ball. Let us heed legitimate leadership and discipline and direction. Otherwise we can never, never win out to the goal.

Some one may say: "Oh, that is Brighamism! You want us to obey counsel, to follow the file leader. That is Brighamism!" It is not. The charge has so little foundation that it is not even worth while to get angry about it. Here is one vital difference between "Brighamism" and our philosophy and procedure. Brighamism gives no opportunity for free speech at the business sessions and conferences, the very place where the people are to discuss matters and determine common consent by the ballot.

The man who started any sort of opposition in Brigham's day, and for a long time after, was speedily shown to the door by an escort of very efficient ushers. He found himself immediately in the great and glorious out-of-doors. The conference went on without him—and a negative vote was not taken. Often the recalcitrant member found himself disfellowshipped speedily, if indeed he escaped an exposition of the principle of "blood atonement."

Have we anything like that? You know we have not. Free speech has been the rule in our conferences—very free indeed. And very often those who have stood in opposition to the administration have been given positions of great trust and responsibility as well as honor. That has been done to this very day.

The late General Conference was a monumental evidence that the right of free speech remains un-abridged. Everyone said about what he pleased. Debate continued until the people closed it themselves. In every decision made by the chairman on a question wherein there was even a shadow of doubt, free speech was given the benefit of the doubt. You know that to be a fact.

If this church errs in anything it errs in too great leniency, and men are allowed to go on and on until they ruin themselves and others. If you do not believe that, get the proper longitude and latitude and draw a straight line across the map toward Toronto. Where an attempt has been made to curb one man who will not play the game according to the divine rules, a dozen have been permitted to go scot free, because to the last extremity we have thought to save them.

But returning to our theme: free speech has its time and place. And there is a time for work—orderly, concentrated, disciplined work. When the debate is over, in branch, district, or stake, or general church, the votes cast and counted, the lineup for the period determined, we ought to get busy and play the game, giving mutual support. Let us advance the ball.

Let us not deceive ourselves. We are not out for a summer picnic or a little joint debate among ourselves. The opposition is lined up. And the opposition is bent upon only one thing: the entire destruction of the church, root and branch.

Have you noted the character of the books appearing against us? Have you observed the work of the lecturers who are covering various parts of the country? It is reported that two hundred and eighty-eight thousand congregation of various denominations have banded themselves in an alliance to destroy "Mormonism," as they term it. And their hardest attack many times is upon the Reorganized Church—not upon the Utah Mormons. Some of them at least do not hate polygamy as bad as they have claimed to do, or they would not pass by Utah Mormonism to attack a moral and religious people whose record is clean and honorable. But so it is. The issue is drawn. The battle is on.

Have we time for bickerings? The opposition does not wait for us to adjust our little differences. Our opponents have no excessively reverential regard for fair play. They are not lop-sided with over-developed consciences. They mean business. They are smashing at our center and driving at the ends of our line. Perhaps we better get together and advance the ball.

THE SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC PLAN

A few have told us that we have been publishing too much in the HERALD of outside affairs; that we should discuss simply the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

We concede after all, that this is our primary purpose, but we consider that within the gospel of Jesus Christ there is included, not only the first principles of faith in God, repentance from dead works, baptism of water and of the Holy Spirit, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment, but that there is also the right of humanity to receive justice here and now. The industrial and the economic is part of the teaching of the church, and is part of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and we should be workers with God, but also with one another.

When we consider the industrial situation, we are confronted clearly by the fact that divine revelation first warned us of the necessity of organization, and laid down the plan in general terms as early as 1831. Thirteen years later we find, in England, the beginning of a cooperative movement.

In America, there was at that time such an abundance of land and opportunity, that the need for economic organization was not apparent. It is probably within the last ten or fifteen years that we have reached the point in America that was reached by England one hundred years ago. But in view of this necessity, the papers are full of the discussion of our industrial need.

The organization of Zion, the law of stewardship, of tithing, of consecration, of inheritance, of the storehouse, were all first laid down and set forth with some detail in modern revelations in the book of Doctrine and Covenants.

After a few years the church was reprov'd, in the Fishing River Revelation, for its lack of faith, and that progress had not been made, because they wished God first to accomplish his purpose, before they were willing to move forward and do their share.

Some are blind to the fact that to-day other church organizations have taken up tithing, and are taking up and defining consecration, surplus property, stewardships, and are even discussing the establishment of Zion. Practically every one of these terms used in the social and economic law is receiving now, construction and interpretation at the hand of others. How can we be blind to these facts? If we are to progress we must first face the situation frankly.

We have the conviction that if the church would move forward and live up to the law already given, that our heavenly Father would reveal more of the details, and also would place upon us a responsibility and a privilege of service to humanity greater than has yet been declared.

We continue to print these statements by others to show what others are doing, with the hope of arousing our own members to a realization of our opportunity and of our need. This church calls for the most complete consecration of any organization. Are we doing as much in practice? Are we giving as much as are other organizations? Are we making an effort to carry on that which we believe is the very work of God, restored under his immediate direction? Are we raising the warning voice to the nations of the earth as are others who have less light?

It is not those who are called; it is not the son who says, "I will," who deserves a reward, but it is the one who does the will of his Father who is in heaven.

To us there belongs the honor of presenting in the Doctrine and Covenants, the first definition and statement of these principles, some eighty-eight years ago. It is possible that we still lead in their definition.

To this church should also belong the honor and the responsibility of leading in this economic movement. Nor is that for the sake of personal glory nor that we may prosper, but upon us is laid a responsibility by the revelations of our heavenly Father, that being given the light, we may let it shine. The plan of God is best for us, though a selfish interest is not and cannot be the first consideration. But by doing his will, and seeking the good of our brother and all humanity, good will result to us and to others.

UNSELFISHNESS AND SACRIFICE

For the solution of the problems before us it is plain that no progress can be made on the principle of "What can I get out of it" but only on the principle of "What can I give? What can I do?"

The world challenges the idea of unselfishness, and says that too long has man proceeded on the basis of his own self interest to make possible now a sudden change. Yet it is admitted that enlightened self interest will cause the employer to provide amply for those who work under him, and that enlightened self interest requires on the part of the working man a right return for the remuneration given him. An increase of production is necessary. To meet our problem it is also necessary that there be the spirit of conciliation and of cooperation to settle strikes and to solve even the more immediate of the world and national problems.

But in the doctrine of the church the spirit of preferring one another and seeking one another's good, of doing unto others as you would be done by, it is clearly set forth that there is no opportunity for reasonable controversy.

Yet if the spirit of each member should be, "What can I do for my brethren; what can I do for the church?" so should the spirit actuating the church and those directing in its affairs be, "What can the church do for the membership?" Not "What can we get from them?"

Enlightened self interest would require an adequate remuneration. Enlightened self interest requires, the work of the church requires the spirit of sacrifice; the elimination of unnecessary wants; a devotion and willingness to do anything we possibly can to assist in the onward progress of the work.

On behalf of the church, enlightened self interest alone requires not only a reasonable remuneration, but a refusal to permit this devotion to be wasted and scattered abroad; but rather an instance that each man and woman shall be not only permitted, but urged and encouraged to give the best service for which special training has fitted him or her.

We should support the church and church institutions, even though it be to our seeming hurt; support them though it does not mean our immediate gain. Yet we may justly ask that the different institutions and stores be efficiently managed, and hope and expect that efficient management will mean ultimate advantage to the body and to the members who make up that body. Unless it accomplishes that end, it is so far a failure.

It is right that there should be that spirit of consecration on the part of the membership. It is wrong that we should hold the spirit set forth in section 102, to wait until the Lord has done his work; that we will hold our money until we can see the benefit. We should go to work to make progress possible through our efforts.

The ideal before us is not greed, it is not envy, but should be more efficient service on our part to the body, and through the united efforts, improve conditions for all, and especially those of the household of faith.

A PUBLIC DEFENDER

---

The Public, sometime ago, contained an able article, "The public defender" by Meyer C. Goldman, of the New York Bar.

He states that in European countries, also in certain American communities as Los Angeles, Omaha, Pittsburgh, New Haven, Bridgeport, and Hartford, the public defender is already a part of the court system, the same as the public prosecutor.

It has been a practice of the courts in criminal cases to appoint some attorney who happened to be in the court room, or in some instances one who is not there, to defend the accused, when he is too poor to secure counsel for himself. But this service is entirely without remuneration except in the case involving possibly capital punishment. Sometimes it results in an able defense; sometimes in the reverse.

Very often these cases are assigned to young lawyers, who are glad to take them in order to secure experience. Just as able physicians donate their services, so able lawyers have assisted and taken care gratuitously of the interests of clients in such cases. The question arises whether it is really just to the attorney, to the defendant, or society. In New York City an effort is being made to secure counsel for defendants who are too poor to provide their own. But as Mr. Goldman well points it would be a matter of justice, and not called charity.

The public defender would be a man chosen to perform that service, and would be under like obligations with the public prosecutor; and like the public administrator, would see that all cases are taken care of, wherein the parties had not the means to secure a good defense. The principle of fair play and of underlying justice is involved.

CORRECTIONS

Two unfortunate errors appear in the report of my sermon in the HERALD for November 26. In speaking about the resolution favoring the preparatory course for the ministry, adopted by the Joint Council, I said: "The notation in the joint council record says that this motion was adopted unanimously; however, my recollection is, that there was one member who did not vote." The HERALD unfortunately makes it read, "Here was one member who did not vote." My vote was cast for the resolution.

The title intended for the sermon was, "The student in the ministry." The subtitle, "Is he a menace? Does he presage apostasy?" By mistake it got into print: "Does he presage authority?" The subtitle was suggested by the insinuation thrown out by some that the growing student body in the church foreshadows apostasy and approaching rejection as a church.

Again the quotation from Paul is made to read, "As certain also of your own poets may have said." The may is superfluous.

ORPHANS' HOME

---

F. L. Mahannah, superintendent of the Orphans' Home at Davenport, Iowa, urges that the first consideration for a child at the children's home is to eliminate and care for elsewhere those that are mentally deficient or subnormal. They should not simply be turned out, but provided for elsewhere.

Second: The child should be given a very thorough physical examination and put into first-class physical condition.

Third: The next matter that should be considered is the facility for play and wholesome recreation. In the larger institutions this would include a gymnasium.

Fourth: The next consideration is education, or the school. And in this should be included manual training, such as simple bench work in wood and the use and care of wood working tools. Also the work in the schools should be supplemented by, and correlated with the work in the various departments of the institution, the farm, the garden, the kitchen, the laundry. The object to keep in mind being that every boy and girl should be trained to work, to like his work, and to do his work well, and earn wages readily and honestly.

This is difficult even in a private home, but there are still greater limitations on an institution. To overcome the fact that the state furnishes everything, the child is encouraged to earn and own property of its own, individual garden plots, or broods

It Is Written

Slavery is a most absolute and involuntary form of human servitude and deprives its subjects of their personal and political liberties.

The first negro slave in the United States landed in Virginia in 1619, but slavery has existed at various times and in sundry places. It was practiced by the Babylonians, Assyrians, Greeks, etc.

Anciently one of the chief sources of securing slaves was by the captives of war; in fact, it is said that the word "slave" originated from Slavs taken as prisoners of war.

In some countries men have been made slaves for the satisfaction of their debts. This was later modified by imprisonment for debt. Debt creates a condition of serfdom and subjects man to the tyranny, injustice and caprice of his fellowmen.

Excessive debt has a depressing effect upon our spirits. To rid ourselves of it often requires long and laborious self denial under which we tire and become resentful.

The Lord seeing the detrimental effects of debt upon his children has warned them against it. Much of our trouble from this source could be avoided by the exercise of wisdom. We should never contract an obligation that we are not morally sure that we can fulfill. We should never let our pride, our desires, or our ambition overbalance our judgment.

There is this difference between our business dealings with men and our business dealings with God; we can place ourselves in debt to man while we may be operating our business at a loss; but we only get in debt to God as we prosper and increase in wealth. Having been thus blessed we should not take that portion which belongs to God to pay our debts to man. Pay man's debts out of the nine tenths, but remember the instructions; "Behold, it is My will that you should pay all your debts."

The manner in which we shall determine this is simple. Let every member take an inventory at the close of the year of everything that he possesses of value, listing it in its present conservative selling value; from the total of this deduct your debts.

To those who have not yet paid any tithing, one tenth of the remainder would represent the material wealth in their hands which belongs to God.

Can you afford to continue to hold and use that which belongs to him and his law has made it clear that you should pay all your debts and that this particular one must be cared for at least annually?

If you have not yet filed your Property Statement for 1919, we suggest that you do it now.

LOYALTY TO CHURCH INSTITUTIONS

Sooner or Later We Must Decide on This

As Israel of old we are come up to Mount Zion to realize the fulfillment of promises long since made by the Lord. We are very glad to be numbered among those who have thus been permitted to come and shall surely appreciate the good things we receive. Long years we have waited in patience for this time to come, and earnestly we have prayed that the Lord would hasten the redemption of Zion, that we might find a place of safety in time of trouble, a place with Latter Day Saint environment, a place where we might rest from the jarrings of the world, Yea, verily a place, where separated from the world so to speak, we might be privileged to labor with the Saints for the accomplishment of Gods word, and above all, realize the promise, "They shall have all things in common," "there shall be no poor among them," and that "every man shall have an abundance of the things he needeth" even his needs and just wants, I repeat, for this day we have longed and for the realization of these things we have earnestly prayed, and we continue to pray.

WHAT CAN I DO?

Do you realize that in our anxious anticipation for the above-mentioned conditions, there is constantly present with us a hope that we might enjoy, and that we may be protected and that to us, might come the realization of the promise to receive all things necessary to our existence and enjoyment? I say in our hopes for Zion's success we are altogether too much concerned as to "what shall I get out of it?" and too little concerned as to "what can I do to assist in this great work?"

Did Christ ever ask himself the question, "What shall I receive?" No; listen; "Father, I will go and redeem man, and to thee be the honor and glory." Again; "I am come that ye might have life, and that ye may have it more abundantly." Who, then, was Christ interested in? You and me and the establishing of his Father's word. Lest we be dishonest with ourselves and each other, turn the searchlight inward and ask ourselves the question, Why do I want Zion to be redeemed? Why?

OUR RESERVATIONS TOO PROMINENT

Observation has justly been made that in many of the cases the Saint answers: "If the church will give me my needs and just wants I certainly would be glad to go on the stewardship plan." Why? Because in many cases we are not receiving our needs and just wants in the world and natural enough, if the church can give us better than we are already receiving, why not work for it? In far too many cases has the answer to the call of the church for earnest, consecrated workers, who are willing to labor unreservedly for the accomplishment of the redemption of Zion failed to come in. Perhaps this is due to the fact that to serve God unreservedly means the laying away of a great many things that may seem dear to us. Think ye, even if the church should say you are entitled to your just wants and needs, that in the sight of God you are justified, altogether, in requiring it unless you are living fully in harmony with the law, which says there should be given to our brother and sister graciously, out of the things we possess that they too, may not be in need.

He who was entitled to all things, said upon one occasion, "The birds of the air have nests, the foxes have holes, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." Did he require, even though he was entitled to receive? No. He who might have summoned angels to his relief, sacrificed many of the things we hold dear to us, that we might partake of that more abundant life. But he who sacrificed then, will enjoy the fruits of his labors. When through with our experiments, speculations, etc., we will have to learn that to serve God, means to serve our fellow men and to do so, means sacrifice.

WHY PATRONIZE CHURCH INSTITUTIONS?

We have church institutions for the purpose of assisting in the accomplishment this service to our fellow men and honoring God, but they seem to be ever in their infancy because there be some who would hinder the growth of these, recognizing that if they should be permitted to grow, eventually all greed, graft, speculation and selfishness would be subdued and trampled out, which thing, seemingly our people could not live without.

Did you ever hear anyone say, "Oh, well, I'll tell you brother or sister so and so, if there was any inducement for me to purchase my goods from the church institutions I would do it, but what's the use? I can buy cheaper somewhere else."

Of course you have; so have I, and in carrying the conversation a little farther we will discover that these same people will be very glad to purchase from the church institutions when the time comes that it is possible to do so at a decidedly cheaper

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION WORK

We are just in receipt of University Extension Bulletin from Philadelphia, in which we note a very ambitious and important program is presented. There are lectures of marked interest, beginning with the last of October. The program so far announced is for the month of November, including the first week of December. But it is evident that it continues into the late spring of 1920 with lectures every night of the week except Sunday, and on some nights two numbers at different points in Philadelphia.

The University Extension Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Albert N. Hoxie, is announced for seven concerts of a remarkably high order. The following is a short announcement of these concerts:

"The University Extension Society takes pleasure in announcing a series of Thursday evening concerts at Wither- spoon Hall (and November 20, at the Academy of Music) weekly, beginning November 6, by the University Extension Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Albert N. Hoxie, former Director of Music at League Island Navy Yard, and Director of the largest chorus organized for war work, the Liberty Chorus.

"It is generally acknowledged that few men in this country have done so much as Mr. Hoxie for "music for the masses," for spreading among the people the the gospel of good music, and giving them an opportunity to express themselves musically. He was not only one of the pioneers in community music, but is to-day, through his war activities, undoubtedly its foremost exponent. His directing of monster audiences in past summers at Hunting Park, Asbury Lake, City Hall Plaza and elsewhere, as well as his two years' work at League Island, to which prominent navy officials have paid splendid tribute, equip him admirably for the work he is now undertaking. A little over a year ago the American marines thrilled the world by their exploits at Chateau Thierry, they not only drove the enemy back, but they revolutionized attack. They went into battle singing, and the songs they sang were those that Mr. Hoxie had taught them at League Island. Those who were fortunate price. Let's brace up, show the Lord that we will move now and do the thing he has required at our hands; he has spoken and again has he spoken and we have failed. It is possible now for us, if we will all put our shoulders to the wheel and push, furnishing the church institutions with the volume of business necessary to the putting into effect the conditions we hope for. Think if we will lay aside selfishness and do our bit, instead of waiting for the Lord to do it for us, how much we could hasten this Zion in its redemption. Let us cease to be so much concerned as to what I am going to receive out of it but more concerned as to what can I do to assist. We can never redeem Zion with our selfish desires and more than that, we can not expect someone to eliminate it from our lives, you and I, each in his own place must drive it from his own life. Perhaps we are all guilty. What think ye?

enough to listen to the singing of the sailors and marines night after night under Mr. Hoxie's direction, realized what a unique force he was in creating the splendid morale which characterized the American army and navy, and, in his directing in this city and other cities, in keeping at a high pitch the civilian morale. This same leadership, enthusiasm, stirring personality and musicianship, Mr. Hoxie is now devoting to the University Extension Society.

"He has surrounded himself with a group of the leading soloists and instrumentalists in Philadelphia."

LONDON COMMENT ON LEAGUE FAILURE

Among other comments on the action of the United States Senate on the Treaty of Peace, we note the following from the London Spectator:

"We understand perfectly America's difficulties and the spirit in which the Senate has been in action and how public opinion has been working. While America's voice is still uncertain, let it not be forgotten that America is always inclined to be like the man in the Gospel who said 'I go not and went.'"

"When she did act, it was with a self-abandonment and unselfishness and generosity to which the history of international relations affords no parallel. America threw herself into the contest without a reservation."

The Globe adds:

"It is for the government and the people of the United States to decide whether they are meeting the moral responsibility the present situation places upon them. America never failed before, and it is inconceivable that she will fail now."

DANGER IN SUNDAY EMPLOYMENT

A brother who has charge of one of our western branches located at a summer resort, in a recent letter makes the following comment on a condition there which may exist in other places. He writes as follows:

"There were a number of vacant seats in our church yesterday, quite a few being absent from one cause or another. One that is giving me much concern is that several of our young sisters have accepted situations calling for service on the Lord's Day in serving refreshments around 'The Pike' where the environments are anything but spiritual and sacred, and must naturally partake more or less of the spirit of those who disregard the Lord's Day. I am amazed sometimes at the blindness of the parents in permitting lovely daughters to be placed in such surroundings merely for the paltry sums they can earn that way. I spoke gently and kindly to one of our finest girls on this matter, telling her I thought she should seek other employment for her own sake, but I fear it was not very kindly received. There is such an allurements in these places to see a gay life that the effects of the 'sowing' are lost sight of, and only when perhaps it is too late will the awakening come that will reveal the exorbitant price which has been paid for the slight pleasure enjoyed. My heart is saddened, but I can only pray and hope that the good Father will so influence them that conditions will soon be changed for the better."

The danger pointed out by the brother is real, though unrecognized or ignored by those threatened. It is one which should be recognized by our pastors and by them pointed out to the people of the church.—One.

PARENTAL DON'TS

As all students of practical psychology know, a command to a child given in the form of a prohibition usually fails of its object. "Don't do" simply suggests doing, and generally results in disobedience. The ancient story of the mother who left home with the caution to the children not "to put beans up their noses," thereby suggesting to them an interesting experiment which they subsequently tried, to their own agony and the mother's discomfiture, is an extreme example of much modern foolishness in the matter of discipline. Kindergarten theories and practices are doing much good in this connection, but it will be some time before parental injunctions cease to be couched in the form of prohibitions, and "don't," is eliminated from the mother's vocabulary.

Professor O'Shea of Wisconsin University tells a story of the fall from grace of a boy whose father left him alone in the house with the sole suggestion: "Don't touch the clock." The boy had never touched the clock before, but when the father returned it had been trifled with to its exceeding detriment. Commenting on the story, Professor O'Shea said: "If instead of leaving the boy with mind empty of all suggestion save one that centered his thoughts upon the clock, the father had said: 'There are some bits of wood in the cellar and you may have my tools to make a box if you like,' the clock would have remained intact."

Another story told by Professor O'Shea illustrates the fact that the trained mind of the adult is also keenly susceptible to the power of suggestion. On the wall of the laboratory in the scientific department of the university was a notice: "Do not strike a match in this room!" Owing to the danger connected with explosive gases, this caution was very necessary. One of the learned professors was seen, one day, deliberately to strike a match and watch it burn out. When brought before the Faculty Board and asked to explain his action he assured the Faculty that he had had no reason for doing so unjustifiable an act; his only explanation was that, being at the time in deep thought on an abstruse subject, his eye had caught the prohibition on the wall and the suggestion of the striking of a match had affected him subconsciously and prompted an act which had been performed by him without his conscious volition.—Gordon Hart, in The Woman and the Race.

THE GRAPHIC ARTS BUREAU

The bureau has for immediate use, fifteen or twenty sets of slides on travel and economic subjects. We can also secure any of the Underwood and Underwood slides. We can also assist in securing moving pictures from the United States Government Social Purity League, etc.

We can also assist you in the purchase of stereopticon or moving picture machine at a discount to you.

The bureau was organized at the last General Conference for the purpose of encouraging the amateur photographers of the church; building up a "circulating library" of slides and films; developing a Latter Day Saint art gallery and being of general service to the church along lines of the graphic arts.

For further information, write to the secretary, A. H. Knowlton, 622 South Chrysler Street, Independence, Missouri.

Occasionally we get short items for publication that are so incomplete in essentials that we cannot use them. We like brevity, but an obituary notice without the date of demise, a report that Brother Smith, for instance, (without initials) is holding a series of meetings, or anything like that makes it hard for the editors to do anything with the items. Read your letters and contributions the second time for such things.

THE FORUM

This department is for the free discussion of questions of vital interest to the church in an impartial, impersonal way. We welcome affirmative discussions for the purpose of ascertaining the truth. The views presented are not authoritative, and represent the opinion only of the writer, but we hope it will lead to authoritative conclusions by the church. Names must accompany contributions but need not be used.

The Book of Revelation As I See It

I read in the HERALD of October 1, under the caption of "Concerning Revelation 17 and 18," a letter with request by the writer of hearing comments thereon from other Saints.

To me it was an interesting letter. Comparing Revelation 18 to the German power, it harmonizes in many ways. It naturally would, as history repeats itself. As in the case of Acts 2:16, where Peter said, "This is that which was spoken by the Prophet Joel." They were not drunken, but it was the Spirit of God, the same spirit spoken of by Joel, not a complete fulfillment of the whole prophecy but the same spirit, the same in Revelation 18.

The German power harmonizes with many of the things spoken of there, but not a complete fulfillment. Some of the places failing a complete fulfillment are in Revelation 18:21-22 where Babylon shall be thrown down and found no more at all, as there will be a Babylon after the millenium, possibly the greatest Babylon of all the world.

Again, when no craftsman of whatsoever craft he be, shall be found anymore at all in thee. While in Germany and not only Germany but all the world, the craft of millers or whatever "craft he be" still exists and will create strife and turmoil, until the beast of Revelation 13, which came up out of the sea, will be wounded, as it were, to death. When the Babylon of Revelation 17 is completely subdued, is the time when Satan will be bound. When Satan again is loosed the wound of the first beast will be healed. The second beast will then come up out of the earth, or up among the well organized body of Saints, when Satan shall manifest the power spoken of in the latter part of Revelation 13.

As to the time of the calamities of Revelation 11 and 16, the Babylon of Revelation 18, I will use the Inspired Translation of the Bible.

In writing this article as I see it, one would have to touch on the second and third coming of Christ. (Luke 12:40-42.)

I know that some do not see this as I do, but I do not know that the church has taken any stand contrary to it. I will ask those who see differently, to harmonize the following: I understand the scripture to teach that at the second coming of Christ, the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we who are alive shall be caught up with them, into the cloud. (Thessalonians 4:16-17.) At the age of man they shall be translated. (Doctrine and Covenants 63:13.) At the close of a thousand years, Satan will be loosed, Christ and those who ever remain with him, will appear on the sea of glass, (Revelation 15:2) which is before the throne in heaven. (Revelation 4:6.) At the expiration of the short season will come the judgment, the Battle of Armageddon, the everlasting reign of peace. When God and Christ with the beautiful city shall descend from heaven all is to be changed. (Revelation 21-22; Revelation 16:16, 21; Revelation 11:15-19; Matthew 25:32-47; Joshua 14.) If not how can we harmonize the following:

All changed at the sound of last trump. (I Corinthians 15:51-52.) A trump shall sound at the end of the short season after the millenium, all dead arise, divided on right and left hand. (Doctrine and Covenants 28:6-7) divided on the right and left hand at a time when Christ shall come. (Matthew 25:32-33.) A trump shall sound at the second coming of Christ. (Doctrine and Covenants 85:26-27.) Redemption of those received the Gospel in prison at second trump. (Doctrine and Covenants 85:28.) Coming of the spirits of men to be judged, sound of third trump. (Doctrine and Covenants 85:29.)

As the Doctrine and Covenants tells us of many things that shall be made known in the Inspired Translation in the New Testament, more especially because the Book of Mormon tells us that great and marvelous things which were hid from the foundation of the world, would be unfolded which the Lord had caused to be written by his servant John, an apostle of the lamb. (Book of Ether 1:113.) (1 Nephi 3:251), therefore should we seek to have a more thorough understanding of the Book of Revelation.

Beginning with the 4th chapter of Revelation, the apostle was shown a door open in heaven and a voice said, "Come up hither and I will show you things that must be hereafter." One of the things he saw in heaven was the sea of glass before the throne. (Revelation 4:6.) Beginning from that time on things have transpired as they were shown to him, at the opening of each seal. The restoration being the fifth seal. (Revelation 6:12.)

Things that are to transpire prior to the second coming of Christ. The full description being given from there down to latter part of chapter seven. This trip over the path of history does not give much of a description of the preparation being made by the Saints during the millenium, but it tells of a preparation of the seven angels with the seven trumpets, preparing themselves to sound after the opening of the seventh seal. (Revelation 8:6.) Giving a description of the plagues, etc., that will be upon the human family from then on down to the judgment. Revelation 11:18 and Revelation 10 and 11, will give a description of the work God will do among his people, that are left on earth just prior to the judgment. One time over the history from John's time until the judgment, next time over begins with the apostacy.

Revelation 12 and Revelation 13, tell again of the apostacy in the form of a beast with 7 heads and 10 horns, down to the time when she will be lead into captivity or wounded as it were wounded to death. Revelation 13:11, the Beast came up out of the earth and exercised all the power of the first beast before him. The remainder of the chapter tells of the miracles and the power that he manifested down until the judgment. The first five verses of chapter 14 tell the blessings of the redeemed just prior to the judgment and that they sang before the throne in heaven. (Revelation 14:3.)

Again he was shown the future, beginning with the restoration, (Revelation 14:6) telling the work to be done by the restoration, and the plagues and judgments down to the coming of Christ.

In view of the prices fixed, sugar that comes from Louisiana costs 17 and 18 cents wholesale. It is of interest to note that F. G. Miret of Porto Rico states that at 10 cents per pound, it will give the sugar men enough profit in a year to buy half of Boston.

Mr. Miret, according to the Christian Science Monitor is very familiar with the trade of sugar production and refining. He states that sugar can be produced to sell at five cents per pound, even under very primitive conditions.

Affirmative Discussion

Every once in a while we hear from some one who does not know what is meant by an affirmative presentation of the gospel. By that is simply meant that we present the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ; that we present the truth; that we show something constructively for which we ask the assent of our hearers or readers. But the strength of our argument rests in the good that we present, rather than in tearing down what some one else believes, and indulging in personal attacks. We may prove that everyone else is wrong, but that does not prove that we are right. It is more important that the truth should be presented. It is more important that the right should be made manifest, than we spend our time in attacks upon others.

So in the columns of the HERALD, by action of General Conference, as well as editorial suggestion, our arguments should be affirmative. That does not mean that we should all write on one side of the question, or all write on two sides of the question; that we approve or disapprove. There may be more than two ways of looking at a matter. We want all the light we can receive, but we do not care to receive articles, the only point of which is to destroy some one else's position. If you have a reason for the faith within you; if you have a reason to believe that you are right, present your ideas and the reasons why you assume the position you do.

One principal reason why we urge this rule is, that we are more interested in finding the truth than we are in receiving or making attacks upon others.

Where Is Hell Located?

In discussing the location of hell, I wish to call attention to an extract taken from Josephus's discourse to the Greeks concerning hades, and then compare his description of hades with various statements made in the Scriptures.

"Now as to hades, wherein the souls of the righteous, and unrighteous are detained, it is necessary to speak of it. Hades is a place in the world not regularly finished; a subterraneous region, wherein the light of this world does not shine, from which circumstance, that in this region the light does not shine, it cannot be but there must be in it perpetual darkness. This region is allotted as a place of custody for souls, in which all angels are appointed as guardians to them, who distribute to them temporary punishment, agreeable to everyone's behavior and manners.

"In this region there is a certain place set apart, as a lake of unquenchable fire, whereinto we suppose no one hath hitherto been cast, but it is prepared for a day afore-determined by God, in which one righteous sentence shall deservedly be passed upon all men; when the unjust, and those that have been disobedient to God, and have given honor to such idols as have been the vain operations of the hands of men, as to God himself, shall be adjudged to this everlasting punishment, as having been the causes of defilement; while the just shall obtain an incorruptible and never fading kingdom. These are now confined in hades, but not in the same place wherein the unjust are confined.

"For there is one descent in this region, at whose gate we believe there stands an archangel with a host; which gate when these pass through that are conducted down by the angels appointed over souls, they do not go the same way, but the just are guided to the right hand and are led with hymns, sung by the angels appointed over that place, unto a region of light, in which the just have dwelt from the beginning of the world; not constrained by necessity, but ever enjoying the prospect of the good things they see, and rejoicing in the expectation of those new enjoyments which will be peculiar to every one of them, and esteeming those things beyond what we have here; with whom there is no place of toil, no burning heat, no piercing cold; nor are any briers there; but the countenances of the fathers and of the just, which they see always, smiles upon them, while they wait for the rest and eternal new life in heaven, which is to succeed this region. This place we call the bosom of Abraham.

"But as to the unjust, they are dragged by force to the left hand by the angels allotted for punishment, no longer going with a good will, but as prisoners driven by violence; to whom are sent the angels appointed over them to reproach them, and threaten them with their terrible looks, and to thrust them still downwards. Now these angels that are set over these souls drag them into the neighborhood of hell itself; who, when they are hard by it, continually hear the noise of it, and do not stand clear of the hot vapor itself, but when they have a near view of this spectacle, as of a terrible and exceeding great prospect of fire, they are struck with a fearful expectation of a future judgment, and in effect punished thereby; not only so, but where they see the place (or choir) of the fathers and of the just, even hereby are they punished, for a chaos deep and large is fixed between them; insomuch that a just man that hath compassion upon them cannot be admitted, nor can one that is unjust, if he were bold enough to attempt it, pass over it.

"This is the discourse concerning hades, wherein the souls of all men are confined until a proper season which God hath determined, when he will make a resurrection of all men from the dead; not procuring a transmigration of souls from one body to another, but raising again those very bodies, which you Greeks seeing to be dissolved do not believe (their resurrection.)"—Whiston's Translations, Josephus, page 743.

Jesus confirms the main facts of this Jewish conception of hell, in his teaching, as shown by the following passage.

"And it came to pass, that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom; the rich man also died and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, [in hades he lifted up his eyes.—Revised Version] being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom. And he cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame. But Abraham said, Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivedest thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things: but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented. And besides all this, between us and you there is a great gulf fixed: so that they which would pass from hence to you cannot; neither can they pass to us, that would come from thence."—Luke 16: 22, 26.

There evidently was no water where the rich man was, so he wished Lazarus sent to minister to him.

"As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water."—Zechariah 9: 11.

The fallen angels were to be reserved in chains of darkness until the judgment day.

"For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment."—2 Peter 2: 4.

"And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains, under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day."—Jude 6.

"Now this is the state of the souls of the wicked, yea, in darkness, and in a state of awful, fearful looking for the fiery indignation of the wrath of God upon them. Thus they remain in this state, as well as the righteous in paradise, until the time of their resurrection."—Alma 19: 6.

The Prophet Ezekiel in foretelling the destruction of Tyre, said the city should be brought down to the low parts of the earth.

"When I shall bring thee down with them that descend into the pit, with the people of old time, and shall set thee in the low parts of the earth, in places desolate of old, with them that go down into the pit, that thou be not inhabited; and I shall set glory in the land of the living."—Ezekiel 26: 20.

"Son of man, wail for the multitude of Egypt, and cast them down, even her; and the daughters of the famous nations, unto the nether parts of the earth, with them that go down into the pit."—Ezekiel 32: 18.

"Though they dig into hell, thence shall my hand take them; though they climb up to heaven, thence will I bring them down."—Amos 9: 2.

"Hell from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming: it stirreth up the dead for thee, even all the chief ones of the earth; it hath raised up from their thrones all the kings of the nations."—Isaiah 14: 9.

A part of the mission of Christ was to deliver the captives. In order to accomplish this, we are told, that he visited the lower parts of the earth.

"For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth."—Matthew 12: 40.

"Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth."—Ephesians 4: 9.

The foregoing passages seem to indicate that hell is located in the interior part of the earth. Now hell is also spoken of as the bottomless pit. If a man was to dig a pit in the earth, the part nearest the center of the earth would be the bottom, but suppose the pit should be dug to a depth past the center of the earth, then it could have no bottom because the limit of the excavation would be approaching the surface of the earth, and could no longer be properly called the bottom of the pit, in other words a cavity at the center of the earth could not have a bottom as all surrounding surfaces of the cavity must of necessity be over the cavity, not under.

"The hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth, and the Devil shall have power over his own dominion."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 6.

"Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and the sea: for the Devil is come down unto you, having great wrath."—Revelation 12: 12.

"And they were thrust down, and thus became the Devil and his angels; and behold there is a place prepared for them, from the beginning, which place is hell; and it must needs be that the Devil should tempt the children of men or they could not be agents unto themselves."—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 10.

While Satan has had power to tempt man, from the beginning, he has not had all power even over his own dominions in the past, but the time is near if not already here, when he will have more power over those who surrender themselves to him. That the earth and hell are the same does not seem to agree with some of the foregoing quotations, but, that hell is a part of the earth seems to me to more nearly harmonize the various scriptures referring to the subject. When Satan is confined in the bottomless pit he will have no power to tempt the nations, but after he is loosed for a season he again has that power.

"And I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the

PASTORAL

Getting Results in Pastoral Work

(Read before gathering of the priesthood of the Far West Stake at First Saint Joseph Branch, October 5, 1919, by E. F. Robertson.)

In what enterprise a man enters he wishes to succeed, and, to him, success means the attainment of the desired goal or end, the accomplishment of that for which he strives. Every normal man who possesses the average amount of ambition is therefore interested in getting results and is willing to spend time and earnest thought in developing plans that will contribute to his success.

This should be and doubtless is, as true of the priesthood in the church as it is of other men. The man in business without ambition does not succeed, nor do we find victory perching on the banners of those in any walk of life, who pursue their vocation half-heartedly, or who fail to put into their work the best of their thought and energy.

If we are to make this work progress and grow, if we are to contribute to Zion's redemption, it will be because we desire to do so, because we are earnestly and consistently devoted to the work.

So long as we desire other things more, so long as we take more pleasure in the pursuit of our own projects—the increase of our business interests—so long as we fail to keep that second great commandment to "love our neighbor as ourselves," so long the work will lag and so long will Zion exist for us only as an unrealized dream.

DESIRE BUT THE FIRST STEP

There was a time in my boyhood when I looked fondly forward to the time when I would be a man, and I thought I would be a physician and would go about among the suffering and afflicted ones ministering relief from pain and sickness. But I learned that before I could be a successful physician I would have to spend years in earnest study and preparation. Desiring to be one would contribute to my success only inasmuch as it inspired me to the necessary sacrifice of time and effort.

Later I came in contact with the gospel, and when I had been baptized and was receiving confirmation at the hands of the servants of the Lord I was told of the work he had key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil and Satan, and bound him a thousand years. And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years be fulfilled: and after that he must be loosed a little season."—Revelation 20: 1, 3.

"And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth."—Revelations 7: 8.

Even when Satan holds sway in the earth there will be an oasis in the desert of wickedness.

"And it shall come to pass among the wicked that every man that will not take up his sword against his neighbor must flee unto Zion for safety. And there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven; and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another."—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 13.

MARIAL E. MOORE.

in store for me and commanded to prepare myself for it. I was glad to have a vocation selected for me by wisdom so much greater than my own, but could not escape the responsibility imposed upon me of making preparation. At other times during my early youth the word of the Lord came to me, always urging preparation, and I became conscious of the fact that just as I would have had to labor and sacrifice to qualify myself for the profession I had chosen, so must I labor and sacrifice if I would succeed in the vocation whereunto God had called me. This is true, not only of myself, but of every other one who is called to this high and holy calling.

NO WORK FOR GOD IS TRIVIAL

Let no man in any order of the priesthood think the work required of him is of trivial importance. There is no office in the priesthood but presents a man-sized task, and if it is prosecuted properly will call forth all the best manly qualities of mind and soul and in the performance of the work you will be giving expression to the best that is in you, intellectually, morally, and spiritually.

If God has called you to do a local work, and you load yourself down with other duties and responsibilities, allowing the work of your own choosing to crowd out opportunity or desire for preparation for the God-appointed work, do you not thereby manifest a lack of faith or a want of love for the work? Do you not of your own will block the channels by which the divine blessings should come to crown your work?

Christ, above all others, has the right to counsel and advise. He says: "Seek first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, then shall all these things be added unto you." You, brethren, who are called to labor here in the land of Zion in this last and final day, am I placing too great a tax upon your faith, or your integrity, if I ask you to give your first and best thoughts and efforts to your God-appointed work, and trust him for that clearness of vision and business sense you will need in your own work?

The work of a pastor is, preeminently, a work of teaching, and it requires no argument to prove that he who would teach must know the subject he essays to teach. He should not only have the matter well learned but should know how to present it so that others might benefit by his knowledge.

The man who does pastoral work among the Saints should be thoroughly conversant with the spiritual ideals of the church. He should have a vision of the completed work, and should cause those to whom he ministers to visualize these ideals and to feel the necessity of realizing them.

This necessitates an intimate acquaintance with the people, he must visit them in their homes, see them at their work, observe the conditions under which they live, appreciate their difficulties and trials, catch their point of view and learn their mental processes. For all this God has wisely provided in the law.

VISITING EDUCATES THE VISITOR

Did you think official visiting was designed solely for the benefit of the people visited? Not so. God has designed this visitation as a part of the education of his pastoral workers, as a means of bringing them into direct contact with the flock over which they preside.

In this connection let me suggest, there is no formality needed as a part of official visitation. I have seen certain brethren who also pursued a fixed course, and unless they have gone through with a certain formality they would hesitate to report an official visit. To always call the house to order, to begin and close with prayer often places a formal constraint upon the persons visited, and you fail to do what the visit was intended to do, that is, get a definite idea of the real everyday lives of the families visited. My advice is, do a lot of praying before you go, and when you meet the people, greet them with a smile and hearty handshake, and put them just as much at ease as you can, then proceed to visit with them and learn what they are thinking about, what their ambitions are, and what their necessities. Be sure to locate something in which the church can be of service to them and talk that feature. Impress upon them wherein the church needs them, and wherein they need the church.

BUILDING THE TEMPLE

The church is represented in Holy Writ as a temple. Paul referred to himself as a "Master-builder," and to others as workmen. He counseled Timothy to study, that he might shew himself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. I may safely say that the work of that structure is still unfinished, and you and I have a part in the completing of it. We, too, must study and put into our work the best of our thought and our most earnest endeavor if we would not be ashamed.

Did you ever look upon some magnificent building, beautiful in design and construction, and think of how it existed once only in the mind of some architect and in rough unhewn stone? Workmen on the building knew how to take the idea of the architect and work it out in stone and we behold the result. So should we, as workmen on the "Holy Temple of the Lord" know how to take the idea of the divine Architect and work it out in the characters of the men and women, he has given us as material with which to build.

Let us not forget that the most effective way of teaching is by the example we set before the Saints. Paul advised Timothy thus: "Be an example to the believers in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity." When the Christ came to earth to be our great Teacher, he essayed to be just such a character as he taught us we should be, that his teaching might be made effective by his example.

The Lord, in Doctrine and Covenants 119: 3 admonishes us thus:

The elders and men of the church should be of cheerful heart and countenance among themselves and in their intercourse with their neighbors and men of the world, yet they must be without blame in word and deed. It is therefore not seemly that they indulge in loud or boisterous speech, or in the relating of coarse and vulgar stories, or those in which the names of their God and their Redeemer are blasphemed. Men of God, who bear the vessels of the Lord, be clean in your bodies and in your clothing; let your garments be of a sober character and free from excess of ornamentation. Avoid the use of tobacco and be not addicted to strong drink in any form, that your counsel to be temperate and be made effectual by your example."

LIVE UP TO OUR PRECEPTS

The doctrine of "Do as I say but don't do as I do," will never accomplish any desired results anywhere. If I am to admonish the Saints to observe their prayers in the season thereof, and to attend to all family duties, I must not, myself, be neglectful of prayer or remiss in the duties of my home. If I urge upon others the necessity of being present at the services, Sunday and midweek, I must not be absent myself for some trivial cause. If I teach others to be honorable in their dealings with men there must be no shadow on my own character as an honorable and upright man and if I teach the law of tithing to my brethren, I should have my own tithing paid; that in all these things my teaching should be made effective by my example.

ENFORCING THE LAW

But let us now pass to another phase of pastoral work, namely, the enforcing of the law. The Lord has placed upon the priesthood the responsibility of seeing that the law is kept, yet in my opinion we are liable to greater condemnation for failure along this line than any other.

The law is very plain and explicit and is, that he that sinneth and will not repent shall be cast out. We may deceive ourselves with the thought that we are showing mercy when we allow the wicked and unrepentant to retain membership in the church, sometimes to the hurt of the whole body. We would not think it mercy however to fail to place in quarantine a case of contagion that is likely to spread death and misery broadcast. We would look upon such a course as unwise. Would it not also be unwise to tolerate in our midst a case of moral leprosy that might cause the dejection and death of the entire organic body? I am making no plea for the application of harsh measures. To accuse me of so doing is to impute hardness to the law of God.

The carrying into effect of the law implies the doing of all within our power to reclaim the sinner from the error of his way, and when all our efforts in that direction have failed, he must be cast out. If fully applying the law results in a man's losing his membership in the church the trouble is either with the lawbreaker or the lawmaker. No man can attach fault to the person who makes the application.

It is the declared will of God that those who enjoy fellowship with the church should keep the law, and that his house should be a house of order.

I have heard this criticism upon the work of this church, that if iniquity were found by the officers it would be covered up. I want to say this right here, not half the harm will result to the work if we proceed against the offender boldly and in harmony with the law (and if he is guilty and will not repent, cast him out), as will follow if we try to keep the thing hidden from sight to save the good name of the church.

There is no society on earth where iniquity does not enter sometimes. We may not hope to keep so pure that no one will ever offend, but let it be known that offenders will be dealt with, that he that sinneth and will not repent shall be cast out; that only the pure can retain membership here.

But let me be understood. "He that sinneth and repenteth not." We can afford to be long-suffering and patient with those who repent. The law requires forbearance in such cases. Careful and painstaking labor should be done always to produce repentance.

Paul says, "If a man be overtaken in fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted.

INTROSPECTION

The first thing to be considered by the officer, when dealing with an offender, is himself. It is the work of one who is spiritual to restore the erring. If you are not spiritual don't undertake it. Become imbued with the spirit of the work and then proceed in meekness. You will need to be meek, for sometimes your well-meant efforts are mistaken for interference and you may be insulted and advised to mind your own business. Then you must be prepared to show the brother in kindness that in looking out for his spiritual interests you are minding your own business.

All labor with an offender should be done in love, and with a fervent desire to restore him to diligence in the work. Threatening should be avoided, and harsh words should never be indulged in. If it becomes necessary for charges to be preferred against a member, it should be a cause for deep regret on the part of the one preferring them. No action should be taken in anger.

If I find myself to be actuated by personal ill feeling in laboring with a brother, I should know that I need to be labored with myself and should pass the work on to some other brother who is spiritual, that it may be done according to the law.

But I may not excuse myself for not performing labor on the grounds that I am not spiritual. It is my duty to be spiritual. A certain brother once told me of a time when he hesitated to take upon himself the responsibilities of the priesthood. The words of prophecy through another to him were: "From this day you are responsible for the souls of men, and I will require them at your hand." This is true of every man who accepts an ordination to any office in the priesthood. He assumes responsibility for the souls of men, and God will require them at his hands. His lack of sufficient spirituality to proceed with the work will mean only greater condemnation to himself.

It may be that the offending brother or sister has gone so far in the dark way that I cannot reclaim him, or her, but I can only demonstrate that by doing my best, and only when my best efforts have failed am I free from responsibility, and then only inasmuch as I have honored the law.

Action against any person should be made with the sole purpose of honoring the law of God and of freeing the church from iniquity.

All officers in the branch are to a certain extent pastoral, and these general rules will apply to each. If followed I am sure we will get results.

First, know the work, Second, know the people. Love the work and desire its progress, give yourself unstintingly to it. Love the Saints and let them know that you are eager to help them in all their difficulties. Win their love and confidence and never betray them. Thus you will meet with immeasurable success and Zion will come out of the mists and become a tangible reality.

Some Pastoral Activity

The following letter has been received by the Presidency from Elder C. I. Carpenter, President of the Kewanee District. So many lines of activity are mentioned in his letter that it is deemed worthy a place in the HERALD. Possibly it will convey to other district presidents some ideas or suggestions upon which they may act with profit.

"On Sunday the 9th we began what has developed into a series of discourses on The duties of members, in the Moline Branch, which has seemingly created considerable interest among the members, the attendance being noticeably increased and the requests for continuance being worthy of consideration. We feel that under the circumstances it will be wise to follow it up until we have finished the subject according to a definite outline which we had worked out and are attempting to follow.

"We began the same subject in the Rock Island Branch, but have made no definite appointment for a continuance there, as we wish to go to Peoria as soon as we have concluded this effort here. In the meantime we are doing some much needed study, preparatory to a broader line of teaching, and following up some definite lines of correspondence work with the ordained men of the auxiliary departments.

"We are working out the details of a literature campaign among the members, and a campaign of education of the priesthood along the line of the detail of their specific as well as general duties.

"We are trying to prepare ourselves for more effectual labor by assembling the information to be had, preparatory to disseminating it as we go among the members."

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Reunion Afterglow

Surely it is recognized by all general officers of the auxiliaries of the church that reunion committees generally are responding to the demand for more educational work such as institute sessions, training classes, etc. Now and then we receive letters telling of the pleasure and satisfaction experienced by those carrying on such work. Two of these are found elsewhere in this column, no doubt, many others could write just as interestingly if they would but take the time.

I am happy, indeed, to give the following account, though brief, of the auxiliary work done at four different reunions which I attended. Perhaps if I had written immediately upon my return home I could have given a more enthusiastic report but this, having had a month or more to mature, can be taken as a "safe and sane" account of the work done at Matherville, Illinois, Madison and Chetek, Wisconsin, and Plano, Illinois.

My heart was full—of homesickness—when I arrived at the little mining town of Matherville after missing one inter-urban car, waiting all day for the next one (the power was off) and then no one at the station to meet me. Several times some one had come from the camp only to find that the "cars were not running." The reception given me on the grounds, however, made me feel at home and as though I had come to just the right place in this great big world. The reunion committee, of which Brother C. I. Carpenter and J. W. Bean were members, told me that we could have all the time we needed for our work. This offer was rather overwhelming considering some of our experiences of the previous summer!

However this is what was done: Each morning was spent with the children in singing, story-telling, and manual training. At the close of the reunion the exhibit showed clay models, crayon and cut-out pictures, sewing cards of all sizes and designs made by the younger ones; the Oriole girls made an entire quilt for the children's Home, outlining, with red thread, pictures drawn on small muslin squares; the boys exhibited fly swatters and bird houses made under the direction of Brother Okerlind who proved himself to be a real boy's man.

One day Brother Okerlind asked to have all the boys excused from the closing assembly of the school and they stole off mysteriously from the camp, not returning till the middle of the afternoon. How happy we girls were to see them come in camp finally carrying bundles of long sticks for the marshmallow roast planned for the evening!

In the afternoon the Woman's Auxiliary was given one and one half hours and we used it for the discussion of our work, holding four interesting sessions. It would be impossible for me to name those who were helpful in carrying on the children's meetings and the Auxiliary meetings, for everyone helped. I have never seen better cooperation or a more helpful spirit. The stories and experiences told by Brother and Sister Pitt, the prayer offered by Brother C. I. Carpenter and others, the kindly, encouraging spirit shown by uncle, J. W. Smith, and Brother J. W. Bean and wife, the interest manifested in the round table discussions, and the attendance of about fifty children daily, all contributed to the successful reunion in that little town of about three or four hundred.

At Madison, Wisconsin, I again missed connection with those who were to meet me but any disappointment I felt disappeared as I setpped into the meeting tent and Brethren W. L. Christy and C. B. Hartshorn smiled a greeting. Brother Muceus was speaking and during his discourse very kindly introduced me and told my reason for being there. This made me feel just one of the rest of them, helping to make the reunion a success.

We began our children's meeting on Monday morning and carried on much the same work as at Matherville, helped efficiently by Sister J. W. Peterson and Sister Ethel Williamson, who took charge of the work during the latter half of the reunion and prepared the exhibit for the last Sunday. The afternoons were given to auxiliary work and recreation. Brother Hartshorn, who was in charge of the auxiliary work, very kindly gave the Woman's Auxiliary most of the time for the first three days as I was leaving for Chetek the middle of the week.

The Auxiliary meetings were highly satisfactory, all the campers, men and women, attending and taking part in the round table. Brother Christy supervised the work of the young people and I wish to mention especially the young people's prayer meetings held on the bank of the lake at six o'clock in the morning. They were wonderfully helpful and spiritual.

In the afternoon and evening there were swimming games (and please, Sister Editor, tell the girls I learned, in beautiful Lake Monona, to float on my back. I had learned to swim in the Y. W. at home).

To ask a man to meet a stranger at four o'clock on a cold, bleak morning in northern Wisconsin and have him do it and still be called amiable is saying a great deal. Brother LeRoy Colbert met me at the station at Chetek on one of the darkest, dampest, chilliest mornings imaginable, and yet was able to smile!

Here again I met Brother and Sister Pitt and had their splendid assistance and helpful association. We organized the children and carried on story-telling, singing, and hand-work as before. During the two afternoon sessions given to us we used the Home and Child Welfare charts and the charts furnished by the National Child Welfare Association.

At Minneapolis on Sunday afternoon Brother Lundeen called a special meeting for two-thirty and we used one and one-half hours in talking Woman's Auxiliary work. The evening hour was given entirely to us and in these two meetings we sensed a keen interest in our work. Not the least was the interest shown by the men in our relief and service program.

Sister DeLapp entertained me most hospitably and I spent a few days with her family at the wonderful Minnesota Fair.

When I arrived at Plano the children were already organized and working under the direction of Sister Ethel Williamson with whom I had worked at Madison. A special tent had been provided with tables, organ, and chairs. Again I met Brother and Sister Pitt and Brother Christy, and each time they listened with kindly and sympathetic interest, and helped in the round table discussions.

Brother Wipper was an encouraging coworker in the institute work at Plano. He will verify my statement when I say that especially in our Relief and Service program and round table was the Spirit present to a marked degree. I cannot forget Brother Wipper's own statement as to the vision he had received of the work of the Woman's Auxiliary in this department of it. I leave it for him to tell you sometime in his own convincing way.

Another stop would have been made at Blue Rapids, Kansas, had a telegram been received in time. I was glad for the opportunity of meeting so many of the Saints, with some of whom I had corresponded, and to carry to them, personally, the inspiring message for service in assisting to redeem Zion which the Woman's Auxiliary has to give. It was a wonderful, happy time for me to meet with those away from the larger branches and witness the kindly spirit, love and consecration among them. From my experience this summer I must conclude that the Woman's Auxiliary has found a very definite place and that it is being welcomed in many, many places as a very necessary department of church work.

From the East—

Sister Lucie Sears, in a personal letter to Sister Gardner telling of the work at the Onset reunion makes the following interesting and inspiring comments.

"I was somewhat troubled because I could not connect with the people I wished to help me. The High Cost of Living kept many a seasoned reunionite away this year. I did not know just how I was coming out with the work, and after I went to bed at night I would spend a little time thinking it out—"How could I get the women interested?" and "Why were they not interested?" The thought came, "You were not interested until a short time ago, why?" and the answer was, "I did not understand it nor take the trouble to find out about it." "Exactly, and that is just the attitude of many other women. If you can get the work before them again this summer won't it be the very best thing to accomplish? There is no running before walking."

The Home and Child Welfare charts and outlines were of great assistance to me. I planned to use them as propaganda, and thus my work was based on that and one day's program paved the way for another, each fitting in most harmoniously with the other sessions of the reunion. Brother Baldwin said it was divinely planned, and I am willing to give the praise where it belongs for I know the Lord did assist our efforts and carried the message to the people accompanied by his Holy Spirit.

We had one meeting for women. Sister Jennie Studley gave a splendid talk to the mothers and some appropriate songs were sung by a young soloist. We talked a bit about what we had gained from the talks about the Woman's Auxiliary. (A complete program was given elsewhere in the letter and will be given careful consideration by the executive in presenting the work for reunions next year, no doubt. It is an excellent program.)

"I cannot tell what the results will be, but there was a fine spirit in all our meetings, and many whom I have longed to see active came out and said they would work, pledged themselves to seek opportunities for service and to keep trying until they found their niches to fill. I could not but notice how often the ministry referred to the topics discussed in our meetings in their talks which made it seem of more importance to some and helped to drive home the points we desired to make. Brother Edwin Miller in his sermon had our outline on the platform as we had used it in our talk. He called attention to the theme and the outline below and used it as his illustration. The need and the remedy at hand for greater care of the children was several times brought out in talk and testimony; the talk on Relief and the Round Table gave rise to "An evening with the bishops" at which such questions as we could not answer at our round table came up as well as other kindred subjects. This in turn made a splendid opening for the next topic about household management, which was well explained by a sister who has been working along that line. Her budget system was so reasonable and so well explained that it was helpful to many.

"Let me relate an experience that drew us all nearer together and was one of the many beautiful things which came to us at this reunion.

"Every one had started for the tabernacle but myself. For some reason I lingered in the cottage and decided that before going to the meeting I would again pray. As I knelt beside my cot the Spirit came to me with the gift of prophecy and bade me hold myself in readiness to deliver it when prompted. It was spoken to me distinctly and yet so quickly that when I arose I could not frame the thoughts into words but I knew that when the time came it would be given back. We had beautiful meetings for the next two days and the Spirit was there in power but I was not prompted to speak. The following day as soon as the meeting opened the Spirit said to me, The handmaidens to whom this word is addressed are all present and each will receive it as a personal message from God. Arise and do your duty.

"As I stood near the front on the side in a position to see all over the tent, I could almost see (although it was not seen but sensed) how the Spirit touched the various individuals. I saw twelve people who were thus touched, so I was not at all surprised that during the day twelve people should come to me and say, 'I recognized that part of the message which was meant for me.'

"And because of certain things contained therein that may encourage and comfort you and others who are laboring so hard to help the women of the church and because of the recognition of such labors by our heavenly Father I am sending with this a copy of the message that brought rejoicing to our young mothers and workers."

— To the West!

Dear Sister Gardner: . . . We all enjoyed the Home and Child Welfare charts very much and used them in our Denver local after using them at the reunion. So we tried to profit by the good work sent out and pass it around as much as we could.

We were wonderfully blessed in the efforts put forth in presenting the Relief and Service work. The time allotted was in one of the general meetings and we had the whole reunion present. I will send you the outline we used for this work, as you request, as soon as I return home. We are at present spending a little vacation up in Wyoming with Mr. Cowan's mother, who will soon celebrate her seventieth birthday.

My heart and soul is in the work and I have tried to do what I could in Denver, but have not done near all I planned to do. We have been in touch with some of the noblest charity workers of the city of Denver and have had them come to the church to explain their work. One morning our pastor arranged to give us the morning hour and we had one of the principal workers from the board of city charities. She told us all about their work and the systematic way in which they were working for better conditions.

We have also had a number of government workers who have given talks on Home and Child Welfare work, adequate foods, relief work and social purity work, in our Auxiliary meetings. Sister Cramer and I belong to an organization known as the "Woman's Cooperative Committee," composed mostly of club women, woman doctors, and government workers. We are trying to keep up with the times in various lines of relief work that we may be able to be of better service to our church. . . .

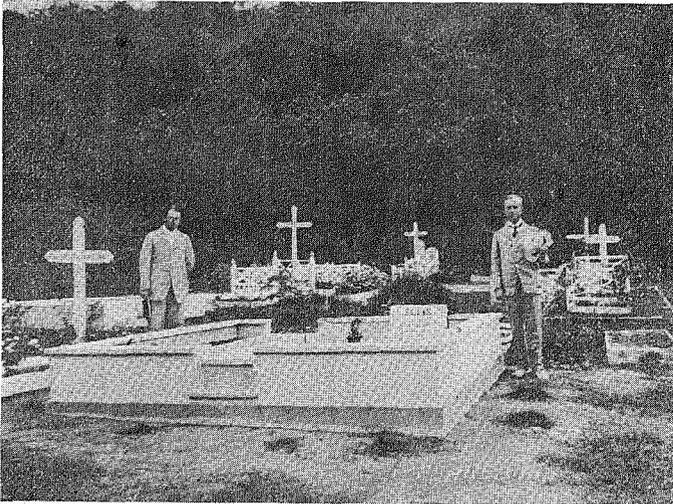

Sincerely,

ALICE M. COWAN.

Above all else this country needs a nation-wide revival of the old-fashioned prayer meeting religion, which will make every man and woman strive in every act of life to do that which on the great judgment day they will wish they had done.—R. H. Edmonds.

LETTER DEPARTMENT.

A Martyr in the Cause of Christ

The resting place of Sister Clyde F. Ellis, at Tahiti, Papeete. She died during the epidemic of influenza in 1918. On the left is Apostle John W. Rushton, and on the right Apostle Paul M. Hanson, both of whom recently visited the islands on their way to Australia.

Remarkable Evidences of God's Kindness

Wyoming and much of the plateau west has recently been swept with a very severe snowstorm, developing particularly for one day into an actual blizzard. Trains were delayed, stock suffered, mail deliveries stopped, and much inconvenience very naturally resulted and still results from such a deep snow at such an unexpected time. Some were and still are without a sufficient supply of coal, owing to the limitation placed on the amount of purchase, which in turn is owing to the decrease, suddenly, of the amount of supply caused either by the strike or the fear of the strike. And some—those out on the prairie at any rate—have an insufficient supply of coal owing to carelessness in many cases.

What a shower of letters greeted me when once again I was able to get in touch with travel and transportation! And what a miscellany as to subject matter and nature. Here is a portion of one from a sister now in the West whom I visited in Saskatchewan many years ago and who had all but faded away from the horizon of my recollection. Let her tell her pathetic story. Surely she has had her time. I blessed her child at the time I visited her of which she writes:

"He is a big boy now, fourteen years old this last October. I only resided in Canada a little over three years. I have two boys and one girl; they were all born in Canada. We left there to come to Iowa, my old home, when my girl, the last child, was three months old.

"When I left Canada I was practically an invalid, had drifted into that most critical condition of health till my life was despaired of by the best medical skill.

"We moved from Iowa to western Nebraska. At this time my health had become so bad that I had to give up house-keeping and stay with my husband's people who lived in these parts of Nebraska, and eventually by very energetic efforts on my part with the aid of a good home treatment I regained my health in some measure at the end of three years. This seemed almost miraculous—in fact was considered so by medical professors—owing to my tubercular trouble which reached a stage where it destroyed much lung tissue, leaving great cavities in my lungs. But this is an incident of the past and I can only look back over it all and see God's hand guiding me through the purifying furnace. Of course this is only one experience; others have followed with rich blessings always attending, while I am growing in grace and a knowledge of God.

"Two years ago I had the privilege of proving his unchangeability during a very severe siege of typhoid pneumonia fever. To explain: I have for the past ten years been isolated from all church privileges of our faith and have had to mingle with those of all denominations, so had to keep my light always burning brightly in order that its rays might reflect for a guide to others.

"So it was in such a community that I asked God to use me in any way he saw fit that I might convince those people that the God whom I served was unchangeable. I was so enthusiastic over their soul's interest that I was ready to lay down my life if need be. So this spell of fever came as a means to prove him.

"The first day my fever ran up to 105. I became unconscious about the twelfth hour and lay in that state for forty-eight hours, when I gained consciousness again. God gave me the witness of the Spirit that he was watching over me and not to fear, for this was a chance to prove my faith by my works.

"Of course the best medical aid was secured through the aid of my friends (my husband being in Colorado at the time). But I refused to take the medicine prescribed. This called forth indignation from my friends and more so from the doctor. And I persisted to the end in refusing medicine though they used every possible inducement to get me to take it. They called my husband home by telegram, even threatening to use the law to gain their point. They went so far as to threaten to withdraw their service in caring for me if I did not yield. I had to kindly tell them that such was their privilege, that I did not fear the outcome in any case. So they all deserted me—my Presbyterian friends, who were the people with whom I was laboring in church work at the time.

"But the doctor continued his daily visits, mostly to watch results, for I would not take his medicine. He predicted I could not possibly recover. I got so low they pronounced me dead at one time. My fever became so great that the hair of my head was burnt so it looked and smelled as though it had been seared with a hot iron. The suffering I endured could not be told in words, but His grace was sufficient. You know all our trials are attended with a blessing. So most of all I want to tell you of the blessing.

"The last three days, when my fever ran to over 110, I surely realized what the tortures of a burning furnace meant. Oh! such agonies! But I still trusted Him whom I had learned to know so well.

"It was during the last of March when it was very cold, so cold the attendants could not stay in the room where I was as all the windows and doors had to be open for me. It seemed every hour my fever grew worse, till I cried out in the anguish of my soul for deliverance in these words: 'O God, have I not suffered enough to convince these people? I can endure no more.'

"For a moment my agonies seemed to increase. 'Yes, God, I will trust you, though I die,' was my last appeal at the time, having my arms stretched upward in an appealing attitude. Instantly a hand grasped my hand, and that moment my fever left me. The scene and blessing I will not try to describe. It was satisfying enough for me and compensated for all the suffering I had endured up to that time and also what followed the next three weeks which was the worst of all, which I will not take time and space to relate.

"When my husband and the nurse came into the room again I was cold. "The nurse said, "she is dead." It was about a half an hour from the time of their former visit into the room, as I had requested them not to come in and bother me since they could do me no good. It was for God and me to settle it. I could not speak, nor move, but I realized all they said and did. I lay in that state for a while and then fell to sleep, the first I had had for eight days.

"The convincing evidence in this case will bear no small amount of fruit in its own due time, which I am fully assured of, but I am not leaving the field unworked. While I am living in other fields I am reminding many of them of this same truth by sending tracts and other literature of our faith. I am now living in another locality where I have to mingle with the churches of the world, as we truly have to consider them, for they are not of God. So I am endeavoring to keep the banner of the latter-day gospel in the foreground.

"My husband was killed shortly after I got over the siege of fever. He was killed in July two years ago. So I have been struggling alone, having no means left me of this world's goods, but somehow I have managed to get along and my health has been improving continually till I have now regained my former health which cannot be improved upon very much. So I now feel as though I can commence life over."

The sister's extraordinary experience brings back to my mind my own in Phoenix, Arizona, in 1908 when I went there to make an opening in that town in the fall of the year. Promptly after my arrival I took severely sick in my little furnished cottage which I had rented to occupy alone and board myself. I made my way in the nighttime with assistance to the Catholic hospital. I presently found myself in the hands of hooded charity sisters and everything went well till the old Mother Superior came around. And then because I was not prepared to pay in advance the cost of their hospitality she impetuously said: "Our terms are strictly sixteen dollars a week in advance and I shall call for the hack." And sure enough she called; the hack came, and sick as any dog ever was I had to pull out and seek other shelter. I entered the hack. The driver said, "Where do you want to go?" "I don't know," was my reply. After a few moments' meditation I decided to return to my own hired quarters, to my bed and room all alone by myself and depend wholly on God. And don't you know that as I went back there with that resolve unreservedly enacted in my mind, I began to recover, hop, step, and jump. Soon again I was on my feet and no thanks to the designing papists—save for a little calomel and part of a night's occupation of their unwelcome nest. It seems there is no limit to God's mercy when faithful sincerity throws itself wholly upon his dependence. But how seldom we do that. Medicine is all right in its place, but he who hath faith to see shall see, he who hath faith to leap shall leap. And he who hath not faith to receive these things hath power to become God's sons and to be saved in his kingdom.

Most sincerely yours,

ALVIN KNISLEY.

TORRINGTON, WYOMING.

It is little short of criminal, not only from the standpoint of the normal child, but also from the standpoint of the sub-normal child, to attempt to care for subnormal or feeble-minded children in a cottage of normal boys and girls.—Fred L. Mahannah.

Sentiments We Appreciate

In the HERALD of November 12 I read an invitation from the editors to the younger element of the church to send in contributions. I have long felt a desire to write some of my thoughts for the HERALD but have always held back from doing so, believing that what I would write would not be of enough worth to take up valuable space which could be used for better material. But the invitation from the editors—"Let us hear from the young," has given me the boldness to attempt it.

I am one of the young (28 years), called to the priesthood as a teacher a year ago, and before that time and since, I have tried and am still trying to qualify for not only acceptable but efficient service to the church. The more I study and learn of this "marvelous work" the bigger and grander it seems and I am made to realize that as Saints we do not appreciate the gospel as we should and the sole purpose for which I wrote this article is that it might create a train of thought in the minds of the Saints that will cause them to appreciate the gospel more. Why shouldn't we appreciate it when we understand its universality, its power, and purpose?

I long to see the church of God progress even more rapidly than it has and I believe that this progress cannot take place unless each individual member progresses and develops, nor can this individual development be obtained only by study and activity in the church work, and activity can only be effectual when we have our whole soul in the work. Half-hearted effort is little better than none at all.

These are my sentiments, and express the reason for writing that it might be that some of the young people, of whom I am one, may read and feel a desire in their heart to be of service to the Lord.

GIBBS, IDAHO, November 15, 1919.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a few lines from this part will be of interest to you and the readers of the HERALD, not regarding anything great that I have done or helped to do but relative to our Brother Augustine Dwyer. (It is with no little degree of pride that I call him our brother.)

Yes, Spokane has had this man in all her schools from the lowest to the highest, in our churches, halls, and homes, and Spokane has received him as she has no other lecturer or reader. And she had a right to.

Brother Dwyer captured the high school in an amazing way. I witnessed his presentation of Shakespeare's Julius Caesar before the faculty and eighteen hundred pupils of the North Central high school. The following day another ovation awaited Brother Dwyer at the Lewis Clark high school where before two thousand pupils he gave Shakespeare's tragedy Macbeth.

The Credit Men's Association, made up of the leading business men of Spokane, made Brother Dwyer their guest of honor at a noonday lunch. After the lunch, he delivered, according to engagement, his great lecture: "Thirty-one days in the Desert of Sahara." The lecture was given in a beautiful auditorium especially arranged for the occasion.

Mrs. M. E. Hayes, wife of ex-governor of Washington, received nearly one hundred in her home to hear Brother Dwyer read the three-act drama, "The silence of Dean Maitland," November the 11th. Each of the Spokane papers spoke highly of the affair.

Several of the churches engaged him and he brought to them record breaking houses.

In our own little chapel he spent much of his time. He lectured both to the church and the priesthood. Never shall we forget him! With all due respect to the ministry that has labored here, we feel free to say that he has done more to lift the stigma which has so cruelly been held over us, than any one else.

It is true that he is a lover of order especially in the house of worship, and we regret that in order to have it his kind requests were not heeded and it became necessary for him to insist. May his insisting be indelibly stamped on the minds of those who have been so careless in that respect, all of our ministry of Spokane is agreed.

His many friends of this place wish him a continuation of the manifest blessings of heaven. We would that he might remain with us, but we would not be selfish. We know that wherever he goes fortunate are the Saints, and to them we say with all our heart: receive him with the fullest confidence, that he is not only a man of God but a most diligent worker for the cause. Kind, humble, and full of love. Saints may well be advised to get him if they can!

We all feel encouraged and cheered and our hopes are renewed. We are thankful to God for men—real men.

Most sincerely yours, J. A. BRONSON.

BASEL, SWITZERLAND, November 14, 1919.

Editors Herald: I was so happy to be able to write Sister Kippe yesterday that the allowance of two past months will now soon reach her, for she wrote me that they had to pawn their furniture.

When I wrote her sometime ago that I felt sure that she would receive forty dollars per month in the future, which makes so much more for them, on account of the low value of German money, she wrote me such a happy letter with the exclamation right at the top: "Thank the Lord; now I shall be enabled to pay off our debts."

As for us, applying with earnest prayer to the central federal authorities in Berne, with a certificate of Brother Passman that he needed my husband, we obtained at least a temporary annulment of the expulsion decision of Basel's authorities.

A clergyman who studied theology with my husband, who is engaged in the "Basel's Mission House," is warning the people in his sermons and house visits to cast my dear husband out of the house when he comes to present them his leaves (translation of the Angel Message tracts). But he has written to him recently a letter full of assurances of love and sympathy for him as student friend, and on account of Brother Roos's ancestors, whose books have been such a great blessing to him, and that therefore he wants emphatically to insist that there is nothing personal in his antagonism, but that his objection is only to the doctrine promulgated.

My husband and I have written him long letters, to prove to him by the Bible that the reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the true church of Christ; the only one that is doing what Acts 3:21 and Revelation 14:6 asks to be done in the last days. But his last answer was: "Though I must acknowledge that your leaves (Angel Message Tracts) are mild and not harmful, indeed innocent, I must repeat that I deny energetically the necessity of angel's speaking to us, bringing brass plates, etc. We have the Bible and want nothing more."

I answered him that just this teaching had brought me, in my youth, to ask myself if the Bible was of any more worth than mythology, and that on my fervent prayers to conserve my childhood faith, the Lord in great mercy gave me an insight into the superior world, by visions and dreams, and told me things to come which came to pass. Then he led me into his church, so that now I can again happily read my Bible, and no more doubt a word in it.

I challenged him to prove to me that any other church in the world is preaching the fullness of the doctrines and will of Jesus Christ; the church has organizations, or is creating organizations which make it possible to fulfill every requirement of the everlasting gospel, as done by the first Christians.

To this he has not yet replied, and I am praying the Lord to convince him and give him his true church. Because that clergyman is really in earnest, a real Saul, and if the Lord turned him to become a Paul, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ would have won the continent. For the whole clergy seem out of their wits, since my husband alone has won in Basel about five thousand regular readers of the leaflets, by bringing every two months a part of the Angel's Message tracts. However they have probably literally assailed the police to put us out, for up to that time the police had been really charming.

So the authorities profited by the opportunity to expel everyone who had not a fixed position with a fixed income, and said that my dear husband belonged to that class and might one day fall to the charge of Switzerland, and so must go.

I determined to fast and pray four days, according to the word of Jesus that "there are spirits," (and I think especially spirits undermining the spreading of the fullness of the gospel, or of the everlasting gospel), who can only be overcome by fasting and by prayer, and was very happy that to-day, which is the fourth and last of these fast and prayer days (while my husband is in Berne contending before the central federal authorities), the appointment of my dear husband, by the Presidency, has come, with recommendations and assurances that the church is caring for our living. This probably will entirely annul the expulsion decision of Basel.

As for me, as my leaves have shown to you, I am the founder (1896) of the Bethany Prophylactic Society (with former pupils of my high school in Strassburg-Alsace), which is an international [interconfessional] society, which has attracted by its work, even in London, Rome, and Calcutta, thousands of souls, and has, especially here in Basel (as well as over Switzerland), proved to be a grand channel to introduce the only true church of Jesus Christ.

In all the twenty-two years of the existence of this society, never a member of it in any country has prescribed to me any work or any change in everything I have organized. So here in Basel no one objects to my teaching the children of the Rinderhort after school time, the translation of the Saints' Hymnal and Zion's Praises into French, practicing the tunes, and explaining to the women in my socials, Macgregor's A Marvelous Work and a Wonder, even bringing them to attest that the clergy here are wrong in all they say against the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ.

By the leaves of the society's work, and successful results in nursing, especially the grippe, we found thousands of readers; after which I retired from the sale of the leaves, letting my dear husband instead carry about the translations of the Angel's Message Tracts, for which he immediately secured five thousand readers.

The licentiate of theology of the University came full of enthusiasm for the grand social movement set forth, and since then my dear husband has had some very interesting interviews and correspondence with him. Thus the colonizing work of the society proves to be a channel, a great opportunity, to lead many toward the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. But I must cease. The children have come.

Yours truly in gospel bonds,

JULIA BOGGS.

CRESTON, IOWA, November 24, 1919.

Editors Herald: Sunday, November 16 will go down in the history of Creston, as one never to be forgotten by the Creston Saints. The organization of the branch was effected at this time, and the Lord's work established in this place.

We had with us Elders John Garver and Cyril Wight of the stake presidency and A. J. Yarrington of the stake bishopric. The day was enjoyed by all, both physically and spiritually. Brethren Garver, Wight, and Yarrington presided at the organization, at which time two ordinations took place, Brother Millard Hogan to the office of priest and Brother Charles T. Engle, deacon.

A beautiful tribute was paid to the few faithful Saints by Brother J. Garver, for their zeal and integrity as a little band of Saints to hold up the work for so many years, until others were added to their number, and the organization of a branch was possible.

Elder George B. Hall who has so faithfully devoted himself to the work in this place was recommended and unanimously elected as branch president. Sister Stella Franklin was unanimously elected branch clerk.

Creston offers many opportunities to the Saints desiring to locate within the stakes. Good employment, good schools, beautiful surroundings, and a wonderful opportunity for those desiring to work along spiritual lines.

With a good leader and the cooperation of our faithful little band of Saints, we intend to accomplish much good in this place. C. F. ENGLE, Correspondent.

[The following letter is from Bishop A. Carmichael to President Smith.]

LAMONI, IOWA, November 19, 1919.

We are pleased to inform you that we have reached home and hope that we are again on the job. Mrs. Carmichael stood the trip as well as could be expected under the circumstances. We are optimistic in the thought that she will continue to recover, thus liberating us more fully for the work we take such a delight in doing. There is nothing in the wide world like it, Brother Smith, to be a real coworker with the Master, and as the days come and go, our constant prayer is that we may be more and more worthy of being engaged with him in this wonderful work.

We have come back to our work, we cannot say with a broader view, but we can say with a more consecrated one. We believe that in the years past we have sensed the extent, somewhat, of the height and width and depth of this work, but we have also felt that our vision was finite, hence our viewpoint limited and especially our spirit of consecration was not as deep as it should be. We still feel this, but the Master knows that we are trying to place ourselves in a position wherein he can use us to the very best possible advantage to the cause.

From our travels among the Saints we have had one idea forced upon us and that is the great necessity of preparing not only a people but a place where the Saints could gather. It is almost pitiful to listen to the longings and hopes of the Saints expressed in their desires with reference to Zion. We have come back with renewed determination to place every ounce of our energy as well as what little talent we have on the altar to help prepare a place for these honest souls who are longing for a place of refuge.

Right here, allow us to compliment you on your articles in the church papers. They have the true ring to them, so far as we can discern. You may rest assured, Brother Smith, that the thing the Saints are interested in, is Zion, including the gathering, etc. Your articles were timely and if we are any judge of this matter a continuance of such articles from your pen will do a wonderful lot of good. Our experience in Southern California has been, in some respects, unusual. While we have been hampered in our spiritual work with domestic affairs, we have had a wonderful endowment of the Spirit in what little we did do.

We are very much in hopes that Mrs. Carmichael's health will rapidly improve so that we can get out among our people. Never before have we had such a great desire to teach the people the law. It is useless for us to take your time with statements verifying the fact that the thinking men of the world are giving us a close race in many of the views that we have thought were essential for the progress of the race. From your vantage ground you can note these better than we can tell you, but in passing, we wish to say that we thank God that he is inspiring men to help us educate the human family to the standard desired to bring to pass Zion's conditions.

We are still optimistic, thoroughly imbued with the thought that there is nothing for us to fear that the slogan, "go forward," is the only one worth listening to.

May the Master who controls the destiny of all be with you and yours. In bonds,

A. CARMICHAEL.

[From a letter to the Presidency by E. B. Hull, dated at Attleboro, Massachusetts, November 17, 1919.]

Last Saturday and Sunday the district Sunday school and Religio convention was held in Boston. Twenty-eight of our members attended. One of our number is the editor of the district paper, called The Gleaner, which was read Sunday. Peter Whalley, one of our Attleboro boys that was in the war four and a half years, delivered a lecture in the Boston church on Saturday night, from the subject, "A Latter Day Saint at the front." He certainly has had a wonderful experience, meeting men and ministers while in the British service, talking our work to them, in fact holding debates with chaplains while on the front, when an opportunity would present itself. Many times the wounded boys would send for Corporal Whalley rather than their chaplain. Brother Whalley has been in demand by various organizations, to hear of his experience while on the Macedonian front. He has lectured in our churches in Attleboro and Boston, also in the Universalist church and other places in this city.

Our convention was of a high order, the Lord being with us in all our meetings, especially in the prayer service. A large number of members and friends from the various branches were in attendance.

We are doing very nicely here in this city, had a remarkable case of healing here a couple of weeks ago. A sister was stricken with appendicitis; the doctor ordered her to the hospital, but she refused to go, instead, she sent for Brother Richard Bullard and myself and the next day she was so much better that the doctor did not urge her to go to the hospital; in a week's time she was able to be about her business again. The Lord is working by his Spirit with the Saints and friends in this place and we hope for greater things in the future than we have been able to do in the past.

[The following extract is taken from a letter to the Presidency written by Bishop Richard Bullard, Winter Hill, Massachusetts, November 17, 1919.]

I wish you could have been with the young people's convention, which convened here [Boston] Saturday and Sunday last. The spirit of light, joy, and intellectuality, was sure y with us in power. It was a feast which must have a lasting effect for good on all whose hearts are tender to the divine touch of the true spirit of this majestic work. A young man, stranger to us, arose and said he came out of curiosity, but never before had he experienced such a spirit that could thus move strong men to tears, and have such an influence upon one as it had affected him; he heard the voice of the Good Shepherd, and will come into the fold, I feel assured.

The work in this district has taken upon it new life, and the men you have sent here fit in exactly to the needs of the hour.

[From a letter addressed to the Presidency by Elder T. U. Thomas, Youngtown, Ohio, under date of November 18, 1919.]

The church work holds its own here thus far and everything moving along very nice according to our understanding.

This week this city is visited by Mrs. Lulu Loveland Shepherd from Salt Lake City who speaks in opposition to the polygamous doctrine of that church and exposes their evils in that city and valley.

The lady made a distinction between our church and the Utah church and said in addition we were opposed to polygamy; this was done after the writer had made a visit to her previous to the lecture and made the request. The audience were dumfounded to learn that we had no affiliation with the Utah church; of course we were delighted for them to know the truth.

[Extract from a letter by Patriarch Ammon White, addressed to the Presidency, under date of November 16.]

The recent articles of the trip of President F. M. Smith in the East, carried with it the spirit of devotion to the interests of the people.

Everywhere the best people of the church are praying that wisdom and strength shall be the heritage of the leading men of the church.

May the obstacles that infest the path be removed that your usefulness may be extended.

Brother Benjamin Pearson reports that the recent Southern Missouri conference was poorly attended, largely on account of heavy rains. Five branches reported, five elders and one priest. Most of the important business was carried over till next conference at Thayer, in February, date to be set by district officers.

FROM HERE AND THERE

One of our progressive district presidents is working on a literature survey of each branch in the district, with the object of placing the church literature in every home. Incidentally he is sending out catalogues and explaining what is to be had of special value to various individuals in the branches.

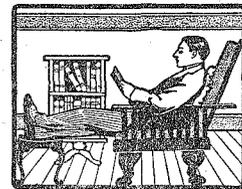

The Tri-Cities had a union service on Thanksgiving at Rock Island, Illinois.

PERRY, IOWA, BRANCH

"We have a splendid deacon in the person of Brother E. C. Kibby who is treasurer for the entire branch, paying out of one common fund the expenses of each department of church work, thus not only supplanting the office of treasurer in Religion, Sunday school, Woman's Auxiliary, etc., but also eliminating all collections, except Christmas and birthday offerings. The deacon brings in a budget estimate once a year, each member paying his share takes care of the expense. If any of the members are not just clear as to the amount they should pay, a little talk with the deacon makes it all right. How is that for coordination? This method has been in operation for one year and has been very satisfactory.

The district organizer of the Woman's Auxiliary, Sister D. A. Emslie of Des Moines, recently met with the Perry local, giving instruction, encouragement and strengthening the sisters in a marked way. The functioning of district officers means progress.

"Thanksgiving day was fittingly observed. The Saints met at the church for worship at 9 a. m.; the meeting was well attended and given largely to testimonies, which were edifying to those present."

Burlington, Iowa, Branch reports visits recently by J. A. Gillen and C. E. Willey with forceful sermons from each. On November 9 Model Sunday, or Rally Day, was observed, in the interests of the branch and the departments, with excellent program features. The organized men's class, the United Workers, have purchased a small printing press and made their debut with a printed program for the day. Henry Broman and Bertha Green, of Ottumwa, were recently married. The Thanksgiving service was a pleasing one, with two papers read, one of which was commended in a spiritual manifestation in the prayer meeting.

Elder George H. Wixom, president of the Southern California District, reports a joint meeting of the priesthood at Santa Ana on November 9, at which Bishop Carmichael was present, and the situation in Southern California discussed. Elder Wixom then proceeded to Ceres, California, where he preached twice on the 9th, and continued on the 10th at Turlock. Some drove twenty miles to attend the services, so the attendance was good. On the 16th Elder Wixom was in Los Angeles, where he preached in the morning, and met with some Baptists for two hours in the afternoon to explain our work, then with the Eighth Quorum of Priests, and finally spoke that evening at Santa Ana.

Elder S. W. L. Scott has just completed a series of sermons on Bible prophecy and church history at Battle Creek, Michigan. He discussed the great conflict, Russia, Israel, and the Lord's work in these latter days. He expects to return there after Thanksgiving.

The Second Saint Joseph, Missouri Branch had a roll call Thanksgiving evening, each member responding to his name and giving proper address and addresses of any others not present, followed by a statement of what they were thankful for. We presume the mailing list thus secured will be used to good purpose. Three persons handed in their names for baptism. Considerable local interest is manifested in the Christmas offering. A box social netted $44.15, and the men folk talk of putting on one at which their boxes will be sold to the sisters. E. F. Robertson and V. M. Goodrich have been speakers of late.

The Lamoni Electric Company has been fortunate in securing coal sufficient to keep going, though on a somewhat limited schedule, so the Herald Publishing House has been able to continue its usual work and hopes to for some time to come. A local fuel administrator has been appointed, to care for all orders for coal and wood. It is expected a municipal woodpile will be established. A car of coal was recently received for the Saints' and Children's Homes at this place.

A series of gospel sermons is being preached from the Lamoni pulpit on Sunday evenings. J. F. Garver, pastor, has been delivering a series especially for the Saints at the morning services. The Sunday school attendance has been especially large of late, averaging around 600. The attendance at the junior meetings, for children, reached a total of 180 on the 24th.

Brother A. Howard of Richton, Mississippi, desires that some of the missionaries visit his community and preach to the people there. He thinks the interest would be good in that community.

A letter from Marlette, Michigan, by J. D. Westover, says the branch there is progressing. They expect Brother William Fligg to hold a series of meetings there this winter, but the churches are closed just now on account of diphtheria. Brother G. M. Shippy will be interested knowing the writer of this letter was ordained a priest lately.

Brother C. I. Carpenter has located with his family in the Kewanee District, residing at 2760 Eleventh Avenue, Moline, Illinois. They like the people and find a vast amount of work to be done.

The First Presidency is in receipt of the following letter from Elder G. R. Kuykendall, who is attending the Palmer School of Chiropractic at Davenport, Iowa:

"Just a few lines to let you know we are still alive and find some time for church work. Yesterday I preached in Rock Island, Illinois, church. Sunday before last I preached morning and night in Clinton, Iowa, church, also have been occupying here in Davenport and Moline, Illinois. Other places here in Iowa and also Illinois I am to get to soon. With my church work and serving as one of the presidency of the large freshman class of about six hundred, also as chairman of their committee on or for entertainment, also as president of the student body organization here from Texas, and my studies and other minor things, I am a little busy part of the time. . . .

"Had a good, large, appreciative congregation at Rock Island last night, they seem to be growing quite fast."

Moorehead, Iowa.—In the early fall Joseph Lane of Pisgah, and Joseph Seddon, of Woodbine held a series of meetings here, well supported by the local officers. Four Sunday school girls were baptized. The usual regular services are held, all fairly well attended considering the scattered condition of the members. The Thanksgiving service was followed by a basket dinner at the church.

South Boardman, Michigan: The branch here, once a flourishing organization, has dwindled of late because of lack of employment for the Saints. Regular meetings are held, with Religio and Sunshine Band working together on 4 p. m. Sundays. Prayer meetings are held at the homes during the winter.

Prayers are requested for Lawrence, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Maclelland, who was discharged from army service last summer.

A long letter from Sister Queenie Swann, of Birmingham, England, says they long for Zion and Zion privileges where their children might grow up under more favorable circumstances. She relates that the Lord has answered her prayers in many ways. The organization of a Woman's Auxiliary is noted and credit given for excellent leadership in the branch. The reunion in August is still fresh in mind as a very enjoyable occasion.

Stewartsville Branch is in the Far West Stake, about twenty miles east of Saint Joseph, Missouri, and numbers about two hundred. Three other branches are near, the four being within a radius of about five miles. The people are mostly agricultural, and of the busy, energetic type. Recently Bishop E. L. Kelley held a series of meetings, which were well attended and received. He preserves his old-time geniality and likability. The Sunday school class of W. H. Worden was recently by request given the entire Sunday, which they occupied as "Old boys' day." A pleasing program was rendered, including singing by the class of about fifteen. A. W. Head, senior member of the class (being in his eighty-sixth year) spoke in the evening, T. T. Hinderks in the morning. Carl Kennedy and Sister Edith Anderson were recently married. The Sunday school has raised three dollars a member as Christmas offering.

Sioux City.—The Woman's Auxiliary of the Sioux City, Iowa Branch served dinner Thanksgiving Day in the dining room of the chapel. A short program was given by the Religio Department in the afternoon. The coordinating committee hopes to have a series of such entertainments during the winter months. We are pleased to see the rapid advancement our orchestra is making under the able leadership of Glen Baker.

Indianapolis.—The three department building, one department of which is occupied by the Indianapolis Branch, caught fire from an inferior flue, burning two district tents which were kept in a small storage room. Other than this our room was not damaged. The rooms occupied by the kindergarten and the Northwestern Baptist Association, were damaged considerably by fire and water. We regret that we will not be able to use our room until Sunday, December 7, as the owner is having some excavating done and will build a new flue and install a furnace for each room. We are expecting to have a much nicer room when it is finished.

Brother J. E. Vanderwood writes from Elida, New Mexico, that after some difficulty in securing the use of a building for services in that place, he obtained the use of an empty store building and is having good results. At present he is being cared for by nonmembers and has sold a Book of Mormon.

The Lamoni Branch is putting in an extra furnace in the east end of the basement, to heat the toilets and better equalize the heating problem. It will be a decided improvement.

Fargo, North Dakota, has recently had an influx of members from Montana and the western part of the State, where the drouth has affected them seriously. Several baptisms and others announced. Spiritual prayer meetings are especially mentioned, with the gifts manifested in power. The Saints are endeavoring to provide for the social needs of the young, so the attractions of the world will lose their lure. The Religio is flourishing, and normal work made a feature.

Nowata, Oklahoma, numbers about 100 members, with room for more. A. C. Silvers, of Nevada, Missouri, is there, having returned home for Thanksgiving. They appreciated the district conference, and announced that the next one is to be at Pittsburg, Kansas, February 14 and 15.

Cope, Colorado, is a new place, holding meetings about nine miles out, in the Hobbs schoolhouse. Through the efforts of J. C. May and James Thomas, prejudice has been broken down and interest established. Brother Thomas was ordained an elder while there, F. T. Imlay a priest, and two baptized. They invite those passing through to call. Address F. T. Imlay, at Cope.

Central Chicago, at Sixty-sixth and Honore Streets, has been having excellent prayer meetings of late, especially the Thanksgiving service. Prophecies were given through the Spirit, and some calls to the ministry indicated. U. W. Greene and Peter Anderson have recently visited the branch. By buying certain groceries at wholesale and selling them to the Saints at retail prices, one of the Sunday school classes not only had a good time but realized $22.55 for the Christmas offering. Another phase of cooperation is the securing of an agency for a "factory to family" supply of hosiery and underwear. The branch is flourishing, and the Saints happy.

Ruby Caldwell, of Paris, Tennessee, wants the names and addresses of all interested in Sunday school home class work, so she can present the advantages of keeping in touch with the work through this department of the work.

Sherrill, New York, a branch of seven families recently completed a $3,500 house of worship and expect to make their branch a real factor in the community. Joseph Luff was the speaker at the opening, and addressed about 120 persons. Not satisfied with that, he helped during the days of his ten-day stay on the cement floor of the basement. This and his work in general was greatly appreciated. He and George W. Robley are now doing missionary work in Buffalo. James Bishop and G. F. Robley have been working at East Pharsalia. It is planned to organize a Sunday school at East Syracuse.

Clinton, Iowa, holds regular meetings, including priesthood. A committee of the priesthood is appointed to solicit funds for the excavation of a new basement under the church, about $200 already raised. Immediately after the holidays a series of cottage preaching services will begin, a number having requested them. Sunday school and Religio flourishing under the coordination plan, harmonious action due to this method is greatly appreciated.

Lamoni Branch. In conformity with the resolution adopted by the Sunday school, the branch presidency nominated A. M. Carmichael as superintendent of the school for the coming year. G. W. Blair has served about twelve years and desired release. J. A. Gillen was in town during the past week, lecturing at Graceland to the class in religious education on "Principles of the gospel." He addressed the priesthood on Sunday and preached at night. During the sacrament service James R. Houghton, a college student from Davenport, Iowa, was ordained a priest, as per action of his home district. During the coal famine the Religio has been changed to Sunday evening, 6.30, and the entire time on the evening of the 7th was occupied in a debate by six Graceland lads on "Resolved, that the Cummins Bill of railroad administration should be adopted." The affirmative was given a 3-0 decision by the judges. Ziegenhorn, Needham, and Almond affirmed; Scarecliff, Houghton, and Roberts denied. To carry out provisions of fuel administrators, church services are to be curtailed to one heating on Sunday, and college classes begin work an hour later and close an hour earlier each day. Stores are open from ten to four.

Sincere gratitude is expressed by Sister Mary Hartshorn, of Senlac, Saskatchewan, for the article on church decorum recently appearing in these columns from the pen of Augustine Dwyer. She feels that is a sad spectacle when the deacon or other officer must shout to secure order from an assemblage in God's house.

Mrs. Ellen Horr writes from Thunder Hawk, South Dakota, that they have a Sunday school composed of four Latter Day Saints and some belonging to other denominations. They miss the privilege of church associations.

Elder E. E. Long announced a series of sermons, at Fairfield, Nebraska, beginning November 30, on "What is the matter with the world?" He treats such subjects as the "Battle of Armageddon," "The time of the end," "What prophets say about the I. W. W.'s," "God's plan and man's way."

The Philadelphia North American for November 17 mentions at some length Albert N. Hoxie's work of democracy through liberty singing, which evidently is the result of an interview. The program this winter are combinations of special solo and other vocal numbers, and orchestra music, and sandwiched in between is singing by the whole audience.

"On coming to Independence one cannot but be impressed by the many opportunities for study, and the large number of classes for study. The fine library and reading room is used by many, and is an ideal place to spend a quiet hour. The Religio is also a source of interest, the attendance being large and the programs interesting. A large number of Boy Scouts attend, and will make up the warriors in the army of the Lord."—Mrs. Helen McKenzie.

Any Saints near Mandan, North Dakota, are asked to write to or see Brother and Sister G. W. D. Twyman, of that place, employed at the industrial school.

Bedison Branch, in the Far West Stake (at Conception Junction, Missouri) is reported as in a condition of commendable unity, though finding some discouragement in the small number of Saints. Preaching is done by local brethren, with prayer meetings in private homes.

Hiteman Branch, made up of coal miners and in the Lamoni Stake reports considerable anxiety among the Saints because of being out of work since November 1, but hoping for a better turn of affairs. They have about two hundred members, and are operating under the coordination system and find it a success. The various heads of departments meet regularly to exchange views, and find it very profitable. To make Sunday evening meetings attractive, posters are used to announce subjects and other interesting features, and the choir is helping commendably. Religio, Sunday school, and Sunday services well attended.

Soldiers Grove, Wisconsin announces some of the ladies' aid society recently raised fifty dollars to apply on a new church in the spring. In spite of typical winter weather, recent meetings are well attended.

Meetings of the editors of the HERALD and Ensign and the Board of Publication were held in Independence on the 4th and 5th. A number of matters concerning a closer unification of editorial and managerial problems were discussed, and some decisions arrived at which will be announced later.

The need of the hour is not more legislation. The need of the hour is more religion. More religion is needed everywhere.—Roger W. Babson.

"Every man knows the difference between falling for a thing and tumbling for it."

NEWS AND COMMENT

The printing strike in New York apparently ended about Thanksgiving Day, with a wage loss of about three and one-half million dollars. It is expected that normal conditions will have been achieved even before this appears.

The Labor Party, recently organized in Chicago, expects to present a nomination for President of the United States next summer.

One pound of sugar per person per month it is stated will be the ration allowed in New York until February.

The British Government expects to introduce the temperance bill before the close of the year. This is not prohibition, but will probably be a bill for control.

Great Britain is already laying its plans for developing Palestine in a manner similar to that pursued in Egypt; that is, by financing government works of benefit to agriculture. They have also provided for the establishment of a bank there which will permit of loans being secured at a low rate of interest in order to develop agriculture. When one considers also the financial standing of the Jews in Western Europe and America, there is no longer fear of lack of funds for the development of that task.

There is a movement on foot to have the suffrage amendment ratified by the States on or before February 15, 1920, as that is the centenary of Susan B. Anthony, in whose honor the federal amendment has been named. Already 21 of the 36 necessary have ratified, and only one has refused to ratify. It will take quick action, however, to insure ratification by a sufficient number within the next two months.

One outcome of the experimental flight of army aeroplanes across the continent, will probably be the early establishment of an ocean-to-ocean air post. The air mail service between New York City and Chicago has proven a success and will probably be extended to the inter-mountain regions and on to the Pacific Coast. This will be a great improvement over the pony express between the Mississippi River and the coast, which was the means of communication in the memory of men still living.

The International Labor Conference in session at Washington reports some exceptions to the 48-hour week, in countries having a number of new industries just being developed.

W. G. McAdoo, formerly secretary of the treasurer, states that many of the soft coal mines made a very high profit during the past two years, 1917 and 1918. The profit was as high as 900 per cent in some cases.

Lynn J. Frazier governor of North Dakota reported that public ownership is a success in North Dakota, and that probably 80 per cent of the citizens favor public ownership of elevators, mills, and banks. This is for the purpose of eliminating freight charges both ways, as well as the speculative profit, and save money for the farmer.

THE INSPIRED TRANSLATION

Saints should appreciate the exceptional privilege of using this wonderful book which the Lord has so graciously given the church in the latter days.

Many plain teachings in the usual translations have been omitted or perverted but by the power of God's Holy Spirit they have been restored and corrected till we need no longer grope in darkness. No Latter Day Saint library is complete without a copy of the Inspired Translation.

NO BOOK LIKE THE BOOK OF MORMON

Throughout the world the reputation of the Book of Mormon has gone, yet its work has only begun. In the hands of a righteous people, who know its contents and abide by its precepts, the record of God's people will convince the Jews that Jesus is the Christ.

Own more than one copy. See that others as well as yourself know the pure message of these ancient people to us. Put copies in the local libraries; discuss the book with your neighbors.

ORPHANS' HOME

of chickens, the entire proceeds of which go to the child owner.

The whole discussion of the problem of state institutions, which also applies to church owned institutions, emphasized the fact that the farm should have such a system of accountancy as to show what it is costing and what it is producing, and that this can be effectively done by charging off the portion of time of all employees who work on the farm or in any other department.

But, while it is true it may take from two to ten inmates to perform the work of one man, and while it may even require a greater expense to secure the work done by the inmates than it would to do the work directly, still that is not the best policy. The primary consideration of every institution is the good of its inmates. It is better for the mentally deficient and helps to their cure to give them outdoor work. It is not well simply to give them play. They should have purposeful work to do. Even though the hope of recovery is not good, even though they do not recover, it tends to make their life happier and to produce better health. It is true also of delinquent boys and girls, and of feeble-minded boys and girls. It is true in the state penitentiary.

But nowhere is it more important than in an orphans' home. These are presumably normal boys and girls, with splendid prospects, in fact the certainty, that at sixteen years of age they will be turned over to society. The work of preparation is vital.

Manual training is excellent and should be secured. Playgrounds are a splendid thing, and play apparatus should be secured and maintained; school work should also be provided. But none of these can take the place of purposeful work; none can take the place of the advantage of responsibility and personal property.

What is true of the farm is true of the garden, is true of the kitchen, is true of every part of the institution.

Efficient business management there should be, but the question of profit or gain financially is secondary to the proper development and care of the children.

NEW YEAR'S COURSE IN RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

The work being done at Graceland College by the group of young men and women preparing for foreign missionary work holds so much promise for the good of the church and its work, that it appears wise to issue a call for another class to enter Graceland College next fall. That class will be enlarged to the number of forty at least. The preparation will be not alone for foreign service, but for domestic as well; mayhaps not over a third for foreign service, the ratio to be determined after the applications are in showing the material available for the next course. The preparation will require at least a year of intensive study along special lines. The great demand for qualified workers requires speeding up in preparation. This course of preparation carried on in Graceland will include:

1. A thorough study of the doctrine and beliefs of the church and methods of presenting them.
2. The language, history, geography, customs, etc., of the foreign country to which the missionary is to be sent, or courses in American political history, political science, economics, or sociology, for those expecting to do local work, with particular reference to the problems of Zion.
3. Certain academic studies to meet the needs of individual students.
4. Elementary sanitation, hygiene, first aid, simple nursing, etc.
5. Other incidental subjects closely related to the work to be accomplished.

The selection of the young people to make this preparation is highly important. The qualifications of those selected must be such as to assure the highest degree of success possible. These will include:

1. Consecration and call to the work of the church and intense interest in the welfare of the church and the prosecution of its work.
2. The necessary education and general intelligence; a high school education or its equivalent. Successful church and missionary work is in most cases the best equivalent. Systematic reading courses and travel experiences function as developers of intelligence.

3. Not over thirty years of age, with general good health and physical fitness.

As above indicated, the number is limited, and those desiring to enter the course should apply at once by writing to the President of Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa. From those applying, selections will be made by the general church authorities for admission to the courses.

Since the establishment of this course, many of the conference appointees and church workers have spoken to me about young people qualified for the course. Such should write to President George N. Briggs of the college, or to the undersigned, so application blanks can be forwarded.

This work of preparation for church service is highly important, and all interested in the progress of the church work should assist in securing a group of workers in the course whose qualifications are exceptionally good. All who are engaged in the work of this present class deeply feel the responsibility and importance of the work, and are earnestly working to meet the divine approbation, and the standard for next year's class must be raised rather than lowered.

May God bless our efforts.

It Is Written

"... those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them forever..."

For this reason the Bishopric advocate for 1919

EVERY MEMBER A TITHE PAYER

A plan has been approved by the municipality of Jerusalem and "Advanced G. H. Q." with General Allenby's signature affixed, to extend the boundaries of the city and provide better quarters for its inhabitants as well as allow normal growth. The present symmetry of the city will be interfered with as little as possible. The valley of Kedron, the Garden of Gethsemane and the Mount of Olives on the east are to remain clear of buildings except those which will be characteristic of the area. On the north and west sides is a wide area free for the erection of buildings. It is intended to reserve a certain area around the walls free from buildings.

President Wilson in his message to Congress recommended again a law requiring that all merchandise and interstate commerce be plainly marked with price paid the producer. This should tend to prevent unconscionable profits.

THE NEED TO ORGANIZE

Since Capital Is Strongly Organized, Labor Must Be

The reason for the existence of labor unions, and the right of the workingman to organize are hardly matters for argument at this late day. Organization comes from force of necessity. It has the cold logic of self-preservation back of it.

Capital has always been organized to a greater or lesser extent. And of late years its organization has become very complete, as well as complex and powerful. Capital being without individuality, is of course without conscience or pity or justice. Individual capitalists may have these graces and characteristics; but not to such an extent that many of them are in danger of immediate translation.

Capital has only one purpose: to get dividends. Labor is something to be translated into profits. The life and well being of the laborer are of little concern to capital, excepting to the point that he shall be able to do his work and reproduce his kind to take his place at the machine—unless cheaper labor can be imported from abroad.

In the face of this situation, the laborer must look to his own interests, if they are to be guarded at all. Individually he is powerless. As John Mitchell used to point out so concisely, if the individual worker goes to his employer and says, "I cannot live on my present wage and I cannot endure so many hours of work in my occupation," the employer cheerfully replies, "Well, then, quit! There are a hundred men ready to take your place." But if all the men in an industry go to the managers with such a statement, they command respect. Hence, organization. Hence, collective bargaining. Hence, the use of the strike as a weapon.

Labor is compelled to organize, and the individual laborer is almost compelled to enter the union if he would live. If he stays out he must fight both organized capital and organized labor.

But here is the dilemma that confronts some of our men. They recognize that labor has its just grievances. They recognize, perhaps, also, that employers have their just grievances. But they observe that both resort to many methods that are questionable, if not reprehensible. In most every strike, violence and crime are resorted to by both sides to the struggle.

So the individual laborer finds himself in an organization whose existence is justified by the cold logic of necessity. But with some of the aims of that organization he is not in sympathy. And with many of its methods he is even more out of sympathy. In the event of a strike he must walk out willy nilly when the votes fall that way. A switchmen's strike was called in Kansas City a few weeks ago. Six men were interrogated as they walked out and not one could give the reason. One replied, "H—, don't ask me. I came to work this morning and the boys said we were to go out at four. Here we are." (The next day the vote was reconsidered and they went back.) And when the strike is on, the individual worker may find himself either an active or a passive supporter of violence, lawlessness, even murder or rebellion.

So it becomes more increasingly apparent that the Lord foreknew our times when so many years ago he said that we must needs organize ourselves as Saints and become independent above all other people. That seems to be the only escape for individual Saints who are laborers and who recognize the need of organization and cooperation but do not feel that they can identify themselves with the methods of warfare that evidently will become more and more prevalent as the struggle between capital and labor becomes more and more virulent.

Certainly we need the Lord's help, and divine wisdom to accomplish such a work. And above all we must divest ourselves of the spirit so prevalent in the world that defeats the best meant efforts of almost every worldly organization.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

JOINT HEIRS WITH JESUS CHRIST

A Christmas Theme

We wonder to how many is the real meaning of this term known, "joint heirs with Jesus Christ."

In our study of the law, we are struck with the fact that there are different estates in land; different manners or times for which it is held.

Most fundamental of all is the title which is in the government or king, the alodial title. It is because of that fundamental right the government can take land by eminent domain, can tax land, and can make certain provisions with regard to its holders.

The most fundamental title held by individuals is one in fee simple. The very fact of fee means that it was held in fief, and subject to certain duties. Subject to these duties the right of title is to a man and his heirs and assigns forever.

There were then the fee tail of various kinds, which limited title to a man and the heirs of his body. He was not permitted to transfer it except his life interest, and the fee returned always to the heirs of his body. It might be his children, it might be to his eldest son. It usually was the latter in English law. Ancient Israel held the land on a similar plan by which the title returned to the tribe every jubilee year (fifty years).

Land might also be held for the life of an individual, or the life of another; or it might be held under leases of various length, or simply rented from year to year or month to month.

While a life estate was considered superior to any lease, yet lease is often made for ninety-nine years, especially where important structures are to be erected, and the title is defective, for then no matter who is found to be the owner, those who erect the building as lessees are protected in their possession. In the early days, some leases were made for nine hundred and ninety-nine years. Leases of the time of Alfred the Great have just been coming due of recent years in England.

Then when more than one individual owned a title, it might be held in various ways. When the same deed conveyed directly to a man and his wife, they took as tenants of the entirety, as they were considered to be one person in law, so that each of them owned the whole of it, and not the half, with the right of survivorship; that is, the survivor took the whole of it free of debts, free of any obligations, as it was his or hers from the beginning. This still continues in some States, but not in others, unless clearly specified.

There is also the estate of tenancy in common. Such tenants necessarily hold the like estate, but do not necessarily take their title at the same time, or by the same instrument. Each one takes an undivided share of the whole. They can sell it; can devise it by will. They do not own any one particular part, but an undivided share of the whole. Their creditors can claim and sell the undivided share. If they do not will it, it passes on to their heirs, not affecting the interest of the other tenants in common.

But our Lord did not use any such figure in declaring our interest in his kingdom, but declared that we are joint heirs with Jesus Christ, if it so be that we suffer with him that we may be also glorified together.

Joint tenants take by the same instrument, whether deed or will, the same estate, exactly equal, neither more nor less. Their estate takes effect at the same time. Each one owns an undivided interest or share. In the case of the failure of one, those who remain still own the whole. One cannot assign his share for a price to another, nor will or leave it intestate to others, for the right of survivorship intervenes; those who survive have the right of the whole.

Now consider what that means. Such a deed or will or testament opens up to admit new members if they come within the terms of the description, when the will takes effect. One cannot sell his right, he cannot give it away. Only those who are worthy are included. If some who were once in, enter into death (spiritual death), their share is lost to them, and the whole still remains to those who survive and continue. Joint heirs with Jesus Christ means that we take, by the same instrument, at the same time, the like interest with him. It is also a fee estate, being a freehold, inheritable, but subject to duties.

It is a wonderful thought and one that should encourage us greatly, that we may indeed become the sons of God, worthy to be accounted his heirs, and associate with our elder Brother.

If we are to do so, we must partake of His spirit. He possessing all, yet left the courts of glory that he might open the way that others might enter in and share with him the like interest, the like glory. He was already the elder Brother in perfect and complete right. He underwent much suffering that he might extend to us the privilege of association and sharing with him that to which he was already fully entitled.

Too many times has our heart been made sad to see the way that those who are left, the heirs of one who has passed away, while they express great sorrow for his loss, and great love for him who has gone, yet show the most narrow and bigoted spirit: "I must receive all that he left me, and exactly as he left it." That which is not written absolutely and signed must be ignored, no matter how clearly expressed.

We have known this to occur when thousands of dollars were left to each heir, and the wish of the one who was gone represented an expenditure of only fifteen or twenty dollars at the most; and not more than three or four dollars to any one heir. It is left so it is mine.

Such do not possess the spirit of the Father, the spirit that was in Jesus, "I come, as it was written in the book of thy law, to do thy will, O God." He placed the will of his Father above all technicalities. He had only to know the Father's wish, and he was fully ready to carry it out, regardless of cost or suffering to him.

How wonderfully then shines out his example. The whole estate was already his, yet he would say, "Father, kill the fatted calf, for I will go down in the waste places, even among the swine; down into the ways of suffering, that I may perchance win back my brother and gain my wayward sister, that they may share with me as thy heirs. All that thou hast is mine I know; but I would that these also share with me as the heirs of the kingdom and thy glory"; heirs of God—joint heirs with Jesus Christ, if so be they suffer with him that we may be glorified together.

Christmas celebrates his birthday. His birthday means just this—the reconciliation of man to God. He suffers that we may share his glory as heirs of God and joint heirs of Jesus Christ.

SIGNIFICANT ECONOMIC SIGNS

Of all the unrest existing in the world there still remains this very important factor, that out of the turmoil is coming a better understanding of the social order, and of justice between man and man. There is becoming a disposition, not only on behalf of agitators, but among employers, to recognize that the better a man is cared for, the better a workman he is; that shorter hours to a limitation, means both better work and greater output. This applies especially to the eight-hour day, but it is a principle that could not be applied indefinitely with like beneficial results.

The man who is able to have reasonably good home surroundings is a better workman and produces better results, and is in fact cheaper in the long run. It is not enough to provide arbitrarily by a board as to what he shall have by providing public baths and public recreation halls, but the man himself should be allowed to make his own choice of his form of recreation.

We recognize that the action taken by an assembly of Quaker employers as pointed out in the Atlantic Monthly is a good one. They hold quite clearly that the time has come when profits cannot be said to belong exclusively to one class. The cost of labor, the cost of material, the cost of management, necessary depreciation for machinery, and of property employed, should be allowed for, and also a fair interest on the capital invested. But all the resulting profits should not also go to capital. The laborer should have his just share therein.

Fundamentally this is the basis of the plan proposed by the railroad brotherhoods for the management of the railroads of the country, though it is not primarily government ownership nor thoroughly worked out in all its details.

Similar conclusions are to be noted in the action of the archbishops' committee in England, and also in the writings of such men as John D. Rockefeller, jr. and Jacob Kahn in this country.

This principle is also seen, and has been seen for several years past in the conduct of the Ford factories at Detroit.

Still later, as we see in the Atlantic Monthly for July, 1919, the coal commission of England made a report which has been adopted by the government there, reducing the working hours underground from eight to seven hours per day, beginning July 6, 1919. And if the economic condition of the industry at the end of 1920 warrants it, a further hour shall be taken off, beginning July 13, 1921. Wages shall be increased two shillings per day work. This latter would mean an additional sum of thirty million pounds or one hundred and fifty million dollars per year.

The chairman and the employers associated with him, joined in a report, that upon the evidence given, the present system of ownership and working in the coal industry stands condemned. Some other system must be substituted for it. In the report they add:

"We are prepared, however, to report now, that it is in the interest of the country that the colliery worker shall in the future have an effective voice in the direction of the mine. For a generation the colliery worker has been educated socially and technically. The result, he is a great national asset. Why not use him?"

Such movements as these represent practically a new moral and social order.

We have pointed out in these columns in the past year the essential fact that just treatment for the workman is economically sound, for the sake of industry itself. But more than that in the social order, the sole aim should not be the good of society as a whole, but also the highest possible development of the individual and then the utilization of his powers and ability for the good of the whole social order. The ideal then becomes greater individual development and through it greater social development; and because of greater social development, again greater individual growth.

These signs, of which we have indicated but a few, are certainly significant to the church and society as a whole. There are, it is true, some signs of backward and destructive tendencies, but the movement is onward. It is important to us, because of our social ideals as a church.

DEFEAT OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

The Christian Science Monitor of November 20 contains an editorial on the Peace Treaty, in which especial emphasis is placed upon the fact that the agreement was not openly arrived at. They urge that if this one clause of President Wilson's platform had been upheld, every other difficulty would have resolved itself. If the discussion could have taken place in the full light of world publicity, public opinion would have made itself so plainly felt in each and every state, that the Peace Treaty would not only be ratified by now, but all of its difficulties removed.

One can readily see how it is possible for experienced diplomats to put something over in secret, which they could not do in the full light of publicity. One can also see the argument that would be made that they must first agree upon what they are to present to their late enemies; and that if their enemies knew the discussion and the details as they were being formed it would be possible to submit an unanimity of opinion, and that it would be possible to prevent the work undertaken.

That is a problem which also confronts us as a church: How far should matters be determined in quorum capacity? How far should they be determined by open public discussion? It is evident that to arrive at any reasonable form, a relatively small body will have to be concerned in concurring in these forms of action. It finally narrows down to a very small number of men who would make the actual draft and take care of the wording of each clause.

Before we are too critical, let us remember how largely in our private undertakings we depend upon secrecy. A man going to purchase a home does not make his full purpose known at once. When people know that a railroad is going to purchase ten acres of ground in a certain locality, immediately they put up the prices. Yet there can be no doubt if a matter is publicly faced, in the end that which the public wants will be accomplished.

A CHILD'S PLACE IS THE HOME

An orphans' home, a children's home, or a hospital is not a good place for a baby, even though they have the best of doctors, trained nurses, even though the work is as it must be where one nurse will have to care for a dozen babies. They cannot be cared for as they should be. Babies as a rule, come into the world singly. They are individual, and should be cared for individually. Otherwise the child will suffer physically and mentally.

Doctor Chapin, in the American Magazine, states that in New York State Institutions, 1909 to 1913, four hundred and twenty-two babies out of every thousand died under two years of age. Out of the State as a whole, only eighty-seven out of one thousand died. We must remember that the latter figure includes the orphans; and that the figure is much less for those who are not cared for in an orphans' home.

Doctor Chapin states that it means that three hundred and fifty out of every one thousand babies will die, because they do not have the normal life that babies should have. For one thing they cannot have the care exactly when they need it, however special and urgent the need may be. In the second place, they need loving. In the third place, many babies together means an added danger of contagion. Even though the matrons and nurses are kind, a baby needs something more than kindness. He needs plain love, all by himself. This statement is made by a physician, as a physician, and not as a matter of sentiment.

It is also true of babies who are sick. They cannot be cured nearly so readily in a hospital as they can be in a home. For in an institution, he is nobody. In a private home, he is somebody.

Doctor Chapin refers to many cases of babies, who were anemic, and it seemed they could not possibly do anything for them in the hospital, yet they grew fat and hearty in a private home. It was not an antiseptic home either, nor by any means too clean.

It seems a strange thing to think that a woman not specially trained, but with just good common sense and love will have better success caring for one or two babies than will a trained nurse in a hospital with a dozen. But it is undoubtedly true.

According to Doctor Chapin, in New York when a child is taken from the hospital, the foster mother is paid fourteen dollars a month, while a physician takes supervision of a number of babies, and gives them the attention of a trained nurse from time to time. The work of the physician and nurse is only supervisory and occasional, seeing the child every week and giving advice.

But the benefit to the baby is not the only gain. It has caused men and women to wake up. Some foster fathers have shown as much interest as the foster mothers, and have been absolutely transformed. Hysterical and nervous women who are always on the sick list, adopting a child, have an interest outside of themselves and forget their ills and become normal and healthy again. The baby gains a mother; the mother gains a child; and the doctor loses a patient, which is quite as it should be. Doctor Chapin says:

"Men who have become absorbed in business to the point of overstrain and irritability go home to a child, and find themselves relaxing and growing young and care free once more."

THE ECONOMIC OUTLOOK

From many sources comes the information that the situation in Europe will be very grave the coming winter. The difficulties have been pointed out many months ago, but no one has arisen to grapple with them in a way to clear the field for proper reconstruction.

Mr. Churchill stated in the House of Commons, that the only government in Europe which had abolished conscription and translated disarmament into practice was that of Great Britain. But that is only a drop in the bucket. There have been many petty wars going on in Europe, and large military forces sustained throughout the summer, which prevented the rightful use of the men in industry and in the raising of food.

At the same time there are a series of strikes in this country. Those that loom largest are the coal strike and the steel strike; but at the same time almost every paper features some smaller strike in some part of the country. There are strikes also in Great Britain and throughout Europe.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

THE CHURCH AND ITS MISSION

It may be thought presumptuous for one of limited experience and little authority to give an expression of what the church stands for and what should be its mission. Official statements of the presiding ministers, numerous tracts showing the distinctiveness of our belief, and the miscellaneous articles in the church papers along this line, ought to have given us a sound understanding of what the existence of the church means to mankind. However, the plea is made that so far as he is aware, the writer believes the following to be a discussion of the church from a new angle.

THE MESSAGE OF THE CHURCH

Let us, for one moment, allow our minds to go back over the centuries and rest upon a scene of dramatic importance to the future ages. Upon the hills near Bethany walk a small group of men in deep conversation. They watch with loving and earnest devotion every movement of their Leader as he tells them of the work that lies before them. Then, reaching a hill near Bethany, the Master stops them, and in words of authority and of love he gives to them the Great Commission: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you always, unto the end of the world." Then, with a parting blessing to his disciples, the Master is taken away from them.

History records that soon after this remarkable event this chosen band of men went out in the power of God, and in a few short years brought thousands of honest souls to the feet of Jesus. What was the message they had to offer, and what was it that brought the nations to a realization of the supremacy of the gospel?

It is a certain fact that unless the message of the church to-day is based upon the same foundations as was the gospel in the early days, we may expect nothing but miserable failure. But, in so far as the basic principles of the latter-day church are in harmony with those of the church founded by the apostles of the first century, thus far may we expect it to be a power for good among humanity.

FOUR FACTORS IN OUR MESSAGE

What, then, is our message? Analyzing the records of the church and its official statements, we find that there are four dominant factors in the message of the gospel. They are: first, the fatherhood of God; second, the mastership of Jesus Christ; third, the brotherhood of man; and fourth, the immortal destiny of the human soul. But, you may say, what difference is there between our church and the different sects, for they also teach these four principles; at least, most of the churches do? That may be true, yet there is a vast difference between our understanding of these principles and the understanding that the sectarian world have of them.

For instance, our belief in the fatherhood of God is not relegated to the world of two thousand years ago. We believe that our Father's ear is not deaf to his children's cry, nor his voice dumb to their entreaty. We conceive our God as being as near to us as he was when he spoke unto the church at Jerusalem: "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." We believe that in all matters pertaining to the eternal welfare of the children of men, God is anxious and willing to speak to them and acquaint them with his solution of their problems. We teach that before a man may presume to occupy in the sacred ministry of God, the Father must give him permission and call him by the voice of revelation to that holy and special position. Further, we claim that, while a desire to serve as a minister of God is a righteous and good desire, yet that alone is not sufficient excuse for a man occupying in the priesthood without a permission from God.

CHRIST'S WORDS AT FACE VALUE

In harmony with this belief in the reality of a Father, we believe that the prayer of faith will bring its answer. We claim that the age of miracles is not past, but that the conditions of disease and death are still under the control of an almighty Power, and that by the administration of his ordinance and through the authority of the name of Jesus Christ, devils are rebuked, the sick healed, the lame made to walk, the blind to see, and the deaf to hear.

All these claims may be substantiated by reference to the divine Word, and we quote the following passages, for further reading: Amos 3:7; Galatians 1:11, 12; Hebrews 5:4-6; Acts 13:2, 3; Romans 10:14, 15; Mark 16:17, 18; James 5:14, 15.

Such, then, is our understanding of the fatherhood of God, and it will be readily seen that there is a vast difference between our church and other Christian sects.

As regards the belief in the divine Mastership of Jesus Christ, the Reorganized Church is much more rational in its belief in this principle than is noticeable in the other institutions of Christianity, for we are willing to accept all the precepts of Jesus Christ as the principles of the gospel. Mastership implies obedience, and that church which gives implicit obedience to his words is the church which fully recognizes his Mastership. For many years the elders of the church have proved before the world that this church does indeed receive all the commandments of Jesus Christ, and in honorable controversy with other churches have shown that the Reorganized Church is the only church which accepts the words of Christ on their face value.

THE BROADEST VIEW OF DEMOCRACY

As regards the principle of the brotherhood of man, there has been on the church books for the past eighty years a God-given plan for the remedy of all the social and economic evils resulting from the violation of this principle. At a time when men scoffed and ridiculed the social solution as presented in the gospel, this church was laying afresh the foundation of a new order. Other churches might indorse the ideals of brotherhood and they might eloquently extol the ideals of democracy, but it must be remembered that for many years the restored church of Jesus Christ presented to its followers the only solution to labor troubles, and that while it has been sleeping on its rights, the sectarian churches have adopted many of its views, such as the principle of stewardship, the consecration of the surplus, and the payment of tithing. We believe that there should be a new emphasis laid upon the social plan of the church by the ministry, and this institution of God should blaze the trail to a higher condition of civic and political righteousness.

IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL

As regards the fourth principle, the immortality of the human soul, there is no teaching in all the world that can compare in depth and beauty to that found in the latter-day revelation. There we find that man was in the beginning with God, that the elements are eternal, and that spirit and element inseparably connected bring to man the fullness of joy, and to this end was man born into the world. The revealed word of God, as understood by us, shows the grandeur and beauty of the atonement of Christ and the plan of salvation such as the world has never conceived. Furthermore, in Doctrine and Covenants 76:1-8; 85:2-16, there is revealed to us the marvelous and beautiful plan that God has ordained for the perfection of his children and for the reward of their works. No longer need we believe in an arbitrary dividing of humankind into two different groups—the sheep and the goats—of which one is ever in the presence of the Father enjoying the glories of paradise, and the other is consigned to the flames of a never-ending torment. No, the church has a message of love and mercy to every man, and the immortality of man is interwoven with the other principles of the gospel in such a way as to cause us to exclaim: "Oh, how wonderful are thy works, O Lord of Hosts; and thy ways, they are past finding out."

Such, then, is the message that the church has to offer to the darkened souls of men. Is it not one worth taking to them? Should not the hearts of every member of the church throb with joy when he realizes the glorious gospel which has become his? If only every individual in the church could see the glory of the latter-day message, there is no doubt but that there would come over the church a spirit of consecration and devotion such as has not been seen since the days of the early Christians.

THE WORK BEFORE THE CHURCH

With such a message as this, what should be the aim of the church? What is the work that lies before us as the church of God to-day? What are the great responsibilities that God has placed upon his people?

When the apostles were commissioned to take the gospel to the nations of the earth, they had two great ends in view: the conversion of the heathen nations to Christ, and the restoration of the gospel to Israel. For a time they were remarkably successful; the Spirit bore witness to their labors, and thousands upon thousands were converted to the gospel. The church failed when it forgot the principles upon which the gospel is based; when it arrogated to itself power and pomp in the place of the simple teachings of the brotherhood of man; when it forgot to obey all the commandments of Christ; when it allowed heathen philosophies and ideas to mar the simple and beautiful teachings of the immortality of the human soul and the rewards of right conduct; and, finally, when it heaped up to itself teachers not commissioned of God, and who refused to hear the voice of the Lord. Such, in brief, is the history of the great apostasy.

OUR MISSION UNDER THE RESTORATION

Now that these pure principles have been once more given to the church, and the church has been restored to power and authority, what must its mission be? So far as we can see, the mission of the church is threefold: 1. It must revitalize the dead form of so-called Christianity. 2. It must convert the heathen nations to the ensign of Christ. 3. It must bring about the gathering of Israel from the four corners of the earth—Judah and its fellow tribes to Jerusalem, and the ten tribes to the land of Zion.

In reforming the various Christian sects, there should be shown a broader sympathy with the members, and a deeper understanding of the human heart. Error, in itself, should be relentlessly fought, but that should not be made an excuse for a tirade of abuse against individuals or society. It should be the aim of every missionary to acquaint himself with the various religious movements, and, instead of the usual method of finding the largest number of errors in a certain sect, it should be his purpose to discover the beautiful and life-giving truths upon which he may expect to build. Instead of the critical, faultfinding spirit, there should be shown the helpful, loving spirit of the Master. I believe the time will arrive when the people of the many churches will come to a general realization of the truth of our message, and if that time should come, may it please God to see that this church has not become too frigid and self-centered to receive them with love and fellowship.

THE EVANGELIZATION OF THE WORLD

As regards our work among the pagan nations, our purpose should still be to bring to our task the broadest possible vision and the deepest sympathy. We should remember that all the truth is not contained in the three books of the church, and that wherever a nation has felt after God, he has ever condescended to shed the beams of his glorious light upon them, and perhaps in the darkest tradition of the heathen, we can catch a scintillation of the truth which to us has been revealed more fully. It is not enough that the church convert the heathen to the gospel. It is not enough that the idolator cast aside his images, and bow at the feet of Jesus. It is not sufficient that he be baptized and receive a new birth. There must be given to him the opportunity of expressing his new ideals in his own ways. The church must provide for him this opportunity. Every heathen should be given a fair chance of contributing to the measure of his ability to the welfare of the church and to the advancement of his race. We should note that in the Orient the conversion of villages and tribes is the rule, as compared to the individual conversion among the white races, and the missionary should be prepared to see that these conversions are real and sincere, and that each tribe or village is given a chance to develop in the gospel light.

There are great things happening in the East. The Lord has opened the countries that have been secluded for centuries from the Western civilization, and he has been using the Christian missionaries thus far sent to them as instruments in his hand for the preparation of these peoples for the dawning of the brightness of the gospel. If our vision is broad enough we can see under the turmoil and struggle of the present age the dawning of a new existence for the Orient, and the time is near when the gospel must be taken to them in power and assurance by men commissioned and endowed by the Spirit of God.

PLACES TO BE PREPARED

Turning now to our third aspect of the work of the church, we must remember that before the gathering of Israel can be consummated, there must be a place prepared for them in the regions designated by the Lord. For years and years the people of the new covenant have wandered in darkness and slumbered over their responsibilities. Zion, the city of God, should have been a holy habitation many years ago, if only the church had obeyed the commandment of God, and to-day the voice has gone forth again in no uncertain tone, that this is a day when the sacrifices and service of God's people are required to the uttermost. It is high time that the economic law of the church should be fully put into operation. Like the children of Israel we are standing near the River Jordan at the entrance to the Promised Land, but we are afraid to put our foot upon the river to test the promise of God as to the opening of the way.

As for the Jewish home, it is noticeable that "the sons of strangers" are building the walls of Jerusalem, and "their kings" are ministering unto the welfare of the long-persecuted race. Our missionaries are being sent over to make of Jerusalem a holy habitation. And very soon the call shall go forth to the dispersed among the nations to come and gather back to their ancient home.

EQUALITY MUST PREVAIL

It is in this great work of the church that the law of equality must shine, the true ideal of the brotherhood of man must ever be kept before our eyes. Our success temporally and spiritually will be measured by the way in which this law is kept. We may expect soon to see the principle of stewardships becoming more generally known among our members, and we ought to expect a greater consecration of talent and means to the end of the redemption of Zion and the building of the temple of God. But before this can happen it is necessary that every Latter Day Saint become fully aware of the significance of the hour; it is vitally necessary that each member of the church be keyed up to the highest pitch of service and self-sacrificing devotion to the great cause.

Then can the army of the Lord go forth, and the ensign be raised in the sight of all nations, and then we may hope to see the culmination of the great purposes of God and the ushering in of the millenium of peace.

WHAT DO WE NEED?

With such a soul-stirring message and with such a tremendous piece of work before us, what does the church need to carry forth its stupendous program?

It needs, in the first place, men and women of intelligence and high ideals. To meet the gigantic problems lying before us as a people, we need men who are able, under the help of God, to solve them. We need trained minds prepared to undertake the special work which the church will lay upon them. And, of course, it is understood that with the intelligence there must be a spirit of consecration and self-sacrifice such as is rarely seen nowadays.

Again, we need the spirit of love. Never in the history of the church has there been more necessity for the spirit of forbearance in our dealings with our brothers. While the world outside is in a turmoil of hate and madness, there should be reflected inside the church more and more of that "love which casteth out fear." Cooperation and trust are the watchwords of the hour, and we should see to it that the church presents a solid line against the enemy of our souls. Retaliation and strife may be the method of procedure in the affairs of the world, but there should be in the church of Christ the spirit of forgiveness and meekness that was characterized by our Master.

Furthermore, there should be shown a spirit of zeal and energy in the church. We need men whose hearts are throbbing with the yearning for souls; we need men and women who are eager and ready to be found in the front lines of service. We need men whose very beings pulse with a great desire to spend themselves to the very last breath in service to the church.

But more than all, we need the Spirit of God. We may have men of zeal, actuated by the spirit of love, and gifted with an unusual amount of intelligence, but unless the Lord pours out upon us the gift of his Holy Spirit, we may as well give up the battle at the beginning. But we are assured that the Lord will not break his promises to us, and while in the past we have enjoyed a bountiful measure of his spirit, yet we feel sure that the time is near when the wonderful endowment of the Spirit of God will be poured out upon these servants who are ready and pure in heart. Possibly we are too optimistic, but we believe the time is not far away when, clothed in the power of God, an army of young men and women shall go forth to the nations that know not the God of Israel, and in the might of the Lord proclaim the ensign of the gospel. If one will but put his ear to the ground, he will hear the steady tramp, tramp of the army of God which has been and is being marshalled in the quiet homes of the Saints, preparing themselves for the great call to serve.

To the eye of faith, one already sees the fulfillment of the glorious prophecies of old. "In the wilderness, waters" are breaking out, and "streams in the desert." A highway is being cast up, the "way of holiness."

FRANK B. ALMOND.

It Is Written

An inquiry recently received at the office reads as follows:

"I am making out my inventory and would like to ask you a question. I have 12 hogs weighing 100 pounds each and 400 bushels of corn. Now, say I pay tithing on these hogs and also on the corn, and the hogs gain 100 pounds each from eating the corn that is tithed. Would I have to pay tithing on 1200 pounds increase in the weight of the hogs?"

The foregoing problem, together with many others of a similar nature which frequently perplex the Saints in their honest endeavors to comply with the tithing principle of the gospel, is clearly solved by the calculations provided for in the Property Statement blank, which has been adopted as the basis for the Saints to determine, at least annually, their standing before the Lord.

The Property Statement provides for a list of your resources (what you possess) and a list of your liabilities (what you owe). If no tithing has been paid previously, your debt to the Lord is one tenth of the amount that the former exceed the latter. For the sake of illustration, let us assume that our inquirer has paid no tithing heretofore and that the Property Statement he is now making out will read as follows:

| Resources        |         | Liabilities       |         |
|-------------------------|---------|--------------------------|---------|
| Farm .....              | $4,000 | Mortgage on farm .....   | $2,500 |
| Machinery .....         | 500     | Note on live stock ..... | 400     |
| Clothing .....          | 200     |                          |         |
| Jewelry .....           | 50      | Total liabilities .....  | $2,900 |
| Cash .....              | 200     |                          |         |
| Liberty Bonds .....     | 200     |                          |         |
| Horses .....            | 500     |                          |         |
| Cattle .....            | 400     |                          |         |
| Poultry .....           | 100     |                          |         |
| Corn, 400 bu. ....      | 400     |                          |         |
| Hogs (12, 100 lb. each) | 150     |                          |         |
|                         | -----   |                          |         |
| Total resources .....   | $6,700 |                          |         |

This brother's total resources exceed his total liabilities by $3800. His debt to the Lord as tithing is therefore $380, which he pays, leaving a net worth of $3420.

Another year goes by and he desires to pay tithing on his increase. In the meantime the tithed hogs have eaten the tithed corn previously referred to; the hogs have been sold and the money placed in the bank, with his returns from other sources, from which he has withdrawn a portion for living expenses and upkeep of the farm. He feels that his farm machinery has deteriorated in value $100. In his previous statement he valued the family's clothing as $200 and although since then they have spent $400 for this purpose, a fair valuation of clothing now on hand he places as $300. He has paid the $400 mortgage on live stock and reduced the farm mortgage $300. As a result of the foregoing and other changes, the following is his:

SECOND PROPERTY STATEMENT

| Resources             |         | Liabilities     |         |
|------------------------------|---------|------------------------|---------|
| Farm .....                   | $4,000 | Mortgage on farm ..... | 2,200   |
| Machinery .....              | 400     |                        |         |
| Total live stock .....       | 1,500   |                        | $2,200 |
| Clothing .....               | 300     |                        |         |
| Jewelry .....                | 50      |                        |         |
| Cash .....                   | 400     |                        |         |
| Grain .....                  | 350     |                        |         |
| <hr/>                        |         |                        |         |
| Total resources .....        | $7,000 |                        |         |
| Less total liabilities ..... | 2,200   |                        |         |
| <hr/>                        |         |                        |         |
|                              | $4,800 |                        |         |

From the net worth as shown above should be deducted the net worth the previous year after payment of tithing in full which gives an increase for the year of $1380 (4800-3420) on which the tithing would be $138.

It is thus clearly evident that the hog and corn transaction cannot be figured by itself but must be considered in connection with the other activities of the brother. One should figure his tithing upon his entire increase and not upon the profits of a particular undertaking or certain branch of his business.

To briefly sum up the entire question, one should enter as a resource everything he possesses of value, and as a liability everything he owes. In beginning his tithing payments his debt to the Lord is one tenth of the amount that his resources exceed his liabilities, and thereafter annually one tenth of his total increase.

The Property Statement is the form that has been adopted for making this computation, and in harmony with Section 106 of the Doctrine and Covenants, the Bishopric urge that the membership of the church, both old and young, adjust their affairs at least annually before the Lord. Blank forms may be obtained from your Bishop's agent, local bishop, or by writing to this office.

THE ESTABLISHMENT OF ZION

Written for the Pen and Ink Club.

This is the stern task to which we are appointed. Nothing short of it will satisfy us. To attain it we must maintain undiminished a sense of personal worthiness; we must learn—though oft defeated in our efforts—to be disciplined into a larger vision made surer by adversity; to be delayed many times and yet to believe in the power of the human spirit (supplemented by the Spirit of God) to surmount difficulties; to outwit sin; to defeat envy and hate; to believe in the gradual but sure power of good will; to grow heart-sick but never bitter; to chafe under the restraint of delays, but never to be conquered; to feel the presence of evil, yet to believe in the supremacy of a personal God; to give liberally, yet to obtain in abundance. This is the completest of consecration.

MARK H. SIEGFRIED.

The number of Chinese in America is stated to be 80,000. About thirty years ago there were probably 180,000 but this number has now greatly decreased.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE LABOR PROBLEM

The labor problem is a grave one. A recent article in the Saturday Evening Post (October 18, 1919), by Floyd W. Parsons declares: "Everyone knows that high wages alone are not a panacea for labor ills." Recently some have come to question if high wages, safe and healthy working and living conditions, and a voice in the management of the business, will constitute the desired answer.

It has long been well recognized by enlightened employers that an inadequate wage is the most expensive of any. Safe and healthy working conditions pay dividends. A good wage does the same. A voice in the management has also been found a profitable investment. It has long been recognized that the enthusiastic interest of working men is a valuable asset. This in many instances is best secured by giving them a share of the responsibility.

IMPROVED WORKING CONDITIONS

Mr. Parsons, in the article referred to, reports that the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company has taken practical steps to better the working conditions with improved ventilation and sanitation of the work room. Partitions have been removed, and the size of the rooms enlarged, so that now practically all rooms have natural light from two sides. To avoid the morning and evening rush, the working hours are from nine to four-thirty, five days a week, and nine to one on Saturday. Five minute rest periods are given at eleven o'clock and at three; during this period the windows are thrown wide open and exercise indulged in.

All of the company's welfare or betterment work is in addition to wages, and not a substitute for them. Also, care is taken not to interfere with the right of the employee to live his or her life without undue interference.

DISEASE PREVENTED BY EARLY STEPS

Vacations with full pay for two weeks are allowed each year, increasing length of vacations with increasing length of service. Entrance tests for employment includes both a medical and psychological test. The latter is based upon the psychology of association, reaction, time, etc. The company abolished the common plan of making deductions for tardiness. A bonus of a week's salary is offered employees who make exceptional records in attendance during the year. All employees are given an annual medical examination. The purpose is to detect disease in its incipient stage, to correct minor defects, encourage proper treatment, and to secure the prevention of disease. Workers who handle food are examined more frequently than others. A rest room, an office dispensary, an optical clinic, a dental clinic, and a tuberculosis sanatorium are some of the special house provisions. Three days a week glasses are fitted. The optical clinic is held each afternoon. A dental clinic being on the grounds saves many days of time.

Naturally some of these plans are only possible in such large institutions. For instance, the sanatorium cost over $1,000,000, and has resulted in the cure of many of their employees. Fifty-three per cent when sent were only in the incipient stage; forty-two per cent were moderately advanced, as the physical examination had discovered the trouble in time. When an employee is in the sanatorium, his pay goes on. When he returns to work he is weighed biweekly, and bimonthly is given a careful medical examination. For anemic condition, employees report twice daily at the dispensary for milk. The average last year was 112 each day.

In addition thereto, the company furnishes a meal, costing them, not including any charge for rent, approximately twenty-nine cents each day per person. The meal is not charged for nor deducted from wages; it is supplementary.

Each employee has a steel locker where he can keep his personal belongings, comb and brush, individual drinking glass, and towel.

SAVINGS FUND MAINTAINED

A savings fund was instituted according to which the company deposits for the benefit of each employee, an amount equal to one half the deposit made during the current year. The purpose is that those who are not saving are most likely to be dissatisfied. The company's deposits may be drawn out in case of death or permanent incapacity, or by vote of the trustees, in the event of honorable retirement after twenty years' continuous service. The employee's deposit may be withdrawn at any time, but in such case the company's contributions stand to the credit of the remaining depositors. The rate of interest earned by the deposits was 5.16 per cent. It is evidently a form of insurance through personal saving.

Also a cooperative store is run by the employees to offset the increased cost of living. The best qualities are sold as near cost as possible, and the company contributes the rent.

Disability insurance, plan for the retirement of aged and disabled employees, and wide provisions for recreation and education are other factors. The company pays one half of the premium for disability insurance. It has also insured the lives of all its workers under the group-insurance plan. At the age of 65 an employee may be retired at one third salary.

A gymnasium fully equipped is provided with competent instructors in attendance. Classes are provided in life insurance and stenography. The library contains more than 20,000 volumes. Classes are provided for women in sewing and millinery, with full equipment and trained instructors in dress making and millinery.

Many of the plans expressed above are scarcely possible except in a large industrial unit.

LOS ANGELES MINISTERS SEEK TO REVIVE HEALING

Resolutions urging all church people of Los Angeles to study the Bible closely with the view of restoring the work of healing as a part of the regular church work will be presented to practically all Protestant denominations. The resolutions were adopted at a meeting of approximately 200 evangelical ministers and laymen held at the Y. M. C. A.

The action of the ministers was taken at the suggestion of Doctor Henry Stauffer of Park Congregational Church, who presented the resolutions, reading as follows:

RESOLUTIONS

"Whereas, we, as a conference of ministers and laymen assembled here, feel that healing is taught in God's word and that it is possible to utilize those teachings in a very definite and helpful way with scientific facts that are becoming well known.

"Resolved, That we encourage a study of the subject of healing in all practical and helpful ways and urge all who are interested to make as thorough a study of the subject as possible from a Biblical, psychological, scientific and common sense standpoint, and thus learn how to help and heal themselves and help others.

URGE LEAGUE OF HEALING

"Resolved, That we encourage the organization of a Christian League of Healing and Helpful Service, with duly elected officers who shall arrange for meetings in which healing in the churches shall be presented by different speakers and studies on the subject of healing shall be encouraged, and

"Resolved, That we also encourage the churches to organize classes and study the subject of healing and learn the definite principles which can be used to help and heal the people and also train persons to help disseminate Biblical, scientific and common sense methods and principles which everyone can use to establish health and recover it if lost."—Los Angeles Evening Herald, December 2, 1919.

HEALING THE SICK

We note in The Gospel Trumpet for October 30, a page devoted to instances of divine healing. It seems that in at least one of these instances the patient was anointed first with oil. (See James 5:14, 15). It is quite curious to see that they use the word saints in referring to their members—the saints of Montana, the saints of Alberta, etc.

The Lord provided in James that they should send for the elders. We cannot but think that following the exact plan that God has given is the best way. We recall that the disciples came to Christ and told him that a certain one was healing the sick and casting out devils in his name. He replied, "Forbid them not, for he who is not against us is on our part."

THE JOURNAL OF HISTORY FOR 1920

The Journal of History at present has about three hundred paid up subscribers. The membership of the church is about ninety thousand. Surely, there ought to be ten times three hundred of this ninety thousand interested enough in the historical aspects of their religion to pay one dollar and fifty cents for a record such as we are publishing. One dollar and fifty cents is a good deal less than the price paid for other historical reviews which usually range from two to five dollars in price.

We believe that the reason for the small number of subscribers to the Journal is the fact that what we are publishing in the Journal is not very well known to the church as a whole; therefore we wish to present here a prospectus of some of the things that will appear in the Journal for next year. In the January issue will be a plat of the city of Nauvoo, on which is located the exact residences of each of the places of historic interest there. Accompanying this will be a description of some of these places by Brother Mark H. Siegfried who grew up in the city of Nauvoo. Anyone having a copy of this Journal can add greatly to his interest when visiting the City Beautiful.

In the April issue of the Journal will be a bibliography or index of all of the biographical material which has appeared in the Journal of History or in the Autumn Leaves since the beginning of their publication. Also all of the material so far published on local history such as the history of the work in Michigan, in Pottawattamie District, in Independence, etc.

Frequently demands come to us for information with regard to the life of some Latter Day Saints. If it has been published, you will have in this Journal a key where it can be found. In the same issue will appear a directory of the quorums in the history of the church, in which the reader may see at a glance the exact year in which any man entered the leading quorums or left it. Also the January issue will contain an article by Heman C. Smith, not previously published we believe, taking up legal points involved in our claim of succession from the church as established in 1830.

During the year of 1920 the Journal will publish important private letters such as the William Marks letters, bearing upon our early history. It will publish complete genealogy showing the descendants of the early founders of the church, such as Oliver Cowdery, Whitmer family, the Briggs family, etc. It will also publish a series of memoirs of some of our pioneers who are still with us, such as John Shields, Henry A. Stebbins, and others.

The 1920 Journal will also continue the new department begun in October entitled "With the Exchanges" in which will be reviewed current periodicals and articles as well as books touching upon the history of the church. There will also be a history of foreign missionary work which ought at this time to be of peculiar interest to Latter Day Saints. This history will contain the record of our work in Scandinavia, Germany, Switzerland, and the British Isles, as well as something of our work in Australia, Society Islands, and in Hawaii. A good deal of this latter material has been published, but very little with regard to our work in Europe. There will also be a history of our work in Canada.

In addition to all this the present articles such as Official Statements of Joseph Smith; the one republished from the Missouri State Historical Review on "Early Days on Grand River and the Mormon War." History of Pottawattamie and Lamoni Stake which are now running in the Journal will be continued.

We believe some knowledge of what is going to be in the Journal for next year will be welcomed by the readers of the SAINTS' HERALD.

THE EGYPTIAN UNREST

The British Government announces that its purpose is "to preserve the autonomy of Egypt under British protection, and to develop self-government under Egyptian rule." And they have decided to send a commission to Egypt to work out the details of a constitution, and in consultation with the representatives of the Egyptian people, propose an acceptable scheme of government.

The commission is to find the causes of unrest in Egypt, and attempt by exhaustive inquiry to determine how best the situation may be handled. It is probably true that the administration in Great Britain is a great deal more prosperous than it had been any time within recent centuries, so that the grinding poverty of the old code has been swept away. But much yet remains to be done to secure an equitable administration.

BIBLE TRANSLATIONS

Nsenga, Kono, Donga, Adamawa, Dehwali, Wukungfu: these six for the first time appear on the list of the Bible Society. During the years of war that energetic and persevering body has brought out the Scriptures in thirty-five new languages, dialects, patois, or whatever term is the most correct for the speech of out-of-the-way peoples of the earth. The six quoted belong to various parts of the great African continent—all but one, Wukungfu, which is the language of Hakka, a people of 15,000,000 in the South of China.—The Christian Science Monitor.

DISPOSING OF LIQUOR

In the arguments before the Supreme Court of the United States, the brewers urge that they wish to get their money out of liquor now tied up, which they value at around fifty million dollars. It was further stated that over seventy-five million dollars of whiskey is in bond. They are trying to claim one year of free drinking in which to dispose of this.

It certainly would pay the Nation to buy it and dispose of it in some other manner, rather than to engage in such a year of free drinking after adopting prohibition.

Men, my brothers, men and workers, ever reaping something new;

That which they have done but earnest of the things that they shall do;

For I dipt into the future, far as human eye could see,
Saw the vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be;

Saw the heavens fill with commerce, argosies of magic sails;
Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales;

Heard the heavens filled with shouting, and there rain'd a ghastly dew
From the nations' airy navies grappling in the central blue;

Far along the world-wide whisper of the south wind rushing warm,
With the standards of the people's plunging through the thunderstorm;

'Till the war-drum throbbed no longer, and the battle-flags were furled
In the Parliament of man, the Federation of the world;

There the common sense of most shall hold a fretful realm in awe,
And the kindly earth shall slumber, rapt in universal law.

THE FORUM

This department is for the free discussion of questions of vital interest to the church in an impartial, impersonal way. We welcome affirmative discussions for the purpose of ascertaining the truth. The views presented are not authoritative, and represent the opinion only of the writer, but we hope it will lead to authoritative conclusions by the church. Names must accompany contributions but need not be used.

Amusements for the Young

A great deal is being written about furnishing amusement for the young people to-day. In my young days we were quite content with our places of enjoyment. We had what we called school exhibitions, where a packed house gathered to hear the pupils who entertained them with recitations, readings, dialogues, and songs. We had lyceums where debates were carried on until recess, and the rest of the evening was taken up with a program. We had singing school where we learned the rudiments of music; then different schools would have spelling schools, where they would compete for the best speller. These were all educational, but times have changed. We have outgrown them.

I am heartily in favor of education, but I think too much space is being taken up in our paper, which could better be used along gospel lines. Perhaps that is one feature of the gospel. I think the young can not be encouraged along educational lines enough, but we who did not have the privilege of institutions of learning in our day as now, do not enjoy an article where the writer seemingly can not use enough big words to express his meaning; words unknown to us, and we need a dictionary of late date to understand them. I am thankful there are not many of such articles. The good old Bible with its plain language can only be comprehended by the Spirit of God.

In regard to the picture shows to keep our young people interested from the outside world, I am opposed. There are lectures that may be thrown on the screen that would be impressive and of great benefit. Otherwise, I think we should teach our children to shun every appearance of evil. My parents would not permit us to stand and look on at the dance at a public gathering, and my observation of the picture show has been that those who attended were infatuated, as those who attend the dance, many absenting themselves from church rather than miss the show. Another reason is, I believe it to be detrimental to the eyes.

I thank God for parents who taught us that we must attend church services and Sunday school exclusive of everything else. The reverence I felt for them was expressed in my patriarchal blessing, given by Uncle Charles Derry a few years ago. It truly represents the influence of parents in the home.

I do not wish to criticize, for I truly believe the church is doing that which is for our best good. To this end we ever remember you in our family worship, that those who have the responsibility of carrying on the work may have wisdom to guide and direct the affairs of the church, and that his Holy Spirit may be with them that all may be done to God's honor and glory. ### Profiteering

A short time ago a certain clothing merchant in a well-known Southern city, filed a complaint in court against a negro porter, charging him with felony, the charge specifically stating that the porter had stolen a suit of clothes valued at $65. This price was stated in the complaint because it was his selling price for this same suit of clothes.

The porter secured the services of an attorney, and upon being told that it was necessary to show that he had stolen something worth $50 or more before he could be convicted of a felony, he produced the price tag and said that he knew the cost mark, and that the suit of clothes had only cost the merchant $22. Upon being informed by the lawyer that he was going to raise the cost price as an issue in the case to show that his client had stolen something worth less than $50 the merchant went to the prosecuting attorney for the State, and had the charge against the porter squashed.

This merchant was afraid to let the public know that he was selling his goods for almost three times as much as their cost to him. He also knew that such a practice is just as dishonest as was the stealing of the suit by the porter. He perhaps also knew that the people did not know they were being victimized every day by this kind of stealing, which is within the law. He knew if the truth had been known there would likely be some very unpleasant happenings in his immediate vicinity, unpleasant to merchants of this character, who if they are ever discovered and brought before the court of public opinion, it will be impossible for them to receive protection in their violations of the law, by having the district attorney squash their cases.

Reader, which of these two men is the most dangerous to society? And which would the name of thief best suit? the porter who stole the suit of clothes valued at $22 or the merchant who has perhaps sold hundreds of these suits at an exorbitant profit, and who became an accessory after the fact in a misdemeanor case, rather than let the light shine on his business methods? Some day the people may understand the standard set up by the Christ, when a knowledge of him will cover the earth. May the day be hastened.

The Poor

Jesus said, "For ye have the poor always with you." (Matthew 26: 11.)

The Master did not make the above remark with the idea in his mind that it was a necessary condition, and that we should give it no special concern; that it was one of the permanent conditions of life. It was more in the nature of a historical statement, that like the seasons it would come and go; death and sickness and other misfortunes would constantly be making people poor, and as it would be necessary to preach the gospel until he came, so would it be necessary to care for the poor; and at the same time, there would be no poor in the absolute sense because the perfect law of the gospel would respond so quickly that it would not permit the unfortunate ones to go uncared for for even one day.

As a church we will not have attained the standard of righteousness contemplated in the law of Christ until we can say, There are no poor among us.

It is the purpose of the writer to give consideration to this very important question in the light of scripture, and also from the best writers on the social problems that are ever present with us for our solution. We cannot turn it aside; it must be solved; if not by us as a church, then by others who will have the vision, courage, and patience to go on with the greatest problem that has ever been before the human race for solving.

The Old Testament teaches:

"If there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren within any of thy gates in thy land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother: but thou shalt open thine hand wide unto him, and shalt surely lend him sufficient for his need, in that which he wanteth. . . . Thou shalt surely give him, and thine heart shall not be grieved when thou givest unto him: because that for this thing the Lord thy God shall bless thee in all thy works, and in all that thou puttest thine hand unto."—Deuteronomy 15: 7, 8, 10.

"I am poor and needy; yet the Lord thinketh upon me. . . ."—Psalm 40: 17.

"The rich and poor meet together: the Lord is the maker of them all."—Proverb 22: 2.

"The poor is hated even of his own neighbor; but the rich hath many friends."—Ibid., 14: 20.

"Wealth maketh many friends; but the poor is separated from his neighbor."—Ibid., 19: 4.

"He that oppresseth the poor reproacheth his Maker; but he that honoreth him has mercy on the poor."—Ibid., 14: 31.

"Whoso mocketh the poor reproacheth his maker."—Ibid., 17: 5.

"What mean ye that ye beat my people to pieces, and grind the faces of the poor? saith the Lord God of hosts."—Isaiah 3: 15.

"If thou lend money to any of my people that is poor by thee, thou shalt not be to him as an usurer, neither shalt thou lay upon him usury."—Exodus 22: 25.

"And thou shalt not glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger."—Leviticus 19: 10.

"For the needy shall not always be forgotten; the expectation of the poor shall not perish forever."—Psalm 9: 18.

"Defend the poor and the fatherless: do justice to the afflicted and needy."—Psalm 82: 3.

In the New Testament:

"For ye have the poor with you always, and whenever ye will ye may do them good."—Mark 14: 7.

"But ye have despised the poor. Do not the rich men oppress you, and draw you before the judgment seats."—James 2: 6.

"And in those days, when the number of the disciples was multiplied, there arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the daily ministration."—Acts 6: 1.

What the Book of Mormon says:

"Nevertheless they put down the power and the miracles of God, and preach up unto themselves their own wisdom, and their own learning, that they may get gain, and grind upon the face of the poor."—2 Nephi 11: 91.

"They rob the poor, because of their fine sanctuaries; they rob the poor because of their fine clothing; and they persecute the meek, and the poor in heart; because in their pride they are puffed up."—2 Nephi 12: 15.

"For behold, ye do love money, and your substances, and your fine apparel and the adorning of your churches, more than ye love the poor and the needy, the sick and the afflicted."—Mormon 4: 50.

"And they had all things common among them, therefore there were no rich and poor, bond and free, but they were all made free, and partakers of the heavenly gift."—3 Nephi 1: 4.

"Perhaps thou shalt say, The man has brought upon himself his misery; therefore I will stay my hand, and will not give unto him of my food, nor impart of my substance, that he may not suffer, for his punishments are just. But I say unto you, O man, whosoever doeth this, the same hath great cause to repent; and except he repenteth of that which he hath done, he perisheth forever, and hath no interest in the kingdom of God."—Mosiah 2: 30, 31.

"Yea, will you persist in turning your backs upon the poor, and needy, and in withholding your substance from them."—Alma 3: 96.

"And now behold my brethren, I say unto you, Do not suppose that this is all; for after ye have done all these things, if ye turn away the needy, and the naked, and visit not the sick and afflicted, and impart of your substances if ye have, to those who stand in need; I say unto you, If ye do not any of these things, behold, your prayer is vain, and availeth you nothing, and ye are as hypocrites, who deny the faith."—Alma 16: 223, 224.

In the Doctrine and Covenants:

"And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them."—Doctrine and Covenants 36: 2.

"If thou lovest me thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which cannot be broken: and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me."—42: 8.

"And the storehouse shall be kept by the consecrations of the church, that widows and orphans shall be provided for, as also the poor."—82: 2.

"And the bishop, Newel K. Whitney, also, should travel round about and among all the churches, searching after the poor, to administer to their wants by humbling the rich and the proud."—83: 23.

"Behold, I say unto you, Were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh Saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer."—102: 2.

"Woe unto you rich men, that will not give your substance to the poor, for your riches will canker your souls; and this shall be your lamentation in the day of visitation and of indignation; The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and my soul is not saved! Woe unto you poor men, whose hearts are not broken, whose spirits are not contrite, and whose bellies are not satisfied, and whose hands are not stayed from laying hold upon other men's goods, whose eyes are full of greediness, who will not labor with their own hands!"—56: 5.

"Thou shalt not be idle; for he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer."—42: 12.

WHAT WE HAVE LEARNED

From the preceding quotations we have learned the following:

That our heavenly Father desires us to be very kind and considerate of the poor.

When we do the poor a kindness we should not exact compensation for our service; that would be usury.

That we should defend the poor; be their friends.

The poor is despised and hated by his neighbor.

The poor will not always be outcasts; in the Lord's own time they will realize what they have hoped and prayed for.

The Lord will bless those who have been friends to the poor.

When we oppress the poor we are enemies of God, for he loves them.

Widows and orphans have a claim on the church.

Excuses will not be acceptable to God; because the poor have done wrong the rich are not free from blame.

The rich and proud persecute and oppress the poor.

There will be a day of lamentation and sorrow for those who have oppressed the poor.

The poor, if an idler, is condemned, and it applies with equal if not greater force, to the idle rich.

If we neglect the poor our prayers will be an abomination to the Lord.

There were no poor in the Zion of Enoch's day.

There will be no poor in latter-day Zion when it is established.

One of the causes why Zion was not established in the early days of the church was because the poor were neglected.

The bishop was directed to travel among the churches to seek out the poor.

A SYMPATHETIC VIEW

The quotations that follow are from a book written by Walter Rauschenbusch, professor of church history in Rochester Theological Seminary, entitled, Christianity and the Social Crisis. He shows a very sympathetic feeling in regard to the poor in his effort to interpret the teachings of Jesus, the prophets and apostles, and the conditions of the early Christian church.

"The fundamental conviction of the prophets, which distinguished them from the ordinary religious life of their day, was the conviction that God demands righteousness and nothing but righteousness."—Page 4.

"The twin-evil against which the prophets launched the condemnation of Jehovah was injustice and oppression."—Page 8.

"We advance another step in our study when we emphasize that the sympathy of the prophets, even of the most aristocratic among them was entirely on the side of the poorer classes. Professor Kautzsch says: "Since Amos it was the alpha and omega of prophetic preaching to insist on right and justice, to warn against the oppression of the poor and helpless."—Page 11.

"When the prophets conceived Jehovah as the special vindicator of these voiceless classes, it was another way of saying that it is the chief duty in religious morality to stand for the rights of the helpless."—Page 12.

Referring to a time when Israel was wandering away from God he writes:

"The rich controlled the administration of the law. Priest and magistrates shared in the thirst for the most attractive of all narcotics—wealth. The rich in their well fed optimism were lifted out of the natural human sympathy with the poor."—Page 15.

"Thus the law, like the preachings of the prophets, manifests a striking sympathy for the poorer classes and an unflagging respect for their equal humanity. The manhood of the poor was more sacred to it than the property of the rich."—Page 21.

"We have seen that their sympathy was wholly and passionately with the poor and oppressed. If they lived to-day, they would place the chief blame for poverty on the poor and give their admiration to the strong."—Page 41.

"Moreover, in joining hands with John, Jesus clasped hands with the entire succession of the prophets with whom he classed John. Their words were his favorite quotations. Like them he disregarded or opposed the ceremonial elements of religion and insisted on the ethical. Like them he sided with the poor and oppressed."—Page 53.

"As with the Old Testament prophets the sympathies of Jesus were with the poor and oppressed."—Page 82.

Referring to the early Christian church he writes as follows:

"Moreover, the income of the church was wholly for those in need. In modern church life the bulk of the income goes for the support of the clergy and the expense of benevolence only a small fraction is for charitable help of the needy."—Page 126.

"The property of the primitive church was entirely devoted to the needy. The officers of the church lived by their own labor unless the service of Christ compelled them to forego their earning."—Page 182.

"From the outset widows and orphans were extensively cared for."—Page 129.

"The duty of working was strictly urged in the primitive church; . . . but if a man was out of work, the churches assumed the responsibility either of finding him a job or of caring for him. . . . The church at Rome, living in the midst of vast pauperism, could boast that it had no beggars in its membership."—Page 130.

THE CAUSE OF POVERTY

If we understand the cause of poverty we can then be better able to provide some means for its elimination. To be poor, or in poverty, does not always mean to be suffering because of hunger or for the lack of clothing; if a person's income is only sufficient to provide for the day's recurring wants in case of sickness, accident or lack of employment he will be dependent on some one to assist him in supplying his daily needs. Such a person is poor and they stand in the poverty line, and as old age comes on their hardships will increase and without hope of improvement.

Poverty and pauperism are not synonymous. The pauper, because of indolent and vicious habits, has sunk himself so low in the scale of morality that he has lost all of his self-respect and becomes an absolute dependent because he has lost all of his power of initiative, and finally becomes a public charge. Being poor would be a contributing cause but that alone could not be responsible for his downfall; vicious companions and heredity would contribute very largely.

Men who have labored among the poor have given us much valuable information in their writings concerning the poor and so have some who have given it a special study and from their extensive writings we will make a number of extracts:

"To live miserable we know not why, to work sore and yet gain nothing,—this is the essence of poverty."—Thomas Carlyle.

"The insecurity of livelihood caused by sickness increases with the increase of poverty. The highest classes of workmen have less sickness than the next lower, and so on down to the poorest, among whom sickness, in one form or another is almost universal. Among 10,000,000 well-to-do persons the number of yearly deaths is probably not more than 100,000; among the highest class of wage-earners the number is probably less than 150,000; and among the poorest, or those in poverty, the number is probably not less than 350,000."—Poverty, by Robert Hunter, p. 144.

"The workmen who are crushed, crippled, or killed, who contract incurable diseases, who are poisoned, or who are incapacitated by carelessness, unsanitary conditions, or dangerous machinery, are so numerous in this day that in a very few decades we shall look back upon this period as one of downright barbarism."—Ibid., p. 157.

The extracts that follow are from Sociology and Modern Social Problems, by Ellwood:

"In an investigation made by the writer in thirty-four State reform schools, 29.6 per cent came from families in which there had been divorce or desertion, 33 per cent in which either father or mother were dead."—p. 157.

"It has been estimated that the number of people in the United States living below the poverty line is more than 10,000,000 in years of average prosperity."—Page 284.

"It is usually estimated that from twenty to forty per cent of all such cases of dependence may be attributed to lack of employment, not due to the employee. . . . Again, changes in methods of production through the introduction of new machinery frequently displace large numbers of workingmen, who, on account of age or other reasons, fail to get employment along new lines."—Pages 290, 291.

"The employment of women and children in factories is another cause of poverty." "The disease-begetting occupations in modern industry are very numerous, such as hat-making, glass-blowing, the grinding of tools, and the like—any work in which there is a good deal of dust." "The accidents in mines and on railways in the United States each year cause as many deaths and serious injuries as have often resulted in many a petty war. Thus, on the railways in the United States in 1912 there was a total of 10,585 persons killed and 169,538 injured, over four fifths of those injured being employees."—Pages 291, 292.

"The housing of the poor in badly ventilated, poorly lighted, and unsanitary dwellings greatly increases sickness and death, and undoubtedly contributes greatly to their economic depression."—Page 293.

"Sickness causing temporary or permanent disability figures in from twenty-five to forty per cent of all cases applying for relief in our large cities. Probably it is the most common and most important single cause of poverty with which charity workers have to deal."—Page 294.

"In thirty-three cities, out of thirty thousand cases dependence was due to personal intemperance in 18.46 per cent, and due to the intemperance of others is 9.36 per cent, making a total of 27.82 per cent of cases in which intemperance can be traced as a cause of poverty."—Page 295.

"Shiftlessness and laziness are frequently found in the list of causes of dependence. . . . From ten to fifteen per cent of the cases of distress being attributed more or less to these causes."—Page 295.

"Even in America we frequently find old persons who have worked hard all their lives and yet come to poverty in their old age through no fault of their own. . . . From five to ten per cent of all cases of distress . . . which charity organization societies in our large cities deal with are those of deserted wives."—Page 296.

"On the whole, it seems unwise to attempt to divide the poor into the 'worthy' and 'unworthy' poor as has often been done, for no one can say who is the worthy and unworthy, in a moral sense. The only sense in which these words may be used scientifically in charitable work is to mean 'needy' and 'not needy.'"—Page 298.

"It is estimated by those in charge of reform schools for delinquent children that from 85 to 90 per cent of the children in those institutions come from more or less demoralized or dissipated families."—Page 320.

THE REMEDY

The remedy for poverty and its attendant evils is found in the gospel of Jesus Christ, and the writer knows of no historical account that any people or nation have ever solved it under any other law. The Bible and the Book of Mormon give the accounts of three efforts being made. Two of them were successful, and one a failure.

"And the Lord called his people, Zion; because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them."—Genesis 7: 23, I. T.

One of the important facts in the above statement is that they "dwelt in righteousness," and we must not lose sight of that condition.

"And they had all things common among them, every man dealing justly one with another."—2 Nephi 12: 11.

Two things we learn from the above, that they had all things common and dealt justly "one with another," and were a very happy people. (4 Nephi 1: 19.)

The prosperous and happy condition continued until the year 201, and then the historian gives us the following information:

"There began to be among them those who were lifted up in pride, such as the wearing of costly apparel, and all manner of fine pearls, and of the fine things of the world. And from that time forth they did have their goods and their substance no more common among them, and they began to be divided into classes."—4 Nephi 1: 27, 28.

From the above we learn that the cause of their downfall from their happy condition was pride, and then they no longer had love one for another.

"And all that believed were together, and had all things common; and sold their possessions and goods and parted them to all men, as every man had need."—Acts 2: 44, 45.

In the fourth chapter and thirty-second verse the same ideas are expressed, and their happy condition was because they "were of one heart and one soul." This happy condition did not continue very long because selfishness began to show itself and before a year expired complaints were made to the apostles as the following will show:

"There arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the daily ministrations."—Acts 6: 1.

What is said in the Bible and Book of Mormon about "all things common" and "equality" is very meager, and we have nothing of the details to help us to understand how to carry the principles into effect. What is given in those two books must be interpreted by the light all ready received through latter-day revelation and what the Lord may give us in the future.

In the Doctrine and Covenants (81: 4) we learn that to accomplish the Lord's work it must be done according to the laws of the Lord, and in 101: 2 he says: "It must be done in mine own way." There have been in the past, and now are, a great many good men and women who have tried to solve the problem of the poor and have done great good in the world, but it never has or ever can be by human wisdom. Unless God is in it, the problem will ever remain unsolved. The realization of that happy condition will only come to that people, whether small or large, who are willing to live under the law of righteousness as revealed to us in the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Doctor Shailer Matthews, in his book entitled The Social Teaching of Jesus, puts the matter in very terse language, as follows:

"And Jesus saw aright. A perfect society cannot be created from imperfect people. That which stands in the way of the realization of many a man's ideal for society has not been its own logical inconsistencies, but its failure to find or produce the right sort of men upon which to work. The plan of the house called for marble and the only material at hand was mud. Jesus proposes to furnish good material as well as a noble plan."—Page 209.

There are four elements which must exist in every member of a group who attempt to solve the problem of poverty, and without them failure is sure to follow. First, honesty; second, industry; third, economy; and fourth, efficiency. The following illustration will help to make the matter more clear:

A group of ten men agree to put their surplus wealth, after all their just wants and needs are supplied, into a common fund to be drawn on in times of sickness and old age. Suppose "A" is dishonest; there will soon be discontent and trouble. "B" is lazy and finds many excuses not to work; that means more trouble. "C" is wasteful; food, fuel, clothing and other common things are wasted in an extravagant manner, so that he has a very little bit to contribute to the common fund, and that means still more trouble. "D" is not very efficient and wants to work at something for which he has no skill and is not content to work within his sphere of ability, and so accomplishes but very little; the climax has come now with such conditions existing. The group cannot remain long together, so a separation is sure to follow.

As a commencement in the solution of the problem men and women must be found who are honest, industrious, economical and efficient and who have made a good start in eliminating selfishness from their lives, and, "every man seeking the interest of his neighbor, and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God." (Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4.)

The Lord's plan to bring about equality and eliminate poverty in the material things of life is the law of stewardships which he has given to the church, and is found in general statements in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants: 42: 9, 13, 19; 70: 1, 3; 81: 4; 72: 9; 101: 2, 12.

The Lord has made the bishopric the interpreter and administrator of the law, so I will not attempt it. (Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10, 128: 2; 128: 9.)

The results accomplished by living under the law of stewardships will be that every person will have an opportunity to work, every family will have a home, all farmers will have a farm and not be renters, all children will have opportunity to go to school, the sick can be adequately cared for, the widow and the orphan will be cared for, not as paupers but as members of one common brotherhood. There will be no need to join fraternal societies or take out life insurance, or lay up for a rainy day. The storehouse will have the abundance in it so there will be no rainy day for God's children. Colonies will be organized (Doctrine and Covenants 128: 1) and the spirit of cooperation will prevail in all the activities of life. Are we all willing to work, pray and help the bishopric bring about that happy condition when there will be no poor in Zion?

HONESTY

Many people comment upon the statement of David that "all men are liars." If such is the case they do not spend much of their time in that employment. Some one has estimated that even the worst liar tells the truth about ninety-eight per cent of the time.

A recent article in the American Magazine states that ninety per cent of the people can be trusted absolutely to be honest, and at least seven per cent more are honest in intent, and if they do not pay promptly they will pay as soon as they possibly can. Less than three per cent are bad accounts.

What Shall the Harvest Be?

A Strong Appeal for Higher Standards in Music

The Apostle Paul probably did not realize when he wrote that pithy epigram found in Galatians 6: 7 that he was uttering a truth concerned with the greatest law in the universe—the law of compensation. We wish we could comprehend more of that limitless law, but being one of the most finite of the finite ones of earth we feel that we but touch only the immediate particles of it. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap" is more than a truism; it is a universality, and so far as mankind is concerned and human activities are had in the consideration, there is wrapped in it all of the splendid balance of the universe.

Men fail to keep mindful of the ever-present connection of cause and effect; of the absolute surety of consequence following action, and they go on sowing as though the ultimate harvest could be as they might wish; they go on producing as though they need never make use of or father the things produced if they chose not to do so; and so often are they unmindful of the fruits that posterity must harvest for them because they leave the scene of their actions before the consequent harvest can ripen. But the harvest will surely come, and it will be of the thing sown, and the increase will be of the fold that nature shall decree.

THE CHARACTER OF MUSIC IN OUR FATHERS' DAY

It is equally so in the musical life of mankind. During the past thirty years the writer has given a fair amount of attention to the trend and development of popular music in America; to the evolution of the music of the masses. He remembers from his childhood days the character of the music that dwelt in the hearts of the common people. The great conflict of the Civil War had not long been closed and there had sprung up from the hearts of the people and out of its almost crushing distress a host of songs, expressive of the depths of feeling into which the people had been plunged. There were at this time born some things that were more than sentimental; some things that seemed as if touched with inspiration. Periods of great crisis and distress have always resulted in the bringing forth of some great epochal songs that have burned themselves into the lives of the people and their way into enduring fame. In the throes of the French revolution "La Marsellaise" was born in a single night of intense stress of feeling. When the perpetuity of the young American Nation was threatened in the war of 1812, Francis Scott Key, while confined in a dungeon, gave to the Republic that which has since been adopted as the national anthem, "The star spangled banner." When the integrity of the nation was again threatened in the awful carnage and woe of internecine strife, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe arose in response to the divine afflatus and endowed the struggling republic with courage and determination in her immortal poem, "The battle hymn of the Republic," the music to which it was coupled being more generally known as "John Brown's body." Other songs were born in that great crisis that still live on with us. It remains for the future to demonstrate to us what the epochal songs of the recent awful World War shall be.

SONGS ARE SOUL EXPRESSIONS

But aside from the great crisis of mankind the evolution and trend of a people may be seen in their songs, for people will express themselves in those ebullitions of the heart, that reflect in so large a degree the heart throbs of their everyday experience. Such, for instance, are the songs of Stephen C. Foster, who gave to us such imperishable things as "Suwannee River" (Old folks at home), "My old Kentucky home," "Old black Joe," etc. In these songs may be seen the spiritual tendency of that people, whether it be upward towards better things of human attainment or downwards toward that which is enervating and disintegrating.

Each age has brought its own harvest of songs into being; each age has imprinted its nature and its characteristics, its attainments and its ideals on the songs it has produced. Thus the era of sturdy upbuilding in the history of this nation following the close of the Civil War brought forth its songs, reflecting the dominant characteristics of the people. The simple pure melody; the tender ballad; or the heroic setting of some vigorous inspiring poem of sentiment; all these proclaimed that the nation was bent on building its structure solidly and that men's minds were turned soberly to the work of attainment. Some of these songs were of course worthless; many of them were only commonplace; but a few of them stood the test of time and bore within them the germ of their immortality.

But as the nation grew and life became more easy and luxurious and men began to seek the gratification of lives less virile, their songs began to take a lighter vein; less of the serious and more of the frivolous began to creep into them. Men slowly drifted into that state wherein they desired to seek that which would amuse rather than that which would elevate and their songs were an answer to their desires.

What of to-day? What do the songs that are now sought and sung by the people proclaim as to the present status of the race. Will comparison and analysis make us proud of our place in history or will it give us cause for regret tinged with shame? Which has been the path sought by man in the music of to-day; upward or downward?

We well remember the songs the people loved to sing when in our childhood days. When folks gathered together in social ways they chose to sing the songs expressive of the better nature of the people. "Annie Laurie," "The old oaken bucket," "The last rose of summer," "When you and I were young, Maggie," "Sweet Genevieve," and others were sung constantly. Syncopation was then known only in its properly restricted sense and its frenzied exaggeration, now known as "ragtime" was not even dreamed of. People loved to cling mostly to the substantial and the real in their music, for humanity was not then pleasure mad and so intent upon the pursuit of folly as now. In the churches one heard and helped sing the grand old hymns that had arisen from the religious experiences of the people, such as "Duke Street," "Pisgah," "Uxbridge," and others of like character.

THE DOWNWARD TENDENCY MOST EVIDENT

But now what? In the past score of years there has gradually been developing a style and class of songs that truly betoken the steady decadence in a large measure of modern society. Our folk songs have gradually left the old safe standards of pure and simple expression of heartfelt sentiment and have insidiously crept into the realm of that which is more and more trifling, banal, vulgar and debasing. The descent has been from the cheap and vulgar down through the whole superinduced growth of "ragtime" to the present tawdry, sickly sentimental, suggestive mawkishness of to-day. Society is clamoring for the song of unnatural sentiment and she is being served with the screeds of unholy love; she demands the thrill and she is given excitement that vitiates; she seeks constant exhilaration and she receives self-induced, illy-disguised frenzy. The legitimate, if wisely employed, element of syncopation (writing or uttering a note or phrase away from its natural accent) is pursued to its disgusting extreme and as a result "ragtime" is had among the masses in its fullest most atrocious measure. Even our churches believed they had to yield to the abnormal appeal for the artificial and its undue excitement, and instead of the beautiful, dignified, reverential hymns of our fathers we have the "modern" church song with its catchy lilt and its appeal to speedy popularity through the most primitive musical instinct, the love of rhythm, as evidenced in the tom tom beating of savagery. Disgustingly sentimental words, descriptive of attributes that neither God nor his worship can ever possess are set to tunes that are positively a "near relation" to ragtime, and made to serve as songs of worship.

"BEST SELLERS" AND WORST SMELLERS

Some one has said, "of the making of books there is no end" and it may with equal truth be said about the publishing of songs. The number put upon the market each year is positively appalling. It is a safe guess to say that out of every hundred put out there are not five that justify their existence. Music stores and department stores are crammed with them, dressed in gaudy colors and betitled in such way as to fascinate and attract; ranging from the "best sellers" to the worst smellers; and too often both qualities are found in the same piece.

What shall the harvest be? Amid all the vast and appalling array of that which is alluring, unwholesomely pleasing, unnaturally exciting, unduly stimulating riffraff of songs, how is the chaste and pure in music to thrive and prevail, and what is to be the effect upon the music of the future by such untoward influences?

There are some who maintain that the present deluge of popular songs is a healthy sign; that society is merely progressing through its accustomed development, and that out of the ruck and heap of music being put before the public there will come a distinctively American school of musical composition. We admit that society always goes forward in the long run, even though it many times has to go through the throes of travail, but why that way? We cannot conceive of the vitiatory and degrading as being in any way a part in contributing to the general uplift.

But what is the moral with which this tale shall be pointed? It is that Saints should as ever seek to discriminate and always choose the good. That those to whom God has given the divine charge to cultivate the gifts of music and song should seek to do it with music only of the best. In no other way can we whose creed is "all truth" honor the God of intelligence who bids us to come and partake of his glory.

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

Musical Gleanings from Near and Far

Singing is being made a feature in the Boy Scout's training, as tending to increase good will and enthusiasm as well as artistic appreciation.

A statue of Paderewski is to be the central figure in a group monument being erected in Warsaw in celebration of the new independence of the Polish nation.

An ex-British soldier has sent a letter to the Red Cross Institute for Crippled and Disabled Men, in which he begs that more music be composed suitable for playing with one hand.

His Majesty, the Emperor of Japan, recently bestowed the decoration of the Order of the Sacred Treasure upon four woman musicians, professors of the Musical Academy of Tokio. His Majesty also conferred on them the sixth Order of Merit for their services in musical education.

The National Association of Negro Musicians was recently organized to encourage art and composition of the colored race in this country. They have drawn their members and directors from all the states and propose to make this a very live society.

Wounded soldiers are being musically educated at the Music Settlement Schools all over the country under the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

Pope Clement IX wrote seven opera librettos. At one time in Rome, popes are said to have possessed a theater of high order with excellent scenery.

The Paris paper, La Figaro, has sent a call for six poems not more than thirty lines each, celebrating peace. These poems are to be set to music by such well-known composers as Brunneau, Faure, Messager, Saint-Saens, and Widor.

The first musical dictionary was published in 1703.

The pianos of Beethoven's time were nearly an octave shorter than the pianos of to-day. They had ten notes or keys less.

American Women to Promote Community Singing in Orient

So potent has been the influence of Occidental music in the Far East, particularly the Christian hymn, that it is actually causing widespread changes in the music of the natives. This very definite announcement, based upon first-hand reports from American missionaries, has just been made by the Interchurch World Movement, whose national headquarters are in New York City.

According to the reports, the squeaky notes of the average Chinese and Japanese orchestra are giving place to the strains of "Rock of Ages" and "Onward Christian Soldiers," and even the raucous noises of the Mongolian street band are being subdued into more musical sounds. The missionaries also state that it is always easy to draw a crowd of Orientals with a baby organ, no matter how antagonistic the people may be toward the Christian faith.

USE OF HYMNS IN INDIA

The Interchurch World Movement calls attention also to the growing popularity of Occidental hymns in India. The recent coronation procession of a maharajah in that country marched to the stirring strains of American gospel hymns played by the potentate's brass band. Christian music is said to have reached its highest development in Burmah, where Baptist converts among the natives have been trained for the past century in vocal and instrumental work.

BROAD WORK OF COMMISSION

Music has shown itself so important an evangelizing factor in the Oriental mission field, that a commission of prominent American women, headed by Miss Josephine Ramsay, a specialist in community music, is on its way for a six months' investigation of the question. Miss Ramsay and her commission will give special study to means of building up community choruses in the villages in India, China and Japan, methods of training oriental musicians and choir directors, and the translation of Christian hymns.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

A Square Deal

"Is your child getting a square deal? If not, what are you going to do about it?" In these words the new dodger, "What do growing children need?" just issued by the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor challenges every parent. In simple, concise language the essential requirements for the normal growth and development of the child are listed under the headings, Shelter, Food, Clothing, Health and Personal Habits, Play, Education and Work, Religion and Moral Training.

These simple standards include nothing that is not fundamental. It would be easy for the parent to check each item and discover in what respects, if any, his child is not getting what is absolutely necessary for his proper development.

While the average, well-to-do, intelligent parent could probably rate himself 100 per cent efficient in maintaining such standards as these for his children, it would be a fortunate community in which every child had correct weight for height; a safe, clean, roomy place for outdoor and indoor play; and schooling for at least nine months a year from 7 to 16 years of age; or even clean, whole garments and three square meals a day.

These dodgers can serve the community, as well as the parent, as the basis for a survey of its children. "Has your child these?" is a question not only for parents, but also for cities, towns, and villages. The children's rights, in a democracy, are without exception, all children's rights.—United States Bulletin.

Children Keep a Weather Calendar

If nature study is to be begun for the first time, the easiest introduction is by the time-honored topic of the weather, in conjunction with the day. A weather calendar naturally follows, the days being marked with appropriate colors and symbols, yellow for sunshine, grey for cloudy, kite for windy, umbrella for rainy, etc. The calendar may be decorated to represent the main nature study idea for the month, a snow scene for January, skating for February, etc.

Daddy has a newspaper every morning; why should not the children have one of their very own? Theirs can be a sheet of drawing paper hung beside the calendar, on which one of the children may draw a flower, etc. These drawings may not be works of art from the grown-up standpoint, but they aid the child to observe and to tell, as well as he is able, what he has seen. He should be shown where he can improve his work, but the original sketch should never be interfered with or criticized. A more accurate representation can be given in a separate lesson after the child has had a chance for further observation, but in no way connecting this with his first drawing on the calendar, lest he become discouraged or self-conscious and try to express something which he has not really seen.

To adopt a tree in springtime is another good plan. Have the children give the tree a name and so make of it a companion. Always include the family name of the tree. Frequent visits must be made to the tree because it cannot come to the children. Notice how the buds are arranged on the branches, which of them grow most rapidly; and what they turn into, leaves, flowers or branches. Try to discover if the tree has any other visitors; bright eyes will soon discover many. Play a game around the tree; sing to it.

"Time is never wasted listening to the trees;
If to heaven we arose as grandly as these,
Holding to each other half their kindly grace
Haply we were worthier our human place."

Because the child after making mud pies is told that his face is dirty, he naturally concludes that all soil is dirt. Point out to him that it is only when out of place that it is dirt, for in place it is the home of miracles, the matrix from which comes that wonderful force we call life. Let the children make experiments with different kinds of soil—clay, sand, loam. In this way they will become familiar with the names and textures of each.

Have the children notice the changes in the air, that it is hot in summer, cold in winter, dry in sunny weather, damp in rainy weather, calm, breezy or very windy. Explain why we should be careful to breathe only good air, breathe deeply and expand our lungs; that we live in the air as the fish live in the water; that birds fly up and down in the air as fish swim up and down in the water, that air is all above us just as the water is above the little water animals that crawl on the bottom of ocean or river.

Every child is familiar with water in many forms, but perhaps the wonders of its forms are so common that he has not noticed how miraculous they are. "We cultivate the imagination of our children by tales of the prince who became invisible when he put on his cap of darkness and who made far journeys through the air on his magic carpet and yet no cap of darkness ever wrought more astonishing disappearances than occur when this most common of our Earth's elements disappears from under our very eyes, dissolving into thin air." What child has not noticed the steam rising from the damp pavement when the sun comes out after a shower? The drops of water are donning their magic caps and flying off into the atmosphere to become invisible to our eyes. The next time we see them, it may be as part of the white clouds sailing across the blue sky. Then there is the magic power which brings back the vapor spirit to sight and touch. This magician's name is Cold or Jack Frost who transforms our water drops again and gives them many fancy shapes.

When the child sees so many things smaller and weaker than he, all doing something and making something, he too longs to join this busy world. He may well use such occupations as cutting, pasting, weaving and modeling, for the birds, trees and spiders do all these things, while the flowers are painted with colors taken from the sunbeams and from the earth.

Stories of animals and insects may be appropriately told to emphasize the nicety and exactness of work done by creatures so much more helpless than we, and in this way a desire to do good and accurate work will be stimulated.—MRS. BERTHA LEWIS, in Bureau of Engraving Bulletin.

Public health officials announce the discovery of another germ which is causing a plague-like disease. To discover a new species of germs is the first step in fighting the result. The one is called bacterium tularense. About two dozen cases of a peculiar disease have occurred among the rural population of Millard County, Utah, within the past three years. A fever, like that of ordinary blood poisoning, develops and lasts from three to six weeks. The patient becomes very sick and is confined to bed. The first case known to have ended fatally was reported in 1919.

Music In the Nursery

At a very early age the sense of rhythm develops. The love of soft, sweet sounds, accompanied by rhythmic motion, is utilized by Froebel in his "Mother Play," where the mother gently moves the baby limbs in time to a simple melody. Baby specialists are now advocating the giving of rhythmic exercises to the baby, beginning when he is about a year old and continuing throughout childhood. There can be no doubt that these rhythmic exercises with musical accompaniment not only develop the baby's muscles and improve his health, but benefit and also soothe his nerves, and in some subtle fashion put him into harmony with the rhythmic orderliness of the world about him.

Just as the baby enjoys rhythm before he himself can beat time, so also he enjoys melody long before he can carry a tune. Even a baby a year old, unable to express his art sense by drawing or modeling, will delight in chanting or humming little tunes of his own invention. Do not discourage the baby or make him self-conscious by laughing at these first efforts, or by publicly applauding them.

Now comes the time for the many charming motion-songs of kindergarten and other origin. Let the youngster delight his sense of rhythm by tramping sturdily about the nursery to a spirited march, by singing the rain-song while his tiny fingers imitate the falling drops, or by beating out an imaginary horseshoe while he sings about the blacksmith.

Great care should be taken to choose toys that are musical. Instead of an ear-piercing whistle, let brother have a melodious fife, or even a drum. And instead of providing baby sister with a spoon and a tin pan, why not let her have a xylophone on which to play with a padded stick?

Still more important, if possible, is the avoidance of harsh voices in the nursery. If our children heard only low, pleasant, well-modulated voices the force of imitation would change the American voice in a single generation.—Music and Childhood.

Influence of Happiness

When we go along the street and meet so many different countenances, attitudes, motions and behaviors, then we can discern the different conditions in which people live. We can tell what kind of homes they live in, what sort of wives, husbands or children they have, the character of their neighbors and their homes, too; the care of their homes and surroundings, and the order and beauty of the things that form their lives. In our tottering down street we met a beautiful woman, beautiful in face, form, dress, grace and manner. We say at once that she has a lovely home, a fine husband, interesting children, happy visitors, ample living. We wondered at once if these things made her so perfect or her sweet personality was part of her noble life. The latter, we were quite sure. We detected at once she was a religious woman, one whose life was up on the plane of the Golden Rule and the Beatitudes. There was not a particle of envy or vanity or discord in speech or manner. In fact, she seemed an entire harmony made up of sincere conviction and helpful life. She was like a sunburst in a cloudy day and the viewing of her made us feel better as we moved on through the motley crowd.—Ohio State Journal.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

News from German Saints

The Presidency is in receipt of a letter from Elder Gustav Huvendiek, of Hanover, reporting a conference of the German elders and members at that place, September 14. The report is in duplicate, German and English. The English version says:

"In a with flowers decorated hall in the church of Hanover, was at 10 o'clock a good visited Sunday school held. And at one o'clock in the afternoon all the elders met with prayers and great happiness, to deliberate over all things connected with the church."

A "German Elders' Colleague" was formed to look after the needs of the mission until the Presidency could be heard from. Hanover reports 82 members with 6 deaths; from 20 to 30 visitors at services. The conference was harmonious and happy. The German Saints report great hardship and suffering during the war and even till now on account of scarcity of provisions and houses; but are determined to prosecute the Lord's work.

Some Debating Activities

Matters are quite alive in my district (Eastern Oklahoma) by reason of the spasmodic condition of the nonprogressive wing of the Christian church. They remind me of the little bantam rooster, always ready for scraps, no matter what they are up against, if the bait is large enough.

On August 12 the Curtis-Chism Debate had its beginning near Fort Towson, Oklahoma; a grand victory for our cause, that being the third debate held at that place with that people.

On September 20 was the beginning and the ending of a twelve-night debate between our Elder J. W. Jackson and T. R. Vaughn at Broken Bow, Oklahoma, in the Christian church. That very first night Brother Jackson splintered his opponent's playhouse so badly that his congregation got their heads together the next day and by their vote closed their church house and stopped the debate, after having fully endorsed their man. We waited, counseled, and labored with them nearly a whole week to get them to hang fire, but they would not. As soon as we would remove one excuse, another would take its place.

About this time or before, I received a challenge from the same people of Apple Springs, Texas, and after considerable parleying, church propositions were signed, and our Elder J. W. Jackson of Dierks, Arkansas, met their Mr. F. J. Berry, of Frankston, Texas, and the fight was on, October 27, 7.30 p. m. and continued twelve nights in a tabernacle at Apple Springs, and if we are to judge the case by the sentiments of the people, the verdict would surely be in our favor by far.

Elder Jackson is a noble defender of the faith, and I have my doubts about Mr. Berry ever meeting him or any other of our elders till he thinks himself better informed. I would say Elder Berry, but he denied being an elder, after he had made the statement that an elder was not an elder only by reason of being old, and by the way, Jackson fixed that delusion for him, too, as well as his Brush Run Pennsylvania Pentecost church. The debate ended with seemingly good feelings on both sides; much prejudice was removed, friends were made who requested us to return at some future time and preach for them.

Waiting for another challenge, I remain,
As ever firm in the faith,
J. C. CHRESTENSEN.

Every Member a Tithe Payer

THE MOTIVE

Some men pay their tithe like some men hold their job, by holding it down instead of holding it up.

Don't pay your tithe to be safe—pay it to be of service to humanity.

GOOD ADVICE

The doctors will tell us that when we are sick not to quit work and keep on eating but to quit eating and keep on working.

Why is not this good advice for the Saint who is spiritually sick? Don't quit paying your tithing and begin to find fault, but refrain from finding fault and keep on paying your tithe.

SUPPLY AND DEMAND

"The man who loads only nine gallons of gasoline to take a ten-gallon trip might just as well have stayed at home. He has bucked up against the law of supply and demand." Just so the man who thinks he can supply the demand of God by paying only a part of his tithe will not be able to make his trip to celestial glory. The Lord's demand is that you pay one tenth (tithe) of your net increase. Nothing short of this will supply the demand.

THE SIZE OF THE MAN

We have read somewhere that "A small man can make a big job shrink to littleness, but it takes a big man to make a little job grow into a big one" and we think this is about so. To be a partner with God is a big job.

We have seen men try to make the paying of the tithe which is God's share of the profit in the partnership business, shrink to littleness. Unconsciously they were measuring in thunder tones their size.

We have seen other men pay their tithe no matter what the amount with such a spirit of generosity and love that the smallest payment has been as big as any check a multi-millionaire can draw.

North Dakota Mission

I am not as closely in touch with conditions in this northern mission as when I left three years ago, but having returned last June, I have tried to adapt myself as much as possible to present needs.

With a few exceptions, I may say the spirit of hardy pioneers, (using the term in both its material and spiritual sense), has not lost its old-time force. Speaking more particularly of the western half of the State, and this applies also to Eastern Montana, four successive crop failures still finds the people looking hopefully into the future.

Our summer reunion brought out about an average attendance. The presence of Brethren F. A. Smith, W. W. Aylor, and Augustine Dwyer with their diversified talent was appreciated, and next year's meeting to be held at Minot is looked forward to with joyful anticipation.

Despite the very early and severe winter, we are striving to keep up the regular branch meetings, Sunday school, and Religion.

The Boy Scout Movement, under the leadership of Brother McElwain, and musical training under Brother Mollison, show marked improvement. Graceland as an aid to development and efficiency is included in the future plans of many of the young, and when the sun of financial prosperity in the shape of golden grain fields revisit us as in the days of yore, there will be a substantial increase in the attendance from this State.

The ordination of three young men to the priesthood, was authorized at the late district conference. We hope and pray they will magnify their calling. The world is in great need of spiritually enlightened, consecrated young men to take the lead, with singleness of heart to the glory of God and welfare of the church.

Political strife is at fever heat in this State where the nonpartisan governor has taken over the large coal mines. The case was tested in the courts. Judge Amidon decided in favor of the State on the grounds of necessity. We have already had six weeks of winter and the thermometer ranging from 28 to 32 below in the last days of November, with high winds prevailing. Human lives were at stake. What man of sense and feeling but will agree the governor did right in keeping the mines at work, which he did, leaving politicians and capitalists to settle their differences later.

Several of our members have moved from the farms and small villages into the larger towns, especially Fargo, to obtain employment, and the branch at the latter place is considerably augmented thereby. Mrs. Sparling and myself go along with our daughter to the same place. Saints will learn my street number later.

WILLIAM SPARLING.

The Coal Strike

[An elder writes from the Kansas coal fields as follows]:

"In this section I have opportunity to see the coal strike in some of its phases. One thing is certain, that regardless of the merits of their claims or lack of merit, the miners will not return to work except under a contract satisfactory to them. Governor Henry J. Allen, whom I met when he lectured at Scammon on the 21st, has appealed to the men to return to work with the mines under State control, guaranteeing that they should receive whatever their new contract when made should allow them, but I have not seen the least inclination to yield.

"From our viewpoint in the gospel are seen more deep-rooted causes for these troubles than are commonly seen: The miners have just grievances against the operators, but on the other side the operators have just complaints against the miners. Some of these grievances are local and some general. The ungodliness of men and the consequent withdrawal of the Spirit of God leaves the way open for every form of difficulty to arise.

"The spirit of anarchy is rife among men and in this district an organization is now being effected under the title of The Communist Labor Party which holds among its principles the developing of the power of the workers, the abolishing of the existing political state and the establishing of the dictatorship of the proletariat. Locals are being organized and the appeal for new members is being made most strongly to the radical socialists to whom the old socialist party is too conservative and too tame. . . .

"During the two months last passed I have taken special care to teach the Saints the law given in the Scriptures as to their attitude toward the Government, and to warn especially the young men against the spirit of mobocracy and anarchy which is threatening the foundations of both civil government and church. Our church law does not admit of any principle or policy which weakens faith in the government, and the Saints ought to see that the destruction of the government means the destruction of our church also, for neither can exist where anarchy prevails."

Christmas the Time of Giving

During the Thanksgiving season, as I thought over the many things for which I was grateful I could but feel that one of the greatest blessings that could have come into my life was that the Sunday schools responded so nobly and so faithfully to the call we sent out. Your splendid cooperation and the sustaining influence of your prayers builded up my spirits and enthused me in my work. May God bless you all for this good support.

We are drawing near to the Christmas season, a time when we all desire to give something to our loved ones and friends, a time when the spirit of giving predominates, a time when we would be pleased to make all the world happy with a gift. Let us think for just a moment—who has done as much for us as our heavenly Father? Who has watched over and protected us when dangers hovered near, to whom do we owe our very existence, our all, and who offers us a home when we have passed into the future life? I need not answer these questions—you need not answer them. We all know.

Every Nation responded to the call of their Governments during the time of war. The people gave and gave, then sacrificed and gave some more. Can we be less loyal and true to our God, his church? Remember, this offering is for the building up of his kingdom here on earth. The building up of Zion that we may have a more safe and righteous place in which to dwell.

Would we have God withhold his support from us? Shall we withhold our support from him? Think it over. Christmas is nearing—the time of giving. Our aim this year is for $150,000; shall we content ourselves with giving less? Can you content yourself with less than your portion? Let us all join together and give to God's church this one great Christmas gift that he may rejoice with us on this most glorious of all days.

If you are not a member of the Sunday school, or if your Sunday school has not taken up actively, the offering work we will be very glad indeed to have you enter personally into this movement for your assistance and your help is needed if we are going to be successful in our efforts. Do not wait for some one else to set the example, be a leader, one whom others may follow without regret. Don't see how little you can give to this offering, but do your best according to your circumstances.

Watch the church papers for announcements. Let us hear from your school; tell us what you are doing. Now, altogether—with one grand charge for "over the top." Come on.

Do not send any checks, money orders or drafts to the writer, but send all returns to Benjamin R. McGuire, Independence, Missouri.

Merry Christmas! Happy New Year! With God's blessings.
ARTHUR W. SMITH.

While less than six per cent of the population of India can read and write, still one half of one per cent are enrolled in the secondary schools and universities, so that India ranks in higher education next to England and Wales, and even above France or Japan.

NEWS AND COMMENT

According to an Australian trade representative recently quoted in the news dispatches, "Australia continues peaceful, placid and prosperous." In other words, the wave of high prices and industrial unrest has not affected that land at all seriously. There are three wheat crops ready to market; returned soldiers are paid $10 a month till employment is found.

New York State is considering taking charge of the whole milk situation of production and distribution. A meeting was held of men representing the producers, distributors, consumers, and public officials, and a majority approved the legislative act of making the production of milk a public function, and having the State fix the price.

Lord Leverhulme, speaking on the partnership of labor and capital in business is reported to have said: "Why should all the profits go one way, and all the work go another? Why shouldn't we divide the stream, and let the profits go, some portion to the stockholders and another portion amongst the staff who are engaged in the business? . . . If anyone approaches the subject with the idea of adopting copartnership and profit-sharing as the best way to increase his profits, he will make an utter failure of it. If he approaches the subject with the idea that there is something finer than dividends and something higher than big profits, namely, making finer men and women, it will be a success."

The International Labor Conference which convened at Washington for the last three weeks of November, adjourned on November 29. It is the first such conference to be held, and is remarkable for the fact that it was held in America, but American labor did not take part in it. Among the results agreed upon was the eight-hour working day, and the fourteen year age limit for children. They also provided for a government body and international labor office, and for future conferences. Special provisions were made for countries in which industry is only partly developed. Thus a working day of nine and one half hours for Japan was a decided gain.

Despite the oppressive signs of the times there is still apparent the strong undercurrent of democracy and greater freedom of peoples. In Belgium this has caused the overthrow of the house of the Clerical Party, even though led by so popular a leader as Cardinal Mercier. There is a large gain in the number of seats held by the Radicals and the Socialists in the Belgium Senate. This is only one of the signs out of many.

In Massachusetts in the first five months, the fees derived since prohibition are already equal to more than half of the fees derived from liquor licenses, while additional savings are becoming apparent from time to time. The first big saving is in the jails and criminal courts.

The Public, which has indeed been a "Journal of Democracy" has discontinued publication, the unexpired subscriptions being taken over by The New Republic. We shall seriously miss this fearless weekly with its frank discussions of the real issues in democracy, and only wish it might have continued its good work.

A large department store for their 12,000 employees is to be erected by the American Woolen Company at Lawrence, Massachusetts. It is understood the store will be conducted on the cooperative basis and that the employees will have the privilege of buying necessities at cost. There was such great interest in the purchase of foods from the recently offered army supplies that this movement is the result.

A bill has been introduced in Congress by Martin L. Davey, member from Ohio, proposing drastic steps in dealing with sedition. The department of justice found no existing laws to meet the emergency in deporting undesirable aliens, even when they had been convicted of sedition. This bill provides for denaturalization and subsequent deportaton. It is a sad condition when the Government must allow all manner of outrages on our institutions and representatives because we have no adequate statutes for dealing with such offenses. We have no doubt Congress will take speedy action in this matter that the festering sore may not become a cancer and eat out the vitals of American life.

The London Daily Times of November 18 features some gloomy comments by Canon Peter Bren who lately declined the bishopric of London in the Church of England. He deplores the fact that the leaders of the church seemed to have no conception of the extent to which the great masses of the people were out of contact with all forms of organized religion. Not only is it true of one class, but all of them are affected. He quotes a vicar in a northern town who says: "I am appalled not merely at the indifference but at the hostility to the church of the whole body of workers." Accepting for argument's sake the suggestion that it was but a temporary effervescence following the war, the canon asserted that the only real course of safety lies in the entire democratization of the church, yet he was not sure but that it was too late. He regarded support of the Life and Liberty Movement and the Enabling Bill as of the utmost importance to the churches; otherwise dark days from antichurch legislation is apt to ensue.

Because of the urgent need of conservation of paper to prevent a complete depletion of stocks, publishers in Kansas and Missouri have adopted resolutions requesting the Government, either by legislation or executive order from the post office department, to forbid issuance of comic supplements and magazine sections.

Public ownership of utilities is possible now in forty-two States of the Union. Eight hundred and fifty towns and cities in the United States are successfully operating electric light plants, and municipally owned plants are increasing more rapidly than those owned by private corporations, according to the Municipal League, of Georgia, which is seeing to it that use is made of the possible 2,000,000 horse power waste now allowed in the rivers of the State.

In the Eastern District of Missouri, December 5, the United States District Court sitting at Saint Louis, ordered an injunction against the officers acting under the War Prohibition Act to prevent sale of whisky. As a result a large amount was sold that week end. The issue will doubtless be decided soon by the United States Supreme Court. However by January 16 the Eighteenth Amendment takes effect, and it will no longer be a question of wartime prohibition.

One of the most far-reaching industrial struggles in our time ended in the acceptance on the 10th of President Wilson's proposal that the miners accept a 14 per cent increase of

AT THE OFFICE

The reduction of size in some of the type used in the present issue of the HERALD, and which will likely be continued, increases the amount of material used about one sixth, or four pages on the regular twenty-four used. With the print paper shortage so serious, and the possibility of running out of stock before the supply ordered months ago arrives, we are glad we can do this and take one of the necessary steps in our Bigger and Better Herald. However, we expect to make good the promise of "bigger" even in size as occasion demands when our paper arrives.

Order your Christmas gifts from us as early as possible. The mail service is greatly curtailed, and we fear all who order late will be disappointed, even though the orders are filled on the date of arrival.

Sunday school and Religio Quarterlies are being mailed this week. Be sure they have not arrived at your postoffice before writing us. Oftentimes there is confusion because of several different people ordering, each disregarding what the other has done.

The management expresses its appreciation of the splendid cooperation on the part of the employees which alone has made it possible to meet the demands made upon us during the last two months. The printing business has had no end of troubles for sometime, but we are almost up to the requirements of the trade. In another month we expect to see things normal again.

Matthew W. Liston, our energetic agent at Flint, Michigan, sent us orders during 1919 to the amount of $855.30. It is that kind of spirit of cooperation which will insure success in all departments of church work. We will be pleased to have other agents compute the total of last year's orders.

wages and resume work at once. In the meantime a commission composed of one practical miner, one operator, and another person will formulate a permanent basis of wage and price adjustment, attend to immediate needs for equalization of wage scale, and report within sixty days on their findings. Though the situation is greatly relieved in the resumption of work by the miners, a coal shortage will continue to exist all winter, and the fuel administration intends to see that proper conservation is had, and urges the utmost care on the part of the general public in the use of fuel.

Health Sunday was observed all through the United States December 7. By public education it is hoped that better health may result throughout the world.

President Wilson in his message lays marked stress on cooperative bargaining as a basis of justice to labor. He also emphasized the need of democratization of industry and the present labor unrest.

The rapid increase of tobacco-using among the women of England is frequently commented on in the press notices of to-day. Recent items from England insist that men not only do not disapprove of the habit among the womenfolk but actually encourage it. We are assured by some editors that these dispatches are originated by tobacco interests in this country to produce the general idea that the custom is receiving universal sanction, but we know from several unbiased sources that the conditions exist, whatever the causes or results. This church was warned against the use of the weed long before medical science had so thoroughly demonstrated the harmful effects of its use. The insidious advances it makes toward our young people should be met with a strong barrier of well-grounded information and sentiment from those fortunate enough to have been warned.

FROM HERE AND THERE

FROM THE BRANCHES

Attleboro, Massachusetts. The church building is to have a new roof; the various auxiliaries of the branch have raised over $200 for this purpose. The Saints of the Massachusetts District are solicited to contribute to the district Sunday school paper, The Gleaner, edited by Sister Gertrude Robbins, of 17 Hodges Street, Attleboro, Massachusetts. She is also editor of the local Religio paper. Any news of general interest in the branches is asked for. Efforts are being increased to bring the Sunday school Christmas offering "over the top." E. B. Hull, pastor, recently used for sermon subjects: "Making excuses, and taking things for granted," and "Need of changing our tastes." The church was well filled with members and friends.

Wiley, Colorado. Since the visit of Brother J. C. May in 1915 this branch has taken on new activity. The branch was organized in 1919, with a membership of 37. To-day the membership is 113 and they have a new church that with equipment cost $3,000, and it was dedicated in October with Brethren Sutton and J. D. Curtis present. Since then money has been raised for additional equipment. Regular meetings include preaching, Sunday school, prayer meetings, Religio normal study.

Burlington, Iowa. Two baptisms recently. The "United Workers," the organized men's class in Religio, had an oyster supper to help defray expenses of their new printing press. They want to use the latter in tract work in the city. A movement is on foot to have union Protestant and union Catholic services at the churches during the coal shortage if wood can be secured. The Saints believe they can get the necessary wood for their services.

Stockton, California. The Saints have been making improvements on their building and surroundings regularly commensurate with their means. The latest, not yet complete, is an Oregon pine floor in the basement. The Woman's Auxiliary has most loyally assisted in such movements and announce the sale of home-made food, fancy and useful articles on the 20th. H. J. Davison, pastor, visited Chico lately, and attended Thanksgiving service. While he is absent Priests Roy Snively and A. Kern keep up the preaching services in Stockton. The Temple Builders are reputed to have definite plans regarding individual communion set.

Pisgah, Iowa. Sunday school, preaching, Religio and sacrament the first Sunday of the month are on Pisgah's program. An oyster and ice cream supper was recently given under auspices of one of the young people's Sunday school classes, and netted over $60 for the Christmas offering. Norman E. Hield, of Janesville, recently visited the place and preached twice. Joseph Seddon, of Woodbine, will begin a series of meetings on the 14th. Mrs. Jess Nuzum was recently shot by her four-year-old son who was playing with a gun. She was the mother of ten children, nine living.

Soldiers Grove, Wisconsin. The correspondent suggests that when meetings are held the elder to occupy is expected to be there and fulfill his obligations. Should he have more responsibility than the individual members of the congregation? is the question propounded.

Rich Hill, Missouri. Elder H. E. Moler, district president, and Elder Lee Quick, missionary, recently held a series of services at this place. The effect on the Saints was good, and the flock built up and strengthened.

McGregor, Michigan. Good Thanksgiving services were held. In the afternoon, after preaching in the morning, an institute session was held for Sunday school and Religio. Severe storms were in progress at the time of writing this letter, with considerable damage from high winds.

Second Saint Joseph, Missouri. Five were baptized on the 30th. The church was filled to capacity in the evening, with preaching by the pastor, J. L. Bear. The Religio held its session at Sister Whitlow's, about thirty being present. About three thousand invitation cards have been sent out, inviting friends to attend services (the time and character being noted) and it is bringing results. They plan to send them out again about the middle of January.

Independence, Missouri. The coal shortage has seriously affected the meetings, none but day services on Sunday being allowed. Preaching has been done in cottage meetings. On the 7th President F. M. Smith, Pastor W. W. Smith, and Bishop B. R. McGuire presented to a large congregation many stirring and practicable features of church doctrine, such as common consent in government stewardship, and strict loyalty to the accepted faith in all things pertaining thereto. The reports of the missionaries are enlisting the very thoughtful attention of the Saints.

Scranton, Pennsylvania. In October a rally day was held, with a large crowd at all the services. Several talks and papers were had, and were very inspiring. At the close, two were baptized. E. J. Gleazer was a speaker, and introduced a series of meetings which were held the following week, with a fair number of nonmembers in attendance. On November 23 "Family Day" was held, which has been one of the favorite days in the branch for the past few years. At the prayer service two manifestations of the Spirit were had. Five were baptized that evening, three adults.

Valley, Idaho. The prayer meetings were well attended, especially by the young people. The Saints are very busy attending to the Lord's work and building the kingdom. A Doctrine and Covenants class meets Monday evenings and has recently discussed section 83. The Religio is giving special attention to the lessons, but in addition have some interesting programs by the young.

Webb City, Missouri. The branch has been materially reduced in number by the removal of members on account of the closing of the lead and zinc mines. The loss is keenly felt because in a branch of this size all are needed. At the recent election of branch officers the presiding officer was given full charge of the work, under the present recognized system. That is, there is no presiding priest or teacher. Some are investigating the work, following the series of meetings by Lee Quick.

Uniopolis, Ohio. The membership is near fifty, well scattered. Two collections are taken up at Sunday school, one for the school and one for branch needs. It seems to be a good method of keeping money on hand for time of need. Social service is held after Sunday school, the Saints believing that in harmony with the Doctrine and Covenants. Opportunities for employment are good.

Bishop R. May writes from London on November 21, saying that he had just completed the purchase of a hall at a great bargain. It will be remodeled for church purposes.

Though there have been some very narrow escapes, the electric light plant in Lamoni has been able to continue its service with some restrictions, and the Herald Publishing House has been permitted to continue. The schedule for some days has been from noon till 9 p. m., on account of heating facilities, but on the morning of the 15th all restrictions in Iowa were removed. Enough coal was on hand to last till 3 p. m. but two cars were left at 11 a. m. so normal conditions may soon prevail.

Editor S. A. Burgess spent a week in Saint Louis, Missouri, recently, on business.

Brother D. Amos Yates is reported as a welcome visitor in San Bernardino Branch. He is arranging for cottage meetings to be held in the homes of the Saints. Friends and neighbors are to be invited to attend with their Bibles, and study the word of God. All will be privileged to ask questions and the round table effect sought.

ECONOMIC OUTLOOK

There seems to be a spirit of distrust, that makes adequate leadership difficult.

As a result we are confronted with what may easily prove to be the most terrible winter the world has seen since the Thirty Years' War, and the difficulties existing at that time added to by anarchy and distrust.

Alberta Sunday school with South Edmonton Branch, December 19, 1919, 2 p. m. Meeting place one block south of post office. District officers, please report. Minnie Burton, secretary, Ribstone, Alberta.

The Presidency

It will be remembered that notice was published after the spring conference covering the matter of reports by all General Conference appointees to the effect that the weekly letter was to be continued and that in addition thereto a monthly statistical report was expected. These reports are to be addressed to The Presidency, Box 255, Independence, Missouri.

It is to be regretted that there are many delinquencies in this matter of reporting and the general authorities are constantly under the necessity of reminding those who are backward in this matter. A form letter has been prepared which will be mailed to all who fail to report promptly, which is as follows:

"According to the instructions issued governing the matter of reporting, a weekly letter and monthly statistical report is expected from every General Conference appointee, addressed to The Presidency, Box 255, Independence, Missouri. All weekly letters and reports of missionaries are passed to the Quorum of Twelve for reading and attention, those from local appointees being scrutinized by the Presidency.

"The files show you have failed to comply fully with the instructions, and this is to urge you to make consistent effort to do so, for these letters and reports are necessary. Please be prompt, and when making statistical monthly report, it is requested that under the heading 'Remarks' you give a brief survey of the work performed and the places visited in the month, as this information is of material assistance in making out the official reports of the various departments concerned."

It is to be hoped that those who receive this notice of delinquency will make prompt effort to comply with the request contained therein. Respectfully submitted,

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Frederick M. Smith.

The Bishopric

BISHOP'S AGENT

To the Saints of the Northeastern Kansas District: The year 1919 has almost drawn to a close, and those of you who have not as yet enlisted under the 1919 banner as a tithe payer must not procrastinate. The total receipts in the district for the year has been very gratifying; but the increase of tithe payers is not what it should be. The political and social conditions of the world cause a heavy drain upon the resources of the church to alleviate the distresses of the unfortunate ones. The bishopric not only need the means you place at their command, but your concordant assistance. Will you do your part by enlisting in the noble work?

FRANK G. HEDRICK,
Bishop's Agent.

FANNING, KANSAS.

Pastoral Notices

To the Missionaries, Local Men and Saints of Kewanee and Nauvoo Districts: Having been appointed by the Quorum of Twelve to supervise the missionary work in the above-named districts, I wish the cooperation of all of you, because by working together we will be able to accomplish more. If you want special meetings in your branch, please let us know, or if isolated, and there is an opportunity to get the gospel before the people, write to the undersigned, and we will try to fill the need.

The hastening time is upon us, and we should heed the admonition, "He that is warned, warn his neighbor." Have you observed that to the limit of your possibility?

I hope and pray that you will feel free to write to me, as that is the only way I will be able to get in touch with the work in some places.

Yours for the advancement of truth,

OSCAR WILLIAM OKERLIND.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

Wanted: Consecrated and Able Men

"Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

There was a time in the history of the church when one of the chief factors, perhaps the greatest factor in the success of a man's ministry was his ability to preach. The preaching of the gospel must ever remain one of the chief functions of the church, and the power to declare the word acceptably a priceless endowment. And yet, as the organization and work of the church become more complex and farreaching many other factors enter into the work of the ministry.

The necessity for men of executive ability becomes more and more pronounced in all departments. This is true in branches and districts, many of which languish for the lack of leadership. One man with ability to organize and lead out can transform an entire local congregation, or an entire district or stake. It also is true in the auxiliaries, and in the missions.

To illustrate the variety of questions that must be met and studied and mastered, if we are to succeed, we refer to a rather voluminous and remarkable report recently made to the First Presidency by Apostles Rushton and Hanson, covering the situation in the Society Islands and adjoining islands. Not all the questions studied by them can be mentioned here, but we have made a notation of some of them, as follows:

Economic conditions of the natives: The natives have been brought into a condition of bondage to the traders amounting to serfdom or peonage. Dependent upon the traders for supplies, they must sell their copra and shell at prices fixed according to the whim of the traders, and pay at company stores for all commodities at prices fixed by the same standard. The burden of debt quickly accumulated on company books holds them in thrall to the will of the trader, and may, eventually, besides eating up the man's life in toil, also eat up any property holdings in the way of a home. Under these circumstances what can be done to help our native Saints toward independence? To what extent, under French law, could the church engage in commercial activities? What steps should be taken, if any?

Moral conditions: White men have been no less slow to exploit the natives morally. The natives have their own natural weakness to contend against, in addition, all nationalities among the traders, travelers, transients, and foreign officials, both great and small, have persistently debauched native womanhood and girlhood. As a result, moral standards are very low, and the shame is upon white men more than upon the natives. Venereal diseases are prevalent—in some islands it is said that ninety per cent are affected.

In the Marquesas Islands it is said there were thirty thousand natives in 1897; now there are scarcely three thousand. Disease, drink, opium, and vice have made the change. Boys and girls of eight and nine are delinquent. Unmarried young people are given over to promiscuity. It is a native tradition that young girls who remain chaste will sicken and die. Once grown and married, the natives generally remain continent—but if one should die the other is then likely to go wrong again.

Under these conditions we can save our own Saints only by extreme vigilance. What can the church do to combat this situation? What steps had best be taken? Again, should we enforce the law touching what we know as the "second offense" rigorously in the islands as we do in America? We have back of us two thousand years of Christian teaching on morals. The natives have had only a very short period, and during that time have been more victimized than ministered to. Must they be held to the same strict account? When a boy or girl, thus surrounded by such an environment and such traditions, twice falls into iniquity and confesses, but later, in mature years, fully realizes the nature of the sin and forsakes it, is the church door forever closed? Is there any "balm in Gilead" for such?

The missionary force: What are the needs of the mission in the way of men? How many missionaries should be sent over next year? The apostles recommend that at least five should be sent, besides the bishop and mission president.

What should be the qualifications of the missionaries to the islands? The apostles say that they should be married men, not over forty years of age, students, deliberate, tactful, of good judgment, moral, intelligent, spiritual. They should have had some manual or vocational training; with an elementary understanding of hygiene, sanitation, domestic economy; and one of them should be a musician. The women should understand nursing. Those now taking the course in Graceland who may go to the islands, if there are any, are advised to study the bibliography of the Polynesian races (that part from Brother Rushton's pen) also the French language, and social and official etiquette.

How long should men remain in the mission? The apostles say not longer than five years. How long should they remain away from the General Conferences? Not longer than two years, we are told.

Mission headquarters: Our present mission headquarters are at Taronā, Papeete, on rather low ground, subject to frequent damage by tidal waves, and in an undesirable quarter. Should they be changed? A tract of high ground in a very desirable quarter, consisting of five or six acres, with buildings, can be purchased. Should we take it over? If so, how should the project be financed, until we can dispose of the property now in our possession?

Children's home: A movement has been on foot for some time to establish a home for children in the islands. Is it practicable? How should it be financed and conducted? Might such a home be used in the campaign to combat juvenile delinquency? Could boys there be prepared for later entrance to Graceland College? If started at all, where should it be located?

The island press: Is there need for a local board of publication? What tracts and other literature, including hymn books, should be published? What field is there for the Te Orometua as a mission paper? What is needed by the local plant in the way of presses, pressmen, etc.?

Removal of natives to Zion: Is the time near when any considerable number of the native Saints should come to America? Could they adapt themselves to our customs, environment, climate, and food? What would be their status as citizens? What their social status? How would they be received by our own people and others? Could they become economically independent here? Could they be happy anywhere, except in the land of the sea and the coconut?

We have made these notations from the report of the two apostles for two reasons: first, they contain some items of interest and information that our readers may enjoy; second, they illustrate our subject by indicating the great variety of problems met and studied by two of the apostles in a rather brief stay in one mission. Evidently the mere preaching of the word was but a part of their work. Executive ability and a wide range of knowledge and information were required to pass upon these matters and others not mentioned—giving just a hint as to the dignity and responsibility of the office of apostle in the mission field.

Every mission as it is opened up will bring its own great list of complex problems—Mexico, South America, South Africa, France, India, Japan—each will bring its own problems. Hence the need that men should be making preparation. Hence the wide range of studies assigned by the Lord to the eldership, in Doctrine and Covenants, that they might "be prepared in all things." Hence the need that executive ability should be developed. Hence the need for consecration and inspiration. No one need fear that he will not be allowed to use ability, power, authority, when he is in condition to do so—for the world is calling, the harvest is great and the laborers are few.

At home, the development of the stakes, and the building up of Zion, together with the grave problems associated therewith, calls for men of marked ability, as well as men of devotion and prayer. Trained men, able men, broad-minded, big men are needed. We believe that God will call such men, and equip them, and assist the church to equip and develop them. And when they are at hand, bigger and better, and more able to grapple the situation than those now in authority, let us step aside with a sigh of relief and help in some humbler capacity.

We have great hopes for the young men now coming on—unknown men, perhaps, some of them. But our brightest hopes are for the children of Saints, traditioned in the story of the latter-day glory, consecrated from birth by parental prayers, called of God to fill important places and finish the work of their fathers.

The Birthday of the Prince of Peace

Once more the short passage of the year has brought the day on which we celebrate the coming of the Son of Man to earth. He appeared in the eyes of men as an innocent, helpless babe; but in the eyes of God he was the only begotten of the Father, the Prince of Peace, Lord of Lords, the Son of God. That was the day of greatest significance since the world was.

A year ago we were able to celebrate it as the end of the world war. It was so near to that event that we realized little more than the fact that the great quiet meant the guns on the western front were no longer tolling the passage from life of the sons of men. The world has only begun to realize once more the soft tones of the church bells calling us to worship.

The year that has passed has been one of tremendous stress. The Peace Conference has met and adjourned. Many of the leading nations have signed the Treaty of Peace, even though America has not as yet. It has been and still is a time of great unrest and uncertainty. But with it there has also been a deeper appreciation of man's fellowship with men and a greater realization of the necessity of co-operation; a growing hunger for service. When all things are in motion, all things are possible. What changes will be brought forth the wisdom of man does not know. But there is a unanimity of opinion that there will be a new world of some kind.

A League of Nations has become a possible fact, even though there are objections to some details of that document, as there always are to every forward movement; even though it is probable that time will show the need of amendments and changes. Still it marks a great human stride in advance that mankind has not only discussed, but the rulers of the nations have formulated such a document, and that in the opinion of the majority of thinking mankind, the League of Nations is not only a possibility but a necessary.

All of this signifies a desire for peace. It is not alone a selfish desire, but is part of the broad realization of the sonship of man and the fatherhood of God.

In far-away Bethlehem once the shepherds heard the angels sing, while they saw the glorious presence of the messenger of the Lord. There still wait the shepherds on the plains, though to them there comes not again the angels, and there is no heavenly choir. Yet for the second time in many centuries, the nations again celebrate that natal day in the fair town of Bethlehem under Christian rule. Again there rings forth, if not from angels, still from the word of God, the words, "Fear ye not, for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, who is Christ the Lord. . . . Glory to God in the highest; and on earth, peace; good will towards men." (Luke 2:10, 11, 14.)

At the spot where it is believed he was born, there was erected years ago, the Church of the Nativity. Under the choir loft of that church, down twelve steps there is still preserved the place where it is believed he was born, and on a silver star placed to mark the spot, the words are inscribed in Latin, "Hic de virgine Maria Jesus Christus natus est." Which in English means, "Here was born of the Virgin Mary Jesus the Christ."

The fact that a British soldier stands guard in that room only emphasizes that the great war has been not only the triumph of democracy over autocracy, but it also has been the successful crusade of Christianity to free that land from the Turks.

But these outward signs are only the symbols of the great, tremendous fact that once the Son of God left his throne on high and came as man to bring humanity back to God, and open up to us the possibility of sonship with God, and brotherhood with him, insomuch as we are brothers one with another.

With him there is no delight in war. When he reigns, peace will be established in all of the earth. When he came in the meridian of time, the temple of Janus was closed, and the world was at peace; and he comes again to restore to the world a like condition.

A change is not necessarily an improvement. A new thing is not necessarily better. But he will bring a new world which will be a better world, since it will be a restoration to the divine plan, and from it will be purged all iniquity and all that destroys or harms.

We give gifts to one another to celebrate his natal day, because we are all members of one common family, and thus we may signify our love for him. But we should not forget to give to his little ones, nor our gift of self and means to him, as from our hearts we breathe in fervent prayer, "Glory to God in the highest; on earth, peace; good will to men."

A Correction

---

In the HERALD of December 3 appeared an extract from a sermon on tithing without credit. The line giving the information we intended to accompany the article was as follows: "Delivered by Elder W. H. Deam, at Enoch Hill church, Independence, Missouri, August 17, 1919."

Interchurch World Movement

We have in previous HERALDS indicated the survey being made throughout the United States, county to county, community by community. The information should be valuable when completed. Church conciliation; movements for civic betterment; charitable, educational, and religious work in each community.

We are now in receipt of a letter from Professor George H. Von Tungeln, Professor of Sociology, at the Iowa State College, Ames, Iowa. Professor Von Tungeln has charge of the work in Iowa, and states he is in position to give college credit in the department of Rural Sociology, for the work done by qualified students.

He incloses a letter signed by Roscoe C. Edlund, 111 Fifth Avenue, New York City, who is in charge of the personnel work for the whole United States. Professor Edlund states that there is need of a number of men with training in sociology, statistics, and economics; men connected with church work, or who are at least sympathetic with church work. Many of these men will be salaried; in addition thereto a number of volunteers will be needed in local communities. Those who give full time will be paid. Those not available for full time work, but who can give voluntary service should also write to Professor Edlund at the address given.

A Trip Among the Indians of Oklahoma

Some of the same reasons which indicated the wisdom of my recent trip to the Omaha Reservation also suggested a trip into Oklahoma, and about it I had written Brother Hubert Case, for upon him I depended to arrange for some meetings. On November 14 Brother Case and I left Kansas City on the Rock Island, bound for Kingfisher, Oklahoma. Fifty-three a. m. is a bit early to leave one's bunk, but the Firefly's stop at Kingfisher is but a short one, so we had to be ready to detrain at 6.09 a. m. But when we stepped from the train at Kingfisher into the clear, crisp air we experienced the euphoria nearly every healthy person does who gets up "bright and early." Rather strange, isn't it, how naturally proud one feels to be "up with the sun" or before. Day was just breaking, and the bright stars indicated a cloudless sky and promise for a good day. The conspicuous constellations of Ursa Major and Orion gave us our directions, and the friendly greeting of Brother Sorden made us feel welcome. He was waiting for us, and soon his car was steadily carrying us into the lightning east. Two miles from Kingfisher we found the ever-present welcome for missionaries at the Sorden home—and refreshments.

The forenoon was spent in work on the mail I carried along, and chatting "church" with the folks. After lunch we were taken to town and put into the care of Brother A. R. Smith, who assumed the task of taking us to Victor Bushyhead's, some twenty-five miles south and west of Kingfisher, where a meeting was to be held. Near the middle or latter part of the afternoon Brother Smith started on the trip, and it was well after dark when we finally found Victor's place. And we had some road experience the last few miles. At Victor's Brother Smith left Brother Case and me and returned to Kingfisher.

Brother Bushyhead extended to us the usual Indian greeting, quiet but cordial to one who understands Indian ways. After shaking hands with those present, we were soon informed the meeting was about to begin. We knew from past experience what the meeting would be like, so we prepared for it by laying off our overcoats and hats and throwing over our shoulders the Indian blankets furnished us.

The tepee, erected south of the house, was a good one, and spacious. Much larger than the one we were in on the Omaha reservation; yet at the start it was crowded, for more came than were expected. Brother and Sister Ed. Dillon came in soon after the services began, and Brother and Sister Keuffer, and Brother and Sister Miller. Only a part could find room, so the rest went to the house.

We have spoken previously of these peyote ceremonies. They are distinctly religious, and extend throughout the night. Symbolism plays a prominent part in all Indian religions, and the peyote ceremonies are no exception. It would be quite difficult to describe them here. Just where the peyote religion originated it is difficult to say, but so far as its ceremonies among the American Indians are concerned, they seem to have come from some Mexican tribes taken up by the Indians of the Southwest have spread northward and eastward, until few tribes do not have them. The ceremonies vary somewhat from tribe to tribe. I noted quite marked differences between those of the Cheyennes and those of the Omahas, though on the whole they were alike.

Prayers and sacred songs are the dominating features. Before entering the tepee the participants form "Indian file" before the door to the tepee (always on the east) and as the already blazing sacred fire in the center of the tent casts its flickering light through the canvas walls upon the silent worshipers it has a strange effect upon one as he listens to the intonations of the leader who stands before the tent and devoutly prays that Powhattan or Manitou (God) may bless the meetings to all who enter, that good may come to each, especially to their sick ones.

From the moment the chief begins his prayer before the tent till the formal dismissal after sunrise, everything within the tent is ceremoniously governed, and solemnly and religiously done, except when short recesses are taken.

Among the Cheyennes tobacco enters into the ceremonies, and to roll a cigarette and solemnly smoke at least four puffs is expected of each worshiper. The smoking is at times the prelude to prayer. After the first "holy smoke" in the Cheyenne ceremonies, the first of the peyote is eaten. Each person is handed two or more (depending on the quantity on hand) of the herbs, and these are solemnly eaten. Following this the singing begins. The chief starts it. Holding in the left hand a staff, called "Aaron's staff," one end resting on the ground between the singer and the fire, the same hand holding a wisp of sage and at times some sacred feathers, the rhythm of the song is accompanied by the shaking of a rattle in the right hand. Each singer sings four songs, being accompanied by a drummer at his right. The four songs finished, the staff and rattle and drum are passed to the left, and another singer and drummer take up the singing. The staff thus makes the rounds, always passing to the left, and the singing is thus kept up till midnight, interrupted at times for prayers and speeches. In the meantime, the fire in the center is skillfully attended by the "fire chief," the bed of coals being carefully shaped into whatever design may suit the fancy of the fireman. On this bed of coals is sprinkled the incense used with prayers.

After the first general eating of peyote, the number consumed is left to individual inclination, the user securing by request from the chief the number desired. The eating is accompanied by prayer, and while one is eating no person is permitted to pass between the one eating and the fire or the crescent on which rests the chief peyote.

At midnight a change is made in the program while two special ceremonies are performed. At a signal blown on a whistle made from an eagle's bone, a pail of water is brought in by the wife or daughter of the chief, and this water is "blessed" or consecrated by solemn and deliberate prayers by the chief and the water carrier, then passed around and drank. During the drinking, speeches are usually made. The other midnight ceremony is the prayer offered by the chief outside the tent at each of the cardinal points of the compass.

The water having gone around and been taken out, the chief returns to his seat, the singing is resumed, and, interspersed with prayers, is kept up till about four o'clock a. m., when the water ceremony is repeated.

At daybreak the daylight songs are sung, and at sunrise the closing songs are sung, when food—four kinds—is brought in ceremoniously, ceremoniously blessed, and partaken of in common. After dismissal the worshipers file out in certain order, and the ceremonies are over.

At various times in the night at Victor Bushyhead's we were called on to participate in prayer and speech, and did so, and told of our faith, and also of the proposed legislation at Washington. We again spoke of our pleasure in sensing the religious spirit present, and felt sure that while we saw the appeal this peyote religion made to the Indian heart, in time it would give place to a better religion.

Sometime about eight or nine o'clock Sunday morning, the 16th, the meeting was over, and after getting something to eat we again met with the Indians to discuss matters having to do with the Washington matter. In the meantime, however, I got my camera busy, and secured pictures of the tent, the crowd of worshipers, of Victor Bushyhead, Percy Cable and Skunk Neck, and other interesting characters. I left with them a paper I wanted them to sign, and about 11 o'clock we left Victor's in the car with Brother and Sister Keuffer and son and Phillip Cook, and drove about fifteen miles north and west, to the home of Mrs. Earrings, mother of John Bull who is one of our members, where another meeting had been held. There we met John Bull and his wife Inez, and his mother, and Reuben Taylor, and several others. There, too, we held a meeting and Brother Case and I spoke to them, Brother Cook acting as interpreter.

At this place Brother Cook left us, and Brother and Sister Keuffer took us to El Reno, en route to Oklahoma City. At El Reno, about three o'clock Brother Keuffer took us to a restaurant for a meal, the first full meal for Brother Case and me in twenty-four hours. We enjoyed it.

The ride from El Reno to Oklahoma City was a sleepy one, but it was made without mishap, though we had once to waken our driver, Brother Keuffer. Nodding at the wheel was a bit too risky to let him sleep peacefully on.

It was after dark when we reached Oklahoma City, and the comforts of Brother and Sister Keuffer's hospitable home were enjoyed by the tired and sleepy missionaries. A good night's rest and a good bath put us in shape for work at our mail on Monday. We found time for a ride in the big Apperson eight which Brother Keuffer sent to the house, and not a little enjoyment for me in the ride came from being at the wheel with a chance to try out the big car.

In the evening we met with the Oklahoma Saints at their chapel and I spoke—on Zion—to an audience of interested listeners.

Tuesday was spent working on the mail, and visiting in the home of Brother and Sister Dillon, and talking with Brother Rannie, the district president, and Tuesday evening meeting with the branch priesthood at the church.

Wednesday morning early, Brother Ed Dillon was at the door with his Ford ready for a long trip, for we were starting out on a journey which would take several days. Ripley was our first destination, which we reached late in the afternoon, having stopped at Perkins for lunch. Just after leaving Perkins, however, we went to the home of Chief Dave Tohee, of the Iowas, and had a visit with him, and from him Brethren Case and Dillon received an invitation to be with them at their Thanksgiving feast. About a mile from Tohee's we met Robert Small, another Iowa leader, and had an interesting visit with him.

At Ripley we were made welcome at the home of Brother and Sister Tom Berry. On short notice the Saints were called together at the church and a goodly little audience greeted us.

Ripley was in the midst of a new oil craze. A big well had been brought in a few days before just east of Cushing, and speculation in oil leases was rampant. Brother Tom was a bit affected thereby, and was as busy as could be. Here's wishing him well.

Thursday morning, in Sister Berry's new Ford, we went east from Ripley to Cushing, thence east and south. We were making a hasty trip into the country of the Sac and Fox Indians. About six miles from Cushing we met Henry Hunter, a Sac and Fox, and from him learned where lived their leading chief, Ed. Butler. Taking Mr. Hunter with us, we drove four miles further, over to within sight of the great Drumright oil field, to the home of Chief Butler. His family were away, picking pecans and visiting. His home is a neat farm house, and the general appearance of the barns and outbuildings gave evidence of prosperity. Chief Butler spoke good English, and is a man of about thirty-five years of age. Our visit with him was interesting, and we feel sure accomplished good. It opened the way for our work among the Sac and Fox Indians, and it is to be hoped that we can take advantage of the opportunity, though shortage of missionaries for Indian work may prevent.

On our return we left Mr. Hunter at his home, and passed on to Cushing. West of Cushing about two miles we made a detour to see the big oil well, the Thompson well mentioned above as being responsible for a new oil excitement. Brought in about two weeks before we were there, it was still flowing at the rate of about 500 barrels per day. It was my first sight of a gusher.

Returning to Ripley we were at Brother Berry's for lunch about one o'clock, and about 2.30 p. m. we left Ripley for Stillwater, where we visited a sister living there, and called on a professor at the A. and M. College. Then on to Morrison, where we arrived sometime after dark. But despite being unannounced, we found a hearty welcome at Brother and Sister Dave Linden's, where we were for the night. We remained in Morrison till noon, Brother Dillon getting some repair work done on his car, while we called on some of the Saints living in Morrison, having lunch with Brother and Sister Joseph Liggett, Sister Liggett being the daughter of Brother and Sister Dave Linden.

Leaving Morrison about one o'clock, we drove to Red Rock, but on the way drove to the home of Brother Bert Diamond, an Otoe Indian who owns several hundred acres of fine land on the Arkansas River bottom. Brother Diamond had left for Red Rock, and we later saw him in town.

At Red Rock we secured a room in the hotel for the night, and, while Brother Case and Dillon drove out to Brother Jaynes, I wrote some letters and took some pictures, and also visited a bit with Brother Diamond.

The forenoon of Saturday we spent visiting some of the native church members, among them Dave Pettit, several members of whose family are members of the church, and one or two of whose children I hope to see in Graceland College next fall.

A "feast" was scheduled at Mr. Arkeketa's, some four or five miles west and south of Red Rock, at noon, Friday, so Brethren Case and Dillon and Sister Dillon (who joined us that day) and I went there. It was in honor of the birthday anniversary of a little girl, granddaughter of Mr. Arkeketa. The Indians are sociable, and love to be together, so "feasts" are common and popular. While the women join in the kitchen and talk while they work, the men gather and converse on various topics. In Mr. Arkeketa's parlor we talked to the Indians, answering questions on church matters, and about Washington affairs.

The "feast" was partaken of out-of-doors, as it was spread out on clean table cloths on the ground, picnic fashion. It was plentiful and enjoyed. A speech and prayer preceded the meal.

At the meeting at Victor Bushyhead's three Otoes were present, having come 120 miles to be present and extend to me and Brother Case an invitation to be present at a meeting to be held the 22d at Jonathan Koshiway's, near Red Rock, so from Mr. Arkeketa's we went to Mr. Koshiway's, some six miles east of Red Rock. We reached there about four p. m., and found some already gathering. Sitting Indian fashion on a rug in the yard were three leading chiefs of the Otoes, Chief Bluehair (English name Hoke Dent), Chief Sam Black, and Chief Sam Alice. To these we were introduced, and with them chatted, through an interpreter.

The chief in charge of the meeting was "Jack" Koshiway, at whose home it was held, and in whose yard the large teepee was already erected, enlarged by an addition in anticipation of an unusual attendance. Quietly the crowd gathered, and by 7.30 when the meeting began, over thirty entered the tent, this number being augmented during the night, till about thirty-eight or forty were participating.

Several marked differences from the Cheyenne in the method of conducting the meeting were noticed, chief among which might be noted the following: Tobacco is not used in the ceremonies; the singing is more frequently interrupted for prayer and cedar burning; scripture readings are introduced occasionally; more prayers were uttered in English; less peyote was eaten. Another feature particularly valuable and interesting to us was the courtesy shown us by Chief Koshiway in frequently explaining the ceremonies and their symbolism. These explanations were offered in a dignified but simple manner, and greatly added to our enjoyment at witnessing the ceremonies. A deep religious feeling pervaded the meeting from beginning to end.

We have mentioned the midnight water ceremony. The Otoes usually have scripture readings at this part of the night, but on this occasion I was asked to talk to them, and I did so for about one half hour. I spoke briefly of my great interest in Indian affairs, of their tribal religions, and how their religious ceremonies had always served a purpose, and expressed the hope that the good and beautiful in their ceremonies might be preserved, yet in their development what at one stage might appeal and serve would at other times need to be superseded by better forms. Then I led up to their traditions and our beliefs, and how they ran together in some directions, and that our missionaries came among them with a gospel message which according to our beliefs and traditions was once enjoyed by their ancestors when under better conditions. From this I led to more immediate subjects and told how I desired to help them along certain lines, and what I expected of them. Suffice it to say I met with a satisfactory response.

The morning ceremonies began about daylight, and were finished some time after sunup. In the course of these morning ceremonies, several little events took place which will be of interest to HERALD and Ensign readers, I think. Indian friendship is expressed frequently in gifts, and several presentations were made to me in unostentatious manner, and the spirit accompanying the gifts was greatly appreciated. A Mr. De Roin passed to me his eagle feather fan, as an expression of friendship. These feather fans are sacred. A Mr. Daily passed a dollar to me as a token. Chief Diamond gave me his gourd rattle, one he had used on many occasions, and which has often done service as the official rattle of the ceremonies. Chief Koshiway said there was five dollars left from the provision fund, and he handed me that, saying they wished it to be used towards our expenses in driving so far to be with them. Then Chief Koshiway took from his feet his official moccasins, a beautiful pair of Kiowa workmanship, symbolically decorated, and said he wished to give them to me. Holding them in his hand, he told the traditional story of their symbolism—a tradition which I wish to relate at some other time and place.

I valued greatly the presents for what they meant: tokens of sincere friendship.

At times during the night a ceremony was repeated which for religious beauty is seldom excelled. At a signal from the chief, the gourd and staff would be laid gently on the ground in front of the singer, the drum stick laid quietly on the drum head, while the chief, handing some cedar to an individual, would ask him to pray. The one so called upon, leaving his seat in the circle, would step towards the center of the teepee, and kneeling or standing before the fire, still holding the cedar, and raising the face towards heaven, would utter a fervent petition to Wakonda, for help, for blessing, for favor, for healing. Each of the four of us, Brother and Sister Dillon, Brother Case, and I, were called on for such prayer. At the close of the prayer, the cedar was sprinkled on the glowing embers, and the tent was filled with the sweet odor of this fine incense. Be it said to the credit of Sister Dillon that though timid about praying in public, when called upon she quietly and readily responded, much to the delight of the worshippers.

At 9.30 Sunday, the 23d, the ceremonies were finished, and the ceremonial breakfast over, and we all stepped out into the sunshine of a splendid day.

About 10 a. m. a feast was spread, and at 11 Brother Case called them together for a meeting, when he and I both spoke again. But before we did so, Chief Bluehair, stepping before me, addressed me in Otoe, and in well-chosen words greeted me as a friend, "face to face." He had listened to my words during the night: he believed them and wished to greet me as a friend. Then he solemnly shook my hand. And I knew that he thus extended to me the friendship of the tribe. I prize it greatly. May God help me and our workers to repay the friendship of that tribe.

For nearly an hour after coming out of the tent, I was kept busy with my camera. I got some good pictures, too, which I hope to use soon in some illustrated articles which I hope will be of interest to the Saints.

Sometime about one o'clock we left Koshiway's, after saying good-by to our many friends, and, turning our car northward, we drove to Ponca City. At Ponca City Sister Dillon left us, to take the train for Oklahoma City, while Brother Dillon, Brother Case and I drove eastward. Crossing the Arkansas River near Ponca City, we entered the Osage country, and at night stopped at Fairfax. After supper at a restaurant, we went to our rooms at the hotel, and it may readily be guessed we were not long in retiring for some much-needed sleep.

The next morning we were on the road quite early, with our noon objective Skiatook; but owing to some very bad roads encountered from Powhuska to Skiatook, we did not reach Skiatook till nearly two o'clock. Though the road was rough, yet it was interesting, for we went through some of the new oil fields, at times the road threading among oil derricks and past "gassers." Pumping rods run in every direction, crossing the road at all angles, above and below, while the "chug, chug" of pumping engines kept the air throbbing. We passed through Pershing, a new oil town, composed chiefly of "shacks" and hustle, and past a roaring gas compressing station, where the gas is collected, compressed, and sent under high pressure through pipe lines to Kansas City and other cities consuming it.

At Skiatook we met quite a number of the Saints, though our stay was necessarily brief. Brother Case left us here to cross the river to Collinsville, to visit other Saints and relatives, while Brother Dillon and I went to Tulsa. There I met the branch officers, Brethren George A. Kelley and Earl Bailey, for consultation relatives to Tulsa affairs, and the following morning met Brother J. A. Davis, missionary, and left about noon with a better understanding concerning some recent developments in the Tulsa Branch, the better prepared thereby to advise on further movements. From the Tulsa Hotel management we received the same courtesy and entertainment always extended the church representatives—a courtesy we duly appreciate for our church men as well as ourselves.

About one o'clock I bade good-by to Brother Dillon, who had in his Ford car piloted Brother Case and me on our journey among the Indians, and who through "thick and thin," rough or smooth, sick or well, had faithfully stuck to the wheel, and done his part, all the more appreciated because his services were voluntary. On the journey we had driven nearly five hundred miles, and had visited the representatives of seven or eight tribes, and I believe much good was accomplished.

Our opportunities among the Indian tribes for church work are increasing wonderfully, and devoted workers are needed who will study the needs of the Indians, and who are prepared to adapt themselves to the methods of work necessary to follow. The Indians are anxious to learn better ways and religiously are alert. The opportunities to do good run in social and economic directions as well as religious, and I earnestly hope and pray that a corps of workers may be formed to meet the needs.

The trip from Tulsa to Kansas City was passed in working on my mail, doing some reading, and engaging in very interesting and at times very earnest conversation with a fellow traveler, Brother W. N. Robinson. Though the train was late, and at a late hour of the night, yet the "folks" were at the station to meet me, and I was happy to be home after a strenuous trip, more than ever interested in the Indian question.

The I. W. W.'s

The following item from the Christian Science Monitor, November 14, may prove of interest to our readers:

"Scott Henderson, a former assistant attorney general, testified that at the request of former Governor Lister he had conducted an extensive investigation into I. W. W. activities in this State, interviewing a great many members of the order, in and out of jail, and that the average I. W. W. interviewed did not possess intelligence above that of a 12 or 15 year-old-boy; that they had but hazy ideas as to any definite political program their organization might have; that in some way they expected to gain control of the industries of the country and believed that this would ultimately place in their hands the control of the political machinery of the government."

We have not seen the figures to verify this conclusion, or do we know what tests were made by Mr. Henderson to make his conclusion. The result is one, however, that might have been foreseen when a few able men are leading many unable to their hurt and the hurt of society in a so-called revolutionary movement. But this being the case, there is required sympathy and careful treatment, rather than persecution and oppression.

Forceful opposition tends rather to aggravate than to cure the trouble.

Book of Abraham

---

On the question of the Book of Abraham. In 1913 Elbert A. Smith wrote an editorial in the HERALD of June 4. This was followed by an article by W. R. Dexter, in the HERALD for June 11 and 18. These show the points clearly to be different between the translation of the Book of Mormon and the Book of Abraham, and show also clearly that there were only three books accepted by the early church, the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. Judge Philips stated that such was the case as late as 1846, in his decision in the Temple Lot suit.

Poverty doesn't hurt much. I go down town and see acres and acres of women's hats, and I wonder where they will get the women to go under all of them. They certainly couldn't get me under one of them. God doesn't look at the hat but the head under it; sometimes it isn't there, it's minus.—William Quayle.

Preparation for Our Ministry

(Excerpts from sermon by Apostle U. W. Greene, Independence, Missouri, Sunday, November 30, 1919.)

There are at least two things plainly revealed of God unto this church that we must perform if we do the work that our heavenly Father requires of us. The first and foremost is that of taking this gospel to the nations of the earth. I see no escape from that. Our commission is to go into all the world, to carry the gospel to every nation and to preach with a warning voice, to call upon people to repent and get right with God—and then to flee from the nations to Zion. Now, we have not as yet accomplished the work that has been assigned to us in this direction.

For a long time I have felt somewhat a burden of spirit, possibly because I have performed some work in foreign countries, and that work has been very near to my heart. I for one have been glad to assist in the selection of the small company who are taking the special course of preparation at Graceland with a view to their being appointed to go to various nations of the earth with the gospel, and I believe that this work is so important that every man and woman who names the name of Jesus Christ should be behind the movement with their prayers and with their faith and with their means, for we must work together for the accomplishment of the divine purposes.

My experience has taught me that the man who has been sent to a foreign country without the knowledge of the language is handicapped; that if he is not supplied with suitable tracts he is handicapped; that if he is unable to reach the people without an interpreter he is handicapped—and badly so; hence the need of the preparation that is being given to a few of our brethren at the present time.

And I want to say for one that I will welcome the day when the Presidency will ask for the ministers, the missionary arm of the church, to come in for a few weeks during the year or prior to the convening of the General Conferences for special courses of lectures that will tend to make them more efficient representatives of this church than they have ever been before. We can see the necessity of it, that we may all teach the same things and that there may exist greater unity, and that information may be imparted to the young men that will enable them to prepare for service better than they can do at the present time.

I would welcome, gladly, hopefully, such a call to the ministry of the church this coming spring. I believe it would be time and means well spent.

In the past we may have been hindered by lack of training, but I am glad to-day that God has been moving upon a number of young people and they have taken a special course of training that will enable them to direct the affairs of Zion scientifically and intelligently, as well as spiritually. I can see no wrong in special preparation for so important tasks as have been assigned to us. A great many people have looked at the work and said, "Why, it is more than we can accomplish; we just can't do it. We are so few, we are so poor, and it means the expenditure of so much money that we can't bring it to pass."

I am reminded this morning that a great many years ago,

I should have said centuries ago, a company of twelve thousand men and women which had been exiled from their native land for seventy years was permitted to return, and from the top of Mount Scopus they looked upon the ruined city of Jerusalem. Their temple was a heap of stones, their palaces were in ruins, their walls had been thrown down; and as they looked they wept and lamented: "We are too few and too poor; we cannot possibly rebuild it." At once there arose in their midst a young man and he spoke in the name of the Lord and said, "The gold is mine, the silver is mine, saith the Lord, and the precious stones and the wood and the stone is mine. Now go to with all your might and I will work with you; and you shall accomplish that which seems so great a task, and this house that you shall rebuild shall be greater than the first house that stood here, and the desire of all nations shall come unto it."

Those people went to work and they worked all day and their enemies came at night and threw down the stones they had placed on the walls. This happened until finally every man put a sword by his side and they placed watchmen all around the walls at night so that their enemies could not come and overthrow their work. It took them twelve years to accomplish the task, working by day and watching by night, but God blessed them. And with the passage of years there came a time when a woman brought a little boy to the gate called Beautiful and offered the two turtle doves as provided for in the law, the token of the birth of a firstborn son, and that day that mother brought the desire of all nations unto that house of God—it was the Christ, the Savior of the world, who was there according to promise.

If the task seems too great in these latter days, remember God has said, "I will be with you and I will help you." But there are some things that we must observe: First, we must have faith in God; we must have faith in our brethren; we must recognize other men as being as honest as we are and as anxious to do the will of God; we must recognize the fact that we are colaborers together with God, and not try to tear each other down, but seek to build up the work that has been committed into our trust, and we must prepare. I am satisfied that there are sufficient people in the "regions round about" to-day to make possible the accomplishment of the divine purpose if we can instill into your minds and hearts the spirit of love for this work and love for each other that will enable us to move out as one great army of workers together with God.

It Is Written

"A man there was, the people called him mad; the more he gave the more he had." These words of Bunyan express a truth realized by many at this season of the year. As paradoxical as it may seem, it is true, nevertheless, that the increasing measure of our giving determines not only the measure but refines the quality of our receiving.

The heavenly chorus which roused the little company of shepherds on Bethlehem's plain at our Savior's birth inspires an ever increasing multitude the whole world round each succeeding year.

These good tidings of great joy; these anthems and praises, glory to God in the highest, are born to earth by the grace of our Lord, Jesus Christ. He was rich, yet for our sakes became poor that we through his poverty might be rich. He is the way, the truth, the life.

The gospel is the greatest gift that can come into one's life. By a willing consecration of life and means we become workers with God and bearers of good tidings of great joy to all people, and into our lives there comes an abundant measure of joy and peace which the world cannot give nor take away.

As we sit around the hearth this Christmas day; as we see the children's bright faces, the new light in mother's eyes; as there wells up within us good will toward all men, there dawns upon us added meaning of our Savior's words, "It is more blessed to give than to receive;" the glory of God shines round about us, and we are ready to hear and heed Paul's counsel to Timothy, to charge them that are rich in this world that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth richly all things to enjoy; and with the Bishopric we, too, advocate "every member a tithe payer." ### Intensive Preparation for a New Problem

A Recognition of the Past and a Look at the Future

Shailer Matthews in his Church and the Changing Order makes this observation: "Every age is apt to think itself the turning point of history." This situation is created by the fact that the present problem always looms largest and we are naturally absorbed in the solution of to-day's problems.

Yet I believe we are justified in assuming that the present age is a turning point, in view of the fact that the kaleidoscope of prophecy has brought it so prominently into the fore. This is admitted not only by those within the church, but by those without. The world is face to face with a crisis and the church, caught off her guard, is not going to escape calamity.

When I say "caught off her guard" I do so advisedly, without any thought of particular criticism. It is due to mistakes and errors in which all of us have participated in some degree. But the time has come when these conditions must be remedied.

Withal, however, that the present economic revolution through which the world is passing finds us unprepared, I cannot refrain from paying tribute to those men of the past and the present who have so carefully built up the defenses of the church against formidable foes. Many of our men have become experts in the exposition of the scriptures and in defending the church from attack. They have accomplished this as a result of heeding the injunction to "study."

Ceaselessly and diligently have they built up these spiritual defenses in the midst of stern opposition. In many tracts and books, the work they have done remains as a priceless heritage to succeeding generations.

HOW SHALL THE YOUNG PREPARE?

To-day a new problem has come. The principles of the gospel are just as fundamental as they ever were. But there comes a clear and insistent call for a determined effort to solve the pressing economic problems that remain before us. How, then, are we who are younger going to be able to prepare ourselves to defend the faith and at the same time make much headway in the working out of new plans to meet the present crisis?

There can be only one answer: by intensive preparation. In a few moments or years, we must absorb that which our forebears have learned through years of effort and study. This is their contribution to us and we believe they give it gladly. There are those, however, who have made the mistake of thinking that because new methods and new efforts toward intensive preparation were being undertaken, we were rushing blindly to our destruction.

Just the other day I heard a man say: "Instead of opposing everything the young men are doing, the men who are advancing in years should thank God that the young men are ready to take up the work." I believe they do. That is, the vast majority. But because there are some very good men who sound the tocsin of alarm occasionally, it is necessary to call attention to these matters.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

It was in this spirit of giving the younger men and women a chance for this intensive preparation, that the work in religious education was indorsed by the leading quorums of the church and by the church in conference assembled. This work will be a success in the future to just the extent that the church lends its sympathetic support in addition to its vote.

It must be borne in mind that like in every new venture, new trails must be blazed. It must be nothing short of miraculous if we did not occasionally get lost in the woods.

In addition to making up an entirely new course of study, we have been compelled in the doctrine course proper to teach from textbooks that have never been written. While many good books are available, they are not written in textual form. Surely, a great work remains to be done!

On account of these conditions, the writer pleads guilty to having made many errors. In fact, the responsibility was undertaken with the full realization that such would be the case. But if in this path through an unmarked forest we can set up the "danger" signs to assist those who shall follow, we shall not feel that our effort has been in vain.

GRATIFYING RESULTS FROM PRESENT CLASS

If any have wondered as to the effect of this "education" on those sent to receive this intensified preparation, let all fears be set at rest. They are thoroughly consecrated. I am free to state that I have come to regard very highly this group of devoted and earnest workers, even as I have learned to love the majority of Graceland's students who have come to prepare for more effective service to the church.

In closing, let me add this word of personal testimony: As I have stood before the class, talking to them of the many problems confronting us and the evidence of the crystallization of forces for their solution, I have been made to rejoice because of the burning power of God's spirit.

May this Spirit come to each of us not only as an abiding comforter, but as a bright and burning beacon light to lead us past any trivial differences that hinder and to a full comprehension of the lessons to be learned. C. E. WIGHT.

Echoes from the Student Body

(It will be of interest to our readers to know what the prospective representative men of the church are thinking about and saying in some of their classes. Below are a few of the characteristic remarks one hears in attending the large Sunday school class of over sixty members in Lamoni. We invite other classes to have some of their best conclusions likewise reported for publication. These are reported through the kindness of Elder J. A. Koehler.—EDITORS.)

"Our concepts of basic laws are constantly changing."

"The price of progress is the disturbance of equilibrium."

"The endurance of society is based upon some kind of standard."

"The standards of society are set up by society itself. Society itself determines what it believes."

"We can judge by the experience of the race what is basic."

"Governments usually have failed because of a disregard of moral law."

"Are we educating a generation away from the church?"

"The reason so many students are educated away from the church is because they go from one extreme atmosphere of accepting dogmatic pronouncements as authentic without question, to another extreme where nothing is accepted as true until it is proven."

"The authority of any decree or law is its adaptability to the end it is intended to serve."

"The men who are called upon to rescue society from time to time are drafted from the ranks of religion."

"The great fault of religious people is in accepting without question what is given as the mind of God. They should examine it to see whether or not it is divine."

"The religious world has been individualistic; it has thought of salvation as purely an individual affair, and they have not thought of the salvation of the group."

"We find an ever increasing tendency in economic discussion to emphasize the necessity of fair and just returns."

"Both labor and capital have thought only of what they might procure for their own ends, and have not thought of the public good."

"The laws of the state or the nation are determined by what is conceived to be the public welfare."

"Our church exists to the end that in those communities where it may exert a controlling influence it shall work out the problems of society."

"As a church we have been withholding from the world the greatest thing God has given us—and this because of our selfishness."

"There is a danger that when labor comes to its own that it will abuse its power as capital in the past has abused its power."

Mistresses of homes, don't let there be a dog or a cat or donkey or any other creature in or about your homes, which shrinks when a man or woman approaches it. And here I may add that, without specially victimizing the animals through dislike, a household frequently makes the life of some poor brute one long martyrdom through neglect. The responsibility of this neglect lies primarily with the mistress of the house. She must not only direct her servants, but see that her directions are carried out, in the way of affording water, food, and needful exercise. A pretty "Kingdom of Heaven" some houses would be if the poor brutes could speak.—Frances Power Coobe.

Heaven is not a place of inaction, not a place of passive enjoyment, but a realm of congenial pursuits and ennobling occupations.—Samuel F. Halfyard.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

CHEAP BUILDING MATERIAL

As one method of meeting building difficulties in Europe, a return is made to a variation form of construction, called in French pise, from the Latin meaning "to pound." It consists of clay and other earth pounded into slabs between boards.

It was used in Egypt and also in the southwestern part of the United States in prehistoric times. The buildings in the earlier times in France were made of this material. And recently a building has been made in England at the cost of about twenty dollars for a six-room cottage, by an inexperienced man and boy. This probably does not allow for their time.

It has the advantage of furnishing the material right on the grounds at a minimum expense, and requiring little machinery.

Reading of it reminds us of the adobe houses of the west, erected by the pioneers.

SHRINKING VALUE OF THE DOLLAR

Frank A. Vanderlip points out that the present situation is largely determined by the decrease in the value of money. Evidently we have not a permanent standard, and the value of the dollar has fallen about fifty per cent. This would cause no suffering if wages and income were adjusted upon a like basis. It is not the number of dollars a man receives, but it is what he can secure with those dollars that is important to him and his family. The liquidations of the securities held in Europe, and the transfer of excess gold from the United States have been two vital factors securing increased prices in this country. Prices are, in fact, higher in the United States than they are in Great Britain. A remedy lies in taking steps to restore the balance by the investing of American money and credits abroad.

UTAH MORMON TEMPLE DEDICATED

Laie, Island of Oahu, T. H., November 30.—A magnificent Mormon Temple was dedicated here to-day by Heber J. Grant, president of the mother church in Salt Lake City, four years after the site was consecrated by the late President Joseph F. Smith and sixty-nine years after the first Mormon missionaries made this their Hawaiian headquarters.

To-day's dedication marked the conclusion of four days of ceremonies, to attend which President Grant made a special trip from Utah.

TEMPLE NEAR HONOLULU

The temple is located on a hill overlooking the ocean in the heart of the prosperous Mormon settlement, forty miles distant from Honolulu.

Before the temple stands a semicircular wall ten feet high, while a series of terraces stretches from the entrance of the grounds to the temple door. Each terrace is three feet higher than the next below. There are five acres of ground within the temple square, where provision is made for fish, water fowl and flowering plants in four cement ponds. The grounds are surrounded by a wall of native stone.

E. Wesley Smith, son of the late president of the Mormon church, is the president of the Hawaiian Mission. He is a native of Hawaii, having been born at Laie thirty-three years ago while his father was conducting missionary work upon the island of Oahu. He worked for three years as a missionary among the Hawaiians and also spent five years as a missionary in California.

WADDOPE IS PRESIDENT

William M. Waddope is president of the temple and Duncan McAllister, for many years chief recorder in the temple at Salt Lake City, will be chief recorder of the Laie temple. Elder Robert Plunket, a young Hawaiian, will assist Elder McAllister in this work.

The Mormon church has houses of worship in all the principle settlements of the Hawaiian group.—Oakland (California) News.

A NO-TOBACCO CITY

LaVerne, California, bids fair to become a no-tobacco city and be the first outside Zion City, Illinois, to prohibit tobacco.

LaVerne is a college town of 1,700 people. The moral tone is high. Our California superintendent has been looking for a town with sufficient moral courage and sentiment to drive tobacco from its corporate limits, and it appears that he has found it in this fine little city. In that state such can be done either by the city council or by referendum vote.

On October 23, Professor Lough addressed their college faculty and student body and at the close of the address the following resolution was adopted without a dissenting vote:

"Whereas experience and investigation demonstrate the fact that the traffic in tobacco is fundamentally wrong, be it resolved by the faculty and student body of LaVerne College, LaVerne, California, that legal steps be taken at once to prohibit the giving away or selling of tobacco in any form within the corporate limits of the city of LaVerne."

This was introduced by Doctor Hoover and Doctor Miller, president and vice president of the college. The matter will be taken before the city council of which a majority are favorable.

Zion City, Illinois, has always prohibited tobacco and the action has been sustained by the courts.

Rejoice with us for the progress being made by our California hustler. Pray that he may carry it through to success and we may soon be able to announce a no-tobacco city to the credit of our league and the first step toward the consummation of our purpose.—The No-Tobacco Journal, November, 1919.

A SOCIALIST SIDE TO THE CENTRALIA AFFAIR

Upton Sinclair, who has recently been using a great deal of space in The Appeal to Reason, in denunciation of the "capitalist press" suggests another side to the commonly reported shooting of discharged soldiers while marching in a parade on Armistice Day in Centralia, Washington. We give here the quotation he uses to establish his version of the affair, which he says he found after diligent search in a newspaper, no name being given:

"A coroner's jury sitting over the bodies of Lieutenant Warren O. Grimm, Arthur McElfresh, Dale Hubbard and Ben Casagranda, the ex-service men killed here last Tuesday, brought in a verdict finding that the men came to their deaths as a result of gunshot wounds fired by persons unknown, without fixing responsibility. Testimony tending to show the marching ex-service men started toward the I. W. W. hall before shots were fired from the building or from the Avalon hotel opposite featured the inquiry, and is said to have been responsible for the failure of the jury in rendering the verdict to fix responsibility for the shooting.

"Doctor Frank Bickford, one of the marchers, testified at the inquest that the door of the I. W. W. hall was forced open by participants in the parade before the shooting began through the doorway or from the Avalon hotel opposite. Doctor Bickford said he was immediately in front of the I. W. W. hall at the time and that during a temporary halt someone suggested a raid on the hall.

"I spoke up and said I would lead if enough would follow," he stated, "but before I could take the lead there were many ahead of me. Someone next to me put his foot against the door and forced it open, after which a shower of bullets poured through the opening about us."

ILLITERACY

There are fifteen cities as follows: Boston, Kansas City, Saint Paul, New Orleans, Los Angeles, Springfield, Omaha, New Haven, Cincinnati, Baltimore, Indianapolis, Saint Louis, Philadelphia, Providence, Birmingham, in which from ten to twenty per cent of the foreign born cannot speak English. This represents a total of 88,500 persons.

There are seven cities having from twenty to thirty per cent who cannot speak English, as follows: New York City, Scranton, Newark, Chicago, Detroit, Buffalo, and Pittsburg. This represents a total of nearly 757,000. Two cities are over thirty per cent, Cleveland and Milwaukee, representing 97,400.

This represents a problem to be dealt with frankly and justly. To do away with all foreign languages would be decidedly foolish. On the other hand, the citizens of any country should be acquainted with its institutions and should be able to converse in the common tongue. We seriously question, if they should be prohibited ever using any other tongue. That would naturally cause objection. But they should be able to converse and understand the common language, and be acquainted with our institutions.

Several universities are offering special courses for Americanization workers. A decided effort is being made to improve existing conditions, with hazy hopes of success. Education is the fundamental thing in the whole movement.

DISEASE PREVENTION

The United States Public Health Service states that preventable disease cost the United States four billion dollars less in 1917 than it would have done had the health conditions of twenty years ago prevailed. Four hundred thousand less deaths occurred in 1917 than would have occurred had the 1900 death rate prevailed. One man in every three called by the army was found to be physically unfit, and annual illness of workers in this country costs two billion dollars.

State and city health officers, the Red Cross, the American Public Health Association, the American Medical Association, the National Tuberculosis Association, and other health agencies have some plan and are attempting to deal with this question, but Surgeon General Blue points out that there will be little accomplished and much overlapping unless there can be a coordinated effort.

An effort will be made in the near future to hold a conference of these various agencies, to consider not only matters of general interest, as public health nurses, supervision of school children, conservation of the lives of mothers and children, but also special local questions—malaria in the south, and pneumonia in the north. There is need for national conservation of health.

"Time is money, in spite of which many a fellow never knows how much time he has."

THE FORUM

This department is for the free discussion of questions of vital interest to the church in an impartial, impersonal way. We welcome affirmative discussions for the purpose of ascertaining the truth. The views presented are not authoritative, and represent the opinion only of the writer, but we hope it will lead to authoritative conclusions by the church. Names must accompany contributions but need not be used.

The Laborer and His Hire

There is much discussion over administration and the establishment of Zion, and many think that it will be some kind of a mysterious charge by which everyone will be taken care of without having to work, or with working only very short hours.

It is undoubtedly true that the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, and also that there is an abundance and to spare; that it is a question of distribution. But it is also true that it is the laborer who is worthy of his hire. (Doctrine and Covenants 83:13); that "the idler shall not eat the bread of the laborer (42:12); we are commanded to cease to be idle (85:38); idleness shall not be upheld (118:4); the idler shall be held in remembrance before the Lord (68:4); "And the idler shall not have place in the church, except he repents and mends his ways" (75:5).

The economic and social plan, if we understand it correctly, does not provide for either relative or complete idleness. It requires that every man shall labor. There is no place in the divine plan for the idler, whether he be the so-called rich or poor. Every man should work for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God.

Nor does the divine plan mean that we will work easier. Rather our faculties and ability will be developed by due preparation and practice. We shall be given the incentive to cooperation by virtue of which we will produce more rather than less, and will willingly work a right number of hours, for the sake of ourselves and our brethren of the faith, and for the church of the living God.

With just distribution it may properly result that with intensive application, we shall be able to produce ample for our just wants and needs and the work before us in a smaller number of hours. But that remains as yet to be developed by experience.

We must have time for spiritual service and for study, under the divine plan, and we expect that a man will then receive a just recompense for all of his labor (Doctrine and Covenants 42:14) and that he shall be secured and so shall labor willingly for the common cause; as in a practical way, he shall receive such assurance as will amount to an insurance against old age and sickness, and an insurance of his loved ones in case of his passing over before them.

He will voluntarily avoid unnecessary expenditure, both in private and in public, and carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and the repression of unnecessary wants; and will gladly turn in his surplus to upbuild the insurance fund for the sake of himself, his family and his brethren. (Doctrine and Covenants 130:7.)

The same principle will be carried out in church administration, and unnecessary expenditure will be avoided. The principle of sacrifice will also be there observed, and that which is essential devoted to the continued progress of the general work. There will doubtless then exist that liberality which is not waste. Zion cannot be built up except according to the

An Invitation

Wishing to assist in making the call of "Every member a tithe payer in 1919" effective, we ask you to consider your duty fully. Have you been prospered? Have you complied with the law of God in financial affairs? Are you excusing yourself? Are you honest in your conclusions, knowing that God knows the facts? The orthodox churches are now teaching the law of tithes and offerings, to them a newly-discovered truth. Shall we who have had special revelations upon this law, neglect it? We meet Saints who feel they are unable to do but little in financial support of the church, and excuse themselves because of the "high cost of living," and yet they spend freely for comforts, pleasures, luxuries. In fact if they are affected it is because of the cost of high living. Are they justified? We think not!

We are living in a day of tumult, unrest, perplexity of nations as well as individuals. Our only safety, our only hope of deliverance, is by a conformity to the law of God, spiritually and temporarily. When we consider our duty, we should look at all the facts fairly—squarely—and study the revealed word—and know that it is the doer, and not those who hear only, who are justified.

If you say you love God: love the gospel light and truths, if you regard in mercy the poor, if you are earnestly desire the salvation of human kind, you will prove your faith and love by your compliance with the law of tithes and offerings. Your works count, not your words only. Some pay nothing—some salve their conscience by payment of "a sop." Neither make a sacrifice. The promise is that after the sacrifice cometh the blessing."

The Little Sioux District has done well through the years. But we should do much more. Everyone who believes his name is recorded above, should wish and expect that his name is recorded here, not only on baptismal record, but financial record as well.

For you know we love to preach, and tell our neighbors that we are to be judged and rewarded for our deeds—our works. The payment of tithes for the intended purpose is a good deed, a noble work. It broadens the soul, it increases faith, hope and love, and spirituality. To withhold increases selfishness, which withers the love for God. A sad reflection it is to see so many who are ready to testify of their "love for the work" and do little else. "He that knoweth the Master's will and doeth it not, shall be beaten with many stripes." Do you know his will? Are you doing it?

Only a few days of 1919 remain. There is a solicitor in your branch. Pay him! If you are isolated, send to the undersigned.

principles of the celestial law, nor can it be built up except on the principle of right business administration, and through the labor of our own hands, and our own intelligence. Enlightened and strengthened also by the spirit of God we shall be able to produce sufficient and to spare. S. A. B.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5620 California St., Omaha, Neb.

Peace and Good Will

Much gentle light still remains in the world since that great Light came into it on Christmas day, so long ago. Indeed, we of the household of faith, cannot but believe that the effulgence and glory of that Radiance increases as we contemplate It, and attempt to reflect It. At this particular season of the year, who shall say that the influence of the Child of Bethlehem has not purified the hearts of men, and brought peace and good will?

When raging hate is spread over the world, and the hand of man is lifted against his brother, when crime and cupidity, and all the orgies kept at the altar of the god of self, are witnessed, one wonders where the divine power of the Christ poured out in blessing upon the world so many weary years ago, is made manifest! It is comforting to remember, when such thoughts arise, that "the kingdom of heaven is within," and that it comes softly to the heart of man, without trumpet blare, or spectacle of pomp. Therefore we find, in the multitude of kindly thoughts, in the devotion of consecrated workers among the poor, in the ministrations of gentle hands at the bedside of the sick, in the loving words of life, of comfort and counsel given by ambassadors of the Christ, in even the common everyday life of conscientious manhood and womanhood, evidence in rich abundance that that power has not been curtailed, that love not shortened, nor the influence of that Life lessened in the world to-day.

We find an echo in our hearts now, of the song which was heard on shepherd plains. Peace, and good will! Down the corridors of time, the message of the angels has come ringing, and it has only gained in beauty and meaning through the passage of time. Believe in it! Let it surge through humanity, this day, purging out all dross of self, all unworthiness, all baseness. Let it purify every thought, animate every impulse, consecrate every endeavor. Let it become a star to which to hitch every ambition, by which to rectify every aspiration, and towards which to direct every enterprise. It cannot lead astray, for its mainspring is love, the "new commandment" given by the Savior in those last hallowed hours with his disciples before the culmination of his life's offering.

If we could carry with us, throughout the days ahead, the soft ministry of love which we experience during these days of "peace and good will," might not the end of the next year witness fewer heartaches for us? Might we not escape much pain and regret? Might we not find more opportunities to minister to those who need us—to reflect the Light we so adore? Might we not approach our sunset days with greater confidence of a race well-run, duty well-performed, God well-interpreted? Might we not be able to see that after all, all there is to life, is the simple, honest living of it, the conversion of its every event into things of the spirit—things which are eternal in their nature? Should we not be able to look beyond the vehicle, which at times conveys us so slowly and imperfectly, to the destination towards which we journey, realizing that the race is only to those who finish the course, whose faith and works agree, who have grace sufficient for the accomplishment of the resurrection of body and the spirit from the graves of their follies, their mistakes, their sins of omission and commission?

What will the new year bring to this church, and its members? What definite progress will have been made? Will we be nearer the culmination of our hopes? Will we have thrown all reservations to the winds, and placed our whole selves upon the altar of obedience and fulfillment of that which has been given to us? Will we?

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Have Faith in God

Our attention was called some time ago, to a man who, because of a certain calamity, turned from worshipping God, and denied that such a Being existed. The details of the case were interesting, and the affair was being discussed by a group of his friends and acquaintances. One remarked, "Well, he never could have had any real faith in God, or he would not let trial destroy it."

"You can say that," defended another, "because you are strong, and have never been called to pass through anything like that. Just think, how would you feel if your child had been born with that defect, an idiot for life, poor little innocent thing?"

"But," said the first, "that does not change my position. True I should be tried to the soul, were any such calamity to befall me, but after all, is it not only in harmony with what is happening to humanity every where? Why should I, because I am called upon to share the ills of human life, say that there is no God? I say, this man had no real religion before this happened, or it could not have made him turn atheist!"

"There you are mistaken," replied the other. "He was always deeply religious, was a loyal supporter of his church, taught a Sunday school class, and in every way identified himself with the activities of his group."

"I still insist that his religion did not reach his heart. It was not grounded upon real faith and confidence in God. It was egotistical in nature. He evidently had the attitude, 'I will trust God just so long as he lets things go well with me.' Consciously or not, this must have been his thought, for did not just such sorrows and woe exist before this thing happened to him? What kind of a spirit, do you think, is it, that can see misery and sorrow all about, and can smile, and say 'I believe in God,' and 'God is good,' and then, when it touches him, when his own heart is wrung, his own interests involved, will shrivel up like the small thing it is, and say, 'There is no God?'"

Recalling the arguments and statements made at that time, we are asking ourselves the question, "What is real faith in God?" We are reminded of the latter-day utterance, "Against none is His wrath kindled save those who confess not His hand in all things," and this seems to be the corner stone of the faith we should have in our Creator, whose love surrounds us equally in adversity or prosperity. If we cannot feel that his love is abiding, and that he only allows that to come to us which shall be for our development, surely our feet are not well established upon the rock of faith which is abundant to our salvation.

Faith in even small degrees, is no doubt of some avail in leading us upward. By at least the exercise of so much, we are hopeful of receiving more. Nay, "receiving" is not the word,—it should rather be, "developing" more. Surely it is possible to build up faith, by the slow steps of experience, going patiently on from one acquired position to another, and yet, how slowly wisdom comes! It means much thought, much patience, much vision, much "wrestling with the angel," but at last we may be sure, the struggling soul shall reach the light—that blessed light which reveals things as they are, as they have been, as they shall be! Is it not worth working for, striving for, hoping for? Should not our patience be unlimited in attempting to reach these heights, building in confidence from the known to the unknown, from the now to the then, and never faltering at pain, sorrow, or trial?

Who are we, that we might hope to escape the common lot of man? What have we done for the Maker of the universe, that we should expect him to set aside his laws, to shield us from the common experiences of the flesh? Have we always rung true? Have we always lined ourselves up squarely with the living principles of love and truth? Or have we complained, doubted, denied? Peter, impetuous one, sank beneath the waves, because of his weak faith, and yet he saw the Savior, worked with him, listened to his teaching, caught the priceless words of life as they poured freely from his great heart. How much more need have we of understanding the principles of life? And shall we be content without them? No, let us rather search with all diligence for the pearls of knowledge hidden in every experience, the germ of light and truth hidden in every sorrow and grief. If we will it to be so, nothing but good can come to us whatever path we may traverse in this earthly pilgrimage. But to find it, to make it our own, we must ever ring true, ever assay pure gold.

The tendency to good is an influence none of us can escape. We may divert direct leadings, we may twist and misuse powers and instincts, we may hinder by perverseness and wilfulness, but sooner or later, the softening, glorifying, unction from above will bring us to the source of all good, even God himself. We cannot believe otherwise, and still profess to believe in his omnipotence and his supreme love. "God so loved the world," can we think, for one moment, his designs and desires for the object of his love, shall, or can be thwarted? Can we believe that slow of heart as we are to concede, loath as we are to obey, blind as we are to see, his love can not reach us and triumph over the human barriers we erect between it and ourselves?

As in the mighty river there are counter currents, eddies, whirlpools, where apparently, the onward course of the water is hindered, hampered, diverted, yet the mass is inevitably being rushed seaward, so in human life we see apparent divergences, counter forces, even black whirlpools where all seems lost, only to awaken to the consciousness sooner or later, that all obstacles were but seeming, and humanity as a whole is being inevitably and irresistibly drawn to God, to good, to the center and great source of love and truth. The Christ showed us the straight, direct path to the Father; we choose the roundabout, the dalliance with forbidden things, the exploring of dark caves and burrows, we tie bandages about our eyes, shut our ears, snore in sleep and sloth! Now and then some sleeper is awakened, and tries to shake his fellows into consciousness of the spirit, but a grunt or a rubbing of heavy lids, is all the reward he gets. When, oh when, shall we "awaken in His likeness," realizing that that awakening is for us, here and now? When shall we learn to see with his eyes, recognizing eternal values instead of earthly ones? When shall we look with steadfast purpose to the great Light, as he looked, reduce the terms of mortal living to those current in immortal realms? When shall we learn to value the things of the Spirit above those of the flesh? When shall our faith in God be reflected in actions commensurate? When shall we sense the fact that "in love is the fulfillment of the whole law?"

Let us have faith in God. Let us believe that whatever comes is best for us, if so be we shall will to turn it to the glory of God. Sorrows and griefs soften the heart, and give wide sympathy and friendliness toward other sufferers. Adversity steels the courage; temptation gives resistance, trials develop patience, and deprivation, hope. All these are eternal values, that go into the sum total of our individualities, and will be carried eventually into other realms than this. Can we afford to deny or scorn this gentle ministry, which seeks to bring us imperishable good? Shall we shut the doors of our being against the pleadings of divine love, which, reduced to terms of our everyday living, becomes simply love to all human creatures—thoughts of peace and good will?

"As ye did it unto the least of these, . . . ye did it unto Me."

Give Your Child First Hand Experience

For those who intend to teach little children of four and five as a profession, a training in kindergarten methods is required by law in practically every state in the Union. Why is such training not equally necessary for those whose future work will probably be home making? The broad principles underlying kindergarten training have been thought out for us by many great educators and philosophers of the past and present, and these principles will help the individual parent as well as the teacher to interpret his surroundings, to form a wiser attitude toward life, and to love and understand children. Such an education is almost indispensable to mothers. But if, as mothers, we cannot have such training or cannot send our children to kindergarten, let us plan their early education in the home so that it will be based as far as possible upon sound principles of child-study.

The child between the ages of three and six is very impressionable, and upon his early experiences must be based his whole future education. Therefore it is important to see that he receives only right impressions and has only right experiences.

The child is and should be constantly handling objects and constantly inquiring about them. Such inquisitiveness is the greatest aid to education. How many interesting sights we pass over because we lack the keen observation of a child! "He who is interested in much has in advance a great advantage over the indifferent person and remains younger even in age; whereas the indifferent becomes old in the seasons of youth."

Let the child live with you. This is not easy for a busy farmer's wife such as I am. It does not mean, "Keep out of my way while I mix this bread." It means, "Roll up your sleeves and wash your hands. Now dip out four quarts of flour for me." Perhaps some of the flour may be spilled, but only by using the hands will the child learn motor control. What if the biscuits are not all smooth? By making three rows of four each, he will be learning valuable number facts.

The child may ask, "Why is the flour white? The wheat is not white." This question brings out the whole story of bread. Don't merely tell it; see it if possible—the wheat seed, the growing wheat field, the reaping, and threshing the flour mill, the bakery. Enrich the child's experience with pictures, stories and songs, relating to this subject, and after this a slice of bread will be an object of new interest to the child.

Tell in the same way about the strawberries that he eats with his bread. Where do they come from? If you cannot show him the growing plants, find a picture or draw one so that he may not say, as a lady of my acquaintance did, "I've always had such a desire to see strawberry bushes."

City children ask, "Why is there a picture of a cow on the butter paper?" If you cannot visit a dairy or a creamery, buy a gallon of milk and let the child skim it and churn the cream into butter with the egg beater. Then after he has salted it, let him eat some on his bread. My country children ask, "How did the firemen know there was a fire?"

Their father took them to the fire house to see the alarm bell and the boots, clothes and brass pole ready for the night alarm.

When fathers go to the field to see the oats planted, they should take their five-year-old boy or girl along and tell the story of the growth of the seed.

On the way for the cows, sharp eyes may find a badger hole or see some muskrats in the creek.

Is all this education? The beginnings of education are started in and about the home in the child's attitude and reaction toward his environment. All the time, he is learning to see and hear and to think. The child whose mother and father live with him is sure to store up experiences and be able to compare and relate them later, to be observing, to be constructive (which is the only remedy for destructiveness) and to be able to express himself as well as to have something in his mind to express.

In play children are constantly educating themselves. They are learning to direct their attention and their motions persistently toward a definite end. We can suggest plays and tasks which will train the eye to see quickly, and teach the colors, directions (front, back, up, down, right, left); the points of the compass, the time of day, and the days of the week. My little four-year-old learns much as she sits beside me at the sewing machine. She arranges my drawer of thread, learns the colors and plays a game, guessing which color is gone from a long row of spools.

A set of colored kindergarten balls, a box of crayons, or later a box of paints make an excellent Christmas gift and aid in color training. Colored papers and a small pair of scissors will occupy many a stormy day profitably. The mother who is at all musical can train the ear to detect high and low tones, loud or soft bells, and music for marching and skipping. Have the child bounce a large ball to music, or clap to music. This will help him to gain motor control. Play dominoes with him. Suggest "Hide the thimble" or "Blind man's buff" or "Cobbler." All these games help to train the eye, the ear and the hands.

I will not dwell upon the moral training of children, for mothers seem to consider that their duty even though they may not think it necessary to train the mind. My idea of preparing a child for school is not to teach him reading and writing unless he is past the age of six, but to give him many and first-hand experiences, which will train his senses and make his mind and body active and able to express his feelings.—Mrs. Winifred B. McBroom, in Government Bulletin.

SALOON LICENSES AND PROHIBITION

Much emphasis has been placed in the past on the argument that the Government finances required the license fees received from the saloons, and that if prohibition took effect it would mean greatly increased direct taxes. This has been shown not to be the case, and even though it were true, the increased prosperity more than justifies the change.

It is of interest to note that similar reports of benefits from prohibition are now sent from Louisiana, and New Orleans in particular. Receipts for the past fiscal period show an increase of over one million dollars over what it was with the saloon licenses. That is, there is a total of over fourteen million. The increase comes in the opening up of new stores, increased licenses paid by other merchants, and the increase of population.

It is striking that this increase has proven so substantial that the budget for the coming year is much larger than for the previous year. Yet it is expected to be met from these routine taxes without placing an additional direct tax on the property holders.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Among the Indians

(From a letter to the First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve.)

The last ten days has been a strictly missionary effort in the way of introductory work. President F. M. Smith came to Oklahoma with me. We visited the Cheyennes where I had called a meeting especially for him. They had invited other tribes to come and there were a few others present. We held two meetings with them then came on here for two days' rest, after which we went to the Iowas, Sacs, and Foxes, and on to the Otoes where we had called a big meeting.

We met the Otoes and their visitors from five other tribes, and were with them three days. I believe much good was done. The last meeting we called them together at one o'clock Sunday and the leading chief, Mr. Dent, walked forward with his right hand extended with a greeting of friendship saying to Mr. Smith, "We are ready to believe what you say; we have heard your words and feel you are our friend."

President Smith went home from Tulsa and Brother Dillon and I drove through the Creek Nation and the Sac and Fox, coming on to the Iowas where we had an invitation to come and hold a Thanksgiving meeting for them. Here we met the three tribes, Otoa, Iowa, and Arapho. The weather was stormy so we had to content ourselves with one day's meeting. We came on here last night where we will rest for a few days.

An open door awaits us everywhere among this wonderful people who are ripe for the gospel. We need helpers. Brother James Yates should be sent to the Otoes, Pawnees, Iowas, Sacs and Foxes soon. Never in the history of the church has there been such an effort made as President Smith has given us here in this work.

I am, your coworker,

HUBERT CASE.

More About Moving Pictures

In confirmation of what I have hitherto said on behalf of the moving picture as an aid to gospel work permit me to present herewith excerpts from a recent article descriptive of what is going on in the land of the movies.

"On the foothills of the Verdugo Mountains just east of the town of Burbank, California, and not a dozen miles from the heart of the city of Los Angeles, are building the studios of the Historical Film Corporation of America, the organization that is to picture the Holy Bible.

"Here, like unto 'a city that is set on a hill' and overlooking the beautiful San Fernando valley, as Jerusalem sat, queen of the east, will be built a new Jerusalem, replica of the city of the time of Christ, and here also will be called into being again the people and events of the Old and New Testaments.

"Here will the ministry and the passion of the Prince of peace be revived in solemn but gorgeous pageantry, and here will Moses and the prophets be called into pictured life in order that Bible history and its lessons may be made a part of the daily life of the people to cure unrest and help in the work of bringing lasting peace to the world.

"In short, an American Holy Land is rapidly being called into being at Burbank, and something new and wonderful in moving pictures is in process of creation. The Jerusalem set will be the largest ever conceived for motion pictures, but there will be many other sets, like Jericho and Thebes, nearly as large, and hundreds of fragments which in the aggregate would make a city.

"Back in one of the canyons in the heart of the Verdugoos is building another kind of set—the Garden of Eden. Here with $100,000 worth of flowers and trees, shrubs, vines, ferns and plants, Director Wells, with his staff of artists and engineers, is creating the most entrancing garden ever dreamed of outside the Elysian Fields—an appropriate setting to the great tragedy of the fall." And this garden, when the purr of the camera is no more heard within its purple shadows, and the actors have departed to other scenes, will remain a memorial to the greatest work ever done in motion pictures and a show place to travelers who in time to come will make pilgrimages to the Western Holy Land.

"Burbank was named for Luther Burbank, the famous horticultural wonder worker. It is an ideal setting for Bible pictures, for the beautiful environment is bound to lend inspiration to all who work therein. Work on 'The Creation,' the first spectacle of the pageant of the Bible, has already begun."

I had no intimation that the above was in prospect when I wrote you only a few weeks ago. But I am sure this is only the beginning and that the coming ten years will see a wonderful revolution in the moving picture field. Once the churches are aroused to the utility of the moving picture in portraying religious themes there will be a general and wide spread demand for same.

I have received an unsigned letter from a sister objecting to the use of the moving picture machine in church work. She contends that if God had intended for us to use the machine he would not have called men to preach the gospel! She also urges that this money should not be squandered but should be used to care for the poor.

Let me say; the moving picture will never displace the minister of Jesus Christ, but it can, and will, be an almost indispensable help to him. The same argument now used by the sister can be urged against magazines and periodicals of the church such as the HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves. It will apply to charts and maps or any "helps" outside the spoken word. It is illogical. And as to caring for the poor we should not overlook the fact that our first and greatest duty is to warn the world, and if, by the use of the moving picture we can reach the eye, so likewise through the spoken word can the ministers of Jesus Christ reach the ear of men.

I sometimes think that the reason why Jesus was always on the go, sometime leading the people into the wilds away from the common haunts of men where it was necessary for him to miraculously feed the multitudes who followed him, was because he wished to have object lessons close to nature—to have a continuous change of scenery and surroundings, knowing, as he did, the teaching by means of the eye is the greatest factor in education. My advice is that wherever you can install a moving picture without causing too much inconvenience do so.

T. W. WILLIAMS.

On the question of the cost of living it is of interest to note that a bill before Congress allows a man who is totally, permanently disabled, $100 per month; and in case of double, total, permanent disabilities, where a man has lost both eyes and both arms, $120 a month is paid, together with $57.50 insurance.

At the Front

(From a letter to the First Presidency.)

On arrival at Sherrill, New York, I found Brethren Robley (senior and junior) and J. E. Bishop busy putting on the priming coat of paint on the new building. It is a neat structure.

The conference was more of a "two-day meeting," as no business was done. The meetings were very enjoyable and spiritual. I spoke four times while there and the other brethren alternated. Services continued over the second Sunday. Audience good-sized first day, because of members from abroad, but after that slim—very; but I am told that an audience of fifteen or thereabout is about the average in churches there. We beat that, of course.

After the first Sunday I suggested to Brother Bishop that he and I concrete the basement floor and excavate and build the baptismal font therein. He consenting, we set to work, and with help from Brother Robley, jr., finished it before I left. A small portion of the floor had been put in before by Brother Whitehead of Syracuse. While engaged thus a trio of sisters arrived and summoned us to the exterior of the building and after making us "pose" to their liking, "shot" us a la kodak process, Robley, jr., self, J. E. Bishop, and the carpenter (Brother Loveland).

Reached Buffalo, started in as per schedule of announcement. We occupied alternate nights and a sermon each on Sundays. I was called on for an extra yesterday and responded.

Leave here for Niagara Falls, New York, to-morrow (D. V.) to begin a series of meetings. Health—fair to miserable. Epidemic of smallpox in Toronto reported in papers and all border lines quarantined here.

Hope to keep going till time of spring conference and then return to the home roost.

With prayer and hope for Zion's triumph and your endowment to lead thereto, sincerely as ever,

BUFFALO, NEW YORK.

JOSEPH LUFF.

Christmas Offering News

From the many letters bringing news of work done, we are sure you will be interested in the following summaries.

The time is short. Only a week left of this year, then we will begin counting our totals. Let us rally our forces to the utmost and go over the top to a glorious victory.

Yours for the greatest degree of success. A. W. SMITH.

Pleasanton, Iowa, a little band of 15 to 22 Saints, has raised $3.50. They enjoyed the experience, as do all those who work faithfully in a good cause.

Little Sioux, Iowa, raised $3.24 a member by each doing his "bit" each Sunday, which after all is a very good plan. The grand rush at the end of the season too often finds us financially embarrassed.

Saint Marys, Ontario, has been hard hit from various sources, but have steadily forged ahead until they have gone past the $2.50 per member mark. They are beginning immediately on the next year's offering.

Delhi, Ontario, planted a patch of potatoes which netted about $70, and the home class raised $47.90, which, with other funds raised, gives them $147.47.

Second Detroit has $3 per member and paid in addition $200 on the church building. They have an average attendance of about 60. They ask for a clock for next year.

Creston, Iowa, raised $76.47 to date of reporting, and had 29 members. They are working for $3 per member.

Levering, Michigan, had $60 last year or $2.50 a member. For this year their aim is $100, and they had about $95 at time of reporting.

Second Independence had over $4.50 per member and expected to reach $5 by Christmas. They have an enviable record as to their general financial standing in addition to this.

Providence, Rhode Island, is aiming for $1,000 and has as her motto: "Providence never fails." They had only about $150 to raise at time of reporting.

Deckerville, Michigan. These people were involved in a disorganization of the branches represented in the community, but have as a Christmas offering of $97.28.

Bennington Heights, Kansas City, raised $133.55 last year and thought it a high mark, but by persistent efforts have raised it so far to $142.49 and will do much more before the end of the year.

Missouri Valley, Iowa, began with a big debt as a branch, but have set their aim at $100 and will likely reach it. And they are getting the church debt paid off, too.

Joplin, Missouri, reports an aim of $500 and $204.50 on October 5. They were not discouraged, but fully intend to reach it. If the closing of the mines does not affect them too seriously, they will, too.

Dubois, Pennsylvania, with a membership of about 19 and some discouragements, had on October 17 about $30, but were expecting to reach $75. They have had much persecution and misrepresentation, but that nerves them to greater efforts.

Bemidji, Minnesota, raised $20 last year, but on October 1 had a balance of $92.25 for this year, with an aim of $100. Looks like they are going over the top good and strong.

Wellston, Ohio, reported on October 11 they had $87.19 of their $100 goal.

H. M. Aebli, of Loxley, Alabama, reports that the Roberts-dale school, with a membership of only about 12 or 15 had an aim of $50 and seemed to be succeeding. Bay Minette, with a membership of about 42 had set their aim at $50. The Mobile school had about $150, and the other schools had not reported.

Tulare, California, had sent to the Bishop by November 2, a total of $257.90 and had on hand $116.50, with hopes of increasing that considerably.

Sandwich, Illinois, has an enrollment of 25, an aim of $175, and had at time of reporting $145 in the bank.

Hornings Mills, Ontario, has an enrollment of 33 and set their aim at the first of the year at $200. At time of reporting (November 3) they had reached $97.50 and were sure they would reach their goal. They had some potatoes and eggs for sale, which would materially increase their funds.

Sault Sainte Marie, Ontario, set a goal at $150, and although small in number, were going to increase their present $98.60 to that amount ere time of closing the books.

Ravenwood, Missouri, believe they will do as well as last year, with $4.50 per member. They give all the eggs laid on Sunday for Christmas offering.

News From the Islands

In company with Bishop A. V. Karlstrom and wife and Bishop George Lewis of Australia, Elder J. W. Rushton and I sailed from San Francisco, September 8, arriving here [Papeete, Tahiti] early on the morning of the 21st. All cabins were filled. Though the steamer was crowded, all on board were good-natured, making the voyage an altogether pleasant one.

We were met at the wharf by Elder Clyde F. Ellis and a company of native brethren who conducted us to the church where Elder Varoa, president of the Tione Branch, warmly and affectionately welcomed us as servants of the church.

The congregation here was reduced in numbers by the desolating ravages of influenza. About fifty church members in Tahiti were carried away. The world knows but little of Papeete's experience of last November and December with this terrible disease. The dead numbered so many, burial was impossible, so cremation had to be resorted to. Among those who fell in this disease was Sister Clara Ellis; well may the words of the Lord be applied to her:

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

In the cemetery a fitting monument marks the resting place of our beloved sister, a resting place until a glorified body shall spring forth from her mortal body as a fertile seed.

All who are laboring here have done much for this mission. Not one murmur have I heard from anyone of them concerning the sacrifices, inconveniences, and isolation from the world's affairs which have attended their many years of labor in the islands.

Our genial bishop of Australia was with us during the day of the boat's stay in port, then went on to the sunny shores of his homeland. His smile must have won, for though he left at daybreak many of the natives accompanied him, carrying bananas, mangoes, oranges, limes, etc., to his cabin.

Bishop Karlstrom and his wife will remain in the islands, and there is every prospect that their devotion to the ideals of the church will prove a distinct gain to the mission.

In studying the needs and conditions of this field, with the brethren, Brother Rushton and I have visited Tahiti, Moorea, which is twelve miles distant, and the following islands of the Tuamotuan Archipelago: Kaukura, Niau, Fakarava, Takapoto, Apataki and Arutua.

Takapoto, three hundred miles from Papeete, was the diving island this year; to it many of the natives from the surrounding islands gathered to dive for mother-of-pearl. Our five weeks stay on this island enabled us to come closely in touch with many of the members of our church. These outlying islands from Tahiti are but a few feet above the sea level, and are of peculiar formation, consisting of a narrow band of land, surrounded by a coral reef near the shore. They are circular or oval in form. Inside of the narrow strip of land is the lagoon, where the diving operations are carried on.

The divers go out in vaas, small canoes with an outrigger, and from these dive down to sometimes as far as one hundred and thirty feet for the shell. During our stay two young men, members of the church, were drowned while in quest of this wealth of the sea.

These people have many faults, also many virtues. The Spirit of God is in their midst. Some of the most soul-stirring talks and testimonies have greeted our ears in the social services of the church.

We returned from Takapoto on a five-ton sailing boat, and on our way met with varied experiences. A severe storm lashed the sea into a fury, developing into a hurricane, and at one time our boat was almost capsized. It stood for a moment on one side in a balanced position, then righted itself. We next encountered a calm, then a heavy, tropical downpour of rain which drenched us all to the skin. The hold of the boat being filled with copra there was no shelter available, and then for several days we were exposed to the burning sunshine.

From here we intend to sail on the Moana, November 28, for New Zealand, then proceed to Australia to be in attendance at the mission conference which convenes in Sydney the latter part of December.

The weather here is pleasant, though summer is drawing near.

The faces of Elders F. M. Sheehy, F. A. Smith, Bishop Ingham, and of the company of the Saints who were at the wharf in San Francisco to bid us godspeed, are held in bright recollection. True friendship is of more worth than gold.

Our address in Australia will be 65 Nelson Street, Rozelle, New South Wales.

Brother Rushton has consented to write later to the church papers somewhat fully of our journeys.

With faith in the ultimate triumph of the church,

PAUL M. HANSON.

[Extracts from letter to Presidency by Apostles Rushton and Hanson, November 18, 1919, Papeete, Tahiti.]

We have advised Brother Ellis to make preparations to leave for America as soon as possible after the native mission conference to be held in Apataki, December 17 to 27. He thinks he will leave in March and proceed directly to Independence for General Conference for 1920. We find that he has done a good work, and seems to be held in esteem by the foreign people of Papeete as well as enjoying the confidence and good will of the Saints, and is also regarded as an expert in the Tahitian language by those qualified to give an opinion; he has also worked very effectively to straighten the various records in the mission, besides keeping up the translation, printing and publishing of papers, etc., and performing missionary work, and this in spite of the very heavy blow which nearly a year ago bereft him of his wife. . . . We speak in admiration of the good and uncomplaining work of the sisters sent to this mission. No one can appreciate what it means to travel in small boats for days at a time without beds, conveniences and proper food, exposed to wind, sea, and rain, unless having had experience. Then they are isolated from all a woman holds dear, company, culture, home, and the many little things dear to a woman's heart. Our respect and reverence for such women deepens as we consider what they have done and in spite of all no word of complaint had been heard by us from one of them. The church should know and appreciate the fact that the success of the work in this mission is due in a large measure to the sacrificing and faithful service of the women who have been here as well as to the ministry.

Spiritually, the native appreciation of our work is primarily if not largely emotional in its origin and character; still we have been surprised to find among the matured men and women an expression of their understanding of this work which approaches anything we have heard by way of intellectual appreciation. There is not any doubt in our minds that God is working with them, and there is a great field for cultivation among these people. We have noticed that while there have been an absence of what we call the "spiritual gifts," that in almost all prayer services there has been an unusual degree of spiritual power. The witness of the Spirit

NEWS AND COMMENT

Italian cities have a fine habit of offering prizes for the encouragement of young Italian composers. The city of Bologna recently offered the Sarruzi prize for 1921, of 10,000 lire, for the composition of an opera. Milan, also, in honor of her 50th anniversary of her Civic Popular School of Song is offering two prizes, one of 2500 and the other of 1000 lire, for a composition of three or four solo voices.

Efforts are being made in Boston to secure a permanent improvement of the moving pictures offered in that State. The moving picture is coming to be clearly recognized, and also the fact that a large per cent of the pictures produced and shown are of questionable character. The effect is found to be bad, not only on children, but also upon adults, while it should be made a force for good.

An important event of the past week was the decision by the United States Supreme Court that wartime prohibition is constitutional, and that the United States is still technically at war with Germany, so that act is still in effect. This was a great surprise to the liquor interests, as they were confidently counting upon the law being held unconstitutional, and so permitting one month. The newspapers state that four hundred million dollars worth of whiskey is being held in Kentucky, ready for shipment, and thousands of box cars were held up there for its shipment, even though wheat in Kansas suffered from lack of transportation. It is worthy of note that newspapers which were strongly opposed to prohibition, still declare that it was better that such a decision be made, rather than have the country suffer from a thirty day orgy. A further decision is expected.

We have noted with much interest the effort made by various fair price committees in some of the larger cities of the country. The list published in Chicago is much below the usual market. These prices do not purport to be the lowest possible of minimum prices, but a fair price. They list both men's suits and women's suits at about $24 and $25, and other articles of wearing apparel in proportion. Attorney General Palmer is urging strongly the formation of fair price commissions, to not only state what is a fair price, but refuse to permit higher prices to be published. Our personal observation forces us to the conclusion that most retail prices are at presto us is that these people have been born of God but need nurture and guidance by those who love them and can win their confidence.

The priesthood generally impressed us by their clean appearance. All wear white clothing and have their bodies washed that no foul odors can be detected from any of them. In the services they are equal to any of the brethren in American congregations in their deportment. They show interest in their work and their questions were above the average in such meetings as we have attended. We believe that given the same opportunities with equal facilities many of these our fellow ministers will compare favorably with any others.

We have also observed that in services there is a fine deportment; seldom any loud talking or laughter. The women usually sit on one side of the church and the men on the other, and even the children are orderly and quiet during the services.

ent too high; that there is too wide a difference between what the producer receives and what the consumer pays.

The Saint Louis Republic which was founded as the Missouri Gazette a few years after Lewis and Clark left to explore the great west in 1808, has recently ceased publication after one hundred and eleven years of continuous service. It was the first newspaper to be published west of the Mississippi River.

The Missouri Historical Society celebrated recently the centennial of the first steamboat up the Missouri River in 1819. When Lewis and Clark started from Fourth and Olive Streets in Saint Louis, for their exploration of the unknown west, in 1804, Saint Louis was the western outpost of civilization. Later a post was established which contained an important landing, near what is now Independence, Missouri, making that city practically the starting point for several western trails. It is especially famous in connection with the Santa Fe trail. We are prone often to forget that the western boundary of Missouri ran straight north and south, through the mouth of the Kaw River, while Iowa did not become a State till 1845, and all west of that was still the undivided wild land of the American Indians. The steamboat was a dominant factor in the development of the Mississippi and Missouri River territory, in the first half of the nineteenth century, and wonderful tales are told by old settlers. The steamboats would line up at the wharf in Saint Louis as thickly as they could crowd in their noses, while the trip up the Missouri was a great adventure and required skillful pilots. The river was navigable as far up as the mouth of the Yellowstone.

Captain Ross-Smith has recently won the prize offered by the Australian governor to the first aviator to fly from England to Australia within thirty days. He left London, England, on November 12, and reached Australia on December 10. On the way he overtook in India a Frenchman who had started on October 12, and in that remote part of the Far East they traveled in company for a short time. Hence we find the prophecies being fulfilled. It does not take much faith to see the time when airplanes may be used as a means of gathering the people.

Senator Arthur Capper of Kansas, has declared profiteering to be the principal cause of social unrest. As one instance he cites the advance of fuel oil one hundred per cent in less than one month on account of the coal strike. Such a price had nothing to do with cost of production, but merely with charging the public with all that could be taken because of their necessity. He declares that the people have more than paid for all the cotton and woolen mills in a single year, as well as the shoe factories, flour mills, steel mills, saw mills, packing houses, etc., during the war. He states that a lumber man informs him that prices are at least thirty per cent beyond all reasonable profit. He gives no further citations for his statements, but it is evident that there is a serious discrepancy between the cost of production and the price paid by the public for many articles.

Because of the serious shortage of print paper which threatens to destroy large numbers of small newspapers, the post office committee of Congress is calling on publishers to reduce their consumption of print paper ten per cent. Unless this is done, it is urged, severe repressive measures will have to be taken. We fully indorse the suggestion that a reduction

Never before have the merchants seen such a year for Christmas shopping. Prices have evidently made no difference, except where they were too low. In the large cities where mechanics and skilled workers in all trades are receiving about double the wages of four years ago, it is a common thing for the buyer to successively reject article after article till the highest price is reached, when the purchase is made, regardless of the cost or quality. Factories and mills are swamped with orders and sometimes months behind in delivery. Not only in this country is it so, but in England as well. It is a common thing for orders to be booked six months ahead and business refused daily.

NEWS FROM THE BRANCHES

Pittsburg, Kansas. With the arrival under missionary appointment of A. E. Stofft, this place took on new life. He and family moved in August, and the effects of his pastoral work are shown in the activity of the priesthood, and in the Sunday school and Religio, while the weekly prayer meetings are a feast to the soul. The Religio programs have an important place in the work of the society, with the young people's class averaging 22 in attendance. They have organized a bi-monthly (evidently semi-monthly—Editors) club, at which meetings they are spending a part of the time in the study of church history, after which the first and second vice presidents take charge of the recreational features of the evening, thus prompting sociability. The musical talent is being encouraged.

Wiley, Colorado. Weather extremely cold but services continue and the Saints are busy in preparation for the holiday season. In holding midweek services at the homes of the Saints, those unable to attend for various reasons are favored first, and are greatly blessed with the rest.

Missouri Valley, Iowa. The pastor, J. M. Baker was called to meet with the other pastors of the place and arrange union services on account of the recent coal shortage. The union part seemed to be a unity of opinion that the Saints should have nothing to do with the meetings, and there the matter dropped. Now scarlet fever has become prevalent and prospects for services very poor. Two families of the Saints are affected. A number of plans for the Christmas offering have thereby been upset. Under normal conditions the new year should be most favorable, with the church debt paid. A short time ago a red letter day was had, and during the drive of about ten days eight hundred dollars was raised, two hundred being raised on red letter day at the special solicitation of the pastor. Dedication will be announced later. Prayer meetings are now being held in the homes of the Saints.

Waterloo, Iowa. The branch is still alive and has a good chapel well located in a neighborhood of laboring people and no other church near. It is the hope of the Saints to interest many who are close enough to attend conveniently. The Saints who attend the meetings are well repaid.

South Boardman, Michigan. B. H. Doty, missionary in the Central Michigan District, returned home here to spend holidays with his family.

San Bernardino, California. The Woman's Auxiliary have been allowed a place in the church bazaar conducted annually by all the churches in the city, and where all kinds of articles from a mince pie to a comfortable quilt are sold. The booth maintained by our sisters stood second to none, and their influence, under the leadership of Sister Nellie Aldridge will help to make the work much better understood in this place.

Des Moines, Iowa. The Saints of Des Moines and vicinity are desirous of making an effort to minimize the high cost of living by instituting a community buying and distributing agency. They want, if possible, to buy direct from the jobber, and are anxious to know the names and addresses of the Saints who might be engaged in the jobbing business. Names and addresses of Latter Day Saint firms or members or friends who are in this business should be sent to E. O. Clark, 2500 Logan Avenue, Des Moines, Iowa.

Lamoni, Iowa. The Religio has engaged a series of moving picture films on the following subjects: "Beulah," "Littlest Rebel," "The Raven," "The Melting Pot," "Quo Vadis," "Van-ity Fair," "Aladdin's Lamp." These will consist of from three to seven reels each, and one subject shown each week. During the weeks necessary to use these films, the Religio will hold its sessions at Graceland College on Friday evenings, the lesson period being occupied as usual, followed by the showing of the films on the college machine. Subscriptions will be taken, and admission to the pictures made by ticket so the seating will be made. It is expected that these will begin early in January.

A letter from L. D. Coope, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, says he has just attended a meeting in the Presbyterian church, which made him the more greatly appreciate the value of being a Saint. He reports the branch in Pittsburgh in very good shape. He thinks the church will never attain the conditions necessary till the law of tithing is fully observed. Prayers are requested that the other members of his family may become members of the church.

Heman Hale Smith, assistant church historian, is to be in Chicago and Cleveland on December 29, 30, and 31 attending some important meetings in the interests of the church. At Chicago on the dates mentioned will be held a meeting of the Association of Labor Legislation. As the dates conflict, part of the three days will be spent in Cleveland attending meetings of the American Historical Association and the American Political Science Association. On the 19th he leaves for a short trip to Independence on church business.

It is interesting to learn that Brother A. W. Smith, in charge of the Christmas offering movement, not only preaches the gospel of giving, but is willing to work out in actual practice that which he urges on others. He took over a class of four boys at the beginning of the year, whose ages were from nine to thirteen. They set as their aim $35. In July the aim was passed, and a new one set for $70. They are now within a dollar or two of that mark, and in addition have had two or three camping trips, with expenses cared for by the class.

The Holden Stake bishopric are sending out Bulletin No. 5, this, an illustrated leaflet showing that the tenth is the Lord's. An appeal is made to the Saints of the district to comply with the financial law, and information furnished whereby they may conveniently attend to the details. We are told that at the request of the joint council, Elder J. W. A. Bailey was released from the bishopric to fill the many urgent requests for missionary work. This was done reluctantly, a loyal vote of thanks was tendered him in granting his resignation.

So interesting are the stories on the Book of Mormon in Junior Religio Quarterly for January-March, 1920, that we suspect many grownups will be seeking a sly chance to read the Junior Quarterly. The style is so free and easy and such a good spirit goes with them that one does not think of "lessons." But Sister Vida Smith, the editor, could hardly write any other way. It is her characteristic literary style.

Elder E. E. Long, home for the holidays from his Nebraska fields, delivered some lectures to the class in religious education at Graceland College on "Opposition and how to meet it." He reports that on account of repeated blizzards and severe effects of coal shortage, the series of meetings at Fairfield were not very successful.

We are pleased to note the character of the inter-departmental institute advertised in the convention notices by the Toronto District workers. There is no good reason why there should not be many such institutes held all over the church, that our workers might be fully instructed in the possibilities of Religio, Sunday school and Auxiliary work.

Elder Charles Derry is now nearly ninety-four years of age and confined to the home as he has been for the past two years, but he retains his cheerful disposition and is glad there are many others able to do the work he would like to be engaged in.

Notice is sent in from the Spring River District that A. C. Silvers, of Nowata, Oklahoma, was elected to succeed A. V. Karlstrom as superintendent of the district Sunday school, and Mrs. M. E. Sheppard, of 2415 May Street, Joplin, Missouri, as secretary, to succeed Mrs. A. V. Karlstrom.

Elder G. R. Wells has so far recovered that it is expected he will be released from the Sanitarium so he can return home prior to Christmas. The operation for mastoiditis was highly successful, and by careful treatment it is hoped his hearing in the affected ear will be practically restored.

"Herbert Spencer Salisbury has been appointed as a member of the faculty of the University of Louisiana and assigned to the mathematics department. He will leave with his family for his new work and his new home about January 5. Mr. Salisbury recently purchased a home on South Pleasant Street, expecting to live in Independence permanently."—The Independence Examiner, December 18, 1919.

Individual contributions to the Christmas offering are often unmentioned in the lists of schools, but the following who have sent direct are mentioned as deserving credit: Mrs. Deborah Pool, Mason City, Iowa, $4; Clarissa J. Lince, Levering, Michigan, $2.50; John J. Newberry, Wainwright, Alberta, $3.50.

Elder Hubert Case has been in Lamoni a few days recently after some successful work among the Indians of Oklahoma. He left during the middle of the week for his field, where he will begin a series of meetings three and a half miles west of Kingfisher, Oklahoma, and will likely preach for the week following. During that time the Indians of the community will hold one of their annual Christmas-tree events, which mean much to our red brethren.

Christmas Greeting

The following letter has been mailed to all general conference appointees, and to many others who are devoting their whole time to the service of the church. It will be noted, however, that it is a greeting from the Presidency to all of the workers of the church:

To the General Conference Appointees; Season's Greeting:

As the Christmas season comes on we can not but think of the faithful toilers for the church, and especially those whose whole time is given over thereunto. Without doubt the year has brought disappointments and regrets to every one, but what pleasure there is in the memory of time well spent in the Master's service, of labor for love of humanity, of working for others. And we sincerely wish that the memory of a well spent year may enhance the enjoyment and good will of your Christmas tide.

The church values the labors of its servants, and in behalf of the church, (the Presidency, representing the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric, extends to you appreciation and thanks for your faithfulness and labor. May God bless you and yours, and at this Christmas time may your soul swell with the rich, expansive, and deep feelings of good will till you can sincerely wish for every man, peace. As a minister for Christ your labors must have contributed to augment the fund of peace on earth, good will to men. May the angel's song find full echo in your heart to-day.

With kindly wishes for a peaceful Merry Christmas and a Happy and Prosperous New Year, I am Very sincerely yours,

FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, December 25, 1919.

Greetings

The editors extend to all our readers hearty greetings of the season and best wishes for the coming year, that the blessings of God may attend each one, and his Spirit inspire and direct us all.

Power of Governor

In the recent coal strike, one interesting development was the mining of surface coal in Kansas by the direction of the Government. The governor of Missouri took like action, looking to the State taking charge of the mines and producing the necessary fuel. In North Dakota the Government arbitrarily exercised its authority to mine lignite.

This action in North Dakota was taken into the federal court on an injunction, but Judge Charles Amidon refused to grant the injunction. He frankly held, in exercise of his authority, to maintain public order and prevent riot, the governor had the right not only to suppress riot after its occurrence, but to take practical steps to prevent its occurring, and in this instance to take military control of the mining properties, and furnish necessary lignite to the public. He is more than simply a police officer to arrest men for wrongful acts. But he represents the State, and on behalf of the Government may exercise necessary powers in the interest of the public.

The court therefore held that the governor had the necessary power in the emergency.

Colonization in Canada

The Public for November 15, in discussing the soldiers' colony at Kapuskasing, Canada, reports the venture there to be successful; but it also points out three defects.

First, there should be a land survey, so that the unfertile spots will be avoided.

Second, there should be "town planning." As it is at present, the village is scattered for eight miles along the railroad, each family having one hundred acres. They are too far apart for ordinary association.

The third objection is, that the title is eventually given in unrestricted fee simple. This is the case with the homestead laws as affecting western Canada, and as was also the case with the homestead laws in the United States. The objectionable factor is that in a short time a fine title is gained, the land vacated and held for a raise, so instead of furnishing homes for those who need it, the land is taken out of the market and out of use.

It is urged that the tenancy depends squarely upon use. This raises a question of marked economic interest and value. At first it will naturally be opposed as being paternalistic. Legally to make titles dependent upon use, will prevent some difficulty. It is not, however, impossible of solution.

It is of interest to us in determining what is a stewardship, and in what way should land be held in Zion and her stakes to be of the greatest possible benefit.

Peace Treaty

It is of interest to note that the vote on the question of ratifying the Treaty of Peace with Germany without any reservation, thirty-nine senators voted in the affirmative. On the question of ratifying with the large reservation, forty other senators voted in the affirmative. Thus seventy-nine were in favor of ratifying the treaty, either with or without reservation; and only fifteen voted against reservation either way.

The reservation provides that the United States may withdraw from the League whenever Congress so desires. It is sure that Congress instead of the President shall have power to decide all matters that call for action under the League covenant; and preserves the right of Congress to decide when the United States will be bound.

The objections are that the resolutions of ratification are preceded by a preamble requiring the ratification of three other nations; the reservations practically amount to amendments; and some of these amendments or reservations would completely nullify the League of Nations. This is doubtless the wish of the fifteen who voted against the Treaty on every vote, but not of the rest of the senate.

Training for Parents

We require a trained nurse, and require a trained and experienced physician in our illness. We require trained executives for our work. Recognized experience is necessary, in business, and in the factory. We recognize that an experienced farmer is needed for the work of the farm, and for the proper rearing of stock. Why then do we ignore the fact that training is needed for fatherhood and motherhood?

Yet in our own school and college curriculum, nothing was offered until very recently, and now but comparatively little on that important subject.

We may have advanced beyond the attitude of the woman who upon being advised, resentfully replied: "I guess I know how to bring up children. I have buried seven." But have we progressed far enough?

We call to mind a significant tombstone on which was written: "Here lies Johnny Smith, the only child of Henry and Maria Smith. Died at the age of two years and eleven months and seventeen days of acute indigestion. Our only consolation is, we never denied him anything he wanted."

Hebrew Converts

After missing four numbers on account of the strike in New York City, The American Hebrew of October 31, lays a special emphasis against the Christianizing of the Jews.

This theme appears under two or three different headings, in which the position is taken that no true Jew would depart from the ideals and faith of his fathers; and those who have departed, Christian denominations are welcome to convert if they can. But that different Christian denominations have been victimized several times by men of low caliber who profess to have been rabbis, when a very casual examination would have shown their claims to be unfounded.

It is a matter worthy of serious consideration when the Hebrew papers deliberately warn us that there are many such imposters. Of course we can not agree in a fundamental sense that their position is true, for Judaism prepares for and needs the coming of the Messiah, and naturally looks forward to Christianity; that is, to the high ideals originally presented by Jesus, the Christ and Messiah.

It is said that a certain German countess in Hanover, Germany, was an ardent skeptic. She cherished an especial antipathy toward the doctrine of the resurrection. When she died she left minute directions for burial. An immense granite slab covered her grave. Granite slabs were placed on each side and at the head and at the foot. All were clamped together with heavy iron clamps. On the monument these words were engraved, "This forever bought grave may never be opened." Thus she hoped to continue preaching her doctrine of doubt. But a little seed fell upon the grave and it grew up through the crevices between the slabs and became a tree. It burst the iron clamps and shouldered the granite rocks away. A little seed was stronger than infidelity.—Elbert A. Smith.

Forward Movement Among the Churches

Five leading Protestant churches of the United States and Canada have inaugurated an Interchurch Forward Movement. These churches are the Anglican, Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, and Congregationalist. The field of operation will be the continent of America, India, Egypt, China, Japan, and the whole of Asia.

A series of conventions are now being held at strategic points in both countries, forty of which will be held in the United States and some fifteen in Canada. These conventions comprise delegates from all the local churches of each denomination within a given area.

It was my privilege to attend all but one session of the convention recently held in Massey Hall, Toronto, Canada. This is the largest assembly hall in the city. It was filled to its capacity at each evening session. The day sessions were well represented by delegates from all parts of the province of Ontario.

This is the first movement of its kind in the history of America. It may well be defined as an attempt to produce "unity in diversity" as the leaders disavow any desire or intention of affecting any organic unity. It is an official effort, on the part of the churches represented, to unite for a campaign covering every phase of ecclesiastical and evangelical activity. It, therefore, commands our attention and careful consideration. It does not follow that, owing to the fact that we are not included in this movement, we should oppose it. The sectarian churches are working out their own destiny. They will do this regardless of our indorsement or condemnation. They should be permitted to do this. Our work is positive rather than negative. We can, and should, inaugurate a vigorous, persistent, and affirmative campaign for Jesus Christ and the gospel which he has committed to our charge. We are called upon to "teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you," with the assurance of Jesus Christ, who has thus commissioned us, that if we are faithful to our trust, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." Let others do what they may, this only is our work.

Doctor Alfred Gandier, president of Knox College, Toronto, presided at the opening session of the convention. He furnished the keynote, indicating the purpose of the movement, in the following language:

"This is not, in any sense, a movement toward church union. It is not a merger of any kind. It is not associated with any negotiations that have been held, or will be held, in the interest of organic church union.

"It is an interchurch movement, each church remaining true to its own teachings, loyal to its own traditions, true to its own genius, following its own form of worship and methods of work. Each church is to be permitted to pursue its own course and follow the same policy as heretofore, so far as its individual activities are concerned."

Doctor Gandier made it emphatic and clear that there was no intention on the part of the churches to modify its creed or tenets of faith. It developed, both from the opening address of Doctor Gandier as well as the addresses of the speakers which followed him, that this forward movement is the sequence of several conferences of the leaders of these various churches wherein it was conceded:

"1. That the church has failed in its purpose.

"2. That the church members have been recalcitrant in their duty as Christians.

"3. That the church no longer holds the confidence and support of the masses.

"4. That the church is losing communicants and attendance at the general church services.

"5. That, if the church is to persist something heroic must be done to regain lost prestige and thereby maintain a standing among men.

"6. That these churches have a 'form of godliness' but lack the power and Spirit of God."

Doctor Gandier stated that the present movement was intended to rouse the churches to "obey the great command and fulfill the perfect mission of the body of Christ on earth." He did not indicate in what way this was to be brought about save in the effort to raise twelve million dollars in Canada to revive interest in the church. He freely admitted that the late war had made fully apparent the inefficiency of the churches and thereby impelled a forward movement.

He said that it was the purpose to sound a call for penitence for past failures and new consecration of purpose. One of the most important efforts of the movement will be to raise this fund of twelve million dollars in Canada to be devoted to—

General publicity.

Sending out speakers.

Printing literature.

A house-to-house canvass.

Reclaiming communicants who have become lost to the church.

Provide for one of the churches to take the entire responsibility of occupying in districts which cannot afford to support more than one church. In this event the other churches will withdraw from that field.

Doctor Gandier concluded his address by remarking that if the allied nations could pursue their individual purpose and still establish a league of nations it was likewise possible to develop and maintain a league of churches having the same purpose in the field of spiritual activity as the League of Nations maintains in the political and economic affairs of the nations of the league.

The comparison is quite faulty in this. Jesus Christ said, "There shall be one fold and one shepherd." He prayed that his disciples "may be one, as we are." It is recorded that in the olden time "the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul." We learn that "by one Spirit we are all baptized into one body." Paul says, "there is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling. One Lord, one faith, one baptism. One God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all."

The Lord, speaking in latter days, has truly said, "Except ye are one ye are not mine." "Unity in diversity" may be possible in political affairs, but it is entirely inapplicable to the things of God. Nations can, and do, exist independently of other nations. One nation is not a part of another nation. There is but one church of Jesus Christ. There may be branches of this church, but these branches receive their strength and power from the great fountain head, Jesus Christ, and therefore must and do bear identical fruit.

Doctor Gandier stated that, "The challenge held up to the organized church of Jesus Christ to-day is, will she be true to her mission or will she not?" We answer, "Yes." The church of Jesus Christ has always been true to her mission—she always will be for a failure on the part of the people who comprise this church to be true forfeits to them the authority of Jesus Christ and the office work of the Holy Spirit, which gives life and vitality of the church. A church without these two essentials is dead.

"The pledge," concluded Doctor Gandier, "of the united churches is to be from this time forth that the resources in men and in money, in blood and in treasure, of all the branches of Christ's church will be at the disposal of Jesus Christ as never before for a world-wide campaign of redeeming love."

The Honorable E. D. Drury, recently elected premier of the province of Ontario, followed Doctor Gandier. He said:

"We must sink our nonessentials and emphasize the one big thing for which all the churches stand."

Mr. Drury failed, throughout his remarks, to indicate what this "one big thing" was. He continued:

"This movement is an acknowledgment of a failure of duty on the part of the churches. It is an acknowledgment that we have not been attending to the things we might have, but have not, done as servants of Christ.

"This failure has not been due to lack of organization or machinery, but the lack of putting Jesus Christ as the center of all Christian service.

"We have depended too much on other things for the salvation of the world. We have depended on political reform, social service, ethics and philosophy and forgot Christ.

"I take it that this movement is an acknowledgment on our part that we are going to get back to the only thing that can save the individual and save the world, and that is belief in Jesus Christ.

"This movement is a confession that we have failed. It is an acknowledgment that we must go and get strength from the only source of strength for our work as Christian people."

Mr. Drury spoke as a layman. He was introduced as the Christian premier of Ontario. The convention gave him an ovation lasting for three minutes. Though the ministers were not willing to be as frank as Mr. Drury, he evidently expressed the sentiment of the great majority of the delegates.

We do not think it impertinent to inquire at this point:

Can we reasonably expect that the men who have been leading these churches in the past and who are responsible for the condition in which we find these churches to-day will be able to bring their followers into closer relationship with Jesus Christ using, as they must, the same organization and machinery which has produced this present spiritual dearth? Will it not be necessary to secure different tools and divinely ordained workmen for this purpose? Jesus, in speaking to his apostles said:

"Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain."

The Apostle Paul's exhortation to the "Church of God which is at Corinth" is particularly applicable here. He said:

"Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among; and that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment. For it hath been declared unto me of you, my brethren by them which are of the house of Chloe, that there are contentions among you. Now this I say, that every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ.

"Is Christ divided? Was Paul crucified for you? Or were ye baptized in the name of Paul?"

The Weymouth translation renders this passage as follows:

"Now I entreat you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, to cultivate a spirit of harmony—all of you—and that there be no divisions among you, but rather a perfect union through you having one mind and one judgment. For I have been distinctly informed, my brethren, about you by Chloe's people, that there are dissensions among you. What I mean is that each of you is a partisan.

"One man says, 'I belong to Paul;' another, 'I belong to Apollos;' a third, 'I belong to Peter;' a fourth, 'I belong to Christ.' Is the Christ in fragments? Is it Paul who was crucified on your behalf? Or were ye baptized to be Paul's adherents?"

The Twentieth Century New Testament gives the following rendition:

"I have been informed . . . that party feeling exists among you."

Doctor R. Bruce Taylor, Dean of Queen's University, Toronto emphasized the failures and shortcomings of the church in the past. He likewise noted the decline in authority on the part of the ministers and the ever lessening power on the part of the church membership. He said:

"Church people have come to look upon their minister as a paid employee, to be discharged upon a few day's notice if he displeases them. If there is to be any power in the ministry [thus indicating his doubt that there was any now] the people must expect of their minister that he will stand up and say unpopular things and take a strong stand upon public questions. No man who is at the mercy of any member of his congregation who pays a tithe of his income can fulfill Christ's mission."

In view of the acknowledged fact that all Protestant ministers receive their call from the people, how is it possible to overcome the condition herein deplored by the learned doctor? Men in these various churches are "called" through the vote of the congregation where they labor. They may be released by the same vote. And this in harmony with the rules and regulations of the churches. If Doctor Taylor would correct this fatal mistake, which he so clearly portrays, he must not seek to apply a plaster—he must go back to the source of the trouble. It seems inconsistent to acknowledge the right of the congregation to hire and thereupon deny its right to fire its minister. A stream cannot rise above its source, neither can a minister who receives his authority through the vote of the church membership arrogate to himself the priesthood which only God can give. Doctor Taylor has very frankly admitted that whatever authority there may be in the ministry of the churches herein represented comes from the congregation rather than from God. A fatal admission that.

On this question the Bible is very explicit: Jesus said:

"Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go, and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain." John 15:16.

"As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away." Acts 3:1-3.

"And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God as was Aaron. So also Christ glorified not himself to be made a high priest; but he that said unto him, Thou art my son, to-day have I begotten thee." Hebrews 5:4-5.

Paul puts the question directly up to the learned doctor thus:

"How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him whom they have not heard? and how shall they preach, except they be sent?

as it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things?"—Romans 10:14, 15.

We fully agree that a minister of Jesus Christ must be independent of any man or number of men and that, in no sense, should he feel beholding to the people whom he is to teach, but, in order to do this, it is imperative that his call comes from the only infallible source and that is from God in harmony with his law. This will necessitate direct and present-day revelation from God—a thing which the churches representing the forward movement studiously deny.

Doctor Taylor said that the first thing to be brought back is the Bible. He deplored the fact that people did not bring their Bibles to church any more. He said:

"We want the Bible back again. We want more stiff expounding and a great deal less of this stuff they put on the top of blanc mange—whipped cream. We want less whipped cream and more of the good solid kind of thing that comes out of the daily study of the inexhaustible Book. If we are going to have any quickening we must have the Bible back again. We must understand the necessity of emphasizing spiritual things."

The doctor is quite right in this. We congratulate him on the stand which he has taken in regard to the Bible. Is it not true that the various creeds of these churches have well nigh crowded the Bible out? Would it not be a splendid thing to discard the creeds, which it is now admitted have proven a dismal failure in bringing men to God and depend on the Word of God alone? The creeds have failed; church dogmas and traditions have proven ineffective. Why not have recourse only to the only infallible source? The doctor, while contending for the necessity of recourse to the Bible, also stated that "dogmas cannot be left out of religion"; a grave mistake. The Bible antedates dogmas. It is above all dogmas. Let dogmas go. Let us depend upon the Word of God.

Doctor Taylor emphasized the thought that the church should not exist to entertain people. He said:

"There is a pressing need to return to the old days when Christianity was a matter of reverent thought. There is room for a rediscovery of Puritanism, of sternness, of discipline, in religion. The situation is grave. The situation must be met with tools none too good. We should remember that we are doing this in the power that is deathless and in the power of Christ who died and rose again, in the power of the Holy Spirit manifested on Pentecost. The power is here if we can lay hold on it."

The statement is quite inconsistent. If they are now doing their work in the "power of Christ" then there is no occasion to "lay hold on it." If they are without this power there is only one way to "lay hold on it" and that is by conforming to the law of Christ, which makes possible a realization of this power. Why not discard these "tools none too good" and use the tools which Christ supplies and which do not deteriorate?

The "Holy Spirit manifested on Pentecost" was the sequence to a strict compliance to the principles of the gospel as enunciated by Jesus Christ which comprehended the following:

Faith in God and in Jesus Christ and in the Holy Ghost.
Repentance which comprehended sorrow for and forsaking of sin.

Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins.
Laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost.
The administration of the rite of baptism and the laying on of hands by men called and ordained by the direction of God.

We venture the opinion that the doctor will wait for a long as he and his conferees ignore and violate the specific long time for the "Holy Spirit manifested on Pentecost" so provisions of the law of Christ which made it possible for the disciples to be endowed with power from on high. If these churches are seeking the power which they confess they do not now possess, there is but one way to secure it, and that is by strictly complying with the provisions of the gospel which makes this power possible.

Doctor Taylor continued:

"There is an increase of indifference to the activities of the organized church. The rush of to-day is taking all of us more and more away from the organized religions in which we were brought up. We are not as earnest in this as we ought to be.

"Next we have a shaking of authority. I wonder where the seat of authority is in religion?"

He mentioned the arguments of the various churches pro and con and added that—

"The result of the whole thing has been to unsettle all of us with regard to that question of the seat of authority in religion."

Is it not indeed a sad commentary on the spiritual insight of the churches when a leading representative in an Inter-church Forward Movement will be forced to say, "I wonder where the seat of authority is in religion." Evidently, these leaders are not in touch with that seat and therefore have no authority to speak for the author of true religion. What would these people think of a man coming as an ambassador of the King of England and saying by way of introduction, "I wonder where the seat of authority is in government."

Doctor Taylor concluded:

"The sense of the awe of things unseen does not grip the youth of to-day in the way it did the youth of a hundred years ago. Let us rediscover in religion the fact of Puritanism. The Puritan movement has been the greatest thing in British history. In everything but religion we discipline ourselves but do we give any kind of discipline at all in spiritual things?"

"You cannot manufacture a revival—you cannot do it by advertising nor by getting some great figure here and paying him a lot of money nor by getting some choir leader who is going to play the soft stuff.

"We want to fight against this materialism that is almost unavoidable in the fact that a multitude of people have made more money than they know what to do with.

"Let us realize that the years of our working life are, after all, brief, and for God's sake in these years let us live for a result, not in those things that perish but for those things that endure."

The most impressive speeches were made by H. Sherwood Eddy, late of India, and J. Campbell White of New York, both laymen. The ministers who spoke were devoid of vision. They had no definite objective. They confessed their impotency in the past. They indicated that they were alarmed and perplexed over the present status of the church and were determined to make one desperate effort to reingratiate their services into the confidence and support of the people. These two laymen related conditions as they saw them in their work among the lay following of the churches. They evidenced a much clearer vision than did the ministers of the real purpose of the church and the needs of the hour.

Sherwood Eddy has only recently returned to America from an extended trip through the Far East. He has visited Egypt, most of Asia, India, China, Japan, Germany, Austria, and Russia. He has made an extended study of conditions in these various countries. Herewith some excerpts from his address. I regret very much my inability to present a more complete report. His was a call to the churches to rise to the occasion and embrace the opportunity offered to them in Japan, in China, in India, and Asia, where rational movements are under way that can only be attended with good if they are given real Christian leadership based upon the actual teachings of Jesus Christ. He said:

"There are eight religions, forty-seven languages, and two thousand castes in India. For centuries these have been separated as by impassible gulfs, but to-day they are being forged into a unit of self-consciousness. Next year India enters upon a measure of responsible government. The new East, under the shadow of Islam, has caught the catchwords of the new democracy, but it has no conception of religious liberty.

"In India national feeling is awakening. There is no religion in India other than the Christian religion that can furnish an adequate basis for national life. India's supreme need is honest Christian leadership.

"China in facing a great crisis. The nation has formed a republic without the foundation upon which a successful democracy can be carried on. It must fail unless the ideals of Christianity are inculcated there.

"Japan to-day stands at the crossroads. What shall its future be—autocracy or democracy, militarism or freedom, materialism or Christianity? If ever there is a yellow peril it must be a peril of our own making. It will matter to us if 620,000,000 of the yellow race should rise up as a force for materialism.

"In Egypt, Palestine, Syria, and Turkey a new spirit is everywhere talked about. Nowhere under the shadow of Islam is there any conception of real citizenship or of real liberty.

"Three countries of Europe are verging on revolution and two on famine. It is truly a tragic world. To-day is the golden hour of opportunity for Christianity. All the world is calling to-night, 'Come over and help us.' This call comes from the East that gave us the gospel. Will we go over and help them?"

"These lands need but one thing and that is the real basis of a Christian civilization to permit of good government which will enable them to regain prosperity and real national life. One hundred thousand Indian troops, returning from many battlefields, are spreading throughout the land new ideas and producing new desires. The governments of Japan and China have shown a readiness to welcome the Christian missionary."

Mr. Eddy stated very clearly and emphatically that the converts to Christianity, particularly in India and China, were becoming dissatisfied with the divisions in the Christian churches and the creeds which thus separated them and that there was a well-defined effort to cut away from the sects and to get back to the primitive teachings and practices of the early Christian church. He stated that even now steps were being taken for independent organizations based on the Bible and the Bible alone. He showed how the young men of these nations were embracing Christianity and leading the people. He asserted that "No non-Christian religion in the world can form an adequate basis for the national life of these countries."

His closing peroration was a masterpiece, and one could easily have imagined that he was a Latter Day Saint bishop calling upon the members of the church to honor the law of consecration and tithing given through Joseph Smith. He said:

"You and I must choose between selfishness and sacrifice, getting and giving, mammon and God. How many of you Christians have tithed your increase this year? If you have done this you have not done your whole duty. Have you made a consecration of your surplus? No real Christian can stop short this year without consecrating to the work of God all of his surplus. No Christian can afford to lay by any surplus this year. You must recognize that your business and profession is a stewardship from God for which you will have to render an accounting."

It is needless to remark that when Mr. Eddy gave expression to the above there was a breathless stillness, a hush which indicated that he was making a profound impression on many of these self-satisfied, complacent, and contented church members.

Mr. J. Campbell White was the speaker on the closing night of the convention. His was a plea for missionary work. He is at the head of the international missionary movement. He said:

"Alongside a powerful league of nations we need equally a powerful league of churches, and that is what we are now in process of shaping up. I believe that we will have a bigger war in the lifetime of many here than the last war, unless we carry this spiritual war through to a proper conclusion.

"The revenues needed to carry on this work of the churches apart from the upkeep of the congregations will be $300,000,000 this year. God needs a larger recognition in regard to our possessions, if our possessions are not to prove a peril. We want to enroll 10,000,000 tithe payers this year—a definite enrollment of all those who recognize God as the real owner of their possessions and that they are only stewards. If the church members in America would pay one tenth of their annual increase it would mean a billion dollars a year. In the United States we do not average a fourth of one per cent."

From the speeches of other speakers we gathered the following:

"If we are to make our Christian faith a potent factor we must not only inspire the members of the churches with devotion but we must also reach out to the hinterland to those who have no definite Christian affiliation."

"What we lack is the Spirit of God. If this country would take up the work of God as it took up the work of the Empire our effort would be irresistible. There would be no limit to what might happen if we had the same oneness for Christ that we had for our earthly king."

"Has Canada been saved from Germany to the materialism and selfishness which prevailed before the war? Has she been saved to the present unrest and distrust and suspicion of each other?"

"The meager influence the church has exercised in the past is a cause for great dissatisfaction."

"The people of the Far East are not concerned with oratory or with big conventions. They are tremendously concerned about what we are going to do with the present situation."

"Men and women must be fired with the spirit and purpose of Jesus Christ."

"We must take a fresh account of stock. We must exert ourselves for a real occupation of our community and nation."

"No denomination has a moral right to stand aside from other churches. We must study to get together and plan together for our constituency. Millions of people to-day are in a frame of mind to be brought into real church relationship. Vital religion is the only hope of national life."

"We have more than the proverbial fifty-seven varieties, we have one hundred and twenty varieties of religions in New York. We hope some day to have only one Methodist church in America."

"The present situation is a serious indictment of the churches. The children of Christ must get into working relation with each other. The friends of Jesus Christ must cooperate. For all too long have we been working in conflict with each other. We must get together."

It is proposed to:

Raise an immense fund to further this movement.

Each church will collect and administer its own fund.

Each church will make a study of the field to be occupied.

Religious leaders of all communions will study the different fields which will be divided according to mutual consent.

In unoccupied communities some church will be given responsibility where the community is not strong enough to support more than one church.

Special feature advertising, with posters, pamphlets, and newspaper advertising.

Canvass of all leading colleges and universities by specially selected national speakers.

It is clearly evident that the church leaders of the United States and Canada have read the handwriting on the wall. They sense the failure of the churches, which they represent, to supply the demand of the world for a virile Christianity. They are desperate and are attempting to regain their prestige and power among the people. Their present program will not accomplish this purpose. They may increase their treasuries; they may have accessions in church membership; they may secure a considerable amount of advertising; they may have a temporary revival, but there is only one way to get "back to Jesus" and that is by adopting his program without amendment and revision.

There is but one church of Jesus Christ. It was organized by Jesus Christ himself. Its ministers have been called by Jesus Christ. They teach the gospel as it was taught by Christ and his apostles. They administer the rites of this gospel as they were instituted by Christ himself. The membership of this church receive the gift of the Holy Ghost as it was manifested on Pentecost. God confirms the gospel, to the souls of those who obey, with signs following. That church is the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Quotations from the Iowa Interchurch World Conference

[On December 8, 9, and 10, Elders F. M. McDowell and D. T. Williams of Lamoni, attended the Iowa conference of the Interchurch World Movement as representatives. Sixty-six counties of Iowa were represented and some most interesting subjects earnestly discussed. The following are quotations gathered from the many uttered on the floor of the meeting, and will be followed later by a more extensive summary of the developments of the conference, by F. M. McDowell, compiler of the notes furnished herewith.—EDITORS.]

"The church that can not see the need of the man next door can not see the need of the man at the farthest end of the earth."

"The church suffers to-day from under-spiritual production."

"One big need to-day is lives possessed with the spirit of Christ."

"Every man is a possible disciple of Jesus Christ."

"Do we merely have church service on Sunday, or church service all the time?"

"What is the gospel of Christ separated from the program of social service?"

"The Catholics have nine hospitals to every one furnished by all Protestants together. One Protestant church in the neighboring city pays $2,400 yearly to a young man who acts as social and recreational leader for his parish."

PASTORAL

Northeastern Illinois Buys Reunion Grounds

The committee elected at the Plano reunion, to locate a permanent reunion ground was able to report success at the recent conference. The site is about 10 acres of land one mile northwest of Elmhurst, about 20 miles west of Chicago. It contains about three and one half acres of good timber, and Salt Creek is the boundary on the west, so plenty of water for baptizing and bathing, by adding to the dam already there. The committee was continued, with some changes, and now has J. O. Dutton chairman, Wardell Christy, secretary-treasurer and three other members, J. A. Daer, William Darman and J. H. McGuire. The committee was empowered to purchase the land and have, by drawing a contract and paying $200, and are to pay $1800 more March 1 when the deed will be drawn to Benjamin R. McGuire, Presiding Bishop. Over $1000 was raised in cash at the conference and we take pleasure in announcing to all the scattered members as well as to all in branches that we are ready for your donations. Send them to Wardell Christy, 6532, South Hermitage Avenue, Chicago, who will be glad to send you a receipt for whatever you are willing to donate. The firm we are dealing with have promised to take Liberty Bonds at par, so now is a chance to use some of your bonds, and in a good cause. This district has long suffered for the want of a permanent grounds and now it is possible to have one if we all do our best! Some time in March, when the snow is off and before work can begin on the land, the committee desire a rally day, to put the timber in proper shape for tenting, as there is some small stuff in the way and some limbing of trees to be done. In fact, it will be practical physical culture, so come with axes, saws, and grub hoes. Notice of the day will be given later on. We want this purchase to make no difference with the tithes and offerings of the district, but let it be a special, offering, and in time it will yield a goodly harvest. For years past we have spent much money on temporary arrangements, and to-day have nothing to show for it, but from now on it will be different. So may we urge the young, especially to sacrifice all you can, for this will be a great blessing to you in years to come. Many holidays there will be gatherings of the Chicago Saints there, as well as many from the surrounding district. Begin now to lay your plans to be at the next reunion, for all being well it will be the largest gathering this district has ever seen, and God being willing, may it be the best. Our new missionary J. W. Paxton was at the conference, and will be in the district shortly after the Christmas time. Rockford take notice, as we are liable to come your way about then and then to Belvidere, and other points. We believe the work is onward here, and may every Saint put their shoulder to the wheels of progress that they may roll on! Let us remember in much faith and prayer, our brethren who have gone to foreign fields, and who are meeting so many things to discourage them. Remember the same God who delivered Peter of old, is just the same to-day, and can overrule all things, if we have the proper faith and works. Your servant in Christ.

THE FORUM

This department is for the free discussion of questions of vital interest to the church in an impartial, impersonal way. We welcome affirmative discussions for the purpose of ascertaining the truth. The views presented are not authoritative, and represent the opinion only of the writer, but we hope it will lead to authoritative conclusions by the church. ### Inheritance

Are we not all His children? If children, then heirs.

What is an heir? One who inherits something. That which he inherits is an inheritance. An inheritance is that which an heir has a right to before he receives it through a will or some moral obligation. In this case he is an heir through religious obligation.

Since the heir has a right to his inheritance no one else has a right to it and no claim on it. If another has no claim on it he has no right to charge the heir for it. If another has claim on the property, he is also an heir to the same.

Shall not every man's inheritance be his, and shall he not hold it by title and deed? (Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1.)

If a man shall buy his property he is not an heir, but a purchaser; and his land is not an inheritance but a purchase.

Let me again call your attention to Doctrine and Covenants 82. All children have a claim upon the Lord's storehouse, if the parents have not wherewith to give them inheritances. This means that children, after they have become of age, have a claim on the Lord's storehouse for inheritances if their parents have not sufficient property to thus provide for them.

What does it mean to have a claim on anything? "To be entitled to a thing; a demand, as of right; a right; a title." (Standard dictionary.) It would seem that a claimant is on a par with an heir in his right to property.

Now, no one can rightfully sell anything which legally belongs to one who already owns, or has a first right to the thing in question.

In section 58: 11 we read that it was the will of the Lord that the Saints in the various places should put their money into the hands of the bishop to purchase inheritances for the children of God. That which is purchased for some one belongs to the one for whom it is purchased, otherwise it would be purchased for another. Notice that the Saints were to send the money to the bishop and he was to purchase the land; he, or the agent.

I remember of no statement being made that the Saints or individuals were to buy their inheritances.

We read in section 98: 10 that all the churches should gather together their moneys and send honorable and wise men up to the land of Zion to buy lands and gather on them and in this way establish Zion. I cannot believe that the Lord intended this land should in turn be sold as an inheritance to the Saints who had given their money to buy the land.

If not, who should pay for their inheritances; the poor? If so, how shall the poor be exalted in that the rich are made low? Read section 101: 2. And how will the Lord consecrate of the riches of those who embrace his gospel among the Gentiles, unto the poor of his people if they shall pay for their lands? A consecration is not a loan; if it were, the surplus which is consecrated unto the bishop would be a loan and should be returned, for all should pay their debts. But consecrations are not loans because they are not to be returned. Section 42: 11: "He that sinneth and repenteth not shall be cast out of the church and shall not receive again that which he has consecrated unto the poor and needy of my church."

Neither should the church ask the poor and needy to pay to it what has been consecrated to them, the poor. In section 42: 8 the Lord says if we love him we shall consecrate of our properties unto the poor with a covenant and a deed that cannot be broken. Notice that the consecration is to be made unto the poor and that with a deed and covenant that cannot be broken.

Should worthy Saints going to Zion without enough means to purchase inheritances be required to pay for them? Let reason speak and justice show herself.

The attitude of the church toward its members should be the same as the attitude of parents toward their children, for we are the family of God on earth. (Ephesians 3: 14, 15.)

According to section 82, if parents have sufficient property to give their children inheritances they should do so.

Jesus said: "What man is there of you, if his son ask bread will he give him a stone?" "Or if he ask a fish will he give him a serpent?"

"If ye then being evil know how to give good gifts unto your children how much more shall your father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?" (Matthew 7: 9, 11.)

Is it not the goodness of God portrayed in the principles of his kingdom on earth?

Would it be in harmony with the spirit of equality for parents with sufficient means to give their children inheritances, while the children of parents less fortunate would be required to pay for inheritances?

In Doctrine and Covenants 51: 2 we read that every man would receive alike among his people.

Would two young men receive alike if one were given an inheritance and the other required to pay for his? No distinction is made between the sons of the rich and the poor men. Let every man receive alike.

The fullness of the earth is the Lord's and he is no respecter of persons, for by one spirit we have all been baptized into one body and have become heirs according to the promise, even joint heirs with Jesus Christ. Consecration to the poor, as to the church, carries with it the sense of no reimbursement.

In my opinion, all consecration to the poor should go through the proper channel, the bishopric. (Section 42: 8.)

Though the consecrations should go through the bishopric, it is to reach the poor in the sense of a consecration. Consecrate unto the poor. (42: 1.)

We infer from the reading of section 82 that some will have claim on the storehouse for inheritances. Now, in section 81: 4 we read that the talents cast into the storehouse become the common property of the whole church. It belongs to whoever needs it. So the worthy Saint may go to the Lord's storehouse and claim enough talents as his own to purchase an inheritance in concert with proper authorities.

If it were necessary to return the price of the inheritance, that which the steward received could not have been his, and the storehouse could not be the common property of the whole church. This appeals to us as being the true spirit of all things common, translated into the terms of Christian experiences and actions. It agrees with my idea of selling our property and imparting to every man as he has need.

AT THE FRONT

ARRIVED IN SWITZERLAND

After a long tiresome journey, we arrived in Basle on November 20. We found Brother and Sister Roos and also Broter and Sister Passman well and waiting for us. We have been nearly all over Basle looking for rooms, but have not been able to find anything so far. We are stopping at a hotel, the cheapest we can find, and we had to take our meals here in order to get a room. It amounts to about $80 per month. The food is very poor and I am sitting here with my overcoat on writing to you. We hope to be able to get a place soon where we can do our own cooking.

We had Sunday school and preaching Sunday. There were six nonmembers present—three Frenchmen and three Germans. I spoke in German and Sister Roos translated into French.

(A letter by Elder Jacob G. Halb to the Presidency and Twelve, from Basle, Switzerland, care Frederick J. L. Roos, Petersgasse 13, November 25, 1919.)

A NEW BAND IN THE ISLANDS

I am again able to take up my weekly letter, which, by the way, is not more frequent than monthly. And the reason is inaccessibility to the mails when one is in the Tuamotuan islands.

Emma and I left Tahiti about the last part of March for the island of Manihi where there was need of missionary work (they not having been visited by us missionaries during the last four years save passing through on ships), as well as to establish the band there which had been in process of formation for a year or more. During our stay there we began work on a church building which had been hanging fire for a like period. In fact, the branch of nearly a hundred members was in a state of stagnation. The congregation was split and half of them were meeting in another place under the leadership of a Catholic trader, who also conducted their meetings. A Catholic priest in a nearby island had been sent for to take charge of them. So my arrival at that time was opportune. They were successfully returned to the fold.

During my stay there I did my best to discharge the work of a missionary and seventy, preaching and building up the Saints, at all convenient hours as well as to engage in other special work, such as the band, at other convenient hours. The people had not much work to do as they are awaiting the time of the harvest of their nuts, so were living in the city, which gave them full time day and evenings for church work. Forenoons I went from house to house giving lessons on the horns, and afternoons I studied, wrote, and prepared for meetings, etc. I think eleven were baptized at that time.

I promised to write something of the band work that you might be kept in touch with its developments, so will report on that to date.

Upon arrival of our ship at the island a flurry of excitement ran through the village, especially among the young men who were members of the band, because their long-awaited horns and the teacher had arrived. After getting ashore and being located in a house (a very nice and comfortable frame building) the boys began to ask if they might go and take off the boxes of instruments. They soon brought them ashore and we were not long in opening them up. All the population were there. Some had been born and raised on the island and had never seen a horn. Even some of the band boys had never seen a horn, much less had heard a band play. So there was an hour of tooting, or trying to toot, with an excessive amount of conversation, while all showed an unbounded amount of enthusiasm, and new applications for membership began to come in. I realized that I had a "half-Nelson" hold on that bunch of boys; so began at once to make the best of it by writing out a set of by-laws for the band.

At the end of the first month (the boys having learned the rudiments, signs, etc., of music), we met to try a piece together. The piece went off well the first time. Then pandemonium broke loose. Many of the younger ones who had never heard the harmony of an assemblage of instruments were enraptured by the strains of "O happy day" as played by the Manhi village band. Two months had passed. The scheme had been launched; and I was ready to sail for other places of labor, but ships did not seem to be running to the islands where I was needed, so I kept with them another month. Then we all went to the island where they dive for pearls.

At the pearl diving island of Takopoto about a thousand natives had gathered, and were well shepherded by the missionaries representing their faiths. We had fully a third of them to our credit. By this time the band had learned about ten pieces, and to meet the popular demand, we gave a concert in the most formal way we could imagine. This seemed to dissolve the prejudice more than anything I have been able to devise in my whole experience. The next day I was surprised to find boys who had been my archenemies sitting on my floor, talking to me in the most friendly manner. After that we used the band to keep up enthusiasm as we nightly preached to them from the porch of the church, for the church was too small. That is, we used the band in the worship only once a week. We had sense enough to not let the band become the main issue, but we saw it bring results. We also saw it restrain the members from doing evil by way of the praise they were getting, as well as by way of fear of the carrying out of the by-laws to the extent of their expulsion, as we did in one instance. The apostles will perhaps write you something concerning the matter, so I will desist at this point.

During our stay at the diving island (the island didn't dive) we did the work of a missionary, acting as a sort of a doctor-nurse, for there was much sickness there as well. My reports will show activities along that line for the months of August, September, and October.

We are all at Papeete at present, having returned here to confer with the apostles in reference to the future work in this mission. They will be leaving in a few days—in fact, as soon as a convenient ship arrives.

This will give you a general view of my work for the last few months, during which time I have been hindered more or less in writing a weekly letter to you.

With best wishes, I remain,

A. H. CHRISTENSEN.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

BREACHES OF PUBLIC ORDER

We continually note the signs of distress about us and the breach of public order. One of the latest instances is the shooting at Centralia, Washington, of American soldiers in uniform in the armistice parade. A number of the I. W. W.'s have been arrested, but we have seen no statement directly fixing responsibility, except in the one instance that the secretary pleaded guilty before the mob hanged him. But on that we have only ex parte evidence. This hanging by the mob is another instance of unrest.

Against these signs should be set the strong disposition for right on the part of the people; the action taken by the miners in the coal strike; the election of Coolidge in Massachusetts. Still these are times for serious consideration.

INDIAN REPORT

Cato Sells, United States Commissioner of Indian affairs, in a recent report to Congress, states that the Indian is holding more of his land in a fee simple, and more Indians are becoming better citizens. For a long time it has been advisable to be to them as a father and nursing mother; to care for them, and also to protect them from those who would do them harm.

Mr. Sells states that in the past three years, nearly eleven thousand fee simple titles have been issued to the Indians, against less than ten thousand for the previous ten years. The Indian is in the habit of holding land in a community, rather than individually.

The Indian has also subscribed to over $10,000 of Liberty Bonds; and over $832,769 of War Saving Stamps.

In the third place, ten thousand Indians engaged in the late World War. Many of them won the croix de guerre, and they were especially noteworthy for bravery in action. The Indians are inclined to be friendly, and deserve and should have fair treatment from the Government and the citizens of the United States.

Much emphasis has been placed on the hostility of the Indians in the past, but we have been led to believe from information from old settlers, and from those who crossed the plains, and from an examination of the record, that the cause of the hostility was based largely on the unjust treatment of renegade white men.

We note very favorable reports such as indicated above from Mr. Sells. Yet there still remains the serious need of more intelligent assistance, and that means we shall first have to become better informed on the basic conditions existing.

IS AMERICA EDUCATED?

"There are in the United States approximately 12,500,000 boys and girls between the ages of 16 and 21 who are coming to their majority at a time when, in order to make a living and assume the responsibilities and duties of life and citizenship, more knowledge and training are needed than ever before. Two and one half million of these attain their majority each year; less than one eighth will graduate from high school; only a little more than one fourth will have any high school education."—R. P. Claxton, United States commissioner of education.

We fall so readily into the habit of boasting in general terms of education in America that it is well occasionally to be met with a concrete, even if disagreeable, fact.

That only one out of four in the country ever enters high school, and but one out of eight ever completes a high school course, is calculated to give us all pause in our boasting. And yet that ratio will be found to hold substantially good for Iowa, probably the richest body of people in average well-being in the world. Not more than one out of three in Iowa ever enters a high school, while not more than one out of eighteen ever enter college.

INDUSTRIALISM, SOCIALISM, OR COMPROMISE

Socialism will not work, and neither will individualism, or at least the older individualism that we have hitherto made the basis of the social order.

Here, therefore, stands humanity, in the middle of its narrow path, in sheer perplexity, not knowing which way to turn. On either side is the brink of an abyss. On one hand is the yawning gulf of social catastrophe, represented by socialism. On the other the slower but no less inevitable disaster that would attend the continuation in its present form of the system under which we have lived. Either way lies destruction; the one swift and immediate as a fall from a great height; the other gradual, but equally dreadful, as the slow strangulation in a morass. Somewhere between the two lies such narrow safety as may be found.

The ancients were fond of the metaphor, taken from the vexed Sicilian seas, of Scyllia and Charybdis. The twin whirlpools threatened the affrighted mariner on either side. To avoid one he too hastily cast the ship to destruction in the other. Such is precisely the position that has been reached at the present crisis in the course of human progress.

When we view the shortcomings of the present individualism, its waste of energy, its fretful overwork, its cruel inequality and the bitter lot that it brings to the uncounted millions of the submerged, we are inclined to cry out against it, and to listen with a steady ear to the easy promises of the idealist.

But when we turn to the contrasted fallacies of socialism, its obvious impracticality and the dark gulf of social chaos that yawns behind it, we are driven back shuddering to cherish rather the ills we have than fly to others we know not of.

Yet out of the whole discussion of the matter some few things begin to merge into the clearness of certain day.

It is clear enough on the one hand that we can expect no sudden and complete transformation of the world in which we live. Such a process is impossible. The industrial system is too complex, its roots are too deeply struck and its whole organism of too delicate a growth to permit us to tear it from the soil. Nor is humanity itself fitted for this kind of transformation which fills the dreams of the perfectionist. The principle of selfishness which has been the survival instinct of existence since life first crawled in the slime of the world in evolution, it is as yet but little mitigated. In the long process of time some higher cosmic sense may take its place. It has not done so yet. If the kingdom of socialism were opened to-morrow there are but few fitted to enter.

But on the other hand it is equally clear that the doctrine of "Every man for himself," as it used to be applied, is done with forever. The time has gone by when a man shall starve asking in vain for work; when the listless outcast shall draw his rags shivering about him unheeded of his fellow. When children shall be born in hunger and bred in want and broken in toil with never a chance in life.

If nothing else will end these things, fear will do it. The hardest capitalist that ever gripped his property with the iron clasp of legal right relaxes his grasp a little when he thinks of the possibilities of a social conflagration.

In this respect five years of war have taught us more than a century of peace. It has set in a clear light new forms of social obligation. The war brought with it conscription—not as we used to see it, as the last horror of military tyranny, but as the crowning pride of democracy. An inconceivable revolution in the thought of the English-speaking peoples has taken place in respect to it.

The obligation of every man, according to his age and circumstances, to take up arms for his country and, if need be, to die for it, is henceforth the recognized basis of progressive democracy.

But conscription has its other side. The obligation to die must carry with it the right to live. If every citizen owes it to society that he must fight for it in case of need, then society owes to every citizen the opportunity of a livelihood. "Unemployment," in the case of the willing and able, becomes henceforth a social crime. Every democratic government must henceforth take as the starting point of its industrial policy, and there shall be no such thing as able-bodied men and women "out of work," looking for occupation and unable to find it. Work must either be found or must be provided by the state itself.

Yet it is clear that a policy of state work and state pay for all who are otherwise unable to find occupation involves appalling difficulties. The opportunity will loom large for the prodigal to waste money, for the undertaking of public works of no real utility and for the subsidizing of an army of loafers. But the difficulties, great though they are, are not insuperable. The payment for state labor of this kind can be kept low enough to make it the last resort rather than the ultimate ambition of the workers. Nor need the work be useless. In new countries, especially such as Canada and the United States and Australia, the development of latent natural assets could absorb the labor of generations. There are still undreamed empires in the west.

Clearly enough a certain medicum of public honesty and integrity is essential for such a task; more undoubtedly than we have hitherto been able to enlist in the service of the commonwealth. But without it we perish. Social betterment must depend at every stage on the force of public spirit and public morality that inspires it.

So much for the care of those who are able and willing to work. There remains still the uncounted thousands who by accident or illness, age or infirmity, are unable to maintain themselves. For these people, under the other dispensation, there was nothing but the poorhouse, the jail, or starvation by the roadside. The narrow individualism of the nineteenth century refused to recognize the social duty of supporting somebody else's grandmother. Such charity began, and ended, at home. But even with the passing of the nineteenth century an awakened sense of the collective responsibility of society toward its weaker members began to impress itself upon public policy. Old age pension laws and national insurance against illness and accident were already being built into the legislative codes of the democratic countries. The experience of the war has enormously increased this sense of social solidarity. It is clear now that our fortunes are not in individual keeping. We stand or fall as a nation. And the nation which neglects the aged and infirm, which leaves a family to be shipwrecked as the result of a single accident to a breadwinner, cannot survive as against a nation in which the welfare of each is regarded as contributory to the safety of all. Even the purest selfishness would dictate a policy of social insurance.

There is no need to discuss the particular way in which this can best be carried out. It will vary with the circumstances of each community. The action of the municipality, or of the state or province, or of the central government itself may be called into play. But in one form or another, the economic loss involved in illness and infirmity must be shifted from the shoulder of the individual to that of society at large. There was but little realization of this obligation in the nineteenth century. Only in the sensational moments of famine, flood, or pestilence was a general social effort called forth. But in the clearer view of the social bond which the war has given us we can see that famine and pestilence are merely exaggerated forms of what is happening every day in our midst.—Steven Leacock, noted economist, in New York Times.

PROFIT SHARING NOT PHILANTHROPY

In the first place, I do not look upon profit sharing as philanthropy or a form of benevolence.

I do not put it in the same class with gifts at Christmas-time or bonuses at the end of the year. I do not approve or believe in any plan that even savors of giving a man something for nothing.

I do not believe that any self-respecting man wants any such arrangement, and I do not believe that any broad-minded, self-respecting employer can, in the long run, afford to have any such arrangement.

The profit sharing I believe in is the kind that is real; the kind that promotes thorough and efficient cooperation between employers and employees; the kind that makes partners of employees; the sort of profit sharing that is practiced between partners in business.

Anything short of this is bound to result in failure and will widen rather than narrow the breach between the employer and employee.

Close observation, coupled with considerable experience, has convinced me that practically all the many failures in profit sharing, both in this country and in Europe, have occurred because at bottom the plans were not honestly devised nor equitably worked out.

In nine cases out of ten, at some point in the practical application of the plans that have failed, the fact has developed that they were not mutually beneficial; they either did not enhance the efficiency of the man in such a way as to satisfy the employer, or else did not distribute profits in such a way as to benefit and satisfy the employers.

No partnership where the profits are shared by two or a half dozen partners could last any length of time unless mutually beneficial, and the same rule holds good in a larger partnership where the profits are shared among many partners.

No man or firm or corporation that is thinking of adopting profit sharing can hope for success, unless prepared to approach the subject in this spirit and deal with it in an absolutely honest, open, and broad-minded manner.

As I have said, the relation between employer and employee has changed with the centuries.

Originally it was owner and slave; then it was master and man; now it is employer and employee, each stage of development bringing the employer and employee into closer cooperation. What has caused this change in relationship?

In my judgment the cause is found in the vast and broad educational forces that have been at work in the world.

Since we founded this country we have spent approximately as much money on educational systems as on our railroad systems.

We consider our railroads financially successful if they earn dividends.

If our educational systems are successful the dividends we get from them are minds that think better, more clearly, more independently.

Right now, this country is getting such dividends from its vast investments in educational plants.

In the industrial world, in the relation between capital and labor, between employer and employee, we are getting these very dividends, and getting them direct and in cumulative fashion on the wage question.—George W. Perkins.

JAPANESE IN AMERICA

We learn from The Literary Digest that there are 140,000 Japanese in the United States, and 110,000 in the Hawaiian Islands. Of those in the United States the majority are on the Pacific slope.

Particular stress is laid on the fact that the Japanese are taught to be loyal to their adopted country, and if it ever comes between the land of birth and their adopted country, they will be loyal to and uphold the honor of the latter.

Furthermore, most Japanese students went to Europe before the war; during the war they have come to America; while a number will henceforth be sent to Europe in order that they may be informed with regard to the customs of all the leading countries, while a large part will remain in America and will continue to be sent to America. These, of course, are young people of good birth, who receive their education abroad and then return to their own land.

Also a number of women have come to America to take up advanced study.

We have this to remember that children born to Japanese in this country are Americans, and that these children talk nothing but English outside the family circle. They attend the public schools and if they are taken to Japan, they become restless, discontented, and are always eager to get back "home."

Character Training

It is important to feed and clothe children in the best possible way; but it is much more important to train their characters in the best way.

Why do we especially want to train children well?

1. To build up in them strong and noble characters.
2. To make them fit to face life.

Mothers should begin to train their babies as early as possible. No baby is too young to know whether he can manage his mother or whether his mother can manage him. Teach a baby at once that he will not get all he wants because he cries for it. A little crying will not hurt him, but to give him every thing he cries for will hurt him very much. It will make his character weak, undisciplined, self-willed, uncontrolled.

The child's mind grows with his body, and as the one needs right conditions, so does the other, or it will be stunted.

How can we train and educate the mind and thus influence the character? To do this, we should interfere as little as possible with nature's methods. A baby has great power of concentration; he will look steadily at one thing for a long time; he will make a movement over and over again until he can control it. He should be left undisturbed; he should not be spoken to only for the sake of seeing him smile. Excepting during his regular occupations—his meals, sleep, and going out—he should not be disturbed when he is absorbed. When awake in his cot he should be able to see what is going on about him. This will always be enough to occupy his attention. As he gets older he should be taught to amuse himself, not to want constant attention from his mother. He will be much happier and much less trouble if he can do this. He will never do it, however, if he is taken up and amused whenever he cries. To help him to gain a habit of self-occupation is to help to educate his mind and character.

A baby's mental business is to learn all he can about the world in which he lives, and he does not like to be interrupted whilst learning. Do not speak to a child unnecessarily when he is absorbed and good.

We learn and grow by trying and succeeding. Therefore, unless it is hurtful to himself or to others, do not prevent a child from doing what he can for himself. This teaches him self-reliance.

One morning a child of two and a half came to breakfast. There were many delightful things he wished to do. He would climb on to his high chair, unfold his feeder, and painfully tie the tapes around his neck in front, and then turn the feeder round! He would take a spoon and crack his own egg, and he broke into a howl of disappointment when prevented from trying.

Too often, out of mistaken kindness, people thwart a child when he tries, and enjoys trying, to attain his objects by himself.

Do not indulge children. It makes them soft and selfish.

Do not nag or be harsh to them. You may make them cowardly and deceitful.

Always be gentle, but always firm.

Let your yes be yes, your no, no. Never shake children or box their ears or frighten them.

Moral education helps children to learn self-control; and remember you want to make them fit to go out into life, where they will need a great deal of self-control, where they will not find everything made easy for them, where they will not be spoiled and get everything they want. Regularity in good habits, when children are small, is a very important part of moral education, because through good habits a child learns to make right choice—to choose the good and refuse the evil.

Let him hear only kind words and pleasant voices. Let that to which he is accustomed be right, that to which he is unaccustomed be wrong. If he is never told to do unreasonable things, he will see that obedience to the reasonable things he is asked to do is right; and he will be more likely to refuse wrong when it comes his way.

Some day he will certainly have to choose between right and wrong. He can only choose rightly if he knows the meaning of right-doing. And, whilst he is small his knowledge comes through good habits, and trust in the kindness of those he loves best. The first time he makes a good choice he shows control over his will.

Therefore teach children from the very beginning:

1. How to be obedient.
2. How to be self-controlled.
3. How to be unselfish.
4. How to be pure.
5. How to be truthful.

Teach them to be unselfish by encouraging them to do things for you and for others, by making them think of other people first, not of themselves first. Do not always slave for them, but show them how they can help you. A mother often makes her children selfish by doing everything for them, and saving them trouble. That mother is not really a good mother. A good mother thinks chiefly of what is best for her children's characters, not of what is easiest and pleasanter for them.

To cultivate and practice good habits, bodily, mental and moral, is to build up a great and good character; and the famous old saying bears this out:

"Sow a thought, you reap an action;
Sow an action, you reap a habit;
Sow a habit, you reap a character."

Therefore train your children in right actions, over and over again, until the right actions become habits, and the habits are built into a character.

From Across the Water

Dear Sister: I send herewith a paper read by Sister Swan, at the Woman's Auxiliary which was started in this branch some weeks ago.

We are studying the articles which come through the HERALDS, until we can obtain F. B. Forbush's book on child and child-training.

We have about fourteen members and we feel that this organization affords opportunity for the sisters of the church to let their lights shine.

We realize how great is the need of such organizations, and realize also as a church we should be leading in this. As young mothers and mothers-to-be, we are responsible for the ministers of Christ, who are to take part in the "grand finale" of the gathering of God's people unto Zion.

May one and all feel our responsibility and endeavor to try and make the work of the church a success.

Praying for its ultimate triumph to the glory of God,
I remain your sister in Christ,

AMY NORTON,

Secretary Woman's Auxiliary.

Training Little Children

SEVENTEEN RULES FOR MOTHERS

Many mothers have asked me, "Do you find that your kindergarten training really helps you when you are dealing with problems in your home?" My answer is invariably, "Yes."

Two years of thorough and stimulating training in Froebel's wonderful methods for teaching little children and several years of trying to put these methods into practice could not fail to give a mother a more intelligent and spiritual grasp of the meaning of her children's activities.

Thinking back over the past years, I have been trying to formulate some of the practices that have helped me over the hard places, and offer the following to the mother who wishes to make of her children's early years a period that they and she will remember with great joy.

1. When it is necessary to restrain a child from doing something wrong or harmful, always suggest something else he may do. Never issue a don't without promising a do.

2. In giving a child permission to play, take care that his activities do not develop into license. For he will be happier if some limitations are imposed to test his powers and help him concentrate. For instance, if he is playing with blocks or cutting from paper, giving him permission to do anything he pleases often results in aimless or destructive activity. Some suggestions from the mother, to make something—to furnish a house for instance—stimulates and directs his mind, while leaving him free to express himself.

3. Before a command is given, always consider whether it is going to raise an issue. If a child refuses to obey, do not always insist upon implicit obedience; your command may not have been an entirely wise one. Punish for disobedience if necessary, but do not raise avoidable issues, "Breaking a child's will" is cruel and most harmful.

4. When a child is naughty always be sure that the cause is not a physical one, for fatigue and hunger come easily to little people. Many problems that are unsolvable before a meal are no longer problems afterward.

5. Try to follow your children's activities and to understand the instincts and inner laws from which they proceed. View what they do in the light of your intelligence and of your spirit. Such a habit of watchfulness and care prevents nervous irritation, and enables you to enter into and to encourage sympathetically activities which are pleasing.

6. Be consistent in what you approve and disapprove. Do not one day, because you are tired, reprove a child for something he has done and the next day ignore the same thing because you are rested.

7. Answer questions truthfully. A child's mind does not always crave details. Give him only broad statements. Build a strong foundation of truth to which details may be added later. As regards the vital question of the origin of life be careful not to give the child more than he asks for. Do not force your buds to open too early. The life of flowers and birds are analogous to human life and will tell you how to answer this question.

8. Avoid useless negotiations. If there is no real reason why a child should have his requests denied do not deny them.

9. In regard to children's interruptions, consider whether what they want you to do is not more important than the special activity you have planned for that moment. In the last analysis, why do we mothers exist at all if not to give of our best to our children and to meet their needs as they show themselves?

10. The care of a child's body is important, but should not monopolize a mother's attention at the expense of mind and spirit.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

From the Land of Baked Beans

My work this year is in the Massachusetts District, which is composed of nine branches. I have visited all but one of them and find the work in a fairly prosperous condition. Some of the larger branches seem to have had special blessings given them of late. Others move along in about the same way from year to year, conditions not being favorable for much advancement.

Massachusetts and Rhode Island are great manufacturing States. There are great cotton mills, woolen and shoe factories, the largest in the world I believe, jewelry manufacturing on a large scale, and a swarm of other establishments making things useful, ornamental, and detrimental.

I had the privilege of going through the great Douglas shoe factory with Brother Ames, who recently joined the church in Brockton. It took an afternoon to go through just part of it. It is surprising the number of operations a shoe goes through before they charge you $6 apiece for them.

The cotton and woolen mills are something marvelous to one who has never seen one in operation before. Brother Heap, of Fall River, took me through one of the great plants located there. It was a fine experience and I thoroughly en-

11. Cultivate a sense of humor in yourself and in your child, it is wonderful how many trying situations may be relieved through this means.

12. Show a child the same respect you would a grown person. What a child resents most in being struck is not the pain, but the insult to his pride.

13. Do not leave your children largely to the care of nurses, however conscientious or seemingly intelligent they may be. Nurses minister mostly to the physical needs of little children, and the time soon comes when they are no longer necessary for this purpose. Then it may be too late for the mother to build the bridge of sympathy between her children and herself. Moreover, it is in early years that the child is most impressionable and that a mother's influence may count for most.

14. Do not threaten. Make punishments slight, but see that they always follow the offense. Their effectiveness depends upon their inevitability, not on their severity. A child keeps his fingers from the flame because he knows it will always burn him.

15. A child that is occupied is always a good and happy child. For outdoors, try to have a sand box, a swing, a garden and garden tools, and let this be a spot where the children hear the word don't as seldom as possible. For indoors, provide modeling clay, paints, a soap bubble outfit, blocks, crayon, colored paper, blunt scissors, colored wooden beads, shoe strings for stringing, and pegs and peg boards. (Beads, pegs and peg boards may be procured from Milton Bradley Co., Springfield, Massachusetts, or E. Steiger and Co., 49 Murray Street, New York. Both companies will send a catalogue upon request.)

16. Since you are constantly supplying your child with mental and spiritual food, see that your own mind and spirit are kept renewed and inspired by good books, fresh air, poetry, change of scene, stimulating companionship, good pictures and music.

17. And remember, your child came to you with the divine spark. He is for you largely to make or mar.—Mrs. Gertrude H. Campbell, in Government Bulletin.

joyed it and expect to store up some material for future sermons.

Massachusetts stands well, I believe, in a low divorce record. I have a theory to account for this. "Everybody" has worked in the mills at one time. The looms make a continuous humming noise and racket, conversation in the usual way being impossible. Such a condition among a lot of girls is also impossible; but necessity has always been the mother of invention. The operators, men and women, carry on conversation by means of a sign language they have invented. They can scold, flatter, banter each other to their hearts content amidst all that noise.

An old Quaker said you can't get very mad if you keep your voice pitched low. Generally the angrier we are the louder we speak and the louder we speak the angrier we get, a kind of "vicious circle" as it were. When the operators get married of course they talk and argue as other mortals do; but right here there is a difference. When they get into a "heated" argument they become noisy by loud talking and instinctively revert to the sign language of the mill, when lo and behold! their anger melts away, quietness and peace prevail and they live happily ever afterwards. It is a great scheme to promote good will and cut down the divorce totals.

Here you are always unexpectedly coming across some scene of early American history. For instance, I was walking along the streets of Somerville (a suburb of Boston), with Brother Fisher recently and he casually pointed out a stone which marked the spot where Paul Revere turned the road on that memorable ride, which as youngsters we delighted to read about. Bunker Hill monument was visible in the distance.

I left Plymouth last week. Preached nearly every evening for a week trying to encourage the little band of Saints there who are trying to carry on the work of the Lord in this noted city of our ancestors. The Saints have a very neat chapel, but since the population has shifted it is no longer advantageously situated.

Brother Nickerson has done a good work there in the past. His son Arthur is giving of his time and talents to forward the cause of Christ. Brother Leland, the presiding elder, is a consecrated man to God's service, and his family sustain him by their presence at the services. Brother "Charley" the teacher also acts as a deacon, there being no one for that office. Brother Leland's father, a priest, preaches as opportunity affords and looks out after services in the abandoned Union church some distance from the city.

Plymouth Hall, a museum containing many relics from the Mayflower and of early American history, is a very interesting place to visit.

Great preparations are being made to celebrate the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims in Plymouth in 1620. The large stone, now known as "Plymouth Rock," has been preserved all these years. It is now some distance from the sea by reason of the beach having been extended by filling in, but it is the intention of the State to restore the original lines of the water front, so buildings will be razed, piers moved, and the waves of the harbor will again lap the rock upon which the brave Pilgrims first set foot at Plymouth. I shall possibly write further of this most interesting old city in the forthcoming edition of the HERALD devoted to the Graphic Arts.

The week of open season for shooting deer was on, while I was there, so had deer at "Grandma" Leland's. At a social held there we had a clam chowder treat. You poor "Westerners" don't know anything about this dish. By the way any place four or five miles from low tide is "West" with these Easterners.

I am writing this at Dennis Port, located on Cape Cod.

The branch here has been established for over fifty years. Possibly the congregation is the most unique in our church. It is composed largely of old sisters. But if you think they are "has beens" you are mistaken. You should see how nicely they have their church fixed up and they intend making additional improvements. They have a nice maple floor, laid with such skill not a joint is noticeable. The church has recently been re-seated with up to date seats. They have a victrola with sacred music when occasions require. The town seems to be gradually dying out. The men have been lost at sea and so there are many widows in the place. It is a town of tragedies. The younger men go to the cities. In the summer time this is quite a summer resort for wealthy people from Boston, a large hotel and many vacant houses affording accommodations. Officially the branch largely depends on Elmer Lewis, the presiding officer, a young man who has stood right by the work and I think his faithfulness is appreciated. The other day I passed a millinery store on the main street. I was puzzled to account for the unusual appearance of the hats in the window. Then I understood; they were trimmed for elderly women. Generally Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like the average millinery window. Fishing for "scallops" is quite an industry here. They are a shell fish of the oyster variety. The white meat looks as if it had been cut in cylinder inch pieces.

There is a snow storm now raging, quite a difference in the climate to that of Hawaii nei. It is going to take me some time to get acclimated.

The Western people don't realize that "Boston baked beans" are no joke. Beans and brown bread appear on the table Saturday evening and Sunday morning as regularly as the week ends arrive, in, I should say, ninety per cent of the New England homes. It is not a habit, it is a sacred institution handed down by illustrious ancestors of imperishable fame. But they are not the mussy or bullet beans we have out in the "wild" and supposedly "woolly" West. Here is the way they bake them. The beans are soaked Friday night, then the water is poured off, a piece of fat pork put in the bottom of the crock, some mustard, sugar, or molasses, salt and pepper, a little water, the crock put in the oven early in the morning and kept there until the evening meal. Are they good? I wish it were Saturday supper time!

Brother Bullard is an old-timer in this mission. He has been getting around with youthful vigor and his kindly, patriarchal spirit makes him a welcome visitor in the homes. Brother Baldwin has done a fine work especially in Boston. He is now at home for the holidays, and a well-earned rest. Brother Tomlinson, our young Canadian missionary, is active in the vicinity of the Fiskeville Branch, having also labored some at Lynn, Massachusetts. Brother Doctor Sinclair is looking after the work, going there every Tuesday evening; I hear quite an interest has developed.

Hopefully,

C. EDWARD MILLER.

Do not take drugs to cure the headache, says the United States Public Health Service. Consult a physician, a dentist, or an oculist, to see if the cause can be located. Often the eyes, or the teeth may be at fault.

Don't grow rich. If you once begin you will find it much more difficult to be a useful citizen. Don't seek office; but don't "disremember" that the useful citizen holds his time, his trouble, his money, and his life always ready at the hint of his country. The useful citizen is a mighty unpretending hero, but we are not going to have a country very long unless such heroism is developed.—Charles Lowell, about 1864.

Germ diseases kill off more people than the deadliest wars, says the United States Public Health Service. In 1917 pneumonia and tuberculosis killed 223,000 Americans, more than seven times the number killed in action in France.

Heart disease caused more deaths in 1917 than any other ailment (115,337), says the United States Public Health Service. Right living would materially reduce this. Don't wait for the disease to develop before you see your physician.

NEWS AND COMMENT

E. O. Randall, who was reporter of the Supreme Court of Ohio for several years, and lawyer, writer, and teacher, and who was also declared to have been the foremost authority on the early history of Ohio, passed away on December 19. Elder C. W. Clark, president of the First Columbus, Ohio, Branch, writes that in him a very good friend has been lost, as Mr. Randall was instrumental in having the article which was reprinted in the SAINTS' HERALD of November 14 and 21, 1917, printed in the Ohio Archaeological and Historical Quarterly, and that he has defended our church in many ways in Columbus, and on many different occasions. Elder Clark has also sent us the Ohio State Journal which devotes nearly three columns to his life. Thus passes another stalwart friend.

President Wilson has named as the coal board to determine wages and prices, Henry M. Robinson, John P. White, and Rembrandt Peale. The latter two acted as advisors to the fuel administrator during the war, and Mr. Robinson on the shipping board.

The paper shortage has caused the introduction of a bill in Congress to limit the size of newspapers, so that the big dailies shall not smother the small papers. In the midst of the general opposition to this plan, it is interesting to note its approval by the Christian Science Monitor. It urges that a beginning, however, should be made in the saving of paper by the Government, and cites as one instance the Congressional Record. The serious difficulty, however, is that the interest of readers is so diversified that it takes considerable material to meet all needs. On the question of the paper shortage we have also to consider the need of care on the part of the public. It is waste to simply throw papers in a fire. When it is baled up it may be sold, and thus returns and increases the supply. It is principally on account of the paper shortage that the HERALD has reduced the size of some of its type so as to give the equivalent of at least four extra pages without requiring additional paper.

Doctor Edward Toulouse, a French specialist, urges that childless women should be conscripted to work, exemption being allowed according to the number of children. He hopes by placing a premium on offspring to raise the present low birthrate in France.

The Omaha Bee refers to the criticism which has spoiled the idealism of the war, and the selfishness which followed the then spirit of sacrifice. The churches, however, are inculcating more and more the idea of the tithing, and unity plans are one of the marks of the present age.

Owing to the existing unrest and the unsettled conditions of the railroads, the federation of labor, the railroad brotherhoods, and farmer delegates have appealed to the President against the present return of the roads to private ownership. They urge an extension of the period of government operations for at least two years, in order that a fair test may be made. They suggest that Director General Hines has stated that the return of the railroads would involve an increased state revenue of one billion dollars a year, which will probably be reflected in increased cost of living of from four to five billion a year.

The Bishopric

Northeastern Missouri Distict: Due to the fact that Bother William B. Richards has entered the missionary field, it has been necessary for us to make other arrangements for some one to act as Bishop's agent of the above district, and we hereby appoint Brother Vernie Ruch, Huntsville, Missouri. He comes to us well recommended as one worthy of the confidence of the Saints. He manifests a desire to have the Northeastern Missouri District one hundred per cent tithe payers. I am sure if the Saints could recognize all of the benefits which accrue to those who observe strictly all of God's laws that this ideal would soon become a reality. May the Spirit of the Master thus aid us in having a clearer

The developments in Europe and contests over the spoils of war are said to be causing President Wilson to consider seriously the advisability of withdrawing entirely from any share in the European settlement.

Since the opening of the regular session of Congress an effort is being made to break the treaty deadlock. But all further efforts will now be postponed until after the holiday recess. The Root resolution proposes a special declaration by resolution of Congress to be submitted to the President, declaring the war at an end with Germany, and attempting to preserve our rights under the treaty as drawn, without assuming the responsibility of upholding the treaty as such. The resolution includes a declaration of the general sentiment of this nation to help establish a world organization for the friendly settlement of international disputes. It also declared the close relation to the allies without affirming or accepting the present league of nations.

FROM HERE AND THERE

A splendid series of meetings were held at Purcell, Missouri, from November 30 to December 14, in which much interest was shown by both members and nonmembers. Advertising matter announced the general theme to be "The world's troubles; the cause and the cure." One brother thought the theme a pretty big one but the speaker expressed himself as confident of having the remedy and the only one which would meet the world's need which was the divinely given gospel. Such subjects as "God among the nations," "The present times in prophecy," "What the Bible says about modern revelation," "Man's probation," "Eternal judgment," and many others, in all of which the gospel was set forth. Elder Charles Fry was the speaker.

According to the Independence Examiner, a near-panic was imminent in their office recently when a transfer man announced that a car of print paper had arrived on track in that city. It was found it was intended for the Ensign office, and was considered such a remarkable thing that the Examiner force declared a holiday to go down and see so large an amount of paper. R. J. Lambert, manager of the Ensign Office, had ordered it in June. The same car now would have cost $2,000 more, if it could have been secured at all.

Missionaries take notice. I will send you on application, leaflets touching upon alcohol, coco-cola, soft drinks, tea, coffee, cocoa, patent medicines, and tobacco.

I will pay for the leaflets and pay the postage to you, and you tell the people what effect these drugs have upon the system, thus mutually benefiting society. J. W. GUNSOLLEY, 1106 Bales Avenue, KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

Temperance superintendents and others. I am now prepared to furnish leaflets and books on temperance at the following prices: Smoke Inhalation, by Doctor D. H. Kress, 15 cents. The above booklet and a number of tracts treating upon several of the drug drinks, including tea and coffee, 25 cents. Bruce Fink, on tobacco. This is a masterly work treating on the origin and practice of ancient and modern methods, and the evils that follow its use. Price 25 cents. The Brown God and his white imps is another good book, edited by Mr. Higley, price 25 cents. Mr. Higley also publishes a monthly paper devoted to the education of people in reference to the evils following the unwise use of tobacco, price 25 cents. This paper should be in the homes of all Saints. Send me your subscription. In lots of ten or more to one address, 20 cents per copy. J. W. GUNSOLLEY, 1106 Bales Avenue, KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

be continued throughout the winter. A joint officers' and teachers' meeting was called recently by the pastor, at which time a new phase of coordination was considered and a recommendation adopted to be submitted to the branch of the departments, providing for the coordination of the work of the three treasurers; that is, the branch treasurer to act as treasurer for its departments, and the interests of the three to be pooled under the budget system. The Woman's Auxiliary is taking active steps in the relief and service work. P. R. Burton, now located in Nauvoo, spent Sunday, December 21, in the city, speaking at the morning and evening service. Election of officers for Sunday school and Religio resulted in some changes in both. A good feeling was manifested and should result in good for the coming year.

Lamoni, Iowa. As a result of a quiet but persistent campaign by the Christmas offering workers, under the direction of A. M. Carmichael, the Sunday school has broken its record in Christmas offering. At the time of this writing, a total of $2,206 has been reached, with an enrollment of 648. A considerable sum of money intended for the same purpose as the Christmas offering was sent directly to the Bishop. There was nothing of the spectacular in the campaign, the school setting out to maintain its record and doing it.

Walnut Park, Independence. Church services are resumed again following the coal famine and group meetings well attended. The Religians maintained their spiritual interest by holding cottage meetings. Some three hundred members assemble at and near Walnut Park. All but about $700 is paid on the basement of the new church. Three good sermons were delivered during the past week at different cottages by Brethren Haskins, Jenkins and Kelley. Sunday, 21st, the pastor, A. H. Parsons occupied at 11 on "Be of one mind." In the evening W. H. Kelley gave a rousing sermon. All services were excellent.

ARE YOUR ACCOUNTS SQUARE WITH THE LORD?

Health, wealth; family, friends; all that we are or hope to be—without God's bounty, none were possible.

All the year through we have received. Day by day we have been made debtors to his goodness.

And now the year is done, and its records are being closed. Have you squared your accounts with the Lord?

Every business man takes inventory at the end of the year. He strikes his balance, pays up his obligations and starts the new year with a clean record.

Our obligations to the Lord are no less binding than to our banks and bond holders.

A tenth of our increase is commanded. Will we hesitate at an obligation so sacred?
