Conference Minutes

SOUTHERN NEBRASKA.—We are informed that the list of delegates for General Conference from this district is as follows: Brother and Sister F. S. Gatenby, Sister T. S. Rutledge, Brother and Sister J. H. Butler.—EDITORS.

EASTERN COLORADO.—At the First Denver Church, 10 a. m., February 22, 1919. District President J. R. Sutton in charge was assisted by F. A. Smith and A. E. Tabor. Branches reporting: Fort Collins, Holyoke, LaJunta, Colorado Springs, Wiley, Falcon, First Denver, Second Denver, Trinidad, and Wray. Total membership reported to date, 1,127. Ministerial reports 38. Bishop's agent's report showed receipts $3,808.88; disbursements $3,683.57. Auditing committee found report correct. Some very encouraging reports from the gospel literature board and library board. Four were ordained, one each to the office of elder, priest, teacher, and deacon. Provision also made for the ordination of two others not present. A budget of $25 was authorized and provided for the expenses of district officers. Provision was made for a reunion to be held one week prior and at the same place as the next conference which will be at Fort Collins, August 30 and 31, 1919, in charge of district presidency. Delegates to General Conference: George F. Bullard, Mary L. Bullard, James Thomas, Emma Savage, Christian A. Ralston, J. D. Curtis, E. E. Conway, O. E. Sade, A. E. Tabor, N. A. Tabor, Florence Bullard, J. Charles May, F. D. Bullard. First ten named being delegates, last three alternates. A collection taken for the benefit of the missionaries amounted to $42.41, which was divided between six men. Coral E. Willis, secretary.

SOUTHERN OHIO.—At Columbus, Ohio, First Church, March 1 and 2. Apostle G. T. Griffiths chosen to preside, assisted by F. J. Ebeling, district president. Reading of statistical reports. All but one of the branches in district reported, showing a total membership, including scattered members, of 1,390. Reading of district president's report showed he had visited all but three of the branches in district; also organized a branch at Dayton, Ohio. Bishop's report read. District officers elected for the following year: F. J. Ebeling, president; George E. Burt, vice president; Sarah E. Batchelder, secretary-treasurer. Delegates to General Conference: G. T. Griffiths, F. J. Ebeling, J. M. Hardin, J. G. Halb, G. E. Burt, Floyd Rockwell, D. J. Hannah. The following resolution was adopted: All branch secretaries report promptly to the district secretary after their branch business meeting, the names and addresses of those elected to the respective offices. Motion was sustained that we rescind second clause of second paragraph in resolutions presented to the priesthood in 1918, a copy of which was sent to all at that time. Time and place of the fall conference left to the officers in charge. Sarah E. Batchelder, secretary, The Plains, Ohio.

Those from the south should use No. 111 leaving Kansas City 7.35 a. m., Saint Joseph 10.05 a. m. Kansas City travelers may use Interurban to Saint Joseph, but must walk across Burlington tracks to Union Depot and carry baggage. Numbers 113, 114 will also carry extra equipment. Numbers 111, 112 will run to Lamoni on closing days, to be announced.

Party coming by special chair or Pullman, Chicago to Lamoni, will leave Chicago on train No. 3 at 11 p. m., Saturday, April 5, arriving Lamoni 12.40 p. m., Sunday, 6th.

R. S. SALYARDS,
Church Secretary.

SAINT JOSEPH, MISSOURI, March 27, 1919.

Our Departed Ones

JORDAN.—James Moore Jordan, aged 52 years, was baptized by Daniel Macgregor. Died at Goodwater, Saskatchewan, October 31, 1918, of leakage of the heart and dropsy. He leaves to mourn, wife, 8 children, 4 sisters, 6 brothers, and a host of other relatives and friends. Sermon by E. E. Williams, assisted by the Methodist minister.

FORD.—Mary Elizabeth Fewell was born November 3, 1861. Married Edward Ford, January 8, 1889. Died February 16, 1919. She leaves to mourn a husband and 5 children. She was a true, devoted Saint, and was loved by all who knew her. Funeral at Saints' church, Wirt, Indiana. Sermon by J. E. Warne.

WELLS.—Guy Arnold, at Saint Joseph, Missouri, February 15, 1919, son of Brother Guy A. and Mrs. Elrado Wells; age, 4 years, 7 months, 12 days. Funeral services at home; address by R. S. Salyards; interment at Mount Mora Cemetery. The loss of this fine little boy was a great bereavement to this family and its connections.

ANDERSON.—Anna C. Anderson was born in Sweden in 1827. Died March 14, 1919, at Lamoni, Iowa. Married Charles J. Anderson in 1856. They accepted the latter-day work the same year. Came to America in 1860, and went to Utah. Also lived at Malad, Idaho, where they heard the doctrine of the Reorganized Church, and united with it in 1868. Came to Iowa in 1874. Brother Anderson died in 1911. Four sons survive her, Otto, John, Hiram, and Levi. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins, assisted by John Smith.

BELL.—Sarah Jane Bell was born at Huntsville, Ohio, June 5, 1862. Died January 27, 1919. Baptized July 8, 1906, in Terlton, Oklahoma, the scene of her departure to the beyond. All the children were present at the time of her death, excepting her son Harrison, who is in the service "over there." The funeral was attended by a large number of friends who are left to mourn. Sermon by Frank F. Wipper, at the Saints' chapel in Terlton.

MAYES.—Clyde William, the little son of Brother and Sister Charles Mayes, was born June 20, 1917, in Collinsville, Oklahoma. Died December 15, 1918, after a short sickness. He was the only child of this devoted couple, and they deeply mourn, but the sustaining grace of heaven attended, and they look hopefully beyond. Sermon by Frank F. Wipper, at their home in Collinsville, Oklahoma. Interment in Ridge-lawn Cemetery. That same evening after the funeral the father, Charles Mayes, was baptized.

GUILFOY.—Samuel Guilfooy was born at London, England, July 13, 1867; died February 28, 1919, at Woodhaven, New York. Was loved by all who knew him, and a kind husband and father has gone to his reward. He is survived by his wife, two daughters, and a grandchild. Funeral services at the home. Sermon by C. H. Rich. Interment in Maple Grove Cemetery.

GUILFOY.—Ethel Guilfooy was born at Brooklyn, New York, August 3, 1898. Died March 2, 1919, at Woodhaven, New York. Like her father, she was sick but a few days of influenza followed by pneumonia. Her death was especially sad as she was soon to be married. She is mourned by mother, two sisters, and a host of friends. Funeral service at the home conducted by C. H. Rich. Interment in Maple Grove Cemetery.

GREEN.—Manly Otho, son of Manly and Jenetta Green, was born near Thurman, Iowa, April 28, 1892. Died at Tabor, Iowa, March 24, 1919. He had been an invalid for ten years, but was patient in affliction, and of pleasant disposition. He was baptized in 1904, and loved the Lord's work and service. Sermon by Columbus Scott, at the home in Tabor, Iowa.

DICKINSON.—Ina May Dickinson was born October 24, 1896, near Clinton, Missouri. Baptized in 1905. Married George Dickinson January 1, 1914. Of this union 5 children were born. She died March 17, leaving to mourn their loss a husband, 4 sons, one daughter, father, mother, brother,

DAILY HERALD

For General Conference

Again we are going to issue a daily edition of the HERALD to promptly and fully furnish the news and reports of the conference and convention sessions.

We assure our friends they will appreciate the service rendered in this manner, and believe we can even improve somewhat on the past record. Not only will the news be included to within an hour or less of going to press, but also many other interesting comments and sidelights with copious reports and summaries.

The first edition will be on the evening of the 7th, and continue daily except Sunday till the close of conference.

The old price is being maintained though material is costing double. Please order early—why not now?

CHICAGO PARTIES NOTICE

At the last minute—in fact after the forms were on the press and some of them run—we received a telegraphic notice from the Church Secretary changing the notice of Brother Christy regarding the train for conference from Chicago. We are informed since that it should read, "train No. 3 will leave Chicago at 11 p. m." instead of train No. 11. See notice of Church Secretary in this issue.

Bishop George Lewis has left Australia to attend the General Conference, coming via New Zealand and due to arrive in Vancouver on the 5th. Brother Lewis is in charge of the finances of Australia.

Mrs. Earl Harmon of Interior, South Dakota, writes of the wonderful help she has had from the prayers of the Saints in her behalf. She wishes that her mother who is suffering from asthma and heart trouble might be remembered.

The Buffalo Saints will celebrate the church birthday anniversary with a special program on April 5 and 6. An excellent program is prepared by the Religio for Saturday evening. On Sunday morning at 8.45 sacrament and prayer service will be held, especially bearing in mind the General Conference about to convene. From 10 to 11 the service will be in charge of the Sunday school. From 11 to 12 there will be short sermons given by several of the young men of the branch, interspersed with music. At 7.30 song service, followed by talks on the following: "Why the restored gospel?" "Joseph Smith the man."

In a recent number, Zion's Ensign announced the addition of Elders John W. Rushton and Isaac M. Smith to their editorial staff as contributing editors. We congratulate them on this step and are sure the already high quality of the Ensign will be greatly enhanced by this step.

Elder J. L. Parker writes the Presidency as follows from Lincoln, Nebraska:

"I think you will gather from the inclosed circular that we are not asleep.

"Reverend Mr. Shook has lectured in seven different churches on the subject of Mormonism. He made a direct attack upon us and his remarks were so absolutely rank, I could not resist the temptation to challenge his statements, and as a result we mixed in good shape and before quite a large number of people he agreed to meet us in public discussion.

"Brother Curtis arrived Monday evening, and propositions were submitted to Mr. Shook and he backed clear out, after which we announced Brother Curtis would reply at our church.

"As a whole, we have received considerable advertising, and I am sure we came through the scorching all right and in the end good will come from this attack.

"Brother Curtis will remain over Sunday, and I am sure* the Saints appreciate his coming."

Elder G. E. Harrington sends the following clipping from the Toronto Evening Telegram:

HAD TO CHANGE NAME

OBJECTION TAKEN TO THE "CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST"

J. T. Richardson explained the bill to incorporate the "church of Jesus Christ," which is opposed to Mormonism and polygamy. Their only text-book is the Bible.

"Why should these 500 men assume the sole right to use this name?" asked Mr. Dargavel. "I think it is a sacrilege."

R. C. Evans explained the tenets and doctrines of the church. Last June he started this church, and preached the gospel as taught in the New Testament.

"Bring in another name and we will report the bill," said Mr. Dargavel. Mr. Evans said that a new name would be found.

"The Church of the Christian Brotherhood," the new name for Mr. Evans's incorporated church, was submitted to Mr. Dargavel, and on his approval the bill was carried.

Brother J. J. Cornish writes:

"I often think, and hear others talk of the 'golden past,' of wonderful liberty in the presentation of the gospel. But I thank God for the golden now. God is blessing his people in many ways; subjects I have preached on years ago, assisted by the Holy Spirit, I can say additional light comes, to the convincing of men and women of the truth of the angel's message, backed up by the good Spirit."

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE

APRIL 6

The first session of the day was a sacrament meeting in the upper auditorium of the church in charge of J. F. Garver and D. T. Williams, presidents of Lamoni Stake. The attendance was large, a considerable number standing during the service. There were several earnest prayers and testimonies, and at the close, at the request of the presiding officer President Elbert A. Smith made a few remarks to the effect that no matter what questions arose during the following meetings of the conference, at this time we met as brothers and sisters and friends. It was fitting that such an assembly of God's people should begin with a reconstruction of the individuals thereof through the holy sacrament. He expressed his faith that in the solution of the problems before us right would triumph and that God would in some way make it plain so his will might prevail. The spirit of the meeting was excellent though undemonstrative in character.

At 9:30 the local Sunday school occupied in all departments. The beginner and primary departments held classes as usual, and a number of visitors took advantage of the opportunity to visit them and learn the details of local operation.

The intermediate and junior departments united in a general program by the children in connection with their lesson study.

In the upper auditorium Superintendent G. W. Blair and assistants were in charge and instead of lesson study there were speeches by G. R. Wells, superintendent of the General Sunday School Association, E. D. Moore, secretary of the association, and B. R. McGuire, Bishop.

Brother Wells spoke of the missionary aims of the Sunday school, the possibility of using foreign language quarterlies, of using the present Quarterlies as texts for foreign missions. He significantly urged that the word auxiliary should be abolished and only used as a term to identify the organizations which were formerly auxiliaries but no longer such. Instead, they are departments of the church with specific responsibilities. The auxiliary idea is not the up-to-date ideal of the organizations known as the Sunday school, Religio, and Woman's Auxiliary.

Brother Moore emphasized the fact that all the efforts of the general and district officers are centered on more efficient work in the local schools, for there is the problem of school spirit and influence worked out. Not only is a good school going to establish and maintain the features which characterize progressive organizations and bring efficiency, but they will insist that there be good record keeping lest as schools and districts there be retrogression as in the case of the Zarahemlaites when found by the Nephites.

Bishop B. R. McGuire, in behalf of the church, thanked the Sunday schools throughout the world for the magnanimous manner in which they had fulfilled the task of paying the church debt. "The church debt is paid," were the words of the Bishop, and the applause was "but a feeble expression of the gratitude felt in the bosoms of those present over the realization of that goal. As to the future disposition of funds raised in this manner it was the intention of the Bishopric to present a budget to the General Conference, in which the estimated amounts needed for various purposes in the church would be listed and subject to the approval of the conference. In this manner the Sunday schools, through their representatives in conference, could help to decide on the expenditures as well as the income. While it was a possibility they would be disappointed in evolving the budget, he thought it could be done and would be a distinct step in advance, if consummated.

During the service Albert N. Hoxie telephoned from Chariton that he was on the way with a trunk full of music and tons of enthusiasm. An announcement had been made for a general meeting of all singers at 4:30 p. m. in the church.

At the eleven o'clock service at the church R. S. Salyards was in charge, with opening prayer by Joseph Luff. The choir, considerably augmented by visiting singers, rendered the "Radiant Morn" anthem, and Mrs. Francis White Norris of Hartford, Iowa, sang a solo.

The speaker was U. W. Greene, with a subject assigned by the Presidency: "Reaching the lower classes of humanity." The speaker dwelt principally on foreign mission possibilities, though he insisted that to reach the masses in this land as well as any other, there must be visiting of homes, conversations with the people, and a heart-to-heart interest developed in the message of salvation.

A year ago Brother Greene stated that fifty young men and women should be chosen and prepared for foreign missions. He was prepared now to double that estimate, in view of the pressing demands for such work.

He felt that as a church we must in the immediate future take steps to establish classes, perhaps in Graceland, for the teaching of all the foreign languages and the history of the countries and peoples. The missionaries and their wives should know the language and in addition have a little knowledge of medicine, for the results of the extreme poverty of the peoples throughout the Orient are universal disease and unsanitary conditions. He did not deprecate nor seek to minimize the power of God in the healing of disease, but he felt that simple medical and hygienic measures were often the very first steps to be taken in reaching the people. The women should especially devote study to sociological aspects and be able to minister effectively to the poor and needy wherever found.

He thought the tracts of the Angel Message series as an example, should be translated into many other languages and printed in large numbers. The Book of Mormon is now printed in Swedish and German, but should be sent out in dozens of other languages; the same of the Doctrine and Covenants. (Of course the Bible is already available in the other languages.)

One of the means of reaching our own young people and holding them was to make the church a community center where a reading room could be had, where the young could have opportunity for social intercourse without resorting to the streets, and for the whole church community use the church building and equipment seven days in the week instead of only one.

As early as two o'clock the congregation was assembling in the upper auditorium for the Memorial Service for the students who had laid down their life in the recent war. At 2.30 p. m. practically every seat in the house was taken. At 3 o'clock the relatives present of those who had paid the supreme sacrifice took their seats and the service opened with Elder George N. Briggs, president of Graceland College, in charge.

After the singing of America by the congregation standing, a fervent prayer was offered by Bishop J. F. Keir. There followed a selection by the Graceland Orchestra, and an anthem by the college glee club prepared the way for the discourse by Elder John W. Rushton.

President Briggs, in introducing Elder Rushton, called attention to the fact that he had been directly appointed on behalf of the church to keep in touch with our young men who entered the army service, and that he had done so, both in the camps here in America, and also with the boys who went over the sea. We shall probably be privileged to publish at least a brief resume of the sermon in an early number of the Daily Herald.

At the close of the sermon a military quartette sang, "How sleep the brave," while some thirty-seven men in uniform on the stand stood in silent tribute to those who had passed away. Manly tears stood in the eyes of some of them for their lost comrades.

After an anthem by the Graceland Glee Club, Bishop Keir offered the benediction.

The evening service was attended by a houseful, many having to be turned away early. The choir was large, practically filling the recently enlarged platform of the church. At the beginning of the song service Brother Hoxie said there was never a time in the history of the church when there was more need of deeply spiritual song, and that it was his intention to specialize on congregational singing during conference week. A number of songs were sung by both the choir and congregation, with an anthem by the choir and a solo by Nelle Atkinson Kelley of Omaha.

The meeting was in charge of D. T. Williams, the opening prayer was by Frank Russell, and T. W. Williams was the speaker of the hour. With typical fearlessness Brother Williams laid down some principles upon which his hearers might dwell with considerable profit. If we do not desire for others the same things we seek for ourselves, said the speaker, we are Latter Day Saints only in name. If we think of removing to Zion to escape the evils of the world and have reposed peace while our brothers and sisters in the world are suffering and dying, we can never be a part of Zion. Again, as to consecration, Brother Williams said he at one time worried considerably over the securing of a competence for a proverbial rainy day. Now he had come to the point where that no longer mattered. He believed that when one puts his whole heart and soul into the saving of souls there will be no rainy day. As to dying poor—even in a poor-house—that did not matter—why should one care for so small a thing as that, if he was fully absorbed in the spirit of our gospel belief and had the faith necessary to allow God to bless us?

The morning service in the lower auditorium was in charge of J. L. Parker, with a sermon on prayer by William Fligg. The attendance was good. Brother Fligg emphasized the value of prayer and its effects over riches, its strengthening effect in developing us to meet the Bridegroom when he comes; its necessity in overcoming temptation and abiding the day of God's wrath upon the wicked; its value in the home circle, and shaping character in the government of God as opposed to the governments of the world.

The service at 3 p. m. in the lower auditorium was by R. W. Farrell, on, "The church, the war, the world." We are pleased to report that the sermon is available for printing. As the subject indicates, it was on most timely phases of our present problems.

In the evening at 7.45 G. H. Wixom addressed a roomful in the lower auditorium on the principles in our economic theory which so effectively appeal to nonmembers, who are disappointed in the lack of program among the sectarian churches. It was typical of the line of procedure along which Brother Wixom has succeeded in California.

At the Coliseum Sunday, at 11 a. m., the service was in charge of Hubert Case, with J. R. Grice as speaker. Daniel Macgregor had been announced, but on account of the attack on the Saints at Saint Thomas, Ontario, Brother Macgregor could not leave at this time.

The effort of the young Detroit pastor was highly commended to us as being a thrilling appeal on "Called to be Saints." He showed in pleasing illustrations and apt comparisons how we could express a Saintry life in our activities.

At 3 p. m. at the same place the sermon was by Lee Quick, preceded by a vocal solo by Bertha Burgess of Lamoni. A. C. Silvers was in charge, and Hubert Case offered prayer.

Among other things Brother Quick discussed the question as to why so few people of social prominence were converted to our beliefs. He answered that under his own ministrations—which were typical of many others—a goodly number of men and women ranking high in social and commercial realms came to him and admitted that they believed he had preached them the true gospel, yet because they believed that to accept would bring disrepute on them and their children they would not take the final step and receive baptism.

He frankly raised the question as to whether recreation and amusements adopted by the church and made a part of local religious life would solve the problem of interesting the members in the religion of Christ. It was his observation that the lack of interest might be spiritual indigestion, which if treated directly would remove the difficulty without artificial aids such as swimming pools, gymnasiums, etc., in connection with the church work.

In the evening Wardell Christy addressed a goodly audience at the Coliseum. The service was in charge of Hubert Case and was preceded by a number by the college girls' quartette, and a vocal solo by Sister Griffiths of Independence.

The subject was "Humility." "Not riches, nor possessions, nor honor make greatness, but humility," he said. We are to make our office great by living such condition of heart and mind that humility may be our strength. If God does not greatly shine in our hearts the trouble is in us. We should have greatness in our home and in our church life, but the elements are necessarily in ourselves. The kingdom of God furnishes the foundation for the highest attainments of humanity.

MONDAY, APRIL 7

At 7 a. m., the choir met for prayer service and devotion.

The various quorums were in session at their places of assembly, getting ready for the conference work, but no other general sessions were held except the Woman's Auxiliary, which occupied from eight a. m. till noon.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

The General Convention of the Woman's Auxiliary opened at 8 o'clock on Monday morning. Reports were read and an organization effected for the convention. Reports will follow in later issues.

The meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary at 10.30 a. m. Monday the 7th was in charge of President Mrs. D. J. Krahl.

The first speaker was Mrs. Frederick M. Smith, who used an outline to explain the policies of the Auxiliary. She made many interesting points, such as adapting psychology to the needs of the home, to child-rearing, etc. We were told that after the birth of her first child she took up the study of psychology, and by so doing was inspired to tell it to others.

The issuance of a manual for the Temple Builders was stated to be in the near future. A new Year Book is to be put out the coming year.

The following outline was used by Sister Smith:

EDUCATIONAL WORK

HOME AND CHILD WELFARE

Physiology and hygiene

General psychology.

Child study.

Sex hygiene.

Preventive medicine.

Eugenics: Race and culture.

Home economics.

- a. Selection and preparation.
- b. House problems.
- c. House sanitation.
- d. House planning and sanitation.
- e. Home nursing.

RELIEF AND SERVICE DEPARTMENT

Sociology.

Social pathology.

Origin, nature and treatment of dependent classes.

Causes of poverty.

Sewing and aids.

Locals.

Bazaars.

Friendly visits.

General relief.

Cooperation with deacons and bishops.

YOUNG WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Duplication of other departments to young women with certain recreational features.

Culture in its various phases.

Etiquette, etc.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Following the address by Mrs. F. M. Smith questions were invited from the audience.

One was whether it is possible to cooperate and possibly affiliate with other similar societies. It was answered that it was very proper and advisable to do so.

It was answered that in case a group of women wish to organize and lack a leader, they should choose the best of the number for simpler subjects and develop themselves for their own needs and thus inspire new leaders.

Some one asked what was the need of sewing and aid societies studying the sources and origin of the needs of the poorer classes. It was answered that by so studying it was often possible to enable people to help themselves as well as be helped.

President F. M. Smith discussed "The home."

Said he: "I stand for the Woman's Auxiliary first, last, and all the time. . . . There must be a woman's organization in the church."

As reasons, he suggested that there were certain organizations exclusively for men, such as the priesthood, and the women had their special needs to be conserved.

He believes that while we do not need hatchet-swinging, saloon-smashing women, we are in the midst of a world revolution affecting the rights of women and it will not go backward.

The inroads of vice and immorality must be met by a strongly organized effort on the part of intelligent women. Without the women, any organized effort cannot be effective if it be at all Utopian.

Even the success of the British Army was largely augmented by its woman's auxiliary. As a stimulus to education women stand ever strongly in the foreground.

Scientifically there is nothing in the world so similar to a man's brain as a woman's, and if she is not his equal it is because she has not developed that brain. Naturally, when men specialize on certain subjects they excel. When women are able to give special attention to certain subjects they will in the same manner excel.

Because of biological differences between man and woman there will always be differences in spheres of action, and a lack of understanding of this fact causes much of the trouble in the world.

As a concluding statement he told the women of the church to "hang on to your rights and be sure if used properly more will be forthcoming."

Long before one o'clock the crowd could be seen gathering towards the church building in order to secure seats for the business session.

By 2 p. m. many were standing. The heavy showers which fell intermittently during the forenoon had ceased and the skies were fair, the weather springlike, as the conference began its important deliberations.

The meeting opened at 2 p. m. with President F. M. Smith in the chair. "Redeemer of Israel" was sung, and prayer offered by Elbert A. Smith.

The First Presidency were authorized to preside over the conference and make the usual arrangements for time, place, and character of meetings, appointments of speakers, etc.

The credentials committee reported additional names on reports.

Secretaries: R. S. Salyards and P. G. Fairbanks. A. N. Hoxie in charge of music.

R. W. Harder and assistants, stenographers of the conference.

Local ushers were given charge of ushering.

Press committee: T. W. Williams and Walter W. Smith.

It was announced that the hours of meeting for the conference would generally be as follows:

At the Coliseum at 8 a. m. meetings of the Melchisedec priesthood and those of the Aaronic under conference appointment.

At the church, from nine to ten, prayer meetings. From ten to twelve business of the auxiliaries. Two to four, conference business sessions. The evenings at the church will nearly all be devoted to special services such as college, Auxiliary, etc.

President F. M. Smith then read his report, the greater part of which follows:

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

When we met here two years ago we were under the excitement contingent upon the formal entrance of the United States into the great world war, and one year ago our conference was held amid the feverish activities of a nation directed by the strong hand of military discipline. Now we meet amidst the chaos of reconstruction at home and the terror of Bolshevism abroad. The doctrine of discontent is being systematically and energetically propagated, and from its dangers neither the nation nor the church is free.

While the war was being carried on, I made earnest plea not only for loyalty and patriotic devotion, but for earnest preparation for the inevitable period of reconstruction so that as a church, a part of the social organization, we could make the full contribution toward reconstruction and a composition of the social troubles that might justly be expected from an analysis of our social doctrines and our organization. But are we fully prepared for that work? I fear not. I fear, too, that as a people we lack the courage of our convictions. We are loud in proclaiming our theology, bold in forensically defending our claims, but weak in the practical application of our religion, and timid in entering upon the practical demonstration of our social economies. We are loud in proclaiming the identity of our organization with that of the Master, but reluctant in furnishing the working confidence necessary for the personnel of official organization to properly function. We have created a splendid organization, with the strongly centralized control necessary to efficiency, but emasculate the whole system by spreading discontent, suspicion, envy, jealousy. To lustily and even feelingly sing, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet to guide us in these latter days," is easy, but to furnish the warm, living flesh and blood of confidence and support to the skeleton of our organization is more than a matter of music. To hail the leader in glad acclaim is somewhat at variance with the process of fettering him for fear he will lead astray.

Despite the disadvantages of the unusual conditions contingent upon a world war, the work has progressed steadily. Statistics show last year to be a record one in increase of numbers, and the financial growth has been such that the church debt is no longer a cause for worry. The progress in spite of the discontent existing in some quarters has been such as to hold earnest promise of rapid progress if the necessary cooperation can be had in all departments. A goal in numbers and local organizations should be fixed and worked towards, as well as one in amount of funds to raise. What may we hope for? What shall be the degree of effective working confidence which shall be developed this year? But whatever the ideals in a material way, not for a moment should we lose sight of the fact that the great objective of the church is spiritual regeneration, moral refinement, social uplift.

CHANGE OF METHOD

Two years ago a change in methods was introduced touching the appointment of the Twelve and the missionaries. The old mission fields were abolished, and the Twelve not appointed in charge of fields as individuals, but left free to go in the direction of the Presidency. The line between missionary work and local work was more sharply drawn.

How has the new plan worked? Answers to this question will vary according to the experience of the individual under the new arrangement. With some it has been a failure, with some a success. For the time being, at least, the men under missionary appointment have been left largely to their own initiative. Some have shown little, but have been inclined to interfere with local affairs, with consequent trouble. Others have developed initiative with marked success in their work. With some modifications the present plan should be continued.

The training and attitude necessary for success in missionary work are essentially different from those necessary in local work; but between the two there should always be the fullest cooperation in the interests of the work.

The local men are on the whole showing more cooperation and team work than previously, and this holds promise of improved local conditions.

The system of reporting of all departments of church work to the Presidency, is being gradually perfected, and we are thereby keeping in close touch with affairs throughout the world.

LEGISLATION

As to legislation necessary this year further than the usual routine business and the various budgets, that of prime importance is to determine the policies at issue between the Presidency and Twelve. Of this more in another place.

DEPARTMENTS

The work of the various departments is set out in the various reports submitted.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

To the question of foreign missions I have given much thought, prayer, and meditation, and present herein what light has been given to me thereon, some of which I have presented formally to the Twelve but which is so far unendorsed by them according to our information.

As expeditiously as possible a consistent effort should be made to establish our work permanently in Jerusalem, to become the base for missionary and local church work not only in Palestine but in the near East.

Besides this, the present foreign work should be continued and expanded so far as possible, while preparations should be at once started to open up earnest and vigorous work next year at least in the following places: Basel, Switzerland, with a view to it becoming the base of missionary campaigns into Italy, France, Germany, Scandinavia, and the Balkans; Havana, as the base of work in Cuba; Mexico City, as a base for the Central Latin American countries. Assistance should be sent those laboring in New Zealand, the Society Islands, and Hawaii.

This work of preparation I would briefly outline as follows: Select an adequate number of young men and women,

DOCTOR LIBBY'S LECTURES

It has been my pleasure to attend about nine lectures delivered by Doctor Libby in Denver, Colorado, during the winter months. Doctor Libby is at the head of the school of philosophy in the Colorado State University and known throughout the United States as a lecturer of no small repute. It has been very instructive and educational to listen to this student. He has been coming to Denver every Saturday and giving these lectures free to the people so they may have a better understanding of things in general and a fair knowledge of the war situation and the peace conference in particular.

A certain number of books he recommended to read along general lines and others along particular lines. The books in general are:

The League of Nations, volume 1, by Theodore Marburg.

Race Sentiment as a Factor in History, by James B. Bryce.

The Stakes of the War, by Stoddard and Frank.

The Psychology of Peoples, by Gustav Le Bon.

The Soul of Europe (A Character Study of Militant Nations), by Joseph McCabe.

Present-Day Europe, Its National States of Mind, by Theodore L. Stoddard.

These books appertain to a study on national characteristics. American characteristics will be better understood by the reading of America and the Americans from a French Point of View, by Price Collier; and Americanism in War and in Peace, by Franklin H. Giddings.

In like manner the following countries will be better understood if the student reads concerning:

Arabia: The Civilization of the Arabs, by G. Le Bon.

Belgian: The Belgians at home, by C. Holland.

Canadian: The Race Question in Canada, by Andre Siegfried.

Chinese: Society in China, by Robert K. Douglas; Chinese Characteristics, by A. H. Smith; The Real Chinaman, by Holbrook; The Cycle of Cathay, by Doctor Martin.

English: The English People, a Study of Their Psychology, by Emile G. Boutmy; England and the War, by A. Chevrillon; England and the English from an American Point of View, by Price Collier. English Traits, 1899, by Ralph W. Emerson; Great Britain and Germany, Being a Study of National Characteristics, by Richard B. D. Haldane. (This book is written by an Englishman who knows Germany the best.) Pale shade, by Gilbert Murray.

French: France and the War, as seen by an American, by James M. Baldwin; Thought of America and France, by E. Boutroux.

German: Gems of German Thought, by William Archer, (This book is most unfair); Philosophy and War, by E. Boutroux; Germany and the Germans, from an American Point of View, by Price Collier. (This book is the best book on Germany ever written before the war.) The Soul of Germany, by Thomas F. Smith. (The best book I know of to-day.)

Irish: John Bull's Other Eye, by Bernard Shaw.

Italian: The Italians of To-day, by Richard Bagot.

Japanese: Things Japanese, by Basil Chamberlain; Thinking Black, by Dan Crawford.

Polish: Poland, A Study of the Land, People, and Literature, by George M. C. Brandes.

Scottish: Scottish Characteristics, by Edwin P. Hood.

Spanish: The Soul of Spain, by Havelock Ellis.

Turkish: The Real Turk, by Stanwood Cobb; Turkey and Its People, by Sir Edwin Pears.

Africa: African Game Trails, by Roosevelt.

The best book which gives the greatest amount of information concerning the countries which will likely be affected by the action of the peace conference is "The Stakes of the War" by Stoddard and Frank. This book gives one just what information he needs in forming an idea of the country involved and also gives the various solutions offered without taking sides or expressing an opinion.

Doctor Libby has been giving several lectures on the League of Nations, and from these lectures I have gleaned the following:

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Bear in mind three things when studying this question: (1) The peace conference, (2) the league of nations, and (3) the league covenant. Do not confuse these three things in your mind. Please also bear in mind that the league covenant can be amended even after the first draft may be put into execution. Some of the newspaper talk would indicate once we get into the league of nations and sign up we cannot add to or change the covenant. Please read the following: "Amendments to this covenant will take effect when ratified by the states whose representatives compose the executive council and by three fourths of the states whose representatives compose the body of delegates." (Article XXVI.)

The uneducated are easily stampeded, and the big problem before the diplomats of this country is to keep the people of the United States from running wild on the question involved on the biggest problem before the civilized world. What the Government wants of the people is to think, talk, and read more on this question. It is not necessary to jump into this thing hastily or else we may make a failure. It has been said, "Next to perfection is having good common sense." If this is true then let us exercise the good common sense our Creator has endowed us with. Let us be wise and try to seek out the best means of accomplishing the wish of the greatest number of people. Goethe said, "Wisdom is seeking the right end by the best means." The masses must be taught what this covenant means so the voters may be informed when they go to the poles to vote for or against the covenant or league of nations.

The check to hasty legislation is opposition. This is the reason why the friends of the idea are making a strong opposition. It is desired that the fifty-one people who vote against or in favor of a certain action may have a clear understanding of what they are voting for. Just so the forty-nine who may think the opposite to the fifty-one out of one hundred may also have a clear idea of things. Suppose that the legislators of the 300,000,000 people represented in the league pass favorably the covenant, what then have we? It is a known fact that about 25 per cent of the population can read and write. Will it not be a stupendous task to educate the other 75 per cent of the people to be peaceful? Is the United States ready to enter into a contract to undertake such a problem as the educating of the world to righteousness? We better make sound and lasting legislation by going slow. This will be making haste.

What do we people know about the situation confronting the men at the peace conference? We know but little. There are problems being solved there which we cannot even attempt to solve in our own minds because we do not have the information necessary at hand. Let me give you an illustration or two. One of the first causes for the war was the possession of Mesopotamia. Why? Because Germany wanted a road to the Persian Gulf, a quick route to their possessions in East Africa and to India in case they wished to strike India in the back. Germany wanted this country for economic reasons as well. This country is very rich in soil, and it but needed intelligence to take hold and the desert would blossom as a rose, and the entire German nation could be fed from this country's produce alone. It at one time supplied 20,000,000 people with food.

In order to be able to form a true judgment concerning any country one ought to know at least twenty things about it, such as race, climate, industry, occupation in general, living, philosophy, literature, art, laws, psychology, geography, economics, diplomacy, and language.

Now who is there who may know enough about these different aspects of each nation in order to form a just opinion? Wilson took with him to the peace conference fifty of the best known authorities on the various countries, each man a specialist in a certain country. He is able to advise with them and has no doubt. Whether we will do the same when it comes to the adoption of the league of Nations remains to be seen.

Another point at issue. A voter may ask, "Why the need of article XXI?" Let us see what may be given as a reason for the adoption of this article. The central thought is freedom of transit. In order for Russia to get her wheat to market without great cost she has been shipping it through the Dardanelles. Three times within the last few years Turkey has closed the waterway to the Russians. The Baltic Sea has been, at least during the war, nothing but a large German lake, thus preventing Russia from coming to market this way. Switzerland has no seaport and the conference probably will think the Rhine River should be opened to that country at least and so the river will be internationalized. The same thing will not only happen to the Dardanelles and the Baltic Sea, but it will also happen to the Rhine River, the Kiel Canal, the Suez Canal, and the Panama Canal. They will be internationalized.

Much in a similar manner each article in the peace covenant stands for something or even many things we may not know and we may have to guess the reason why such article is placed in the covenant. We should make it a point to find out the why of these things if we can. The only way which seems open to us at present is to read and study the countries involved therein.

There is a feeling at the peace conference that the people should keep their heads on and stand squarely upon both feet. This government runs on two rails. We cannot afford to cater to the rich or the rabble. The middle class must be heard. The test of a nation may be determined by the strength of the middle class.

There are two things which the opposition is urging to the league of nations which I wish to speak of. I do not care to take sides. I do want to see that both sides have fair play. Are the Monroe doctrine and the advice of George Washington with reference to entangling alliances in danger?

The psychology of the Monroe Doctrine simply means this, that we do not want you people in Europe to bring any of your snobbery here to America. We do not ask who a man is but we ask what a man is. We want refinement but we do not want snobbery. We want leaders, but we do not want landed titlers—lords and kings. When the people from England came here they established a New England. Now Wilson is extending this doctrine to Europe and Africa. How? In this way: It is claimed that each country seated around the peace table are suspicious of each other except America. Why do they not look upon America with suspicion? Because England will say to France, What do you want out of this? France will answer, We require certain territory. France will say to England, What do you want out of this? England will say, We want certain other territory. In turn they will say to America, What do you want? Wilson replies: "We Americans do not want anything except 'peace on earth and good will towards all men.'" He will also say to the peace conference: Now you men claim to be above Germany and here you are doing the very thing you have been criticizing Germany for, the acquiring of more property. Now, men, you just keep your hands off the territory taken from the German Empire. We will control this part under the league of nations. This is the extension of the Monroe Doctrine.

The other thing to which objection is raised is the entangling alliances. We will consider this briefly. What is the psychology of the advice given by Washington? He advised us to keep out of entangling alliances with European powers which might embroil us in war. Washington was wise in his day. He saved the nation by his generalship and he preserved the nation by his statesmanship. He could not see the future as we see to-day the things as they are really transpiring. He gave his advice because upon each throne in the world in Europe sat a man with unlimited power and the idea in the mind of each ruler was territorial expansion, power, and control. Napoleon was rising to the height of his power. The cables, airships, ocean liners, and wireless have brought the nations close together. The conditions have changed since Washington's day. No ruler in Europe has unlimited power now. We are forming an alliance to prevent a world war. There may be always class war.

Wilson wants a land of "nowhere." Utopia means a "land of nowhere." He does not want Eutopia, which means, "a land beautiful." The land of nowhere in Washington's day is a land of somewhere to-day. The land Wilson sees, the land of nowhere, will be the land of somewhere in fifty years. What Wilson sees is the application of the Golden Rule: "Do unto others as ye would that men should do to you." He wants to love the entire race. Love is sympathy, and the test of love is to sympathize with the greatest number of people. It has been said Wilson is trying to force the issue and demand the league of nations be had at once. This is far from the truth. What he is trying to do over there is to get England, France, Italy, and others to not insist upon such a complete and thoroughly organized league that our country cannot or could not legally adopt at this time. Wilson invites criticism and he considers the true friend of the league is he who will criticize the covenant by pointing out its faults.

If the covenant needs amending let us see that such will be for the interest of the world and not especially for the United States.

WHAT DO WE BELIEVE?

Jesus the great teacher said: "Have faith in God." And Ralph Waldo Emerson in his essay on spiritual law says: "Let a man believe in God, and not in names and places and persons." This sentence is worthy of more than a passing thought, especially if we understand or apply the verb believe in the active, rather than in the passive sense. To me there is a fertile field of thought suggested in the clause, "Let a man believe in God." While contemplating it, my mind is directed to some of the causes which tend toward the retarding of spiritual growth; the things which, if imbibed, will not only stultify, but dwarf also, the souls of men. At once I am reminded of the conventional forms contained in the usage of names and places and persons, that so often cause men to lose sight entirely of the greatness, as well as the simplicity of God.

Too frequently when men think of God, they think only of a word, a name, that is spelled with three letters; there is no substance or reality in the idea they entertain. In fact, the passivity of it doesn't even create for them a definite idea; it simply becomes the usage of a term that, in itself is vague and amorphous. This is the chief reason why so many, otherwise good people, know so little about God. They are like the Samaritan woman to whom Jesus talked at Jacob's well. She said, "Our fathers worshiped in this mountain; and ye say, that in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship." You see she was governed by the idea of a certain place. The Jews also were very superstitious about worshiping in any other place than Jerusalem; but Jesus said to the woman, The time is coming and now is that the true worshiper shall neither worship in this mountain nor in Jerusalem, but they shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth, for the Father seeketh such to worship him.

I have paraphrased the foregoing text, that it might express in a sentence the idea that it is not the place in which we worship, but it is the manner and spirit of our worship that counts.

Many men are considered skeptical, and even called infidels, because they are not, by the people, permitted to think, or speak of God in any way other than along the established, conventional lines. These conventional lines, too, are often so narrow that they obscure the real object and retain only the shadow—and often the shadow itself is wanting. "Let a man believe in God." That is to say, don't restrict the mind of man, but rather give him the privilege to exercise his God-given faculties; permit him to believe in the largeness and goodness of God regardless of your own conventional ideas or notions.

The assaults made upon religion and the Christian's God, by such men as Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll were not in fact made against the Creator of the universe, but rather against the theoretical gods of the different schools of religion.

For example, certain forms of theology said that God is a very revengeful God, and will therefore burn forever all those who refuse to believe just as we do. Mr. Ingersoll says: "I don't believe in, nor can I worship such a God," and men are not to be blamed for being skeptical if they have heard of no other God. Such men are not permitted to believe in God by reason of the human restrictions that have been placed upon him. If the theologies had taught men that God is the personification of love, and that his love for the world of mankind caused him to send his Son in the person of Jesus Christ to be an example of life to them, that they might thereby save themselves from the life of ignorance and tradition that is sure to prove destructive to them if they do not evolve out of it, I think it would have been easy, even for Colonel Ingersoll, to have believed in God.

What virtue can there be in believing in names and places and persons, if by reason of such belief our vision is clouded and our understanding is dwarfed? Let men, first of all, believe in God; let them see that such belief enables them to better adapt themselves to the real issues of life, because God is the vitalizing essence of the universe. Let them see that the Christ life stands supreme because he believed in God; let them see that when a man believes thus, he becomes a better man in every sense of the term; because the things we believe with all our hearts we do, and the things we fail to do we don't believe, however much we may profess to believe them.

The man who says to me, "I am not religious, but I believe that if I do right and treat my fellow men as I would like to have them treat me," is at least ninety per cent more a Christian than the man who says, "I believe in God and the church," and then belies the profession he makes by the life that he lives and by the spirit he manifests. The first man really believes in God, but the latter believes only in certain conventionalities.

My ideas may be more fully expressed by relating certain experiences. One day when boarding a train I seated myself beside a young man who said: "You are a minister, aren't you?" I answered, yes. He then said, "What church do you represent?" I told him, and after a few words of conversation, he said: "Well, I belong to the big church," meaning of course that he was not a believer in church doctrine. I said to him, "Mr. ———, I have a great deal of sympathy for men like yourself; I believe in times past I have seen things from your point of view, and if I were compelled to believe what some theologies teach about God, I, too, would be skeptical; but I have not so learned Christ. I have reasons for my religious belief that are more reasonable and logical than those entertained by the generality of religionists."

Whereupon he answered: "I am not credulous enough to believe all that rot about God and his hell fire."

I said to him, "Mr. ———, don't be too hasty now in your expressions, because I think you will find that in the last analysis it requires a great deal more credulity to be a disbeliever than it does to be a believer in God."

He at once demurred, and I said to him: "Mr. ———, the great Roman philosopher, Seneca, said that two errors prevailed in his time; one was that men spent too much time over trivialities, and the other was they jumped too readily at conclusions. That was no truer in Seneca's time than it is to-day, so don't reach your conclusions too quickly, and I will define for you what I mean by the term 'belief.'"

"In the first place, we live in a very methodical world; everything in the universe is governed by the law of cause and effect. The scientists have discovered the working of this law to a sufficient degree to enable them to observe a comet as it makes its orbit about the sun and then tell just how many years it will be until it returns and again makes its orbit about the sun. They can tell when and where the eclipses of the sun and moon will appear many years ahead, because of the perfect order with which the planets move. The seasons come and go in their order, seed time, growth, harvest; all is governed by law and order. The entire universe if properly observed presents to us one grand system of harmony. Now, sir, this is not all a matter of chance, but back of this great harmony is an Omnipotent Power, working in and through this universe—the source and spirit of all things—the great universal cause. It is there and cannot be denied by anyone. Now, call it what you will, and after all it makes but little difference what term is used. You may speak in the language of science and call it the 'great first cause,' or with the naturalist you may call it 'nature,' or with us Christian people you may call it 'God,' and in the last analysis it will require a great deal more credulity to disbelieve in that Omnipotent Power, that universal executor of law, than it does to believe in it."

He said to me, "I concede your point."

You see I simply let the man see that he really believed in God, but didn't know it. From this vantage ground I lay before him the philosophy of Christ and the teaching of his church. The man listened very attentively, and finally said: "You are the broadest minded man I ever met." He told me where he lived and then added: "I am the banker in my town, if you ever come there come and see me—make your home at my house. I would like to have you teach the religious people of my town your philosophy. There are a number of churches there, but I can't believe in their idea of God, nor in their method of religious teaching. It is altogether too small and too unreasonable.

"Let a man believe in God," then is a very timely and wholesome admonition. Who is able to hear it? As members of the church of Christ we should be careful not to hinder others from believing in God because of our blindness and weakness. Develop within you the Christ life; live it day by day, and it will only be a matter of a short time until our churches will be filled to overflowing with eager, earnest believers, whose songs of praise shall reverberate to the ends of the earth.

The admonition of Jesus to have faith in God, is a timely one, because this simply means for us to believe in the highest and best in life. To believe in God and in his Christ is to develop within ourselves a perfect life and a noble Christlike education. This is the end and ideal of all true religion.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

If the church of Christ existed in the time of the Reformers it did not need reforming. If the church that did exist needed reforming it was not the church of Christ. If the church of Christ did not exist it could not be reformed, only restored. The very name reformer is inconsistent with the work of Christ and his church and no man has ever been authorized of God to change or reform in the least that which he has established.—Charles Fry.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

DENOUNCEMENT OF POLYGAMY

[The following is from the Toronto World of March 24, being a synopsis of a sermon by Elder T. W. Williams. This was his closing lecture in the Allen Theater, of Toronto, at which the largest crowd of the season attended. The interest was intense, the meeting began at 7.15 and lasted till 10 p. m., and the audience stayed throughout and applauded repeatedly. The subject used was: "Was Joseph Smith a polygamist?"—EDITORS.]

"Taking advantage of the fact that the late war has greatly depleted the man power of the various nations of the world, the Mormons of Utah are openly and brazenly discussing the 'advantages' of polygamy," said Tom Williams at the Allen Theater last night (Sunday).

Mr. Williams gave a very vivid word picture illustrative of the evils of promiscuity and polygamy. He outlined the history and evolution of marriage and, from a scientific, biological, and spiritual standpoint, demonstrated the superiority of monogamy over all other expressions.

Mr. Williams continued: "Polygamy is now taboo in practically all the nations of the civilized world. The Governments of Canada and of the United States should see to it that the Christian ideals of marriage are rightly observed. We cannot afford to rehabilitate the antiquated and barbarous customs of the past. Love is the true basis of all human relationship. Marriage is not an exception to this rule. Given a virtuous and pure love between a man and a woman and there remains no place for a third party. The claim that we must 'let down the bars' in order to equalize the sexes is biologically false. The law of biology is tending always to equalization. Nature is sufficient to every emergency. The sublime yearning in the heart and mind of the motherhood of the world for the safety and preservation of the life of those who are 'flesh of its flesh' reacts in maternal expression for the 'life that is yet to be.' The birthrate of the war years and those immediately following give but one answer. All nature converges to an equalization of the sexes.

DEGRADES WOMANHOOD

"Polygamy is unnatural. It is revolting to the finer impulses of the race. It is masculine perversity and selfishness. It degrades womanhood and prostitutes manhood. It destroys the equanimity of the home, it violates all of those secret ideals which have contributed to make the race what it is to-day.

"The Mormons of Utah have never renounced their belief in the doctrine of polygamy. Their leaders still maintain that it is a divine institution and are but waiting the opportunity to revive its practice among the faithful.

"Religious liberty exists in all free countries. Men should not be permitted, however, under the guise of liberty, to introduce the practice of doctrines inimical to the well being of the race. The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is unreservedly committed to the monogamic law of marriage. From the very beginning of the church to the present the church has been unqualifiedly opposed to polygamy."

THE GOVERNMENT URGES THRIFT HABITS

To make war taught thrift and the practice of saving through lending to the Government a permanent and happy habit of the American people, the war loan organization, which now comprises the War Savings and Liberty Loan activities, have started an intensive movement to promote wise spending, intelligent saving, and safe investment.

The fact that 30,000,000 people—men, women, and children—through ownership of Government securities now have a direct personal share and interest in the Government, whereas before the war only 300,000 had such direct financial participation, constitutes a civic asset too valuable to lose. The ultimate objective is to popularize thrift that one of the most valuable lessons taught by the war will become a happy, everyday national habit. The result would be a people who spend freely, but who think before they spend that they may get full value.

The Savings Division of the War Loan Organization has been constituted in Washington as a Treasury Department activity to assume national leadership in the campaign for thrift and the sale of War Savings Stamps. This division cooperates with the twelve Federal Reserve Districts of the country. Chicago is in the Seventh District, which comprises the five States of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, and Wisconsin.

The keynote of the campaign is that wise spending is the basis of intelligent saving and that waste, whether of commodity or time, profits no one. This definition may be stated in more expanded form as follows:

WISE SPENDING

This means spending preceded by thought to make certain that the purchaser gets his money's worth in commodity, comfort, service, recreation, or advancement. It implies the balancing of all needs, present and future, and of the means of meeting these needs. It is a sort of budget making. Wise spending sees to it that all the income is not spent on the first needs or desires, lest other more urgent needs or desires appear. The individual must overcome the temptation to satisfy present needs to the neglect of the future. On the other hand, urgent necessities of to-day must not be neglected for the petty ones of to-morrow. Provisions must be made for the rainy day and the unforeseen emergencies, but economic stability implies also some capital with which to turn around or to take advantage of opportunity.

INTELLIGENT SAVING

This constitutes largely in foregoing foolish personal expenditures in order to be able to secure in the future necessities or even the more substantial luxuries. Such saving is the opposite of miserliness in that it involves chiefly the postponement of expenditures until small sums, which would purchase little in themselves, have accumulated into substantial buying power. Such saving contemplates the maintenance of family efficiency, meeting of real necessities as they arise, and, at the same time, capitalizing a part of the individual's earnings and placing the family on a sound financial basis.

SAFE INVESTMENT

War Savings Stamps are a solid and attractive investment and also the most effective mechanism for saving small sums regularly. Money saved in these securities directly aids the Government. The ownership of such securities gives the individual a personal share in his Government that is helpful to practical citizenship.

AVOIDANCE OF WASTE

The war taught the American people to combat waste as a means of helping the army and navy and of winning the war. Incidentally, what was saved contributed to the well-being and happiness of each family. Avoidance of waste, of course, is as important to the nation or the individual in peace as it is in war.

The Government, through the Savings Division, has outlined many motives for saving in 1919 and lending to the Government during the post-armistice period and after peace is signed. Following are the motives:

POST-ARMISTICE MOTIVES

To pay all war bills. To maintain our troops abroad. To bring our soldiers home. To restore those who have fought for liberty to social and industrial usefulness. To care for the helpless, maimed, sick, and wounded. To discharge our full duty to the dependents of soldiers.

MOTIVES OF EVERYDAY PATRIOTISM

Saving, through lending to the Government, is practical, constructive citizenship. It gives a personal share in the Government's operations—in itself a privilege. Constitutes a body of active citizens less susceptible to pernicious influences because they have a tangible stake in their Government. Stimulates desire for knowledge of the operations of the Government. Is a powerful agency for the Americanization of the foreign born—a practical eraser for the hyphen.

MOTIVES OF SELF-INTEREST

Getting one's money's worth. By thoughtful spending, making wages yield the maximum in commodity, comfort, service, recreation, advancement. Protection for the future—saving for a rainy day. Saving for old age, insurance, or for income. Saving for the unforeseen emergency. Establishing a "turn-around" fund which enables one more readily to meet adjustments in employment or business. Establishing the family on "Safety Lane" if not on "Easy Street."

ADVANCEMENT

Saving for a definite, concrete motive, such as buying a home or making any other substantial well-considered purchase. Saving for an education, or training in trade, profession, or art, or to give children educational advantages or to furnish them a start in life.

RECREATION

Saving for well-thought-out and desirable recreation, or amusements, such as a trip or special vacation in 1924. Saving to effect substantial purchases that will add to family recreation.

CAPITALIZING TIME

Getting maximum satisfaction from each hour of labor. Capitalizing spare time to yield an added monetary return or the greatest possible advantage in self-improvement or recreation.

CAPITALIZING WASTE

Turning waste of commodity or undue deterioration into a source of monetary savings or of solid comfort, recreation, or advancement.—War Loan Press Bureau, Chicago District.

WAS WALT WHITMAN A PROPHET?

[The following is from The Literary Digest, March 8, 1919]:

American readers have found prophets of today's world situation in Shakespeare, in Victor Hugo, and in various other foreign writers, but an Englishman calls attention to Walt Whitman. Doctor C. W. Saleeby, writing to the London Times, makes an extract from Walt's "Years of the modern," first published in "Drum taps" in 1865, and asks, "Is not this indeed prophecy—the human utterance of the Divine?"

I see not America only—I see not only Liberty's nation, but other nations preparing;

I see tremendous entrances and exits—I see new combinations—I see the solidarity of races;

I see that force advancing with irresistible power on the world's stage;

(Have the old forces, the old wars, played their parts? are the acts suitable to them closed?)

I see Freedom, completely armed, and victorious, and very haughty, with Law on one side and Peace on the other, A stupendous Trio, all issuing forth against the idea of caste;

—What historic dénouements are these we so rapidly approach?

I see men marching and counter-marching by swift millions; I see the frontiers and boundaries of the old aristocracies broken;

I see the landmarks of European kings removed;

I see this day the People beginning their landmarks (all others give way);

—What whispers are these, O lands, running ahead of you, passing under the seas?

Are all nations communing? is there going to be but one heart to the globe?

Is humanity forming, en masse?—for lo! tyrants tremble, crowns grow dim;

The earth, restive, confronts a new era.

The perform'd America and Europe grow dim, retiring in shadow behind me,

The unperform'd, more gigantic than ever, advance, advance upon me.

[The lines of the foregoing poem seem to have possessed more than human prescience. Note the expressions, "Tremendous entrances and exits"—"new combinations"—the "solidarity of races." Note the idea of caste giving way before freedom—God grant, too, that peace and law may complete the trio.

Note the reference to the marching and counter-marching of "swift millions"—boundaries, frontiers, and old aristocracies broken up—European kings and landmarks removed, and the people setting up their own ideals. Then, too, the expression, "humanity forming en masse" carries our mind to the league of nations forming at this moment while "crowns grow dim."—E. A. S.]

If you resolve to do right, you will soon do wisely; but resolve only to do wisely, and you will never do right.—Ruskin.

The field is open to talent and merit is sure of its reward. The gifts with which industry are crowned are her own.—Claud.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Roll of Honor

476 STARS

We have received from Brother McGuire a list of six more schools that should have been on the Roll of Honor, and not wishing to slight any of these schools, we shall, with the consent of the Ensign, HERALD, and Stepping Stones, publish these last few.

Strathcona, Alberta. Sister William Osler writes: "I am writing in behalf of the Edmonton School. We had a banner school, if $2 per member means a banner school. Many of our members are in rather hard circumstances at present, but others gave more so as to make our average $2 per member. We had to work hard this year, for our aim was to double last year's offering. This we did and more."

Bulahdelah, New South Wales, Australia, Morning Star Sunday School. G. H. Parker writes: "During the Christmas vacation I visited some of the schools in this district (on my way to our mission conference). I was very pleased to find the Bulahdelah School had raised over $2 per pupil, as Christmas offering. Next year I hope to see all the schools of this district fall right in line and do all they can to assist in this movement."

Fiskeville, Rhode Island. C. F. Yates reports Cranston Sunday School as being "over the top."

Catawba, Florida. Santa Rosa Sunday School is "over the top."

Over half of our schools went "over the top," but where were the other half, and where are they going to be this year? I feel sure that all will be right in line, and would it not be splendid if we could report every one of our Sunday schools as being over the top this year? And why not? Let us all work hard and sincerely. Has your school received the clock? Find out and let us know if you have not. We will have to know the total enrollment of your Sunday school and number of classes in order to send right clocks. Let us be sincere and diligent this year in our efforts to build up the schools and the offering.

Sincerely yours,

ARTHUR W. SMITH.

Paying Tithing

If I do not pay tithing, am I in good standing?

A brother told me once that he thought he was, and he had not paid any.

Well, would you think you were a good citizen of the United States if you paid no taxes? They would compel you to do so; but God does not compel us to do anything. We are not forced to be baptized. No, it's all freewill.

"He'll call, persuade, direct us right;
Fill us with wisdom, love, and light;
In various ways be good and kind,
But never force the human mind."

What reward could you get for being forced? We are to be rewarded for what we do, not what we think. God has promised us eternal life on conditions, but we must comply with the conditions. If we do not, we lose the reward. I hire a man to do some work—if he fails, he gets no pay. God does not pay idlers for being idle.

We are here to be tested. If we stand the test, we get the reward; if we fail, we lose the reward. The testing will show what I am fit for.

Jesus said: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy mind, and with all thy heart, and with all thy strength."

"The law of the Lord is perfect." What is the law for? To make us like it—perfect. Can you be perfect if you do not obey it? It is a means to an end. Can you reach the end or the goal some other way?

If you wanted to learn music, could you learn without applying the rules of music? You could not make bread without applying the rule. Law is rule. You must have all the ingredients, or you will fail. If you make bread, you want good bread, and if you leave out the salt, your bread will be lacking.

"Will a man rob God?" How can I? By withholding the tithe. It's a part of the law. If I obey seventy-five per cent of the law, I am only three quarters perfect.

"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse; that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

Well, supposing you fail in your part, will God do his anyway? What were you baptized for? The remission of sins. Would your sins be pardoned on any other condition? Think about it. Will your omissions be overlooked? I think I would feel guilty of omission. We do not want to be "slackers," surely not toward God.

If I have a thousand dollars saved, I owe one hundred. If I have saved one hundred, I owe ten. If I have saved ten, I owe one. Oh, but I want that for "a rainy day." Well, you'll want something if you do not; that is, unless you or your family need it—justly. All your just needs and wants are to be supplied.

What you really want is to be in favor with God. He will take care of the rainy day. Jesus says, "Have faith in God." You can depend on him. I know, I have tested him. "Lay up treasures in heaven," not on earth.

If I am afraid of rainy days, have I faith in him?

I worked two whole years to pay a debt, and when I got it paid, it was just the beginning of winter. I had no money, and no work. I started to town alone, and with a bundle. I had six miles to walk. I felt a little sad, so I went out of the road in the sage brush to pray. Oh, what a prayer I offered, pleading, petitioning, thanking God Almighty for his love to me, in giving me good health. I was enraptured. I was well paid. I wept; not with sorrow, but with extreme joy. A voice spoke to me and said, "All will be well."

As I entered town I met a man and he said, "Where are you going, Charley?" I said, "I do not know." He said, "Well, don't you want to work for me? I will give you thirty dollars a month and board, to work in my wood yard."

Answer to my prayer. Who need fear if God is for us?

Am I a soldier of the cross? Am I? How do I show it? Do the right and then you can trust God, indeed.

"We are the living witnesses, and teach the word to you,
Beware how you receive it, do not yourselves deceive;
For God himself revealed it. We know what we believe."
CHARLES A. PARKIN.

The Bishopric Advocate for 1919

"Every Member a Tithe Payer"

"He that loveth father or mother or brother or sister [or money] more than me is not worthy of me."

"One tenth is the Lord's."

Fear of coming want causes some to withhold the Lord's portion. Why not trust him and pay tithing?

Education

The topic of education is so broad in its extent, and covers so much ground, it would require a more able pen than mine. But as so much has been said pro and con, I may be pardoned if I touch on it.

Some seem to think it is unnecessary in the work of God. But we read that "the glory of God is intelligence." He has endowed his creatures each with a portion, and asks us to "come up higher," "study my word," "study all good books." This is amazing condescension on the part of God to ask his creatures to share in his glory and intelligence, for that is what he means. Then how is it possible to "come up higher" if we could not get knowledge? Knowledge is within the reach of everyone. We are living on too low a plane.

We need not go to college, or have some university confer degrees upon us in order to be educated. "Acquired knowledge is education whether it comes from books, travel, lectures, or observation." Some have the idea that education means a diploma; your head may be empty, but if you have a diploma, you are all right.

When Abraham Lincoln was a boy, he obtained knowledge by reading books by the light of a pine knot before a fireplace. But he was determined to get knowledge, and he afterwards became president of the great American Nation.

One sister, giving her views on the subject, says: "I have tried to read some articles in our church papers which undoubtedly were good, but as far as my education was concerned it was useless." It is unfortunate, to say the least, that good instructive thoughts are lost by clothing them in language not readily understood. But there is another side of this vital question. That is where education will come. Educate ourselves to understand them—at least we can try. If the mountain will not come to Mahomet, then Mahomet must go to the mountain.

The teachings that fell from the lips of the Man of Galilee were most sublime, yet simple, and with what power they could penetrate the hearts of men! They have come down the centuries and will never die, while eloquent, learned discourses that win applause from men will be forgotten. He was not learned according to man's ideas of learning, but at twelve years of age he confounded the most learned men of that day.

We need not be afraid of getting too much education. Its boundaries are limitless, and the mysteries of God are contained therein. God is the author of all education and knowledge. And the time will come when we can comprehend even God.

Reconstruction is a word we hear very often now since the war, and certainly standards are changing. The old must give way for the new. The standard of yesterday cannot be used for to-day. Changes are coming so rapidly there is scarcely time for preparation; and preparation will be needed in the combat that is coming, and woe to those who are not prepared. In the words of our President, "We must prepare for greater things with a haste which is feverish because of the rapidity with which things happen to-day."

I cannot close without speaking of the benefit I derived from reading Brother Dwyer's article, "Decorum in our Sunday services." Reverence always appeals very strongly to me. I have often been shocked and indignant when at conference to hear talking and laughing and noisy shuffling in the same place with God's Holy Spirit.

The "value of silence" was painfully absent and the spiritual atmosphere was sadly lacking. One sentence that made a strong impression on my mind was, "parents should teach the children in the homes that behavior in the house of God is a factor in the molding of character." The homes are producing the future men and women of our church, and no nation can be greater than its home. But this is a subject by itself.

MRS. A. MCKENZIE.

HAVERHILL, MASSACHUSETTS, March 16, 1919.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since Haverhill has had any space in your valuable paper, but as we are still in the work and trying to spread the gospel we want to let our past friends know it.

Our branch has not grown numerically but we trust it has grown in quality. We do not get many visits from the ministerial forces, as those who are stationed in Massachusetts District are filling pastors' positions. Our president, Leon E. Jordan, tries to fill that office and has the good will of all the Saints. He is assisted by the priesthood in the branch, and they all work together for the good of the branch.

During the past two weeks we received a treat that has been the lot of the Massachusetts branches to enjoy this winter. Brother Augustine Dwyer was able to be with us one short week. When we heard of the wonderful success he had been having in the other branches we were fearful we could not give him an audience large enough to pay for his efforts. We made an effort to get a union church in our neighborhood where we have lived for twenty-five years and are known and respected as citizens. But they delayed answering us until it was too late, and afterward admitted they did not want us to use the church for fear we might introduce some Latter Day Saint doctrine. The pastor went so far as to write the pastor of the church in Brockton where Brother Dwyer lectured, to see if our statements regarding him were true. We hired the hall that is let in connection with the Unitarian church for three nights. Brother Dwyer spoke here the first night to the smallest audience he ever spoke to. He thought it would be useless to continue, as there was so much expense connected with his illustrated lectures. After the lecture the few Saints decided that as it had been advertised we had better keep our contract if no one turned out. The next night we were happily surprised at an audience of about fifty; the next there were still more. Brother Dwyer gave his wonderful lecture on "Thirty-one days in the Desert of Sahara." The third night he gave "Three years in the Holy Land." To those who have heard these lectures there is no need to emphasize their wonders, but they were a rare treat, both the pictures and the lectures.

The fourth night, as we could not hire the hall, Brother Dwyer invited all present the previous night to come to our hall and hear his lecture on "My three months in Russia." This proved wonderfully interesting, also several who had heard him took the trouble to find the hall and they were repaid. Brother Dwyer decided he would come back from Boston, where he was announced to speak Sunday evening, and give us the two days before going to New York on his way west. He announced his two illustrated lectures, "Venice, the bride of the sea," and "Rome, the Eternal City." We procured the hall again, and the audiences were much larger, and if he could have spent another week with us we would have had to get another hall.

The last two nights one of the wealthiest ladies in the city chanced to hear him. She had traveled over the same ground, and after the lectures invited the brother up to talk them over with her. She said it was a shame that no more knew of his being in the city, as there were many who would pay $1.50 to hear him speak. She said she had heard the best preachers in the country, and that Brother Dwyer's lecture on Rome was the best sermon she had ever heard. When she found he had to go to New York she said if he would return another year she would personally manage a series of lectures for him in one of the largest places in the city.

We were all greatly benefited by his visit. We were heart-sick the first night, but jubilant the last, and we hope God will see fit to let our brother return sometime in the future, and we will give him a full house.

"Why I became a Latter Day Saint" was the subject of his Sunday morning talk, and those present will long remember the outpouring of God's Holy Spirit, for though the elements raged without, the peace attending the brother's message could hardly be surpassed.

It will be a week long to be remembered, and the Saints were greatly strengthened in faith.

Yours in gospel bonds, SUSIE THAYER JORDAN.

PARIS, TENNESSEE, March 16, 1919.

Editors Herald: Our winter institute work convened at Foundry Hill Branch, March 10, and continued through three days. Brother A. W. Smith and wife were on hand to take charge of the work previously outlined; also our district superintendent, O. S. Caldwell, was on hand, and with the aid of his assistant superintendent, Brother D. Walls, made all things as pleasant for the team as possible.

The choir rendered splendid music, and made their service as profitable as possible. Also, I want to state that Brother J. R. McClain, district president, and his noble wife, Sister Kate McClain, were both present and greatly assisted in helping to make this institute work a success. In fact, it seemed that Brother McClain was just as much interested in all departments of the session as anyone, either young or old. All did their part in helping to carry on the work, and I do not think I ever experienced a better feeling among a congregation than prevailed among this body of Saints the entire time, and it seemed that all enjoyed themselves to the fullest extent.

Brother and Sister Smith certainly understood how to handle the work that was placed in their hands, and I feel safe in saying that this institute work was one of the finest things we ever experienced, and was more educational than anything we ever engaged in before.

If there is another trip planned for another year, I feel safe in saying that Brother Trowbridge can place our name on the list, and give us more than one session, if possible.

All who missed this institute missed something worth more than they probably thought for. One could very well afford to sacrifice three days' time and a few dollars, to attend such meetings. This work is worth more to the Saints than any other one thing they could engage in. I have heard several try to express themselves, as to how glad they were that they attended, but they just could not find words to do so.

So you who are in charge another year, please send us another session of this kind of work, and please find room for Brother and Sister A. W. Smith's names on the list. They certainly did win the love and confidence of all of the people with whom they came in contact.

There is much more I would like to say in behalf of this institute work, but space will not permit me to do so.

Your sister in the one true faith,
RUBY CALDWELL.

GLOUCESTER, ENGLAND, March 17, 1919.

Editors Herald: Just a few lines to say we welcome the HERALD week by week, with its messages from various parts of the world.

We feel to rejoice with all the Saints that the war is over at last. The Gloucester Branch has suffered in common with other branches, and the trial of our faith was at times severe.

A promise was given by the Lord to us that our brethren would be preserved to us. This has been fulfilled. We sent four to the battlefield from our midst, but all have been preserved, and when we listen to the experiences of our brethren, we realize how marvelous has been their preservation indeed.

General Conference will soon be here, and we look forward and trust it will result in advancement to the church. We hope there will be a reorganization of our forces, and that we shall move forward. Truly the hastening time has come.

After the experience of the last four and one half years, the Saints naturally are greatly interested in the gathering to Zion. May God continue to direct in the great preparation which must be made for that event.

I take this means of conveying my very kind remembrance to Elders J. W. Rushton, William Lewis, and E. B. Morgan. I have not forgotten these brethren and their past labors, and we should be pleased to see again our minister in charge, U. W. Greene. However, we want them all to know that their labors amongst us have been appreciated by the Saints.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

E. J. TRAPP.

PRINCE ALBERT, SASKATCHEWAN, March 19, 1919.

Editors Herald: I am thankful for this great latter-day work. Am a constant reader of the HERALD, and in it I find good spiritual food.

We are isolated Saints with no church privileges, but we have our Sunday school every Sunday, my two daughters and I. The Lord has said that where there are two or three gathered together in his name, he is in our midst. We can truly say that the blessing of the Spirit has been with us at times, which gives us more courage to press onward.

I am trying to live a true Saint, and let my light shine for the good of others, that they may see the light also. My desires are to put forth an effort to work for the Woman's Auxiliary and for the Christmas offering for 1919. I want to do all I can for the redemption of Zion, so that at Christ's coming I may have part in the first resurrection and be redeemed into that glory celestial.

Ever praying for God's people,

Your sister in the faith,

ANNA GLOVER.

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA, March 19, 1919.

Editors Herald: Perhaps those who are in charge of the institute work in the different branches will be interested to hear of the good results following their efforts, therefore, I shall try to tell briefly of the work here.

Several weeks ago we decided to have the institute work given in our branch, although we feared it might not prove very beneficial to a small branch like this one, yet we were determined to get all the good possible from it.

When Brother and Sister A. W. Smith came into our midst, they proved themselves thoroughly capable of accommodating themselves to their environment, and proceeded to present the work in a very interesting manner, and all who availed themselves of the opportunity to hear were very much pleased.

The outline of the work is splendid, covering a large field, yet it is presented in a compact form, and has been very helpful to our branch. We are adopting several suggestions as given by the team, and expect to carry out others in the near future.

I believe I am expressing the sentiments of the branch when I say we enjoyed the institute and have been benefited by it, and think it a good plan to continue the work.

We all enjoyed our association with Brother and Sister Smith, and while we did not learn to know them as well as we should like to have known them, yet, well enough that we are able to retain the most delightful personal impressions of them.

With best wishes for the institute work in the future,
In gospel bonds,

BERNICE FLEEGER.

ANDOVER, MISSOURI, March 20, 1919.

Editors Herald: I thought a few words from this part of the vineyard might be appreciated.

I am always glad when the HERALD arrives, as I love to read the beautiful articles and letters which it contains. After reading them I always feel strengthened and ready to go on in this life's battle.

I have passed through a siege of sickness, but, thank the Lord, I have been made well again. I feel as though I could not do enough for the blessed Master.

I want to live as pure and good a life as I can, so that when I am called from this world I may receive that crown of eternal life and live here on this earth when Christ, whose right it is to rule, shall reign.

Let us who bear the name of Latter Day Saint cease to find fault with the leaders of the church. God placed them at the head of the church to lead us, and to watch over us, and we should be loyal to them and give them our support and our prayers. They are doing their best, I believe, and if we don't give them our aid, it is our fault, not theirs, that the poor are not all provided for and Zion not redeemed. We should understand that our President Frederick M. Smith has much of the burden of the whole church on his shoulders. Are we going to help him bear those burdens by giving him our most loyal support and our prayers, or are we going to burden him more by our faultfinding and grumbling?

I pray that God will help us to overcome all our faults, and keep our feet grounded firm on that rock. I have been in this church since eight years of age, and I can say that I know it is of God, for I have been shown by God's Holy Spirit.

We are looking forward to General Conference time, as we do love to mingle with our brothers and sisters. I pray that God's Holy Spirit will be with us, and that we will have a time long to be remembered.

I should like to hear from the Saints in Michigan, those living in the Lachine Branch.

I am glad to say that our church is open again, and we are able to meet together. I hope and pray that we will be accounted worthy to escape the dreadful scourges which are coming on the earth. Ever praying for the redemption of Zion.

Your sister,

VIOLET THOMAS.

BLACKGUM, OKLAHOMA, March 21, 1919.

Editors Herald: I wish to write a few lines to your valuable paper, as it is so much help to us. We are taking four of the church papers: I surely do enjoy reading the spiritual letters from the Saints, and the grand sermons. We have no preacher here, but we are ever praying that there will be a branch organized here in the near future.

We are persecuted on every side, but it takes persecution to make faith perfect, and my humble desire is to press onward and upward, and do what the Lord would have me do, and to live more humble and obedient unto all his wishes.

We are having our prayer meetings regularly, and the Lord has wonderfully blessed us in many ways. I have never regretted the step I took when entering the water of regeneration, and I find it a great pleasure to work for the Lord.

My father has a light attack of influenza, and I ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints in his behalf, that God may restore him to normal health.

I ask to be remembered in the prayers of all the Saints, that we may let our light so shine that all may see our good works, and turn from their erring ways. I want to do all I can to help build up Zion, and I know that without the Lord's help we can do nothing.

Your sister in Christ,

LILA PACK.

SANTA ANA, CALIFORNIA, March 21, 1919.

Editors Herald: Since there has been some comment on that "friendly letter," I wish to inform the readers that it was not written for publication, neither was it intended as a criticism. I was writing to a friend who was also an editor.

Having had no one to talk with on church matters for so long, and feeling entire confidence in the one that I was writing to, I wrote freely. I still have confidence in that friend to believe that he had some good motive in publishing the bulk of the letter, and I cannot say that I am sorry that he did so.

I am glad to give a word of encouragement to those who have much to contend with in the discharge of their duty. I only want the readers to know that I did not so far forget myself as to publicly criticize my superior. Neither was I gossiping. When I speak a good word for the uneducated ministers, it is not that I underestimate education—I who need it so much—neither that I would uphold a coarse or uncouth person in the stand. I don't think we have such. But education is not everything that is needed. We have many elders in the church who are of limited education, who have done, and are still doing a good work. There are all kinds to be reached, and some classes are not so successfully reached by the polished gentlemen with smooth, flowing language, as they are by the more ordinary and abrupt who can adapt themselves to the need of the hearer.

Yet we are proud to know that we have some that can fill the highest station, and can vie with the learned of any denomination.

Each one for his position in this body of Christ.

EMMA B. BURTON.

HONOLULU, TERRITORY OF HAWAII, March 23, 1919.

Editors Herald: To-day in the Sabbath school my heart was made to rejoice when Brother Thomas Kelii stood up and proposed that the Honolulu Sabbath School increase their Christmas offering to four hundred dollars for the year 1919, which motion was seconded by Sister Alice Kanui, and unanimously carried. This shows how this branch of the church wants to see the whole church freed from debt.

This branch of the church has been greatly prospered under the pastoral care of Brother C. Edward Miller. When he came here, the branch was in debt, about five hundred dollars, but through his good management, the debt began to decrease until it was all paid off. And when he left there was a good sum in the bank in our favor.

I wish to say that there has never been a man who has been so well liked by this people as Brother Miller, with the exception of Brethren Waller and McConley. Brother

Miller soon captured the affections of these Hawaiian Saints, and retains their appreciation to the present time. When he left us there were many tears shed.

Brother Miller's wants were not forgotten. Sister Dawssett's husband made him a present of a splendid overcoat, which will be very useful in cold weather. Sister Maria Scott gave him a beautiful steamer rug—all wool, made in New Zealand. Other things were given him by the young people of this branch, and we older ones gave the needful things as we were able. But the best gift of all to him, and the one he will remember the longest, is the love of our hearts. And the love and service he gave to this people will be long remembered by us.

To-morrow, the 23d, he will arrive in San Francisco if all goes well, and if we should never see him again in this world, we expect to meet him where Jesus has gone to prepare a place for his people. And remember, Brother Edward, the priesthood and Saints of the Honolulu Branch send you their best alo-ha, alo-ha, alo-ha nui.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
THOMAS CLANCY.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, March 24, 1919.

Editors Herald: The Burlington Branch enjoyed a visit from Brother Charles Fry March 5 to 9. Brother Fry was our pastor here for four years, and this was his first visit to former scenes since his removal eight years ago. The pleasure in the reunion was mutual; as he suggested, a foretaste of the great reunion to come. He spoke for us Thursday, Friday, and Sunday evenings, and was associated with Brother Williams in charge of the sacrament service Sunday morning; a service to be long remembered by all.

We had the pleasure of witnessing three baptisms Sunday morning, March 23, adding to the ranks of our young men (all too rare a quantity), Brother Lester Massena, the other two being little sisters, Madge Kaestner and Elizabeth Kunz.

We had expected to hold an institute session March 21 to 23, but owing to some slip, as yet unexplained, we were minus a representative for the Woman's Auxiliary, and after an attempt to hold the sessions thus crippled, the appointment was canceled for the present at least.

Sunday school and Religio are prospering, with an attendance at the former ranging close to ninety, and the latter near sixty. A feature of the program a week ago was a partial recounting of his experience in the service by Sergeant Henry F. Broman, recently returned from France. Yesterday the Oriole work was featured by one of the junior classes.

A class in the public speaking course is beginning work this week with Brother D. J. Williams in charge.

CORRESPONDENT.

BARNUM, MINNESOTA, March 24, 1919.

Editors Herald: As we are among the isolated Saints it gives us courage and strength to read the good sermons and letters. It is thirty-nine years since we obeyed the gospel, and we never have regretted it. We have seen great development toward the redemption of Zion.

None of my four boys were called to the service of the Nation, and none of my family of nine were victims of the influenza; the latter for which I thank our heavenly Father for his kind care and keeping.

If any of the missionaries or Saints go through Barnum, we would like to have them call on us. My husband, two daughters, two granddaughters, and myself are the only Saints here.

We live about thirty-five miles south of Duluth. If there are any Saints living in this district, we would like to correspond with them. We miss the association of the Saints. My husband's is an invalid, and we make our home with our children.

We have received many great blessings, and we want to live faithful so we will be numbered with the redeemed.

Yours in gospel bonds, MRS. C. J. CARLSON.

TURLEY, OKLAHOMA, March 25, 1919.

Editors Herald: As I am renewing my subscription, I feel to say that its value is too great to miss one copy.

I was raised a Baptist, and so far as I know, am the only Latter Day Saint in our family. My one desire is to live the faith, for I know it is true.

God has blessed me in so many ways. My husband and one son are not in the work, yet believe. So I ask the prayers of all Saints that I may live in all meekness, and my daily life may be a light to my home and friends, and that God will hear my prayers and bring my loved ones in.

Your sister in the one faith,
MATTIE L. SMITH.

SWANTON, VERMONT, March 25, 1919.

Editors Herald: The letters of the Saints are always read by me with great pleasure. They often cheer me and increase my faith in this great latter-day work.

So far I have been unable to locate any of the Saints here as this is an unorganized territory, I believe. Just my sister and I are the only Latter Day Saints living in this town.

This summer we expect to move again, but just where we will locate is unknown to us yet. It might be Windsor, Ontario, and it might be Bridgeport, Connecticut. However, I do not care very much where we go just so long as it brings us back into a branch once more. My sister and I can truly sympathize with those who are isolated, yet we have one great comfort and that is we cannot be isolated from God. We both miss the companionship of the young people, but some day soon we hope to be among the Saints again.

Will some of the elders or Saints give me some information on the following: A man in England, by the name of Rawson, in his book entitled, Life Everlasting; claims he is inspired; he claims his book is a record of Israel; that the ark of the covenant will be found in Iceland; that the British Isles is the chosen country, and that he has divine healing; all you have to do is to write to him and he prays for you, and he claims he has only failed in one case. I am satisfied that he and his book are all wrong, but I want any information the Saints can give me about this man Rawson and his record, if such he has. However, we wish to prove to others his errors. Will some one who knows about this please answer?

My sister, Winona, desires the prayers of the Saints in her behalf, as she has appendicitis and the doctor says she cannot be well until she has had an operation; this she does not want to undergo. May we have an interest in your prayers that we may remain faithful to the end.

May the blessing of the Father be with each and every one is my prayer.

Sincerely, your sister, MOLLY BLANEY.

UNDERWOOD, IOWA, March 27, 1919.

Editors Herald: "Anti-Tobacco Day" was observed by the Underwood Sunday School on Sunday, March 23. Superintendent, Sister Anna Hoss, with the assistance of others had arranged an interesting and instructive program, which was well rendered. The weather was fine, and it was the first Sunday for months that the roads have been good. The result was a large attendance, and quite an interest was manifested.

We trust the good work may go on until the use of the noxious weed shall become as unpopular as has the intoxicating cup. The following program was rendered:

Opening song: "Onward, Christian soldiers."

Prayer by Elder P. T. Anderson.

Song: "Don't step there."

Essay: "Tobacco," by Dula Hoffa.

Song: "Yield not to temptation."

Recitation: "A boy's resolve," by Kenneth Jensen.

Song: "We are the anti-cigarette girls," by girls of the junior class.

Recitation: "The wily weed," by Ceril Damitz.

Song: "We are the boys," by boys of the junior class.

Reading: "No chance for smoking in heaven," by Ella Klopping.

Bible reasons for not using tobacco; Song: "Look for the beautiful," by intermediate class.

Recitation: "Outside and inside," by Corrinne Jensen.

Talk by P. T. Anderson.

Closing song: "Dare to do right."

Our Sunday school had quite a setback caused by the influenza, and later by the bad roads, but it is now taking on new life and we are hoping for constant growth and increased interest in this department of church work.

H. N. HANSEN.

DIERKS, ARKANSAS, March 27, 1919.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I have written to our excellent paper—not because I have lost interest in the gospel, for such is not the case.

I came into the church twenty-eight years ago, and I have preached to and baptized many into the church. I am just as anxious to do what I can now as I ever was. If my hands were loose, and the church willing, I would be a constant worker. I do what I can anyway, and wish I was able to do more.

We need more workers in this field. Our missionaries have done an excellent work, but we have too much territory for the number of workers. The gospel is precious to all who accept it and has many future promises, yet the world is perishing! It looks to me as though each member could do just a little more towards helping spread the good news—especially those who attend picture shows, overdress, chew and smoke tobacco. Each drop of water helps to make up the mighty ocean. More praying, more faith, gives more of the Holy Spirit, which enables us to do our part.

"He that overcomes shall inherit all things." Try it. Faith without works is dead, being alone.

Onward,

J. W. JACKSON.

CROTON, CONNECTICUT, February 27, 1919.

Editors Herald: I have received two copies of a little paper sent out by one John Zahnd, in which he relates a number of dreams and visions, revelations, etc. He also enclosed a copy of a letter that he wrote to Brother T. W. Williams of Toronto, Canada. In one article he mentioned an article in the Ensign of November 7, by Brother Elbert Smith; and said that Brother Elbert is so far in the dark that no doubt he will soon deny revelations from God.

Mr. Zahnd also quotes Brother F. M. Smith as saying in some issue of the Ensign, that it is our duty to weigh that which comes from God, and he will reveal himself as pleaseth him best.

He also quotes Apostle Peter Anderson as saying that he (Anderson) had never seen an angel or a vision, or heard the voice of God. Zahnd proceeds to ridicule Apostle Anderson for his not having had any of the above experiences. He, (Zahnd) apparently has forgotten Paul's instructions (1 Corinthians 12) where it says "that God bestows the spiritual manifestations as seemeth him good."

To one man he giveth faith; to another, knowledge; to another, divers kinds of tongues, etc., and Paul goes on to say, Do all speak with tongues? Do all have the gift of healing? etc.

I have been a member of the church twenty-seven years, April 5, 1919, and I have never had a vision or heard the voice of God. But God has healed my body and healed my little girl of lockjaw; he has most wonderfully delivered me from Satan when Satan was trying to make me pray to him; he has given me discerning of spirits at times; and he has baptized me with the Holy Ghost.

There is absolutely nothing in the quotations from Brother F. M. Smith, or Elbert, or Anderson, that can be construed by an unbiased mind to show any weakness of faith or lack of true spiritual goodness.

I don't doubt but what Mr. Zahnd has had some wonderful spiritual experiences. But I am positive that he lacks that discernment necessary for those to exercise that would be of service to God. Mr. Zahnd is led by his spirit to find fault where there is no fault. If he had quoted some false teaching that the brethren were promulgating, but there was nothing of the kind in the copy of the Ensign quoted from.

Zahnd shows what spirit is making him think that he is the one to lead the church. He says in his paper that Elder Wheaton, president of the Hedrickite Church, said that as soon as they could get President F. M. Smith to admit in writing that lineal priesthood was not correct, that then the break would come, etc.

The Lord said to Joseph the Seer that in him and his seed should the nations of the earth be blest. He also told the prophet that none should be appointed unto this gift except it be through him.

"O hearken ye elders of my church and give an ear to the words which I shall speak unto you: for, behold, verily, verily I say unto you, that ye have received a commandment for a law unto my church, through him whom I have appointed unto you, to receive commandments and revelations from my hand. And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me. But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead; and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations, or commandments; and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived, that you may know they are not of me."—Doctrine and Covenants 43:1, 2.

It is not my desire to cover sin or lack of efficiency. Our creed is "All truth."

It was well known before the prophet's death that he had appointed (not ordained) young Joseph as his successor. Joseph, the father of F. M. Smith, states in Church History (pages 506, 507) that the prophet while in Liberty Jail blessed him to a life of usefulness, and on two other occasions, the same blessing was confirmed by Joseph the Prophet upon him. And also that a public attestation of the same blessing was made from the stand in the grove in Nauvoo sometime before the murder at Carthage.

I was well acquainted with the late Prophet Joseph, of the Reorganized Church, and to know him was to respect him.

He was a man steadfast and true. And he, by that authority bestowed upon him by our heavenly Father, appointed Frederick M. Smith to be his successor. I am personally acquainted with him, and like his father, he is a man that to know is to respect.*

I am acquainted with his brother Hale, who is a man of action, resembling very much his uncle, the late Alexander Hale Smith. I am no man-worshiper, but pay honor to whom honor is due.

If the church, after the prophet's death, had given heed to the above command, concerning who was to appoint the successor of the Prophet Joseph, and waited patiently until young Joseph received the divine command to occupy in the place to which he was appointed, there would not have been the confusion that there was. James J. Strang was the only one that claimed to have been appointed to succeed the prophet by himself. He produced a letter, claiming that it was sent to him by Joseph the Seer, in which he is called to lead the church. But, like Brigham's polygamy revelation, it did not have the right ring to it. And Zahnd's revelations smack of the same spirit.

When Brother F. M. Smith gave the word of the Lord, calling Brother Benjamin R. McGuire to the Bishopric, I read the account in the HERALD, and as I read the words, "Benjamin R. McGuire is the presiding bishop of the church," the Holy Ghost testified to me that it was of God.

Brethren, I do not expect to find the leaders that God has chosen to lead his people to be faultless. It is my duty to sustain them and pray for them, and so live myself as to make their task easier.

Concerning the gathering, I have information and am positive that the Bishops are moving as fast as wisdom directs to make settlements where the Saints may come and live in communities with each other. If the Saints had done as the Prophet Joseph commanded them, they would have been gathered years ago.

And now if you will stop paying dues into the worldly institutions and send the same amounts to Brother McGuire, and if we will all pay our full tithing, we will see things move. But if the Masons, Odd Fellows, A. O. U. W's, Owls, Elks, Moose, Red Men, Knights, etc., take our spare money, we cannot expect God's blessing, and the gathering won't come along as I would like to see it.

I am crippled with a broken thigh and am in pain most of the time, but I rejoice in this church of God, and love the brethren.

Prove all things (by the word) and hold fast that which is good.

Your brother in Christ,
T. G. WHIPPLE.

LONDON ENGLAND, February 28, 1919.

Editors Herald: It is some time since I have written to you but I have been a constant reader of your columns and with many others I can say I feel strengthened and encouraged by reading the good tidings that come to us each week telling of the gospel and its progress in other lands. We also hear of the hard struggles of some to get the gospel before the people, because of prejudice and false reports. If people would only investigate for themselves so that they could understand correctly what we do believe, and not believe misrepresentations by those who know not, how good it would be. But truly there are none so blind as those who will not see. We can sympathize with those who have to meet such conditions, having had a big share of such here ourselves. However, we are glad to note a steady growth in the church and a greater desire in many of the Saints to more closely observe the temporal law and the grand system of equal opportunity that will be the spiritual as well as the temporal salvation of God's children. If our church would, as a united body, comply with this Zion law we would see Zion arise and shine and the glory of the Lord would rest upon and be with his people and an answer to the many earnest prayers of the Saints would be realized and they would gather from the far corners of the earth out of Babylon, with songs of joy and thanksgiving to receive their inheritance in Zion. Then together we could sing with one heart and mind the beautiful words found in hymn 311,

"The morning dawns, the shadows flee,
Lo, Zion's standard is unfurled,
The dawning of a brighter day
Majestic rises on the world."

What a grand vision comes to our mind's eye when we sing that beautiful hymn with the spirit and understanding. Dear Saints, only at times can we sense the grandeur and glory of the work we are engaged in. How feeble our efforts seem at times to point out the beauty of this gospel, yet we cannot say we are discouraged. There are so many things transpiring in the world these eventful days to confirm and strengthen us in the faith that it would seem impossible to doubt even though there are discouragements.

It will be eight years the coming July since we left our Zion land and all our dear family to be of some service among the Saints and people of this land. Brethren Griffiths, Baldwin, and Thomas sailed with us, and they will remember our beginning at No. 2 Coborn Hall, Bow, London, and how sorry we were to see Brother Baldwin leave for America that autumn and Brother Griffiths and Brother Thomas a few months later. No missionary has come to assist us since except for a few weeks when Brother Greene was with us and the few days others were here to refresh and inspire us, still we have remained with the little band of Saints through the dark days and terror of war during which time our hall was taken from us for war service. Since then the meetings have been held at our home, and lately at some of the other Saints' homes. In July our daughter with her two little boys came from Independence to live with us, which helped to cheer and drive homesickness away. We are all trying to do our bit and are happier for doing what we can in church work.

Although the fighting is over, there is still great unrest and dissatisfaction in many ways, yet we hope now for better prospects for religious work. There is nothing to hinder our missionaries from laboring in open air work in this city and we think the opportune time has come. Time is ripe, God's work must hasten and our hopes and our desires are increasing to see our missionaries here to lift the gospel standard. We regret that our good brethren here are necessarily too much engaged with their daily labors to have the time to fit themselves for missionary work, but they are doing what they can in branch work. How we would welcome Brother Macgregor, Brother Baldwin, Brother Rushton, or any of our good and courageous men to help us. Brother John Judd is now released from branch work and is ready and willing to assist any that may come. We are optimistic enough to believe that good can be done here if we can get a proper hall to meet in and a missionary put in charge who can put his whole time into church service. We also hope the time will come when Brother Dwyer will come to London and give some of his grand lectures. What a stimulation it would be to the Saints in the different parts of the mission. His articles in the church papers are full of inspiration and I especially appreciated the one in the Autumn Leaves on "The art of clothing the heavenly message." Surely it will impress our young people to embrace the opportunity afforded them which our older preachers did not have in their young days. It is so much more difficult for an uneducated man to hold the interest of the people and how necessary it is to be well-informed, historically as well as religiously.

Now that General Conference is nearing we earnestly pray that God may direct the affairs of his kingdom on earth and that the necessities of this mission may be considered and provided for. Brother May has tried to do a little missionary work but his time is much taken up visiting the branches in the mission where he is reasonably successful in his line of work and is blessed in his efforts. A few have been gathered into the fold and the difference between ours and the Utah church has been clearly drawn and better understood by those who take the trouble to inquire, although there has not been a special effort made to bring the work prominently before the public. Our anticipations in this direction have not been realized.

We are glad to be situated so that we can welcome our soldier boys when they came to London. Quite a number have come and stayed a little time with us among whom were Brethren Dyke and Chapman from Australia, Brethren Reynolds, Shaw, Bisner, Petre, Brown, Bushland and Johnson from Canada, and a number from the United States. We had Brother Hart from Independence, who, by the way, has taken a Scotch bride home with him, and Brother Lyman Case, who, we were made sad to learn, was killed in action in France. Brother Case visited with us a number of times and we found him to be a noble young brother. May the Lord comfort the bereaved ones at home.

Many of our boys are going back looking and feeling fine physically and spiritually. It is good to hear them tell of their experiences and of how marvelously they have escaped, and they feel doubly confirmed in the faith. Their hope and faith in the gospel was their great support and they go back feeling they have been spared for a purpose and desiring to be of greater service to the church. Surely our hope in Christ is an anchor for the soul, both sure and steadfast. We are led to wonder how anyone who has obeyed the law of adoption and received the marvelous testimonies and evidences of its truthfulness can allow any influence to lead them out into the sectarian world of conflicting ideas and opinions that are out of harmony with the pure gospel principles taught by our great Leader and Commander. I would surely doubt even an angel that would come and tell me to leave the church and faith I cherished, knowing that God from the heavens had borne witness and by the voice of revelation given me the sure testimony that Jesus was the Christ and that this is the true church of the living God. No other foundation can man or angel lay than that which was given by our Lord, nor would I care to follow any other. I well remember the words of our departed brother, Robert Davis while telling how wonderfully God had manifested to us the truthfulness of his work. He said to me, "There is no power on earth that can ever lead you away from this work," and so I feel to-day that after forty-five years of enjoying the light of this gospel it grows brighter and will grow brighter until the perfect day, is the testimony of,

Your sister,
MRS. R. MAY.

BAY CITY, MICHIGAN, March 28, 1919.

Editors Herald: An interesting and instructive session of auxiliary work was held in the church Sunday afternoon. Meeting in charge of local president, Sister Esther White, and Sister Ida Hawn.

After song and prayer the meeting was addressed by district president, Sister E. L. Pringle, of McIvor, Michigan. There followed short talks by members. All agreed that the auxiliary was very beneficial, both socially and spiritually, as well as in the home life. One sister said she had learned to glean the best of others' ideas and mix with the best of her own, and "it works fine." Perhaps this is in part what the Lord meant when he commanded us to go in and out and find pasture.

We younger women were cordially welcomed, but still felt the need of a department of our own, so before the meeting closed, arrangements were made to organize a young women's department.

A trio was rendered by Sister Kear, Sister Sweetman, and daughter Violet.

Wish we might give in part the splendid talk of Sister Pringle, but that may not be done. It was declared a pleasant and profitable service.

EDITH A. SMITH.

NAUVOO, ILLINOIS, March 30, 1919.

Editors Herald: We are trying to establish the gospel here once more and are happy in our labors for we have the Spirit of the Master with us and are encouraged to press on in his cause. The eyes of the world are turned to this old historical place, and many of the daily papers give write-ups in their Sunday editions. Not all of them are true, however, and we notice many errors that also must be noticeable to the reading public, if they are conversant with United States history, and we think most of the reading public are. This does not injure us as a church but calls the attention of all people to us, and when they come to visit the property it gives our representatives an opportunity to explain the principles of the doctrine of Christ and the true history of the church. Also its organization, the Utah apostasy, reorganization, and of its growth and development in these the latter days. When these things are explained on the ground where many of these stirring events were enacted, you may rest assured that they are not soon forgotten.

Many lasting sermons are preached here to visitors, that do not go on record, but in after years the missionaries will hear from this seed that is being quietly sown by the representatives as they are showing the visitors over the grounds. The question that is asked most is: "What is the difference between you and the Utah Mormons?" This opens the way for the guide, and in a nice, quiet way they are told of the latter-day apostasy, and of the court decisions in our favor. Then in many cases we notice a different feeling, and they regard us with a better feeling and say: "I am glad I found that out for I always supposed you were all the same, or that you were a branch of the Utah people who did not practice polygamy." Over eight hundred visitors have visited this place and are on record since May 24, 1918. Many Utah elders visit here, and sometimes we have discussions with them, just in a good friendly way, but as the prophet said, "They will not hear good when good cometh," yet they have been warned.

Brother Layton has made many improvements on the grounds, in the way of removing the old stumps, and cleaning up and burning the brush, etc. As a result the old, neglected places have become places of beauty. Many of the visitors express themselves as pleased with the improvements, and some say: "My! how I would like to live in one of these dear old houses." Brother and Sister Layton live in the Mansion House and we live in the Nauvoo House. The women folks are planting flowers and making things look very homelike. We expect many visitors this summer as we will have a reunion at Montrose, Iowa, just across the river, and many will desire to see the property, and visit Nauvoo. Dear readers, if any of you are passing this way, stop off at Montrose and cross the river and pay us a visit.

Dear Saints, we want you to read the church history and become posted on the doings of the early church. It will be a help to you, and you will become better acquainted with the prophet and his work, and it will cause you to love your church better. You will be a better person, for you will try to follow more closely the teachings, and you will be better able to defend yourself when attacked. Many, many of our people are not acquainted with the church, and I would advise such to purchase the Young People's History, and have it before their children. Read it, and encourage them to read it, and they will be more interested in the church, and more able to defend it.

I am in the field most of the time in the vicinity of Nauvoo, and am enjoying my work fine. Brother and Sister Layton and Sister Burton are kept quite busy showing visitors around and telling them the gospel story. Sometimes they come in the forenoon on wash day, yet they are always glad to stop their work and entertain them.

Yours in the gospel, P. R. BURTON.

HAMILTON, MISSOURI, March 30, 1919.

Editors Herald: I certainly sympathize with those who are isolated from church privileges, who have not the opportunity of association with the Saints of God.

We have a very nice country church and a goodly number of earnest workers here in the Oakdale Branch, near Hamilton, Missouri, of the Far West Stake.

We are enjoying God's blessings, and are made glad to see his children who have the "moving Zionward desire," locating with us.

There is much we young people can do, and we should grasp every opportunity.

We have an enrollment of eighty-five in Sunday school, with a home department enrollment of eighteen, and cradle roll, twelve. Our Sunday school went "over the top" with our Christmas offering. We hope to do better this year.

Two of our young men who were in the United States service have returned—Guy G. Hawley, who was in Camp Bowie, Texas, and Brother Frank Hershey, who was at Great Lakes, Illinois. The latter is now working in Kansas City.

NINA HAWLEY.

FLAT TOP, COLORADO, March 31, 1919.

Editors Herald: Seeing no word regarding our conference held in Denver, will say that we had a good, spiritual conference with splendid attendance.

All the branches in the district reported, and reported conditions as a rule very good. All the missionaries were there, except one, E. F. Robertson, who was prevented by other demands from attending. We were also much pleased to have with us Patriarch F. A. Smith, who assisted by his timely counsel and spiritual teaching; also Patriarch James Davis.

The auxiliaries held profitable sessions, and all seemed working for the general good.

Preaching during conference was by James Davis, F. A. Smith, and O. E. Sade.

The next conference will be at Fort Collins, the last of August, preceded by a reunion. A good attendance is expected and hoped for.

In bonds,

J. R. SUTTON.

ALL MODERN HOMES HAVE BOOKS

All Latter Day Saint homes should contain the History of the Church in four large volumes, for the adults and the students. $2 per volume in cloth.

And the Young People's History in two volumes, by Vida E. Smith. $1 per volume in cloth. The second volume is just off the press, and is a gem. Order now, in time for the long evenings.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, March 31, 1919.

Editors Herald: As it has been a long time since there has been any news from Detroit Branch No. 4 in your columns, I thought perhaps a short letter could be accepted. We have our "ups and downs," the same as any other branch.

We have suffered as a branch from this dread disease that is raging through the land. Two of Brother George Lakin's family were compelled to have their lungs tapped to relieve them. They are both progressing nicely now.

Our Brother James McKay, the deacon in charge, was called to his eternal home by this dread disease. It was a severe loss to us, for though he had not lived among us as long as others, we had all learned to love and respect him. He was an unassuming servant of God, but so dependable.

The Relief and Service department are being wonderfully blessed in their efforts. We try to keep in touch with the sick members and report our labors to the priesthood. We are making an effort to get a church home, as our present location is not desirable. It surely "cheers the heart along the way" when we can see the progress the church is making.

I feel thankful indeed to see that the men called into the different offices of the church are such capable, businesslike men. May they be blessed with wisdom and meekness.

Your sister in the faith,

NETTIE M. GAULT.

If you don't want to succeed, be a grouch. If you do want to succeed, don't be a grouch. You've got to make your choice and be one or the other. You can't be both. The action of the grouch upon one's chances for success are similar to the action of thunder upon milk—it sours them.—Exchange.

It is when I let my life go out in love and goodness to my fellow men that the life of Jesus and the possibilities of my own nature are revealed to me as I never saw them before. In losing myself I find myself and something greater and better than myself.—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

consecrated to foreign mission work. Let them be brought together for education in the language, customs, history and government of the peoples to whom they are expected to go, and educated in the doctrines of the church. This educational work must needs be intensive, because of our delay in preparation.

MEMORIAL TO OUR SOLDIERS

To be in line with the trend of the times, we as a people should make consistent efforts towards the erection of some memorial to those of our number who have been sacrificed in the great world war. A fitting move would be to combine this demand with the demand for more buildings at Graceland College, and erect a building to the memory of the soldiers in which in future years will be carried on educational activities designed to prepare for the best citizenship. And the fund for such memorial should be generous.

SELECTION OF PRESIDENTS OF SEVENTY

There has grown up the custom of having selections and nominations to fill vacancies in the council of Presidents of Seventy made by the council itself. We are of the opinion that such selections and nominations should come to the General Conference from the First Presidency, after approval is had by the Quorum of Twelve and the Seventy.

THE HIGH COUNCIL

Because the present organization of the Standing High Council of the church permits it to do so, that council has held several sessions in the course of the year, and its work has covered a variety of aspects. Some important decisions have been reached by it with which the ministry particularly should acquaint themselves. Reference here is had to those published in the January issue of "One." In the one involving the question of trial of a general officer of the church, a decision has been reached on a question in dispute for many years, and on which it is doubtful a decision could have been reached without inspiration, and that such divine assistance was given the president of the council was a matter of keen satisfaction and pleasure to every member of the council, and doubtless to many others, though the Quorum of Twelve has called it in question.

AUDITOR AND ARCHITECT

Last conference the Presidency was authorized to appoint a church auditor or auditors. Acting on this authority, we appointed Brother R. B. Trowbridge, whose report will indicate his activity.

Acting also under authorization, we appointed Brother Henry C. Smith church architect and we are pleased to report that he has arranged to give all his time to the work of his office.

APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE

Some years ago, by one of those spasmodic bits of legislation not infrequently had, an appropriations committee was created. It is the Order of Bishops. To have the committee on appropriations composed only of those of one line of church activities is an error. This committee should be changed so as to include representatives of the spiritual activities.

OF THE WORK OF THE TWELVE

Stating our opinion of the relationship of the two quorums, my attitude is that (not touching the legislative functions of the two quorums) in the executive or administrative line the Twelve are in all respects subordinate to, and under the direction of, the Presidency, and this includes missionary as well as local work.

As a concomitant to that, there should be noninterference on the part of the Twelve with organized local work, only as they shall be sent under the direction of the Presidency to "regulate" according to the law and not in the distorted sense acted upon by some who have held the apostolic office.

As a concomitant of the preceding, there must be the development of a force of local officers, high priests, elders, and the Aaronic officers, adequate to carry on the local work when once organized, subject to the supervision of the Presidency and the "regulating" demanded by the unfortunate emergencies we seem unable to escape.

There should be intensified missionary work both in Zion and the regions round about, as well as in foreign fields. The Seventy must speed up in their specific work: and this cries aloud for a definite unified missionary policy towards the goal of which local as well as missionary forces may work.

I am opposed to the old system of dividing the world up into fields, each to be presided over by an apostle. This policy, pursued up to two years ago, has made of the Twelve a body of individualists, without a unified policy either in local or missionary work, and some of our present difficulties are due to this wrong system.

The work of the Twelve is immediately under the direction of the First Presidency, without field appointment as of old, to go as sent, by twos or threes or fours, into foreign and new domestic fields to open up and organize the work, and with frequent change and shifting, till out of their common experience in harmony with the First Presidency, a common unified missionary policy, domestic and foreign, can be developed—something the Quorum of Twelve has not now and has not had in my memory.

The Twelve must, therefore, hold themselves in readiness to do this class of work and make preparations therefor, and carry out this enlarged development of their work, that they may, wherever sent, because of the unified policy of work and theory represent more than their individual selves in their work.

There must be developed a definite foreign missionary policy, with adequate, systematic, scientific, and rational preparation (education) for its expansion. This for the present will include, as noted elsewhere, the immediate opening up of the Palestine mission and the preparation and education of young men and women for other missions next year and later.

This means that work shall at once begin on more adequate provision of literature in the languages of the countries to which workers shall be sent.

There should be an immediate establishment of a fund for the purchase of large tracts of land in the region round about needed for the establishment of Zion and in connection it is well to say there should be a closer supervision by the Presidency over the entire work of the General Bishopric.

There should be an expansion and extensior stewardships, spiritual as well as temporal.

The Zionie developments should be expedited by establishing the center place under the Presidency and Bishopric and by moving the principal place of business to Independence.

There should be erected soon an adequate assembly hall or conference building, and the General Conferences should be held only there.

There should be erected an office building in the near future adequate for general office work.

Graceland College should be expanded in buildings and work, and courses calculated to prepare men for the ministry should be established. And here it is well to lay emphasis on this, that I stand for broader mental culture among the membership, and especially among the ministry. It is time we forever drove from our midst the idea that God's glory lies not in intelligence, or that God cannot use an educated man. We should stand for mental, physical, and spiritual culture. Our salvation lies not in the cultivation of our emotional sides alone, but in the well-balanced culture of mind, body, and spirit. We should stand firmly for higher standards of education as a prerequisite for the work of the ministry.

There must be closer coordination of all the departments of the church, and that coordination can only be brought about by a closer executive supervision of their work by the Presidency. In the past there has been manifested a strong tendency towards independence of departments which has made for inefficiency.

There should be a great expansion of the work of the Sanitarium. The work of that institution is pitifully inadequate for our needs. It needs more buildings, better equipment, larger force of workers, so that community welfare work may be undertaken by it in the interests of health.

More attention must be given by the church to the needs of our young—in recreation, physical and spiritual development.

The work of the church is onward. The progress of the past few years has been encouraging. Another two years should see our membership pass the one-hundred-thousand mark. We should not be satisfied that the debt should be wiped out, but another two years should see a half million dollars in the land-purchase fund, and a goodly start toward the temple fund.

Before us lies a great field of opportunity. Are we ready? Have we the courage to approach our ideals, shall we remain below them?

In the passing from the individualism of the past regime to the cooperation of group activity or socialism of the present, there must be developed a solidarity which arises only from loyalty to the institution and its corps of officers. Centralization of large powers in execution or administration is necessary, but the rights of the people are adequately guarded by the law of common consent, which is the consent of the governed. Unless this solidarity is developed, unless such large powers in administration are given, and unless our society is bonded by such loyalty, our progress is bound to be slow, if any is made at all. We have a great plan of social righteousness, but its establishment demands what we have just mentioned. Have we the courage of our convictions?

F. M. SMITH.

The Secretary of the Twelve then submitted a report of certain matters to the consideration of the conference. After their report had been read, J. W. Wight moved that on account of the importance of the question that a general assembly of the church be called by the Presidency to meet at such time and place as may be deemed proper.

A substitute was at once submitted that the matter be referred to a joint council of the Presidency, Twelve, and seventies. Discussion of these motions continued at length until 5 p. m., whereupon the previous question was moved, and upon submission the substitute prevailed.

Announcements for the services of April 8, quorum meetings and special features were made. They will be set forth as they occur. After singing one verse of "How gentle God's commands," benediction was offered by Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith.

Immediately at the close of the business session, the various delegations were called together for organization, so as to be prepared to meet quickly and act if any necessity should arise.

The day might well be called the Woman's Auxiliary day of the conference, as the morning hours from 8 to 10 a. m. were devoted to their meetings, and the evening session at the church was also offered by them.

The evening meeting at the church was devoted to Woman's Auxiliary features. President Mrs. D. J. Krahl was in charge. The conference choir rendered two anthems, and Nelle Atkinson Kelley gave two vocal solos.

There were three speakers. Mrs. J. A. Gardner, of Independence, secretary of the society, spoke on "organized girlhood." Miss Grace Thompson, of Lamoni, used as a subject: "Temple Builders and Oriole Girls." Doctor F. M. McDowell, of Lamoni, spoke on the "Young people of the church." The attendance was good.

The preaching service at the Coliseum was by James E. Yates, to a full house, on "Building with untempered mortar." Elder Hubert Case is in charge of the Coliseum meetings.

TUESDAY, APRIL 8

The day is fair and offers no hindrance to the assembling of the Saints.

The choir again met in the early prayer service at 7 o'clock, an excellent spirit present in their meeting. They feel the necessity of consecration to their especial work, and have met this way for the last several conferences.

At 8 a. m. the Woman's Auxiliary met at the church. The program consisted of an address by Max Carmichael, superintendent of schools, Lamoni, on "Better homes through concerted action." A round table discussion on home and child welfare work, led by Mrs. Lena Graham, suggested for discussion the value of special child welfare meetings in your community; experiences and difficulties met by local organizations in child welfare work.

The meeting of the priesthood at the Coliseum was addressed by F. M. Smith, who dwelt especially on administration to the sick. A letter had been written to 67 representative men in all the leading quorums, asking them to express themselves on the length of the anointing prayer as related to the prayer of the one confirming. Answers were received from a goodly number and some of the most characteristic read to the audience. It was of especial value to the elders, and could but leave one listening convinced that the big thing is propriety, dignified simplicity without stiltedness is the end to be desired. Letters from S. A. Burgess, I. N. White, G. N. Briggs, A. B. Phillips, Edward Ing-ham, E. O. Clark and Charles Fry were read.

President Smith expressed a hope that it might be possible at some time in the near future to have a series of meetings at which the priesthood might meet and come to a unanimity on such details of our work, not hampered by the rush and stress of conference business, etc.

At 9 and 9.15 the various quorums went into session. The elders meet at the Mite Society Building, with C. I. Carpenter in charge. The high priests meet at the Methodist Church, J. A. Tanner president. The seventies are beginning to meet in separate quorum sessions, there being three quorums, First, Second, and Third. The meeting place of the seventies is at the Odd Fellow's Hall.

The Order of Bishops meet as usual at the general church library at the Herald Building.

The prayer meeting at 9 to 10.15 at the church was in charge of J. M. Terry and W. A. McDowell. It was reported as an excellent meeting, soothing the disturbed feelings of many Saints.

At 10.30 the scheduled meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary opened in the upper auditorium at the church.

The first speaker was Mrs. Mabel Knipschild Smith of Independence, Missouri. Her subject was, "Social service work," being a broad presentation of a most important subject. The experiences of some of the most eminent workers in this line were related and shown in their relation to our work in social welfare work.

All who have gone into this subject realize that there must be great wisdom shown in helping the needy, that it may be done justly. How they may the better help themselves is the great problem not only of the world but of the church. Help them out of their poverty and not in it, is the keynote of the situation, the speaker told us. This must be the ideal of all workers, whether it be the Auxiliary, Bishopric, deacons, relief societies—or better still, a combination of all these.

It was interesting to note that not only the poor, but sometimes the wealthy as well, need the advantage of social work. When intelligently done, it is as possible to reach the heart of a poor wealthy person as to make a poor person rich in gratitude.

These great needs were said to be dominant in our social needs:

- Social work.
- Relief.
- Medical.

Educational.

Page 24 of the Supplement was read from by Sister Krahl, showing the statement of the Auxiliary on the subject.

These books were used by the speaker and there was a demand for the names and addresses of publishers. We are glad to pass them on to our readers: The Good Neighbor in the Modern City, by Mary E. Richmond, J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia; The Normal Life, by Edward T. Devine, Douglas C. McMurtrie, New York; Social Diagnosis, by Mary E. Richmond, Russel Sage Foundation, 130 East 22d Street, New York City; What Social Workers Should Know About Their Own Communities, Russell Sage Foundation.

The next speaker was Mrs. J. A. Gardner, who used the thirteen of the 35 home and child welfare panels which are sent to reunions and general gatherings by the general officers. An excellent booklet accompanies the set, from which the speaker read extensively. All who saw and heard these could but wish they might be presented in their own communities that all might have the valuable information so nicely presented.

The following outlines are not complete, but fairly represent the character of the panels, which were profusely illustrated in colors:

HOW TO EAT

Nature attends to every process of nutrition except two: choosing and chewing our food.

Habits of eating formed in childhood continue throughout life.

WHAT TO EAT

These supply building materials: Milk, eggs, meat, cheese, oatmeal, wheat products, dried peas, spinach, lentils, beans, and nuts.

These grow energy: Milk, cream, fruits, olive oil, vegetable oils, figs, cereals, potatoes, rice, green vegetables, cornmeal, pears, bananas, macaroni, vegetables.

When milk is old or dirty, tiny invisible plants called bacteria grow rapidly in it.

Pasteurize your own milk.

WHAT NOT TO EAT

Fried foods overtax the stomach. So also do: pickles, pastry, highly seasoned foods, too much meat, unripe fruit, coffee, beer, tea.

SWEETS

Constant indulgence in sweets impairs appetite, ruins digestion, decays the teeth.

Ideal sweets: Raisins, figs, dates, maple sugar, pure honey, sweet fruits, sugar cane.

CARE OF THE EYES

Only one pair of eyes—they must last a lifetime.

Avoid facing the light, reading in the twilight, reading when lying on the back, using the "common towel."

CARE OF THE FEET

From earliest infancy nature should be given a chance. Do the child's feet have to fit shoes, or do shoes fit feet?

HEALTH AND THE COMMONWEALTH

Cooperation of the home and the school. Schools should teach hygiene, have regular health inspection, physical training, etc.

Homes should clothe children properly, keep children clean, afford proper nourishment and sufficient sleep.

COMMUNICABLE DISEASES

No need to force children to run the unnecessary gauntlet of measles, mumps, scarlet fever, diphtheria, etc.

Epidemic is a disgrace to a community.

Regular and thorough examination is a necessary disease preventive.

CARE OF THE TEETH

Carefully preserve the baby teeth, they lay the foundation for future molars.

CORRECT BREATHING

A child cannot breathe properly if the nasal passages are obstructed.

With adenoids—breathing becomes difficult, the expression vacant, the hearing dulled, the comprehension slow, the growth stunted. To breathe properly breathe through nose, and use both chest and diaphragm.

MODERN HEALTH METHODS

Essentials: Dental clinic, school nurse, playground. Prevention is better than cure.

CHURCH RECORDER

To the First Presidency and General Conference of 1919, Lamoni, Iowa: We are pleased to submit herewith a tabulated statement of the membership statistics as shown by the reports of branches which have come to us during the year 1918.

Attention is invited to the following items: The total of 1917 was 86,260, to which has been added by baptism 5,195, by transfers received 4,443, and from which has been deducted as losses by transfers issued 4,090, expulsion 118, deaths 865, leaving a net gain of 4,565, and making a present number of 90,825. This shows the largest number of baptisms for any one year since 1890, the next largest being in 1916 when there were 4,907; and the largest net gain during the same period was 1917, when there was a net gain of 4,668.

There have been during the year 554 ordinations, 801 marriages, 1,411 children blessed, and the reports show 36,551 absentees; 5,815 hold the priesthood; of these one third are of the Melchisedec order, one third hold the office of priest of the Aaronic order, and one third are teachers and deacons.

Of the 5,195 baptized 2,275 or 43.8 per cent were males, and 2,920 or 56.2 per cent were females; 2,078 or 40 per cent were under fifteen years of age; 4.6 per cent of our entire membership transferred from one branch to another.

For the purpose of comparison we submit the following figures covering the ten-year period from 1910-1919, a five-year period from 1915 to 1919, and a one-year period for 1918. By reducing these items to a percentage basis a more accurate idea of our progress is conveyed in this tabulation than can be obtained from the aggregate numbers as given in the annual reports.

During the past year Michigan leads the list in the number of baptisms having 981 which represents 10 per cent of their membership; Missouri is second with 884 which is 6 per cent;

PENNSYLVANIA: Pittsburgh District, Duboise, Lock Number 4, Punxutawney. WASHINGTON: Seattle and British Columbia District, Bellingham. WISCONSIN: Northern District, Rock Elm and Black River Falls; Southern District, Readstown; 35 in all.

Nothing has been received during the year from the Society Islands, we suppose on account of conditions incident to the influenza epidemic, nor from Germany or Palestine because of the war situation.

The quality of the work received from our district and branch secretaries is improving in most cases, a few however are still negligent. We hope to make still further improvement in this direction by a persistent campaign of education which we are prepared to launch during the coming year if permitted so to do.

Since our last report was submitted our office quarters have been changed from Lamoni, Iowa, to Independence, Missouri. Some delay and loss of time was necessitated by moving, including preparation of quarters and obtaining necessary equipment with which to handle our work. The influenza epidemic took its turn at our office force causing some loss of time here as well as in other activities. Considering all our handicaps, however, we are pleased with our year's work and are better prepared to handle the work of the coming year than we were at the beginning of the present.

Respectfully submitted,

C. I. CARPENTER,
Church Recorder.

GLEANINGS

On account of unusual conditions in the sudden rise of water in the city reservoir, the water in the mains for sometime has been very muddy. After some strenuous work and the establishment of a chemical filter, the city council was able to clear it up most satisfactorily by the evening of the 5th. Aluminum sulphite and sand is used and the results are most satisfactory. When the entire system is established the water will be fit for drinking if desired.

"How can you tell which of all these visitors are preachers?" asked one Lamomite of another.

"I cannot."

"Well, just watch that group on the corner there a moment. The preachers are all talking with their arms and hands and the nodding of heads. Can you tell now?"

"I can."

And so can anyone who observes.

Conference visitors found the Lamoni church considerably changed since the general meeting of two years ago. Two exits have been cut into the west end, so any who desire to go out of the building that way or come in, find it convenient to do so. The platform has been considerably enlarged so it will accommodate a large choir, an orchestra and a grand piano in addition to the organ.

The territory of the church is more nearly reported up to date this year than has been for years before at this time of the year, but few points being on the delinquent list. ## PRAYER BY ELBERT A. SMITH

OFFERED AT THE OPENING OF CONFERENCE, APRIL 7

We look to thee, Almighty God of love, believing that we are still the recipients of thy blessing and that the church is still the object of thy love and direction. So we come to thee with a feeling of assurance and confidence that we will be directed by thy Holy Spirit.

We present before thee this waiting assemblage that shortly will constitute the conference of thy people, and we pray that as it shall be organized and as we shall move forward upon the business that may come before us, that we may do so continuously under the direction of thy Holy Spirit.

We feel that it is an eventful moment and a time that should challenge our prayerful attention—if we have forebodings we pray that they may vanish away, as presently we shall see unfolded before us the revelation of thy will and its accomplishment. Wilt thou so direct us, we pray, that we may so deport ourselves in faith and without feelings of partisanship that we may judge carefully all that shall come before us for our consideration.

Bless, we pray, the delegates and the ministry, all those who are burdened with the responsibility of deciding the questions that come before them; may they do so carefully, feeling that they are representing the church and are seeking to safeguard her interests.

Be with us now, we pray, and in every session of this conference, of whatever nature, may we be blessed of thee.

In Jesus' name, Amen.

WHAT IS LOYALTY?

Contrary to the expectation of some, loyalty is closely related to legality and the law. One who is faithful to the law is loyal, as well as one who upholds the lawful authority. The term also includes truth between individuals to whom is due fidelity, as from one friend to another or between lovers.

Some are inclined to object very strongly to the idea of personal loyalty, urging one should be loyal only to the truth. In part this objection is justified. Confidence begets confidence. Loyalty begets loyalty. And while it may be used as properly as that fidelity or allegiance due a superior, it may also be used between equals. Within the church there is no such loyalty as that due to a prince, though there is a sense in which there is due a loyalty to the superior officers, to those on whom is laid the burden of the work. But this is not so much personal as it is official; nor does it mean that to a few men should be given the absolute right to dictate all action, and that all others, through the principle of loyalty must support everything which is submitted. The right of common consent forbids this, nor do we know of anyone who asks otherwise.

Loyalty to the church, leaving out all individuals and personal elements, requires that a man entering a new field shall not attempt to tear down the work of his predecessor, and by inuendoes, suggestions, or direct statements, destroy confidence in the work already done. It means also that no man sent out to represent the church should make it his primary purpose to misrepresent and destroy right confidence in the constituted officers of the church.

It requires truth, and truth includes—not merely the collection of a number of isolated incidents, each of which may apparently be true in and of themselves, and yet which may be neither singly or collectively true in the sense and manner in which they are presented.

To ascertain the truth of anything that is said or done, it is not enough merely to find the exact words, or to state the exact form of action. The surrounding circumstances—the setting, is essential if the truth would be known. Yet this fact is continually ignored, and time and again an answer given to meet a particular condition, is extended to meet very dissimilar conditions and in a way to prove injurious. Circumstances must be considered and every fact in its right setting.

Further than this, individual character must be given consideration. When this is done, and we really know the man, we then know that certain constructions, which before seemed impossible, have become not only improbable but impossible, until as clear as light there comes out the only true and right explanation.

We have many times in case of difficulty resorted to this, and have tried to consider as far as we could the possible surroundings, but above all to consider the individual affected, and it seems almost invariably when the individual character is considered, the solution is at once shown. The Master has said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." There is no longer darkness, there is no longer doubt, but there is certainty without further necessity for verification.

Loyalty to the truth requires that individual character should be given its due weight and consideration.

There never has walked this earth, a man of whom it was not possible, if one sat down to consider all of his acts, but that one could find something objectionable, providing that is what he is looking for. A man, by his own imagination, makes actions the most innocent become quite the reverse. It is written even of our divine Master, that they accused him of being in league with Beelzebub. When one sets out to make a case, quite an accumulation, apparently, sometimes can be found and viewing these alone, the record may appear a dark grey if not quite black.

The Master also spoke of this condition of those who would cast out a mote from their brother's eye, but who consider not the beam in their own eye. In such incidents, those so asserting will affirm their truth, but this is not correct, nor a true picture, for they have disregarded all of the right action, and have disregarded character and have given only a perverted view. Hence the result is false.

Yet it is still true, that some thinking to establish such a case may in all seeming innocence assert the truthfulness of their imaginations.

We want and need men loyal to the truth. That means not only the truth laid down in the word of God (it does mean that), but it also means truth in a broad personal sense. It requires loyalty to individuals.

We need men loyal to the church whose effort is to build up the church, not to tear down. This will require the loyal support of their coworkers. If there is cause for offense, it means that we will not attempt to try the case in each locality where we go, but will bring it before the proper tribunal or body. It means, if we think we have cause for offense, there is still the proper time and method of procedure. Friends do not consider it a burden to be loyal one to another, but rather a rare privilege.

Loyalty to Christ means loyalty to our brother, loyalty to the church, loyalty to one another, loyalty to the truth demands justice, mercy, and loyalty to the men on whom rests the burden of the work as well as to our friends and to each other.

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF A DELEGATE

A delegate to General Conference is elected on a basis of one to each hundred members. In other words, from every hundred members of a district or stake one is chosen to represent the number by his vote at the general meetings of the church.

An ex officio is a member of the Melchisedec priesthood, he having a seat, voice, and vote in the assembly.

Ordinarily there is no difference in the voting strength of a delegate or an ex officio—each person has one vote on matters before the body. Questions of considerable importance are decided in this way, and the responsibility of deciding correctly is a heavy one.

But there is something that we would bring again to the attention of not only delegates to this conference, but to those who have elected them, as well as those who may be personally concerned in the future.

Occasionally some question arises which is considered so important that a yea and nay vote is called for. Then the complexion of the situation is entirely changed. The ex officio with no delegate rights continues to vote for himself as a representative of the church, but a delegate votes for a hundred members, he being but one of that number.

Perhaps it is generally known that if five members of the assembly call for a yea and nay vote just prior to the vote being taken, it must be acceded to and the chairman announces that the delegations shall assemble and render their decision and vote.

This is followed by a breaking up of the general meeting and a resolving into groups from the stakes and districts represented. Ordinarily this should be a simple procedure, for with proper organization a chairman of the delegation has already been chosen, as well as secretary, and if the question needs further elucidation it can be had. That is, it is usually so; but there have been occasions when this was not possible. We call to mind such a vote being called a few years ago over a motion to lay some question on the table. The chairman took care very properly to instruct the delegates that since the vote was on the question of lying on the table, it was not subject to debate, hence the delegations could not discuss but only record their votes.

So it will be seen that complications easily arise. In fact they are more apt to than not. Seldom is an important issue raised which is so clearly defined and free from faults that it can be easily decided. One may favor the proposal but be opposed to some amendment involved. Another may favor a substitute offered but be unwilling to vote for it finally because it is sure to be affected by an unpopular amendment.

Every legislative body must grapple with such problems and oftentimes be condemned for its inability to strip apparent nonessentials and arrive at a clear-cut decision. So long as humanity is human this will continue to be a problem.

So we say that the responsibility of a delegate is a serious one. It is not sufficient that he or she keep track of some one person in the audience and vote as he does, thinking his judgment must be better than some one else's. The views of the one had in mind may be wrong. We must stand on our own feet, held firmly there by the strong hand of God who supports us by the light of his Holy Spirit. And this is obtained through intelligent and devout prayer.

No matter how we look at it, the responsibility cannot be evaded. If one does not vote, he is making a colossal blunder. If one has no opinion he is not fit to be a delegate. To vote right, according to one's best conception of right is the duty of every person. To do that is no sinecure. The very life and progress of the work may depend on our vote. If the decision is close and we find our vote was sufficient to have turned the scales either way, how many years of remorse we shall have if we in our retrospections conclude that we did not go deeply enough!

If we could deeply impress every delegate with the sacred responsibility of being open to conviction at all times, yet exerting every ounce of one's intelligence to decide as we think our friends at home who elected us would have voted, it would be sufficient. Of course our words cannot do that, but we do trust that in the discharge of this responsibility we may have the divine power of God to enlighten our minds.

THE BISHOPRIC

One of the splendid features before this conference is the report by the Presiding Bishop of a total indebtedness March 24, 1919, of only $76,043.33. There is in his hands and in the hands of other bishops and agents the sum of $79,430.24 in cash. This means that the debt is paid or can be and will be paid as rapidly as those holding obligations will permit.

Going back over the past records, we note in the report to the conference of 1917, the statement that from May 1 to December 31, 1916, $21,157.10 had been paid on the church debt, leaving a balance due by the general church of nearly $225,000, or indebtedness of the church and its institutions, including Board of Publication, Graceland College, and the Sanitarium, of about $370,000. A start only had been made in 1916.

The report, however, to the conference of 1918 showed, during 1917, $104,688.17 had been paid, leaving a balance due by the church and its various institutions of $266,886.90 to December 31, 1917.

The present report shows that during 1918 the tithes and offerings, and consecration receipts outside of Christmas offering, had exceeded the 1917 contributions by $61,714.37. The previous year had shown a gain of 50 per cent increase.

The previous year had shown a Christmas offering of $75,000, while 1918 returned nearly $91,000 Christmas offering. The result is that by December 31, 1918, the church indebtedness, including that of its institution, had been reduced to $159,686.19. A little over $83,000 has been paid since.

Stating it in a different way from these figures, the debt of the church and its various institutions and departments May 1, 1916, was over $392,000, and that there was then cash on hand with the Presiding Bishop and agents, a total of about $26,500, a net indebtedness over cash on hand of over $366,000.

That March 24, 1919, there remained an indebtedness of a little over $76,000, with over $79,000 cash on hand and in the hands of agents.

This splendid result accomplished in less than three years is what has been secured by the policy of the Presiding Bishopric, supported by the Order of Bishops, that no expenditure which could reasonably be avoided should be made until the debt of the church had first been paid; in particular, that no building be erected until the debts first be paid.

But it is also because there was an increase of about 50 per cent in receipts of tithes, offerings, and consecrations, in 1917, over 1916; and a further increase of over $61,000 for the last year. And the Christmas offering has greatly assisted.

In a report of the Bishop to the conference two years ago, the statement is made that present worth has been reduced over $45,000 because of items charged off to profit and loss. It shows a statement of available assets of $517,405.97.

This year a decided change is made by the listing of houses of worship amounting to $1,267,482.66. This is a decided increase from the invoice reported in 1908 at which time our houses of worship were listed at about $676,724.05. Excluding this item, there remains a balance of $1,061,900 assets of the church.

We note an increase for the two years in other assets, accounts receivable over $22,000; bills receivable nearly $100,000; cash in hands of bishops and agents and the hands of the Presiding Bishop $51,000; the Holden Home over $18,000, and Liberty Home over $6,000; Independence Sanitarium about $12,000 when we take into consideration the fact that part of the assets listed two years ago was $12,000 due from the Sanitarium to the church.

Real estate and real estate contracts show an increase of $62,000. Graceland College is also added to the assets listed two years ago, giving total assets of about $89,000, which means no substantial increase for the college for the last several years. The college has been working very closely to avoid additional expense, while the debts were being paid.

Assets of the HERALD and Ensign are not listed two years ago, and are now about $198,000 to the total listed assets.

Total increase in assets other than houses of worship, $540,000, or deducting assets of Graceland College and of the Board of Publication as they were not included two years ago, an increase of over $200,000.

In round numbers this year, the present worth is over $2,100,000, or exclusive of houses of worship, $873,000; and two years ago the present worth, including that of the college and Board of Publication, was about $447,000.

PASSING OF A PIONEER

In the passing of Patriarch William Lewis at Saint Joseph, Missouri, on March 29, the church has lost one more of its faithful men of the old guard. He united with the church when but seventeen years of age and was ordained an elder the following year. For a number of years he served as president of the Far West District and pastor of the Saint Joseph Branch.

He has made two missionary trips to Wales, the place of his birth, and has also labored in Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Manitoba, Canada, and in New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Illinois, Kansas, Iowa, and Missouri.

His wholesome counsel, optimistic outlook, and abiding faithfulness have been the means of spiritual benefit to thousands among us. The church has lost one more of its most faithful workers who served faithfully to the end.

RECORDER'S REPORT

It is of interest to note that less than one in fifteen of the church membership hold the priesthood. Of these, only one third hold the Melchisedec priesthood. In other words about two per cent hold the eldership; about two per cent are priests after the order of Aaron, and about two per cent are teachers and deacons. Apparently about one in five of the Melchisedec priesthood have been ordained to special office, as to the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, seventies, evangelical ministers, bishops, and other high priests, or less than four hundred men.

It may be noted from this that priesthood meetings will not fully provide for the men of the church.

The record for baptism is decidedly encouraging. The baptism of children under fifteen years of age would appear to intimate that the larger per cent of children of this age are being baptized. The church should at least hold its own children, and the reports for the past few years would seem to indicate that the percentage baptized is near what it should be.

In addition to this it is of much interest that sixty per cent of the baptisms are of those past fifteen years of age, showing that as a missionary organization the church is making good.

There still remains the perennial question of scattered members. Much is being done and plans laid to correct this under the direction of Elder F. A. Smith, the Presiding Patriarch.

The largest net gain was made in the year 1916, and reported to the conference of 1917. In the conference report for that year the net gain was given as 4,638. At the conference of 1916, there was reported 4,907 baptisms for 1915. This is the largest number of baptisms until the past year.

A PEN AND INK CLUB

The assistant historian says a "pen and ink club" is in process of organization to prepare writers and authors for our church publications. We welcome any such effort, for there are always many among us with sufficient knowledge and fair imagination but who lack technique. Till we can have a full-fledged school of journalism with extensive curriculum, we may well devote some attention to such a localized effort or efforts leading to a better equipped corps of writers.

For instance, if we could get a few hundred writers to understand the importance of sending in manuscripts double-spaced, who know the value of intelligent paragraphing, the simple rules of quotations and the limitations of paraphrasing, it would be a boon to all who had to do with the final work and favorably react on the character of the work appearing in the periodicals.

Of course we hope the proposed club will do much more, but if nothing else were attained, it would be worth while.

Success to the whole family of pen and ink clubs.

The recreational hall in Lamoni, rented and equipped because of the initiative of a large class of young men in the Religio, is an interesting place. The boys go there one evening a week at present, and thoroughly enjoy themselves at basket ball, punching bag, boxing, etc.

The membership fee is a dollar a year, and it is intended to gradually increase the equipment and time of opening until it can be open all the time and be under continuous supervision. F. M. McDowell, president of the local Religio, has charge of the venture, which is a real success. It is said the boys who patronize the affair most enthusiastically are the most regular in attendance at the prayer meetings.

All members of the conference this year are wearing a button badge, about an inch in diameter instead of the customary printed ribbon. On the button is a replica of the church seal with the additional words: "Gen'l Conference 1919." Delegates have white buttons, ex officios have blue, and press and conference employees pink. No one is allowed on the main floor without a button, except the few remaining rear seats after 2.15 p. m. Woman's Auxiliary members wear a little card reading: "The Woman's Auxiliary General Convention, Lamoni, Iowa, 1919."

The Graceland service flag shows 136 stars; eight of them are gold stars as follows: Myron Morgan, Allen Trachsel, True Myers, Beryl Crook, Towner Bohn, Bernard McNamara, H. V. Grenawalt, and Miss Hortense Wynn.

Elder Rushton states that he has records of 1,093 names for the service flag of the church, and from the whole church 37 casualties. The names of these who have paid this great sacrifice have been listed from time to time in "service notes" in the HERALD and Ensign.

Autumn Leaves for April is late, being made so by the unavoidable congestion from pre-conference and conference work. They are almost ready for mailing, and no doubt will soon be in the hands of the readers. It is an excellent number.

Adjectives are a nuisance, so we have decided to eschew them. For instance, when we say Sister Blank rendered a beautiful vocal solo and Sister Jones did the same to an indifferent one, it might be illuminatingly true but nevertheless trying. We wary editors become more and more chary of descriptive adjective for, frankly, we are constantly afraid we'll pick up the wrong one and not do justice to the occasion. But the superlative adjectives such as best, finest, worthiest, might well apply to many of the things we are permitted to see at General Conference time.

"Our local band proved that they are prepared for most any emergency last Saturday evening when it was suggested to them that some form of entertainment should be provided for the large crowd of people upon our streets with apparently nothing to do. In a half-hour's time the boys were on the job with a pleasing program which seemed to be thoroughly enjoyed by everyone. Good work, boys, your efforts are appreciated.—Lamoni Chronicle.

B. R. McGuire, speaking in the upper auditorium at the 9.30 Sunday school service, made special reference to the Christmas offering. He stated that objection had been made that the Christmas offering was and would divert funds from the proper tithes and offerings. But this has not proven to be the case. For 1917, there was an increase of about 50 per cent in tithes, offerings, and consecrations; for 1918, there was an increase over 1917 of over $60,000.

"God grant that the time shall never come when a person shall be cut off from the church for stubbornness, for if that prevail every mother's son of us will be out in six months."—F. J. Ebeling.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE

APRIL 8
2 P. M.

The meeting at this time was opened by singing No. 34 in the Hymnal, Frederick M. Smith in the chair. The prayer was by Frederick A. Smith.

The minutes of the meeting were read, beginning on Sunday morning, April 6, and bringing them to date. It is surprising how many public meetings are held during twenty-four hours. Almost every hour there are meetings, and usually there are several being held simultaneously.

At 2.15 the seats on the main floor not occupied by delegates or ex officios are given over to visitors not members of the conference.

Following the reading of the minutes, as a matter of personal privilege J. W. Rushton offered the following resolution:

That this assembly in General Conference extend to Brother Heman C. Smith and his family our deepest sympathy in his sickness, and humbly pray that God may hear our prayer, and speedily restore him to his family and to his work.

This prevailed unanimously and the secretaries were ordered to send the message by telegram to the brother and family.

The credentials committee made an additional report, of no interest to our readers but of vital importance to those concerned, since seating and voting are prime essentials in an assembly so large as a General Conference.

The reports to conference, totaling 131 pages, which had been printed and given each delegate and ex officio, were taken up and spread on the minutes subject to further action. The reports from Church Secretary, Recorder, and Historian were received in due motion and vote.

Report of the Presiding Bishop, previously printed in the HERALD, was received.

Report of Graceland College, by its president, G. N. Briggs, and the treasurer, J. A. Gunsolley, was received.

Reports of the Board of Publication, Independence Sanitarium Trustees, committee on Bible normal work, committee on teachers' edition of the Inspired Translation, on Book of Mormon concordance, of Gospel Literature Commission, Social Purity Board, United Order of Enoch, committee on Book of Rules, committee on memorial to Martyrs, trustees of Children's Home, Saints' Home committee, Church Auditor, committee on Church of Christ, committee on Holden Home, were received in order. These reports will probably all appear in the DAILY HERALD.

The chairman read a letter from the Anti-Saloon League of Iowa, with headquarters at Des Moines, acknowledging support of our people and suggesting that he asked our aid in keeping three per cent beer out of Iowa.

A resolution was presented providing proper places for official representatives of the press and excluding others. This was adopted.

The evangelical order was reported by F. A. Smith, Presiding Patriarch, and Hyrum O. Smith, secretary.

Treasurer of the Library Commission, James F. Keir, reported $174.80 received and $76.80 on hand.

The Presidency recommended the appointment of C. I. Carpenter, R. S. Salyards, O. W. Newton, and D. J. Krahl as a committee on boundary lines, and they were indorsed.

The Englewood Branch presented a petition that they be joined to Independence Stake as they were so close to that place and not conveniently near Kansas City. It was referred to committee on boundary lines.

Wheeling District petitioned the conference to define jurisdiction of branches in matters of missionary work, baptisms, etc., matters hitherto subject to much debate. It was moved to refer to First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve for consideration and report. It was so referred.

A petition from Wellsburg, West Virginia, Branch of the Youngstown-Sharon District, asking to be included in the Wheeling District was referred to committee on boundaries.

Southern Nebraska desired to have three counties cut off from their district and added to Eastern Colorado District. This was also referred to the boundaries committee.

Holden Stake also asked that Moniteau and Cole Counties be added to that stake. It was referred to the committee on boundaries.

A document from a joint meeting of the Twelve and seventies regarding their opinion on a report of the Twelve was read.

It was sought to lay this on the table, since the action of yesterday had provided for its disposal. This was denied by vote.

It was moved to refer to the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy.

The chair was asked to rule as to whether a motion would be in order to refer to the Twelve and Seventy the matter before the house. He said the motion was in order. Appeal was taken but the chair was sustained.

After considerable discussion a substitute was offered that the document be referred to the Twelve and Seventy.

The final decision was to refer to First Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy.

Preaching announced at church for the evening service with Daniel Macgregor speaker, missionary choir furnishing the music.

At the Coliseum G. R. Kuykendall was to be speaker, with conference choir furnishing the music.

It was moved that those able to do so, fast from the morning and noonday meals to-morrow, April 9, and devote themselves to deep prayer for the needs of the church. The motion prevailed unanimously.

Adjournment was had at 4.55.

The preaching services at 7.45 were at the church and Coliseum as announced. Elder Daniel Macgregor was the speaker at the church, using a large chart to show the fulfillment of Bible prophecy.

Elder Glauud R. Kuykendall addressed the audience at the Coliseum down town on, "On this rock I will build my church." The attendance at both places was good.

From 8 to 10 p. m. the Lamoni Temple Builders held a reception at the high school building in honor of visiting young people. At this writing we are unable to give details, but hope to do so later. From the many young people seen going in that direction we would imagine the attendance was all that could be desired.

APRIL 9

This day began with copious showers following .75 inch of rain during the night. This affected most adversely the attendance at the early meetings.

The young people's prayer meeting at the church at 7 a. m. was reported by Brother Hoxie as being an excellent one.

At 8 a. m. upon the suggestion of President F. M. Smith, upon due motion the hour was spent in prayer. Many very fervent prayers were offered and one or two testimonies. President Smith closed the meeting at 8.58 with a very earnest and humble prayer for divine direction to the church.

The prayer meeting at nine was in charge of O. Salisbury and A. E. Stone. The attendance at the close was good, considering the inclemency of the weather.

RELIGIO CONVENTION

At 10 a. m. the Religio department convened in the upper auditorium of the church with G. S. Trowbridge in the chair, assisted by Vice Presidents T. W. Williams and F. M. McDowell. The opening prayer was by C. Edward Miller.

President Trowbridge remarked on the new situation under which the Religio department met at this time. Hitherto it has met as a separate organization, but this time as a department of the church during conference sessions.

He felt it was a forward step and was typical of the forward steps taken by the Religio in its work during the past year. He concluded his little preliminary speech with a poem—as usual.

The following committees were appointed:

Credentials: Donnie Lehman, Vernon Reese, Mrs. E. S. McNichols, E. C. Harrington.

Resolutions: F. F. Wipper, T. J. Elliot, C. Ed. Miller, Louise Evans, Ruby Jackson Hitch.

Notification: J. A. Gunsolley and J. W. Wight.

Press: R. J. Lambert, E. D. Moore, T. W. Williams, S. A. Burgess.

Appropriations: J. A. Becker, M. H. Siegfried, B. J. Scott.

A painfully tedious operation was the reading of the names of delegates of all the districts and stakes who reported too late to have the list published. In some cases late conventions make this necessary, but in many others it is simply carelessness and amounts to a real infliction on a convention to have to waste so much valuable time. We wish all delinquent secretaries could realize this as fully as a weary convention does.

The printed report of the president, which contained all those of the other officers, was spread on the minutes and attention called to the special items.

The secretary read some revised totals of statistics showing 362 locals compared with 326 last year; enrollment 14,365, nearly every district showing a decrease in membership; home department 1,800, though the secretary's figures do not agree with those reported to the home department superintendents.

There are 993 classes and 200 locals in unorganized territory, with an average attendance of 23.

The executives of the society were authorized to dispose of problem of handling the Religio pins hereafter.

A resolution prevailed to adopt the budget system for the Religio department districts, stakes, and locals.

It was suggested that those not understanding the budget system could get leaflet free from the treasurer, R. A. Lloyd, 5032 Devonshire Avenue, Saint Louis, Missouri.

The question was raised as to ex officio rights during convention. Some proposed that all members of the two priesthoods be allowed voice and vote, but on voting it was unanimously denied. However, general church appointees were given this right.

C. Edward Miller protested that the Quarterlies should be international in scope and that the text as well as date of issuance should be arranged to meet this need. T. W. Williams said he had difficulty in adapting the suggested programs to Canadian conditions, and confessed conversion to the fact that there are other places than the good old U. S. A.

These resolutions provoked considerable discussion of an interesting nature.

Moved it be the sense of this convention that the parties having charge of the preparation of the lessons and program be instructed to so arrange them that they will be applicable to the entire world.

Moved as an amendment that the publishing house send these Quarterlies out in time to reach all fields.

The editor of the senior Religio Quarterly (J. A. Gunsolley) wondered how many were using the suggested programs appearing in each number. He hoped they would be considered only as suggestive and not as final.

The chairman ruled that the revising committee should consider it their duty to change references to "this land," to make them more international in character, though this was informally objected to.

The amendment and resolution as amended prevailed. It was pointed out in the debate that this would necessitate earlier orders from all locals to be at all effective, even if it is possible to attend to the other.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY NOTES

Wednesday, April 9, at 8 a. m. Max Carmichael, superintendent of Lamoni public schools, talked in the lower auditorium to an assembly of the Woman's Auxiliary. The inclement weather and very early hour contributed doubtless to preventing a full attendance, which is to be regretted for Brother Carmichael's address was replete with practical suggestions. He claimed that while the responsibility for the welfare of the home should never be shifted to the community, it was still impossible to have the best homes without concerted action on the part of the various homemakers of the community. No one lives to himself alone, and no mother raises her child to herself. Influence is exerted by and upon every unit in the environment.

Brother Carmichael spoke of the early age at which a child should be impressed with his identity, with the home and the community. He emphasized the opportunity open to women to act in a concerted manner upon the problems which affect them. He urged them to join the various organizations in the world which are striving to improve conditions of the home and community. He suggested to them that they work through present existing organizations in seeking to correct conditions. He mentioned as such legislative bodies, schools, Boy Scouts, girls' clubs, social centers, Parent-Teacher Association, booster clubs, young mothers' clubs, courts and town councils. Among these he made some special distinctions, such as for correction of impure food conditions go after the town council, getting it to pass laws to screen provisions, inspect milk, analyze water, etc. For the improvement of sanitary conditions use booster clubs or Boy Scouts' organizations in popular clean-up campaigns. For improvement of school conditions get concerted action from Mothers' Clubs, advising with the teachers, or through the Parent-Teacher Association.

Wednesday morning, at its business session, the Auxiliary was notified that the First Presidency had no desire to suggest any change in the personnel of its executive so far as the president was concerned.

In harmony with this communication Sister Krahl was re-elected to the office of president.

The Bureau of Home and Child Welfare was commissioned with the task of devising a plan whereby the young mothers burdened with family cares and duties may be given opportunity to study for those responsibilities.

The Relief and Service Bureau was requested to make a survey of the homes of the church membership by means of the questionnaire method. A rough draft of such a questionnaire was presented by Sister Krahl to illustrate what was meant by "Standardized homes." This draft was received with such eagerness and pleasure that requests came from many quarters for copies at once, for distribution.

It was decided to "adopt" one or more French war orphans, the money to be raised by subscription at this convention. This was left with Sister Krahl and Sister Gardner to carry out. So all who notice this and desire to contribute to this good and worthy cause may see these sisters as per plan to be announced later.

2 P. M.

The opening of the meeting was preceded by rousing congregational singing in charge of F. G. Pitt.

No. 109 was the opening hymn, with President F. M. Smith in the chair. At this time one copy each of the President's message to the conference and of the report submitted by the Quorum of Twelve were distributed to the members of the conference in compliance with yesterday's action.

The opening prayer was by F. G. Pitt.

It was brought out in questions to the chairman that when alternates were chosen and no instructions given, the selection of delegates from that district was subject to the action of the delegates present. If instructed by appointing conference, the selection should be in accordance therewith.

A question of privilege was asked by President F. M. Smith and he said he wished in answer to many requests to explain his attitude regarding the reference of several matters to the joint council. The privilege was granted as no objection was made.

A petition from the Eastern and Western Montana Districts, changing boundary lines, was referred to boundary lines committee.

The joint council reported progress in discussing the matter referred to them and asked for further time.

Elbert A. Smith took the chair at this time.

A motion was made to recall the consideration of these matters from the council, and make it an item for the consideration of the conference.

The previous question was ordered and the vote resulted in a large majority in favor of taking it up as a conference.

It was made a special order of business for 2.15 on the 10th.

A brief from Kirtland District asked for an adjustment of a case of long standing in that district which had been taken to the High Council but which has since been under discussion by various members of the Presidency and Twelve and others.

It was moved to consider the matter. Carried.

It was moved to adopt the last paragraph which reads: "And if in your judgment the Temple Branch has acted contrary to law and usage governing church courts, their action be set aside and Melzine Russell be restored to full fellowship."

The discussion was led by F. J. Ebeling, the counsel in the case, who had presented the petition. He reviewed at considerable length the details of the case, speaking continuously for an hour. Others discussed it at length another half hour when the chair announced adjournment till the next business meeting.

Among the committees appointed was one on administration: J. M. Terry, F. G. Pitt, J. W. Metcalf, F. M. Weld, Edward Rannie, W. D. Bullard.

T. W. Williams offered the benediction.

SUNDAY SCHOOL AND RELIGIO

The problems meeting of the Sunday school and Religio met at 5 p. m. as the conference session ran late. It was developed that several questions had been sent in, many of them old, such as how to get members of Religio to attend and then to induce them to study. Another, How to get them to take part in the program, Is it advisable to hold meetings on Sunday evening? How library and literature workers are to report, etc.

F. M. McDowell urged that the Religio could not be simply another Sunday school, but must have different ideals and methods. This brought up the problem of holding the sessions on Sunday evenings as the recreational features might not seem appropriate on that evening.

T. W. Williams indorsed that idea and said that if the society functioned as it should it would reach the young as it should—something not attained at the present time.

George Gould, a scoutmaster at Independence, expressed the great need of giving the young people something to do which will arouse interest as nothing else can. Don't compel them to seek an opportunity to work—go out of the way if necessary to enlist their energies.

J. R. Lentell said we are often confronted with the problem of overcoming the opposition of those who believe there should be no activities in the church except preaching and prayer meetings. Make church a recreational center with the Religio definitely back of it, was his advice.

J. W. Gunsolley, temperance superintendent, advised the plentiful use of well-selected slides in stereopticon work. He mentioned holding a mock trial in which the features of an elders' court were well emphasized.

Mrs. J. C. Schwab pertinently asked why the Sunday school should so uniformly succeed with serious study and no recreation when the Religio with the same methods usually failed.

She was answered by several that the hour for holding Sunday school and the sentiment in its favor were the result of a century of tradition. There is no comparison between the two because of this. One prominent speaker hoped the time would come when there would be no formal lesson study in the Religio. Let the information be imparted in general lectures, program features, etc.

"The Religio is the only institution whose work is especially to meet the social and recreational needs of the church; hence we must not expect it to do the work of the church and Sunday school in spiritual needs," said F. M. McDowell, "and I have great difficulty in making people realize that when we specialize in that work it is not because we are minimizing the value of spirituality. We cannot leave spirituality out of our lives."

"We always had something new at the beginning of our meeting, and it greatly helped," said D. M. Hall, of Council Bluffs. "Vary your work so it won't get stale."

"Boiled potatoes in their jackets get most monotonous when dished up meal after meal," continued Harvey Sandy, of Kansas City, "so change your method of dishing up the Religio work—it will pay."

The meeting at the Coliseum was addressed by Elder E. Curtis, there being a good attendance and interest.

THURSDAY, APRIL 10

The day opened chilly and threatening and continued so the whole forenoon. Still this did not prevent full attendance at all services.

The meeting of the young people at 7 a. m. in prayer was as usual interesting and profitable.

The priesthood were addressed at 8 a. m. at the Coliseum by President F. M. Smith on the form to be used in confirming those baptized into the church. He had written some 67 representative men of the church, and gave a resume of their opinions, and read several letters.

From these and his suggestions the following were brought out—the prayer at confirmation should clearly induct the candidate into the church; it should state the right of the candidate to receive the Holy Spirit; it should distinctly confer the gift of the Holy Spirit; it should be very solemn and earnest.

The Elders' Quorum were addressed yesterday by Elder Walter W. Smith, president of the Independence Stake. His address was so much appreciated by the elders that they request that he prepare or arrange his lecture for publication.

This morning Elder John F. Garver, president of the Lamoni Stake, led out in the discussion of "Re ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." A new thought was presented by Elder Garver on this subject—that the men of God in reality bore vessels of peace and wholesome helpfulness and must often go to God in humble prayer that He may fill those vessels with a new message adequate to the occasion. Clean hearts, clean hands, clean bodies are prime essentials to clean thoughts and a pure effective message, was a leading thought of the speaker.

The Woman's Auxiliary had a meeting at 8 a. m. to discuss "The way by which the studies of psychology and sociology may be made applicable in the practical demonstration of our lives," and "Rural women and their educational needs." This program was in charge of Mrs. Dora Glines, supervisor of the educational bureau of the Woman's Auxiliary, and Miss Louise Evans, district organizer.

RELIGIO CONVENTION

The second session of the Religio in business session was held at 10 a. m. on the 10th, with President G. S. Trowbridge in charge.

The secretary read the minutes which included an omission in yesterday's items that E. D. Moore had been chosen assistant secretary, and Mrs. Anna Midgorden stenographer.

Ralph Gaylord rendered a cornet solo. Yesterday Mildred Redfield gave us a piano solo.

The resolutions committee favored the adoption of the following proposed amendments as offered to the convention:

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO CONSTITUTION

Section 4 of article 3, page 15, insert the following words immediately after the third word in the first line of the first paragraph: "Each officer shall report to the local at the close of each quarter, the work done by him and his committee." Then commence the subheadings, "President, Vice President, etc."

Section 4 of Article 3, page 15, under the subheading "Secretary" in the sixth line of the first paragraph insert immediately after the word officer, making it read as amended: "The secretary, in addition to the work usually done by this officer, shall immediately, following each election of officers, report to the district secretary the name and address of each newly elected officer, (placing the comma instead of a period and adding:) "and shall make such report to the district secretary as shall be asked of him from time to time." Then follows the remaining sentence in the paragraph.

Section 4 of Article 4, page 19, under the heading Withdrawals, after the thirteenth word add: "shall notify the secretary or one of the Lookout Committee so that his name may be taken from the records," and eliminating the remainder of that section or the last twenty-one words, making it read: "Any member desiring to remove and unite with another society or home class shall notify the secretary or one of the Lookout Committee so that his name may be taken from the records."

DONNIE LEHMAN,
E. D. MOORE.

Notice is hereby given that the following amendments to the constitution will be submitted to the General Convention of Zion's Religio-Literary Society, to be held in Lamoni, Iowa, during the month of April, 1919.

Article three, Section 1.—Organization. Strike out the words vice president and substitute therefor the following, "Two vice presidents."

In constitution of district: Article three, Section 1.—Organization. Strike out the words vice president and substitute therefor, "Two vice presidents."

In constitution of local societies: Article three, Section 2.—Organization. Strike out the words vice president and substitute therefor, "Two vice presidents."

EDWARD RANNIE.

The first two were adopted without change, but the third paragraph was changed by the simple adding "or stake" to make the paragraph plainer.

On consideration of the adding a provision for the election of two vice presidents the advisability of making one of them responsible for the boy movement in general, district, and local matters, was brought up. A motion gave T. W. Williams and F. M. McDowell the task of formulating resolutions to cover this proposal, so they retired for that purpose.

The Lamoni high school glee club gave us a vocal selection.

A question to the chair caused him to read from the constitution that anyone old enough to express such a desire may become members of the Religio, but all eight years of age or over may vote.

It was discovered that some people did not know that the Religio is issuing stories for small children. The first edition was free to introduce them, but the second selling at 3 cents each to pay for cost.

A resolution prevailed asking that the stories for children be printed at least another year.

The notification committee reported that the First Presidency desired no change in the presidency of the society, thus placing G. S. Trowbridge in nomination. He was elected unanimously as president.

A test was made as to use of term department instead of society, as used for years, and the vote was 35 to 56 against the change. So the name is Religio Society, though it is a department of the church.

As to president's expenses, a resolution prevailed instructing the appropriations committee that we favored the appropriation of all the funds necessary to free the hands of the president from detailed office work.

The general vice presidents suggested that instead of adding provision for two vice presidents the wording be "a first and second vice president."

Some further provisions were suggested but held over till the deferred business session of the convention, likely one of the first days of next week.

The business session at two p. m. opened with E. A. Smith in the chair.

After customary preliminary exercises the boundary lines committee reported and the report was adopted. The complete text is as follows. Those affected should carefully note the recommendations.

To the General Conference: We, your committee appointed to examine petitions covering boundary line changes, report as follows:

In harmony with petition from Southern Nebraska District, we recommend that the counties of Perkins, Chase, and Dundy in Nebraska be annexed to the Eastern Colorado District, subject to ratification by the Eastern Colorado District.

That request of Eastern and Western Montana Districts to change boundary in Chouteau County to longitude 111 be granted.

That the recommendation of the president of the Holden Stake to annex the counties of Moniteau and Cole to the Holden Stake be approved subject to the approval of the Holden Stake and Clinton District.

That the petition of the Wheeling District for the addition of Columbiana County, Ohio, to that district be granted.

We recommended that the petition of Englewood Branch that it be attached to the Independence Stake be referred to the authorities of the Kansas City and Independence Stakes for further consideration and report if advisable.

Respectfully submitted,

R. S. SALYARDS, Chairman,
O. W. NEWTON, Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, April 9, 1919.

At the request of President E. A. Smith, chairman, J. A. Tanner, president of the High Priests' Quorum, took the chair and presided till the close of the discussion.

Asking it as a personal privilege, President Elbert A. Smith made a statement concerning a rumor regarding his attitude toward the President of the church and the Quorum of Twelve. He had sought to be a personal friend to each individual concerned in the crisis before the church, and would continue to do so, but he decidedly approves the policies of the President, after prayer and careful consideration.

The Quorum of Twelve presented the following preambles and resolutions, and it was moved to adopt.

Whereas the present crisis confronting the church grows out of a difference of opinion between the First Presidency and the Quorum of Twelve touching the ministerial policy of the church; and

Whereas the policy of President Smith has not been submitted to the Quorum for consideration, and the Quorum of Twelve renews its expression of willingness to meet with the First Presidency for the purpose of mutually considering policies and methods; and

Whereas the two documents before the General Conference clearly show that this mutual consideration has not been had; and

Whereas both quorums admit and urge the need of modification and revision of the policy now in vogue; and

Whereas, the law clearly indicates the method of adjudication in such matters (See Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11, 12, 13; 122: 9; 123: 23):

Therefore be it resolved, That this question of ministerial policy which is before this body and contained in the President's message be referred to the Joint Council of the First Presidency and the Twelve for consideration and action as provided for in the law.

As a substitute it was moved to adopt paragraph 29 of the President's message, reading as follows:

Crystallizing the principal difference between the two quorums, and stating at the same time our opinion of the relationship of the two quorums, my attitude is that, (not touching the legislative functions of the two quorums, in which they are equal) in the executive or administrative line the Twelve are in all respects subordinate to and under the direction of the Presidency, and this includes missionary as well as local work.

The remainder of the afternoon was devoted to speeches on the subject, the debaters quoting freely from the various books and documents accepted by the church. Those having the floor in debate during the sessions were: F. M. Smith, J. W. Rushton, G. T. Griffiths, J. W. Wight, F. M. Sheehy, Daniel Macgregor, J. E. Vanderwood.

At 5 p. m. Brother Vanderwood was asked to yield the floor for adjournment.

Announcements were made, and the meeting closed with No. 225 in the Hymnal and benediction by James F. Keir.

PROBLEMS MEETING

At 5.30 p. m. the Religio and Sunday school institute met in the basement and voted to ask the presidency of the conference for Monday evening, April 14, to present the twofold aspects of the Religio. It was considered impossible to properly present the social and recreational features of the society in the brief time allotted to these institute sessions.

F. M. McDowell, in charge of the boy movement of the church, addressed the meeting on the boy problem, telling of the progress of the movement throughout the world.

In addition to district leaders, it was a good plan to have a local leader, who could get in touch with National Headquarters of the Boy Scout movement and organize.

The big need was said to be leaders—name meant but little so long as nothing was done to enlist the interests of the boys.

One of the speakers suggested that though the Boy Scout organization provided for the ages between 12 and 18, the boy movement was to reach all ages. He wondered what could be done to reach the other ages.

George Gould, in charge of one hundred Independence Scouts, said there was an insistent demand from the boys from 8 to 12 years of age. He deplored the lack of men willing to serve in this capacity.

A State Scout executive deplored the enlisting in any way of the boys under 12, as when they reached that age the real work of the scouts did not appeal to them.

Matthew Liston said not only men but women were needed, as the selfishness of women often prevented a fulfilling of the possibilities in boy organizations. "We need sisters who will relinquish their demands on their husbands so they can do this work," was a pertinent observation of the brother. "We are supplying a demand even though we may not realize it for years," he added.

"Liberty Cubs" was mentioned as a feeder to the scouts, being for younger boys—younger than 12 years of age. They appreciated activities and games as the older boys did, and yet could not enjoy some games the older ones excelled in.

Brother Hall, of Council Bluffs, urged boys' and girls' clubs as being effective in meeting the needs of the young people.

F. M. McDowell urged that the chief thing was to do something, then follow the tendency that most appealed.

It was announced that if Monday night were secured a first-aid demonstration would be put on by George Gould of Independence.

L. D. S. SALES ASSOCIATION MEETING

This organization is now celebrating its third birthday. Each year they hold at least one meeting of a most profitable character. We were induced to attend this meeting by reading the many handbills scattered around town by this alert organization. Their first meeting this year was held in the basement of the church on the evening of the 10th.

"A good Latter Day Saint preacher is a good salesman, whether he knows it or not," said Albert N. Hoxie, who made the opening speech at the meeting. Brother Hoxie is a salesman of no mean ability in addition to being a "musical chap."

He told us some of his first experiences as a salesman which, as told in his inimitable way, were amusing and instructive. The dominant thought was: Radiate sunshine, smile—always.

Miss Mildred Redfield rendered a piano solo and was called back for a second one.

Miss Ruth Allen gave a reading.

Professor J. A. Gunsolley, in charge of the business department at Graceland College, gave us an inspiring talk on "business efficiency."

Since it was a meeting made up largely of preachers, Elder Gunsolley used a Bible text, "He that is diligent in his business shall stand before kings." "Efficiency is a securing of maximum of results with a minimum of expenditure of effort," was quoted by the speaker as supplemental to his "text."

"If any of you folks have brought up your boy to be a preacher, look out! He may turn out to be a lawyer. . . . To be sure a definite aim is necessary, but make it broad enough that disappointment will not be too serious."

"Personality is the outward magnetic expression of the inner life that radiates courage, courtesy, and kindness," was quoted by the speaker, and, also, "The sum of all those winning and attractive qualities that make you worth while is personality."

"The two worst enemies to progress are indifference and self-satisfaction," was another good quotation used.

At the close of the talk by Brother Gunsolley a vocal solo was rendered by Mrs. Bertha Burgess.

The next speaker was O. Salisbury, of Council Bluffs, on "Salesmanship."

He informed us that whether we were to till the soil, plead at the bar, preach from the pulpit, even if we are to be a domestic in a home, yes, even to get married, we need salesmanship. If we want to read something good on the subject read Knox.

"Make people see with their ears—see as you see, think as you think, and do as you do."

"A salesman will not sell anything to a purchaser unless both are benefited," is a principle Brother Salisbury always lays down for his salesmen.

"If I step into your store to-morrow, come up to me and say, 'Mr. Salisbury, what will you have?' No use to ask me, 'Is there something you want?' If that were not so I wouldn't have come in."

"It costs more to sell goods than to manufacture them," he insisted, and Brother Hoxie agreed. We wondered how many thousands of dollars could be saved to the church when it establishes both its own manufacturing and selling enterprises.

The speaker explained why one needed to be a good salesman to effect a marriage agreement. "When Willie decides that the girl of his choice should be his wife he cannot afford to say so as many clerks would put it—'Bessie, you wouldn't marry me, would you?' Get away from the negative statements."

The meeting was gratifyingly attended by both sexes, mostly salespeople.

C. Ed Miller was the speaker at the church, entertaining the congregation with a description of some of his experiences in the Hawaiian Mission.

Brother Miller has been there for the past several years, and has been a missionary for many years prior to that. He is glad to be back where he can greet his many friends in the church at conference.

A third meeting was under the direction of the Woman's Auxiliary at the Coliseum at 7.45. It was a four-part reel of moving pictures showing how plants and animals come into existence. It is prepared by the State University and sent out for free use for proper instruction, and was presented by the Woman's Auxiliary with this end in view.

Sister Frederick M. Smith had charge of the meeting and was assisted by Walter W. Smith. The house was filled and many standing.

The pictures took up, beginning with the single cell showing how it develops and divides, and showing how plants develop in their various stages, and how some forms of animal life are brought into existence.

FRIDAY, APRIL 11

The day began with the usual 7 a. m. prayer service in charge of A. N. Hoxie. It is so very early, especially when the new summer time is considered, that the attendance is not so large as might be desired.

The 8 a. m. meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary is interesting and fairly well attended, but being at the same hour as the priesthood meeting at the Coliseum, it is impossible for many of the men to attend, even though they might otherwise do so. We appreciate the reports of the press committee of that organization as we know our readers do.

The speaker at the Coliseum at 8 was Doctor D. J. Jacobson, of the United States Public Health Service. He explained in detail the efforts being put forth by the Government to curtail the spread of venereal diseases, not only in the army but in civil life. A number of pamphlets have been published and available free upon request of the Venereal Section, Board of Health, Des Moines, Iowa. The subjects are prepared especially for various ages and both sexes, boys, girls, men, women, parents.

The elders were addressed at 10 a. m. by E. D. Moore on "What hinders our work?"

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

The Sunday school department held its first session at 10 a. m. on the 11th, with G. R. Wells in charge, assisted by Daniel Macgregor, first assistant superintendent.

The secretary of the association, E. D. Moore, was chosen secretary of the convention, and he chose Donnie Lehman and Mrs. Anna Midgorden as assistants.

The superintendency were authorized to make further organization, and named the following committees:

Notification: E. C. Harrington, to notify the leading quorums of the church of our sessions, probable length, etc., and that convention would be glad to receive not only communications but nomination for superintendent of the association.

Credentials (pre-convention appointment): A. E. Warr, of Des Moines District, Mrs. Ida E. Jones, of Portland District, Mrs. Lena Shoemaker, Central Illinois District.

Resolutions: George Wixom, Southern California District, Harry Passman, Northeastern Illinois, D. T. Williams, Lamoni Stake, R. W. Farrell, Massachusetts District, Henry Castings, Des Moines District.

Among the relaxation items of the session were a solo by Miss Wanda Hammer and a reading by Ida Mae Case.

The various reports of officers included in the printed booklet gotten out for all conference reports were spread on the minutes with suggestions for action by the convention.

The report of the treasurer showed a balance of $4,962.29.

A motion to adopt the budget system for the general department was referred to the Presiding Bishopric for advice and report to this convention. The coordination document adopted last year provided that the financial interests of the various departments shall be under the direct supervision of a bishop and be referred to the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric.

A resolution heartily indorsing the suggestions of the General Superintendent (paragraphs 9, 11, 12, 13) relating to the expansion of lessons courses, and that the entire matter be referred to the executive committee with power to act, was adopted.

Since it was impossible for the president of the Religio to be present later than this week, on the suggestion of Superintendent Wells, the Sunday school hour of to-morrow was given over to the Religio to use as much of it as needed.

The 2 p. m. business session was opened with singing "How firm a foundation," Frederick M. Smith in the chair.

The day was cool but drying, and the people in good spirits.

The opening prayer was by Frederick A. Smith.

Following the reading of the minutes of the previous sessions and a record of the meetings held in the interim, Mr. P. H. McBeth, a State representative of the Anti-Saloon League of Iowa, addressed the conference for five minutes on the "winning fight" against the liquor traffic in Iowa and the Nation. He warned us that the fight was not over—indeed that the Liquor Traffic had not even signed an armistice. He asked that the conference at some time take official action indorsing the propaganda of the Anti-Saloon League.

As a matter of information President F. M. Smith made a statement and offered a document. He stated that since he had been approached by a member of the Quorum of Twelve and asked to make a statement regarding a proposed ministerial policy, after some consideration he had submitted a proposition to the quorum and had set a time to meet with them. This was accepted and the meeting held. Following that, a document was formulated by the Twelve and presented to the conference, as follows:

To the General Conference: I am authorized to present the following action of the Quorum of Twelve for your consideration and action:

Whereas the First Presidency and the Quorum of Twelve met in session this morning, April 11, at which time President Smith outlined a ministerial policy and made explanations which are being considered by the quorum; therefore

We respectfully ask the conference to take no further action on the matter before the house until the two quorums have had time to complete their consideration and prepare their report.

On behalf of the Quorum of Twelve,

JOHN W. RUSHTON, Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, April 11, 1919.

The chair presented the document with the understanding first that the adoption of this paper would not interrupt the debate but simply defer the vote.

It was moved to adopt, with the understanding implied above, and the motion prevailed.

After a reading of some additional reports from the credentials committee, which is constantly besieged to make changes in delegations, J. A. Tanner took the chair and the floor was given to J. E. Vanderwood, who had yielded for adjournment.

At the outset he stated that he didn't intend to occupy much time and was rousingly applauded for the statement. One was left to his own conclusions as to whether the conference was tired of the discussion or otherwise.

We realize our readers would like to have us state on which side of some of these momentous questions the speakers are found, but we frankly admit that in some instances it is hard to tell, not referring to anyone in particular. Then it is difficult to condense into a few hurriedly written sentences the sentiments of any person on any subject, much as we should like to do so.

We may fairly say, however, that in the present discussion many arguments are presented on both sides. Naturally, everyone hopes an agreeable compromise may be effected.

At the conclusion of the speech by Brother Vanderwood, who quoted at length from the article of G. T. Griffiths in the HERALD for October 10, 1917, about ten men were on the floor at one time. R. B. Trowbridge was recognized and he asked that the floor be given to S. A. Burgess who, because of deafness and location on the floor of the conference, could not get the attention of the chair. It was granted, and Elder Burgess addressed the conference at considerable length.

J. F. Curtis was the next speaker. All of this quorum speaking so far have urged earnestly the position taken by the quorum.

At the close of his speech adjournment was called by the chair.

An announcement was made that Heman C. Smith, now in Sanitarium, was better, but the physicians feared apoplexy. The conference is anxious for him, as he is so fully conversant with the history of the church, and has labored earnestly so many years.

The problems meeting at 5.30 p. m. was in charge of G. R. Wells, assisted by G. S. Trowbridge, and the subject was normal work.

A number of questions were asked L. F. P. Curry, normal superintendent.

Among other things was the appointment of district normal superintendents, which, it was answered, were elected by the district body, a newer custom, the old one being that the superintendent of the general department should appoint them.

General difficulty was reported over the securing of diplomas. Brother Curry explained this occurred on account of a great deal of detail work in the offices of the superintendents. We were encouraged to believe that the normal department would be taken over by Graceland College.

One letter was referred to from a school which had so much trouble with its attendance there were none who came! But it was a school which had lapsed.

The problem of getting started on time was brought up, and Superintendent Wells advised that the meetings begin on time, no matter how many were late. It is the only way. Those who related their experiences said it was the only way to promote regularity. Let the school decide on a time the most suitable for all. The advice the general officers have given for years that the school should set a time at which the pupils coming should be counted late was indorsed by some speakers. It is the only way in which a secretary can get correct records—the time must be set, then those coming later are tardy and not counted in the attendance.

"Shall we stand or kneel at the opening of the school?" was asked in another letter. The superintendent believed that one could secure as good results—even better—from a general standing posture than kneeling, though if local custom favors there is no objection to that. The reverence is the essential thing, especially as an example for the children.

"How shall we finish out the time with our young classes who get through too early?" asked one. F. M. McDowell stated that it was for the teacher to supply interesting matter outside the lesson so that no ordinary lesson period would be long enough.

James Page said that in the smaller schools the problem was greater, for sometimes the seniors held too long and there was not the favorable opportunity to specialize on children's work.

G. R. Wells greatly favored a simple curtained corner, for then the children are not distracted by the sights around them. Most any room can be temporarily curtained for the small classes.

F. S. Brackenbury of Michigan had seen children bored to death by the larger classes reading, word by word, each paragraph in the Quarterly. We wonder if that is not true of all too many schools.

G. S. Trowbridge urged that story-telling be given a prominent place. Even to tell stories over and over if necessary, for the children don't mind the repetition.

Birdie Chandler of Lamoni Stake wondered if giving prizes to induce lesson study in intermediate classes wouldn't be profitable.

"That method is a prop, an expedient only," said Brother Wells, "but don't make it a main point. Try to reach the seat of the trouble."

G. S. Trowbridge said Saint Louis used the grading system there, whereby the pupil was graded each Sunday on attendance, lesson, etc., and it was proving successful.

These meetings are interesting, fast, and profitable. They move so rapidly we are unable to keep up with all the good points made by the various speakers.

The evening at the church was given over to a second rendition of a Lamoni Community Chorus number. This was given about two weeks ago as a number of the community lyceum course. At this second rendition tickets were given to visitors only, so that there would be room for all. It is an excellent number. Elsewhere we print a summarized program of the event.

At 8 p. m. Elder F. F. Wipper was the speaker at the Coliseum to a good congregation. The service was in charge of Elder W. E. Haden.

The Aaronic priesthood held a meeting in the basement of the church, under the leadership of Bishop B. R. McGuire.

APRIL 12

The usual order of services opened the beautiful spring day: Young people's prayer meeting at 7 a. m., Woman's Auxiliary in the basement of the church at 8 a. m. The Melchisedec priesthood and priests under conference appointment were addressed at 8 on a number of subjects, such as church affiliation, bills before legislatures to prevent prophets, seers, necromancers, astrologers, etc., from operating, public confirmations when severe opposition prevails, etc., were discussed. Whether the elders should use such words as "I rebuke the disease," etc., in administration. Expressing it as his own opinion, President Smith thought it unnecessary for a branch to vote in newly baptized candidates who are well known in the community. Let the care be taken before baptism. It was developed that there is considerable diversity of opinion on some of these details. It was emphasized that there should be the closest cooperation between missionary and local priesthood, which would prevent much friction.

It was urged that greatest precaution be observed in urging the organization of branches. It is highly important that good material for caring for the flock is there.

Correspondence between the Recorder and the President was referred to, in which the former found considerable difficulty in securing blessing certificates from the elders. It was urged by President Smith that vital statistics were very essential, and this was an item not to be neglected. The requests for statistics should be uniformly regarded.

The elders were addressed at 9 a. m. (we gave the hour wrongly as 10 a. m. yesterday) by S. A. Burgess on the sacrament of the Lord's supper. The attendance at this meeting continues uniformly good. The number has been about 65 each day. The plan of having various men address the elders rather than devote most of the time to open discussion seems popular. One session is scheduled to be round table discussion on "What can an elder do? Missionaries? presiding elders? other local elders?"

Elder Burgess went into the history and significance of the Lord's supper, and why we are close communionists.

CONFERENCE REPORTS

HISTORIAN'S REPORT

The year 1918, to the great rejoicing of the Latter Day Saints and others interested in liberty and democracy, saw the conclusion of hostilities in the great and destructive war in which the United States had been actively participating for nearly two years. The armistice being signed on November 11, 1918. Final terms of peace have not been fully agreed upon, but it is thought that the enemies of democracy are not in a condition to make further active resistance.

As in the past, this department has tried to actively perform the part assigned it in the development of the work, but, having received no assistance in the office the work of preparing manuscripts for future volumes of history is not materially advanced. The last General Conference referred the reorganization of this department to the joint council of First Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric. This council subsequently reported that it had sustained the present incumbent as historian and appointed Herbert S. Salisbury assistant, but the assistant has not yet associated himself with the active work of this office. He informs us that he is engaged in preparing a brief, or condensed history of the church, but we have not been consulted in regard to the advisability or practicability of this work, nor, are we advised as to what progress has been made, so cannot speak in regard to it.

The much needed and very important work of this department in connection with other associations is still much neglected, in consequence of lack of time and means. Historical authorities generally give us the same courteous and kind consideration that has hitherto marked their conduct. Our travels in the interest of the department have been very limited, but have been effective for good as far as we could engage in it.

ORGANIZATION

The First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, the Presiding Bishopric, and the Standing High Council remain as at last report.

The Presidency of Seventy was strengthened by one addition in the person of James W. Davis who was ordained to that office at the Annual Conference of 1918. This still leaves one vacancy.

Provision was also made for the ordination of seven others to the office of seventy, viz:

S. G. St. John, Philip R. Burton, John D. Carlile, Hale W. Smith, Thomas W. Curtis, Lyman W. Fike, and Edward J. Gleaser.

Provision was made for the release from the Quorum of five, viz; Benjamin F. Renfroe, Francis C. Smith, William R. Smith, Frederick B. Farr, and Oscar Case.

The Seventy lost by ordination to High Priests Quorum Arthur Allen; by death Rees Jenkins and Rudolph Etzenhouser.

HIGH PRIESTS

Vinton M. Goodrich resigned from the presidency of the quorum and Washington S. Macrae was chosen and ordained to succeed him.

The ordination of nine others to the office of high priest was provided for, viz: William A. Blair, Ralph A. Harder, James Gault, David E. Dowker, Arthur Allen, George H. Parker, Charles E. Jones, Elwyn R. Davis, and Jesse Hardin.

BISHOP

Since the conference of 1918 Edward Ingham whose ordination was provided for in 1917 was ordained by President Frederick M. Smith.

EVANGELICAL MINISTERS

The conference provided for the ordination of George W. Burt and Richard Baldwin to this office.

DISSENSIONS

There has been considerable dissatisfaction manifested with the official administration of the church resulting in a few instances in dissension, but the status of these cases have not yet been determined though some of them are under investigation, hence, there is nothing definite to report.

STAKES

The five stakes hitherto organized still continue in active operation, but no others have been organized or provided for. The officers of the stakes have held several conferences with the First Presidency of the church and other general officers to consider matters of vital importance to stake administration. Paul Craig resigned from the presidency of Lamoni Stake, and Daniel T. Williams was chosen and ordained to occupy in this presidency.

COMPETING ORGANIZATIONS

None of these are doing anything of note except the organization with headquarters in Salt Lake City, Utah. This has lost, by death, its presiding officer in the person of Joseph F. Smith, and has elevated as his successor Heber J. Grant, previously president of the Twelve, and he retained as counselors the counselors of his predecessor, viz: Anthon H. Lund and Charles W. Penrose. Anthon H. Lund was also made president of the Twelve Apostles, and Melvin J. Ballard was selected to fill the vacancy in the Quorum of Twelve. In setting apart these presiding officers this church departed from its former custom and set them apart by the imposition of hands.

AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS

By adoption of the system of coordination at the last conference, the auxiliaries, viz: the Sunday School Association, Zion's Religio, Woman's Auxiliary and other societies lost in a measure their independent existence and became departments of the general church work. They will retain separate organizations, their officers to be appointed as provided for in report of Committee on Coordination, adopted by General Conference of 1918. (See Conference Minutes, pages 2590 to 2592.)

MISSIONARY WORK

The same policy obtained during the year that obtained the year previous, viz: the Twelve having no special individual appointment, but were directed in their activities by the First Presidency. All ministers in the missionary field were also expected to report directly to the First Presidency. The Presidency has been constantly engaged in this, the local, and other duties pertaining to their calling in the general oversight of the work. President Elbert A. Smith, in order to be in closer touch with the office and with his colleague, removed from Lamoni, Iowa, to Independence, Missouri.

Thirteen evangelical ministers, seven bishops, forty-four high priests, eighty-one of the seventy, sixty-eight elders, and two priests; a total of two hundred and fifteen, received appointment to special fields from the conference.

One evangelical minister, three high priests, thirteen seventy, six elders, and one priest: a total of twenty-four, received appointment subsequently from a joint council in post conference session. Several other appointments and some releases have been made during the year by the authorities in charge.

IMPORTANT COUNCILS

Pursuant to their policy of organization the First Presidency have at different times called council of leading officers to consider ways and means. The result has been generally satisfactory to those closely connected with the work done.

THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION

Still controls the publishing interests of the church and the nature of the work is about as in years past.

During the year the second volume of the "Young People's History" has been published and placed upon the market, but the concordance to the Book of Mormon, mentioned a year ago, still remains unpublished.

Bishops Benjamin R. McGuire, Albert Carmichael, Frederick B. Blair, James F. Keir, and Mark H. Siegfried compose the Board of Publication.

GRACELAND COLLEGE

This institution has continued its activities with increased patronage. The report of its board will give details.

Thomas A. Hougas and Charles B. Woodstock were each elected to succeed himself on the Board of Trustees. The board now stands as follows: John W. Wight, John F. Garver, and George N. Briggs, with terms terminating with the present conference; Albert Carmichael and Gomer R. Wells, with terms terminating in 1920; and Charles B. Woodstock and Thomas A. Hougas, whose terms terminate in 1921.

HOMES FOR THE AGED

These several Homes are conducted by bishops nominated by the Presiding Bishop and are doing a commendable service in providing for the aged, poor, and needy.

CHILDREN'S HOME

This institution is filling a demand that it would be difficult to meet without such an institution. It is conducted by a board of seven members, four elected by General Conference nominated by the Order of Bishops, and three nominated by the Woman's Auxiliary and confirmed by the General Conference. The present members are: Albert Carmichael, Richard J. Lambert, Alvah J. Yarrington, Floyd M. McDowell, Callie B. Stebbins, Lucy L. Resseguie, and Minnie B. Nicholson.

The terms of Minnie B. Nicholson, Alvah J. Yarrington and Floyd M. McDowell terminate at this conference; those of Lucy L. Resseguie and Albert Carmichael in 1920, and those of Callie B. Stebbins and Richard J. Lambert in 1921.

THE SANITARIUM

The details of the operation of this institution will be presented in the report of its trustees. The last conference sustained as trustees William D. Bullard, George H. Hulmes, Lester H. Haas, Joseph A. Tanner, Clarence O. Leeka, Mark H. Siegfried, and Benjamin R. McGuire.

ORDER OF ENOCH

There is no further developments in this department so far as organizations are concerned.

GENERAL CHURCH LIBRARY COMMISSION

The President of the church recommended some radical changes in the conduct of this department, including the discharge of the commission and the providing for library interests in another way. This recommendation was, by the conference, referred to a joint council composed of the Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishop with power to act. This council did not report action and the commission and Librarian formerly appointed, have continued to occupy, but this movement has left the affairs of this department in an unsettled condition.

PRESS AND PULPIT

We continue to receive favorable consideration from these sources and some very important publications have appeared during the year. Among these might be mentioned a book written and published by Professor E. M. Violette, Professor of History, State Normal School, Kirksville, Missouri; entitled 'History of Missouri.'

In this work Professor Violette devotes one chapter to "The Mormon Troubles in Missouri." The professor was courteous enough to advise with us quite freely and to use much of our literature. Of course, as was very proper, he consulted other authorities, and made his own deductions. Considering the great mass of conflicting testimony and sentiment from which he had to make deductions he has succeeded admirably and produced the best "History of Missouri" with reference to this subject that we have had the privilege of examining.

A series of articles now running through the Missouri Historical Review from the pen of Rollin J. Britton of Kansas City, promises to be of great value historically, and like Professor Violette, Mr. Britton is giving us courteous consideration.

Among other historical productions the Missouri Historical Society is publishing and offering for sale a pamphlet on the "Mormon Troubles" from the pen of the Historian of the Church in which we establish from Court Records, and other sources, that the old claim that Porter Rockwell as an agent of Joseph Smith made an assault on the life of Governor Boggs in 1842 is a farce unsupported by evidence.

COMMITTEE ON MONUMENT

The committee on monument consisting of Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire, James F. Keir, Mark H. Siegfried, and George P. Lambert was continued. This committee has done some work toward preserving the property, and have located caretakers at Nauvoo in the persons of John W. Layton and wife.

We have other things in course of development which will enable whoever represents the church in this department to place a ban on unreasonable and sensational so-called histories of the church in Missouri. But it will need great care and discretion to meet the situation properly, and must be approached with fairness and just concession.

We have great reason to be satisfied with the general course pursued by the Latter Day Saints in the trying ordeals through which they passed, and that they were in large measure sustained by divine power is evident, yet, we must admit that under great provocation they sometimes acted indiscreetly and without due consideration as instanced by the unwise and hasty statements made in an otherwise patriotic and able oration by Sidney Rigdon, delivered at Far West, Missouri, July 4, 1838. While we justly condemn the vicious and inexcusable extermination proclamation of Governor Lillian W. Boggs, and fully agree with Professor Violette that the "rather extravagant language on the part of Rigdon was hardly sufficient justification for the harsh official order of the Governor," yet we cannot, nor should we wish, to deny that it was a prominent church official that first suggested the possible necessity for a war of extermination.

MUSEUM

This remains without material change. Something should be done to provide a proper place for it and then efforts made to enlarge it.

LOCAL HISTORIANS

As we have before said some of these officers are very efficient and we know of no better system of gathering necessary information. During the last year, however, we have had more trouble than ever before in keeping this force up to the standard, and some of the most important places including Independence and Lamoni Stakes are now vacant by resignations.

AUDITOR

At the last conference the auditing committee was discontinued and the First Presidency authorized to appoint an auditor. Acting upon this authority the Presidency appointed Richard B. Trowbridge who has been acting in that capacity.

ARCHITECT

The Presidency was also authorized to appoint a general Church architect and Brother Henry C. Smith has received appointment to that position.

REVISION OF CHURCH HISTORY

Committee on Revision of Church History upon recommendation of the President was discharged without any provision being made for the work hitherto done by said committee.

CHURCH PHYSICIAN

This office which has been vacant for several years was renewed and Doctor G. Leonard Harrington elected to occupy.

DIRECTOR OF BOY MOVEMENT

This department received attention from the First Presidency during the year 1917 and Floyd M. McDowell was appointed in charge. This was approved by the conference of 1918, and the appointment of Elder McDowell confirmed.
HEMAN C. SMITH.

GRACELAND COLLEGE

To the First Presidency and the General Conference: The attached reports of the president and of the treasurer and business manager of the college were at a formal meeting adopted by the Board of Trustees of Graceland College and made the report of the Board to the General Conference.

Respectfully submitted,
A. CARMICHAEL,
Chairman.

ANNUAL REPORT OF PRESIDENT

The Past Year

To the Board of Trustees, Graceland College: No year in the history of higher education in this country ever opened under such extraordinary conditions as the present. With the prospect of the war continuing indefinitely, the Government looked to the colleges and universities of the land for essential aid in the matter of carrying out its plans for placing our country on a war basis. As was expected, all higher institutions of learning in the country responded and placed their faculties, buildings, and equipment entirely at the disposal of the war department.

Graceland along with the other accredited colleges was called upon to do her part in the training of prospective officers for the army, but it was finally decided that, since there were not 100 young men of collegiate standing enrolled, those who had responded to the call of the Government should be transferred to other institutions, and the majority of Graceland's quota was assigned to the State University of Iowa, where a number of them, during the three months the Student's Army Training Corps was in effective operation, were recommended for transfer to the officers' training camps. This is as was expected and Graceland has again fully demonstrated her ability to prepare young men and women for meeting every emergency in life.

With the uncertainty for the future of the young men of draft age and the prospect that war was to continue indefinitely, claiming the services of the young men of the country for many years, the young women responded as never before to the call for preparation, and Graceland has the largest enrollment of women students in her history. College education has so tremendously justified itself in the war that the whole world now has an appreciation of its value never before known, and this conception of the matter is percolating to every corner of the country. A college course has almost been a condition of preferment in the army, not by reason of any sentiment or prejudice in favor of the colleges, but because the college men have in larger numbers than any other class made good in the vast undertaking in which we have been engaged.

If this is true of military life, how much more true is it going to be of civil life. The period of reconstruction is upon us and the problems to be solved are going to tax us more, if anything, than have the problems of war, because, if for no other reason, it is going to be a slower process, is going to take years where our war problems have taken months.

The uncertainties of the war situation and the unprecedented epidemic which swept over our land during the last weeks of 1918 had most deteriorating influences on the work of the first three months of the college year, but plans were effected in Graceland to arrange the schedule and conduct the work so as to complete the regular year's courses with little, if any, loss. This is being done and it is confidently believed that next June will complete one of the very best college years in the history of Graceland.

Attendance

The success of an educational institution is not alone gauged by the number of students, but, other things being equal, it is one of the evidences of the good it is accomplishing. Measured by that mark the present year is the most successful in our history.

The following figures show the growth in the collegiate department alone:

| Year    | Enrollment | Increase | Per Cent |
|---------|------------|----------|----------|
| 1915-16 | 22         |          |          |
| 1916-17 | 39         | 17       | 77       |
| 1917-18 | 47         | 8        | 22       |
| 1918-19 | 79         | 32       | 70       |

Total increase for the years 1915-16 to 1918-19 260%.
Candidates for graduation from all departments this next June number 56 as compared with 38 a year ago.

Additional Accrediting

I take great pleasure in reporting that the State has extended further recognition to Graceland in the way of accrediting the work done in her commercial department. The work of the college and academy has already been fully standardized and officially accredited, as previously reported to you. Graduates from those departments are given full credit by all institutions belonging to the American Association of Colleges and Universities, and State Teacher's Certificates good for life are issued to our college graduates.

Beginning with the school year 1918-19 a combined academic-commercial course was offered, graduates from which are entitled to full admission without examination to the State University of Iowa and all other colleges and universities belonging to the American Association of Colleges and Universities, and will at the same time prepare one for a business life as stenographer, stenotypist, or bookkeeper. This combination has not heretofore been possible, but now, due to the excellence of the work offered at Graceland, students will be able to reduce the period of their preparation one year by enrolling in the combined course, taking additional to the required subjects in the academy the following electives: Stenography or Stenotypy, Salesmanship, Commercial Arithmetic, Commercial Law, Typewriting, Bookkeeping, Spelling, and Penmanship.

On graduation from such a course one will be able either to continue in college or university, using his ability as a stenographer, stenotype operator, or bookkeeper, to assist him through his college course, or if he finds it necessary to do so he can enter at once into active life in the commercial world.

This additional recognition and accrediting will be a source of great good to our student body.

New Building

As indicated elsewhere in this report, we have had a most unusual increase in our college attendance in spite of the great handicap of the war—70 per cent over last year and 260 per cent over the attendance in 1915-16—and now that peace has returned we can look forward to an unprecedented increase in the number of students. Our young people have awakened to the great benefits of education, which is so tremendously justifying itself in all walks of life, and we must meet their needs.

If our young men and women respond to the clarion call of President Smith given by "inspiration upon us and the voice of God" there will be such "haste and a greater speeding up than has ever been indulged in in the past" that we will not begin to be able to meet their needs without more adequate facilities. With an increased attendance of 260 per cent in three years, what will another three years bring forth?

I can here only invite attention to my recommendation of a year ago:

"The most urgent need, however, is for proper library and museum facilities. We have a most efficient library, adequate in every way, with the small yearly additions that should be made, to meet our requirements for many years if it is properly housed and properly cared for, which is not possible under present conditions.

"What we must have is a library building which will properly house our library and will give us room for our museum and other equipment needed for work in our science courses. We have the beginning of a most excellent museum and historical collection, valuable not only from the standpoint of anthropology, archæology, and history, but, if put in shape so that it is easily available, very valuable for all of our science courses.

"We are very severely criticized by every official examining board of the State for our inadequate facilities for properly taking care of our library, and it is absolutely impossible to provide suitable facilities in our present building.

"It is urgently recommended that provision be early made for a new building, especially designed for library and museum purposes. It is believed that much of the work of construction could be done by student labor, thus giving employment to needy students. The excavation and other preliminary work could well enough be done during vacation, when student help could be used very extensively. Such a building, releasing our present library room for regular class rooms, would relieve our congestion in the main building, thus assisting very materially in administration and efficiency."

Recent years have witnessed a remarkable growth in college interest and attendance, but we have reached the point where little, if any, further advancement can be made without added facilities.

Money Value of Education

A recent United States Government Bulletin shows the results of an investigation throughout the country, proving that every day spent in school by the child is worth $9.02 to him. If that is true of the child in the public schools of the country, of how much greater value is every day spent in college! However, taking the Government average for public schools as applying to college students and our attendance for this year up to the date of this report shows that Graceland has increased the earning capacity of her students $145,699, and figuring to the end of the college year in June, taking the average attendance up to date for the rest of the school year, it shows that our young people of the church will be enabled to earn $254,702 more during their natural life than if they had not been in attendance at college this year.

These figures are almost beyond belief, yet they are based on a most thorough investigation by the United States Government. When we consider the fact that this sum of $254,702 does not represent the earnings of a single year, but is spread out over the years of activity after graduation and is a continued source of income to the church and its members, we are led to ask: Does an education pay from the standpoint of money alone? If it does, is there any better investment for the church to make than to provide adequate facilities which will meet not only the requirements of the church but the requirements of the State?

Memorial Hall

In nearly every county in this broad land, in every college and university, material tribute will be paid to our citizen soldiers, living and dead. People with burning hearts and willing hands will build them monuments, plant groves, dedicate parks, and erect buildings in their names. In a task so worthy, expressing our own devotion for future generations to read, we shall demand a full share.

We are informed that one village has already raised $174,000 for the erection of a granite shaft in memory of their beloved lost. These men, mostly young with their lives yet before them, died in the cause of liberty and democracy and for the institutions of America. Great as is the virtue of a silent granite shaft in commemorating their gift to their country, would it not yet be a finer tribute and one more fitting to the nature of the case to erect a beautiful and dignified building, dedicated to that great safeguard of the liberties for which these sons fought—a free and liberal education?

Surely some memorial is imperative. A sister some weeks ago sent the college a small sum from the earnings of her son who had gone to his reward, with which to purchase some useful thing as a memorial—"A boy's personal gift to other boys and girls near his own age," as she wrote. And what would be more fitting than a memorial hall constructed by the church on the campus of Graceland College, which will endure through the years as a token of love and esteem "from the church in the name of the young men and women who served in the world war to the young men and women near their own age" for uses which will make present and future generations able in time of peace to battle for those principles which will guarantee that our "dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and, that the government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth."

I am advised that the church had 1,023 young men and women in the army and that 37 were called upon to make the supreme sacrifice. Surely some memorial is imperative.

Librarian

In line with the recommendation of President Smith to the General Conference of 1918 that the "college library be made the library of the church in fact, or the chief division thereof, and to the work of the librarian be referred the task of unifying all our library interests," provision was made for the appointment of a college librarian with special preparation along that line. The present librarian spent last summer in attendance at the School for Library Training at the State University of Iowa and will be fully prepared to render most efficient service for the church, as she is doing for the college, when the time comes that her services are so needed.

Possible Attendance

In another place in this report, attention is called to the large increase in college attendance—70 per cent over last year and 260 per cent increase in three years—and yet the number of college students in the church in proportion to church membership is so inconsiderable as to be almost negligible in proportion to what it should be and in proportion to the membership in college from other religious denominations.

A recent report of the "Society of Friends" with Penn College located at Oskaloosa, Iowa, shows a church membership in Iowa of 8,322, approximately one-tenth of our entire membership. The "Society of Friends" has 150 college students in Penn College. On the same basis Graceland should have an attendance of 1,500 college students. Yet we have this year only 79 enrolled. It is true there are some young people of our church enrolled in other colleges, but all too few. As President Smith recently said:

"In the nearly twenty years of my church work I have continuously plead for preparation by education for greater usefulness. I have plead that the members use every energy possible to educate themselves against the coming of a day when there would be thrown upon their shoulders a burden that they cannot carry unless that education or preparation has been had. And if there ever has been a man in this church who has had his position vindicated I have had mine within the last few months. What has been the answer to that appeal, made by your leader, as he believes under the impulses of inspiration, calling upon you for earnest preparation against the coming of that day when the burdens that shall be thrown upon you will be greater than you can carry in your own strength only as you shall have qualified under the inspiration of Almighty God, and the development through your own energies of abilities that God endowed you with. Has that call been heeded as it should? Let the answer be found in the response that we gave to the call of the Government to furnish young men of high school education to enter the Students' Army Training Corps, and let me say that it is with a great degree of sadness that I realize that the failure of all our young men to have reached that standard demanded by the Government not only handicaps us in our response as citizens of the Government, but is bound to handicap us in our response as citizens of the kingdom of God."

Our young people, their parents, and friends are awakening to the clarion call of President Smith, but are they going to awaken soon enough and in sufficient numbers to meet the responsibilities which he feels are to be placed upon them? Every effort should be made to develop in their minds the urgent need for this preparation. If his call is to be heeded, and unless it is our hopes for the speedy redemption of Zion cannot be realized, we must prepare for a college attendance of 2,000 within a few years.

Extension Department

It is the practice of the modern college and university to extend its service as far as possible, not only to those who can spend time at the institution itself, but through extension service to do all possible for the isolated ones. "For those who cannot go to college the college goes to them."

It is believed that this is a legitimate function of higher education. Graceland Extension Institute was organized a few years ago to meet the great demand which all know existed for some form of correspondence study. The Lecture Board of the Religio developed to meet a special need. Other activities of the different auxiliaries do much toward the organization of study centers in the church and in the home. They are creating an atmosphere of study, culture, and refinement which is almost impossible without "studying all good books."

In accordance with the instructions to the Coordinating Committee by the General Conference of 1918 a beginning has been made in the way of reassigning some of the activities and interests in which there was clearly an overlapping of effort with consequent duplication and loss of energy.

Graceland Extension Institute has not been the success it should be or can be because the men and women who expected to give their time to it were already overburdened with other church and home work. They are unable to devote the attention necessary for success. Some of the correspondence courses offered by other departments of the church work have not had proper attention because the demand for the courses is so great that the correspondence lessons sent in cannot be properly cared for by volunteer teachers who have their full hours of duty outside of these correspondence courses.

The experience of the institute officials and those of other correspondence efforts is that by merely announcing through the church papers courses which are offered nearly everyone will receive so many enrollments that the volunteer teacher is unable to care for them at all. The Coordinating Committee feels that if this correspondence work, lecture work and other phases of educational extension work is worth doing at all it is worth assigning people with full or part time to it whose business it will be to carry it on.

With that in mind there has been assigned to Graceland the activities of the Lecture Board and such activities of the Graceland Extension Institute and of the educational correspondence courses of the Woman's Auxiliary as can be adequately provided for as soon as full time or part time instructors and adequate office help can be secured to take care of those interests.

There is a very large field of usefulness for such a department. It will cost money for its organization, but it is believed that it will be as nearly self-supporting as other forms of academic instruction after the initial cost.

Student Activities

College activities consisting of debate, declamation, oration, musical, and athletic insofar as they represent contests, either intercollegiate or intramural, occur so late in the year that it is impossible to report them to you for the current year. This is more true this year than heretofore, due to the unusual epidemic and consequent quarantine. To date we have had no contests with other colleges this school year. However, we have scheduled two intercollegiate debates for the second semester of the present year, our representatives will take part in two declamatory contests, our annual oratorical contest will occur in April, the studio department will be represented in several recitals and other public performances, and the usual winter and spring athletic activities will be entered upon.

Last year's activities are representative of a year's interests along these lines:

(a) We took part in intercollegiate debates with colleges in two different States—Iowa and Missouri—debating the same question with both colleges. In one debate we affirmed, in the other one we denied the question, and won both debates.

(b) In the declamatory contest, which we were permitted to enter for the first time last year, due to the fact that our institution had been fully accredited, we won second place in a contest with twelve schools.

(c) In athletics we played colleges in three different states—Iowa, Missouri, and Kansas—and lost but one game.

(d) Our annual oratorical contest was of a very high order, a larger number of students than ever before competing in the preliminary, with the result that the four final contestants were exceptionally well prepared.

(e) The recitals, musicals, glee club, and orchestra appearances during the year showed the departments represented to be on a very high plane and the students interested along those lines to have had unusual advantages in the way of training.

These debating, oratorical, declamatory, athletic, and musical contests are of very great value, not only for the individual gain to those taking part, but for the general good to the institution in the way of esprit de corps.

Faculty and Student Body

In the face of the very great handicap resulting from quarantine regulations, the closing of the college doors for several weeks, sickness by a large percentage of both students and teachers, it is believed that the year's work will be completed in a most satisfactory manner. This is possible because of the enthusiastic and wholehearted interest in the work at hand. Vacations, holidays, and Saturdays have been ungrudgingly devoted to school work by all. This is but another evidence of the almost unparalleled devotion of those concerned in the welfare of the college.

The past year has challenged many members of the faculty to decide definitely between service with the church or elsewhere, and in every case the decision has been to continue where they and their advisers believe they are called for the accomplishment of a piece of work which will assist materially in the advancement of the cause of Christ on earth. The following positions have been offered to different ones of our faculty within the past few months and declined in view of their recognized calling here:

The presidency of a State University in Mexico; a position as inspector in a State University in the United States; and the superintendency of city schools in a neighboring State.

Almost without exception the members of the faculty are advancing professionally by attendance at the universities of the land, either during the summer vacations or by being granted a full year's leave of absence for study. During the past year our faculty members have been in attendance at the following institutions:

Three at the University of Iowa; two at the University of Chicago; one at the University of Nebraska; one at the Iowa State Agricultural College; and one at the Iowa State Teachers' College.

Such interest assures the success of the college work insofar as it can be assured by the faculty. However efficient the faculty may be, work of a creditable character cannot be accomplished without equal interest and devotion on the part of the student body, and we are safe in saying that there has never been a year in the history of the institution when there were assembled from the four corners of the United States, the islands of the sea, and several foreign countries a body of young men and women of higher ideals or nobler ambitions. There have been fewer failures this year than any other year during my connection with the college. The students along with all other people sense the importance of the times and the serious obligations resting upon us. With few exceptions they feel that the future has very important duties to meet and that their time for preparation is limited.

With such a faculty and such a student body we can rest assured that nothing will be left undone to bring about the highest degree of preparation possible.

Spiritual Interests

A chapel speaker during the year told of one of our church members—a real estate dealer—who remarked to a prospective customer in connection with the amount of time he could devote to him that morning, "We have just time enough to get back for church." The customer replied, "Do you neglect business for church?" to which the real estate dealer answered, "No; church is my business." So with a great majority of our students, they consider the things of God as their business and are in attendance at Graceland as a part of that important business. The opportunities for spiritual development in connection with the work of the college and the church institutions of the community are of a very high order, and I am happy in reporting that the great majority are taking full advantage of them.

The Future

There is every reason to be very hopeful for the future. We have firmly established our place as a Junior College in the educational system of the State and country, and we receive renewed evidences almost daily from the membership of the church that we are filling an ever larger field of usefulness. There is much yet to be accomplished before we meet the larger needs, but it is confidently believed that full provision will be made and facilities placed at our disposal to meet those needs in an adequate way, and the construction of an additional building is a step in the direction of meeting the standards of a full four-year, or senior, college, prepared to meet in every possible way the requirements of the church insofar as an institution of higher learning can meet them.

With the hearty cooperation of all we look forward to filling our place as a higher educational institution of the church in a way which will result in the degree of advancement essential for the near redemption of Zion.

Respectfully submitted,
G. N. BRIGGS,
President.

PRE-CONFERENCE REPORT OF TREASURER AND BUSINESS MANAGER

To the Board of Trustees: 1. The itemized annual report setting out in detail the inventories of all properties in the several departments, with lists of all assets and liabilities and profits and losses, is made up at the end of the fiscal year, June 30. Such report for July 1, 1917 to June 30, 1918 has been placed in your hands and is subject to audit by the church auditors at their pleasure.

2. The report at this time deals more particularly with the budget, making a comparative study of the expenditures with the amounts allowed; and setting out the items necessary for the year July 1, 1919, to June 30, 1920; also a brief report upon the work and conditions of the various departments.

3. Taking the amounts actually expended to January 1, 1919, and estimating the amount required for the remainder of the year to June 30, and comparing this with the budget allowed for the year, the following results may be seen:

|                                 | $ 9,200.00 | $10,722.34 | $1,705.00  | $12,427.34 |

5. Notwithstanding the unprecedented increase in the cost of living, the faculty allowances have been kept within the amount allowed, being $17.71 under such amount. Only strict economy and no little self-denial upon the part of the faculty members has made this possible.

6. Further advance in the price of coal and a small increase allowed for labor has put the item of heating plant, fuel and labor, $732.85 above the allowance.

7. No insurance policies having expired during the year, this item shows no expenditure.

8. Much of our advertising being done by our arrangement with the Board of Publication, the money outlay has been small compared with the amount of publicity used. This item shows $146.82 less than the amount allowed.

9. Owing to the fact that the city water supply was shut off for a considerable time and the further fact that our shop was converted into a gymnasium, putting out of use our electrically driven machinery, the amount for light and water is $24.07 under the budget.

10. The item of interest shown to February 1 is $247.52 under the allowance, because of the greatly reduced debt. The item will entirely disappear from budgets in the future, we hope never to return.

11. The one-fifth indebtedness item shows the amount over-paid by $4,209.67 up to February 10, the result of the effort put forth to liquidate the debt as speedily as possible.

12. Repairs and upkeep of real estate shows an amount of $177.55 over, due to the fact partly of some unexpected expenditures on boiler house, and partly to advance in prices of material.

13. Tuition receipts are above the estimate $3,256.54, due to the increased enrollment over that estimated. Offerings are $70.80 above and endowments $100 below.

14. When we take into account the very unusual conditions which no one could possibly have foreseen, it would seem that this is a very good showing. The total expenditures above the budget, including the item of indebtedness, is $4,383.95. Against this item is to be placed the amount of receipts above the estimate, $3,227.34, making the net amount over $1,156.61, this with the amount of debt paid, $4,209.67 more than the budget calls for.

Budget for 1919-20

15. In the 1919-20 budget the amount asked for is less than the previous year, though some items are increased.

16. The increase of $500 for faculty allowances is required in order to properly equip the college with suitable and competent instructors.

16(a). For extending the work of the Extension Department, in harmony with the action of the Coordinating Committee, $2,000 will be required. This will be needed to provide an academic instructor on part or full time, office help and office equipment. The department will, undoubtedly, be as nearly self-supporting, after initial cost, as other academic work.

17. For library care an increase of $150 is believed necessary to put it upon a better basis, and $50 additional for books is desirable.

18. No advance has been made to office help, though the higher cost of living has made it impossible for a dollar to go more than one half so far. An increase of $120 is asked for.

19. The other items remain the same, with the exception of interest and indebtedness, both of which disappear.

20. The anticipated increase in income will offset the increase asked for in the items of expenditure, being in tuition alone $2,000.

21. Budget 1919-20

|                                   | $11,100.00 |

Indebtedness

22. When it was proposed in 1916 to put in our yearly budget one fifth of the indebtedness, amounting to over $40,000, it was believed that the plan would result in ultimately relieving the college and the church of this burden, but none hoped the task would be accomplished so soon. It is our very happy privilege to report at this time that the debt is fully paid except for a very few small items and that money is in hand to fully cover them, thanks to the united efforts of the Saints and the careful management of our worthy Bishopric. The Lord is certainly pleased with this effort, and his people should rejoice.

Scholarships

23. More students have availed themselves of the general scholarship fund than any previous year, there being eighteen who have borrowed a total of $879.

24. The Religio Fund is an ever increasing means of help along this line. Twelve students have borrowed a total of $647 this year up to the present. Some money has been returned to the fund through payment of previous loans. The amount we do not know, since we keep no account of it, the account being kept by the Religio treasurer to whom the money is returned.

25. The small amount in the Sunday School Loan Fund has been kept circulating as much as possible.

26. One Sunday school district organization and one private individual have started benefit funds of $100 each. The class of a private music teacher has started a fund to which they are adding from time to time. An aged sister and an aged brother have each deposited with the treasurer a trust fund for the benefit of worthy students.

27. All these are very much appreciated, and it might be suggested that here is an excellent opportunity for a good piece of work being done by individuals endowing scholarships and thus assisting in extending the benefits of education to those unable to secure it without assistance from others.

Student Self-help

28. Opportunity is afforded through this department to a number of students to earn a part of their school expenses by doing farm chores, tending furnaces, janitor work, gardening, kitchen and dining room work, laboratory assistant, carrying mail, etc. Upwards of $200 a month is allowed these students and from thirty to forty students receive assistance each year. An allowance of fifteen and sixteen cents an hour for the work is made, which enables one to pay his full board and room rent on working about thirty hours a week.

Hotel

29. We were gratified upon closing our books June 30 that the hotel showed a gain of $353.63. With the unprecedented advance in the price of foodstuffs we feared that a loss would be shown instead of a gain. We attribute the success to the hearty cooperation of the boarders with the managers, and the careful and saving planning of those responsible for the table service. With the further advance in prices we shall not be surprised to find this margin reduced, if it does not entirely disappear, by the closing of our fiscal year June 30, 1919. We shall be satisfied, however, if we shall not lose.

Farm

30. The season was far from an ideal one for farming, and yet the closing of the farm account revealed that a gain of $298.53 had been realized. The plan of having a man to devote practically all of his time to the farm work proper and relieve him of the care of the dairy herd largely we believe has demonstrated the wisdom of the change.

31. It has been decided wise to dispose of our Jersey herd and replace it with a dual purpose breed. The thing needed for our purpose is milk in quantity rather than rich in butter fat, as the product is used mostly on our tables. At the same time cows that may be turned into beef when found unsuitable for milk purposes and whose progeny will find a ready market should be more profitable.

Garden

32. We were disappointed in the returns from the garden, owing to the very dry weather the latter part of the season. However, a profit of $198.09 is shown by the books. As a means of supplying our tables with fruit and vegetables, it is the intention to make this feature more and more a contributing factor.

Improvements

33. As contemplated when we made our report one year ago, we have added a second story to the boiler house, constructed of tile walls, with pebble-dash finish outside, a strongly reinforced concrete floor, and a self-supporting rubberoid roof. This served as a shop until the first of the year, when it was converted into a temporary gymnasium, not having for the time being urgent need for shop work requiring heavy machinery. The expense of this improvement was about $1,450.

34. The old shop room has been provided with a board floor, has had the walls plastered, and has been partitioned into two rooms. One is used for a physics laboratory and the south part supplied with stairs leading to the library above is used as a stack room, or annex, to the library. This has improved our library facilities materially, but they are far from adequate to the needs of the college in order to make our work of such quality as to fully meet standard requirements. Besides this, our library and museum in their present quarters are exposed to serious fire risk that should be overcome at the earliest possible time.

35. It will be absolutely necessary to improve our facilities in the way of a water supply. In case the town secures an adequate supply, piping should be laid for supplying our farm premises. In case the town supply will not warrant this, then we shall have to provide by means of wells or ponds a more adequate supply than our present wells and cisterns afford.

36. Steps should be taken by which our soil could be built up and improved. It has been found that one serious fault is too much acidity, which is to be overcome by the application of lime. The college could well afford to join in a movement to procure a stone crusher or pulverizer and a spreader and secure an adequate supply of limestone for this purpose.

37. Expert service is needed in this day along all lines. A young man of the church, a graduate of some good agricultural college whose heart and soul is in the work of the church, could do a very fine piece of service in connection with our college farm interests. We should be glad to get in touch with such a young man. Our dairying interests, our orchard and gardening interests, and our farm interests would all profit by the magic of his presence. We certainly have such individuals, and hope they will make themselves known.

Respectfully submitted,
J. A. GUNSOLLEY,
Treasurer.

BOARD OF PUBLICATION

To the First Presidency and General Conference: Here-with the Board of Publication submits its annual report.

The printing concerns of the church have struggled under adverse circumstances during the past year, incident to the world-wide war, the terrible epidemic of influenza, and the constant advance of material used in our business.

We found it necessary to make an advance in the subscription price of some of our papers, but in so doing the board tried to be as conservative as possible and add only enough to make the business safe.

The circulation of our papers as a whole has not been as strong as the year before. This decrease in circulation is not confined to the church publications, but seems to be general throughout the United States on many of the secular publications, the reason assigned being the necessity of economizing on account of the great demand for finances.

We again call your attention to the desirability of making a change in our library accommodations. The Board does not wish to be too insistent on this matter, but would very much appreciate any movement by you which will enable us to utilize the space now being occupied by the church library.

We herewith attach our financial report for the fiscal year 1918, ending January 31, 1919.

This report includes that of the Herald Publishing House and the Ensign Publishing House.

We have failed to date to receive any report from the Standard Publishing House, Australia.

TEACHER'S EDITION OF THE INSPIRED TRANSLATION

To the First Presidency and General Conference: The Board of Publication reports that the manuscript for this work is finished. As reported previously the New Testament manuscript has been approved by the Revising Committee. There remains an examination of the manuscript for the Old Testament. We hope to have this done by the coming conference and active work on the composition of this book begun this coming year.

The last year has been a very trying one to our publishing department. The exactions of our Government for men for soldiers, also the wave of sickness which has swept over our land have left us very shorthanded.

We fully expect the coming year, nothing preventing, to put an extra effort on this work.

In bonds,
 A. CARMICHAEL,
 Manager Board of Publication.

THE BOOK OF MORMON CONCORDANCE

To the First Presidency and General Conference: The same may be said of the Book of Mormon Concordance. The manuscript for this work has been compiled for some time. It is not very probable that we can do much by way of printing this work this year, as our efforts will be spent on getting out the Teachers' Edition of the Inspired Translation unless the Conference see fit to instruct us to get out the Book of Mormon Concordance first.

In bonds,
 A. CARMICHAEL,
 Manager Board of Publication.

REPORT OF GOSPEL LITERATURE COMMISSION

Elder Frederick M. Smith, President of the Church, Independence, Missouri, Dear Brother: The Gospel Literature Commission was created in the year 1917, by the concerted action of the General Conference, General Sunday School and Religio Conventions. Brethren Harvey Sandy, E. D. Moore, and Ralph W. Farrell were selected to take general supervision of this work, in its infant state. Steps were taken immediately to get in touch with the districts and organize district and local gospel literature boards. Three thousand five hundred copies of the pamphlet entitled "Helpful Suggestions" were printed and circulated among interested persons. Considering that local and district members held office by election, the work of organization spread rapidly; one by one many persons and bodies caught the spirit of the great work to be done, and the interest has increased daily. The successors to the present members of the commission will have an able and enthusiastic corps of helpers.

I know from indirect reports that come to me that there are scores of local boards which have not notified me of their existence, and the figures I give of work done could be increased fifty per cent were all reports in my hands.

The local boards have, through their districts, reported the distribution of 307,466 pieces of literature. I feel sure that fully half a million pieces of our church literature have been placed in the hands of persons not affiliated with us by baptism. Hundreds of subscriptions for the church papers have been secured by the commission, many books sold, tract cases installed in public places, and religious conversations held with hundreds of persons.

The work is in its infancy. It must not be neglected. It can be improved. Many Saints believe it to be next in importance to preaching the word, the tracts and sermons are "silent preachers."

Owing to stress of other cares the present chairman could not, if chosen, give the work proper attention. He wishes to take this opportunity to convey to those who have labored with him, his fervent thanks. Their many letters have breathed a spirit of helpfulness and saintliness that have refreshed the tired brain and hungry soul.

I wish to unite my prayer with hundreds of others for the success of this wonderful work.

Yours sincerely,

RALPH W. FARRELL,
Chairman.

PROVIDENCE, February 14, 1919.

CONFERENCE MINUTES

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Friday morning Sister Mabel Knipschild Smith conducted a round table discussion upon Relief and Service work.

"Should you feed a tramp?" Should you drop coins in the hat of the street beggar?" What organizations for giving proper aid are in your city?" "Would systematic records of cases or families needing relief be of value to bishops and deacons?" "How may incompetent mothers or home-makers be most effectually reached, aroused, and helped to a better understanding of her duties and privileges?"

The above are some of the questions which were discussed with profit to those present.

Sister Smith explained the record system of the advanced charity organizations of the Nation, and suggested wherein they might be adopted to the problems of our church.

Saturday morning the meeting was opened by a discussion of young women's problems led by Sister Alice Mae Burgess and Sister Grace Thompson. Topics concerning personal habits were discussed, such as care of hair, nails, skin, etc., and were followed by those of etiquette in various phases.

SATURDAY, APRIL 12

RELIGIO CONVENTION

The third session of the Religio was held at 10 a. m. through the courtesy of the Sunday school, which had given the hour to the Religio that its business might be finished this week. G. S. Trowbridge, T. W. Williams, and F. M. McDowell presided.

The general vice presidents reported their proposed amendments setting forth duties of the first and second vice presidents. We hope every Religio worker will carefully note the change involved in the amendments which are printed herewith in full as adopted.

Please note also a ruling made by the leader of the church "boy movement," F. M. McDowell, on the matter, which is to the effect that though a local vice president is the leader of the boy movement he is not necessarily the scoutmaster of the local scouts. There need be no misunderstanding on this matter by those at all acquainted with the provisions for the appointment of scoutmasters.

The amendments with introductory statements read as follows:

General Society. Moved that we strike out Art. 3, sec. 2, par. 2, and insert the following:

"First vice president. The first vice president shall be an associate of the president in his work and in the president's absence or disability shall perform the duties of that office.

"He shall be in general charge of the social and recreational activities of the general society.

"Second vice president. The second vice president shall be an associate of the president in his work, and in the absence or disability of the president and first vice president shall perform the duties of that office. He shall be in charge of the work of the 'boy movement' of the general society."

District Constitution. Moved to strike out Art. 3, sec. 2, par. 2, and insert:

"First vice president. The first vice president shall be an associate of the president in his work, and in the president's absence or disability shall perform the duties of that office. He shall be in charge of the social and recreational activities of the district or stake societies.

"Second vice president. The second vice president shall be an associate of the president in his work, and in the absence or disability of the president and first vice president shall perform the duties of that office. He shall be in charge of the work of the 'boy movement' of the district or stake societies."

Local Constitution. Moved that we strike out Art 3, sec. 4, par. 2, and insert:

"First vice president. The first vice president shall be an associate of the president in his work, and in the president's absence or disability shall perform the duties of that office. He shall be in charge of the social and recreational activities of the local.

"Second vice president. The second vice president shall be an associate of the president in his work, and in the absence or disability of the president and first vice president shall perform the duties of that office. He shall be in charge of the work of the 'boy movement' of the local."

The Four Minute Girls rendered a chorus number.

The appropriations committee reported some pertinent observations along with estimated needs of the officers. Summed up, the idea is that the society must increase its income or decrease its expenditures.

The text of the report follows:

"We, your committee to whom was referred the matter of appropriations, report:

First: That the unlimited provision for the president makes it rather difficult to appropriate from an undetermined remainder.

Second: The net income for last year, not including what was drawn from the former balance was but $1,383.29.

Third: With the present policy of the Religio to go into recreational work rather than study, has already and will probably decrease the sale of Quarterlies. In view of this the society should at once devise some other plan for revenue.

Fourth: We suggest the following are needed:

|                                      |          |
|--------------------------------------|----------|
| First vice president .....           | $ 40.00 |
| Second vice president .....          | 60.00    |
| Secretary .....                      | 75.00    |
| Treasurer .....                      | 25.00    |
| Home department superintendent ..... | 75.00    |
| Temperance department .....          | 40.00    |
| Library Commission .....             | 50.00    |
| Normal department .....              | 50.00    |
| Editorial work .....                 | 375.00   |
| Contingent .....                     | 300.00   |
| Graceland scholarship .....          | 300.00   |

Total .....$1,390.00

Fifth: The appropriations here provided for exceed the net income for last year $6.71, not allowing anything for the president's expense.

Sixth: We suggest that it is a matter of policy for the society to determine whether it shall increase its revenue or whether it shall limit its work.

Respectfully,

J. A. BECKER,
MARK H. SIEGFRIED.

Action on the above was deferred till the report of the coordinating committee could be read and acted on, including nominations of subordinate officers.

The report of the Coordinating Committee was presented as follows:

REPORT OF COORDINATING COMMITTEE

[The following was submitted to the Religio Convention by the committee, and adopted with the exception of the allusion to the Gospel Literature Commission, which was referred to the General Conference. The nominations were considered separately.]

To the General Conference and Conventions: Since the conference and conventions a year ago the Coordinating Committee has held several meetings, and as a result of these meetings we wish to submit the following report and recommendations:

The chief, if not the only function of the Coordinating Committee is to determine the placement of newly organized or reorganized activities. In the expansion of our church work, and in the efforts to supply demands constantly arising, activities will repeatedly be started with regard to which there will be a question as to which one of the departments the activity shall be assigned. To determine where the various activities shall function when such question is raised, is the primary duty of the Coordinating Committee.

The purpose, therefore, of the creation of this committee is to unify the work. To accomplish this there must be only one such committee, and the very purpose of its creation is threatened by the creation of local so-called coordinating committees in branch, district, or stake. The work of coordinating locally is a function of the executives of the departments. To have local coordinating committees doing work similar to that of the general, would be to confuse rather than to clarify.

We recommend that the nomination of district and local department heads be a matter for cooperation between the departments.

The committee recommends that the Social Purity Board as it has existed in the past be abolished and its work, so far as initiative is concerned, be referred to the Woman's Auxiliary. Because of the close correlation of the work of the Woman's Auxiliary to the homes of the church, the committee feels that this work should logically belong to this auxiliary.

During the past year the Woman's Auxiliary has conducted a correspondence course in public speaking. The demand for this course has been so great that we recommend that this course be referred to Graceland College, provided an extension department shall be organized at the college.

We suggest that the Lecture Board activities, now directed by the Religio department, be placed under the control and direction of the college, subject to the provision mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

The social and recreational responsibilities of the Religio department have been carefully considered by the committee in connection with the organized class movement, and we suggest that organized classes in both Sunday school and Religio should be encouraged to develop social life from the gospel standpoint; and so far as practicable the same units should form classes in both departments. Their social activities should be conducted in connection with the Religio.

The committee recommends the adoption of the suggestion of the joint report of the normal superintendent that the normal training work be turned over to Graceland College, provided the extension department is organized. (See printed reports, page 91.)

The work of the Gospel Literature Commission also was discussed by the committee. Our recommendation is that the general commission should be abolished, but that the local (district and branch) boards should be continued.

The committee is prepared to recommend nominations for subordinate officers of the Religio and Woman's Auxiliary departments, as follows:

Religio:

First vice president, T. W. Williams.
 Second vice president, F. M. McDowell.
 Secretary, Howard W. Harder.
 Treasurer, R. A. Lloyd.
 Home department superintendent, Mrs. H. W. Harder.
 Member Library Commission, Vernon A. Reese.
 Temperance superintendent, J. W. Gunsolley.
 Woman's Auxiliary:
 First vice president, Mrs. J. A. Gardner.
 Second vice president, Mrs. William Madison.
 Secretary, Mrs. J. A. Koehler.

Treasurer, Mrs. F. B. Blair.

Historian, Mrs. M. H. Siegfried.

Respectfully submitted,
 FREDERICK M. SMITH, Chairman.

Objection was raised, especially by the general literature commission members, to the following paragraph, and a motion made to exclude it from adoption:

The work of the Gospel Literature Commission also was discussed by the committee. Our recommendation is that the General Commission should be abolished, but that the local (district and branch) boards be continued.

The vote to exclude prevailed by a large majority. Excepting this, the report was adopted.

The nominations for officers were taken up and one by one elected. They are:

T. W. Williams, first vice president.

F. M. McDowell, second vice president.

Howard W. Harder, secretary.

R. A. Lloyd, treasurer.

Mrs. Howard W. Harder, superintendent of home department.

Vernon A. Reese, member library commission.

J. W. Gunsolley, superintendent temperance department.

A motion referred the gospel literature suggestion to the General Conference, with the idea of providing some definite provision for keeping it alive.

Though the report of the appropriations committee suggested a shortage in income, yet attention was called to the fact that the society was not bankrupt, having a balance on hand of $4,474.24.

A motion was made to refer the budget back to the appropriations committee and the executives of the society with full power to act. The majority of the speakers favored using the funds on hand to the extending of the work of the society. Lack of time prevented an adoption of all the good suggestions made. When the vote was put to refer it carried unanimously.

Miss Lucy White rendered a piano solo.

The Religio tendered a vote of thanks to the Sunday school for the courtesy of giving the session to the Religio. Votes of thanks were tendered retiring officers, Donnie Lehman, secretary; James W. Stobaugh, whom she succeeded, also William F. Sage; all to be notified.

Adjournment was had at 12.10, and the Religio began its new year's work under favorable circumstances.

The Sunday school convention was announced for Monday, 10 to 12 a. m.

The business session of conference met at 2 p. m. with President F. M. Smith in the chair, and prayer by J. A. Becker.

The chair was yielded to President Elbert A. Smith, and the minutes were read.

The Presidency presented written appreciation for the midnight serenade during the previous night, given by the singers, under the leadership of A. N. Hoxie.

The chair was yielded to J. A. Tanner at 2.15, the visitors seated, and B. R. McGuire secured the floor to review the three speeches made yesterday.

T. W. Williams next secured the floor at 2.45. He spoke until 3.30.

At that time L. G. Holloway was recognized and took the floor.

At 3.55 Elder Holloway closed his remarks, and as one man something like a dozen men called "Mr. Chairman!" Paul M. Hanson, of the Twelve, was recognized. The audience was comforted with the statement that he intended to speak very briefly—only intending to review the whole situation! At 4.55 he suggested that he did not wish to weary the audience if they wished to leave. The chairman adjourned the meeting when we were assured the speaker was not nearly through.

Announcements for the evening and Sunday were made, including a missionary program this evening at the church.

A telegram from Independence said that Heman C. Smith had had no sleep for twenty-four hours, was spitting blood, and appetite failing.

A busy day is imminent for Sunday, with all the services announced, and some unannounced.

The evening meeting at the church this evening was a missionary program, a most successful affair in every way. Elsewhere we are printing the program of this event and commend the singing of the songs to the tunes suggested to others throughout the church—they are very effective.

The speaker at the Coliseum was F. G. Pitt.

SUNDAY, APRIL 13

This was a day of many activities. At 7 a. m. a goodly number of vigorous, earnest young people met at the post office and "hiked" to the college where they held a characteristic prayer meeting. Brother Hoxie was their leader.

At 8 the Saints gathered to a general prayer meeting at the church, which was in charge of R. S. Salyards and D. J. Krahl, presidents of the Far West and Holden Stakes, respectively.

At 9.30 the local Sunday school occupied under the superintendency of G. W. Blair. In the upper auditorium the time was devoted to short speeches by T. W. Williams, D. J. Krahl, Ward L. Christy, L. F. P. Curry, F. F. Wipper, and J. F. Keir. In the lower rooms the various departments held their usual class work.

There were three sermons at the 11 o'clock hour, one at the church by Walter W. Smith in the upper auditorium, by J. F. Garver in the lower, and Daniel Macgregor at the Coliseum.

In the afternoon at 3 the speaker in the upper auditorium at the church was F. G. Pitt, in the lower room J. A. Becker, and at the Coliseum Elders Philip Cook (full-blooded Cheyenne Indian) and Hubert Case occupied.

In the evening the speaker in the upper auditorium was J. F. Keir, and T. W. Williams at the Coliseum. The writer attended the latter, and long before the time for opening the seats were full. In the afternoon it was the same, and we are informed that all the meetings were well attended. The roads were better than for some time, and many autos brought visitors in from the country. The day was seasonable and pleasant, and the character of the sermons most commendable. We very much deplore our inability to secure sufficient stenographic help to have the various sermons reported, but we have a few summaries.

MONDAY, APRIL 14

The day began with prospects of clearing, after .44 inch rain during the night, beginning about 9 Sunday evening.

The 7 a. m. prayer meeting was held as usual, at the church.

At eight President F. M. Smith addressed the priesthood at the Coliseum. A number of difficult matters were discussed, and some pertinent questions asked.

The prayer meeting at 9 was in charge of V. M. Goodrich and J. B. Wildermuth.

The elders met at 9.15 and listened to a paper on "court procedure" by Charles Fry—one that had been read before the High Priests' Quorum.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

The second session was held at 10 o'clock with G. R. Wells in charge. Since his assistant was otherwise engaged, he asked D. J. Krahl to assist in presiding.

Central Oklahoma had published a proposed amendment, asking that the constitution be changed so that library boards and commissions could be under the supervision of one member instead of three or more as at present provided for. The resolutions committee recommended this be referred to the Coordinating Committee, which was done.

A resolution was brought in, looking to earlier publication of the Quarterlies, and a more international character. Considerable information was elicited in the discussion: for instance that under the postal rules it is impossible to mail one Quarterly till all the others are ready, so one editor behind time delays all the others. Yet since the editors are doing yeoman service and under considerable stress, beginning behind time at first we should not expect too much of them in making up lost time. Mere resolutions cannot change the situation, but a centralizing of control, a calling together of the editors, a competent revisionary arrangement might.

The whole question was referred to the executive committee with full power to act—a reaffirmation of last year's action. It is an intricate question and will require some expenditure of money as well as time. We hope it can be worked out.

A letter from the First Presidency was read, in which the names of G. R. Wells and A. L. Sanford were suggested. The vote resulted in the unanimous choice of G. R. Wells as superintendent.

CONFERENCE REPORTS

THE SAINTS' HOMES

To the First Presidency and General Conference: We present the following report for the year 1918 of the Saints' Homes:

The Homes for the Aged at Lamoni, Iowa, have, during the year 1918, as usual, been occupied to their capacity and those in charge, notwithstanding the serious shortage of labor have done nobly for the comfort of the old people.

The general health has been good considering the average age of those living there. Only three deaths have occurred, two at the Saints' Home and one at Liberty. Three have removed to homes of their own. Five have been received. There are now in the two homes twenty men and thirty women, a total of fifty whose average age is above seventy-six years.

The management has been under the general supervision of the Lamoni Stake Bishopric with Sister Alice Dancer in charge as matron at the Saints' Home and Sister J. T. Williams at Liberty Home.

We feel that a few words of commendation are due these worthy sisters who are devoting their lives to the comfort and welfare of those under their care; Sister Dancer has been in charge at the Saints' Home since its opening, over twenty years and has been untiring in her effort to make the home what it should be.

There is urgent need of an able assistant at the home to relieve her of some of the arduous duties and we take occasion here to say that any capable sister, anxious to engage in a good work, may here find an opportunity worthy of her effort.

The farm department of the home has been under the able supervision of Brother Floyd T. Lesh, a practical farmer and graduate of one of our agricultural colleges, a thoroughly consecrated young man, who is devoting his talent to the work at a great financial sacrifice on his part.

His report of the farm will appear over his own signature.

Some of the needs of the homes are:

A practical or graduate nurse, to have charge of the sick and look after the sanitation.

Capable cooks and housekeepers who could and would make these positions their permanent employment and take an interest in conducting their departments in an economical and sanitary manner.

Brother A. J. Yarrington has occupied as business manager for the Bishopric and his report of the finances are made to appear in a report appended hereto.

A. J. YARRINGTON,
Manager.

HOLDEN HOME

To the Presidency and General Conference: The Home at Holden closed the year 1918 with forty-five inmates. The average age of these inmates is 72½ years, the ages ranging from thirty-nine to eight-eight years.

Sister Almina Rhonemus has acted as matron, and she has given devoted service. Brother D. J. Krahl, president of the Holden Stake, has given much consideration to the improvements which have been made for the comfort of these aged people. Considerable yet remains to be done before we shall be able to give the service we desire to give.

M. H. SIEGFRIED.

When we are busy we are apt to think better of our surroundings. Work brings happiness and idleness breeds discontent. Lot's wife was used as an example very early in the history of the world to demonstrate the fact that when God is leading men from danger to safety it is best not to look back. Yet that example was soon forgotten. The children of Israel suffered great hardships under the oppression. They were slaves with scant food and hard labor. Life seemed not worth living. Yet while Moses was leading them to the promised land they were looking back with regrets to the flesh-pots. They regretted their lost portions of garlic. They were not "worthy of the kingdom."—E. A. Smith.

Yet the great Judge knows the limitations and the surroundings of every man, and the man makes good in his sight who does his best, no matter how many may do better. Nor will your reward be less because you help another man to make his reward greater. Nor will your coronation be delayed a day because you stop by the way to help others.—E. A. Smith.

To persevere in one's duty and be silent is the best answer to calumny.—General Washington.

Little Brown Bag

(A song to the missionary's grip.)

BY ELBERT A. SMITH

[Sung by F. A. Russell at the missionary meeting at General Conference, Saturday evening, April 12.]

Yes, two by two, we have often heard,
They should go forth who preach the word;
But, little brown grip, twixt me and you,
It sometimes happens we are the two.
And more than once you've pillowed my head
When in one I had both board and bed.
Ah, little brown bag, it's I love thee—
In many a field you've gone with me.

Chorus:

Ah, little brown bag, it's you and me
About the Master's work must be!
My books in you and you in my hand,
We will go forth at God's command.

And when I come to the sacred stand,
To declare the message true and grand,
I take the book of the law from you,
And give it back when the sermon's through.
You're always open to take or give
The things by which mankind should live;
But your mouth is shut, when better so—
A very good trait, as all should know.

Chorus:

And when at night in my room alone,
My thoughts go back to the folks at home,
I take again from your close embrace
Each well-known photo of each loved face.
For many treasures you hide away
From thoughtless gaze of the idle, gay.
For you are a mystery-magic bag,
A little brown friend that bears my tag.

Chorus:

Here is a lock from my small boy's head,
And wife's report of the things he said.
And here is the little first red boot,
Worn by my little first baby's foot.
You help me build in some strange room
The altars brought from a distant home;
And near to me are the ones I love,
As I kneel down to the God above.

Chorus:

I'll pack you full of the gospel load—
You'll not complain on the hardest road.
Ah, little brown bag, and glory be,
If as much all times be true of me.
I hope when the Judgment Day comes along
To march right in with that white throng,
And face the Judge, so kind, yet grand,
My books in you and you in my hand.

Chorus:

HEMAN C. SMITH

The whole church mourns the passing away on April 17, at the Independence Sanitarium, of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. Just a few weeks since he was afflicted with a severe attack of asthma. He has suffered from it before, but never so very severely. He was taken west in the hopes of receiving help, but could not stand the mountain air. Returning to Independence, he has since been in the Sanitarium.

The items of his life as gathered in his autobiography in the fourth volume of Church History are as follows:

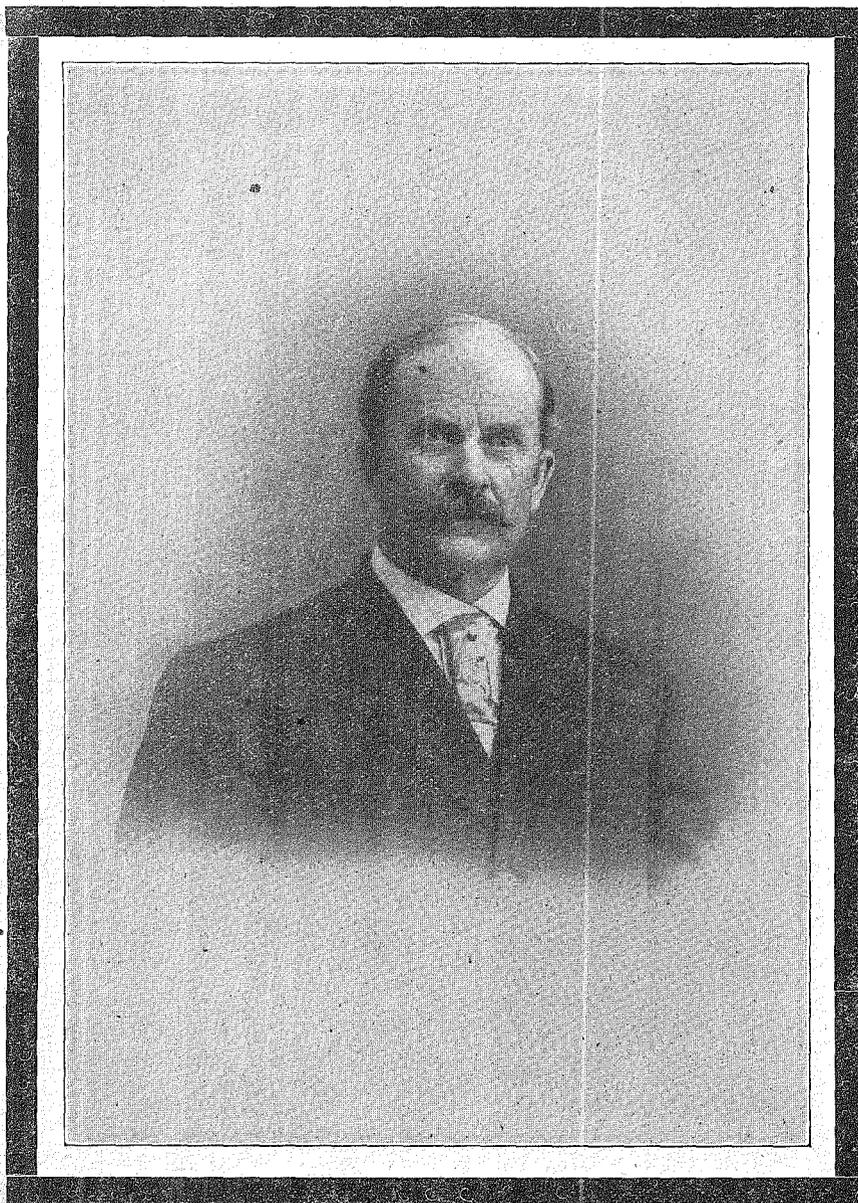

He was born September 27, 1850, in Zodiac, near Fredericksburg, Texas, and was the fourth child of Spencer and Anna C. Wight Smith. In 1858 they moved to Indian Territory, and two years later to Missouri. But the following year they moved to Gallands Grove, Iowa, where he spent his remaining childhood and youth. There they were visited by W. W. Blair, E. C. Briggs, and others, and he was baptized on October 7, 1862, by William H. Kelley, taking this step on his own convictions and not from the influence of his parents or others.

On March 14, 1874, he was ordained to the office of elder, and at once entered the missionary work in the district, but in the fall Joseph R. Lambert chose him as a colaborer in Iowa, southern Illinois, southern Indiana, and Kentucky. In 1876 he was ordained a seventy under the hands of James Caffall and others.

In addition to the fields mentioned he labored in Nebraska, Kansas, Tennessee, Alabama, Florida, southern Mississippi, Michigan, Canada, Texas, western Louisiana, Arkansas, and Indian Territory, as a seventy.

In 1885 he was ordained one of the seven Presidents of Seventy, and in 1887 he was called to the office of apostle, and ordained March 30, 1888, by President Joseph Smith and others. In the meantime, on June 2, 1886, he had been united in marriage to Vida E., the oldest daughter of Alexander H. Smith, and to them were born, at San Bernar-and to them were born, at San Bernardino, California, their four children: Heman Hale, Vida Inez, Anna Earlita, and Lois Elizabeth, the last of whom preceded him to the other side.

In the Quorum of Twelve he labored as assistant secretary, and later as secretary, which position he held for nearly twenty years. As an apostle he labored in Australasia, throughout the southern fields of the United States, both southeastern and southwestern, in the Rocky Mountain Mission, England, and Wales, as well as in Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, and Indiana.

In 1896 he had been appointed with President Joseph Smith to write the history of the church, and in 1895-1900 he acted as corresponding editor of the HERALD. In 1897 he was made Church Historian, and still held this position until the day of his decease.

For twelve years his work was divided between the apostolic quorum and the work of historian, but in 1909 he was released from the former appointment in order to devote all of his time to his work as Church Historian.

In the history of Decatur County, Elder Smith states that he is a grandson of Lyman Wight, and though born in the south, a thorough New-Englander in ancestry, tracing his descent from over thirty families who landed on Puritan soil in the first twenty-five years of settlement, nearly three hundred years ago. Among the most prominent were Stephen Hopkins, one of the Mayflower pilgrims, and a signer of the first contract of free government in America; John Chedsey, deacon of the first church in New Haven, and signer of the Connecticut State Constitution in 1643.

He was a member of the Mississippi Valley Historical Society, the Iowa State Historical Society, the Nebraska State Historical Society, Topfield Historical Society of Topfield, Massachusetts, the American Church Historical Society, the National Geographical Society, Secretary of the Decatur County, Iowa, Historical Society, Editor of the Journal of History during the full time of its publication. He has served as president of the Board of Trustees of the Children's Home, on the Board of Graceland College, on the local school board, and in other capacities.

He has been the author of four volumes of Church History and of many booklets on behalf of the church, as "The truth defended," and "True succession in church presidency," as well as numerous tracts and articles for church and historical magazines. He had material for a fifth volume of Church History prepared when the fire of 1907 destroyed his materials. He went to work and again had gathered material for one or two volumes, but was prevented during these latter years from preparing the final manuscript.

From this rather brief survey, it will be seen that Heman C. Smith has had a life of activity and of honor, and has served earnestly the cause to which he has devoted his life. He possessed in a marked degree that independence of thought and critical judgment of the value of evidence essential to the true historian. He possessed a truly remarkable knowledge of the details of the history of the church from its reestablishment nearly a hundred years ago. The loss of his counsel will be missed by many, and probably by none so much as by us who have been permitted to be closely associated with him here in Lamoni.

He was a defender of the faith of unusual courage and ability. He always tried to be impartial, both to friend and foe, and deal justly with all men. He would not concede a doubtful point even for the sake of an argument, but insisted upon absolute justice as near as he could secure it, and especially so in dealing with questions of history.

He is survived by Vida E. Smith, his widow, who has helped him with much of his work and is the author of the juvenile history, as well as other works; Heman Hale Smith, his son, professor of history and economics, at Lincoln High School, Seattle, Washington; Vida Inez Davis, the wife of James W. Davis, one of the Seven Presidents of Seventy, and a missionary of the church; Earlita Inslee, the wife of Evan E. Inslee, of Seattle, Washington; Joseph W., and Hyrum O., his brothers; John W. Wight, his uncle; and many other relatives in Lamoni and vicinity.

His funeral service was held April 20, Easter Sunday. This seems particularly appropriate for a true Christian, holding as we do the lively hope of resurrection from the dead. At such a time there is no more fitting theme than, "He is not here, for he has risen." We wait with that hope, though in sorrow.

PRESIDENT SMITH'S CLOSING ADDRESS

Just before the closing of the last session of the recent conference, President Frederick M. Smith said a number of notes had come to the stand asking him to make a speech. The assembly emphasized it with vigorous applause, after which he made the following remarks:

It is a matter of fact as well as regret that no battle can be engaged in without there being casualties, and while our forensic encounter has perhaps not been followed by death, there have been a number of what the Frenchman would call blessé, or wounded—that is to say, there have been scars left, some of which perhaps are still felt; and this perhaps not only is true of those who engaged in the struggle, but those who were on-lookers as well, for I realize that perhaps no individual in the church who has witnessed the many debates that have been engaged in, rather warmly at times, in this conference, has been able entirely to separate himself from that debate in the way of interest, and without doubt many have had their faith disturbed. And yet we can expect that, and for that very reason we are wont to sing, "O for a faith that will not shrink"; and perhaps it is not without design that God intends that these hours of trial to our faith shall come, for faith, like everything else that is genuine, is enhanced by the processes of refinement.

There are those, of course, who sometimes in looking upon the servant of God do not see the man, and when the man is revealed their faith is disturbed. And yet there perhaps will not be the time, this side of the millennium at least, when the servant of God will be anything else than a human being—that is, so far as his propensities are concerned. In other words, being human, we cannot expect that all our manifestations and expressions will be divine, and those whose faith is disturbed by seeing the man beneath the cloak of the servant are those who perhaps will be continuously subjected to this trial of faith.

Yet there is before us that which will require a greater faith on the part of our church members than at any period in the past history of the church, for let me repeat what I have said in the opening paragraph of my message, not only do we have the work of the church to carry on, but we have it to carry on amidst that great reconstruction period of the Nation and of the nations and of the world, and reconstruction periods of national and international existence are always accompanied by tension and difficulty. Furthermore, the present period of reconstruction, not only in this Nation, but in all the nations which have engaged in the war, and many which have not, is accompanied by the fabric of the nations being shot through with a spirit of discontent greater and more intense than the world has ever seen before.

Let me repeat, from the dangers of this discontent there is no nation free, and not even the church escapes; and those of you who will keep your eyes open and your ears to the ground—and you will not have to look closely nor listen intently—will see the evidences on every hand that our own solidarity is threatened by that spirit of discontent, of anarchy, of bolshevism, or whatever you wish to call it.

This all goes to say that the conditions under which we go forth from this conference are unusual. The church never has before faced the same conditions. Everything to one who believes in prophecy indicates that this church has entered fully upon the sifting time and the forces of that sifting time are certainly at work. Let me warn you of this: You may have undertaken to determine or foresee the shape that these forces will assume, but no man knows, and so far as you are individually concerned, these forces are likely to shake you in a way that you never anticipated, and the trials that will come to you will come in a way that will give you the most severe test, you can depend upon that. What is true individually is true collectively. It seems to me it only takes an ordinary observer to predict that the trials before the church as an organization are greater than we have ever passed through before. That is not pessimism, it is just simply exercising judgment.

Always the fundamental characteristic of a Christian soldier is faith, and never in the history of the church was that essential more pronounced than to-day; and to those who still cling to the principle of belief in inspiration let me say, Cling to it as you never clung to it before, for only by the direction and help of Almighty God will this church survive. I could repeat this perhaps in another way, and that is that the sifting time being here there never was a period in the history of the church when there was a greater demand, a more urgent demand upon every member of the church to take an inventory of where he is, of what he is, of what his religious stock in trade is, his relation to the church, and consider to what extent he is prepared to give his time, his energies, his means to the service of God and the service of his church. That task becomes of prime individual importance, and certainly as a church it is absolutely essential that there be a body of men and women prepared to carry on the work of this church whose every energy and strength and devotion is consecrated to the furthering of the purposes of God as manifest through the activities of the church.

It is with this belief that I undertake the responsibility I would gladly have been relieved of. I once heard a definition of a prophet; let me give it to you: it is a man who expects to see his ideals realized. I have been such a man. I hope that the development of this church will not be such as to forestall that hope in your leader, and that we might be able to realize the outstanding ideals of the church that stand as one of the most enthusing and shining goals towards which any people ever worked, I sincerely pray from the bottom of my heart that we might have the directional influence of God and his peace to be with us.

CLOSING PRAYER OF THE CONFERENCE

BY PRESIDENT ELBERT A. SMITH

We look unto thee, our heavenly Father, thanking thee that now as we are about to separate we may do so with united forces. We pray, our heavenly Father, that the gentle hand of charity may bind up the wounds that any may have received in the house of their friends; and from thy great heart of love wilt thou pour out the oil of love that shall heal. Help us to forgive and forget as becomes men of God and go forward in the work that lies before us.

Bless the traveling ministry wherever they shall go, as they are sent by the church, directed by the Holy Spirit. Endow them with power as they shall need, standing as they often do alone and opposed by every force that the adversary can bring at his command.

Bless the standing ministry that they may minister to the needs of the people as is becoming to those who have charge of the flock of God.

Be with those that remain at home, and may we all together in the coming year approve ourselves worthy to be called the church of the living God.

Be with us when we reassemble again in a conference; grant that the mistakes that we may have made at this conference may not be repeated, but that we may assemble one in spirit and deport ourselves in that way.

So, Lord, we commend ourselves to thy care, favor, and blessing, in Jesus' name, Amen.

THE MATTER AT ISSUE

The DAILY HERALD has printed promptly that which has been the basis of discussion and division the last several days, though the paragraphs were not numbered when we printed the President's message. The paragraph under discussion was the first one, page 357 of the SAINTS' HERALD, under the heading of the "Work of the Twelve." The matters discussed have been this program or policy of the President as set forth in the succeeding paragraphs on that page.

The vital part of the report of the Twelve was a resolution adopted by them about February 13, providing for a return to the division of the world into missions or fields. As is shown in the message of President Smith, this policy did not appeal to him as he believed that the Twelve had a larger scope and field of service than to be limited by lines and boundaries. Our late president, Joseph Smith, made a similar statement in the HERALD for May 1, 1866. (See volume 9.)

The resolution of the Twelve was:

Further, in order to more adequately meet the present demands of the "entire field of ministerial labor," it is the sense of this body that the "entire field of ministerial labor" should be carefully considered by the Presidency and the Twelve, and provision made for the division of the entire field, into missions, sections, or fields by the interaction of these two quorums; always recognizing the principle:—"For unto you (the Twelve), and those (the First Presidency), who are appointed with you, to be your counselors and your leaders"; as provided for in the Doctrine and Covenants (sections 104: 12; 122: 11; 105: 12).

Since the Twelve met prior to the call for the joint council of Presidency and Twelve, and presented this as their unanimous action, and since the Quorum of First Presidency were opposed to a return to the division of the mission work into fields or missions over each of which should be placed a member of the Quorum of Twelve, the meeting of the joint council had been adjourned indefinitely, as there seemed to be no purpose in meeting.

However, it developed that this is not the construction placed by all the quorum on this resolution, but only by a part of the Quorum of Twelve. While others insist that it was not the wish of the Quorum of Twelve to present this resolution as a final action, but only as a basis for discussion. Both quorums conceded that there is need of amendment and correction of the policy under which the Quorum of Twelve has been acting the past year.

As the matter came before the conference, the question was on adopting this first paragraph in the message of the President under "The work of the Twelve," as given on page 357 of the SAINTS' HERALD. Objection was made to the use of the word "subordinate" as well as "under." Still the members of the Quorum of Twelve freely conceded their entire willingness to work "under the direction of the Presidency" as is provided in the law in these words. (Doctrine and Covenants 104:12; 122:2, 3; 123:23; and as also inferred from other passages as 105:7.) But they also urged the coordinate aspect of the quorums (104:11; 122:9, 10; 126:10). Also, the Twelve preferred the interpretation of Doctrine and Covenants 105:7, 11, preferring the word "with," nor were there any serious controversies over this construction, that the two quorums should work one with the other.

Since the two quorums appeared to differ on this one question, as to whether the missionary field should be divided into separate missions, sections, or fields, the President of the church brought it before the General Conference to determine, and with it brought the other points of his general policy. One of the principal objections of the Twelve was that this platform had not first been submitted to them for consideration.

As soon as it became apparent, about Thursday evening, that it was not the intention of the Twelve to present this as an ultimatum, but instead as a basis for discussion, the Presidency communicated with the Twelve, and as a result they met Friday morning. But since the matter was already before the house, discussion did not cease, but instead a resolution was adopted on Friday afternoon, as has already been set out in the SAINTS' HERALD, that no action would be taken until the Presidency and Twelve had had opportunity to canvass this message of the President as printed in the SAINTS' HERALD on page 357.

As is frequently, if not usually the case, the discussion was very frank and open, but did not and does not prevent cooperation and respect one for another.

On Monday, April 14, the conference deferred further discussion until report is made to this conference by the joint council of Presidency and Twelve. The principal effect of the motion would be to defer to a time certain, that time being contingent upon the report from these two quorums.

On Tuesday, April 15, the two quorums reported agreement unanimously as reported in this issue, and this was promptly adopted by the body.

So long as men are human there is bound to arise occasional friction. So long as men are finite and are attempting to progress, there will be differences of opinion as to the rate at which we should attempt to progress, and also sometimes almost acrimonious discussion of any platform or policy which in changing in any particular that which has been done in the past, attempts to progress to better things. But so long as the Spirit of Christ directs, discussion is left on the floor of the assembly, and all unite to carry out the decision of the body.

It is not unnatural that some should wish to progress more rapidly than others. It is not unnatural that some should see the problem before us more plainly than do others. These make differences which become more or less strong at times, but so long as they are considered in a spirit of forbearance, so long as the good of the work as a whole is the primary consideration, the onward movement of the work as a whole is sure.

In early Church History, volume 2, page 9, in an account of the meeting between the Presidency and Twelve in 1836, after the Twelve had expressed themselves quite frankly, President Joseph Smith, jr., presented the question whether they were ready to continue in the work, regardless of whether they could then be satisfied or not, and they voted unanimously that they would. They then proceeded to settle quickly the differences between them. That is practically what has occurred this year.

It is that spirit of love for the truth, that desire to continue with the church and its work which assures us, though differences of opinion arise.

The issues have been so beclouded and confused with collateral matters that they have been difficult to present. We cannot print all the speeches because of length, and inability to secure stenographers. Short of that there was danger of giving an unfair picture of the actual situation.

BOARD OF PUBLICATION NOTES

The annual meeting of the Board of Publication resulted in the following:

B. R. McGuire, president of the board; J. F. Keir, vice president; M. H. Siegfried, secretary; A. Carmichael, manager and treasurer.

The editors and business managers were continued, with the exception of the Journal of History, which office was declared vacant. Pending the action of the joint council toward the reorganization of the historical department, the manager of the board was authorized to provide for the issuance of the magazine.

For the information of those not acquainted with the former personnel of editors, we name them here: F. M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, editors; Samuel A. Burgess, associate editor; Edward D. Moore, assistant editor, of the SAINTS' HERALD.

For Zion's Ensign: Walter W. Smith, editor; Richard J. Lambert, associate editor and business manager, also advertising manager; Isaac M. Smith and John W. Rushton, contributing editors.

Autumn Leaves: Elbert A. Smith, editor; Edward D. Moore, associate editor.

Stepping Stones: Estella Wight, editor.

Zion's Hope: Ethel I skank and Estella Wight, editors.

Arrangements are being made to properly advertise the Kirtland and Nauvoo properties so the traveling public may get a proper idea of our work and know what to look for at those historic spots.

The gospel literature proposition is being looked into and the extent of it determined so they may know what is necessary to care for the department.

DON CARLOS SALISBURY

Died at his home in Ferris, Illinois, April 6, 1919, Don Carlos Salisbury, nephew of the Martyr Joseph Smith. He served over three years in the Civil War, and was promoted for gallantry in action. He was an elder and first counselor to Bishop G. P. Lambert. Held numerous township offices in Hancock County and was instrumental in building up the Reorganization in the county, where he was universally honored and respected. He was the father of H. S. Salisbury, Assistant Church Historian. He was named after Don Carlos Smith, youngest brother of the Martyr.

AN APPEAL FROM THE HIGH COUNCIL

See Doctrine and Covenants 104:35, especially the following:

"And after this decision it shall be had in remembrance no more before the Lord; for this is the highest council of the Church of God, and a final decision upon controversies, in spiritual matters."

It will be seen from this that there is a difference between the standing high council and the traveling high council.

In Doctrine and Covenants 99:9 it is stated there is no appeal, and a decision of the traveling high council can only be called in question by the general authorities of the church, in case of transgression. In the latter passage it states that if the decision of the quorum is made in unrighteousness, it may be brought before a general assembly of the several quorums which constitute the spiritual authorities of the church; otherwise there can be no appeal from their decision.

There would appear to be a good reason for this difference. The decisions referred to in 104:11 by this concurrent body, the traveling high council, evidently concerns the law and usages of the church. Thus we notice in 126:10 that the interpretation of the temporal law by the Bishop is to be acceded to unless the rights of the people are brought in jeopardy. But if there should be a flagrant disregard of the people, these quorums, the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy, may be called upon to render a decision, evidently because such a ruling affects not only the past and present, but also the future administration of the church. It is not a case with an individual, but concerns the law and usages of the church.

It is plainly stated in 126:11 that in case of transgression the Bishop should be called in question "before the council which is provided for in the law, to which court all the general officers of the church are to be subject." This is evidently the High Council (section 104:35, 36).

Personal wrong doing should be decided once for all, and then dismissed.

A case of personal difficulty or controversy between individuals should be adjusted as soon as possible. But if it is carried up through the various courts of the church, when it is decided by the standing high council, it should be had no more before the Lord.

There is always the possibility of an error in the decision of any body. The decision of the traveling high council concerns the law and usages of the church, and so affects the future as well as the present of the church, hence provision is made in case of emergency that such decision may be reviewed by a general assembly of the spiritual authorities of the church.

But as to difficulties between individuals, or where one man is called in question the value of having the issue set at rest and disposed of exceeds possible injury from an erroneous decision by the High Council. It is to the interest of the church that such matters be disposed of. It is in accordance with the divine law that a devoted effort be made towards reconciliation. But finally it must be set at rest. That is the law as set forth in the books of the church. (104:35.)

Of course, the body in General Conference, has the right to sustain or refuse to sustain any quorum or body of men. They also have the right to define the duties of any body or quorum, and no quorum should have the final right to define its own powers. But this does not bring into question any particular decision as affecting the individual.

We have attempted sometimes to point out that there is not an inherent right of an appeal to the High Council, but only the more important cases and more important business of the church should be taken there. If there were provision to take a case from the High Council to the General Conference or General Assembly, provision would have to be made for frequent meetings of that body, as there are some who think they have the inherent right to continue to litigate. Such is not the case. After the decision by the High Council of the church before the Presidency of the high priesthood, it shall be had in remembrance no more before the Lord.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY

In the absence of a decision by the proper authorities we respectfully submit the following:

In Church History, volume 1, page 572, is to be found the minutes of a general assembly held in Kirtland, August 17, 1835. These same minutes are to be found in the book of Doctrine and Covenants immediately after section 108.

In the history of the church we note conferences being held at various points, especially in the land of Zion, and in Kirtland, and later at Nauvoo. All of the quorums were not necessarily represented. Particularly is this true of the High Council. So that we note that Joseph Smith was sustained as President of the church in a conference of high priests, elders, and members, held at Amherst, Ohio, on the 25th of January, 1832. On April 26, at Independence, he called a general council of the church, and was again acknowledged as president of the high priesthood.

Now in this General Assembly we find the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, the High Council of Kirtland, the High Council of Zion, Bishopric, the Council of the Seventies, then Elder John Gould, as acting president, organized the traveling elders, an acting president organized the priests, an acting president organized the teachers, and an acting president organized the deacons. It may be noted that the elders, priests, teachers, and deacons did not assemble as individual quorums, but evidently en masse, and chose an acting president who organized them, and who reported their deliberations. Of the bishops some apparently gave individual testimony, as did also some of the assistant presidents.

In the Doctrine and Covenants we notice 99:13 and 119:7 have been considered to refer to a General Assembly. Quorums may meet in a conference and yet not be organized, for the purpose of considering the law of the church articles and covenants.

Then Church History, volume 2, page 117, reads as follows:

Minutes of a conference at Far West, Missouri, November 7, 1837. At a general assembly of the Church of Latter Day Saints assembled at Far West, to take into consideration and transact the business of said church, Elder Thomas B. Marsh was chosen as moderator.

We note here, however, that President Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, and F. G. Williams were immediately after chosen to preside. They reorganized the Presidency and the Twelve at that time, or at least voted to sustain them; also the Presiding Bishop and his counselors, the patriarch, the keeper of the Lord's storehouse, and the seven presidents of Seventy.

Church History, volume 2, page 140, there is a record of a General Assembly at Far West, February 5, 1838, with Thomas B. Marsh, moderator. From the minutes of this meeting it would seem that some of the Twelve were present, but that the First Presidency were not. The Presiding Bishop was present. In fact, page 142 shows that President Joseph Smith was not present, nor was Sidney Rigdon.

Church History, volume 3, page 73, refers to a General Assembly held at Kirtland, Ohio, by a faction of the church, June 23, 1849, presided over by Hazen Aldrich. But this would hardly be a precedent, and so is not further referred to.

Church History, volume 4, page 64, states that during the conference of 1874, a resolution was adopted concerning a General Assembly.

Resolved, That we recognize the necessity of a call for a General Assembly of all the quorums of the church authorities, so far as practicable, and we refer this matter to the President of the church, praying that the Lord may direct respecting the proper time and place for said meeting. We further believe that the President has a right to call the meeting contemplated in this resolution.

From this it will be seen that the President of the church has the right to call a General Assembly. It is here referred to as a General Assembly of all the quorums of the church authorities, so far as practicable.

General Assemblies, in and of themselves, are not self-definitive. It is a General Assembly of what? Evidently the President of the church has the right to call a General Assembly, and to define it. Apparently General Assemblies were held in the old church, which did not attempt to include all of the priesthood, and if we take the clearest instance—that of the Assembly of August, 1835, as appears in section 108 of the Doctrine and Covenants, a General Assembly of the spiritual authorities of the church would include, First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, Seven Presidents of Seventy, the Quorums of Seventy, the General High Council of the church, the various stake high councils, the Presiding Bishopric, the stake bishops as part of the Bishopric, constituting with other local bishops an Order of Bishops, the Order of Evangelists, the Quorum of High Priests, a gathering in joint meeting of each of the several bodies included in the elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, organized by one chosen by themselves to preside over their deliberations, that such a one is referred to as an acting president, as he is not the standing president of them as a quorum.

To insist upon every quorum of elders and lesser priesthood being present, or practically every member who holds any office in the priesthood, would be to defeat the purpose, and will defeat almost the possibility of a General Assembly. So far as we have record in history, emphasis is laid on the presence of the various high councils of the church.

There seems to be a good reason for this, as may be noted in section 104: 14, 15:

The standing high councils, at the stakes of Zion, form a quorum equal in authority, in the affairs of the church, in all their decisions, to the quorum of the presidency or to the traveling high council.

"The high council of Zion forms a quorum equal in authority, in the affairs of the church, in all their decisions, to the councils of the Twelve at the stakes of Zion."

A General Assembly would be confined to the members of the priesthood, and so would exclude delegates. It would, however, include the priesthood in organized rank, including various departments of the Aaronic priesthood as well as the various high councils.

THE CHURCH AUDITOR

The report of the Church Auditor will prove a surprise to many of our readers. He has the assistance of others in checking and verifying the books, and finds them substantially correct.

But this is not all of auditing. With long experience as a credit man, and in work of this kind, he is taking up in order the books of the various financial departments of the church, and putting them in order to show justly the business done, and to record more fully, not only in the report to conference, but also to show more clearly the facts.

As part of this improved system, he has already, as set forth in the report of the Presiding Bishop, arranged for reports from the Bishop's agents in such shape, that they may be thoroughly audited at headquarters, not doing away for the present with the local or district auditing committee, but permitting a recheck at headquarters. He has gone over carefully the books of the Presiding Bishop, to make them more responsive to their needs.

He expects to take up in order the books of the Herald Publishing House and of Graceland College, in fact each of the various church institutions. He has already made a revision in the accounts of the Independence Sanitarium.

But in addition to this work, in consultation with the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric, and under their direction he is proceeding to make a survey of all the church offices, and the manner in which their work is conducted, even if it is not a financial department of the church.

This will include the work of the Church Recorder, Church Secretary, Church Historian, Physician, and no doubt of the editors of the various publications, and the spiritual officers of the church, as in their work there are questions of possible increased efficiency and economy of administration.

Another factor of his work is the preparation of a form of a report from the various institutions making possible the preparation of a general church budget. This matter is before the Order of Bishops for consideration. The advantage of a general church budget can readily be seen, if provision is made year by year, taking into consideration the expenses, receipts, and expenditures, as based upon the experience of the previous year, and provisions made for each of the departments of church work for the coming year. This permits provision being made for the erection of necessary buildings and the expense divided as may be deemed wise, and also provision made for the securing of additional funds, as may be needed.

For the erection of some buildings, it may become necessary that something in the nature of a referendum be secured. That is, that an appeal be made to the people for contributions in amount to carry on the work, and in this way their practical approval is secured.

Another factor is the preparation of a family budget, or account book, in such shape that provision is made for all of the various expenses, each sheet covers a period of one month, and gives receipts and expenditures, and provides for the division of the expenditures in a logical, rational way, providing for the family necessities. It provides in addition, space for a saving account.

To some it may be a great surprise that such things as recreation should be considered for a missionary. But why not? To some it may be a surprise that such a thing should be considered as a missionary having a savings account. But why not?

To some it may be a surprise that a missionary might be permitted to pay tithing. But why should he not be permitted to make voluntary contributions as well as others?

The plan, however, is not for the missionary alone, but for every family in the church, and includes the purchase of that form of liberty bond which is secured by paying our proper tithe and consecration to the Lord's representative.

Naturally, all of this work is subject to and under the direction of the Bishopric.

VICTORY LOAN

The next loan to the United States Government has been announced to begin April 21, the amount to be $4,500,000,000, over subscription rejected; four and three fourths per cent interest and exempt from state and local taxation, except estate and inheritance taxes, and exempt from the normal rate of the federal income tax. They mature in four years, and may be redeemed in three. Those who choose may exchange these bonds for three and three fourths per cent bonds, which are exempt from all taxation except estate and inheritance taxes. As a business investment, this offers a remarkable inducement.

But that is not the most essential issue. The essential issue is that the need of our Government is not at an end, but our boys must be brought home and cared for in the interim. Large contracts have been made for carrying on the war. This necessitated heavy expenditures for buildings and other equipment, while but a small part of this reached Europe it is reasonably certain that the fact that so much was prepared and in sight had much to do with the sudden ending of the war. These expenses must be paid of necessity, and it is still a matter of patriotism to give as liberal support as we can.

The loan is the best investment that we know of with the one exception of that provided for by the Lord: "He that giveth to the poor lendeth unto the Lord." Of course this giving to the poor and paying to the Bishop is upon the highest possible security, but we still have our duty as citizens to perform, and the security is the best of any we know of on earth.

SUNDAY SCHOOL AS A MISSIONARY

The idea emphasized in the report of First Assistant Superintendent Daniel Macgregor of the Sunday School Association, is worthy of special consideration.

He says: "I may say that I have never witnessed such a demand for the Sunday school. It is the crowning of the work of the missionary. Indeed, when an up-to-date school is in operation there will missionary work be coexistently in operation, since it is quite in order that the school should vent its ever-acquiring fund of truth in a practical way, and that is, "go tell it to others." I have pressed home upon our schools everywhere this sacred duty; for surely efficient learning, schooling, is not acquired until the art of telling that information unto others is also acquired."

He further urges that under further coordination every school may take steps to be even more active in the work of preaching the gospel. The schools are said to have a "quorum of strong, vigorous members whose energy and interest in all things good could be used and wonderfully increased, were there some distinctive allotment of missionary work, too, in the preaching of the gospel."

Had you thought of your school as a missionary arm of the church? We do not know how many schools have done so, but being a front-trench missionary, Brother Macgregor may be counted on for seeing it from that angle. He may be right. It is possible that the schools should be more distinctively propogandists of our doctrine to the world, but our ideal has always been that the Sunday school was primarily an institution for the special religious education of our own members, especially the young. Whether that can best be done by a strong missionary effort is a matter for consideration at the present time.

There are those who urge that by a consistent effort along the Christmas offering line we can help to untie the hands of those who are our missionaries so they, rather than the schools as schools, may go out and proclaim the everlasting gospel. We can readily see how effectively that has been done in the recent special campaigns with the result of paying off the church debt in two years.

While we may not agree with the suggestion, it is going to make us think more comprehensively about the missionary work of the church and it might well be a matter for discussion at the executive meetings of the school. If the schools were to decide universally on a missionary effort, they should take over the gospel literature work as one of the first steps, for it is one of the most important methods of introducing our gospel outside our priesthood work.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE

APRIL 14

The report of the Coordinating Committee was read, which was slightly changed from the copy submitted to the Religio and Woman's Auxiliary. It suggested that the general gospel literature work be referred to the Board of Publication. The document was adopted.

The London, Ontario, District, asked that a pin be designed for Sunday school workers, similar to the Religio pin. This was referred to the executive council, with full power to act.

A resolution with preambles concerning the needs of the superintendent relative to clerical help was presented, instructing the executive council (the general officers) to provide sufficient assistance in this line. This was unanimously adopted.

The convention adjourned till to-morrow at 10 a. m.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Organizer's problems were discussed by the Woman's Auxiliary this morning. Summed up, they were: How to reach the indifferent; how to enlist the loyalty of prejudiced groups already organized; how to get leaders; how to train them after you get them; how to finance the organizer in her work; how to get the support of the men in authority in districts.

This resolution was adopted:

Whereas, we believe theory should be closely linked with practice, and desiring to connect more intimately our educational work with its practical demonstration in our Home and Child Welfare, Relief and Service, and Young Women's Bureaus, therefore be it

Resolved, that our executive board, working in harmony with, and under the direction of the Coordinating Committee, shall be empowered to reconstruct the bureaus of our organization with a view to bringing about the results indicated in the above preamble.

The sisters spoke of the success which attends preparation in their work, especially noticeable in reunion and district conference work.

Sister Mabel Knipschild Smith urged the women and girls to offer their services to the organizations for relief which are in every city. It will give them a vision of what is being done and what may be done in that line. She mentioned the Associated Charities, provident associations, social settlements, welfare boards, etc. She urged the women to go through the public hospitals and other public institutions for health improvement.

The seventh business session of the General Conference opened at 2 p. m. with threatening weather, though no rain had fallen during the forenoon. The excellence of the meetings yesterday, together with the opportunity for more mature consideration of the problems before the conference, seemed to pre-sume a good meeting. The delegates seem to be crystallizing their conflicting feelings and becoming ready for a vote on the subject at hand. A meeting of the Presidency and Twelve was publicly announced to be held yesterday.

President Elbert A. Smith had charge, and after singing, "Let us shake off the coals from our garments," M. C. Fisher offered prayer.

The visitors were given the seats remaining unfilled on the main floor, and for the first time very few were compelled to stand.

Following a reading of the minutes J. A. Tanner took the chair by request and the floor was given to Paul M. Hanson, whose speech had been interrupted on Saturday by adjournment.

At 3 p. m. he closed his remarks, Frederick M. Smith was recognized and entered into a discussion of the policies of the document, saying he sought to avoid personalities in so doing. He gave his reasons for many of the conclusions set forth in his report as printed in the HERALD last week.

At 4.30 he concluded his speech and J. W. Rush-ton secured the floor on a question of personal privilege and summarized the proposition, reviewed the recent consultations between the Presidency and Twelve.

A motion prevailed to defer further consideration of the matter till a report could be had from the First Presidency and Twelve, and the assembly adjourned at 4.45 with benediction by Walter W. Smith.

SUNDAY SCHOOL PROBLEMS

The problems meeting at 5 o'clock was in charge of G. R. Wells, and was concerning a number of problems, the first being cradle roll work. Brother Wells answered a number of questions put to him via letters and personal questions. We have sought in the following to summarize some of the answers made by him.

Is it advisable for a cradle roll superintendent to have an assistant?

The principle involved is one that runs all through our work and this office is no exception. If an assistant is needed, have one. But it is often well to let this assistant have secretarial work as well, so the work of recording can better be done, for it is an important feature.

Sister H. B. Roberts thought it excellent to have an assistant so some one would be ready to take up the work when a change was required.

What about "loss" in cradle roll work?

There should be a distinction between loss by promotion and loss by death, as the former is not really a loss.

How about supplies for the department?

Use our own to the fullest, letting us know of needs not supplied, but if we have reached a point where we have not met the demand, get them elsewhere. When we get far enough along we hope to supply all these, but have to await a larger demand in many lines.

To whom should changes be reported?

To cradle roll superintendent whether district or general, and also to the superintendent of district or general association.

As to supplies of all kinds, it was suggested that it is impossible to print a variety for each need, for the demand is not large enough to make it possible to sell them. If anyone finds something better, let a copy of it be sent to the general officers so they can profit by the suggestion.

Is it profitable to have questions for examination, printed or otherwise, on which to base promotions?

It certainly is, and has our heartiest commendation. To avoid the effect of "playing Sunday school" we must have something to give the work an appearance of reality. While we cannot have compulsory tests, we must have something to dignify and broaden the Sunday school work. Have standards for promotions which no one is compelled to reach, but so surrounded by sentiment that no one will want to evade them.

When will we arrive at the time when we can have a first-year Quarterly for first-year pupils in a grade, a second-year for second-year pupils, etc.?

As soon as the workers in the church get a proper vision of grading and will make use of it. Of course we have not perfected all the grades of Quarterlies, but hope to rapidly get them in shape for permanent form.

The meeting at the church at 7.45 p. m. was devoted to the boy movement of the church and social and recreational features, in charge of F. M. McDowell and T. W. Williams. It was a most practical meeting and fairly well attended in spite of the fact that a moving picture demonstration for men only was on at the Coliseum at the same hour. The latter meeting was a series of films put out by the United States Health Service, especially in the interests of moral cleanliness among the army and navy recruits. A drama ran through the series and considerable matter of vital importance was given.

The Woman's Auxiliary held a reception at the high school building the same evening, in which the general officers sought a closer acquaintance with the visitors and local people and a better understanding of the work in which all are engaged.

It was a threatening evening, with a heavy mist falling.

TUESDAY, APRIL 15

The clouds were breaking in the morning and the day began with the usual meetings: Prayer meeting at 7 a. m., Woman's Auxiliary at 8, priesthood meeting at the same hour, with F. M. Smith as the speaker, meeting of the elders at 9, and the usual quorum meetings, such as the high priests, the Order of Bishops, the seventies, etc.

SOME RELIGIO EXECUTIVE ACTIONS

At a meeting of the executive committee of the Religio Society a number of items of business of general interest were transacted.

The editor of the Senior Religio Quarterly, J. A. Gunsolley, of Lamoni, was reelected.

Editor of the Junior Religio Quarterly, Vida E. Smith, Lamoni.

Editor of short stories, Mrs. S. Forties, of Kansas City, Missouri.

Lessons committee, G. S. Trowbridge, Saint Louis, Missouri; F. M. McDowell, Lamoni, Iowa; Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, Kansas City, Missouri.

Historian, Louise Evans, Grand Rapids, Michigan.

Lesson revising committee, J. W. Wight, Flora Scott, Nellie Prall, all of Lamoni, Iowa.

It was decided that one lesson each quarter be given over to boy movement and social and recreational activities.

First Vice President T. W. Williams was given supervision of the moving picture machine feature.

Appropriations approximating $1,800 were voted to the various departments.

The prayer meeting at 9 was in charge of J. M. Terry and V. M. Goodrich.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

The third session of the Sunday school was held at 10.15 with G. R. Wells in charge.

No business being on the table the superintendent addressed the convention on several general topics, such as coordination, budget system, disorder in Sunday schools.

Concerning nominations of superintendents of schools by branch presidents, he wished the delegates to take back word to the schools and branches that this should not be done without consent of all concerned. If when the schools take the initiative in such things and ask a pastor to nominate, it is proper to do so. To do otherwise in any department is a violation of the divine right of common consent. Let the sentiment grow, in the districts, in the schools, everywhere, and when once established, will be greatly appreciated as a forward step. The body always retains the right to nominate in addition to the one or ones presented by the branch or district president.

A number of questions were asked from the audience and answered by Brother Wells.

If there is trouble in a Sunday school, approaching disorder, let the members keep their hands off except to counsel and aid, but rather turn it over to the branch officers whose duty it is to look after difficulties among members of the church, we were advised.

The following from the Order of Bishops was read and motion made to adopt, which prevailed.

General Sunday School Association; Greeting: Following is the action of the Order of Bishops in response to your communication concerning budget, addressed to the Presiding Bishopric and by them referred to the order.

Resolved, that the Order of Bishops approve of the present method of working under a budget system by the General Sunday School Association, and with the view of a closer association with the financial arm of the church, we recommend that at least two members of the Order of Bishops, one of which shall be treasurer of the association, be associated with the General Sunday School in executive in forming the financial budget of the association.

Respectfully submitted,

J. A. BECKER.

LAMONI, IOWA, April 15, 1919.

The chairman was asked if districts and locals might feel free to adopt or disregard the coordination plan at their discretion, and replied that they should do so, in the same manner as the general organizations had a year ago. It is not mandatory.

The eighth business session of the conference was opened at 2 p. m. by singing No. 34 in the Hymnal and prayer by W. A. McDowell. F. M. Smith was in the chair to announce the opening hymn, after which the chair was given to Elbert A. Smith.

Following a reading of the minutes the credentials committee made an additional report, to fill out depleted delegations.

The chair was yielded to J. A. Tanner.

A document from the Presidency and Quorum of Twelve was read, as follows, it having been adopted unanimously by those two quorums:

LAMONI, IOWA, April 15, 1919.

To the General Conference; Greeting: We beg leave and report, that the First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve met in joint council this morning and completed their consideration of the matter before the house and agreed upon the following as a working basis:

The work of the Twelve is primarily missionary, but under the direction of the Presidency. They may be sent to regulate in organized local affairs where such regulation is made necessary.

The work of the Twelve is under the direction of the Presidency in the administrative or executive work of the church both in missionary and local lines, according to the law.

The appointment of the Twelve is not to specific fields in charge of individuals, but the members are subject to direction by the Presidency, in this way being the "Second Presidency."

Missionary and local lines of work are distinctive, and always cooperative when and where necessary.

Local organizations once effected, should be placed under the charge of the local officers, and so far as possible or consistent with the best interests of all concerned, be not interfered with by the missionary line.

Besides their work in the missionary line and in regulating local affairs, the Twelve should be prepared to act as counselors to the Presidency when needed, hence some of the members of the Twelve should be near if not at the seat of the Presidency so that such consultation may be had occasionally.

Suggested modifications to the present system:

The weekly letter from all appointees to the Presidency to be continued, but those from the missionaries to be passed on to the Twelve at the seat of the Presidency to be had when needed thereon, but directions and instructions issuing from these representatives of the Twelve in harmony with the general principles understood and agreed upon by the Quorum of Twelve and Presidency.

For the purpose of closer and immediate supervision of missionary activities, the missionaries may be arranged into groups, each group to be supervised by a seventy, instructed in the missionary policies adopted by the Quorum of Twelve. Variations from these general instructions, or other instructions made necessary by special conditions, may be issued to these group supervisors by the Twelve at the seat of the Presidency or by members of the Twelve who may be on the grounds or in the field of operation of the particular group.

Thus the supervision of the missionaries by the Twelve will be based upon a definite general policy determined by the Twelve, and approved by the Presidency, and the supervision of the missionary work by the Presidency will be mediate.

The Twelve shall then give their primary attention to missionary work subject to call for regulating local work by the Presidency, and ready at all times to prosecute missionary work in new fields.

The general scheme carries with it the concomitant idea of an adequate force of local workers competent to care for congregations and districts when organized as a result of missionary work.

The appointment of all missionaries, domestic and foreign, to be made by interaction of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, either in joint council or by concurrence.

ELBERT A. SMITH,
Secretary Presidency,
JOHN W. RUSHTON,
Secretary Twelve.

We recommend that this document representing a working agreement between the First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve, be approved by the General Conference, and that action in the matter before the conference be indefinitely postponed.

Respectfully submitted, on behalf of the joint council of Presidency and Twelve.

ELBERT A. SMITH,
JOHN W. RUSHTON.

A motion to adopt both the report and the recommendation was carried unanimously.

A motion to expunge from the reports from record was laid on the table.

A motion to delete paragraphs 21 to 24 inclusive in the President's report, referring to the work of the Twelve was discussed at length and prevailed.

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow" was sung at this juncture, the audience standing.

By motion and vote the Kirtland matter, a review of a case which had been discussed before the conference and which had been before the High Council was brought up.

The following resolution prevailed:

Inasmuch as the law provides (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 35) that the Standing High Council is the highest court in the church, from whose decision there can be no appeal; therefore, be it resolved, that the petitioners in the case before us be directed to present the case to the Standing High Council for review.

A motion was made that Melzine Russell (a sister whose name figures in the affair) be given the rights of a church member pending the opening of the review.

J. A. Tanner again took the chair, as the subject under discussion was one in which the president of the church had had a part.

Considerable discussion was had as to the advisability of setting aside the finding of the High Council as suggested in the resolution.

A vote to lay the question on the table resulted in 274 for and 76 against.

It was sought to offer a motion to restore the sister to full fellowship. The chair ruled the motion out of order and his opinion was appealed from. The decision was debated and affirmed, so the motion was not entertained.

Elbert A. Smith took the chair at 4 p. m., made announcements of services, and the meeting adjourned by singing, "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning," and benediction by B. R. McGuire.

The Woman's Auxiliary announced a meeting for the lower auditorium, following the business session of the conference, so no problems meeting could be held, though the place had been regularly occupied by the Religio and Sunday school officers. The sisters were to reconsider one of their elections which had been followed by a resignation, and finish other business necessary. To date we have not heard of the results.

A meeting of Bishop's agents and solicitors was announced for the evening in the lower auditorium, in charge of Bishop McGuire.

G. W. Thorburn preached in the upper auditorium at 7.45.

At 7.45 the Coliseum was overflowing, the big crowd going to hear and see some of the work of Albert N. Hoxie as song leader in the East, especially at League Island Navy Yard, Philadelphia. The Lamoni Band rendered several numbers, after which a liberal supply of song books were distributed, and the audience sang in the same manner as hundreds of thousands have sung under the leadership of Brother Hoxie in his important work.

Much enthusiasm was aroused in the singing of the popular war and camp songs. Walter W. Smith explained the incipency of the "Liberty Sing" movement in which our own choir leader played a leading part. Two reels of moving pictures taken at Philadelphia, showing some of the many great crowds which join with the sailors and marines in the great song events which have received national attention the past year, were shown.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 16

The priesthood address at 8 a. m. was by T. W. Williams, who explained some of the many details in the Toronto affair.

The elders were addressed at 9 a. m. by O. Salisbury on "Some errors to avoid in public speaking," a subject of special interest to such a body of men.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

After the opening of the meeting with Daniel Macgregor in charge and some informal discussion of incidental matters, Superintendent Wells brought in a report of the Coordinating Committee, which recommended that the Graceland Extension Institute be turned over to Graceland Extension Department. The recommendation was adopted, after an explanation that the institute had not hitherto been a part of the college, but was simply named after the college and conducted outside the definite college activities. We were assured that the college was sufficiently interested to make the necessary provision for the care of the work.

Another recommendation was that the committee for revising the Quarterly lessons before printing be chosen by the executive council rather than by the body as heretofore by the convention. This was adopted.

The nominations of the committee of the subordinate officers were all accepted and elected without opposition.

The names and offices are as follows:

A. L. Sanford, Independence, Missouri, first assistant superintendent.

Arthur W. Smith, Saint Louis, Missouri, second assistant superintendent, with the understanding that he continue as Christmas offering superintendent.

E. D. Moore, Lamoni, Iowa, secretary.

M. H. Siegfried, Independence, treasurer.

Mrs. J. C. Schwab, Independence, home department superintendent.

Mrs. Horace B. Roberts, Independence, cradle roll superintendent.

S. A. Burgess, Lamoni, member General Library Commission.

A vote of thanks was tendered Brother Macgregor for his long and faithful service in the Sunday school work.

The final business session of the Sunday school convention adjourned, after its first experience under coordination. There seems to be a feeling prevalent that the conventions this year were not so interesting nor important as they were under the former plan of preconference sessions.

The attendance at all the meetings was smaller than usual, the debate less diversified and animated, and the amount of legislation effected more limited than usual. Some of the reasons for this will be discussed elsewhere later.

At 11.30 the preaching hour was occupied by R. D. Weaver, to a small audience, there being a misunderstanding which caused many to believe there would not be such a service because of the lateness of the hour.

The business session at 2 p. m. was preceded by a congregational "sing" led by A. N. Hoxie.

The opening song was "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." Prayer was offered by U. W. Greene.

J. W. Rushton obtained the floor on a question of personal privilege, and in behalf of the Twelve asked permission to withdraw from the minutes the brief submitted by that quorum. The request was unanimously granted.

President F. M. Smith asked that certain words in his message be stricken from the records, and by motion and vote it was granted.

In the meantime he withdrew, by permission, from the audience while the sustaining of himself in the office of president was considered.

The motion before the house was to ask President Smith to withdraw his resignation. This had been at once followed by a substitute which proposed to sustain him as prophet, seer, revelator, and president of the church. These two motions opened a wide field for discussion, which was taken advantage of very liberally, the speakers frankly expressing themselves on a number of phases of the matter, personal, financial, and otherwise.

The speakers were, G. E. Harrington, Daniel Macgregor, E. L. Kelley, J. W. Wight, T. W. Williams, Mrs. F. M. Smith, J. F. Garver.

At 3.45 J. A. Tanner was asked by E. A. Smith to take the chair.

A motion to take the vote was voted down and the discussion continued.

Finally, Wardell Christy secured the floor and asked B. R. McGuire if he had anything to say. This was followed by such applause that it was an easy matter for the Bishop to secure the floor and explain that he being an interested party in the matter should not be required to even seem to decide the matter. He invited the fullest investigation according to the law of the church, the latter provision being essential to a right decision. After such a decision is reached it should be considered as settled forever. Asked as to proper procedure he asked the audience to turn to Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10; 122: 10. He further stated that the Order of Bishops had already begun an investigation into the subject, from which Brother McGuire had desired to be excluded. He believed the investigation should continue until properly concluded.

From the seventy, as reported by E. E. Long, considerable opposition was expressed to the paragraph in the report of the president which reads:

There has grown up the custom of having selections and nominations to fill vacancies in the council of presidents of seventy made by the council itself. We are of the opinion that such selections and nominations should come to the General Conference from the First Presidency, after approval is had by the Quorum of Twelve and the Seventy.

They urged that it had been under discussion by the council of seven presidents and they were unwilling to concede the change since the Seventies and Twelve were of the opinion that the lawful procedure is pointed out in Doctrine and Covenants 124: 5 and 121: 5.

At 5 p. m. the session was adjourned, with Joseph Luff on the floor.

Chairman E. A. Smith, taking the chair, announced the next business session would be at 10 a. m. to-morrow.

The benediction was by F. A. Smith.

The "Fit to fight" drama in moving pictures, sent out by the United States Health Service, was shown at the Coliseum in the evening. From 7 to 8.30 women and girls over 18 were present. From that time on men and boys over 14 were in attendance.

At the church a Government official occupied, regarding the Fifth Liberty Loan. The conference choir had an important part.

THURSDAY, APRIL 17

The priesthood meeting at 8 was a continuation of the discussion of the Toronto situation.

The prayer meeting was held at 8 a. m. this morning, in charge of J. F. Garver and D. T. Williams. The fact that the elders are all engaged in their priesthood meetings at the same time as the prayer meetings largely affects the character of the meetings, though there are sufficient of the members to make a good audience.

The elders liked the address of O. Salisbury yesterday so well that they voted to ask him to continue the subject this morning, which he did, giving a number of interesting suggestions on the subject of better public speaking.

The business session at 10 a. m. was in charge of Elbert A. Smith. No. 141 in Zion's Praises was sung, and prayer offered by W. A. McDowell.

After the reading of the minutes J. A. Tanner was given the chair and Joseph Luff took the floor which was yielded at the close of the previous session.

The question of sustaining Frederick M. Smith as president of the church, including the offices of prophet, seer, and revelator, was under discussion.

The previous question was proposed and prevailed by a vote of 248 to 77.

The substitute as amended and carried reads as follows:

Resolved, That we respectfully decline to accept the resignation of President Frederick M. Smith and by this vote express our confidence in him as prophet, seer, and revelator of the church and as the President thereof.

Speeches were limited by motion and vote to fifteen minutes on all speeches hereafter.

F. M. Smith resumed the chair and with a statement that since the conference had voted to sustain him, it remained to be seen if it would show that it meant it. He further stated that so far as the work of the conference was concerned, we were only about to the stage reached usually on the second day.

The Third, First, and Second Quorums of Seventy reported details of their work, and the reports made a part of the minutes.

The high priests also reported.

A report from the Australasian Mission was read. From the reports of the seventies we excerpt:

Third Quorum: 22 members reported, 18 in attendance at conference. They preached 2,859 sermons and baptized 247.

Second Quorum: 38 members, preached 3,951 sermons, baptized 286.

First Quorum of Seventy: 46 reported 5,285 sermons, and 376 baptisms.

High Priests reported 244 members, 221 of them reporting 8,039 sermons, and 444 baptisms. A. H. Parsons was chosen as counselor to J. A. Tanner, president.

Bishop George A. Lewis, from Australia, was asked to address the conference in behalf of that mission, which he did in a most acceptable manner.

The Order of Bishops nominated as trustees for Children's Home, A. J. Yarrington and Jay Barr for the three-year term, and M. H. Siegfried for the two-year term. These were approved. They also approved the budgets of the college and Sanitarium.

They made two recommendations which were adopted, one to the effect that the fiscal year for all financial affairs in the church end with June 30 of each year, instead of January 1 to December 31 as at present. This is to apply to church institutions of all kinds, and includes the missionaries. This goes into effect at once.

The second recommendation was that Bishop M. H. Siegfried be general manager of the various church Homes for the Aged. This was adopted.

The Order of Bishops presented another document, reading as follows:

Resolved, that we look with favor upon the church carrying its own insurance on church properties, the details to be worked out by the Presiding Bishopric.

This was adopted.

A motion to approve of the budget presented by Graceland College in its report was unanimously approved.

The Sanitarium budget was likewise approved.

The Book of Rules committee report, which suggested good reasons for a delay of another year, was indorsed by vote.

The report of the committee on Church of Christ was brought up and a vote taken to let it lie on the table. Division was called for and resulted in 136 for and 122 against.

Four of the six members of the committee thereupon verbally declined to further serve on the committee, since their work was considered of insufficient importance to be considered. Those expressing themselves thus were: W. W. Smith, F. M. Smith, M. H. Siegfried, B. R. McGuire.

Various motions seeking to take the matter from the table for consideration were declared out of order at the time, and a report of the Woman's Auxiliary was read and spread on the minutes.

The report, upon which action was based, read as follows:

To the General Conference; Greeting: The committee on Church of Christ beg leave to report that during the year amicable relations have been maintained between the brethren of the Church of Christ and Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. A number of joint meetings of the priesthood of both organizations have been held. The joint committee held one session on November 14 at which the following members were in attendance: Of the Church of Christ, Elders C. L. Wheaton, Alma O. Frisbee, A. E. Hines, and T. J. Sheldon; of the Reorganized Church, Elders F. M. Sheehy, M. H. Siegfried, and W. W. Smith. The following agreements were unanimously adopted:

"Agreed, that persons who are, or have been, connected with the church, desiring to unite with either branch of the church, shall not be received to fellowship until the elders of the branch of the church to which they apply shall have opportunity to decide upon their standing; each organization to furnish the other with evidence in their possession with reference to the person in question."

"Agreed, that when ministers of the Church of Christ and the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints are laboring together, the persons baptized shall have the right of choice as to which organization they will unite with."

Some unfavorable criticisms have been offered by a few of the brethren of the Reorganization, but this is largely due to lack of understanding what the agreements mean. These, in time, we believe, will be eliminated.

Trusting that harmony may still prevail, we are,

Respectfully yours,

On behalf of Committee,

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
Chairman.
WALTER W. SMITH,
Secretary.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, March 25, 1919.

The report of the Coordinating Committee was read, being the same as the one printed in the DAILY and supplemented in the report to the Sunday school department.

A motion to take the Church of Christ report from the table and be made the special order for 2.15 to-day, prevailed, and the meeting adjourned by singing the Doxology and prayer by E. A. Smith.

Brother Hoxie bade the assembly good-by just prior to the singing.

The afternoon business session opened at 2 p. m., with F. M. Smith in charge. No. 131 was sung and prayer offered.

Seats are plentiful at the present sessions, as so many visitors and delegates are leaving. Most of the seventies, high priests, and elders remain, however, and will do so until the sessions conclude. The day is bright and pleasant and except for a natural impatience over any delay, the spirits of the people are especially good.

As a matter of personal privilege Bishop B. R. McGuire asked that his declination to act as a member of the committee on the Church of Christ be revoked, and a motion prevailed to accept the same.

The time having arrived for the special order of business, it was taken up, namely, the consideration of the report of the Committee on the Church of Christ.

An effort was made to get a resolution before the body to rescind the action of a year ago relative to the matter, but it was ruled out of order because the special order had not been discussed so an action of that kind was distinctly out of order.

A motion placed before the body proposed to receive the report and continue the committee.

It was made evident in the discussion that members who had declined to serve would withdraw that declaration if the work of the committee were properly recognized.

The discussion continued uninterruptedly till 4 p. m., when a number of attempts were made to have the vote taken, but it was impossible to get a second recognized, as the member whose voice was heard first usually had a speech ready and proceeded to deliver it.

At 4.17 the previous question was ordered and the vote taken.

The motion to receive the report and continue the committee prevailed.

E. L. Kelley desired the privilege of speaking a few moments to explain the Temple Lot decision. Objections were raised to this, and by motion and vote of 205 to 52 he was thus privileged. He spoke briefly concerning the history of the case.

J. W. Rushton reported that the Quorum of Twelve had had the resolutions of condolence concerning the demise of James E. Kelley prepared and engrossed for presentation to his widow, Mrs. Audentia Kelley.

The time limit for new business was set at 11 a. m. to-morrow, and the meeting adjourned till 10 a. m., the 18th.

The evening was fine and attendance at all services gratifying.

The preaching at the church at 7.45 was by Bishop George Lewis of Australia.

At the Coliseum George Wixom preached.

In the basement T. W. Williams had an interesting meeting on public speaking, and we are sure a great deal of good was done. Many questions were asked and answered. We may reiterate the fact that the correspondence course in public speaking will be taken over by the college on July 1. In the meantime, though the lessons are free, Sister Dora Glines, of Independence, was represented by her friends as being unable to attend to the details necessary in the handling of the lessons, correcting papers, etc., so it might be well to enroll at once with Graceland College which will give it careful attention at practically cost.

FRIDAY, APRIL 18

The customary priesthood meetings were not held this morning. The prayer meeting held at 8.30 a. m. was in charge of R. Bullard and E. Rannie.

The business session opened promptly at 10 a. m. with F. M. Smith in the chair. No. 36 was sung and prayer offered by J. A. Tanner.

The credentials committee reported that there were 56 districts represented, and that Northeastern Missouri had no delegates. The enrollment shows 341 ex officios, and 200 delegates, who could cast 722 delegate votes, making the total conference vote 1,063.

A joint council of seventies brought in resolutions concurred in by the Twelve, concerning the present system by which the presidents of seventies are chosen by that council. This was adopted.

The resolution referred to Doctrine and Covenants 124:5 and provided that the Presidents of Seventy may proceed thereunder to make selections according to the provisions in that paragraph, subject to the approval of the church.

It was announced that Heman C. Smith, Church Historian, had died at 6 p. m. on the 17th, and that the body was en route to Lamoni for burial. The obsequies were announced for Sunday.

The Order of Bishops reported as follows, and the recommendations adopted unanimously except for one vote:

Resolved: That the maximum annual financial needs of the family of each general church officer and conference appointee for the year beginning July 1 and thereafter, be fixed by the Joint Council of the First Presidency, Twelve, and the Presiding Bishopric upon the basis of the family budget returns according to the law of "just wants and needs," but in no case to exceed the sum of twenty-four hundred dollars annually, the payment thereof to be made in equal monthly payments.

Be it further resolved that each general officer and conference appointee shall keep an itemized account of all receipts and expenditures for personal and traveling expenses and make report thereof monthly to the Presiding Bishop upon blanks to be furnished for that purpose, to be prepared by the Presiding Bishopric.

Be it further resolved that each department of the church (general and stake) submit to the Presiding Bishopric a budget of their office and administration expenses for the year beginning July 1, 1919, not later than April 30 for this year and by January 31 for each year thereafter.

J. A. BECKER, Secretary.

A recommendation from the Coordinating Committee that the Graceland Extension Institute be turned over to Graceland College was adopted.

The following on consolidation was read, and upon a motion to adopt was discussed. Walter W. Smith, president of the Independence Stake, explained the advantages of the proposition. J. F. Curtis and Daniel Macgregor opposed the measure as unnecessary, the latter fearing too much centralization of power. J. F. Garver, president of Lamoni Stake, was greatly in favor of the plan.

The following resolution from the Independence Stake High Council was adopted by the Independence Stake conference held at the Stone Church, March 8, 1919, and referred to the General Conference for approval:

"In order to more effectively administer in stake affairs, and looking to the realization of the objective that the Independence Stake should be the central place of Zion;

"Therefore, be it resolved, that it is the opinion of the high council that the branches of the Independence Stake be consolidated for administrative purposes, and that membership be held in the stake as such."

C. I. CARPENTER,
Secretary Independence Stake.

It was moved to defer action one year.

The previous question was moved, but failed to get the necessary two thirds majority to carry.

The motion to defer was discussed, really opening up the whole question. W. W. Smith again explained the points in favor of such consolidation. F. M. Sheehy opposed the measure, as he believed it did not develop individualism. M. H. Siegfried favored on the ground that the people of the stake favored it. G. T. Griffiths explained that it was a good plan, "a grand system." The 34 groups are presided over by an elder, priest, teacher, and deacon, in some groups more than one priest. The people wanted it—why not grant it?

The previous question was ordered. The motion to defer lost—largely. The vote to adopt was almost unanimous.

The following document was read and adopted, practically unanimously:

The Order of Bishops present to you for your consideration the attached resolution.

This policy was presented to the First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve and approved by them.

Respectfully,

J. A. BECKER, Secretary.

Resolved that the policy of the Bishopric for the coming year shall be:

First. To provide funds for the care and expenses of the missionaries and their families who are engaged in promulgating the gospel of Christ together with the general administration expense.

Second. For the care of the poor and the needy and the expenses incident to the operations of the several homes for the aged and orphan children.

Third. For budgets adopted by General Conference for Graceland College, Sanitarium, etc.

Fourth. An appropriation for a twelve-class room building for Graceland College as soon as the finances of the general fund will permit without incurring debt or interfering with the regular work of the church.

We recommend that the Christmas offering for 1919 be used for the purchase of land for the creation of inheritances and stewardships that our less fortunate members may be given an opportunity to purchase their inheritances under favorable conditions.

A resolution from several of the brethren in Washington relative to the rights of children to vote in business meetings was referred to the joint council of the Presidency and Twelve, for report to the next conference.

The Independence Stake invited the conference of 1920 to be held in Independence, and it was accepted.

The mass quorum of elders reported.

The administration committee reported 32 administrations, a good health record for the conference.

The report of the church chorister, A. N. Hoxie, showed encouraging results and the selection of Paul N. Craig as assistant chorister. This was indorsed.

The L. D. S. Sales Association reported several good meetings and that O. Salisbury had been elected president with A. N. Hoxie and W. S. Macrae associates; Clarence Skinner, secretary; H. H. Hand, field worker.

G. Leonard Harrington, Church Physician, reported at length, from New York.

The Secretary of the Twelve sent notification that the missionary appointments would be read at the afternoon meeting.

No. 208 was sung and benediction by F. A. Smith.

The session at 2 p. m. opened with singing No. 186 and prayer by Richard Bullard. F. A. Russell has been leading the song service since the Church Chorister left. F. M. Smith was in charge of the meeting.

The Presidents of Seventy reported the holding of 23 sessions, but were hindered on account of conditions which were now removed.

The Graphic Arts Bureau reported the holding of two meetings during the conference and the perfecting of a simple organization intended to be helpful to the church along lines of photography, illustrated lectures, and chart work. It was suggested that the president, C. Ed. Miller, would make further announcements in the church papers as to their plans.

The Woman's Auxiliary reported, and elsewhere we are printing the report in full.

Their nomination of Mrs. M. B. Nicholson to succeed herself on the board of trustees of the Children's Home was approved by the conference.

The Order of Bishops reported that they approved of the budget of the Woman's Auxiliary in which they desired $1,500 for their expenses during the year. The conference indorsed the recommendation.

The Order of Bishops reported they had held 11 sessions, and had 12 bishops and 6 counselors in attendance. They were considering the reorganization of the Order of Enoch during the coming year.

The sustaining of the various committees and boards of the conference was taken up.

The committee on memorial to the Martyrs was sustained: B. R. McGuire, J. F. Keir, M. H. Siegfried, G. P. Lambert.

The committee on Bible normal book was sustained: S. A. Burgess, J. A. Gunsolley, F. M. McDowell.

The trustees of the Children's Home were sustained: A. Carmichael, Mark H. Siegfried, A. J. Yarrington, Jay Barr, Mrs. M. B. Nicholson, Mrs. L. L. Resseguie, Mrs. C. B. Stebbins.

The Presiding Bishop had no change to recommend for the Board of Publication, and they were sustained as at present constituted: B. R. McGuire, A. Carmichael, F. B. Blair, J. F. Keir, M. H. Siegfried.

The choosing of M. H. Siegfried as general manager of the Homes for the Aged did away with the committees on those institutions.

F. M. Smith desiring release from the committee on the Church of Christ, it was granted and I. A. Smith substituted. With him the former committee was sustained: E. L. Kelley, F. M. Sheehy, B. R. McGuire, M. H. Siegfried, W. W. Smith.

The terms of J. W. Wight, J. F. Garver, and G. N. Briggs expiring, they were reelected as members of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College, and the board as a whole sustained. The other members are: A. Carmichael, T. A. Hougas, G. R. Wells, C. B. Woodstock.

The Sanitarium Board of Trustees were all sustained for another year: B. R. McGuire, W. D. Bulard, G. H. Hulmes, L. H. Haas, J. A. Tanner, C. O. Leeka, M. H. Siegfried.

The committee on the revision of the Book of Rules was sustained: F. M. Smith, F. M. Sheehy, H. O. Smith, J. A. Tanner, E. L. Kelley, A. B. Phillips, T. A. Hougas; also the sub-committee on church procedure: F. M. Smith, C. O. Leeka, and S. A. Burgess.

The committee on a General Conference building was sustained: Presidency, Twelve, Order of Bishops

Two individual missionary appointments were made, Leon Burdick to Youngstown-Sharon District, and J. D. Curtis to Eastern Colorado. The Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric recommended that the rest of the appointments stand as at present until such time as the joint council could meet and determine the necessity for changes and additional appointments. This was concurred in.

The committee on resolutions of condolence brought in reports which included resolutions concerning the demise of Mrs. Clyde F. Ellis, Elder Rees Jenkins, and Heman C. Smith.

The following officials were sustained, in the order given: E. A. Smith, counselor to the president of the church, the Quorum of Twelve, the presidency of seventies and quorums of seventies, Presiding Bishopric and Order of Bishops, Presiding Patriarch and Order of Evangelists, Standing High Council, Quorum of High Priests, the eldership, the Aaronic priesthood, Church Physician, Church Recorder, Church Secretary, Auditor, Chorister, Architect, the Sunday school, Religio, and Woman's Auxiliary.

The filling of the vacancy in the office of Church Historian was left to the joint council.

By request, President F. M. Smith addressed the conference for a short time, which speech is reproduced in this issue.

Adjournment was had about 3 p. m. as per previous resolution, to meet at Independence next year. No. 104 was sung and the benediction offered by Elbert A. Smith.

Thus closed one of the most important conferences ever held in the Reorganization. It was unusual in every way, yet the consensus of opinion is that it has greatly clarified the atmosphere and that hereafter many of the knotty problems that have impaired our efficiency will be considered matters of history.

During Thursday afternoon session J. W. Rushton in removing the covering from a large package on the stand, looked around for a waste basket. Seeing the bag of the Church Secretary conveniently open he quietly and decorously deposited the paper and string therein. R. S. Salyards did not thank him.

Some men make themselves impossible timber in the construction of God's kingdom, forgetting that this temple must be fitly joined together.—R. B. T.

"My disciples, in days of old, sought occasion against one another, and forgave not one another in their hearts, and for this evil they were afflicted, and sorely chastened; wherefore I say unto you, that ye ought to forgive one another, for he that forgiveth not his brother his trespasses, standeth condemned before the Lord, for there remaineth in him the greater sin."—Doctrine and Covenants 64:2.

John said: "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also."—1 John 4:20, 21.

What would he say of one who would say, "I am loyal to the Christ, but I do not owe loyalty to any man?"

About the time Elder Daniel Macgregor finished his series of meetings at Flint, Michigan, and was taking a rest ere attending the General Conference at Lamoni he went to Saint Thomas, Ontario, his old home town for a few days. While in the city a sermon was preached by one Reverend Patrick Dennison of that place on "Mormonism" in which the church, Joseph Smith, and the Book of Mormon were viciously attacked and misrepresented.

In the Saint Thomas Times-Journal of the 25th Elder Macgregor came out with a column explaining the unfairness of an attack of that kind, and challenging Mr. Dennison to debate.

The latest information we have is that the enemy threaten to secure the services of R. C. Evans in their behalf. We hope they will, for Mr. Evans has said he would not debate with any member of the church except Frederick M. Smith.

A favorite suggestion of Brother Keir is that if just one half of the Saints would set aside a cent a day as an offering to the church, it would result in a total of over $160,000. We hope he will continue the suggestion until more than half the membership see the advantage of observing such little ideals which make for such great results.

It is no great wonder if in long process of time, while fortune takes her course hither and thither, numerous coincidences should spontaneously occur. If the number and variety of subjects to be wrought upon be infinite, it is all the more easy for fortune, with such an abundance of material, to effect this similarity of results.—Life of Sertorius.

Just before the opening of the business session on Tuesday, the 15th, Brother F. A. Russell asked the audience to please note that Brother and Sister W. A. Smith were standing along the south wall of the room. The audience expressed congratulations to the newly-wed couple by singing, "Blest be the tie that binds."

Albert N. Hoxie goes joyously around despite rain and cloudy weather. He has not attempted a big choir movement this year, but is presenting more energetically the matter of community and congregational singing. He is present to conduct the music at most of our services, and is especially prominent at the early morning prayer service. He radiates good will on all occasions.

THE WORD OF WISDOM

A MEANS OF INCREASING THE EFFICIENCY OF THOSE WHO OBSERVE IT

In the numerous walks of life the demand is for efficient workers. This is true in the business world, political world, and in the ministry. When the Nation was engaged in war, efficient men and women were summoned by the Government to occupy in positions of responsibility, and it is largely because of the efficiency of the American Nation that peace was declared so soon. We are told that when the German prisoners witnessed the wonderful preparations and saw the huge bases of supplies that this Nation maintained in France they were astounded, and it was this condition of efficiency manifested by the American Nation that weakened the morale of the Central Powers. The soldier who demonstrated his efficiency was soon made an officer because the army sensed the need of efficient leaders. The cry in the church to-day is for efficient leaders in the various departments of church activity. They are needed in the ministry, the Sunday school, Religion, Woman's Auxiliary, and even in the affairs of business, for God has required that we labor together in the work intrusted to all. Our leaders realizing this great need are calling upon us to become proficient in some department of church work. God had this need in mind years ago, and in order that we might be more efficient in our service he gave unto the church a revelation called the Word of Wisdom. (Doctrine and Covenants 86.)

BODY AND SPIRIT DEPENDENT UPON EACH OTHER

The question may arise in the minds of some: What has the Word of Wisdom to do with a good preacher? A weak body usually means a weak mind. Man is composed of a body and spirit. Each is dependent upon the other in this life. The body without the spirit is dead, and a spirit without the body cannot function as God intended it should in this life. The body is the house in which the spirit takes up its abode and through which it corresponds with its earthly environment. When the body refuses to respond to the spirit, the spirit returns to God who gave it and death is the result. A weak body is a serious handicap to the spirit. While it is true that sickness and suffering have developed in the lives of some who have been afflicted certain beautiful attributes and thus brought the individual nearer to God, yet it remains true that sickness or a weak body handicaps the growth and activity of the spiritual part of our being. This being true it is our duty to care for this fleshly tabernacle in order that the spiritual man may be permitted to develop without any hindering causes from a sickly body. It is a religious duty that we take care of this body, and we will answer to God for our neglect of the physical laws, even as we expect to be responsible for transgressed spiritual laws.

COMMANDMENT VERSUS ADVICE

Some of us at times have sought to excuse ourselves in our disregard of the Word of Wisdom by stating that it was given not as a commandment but as a word of counsel and advice. May I ask why God gave any commandment? According to my analysis of the commandments of God it is clear that every command which he ever gave to his creatures, was given for their eternal good; To promote their happiness here as well as in the hereafter. One of the commands of God is, "Thou shalt not steal." Who does this commandment benefit if observed? Again "Thou shalt not commit adultery." Can we not see that every commandment which God ever gave and asked us to comply with, was given for the benefit of the race to promote their manner of life? Jesus said: "I am come that ye might have life, and that ye might have it more abundantly." This more abundant life comes as a result of obedience to the commandments of God. Commandments were given to make us righteous or to teach us right living. They were given by God because they are the laws which govern our associations with each other and with God. They govern the development of the spirit, and when disobeyed the result will be spiritual death or separation from God, because of our unprepared condition. The advice contained in the Word of Wisdom was given for the same purpose as a commandment. To assist us to come up higher before God. There is this difference, however: Spiritual death is the result when we persist in breaking the commandments of God. The Word of Wisdom may be ignored and not result in a separation from God. But it makes it more difficult for us to work out our salvation when we fail to heed the counsel which was given to make us more efficient mentally and physically. The advice contained in the Word of Wisdom has to do with the development of the body. We are told by Him who created this fleshly tabernacle what is good and what is harmful for its development and growth, with the promise that if we observe the advice given, we will receive health to our navel, and marrow to our bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint. One can readily see how his efficiency as a servant of Christ would be increased if through obedience to the Word of Wisdom he would not only enjoy the blessings of health and strength but would receive the blessings of wisdom and knowledge. These promises are made by God and are just as sure as any promise he has ever made. He realizes that he has simply requested us to observe certain physical laws, and if obeyed the results promised must follow.

DESTROYING ANGEL TO PASS BY

During the recent epidemic of influenza some of the Saints were smitten and died with the disease. This does not signify in many cases that those who succumbed with the disease were weaker spiritually than others who recovered, but it does signify in many instances that they were weaker in body. Because of physical weakness they were unable to combat successfully the scourge. Our bodies as Saints are composed of the same material as the bodies of those who are not connected with the church and as such they are subject to the same physical laws. So when in the midst of disease if our bodies are weak and the system run down we are subject to contract the sickness. There is this distinction which I desire to make. God will and does in answer to prayer and in recognition of the ordinances in his church manifest his healing power, provided it is in harmony with his will. As Latter Day Saints we should have less sickness in proportion to our numbers than any other organization in the world. We claim to have received so much more light than the peoples of other institutions, and this being true, we should be not only the most spiritual but the strongest in every sense, mentally, physically, and spiritually. Daniel, that man of God in his day, was a living example that it pays to honor God's laws, whether they have to do with the body or the spirit. When we learn to hearken to the commandments and advice that God has given to the church we will witness the fulfillment of the promise that the destroying angel will pass by.

GOD OR MAN

Objections are sometimes raised against the Word of Wisdom upon the grounds that it is of man. The fact that it is accepted by the church as a revelation from God, should be sufficient to satisfy the mind of any Latter Day Saint, especially those who are familiar with the tests that a revelation is subject to before it is accepted by the church. One of our popular men was spoken to by a lady at a prayer service some time ago. In her remarks she demonstrated some of her personal opinions concerning the brother and when the individual was approached by a brother and asked the source of the prophecy he stated that no matter from what source it came it contained good advice and he of course could profit by heeding the instruction contained therein. Now the same might be said in regard to the Word of Wisdom. Medical science has time and again vindicated the truth contained in the Word of Wisdom. Thousands have observed the advice contained therein and stand to-day as living witnesses that the promises made will be realized. So you may give the credit to Joseph Smith if you desire, but I prefer to accept it as a revelation and give the credit to God. There is no doubt that one's efficiency will be increased and his usefulness in the church enlarged, if he will but heed the advice contained in the Word of Wisdom.

A healthy body means greater development, mentally and spiritually, if the individual has a desire to establish the kingdom of God and its righteousness. May we learn to live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God and as individuals we will become more proficient in our Christian warfare and the church will be in a position to more fully answer the purpose of its existence a "light to the world." When we learn to heed the advice and commandments of God we will have an efficient church because of the efficiency of the membership and we will become the head and not the tail. The Word of Wisdom came from God and was given to increase our efficiency as members of his church and kingdom.

EDMUND J. GLEAZER.

THE RATIONAL ELEMENT IN RELIGION

We mean by the rational element the right, the opportunity and the encouragement to use the higher mental processes in religion. When these processes operate, a person will either think himself out of religion or discover his foundations more secure. The latter will be the case if it is Christ's religion that receives such scrutiny, the former will be the case if it is some other religion.

One of the greatest needs in thinking is a standard. The customs and traditions of the past, while receiving the sanction of antiquity, which says it must be good because it is old, are by no means absolute and entirely reliable.

The reactionary spirit of the Dark Ages was the result of the exclusive use of the deductive method. Theologians and learned laymen took the decrees of the church and applied them to everyday affairs. Thus Jean Bodin defends the horrible custom of beating the Devil out of witches and the demented. Progress depends upon both the inductive and deductive methods of reasoning. And the people of God if they actualize the Sermon on the Mount must progress. If we shall develop Zion we will have to use both methods of reasoning. Thank God he has told us to reason with him.

The cry of many thinkers to-day is that present industrial conditions tend to crowd out the opportunity for thought provoking situations. No man to-day makes a whole article. He specializes on a single part. His task is enervating. It ought to be energizing. Every man ought to see a thing he works for in its entirety and have joy in its production. Further than this our social activities crowd out the necessity for "the wear and tear of original thought." Says Mr. Week, "Railroad tickets are delivered at the door, and the exigencies of travel are quite forestalled. Every care and worry are taken over by agents and experts—for a consideration. Struggle and confusion, judgment and enforced experimentation are ruled out by the over prosperous parents and coddling functionaries. It was never more easy for a simpleton to live. But let us not forget that an easy environment, with few conditions of surprise, throws the individual down to the lower reactions and swings the beam toward devolution and degeneracy."

This man is by no means alone in his estimate of present conditions. Professor John Dewey tells us that the agencies of instruction must be kept parallel with the changing economic and intellectual conditions.

It is seen that if the masses of the people, who largely because of economic and some social conditions do not exercise the higher processes, that they are at the mercy of the propagandist and mob-exciter. Russia has been pointed too, long before the revolution, as a remarkable possibility for such work.

Publicists are so fully aware of the mobility of people's feelings that they resort to suggestion instead of reasoning. It takes time to reason, to set up alternative against alternative and so it is much more in harmony with the spirit of rush and efficiency to suggest. And this suggestion is carried to the degree of hypnotism. Much, if not all of the Billy Sunday type of evangelization is based on the abnormal feelings and contagions of the crowd. This kind of work is as fallacious as the false pedagogy which says find out which of the pupil's senses is keenest and use that to the exclusion of the other, forgetting that the part of education in this matter is to develop each sense fully.

"The history of man is the history of ideas," and the glory of man is the production of ideas. Upon this depends the permanency and safe progress of the state. In democracy it is highly important that each one be taught to think.

In the effort to get men thinking has religion helped or has it hampered? Much of the religious activity of the past has not been the activity of the higher processes, but of the feelings. That is to say people have been made fearful, or intoxicated with some sort of happiness and they have been at the mercy of the suggestion of the preacher. In its lower form suggestion does not admit of thinking. It is not offered that a person may think but that he may act in the manner that is desirable to the suggestor. Ideals, purposes, etc., which are necessary to individual development can only be developed by personal thought. And the supreme work of the preacher is to cause the reaction of thinking in the mind of his audience. Two examples from the life of Christ will show that he was desirous of provoking the higher thought processes. Nicodemus came to him assuming to know certain things. Instead of encouraging that notion as the modern preacher would do, perhaps, Jesus said no man can see the kingdom of God except he be born again. And Nicodemus said: "How," which reveals the disposition of inquiry. On another occasion a woman not of Israel approached the Master seeking a blessing. Jesus said, "It is not meet to give the food of the children of the kingdom unto dogs." This would have the tendency to turn away a highly suggestible nature. But this woman said, in effect, "yes, but dogs may eat the crumbs that fall from the master's table." In both these instances we see the Lord presenting thought producing situations. And it is remarkable to note that all that modern psychology has contributed to pedagogy vindicates the methods used by Jesus in his life's work as a teacher.

As a church we have emphasized the work of the Holy Spirit. And when we look out on the world and examine our responsibility to the world we see no way of a complete missionary effort that shall stir the nations but by the endowment of the Holy Spirit, that many have foreseen and that many hope for. But let it be said that that does not solve the Zion problem. In The Higher Powers of Man it is clearly indicated that there are forces dormant in the soul that have not been utilized in a general way for the good of man. It is my opinion that this book points out a reservoir of energy that this church must tap and utilize in order to become "the light of the world and the salt of the earth." Out of Zion the beauty of God hath shined and it must shine through the intellectual, volitional, and emotional nature of man. This church calls for consecrated effort for the use of every power of man to the glory of God and the emancipation of his fellows.

JAMES E. BISHOP.

Religion is the reason of the mind, making expression in the soul.—T. W. Williams.

The Call of Service

JOHN R. GRICE

(Tune: "Keep the Home Fires Burning")

They were summoned from the office
Called from workshop, farm, and glen,
And the church it found them ready
When the Master called for men.
Though they suffered untold hardships
For the cause they loved so dear,
With a courage born of love they strive
To reach each listening ear.

Chorus:

Leaving home fires burning,
Leaving fond hearts yearning,
While we journey far away—
Some for years to roam;
So where duty calls us,
Or whate'er befalls us,
We'll not lay the armor down,
Till He calls us home.

Many hearts to-day are pleading;
Bear the message far and wide;
Tell them of the King Christ Jesus
Who for us was crucified.
Soldiers of the cross, press onward!
And to nations o'er the sea,
Preach the gospel of the kingdom,
Which will bring them victory.

Chorus:

There's a Long, Long Time of Waiting

GEORGE W. ROBLEY

(Tune: "The Long, Long Trail")

Nights are growing very weary,
Days are full of work;
I am getting weary waiting,
But I must not shirk.
Old remembrances of preaching
Tell me you are true,
But it seems the world is full of schemes
Just to keep me away from you.

Chorus:

There's a long, long trail a-waiting,
But we don't know where 'twill land;
It may be with the Chinese
Or some other band.
There's a long, long time of waiting,
Until the worst all comes true;
Till the day that we'll be going
Out—a long, long way from you.
All night long I hear a calling,
Calling clear and low;
Seem to hear the time is coming,
When off I must go.
Though the road between us stretches
Across land and sea,
I feel very sure that I'll endure,
For I know you'll pray for me.

Chorus:

'Tis one and the same Nature that rolls on her course, and whoever has sufficiently considered the present state of things might certainly conclude as to both the future and the past.—Montaigne: Essays, book ii, chapter xii. Apology for Raimond Sebond.

"I have read somewhere or other—in Dionysius of Hilicarnassus, I think—that history is philosophy teaching by examples."

PRESIDENT'S REPORT

To the First Presidency and General Conference; Greeting: The past year in woman's work has been an important one, marked, we believe, with greater activity than the age has witnessed before. Great things have been accomplished for God and humanity.

The women of the church have not been confined in their efforts alone to saving those of the household of faith, but have gone "in and out" and done service.

My individual work has consisted of personal attention to a correspondence of several hundred letters, the preparation of a number of papers for use at conferences and special gatherings, and several articles have been contributed to our column in the Herald. Institute team workers representing our organization have been selected, and district and stake organizers have been appointed, with twenty more recommendations on hand secured from district presidents. I have presided over the fourteen sessions of the executive committee and two joint meetings of the executive committee and the Woman's Building committee, also attended three sessions of the general Coordinating Committee.

My contribution of service is not all I would wish it to be, but it has been offered with sincerity and consecration and in full faith that the elbow touch of this great sisterhood will eventually encircle every woman of the church for her individual and general advancement.

SUPPLEMENT

In accordance with the order of the executive committee of 1917 a Supplement to the Year Book was prepared by the Year Book Committee, consisting of the president, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, and Mrs. William Madison. The object of the Supplement was to adapt our work to a war-time program of the Government and to prepare our members for the reconstruction work to follow. It contains the revised Constitution and By-laws of the organization, and is serving well the purpose for which it is intended. Five hundred copies have been sold, and we expect to place many more in the hands of our members during this conference.

CHILD WELFARE PANEL EXHIBIT

In further keeping with the Nation-wide effort to achieve the object of saving 100,000 babies' lives and of setting up irreducible standards of health, education, recreation, and vocational training of the Nation's children, we purchased two sets of the Panel Exhibit, and they have been used in the following States: Oklahoma, Iowa, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Missouri, with splendid results. In California our members rented the exhibit and used it in reunion work, in Ohio the locals bought a set of their own. This exhibit has the approval of the highest authorities and presents the last word of scientific knowledge by text that is easily understood, impressive, and illuminating.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

Our honorary president, Mrs. F. M. Smith, has been in close touch with the executive committee the entire year and has been present at all executive meetings but two. She has served on special committee work, and in the absence of the president from headquarters has met emergencies that demanded wise and immediate action. In her association with the committee her broad vision of woman's work has been a valuable help in formulating the future policies of the organization. In the early winter Mrs. Smith in company with President F. M. Smith visited Toronto, Niagara Falls, Saint Thomas, London, Bothwell, Chatham, and Detroit, addressing large audiences of both men and women upon the work of our organization.

Mrs. Fred Koehler, first vice president, has attended all meetings but one, quarantine restrictions compelling that absence. Mrs. Koehler has been a valuable member on the committee, giving us the local viewpoint of our work because of being actively engaged in the group activities of our organization.

Mrs. William Madison, second vice president, was given supervision of the reunion work early in the conference year, taking charge of the large amount of correspondence incident thereto. Before removing her residence to Ohio, Mrs. Madison was in attendance at all executive meetings, lending her influence and support to every forward movement.

Mrs. J. A. Gardner, secretary, has aside from her regular duties prepared a large amount of typewritten copy for the study courses, and has attended to other special work. Her correspondence always bears a note of encouragement to both the isolated and congregated membership.

Mrs. F. H. Esgar, treasurer, was during the winter made business manager of the organization, and has conducted all business transactions in a very satisfactory manner.

Mrs. Madge Siegfried, historian, on account of sickness of her own and of others was not able for several months to take up the historical work. Of late she has been able to make some plans and suggests the office of district historian in order that the progress of our own work may be more properly observed and noted.

EDITORIAL

Mrs. Audentia Anderson, editor-in-chief and member of the executive committee, reports that one hundred and fifteen original contributions were printed in the Auxiliary columns last year. Of these, thirty-seven came from officers of the organization, thirty-one from other sisters, seven from brethren, and the rest from the editor. They represent a contributing force of forty-seven. Twelve reports only were received during the year regarding the local activities of our sisters. The editor observes, "This does not represent as varied and widely-spread a support as the department deserves."

Mrs. Alice Mae Burgess has made a splendid editor for our column in the young people's magazine of the church—the Autumn Leaves. The space has been made very attractive to girls. The name of this department has been changed to "The Parthenon," the artistic heading combines the emblems of the Orioles and the Temple Builders, our two societies for girls.

Mrs. Corless was commissioned in the summer with the task of editing a woman's department in the paper, Glad Tidings, published at Grand Rapids, Michigan. How capably Mrs. Corless has done this none but the readers of that bright little paper can rightly judge. The editor pleads for a more liberal use by our members of our publishing privileges.

STATISTICAL

The enrollment of the organization is 3,617, though fifty report blanks have not been returned. Estimating but five to each of these organizations would add 250 to the above figures, making the total enrollment 3,867. Last year the estimated enrollment was 3,376; the gain, therefore, for this year is 491. Number of classes in Educational Bureau, 87; number of classes in Home and Child Welfare Bureau, 27; number of classes in Relief and Service Bureau, 143; number of classes in Young Woman's Bureau, 58; total number of organizations, 315.

ORGANIZERS

There are nineteen organizers reporting and the following statistics represent some of the work done during the year:

Number of letters written, 1,012; number of visits to branches, 130; number of educational classes organized, 40; number of Home and Child Welfare circles organized, 9; number of Relief and Service societies, 26; number of Young Woman's circles and chapters, 24.

SUPPLEMENTAL WAR WORK

The reports show a general activity among the women of the church in the war work, all other activities being laid aside for the duration of the war.

EXECUTIVE MEETINGS

The General Executive has held fourteen meetings since last General Convention up to the present time. Two meetings of the General Executive and the Woman's Building committee were held in which the purposes of the Woman's Building were discussed. A mid-year meeting was held in June and invitation sent to all officers urging them to attend. Sister Helen Smith, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and Mrs. Lydia Wiesht and Mrs. Alice Mae Burgess, of Lamoni, were present and had not met with the Executive since April.

REUNION WORK

The Auxiliary work was represented by one or more of the general officers at seven reunions this year. Suggestions for carrying on the work were sent to every reunion advertised in the church papers, and a letter sent to each president of a district or chairman of a committee where reunions were held.

FOREIGN LANDS

In Australia there are eleven locals, an increase of seven this year. An organizer has been appointed in every district. The nature of the educational work engaged in is: social purity, English and American literature, psychology (Brother Haworth's lectures being much appreciated), home training of children, mother-play, sunshine work, and sewing. One local is organized with four departments and forty members, Balmain. This local has also the nucleus of a splendid educational library, featuring home economics, child training, sex instruction, etc.

Switzerland.—We have no report from our sisters in Switzerland, but from correspondence during the year we learn that our work is in progress there.

British Isles.—We had the pleasure of seeing our work gather new impetus in this mission this year from the work of Mrs. Pearl Crick, daughter of Bishop R. May, as organizer. Because of war conditions the prospects were not encouraging at the time, but Mrs. Crick felt that she could make a beginning of the work and seemed hopeful for future prospects.

Papeete, Tahiti.—Because of the frightful ravages of the epidemic of influenza in the Society Islands, Elder Clyde Ellis reports our work is entirely wiped out. This report came to us when he notified us of the sad death of his wife as one of the victims, Sister Clara Louise Ellis, who was our organizer in this mission. Sister Ellis was faithful to the last in teaching the native sisters.

When attention was called to the matter the books were then in the possession of the Church Auditor who was out of town. The report of the auditor has not yet been received.

BUREAUS

The Home and Child Welfare Bureau has this year endeavored to cooperate with the Government in beginning a campaign for the conservation of child life. The working basis outlined by the Government to this end was placed in the Supplement and a more detailed plan has appeared in the columns of the Herald. A series of articles entitled, "Training little children," issued by the United States Bureau of Education and the National Kindergarten Association, with the request that they be printed wherever possible, has been complied with by giving space for them in our columns.

A serious and prolonged illness of Sister Lydia Wight, supervisor of this bureau, has prevented a more active participation in this well-begun work.

The Educational Bureau with Mrs. Dora Glines as supervisor has surpassed the record of all other years in the magnitude of its work. It has been necessary to secure much additional help to prepare sufficient copies of its extension courses for subscribers. Courses have been outlined in the following subjects: Mother's and teacher's problems, psychology, sociology, home economics, public speaking, Bible research, elementary hygiene, sex hygiene, home decoration with reading courses in current events, home nursing and parliamentary law. Special material has been prepared for reunion work and the winter institutes. A number of articles have been furnished by the Educational Bureau for publication in the Herald.

The Relief and Service Bureau has outlined a plan for dispensing relief in cooperation with branch officers. It urges that all enterprises for the making of money be carried on under business methods. War-time activities were also outlined and a vast amount of work was done in connection with the Red Cross Society and in the selling and purchasing of bonds, thrift and war savings stamps. This bureau has been under the able supervision of Mrs. Helen S. Smith. A very fine outline of reconstruction work was prepared by Mrs. Smith for institute work.

In the Young Woman's Bureau we have two societies for girls, The Orioles and The Temple Builders, each of which is a channel for pleasurable service, self-expression, individual development and culture. Forty new circles of Orioles have been organized this year with only one third of the reports in. The estimated number of Orioles throughout the church is about 700 and from 150 to 200 active circles. Miss Grace Thompson of Lamoni, Iowa, is director. The Temple Builders, a more recent organization has reports from only five chapters. Their activities have been picnics, serenades, Red Cross work, social gatherings and bazaars, with proceeds used for Christmas offering. Sewing for orphans has been carried on.

Mrs. Alice Mae Burgess is the superintendent of this society and of the Young Woman's Bureau and is devoted to the highest and happiest development of the young women of the church.

Special outlines were prepared by this bureau for reunion and institute work.

INSTITUTE WORK

Early in the fall we were solicited to join the other departments of the church in arranging for winter institutes, the object being to provide a form of systematic instruction for local and district workers. It was with difficulty that we were able to secure women who were sufficiently familiar with our departmental work to represent it and to leave their homes for the necessary time. In some cases where we had a worker there was not the call from that particular territory. However sixteen women representing our work joined the institute teams and the reports that have been returned have brought much valuable information and disclosed the following:

Localities where our work is weak or strong.

Persons who are particularly interested in certain lines of work.

Those who have special talents and qualifications.

The general condition of branches and districts in Auxiliary efficiency.

While the initial effort of the institute was handicapped by the epidemic of influenza, we are certain great good was accomplished among those who were permitted to attend.

PATRONESS SOCIETY OF INDEPENDENCE SANITARIUM

In this helpful society there is an enrollment of one hundred with twenty-four active members. One entire day per week is spent at the sanitarium in sewing and mending. During the epidemic of influenza the patronesses responded to a special call from the Sanitarium and Stake Bishop to make caps, masks, and gowns for doctors, also for elders to be used while administering to influenza patients in compliance with order from civil authorities. The average attendance is twelve.

An occasional program and light refreshments adds a social feature which is enjoyed by all.

CHILDREN'S HOME

The work of our members on the Board of Trustees for the Children's Home has consisted of caring for clothing contributed—the preparation of same for the sewing societies and the purchasing of new material. The Dorcas Society of Lamoni is mentioned as being untiring in its service of making over old garments as well as new. Sisters Minnie Nicholson and L. L. Resseguie are members of the education committee, and Sister Stebbins of the admission and dismission committee. At one time this winter there were forty-one children in the home.

The members of this Board are Sisters C. B. Stebbins, M. B. Nicholson and L. L. Resseguie. The term of office of Sister M. B. Nicholson expires with this conference year.

COORDINATING COMMITTEE

At the meeting of the Coordinating Committee the Woman's Auxiliary was represented by the president, Mrs. D. J. Krahl, and the honorary president, Mrs. F. M. Smith, by request of the Executive Committee. Two of our study courses were presented for recommendation to proper departments: The Bible Research Course prepared by Mrs. F. G. Pointer of Independence, Missouri, and the Public Speaking Course arranged by Brother T. W. Williams of Toronto, Canada. The Bible Research class after some discussion was referred to the Sunday school department, and the Public Speaking Course was referred to Graceland College with the understanding that an extension department would be created to handle this with other extension courses. In the matter of social purity work it was the opinion of the committee that the Social Purity Board should be abolished and that the work, so far as the initiative is concerned, be referred to the Woman's Auxiliary.

JOINT MEETING OF EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE AND WOMAN'S BUILDING COMMITTEE

At these two meetings the purposes and larger use of the Woman's Building was discussed, the outcome of which was the appointment of a joint committee to lay before the president of the church and the Presiding Bishop the fact of the inadequacy of the present building for larger service. The committee bore a petition for an annex to be erected adjacent to the present building. It was advised by the President and Bishop that our plans be laid before the Church Architect, Bro. Harry Smith, who met with the committee. The committee, so far as they could with present consideration and conditions, presented the general scheme of activities centering in the Woman's Building, so that Brother Smith in his building plans might give due consideration to the needs of the women for an adequate Woman's Building, to meet local as well as general needs which are plainly indicated.

In view of the necessity for an enlargement of our work and the development of new activities placed with us by the Coordinating Committee, the many calls for personal work throughout the church, and the inadequacy of our means to meet these demands, the Executive Committee, on the advice of the Presiding Bishop, presents to the conference the following budget and asks favorable consideration in order that our work may go forward:

Stenographer, office, and equipment; development of Social Purity propaganda and activities; material for correspondence courses; establishment of a publicity bureau; general field work; estimated cost $1,500.

Should this budget be referred to the appropriations committee, the committee of the Woman's Auxiliary would be pleased to meet with them while this is being considered.

The cost of operating our society last year was $505.11. The total income not including Children's Home donations was $572.41. Our assets February 16, 1919, consisted of a typewriter, books, stationery, and office supplies amounting to $103.40. We have no liabilities. Cash on hand February 21, 1919, $85.99.

We believe that as the organized womanhood of the Nation arose to meet a great crisis, and met it successfully and well, so will the organized womanhood of the church meet its serious and imperative demands of the present time.

Respectfully submitted,

MRS. D. J. KRAHL,
President.

CHURCH AUDITOR

To the Presidency and General Conference: Having been appointed by the Presidency as General Church Auditor as a result of the action of the last General Conference, I beg leave to hand you herewith a general report of my year's work, and offer for your information and consideration a view of the work of this department as I see it from an auditor's standpoint.

In order that some of the work done or suggestions made may not be misunderstood, allow me to suggest again, as was outlined by the Presidency and others at the time when "an auditor" was proposed at last conference, that the principal work of an auditor is not merely to count the cash of the different institutions handling funds, or re-add various columns of miscellaneous figures. That feature of the work has, we believe, been faithfully done by the various "Boards of Auditors" in the past. The vastly more important work, however, of an auditor has in the past been largely overlooked, and it has been this phase of the work to which we have directed the most of our time during the year.

In the outset we wish to say that in all of our investigation of the different financial departments, we have found no marks of dishonesty or fraud, and that in the most of the institutions the books have been fairly accurately kept, and the results as shown in their various statements are substantially correct. The system of accounting in some instances, however, is subject to criticism and we fully believe that a great part of our financial shortcomings in the past, and their associate evils, are due to the fact that our books have not made a clear or proper showing for us. In spite of the effort we have put forth to get these methods all corrected, we have only been able to cover part of the ground, and see yet before us, or some one else, a good, full year of hard, persistent work.

We are frank and glad to say that the Lord has wonderfully added to our physical strength and ability in the work we have been doing, or we positively could not have done what we have. It also gives us great pleasure to say that, in nearly every instance those in charge of the different departments have gladly and earnestly welcomed all suggestions of improvement and made our work both effective and pleasant by their hearty cooperation and support; this has given us both courage and strength to no small degree.

It is not our purpose to enumerate in detail the work done or yet to be done; however, there are some items we wish to call to your attention in the work yet to be accomplished. We trust that the work done will manifest itself and the results be ample reward for the efforts put forth in its accomplishment.

Our first work as auditor was, of necessity, to make a careful survey of the situation and of the different departments; to those departments which needed attention most we have, of course, given preference. The system of accounting at the Independence Sanitarium has been completely revised, and we trust as a result this institution will, during the year of 1919, prove entirely self-sustaining.

In council with the Presiding Bishopric, the books of their offices have been extensively changed in an effort to make them more complete and comprehensive. We have tried to the limit of our ability to "aid and abet" the General Bishopric in every way possible in the achievement of their splendid ideas, and help them work out some of their problems.

The Independence Stake books have also been materially revised and made more complete.

There is need of some extensive changes in the books of the Herald Publishing House which should be made, and to which those in charge have been earnestly urging us to give our early attention.

The college books need a complete revision in order to make them clear and responsive to the budget allowance made for the use of that institution each year. We have been unable to get to them as yet, but trust to do so very shortly.

In checking up the overhead of the general church, we found conditions existing in the Recorder's Department which we believe need early attention. The work of the department is in an unsatisfactory shape owing, as we believe, to a lack of a correct system and proper methods. The methods employed use too much help for the results obtained, and should be materially revised.

We also found conditions in the Historian's office that need attention to relieve an extra overhead expense, but we understand this matter is already being looked after.

In auditing the books of the different auxiliaries, we find them correct as to receipts and disbursements, but both the General Sunday School Association and the General Religion Society have outgrown their present system of accounting, and we have suggested to both that a change be made, which suggestion was readily acquiesced in by the officers in charge and will be provided for.

The Saints', Children's, and Holden Homes have also been provided with a more complete set of books, which we feel sure will prove a very great improvement.

The present arrangement of having some of the department books close January 1, some February 1, and some June 30, is, we believe, very unsatisfactory. We would urgently recommend that action be taken by the conference, fixing the date for closing all the general financial books of the church hereafter on June 30 of each year, and that all departments be requested to observe the rule. We believe this would be a vast improvement in many ways.

We are gratified to note in nearly every department of the church offices a radical change from what has, in times past, been a kind of "passive effort" on the part of those employed by the church, to a new standard of efficiency and earnest, honest service. We believe this is as it should be and that the church should have the most efficient service in all lines of its activities that can be produced; that it has the right to demand and require at the hands of those in its service as faithful, conscientious and efficient service, as any business institution in the world, if not more so.

Although the work intrusted to us the last year has given us some hard service, we assure you we feel richly repaid for the efforts put forth and still stand ready to willingly respond to any further calls that may be made upon us.

Respectfully submitted,

R. B. TROWBRIDGE,
General Church Auditor.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, March 24, 1919.

THE SAINTS' HOMES

To the First Presidency and General Conference: We present the following report for the year 1918 of the Saints' Homes:

The Homes for the Aged at Lamoni, Iowa, have, during the year 1918, as usual, been occupied to their capacity and those in charge, notwithstanding the serious shortage of labor have done nobly for the comfort of the old people.

The general health has been good considering the average age of those living there. Only three deaths have occurred, two at the Saints' Home and one at Liberty. Three have removed to homes of their own. Five have been received. There are now in the two homes twenty men and thirty women, a total of fifty whose average age is above seventy-five years.

The management has been under the general supervision of the Lamoni Stake Bishopric with Sister Alice Dancer in charge as matron at the Saints' Home and Sister J. T. Williams at Liberty Home.

We feel that a few words of commendation are due these worthy sisters who are devoting their lives to the comfort and welfare of those under their care; Sister Dancer has been in charge at the Saints' Home since its opening, over twenty years and has been untiring in her effort to make the home what it should be.

There is urgent need of an able assistant at the home to relieve her of some of the arduous duties and we take occasion here to say that any capable sister, anxious to engage in a good work, may here find an opportunity worthy of her effort.

The farm department of the home has been under the able supervision of Brother Floyd T. Lesh, a practical farmer and graduate of one of our agricultural colleges, a thoroughly consecrated young man, who is devoting his talent to the work at a great financial sacrifice on his part.

His report of the farm will appear over his own signature. Some of the needs of the homes are:

A practical or graduate nurse, to have charge of the sick and look after the sanitation.

Capable cooks and housekeepers who could and would make these positions their permanent employment and take an interest in conducting their departments in an economical and sanitary manner.

Brother A. J. Yarrington has occupied as business manager for the Bishopric and his report of the finances are made to appear in a report appended hereto.

A. J. YARRINGTON,
Manager.

HOLDEN HOME

To the Presidency and General Conference: The Home at Holden closed the year 1918 with forty-five inmates. The average age of these inmates is 72½ years, the ages ranging from thirty-nine to eight-eight years.

Sister Almira Rhonemus has acted as matron, and she has given devoted service. Brother D. J. Krahl, president of the Holden Stake, has given much consideration to the improvements which have been made for the comfort of these aged people. Considerable yet remains to be done before we shall be able to give the service we desire to give.

M. H. SIEGFRIED.

SAINTS' CHILDREN'S HOME

To the First Presidency, and General Conference: Herewith we submit report for the year 1918 of the Board of Trustees of this institution.

The personnel of the Board of Trustees for the year has been as follows:

A. Carmichael, president; R. J. Lambert, secretary; A. J. Yarrington, treasurer; Minnie B. Nicholson, Lucy L. Resseguie, Callie B. Stebbins, and Floyd McDowell, the latter serving in the place of Bishop Joseph Roberts, deceased.

In October, Brother McDowell, finding the many lines of work which he was endeavoring to carry too great, and in order to conserve his strength for other important duties, asked to be released from the Children's Home Board. His resignation was accepted and Jay Barr was elected in his stead to complete the term which will expire April, 1919.

In October H. C. Burgess was elected by the Board of Trustees to occupy in the place of R. J. Lambert who had resigned.

There will therefore be to elect at the next General Conference one member for two years to complete the unexpired term of R. J. Lambert. Three members for three years to succeed A. J. Yarrington, Minnie B. Nicholson, and Jay Barr.

At the beginning of the year Brother and Sister J. J. Boswell, of Independence, Missouri, were in charge as superintendent and matron. The heavy responsibility of the care of so large a number of children attended by the difficulty of securing sufficient domestic help, proved too great a strain on the health of Sister Boswell, making it unwise for them to continue.

We want to say in behalf of Brother and Sister Boswell that they were consecrated to the work, and sought with all diligence to improve conditions at the home and teach the children the principles of righteousness, but this is a work impossible to carry out except a corps of efficient helpers is available. Here is an opportunity for those who are qualified and willing to engage in the Master's service to do a good work.

In March Elder A. M. Chase and wife were employed and installed as superintendent and matron and have occupied with credit to themselves and the home, having at the close of the year the largest number in the home at any time since it was opened.

There has been received in the home during the year twenty-six children; four have been placed in private homes, eleven have been returned to parents, two have been removed by death. The family now numbers forty-one.

The financial affairs of the home are made to appear in the treasurer's report which is appended hereto.

A. J. YARRINGTON,
Secretary Pro Tem.

BOOK OF RULES

To the General Conference: The undersigned has been a member of a committee on the revision of the Book of Rules and there has been placed in my hands by a sub-committee a manuscript on the parliamentary part of the Book of Rules. Delay has been had in presenting this report to the conference from various reasons, part of which have to do solely with the undersigned. Lack of time to make such an examination of the manuscript as we desired is one of the reasons; another and weightier one is that we believe a delay would not be a total loss. We feel that there should be a careful revision of the court procedure, and this revision, it appeared to me, was contingent upon a wider appreciation of the necessity for this revision. Agitation in various quarters as to the character of our church courts has greatly emphasized the necessity for this revision.

I believe that no harm will accrue to the work by delaying the printing of the parliamentary part of this revision for at least another conference year, as the revision of the court procedure may have a bearing, direct or indirect, upon the parliamentary part.

Very sincerely yours,

FREDERICK M. SMITH,

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, February 11, 1919.

When the race horse is full of vigor and go, and feels the joy of the race there is little need for the whip or the spur. When they are freely used it would indicate that he is breaking, the strain is too great. A few races won in that way end his career. He may have beaten the other horse, but he has beaten himself also.—E. A. Smith.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Conference Minutes

MOBILE.—At Mobile, Alabama, February 22, 1919, T. J. Booker and A. G. Miller presiding. Officers reporting: president, secretary-treasurer, member library board, and Bishop's agent. Financial reports were referred to an auditing committee. Committee reported treasurer's report correct and an error of sixty cents in agent's report. Branch reports: Bay Minette, 356; Escatawpa, 198; Mobile, 114. Priesthood reporting: 6 elders, 5 priests, 3 teachers, one deacon. The recommendation from the Bay Minette Branch of H. M. Aebli for elder was indorsed and he was ordained. Motion prevailed that the priesthood of the district report their labors to the branch in which they hold membership and that the branch presidents report work of the branches to the district conferences. A budget of $9 was adopted to cover expenses of officers till next conference, and a collection of $11.69 was made for the expense of this conference. At 2.30 p. m. the priesthood held a meeting, presided over by Brother Pitt. Taking the nature of a round table discussion, this meeting proved beneficial and entertaining to members as well as the priesthood. Preaching during the conference by W. L. Booker, F. G. Pitt, and A. G. Miller. Adjourned to meet at Bay Minette, Alabama, May 10, 1919. Edna Cochran, secretary.

Reunion Notices

Central Nebraska reunion will begin August 9, 1919, at Neligh, Nebraska, on the Northwestern Railroad, and an ideal place to hold a reunion. One of the finest cities in Northeastern Nebraska, and has without doubt one of the finest parks to be found anywhere; beautiful bluegrass and the finest kind of shade, a fine pavilion all wired for lights, plenty of good pure water, and on the banks of the Elkhorn River. As soon as we can get in touch with the Saints and all others who intend coming, as to their needs, we can furnish tents at a very reasonable price. A good many desire to camp out, and those who do not wish to do so, meals will be furnished very reasonably at one of our restaurants. We should like to hear from every Saint in the district, and hope you will feel it your duty to attend this reunion and assist to make it a success. The First Presidency has promised us an able corps of speakers, and our district chorister is arranging for the music. We shall expect to hear from all the Saints, and we thank you all in advance for your cooperation in this work which has been intrusted to our care. Kindly watch for further notices that will appear in the HERALD. We invite correspondence, so kindly let me hear from you. F. S. Gatenby, chairman, reunion committee, Orchard, Nebraska.

Married

POWELL-SUMMERFIELD.—At the home of Vernie Ruch, at Huntsville, Missouri, February 21, 1919, occurred the marriage of Brother Joseph E. Powell and Sister Maggie Summerfield, John Davis officiating. Their future home will be at Stewartsville, Missouri. He has been active in church work for fifty years, and is well known throughout this part of Missouri.

Requests for Prayers

Mrs. J. D. Crabtree, Buffalo, Montana, asks the prayers of the Saints, as she is sorely afflicted. She has faith that the Father will hear and answer prayers, and knows that he can heal her if it is his will.

Our Departed Ones

CLARK.—John Clark was born December 20, 1832, in Dunferline, Fifeshire, Scotland. Married Margaret Skinner, and to this union two children were born. After her death he married Mary Ferguson, August, 1865. To them six children were born, of whom only two are living. Came to the United States in 1871. Engaged in coal mining at the age of 9 years, and resigned at the age of 70 years. United with the church April 6, 1899, and was a true and faithful member. Two sons and one brother are left to mourn. Services in charge of C. Malcor. Sermon by Henry Pratt.

WOLGAMOTT.—Grace May Wolgamott passed away March 20, at Seattle, Washington, after a long and painful illness, at the age of 28 years, 9 months, leaving husband, 4 boys, mother, brother, and sister to mourn. Services were held March 23, at undertaker's chapel. Eddeva Irwin and Evan E. Insole sang. Sermon by J. M. Terry, from Luke 2:10.

HOWARD.—Mrs. Harriet Howard, mother of our Sister H. R. Tabbut, passed suddenly away at the home of her daughter and son-in-law, H. R. Tabbut and wife, February 23, 1919, in Seattle, Washington. An appropriate service was held on the 25th, J. M. Terry preaching the sermon. She was a good, affectionate mother, and gave to the church two excellent daughters.

MEYER.—At the ripe age of 77 years, 5 months, 22 days, Sister Maren K. Meyer passed out on March 19, 1919, at the home of Brother and Sister R. P. Mulvane, her son-in-law and daughter, in Seattle, Washington, at whose home she had lived as an invalid for a number of years. She came from Denmark to Nebraska City, Nebraska, where she spent over half of her life, and it was there her remains were taken for interment by the side of her companion, who with 6 children preceded her in death. Two sons and one daughter remain, one of whom, Joseph S., resides in Holdenville, Oklahoma, the other two reside in Seattle. An appropriate service was held on the 21st. Sister Eddeva Irwin, a noted soloist, sang, accompanied on the piano by her mother, Sister S. Barney. Sermon by Elder J. M. Terry. The remains were accompanied to Nebraska City by her daughter, Sister Emma Meyer Mulvane, and son Paul. She died in the Lord and is blessed.

LEWIS.—William, March 29, 1919, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. D. C. Kinnaman, Saint Joseph, Missouri, after an illness of three months. Born in Dowlas, Wales, November 23, 1847. When nine years old, emigrated to America with his parents, settling in Scranton, Pennsylvania. Married to Mary Jones, March 16, 1868. After six years' residence in Nebraska, moved to Stewartsville, and for forty-two years lived in and around Stewartsville, Cameron, and Saint Joseph. United with the church when seventeen years old; was ordained an elder the following year. Served as president of Far West District and pastor of the First Saint Joseph Branch a number of years. Accompanied by his wife and youngest daughter, Ruth, made two missionary trips to Wales, in 1901 and 1908. Labored also in Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Manitoba, Canada; and in New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Illinois, Kansas, Iowa, and Missouri. He leaves a faithful wife; three daughters, Mrs. D. C. Kinnaman, Saint Joseph, Missouri; Mrs. G. C. Johnson, Des Moines, Iowa; Mrs. Mark Holman, Xenia, Illinois; four sons, Daniel, of Casper, Wyoming; Tom, of Homer, Louisiana; David, of Kansas City, Missouri; Robert, of Saint Joseph, Missouri; sixteen grandchildren and one great-grandchild; one sister; one brother, and a host of nieces and nephews. Funeral service at First Saint Joseph Church, in charge of R. S. Salyards; address by J. W. Rushton. Interment in Ashland Cemetery, Saint Joseph.

DONSON.—Mary Jane Case was born October 31, 1846, in Pike County, Illinois. Married Elijah Dodson, Christmas Day, 1860. Baptized June 26, 1870, at San Bernardino, California, by M. McKenzie. Died at San Bernardino, California, March 18, 1919. Survived by husband and four children: Mrs. J. T. Reed, Mrs. Henrietta McMullin, Mrs. J. S. Weeks, San Bernardino, and Mrs. L. W. Smith, Rogers, Arkansas. Sermon by Arthur H. Mills. Special services by the Women's Relief Corps and the Pioneers' Society. Interment in Pioneers' Cemetery.

BARRETT.—Colonel George Barrett was born January 11, 1831, at Erie, Pennsylvania. Baptized November 28, 1896, by Henry C. Smith; confirmed by George Derry and H. C.

Smith. He served as colonel under General Sheridan in the Civil War. He leaves a wife to mourn. Funeral at the Stone Church. Sermon by J. C. Foss, assisted by R. O. Self.

HOUGAS.—At Lamoni, Iowa, April 7, 1919, Brother John Hougas, aged 76 years, 6 months, and 26 days. Married Miss Mary J. Teal in LaSalle County, Illinois, October 15, 1862. They removed to Lamoni in 1895. Sister Hougas, one son and one daughter survive him. Brother Hougas was noted for his honest dealings, his integrity, and uprightness. He obeyed the gospel in 1861, being baptized by C. G. Lamphear. Services at the residence, April 9, in charge of John Smith. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins.

JORGENSEN.—Died April 1, 1919. Beloved husband of Henrietta Burdwell Jorgensen, and father of Mrs. D. D. Edmonds, Mrs. Edward Kohls, and Mrs. G. F. Vrang. Aged 59 years. Was a native of Denmark.

DENTON.—Henry Paul Denton was born February 6, 1867, at Hiawatha, Kansas. Baptized February 24, 1918, by S. W. Simmons. Died March 1, 1919, at Dallas, Texas. Leaves wife and 2 stepdaughters to mourn, together with a host of friends. Sermon by S. N. Gray, assisted by B. F. Moore.

YOUNG.—Near Lamoni, Iowa, March 29, 1919, Mavis Maxine, child of Brother and Sister Samuel Young, aged 5 weeks. Grandchild of Brother and Sister D. D. Young, and Brother and Sister John Stolberg. Two children had passed over before this one, but three fine and healthy children remain. Services at the residence. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins, assisted by Robert Ballantyne.

DELONG.—Oscar DeLong was born December 10, 1878. Baptized by his father, E. DeLong, July 8, 1890. Married Miss Anna Brewer, March 4, 1903. Died at Beaverton, Michigan, March 25, 1919, as the result of an accident in which he was kicked by a horse, and from which he suffered for two weeks. Leaves wife and one daughter to mourn. Sermon by G. W. Burt, assisted by E. N. Burt.

SHADE.—William A. Shade was born in Arandsa, Germany, November 12, 1853. Married Fredericka Kastner, December 8, 1880. Died at Los Angeles, California, February 28, 1919. He was baptized in 1881 at Burlington, Iowa, and had occupied as a deacon and priest. Funeral at the Los Angeles church, which he had built in 1899. He was ever ready to do all he could for the advancement of the cause. His companion is left to mourn. Sermon by David E. Dowker. Interment at the Forest Lawn Cemetery.

GILLILAND.—Mary J. Gilliland was born in Ohio, August 9, 1841. Married Freeman S. Gilliland, who has preceded her, in December, 1862, at Iowa City, Iowa. Leaves to mourn; Joseph D. and Charles A. Gilliland, and Jessie E. Oglesby, Elizabeth M. and Bertha M. Unger. Was a faithful member of the church for over 40 years, being baptized by T. W. Chatburn. Died March 14, 1919, at South Gate Gardens, Los Angeles, California. Sermon by David E. Dowker. Interment in the Inglewood Cemetery.

RUPD.—John Randall Rudd was born in Erie County, Pennsylvania, December 16, 1829. Married Serelda Jordan, April 18, 1853, in Shelby County, Iowa. To them were born 11 children, 5 of whom have preceded him in death, together with his wife who died a few months ago. He lived during the trying times of the early days of his church and country, having served his country in 1864. Died February 25, 1919, at Dow City, Iowa. Sermon by J. M. Baker, of Missouri Valley, Iowa.

JOHNSON.—Ellen Johnson was born in Telemarken, Norway, October 26, 1833. When she was eight years old, her parents came to America, settling in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Afterwards they moved to Iowa, and later to LaSalle County, Illinois, where she spent the larger part of her life. Married Brother Henry Johnson, January 15, 1860, in LaSalle County, Illinois. To this union 9 children were born, 6 of them preceding the mother in death. Those who survive, Mrs. Carrie Varland, of Rutland, Illinois; Oscar Johnson, of Miller, Illinois; and Mrs. Hattie Lewis, of Stewartsville, Missouri, and Joseph Seby of Stewartsville, Missouri, whom she raised, all members of the church. Deceased also leaves 17 grandchildren and 4 great-grandchildren. Died on the old home farm, March 26, 1919. Her husband preceded her in death 27 years. Baptized June, 1861, and up to the time of death was a member of the Mission Branch. Funeral in charge of Thomas Hougas; sermon by F. M. Cooper. A model Saint, beloved and respected by all that knew her. Though dead, her life and example still speak to the living and is a beautiful illustration of the power of the gospel to make us in spirit and life like the divine Master.

THE CONFERENCE

The conference just passed is a remarkable one in several respects. Not a single ordination was provided for. The most vital issue of the conference has been discussed elsewhere at considerable length. We are to be congratulated upon so favorable a solution as has been secured, in the working basis agreed upon even though it was but the statement of principles already well recognized.

Some excellent meetings were held by the elders' quorums and by the High Priests' Quorum—meetings which mark real progress.

The priesthood meetings, at the Coliseum each morning also were excellent and gave much needed information.

The meetings of the auxiliaries during the conference as departments of church work was a new feature. The Woman's Auxiliary presented an unusually strong program.

But the one body of men who continued to meet and do constructive work through the conference, was apparently the Order of Bishops. They presented a budget plan for the conference, which includes the necessary budget for the institutions of the church; arranged for the various boards to handle the church institutions; arranged to start their fiscal year July 1, and provided for the rearrangement of the family allowance based upon more accurate information of family needs, agreeing however, on a maximum limit. They authorized the Presiding Bishop to arrange for the insurance of church buildings by the church. They approved the temporary extension of the church offices at Independence for the immediate needs. Finally they adopted as a platform that the work of the church should be supported by them in the following order:

First: The missionaries and their families, and the general work of the church.

Second: The poor and needy, including the various Homes.

Third: The college and Sanitarium, as provided for by budget.

Fourth: An extension of the church offices at Independence.

Fifth: The erection of a building for Graceland College.

We feel that their work signifies real progress for the church and we sincerely trust it will result in greater efficiency in the various departments of church work, some of which have been greatly handicapped in the past.

A TIMELY WARNING

[Thinking the following from an address by Joseph Smith to the conference of 1900 may prove of interest, we are reprinting. It is only one paragraph from his closing address, but all that bears upon that topic.—EDITORS.]

I warn the brethren, as I have in the past, against the machinations of the adversary sowing dissension between brethren. The adversary has tried, in the past, to lead us astray by a popular sin. I do not believe he will be able to do that again; our faces are set like flints in that direction. But he can and he will endeavor to sow dissension between the brethren; and those who are sufficiently sensitive to his attacks, his approaches, will be moved upon by him, and there will be trouble between them. We should be careful in this regard. And I warn the brethren, too, against what we may call official jealousy. Do not give that place at all; do not give any room for official jealousy. Welcome the man that the people can hear, and aid and help and strengthen those who are ministering acceptably; never mind whether it may call you to sit by and hear him or not. I praise God that so far as I am concerned I love to hear my brethren and know that they are acceptable and blessed ministers for Christ among the people. No matter what may be their names or where their stations, I am pleased when I hear the people say, "I love to hear that man preach." It does me good for this reason, that I have accepted, I believe, in its proper intent and purpose, the declaration that every man must answer to God for himself. I wish to honor my brethren in their places. I have tried to do so; I shall continue to try to do that. I do not want to get into conflict with anybody. The misfortune with me is that when I have to fight I fight hard and am apt to leave wounds and scars when the fighting is over; there is no need of it.

FUNERAL OF HEMAN C. SMITH

The last sad rites over the remains of Elder Heman C. Smith, were witnessed by a very large congregation in the Lamoni church and at the Rosehill Cemetery on Sunday, April 19. The day was a beautiful one and the services most imposing.

A short service was conducted at the home by Elder John Smith, who had charge of all the services. A large number of relatives were among the mourners. The pallbearers were: Hubert Case, A. E. Nunn, E. E. Long, R. V. Hopkins, L. G. Holmoway, R. J. Lambert. The honorary pallbearers were: James McKiernan, Columbus Scott, C. F. Church, D. F. Lambert, M. M. Turpen, H. A. Stebbins.

The songs were rendered by a mixed octet, who rendered "Abide with me," and "The Lord is my shepherd." Paul N. Craig sang a solo entitled: "A city foursquare."

The prayer at the church was by E. L. Kelley. With him on the stand were F. M. Sheehy, John W. Rushton, and R. C. Russell in behalf of the Twelve; Joseph Luff and J. R. Lambert, former members of the Twelve. The sermon was by Elder Joseph Luff, who arranged that Elder John W. Rushton read the resolutions of condolence and respect which had been presented to and read at a concluding session of the General Conference. These contained an obituary account and will appear when we print the sermon later. The latter was of unusual power. The prayer at the grave was by Joseph Luff.

As expressed by the preacher of the occasion, we cannot trust ourselves, nor would Brother Heman have consented, to attempt a delineation of the elements of his greatness. He had many noble qualities which endeared him to thousands with whom he came in contact. His labors in the church have been most fruitful and will live throughout eternity.

FRIENDS

Some beautiful things have been written about friendship, but what does it mean in a practical way? Abraham, we are told, was called the friend of God, for he walked and talked and held close converse with him. Solomon says, "A friend loveth at all times, not only in prosperity, but also in adversity." "He is more hearty in the performance of all friendly offices; he reproves and rebukes when he sees anything amiss."

It is unfortunate that this ideal of friendship should be spoiled in the minds of some by its use as applying to the favor of a prince. When a man seeks to curry favor with another he is no longer a friend in the real sense of the term; and a man with whom he can curry favor is not worth the trouble. It takes, at times, a broad understanding to distinguish between such a distasteful act and the sincere support of a friend who speaks not alone from brotherly love, but also from knowledge, and from a sincere belief in the truth.

We have heard the accusation made several times of different people, that they are quite ready to curry favor with those who are leaders or in authority. This has always a disagreeable side whether it is true or not. It takes at times courage to stand for the right and truth when we know that thereby our real friends are not bound to us any more closely, and we lose favor with others by whom our motives are misinterpreted. But there is only one choice for the man rightly to make, and that is: Choose the truth and the right, and stand for it regardless of attacks.

Our master called his apostles friends. (John 15.) It is a noble title; and means grave responsibility.

EQUITY AND LAW

---

The discussion over a case on appeal to the General Conference made it very plain that no such an appeal lies in the law of the church, as the final appeal is to the General High Council, whose decision is final.

And after this decision it shall be had in remembrance no more before the Lord; for this is the highest council of the Church of God, and a final decision upon controversies, in spiritual matters.—Doctrine and Covenants 104:35.

The legal procedure in case of error is to ask for a rehearing. This is provided for in the Rules of Order, and also seems to be permissible under section 99:9.

When a rehearing is asked for it should be upon just grounds. In equity and justice the question is not as to the exact form or title of the action, or who is complainant or defendant. There should be no such a thing as a criminal action in the church, but always brotherly love in an effort to save the individual.

Where the difficulty is between two individuals, it is apparent without regard to the title of the action that it would be nearly impossible to try one without bringing in the pertinent evidence to try the other one. The fact that one is a complainant should not release him or her from liability to an adverse decision. There does sometimes occur a person who is more or less contentious and ready to bring complaint. Certainly, as a matter of abstract justice, the court should be able to find either party or both guilty.

Then upon request for a rehearing before the High Council, the pertinent factors are, Has the person asking a rehearing been fairly heard before the High Council. This does not necessarily mean in person, for as a rule, such cases are tried upon the written record. It is probably rare that all of the witnesses appear in person before the High Council. Did the person asking a rehearing have a fair opportunity to be heard, or was he misled by the form of action?

The vital aspect of this first question is, Is there evidence that could and should have been submitted, and would have been had the person been more fully advised, or has the court heard all of the evidence pertinent to the case?

There is also the question of representation by counsel, but this would principally be concerned in urging new evidence and in pointing out some features of the law or of the evidence apparently ignored by the High Council.

From merely formal defects, where the person was evidently a party in the court below, a rehearing should not ordinarily be granted. It is only when there is evidence or law which was not fairly considered upon the first hearing on appeal. But the issue is not one of technicality. It is exactly the reverse. The issue is one of justice. If there is not new evidence to be considered, what is gained by a rehearing simply changing the title of the case, so that it is B versus A, instead of A versus B?

But all too often the question is the presumed right that one has to litigate and to continue to stir up a difficulty. There is no such a provision in the law of the church, or outside either for that matter. But by taking advantage of technicalities in a court of law a case may sometimes be kept going for quite a time.

The divine Master instructed us:

Therefore, if ye shall come unto me, or shall desire to come unto me, or if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave thou thy gift before the altar, and go thy way unto thy brother, and first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift.—Matthew 5: 25, 26, Inspired Translation.

This would show that it is the duty of the offender to try to make the matter right.

Moreover, if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone; if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church, but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto you as a heathen man and a publican.—Matthew 18: 15-17, Inspired Translation.

According to this, evidently the one who is offended has also the responsibility of making the first move. In other words, both parties have the duty under the law of God to try to bring about a reconciliation. If they fail, one or two others—the teachers—should be called to help.

If still there is failure, then the elders are called in an elders' court. It is often easy for an elders' court to decide guilt or innocence according to the Rules of Order and Debate. But a deeper purpose is to bring about reconciliation, if that can be accomplished. (See also Doctrine and Covenants 42: 22.)

It is true some infer that an individual has the right to do as he pleases; the right to reject the administration of the church officers; the right to be heard before an elders' court; the right then that his case shall be heard before a bishop's court; and finally, the right that it should be heard before the High Council; and that it shall be heard just the way he wants it, no more, no less. There are several erroneous assumptions in this. There is no right to do wrong.

It is the duty of any individual to accept the administration of the church officers and to be reconciled. If they are unable to come to a just and fair understanding, and the matter is before a court of elders, an effort should be made for final settlement there. One may, it is true, appeal before the courts of the church. But we question seriously if the individual has the right simply to insist that his case must be reheard, and that a bishop's court is bound to hear upon appeal, removing all discretion from the court and leaving it entirely with the individual. At least some statement of grounds of appeal should be given sufficient to make a prima facie case. The court may, if it considers it for the best good of the church and the parties concerned, grant a rehearing. If so, it hears the case de novo. But that a person has this right to have his case heard and reheard, and reheard, was particularly denied by our late President Joseph Smith, in connection with an article in the HERALD, volume 50, page 97. (This appears on about page 99.)

The parties have no real right to stand upon a technicality. It is true that one can reject the office of a brother or sister to bring about reconciliation; can reject the administration of the teachers; can refuse to abide the decision of an elders' court providing the bishop's court consents to hear the case; may refuse to accept the findings of the bishop's court providing the High Council considers the case of sufficient importance to give it a rehearing. They may possibly delay on the findings of the High Council, until the exact term has been placed within which they must make reconciliation. They may wait until the last day, and still keep their name on the records of the church, and some one may argue with great force that they are still members in good standing. Perhaps technically, they are. But they certainly are not members possessing the Spirit of Christ; for according to the Spirit of Christ they should seek at once to make the wrong right. The law goes so far as to say:

My disciples, in days of old, sought occasion against one another, and forgave not one another in their hearts, and for this evil they were afflicted, and sorely chastened; wherefore I say unto you, that ye ought to forgive one another, for he that forgiveth not his brother his trespasses, standeth condemned before the Lord, for there remaineth in him the greater sin.—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 2.

This evidently means that the action is equitable or, in other words, is for justice throughout and to settle the difficulty. Technical points then become of little importance. The great issue is a reconciliation. According to the law of God the one who holds out and will not labor to the end of securing a reconciliation, there remains in him or her the greater sin.

It is not correct, then, that an action before the High Council when it is based on equity, is determined by technical points, but is quite the reverse. The facts are that the aim is to determine the real conditions as truly as possible and to decide accordingly.

At present, if the decision is made, that one or both parties shall make an effort towards reconciliation, the matter is still left open for the branch and its own motion, or upon the suggestion of the administrative or executive officers to take action requiring the parties so to be reconciled under penalty of expulsion. Yet, if such an effort is made to dispose of the case and bring about forgiveness or a reconciliation, all that the court and law desires has been accomplished. This principle of brotherly love is fundamental.

Question. Is it right and proper for a branch president to choose a priest of the Aaronic order as a vice president, when there are those of the Melchisedec order who could fill this office, all in good standing.

Answer. It is preferable to have one of the Melchisedec priesthood as president or vice president. However, we know of no law preventing the presiding elder asking that a priest be sustained as vice president, and if the branch approves, they have that right. Our personal opinion is, the branch has the "right" to choose presiding officer, or officers; it is more proper to choose those best fitted and of the Melchisedec priesthood.

Question. Whose right is it to preside, or to be in charge, in the absence of the president, the vice president, (or presidents), or the Aaronic in their order, except when the president should designate some one in his absence?

Answer. Evidently the vice president, as that is what the term means, the branch having so chosen or sustained.

Question. Under the coordination plan, is not every man holding the priesthood an officer in the branch, of which he is a member? If so, should not their counsel be considered, especially those of the higher order, even though they be not chosen as vice presidents of the branch?

Answer. The coordination plan, as adopted last General Conference does not refer to the priesthood. As members of the priesthood they are officers in the branch, so chosen and ordained, and having the right to act in their office and calling. The presiding officer has the right to ask counsel as he deems wise. Any member of the priesthood has the right to go to him for counsel and to offer suggestions, but not to dictate. A wise presiding officer will consider according to merit the counsel of all associated with him, and will strive to win and merit their confidence and support. Where there is friction, there is not the progress there should be. The vice presidents are associate presiding officers. Naturally, many questions will be submitted to them of routine. The counsel of all should be considered, and in our experience usually is.

Question. Has a branch president any jurisdiction governing new openings, or what time services shall be held, outside of the city, such as suburban towns or in the country adjoining the city (even though he may have members of his branch living there)? Or does it not come under the jurisdiction of the district president?

Answer. The branch president primarily presides over the branch. He can very properly hold or arrange for special services at home of distant members in the reasonable vicinity. New openings belong to the missionary department. Usually convenient arrangements can be made, as the missionary is only too glad to have reasonable cooperation. The district president has supervision of all the branches and by virtue of his office usually has a greater interest in aiding the mission work of the district. But the good of the work is the first consideration and very frequently the president of a large branch can to better advantage look after such work in his vicinity. He can have such jurisdiction by agreement with district president.

OUR TALENTS AND OUR STEWARDSHIPS

(Sermon by Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire, Stone Church, Independence, March 9, 1919. Reported by Howard W. Harder.)

I am pleased this evening to see so many gathered here. One might expect, after having attended several services to-day, that there would not be so many here to-night. I think it speaks well for the services of the day, and I trust that the speakers of the day will pardon me if, in introducing what few remarks I have to make, I shall in a few words try to gather up what has been said. You would not want me to say all that has been said, and if I attempted it I am sure that before I got through the audience would not be as large as it is.

This morning our speaker called our attention to this statement of John, the Beloved: If we have fellowship with him and walk in the light as he is in the light, then the blood of Jesus cleanses us from all sin and we have fellowship one with another. And he admonished us to permit nothing to separate us one from another. In the afternoon, our brethren brought to our attention the conditions that obtain in the world to-day, the conditions that obtain in the church, the problems that concern us as individuals, in our homes, in this city, and throughout the world as a church; problems which we have to meet in our local work, and problems that are presented for solution in foreign missions.

THE PARABLE OF THE TALENTS

One of our brethren pointed us to a remedy for our social ills in the possessing of the mind of Christ, that is, the power of knowing as Christ knew, of feeling as Christ felt, of willing as Christ willed, so habitually that the Christ disposition is developed in the doing of all things whatsoever he commanded. This might be supplemented by the spiritual fountain, which is open to us through the gospel, giving us the sustenance and the strength, that the Spirit might lie in us as our Savior has said, a "well of water springing up into everlasting life." If this mind be in us, it would find expression, your speaker thinks, geographically, industrially, and socially, in a plan or sphere or relation of life which we idealize as Zion. The theme as here expressed possibly by some has been thought to relate only to our attitude toward God and toward our fellow men. We have not thought, possibly, that if the mind that was in Christ Jesus be in us it could find expression through the temporal or material things of life. It, then, befalls the lot of your speaker to-night to show, if possible, wherein the mind that was in Christ Jesus might find expression, might be manifested in our attitude toward and our use of the material things found in this world.

As a lesson we will read a portion of the twenty-fifth chapter of the gospel by Matthew:

For the kingdom of heaven is as a man traveling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods. And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability; and straightway took his journey. Then he that had received the five talents went and traded with the same, and made them other five talents. And likewise he that had received two, he also gained other two. But he that had received one went and digged in the earth, and hid his lord's money. After a long time the lord of those servants cometh, and reckoneth with them. And so he that had received five talents came and brought other five talents, saying, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me five talents: behold, I have gained besides them five talents more. His lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord. He also that had received two talents came and said, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me two talents: behold, I have gained two other talents besides them. His lord said unto him, Well done, good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord. Then he which had received the one talent came and said, Lord, I knew thee that thou art an hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strewed: and I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth: lo there thou hast that is thine. His lord answered and said unto him, Thou wicked and slothful servant, thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gather where I have not strewed; thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury. Take therefore the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten talents. For unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance: but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath. And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth—Verses 14-30, inclusive.

I think it is generally admitted in explaining this parable that our Savior is understood as the man traveling in a far country, that in delivering these talents to his servants, he is delivering the spiritual goods referred to in a statement in the gospel by John, in the seventh verse of the sixteenth chapter, where it is stated: "Nevertheless I tell you the truth; it is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart I will send him unto you." We have a somewhat similar reference in the fifteenth chapter and third verse, and in the twentieth chapter and twenty-second verse, wherein the statement is, "And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost."

Some have claimed that the talents which were delivered to the servants are to be understood as material wealth, reputation, ability, learning. I care not whether you think of these talents as that which is received from the Son of God through obedience to the gospel, which is declared to be the Spirit of truth, or whether you look upon it as the opportunity which is offered by reason of exceptional wealth, reputation, ability, or learning. Apply the parable as you will, the principles here enunciated by our Savior are the same. It should be noted, however, that the statement is, the lord delivered unto "his own servants . . . his goods." First, I want to emphasize the words, "his goods," and, second, that he didn't give them all the same amount of goods, but he divided to each severally as their abilities were.

The lord went on his journey and returned and found that he to whom he had delivered the largest amount returned to him that which had been given him with as much more. Likewise, he to whom had been delivered two talents returned two other talents, and in each case the servant is commended, in each case the servant is rewarded. But when we consider him to whom had been delivered the one talent, he who had taken that which had been intrusted and buried it and then upon the return of his lord returned it to him, we find that he does not present it with the same salutation as the others gave who had received the five and the two talents respectively. Let us see what he does say: "Then he which had received the one talent came and said, Lord, I knew thee that thou art an hard man." This showed that he was trying to place himself in the position to defend himself; he had not yet been accused—he was accusing his lord, who had trusted him. And he says more than that, "reaping where thou hast not sown," or, in other words, taking that which does not belong to you; and then as you would naturally expect of one who would be so ungrateful and make such a statement to one who had befriended and trusted him, he displays his cowardly nature in saying, "I was afraid and went and hid thy talent in the earth; lo, there thou hast that is thine."

HOW MUCH WAS RETURNED?

Now, I question whether or not he returned to his lord all the lord had intrusted to him. He at least had lost what might have been received for the use of it during the time the servant had it. The lord's confidence had been weakened and he answered and said unto him, "Thou wicked and slothful servant,"—yes, wicked, for he had charged his lord with being a hard man—"thou wicked and slothful servant, thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gather where I have not strewed; thou oughtest, therefore, to have put my money to the exchangers." In other words, If I am what you accuse me of being, if you were prudent, and I was such a one as you say I am you should have done the best you knew how with that with which you have been intrusted, so that you could not righteously be charged with being negligent in the performance of your duty. "I should have received mine own with usury. Take therefore the talent from him." Yes, that is the natural consequence of failure to use the talents with which we have been endowed, that is the very natural consequence with which we are all familiar.

Something we learn after a few years of experience in the world is, "and give it unto him which hath ten talents. For unto every one that hath shall be given." Construing this text some have said that the individual that has always gets. That is what the text says, but when we read that statement in association with the other words of the parable we learn that he that had, had it because he had exercised all the powers which he possessed to the accomplishment of good. In other words, he had increased and he was worthy of having an opportunity to take this other talent to see if he could not improve upon it, "for unto every one that hath shall be given." I understand that everyone who has improved his opportunities in this life may expect to be rewarded in the next, and he shall have an abundance; but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath. In some respects he did not have to take it away from him as he had already lost it. "Cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness." It seems to me he was already in outer darkness to some extent. "There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

THE CURRENT OF LIFE

In the discourses of the day, the statement was made that righteousness is truth in action, and I would like to add, the closer the contact between the different points of knowing, hearing, feeling, the more even and powerful will be the current of life. If the mind that was in Christ Jesus be in us and it finds expression not only in our attitude toward God and toward our fellow man, but toward God and toward our fellow men in our conduct with them, in our association with them, in association with or in connection with the material things of life, there is an added point of contact.

The servants were first intrusted with the lord's goods. The choir beautifully sang, "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof," and if we gather nothing else from the remarks of the evening, I would that you might go away with the conception, with the understanding and the deep consciousness that the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof. While I may speak of something as "mine," it is not mine, it is the Lord's and I am but a steward over that which I have in my possession. I believe if we consider it with that understanding, it will not be difficult for us to better understand the application of that part of the gospel law which we refer to from time to time as the temporal law.

GOD'S PLAN FROM THE BEGINNING

The Apostle said, "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." If we believe that, we ought to acknowledge God's sovereignty, God's ownership. If I have a piece of property and you desire to have the use of it, in what way do you acknowledge the legal ownership if you please, my legal ownership of that property? By paying me at stipulated and appointed times a fixed amount. From the very beginning, the ownership of God has been acknowledged and the one who made the fullest and best acknowledgement was the one who received the commendation of the Lord. Instance the case of Cain and Abel. Abel brought of the firstling of the flock and of the fat thereof. What does that mean? It means that he brought the best, the choicest, as an acknowledgement of God's ownership, God's dominion.

We find that Abraham acknowledged God's due, and as we are instructed by our Savior, he rendered unto God the things that belonged to God and paid his tithe. He didn't pay it as a barter; he didn't pay it as a consequence of an agreement that he had entered into that he would do it. He recognized the supremacy of God and his ownership; he paid that which he should pay. I wonder if that is the way we pay our tithing to-day, or do we pay it expecting that if we do then God is going to bless us? I believe we should pay because God does bless us, not in the hope that he will bless us—in other words, our observance of the temporal law should be because of our recognition of God's right to receive and not because of fear of the consequences if we do not. If the properties are man's, then they do not belong to God and any offering we make is not of love but of fear, because if it is ours we do not have to give it; if it belongs to the Lord, then we should acknowledge his ownership and pay our debt.

"AS YE PLANT—"

Furthermore, let us look at this from another angle: about this time of the year the seed houses all over the country are distributing catalogues and each one of them is advertising that it has the best and choicest of seeds; from that establishment upon whom we can most depend we secure our seed for the planting, and there is not one of us so unwise as to expect that from some poor, moldy, undeveloped ear of corn we shall be able to raise an abundant crop. It is not natural. We are willing to pick the best of which God has intrusted to our care in the vegetable kingdom, if you please, and plant it, trusting to God that we might have the more abundant supply. Yet we find that our understanding is so clouded and our vision so obscured that we cannot see it is necessary that we take and place under the care, the culture, and the blessing of almighty God the choicest spiritual gifts with which he may have intrusted us in order that we might thereby be enriched. If what we have is the consequence of God's love for us, and if we take of the choicest of it and as a consequence reap the more abundant harvest, why cannot we see the reasonableness of taking that of value which is measured in dollars and cents and utilizing it in that way that it will of a consequence bring to us a more abundant harvest, if we want to look at it from a selfish standpoint.

He that had but the one talent failed to use it, and doubtless your experience in this life has been that the one who is not very richly endowed with either a spiritual talent, an intellectual talent, or a material talent is the one who fears to use that which he has and as a consequence his soul is thereby dwarfed the more.

We have presented to us, as was mentioned this afternoon, several problems. I believe I stated from this stand a few weeks ago that money would not redeem Zion. I am still of the same opinion, although one good brother has questioned that statement, but I think after we had conversed a little while he understood that my opinion was the same as his. Money will not redeem Zion, but our attitude toward money, which measures value, must be taken into consideration in the redemption of Zion. What is value? Value in another word means fitness. Possibly that is not just exactly the way an economist would express it, but the more fit a thing is the more valuable it will be, or, if you will permit me to express a new term, the more the wantability of that article will be—in other words, the more the article is wanted. Every good and every perfect gift, that is, every valuable or fit gift, is from above, and to the extent that we properly prize, properly evaluate, properly measure, in terms of money, that which has been intrusted to our care so that we will utilize it in the way God has intended it to be utilized, it will work to our eternal good.

All things work to the good of those who love the Lord. If we properly evaluate, properly measure the fitness of that with which we have been blessed to the extent that we appreciate the purposes for which it is designed by almighty God and so utilize it to that end, mankind as a whole will be enriched and we, as a consequence, will be blessed. And if the mind that was in Christ Jesus be in us, we will understand as he understood, when Satan would have him take the world and all the glories of it. Christ recognized that the world did not belong to Satan. I think oftentimes when we use this world's goods in the way that God would not want us to use them we haven't the mind of Christ which perceives that the thing does not belong to us and should not be used in the way that caprice would suggest or Satan would have us to use it. So sometimes we use this world's goods as we would, not as God would have us to. Consequently, oftentimes we do not have the sympathy, the love, the feeling toward our fellow men that the mind of Christ in us would beget.

PRACTICAL SYMPATHY

Reverting to the statement of the Apostle James wherein he says, "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." We fail to recognize that sympathies should be aroused by the want, by the need of some other, and that we should be willing to take that with which we have been blessed and impart to them. In this we should be moved not altogether by our sympathies and give in a promiscuous way, but, as our attention this afternoon was directed to section 102, we should give as becometh Saints, and as section 42 says, for the support of Saints. I believe I have here before emphasized that word support. We should not give in such a way as to rob the individual of his individuality; not in such a way as will make of him a member of that famous General Coxey's Army; no, we should give in such a way that he would not want to bury his talent but that he would want to use it that he might hear the Lord say when he comes, "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make the ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joy of thy lord." And if we enter into the joy of the Lord, the world and the fullness thereof is ours if we look at it in the right light. Why then should we pin our faith, confidence, and trust upon a few material things in this life, all of which pass away?

COURAGE AND SACRIFICE

Now, in conclusion, I read an article just two days ago, I believe it was, in the Kansas City Times-Star, relative to the answers given by a number of men in the army to questions that were submitted to them by some of the social workers of the Y. M. C. A. who were over on the other side during the war, and they said in answer to the question as to what quality was of first importance—almost to a man they answered, courage. Secondly, they said, sacrifice. And in answer to the question as to what they most detested the answer was, first, cowardice; second, selfishness.

We have before us a problem that calls for solution and I am glad to say this evening that I find that during the past year the Saints have manifested their confidence in the program of Jesus Christ, our Lord, and have courageously done their part in supplying more in material wealth, thereby showing the correct attitude toward God and their fellow men more than they ever have in the experience of this church. They have also manifested, as I learn from many parts of the country, sacrifice for the gospel of Jesus Christ as has never before been manifested by the Saints of latter days, and I am of the opinion that the Saints are deeply conscious of the fact that straight is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth on to life in this sense that if we would have Zion redeemed it must be done in God's way, but God's way is as broad as infinity is broad and it is as unlimited as God in his infinitude is unlimited. If any man will come after Jesus, the Christ, he must deny himself, and take up his cross and follow him, and I know that there are hundreds and thousands in this church who are bearing the cross of the Master.

That means more than sanctimoniousness. "Thy word is truth," "I am the way, and the truth, and the life," said the Master.

Our brother this afternoon said righteousness was truth in action. Have we accepted the truth of the latter-day evangel; have we taken of the knowledge of the gospel of Jesus Christ and reduced it to terms of human conduct? We are told that we should work out our salvation. That does not imply that we should take the talents with which we have been blessed and bury them as did he who was intrusted with the one talent. We should work out our salvation. Furthermore, we have no reason, no spirit of bondage to fear; no, we should exhibit faith and trust and confidence and loyalty in Jesus Christ and his program, remembering that he has called us no more servants, but friends.

Now, I want to know to-night what one of us would not respond to the suggestion of a friend; who is there of us who would not respond to the request of a friend. I am sure there are none of us who would not. Jesus considers us his friends. In the Hebrew letter, 12th chapter, we read:

For ye are not come unto the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, nor unto blackness, and darkness, and tempest, . . . but ye are come unto mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels. . . . And to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel.

Saints, I am sure that at the close of this day of service, we feel courageously and unselfishly to put our trust and confidence in God and in his word, to use the opportunities that are afforded us from day to day, as he has bestowed upon us this blessing of opportunities according to our several abilities, irrespective of what our brother does or our sister does; and if we do so, the sum of it all will mean that out of this troubled condition in the world there will issue a condition like unto that which we mentally picture as Zion, the city of God. Oh, how I hope that I may make you feel that if it is to be the city of God, God must have something to do with its building—in other words, all our activities, all our thoughts, all our feelings must be expressed in the way that God would have us, in order that the result might be that which would properly be said to be God's; and if it is not the city of God, then it is not the city of Zion for which we are looking.

May the desire which we have be supplemented by the fountain that is open to us through obedience to the gospel, that our vision may be clarified, our understanding more far-reaching, our feelings be more sensitive, and our will to do the right strengthened, that we may courageously press forward to the mark of our high calling and attain unto the stature of men in Christ Jesus.

THE MIGRATIONS OF THE ANCIENT AMERICANS

Every Latter Day Saint is or should be deeply interested in the Book of Mormon, and should familiarize himself with the archæology, topography, legends, traditions, and all pertaining to that intensely engrossing subject.

After studying carefully the Book of Mormon, the Report of Committee on American Archæology, and a later theory placing the entire happenings of the Nephite nation within the confines of Central America and Mexico, the writer has produced this article, confining himself strictly to the journeyings of the Nephites; leaving out, to a great extent, tradition and myths, because of the fact that springing from the same parent stock, the history of the descendants of Lehi, wherever located, must be similar, and though substantiating the Book of Mormon cast insufficient light on location, being as they are, and as to be expected—conflicting, each tribe taking to itself and its locality the happenings of the Book of Mormon, and even some of those of the Bible, as they journeyed. This carried them beyond the borders of Mexico within the United States. It could not be otherwise.

Almost the first record found of the Nephites is that they traveled in the wilderness:

And it came to pass that we did find upon the land of promise, as we journeyed in the wilderness, that there were beasts in the forest of every kind, both the cow, and the ox, and the ass, and the horse, and the goat, and the wild goat, which were for the use of man. And we did find all manner of ore, both of gold, and of silver, and of copper. And it came to pass that the Lord commanded me, wherefore I did make plates of ore, that I might engraven upon them the record of my people.—1 Nephi 5: 216-218.

In these three verses, we find that the Nephites did journey (not wander) in the wilderness. No doubt guided by God, as they ever had been, they traveled to the destination their Great Guide designed for them, and that by the most direct route possible. As to how long they journeyed, we have no way of knowing except that they found these different species of live stock, and the several varieties of metal, all of which they doubtless gathered together in sufficient quantities for their immediate use, at least; domesticating the animals, and smelting the ore, placing each in a condition available for the use expected of it. Evidently all of these things could not be found in one locality. Undoubtedly the animals, with the possible exception of the goat, would be found along the fertile river valleys or grassy plain, while the ore and the wild goat would come from a mountainous region.

All these things they discovered as they journeyed in the wilderness. It must be evident, therefore, that they traveled many days, at the very least, led by One with a definite destination in view. Also they journeyed in a country rich in these natural resources, else the distance traveled must of necessity have been considerably greater. The distance traveled at the very outset, therefore, could not have been short of several hundred miles. To be conservative we will place it at two hundred.

Already it becomes clear that the place of landing must have been far from the place in which we find them while in the height of their prosperity.

As we seek further, we will read of more journeying, more fleeing, until we become convinced that all recorded in the Book of Mormon could not, in the range of reasonable possibility, have transpired within the narrow confines of Central America and Mexico. As their home at a later period was near the narrow neck of land—"pass" (Alma 30: 5) then the place of their landing must have been hundreds of miles from that place, for practically all of their journeying was in the wilderness—a hitherto unexplored region, as further study cannot fail to convince us. Therefore, they must of necessity, have journeyed in one direction only, going farther and farther from the "first inheritance."

Therefore, by making a close study of the Book of Mormon, also the Report of Committee on American Archæology, and the two books of more recent date, it will clearly be seen that so far as the landing place of the Nephites is concerned, the report of the committee, though not necessarily correct, must be given the preference, as being the most probable. To the mind of one making a life study of the Book of Mormon, and the regions southward of the United States, their conclusions are so highly probable as to be almost indisputable. From their report, credited to Johnson's Universal Encyclopedia, volume 2, page 245, we read as follows:

The space between the Andes and the coast range south of latitude 33 degrees, consists of plains and rolling lands with isolated hills. . . . The so-called Valley of Chile, the richest part of the republic, and containing the bulk of the population. . . . All this region is well watered and fertile, and adapted for grazing and the cultivation of grains, and with a delightful and very healthy climate.

Could a country more ideal for a struggling colony possibly be found? Could a place be found more ideal for their "first inheritance"? As we study further we will see where these conditions are still more ideal.

Now, because of threatened death by his elder brothers, Nephi, under divine guidance, took his family, "and also Zoram and his family, and Sam, mine elder brother, and his family, and Jacob, and Joseph, my younger brethren, and also my sisters, and all those who would go with me." (2 Nephi 4: 8.)

Now if, as we suppose, the first landing was made near the thirtieth parallel south, there would be but one direction open to them—a northward one. They did not go back the way they came, for the record says:

And we did take our tents and whatsoever things were possible for us, and did journey in the wilderness for the space of many days. And after we had journeyed for the space of many days, we did pitch our tents. And my people would that we should call the place Nephi; wherefore, we did call it Nephi.—2 Nephi 4: 10-12.

Please remember Nephi—plain Nephi, and do not confuse it with the Nephi of future date. The city of Lehi-Nephi was soon abridged to Nephi becoming in its turn a central city.

Here again we find them journeying in the wilderness. They did not retrace their steps to the land of their first inheritance, for if they did they would not be traveling in the wilderness. If they landed in Chile they traveled north, leaving their jealous brethren to the south.

Now how long or how far did they travel? For the answer let us again read from Report of Committee on American Archæology, page 21:

North of latitude 33 degrees the space between the mountains is much broken by spurs and cross chains, and the intermediate plains are high, rainless, and barren; these are the deserts of Atacama and Tarapaca.

Here again an all-wise Father shows his wisdom in choosing a route over which the revengeful brothers would hesitate about attempting pursuit. Living in a rich country, abounding in fruits and game, their well-known shiftlessness would prevent of their following the faithful but smaller band across so inhospitable a country, thus allowing for at least a season of preparation for the Nephites.

The Nephites, once started on their northward course, there was no turning back. Hard enough would it be for them to even remain quiescent. Rapidly or slowly, whatever the circumstances might be, they were henceforward doomed to that gradual, inevitable march to their Thermopylæ. It is easy to see how impossible it would be for them to follow any course save the one northward. The inhospitable valley of the Amazon on their right, the Pacific on the left, and the jealous Lamanites to the south, no other course was open to them.

Now how far did they travel? Evidently they could not settle in the desert north of the thirty-third parallel south. They must have journeyed at least as far as the first available country. This necessity not only agrees with the topography of the country, strategic position, and the divine plan of the Father, but with the recorded word as well, which says: "And we did take our tents and whatsoever things were possible for us, and did journey in the wilderness for the space of many days."

The committee places their settlement at Cuzco, which seems altogether probable. If this theory is correct it is easy to see the omnipotent arm in their landing, their gathering of minerals, and beasts of burden, their separation from their brethren, the placing of a desert between them and their enemies, and the final settlement in one of the richest parts of the globe.

Now, the placing of eight hundred or one thousand miles between the people would likely be the one great aim of their leader. The finding of a desirable location, though of great importance, must be secondary. In the wonderfully appropriate topography of the country, they were enabled to kill two birds, perhaps several, with one stone.

In Peruvian Antiquities, page 52, as recorded on pages 26 and 27 of the Report of the Committee on American Archæology, we find the following:

"Peru," says Montesinos, "was populated about five hundred years after the deluge. Its first inhabitants flowed in abundance towards the valley of Cuzco, conducted by four brothers . . . accompanied by their sisters and wives. The youngest of the brothers, according to tradition, was at the same time most skillful and hardy."

This needs no comment to students of the Book of Mormon. Who else could these four brothers be but the married sons of Lehi?

Now as to the desirability of the valley Cuzco, we have the following:

Here nature has worked on her most stupendous scale. This region presents every variety of climate and scenery; tropical vegetation in the deep gorges, the climate and products of Italy and Spain in the warm valleys, the crops of Northern Europe in the more elevated and ravines, higher up the pasture lands of Alps, then bleak wilds with sub-arctic climate, crowned by rocky heights and peaks covered with everlasting snow.—Peru, by Markham, page 25.

A second Palestine! Does this not sound like a description of the Holy Land? Is the forming of a land with which these exiles would be so at home merely a coincidence?

In proof of architectural greatness of this country, we find:

Geology and archæology are combining to prove that Sorato and Chimborazo have looked down upon a civilization far more ancient than that of the Incas, and perhaps coeval with the flint-flakes of Cornwall and the shell mounds of Denmark. On the shores of Lake Titicaca are extensive ruins which antedate the advent of Manco Capac, and may be as venerable as the lake dwellings of Geneva.—Baldwin's Ancient America, pages 273, 274.

According to the later theory the Jaredites landed in Mexico, lived in Mexico, and died in Mexico; the Zarahemlaites and the Nephites followed their example. The ruins in other parts of the American continent are ignored. The question arises, Can we afford to ignore them? If we do not present the question as to their origin, the world will. If the above-named theory is right in the statements concerning the Jaredites and Zarahemlaites, but one conclusion can be reached. They were built by the Nephites.

Now, as has been shown, the Nephites traveled or journeyed in one direction only, at last joining forces with the people of Zarahemla. They came from the south, building cities only to yield them up to their hereditary foes, gradually drawing near to the land of Zarahemla.

The Nephites left Jerusalem 600 B. C. Moroni's last date was 420 A. D. Would it be possible that the descendants of the colony which came with Lehi could live, multiply, become the exceeding fruitful vine spoken of in the Bible, a powerful nation of sturdy men and women, blessed of the Lord, and pass onward to extinction all in the narrow confines of the land represented between the Rio Grande and Columbia? Would it be possible for this same powerful nation to live within so short a distance of the nation called Zarahemla for centuries without guessing at their proximity? The obvious answer would lead us to look further south, indeed, to an exceedingly remote region, for the land of their "first inheritance;" for besides the two long journeys already mentioned, the Nephites traveled much, either compulsory or otherwise, and, remember always in the one direction.

In Elder Hills's little book, Geography of Mexico and Central America, page 11, we find the following quoted from the Book of Mormon:

He, Mosiah, being warned of the Lord that he should flee out of the land of Nephi, and as many as would hearken unto the voice of the Lord should also depart out of the land with him unto the wilderness, and they were admonished continually by the Lord, and were led by the power of his arm through the wilderness until they came down into the land which is called the land of Zarahemla, and they discovered a people who were called the people of Zarahemla.

Note the words discovered and flee. For the first time, four hundred years after their flight from Jerusalem, and while still fleeing from their enemies to the south, they discover the people of Zarahemla.

Again taking up their intermittent journey which had been a part of their program for four hundred years, they come to the land of Zarahemla. Would it be out of the range of probabilities then, that they traversed the distance represented between the thirtieth parallel south and the Isthmus of Panama at the slow rate of seven miles a year? Especially when we consider that they were a rich industrious nation, persecuted by a poor, covetous foe, ever actuated by the shiftless, ungodly, bloodstirring attributes and desires credited to them by the Book of Mormon.

In each stop which marks a pause in the protracted Nephite journey, they must have had hopes of their stay being permanent, for they would build a temple. (See 2 Nephi 4: 22; Alma 14: 3.) Every town of note seems to have had a temple.

For a season Zarahemla became the chief seat of the Nephites, the two making common cause against the Lamanites. Thus we find four cities around which as the center, but at different times, the Nephites grouped—the first inheritance, Nephi, Lehi-Nephi (afterwards abridged to simple Nephi, and therefore often confused with the city Nephi), and Zarahemla. Therefore during the first four hundred years the Nephites had shifted their locality to the extent that it was imperative that they desert the city which had cost them so much in time and labor, and at great cost do their work again, their religious zeal causing them to put their greatest skill and hardest labor on the construction of their temples, some of which still remain to astound those who gaze upon them.

All these journeyings, with the possible exception of the last, were made before the Lamanites began gaining great advantage over them. Therefore, during the next six hundred and twenty years, their journeyings must have been greater.

About midway between the time they left Jerusalem and their extinction, we read of the first migration from South to North America. In Alma 30: 5, 6, we read:

And it came to pass that in the thirty and seventh year of the reign of the judges, there was a large company of men, even to the amount of five thousand and four hundred men with their wives and their children, departed out of the land of Zarahemla, into the land which is northward. And it came to pass that Hagoth, he being an exceeding curious man, therefore he went forth, and built him an exceeding large ship, on the borders of the land Bountiful, by the land Desolation, and launched it forth into the west sea, by the narrow neck which led into the land northward.

Here again we find the Nephites journeying northward; a company of men, women, and children, to the number of perhaps fifteen or twenty thousand, there being five thousand four hundred men, with their wives and children. This was by the narrow neck of land which led into the land northward.

Look on the map of the western hemisphere. What narrow neck of land divides the southern from the northern body of land? Only one deduction is possible here. For the first time the Nephites colonize North America. Half of their entire sojourn, therefore, was spent exclusively in South America.

In the forty-sixth year of the judges, we come to the great migration of the Nephites. A migration which finds no parallel in the history of the universe. In Helaman 2:3, 4, we read:

And it came to pass, in the forty and sixth, yea, there were much contentions and many dissensions; in the which there were an exceeding great many who departed out of the land of Zarahemla, and went forth into the land northward, to inherit the land; and they did travel to an exceeding great distance, insomuch that they came to large bodies of water, and many rivers.

Now, remember, they were in North America. Could they have journeyed this exceeding distance and still remain south of the Rio Grande? For answer we will read verse 8, of the same chapter:

And it came to pass that they did multiply and spread, and did go from the land southward to the land northward, and did spread insomuch that they began to cover the face of the whole earth, from the sea south [Gulf of Mexico] to the sea north [Arctic Ocean] from the sea west [Pacific Ocean] to the sea east [Atlantic Ocean].

With this the Committee agrees (See page 69.) Verse 4 says: "They came to large bodies of water, and many rivers."

Ask the first schoolboy you meet to find the locality in North America fitting that description.

We find in paragraph 9 that here, too, they have their temples. By the finding of one temple, therefore, we cannot, in the range of human possibilities, group the entire Nephite nation around it for the entire thousand years of their sojourn on American soil.

In the fifty-seventh and fifty-eighth years of the judges, the Lamanites took possession of all the land of Zarahemla, thus again crowding the Nephites from a great center into their next stop northward, placing the entire Nephite nation within the confines of North America, leaving the continent of their first inheritance to the Lamanites.

Their next stronghold was in the land Bountiful.

Then followed a three-year's war, during the entire duration of which the Nephites fled northward, calling together their people, then in a valley defeated the Lamanites and drove them again into South America.

In Mormon 3:2 we find: "And we did march forth before the Lamanites."

More fleeing, more journeying, and now for their very lives; a flight to last until death. Now their great aim was to gather their people together to fight against the Lamanites; a last desperate effort for existence. They covered the whole of North America, as has been clearly shown. What more natural, then, than that they should push through this populated country calling on all who would rally to their arms? Is it not also most probable they would make their last stand somewhere in the northeast? The committee places the location of their last battle at the hill now called by us Cumorah, in the State of New York. The gold plates hid by their last custodian in the hill he called Cumorah, were found at that place. Joseph Smith, the Seer, said the hill was the hill Cumorah. (See Church History, volume 1, page 181; Latter Day Saint Biographical Encyclopedia, is an account given by David Whitmer of an open vision seen by Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, and himself; Joseph Smith and his Progenitors, by Lucy Smith, page 113; Life of Joseph the Prophet, by Tullidge, page 17.)

The printed record, archæology, reasoning, the discovery of the gold plates, and the word of our beloved prophet attest the fact that the last scenes of Nephite history were laid in the far northeast.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

[The following oration was awarded first place and the author given the prize of a scholarship to Graceland College in the annual oratorical contest during the late General Conference. We are pleased to give it a place in our columns and know our readers will appreciate it.—EDITORS.]

The most cruel and bloody war of all history has closed. The armistice has been signed. The terms of peace are under way; for a little while we breathe the free air of a free people. But hardly have we drawn our first breath, until there forms in our minds the question which has been discussed within the halls of legislation; that question which has throbbed in every heart and in every breast of every land; that question which has been torn from the lips of the dying men on the blood-soaked soil of France, and which now crowds unresistingly to the forefront: "How can the repetition of such a catastrophe be prevented for all future time?"

For it can be prevented. It must be prevented. It shall be prevented. And in the words of Abraham Lincoln our duty lies plainly before us:

That with malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in, to bind up the wounds of the nations, to care for him who shall have borne the brunt of the battle and for his widow and his orphans, to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations.

The nations, indeed have wounds to heal. God, alone, knows how deep and how mortal those wounds are. They are so deep that we, standing now at this moment of victory, and viewing with our finite gaze the wanton destruction of this terrible conflict, stagger and grow dumb; and the shouts of victory that would rise to our lips are smothered by the sobs of mothers and sweethearts, by the cries of fatherless children, and by the untold anguish of millions upon millions of poor, bereft souls.

Our view of the future is shadowed by the numberless orphans who must grow to maturity without the guiding hand of a father; by the gray hairs of aged mothers unsoothed by the hand of son; by the empty blighted lives of fair maidens who must go through life unwed, denied of the support of husband's care, and of the gentle caress of growing children, who must face the darkening days of coming years with only the dead hope of earlier dreams to soothe their lonely lives. Yes, our hearts grow sick and we turn blindly away from such a picture. But the stern reality remains. Those wounds must be healed—healed never again to be torn asunder by a wretched war of unrestrained ambition and unbounded selfishness for power.

In the words of President Wilson, this can only be done, "by such a concert of free peoples that no nation or group of nations by their single choice can upset the peace of the world." "This concert of free peoples is a league of nations formed under covenants, that will be efficacious;" that will guarantee the freedom of thought and of action incident to free peoples; that will protect the interest of peace and peaceful pursuits for all future time. To this task we dedicated ourselves in entering the war; and under that dedication we are duty bound to press that war and its subsequent negotiations to a just and permanently amicable end. We cannot hesitate or turn back. We must face the issue. We must form that concert of free people—that league of nations.

There are those who say it cannot be done. And it cannot upon the basis of autocratic practices. It cannot be accomplished upon the basis of governments which dictate wanton and ruthless destruction; upon the instigation of which, small and defenseless nations are laid waste; by whose orders innocent and unprotected life is destroyed; and by whose very deeds the pure and unstained virtue of womanhood is betrayed. No, it cannot be accomplished upon the basis of German atrocities; but it can be accomplished based upon God-given principles of right and justice.

Those principles are honor, wisdom, love, and humility. Such principles as these are basic in the free government of free peoples, whether that government be legal, economic, or religious. These are the principles for which the allies have been fighting; for which these nations have pledged their last man and their last dollar. These principles recognize the inexorable rights of all nations. Honor prevents any nation's infringement upon the rights of any other nation, however small or however weak. Its meaning carries with it the combination of honesty, sympathy, and justice.

Wisdom weighs and balances the claims of all, makes due allowances for mistakes, and decides judiciously between right and wrong.

Humility brings low the proud and harnesses the boastful. It places in the hearts of men and of nations a just estimate on themselves, preventing any arrogant boasting and discouraging the ambition for a "place in the sun."

Love unites all on the basis of understanding, and binds them together with the strong bonds of sympathy and friendship.

Some have said that the allies have been fighting for national expansion, for national ideals. Honor, wisdom, humility, love—these are not national; they are international. "We have not been fighting for French, English, or American law, justice, truth, and honor, but for international truth, international honor." We have not been praying to a French, an English, or an American God, but to the God of nations, the God of creation. We have never established a tribal or national deity. The God invoked by the framers of the Declaration of Independence, by Washington, by Lincoln, and by Wilson, has been approached as the Father of mankind. So if he has prospered us in this terrible struggle; if he has brought about the triumph of right, shall we not, out of honor to him and his name establish this world peace upon the basis of God-given principles?

There are those who say this cannot be done. That a lasting peace embodying these principles is impossible. If this is true, if out of the infinite travail of suffering there is not to come a new birth of international freedom under international law, then our numberless dead will have died in vain. And, if in this day of victory, we permit narrow and reactionary statesmen to contrive peace negotiations, under which the nations revert to their former state of international anarchy and competitive preparation for fresh conflicts, the spirits of millions of victimized and bemocked young men, dead in their prime, should rise from their graves and protest against the great betrayal.

But we believe it will be done. For statesmen under the directing hand of God have accomplished marvelous works in the past, and under that same guidance they can accomplish this great task of to-day, once they are convinced of what is required of them. In the words of Micah, the prophet, "What more doth the Lord require of thee, than to do justice, and love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God."

Righteousness then can be established only under a league of free nations, that great international fraternity, which, with honor, wisdom, humility, and love as their binding oaths, will guarantee law, justice, and equity among the nations. And in the words of the prophet, "The work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance forever."

FAITH, HOPE, AND CHARITY

Paul says: "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Hebrews 11:1.) Faith is one of the first principles of the doctrine of Christ, and without faith it is impossible to please him. Webster defines the word faith as belief, or knowledge of a thing without the evidence of sight. Paul further says: "For he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." (Hebrews 11:6.) These facts being established—and we know that we must have faith or we will not receive the blessings that are promised us—why do so many who claim to have faith and hope in God, plainly show by their actions that they have faith just so far as they can see and no further?

Do people think for one moment that God will recognize that kind of faith? We do not so understand the scripture. We believe that Paul was a true mouthpiece of God and that we should stake all our hope of eternal life on the words given us by the one chosen and ordained to be a messenger of God to man. No matter who he may be; whether it be Jesus, Paul, or Joseph Smith, let us be true to our faith. God does not, or never has, asked men to make the choice of who shall be his representative, and when he places that honor upon a man he certainly expects us to have faith in that man as well as in the Savior. And why not?

What is man that he should dispute the will of God? Much has been accomplished by faith. How many of us are there who have considered the amount of our faith? Jesus said, "If ye have faith even as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you." (Matthew 17:20.) Then if faith like unto a grain of mustard seed is able to accomplish so great things as these; what must be the size of our faith when we accomplish so little? We have heard this answer given to the above text, "Certainly, if we have faith enough we could move mountains, if we had to do it with a shovel." This is the answer of a pedant; why not take the word of God at its face value, and not speculate as to what might be if we could have our way?

The companion of faith is hope. Though we may be possessed of all the faith possible, yet if we have not hope, we are as a ship without a rudder. Do we not hope for better things? Are we not constantly looking ahead to that gladsome time when we can live with Jesus, free from care, toil, and temptation? Is it not that hope that lives within us that keeps alive our faith, and reinvigorates us to labor more faithfully for our reward? So when we pray for faith, let us not be unmindful of that very important word, hope, that when we are assailed from any quarter, we can always be able to give a reasonable and intelligent explanation of our hope in Christ.

And last, but not by any means least, we approach the word, charity, and let us not consider it lightly, for charity availeth much. We are glad that we can go to Paul for a witness, and have his words to prove our position, for he says: "Charity edifieth," but "knowledge puffeth up." (1 Corinthians 8:1.) Charity will lead one to do all manner of good deeds and yet never seek one word of praise. We may have all the knowledge, faith, and hope of the world, and be able to command thousands, yet if we lack charity we are nothing. We may be able to tell of all the past, present, and future, and lack charity—we are as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. We had the privilege a few weeks ago to hear a sermon delivered by our branch teacher, and his subject was: "What lack I yet?" And all the time he was delivering that sermon, there was but one thought in our mind, and that was charity. The burden of our thoughts were: "Though we give alms, go to church, pray and testify in prayer meeting, and do all we can in Sunday school and Religio, contribute our bit toward the expense of the church, yet there is one thing lacking, and that is charity."

Are we not too ready to condemn our brother or sister for some little transgression, when, at the same time, we may be guilty of a still greater one? Do we not often go out of our way to help others down when we should be the very ones to give them a helping hand and a kind word? Is our pathway strewn with good deeds of charity? The word charity does not signify the giving of alms, or mere financial help, it covers a much broader field than that.

It means that we must be on the lookout when we are approached by Miss Gossip or Mr. Slander, with an evil report of a brother or a sister, not to lend ourselves a party to the same occupation, but try to discourage any desire to talebearing, or of idle or evil gossip of anyone, neither allow ourselves to listen to such things.

If this law of charity were only practiced, how much misery, contention, strife, and heartaches, might be avoided, and how much more pleasant would be our association with each other. When we have been guilty of this breach of confidence, even though the one injured may not know of our unfaithfulness, we know, and God knows, our guilt, and we cannot approach that brother or sister with the same free and easy feeling we could if we were true to them and to our covenant. "And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity." (1 Corinthians 13: 13.)

OF GENERAL INTEREST

BYZANTIUM TO US

Nobody who thrills to a sense of great historical associations can fail to be interested in the proposal that Constantinople be assigned to the United States by a mandate of the league of nations. Owing to its geographical position, its location between east and west, Christian and Mohammedan, its experiences set it above any other city of the world. In modern times the strategic importance of the city, straddling the Bosphorus, partly in Europe and partly in Asia, has made it the focus of the world's "power politics."

With the covetousness of Russia from the days of Peter the Great everybody is familiar, but volumes upon volumes could be written without adequately covering the interplay of forces that struggled for control of the Bosphorus and through that for other things. One illustration is enough to show how terrible was the competition—the war in the Crimea in the middle of the last century.

But the greatness of Constantinople, or at least its glamor, is in its remote past. It was founded about 658 B. C. as the city of Byzantium. Darius, the Persian, captured and burned it. The Athenians and Spartans fought for it, and occupied it alternately. Zenophon passed through it with his immortal ten thousand. Alexander conquered it, after Philip of Macedon had failed. After Alexander came the Romans. In the fourth century after Christ the Roman emperor, Constantine, siezed Byzantium, re-named it Constantinople, established the Christian religion, and made the city the capital of the Roman empire.

The church of Saint Sophia, later to be for centuries a Mohammedan mosque, was built.

Then the menace of Islam arose. Expedition after expedition fell upon the city, Huns, Slavs, and Saracens. The Caliph Haroun el Raschid, storied in the Arabian Nights, once advanced on Constantinople. The crusaders under Godfrey de Bouillon passed through. One of the subsequent crusades halted long enough to capture the city. About 1420 Murad II put Constantinople under tribute to Mohammedan power, and in 1453 Mohammed II captured it. From that day to the present, a period of more than four and one half centuries, Constantinople has been Moslem. That period is at an end; and now it is urged as the best possible disposal of the city, consonant with plans for friendly cooperation of the rival European powers, that the young American nation assume control.—Des Moines Register, April 23, 1919.

COMMUNITY CHORUS CONTESTS THE NEXT STEP

IDEA WITH MANY INTERESTING POSSIBILITIES ALREADY BEING WORKED OUT

To the constantly growing army of people interested in the community singing movement through their own personal participation in it, the news will be welcome that a beginning has been made in arranging contests between two or more neighboring community choruses. Two small but very progressive, California towns, Glendale and Hollywood, are so far as known, the pioneers in this new development of the mass singing idea. Their respective choruses have been rehearsing for the event for a month or more.

The contest will take place at Glendale and there will undoubtedly be as much "rooting for the home team," as at the most exciting baseball match between college or high school teams. This, however, will not effect the judges who are outsiders, having no civic pride in either chorus.

MUSICAL PROFICIENCY TO BE TESTED

The judges will consider a number of points in making their decision, such as attack, enunciation, tone quality, and facial expression. All of these are points on which professional and other highly trained choral unions are judged in their public concerts. The fact that similar standards are now to be applied in appraising the work of the people's singing bodies is evidence of how great an advance these organizations have made along musical lines.

An additional feature of value in connection with the California competition is that the visiting chorus will stop at several places en route to the scene of the contest, and also on the way home, to sing for the people of the countryside. It is expected that this will lead to the establishment of community singing in a number of villages not yet alive to the importance of the movement.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5029 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Some Convention Reports

This week we are presenting a few of the reports of the officers of the Woman's Auxiliary of the recent General Convention. From time to time we shall print the other reports in like manner, believing that many of our readers may have missed their publication in the DAILY HERALD. Anyway, they are worth a rereading.

We are sorry the activities of the Temple Builders and Oriole girls are not more fully set forth in the reports; however, space will be available for them during the year for such interesting details as may develop.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Report of the General Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary

STATISTICAL

The Woman's Auxiliary reports from the local and district organizations for the year 1918 show an enrollment of 3,617. At the present date there are fifty report blanks which have not been returned, and estimating an enrollment of five in each organization not reporting would make a total of 250 which, added to our number that have reported makes our enrollment 3,867. Last year our reports and an estimate on some not reported though active showed an enrollment of 3,376. The gain, therefore, for 1918 is 491.

SUMMARY

Number of classes in the Educational Bureau 87.
Number of circles in Home and Child Welfare Bureau 27.
Number of societies in the Relief and Service Bureau 143.
Number of circles in the Young Woman's Bureau 58.
Total number of organizations in branches 315.

ORGANIZERS

There are nineteen organizers reporting and the following statistics represent some of the work done during the year:

Number of letters written 1,012.
Number of visits to branches 130.
Number of educational classes organized 40.
Number of Home and Child Welfare circles organized 9.
Number of Relief and Service societies organized 26.
Number of Young Woman's circles and chapters 24.

SUPPLEMENTAL

War Work.—The reports show a general activity among the women of the church in the war work, all other activities being laid aside for the duration of the war. The following excerpt is but one instance of the many similar reports: "For the year 1918 we have been very busy with Red Cross work and Relief and Service work but now have discontinued the Red Cross work and are taking up Child Study, renewed our Oriole work, organizing two circles and getting lined up for an active year of 1919. We have counseled with our branch president in our activities and business and expect to report to the branch regularly."

EXECUTIVE MEETINGS

The General Executive has held fourteen meetings since last General Convention up to the present time. Two meetings of the General Executive and the Woman's Building Committee were held in which the purposes of the Woman's Building were discussed. A midyear meeting was held in June and invitations sent to all officers urging them to attend. Sr. Helen Smith of Philadelphia, Sr. Lydia Wight, and Sr. Alice Mae Burgess of Lamoni were present and had not met with the executive since April.

Reunion Work.—The Auxiliary work was represented by at least one of the general officers at seven reunions this year. Suggestions for carrying on the work were sent to every reunion advertised in the church papers and a letter sent to each president of districts or chairman of committees where reunions were held.

Australian Mission.—"During the current year of the Auxiliary work in the Australian Mission we are pleased to report live activity and general interest in all locals. Our total enrollment is 196. Nature of work engaged in is Social Service and Relief Work, Sunshine Band, general church work, and Red Cross work. Social Purity is studied in most locals, and sewing classes are a feature. There is one local fully organized with four departments and 40 members, Balmain. This local has also the nucleus of a splendid educational library, featuring Home Economics, Child Training, Sex Instruction, etc."

Personal.—During the summer I attended three reunions, Logan, Boone, and Dow City. The reunion committees were most generous with their time and we had opportunity to explain our work in detail. It was well received. In February I attended an Institute session in Saint Joseph, Missouri, representing the Woman's Auxiliary. Have attended all executive sessions, and such outside conferences of social workers as time and opportunity permitted.

I have assisted in the stenographic and mailing work of the Educational Bureau, and in the Institute work, besides carrying on the usual secretarial correspondence.

I am deeply interested in the development of this work among our women, and pray earnestly that our forces may be so controlled and directed that some definite results for good may continue to grow out of our service.

MRS. J. A. GARDNER.

Annual Report of Temple Builders

|   |    |
|---|----|
| Number of chapters .....  | 10 |
| Total number of members .....   | 92 |
| Scale of regular meetings: weekly to semi-monthly.  |    |
| Activities: Picnics, serenades, Red Cross work, social gatherings, and bazaars—proceeds for Christmas offerings and sewing for orphans. |    |

MRS. ALICE MAE BURGESS,
Supervisor.

Report of Oriole Work

There has been organized this year forty new circles and I am receiving news of others that wish to organize, each week.

From the reports which have come in there have been about twenty disorganized in the last two years. The reports are only about a third of them in, so I cannot be sure about the other circles.

However, I feel that the work is progressing. Each week since January 1, when the influenza ban was raised, I have received and answered from ten to twenty letters. There were not so many before that, but always several each week.

That which is most needed by the Oriole work or for it, is active, earnest women for Monitors. If we could only have the Monitors we would have the girls.

From the reports that have come in and the record kept, I think I am safe in saying that there are at least 700 Orioles and from 150 to 200 active circles.

This next year I would like to see formed in each branch at least one circle of Orioles, and if the enthusiasm that has been manifested in the last two months is a criterion I believe it can be done.

MISS GRACE THOMPSON, Director.

The best way to get ahead is sometimes to stop short and see where we are. The best way to advance our work is, sometimes, to lay it aside and go to bed. On the whole, all things considered, we may find ourselves on the wrong track. Then our pause has been time well spent.—Richard C. Cabot, in What Men Live By.

It lightens the stroke to draw near to Him who handles the rod.—Washington Irving.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

Song by the Spirit

(Given through Sister E. F. Shupe, at the district conference held at Denver, Colorado, February 24, 1918. Can be set to L. M. such as No. 8 in Hymnal.)

Father, we wish to do thy will;
Help us to love and serve thee still,
Oh! may we not be overcome
By storms of life, or evil one.

But may our minds and hearts absorb
The truth contained in thy blest word.
The things we see, thy wisdom show
Thy love and care for us below.

Sometimes the way seems dark and drear;
Sometimes the light shines bright and clear;
But whether light or shadow fall,
Help us to trust thee, Lord, for all.

For this we know: thy love is great,
And though man lost his first estate,
Thou didst for him a way prepare
To save him from the tempter's snare.

The seasons in their cycles sweep—
A time to sow; a time to reap.
The earth, her bounteous stores doth give
Her precious things, that we may live.

With food and raiment we are blest,
And though with pain or care distressed,
We come to thee, and comfort find,
Oft leaving pain and care behind.

Then may we not bemoan our fate,
But labor still, and watch, and wait.
The day cannot be very long,
If we but meet it with a song.

And soon the Lord of hosts will come
To reign in peace, and claim his own;
And they who true and faithful are
Shall rise to meet him in the air.

The Prodigal's Return

A figure sad, pathetic,
Was walking down a lonely street,
In tatters, rags, neglected,
And shunned by all he chanced to meet;
Within his breast a heart did beat
Crushed 'neath a load of woe,
And to himself he did repeat
A prayer, in broken accents, low.

THE PRAYER

"Oh God! Thou God of Heaven!
In the name of thy dear Son
I pray to be forgiven
For all the evil that I've done;
Oh! may I once again rejoice,

Freed from all sin and care,
I want to hear a praying voice
That talks to thee in prayer."

He met a merry little maid,
With flaxen curls and eyes of blue,
His heart was horribly afraid,
As memories sad passed in review;
A wife wan-faced, a child like this,
In vision 'rose before his eyes,
Thick came his breath through parched lips,
These words, though faint, in prayer did rise.

THE PRAYER

"Oh God! In Jesus' holy name
Canst thou forgive my awful sin,
And through his blood cleanse every stain,
That joy once more may reign within?
Help me, O God, once more to rise
Above all earthly trial and care,
Grant me a voice that to the skies
Can speak with thee, in fervent prayer."

He sank beneath his load of woe,
Of broken vows and broken law,
To help him up the child did go,
Oblivious all of what he saw;
She raised her little voice in prayer,
And asked the Lord that he'd forgive
The poor man's sins, who lying there,
And that through Christ he yet might live.

REST

A smile played o'er his wearied face,
A light divine beamed from his eyes,
He looked into the angel face
Of his long dead, neglected child;
And whispering low he spake these words,
As he passed from this world of care;
"I thank thee, Lord, that I have heard
A voice, that talks with thee in prayer.

Opening Practice With Prayer

We have often been asked, both orally and in written communications, as to whether our choirs should precede their practices with the devotional feature of prayer. We know that it is a question that is receiving some thought among our choristers, who are desirous of knowing what would be the best course to pursue in the matter.

The Savior gave a most fitting exhortation regarding the constancy of prayer, illustrating his principle with a very forceful parable. He said, "Men ought always to pray and not to faint" (Luke 18:1). Paul, in his letter to the Thesalonians, exhorted us to "pray without ceasing" (1 Thesalonians 5:17), and again in his letter to Timothy, he voiced his convictions regarding the continual need of prayer when he said, "I will that men pray everywhere" (1 Timothy 2:8). These quotations enable us to know that not only the Savior, but Paul as well, realized the importance of men praying constantly in their daily lives, in every situation and for every need.

We do not pray often enough and for enough things. We seem to think that we should pray in connection with our religious life and conduct, and some of us forget to pray only when in trouble. But how few of us really pray for the success of our ordinary duties of life; how many of us really "pray without ceasing"?

A choir is primarily a department of our church work and as such is doing the service of the church. It is reasonable to assume that in every department those in charge thereof are constantly lifting up "holy hands" in prayer that the work intrusted to their care may prosper. If they are not doing so they are recreant to their trust. Why, then, should not our choristers pray that they may be guided and their work blessed with success? We believe some of them do, but we fear that too many of them look upon the choir as a side issue of the church work rather than a department of the church's activities, which it really is. Our choristers really have need to pray for their work, that they may successfully conduct it for the glory of God.

But if our choristers need to pray over their work, should not the members of the choirs also be prayerfully concerned about their duties? We think so; and we believe that if they were more so, and realized in a greater degree the sacredness of that work, our song service would be more spiritual.

Our choir members in general need to have a better understanding and a greater appreciation of their duties and their sacred callings. Our choir rehearsals should be conducted in such a way that the members may value them as opportunities wherein they may prepare themselves for a sacred service. We know of no better way than to precede such periods of preparation with prayer, asking the seal of God's blessing thereon. We know that when we approach a task in prayer it always assumes a greater importance to us, and our choir members must inevitably have that same experience under like conditions. A choir practice preceded by prayer cannot help but seem as well as be more momentous. We know that God gladly gives his blessing upon such occasions when we ask it; but are we safe in assuming that he will always give it when we neglect to ask? We recommend opening our choir practices with prayer; is it not worth trying?
ARTHUR H. MILLS.

Preludes and Interludes With Hymns

The proper accompaniment of a church hymn will often determine the degree of excellence with which it is sung. A good accompanist will, by some seemingly occult force, frequently lead a congregation through the work of a trying hymn in such a way that the rendition of it is a triumph. We have witnessed such a feat, where a pianist, by his art and skillful tact, led a large congregation through the stanzas of a long hymn in such a way that all the stanzas were sung in absolute unison and time.

On the other hand, an unskilled accompanist will frequently mar to a large degree the rendition of even a well-known hymn. Decision in playing is a prime requisite in accompanying a choir, chorus, or congregation, and the tyro who lacks it will engender uncertainty and consequent hesitation in the minds of the congregation, rendering futile their attempts at effectual hymn singing.

Our church pianists, or organists, should strive to cultivate the art of accompanying our congregational singing, for this is one feature of our church work that should be encouraged and highly developed. We should be a singing people, cheerful in our warfare that we may be joyous in our triumph.

Preludes must be had before all our church hymns. Interludes may be dispensed with if desired, but the prelude to the hymn must be had and announced if the congregation is to receive the proper impression and impulse to enable them to sing the hymn. Herein is where the accompanist may exercise real skill and art, for he may by such skill determine the successful rendition of the hymn. The prelude should be played in a firm, decisive manner, the rhythm well marked, the phrasing defined, the pauses, if any, carefully shown and the tempo exactly as it is desired to have the congregation sing it in. A very brief, well-timed interval after the prelude will enable the audience to catch its "cue" for entrance. Then comes the work of guiding the congregation; of keeping it together through the entire hymn, not allowing it to drag. The work of the accompanist is almost paramount here, for if he fail, the chorister is almost powerless to surmount the handicap and save the situation. It is an art, this hymn accompanying, and one that cannot be communicated on paper. Our accompanists must labor to acquire the "knack" and to sense what is required to accomplish it.

One way in which our accompanists may enlarge their ideas is from observation. They should occasionally take a "Sunday off," and go to hear the work of an organist of known ability, noting carefully all the little "tricks of the trade" employed and their effectiveness in the guidance of the congregation.

As to interludes, those short bits played between the stanzas, that is another part of the subject. It used to be the fashion for an organist to play an interlude between each verse of every hymn, some going so far as to play elaborate and ornate improvisations, that would occasionally lead into flights of extemporaneous fantasy, between each stanza. But those days are gone now; very few organists now employ interludes in the body of hymns and the practice of playing all hymns with only a slight pause and interval of rest between verses is coming into universal use.

This may seem like an inconsequential subject, but it is not. Even granting that the work of hymn playing is a minor one, and that proper preludes are but trifles, it must be borne in mind that "trifles make perfection, and perfection is no trifle."
ARTHUR H. MILLS.

Some Good Work at Logan, Iowa

The following letter from Sister Ollie Derry, of Logan, Iowa, affords abundant evidence of what may be done by persistent, patient work, faithfully continued until results are attained. Quite a number of branches in the church have as good material with which to work as has the branch at Logan, Iowa, and with equal effort of like character, could accomplish just as much. We give this letter here that it may possibly furnish some incentive to our musical forces to do likewise:

LOGAN, IOWA, March 20, 1919.

Dear Editors: We are glad that we are in a position to write of the musical activities at Logan, Iowa. A year ago last January the Senior Glee Club was organized, eighteen enrolling for membership. We began by using the pamphlet music [we think Sister Derry means "Octavo" music, in which each chorus is published as a separate piece.—EDITOR]. We were very careful to not use selections too difficult at first for fear of discouraging some who did not read as readily as others. We continued to climb gradually, using selections a little more difficult. In a year's time we were able to handle some very good music. We had to work hard but found pleasure in the working. We reaped a reward at Christmas time in the rendition of a cantata, "The Gift of God," by E. S. Lorenz. We did not cease our labors there but will give another cantata Easter morning, "Now is Christ Risen."

We now have a membership of twenty-seven. Not only do we hope to increase in membership but also in ability, and God has blessed our efforts thus far.

We have also a junior glee club, and the enthusiasm manifested by these little folks is certainly a satisfaction and an incentive to work for, and help them. At present they are working on a musical play to be given in the summer. Also, they are working on some pretty little songs which we sometimes use for the opening or closing exercises of the Sunday school or Religio, which encourages them. We find a greater lack of musical enthusiasm among the older choir members, but we are not discouraged and expect to keep plodding along. In the month of May we are arranging for a musical festival where we will use all three musical organizations, sixty-five voices in all. We hope to make this a crowning feature of the musical activities of the year. Acting as chorister of these societies we realize the responsibilities that rest upon us and the great need, not only of physical strength but spiritual strength as well, that we can at all times carry the spirit of God with us in our labors, helping to develop the musical talent in our little branch.

We have written this hoping that it might be an incentive to encourage others in the musical work of the church.

Your sister,

OLLIE DERRY.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Stewardships: Management for Another

"It is wisdom in me; . . . it is expedient that I, the Lord, should make every man accountable, as stewards, over earthly blessings. . . . It must needs be done in mine own way. Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:2.

Read it all. All we have in this world, we are stewards over. We are managing all that we possess for the Lord and he wants it done his way, too. No other way will please him, any more than sprinkling would instead of being buried in the water. It must be done according to the law of the gospel. He has a reason for it. "If you love me, keep my commandments."

"Behold, this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, even as I, the Lord, have appointed, or shall hereafter appoint unto any man. And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God." (Doctrine and Covenants 70:3.) That is very plain. And every person is held responsible according to his talents. If I have only one, I only am responsible for one, if I have ten, I must account for ten. That is perfect justice and equality.

"For it is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship, both in time [that is now] and in eternity." (Doctrine and Covenants 72:1.) There is no escaping our responsibility.

"And again, a commandment I give unto you concerning your stewardship which I have appointed unto you; behold, all these properties are mine, or else your faith is vain, and ye are found hypocrites, and the covenants which ye have made unto me are broken." It would not be of much effect to try to serve under a broken covenant. Not for me. To try would be like trying to plow without a team. The plow is not of use without a team, or some power to move it.

"Honor the Lord with thy substance," is just as mandatory as "Ye must be born again." This is the testing time, and honoring the Lord in our stewardship is the test. If I do not, I will be "weighed in the balances and found wanting," like the five foolish virgins who had no oil in their lamps. That would be a bad "fix," would it not?

God is not after your money. Why, he says: "All things are mine, the world and they that dwell therein"; no, he just wants to test you and see if you will do what he says; if not, you will stand condemned. Because, "By your works you will stand or fall." Paul likens the body of Christ his church—to a human body. If I am a part of that body, I must do my part. "The head cannot say to the foot, I have no need of thee." All the members are needed, even the finger nails. No matter how small I am I have a part to do. The widow's mite was just as acceptable to Jesus—only more so—than the abundance of others.

"Do good, and though pain and anguish be thy lot,
Thy heart will cheer thee when the pain's forgot;
Do wrong for pleasure's sake, then count thy gain,
The pleasure soon departs, the wrong remains."

"The path of the just is as a shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

The Bishopric Advocate for 1919

"Every Member a Tithing Payer"

Your responsibility does not end when you pay your tithing.

You owe it to your brother to encourage him to do likewise; he needs the development that comes from doing what God has commanded.

CAVITE, PHILIPPINE ISLANDS, March 18, 1919.

Editors Herald: I am, and have been for some time absent from church privileges. I am in the marine service and am doing duty at one of the greatest radio stations our Government has.

I find among the men very few that care for religious influence. I am trying to lead a clean and exemplary life among them.

I left San Francisco January 6, and had a voyage of forty days with some interesting features, going by way of Japan and Siberia. I have been to Manila but cannot find there any of our faith. If there are any there I hope to locate them.

I have been studying the Scriptures some, having with me the three books. My brother just arrived, en route to Guam, and gave me some HERALDS. It sure was a treat to read them. I hope to return in a few months and am praying God to so overrule that I may if it is his will. I long to be where I can meet with the Saints.

This is a beautiful place and lovely weather, but the natives are filthy.

Hoping that the work may spread more rapidly in the future than it has in the past, and that I may take an active part in it, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

ZELCA P. COOPS.

FAIRVIEW, MONTANA, April 6, 1919.

Editors Herald: Beginning March 11, we started a series of services in Fairview which were continued for three weeks (excepting two nights during that time). We had good interest throughout, and good attendance with the exception of two nights when we first started. Elder Eli Bronson was the first man on the ground, and in three days, Elder James C. Page came and assisted us. Brother Bronson has just started out on his missionary career and he surely is a credit to our cause. Brother Page is right at home in this kind of work, especially when it comes to visiting among the people of the community. Both men are able servants of the Lord and did good work here.

As a result of these meetings six submitted themselves to be buried unto Christ through the waters of baptism. We believe that there are more who will come into the kingdom and our labors will be so directed as to keep the gospel light before them to the best of our ability. We have heard that there were plans on foot to raise a mob to care for those "Mormon elders." Also that there would have been plenty of men there who just loved to fight, who would have seen to it that those elders were not hurt in the least. And so it goes, history repeating itself. We hear how the enemy was conducting himself, now that the meetings are over, though we heard a great deal while the meetings were going on. Surely we were treated splendidly by all but a few exceptions.

This work has been done as a result of harmonious effort on the part of the Saints of the Fairview Branch because they were willing to respect the evidences given in reply to prayer regarding whether such labor should be performed.

Our branch work has been moving under difficulties since last October when the influenza season struck us. We hope now that we shall be able to make up for lost time, in part at least. Here's hoping that we can have an able man to assist our Brother Eli Bronson in prosecuting the missionary work to be done, in the winter as well as in the summer. We have a good territory to labor over here in many respects, though because of short crops the finances will probably not come in any too fast. Saints, remember the statement made by the Master: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Surely the fields are very white unto the harvest. Shall we thrust in our sickles and reap? May the Lord's blessings rest upon all who are making sacrifices in the interests of the gospel. Over thirty-five dollars' worth of books and literature was sold and given away.

Praying for the ultimate triumph of the truth, I am a servant in the service.

W. R. HILLMAN.

DAVIDSON, OKLAHOMA, April 9, 1919.

Editors Herald: There is a large number enrolled here at the Davidson Branch, but very few close enough to attend church. We are doing what we can with the few in number. We have a very good Sunday school when all are so they can come out, but we have had so much sickness this year that it has been hard for us to do much. There are some who seem to be careless, and don't seem to realize what they ought to be doing.

The time is that we ought to be ready to render our service to God and keep his commandments. There are some here that are faithful, trying to serve the Lord, but we must be prayerful or we will be overcome. For the power of Satan is at work when we are careless. We must watch ourselves and try to set a good example before the world. The time is here when the Scriptures are being fulfilled. In 1 Nephi 3: 232-237 it says:

"And it came to pass that I beheld that the wrath of God was poured out upon the great and abominable church, insomuch that there were wars and rumors of wars among all the nations and kindreds of the earth, and as there began to be wars and rumors of wars among all the nations which belonged to the mother of abomination, the angel spake unto me saying, Behold, the wrath of God is upon the mother of harlots; and behold, thou seest all these things; and when the day cometh that the wrath of God is poured out upon the mother of harlots, which is the great and abominable church of all the earth, whose foundation is the devil, then at that day, the work of the Father shall commence, in preparing the way for the fulfilling of his covenants, which he hath made to his people, who are of the house of Israel."

Now we see that the work of the Father has commenced. The gospel has been restored, and the way is being prepared for the children of Israel to get back the land that was given them for their inheritance many years ago. Now let us read:

"Wherefore, the Lord God will proceed to make bare his arm in the eyes of all the nations, in bringing about his covenants and his gospel, unto those who are of the house of Israel. Wherefore, he will bring them again out of captivity, and they shall be gathered together to the lands of their inheritance; and they shall be brought out of obscurity, and out of darkness; and they shall know that the Lord is their Savior and their Redeemer, the mighty one of Israel. And the blood of that great and abominable church, which is the whore of all the earth, shall turn upon their own heads; for they shall war among themselves, and the sword of their own hands shall fall upon their own heads, and they shall be drunken with their own blood. And every nation which shall war against thee, O house of Israel, shall be turned one against another, and they shall fall into the pit which they digged to ensnare the people of the Lord." —1 Nephi 7: 22-29.

Now, do we see anything that is being fulfilled in this? We see that God was going to make bare his arm in the eyes of all nations of Israel, in bringing about his covenant and the gospel. Now the Lord says the first shall be last and the last first. So the time was now for the Lord to use the Gentile to bring about his gospel, so he made bare his arm in the eyes of all nations of the children of Israel. Well, what else does it say that is come true? "And every nation that shall war against thee, O house of Israel, shall be turned one against another." So there have not been very many, if any at all, but what have rebelled and have been fighting themselves. There are several things, we see, that have been fulfilled.

In these verses all of it is being brought to pass so we may look for lots more in the future.

May the Lord bless his work, that Zion may all be gathered in where we may receive the blessings of the Lord more abundantly. I am ever praying for the welfare of the work of the Lord.

Your brother,

J. F. SKINNER.

WARRENSBURG, MISSOURI, April 14, 1919.

Editors Herald: Just a few lines to tell the Saints how I enjoy my new home. I came here January 12, and have enjoyed being with the Saints here very much.

I feel encouraged in the latter-day work. I can say, as Job said, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." This means a great deal to me. I was once in the dark, but now I see the light. I have many testimonies of this work. I know it is true although I may fail and fall the work will go on.

I have been a member of this church about seven years.

I was ordained a priest last May, and since that time I have done all I could for the work. The Spirit of the Lord has been with me, by the help of the Lord I have done some good. I baptized my father and two brothers, and that makes me feel good.

I have been blessed so many times, and my greatest desire is to overcome and do all the Lord wants me to. I am ready to give the rest of my life for the gospel if I know myself. I hope God will bless his people, and I know he will, dear Saints, if we have faith in him and his promises.

I want your prayers that I may overcome and stand the test, for the testing time is on. But let us not think of giving up. God will take care of his work and his people if we will only trust him. Last Wednesday while I was trying to prepare myself for the prayer meeting, I was studying about the work, and was praying that God would overrule for good. All at once the voice of the Spirit came to me in great power and words like this: "You need not worry, I will take care of my work, and my people if they will do my will, will accomplish great good this year."

I hope, dear Saints, I can do my part and labor to the end for the building up of Zion.

I would like to ask Brother Albert Vancleave to send me his address if he reads this.

Your brother in the faith,
W. J. WILLIAMSON.

201 West North Street.

CROSWELL, MICHIGAN, April 15, 1919.

Editors Herald: In reading the several letters in your valuable paper, I have not seen where this little branch, which is of God's right hand planting, has been heard from, and think some might be interested in hearing from us.

We are a zealous band of Saints, each one trying to do God's service and accomplish the work he has for us to do, for he has spoken and told us there is a great work for his people here to do.

We have some of the aged with us yet, whose testimonies give us encouragement in this work. God has fulfilled the promise he gave at the time he spoke to them when they were few in number and told them to be patient and faithful and many more would be added to their number and cause them to rejoice. To-day there are a goodly number of spiritual, God-fearing men and women, and a goodly number who know the work is right, but still stand outside for some reason which God only knows.

Our heavenly Father is truly acknowledging us, for in our assemblies we are wonderfully blessed by his Spirit and the gifts of the gospel. We feel that he knows our weaknesses and that we need his direction and admonition from time to time.

Those of the priesthood have been especially blessed in their labors.

Our Sunday school is enlarging so rapidly that they are making provision for more class room in our church. Our superintendent, Brother Fred Gardner, is full of zeal and is manifesting his love for this department of work. Our Religio is prospering and coming to the front. Our branch president, Elder Lewis E. Grice, is young and full of love and realizes the responsibility of his office.

Surely this is God's work and is worthy of the best we have. We would ask an interest in your prayers that we may all continue faithful and merit the love and mercies of our Father in heaven.

Your brother and coworker in the gospel,

GUY LEVITT.

WHEATLAND, MISSOURI, April 15, 1919.

Editors Herald: I have often thought of writing to the HERALD to see if any of the brothers or sisters would kindly loan me the Ensign of November 7, 1919. I would like so much to read those testimonies. I am a subscriber to the Ensign now, also to the HERALD, Stepping Stones, and Autumn Leaves.

I would also like to ask all the Saints who read this letter to pray for me that I may be humble and full of love, that I may set a good example before my loved ones and all of those with whom I associate. I have been afflicted with catarrhal deafness for a good many years and cannot hear the blessed gospel preached any more, but I can read, and do read all the good books and papers that I can get. I do not think that our church has enough good books for the young people. I know of two good stories that I would like to see in book form; one of them is "The vineyard story," published in the Autumn Leaves a year or two ago, and the other, "Birds of a feather," which was recently printed in Stepping Stones.

I have purchased and read several of the church books and think they are fine, especially "Pattie," and "Beatrice Witherspoon." It seems almost like I am acquainted with them. I hope to meet them sometime at a place and time where there will be no sorrow and affliction.

Again asking the Saints to remember me at the throne of grace, I beg to remain,

Your sister in gospel bonds,
MRS. NORA COSTELOW.

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA, April 16, 1919.

Editors Herald: We are still progressing slowly, and the work moves on here. The dreaded influenza has not taken any of our number, for which we give God the added glory for sparing the flock.

Our president, J. E. Warne, and his companion are attending General Conference, according to the previous injunction of the Prophet of the church that district presidents attend General Conference. We are glad that our Brother Warne was able to attend, and know that what he learns there will be beneficial to him in strengthening him for the duties devolving upon him in leading the Saints of this district.

We were privileged to have with us on last Sunday, the president of the Sedalia, Missouri, Branch, who gave us a spiritual and inspiring sermon. He is attending the Blacksmiths' Convention held at Indiana's capital city which adjourns to-morrow.

We wish to ask all the Saints and elders through the HERALD, who have any occasion to travel through Indianapolis to come to the church services. Our hall is located at Rader and Twenty-eighth Streets, out on the northwestern car line. We would be glad to have them call at our place, which is just a few squares from Union Station. I am located at 618 North Meridian Street, and Brother Warne's residence is at 220 East Saint Clair Street.

Our branch is not a large one, but a few are striving diligently with strong endeavors to glorify God, and keep our minds dwelling on Zionistic conditions, and hold a firm grasp on the rod of iron. We continue to pray for more laborers, as they are so few and the harvest ripe. I have spent most of my sojourn here employed in a munition plant, and assisting in furthering the cause of the Master in my weak way. Certainly there is not a greater calling on earth than a servant in the vineyard. Our prayers will be for a greater degree of wisdom and meekness.

CHARLES A. NOLAN.

CAMP UPTON, LONG ISLAND, NEW YORK, April 19, 1919.

Editors Herald: I will let you carry a few lines to my many brothers and sisters who were so kind as to write me several cheerful and encouraging letters while I was over in France, doing my bit, as the saying is. I am very thankful to my heavenly Father for his kind care and protection over me and for bringing me safely back to Joseph's land. It never appealed to me as much when I left it on December 15, 1917, as it did the morning of April 2, 1919, when I stepped off the giant ship Leviathan on to its fertile soil again with a heart full of gratitude to my Master.

We left Brest, France, March 26, at 6 p. m.; had a pleasant voyage except for a little seasickness. I was compelled to leave my division 32, on October 19, on account of having taken the influenza, and I was in the base hospital near Meaves, France, from October 21 till November 17, when I was sent to the convalescent camp in the same vicinity and was kept there until January 25, when I was started home as a casual. You see I was some time making the trip. Over there we called the United States home, anywhere, it didn't make any difference. We spoke of the United States as home, but now it's suddenly changed to a certain spot in a certain State which is now spoken of as home, and we are all very anxious to get there.

A calamity which befell most of us boys was, when we left our outfits we left our mail, one of our most important mainstays. For some reason or other it very seldom, if ever, found us after that, so from October 3, the night our division went into the front line in the Argonne-Meuse offensive until now, I've got eight or nine letters and only one from home written the first of December, 1918. So that accounts for a good many unanswered letters which we were not to blame for, but which, if they had been received, would have hastened many a long and lonely hour, day, and week.

We, that is, several thousand casuals, were attached to the Eighty-fifth Division for rations and transportation to the United States, and now we are pretty well sorted out and put together for our trip to the camps nearest home. I go to Fort Russell, Wyoming, scheduled to leave some time to-morrow. That is all for this time.

Your brother in the faith,

PRIVATE JOSEPH L. SANDIDGE.

Our Departed Ones

MAULE.—Donald Maule was born in Scotland, June 21, 1820; died March 18, 1919. Came to America in 1849, and to Harrison County, Iowa, in 1851; resided continuously on homestead where he died 66 years later. Baptized in 1860. Was father of 13 children; 2 daughters and 6 sons remain; all present during his last illness. Known for his firm convictions and honor in his dealings. Funeral March 20, at Magnolia, Iowa. Sermon by D. R. Chambers, assisted by James D. Stuart.

BURNHAM.—James A. Burnham, born March 16, 1832, at Fordeville, North Carolina, baptized by T. W. Smith, June 9, 1872, at Booten, Alabama; died April 21, 1919. His first wife, Carolina, died March 4, 1886; August 17, 1890, married Harriett Carbon. Three children were born to them. Leaves to mourn a wife, 5 sons, and one daughter. Buried in Woodlawn Cemetery. Funeral services in charge of T. C. Foss and George Harrington; sermon by Joseph Luff, at Independence, Missouri.

SCHWEERS.—William H. Schweers was born June 3, 1872; died April 16, 1919, at Independence, Missouri. Five brothers survive him. William was a kind and faithful Saint, laboring for many years as deacon of the Burlington Branch, which labor and devotion will long be remembered. Patient in suffering. Services at the home of G. E. Schweers. Sermon by George P. Lambert, of Ferris, Illinois; interment in Aspen Grove Cemetery.

LASLEY.—Asa M. Lasley was born December 5, 1854, near Lebanon, Indiana. In 1887 moved to southwestern Iowa. In 1888 married Mahala McClain. Early in 1888 moved to Webb City, Missouri, where they resided till his death, March 30, 1919. Engaged in mining business in Webb City till an injury incapacitated him for hard manual labor. For 17 years was janitor of the West Side school. Since 1913 has been attendance officer and supervising janitor. In every duty he was conscientious and faithful, and as a member of the church made for it many friends. The community and church paid him every respect at the obsequies, as his devoted life had abundantly earned.

CURRAN.—Idelia Campbell was born March 17, 1840, in Seneca County, New York. Was the daughter of Isaac and Rebecca Bailey. They moved to Michigan; there she married Frederick Campbell. To this union 8 children were born; 7 were at the funeral. Moved to Independence in 1869. Her husband died in 1887. On January 4, 1898, married Henry Curran, who died July, 1915. Died at her home in Independence, 705 North Cottage Street, on April 20, 1919. She was a lovable Saint, mother, wife, and neighbor. Funeral service in charge of James F. Keir, sermon by A. H. Parsons. Interment in Blue Springs Cemetery.

WELLINGTON.—Eva Gladys Gunsolley Wellington was born September 7, 1895, near Ravenwood, Missouri. Moved to Mapleton, Kansas, with her parents, in 1914. Baptized in June, 1907. Married Avord Wellington June 29, 1918. He left for Camp Funston August 8, where he was in training for nearly seven months. Was home a few short weeks and a baby boy came to bless the home. A week later—April 21—the mother passed away. Died firm in the faith. Leaves husband, child, father, mother, and 6 sisters. Prayer by H. C. Hughes, sermon by Lee Quick. Interment in Mapleton Cemetery.

Use your kind words with your own family, and if you have any left over, give them to strangers.—Common-Sense Sayings.

It is in his work that a man finds himself, and utters himself, so that though dead, he yet speaketh.—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

FROM HERE AND THERE

ELDER BURTON AT MONTROSE

Elder P. R. Burton, traveling missionary of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, is giving a series of free Bible lectures and illustrating the same with large charts at the local church. Large crowds are attending every night, and many are interested in the lectures as they are of a high order, and are educational from a Biblical and historical standpoint. His lectures have much to do with the history of old Nauvoo, and the doctrine as taught by the early Latter Day Saints at that place, showing that they did not teach or practice polygamy, or any of the evil practices that later were practiced by different apostate factions such as the Salt Lake Mormons or the Strangites.

Elder Burton said that his church, located at Independence, Missouri, and Lamoni, Iowa, was the true successor of the church founded by Joseph Smith, and proved his statement by a speech made by a senator well known in Iowa. Senator Burrows, in his speech during the Reed-Smoot case, also a court decision rendered by the late Judge Philips of Kansas City, in the Temple Lot suit. Many improvements have been made on the church property at Nauvoo. Visitors are welcome, and the church has provided guides to show the visitors over the places of interest free. The people of Keokuk should take advantage of this opportunity and visit the old historical homes.—Montrose items, in The Daily Gate City, Keokuk, Iowa, April 1, 1919.

If there are any Saints living near Riverhurst, Saskatchewan, or Davinson, they should write to Emma Volz, of Minden City, Michigan. She also wants to know the name of the nearest branch to each.

Brother E. K. Lester, of Grinnell, Iowa, writes that he has a large number of Autumn Leaves, dated as far back as twenty years, and many copies of Zion's Ensign and SAINTS' HERALD, all of which he would like to give away to some one who needs them. Anyone desiring to use these should write him.

A week ago last Sunday services were held in the Riverside Mansion, by the Latter Day Saints of Independence, Missouri, the first time services were held in that building in years. Preaching was by Elder P. R. Burton, and quite a number were present. Services will continue at this place every Sunday evening at 7.30 o'clock. A Sunday school will be organized after April 1. Elder Burton and family now occupy the Riverside Mansion as a home, and he informs us that it is a comfortable place.—Nauvoo Rustler, March 25, 1919.

We are in receipt of a lengthy tribute in memory of the late departed Sister Jessie Taylor, of the Leeds, England, Branch, and note with satisfaction the many virtues set forth regarding her, but do not have the space to print it entire.

BRANCH BULLETINS

We were pleased to receive a sample of the First Chicago Branch Bulletin advertising the meetings of the branch for two weeks ending April 26. It is put out in the form of a four-page leaflet, the outside pages being nicely decorated with drawn borders and appropriate lettering which gives the personnel and addresses of the officers, and the epitome of the faith, in summarized form. The inside two pages are run off on a duplicating machine—they using a "jelly" duplicator—and listing the services in detail with pungent comment. It makes a very attractive advertising feature. J. W. Pettersson, the superintendent of the Sunday school, does the art work. Elder C. B. Hartshorn is the pastor of the church, located at 4416 Gladys Avenue. W. L. Christy is city missionary. We understand that Saint Louis puts out a similar affair. Brother George Wixom, of Los Angeles, was in our office recently and carried away some of our samples, with the idea of adapting them to their needs out West. It is worth looking into, especially for Saints in the larger places where bulletin boards and announcements in the local papers do not reach the people. Here in Lamoni an announcement in the only newspaper in the town reaches about 90 per cent of the membership. But of course it is only a weekly. A bulletin board is contemplated for late announcements of early events.

A recent letter from Elder A. C. Barmore illustrates the success he is meeting with in presenting the work to the people. He has secured the publication of several of his sermons in the local paper, presenting various themes on a broad basis. He had a program printed giving his various topics for seven Sundays, giving three subjects for each Sunday, 11 a. m., 3 p. m., and 7.45 p. m. His seven services at 3 p. m. were concerned with the Holy Spirit—anticipation, preparation, realization, confirmation, attestation, sanctification, and inspiration. The morning service was concerned principally with faith and repentance, and faith as a Christian virtue of faith, hope, and charity. The evening services were concerned with the signs of the times, and the world war. It will be noted that each class of sermons took a special theme which was continued through the series of seven weeks. Suitable handbills were prepared and distributed.

LONZO JONES

A JEWISH OVERTURE TO CHRISTIAN CLERGYMEN

[We are glad to print the following announcement as sent us by those interested.—EDITORS.]

Christian clergymen in the active pastorate may receive a copy of Rabbi H. G. Enelow's recent book, The War and the Bible, absolutely without charge by making application addressed to J. M., P. O. Box 202, Noroton Heights, Connecticut.

This offer is made by a group of public-spirited Jews with a desire to promote a still better understanding between American Jews and American Christians.

They hope that this small opportunity for a better acquaintance with the religious sentiments cherished by living, English-speaking Jews will be generally welcomed.

The War and the Bible is the work of one of our most representative religious leaders, H. G. Enelow of Temple Emanu-El, New York City, who has been serving for months at the Paris headquarters of the "Jewish Welfare Board." It has been selected as a good example of the addresses to which our people listen from their working pastors covering some one great theme in a connected series of discourses.

So many requests have come from nonclergymen to be allowed to purchase copies, it may be well to say that The War and the Bible is a regularly published book which can be had of any bookseller.

AGREEMENT OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY AND TWELVE

An error has been noted in the document submitted by the Presidency and Twelve to the conference on April 15, published in the DAILY HERALD for April 16, and in the weekly HERALD for April 23, on page 394. There was an omission from the manuscript in our hands, as follows: In the first paragraph under the heading, "Suggested modifications to the present system," in the third line after the word "presidency" there should appear the following: "consultation between them and the Presidency." This paragraph would then read:

"The weekly letter from all appointees to the Presidency to be continued, but those from the missionaries to be passed on to the Twelve at the seat of the Presidency, consultation between them and the Presidency to be had when needed thereon, but directions and instructions issuing from these representatives of the Twelve in harmony with the general principles understood and agreed upon by the Quorum of Twelve and Presidency."

The Graceland radio station was opened by Government permission on the 15th, for receiving only. The release applies to amateur and experimental stations and technical schools but not to commercial plants. The latter will be released on the signing of the treaty of peace. Communication between Lamoni and Independence stations will soon be resumed, and our readers will benefit by it as they have in the past. Important news and announcements can be sent us by wireless on Monday and reach our readers in the issue of the HERALD sent out Wednesday evening. It is interesting to drop into the receiving room and pick up a weather report from the Arlington station near Washington saying the weather the next day will be warm and pleasant when one is shivering around wondering if it can be so. From the Atlantic to the Pacific messages are picked up by our station, and no doubt as time proceeds, many important features will be developed in connection with the work. It is a young science and new developments are being brought out constantly.

The twelfth number of the Lamoni Community Lecture Course was given here on the evening of the 25th, being a concert by the Lamoni Band of 32 pieces. It was a successful number, as have been most of those given so far. There are seventeen numbers altogether, four of these being home talent. While some communities have trouble maintaining lyceum courses, under the community plan Lamoni has not only supported such a course the past two years but secured a much better one than is possible under ordinary circumstances. It was so well patronized that two excellent extra numbers have been provided for good measure.

JOINT COUNCIL MEETS IN JUNE

A few changes have been made in the missionary list—those demanding immediate attention—but the post conference council work will not be taken up till June. The reorganization of the historical department will be effected and announced at that time.

This is the spirit in which we ought to go to church, if we go at all, because we love it and find there our chance for service and for refreshment, a renewing of tarnished standards, an outlet for reverence and aspiration.—Richard C. Cabot, in What Men Live By.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

WHAT IS AN EXECUTIVE?

Some we have discovered are rather puzzled at the idea of our having an executive, and several have asked us what it means, not alone in a dictionary, but fundamentally.

We may note first, that the word president is derived from the Latin, literally—"to sit before." It means to occupy the place of authority and runs back in its meaning to a time when the rulers remained seated when others stood. We preserve something of this in a parliamentary assembly in addressing the "Chair"; the chair, as much as the gavel representing authority over others.

This word is used repeatedly in the Doctrine and Covenants in reference to the one body, the presidency, or the first presidency, who preside over the whole church.

The word executive is closely allied to "executor—one who executes or performs," including the one who executes or carries into effect a will in probate. It is also allied to execution and executioner, which means in its original sense, "one who carries into effect." The executive officer is the one who sees that the orders of the body are carried out.

So we find it allied with administrative or administrator which is also used in probate in case there is no will. The words are quite similar in their significance and signify the one who sees that things are done.

Now in a branch, it devolves upon the presiding elder to see that everything that is necessary is attended to where he cannot do it himself. In fact, a good presiding officer, a really good executive, is only too anxious to develop the talent of others and is satisfied to see that things are done.

So President Joseph Smith wrote an editorial a number of years ago concerning preparing the sacrament. He suggested that properly it would fall under the work of the deacon, but as it is the responsibility of the branch president to see that all things necessary are done, sometimes he attended to it; and this was at that time the case in the Lamoni Branch.

A man may be a presiding elder and do everything himself, but if he is a good executive, he is a manager and sees that other elders and the Aaronic priesthood do their duty, and assigns to each man his duty. He may not do much of the preaching himself, but he sees that every meeting is provided for.

He does not make the laws to govern the church in its branch capacity. The laws governing the branch, its rules and regulations are adopted by the branch. He does not, as such, exercise the judicial function, as that belongs to the regular judiciary of the church, beginning with an elders' court. But when there arises a question of emergency, and a decision must be made concerning carrying out the rules of the branch, and doing what needs to be done now, he has the right to decide who is to preside over a prayer meeting, who is to conduct a preaching service, or who shall exercise in some other function of the priesthood. If the work is to move on there must be some one who has the final right of decision. Such a one is the chief executive of the branch.

We note the same thing in the district. We see clearly now that the district president does not fulfill his whole duty when he merely presides over a district conference. But he has work to do between times, to see that the work of the district is properly carried out, that new openings are provided for, that the branches are visited and helped as needed. It is sometimes suggested that the branch presidents work under the supervision of the district presidents. But further, they should work together. But if there comes a matter of administration, calling for immediate decision, the district president has the right to decide and to request that his suggestion be carried out. Certainly he should never administer in any arbitrary spirit.

When there is a member of the Quorum of Twelve in the immediate vicinity and a difficulty arises, he may, the proper arrangements being made, take charge, and for the time being is the chief executive in that particular field. Under the system in effect up to a few years ago, as missionary in charge, he had the right.

He has also the right in the missionary arm of the work. We have heard several times of a seventy having planned to make a new opening, and he had labored for two or three months; distributing tracts, visiting, talking with the people, and preaching, and had worked up a good interest, the missionary in charge as he was then, would come sometimes from a distance for a week or two and baptize a score or more. Sometimes this became quite objectionable to the submissionary. Still we are not prepared to pass final judgment. There are some men who are splendid in working up an interest, but who cannot seize the psychological moment. When another can do so, it is so much of gain to the church. Of course, we hope that such discretion is never abused. But as the superior executive a member of the Quorum of Twelve had the power of decision and the right to act. The Quorum of Twelve have this right in the missionary work, and they have also claimed it in the work of districts and branches.

But in our church economy, provision is made for one quorum of three men who preside over the whole church. (Doctrine and Covenants 105:7; 122:2; 104:4; 87:3, 5.) It is clearly set forth that the Quorum of Twelve is to labor under their direction. (104:12; 122:3; 123:23.) They also direct the high priests and standing ministry. (104:5; 122:8, 9; 120:3.) They are also associated with the work of the bishopric. (48:2; 122:6.) Being over the whole church, and like Moses (104:42), they become of necessity the directing quorum of the church and the chief executive. Being over the whole church they have to see that the work of the church is unified so that we are all working to the same end, and not different departments working at odds or at a tangent, one to another. It is readily seen that if there is to be unity of aim there must be somebody that sees that that unity of purpose is carried out.

The legislative work is done by the three quorums who define the law and usages of the church, the presidency, twelve, and seventy, with the approval often of a General Conference, or General Assembly.

The judicial is provided for in our system of courts, the elders' courts, the bishops' courts, and the High Council. But in carrying into effect these laws, and seeing that there is unity of purpose, there is in reason as well as in the law of God, provision for a chief presiding authority, who thereby become the executive as Moses was.

Of necessity, if there is a difference between some of the other ministry in the administration of the law, or the work of the church, the principal presiding authority over the whole church has the right to resolve the immediate difficulty and to direct that the work move on.

A good executor neither tries or wants to do everything himself, but quite the contrary, he is anxious to secure able assistance and as rapidly as possible to turn over as much of the work as possible to separate departments. If he can do so, he will free his desk entirely and his hands from details. But if he finds a department is not functioning satisfactorily, if he finds there is a serious need in one department, then seeing the whole work suffer, he may and will handle it for a time, but only until he can secure a suitable officer who is willing and able to do the work.

While we are not writing this with either the knowledge or direction of President Smith, we have heard him express these general ideas on several different occasions, including within the past few years, the statement that the church is now growing so large that it is no longer possible for one man to give that personal attention to each individual as to detail as has been the custom in the past. That the President of the church will have to act more and more through lieutenants and assistants, is only another way of saying through different departments and through the members of the other quorums provided for in the law. He admits this. He urges this particularly in the work of the Twelve and of the stake presidencies. So far as we have been able to observe, it is his plan to turn over the work as rapidly as possible, and as much as possible to different departments. He takes over any department only so long as it may be necessary to put it in shape and see that it is administered as it should be.

Thus the President of the church would give his primary attention to seeing that the departments are working harmoniously to a common end. It is coordination since it is a working with one another, and putting each officer in his proper place.

We write with a great deal of confidence, even if not ex cathedra when we state that the Presidency have expressed and have no desire to concentrate all of the work in the one office. They only desire to secure such supervision as may be necessary for the united working to one end of all of the departments of church work, so that each department is acting under the direction of the Presidency and also with the Presidency as well as with and under the direction of our heavenly Father.

S. A. B.

We claim that the religion of Jesus Christ must have more than merely a personal end in view; that it is not enough for a person to "save" himself, but his religion must have a communicable value and "personal salvation"—must be socialized.

WHAT IS NEWS?

In Everybody's Magazine for April, George Creel states:

There are to-day, and have always been, two kinds of news: one is concerned with the fundamental significances of life and is educational, vital, and interpretative; the other deals entirely with the satisfaction of curiosity, and dies with the day that witnesses the events that it chronicles. One is truth; the other is tattle. The press of America, save in certain noble instances, rarely holds to the first definition, but gives unflinching adherence to the second.

Satisfy curiosity! No matter how mean, cheap, sordid, and ignoble the curiosity, satisfy it! Headlines with a wallop in every word! Right between the eyes! Stuff with a kick! And always the necessity for furious speed in order to secure a "beat." Don't stop for investigation! Let rumor serve for fact, let conjecture take the place of certainty, let gossip parade as honest inquiry! Get on the street first!

Unfortunately, too many, when they speak of news mean only the second kind—statements and incidents as they arise without regard to their setting, personality, or meaning, such news as we have not, do not, and will not attempt to secure. The preference should always be for the first kind of news. That which gives the fundamental facts, states their significance, and at least attempts to be educational as well as vital and interpretative. These facts the church attempts to give in the HERALD, and those who think otherwise are laboring under a misapprehension. The statements which possess a germ of truth, but yet are on the whole misleading, unfair attacks upon personal character are rigidly excluded.

CONTROL OF PROCEDURE

The question may arise as to the right of the legislative or lawmaking body to control the court, and how far it is wise for them to proceed. On this question, Justice Rodenbeck urges, in the Journal of the American Judicature Society for December, 1918, as follows:

The control of fundamental matters of procedure should be in the legislature, but the details of procedure should be regulated by rules of court.

The almost universal practice in this country is to regulate most of the details of practice through legislative enactments even to the extent of vesting in the courts powers and jurisdiction which they already possess. The change from this method of regulating procedure to one wherein the control of the legislature is limited to fundamental matters of a more or less substantive character, leaving the details of practice to be governed by rules of court, is the one along which modern progress in the improvement of procedure should be made.

The tendency has been to get away from formal and mechanical methods of trial. Fixed statutory rules are a survival of the old idea. It is only a difference in degree between a trial by any of the ancient mechanical methods and by fixed legislative rules, binding the courts, according to which the contest must proceed.

Some of the rules ordinarily prescribed by the legislature vest discretion in the courts which is wholly unnecessary, and others provide merely for the orderly conduct and dispatch of business which the legislature would not think of imposing upon administrative bodies. Greater latitude in procedure is often accorded to bodies like workmen's compensation commissions and public service commissions than is given the courts.

There are proper constitutional functions for the legislature to discharge, but one of them is not the regulation of details of procedure in the courts. There is a sufficiently wide field for their activity without encroaching on judicial functions, and the admonition may well be addressed to them: "Act well your part, there all the honor lies."

The Federal courts, if not the State courts, will protect litigants in their reasonable rights to meet their opponent's case, to present their own case, and to a judgment within the issues and within the jurisdiction of the court.

The legislature should prescribe, so far as it can constitutionally, the organization of the courts, their jurisdiction, the powers of the judges, the powers and duties of administrative officers and the important parts of procedure partaking of a constitutional or substantive character and let the courts control the details of practice.

The regulation of procedure was an inherent power of the courts at common law and the regulation of the details of practice by the legislature is an exercise of an ultra legislative function.

This is applicable to our church procedure because in our case the conference or the three quorums are our legislative body. How far should they proceed in laying down rules?

We would respectfully suggest that the General Conference ought not to attempt to define everything that can or cannot be done by a standing court of the church. The fundamental matters should be determined by the conference—the jurisdiction, and the rights and terms of appeal. But the details of procedure should be left to the court to determine, and especially to the general high council.

In other words, equity may be made as inelastic as is law, if we attempt to prescribe every detail of procedure and leave no discretion to our standing courts. Jurisdiction and organization and substantive matters should be determined, and the court granted sufficient freedom to seek out and determine the justice and equity of each particular case.

S. A. B.

What a wonderful thing it is that to every man of us is given the same opportunity for the supreme sacrifice! The same great prize—the same immortal glory! It makes no difference whether a fellow has made a success or failure of his life up to this time; he has the same chance as anybody else—to give all he's got. And nobody can give more. He's the equal in that respect of the greatest genius or statesman in the land.—Saturday Evening Post, January 12, 1918.

THE HIGHER LAW: AN EDITORIAL RESUME

An address upon this topic was delivered by James M. Beck, at the meeting of the American Bar Association in August, 1918, and is printed in the American Bar Association Journal for October. The same theme is also presented in his recent book, The Reckoning.

Francis Bacon wrote that in human society there is a reign of law beyond that effected by pacts of states. Proudhon, in 1845, made a similar statement. Many have questioned the application of the word law to the large body of human regulations having their origin in the common conscience of mankind.

When the Titanic went down, all its passengers became immediately conscious of a regulation that women and children should have the first preference in the saving of lives. Yet no legislature had ever adopted that law, nor was it the result of contract. Yet this in its application was directly contrary to the biologic law of natural selection and struggle for existence. It was something more than a sense of individual morality.

This is one of the illustrations of the fundamental decencies of human life. These form a great unwritten constitution of human society, and are antecedent to all laws of the state, and in fact, are superior in a sense, thereto.

The mythology of Greece emphasized the influence of the gods on all phenomena. The Norsemen, in the saga of the ring, noted that the theft of the gold brought a curse to all into whose hands it came, even though the recipient was the supreme god, Wotan, himself. It was not until the gold, in the form of the ring, was restored to the Rhine-maidens, that the curse was lifted. Moral truth or retributive justice was taught from the earliest ages, and it seems, as Mr. Beck states, a pity that the German people who glorified this saga of the ring with Wagner's immortal music, could not have been more deeply influenced in recent times by its moral philosophy.

Especially do we find this theme of the higher law emphasized in the Old Testament, and still in more marked degree by the great Teacher in the Beatitudes. In fact, this thread runs through all the teachings of Christ—the superiority of the higher law to the laws of the Jewish state. His constant protest was against the too rigid adherence to state-made law.

Mr. Beck suggests that here is one of the greatest manifestations of the higher law, in that Jesus has affected more powerfully the destinies of men than has the Roman empire, though that empire was the greatest governmental embodiment of law that the world has ever known.

In Greece this theme is continually found in the writings of the three great dramatists. It is clearly stated by Antigone, in the play by that name.

Cicero also spoke in the highest terms of a higher law, "which was never written and which we are never taught, which we never learn by reading, but which was drawn by nature herself." We see an instance of this in the arguments of Portia before the court of Venice, against Shylock: "Then must the Jews be merciful." "Upon what compulsion must I, tell me that." Portia then urges that it is not a matter of grace, but that its mandates are greater than that of any court:

'Tis mightiest in the mighty; it becomes
The throned monarch better than his crown.
His scepter shows the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty,
Wherein doth sit the dread and fear of kings;
But mercy is above the sceptered sway,
It is enthroned in the hearts of kings,
It is the attribute to God himself.

This is sometimes referred to as the law of nature, and is the basis of equity jurisprudence, which began in the reign of Edward III, and assumed that there was in the king a residue of power which enabled him to overrule the usages of the common law.

Under equity, the Lord Chancellor would permit nothing, the laws of the state to the contrary notwithstanding, that was inconsistent with honesty. Thus was formulated the idea of abstract justice, higher than the letter of the law, and became lodged in our system of jurisprudence.

Mr. Beck places therein Germany's greatest crime, that she has attempted to destroy, and has in fact impaired for the time being, this divine idea. This is not a mere rhapsody of words. There is a decided principle involved, and this violation reaches back to 1740—the rape of Silesia. There was then manifested the two ideas, each false, but differing greatly in degree. The one that the state is above morality, and the only limit to its aggressions is physical power. The other a pacifism that taught that it were better to condone a wrong, even though the higher law is sacrificed, than to inflict upon mankind the scourge of war.

The ideal of Germany was "power at any price,"—of the allies in 1740, "peace at any price."

His address as a whole is to the theme that the higher law is manifested in the history of nations, and sooner or later gross injustice must be corrected and atoned for; that no agreements of men can prevent the operation of this law; that righteousness must and will prevail. When we compromise with wrong, we merely prolong the agony, and insure additional punishment for ourselves. S. A. B.

THE POWER OF DEVOTED PRAYER

A convert to the Latter Day Saint Church, who has for years enjoyed fellowship with the highest expression of the Christian life as found in the evangelical churches, will seriously miss some blessed experiences, no matter how much otherwise he has gained. It will ever be a comfort to his heart to feel that forevermore his feet stand on no man-made creed, but that he has a foundation no power of Satan can remove. But he will seriously miss the noble men and women with whom in other days, he walked the sacred aisles of prayer. In a word, he will miss that life of prayer so beautifully expressed in the lives of many Christian people not of our church. Often the lines of prayer he knew will come back to him like the sounds of chimes at eventide.

WE LACK DEVOTION

In all kindness let me say it: I do not find as the result of my close observation, that life of prayer among our people I found in the evangelical churches. The Book of Mormon records some instances where men of God prayed earnestly all night. How many of our present Latter Day Saints would do that unless self-preservation were at stake? Yet, I have known men like Mr. John S. Huyler, whom I am proud to call the benefactor of my years, to remain all night in prayer, and prayer had so filled them with a zeal for the salvation of souls they were willing, though millionaires, to go down into the slums of the city and tell to drunkards and harlots the sweet story of the Redeemer's love. They had knelt so long at the foot of the cross, in prayer, the value of one soul in the sight of God and his angels had burned into their consciousness, and they were constrained, by a divine call, to leave the ninety and nine and go into the wilderness to seek the one that was lost. I contend that the great need of our church to-day is praying men and praying women. When we get people to pray, tithing and defraying of church debt will follow as a labor of love as well as a duty.

Unless something is done to arrest the heedless, worldly, skeptical condition which is slowly but surely creeping into our branches, the church must suffer. I observe it wherever I go. I am not painting a false picture. I am no pessimist. I know the condition, and I know, too, the only remedy is prayer. Many have gone out from us and have built altars to strange gods, and multitudes within the church are indifferent and are eating and drinking with no thought or fear of God. Some of our branches are largely forsaken. While various causes may be brought forth to account for this, I believe the primary cause is that prayer is not the ruling power in the hearts of our people as a religious body.

OF UTMOST IMPORTANCE

Prayer is of greater importance than preaching. Prayer prepares the heart to receive the divine message. How the calamity of this war brought a frivolous world to its senses! In many cities, churches were crowded with people who gathered, not to hear a sermon, but a people who gathered to feed on prayer, because their hearts were hungry for it. In supplication to the Almighty, their heavy hearts found relief not to be obtained in any other way. In the great Westminster Abbey, the citizens of London thronged day and night, beseeching God that he would not forsake them. I believe we will shortly experience something like that in our churches. The dwindling branches, and the lack of interest will arouse us to the situation and we will all be driven to our knees, and we will shun all compromise with worldiness, as an unholy thing, and a thing at enmity with the church of Jesus Christ. We are laying a great deal of emphasis upon a gathering in Zion, and an ideal condition, financially, socially, and religiously, but before such a consummation ("most devoutly to be wished") can be brought about, many a stronghold of evil must be brought low, and let us not lose sight of the fact that prayer is the great weapon with which we are to fight the warfare.

The spirit of our time is skeptical. The twentieth century repeats the questions of the Book of Job: "What is the Almighty, that we should serve him? and what profit should we have, if we pray unto him?" All this is exerting an influence upon us day after day. We breathe it in the atmosphere. The only way we can escape is by prayer. Surely Paul foresaw it, therefore his admonition, "Pray without ceasing!" If we do not "watch and pray," we cannot resist responding in varying measures to the pressure to which we are subjected.

I think it would be well for us Saints, seeing a spirit of indifference ever on the increase, to search our hearts as with a lighted candle, and reconsider the entire doctrine of prayer as laid down by the precious Son of God in his gospel. Questions are arising in the church which will not down until there is a satisfactory answer. These questions can be answered only in one way pleasing to God, and that is the way of prayer—the whole church on its knees.

We must first of all revive our faith. And now I feel I have touched a pressing need in our church—a revival of faith in the gospel. Assurance is all important in the domain of prayer. We cannot pray with satisfaction so long as the mind is harassed by questions and torn by doubts. The writer of the letter to the Hebrews considered it axiomatic that "he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."

We should pray on, not daunted by doubts or questions, remembering that Christ said men ought always to pray. We should go boldly before the throne of grace and speak, walking by faith, as seeing him who is invisible. Every family of Saints should have its home altar. The atmosphere of a home where there is a family altar, where prayer ascends daily, is quite different from the home where there is none.

THE DEVOTION OF OUR MASTER

I see a time coming, in our church, when prayer will be an urgently practical subject. I cannot read our church books without realizing that Latter Day Saints, of all religious bodies, are committed to the doctrine of prayer. Our divine Lord was a man of prayer. We hear him not only praying for himself but for others. We see him through the pages of the gospels praying in secret, in public, in the home, in the synagogue, in the temple, in the fields, and in the streets. He prayed so often and so fervently that those who came the nearest to him felt that they had never mastered the art of praying. "Lord, teach us to pray." And he gave them the Lord's Prayer. We see him praying on the brow of Olivet and in the shades of Gethsemane. We see him praying in every crisis of his life. He went out of the world praying the sublimest prayer ever offered at the throne of God—a prayer for his enemies: "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." Bend your ear low to the gospel page and listen to his sweet voice exhorting all men to pray. Listen to him warning them against fainting. He urges them to keep on and on and on. It was his conviction that the heavens could be opened by prayer, and by it blessings be secured not to be obtained in any other way. His word for us all is: "Men ought always to pray, and not to faint."

WE SHOULD GRASP THE SUBJECT

I believe we are coming to a crisis in the history of our church, when its very necessity will force on us a deep study of the doctrine of prayer as laid down by our blessed Savior. Our prayer-life has been too long neglected. I sometimes wonder if we Latter Day Saints have given the doctrine of prayer the critical attention it has deserved. I sometimes wonder if our preaching has been full or precise enough at this point.

From childhood, a Christian mother impressed upon my mind the influence of the mighty power of prayer. I have all through the years of my life given much thought to the subject as a soul cleanser and energizer. Looking back over my experience as an evangelist in the Methodist Episcopal Church, I discover that much of the praying of Christian people has been demoralizing because they have never been instructed in the laws of prayer. Christ told us that we ought not to pray after the fashion of the pagans, and yet there are large pagan elements in much of our praying. There are multitudes, even in our church, who seem never to have grasped Christ's high conception of prayer. Some of us, evidently, seem to have thought of prayer as a sort of magic by means of which we can induce God against his will to show us a favor. Thousands of years ago we read of men praying to God for what they might get out of him, and we have men in this twentieth century who have gotten no further. There are some of us, I feel quite sure (and I base my statement upon utterances I have heard fall from the lips of Saints), whose prayer-life has been tragically disappointing because they have prayed in the wrong way and for the wrong things. It is an ancient blunder. Even in the first century, James, the bishop of Jerusalem, was compelled to write to his converts: "You ask and receive not because you ask amiss." There are people who seem to imagine they have a right to ask God for anything they can think of, and then fall into the slough of despondency because God pays no attention to their requests. I really believe that it is this vicious way of praying that is responsible for so much skepticism that prevails among us upon the subject of prayer. If we claim too much for prayer, we are apt to weaken confidence in it altogether. If we persist in considering prayer a form of magic which we can make use of to get out of hard places, we are certain, soon or late, to find ourselves in a situation where the magic will not work.

THE LAW OF PRAYER

I think if we read our New Testament, with the seeing eye, and the understanding heart, we will come to realize that all answers to prayer are conditioned. These conditions are fixed. They can no more be changed than can the law of gravitation be changed. If we clearly examine the law of prayer we shall find that it is as sacred and eternal as the law of gravitation. There are some Christian bodies who seem to think that laws can be suspended by the repetition of pious formulas. I remember how wearisome, and even painful, it was to me to witness this at some of the miracle-working shrines in Catholic Spain and Italy. I do not question the sincerity of these devotees at the shrines of saints, but I do question their interpretation of the law that governs prayer.

No one can deny that there is a harvest law in the physical world, neither can it be denied that there is a harvest law in the world of the soul. Whatever a man sows that shall he also reap. You cannot abrogate this law by prayer. A man who indulges in alcoholic liquors to excess for twenty years cannot, by an earnest prayer, change in an hour or a day the processes which have been started in his blood and body. What he has sown he must reap. True, God can work a miracle, for his power is almighty, but in the economy of his grace, he rarely works that way. At least I have not in my experience so observed it. Perhaps there are those who have. I do not write as one infallible.

Would it not be absurd to think that any man, no matter how strong his faith, could change the law of gravitation by prayer? The man who drives his automobile over a precipice goes to destruction, no matter how many prayers may be offered by the horrified onlookers. The man who sows his field with tares cannot change those tares into lilies by offering up a series of petitions to God. You cannot set your house on fire and then stop the burning by falling on your knees. In a word, you cannot abrogate the law of the harvest by supplications.

STOPPING THE WAR BY PRAYER

When the dreadful war broke out, I remember reading an article published in the official organ of a leading denomination, to the effect that if people had prayed more at the beginning of the war, it would have been checked and much bloodshed would have been saved. The writer of the article evidently forgot that for nearly a whole generation Europe had sown bayonets, and when the time came for it to reap battles it was too late to stop the war by prayer.

Only yesterday I stood before a war painting, true to life, representing the pious Russians on their knees, begging God to bring the war to an end in an instant. It was a pathetic sight. Of course God did not grant their request. For generations the government of Russia had been tyrannical and corrupt. The very fabric of society has grown rotten. How absurd, therefore, for anyone to suppose that God could give victory to the arms of any nation which had trampled on his laws so outrageously and so long. There are times in history when we can hear God saying plainly to a nation: "When you spread forth your hands I will hide mine eyes from you: Yea, when ye make many prayers I will not hear."

I hope the reader clearly understands the truth I am trying to emphasize. The point is: There is a law of prayer and there is a law of the harvest, and the first cannot annihilate or suspend the latter. It is easy for a people in time of war to assemble in their temples and ask the Almighty to help them out of their distresses, but whether or not the prayer is granted depends upon the previous conduct of the people, and also upon the present condition of their hearts. A prophet long ago told his countrymen that their praying was all in vain. He assured them he could hear God saying: "Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me." "Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well."

REALMS NOT REACHED BY PRAYER

It was, indeed, an awakening in my soul when a saintly professor who taught me ascetic theology in the University at Freiburg, made clear to me that there are vast realms in which prayer is able to do nothing. God has told us, in our experience, that there are things about which we are not simply to talk to him. He has informed us that there are many things for which we are never to ask alone, but do ourselves.

God never allows us to do by one form of energy that which belongs wholly to another. I don't think any of my readers will question that. And yet we often commit to the prayer faculty, duties which belong to other powers of the soul. We cannot make prayer fill the place of physical labor. There are many blessings which can be obtained only by manual toil, and to try to substitute for such toil religious devotions is a sort of blasphemy which God treats with contempt. In Roman Catholic countries, on those three days in the Roman ritual called Rogation Days, I have seen the peasants, led by the priests, go over, in procession, the untilled soil and pray for a rich harvest. The peasants would sometimes rely more upon the prayers of the priest for the harvest than on muscle and steel. They would till the soil and sow the seed after the praying of the priest, but their reliance on the prayers of the priest were paramount in their thought.

During the spring I spent in Iowa, I often watched the growth of the corn. I never lived on a farm one day of my life, and I therefore do not know the rudiments of the laws that govern agriculture, but from what I saw of farmers at their toil, and the resultant fields of waving corn, I concluded cornfields have great respect for a man with a hoe. They care little for a man on his knees. Muscle and steel are prime essentials in the raising of crops the world over. In no sense do I mean to imply that it is not good for a farmer to pray. He will be a better farmer than he would if he led a prayerless life. But I cannot see where prayer can take the place of the plow and the hoe and the perspiration of his brow on a June day. Prayer is good only when held in its place.

I remember, during my days in a Catholic seminary, how some of the students would fritter away the time they should have devoted to study—the examination days would find them unprepared, and yet I have known these very students to pray fervently to God and to invoke the intercession of the Virgin Mother for success in the passing of their rigid examinations. Let me say here, in no educational institutions of the world are examinations more rigid or more exacting than in those of the Roman Church.

These students made the mistake of trying to substitute prayer for honest mental toil. Knowledge opens to a man who is willing to do a deal of hard work, not to a man who fritters away his time. The student, as well as the farmer should pray. Every seeker after knowledge should keep as close to God as he can. Every one who would hold his brain at its highest point of efficiency ought to be in harmony with him whose glory is intelligence, and in whose light all our intellectual torches are lit. But prayer can never be a substitute for intellectual exertion, and only he goes into the kingdom of scholarship who is willing "to scorn delights, and live laborious days."

PRAYING FOR PEACE—PREPARING FOR WAR

I cannot refrain from calling attention here to the startling manner in which the great war has emphasized the fatal consequences of trying to substitute prayer for something else. During my long residence in Europe I was perplexed in my effort to reconcile the great cathedrals erected to the honor of the Prince of peace, with the frontiers of every nation bristling with the arms of war. Thousands of people gathered, weekly, in these temples and prayed for peace. But alas! While Europe prayed for peace she prepared for war. It is one thing to pray for peace, and another thing to work for it. The first is easy, the second is hard. The first costs nothing, the second costs much. The first exposes one to no persecution, the second provokes the world's criticism and scorn. Europe has been taught what it costs not to labor for peace. If the nations had labored for peace within the last fifty years, with one tenth of the energy they toiled to prepare for war, the world-shattering catastrophe through which we have passed could never have been. No, verily it could not!

A FORCE IN THE SPIRITUAL REALM

Electricity is perhaps the mightiest force in the realm of science. It can convert night into day. It can induce men to forget the moon and stars. We stand awed in the presence of its power. And yet, how limited electricity is, both in the doing of great things, and in the doing of little things. Outside its narrow province it can do no mighty work. It cannot teach a child to read. It is mighty but it works within limits. We gain nothing by assuming electricity can do everything. We lose much when we declare prayer can do everything. Prayer is a mighty force in the spiritual realm. The soul feeds upon it. There can be no spiritual growth without it. Within the limits set by the Almighty, the prayer of the righteous man avails much. More things, according to Tennyson, are wrought by prayer than the world dreams of, and still more things could be wrought if all men everywhere would study it and use it according to the will of God. No prayer can be acceptable to heaven which does not breathe the spirit—"Not my will but thine be done!" We do not want to change God's will; we want to bring ourselves up to it. We surely do not desire to alter his plan, for that would be folly. We desire to know what his plan is and to fall in with it. "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven"—that is the cry of every heart that understands how to pray after the manner of Jesus.

I do not wish to be understood as believing that it is useless for us to pray for things which cannot be granted. We have the whole New Testament arrayed against us if we say that. We know that Saul of Tarsus prayed repeatedly that a certain physical infirmity of his might be removed. His request was denied, but his prayer was rewarded. By prayer he was lifted above his thorn and was able at last to say: "I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses, for Christ's sake: for when I am weak, then am I strong."

In black Gethsemane we see Jesus bowed under a great trial. Again and again he implores God that the cup might be removed from him, and God denied his request, but by his prayer new channels were opened through which divine strength streamed into his soul. In the picturesque phrase of the gospel—"An angel came and strengthened him." God did not take away the cup from his lips: He gave him strength to drink it to the last bitter dreg. When God does not give us what we ask, he gives us something better.

A SOUL ENERGIZER

Before I close this article I want to say a word on prayer as a soul energizer. When Paul sketches his portrait of the Christian warrior, he mentions the belt and the breastplate, and the sandals, and the shield, and the helmet, and the sword, all essential pieces of armor, and then adds prayer as the vitalizing force by which all these bits of armor are to become most highly effective.

There is no form of prayer more vitalizing to the soul than meditative prayer—the going apart alone with God. Indeed, so rare is the practice that one might speak of it as a lost art. Our Christian Scientist friends, to their credit be it said, have done much to revive it. This reminds me of the old truth, "There is no heresy so wrong that it has not some good in it." The lack of meditative prayer is seriously evident among the Saints. Indeed, the lack of it is everywhere. I suppose it is because of the tremendous rush and hurry of our modern life. We are "jostled out of our spirituality," so to speak. I remember a beautiful hymn my mother would often sing to me when I was a boy. Through all the years the words of that hymn have lived with me as an incentive to the highest spiritual attainment. As I write these words I seem to hear my mother's voice again singing the precious admonition:

Take time to be holy,
The world rushes on;
Spend much time in secret
With Jesus alone;

By looking to Jesus
Like him thou shalt be;
Thy friends in thy conduct
His likeness shall see.

MEDITATIVE DEVOTION

We all know it does take time to be holy. We need to take time for meditative prayer and fellowship with God if we would rise supreme above the temptations of the world, and the sin that is everywhere about us.

I often think of that counsel which Paul gave his beloved Timothy: "Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them." He tells the Philippians to "think on these things." In the description of the good man in the first Psalm, it is said he meditated on the law of the Lord. We may notice also the resolution of good men recorded in the Psalms: "I will meditate on thee in the night watches." "My meditation of him shall be sweet." God criticized his people when they failed in this moral thoughtfulness, saying, "My people do not consider."

It is, indeed, a solemn and impressive truth that our character in the sight of God depends upon the character of our thoughts. "For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he." To go apart in silence with some eternal truth and dwell upon it is, indeed, a most wholesome practice to promote soul growth. Christ tells us in the parable of the sower, that it is only those who have heard the word and keep it that bring forth good fruit. By meditation the seed of the truth sinks into deep earth, and is "kept" and becomes fruit-bearing. It was when the prodigal "came to himself," when he really began to think, that he resolved to return to his father. It was when Peter "thought thereon" that he "wept." The truths of the gospel can only effect us as we think thereon. This leads to that contentment of mind Paul had, when he could say to a distracted world: "None of these things move me." We all would be more contented if we thought more of our loving God, what he is, what he does, what he says, and thus come to know him better.

How well it would be if, in the busy rush of life, we would plan a quiet time each morning and evening with God!

Take time to be holy,
Be calm in thy soul,
Each thought and each motive
Beneath his control;

Thus led by his Spirit
To fountains of love
Thou soon shalt be fitted
For service above.

"BEAUTY OF HOLINESS"

We read of Jesus that after prayer the "fashion of his face was changed." There is such a thing as a "beauty of holiness," which is often seen in the face of the aged saint. It is the result of silent communion with God. I have a very dear aged friend in the Saints' Home at Holden, who comes to my mind, in connection with this thought. In all my visits to her I have seen a light in her aged face which is not of this world. I once asked her if she was ever lonely, being so much alone, and she answered: "No, for I am always conscious of the divine Presence." That accounts for the light in her face. It is said of God's redeemed ones, "His name shall be in their foreheads." And so we can often see it written on the brows of aged Saints who have been true to the gospel through all the years. Surely, "At eventide there will be light." When we hold frequent communion with God something of the glory of his face passes into our faces, and stays there, and shines out so that others see it. It is as Paul says, "from glory to glory," from one degree of character to a higher—from one degree of spiritual beauty to a higher. It is a gradual growth. Keep your gaze on Christ and you will be like Christ. I like that old fable in Greek lore which tells us that the graceful swan was changed from a most ugly bird into its present beauty, because of its constancy to its mate. But how our gospel experience can outrun the classic fable! The soul grows wondrously lovely just by loving him who was altogether lovely. The natural man discerneth not the things of the Spirit of God, because he knows not how to pray. But very blessed are all they who come into such an experience as I have tried to describe. It is available for all who are willing to dwell in the secret place of the Most High.

In the secret of his presence
How my soul delights to hide!
Oh, how precious are the lessons
Which I learn at Jesus' side!

Earthly cares can never vex me,
Neither trials lay me low;
For when Satan comes to tempt me,
To the secret place I go.

Would you like to know the sweetness
Of the secret of the Lord?
Go and hide beneath his shadow,
This shall then be your reward;
And whene'er you leave the silence
Of that happy meeting place,
You must mind and bear the image
Of the Master in your face.

AUGUSTINE DWYER.

THE WORLD WAR IN THE LIGHT OF HISTORY

(A sermon by Elder A. C. Barmore.)

My text this evening is Micah 3:5. It reads as follows: "He that putteth not into their mouths, they even prepare war against him." Although I am speaking on the historical aspects of war I am using a text of scripture as a basis of my remarks. It has often been said that since human nature remains the same, present events can be explained in the light of past occurrences, or in other words, "history repeats itself." This maxim, as we know, has become all but a threadbare adage, it has been so often repeated.

It has been claimed that wars have often been fought in the interests of liberty, which is true, but it can only apply to one side of any conflict. The very fact that one nation is fighting for freedom must mean that the other side is fighting for oppression. It has been said that the world war was fought in the interests of freedom, or to use a current, common expression, "to make the world safe for democracy," and I believe it; but there is another side to war, all war, that must be considered.

ITS ECONOMIC ASPECTS

As impartial students of history we must consider its economic aspects. In the industrial and political circles of to-day we often hear the words, economic determinism. By this principle is meant the deciding power of the financial or commercial factor in everything human. Some go so far as to say that ministers and church people generally are, in their attitude toward religion, moved by monetary considerations. While there is some truth in this claim it is more than the truth. Some preachers and some professing Christians may be actuated by the love of self, yet the amount of disinterested self-sacrifice in the world would prove that this is not altogether the case. So also war may sometimes be fought for conquest, indemnity, or trade, yet it is not always so.

Our text indicates that the satisfaction of the physical appetite may sometimes be the occasion for war. Just here I am reminded of a story about a young American who objected to going to war against Germany because he was, to use his own words, "a vegetarian." A Government officer said in reply: "That does not make any difference, for while you will be expected to kill Germans you will not be required to eat them." But after all the young man was not far astray for while war does not expect its participants to eat dead soldiers yet there are cases where men are killed to gratify the desires of their fellows for the luxuries of civilization. We understand that Alexander, Cæsar, Napoleon, and other conquerors or would-be conquerors, including the Kaiser, were not or are not any larger physically than average men. Sometimes, indeed, they are smaller, but when we consider them officially they become giants.

When considered as emperor of the French, Napoleon, for instance, had a tremendous maw capable of assimilating, figuratively speaking, all the men killed in his wars. Usually animals kill to meet the demands of pressing hunger though they sometimes indulge in wanton destruction. Man also kills, not, however, to satisfy immediate physical appetite but to satisfy the greed for money, luxury, and power, which characterizes some of the so-called great men of the world.

Our Civil War was primarily for the purpose of preserving our Union, but really, though secretly, slavery was the actual cause of the struggle. Lincoln said: "The slaves constituted a peculiar and powerful interest. All knew that this interest was, somehow, the cause of the war." It may also be true, as some have claimed, that a jealous rivalry between the wage system of the North and the chattel slavery of the South was partially responsible for the conflict. Regarding this war Doctor Graves said (before the war began): "Germany covets both Holland and Belgium because of the manufacturing and shipping facilities they provide." Mr. Gerard says: "If Germany could retain Belgium and northern France she could control the steel trade of all Europe."

ITS EFFECT ON CHARACTER

As an illustration of its effect on those who have loved it for its own sake, we take the case of Napoleon.

Colonel Ingersol says of him: "Little while ago I stood by the tomb of the old Napoleon, a magnificent tomb of gilt and gold fit almost for a dead deity. I looked upon the rare and valuable marble where rest at last the ashes of that restless man. I leaned over the balustrade and thought about the career of the greatest soldier of the modern world.

"I saw him walking the banks of the Seine, contemplating suicide. I saw him at Toulon. I saw him putting down the mob in the streets of Paris. I saw him at the head of the army of Italy. I saw him at the Bridge of Lodi with the tri-color in his hand. I saw him in Egypt in the shadow of the pyramids. I saw him conquer the Alps and mingle the Eagles of France with the eagles of the crags. I saw him at Marengo, at Ulm, at Austerlitz. I saw him in Russia where the infantry of the snow and the cavalry of the wild blasts scattered his legions like winter's withered leaves. I saw him at Leipsic, in defeat and disaster, driven by a million bayonets back upon Paris. I saw him clutched like a wild beast and banished to Elbe. I saw him escape and retake an empire, by the force of his genius. And I saw him on the frightful field of Waterloo, where chance and fate combined to wreck the fortunes of their former king. And I saw him at Saint Helena, with his hands crossed behind him, gazing out on the sad and solemn sea.

"I thought of the wives he had made widows and the children fatherless, of all the tears that had been shed for his glory. I thought of the only woman who ever loved him, pushed from his side by the cold hand of ambition. And I said I would rather have been a French peasant and worn wooden shoes. I would rather have been that poor man and have lived in a little hut with a vine growing over my door and the grapes growing purple under the amorous kisses of the autumn sun. I would rather have been that poor peasant with my wife by my side, knitting as the day died out of the sky—with my children on my knees with their arms about me. I would rather have gone down to the tongueless silence of the dreamless dust, than to have been that imperial impersonation of force and murder known as Napoleon the Great."

Do these things apply to our generals? Did George Washington, Ulysses S. Grant, or Robert E. Lee fight because they loved war for its own sake? No; a thousand times, no. They fought for principles, and were not only willing but anxious to return to the arts of peace.

THE BENEFITS OF WAR

We should remember, however, that war has its benefits. Our Revolutionary forefathers fought for their rights, first as British colonials, and later as an independent nation, against the legions of King George. Later still we fought for our rights as a country in the war of 1812. Does any sane person believe that we could have obtained justice in that age and with the then prevailing British opinion without fighting for it? Again could Garibaldi have obtained the freedom of Italy without war? This also: Could Simon Bolivar have liberated South America without armed conflicts? Further still: Under the existing circumstances could our country have been kept in Union and the slaves freed without our Civil War? We must answer these questions by saying most emphatically, "No." Nor do we believe that the democratic well being of the world could have been secured without this war.

FAITH AND THE FRUITS THEREOF

"For ye are all the children of God through faith in Christ Jesus."—Galatians 3:26.

There are many common words which we clearly understand in the ordinary relations of life, but when we lift them into the religious sphere they puzzle us. Such a word is faith. Much of the failure of the unsaved man to understand faith, arises from this very fact. Metaphysics tries to dissect faith, and staggers him. Theology essays to define faith, and only befogs him. What he needs to see is that the faith he is to exercise toward Jesus Christ for salvation is the very same faith with which he is perfectly familiar in everyday life. True, the object of that faith is infinitely higher, being the work and person of Jesus Christ as his Savior; and the outcome of that faith is immeasurably more precious, being the salvation of his own soul. But the attitude of mind and heart in all believing is the same, and so Christ was constantly speaking to men about faith. He told them to have faith. He reproved them for having such little faith. He told them that if they had faith as a grain of mustard seed they could remove mountains into the midst of the sea; and they could say to the sycamore tree, "Be thou plucked up by the roots and cast into the midst of the sea," and doubt not it shall be done.

Now faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. . . . Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God; so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear. By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts; and by it he, being dead, yet speaketh. By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death; and was not found, because God had translated him; for before his translation, he had this testimony, that he pleased God. But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith. By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went. By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise: for he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. Through faith also Sarah herself received strength to conceive seed, and was delivered of a child when she was past age, because she judged him faithful who had promised. Therefore sprang there even of one, and him as good as dead, as many as the stars of the sky in multitude, and as the sand which is by the seashore innumerable. These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth. . . . By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac: and he that had received the promises offered up his only begotten son. . . . By faith Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau concerning things to come. By faith Jacob, when he was a-dying, blessed both the sons of Joseph; and worshiped, leaning upon the top of his staff. . . . By faith Moses, when he was come to years of discretion, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; . . . By faith they passed through the Red Sea as by dry land; which the Egyptians assaying to do were drowned. By faith the walls of Jericho fell down, after they were compassed about seven days. . . . And what shall I more say? for the time would fail me to tell of Gideon, and of Barak, and of Samson, and of Jephthah; of David also, and Samuel, and more of the prophets; who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens. Women received their dead raised to life again; and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain the first resurrection.—Hebrews 11: 1-35, Inspired Translation.

FAITH IS LOOKING UNTO JESUS

Faith is not simply looking at Jesus. There is a so-called faith which looks at Jesus, instead of looking unto him; and there are many people who are thus simply looking at him. They believe in Jesus as a historical personage; they admit the surpassing beauty of his life; they say no man can match his incomparable teachings; they say, "I believe in Jesus Christ as surely as you do," but they believe in him with the head and not with the heart; they hold him up and scrutinize his beauty as one might gaze through a microscope upon some lovely specimen of nature's handiwork; they see the picture which the word of God has drawn of his only begotten Son, and they are driven to confess, as they gaze, that the world has never looked upon such a matchless character, before or since. But they never go any further. They utterly fail to realize how far this sort of faith falls short of the faith which is needed to save a soul from eternal death.

FAITH AND WORKS

Are our faith and works as great as our forefathers'? I fear not! Jesus Christ yesterday, to-day, and forever the same. So then we must be lacking on our part. Christ has spoken in his word, "Will I find faith when I come?" Let us examine ourselves and see if we have faith as a grain of mustard seed. I trow not, or there would be mighty works accomplished to-day that are not performed by any of us. As is required of us, let us come to Christ with our whole heart, and accomplish a mighty work in the very near future, that the world can see that we are the children of God.

THE POWER OF THOUGHT IN CHRISTIAN CHARACTER

There is no human achievement without mental activity. A man is literally what he thinks, his character being the sum total of all his thoughts.

"As he thinketh in his heart, so is he."—Proverbs 23: 7.

As a plant springs from and could not be without the seed, so every act of a man springs from and could not be without the hidden seed of thought.

A noble and Godlike character is not a thing of favor or chance but is the result of continued effort in right thinking.

By the right choice and true application of thought man ascends to the divine character, and by the abuse and wrong application of thought he descends below the level of the beasts.

Our thoughts are a mold for our actions, and our words are an index to our character, and as a stream cannot rise higher than its source, so we cannot rise higher than our thoughts.

Beautiful thoughts inspire noble deeds, Jesus Christ is the bright guiding star of our example whose beautiful character stands without a rival for its purity and gentleness, and this high standard we may approach by cultivating our minds to think pure and noble thoughts.

Our minds can be likened to a garden which may be intelligently cultivated or neglected; it must, and will bring forth; if no useful seed is put into it, then an abundance of useless weed seed will fall therein, and will continue to produce their kind.

Just as a gardener cultivates his plot, keeping it free from weeds, and growing the flowers and fruits which he requires, so may we tend the gardens of our minds weeding out all the wrong, useless, and impure thoughts, and cultivating towards perfection the flowers and fruits of right, and useful and pure thoughts.

The poet has said, "Sow a thought you reap an act, sow an act you reap a habit, sow habits you reap a character, sowing character you reap your destiny,"

All the religion anyone has is in the life we live, and the life we live is our character, the building of character should be the first and prime effort of all of us, the Prophet Isaiah (55: 7, 8) says: "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon. For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord."

The Apostle Paul realizing the effect of our thoughts upon our character, wrote:

Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.—Philippians 4: 8.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE CHURCH ROW

In a church row on the Kansas side, the pastor sought to soothe the spirits of some of the enraged brethren by prayer. But the prayer was disturbed when one brother grabbed another brother by the throat, and a police officer was called in.

Church rows have been pretty general, and pretty much the same from the time of the first one, which occurred in a very early day when one broke out in the First Church of Corinth. Not even the persuasion of the chiefest of apostles was sufficient to placate all the brethren, and when the row was over there were a number of churches in Corinth, for some said, "I am of Paul," and another said, "I am of Apollos." And they went to law, brother against brother, "and that before the unbelievers," and there were "envyings and strife and divisions."

Those who sit in the seats of the scornful have observed that when "the flesh" becomes stirred to anger, it is much the same whether it is in church or in a Sixth Ward caucus. It is a reminder that we are still carnal. The old question put to the rowing Corinthians by the Apostle Paul yet remains unanswered: "Why do ye not rather take wrong? Why do ye not rather suffer yourselves to be defrauded?" The only answer, perhaps, is in the explanation given to the Corinthians: "For are ye not carnal; for whereas there is among you envying, and strife and divisions, are ye not carnal and walk as men?"

The wise apostle prayed for the warring factions in Corinth, but he made no effort to pray with them. He stayed away from them and wrote them letters, gracious letters, to be sure, but he kept away from them, which is the best thing to do with a church row.

"Therefore I write these things," he said, "being absent, lest being present I should use sharpness."

But with Corinth as an example, brethren still row in the church, and a church row, like a prairie fire, is not to be put out with prayer. For when brethren are fighting mad, they are not in the spirit of prayer, neither are they, like Jerry Cruncher of old, in a humor to "be prayed against."

Evidently they called in the police at Corinth as they did in Kansas City, Kansas, which only proves, after all, that "That which is flesh is flesh."

Nevertheless it was a church row that brought down to us this good old doctrine: "Finally, brethren, farewell. Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you." A dose of that old-fashioned remedy for rowing churches would put the police out of business so far as their official "ministry to the saints" is concerned.—Kansas City Star.

GROWTH IN CHURCH UNITY

The different Protestant bodies are not nearly so far apart as they were twenty-five years ago. Gradually they are learning the art of cooperation, and are becoming increasingly willing to work together. We have, as some of you know, the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. It is only as yet in its infancy, being only a little over ten years old, but it has already accomplished the work of a giant.

The council consists of four hundred members, and convenes every four years. Those four hundred members represent thirty denominations of Protestant Christians—the largest thirty of all. In those thirty denominations are enrolled over twenty millions of the twenty-six million Protestant Christians in this country. Those twenty million Christians are acting together. There is an executive committee which meets once a year, an administrative committee which meets once a month, and all through the year over a dozen commissions made up of experts are studying various social problems, and their reports are published and spread broadcast.

During the last two years this Federal Council has done an invaluable service, not only to our own country, but to the whole world. No wonder that President Wilson has expressed to it his hearty thanks, and that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy have spoken warm words of appreciation of its invaluable services, and that Mr. Herbert C. Hoover has repeatedly expressed his thanks to the council for the mighty help it has rendered. We are outgrowing rapidly our exaggerated individualism, and are learning to work together as one great family of God.—From a sermon by Doctor Charles E. Jefferson, delivered at Broadway Tabernacle, March 2, 1919.

WHAT ABSTINENCE DOES

The New York Life Insurance Company, the largest organization of its kind in the world, we believe, has just issued a bulletin which will be of special interest to those who think that the people of the United States are wise in adopting a policy of national prohibition. The mortality figures of the company's policyholders in Germany during the four years of war from August 1, 1914, to July 31, 1918, have just been compiled by the company's chief actuary. These figures show that the mortality, including deaths on the battlefield, was twelve per cent less for the war period of four years than for the eleven years of peace immediately preceding.

Commenting upon these rather surprising statistics, the company's chief actuary says:

"It is probable that this has been the result of restriction in diet, limitation in the consumption of alcoholic beverages, and a large amount of exercise which the Germans of middle life, the bulk of our insured, have had to stand."

In bringing these significant facts to the attention of its agents and policyholders, the company states that they "point a way to longer life for the average man, to-wit: restricted diet, total abstinence from alcoholic drinks, proper exercise."

Such testimony from one of the foremost of modern financial institutions, conducted by very practical men of affairs, can hardly be waved aside, even by the high-spirited cartoonists of our gay contemporary life as the silly notion of long-haired cranks.—The Outlook, April 23, 1919.

GOVERNMENT AND BUSINESS

Mr. McAdoo was a very useful man at Washington. He quit, he said, because he was overworked and because he wanted to make reasonable provision for the comfort and security of his family—because he was overworked and underpaid. The Government might have lightened his task by transferring some of his duties to other hands. But it would not have given him an opportunity to make that reasonable provision for his family which most men want to make and which business gives them every chance to make. That is one outstanding reason why business has the advantage of government in bidding for talent.

Other men, recruited from the ranks of business in the war emergency and who proved highly useful are leaving Washington. Some of them are comfortably beyond the need of making provision for their families. They are rich and can dispose of their time as they please. And they are in excellent health. They prefer business to government because business gives a far freer scope for the exercise of their abilities. If they can do a particular thing better than another man can, the first thing business wants of them is to develop and put into practice their better way of doing it. That is the principal use business has for them—to do it better. It will give them the freest hand and the greatest reward for exercising that talent.

But government, by its very nature and by an almost immutable law, tends constantly to adopt a hard-and-fast rule for doing the particular thing. It tends constantly to set greater store on exactly following the rule than on proposing an innovation. Its disposition is to resent disturbing the rules. Its habit is to delegate authority grudgingly, with strict limitations. A man used to the free field of business finds government's restrictions irksome. It is well enough to know that various dollar-a-year men were fairly in despair over the rigidity of the machine with which they had to deal. Stiff, with rule-riveted joints, it would not respond to an application of energy as the business mechanism with which they have been used to dealing did.

The ability that enlisted in government service for war would be very useful to it in peace. But government is not so constituted as to attract it except in a great emergency.—The Saturday Evening Post, January 4, 1919.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

The Harder Task

The poets say God calls each one
To occupy some post or place,
To fill some need in the world's great work—
Secular work, or work of grace.

Some called to preach, and some to pray,
And some to follow, some to lead,
Some called to write, and some to sing,
There's some to fill each place of need.

And all in their appointed place
Combine a harmony to create;
Some to stirring deeds are called,
And some reserved to stand and wait.

I know there's joy for those who preach,
And there is peace for those who pray,
I know there's pleasure in the song—
The story, too, or in the play.

And there is fame for him who fights
Where tragic death may be his fate.
But what for mine—the harder task—
To lonely stand and silent wait?

"To stand and wait?" when each pulse beat
Throbs strong to action's faintest call!
My God! the waiting enforced to us
Is yet the hardest task of all.

M. E. KEARNEY.

The Resurrection

Have you heard the blessed story
Of the Christ who died for sin,
How he gave himself a ransom
That we all might live again?
Have they told you how he suffered
On the cross of Calvary,
That his precious blood atoneth
So mankind might then be free?

Have they told you how the angel
Came and rolled the stone away,
How he burst death's bands asunder
On that blessed holy day,
How he rose to life immortal,
How our Savior lives again,
How he lives and reigns triumphant
Over death, and hell, and sin?

You and I can be like Jesus,
But we, like Christ, must die,
Cast aside our sinful natures,
And our lusts must crucify;
We must die to sin and folly,
And be buried 'neath the wave,
Buried with our Lord and Master
In that silent, liquid grave.

Then, like Jesus, rise triumphant
To a better, purer life,
Free from sin and worldly pleasure,
Free from sorrow, free from strife;
We must follow in his footsteps,
Tread the path that Jesus trod,
'Tis the way of life eternal
And will lead us home to God.

A Talk to My Flowers

I went into my garden
To drink the sweets of flowers,
I saw that one was hidden
Where none could see its charms.

And so I said, "I'll move thee;
For here thou must not stay,
Come, show thy lovely colors
On this bright, sunny day."

I gently spaded 'round it,
So careful not to break
One thread of its life's treasure
Or touch its slender neck.

"Upraised now, do not wither
Though taken from your bed.
I'll place you in a better,
And you shall be well fed.

"And all can see your beauty
And sip your fragrant breath.
Now smile and bow to breezes,
In this most showy nest."

But its roots and vines were shaken:
The sun came down with power;
And my precious flower was dead and gone,
In one short, fleeting hour.

Some cannot bear removing,
One touch will make them cry,
And drain the sap and life cord,
Then bow their heads and die.

Now all ye lowly creatures,
When raised to higher spheres,
Keep humble hearts well nurtured,
Learn from this lovely flower.

Happy Day

O happy day, when I shall be
All that the Lord requires of me;
So may he help me, by his grace
To keep the faith; to win the race.

What holy joy, what blessedness,
When I shall see the Savior's face;
To lay this earthly burden down;
To accept of him the righteous crown.

O joyful place this earth will be
When cleansed from all impurity—
When nothing vile can enter in—
Where only righteousness shall reign.

O happy land, O joyful time,
To live with thee, dear Savior mine—
On this glad earth from sin curse free,
Where thou shalt reign eternally.

So may I live from day to day
That all thy law I will obey;
Or has some one a kind deed shown
I will not wait to pass it on.

Then help me Lord till I shall be
All that thou hast designed in me;
Until I hear thy compliment—
"Thou hast well done, faithful servant."

HATTIE HUGHES.

Many ideas grow better when transplanted into another mind than in the one where they sprang up. That which was a weed in one intelligence becomes a flower in the other, and a flower again dwindles down to a mere weed by the same change.—O. W. Holmes.

The Afterglow

Another conference has passed into history, and what a history maker it proved to be! None who attended could help but feel that it was a privilege to have been there, even though at times the suffering and agitation which attended the birth of a new era were distressing to witness—or to endure, for the entire body suffers with every member thereof, and all partook to a greater or less degree of the pains and pangs of growth.

This is not the time nor place to talk of everything which occurred there, but this much is due the sisters who may read this—who did not have the privilege of being in attendance. It is a time to lift up your heads and rejoice, for the power of God is being made manifest!

Just as Christ came to his own in quietness and humility, to such degree that his own received him not, looking as they were for a king of earthly pomp and glory, so this spring witnessed the coming to all hearts of the gentle, quiet influences which smoothed out differences, united fragments, and resulted in a unanimity of thought and action before the close of conference, the like of which had never been experienced before.

Shall we turn our faces from the light because it comes unheralded by spectacular display? Are we still in the beginners' paths, where things must be demonstrated to our outward vision before we can comprehend? Are we as the poor Israelitish slaves, down to whose low measure even the Lord Jehovah had to stoop in order to impress, as witnessed by his instructions to Moses to perform miracles such as could be duplicated by many magicians of darkened Egypt? No, surely the time has come when we can recognize the workings of God's will even though unattended by outward pomp and ceremony; when we can perceive his hand as it molds the minds of men, using, as he must, human instruments to bring about human salvation! Blessed be his holy name!

Surely then we can rejoice, for the days of fulfillment are upon us!

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Woman's Auxiliary Convention

The Convention of the Woman's Auxiliary for 1919 opened at 8 o'clock on Monday morning, April 7. Mrs. D. J. Krahl presided and Mrs. J. A. Gardner acted as secretary by order of the convention. The program as printed was carried out with one or two exceptions.

A registration system was arranged whereby the women in attendance at the convention might record their official position, if any, and the line of work in which they had specialized. One hundred and fifty registered.

The Home and Child Welfare Bureau was requested to put into effect a method whereby the young mothers might have the advantage of the studies offered by the Woman's Auxiliary.

A form of questionnaire was offered by the president with a view to suggesting the standardization of our homes. The questionnaire and recommendation were referred to the Relief and Service Bureau with power to act.

The General Auxiliary has gradually accumulated a number of books including a set containing 15 volumes. The president recommended that a custodian of books be appointed. Mrs. M. H. Siegfried was chosen.

A further recommendation from the president was adopted as follows: "That we suggest to our district organizers to present to the district conferences a budget of expense necessary for the prosecution of our work throughout their respective districts."

In the discussion of the bureau work of the Auxiliary, the question of the overlapping of the work of the Educational Bureau with that of the other bureaus was brought out and as a result the following resolution was adopted:

"Whereas we believe theory should be closely linked with practice, and desiring to more intimately associate our educational work with the practical demonstration in our Home and Child Welfare, Relief and Service, and Young Woman's Bureaus, therefore, be it resolved that our Executive Committee, working in harmony with and under the direction of the Coordinating Committee, shall be empowered to reconstruct the bureaus of our organization with a view to bringing about the results indicated in the above preamble."

The report of the Coordinating Committee was approved and the further development of the Social Purity work placed in the hands of the Executive Committee.

The following officers have been duly nominated and elected: President, Mrs. D. J. Krahl; first vice president, Mrs. J. A. Gardner; second vice president, Mrs. William Madison; historian, Mrs. M. H. Siegfried. The nominees for secretary and treasurer declined and the Executive Committee was authorized to fill the vacancies.

The term of Mrs. M. B. Nicholson as Auxiliary member on the Children's Home Board has expired, and she was nominated to succeed herself, which nomination is hereby submitted to you.

A motion was offered to sustain Mrs. Frederick M. Smith as honorary president. Mrs. Smith declined, stating that she had been vitally interested in this work for years and would continue at all times to be interested in the work of the women of the church, but asked to be released from official position. The following resolution was adopted:

"In view of the fact that Sister Frederick M. Smith consented to serve us in the capacity of honorary president in order to tide us over a rather difficult transitional period which her ability and valuable experience enabled her to do so efficiently, and in the light of her wish to be relieved as here expressed, and no desire on our part to burden anyone with responsibilities against their wish, therefore, be it resolved that this body most sincerely thank Sister Smith for her services in the past and with regret release her from this official position."

Since the opening of the convention there have been ten sessions held. The work of each bureau has been discussed in specially prepared talks and papers and in informal discussions.

In all our experience we have never had so many inquiries about our work as at present, nor has there been such an interest manifest.

A notable feature of our work during the past year has been the splendid cooperation of district presidents and reunion committees, also various missionaries in an advisory way. All of this is greatly appreciated.

It is our intention to work toward the development of higher and better standards of the home, to provide channels for a broader education of women by which we may render a more efficient service to the church and to the world.

MRS. D. J. KRAHL, President,
MRS. J. A. GARDNER, Secretary.

The honor is overpaid when he that did the act is commentator.—Shirley.

Relief and Service Round Table

(Notes from meeting in charge of Sister Mabel K. Smith.)

A beggar might find Bible quotations to justify his manner of getting his living, for we are told there to "give to all who ask," and also "ask, and ye shall receive." However, modern ways of relieving want have eliminated very largely the indiscriminate giving called in olden days, "charity." The coin dropped into the hat of a beggar often but helps to establish him in his pernicious habits of life. A beggar on the streets of Boston was apparently badly crippled, and he would each day reap a fine harvest of coins from the thoughtless passers-by; but at night that same beggar would appear in the public places he loved to frequent, or on the street, in fine clothes, silk hat, cane, and every evidence of luxury and ease.

The truest giving is that of sympathetic interest which will help a discouraged person out of his poverty, not one that but the more firmly keeps him there. The cases are cited of three young men who were injured in identical fashion—each had lost both arms. Number one begged on the street corner; Number two learned somehow to drive, and by driving a delivery wagon, holding the reins in his teeth or around his shoulders, managed to make a scanty living. The third under friendly encouragement learned to write by holding his pencil in his teeth, studied zealously, and became in time a respected judge.

Give, but give wisely, regulating and supervising. It is your duty to make yourself acquainted with the various organizations for relief and charity which are in your locality, and then work in harmony with them. Many cases are worthy, and if put in touch with the proper organizations may be helped in a material and substantial manner.

Several valuable books Sister Smith suggested, and from which she received many helpful thoughts used in her lecture, may be obtained by addressing the Charity Organization Department, Russell Sage Foundation, 130 East Twenty-second Street, New York City. These are: Social Diagnosis, by Mary E. Richmond, and What Social Workers Should Know About Their Own Communities. They give information concerning the various organizations for charity, the most approved methods, and many other valuable ideas. She also urged the women and the girls to join some of these organizations in their localities, to help in the work done, and to get all the information and suggestions possible. There are in every large city Associated Charities, Provident Associations, various church relief societies, settlement work, hospitals and medical departments managed by the city, any of which would gladly welcome study and investigation, as well as cooperation.

Sister Macgregor told of a young man who asked for help at the door and was given a suit of respectable clothing, and because of his bettered appearance was able to find profitable work that had been denied him before.

Sister Christy told of a young man who asked for food at her door. She invited him in, thinking at the same time, "Oh, what if it were my son who was roaming about like this!" Following the dictates of her heart, she fixed him a good meal, and while he was eating it she played the victrola—good music, that inspired good thoughts. She talked kindly to him, in friendly fashion, little thinking of the impression she was making upon him. As he concluded the meal, he said: "You have been so good to me! Your talk and the music I have heard have made me think of my own mother. I ran away from home, and the loved ones there do not know where I am, but I want you to know I am going straight back to them, for I feel now that there is nothing so good as a mother's love and care!"

The well-established charities stand for constructive relief, if for ten minutes or a lifetime. They work by scientific methods, after thorough investigation which precludes to a great extent the possibility of being imposed upon by the unscrupulous. Does our church have any plan to help in this way? True, we have the visiting officers of branches, but their work has largely in the past been restricted to a sort of spiritual oversight. Do they make observations of conditions they see in the homes of people as they visit? If so, to whom are those conditions reported? Is the Woman's Auxiliary by its "friendly visits" able to help in this?

A branch social worker would be a good assistant to any pastor. She could keep an index card record of every family in the branch, their handicaps, their tithing, their intellectual ability, location of the home—ward, street, block, addition, etc.

Sister Becker spoke of the plan which is being worked in Independence. This is a dividing of the city up into groups, a woman in charge of each, who stimulates all kinds of helpful activities among them.

Sister Macgregor said that too often in the homes there was not so much a lack of money as of knowledge of sanitation, food values, and the proper balance of expenditure.

Sister Smith acknowledged the truth of this observation and at once divided the "poor and needy" into two classes, those who were poor in material things, and those who were poor in knowledge. It is wise to help those of the latter class to get into study groups where they may be instructed in the things which go to make the successful home. Our men are seeing the great need of these things. Men have been asking how much "Sister Gardner's" charts cost, and where they can get them, for they feel that many homemakers in their localities have need of just such information. Men go into the homes to administer, and they see where sickness has come about because of the lack of proper air and proper food. One mother said, yes, she knew her boy should drink milk, but he didn't like it. The worker talked a little while to the boy and showed him the pictures of two rats, one very fat and healthy, the other scrawny and sickly, explaining that one had been fed on milk and the other not. The boy quickly decided that if milk made so much difference in the rats, he would try to drink his quart every day.

Sister Becker asked what could be done in the case of a woman who thought she was a good housekeeper, and who would be mortally offended if anyone ventured to offer help or instruction. Sister Smith admitted that great tact was necessary—that it did no good to force anything on anyone. No reform can take place in a day, and it is first necessary to create a desire for an improvement. It was suggested to get such a woman to join some progressive club, where topics of the kind needed could be introduced and discussed in a general way.

Sister Christy suggested that much could be done by working with a physician. A doctor could say: "Your child needs more nutritive food. If you have not had an opportunity to learn all about this, let me send a lady to you who will tell you what is needed." The woman would take no offense, and the reform could easily be started.

Sister Gardner said much could be done from just the "friendly visits." These are not intended to make survey, or to spy out conditions in a home which might need correction, but should be made in all sisterly sincerity. A worker told of visiting six times before she saw any noticeable difference in the appearance of a slovenly home. The sixth time she saw that the windows had been washed and the rug shaken. It was the friendly appreciation which had caused the woman to look forward to the expected and promised visit with a new interest.

Sister Macgregor told of a case which had seemed hopeless. The woman was an educated one—a school teacher. She could talk splendidly on almost any subject, but her practical education had been sorely neglected and her home was an unsightly and unwholesome place. She became a member of a club and finally the monthly meeting was assigned to her place. To the great delight of her friends, when the day for the meeting came, they found she had renovated her home from top to bottom. It was shining and clean in every particular, the children presentable, and the mother beaming with smiling welcome. All she had needed was association with others, and pleasant mingling in a social way, and she was lifted from her discouragement.

The question was asked: "Should our efforts in the line of social service be confined to members of our own church?"

"By no means," was the reply, "there is no work more like Christ's, no missionary opportunity greater, no better chance to express loyalty to Nation, than to help the needy, wherever they are found, to become better citizens, better neighbors, and better parents."

Sister Smith told of the little office frequently managed in the study of some pastor. To it each day, came one or two trained social workers who helped the pastor care for the poor of his flock. Our church spent last year approximately $35,000 in caring for the needy. The time has come when we are recognizing the fact that even the act of doing good requires preparation and careful study. We should seek not to help people in the poverty, but out of it. We often hear people say they are "ready and willing" to help in these good works. You may be willing, but are you ready? It is time every branch should have in it one or more trained social workers, who may intelligently help those who need, in order that soon it may be said of us as was recorded of Enoch's city of old: "There were no poor among them."

[Sister Smith is preparing a little course of study adapting the best methods of modern charity to our church needs. This will be a most valuable aid to our Relief and Service workers. Watch for it.—A. A.]

To Keep the School Child in Health

The Massachusetts State Department of Health is performing a valuable public service to citizens of the State by sending out quantities of "Food rules for school children" to teachers and parents throughout the State. Children are the foundation stones of the future state and their health and education is the supreme duty of the body politic. The rules recommended by A. W. Sandwall, director of the movement, are so simple and important they deserve national publicity.

Here they are:

1. Begin the day by drinking a glass of water and drink at least six glassfuls during the day.
2. Do not go to school without eating breakfast.
3. Eat regularly three times a day.
4. Eat slowly and chew all food well.
5. Drink milk every day—four glasses are not too much.
6. Eat some breakfast cereal every day.
7. Eat some vegetable besides potato every day.
8. Eat bread and butter every day—dark, coarse breads are best.
9. Eat some fruit every day. Spend pennies for apples instead of candy.
10. Do not eat candy between meals. Eat candy and other sweets only after a regular meal.

11. Do not drink tea or coffee; it does the body no good, but harms it.

12. Do not eat or touch any food without first washing the hands.

13. Do not eat fruit without first washing it.

14. Do not eat with spoon or fork that has been used by another person without washing it.

15. Do not drink from a cup that has been used by another person without washing it.—Exchange.

The Completed Temple

Life at best seems only a patchwork.

By the time the artist learns to paint a picture which is considered worth while, his hand has become shaky, nervous, or palsied, and he cannot paint the things for which, all his life, he had been preparing.

By the time the business man has earned enough money to keep him in comfort for the rest of his days, he has often lost the capacity to enjoy the fruits of his labor.

When the mother has raised her boy to manhood, her offspring leaves her for the sake of some one he loves better; and by the time the man learns to really appreciate his mother, she is taken from him.

Nothing seems ever quite finished, quite mature, quite as it should be, in this world.

Perhaps in the by-and-by, on another planet, we shall find that every incomplete thought and work of our lives has been fitted into the completed temple of life which we may then inhabit forever.—Los Angeles Times.

Appreciation from Temple Hall

Dear Editor: You might be interested in knowing that Brother Russell Warnky and wife, of Kansas City, have presented to Temple Hall, the hotel for girls, a piano. Also, Brother Walter Beebe, of Omaha, has presented the same institution with the furniture for their dining room. For all this there is sincere appreciation. Such liberality makes us hopeful of accomplishing the "objective" for which this institution was started.

Yours in bonds,

F. B. BLAIR,
Stake Bishop.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

"A Boy Scout Troop in Every Branch"

If we have ever entertained any doubts as to the possible success of the boy movement in the church, such are now dispelled.

During the recent conference wherever and whenever this work was mentioned we were met with one hundred per cent enthusiasm. Everyone seemed anxious to learn as much as possible about the work and to take back with them to their respective districts and branches some suggestions that would help them in meeting their particular problems.

It is a growing conviction that the Boy Scout organization can admirably be adapted to our needs in the church. This conviction does not at present rest entirely upon theory, either. In a number of places Boy Scout troops have been organized and have already proved their worth to the community and to their church. All that we need now is ten of such troops for every one already organized. We feel sure that another conference will make this dream a fact.

EVERY DISTRICT AND LOCAL SHOULD HAVE A BOY LEADER.
HAS YOURS?

At the recent Religio convention, the general constitution was amended so as to provide for a second vice president in each district and local Religio organization. It also provides further that this second vice president shall have charge of the work of the boy movement in his district or locality, as the case may be. It thus becomes immediately necessary that each district and local organization take steps to elect such an official. Each locality should report to the district official the name of the person chosen as second vice president for that district. Only in this way can our work be carried on effectively.

We suggest that in those districts where a boy leader has already been approved, that he be chosen by the Religio as the second vice president.

Both local and district organizations should exercise considerable care in the choice that is made for this position. Only those interested in the boys and qualified to work with them should be chosen.

We suggest that in case the district or local organization cannot have a meeting, that the executive committee of such organizations provide for a second vice president and put him to work at once. We should have within the next month an active leader of the boy movement in each district and branch of the church. Will you help us?

RELIGIO PINS

Arrangements have been made whereby the sale of Religio pins throughout the church will be turned over to the boys. This work will be conducted by the general director of the boy movement, working through the district and local leaders.

Any boy selling these pins will secure enough profit to make his efforts worth while and will also be directly helping the Religio. Anyone interested should write for further particulars.

THE PLACE OF THE SCOUTMASTER IN THE CHURCH

The most important part of the work of the boy movement at present is that of securing qualified men to act as scoutmasters in the various branches. Whatever be the name or nature of the work which we have decided or shall decide upon, its success or failure will in the last analysis depend upon the qualifications of the scoutmaster. If he is of the right kind the boys will flock to him and to the church; if not he may do us more harm than good. The following quotation is of interest just in this connection:

"The moral and religious value of scouting in a given troop will reflect very largely the scoutmaster's own personal attitude toward morality and religion. For this reason he should be religiously representative of the church in which his work is carried on. In order to be of real value in these two particulars, the first essential is that the scoutmaster maintain, in simplicity and transparent sincerity, wholesome relations to God and to his fellow men. It is what he is that counts in this regard. It is not his primary function to teach Bible lessons and to deliver lectures on ethics. That work is done by the preacher and the Sunday school teacher. His part is to live the right kind of a life with the boys and to help them to do the same. In this connection example has immeasurable weight. Usually boys do not imitate or emulate one whose attitudes are half-hearted or merely perfunctory. Religion as well as scouting becomes contagious only when lived with enthusiasm and genuineness. It is the scoutmaster who determines very largely of what religious value scouting will be to the boys. If he is a natural leader, the virtues that regulate his own life will have a tendency to become reproduced in their lives. They will imitate his religious as well as his scout activities."

A NEW BOOK

The above quotation is taken from a new book on The Boy Scout Movement Applied by the Church, by Richardson and Loomis, published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

Every district and local leader of the boy movement will find it to his interest to secure a copy of this book and study it carefully. It contains a very thorough and masterly presentation of the origin, development, and principles of the Boy Scout movement and the relation of such to the religious life of the boy.

THE IMMEDIATE NEED

Let me repeat, the immediate need is that every district and local Religio organization shall provide for the election of the new officers provided for in the amendments to the constitution. This means that at once every district and locality will have some responsible person acting as leader of the boy movement in that particular district or locality.

Each district boy leader so chosen should report to me at once so that I may be able to publish a list of such leaders. Each local leader should keep in touch at all times with the district leader. With this machinery in operation let our slogan be, "A Boy Scout troop in every branch."

A Tribute to a Friend

While standing by the bier of our late Brother Heman C. Smith I was led to say within my soul: "I am thankful to our heavenly Father that I was privileged to know this noble man, and to hear him preach while yet a boy just entering my teens."

I journeyed from the Pacific Coast to attend the General Conference and had planned to have a visit with this brother and to talk over questions of importance to me with this lifelong friend, the one who had more to do with directing my life in the gospel way than any other man. How sad and disappointed I felt when on my arrival in Lamoni I was informed that "Brother Heman," as we always called him, was not here, but was lying very low in the Sanitarium in Independence, Missouri, where he was making his last fight. Each day of the conference, we were anxious to hear of his improvement and recovery to health that he might return to his home and friends. In this we were disappointed, for the word finally came over the wire: "Brother Heman is dead."

As we gazed upon his lifeless form, we could see through the eye of faith his triumph and victory through our blessed Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

At the time Elder Heman C. Smith came into my life, I was but eleven years of age, and was spending my spare time training for the prize as a boxer and wrestler, being stimulated in this activity by the favorable reports through the daily papers of the wonderful success attending two of my cousins, one a prize fighter, the other a prize wrestler; Richard and Sam Matthews by name.

My mother observed the trend of my thoughts and development and wondered to what it would lead. She invited me to attend church and hear Brother Smith, who had just moved to San Bernardino. I sat in the audience where I could observe the speaker to good advantage. To my surprise and embarrassment, the speaker seemed to be preaching this whole sermon directly to me. I wondered why such a great man should be so interested in one small boy and single him out from all the crowd.

I became interested in the wonderful message of this brother and continued to attend his services. His services made such an impression upon my mind that it seems to me that I can hear his voice still ringing in my ears and his scriptural texts are still clear and bright in my memory. He had changed my course and I was finally called to preach the gospel and to go forth to represent the message of our Savior; and as a coincidence, when one of my cousins, Sam, was called from this life, I was called upon to speak at his funeral. I was thankful that I could be of service in bringing to the grief-stricken family the hope held out to us through Jesus Christ, our Lord.

Brother Heman was a product of what we call "The latter-day work." He believed in fair play and the square deal as the Westerner would express it.

We step forward to place a wreath upon his grave as a token of our love and respect for a brother who so fearlessly stood for the truth, a man who, by his eloquent tongue and forceful character, has been instrumental in God's hands in turning a life from the errors of this world and its disappointments to a life of service in the church and kingdom of God.

GEORGE H. WIXOM.

LAMONI, IOWA, April 24, 1919.

The Bishopric

Advocate for 1919

"Every Member a Tithe Payer"

If your neighbor's house were burning you would not think of standing by and doing nothing while all the other neighbors helped the unfortunate one.

The church is engaged in a good work caring for the widows, the orphans, and the afflicted ones, and sending the gospel to a sin-cursed world. You must not stand by unconcerned while a few try to carry on a work so stupendous. If you cannot preach, you can send teachers with your tithes and offerings.

Read, Saints

"Little HERALD, stop a moment,
Ere you journey on your way,
I have something of importance
That I wish that you would say."

Another conference year is just opening up for the Saints. To occupy successfully and well it is of first importance that we feed our minds as well as our bodies on the best of food. Those who have healthy bodies can eat some poor food and yet remain healthy, not because of it, however, but in spite of it. But those who are weak in body need good food first, last, and all the time.

So we all, whether strong or weak in our bodies, need good food. And, secondly, our minds need the best of food also, so that our souls, consisting of both spirit and body, may be properly fed. What shall we feed them on is the question.

One may say we will feed our minds on all good books. But each individual Saint cannot read all the good books there are in the world, any more than he or she can eat all the good food there is in the world. In Doctrine and Covenants 86, it says that "all" wholesome herbs are for the constitution, nature, and use of man, but no one Saint is to use all these herbs, but each one should use what he can consistently with his or her knowledge, needs, and opportunity. Some in one part of the earth are using one kind of herbs, and in other parts, still different kinds, and so on, according to the needs in each individual case. And so it is that we may read all good books. One may read one good book here and another there and so on until all "good books" are read. The best of books, however, we all know are the standard books of the church. Therefore, we should read them especially. As some may eat poor food and retain strong, healthy bodies, not because of it, but in spite of it, so it is with poor literature. The strong may read it and remain strong in the faith, not because of it, but in spite of it. So whether we be weak or strong in mind and body the best food, both for mind and body is the best for all.

Having ascertained, then, that the best literature is the church books and periodicals, let us see to it, whether priests or members, whether old or young, that this conference year we will not only read casually, but study the church literature as never before, and of course keep the Word of Wisdom. (Doctrine and Covenants 86.)

This done, our souls will rejoice in God our Father, and in Jesus Christ his Son, and the work will go onward as never before.

C. J. SPURLOCK.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Woodbine Jottings

We can report some things that may be of interest to the many readers of this the greatest of all religious weeklies. We are still harboring pride—proud to be called Saints. And our Father owned us as his at our sacrament service, giving us of his Spirit; and we do rejoice and give thanks unto the Giver of all good for that renewing of the Holy Spirit. May it be the abiding Comforter to each one.

Preaching in the branch for the month has been by Elders Fry, Seddon, Putnam, and Lytle. Some very interesting sermons.

We have had the pleasure of carrying the sacrament to Brother Charles Derry three times this year, and have enjoyed the service to our aged brother. We pray our Father's blessing for him.

A priesthood meeting this month was of benefit to all who attended.

The 7th, 8th, and 9th were devoted to institute work. Sister Alice Hupp of Woodbine, Sister Pearl Jackson of Sioux City, and Sister Lillie Marks of Dennison were with us. The attendance at these services was not what it should have been. There was some very interesting work done. The ones that were absent lost the good there was in it. Sister Hupp gave a splendid talk on social purity. I see only one fault to find with this work. It is too far between times. We should study all the time to learn what there is in life for us.

The influenza came back to pay us a visit this month. About sixty cases were reported in less than a week. Not as bad as last fall, however.

Our attendance has kept up well for so much sickness. Brother Joseph Seddon has been laid up for a few days, but is out again. Brother Derry is able to be outside and take his exercise this spring.

Some new members are moving into town and helping us with the Master's work: Brother and Sister Orrin Barr, Brother Clarence Redfield, Brother Norton and daughter, and Brother John Pitt and family. It seems good to have them gather with us.

The reunion committee met here and set the time and place for the next reunion, which will be held at Dow City.

Our desire for the advancement of the work is manifest by our labor to that end. We pray that we may all so work that his will may be done. CORRESPONDENT.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Joint Council Appointments

The following is a list of appointments agreed upon by the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, as per action of last General Conference. Preceding the list, however, is one of general church officers who are devoting all their time to church work, and as such while not under annual General Conference appointments are entitled to the courtesies and privileges usually extended to General Conference appointees, under the rules governing clergy credentials, etc. Changes in the above appointments may or may not be made by the Joint Council which expects to meet some time in June.

TO CENTRAL ILLINOIS SAINTS

"Having been appointed missionary in your district, I wish to meet isolated Saints and friends. It is my desire to make a special effort to reach the people of the world. Write me at South State Street, Lamoni, Iowa, as soon as possible as to where I can best serve the interests of the people.

"I wish to thank the Saints of Gallands Grove District for the kindnesses extended. May God bless you all.—C. E. Harpe."

The Sunday school general executive council has not held any meetings as yet since nor during the recent conventions. It was planned to hold a meeting recently in Independence where a full attendance could be had and a number of the big problems referred to the council by the convention be given due deliberation. The date had been set, but the illness of G. R. Wells, superintendent, prevented. Brother Wells is in the Sanitarium at present, suffering severely from ear trouble, a climax of an affection he has had for more than a year. An operation may be necessary to relieve the pressure and prevent further infection. In the meantime the editors of Quarterlies, committees, etc., are to continue until further notice.

Mrs. G. S. Wightman, of Captiva, Florida, would like to get in touch with the nearest branch. She also wants some of the Saints to visit her sister, Mae Hotes, of 3921 Southeast Forty-seventh Street, Portland, Oregon.

Sister A. Carmichael is seriously ill with pneumonia at the Sanitarium in Independence, following a long illness from a nervous affection.

The superintendent of the Sunday School Association reported to the convention how difficult it had been the past few months to estimate the demand of the Senior Grade Quarterlies. After making all possible deductions as to increased demand, etc., and printing accordingly, the edition was not sufficient to meet the demand, and a second edition has been issued. We hope those who are inconvenienced because of this will realize to an extent what a problem it is to avoid the waste of printing a large excess and yet sufficient to supply the demand. To order by the year and renew before the time is out, will prevent this trouble.

Mrs. Fred Peasley, of Perry, Iowa, wishes to thank whoever it was that sent her the Daily HERALD during conference.

BOOK OF MORMON IN CANADA

There have been a few complaints of custom officers asking duty on the Book of Mormon entering Canada. If any of our readers have any trouble on this score, we would suggest that they communicate with Stewart Lamont, Inland Revenue Office, Chatham, Ontario. He assures us that this book has been placed on the free list, and that he will take the necessary steps to assist in correcting any mistake.

Some time ago a scurrilous article on early Nauvoo history appeared in the Fort Madison, Iowa, Democrat. The Saints of that vicinity felt the injustice of it, and asked the secretary of the Nauvoo District, Brother W. A. Gunn, to take up the matter with Assistant Historian H. S. Salisbury, who accordingly prepared a special article on Nauvoo history for The Democrat, which Brother Gunn succeeded in getting published. The following letter from a well-known pastor of one of the largest churches in that vicinity explains itself. His name and the name of his church are withheld for obvious reasons.

H. S. Salisbury,
Carthage, Illinois.

Dear Sir: Allow me to express my appreciation for your very interesting and instructive article on Mormon History at Nauvoo in the late 30's and early 40's.

My random and rather hasty reading on this subject has been from our Lee County History, various magazines, and occasional newspaper articles; and the general trend of nearly all of these would convey the impression that the Mormons with their leader, Joseph Smith, were a band of law breakers guilty of every kind of petty crime. Never a good word was said either for Smith or for any of his followers. But I soon came to the conclusion that these must be only assertions, accusations without giving any proof; and perchance the misdeeds of border ruffians were all attributed to the Mormons.

I am glad to learn from your article in this evening's Democrat that my conjectures were not wrong. I have no special sympathies for the Mormons except the pity I feel for any wrongly persecuted people. The old axiom, "Homo semper supponitur bonus, quamdiu non probatur malus," applies to the case of these people.

It was wrong to expel the Mormons. This region has lost in consequence of this injustice.

Your excellent article has added another phase to this subject, one that I never thought of nor read of, namely, the proslavery and the antislavery question. It explains much.

Thanks for your article.

Very sincerely yours,

MAY AUTUMN LEAVES

This month the theme emphasized is Mother's Day. The cover design by Ira I. Benham, and in various places elsewhere in the magazine touch on the subject.

The following is a reprint of the contents. Of course a menu doesn't go far to satisfy one's appetite, but it should give one an idea of the variety to be had in one number of our young people's magazine. The editors only ask an opportunity for an introduction to those unacquainted with the magazine in its present form. Send 15 cents for one copy or $1.25 for a year's subscription.

AUGUSTINE DWYER IN CHICAGO

Brother Dwyer's lectures are attracting large houses in Chicago. The reports of his work are most favorable. On the evening of his closing lecture, at the South Side Branch, the rain poured in torrents, yet the edifice was filled to the doors. At the close of the lecture Brother Christy made an appropriate address, speaking the appreciation of the branch for Brother Dwyer's work and extending him a cordial and brotherly welcome to return. The following week Brother Dwyer was called to Independence for consultation with the First Presidency, then returned to Chicago where he will be engaged all of the present month. A notable feature of his stay in Chicago is an engagement to deliver two lectures before the Chicago Bible School.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

It is expected to send a group of young men and young married couples into foreign mission fields as soon as they can be fully prepared for the work. "The field is white unto the harvest." The preparation will require at least a year of intensive study along special lines. This preparation will be made at Graceland College beginning with the fall of the present year. The course will include:

1. A thorough study of the doctrines of the church, and methods of presenting them.
2. The language, history, geography, customs, etc., of the country to which the missionary is to be sent.
3. Certain academic studies to meet the needs of the individual students.
4. Elementary sanitation, hygiene, first aid, simple nursing, etc.
5. Other incidental subjects closely related to the work to be accomplished.

The selection of the young people to make this preparation is a most important matter. The qualifications of those selected must be such as to assure the highest degree of success possible. These will include:

1. Consecration and call to the work of the church and an intense interest in the project of foreign missions.
2. The necessary education and general intelligence; a high school education or its equivalent. Successful church and missionary work in this country is in most cases the best equivalent.
3. Not over thirty years of age, in good health and without physical defects.

As only a limited number can be admitted the first year, applications for this course should be made at once by writing to the President of Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

From those applying selections will be made by the general church authorities for admission to the course.

This is one of the most important pieces of work the church has ever undertaken, and is to be entered upon with a full realization of the importance of the call and the preparation necessary to make it successful and acceptable in the eyes of the Lord.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,

[Upon inquiry we learn that it is the intention that the preliminary work of correspondence will be handled by the President of Graceland College, George N. Briggs, but that all applications and data will be placed in the hands of the First Presidency for consideration by the general authorities of the church. The selection of those who will be admitted the first year to this course will be made by the general church authorities.—EDITORS.]

WHO ENTERS THE SECOND DEATH?

Question. How can we harmonize Revelation 21: 8 with Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7? John says that the fearful and the unbelieving and several other classes will die the second death. Now in Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7 it is stated that the same class of people will be in the telestial glory.

I understand that all people that come forth in the different glories will not die the second death. How can the two statements be made to harmonize?

In Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4 it states plainly who will pay the second death, and also says that they are the only ones that will die the second death. It says also that all the other classes of people will be redeemed. How can we harmonize that with Revelation 21: 8? One says that they will die the second death; the other says not. Which is right?

Answer. Before answering these questions, it might be well to quote the scriptures referred to.

He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son. But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death.—Revelation 21: 7, 8.

... And the glory of the telestial is one, even as the glory of the stars is one, for as one star differs from another star in glory, even so differs one from another in glory in the telestial world; for these are they who are of Paul, and of Apollos, and of Cephas; these are they who say they are some of one and some of another, some of Christ, and some of John, and some of Moses, and some of Elias; and some of Esaias, and some of Isaiah, and some of Enoch, but received not the gospel, neither the testimony of Jesus, neither the prophets; neither the everlasting covenant; last of all, these all are they who will not be gathered with the saints, to be caught up unto the church of the Firstborn, and received into the cloud; these are they who are liars, and sorcerers, and adulterers, and whoremongers, and whosoever loves and makes a lie; these are they who suffer the wrath of God on the earth; these are they who suffer the vengeance of eternal fire; these are they who are cast down to hell and suffer the wrath of Almighty God until the fullness of times, when Christ shall have subdued all enemies under his feet, and shall have perfected his work, when he shall deliver up the kingdom and present it unto the Father spotless, saying: I have overcome and have trodden the wine press alone, even the wine press of the fierceness of the wrath of Almighty God; then shall he be crowned with the crown of his glory, to sit on the throne of his power to reign forever and ever.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7.

Thus saith the Lord, concerning all those who know my power, and have been made partakers thereof, and suffered themselves, through the power of the Devil, to be overcome, and to deny the truth, and defy my power; they are they who are the sons of perdition, of whom I say it had been better for them never to have been born; for they are vessels of wrath, doomed to suffer the wrath of God, with the Devil and his angels, in eternity, concerning whom I have said there is no forgiveness in this world nor in the world to come; having denied the Holy Spirit, after having received it, and having denied the only begotten Son of the Father; having crucified him unto themselves, and put him to an open shame: these are they who shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone, with the Devil and his angels, and the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power; yea, verily, the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord, after the sufferings of his wrath; for all the rest shall be brought forth by the resurrection of the dead, through the triumph and the glory of the Lamb, who was slain, who was in the bosom of the Father before the worlds were made. And this is the gospel, the glad tidings which the voice out of the heavens bore record unto us, that he came into the world, even Jesus to be crucified for the world, and to bear the sins of the world, and to sanctify the world, and to cleanse it from all unrighteousness; that through him all might be saved, whom the Father had put into his power, and made by him; who glorifies the Father, and saves all the works of his hands, except those sons of perdition, who deny the Son after the Father has revealed him; wherefore he saves all except them.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4.

Both of these paragraphs in the Doctrine and Covenants are long, but we believe we have given the pertinent parts above; but there are other passages which also should be considered, among which we note some as follows:

Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolators, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God.—1 Corinthians 6: 9, 10.

Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these; adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like: of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God.—Galatians 5: 19-21.

For this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolator, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God.—Ephesians 5: 5.

And there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life.—Revelation 21: 27.

And he saith unto me, Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book; for the time is at hand. He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still.—Revelation 22: 10, 11.

Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city. For without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolators, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie.—Revelation 22: 14, 15.

And that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain: but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body. All flesh is not the same flesh: but there is one kind of flesh of men, another flesh of beasts, another of fishes, and another of birds. There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial; but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another. There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption.—1 Corinthians 15: 37-42.

And verily I say unto you, as I have said before, He that looketh on a woman to lust after her, or if any shall commit adultery in their hearts, they shall not have the Spirit, but shall deny the faith and shall fear: wherefore, I, the Lord, have said that the fearful, and the unbelieving, and all liars, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie, and the whoremonger, and the sorcerer, shall have their part in that lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death. Verily I say, that they shall not have part in the first resurrection.—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 5.

Ye who are quickened by a portion of the celestial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness; and they who are quickened by a portion of the terrestrial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness: and also they who are quickened by a portion of the telestial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness; and they who remain shall also be quickened; nevertheless, they shall return again to their own place, to enjoy that which they are willing to receive, because they were not willing to enjoy that which they might have received. For what doth it profit a man if a gift is bestowed upon him, and he receive not the gift. Behold, he rejoices not in that which is given unto him, neither rejoices in him who is the giver of the gift.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 6, 7.

O how great the goodness of our God, who prepareth a way for our escape from the grasp of this awful monster; yea, that monster, death and hell, which I call the death of the body, and also the death of the spirit. And because of the way of deliverance of our God, the Holy One of Israel, this death, of which I have spoken, which is the temporal, shall deliver up its dead, which death is the grave. And this death of which I have spoken, which is the spiritual death, shall deliver up its dead; which spiritual death is hell; wherefore, death and hell must deliver up their dead, and hell must deliver up its captive spirits. . . . And then cometh the judgment; and then must they be judged according to the holy judgment of God. And assuredly, as the Lord liveth, for the Lord God hath spoken it, and it is his eternal word, which cannot pass away, that they who are righteous shall be righteous still, and they who are filthy shall be filthy still; wherefore, they who are filthy are the Devil and his angels; and they shall go away into everlasting fire, prepared for them; and their torment is as a lake of fire and brimstone, whose flames ascendeth up forever and ever; and has no end.—2 Nephi 6: 24-40.

But behold, and fear, and tremble before God; for ye ought to tremble: for the Lord redeemeth none such that rebel against him, and die in their sins; yea, even all those that have perished in their sins ever since the world began, that have willfully rebelled against God, that have known the commandments of God, and would not keep them; these are they that have no part in the first resurrection. Therefore had ye not ought to tremble? For salvation cometh to none such; for the Lord hath redeemed none such.—Mosiah 8: 61-64.

And now, I say unto you, my brethren, that after ye have known and have been taught all these things, if ye should transgress, and go contrary to that which has been spoken, that ye do withdraw yourselves from the Spirit of the Lord, that it may have no place in you to guide you in wisdom's paths, that ye may be blessed, prospered, and preserved. I say unto you, that the man that doeth this, the same cometh out in open rebellion against God; therefore he listeth to obey the evil spirit, and becometh an enemy to all righteousness; therefore, the Lord has no place in him, for he dwelleth not in unholy temples. Therefore, if that man repenteth not, and remaineth and dieth an enemy to God, the demands of divine justice doth awaken his immortal soul to a lively sense of his own guilt, which doth cause him to shrink from the presence of the Lord, and doth fill his breast with guilt, and pain, and anguish, which is like an unquenchable fire, whose flames ascendeth up forever and ever. And now I say unto you, that mercy hath no claim on that man; therefore, his final doom is to endure a never-ending torment.—Mosiah 1: 79-85.

There are many other scriptures which might be quoted, bearing upon this subject, but the above should suffice. We have first of all those of the celestial glory, who receive the word of God and keep it. They are referred to in Revelation 21: 7 and many other places in the Holy Scriptures. The Master has gone to prepare a place for them; when he comes, they who are brethren sit with him to judge the world. (Matthew 25. Also Doctrine and Covenants 76: 5; 85: 4-6.) The celestial glory, and also the telestial glory is referred to in the 15th chapter of the first epistle to the Corinthians above, and is referred to in Doctrine and Covenants 76: 6. The honorable men of the earth, those who knew no law, we are told, will come forth in the first resurrection. (Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10; Alma 19: 60, 61; Mosiah 8: 58-60.) While these passages are not directly included in the question, and so are not discussed at length here; still they are pertinent in order to understand the scriptures referred to.

Now we note distinctly the statement throughout the Holy Scriptures above set forth, the Corinthian, Galatian, and Ephesian letters, as well as the several passages in the book of Revelation, that the whoremonger, adulterer, sorcerer, idolator, are to be without the holy city where dwell the children of God. They are excluded.

Note distinctly the statement in Revelation 21: 8; also Doctrine and Covenants 63: 5 above: "Shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." They have not part in the first resurrection; they enter the lake of fire and brimstone. And as we read Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7, we note substantially the same statement: "These are they who are cast down to hell and suffer the wrath of Almighty God until the fullness of time." They are not those who are classed with the children of God; they are not those who are his at his coming. They are those who were filthy, and who remain filthy still, hence they suffer for their sins in the lake of fire and brimstone; and on them the second death hath power until the fullness of time, when they are redeemed in the due time of the Lord.

Then Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4 declares that there is a special class, who have the knowledge of God yet reject him, as is set forth in the Hebrew letter:

For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame. For the earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dressed, receiveth blessing from God: but that which beareth thorns and briers is rejected, and is nigh unto cursing; whose end is to be burned.—Hebrews 6: 4-8.

The above makes two statements. The first concerns those who have tasted of the heavenly gift, made partakers of the Holy Ghost, tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, and yet have fallen away. The second refers to those who bring not forth good fruit, and are to be burned.

There is a difference of classification between those who know the will of God, and then deliberately reject it, and so are numbered with the Devil and his angels; and those who commit grievous sins for which they suffer and yet are finally redeemed.

Revelation 21: 8 is correct according to every view we take. Those who are guilty of these great sins are excluded from the heavenly city. Further than that, the second death has power over them for a season, in that they are separated from God and suffer his wrath. They do not come forth in the first resurrection. But if all the scriptures together are to be believed, they do not continue there forever, but are redeemed in the fullness of time, if they repent.

The statement in 76:4, "the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power," is at once qualified and explained by the clauses which follow, "yea, verily, the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord, after the suffering of his wrath; for all the rest shall be brought forth by the resurrection of the dead. . . . This is the . . . glad tidings," etc.

Also it is possible that some of those included in the class of liars, sorcerers, adulterers, whoremongers, whosoever loveth and maketh a lie, may be included in the class of the sons of perdition; who even after the fullness of times remain filthy still. But according to 76:7, there are some at least of this class who, after suffering for a time the vengeance of eternal fire, being cast down to hell, are still redeemed by the Christ from that torment in the fullness of time. They are not classified with those alluded to in Doctrine and Covenants 76:4.

We may rest assured that our heavenly Father shows all the love and compassion possible, even to his erring children, and reaches out to save them wherever and whenever possible. He does not take delight in their suffering, and permits them to suffer, only that in the end they may thereby be purified from evil. Hence we see that even this depraved class may, if they will, be redeemed, even though it be only in the fullness of times, and that does not by any means place them in the celestial glory where God and his Christ are. They may enter a kingdom without glory. They may enter what they are willing and what they are prepared to receive.

Only those who reject God and continue filthy still are among the sons of perdition. S. A. B.

"NO MATTER WHAT ANY MAN MAY SAY"

---

At this time when in the recent past some have been shaken from their allegiance to the church, and at this time of present and future stress, a recent remark of Heman C. Smith comes to mind:

"I may not always be able to agree with my brethren, for some of them are not always right. If the time ever comes that this church is not big enough for me and any other man, he can get out if he wants to, for I shall not. The work is true no matter what any man may say or do."

REMARKS OF JOSEPH SMITH

But, you may say, President Smith has never been assailed. That is a mistake. President Smith has several times defied the action of men who were disgruntled and who purposed to make the church suffer and the president with it, by cases of defamation of character in the courts; and I have been accused very grievously, too, of very grave errors, and what would be accounted as crime if they were absolutely true. The case was put into the hands of the president of the stake in Independence, and would have gone to trial so far as I was concerned. I simply notified the bishop that I was ready whenever the court said. I then determined to do just as I had said always I would do. No matter what the court might say, I would bow to it. Now I think that many of our differences could be easily settled, if this disposition was taught.

One of the strongest recommendations of the character of Jesus Christ to me as a man and as a teacher, was his ability to bear the contradictions of sinners against himself. I have argued, If I can bear the contumelious conduct of the world toward me, can stand their contumely and their charges of wrongdoing or disposition to do evil, what is to hinder me from bearing patiently what my brother may object to in my conduct? Hence, I am not so seriously grieved when men find fault with me, as some others. I only mention this that occurs in my own history to give you my idea of what we should do in conformity to the law.—Joseph Smith, General Conference Minutes, 1911, pp. 1500, 1501.

I advise you not to be harsh. The day is coming when there must be a better unity of effort and a more kindly spirit exhibited in our preaching. Our success will be better if we show them the better side without compromising the teachings we are holding. We will break down the barriers more rapidly than we will if we insist upon our superiority and keep them at a distance. I believe the time is coming when we should pay heed to the statement in one of the revelations, not to be overcareful with those who are on the other side of the question. I believe we should be careful in this regard.—Joseph Smith, General Conference Minutes, 1902, pp. 552, 553.

I never was taken in a trance: but the influence of revelation upon me has always been to quicken, to make vivid and clear. And my understanding of revelation as we have it, is that every man stands before God upon his individual responsibility, and his individuality never will be taken from him unless he himself consent to it. And if he does, he opens the avenues of his soul for the incoming of a spirit that will ruin him.

I would like to repeat that so you will understand it. The inspiration of the gospel of the Son of God, and the inspiration of his Spirit quickens, revivifies, and puts a man nearer to the influences of life, nearer to his Maker and the Savior than in any other period or periods of his existence. And every man standing before God and receiving of this inspiration, whether it is in the stand, or wherever it may come, or upon what occasion, his increased vitality and vigor of life spiritually is before God and his identity, his individuality, will never, never be taken from him unless he willingly opens the gate to the incoming of other spirits. And if he does that he does it for his ruin.—Joseph Smith, General Conference Minutes, 1906, pp. 919, 920.

PRESIDENCY OF STAKES

A question is sometimes raised with regard to the presidency of the central branch, or the largest branch in a stake. Some seem to think that something is lost if the stake presidency act as the presidency of this larger branch, and as though the people were deprived of something.

The law of common consent applies to every office in the church, as the First Presidency are elected at the beginning of each conference and sustained at the end, so also are the Twelve. Yet these men are sent out to branches and districts and other parts of church work without the local congregation having the right to vote especially upon their reception.

On the other hand, it is true that a district conference has the right to choose those who are to preside over them, or over the conference. Then evidently there are certain rights to the traveling high council. (General Conference Resolutions, No. 279.)

So the stake presidency are voted for, sustained or not sustained, at the stake conference; and they are also voted for, sustained or not sustained, by the membership of the largest branch. This does not take away their right of free agency, nor the right of consent. The branch has the right to reject even though the stake has upheld them, even though they assume a certain responsibility as a stake presidency in the work in the largest branch.

Historically we note that in almost every instance in the early church the stake consisted of a large branch as a stronghold or source of strength in Zion. They are presided over by three high priests; associated with them a high council and a bishop and his counselors. In the early church we note an instance in which it is clearly stated that their authority is extended over Daviess County.

It is unfortunate at times, that there are men who hold so strongly to that which is past, regardless of merit, that they would if permitted to do so, make the stakes back into districts, and make the stake presidency nothing but a district presidency, having no immediate contact with the people.

The stake being regarded in this way as a stronghold. The ideal of a stake would seem very clear, as a stronghold in Zion; a place of refuge, stronger than the ordinary branch for spiritual upbuilding and reinforcement. That this place, so strongly organized, should extend help to the surrounding territory, is to say the least a proper and reasonable aspect.

These smaller places outside of the strong branch, which constitute in a way the stake, receive the additional advantage of the administration of the stake presidency, and also of the stake bishopric, and of the stake high council. The small branches are not brought as immediately under their control, as are those who reside in the largest congregations of Saints, but still should receive spiritual benefit from the stake organization of these eighteen men especially chosen to administer.

LOVE AND FAITH

(Funeral sermon of William Lewis, by John W. Rushton, March 31, 1919, Saint Joseph, Missouri. Reported by Minnie Scott Dobson.)

Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations. Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God. Thou turnest man to destruction; and sayest, Return, ye children of men. For a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past, and as a watch in the night. Thou carriest them away as with a flood; they are as a sleep: in the morning they are like grass which groweth up. In the morning it flourisheth, and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down, and withereth. For we are consumed by thine anger, and by thy wrath are we troubled. Thou hast set our iniquities before thee, our secret sins in the light of thy countenance. For all our days are passed away in thy wrath; we spend our years as a tale that is told. The days of our years are threescore years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labor and sorrow; for it is soon cut off, and we fly away. Who knoweth the power of thine anger? even according to thy fear, so is thy wrath. So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom. Return, O Lord, how long? and let it repent thee concerning thy servants. O satisfy us early with thy mercy; that we may rejoice and be glad all our days. Make us glad according to the days wherein thou hast afflicted us, and the years wherein we have seen evil. Let thy work appear unto thy servants, and thy glory unto their children. And let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us: and establish thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish thou it.—Psalm 90.

Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live.—John 11:25.

Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.—John 14:1-3.

But some man will say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come? Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die. And that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain: but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body. All flesh is not the same flesh; but there is one kind of flesh of men, another flesh of beasts, another of fishes, and another of birds. There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial: but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another. There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption: it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power: it is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body. And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul, the last Adam was made a quickening spirit. Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual. The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven. As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy; and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. Behold, I show you a mystery; We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.—1 Corinthians 15:35-57.

For which cause we faint not; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal.—2 Corinthians 4:16-18.

For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven: if so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life. Now he that hath wrought us for the selfsame thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit.—2 Corinthians 5:1-5.

William Lewis was born in Dowlais, Wales, November 23, 1847. At the age of nearly nine years he came to the United States with his parents and settled in Scranton, Pennsylvania, from whence he moved to Youngstown, Ohio. Married Mary Jones, at Sharon, Pennsylvania, March 16, 1868. Shortly afterward they moved to Nebraska, living on a homestead for nearly six years. From there they came to Stewartsville, Missouri, and have lived in and around Saint Joseph, Stewartsville, and Cameron for more than forty-two years. Our brother became a member of the Latter Day Saint Church at the age of seventeen; and was ordained an elder in the same church when eighteen years of age. He was president of Far West District for a number of years; also pastor of the First Saint Joseph Branch for a long time. In 1901 he was sent on a mission to Wales, accompanied by his wife and youngest daughter, Ruth, and remained there for two years. In 1905 his mission was in the New York and Philadelphia District; also acted as pastor of the Scranton Branch for two years. Again, in 1908, he returned to Wales, England, accompanied by his wife and his daughter, Ruth, and remained there for a year this time. In 1911 went on a mission to Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Manitoba, Canada. In 1915 labored in Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia. The last three years have been spent in continual labor in parts of Illinois, Kansas, Iowa, and Missouri. Brother Lewis departed this life March 29, 1919, 11.22 p. m., at the home of his daughter, Mrs. D. C. Kinnaman, 112 South Seventeenth Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri, after an illness of three months. He leaves a faithful wife, three daughters, Mrs. D. C. Kinnaman, Saint Joseph; Mrs. G. C. Johnson, Des Moines, Iowa; Mrs. Mark Holman, Xenia, Illinois, four sons, Daniel Lewis, Casper, Wyoming; Tom Lewis, Home, Louisiana; David Lewis, Kansas City, Missouri, and Robert Lewis, Saint Joseph, Missouri; sixteen grandchildren, and one great-grandchild, one sister, Mrs. Howel Price, of Ottumwa, Iowa, one brother, of Los Angeles, California, and a host of nieces and nephews.

In the very brief account which I have just read you have the description of one of the characters who not only have succeeded in making the history of this church in which we are at present holding service, but he belongs also to that splendid group of pioneers who have helped to make the United States of America what it is to-day. Our brother was a Welshman, full of fire, passion, and deep devotion. It is the heritage of the Celtic people to be devotedly religious, and I think I do not exaggerate when I also say it seems to be a part of that heritage to be endowed with the prophetic afflatus. There is a peculiar quality to the Celtic race which might easily be classified as the supernatural. To them the veil between the heavenly and the material is very thin, and oftentimes these men and women of the Welsh nation seem to penetrate that thin veil with sometimes strange if not weird familiarity. To say that such men literally walk and talk with God is not merely picturesque language but the actual, naked truth.

The strange influence of these people has been noted by those who have had anything to do with them in any place, at any time, under any condition, and whether in religion, in poetry, in music, or in the dry and barren realm of politics, there is an inspirational strain that characterizes all of their work. I do not need to remind those of you who were acquainted with our departed brother that though by no means what you would call an educated man in the academic sense, he was a man of remarkable genius and native ability, a man whose rhetoric, with a few minor exceptions with regard to grammatical construction, was strongly replete with good, commonplace language and happy illustration—a wonderful instrument in the hands of this our brother, which, together with a remarkable voice of musical intonation, made winning appeal.

It seems to me, though, that this also is part of the heritage of our Celtic brothers and sisters: the voice which I have heard described as possessing the elements of tempest and storm, of mountain torrent and murmuring brook, the sighing of a summer breeze and the crooning of a mother's lullaby as she watches over her sleeping child. In all these various ways our Welsh brothers can play upon the emotions of the soul by a voice remarkable for its music, and for its feeling, and for its power to arouse. These people, possibly, are the only ones in modern civilization who have kept in the twentieth century some of their old-time customs, in what is known as the Eisteddfod. At these times men and women gather from all over the Celtic world and engage in their various programs of rivalry, not of physical strength and competing in brute force, but measuring their ability in poetry, in music, in all the majestic melody of their native choruses, and bardic lore.

It is no wonder these people have been remarkably blessed under the influence of what we call a modern dispensation of divine Providence. The restored gospel made a wonderful appeal to these people of the Welsh hills and valleys, and in its appeal seemed to lift them up beyond the sordid and material, and they became the favorites of God in the sense that upon them and in and through them all sorts of marvelous and miraculous displays of divine power have been witnessed and recorded.

I need scarcely remind you to-day that the most powerful man in the whole of the eastern world, if not the entire world, is a little Welshman born at the place called Criccieth, in the northern part of that little country; and, while he was born in poverty, and reared under the cruelest of hardships, confronted by all kinds of insurmountable barriers, he laughed them to scorn, and to-day not only rules the destinies of the British Empire but controls, to a large extent, the destinies of the entire civilized world. Men hang upon his word, listen to his faintest whisper, and catching the gleam of his black eye, full of fire and passion and inspiration, move in response to that will as though they were listening to an oracle of God.

I mention these things to try to help you to see the kind of man our brother was.

It was my good fortune to meet Brother Lewis when he made his first visit to Wales. I was a very young man in those days, not very long engaged in professional ministerial work. And I remember the first time I met him was in a little village called Ton-y-Pandy, lying at the foot of some of those rugged Welsh mountains. Through the center of that little town there wound, in its noisy way, one of the characteristic little rivers, full of music and prophecy. In a little bit of a broken-down structure, lying at the back of one of the main streets and reached by winding our way through some sort of a little alley, we had our meetinghouse. On this particular Sunday morning—it was a Sunday morning in June—Brother Lewis was occupying the stand. I had heard of him through Brother Griffiths, a lifelong friend of our brother, and was anxious to meet him personally. And I remember his sermon; probably you have heard it. It was a sermon upon the love of God, and he told in his inimitable way, so full of appeal and kindly entreaty, of God's ways of dealing with men and women. I never did forget the music of the voice nor the symmetry and the appeal of the language. The subject is always old and familiar and one that we Christian men and women, winding our way through the dark and climbing up rugged precipices of obscurity and adversity, always love to hear and think about. That was my first meeting with Brother Lewis; I have never forgotten it. And probably the last sermon I heard him preach was on the subject of true faith. These two sermons were the beginning and the end of Brother Lewis' theological knowledge, and what can anybody wish for more? To base a life of missionary usefulness upon the foundation of divine love, and complete it in the majestic vision of a faith that stands true and steadfast in spite of storm and stress, is a record of which any man may be justly proud.

I have been with Brother Lewis not only in Wales, but it was my good fortune to be with him many times since I have made my home in this broad land. I have had to preside over missions in which he had to work, and I want to say this afternoon that Brother Lewis is one of the few men with whom it has been my privilege to associate, who left a refreshing spiritual influence upon my mind and upon my soul. In these days when men are materialistic and inclined to measure things by the dimensions of dollars and cents, and sometimes warp and deform their characters by personal pleasure or search for monetary gain, it is altogether unusual and an experience we never forget when we come across a man or a woman who lives with God and walks and talks with him.

The measure of Brother Lewis, if I have failed to convey it to you, may be gathered fully in the first hymn we sang. (Saints' Hymnal, No. 337, "One Hour With Jesus.") If I am not mistaken, that hymn is his own composition, and the music to those words was composed by another Welshman, a Welshman with a deep passion for music, long since gone on before, and no doubt when our Brother Lewis and Brother Morgan shall meet in the world lying just a little in advance of ours, they shall be engaged in trying to tell their experiences with God and will compose some new melody, and probably the angel choir will have some new hymn with which to please the listening ear of those who linger upon the threshold of eternity.

What a grand life our brother lived—a life of usefulness and selflessness. I have known him since I was twenty-six years of age, and all that time I think, with very little exception, Brother Lewis has been interested in preaching the word of God, has been concerned in the salvation of the souls of men, looking forward with anxiety, with a tremendous longing and patience, to the building up of the kingdom of God. He abandoned, voluntarily, businesses—businesses in which he proved he could make a success, and showed that while he had this capacity in common with many of his kinsmen and national associates, yet all of this was put on one side to devote himself, without any hesitancy, to the work lying so near to his heart.

I was thinking also what a grand thing it is that he died at home. If the Lord will hear and answer my prayer, I know of nothing that will please me better than when the time comes that my wanderings have finished, my earth experience done, I can be in the bosom of my family and have their kindly eye look into mine and their tender grip lead me down into the valley of the dark shadows. He has stayed at home since stricken with his final illness, and around him gathered his dear wife, his daughters, and his sons, and they lighted up the dark passing into the eternal world.

I believe, also, if I had a choice, I would like to die at springtime, when the wintry clouds, so heavy, and dull, and gray, and foreboding, have been driven away by the forceful winds that sweep across our prairies, and the sunshine scatters them as a gray veil; the sky once again is blue and radiant, and the golden sunshine fills the earth with life, power, and glory; all the black fields are losing their barren nakedness and the winds have caught up the dead and dried leaves, as they crackled in the autumnal blasts, and have swept the landscape clean of the debris of death, and in place of them there comes out to us the smiling promise of new crops of wheat and corn; and all the trees are putting forth their buds of hope and the tender blossoms begin to break with laughing glee to meet the new season; and here and there the birds are full of love and cry to their mates in the music of desire, and carry their little bit of furniture to build up new homes, and speak in tender twitterings of a time when the little family shall be greeted; and in all the mystery of love there shall come the teeming millions of endless and varying expressions of immortal life. Death is forgotten, and life cries loud and shouts with gladness reaching to heaven itself.

These are the conditions under which we bid our brother farewell to-day, and I am sure were he here with us this afternoon he would regret exceedingly if one word should fall from my lips that would make the burden heavier to bear, the tears more scalding and blinding as they flow. I am sure, as I knew him and know the gospel he preached, he would have me tell you of hope, of love, of laughter, and of life. In the language of the greatest of all Teachers he would have me say to you: "He is not dead but sleeping." He would have me bid you take heart of grace, and as you look down the dark and lonely corridor of the present experience into the open grave, he would assure you of life beyond this, the great, broad promise of eternal life lying just beyond. It is not that our brother has departed from life, but in this experience we call death he has gone into life of fuller and richer province and shall reap the harvest of the years of labor he so joyously, and hopefully, and quietly, and heroically performed.

Our deep sympathy goes out to his bereft companion. I am sure all of us who have known their life of affectionate companionship, which I regret to say is unusual to-day, regard it as an idyl. It was idyllic the way this man and woman, husband and wife, father and mother, walked almost literally hand in hand in various places and through various experiences. There was always the quiet, unobtrusive solicitation, a sort of mothering inquiry after each other's comfort and condition. There was a feeling that one could not be thought of without the other; in the truest sense of the word they were one. Their life, united, was the obverse and the reverse side of one great and glorious experience, and if I am not mistaken, for more than fifty years our brother and sister walked the highway of life, hand in hand, their faces turned Godward and their children following behind in appreciation of their deep and lasting affection for their parents. To our sister, lonely and saddened in this black day, our hearts go out with a deep sympathy, and the unvoiced prayer that is in all our hearts is that God may bless and sustain her in this trying hour.

To the children who have lost a father, we also share their sorrow and sympathize with them, but we bid them rejoice that before them there was raised such a monumental witness of worthiness of character and heroism, and upon their shoulders, especially the boys', there must now rest the responsibility of maintaining the family honor, dignity, and worthiness of that name which is one of the monuments of God's grace in our church and in the neighborhood. We bid them walk and live in comradeship with their father's memory and, catching hold of the Spirit which animated this noble man, make themselves worthy of their heritage which it is their pleasure and good grace to bear.

Let us remember as we stand here and sit here quietly in the presence of death, in the presence of the body of our brother now still in the dignity of death, that he once stood on this very platform and pleaded with you and me that we would live as becomes the children of God. Let us prove ourselves worthy of his faith, and confidence, and love, and esteem in and for us.

At a time like this I, personally, feel that employing the occasion for proselyting purposes would be unfair to you, unworthy of myself, and undignified toward the man whose memory we cherish to-day. But I feel that we cannot let you go without reminding you of this: The Old Testament, from which we read our first lesson, gives to us the pessimistic view of death. I do not know that even now we have men qualified to explain more fully, or language that can approach this majestic song of Moses in the 90th Psalm. But in spite of all, he could tell us only that our life is spent as a tale that is told, and we cast ourselves in a sort of blind faith upon the mercies of God and await the vindication of our faith in him in dismal uncertainty.

But when we come to the words of Jesus Christ, in the New Testament, all doubt and all fear are dispelled, and with the dogmatism of absolute knowledge, with the assurance of splendid and imperial knowledge, he announces that in him is the resurrection and the life, and catching hold of that dogmatic statement, enshrining the eternal truth of undying hope, which is the Christian's Gibraltar, the Apostle Paul indorses and enlarges this hope in the wonderful philosophy of our New Testament lesson and reminds us that no matter how life shall have dealt with us, no matter how death may come and take us, if our life shall have been lived in the glorious spirit and in the majestic power of the living Christ and we have been holy and true to all he stands for, and of which he is God's own expression, then death never realizes itself in destruction, but rather in the deliverance of the real life from all that can and would blemish it.

I want to say to you this afternoon that it is, indeed, unbelievable and beyond the possibility of explanation for Christian people to be afraid in the presence of Death. If Jesus Christ has told us anything that is true, anything that is worthy, anything that can be expected to help us whatever, it is this announcement that in him there is no death and in him is life forevermore. The immortal life brought to life in the gospel of Jesus Christ puts the soul into relationship with the divine mind, and as we shall condition ourselves in him and mold our lives according to the truth he has revealed, the power of death becomes but the instrument of conveyance over the chasm that separates the now from the then, the present from the future, the night from the day, and in the language of the old Latin philosopher, "Mors Janua vitæ." Death is the gateway to our future life, and down through this gateway we may move without any fear or hesitation, without any doubt, having the assurance of hope that God doeth all things well.

It would be wicked, it would be unbelief, to sorrow as those without hope. Our tears flow to-day because of our sense of personal loss and not because of our brother; our tears run in deep and perfect sympathy with those who have become lonely in this fell moment; but we are not sorrowing, mourning, or crying to those in the dark, and those who have lost their light and their anchorage of hope. We believe that in the morning, when all doubts are cleared away, and all questions answered, and all our mysteries find their explanation, there will come the grand reunion of the broken strands, the continuation of the story which is temporarily interrupted, and the life that but for the moment has passed out of our vision to bloom in the presence of God in the beauty of eternity.

May God grant to us a revelation of faith, a continuation of our determination to become holy men and women. To those of our number strained, paralyzed with grief, may God stretch out his strong right hand and give comfort, and cheer, and good will as they receive from him the ministration contained in the word of God for our comfort.

THE RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD

Shall I believe that the dead will live again? Shall I believe that there will be a resurrection of the body from the tomb? If it is true that the dead will live again and I hold that truth in my consciousness, I am in a fair way to understand other associate truths better than I would be were I to deny the resurrection and refuse to believe it, for a correct understanding of any point of truth always helps on toward a completeness of knowledge.

To correctly understand one division of the truth of things as they are, or as they are to be, is to be put in the way of learning yet other truth related thereto. Thus progress is made in knowledge, and also in power; for knowledge in the mind of man is the genesis of his power.

But if the resurrection of the dead is merely a myth, or a tradition, or imaginary, and if it could be that the doctrine has no foundation in fact, then to entertain such a thought as being true, would be an impediment—would stand in the way of right understanding of other important matters pertaining to life and being. Thus the progress of knowledge (which is the greatest of all things to be desired by man) would be retarded.

Are there any good reasons why I should not believe in the resurrection of the dead? If so, what are they; and what do they weigh in the scale of sound reasoning? Let us cast one or two notions that might arise to challenge the doctrine of the resurrection, upon the scales of reason, while we take a glance at the figures upon the scale beam. After we have noticed any excuses which may masquerade in our thoughts pretending to be reasons that we should not believe in the resurrection, we may then notice some of the reasons why the great fact of the resurrection should be known.

First: Shall I refuse to believe in the resurrection upon the ground that it involves a miracle, and that I cannot believe in miracles?

If so, the same process of thought would challenge the existence of all life, for all life begins, and proceeds in miracles so profound that the wisest may not understand.

Secondly: There may be a certain self-satisfaction in the idea of being an independent thinker; and in proudly refusing to believe that which the mind does not understand; but like the proud bird whose feathers fall when it looks from its gay plumage to its very plain-looking feet, those who boast of such independent thought must experience some humiliation when, in looking down to the very foundations of their own existence, they must believe that they are, and yet cannot understand how life began.

What keen observer of the experiences of life will deny that there is such a thing as power of mind over matter? One step further: who will deny the power of mind over matter under certain limitations? What makes the salivary glands of the mouth open and flow freely when a hungry man merely thinks of good things to eat? It is the power of mind affecting the physical. Most of us do not understand how these things are. It is a miracle; but how foolish it would be to deny it merely because we do not understand all about it. We have strong testimony of the great truth of many things, the details of which we do not know, yet we do well to accept such testimony, and thus keep our faces set toward the source of all truth and light. In like manner, certain splendid testimonies come to us witnessing that the silent tomb must yet yield its dead unto life again; and it is not a reflection upon reason, soundness of mind, or good judgment, that these testimonies be received, and that faith have her perfect work within us concerning the miraculous, until the "mysteries of heaven unfold."

Shall I refuse to believe in the resurrection of the dead because I have never witnessed the rising of anyone from the tomb? If so, I may also refuse to believe that any of the distant orbs in the sky are planets similar in some respects to our earth, merely because I have not been permitted to make a visit to any of them; and yet, should I refuse to believe that such planets exist, it is possible and altogether probable that I would be quite mistaken. Such a mistake persisted in, would obscure our broader vision of the creations of God, and would fix the mind between barren and rocky walls of ignorance beyond which one could not see.

Great truths must be arrived at by the process of such orderly thinking and enlightenment as will cover all the minor points needful as stepping-stones, on the way from the simple to the profound, and from the obvious to the complex. When some of these important stepping-stones are omitted, their progress of learning ceases, and stagnation of life ensues. All enlightenment demands that each factor necessary to the problem in hand, shall be accurately worked out, before the final sun of knowledge can possibly be wholly correct.

If the doctrine of the resurrection to be, is a truth, those who omit the principle from their stock of learning will yet discover that their defect in vision of things to be has woefully impaired their understanding of things that are. If I have false notions concerning the kind and condition of a road that lies before me, and over which I must travel in the future, my well-being for the present is also endangered; because I cannot be making intelligent preparation to-day, for that which I am sure to meet to-morrow, unless I have some knowledge of what I have to meet.

No, we may not have seen anyone raised from the dead, but the span of our day is rather short, and the circle of our knowledge is rather small for us to assert that such has never been done, or that it may not be again.

I have not yet had the privilege of listening to the voice of a friend conveyed by the marvel of wireless telephone, but there are witnesses that testify that it can be done, and the testimony seems to come from reliable sources.

The testimony which comes to the world concerning the resurrection, comes through reliable witnesses. There can be no better.

These witnesses are: Reason, Observation, Cumulative Experience, Good Men, the Prophets, Jesus Christ, and finally, the "sure word of prophecy," as delivered to the worthy, from God himself by the Holy Spirit.

Speaking of the first, Reason (figuratively as a man), what a splendid testimony he gives that there must be a resurrection of the dead! When given audience, what an immovable testimony Reason will bear in the presence of Faith and Hope, when the soul, stripped of all haughtiness and every secret wickedness, brings those two graces of the heart penitently before the throne of Reason and asks for his princely testimony.

Come, let us walk a pace with Reason. First: facts inform us that man has a physical body. Other facts declare that back of every wrought out design, there must be a designer. Evidence accumulates to prove that back of all things created is the supreme Designer, God.

Facts declare that an intelligence so towering and mighty as the One who has created the marvels of all things made, works to a definite purpose. Every known truth combines to declare with one voice that life and being is not the result of accident or of blind, senseless chance!

This self-evident truth being established, we may with good reason seek to know the great purpose of life and being. For having our free agency, it is possible for us to cooperate with God in the purpose of life and being to our own great benefit; or to oppose such purpose, causing needless loss to ourselves.

Again: Facts declare that man has been given use of a physical body for the short period which is called in this world, the span of life. The further fact is, that about the time man begins to learn how best to take care of his body, he must lay it down in the tomb.

Reason, having brought the aforementioned facts to notice, is now questioned by Mind in the following manner: "If the tomb is to be the end of man what purpose could the great Designer have had in view when he created him?"

Reason answers that if such an ignoble finish is to be the end of man, then the whole of all the vast system of creation is worse than child's play. If the tomb is to be the end of man, then the whole procedure of life and being is utterly without any purpose worthy of the Supreme Intelligence which has brought all things into being.

Reason therefore declares from his princely throne, that the tomb is not the end of man; and true Faith and sweet Hope listen with attentive ear, and the heart that hearkens does well to hear.

Mind next asks: "Since good evidence proves that the tomb cannot be the end of man, must he forever live on in spirit existence, destitute of bodily being?"

Reason, in order to stimulate a fair view of the truth, responds with the following question: "If Spirit existence, apart from the body is the ideal and perfect status of life, why has the Supreme Intelligence clothed all things that we see, in physical form?"

Reason continues in answer to his own question as follows: "Since in the wisdom of the Supreme One he has seen best to put the spirit in a body, it is therefore evident that this is best for man, else he would not have created man thus; and that if the spirit life apart from the body were the better, man would have been left so in the beginning."

Then Reason proceeds to urge that since sin, or imperfect living, has been permitted to bring about death, or the dissolution of the body, the supreme designer could only have permitted such in order that a higher order of life shall be obtained in the resurrection. This will be a restoration of a body to the spirit, in which the spirit may be clothed in all perfection. This new body is not to be subject to sickness, disease, or death, and in it the highest and best estate of life may be reached.

Such a view of life and evolution gives reasonable purpose to the march of all things as they exist in fact; and without such a view the whole of life's infinite organizations become contradictory to every intelligent purpose, and a mass of bungling, meaningless chaos.

Reason therefore justifies the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, and prepares us for the testimony of the prophets of God, of Jesus Christ, and of the sure testimony witnessed by revelation through the Holy Spirit.

THE TWO RESURRECTIONS

The prophets in every age have spoken the word of God, proclaiming that the tomb must, according to divine purpose, yield its dead to life again.

These prophets have been separated by miles, seas, and centuries, yet their voices have ever been in beautiful agreement unflinchingly testifying that the great time of the resurrection will surely come.

During life the people are classed in two great divisions; the righteous and the wicked. As righteousness or wickedness vitally affect the life during all the days of man upon the earth, it is not unreasonable that the resurrection will be in two classes also, embracing the righteous in the one and the wicked in the other. This is affirmed by the Prophet Daniel (12:2) when in speaking of the dead, those who "sleep in the dust of the earth," he says they shall awake, "some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt."

More than six centuries later, John the Revelator confirms the word of the Prophet Daniel pertaining to the great division that is to be made between the righteous and the wicked in the resurrection, and then goes on to specify that there will be a span of a thousand years intervene between the resurrection of the righteous and the time when the wicked will come forth from the tomb.

In the testimony of John, the "first resurrection" is spoken of; and that it is the righteous who will be resurrected first is evident by the language, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: upon such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."

And of the wicked he says: "The rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." These are the two resurrections.

WORDS OF WITNESSES

Job: "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God."—19:25, 26.

David: "I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness."—Psalm 17:15.

Isaiah: "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust: . . . and the earth shall cast out the dead."—26:19.

Jesus: "Thou shalt be recompensed in the resurrection of the just."—Luke 14:14.

"Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."—John 5:28, 29.

Paul: "And have a hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust."—Acts 24:15.

All these testimonies, and many others of the apostles and prophets show that the doctrine of the resurrection was taught as a part of the gospel.

Faith being defined as the "evidence of things not seen," these testimonies and evidences will surely strengthen faith in the truth for every soul that will give them due consideration; and then there remains the witness of the Holy Spirit which is able to unfold a positive knowledge of these things to the mind; and thus all men may have access to the word, and not to the word only, but also to the "much assurance" and power of knowledge by means of the heavenly Spirit Messenger whose office work it is to take the things of the Father and show them unto us, and to "show us things to come."

A PERSONAL TESTIMONY

A very singular spiritual experience, including some revelation concerning the resurrection of the dead, came to the writer in the year 1907. Many will remember that in the spring of that year the comet known as "Halley's Comet" caused no little commotion throughout the country, being a live topic for newspaper and magazine articles, as well as furnishing an incentive for strange performances of ignorant and superstitious people, who thought the end of the world was surely at hand. It may also be remembered that there was an unusually warm period of weather early in the month of March, or about the time of the appearing of the comet; and that this very warm wave was followed by an extremely cold wave early in April. These extreme weather conditions, together with the fact that the writer had been neglectful in the matter of supplying himself with clothing suitable to the extreme variations of the climate between his southern mission field and that of Lamoni, Iowa, where he attended the General Conference that spring, caused him to contract a most severe cold, and to find himself stricken down with typhoid pneumonia upon his return to Seiling, Oklahoma, on April 21 of that year. Then followed a period of illness of more or less severity until, on Tuesday, April 30, a relapse soon put the patient to the point where Doctor W. D. McGinnis found, as stated by him at that time, that he had been called in too late for medical skill to save the patient.

This diagnosis was given by the physician on Saturday, May 4, 1907. The particulars are given because the writer considers the experience which came to him during this illness to be one of the most marked spiritual manifestations of his life. On Sunday, May 5, Elder H. F. Durfey was called in and administered according to the custom of the church, by the anointing with oil and by prayer.

Those who are skeptical-minded about visions and spiritual communications may find some little thing which seems to them to be in favor of their idea that spiritual manifestations are wholly imaginary, in the fact that many of these testimonies of spiritual manifestations come from people who were very ill, or near death at the time of receiving their visions; but be that as it may, the writer presents these facts of experience for what they may be worth to others, and rests assured within himself that there is a true scientific principle involved wherein (upon some occasion at least) spiritual powers are in the ascendancy, when carnal fullness that so easily accompanies bodily strength, declines with the physical to a point of abject weakness. For we read that the Prophet Daniel had fasted and was prone upon the ground from weakness at a time when great spiritual enlightenment was given him by a heavenly messenger. We also know that according to the natural laws of physical being Jesus must have been much reduced in physical vigor after having fasted for those forty days without food or drink, yet he received spiritual power such as no other man has ever attained.

As has been stated, the life of the patient, in the instance of the present narrative was despaired of. And it should also be noted here that for many months he had been specially exercised in fastings and in prayer at various intervals, praying for some definite knowledge from God concerning the life that is, as related to the life that is to be; knowledge concerning the resurrection of the dead, and a number of matters that had been puzzling the mind. After Elder Durfey had gone away, and the attendants were watching by the bedside, on the night of that same day; while they thought the patient unconscious, and that each succeeding hour would probably be his last, he was not only conscious of all that was going on about him in the room, but superconscious as well, to the extent that spiritual matters became as clear to the consciousness as ordinary affairs ever are to the natural mind. Yes, more clear than the natural consciousness of the mind pertaining to every-day affairs, for there was an all-inclusiveness in the wonderful comprehension of spiritual things that were opened up to the mind that exceeded anything ever experienced before by the one whose physical life was at this moment suspended by the frailty of a thread.

There had been almost constant silent prayer from the time of the administration referred to, until the spiritual vision, intercourse, or illumination opened in such exaltation of mind and grandeur of truth manifest that no words can describe the glory of it. While thus literally enwrapped in the spiritual vision questions were asked, one by one, pertaining to the matters of life and being, of which the writer had been praying to know and this testimony is to say with reverence and solemnity that the answers which came from the heavenly source were given in as direct reply, and with as much clearness of expression, as when one man speaks with another.

Not that there was an audible voice such as salutes the ear, for such was not the case, but it was such a voice as found response not only upon the auditory nerve of the ear, but rather upon every fiber of being; and every atom of soul, whether of body or spirit responded to the sweet, yet penetrating and overwhelming flow of revelation, when some questions were asked, and the answers were being given, the things being revealed were so vastly superior to the capacity of the mind trying to receive it, that it became necessary to cry out: "O Lord, close up the vision until thy servant shall have time to try to grasp the greatness of it all, lest by continuing the vision he shall not have power to endure its glory."

Then the voice would cease speaking, and according to the prayer, the mind would be given time to grapple with the mighty things which had been spoken; and thus the vision would proceed at intervals, then close by entreaty, until all had been received that the mind was able to endure.

The existence of spirit being, in a conscious state independent of the body of flesh was shown; and the truth of the resurrection of the dead was so confirmed by that matchless voice of spirit power, that it can never be doubted, while life shall last. The information was also made plain to the mind that the fleshly body, while in the carnal state, is to an extent a bond and a fetter and an impediment as to the obtaining of the knowledge of some spiritual things which will be better understood when gracious death shall have broken the fetters, which we are required to bear while in the flesh; but which impediment shall all be obliterated in the glorious resurrection of the just. Concerning certain matters inquired of, the illuminative voice declared that in this instance the information could be had, but only upon the condition that the supplicant cross the river of death, otherwise he must be content with such knowledge as was given him at that time concerning these certain matters. He was also given the matter of choice as to whether he should cross the river at that time or return to health and pursue the course of life to a maturity of days.

He was informed that if he chose to recover from the illness of body and to live, that he would encounter many hard experiences, he was shown a forecast of himself sitting at times weary by the wayside of life, but also assured of many blessings. He chose to live, and began to amend immediately so that within a few days he was able to walk several blocks, and within two weeks to occupy the pulpit in preaching. The judgment of the physician was that if he continued preaching that winter it would kill him; but under the power of blessing he was enabled to preach more that winter than before; and to arrive at a state of health which to this day is better than was enjoyed even in youth. And now in the conclusion of this personal testimony the writer declares that while in the heavenly vision the Lord did as in former times, show forth things unspeakable to utter, unlawful to proclaim as yet, and that it is not possible for our minds to grasp them fully in the present time, or to make them known among men.

But of the resurrection of the dead we are assured. The sweetest promises ever made by the angel of hope are verified in the resurrection.

In the light of such hope the angel of faith fills our days with blessings.

From the throne of Reason hope in the resurrection, and faith that it shall come in God's own good time, is indorsed and proven by scientific precision.

The Holy Spirit verifies the testimony of the prophets; and so by the support of these many witnesses, and under the glow of the divine unction which accompanies the proclamation of the truth, we repeat in this simple and straightforward way: There is a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust; the one to everlasting life and peace, the other to sorrow and condemnation which is deserved by those who willfully continue in wickedness.

May these words of soberness and truth be sanctified to the souls of all those who will give heed to them is the prayer that is sent out with this testimony.

JAMES E. YATES.

It's the soldier's choice of honor rather than life which will make them all gentlemen together; and they won't stand, either, for seeing the ideals they bled for going by the board. They'll fight for them at home—just as they did in France.—Saturday Evening Post, January 12, 1918.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

Sometime, Somewhere, Each Finds Gethsemane

In golden youth, when seems the earth
A summer land of songs and mirth,
And not a shadow lurks in sight,
We do not know it, but there lies,
Somewhere, veiled under evening skies,
A garden all must sometime see,
Gethsemane, Gethsemane!
Somewhere, one's own Gethsemane!

With joyous steps we go our ways,
Love lends a halo to the days,
Light sorrows sail like clouds afar,
We laugh and say, "How strong we are!"
We hurry on, and hurrying go
Close to the border land of woe,
That waits for you, and waits for me;
Gethsemane, Gethsemane!
Forever waits Gethsemane!

Down shadowy lanes, across strange streams,
Bridged over by our broken dreams,
Behind the misty cape of years,
Close to the great salt font of tears,
The garden lies; strive as you may,
You cannot miss it in your way.
All paths that have been or shall be Pass somewhere through Gethsemane.

All those who journey, soon or late,
Must pass within the garden's gate,
Must kneel alone in darkness there
And battle with some fierce despair.
God pity those who cannot say,
"Not mine, but Thine," who only pray,
"Let this cup pass!" and cannot see
The purpose in Gethsemane.
Gethsemane, Gethsemane!
God help us through Gethsemane!

An Admonition

(Given by the Spirit through Mrs. E. F. Shupe, at the district conference held at Denver, Colorado, February 23, 1919. The music for this song is long meter. It can be set to No. 8 in the Saints' Hymnal.)

Come, O my people, come to me.
Let all your works with faith agree.
Show that my law, my word, is true.
Come heed my counsel unto you.

Study my word; my law proclaim,
Which brings salvation unto man,
And let your conduct ever be
With this true law in harmony.

Let not the Evil One persuade
Some other way than this can save;
For he who knows your every need
His gospel gave, that you might live.

Though rough the way, and hard your lot,
Be patient still, and murmur not.
In my own time you shall be free,
If you but closely follow me.

Where'er you are, where'er you go,
In every time of weal or woe,
His promise true is just the same.
Oh, then may we adore his name!

For he who died, that you might live,
Will unto you his Spirit give
To guide, direct, and comfort bring.
Lift up your heads, his praises sing.

His Monument

---

Shall we build a monument of costly stone
To perpetuate the Seer's great work and name,
Its height o'ertopped by heaven's clouds alone,
And chisel there imperishably his fame?

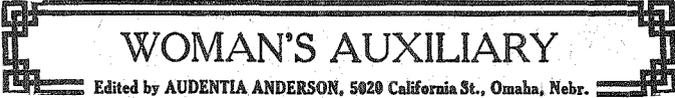

The years have come and to oblivion sped,
The while his work went on—still onward goes—
Triumphing, though he slumbers with the dead,
His name, his works, outlive his bitterest foes.

The truths he taught a thousand tongues proclaim,
Wherever there is preached this gospel light
In its pure fullness, there his deeds are named,
There rises his memorial shaft of white.

His name, his deathless name and work will live
Within men's hearts, with His, the crucified,
He gave to men the greatest man can give,
And for God's truth, like Jesus Christ, he died.

In many distant lands his name is known,
His works the islands of the sea have blessed,
We may perpetuate in enduring stone
Only the humble grave wherein he rests.

The Young of the Church

(Extracts from the address of Doctor Floyd M. McDowell, Monday evening, April 7, at General Conference.)

I will say that you cannot frighten me by calling me names! [Doctor!] If I run overtime to-night, don't blame me. It isn't often a "mere man" gets the last word, as I do on this program.

I am concerned with the problem of the young people of the church. I am convinced that the church exists not for itself, but for the good it can do its members—its young people, if you please. We frequently make the instrument the end, instead of recognizing it as the means. In history we see the Roman Catholic Church becoming an end, and not a means. All organization is for some purpose, and we should never mistake the vehicle for the destination.

The young people should learn to understand the church, and the church should learn to understand its young people. This is the mission of the church. If I could get the young people to believe that their greatest happiness lies within the church, and the church to believe that its greatest happiness lies with the young people, I think I should feel satisfied in making the effort such a result might require. And we are waking up! A letter from England recently contained the remark: "If only the church had saved to itself every young person born into it, what an army it would be!" Another letter from Australia shows that they are feeling the need there, also.

God himself has recognized this work in prophetic messages to us. In the last two reunions in Lamoni Stake, the need of the young has been recognized. There were days set apart for their activities. This is as it should be, for there is a world of energy in our young people for us to utilize if we but knew it!

What are young people, anyway? They are not small adults in any sense of the word. They haven't the same proportions, physically or mentally. Youth is the most significant period of life. Show me a nation which recognizes this fact, and I will show you a nation which takes definite steps to prolong the period of youth. That is a nation high in civilization. Animals mature in a short time—the lower, the shorter. That it takes a human being twenty-five years to mature was for a purpose. Man attains wonderful heights, mentally and spiritually, and it was not an accident that he has a long developing period. My plea is to recognize that period and utilize it!

Sincere attempts to understand youth, and temper the study with the Spirit of God, will reveal to us much of the laws which govern that important period of life. When some of us attempt to do this, somebody says we are ignoring the spiritual side of the question. Youth is youth, and has certain activities and instincts which, while not those of the mature or the aged, are none the less God-given and right. "Every good gift and perfect gift" comes from God, and it is an insult to our Maker to presume that the instincts of youth are bad—just naturally bad! I say: Force evil tendencies out if they crop up, by filling the life of that young person with all the healthful activity it can stand! We have outgrown the old idea that natural impulses are from the Devil. A well-known church has taken out of its creed the doctrine that all men are conceived in sin.

We have heard various objections to the Boy Scout idea we have advocated. One man said it led to the Y. M. C. A.! As if the Y. M. C. A. was a hotbed of all that was evil! Another said that the Boy Scouts were too bad for his boy, while another man wrote that the boys of his branch were too bad for the Boy Scouts! It seems to me it is a case of "All out of step but Jim"! We contend that when all are organized, under proper leadership, we can all find the proper adjustment. Boys must be instructed how to act, to do; we get nowhere with negative teaching. Education is not something which can be suddenly conferred upon anyone—imposed from without. It must grow from within, and is developed by doing.

Paul's advice is the only reasonable one: "Overcome evil with good." Overcome undesirable tendencies by substituting that which is desirable. The damnable doctrine of repression in connection with leading our young in right paths must go! It is a shame that we have witnessed on the conference floor efforts in that direction. We have voted to disapprove of this, or that! What have we substituted—by vote?

We have failed miserably whenever we have tried to repress God-given instincts! The average boy will do. If you don't provide the what, somebody or something else will. I was thankful for Brother Greene's sermon of yesterday. He struck the keynote when he advocated the idea of using our facilities to interest and hold the young. Why, when we started a gymnasium here, certain ones almost ostracized us! They argued that home is the place a boy should be, and no community center will take the place of the home. Granted; but a home cannot fill the need for group activities of the kind that appeal to the young. One man bragged that his boy had never been in a swimming pool in his life! I suppose we could find boys who had never had a bath in their lives, or proper clothes!

Don't decry legitimate activities. They are necessary. One man here was fairly standing on his head because we have a gymnasium, and his own boy is drawn there, and looks in from the outside! The father is not feeling the impulses of the boy, nor does he understand them in any particular. A boy is not irreligious because he plays ball, any more than men are religious because they trot off to church every time the bell rings—and sleep all through the services!

We still have reunions where the whole program is embraced in three gospel sermons every day! They are so narrow that there is just the word left! Spirituality does not exist separate from the thing that develops it! Get that! Spirituality is not something which can be poured down upon a man from outside. Actual living and doing produces it. Could a musical education be bestowed upon anyone without a doing on his part? Could a spiritual?

One man, attacking the idea of keeping the young people busy, says that we should get them spiritual first, and then give them the swimming pool. Isn't that what the church has attempted to do all these years! They have had Sunday schools, and Religios, and sermons a-plenty, at least.

Why have worldly amusements attracted our young? Because the children are bad? No; it has been because their instincts have not been properly fed by the church or home. Don't preach at your boy every time he comes into the house! Don't remind him too often that he is a Latter Day Saint! He may be that, but at the same time he is a young animal, with certain physical and mental traits and impulses which must be reckoned with. He is a happy lad whose father understands him, and does not believe everything he wants to do is bad just because he wants to do it.

When we opened our gymnasium here one man was among the first to join. He comes and plays with us, and he plays with his boys. Is he any the less spiritual for that? No! He is providing legitimate and wholesome expression for the things they want to do—something the church has been too slow to provide!

When I was a boy of fourteen I had no temptation to smoke or do many of the things we wish our children not to do; but I worked for two old maids who had nothing to interest me. They had some cats, it is true! But I got to going to the nearest barber shops and hanging around them, where the things I heard were not always desirable or profitable. Why did I go? Because I wanted something to do! Didn't I have work at home? Yes, and plenty of it, but work does not satisfy the demand or the yearning that is in the heart of a boy of that age.

We are so afraid of "worldly things"! Somebody recently wrote Brother Elbert Smith, and criticized him for being worldly, and cited him to Paul. Brother Elbert replied: "Your criticism may be just, but we notice that you have your picture on your letterhead. May we ask, Did the Apostle Paul use his picture on his letterheads?"

Because we have been so slow in the past to provide proper amusements for the young, we should make all the more haste now. The greatest evils of to-day are professionalism, commercialism, and immorality. One of the effects of the former is that people are content to go and be entertained by hired professionals. They go to the picture shows, theaters, races, pageants, where they can sit passively, and be "entertained." They are forgetting how to entertain themselves—forgetting games, and sports, and activities.

Commercialism has laid its hands upon the old-time sports, and men make money of everything the boys and girls want. Are we doing anything to combat this tendency? Do we furnish anything to counteract this evil? When the great prohibition drive came on, the wets were organized months ahead, with all kinds of money to back them, while Christians could hardly be dragged out to vote! This commercialism, which considers everything in terms of dollars and cents, robs in every direction, and will assume no responsibility for results.

Immorality is everywhere present, to pervert the instincts of boys and girls. These instincts are God-given, but can drag to the lowest level if misused. It seems to be a law that that which is most sacred can be the most degraded. We cannot repress these instincts! Our only safety lies in giving them proper direction and wholesome channels of expression. Sacred things become the most dangerous if misunderstood or misapplied. It is not because boys and girls want to be bad that they fall into error; it is through ignorance, and the lack of proper guidance and substitution. Why can't the church try to understand? Spirituality will develop with wholesome direction given to natural activities. Eighty boys come to our gymnasium and most of them come also to our prayer meetings. What we have tried to legislate against is, in most instances, not the thing itself, but what it may lead to. Let us try to see clearly, and help the young people to see clearly also. Then they would have a real fortress of strength which will bring them out right, and we will have patriotic youth, moral youth, religious youth! Speed the day when our young will come into their own!

General Policies of the Woman's Auxiliary

(Extracts from the address of Sister Frederick M. Smith.)

An auxiliary to contribute intelligently to the sum total of the work of the church to which it is adjunct, must definitely inform itself concerning that work and definitely qualify itself for service therein. In our Year Book three years ago, I said: "Our Auxiliary has attempted to stress the educational aspect of our activities. This is well. We recognize that actual service is demanded of every woman in her home, her church, and in the community of which she is a member, but we believe also that the preparation for more efficient service is always an essential of our work." More efficient women means more efficient church work, no matter where the line lies. I wish to emphasize what perhaps you have not thought of before, that the Auxiliary stands preeminently for women's work. We do not care to interfere with the work of the priesthood, but rather would qualify ourselves to do well that which is distinctively our own.

I have arranged here a chart illustrating our working policies. First of all I have placed the educational, for we realize the need of stimulation in this regard. Most of us women work hard enough in our homes, for, as a class, we are not wealthy, and most of the work necessary is done by our own hands. But we must be aroused to understand that our duty is not fully done, to ourselves nor to our family, if we do not make an opportunity for some study that shall lift us above the mere necessity of work.

We do not pose as a college. Our work is between the college and the busy home keeper. But we do have courses adapted to what we have seen to be the needs of the women we try to reach. Papers are sent in, corrected, and returned. In the past we have not worked with Graceland, but, in a spirit of cooperation, tried to fill a niche unoccupied by that institution, heretofore.

We have experts at the heads of our various departments, who, while they have had the advantages of higher study, still realize that the women to whom they minister are those in the home, busy with its cares, and the bearing and rearing of children. These we want to reach, with many helpful plans. I might mention here the biological film which will be shown at the Coliseum, Thursday evening, for the benefit of those parents who desire to impart the story of life to their children in a scientific and wholesome manner. This film is in four reels, and shows the beginnings of animal and plant life in an extremely interesting and instructive way. Another help I might recommend is Galloway's Biology of Sex. We mothers must understand that while the actual work of living goes on, there should go along with it definite study, that we may live more wisely and to better results when all is done. As the sewing and aid classes meet for work, they could do nothing finer or more enlightening than to take up the study of sociology, and become acquainted with the social conditions of the world.

I would urge the friendly visiting among the sisters, as a means of getting in touch with each other, and realizing where and how helpful ideas may be imparted. And let us not be discouraged at anything. These young mothers who do not come out to the Child Welfare classes will some day be aroused to the value such study will be to them. It was the coming of my own first daughter that led me to begin the study of psychology here in Graceland, years ago. From it I wandered into the fascinating fields of child psychology, group psychology, etc., finding no limit to the interest I took in the study.

The following outline was used by Sister Smith to illustrate the Auxiliary's educational opportunities:

EDUCATIONAL WORK FOR THE VARIOUS DEPARTMENTS

Home and Child Welfare:

Physiology.
Hygiene.
Psychology.
Child study.
Sex hygiene.

Eugenics: Race and culture.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Heman C. Smith, as I Knew Him

[The following tribute is from one of Brother Heman's numerous friends among the younger generation, and as such is well worthy our consideration.—EDITORS.]

The passing from earth life of one who has stood for many years in the front ranks of the defenders of the angel's message as a valiant standard bearer for truth, brings a feeling of sadness and regret. Were it not for the hope contained in the gospel, the passing would be almost unendurable. The clouds of darkness shut out the glorious rays of the gospel at times, but in the hour of man's greatest trial there comes from the courts above that gleam of hope which secures for us the recognition of a divine hand.

In the death of our late beloved Historian, Elder Heman C. Smith, the church has lost one of her stalwart sons. A man of sterling integrity, who by his life has endeared himself to those who knew him by close acquaintance. In all the years of his associations with the church, extending over a period of nearly forty-five years as a representative of it, he has ever presented an unswerving front to the enemies of truth. He was fearless, yet kind, in defending that which appealed to him to be the will of the One whom he served. Both in private and in public he was ready to defend his convictions of truth and honor.

In his department when discussing issues involving the interests of the church, either with his brethren, or the opponents of the latter-day work, no one can truthfully say that he resorted to questionable methods in order to gain a point. In the General Conferences he was looked upon as a powerful antagonist by those who happened to be on the opposite side of the question under discussion. While those who viewed the matter as he did were always glad to have him champion their cause. He was a man of more than ordinary ability in the forensic field. Many victories have come to the church when he has met some of the greatest opponents of the gospel of Christ. Those who were thus arrayed against the truth feared him as an able expositor of the church.

It was seventeen years ago when I became intimately acquainted with him. At that time I received my first ordination under his hands. I shall never forget the good council and advice he gave me then, as I believe, under the direction of the Spirit of God. He mentioned some things then that have had a complete fulfillment since. This proves to me that he was in close touch with the source of light, and I have no reason to believe he ever departed from that light.

As a historian I have always regarded him as an exceedingly safe man. Never have I hesitated to rely on matters of vital importance written by him as that which contained the facts of history. He was slow to record anything purporting to be history until he felt sure he had the facts. The church can feel itself indebted to his masterful efforts to ascertain the facts. At no time have we ever had to repudiate that which he has written as a matter of history.

He was a man of sober judgment, very seldom, if ever, seen to indulge in hearty laughter. Yet he had a sense of humor that was pleasing indeed. In his last sickness while suffering severely under the hand of affliction, he would engage in conversation with his friends and by his witty statements keep them laughing. In this he took special delight. He tried to be cheerful, yet was deeply concerned as to the outcome of his sickness.

He always felt the solemn obligations placed upon him as a minister for Christ to respond when called upon to officiate in the work he was called to do. Especially is the above true in regard to administering to the sick. At no time, under no conditions, has he ever refused to go to the sick bed of a suffering brother or sister, no matter what the malady might be. Without murmur or complaint he always went and did what he could to bring relief to those in distress. To my personal knowledge, I have known him to go when called, when it seemed to me he should have been excused under the circumstances from going. Other men would have asked to be excused, but Brother Heman went without a murmur or complaint and found joy in the service he was able to render suffering humanity.

As a gospel preacher he had few equals in the church—a clear, logical reasoner who always gave his audiences food for thought. A short time before his death he spoke on "Love." One of the statements made by him on that occasion, I shall not forget, wherein he stated: "There is only one thing greater than love and that is, the object loved." This statement is a sample of his clearness as expressed in all his sermons.

His faith in the gospel never wavered. The last words I ever heard from him in this life was a testimony of its divinity. As some of his close personal friends were leaving the room after having discussed certain features of church work, he made the following statement: "It matters not what happens to me. The gospel is true. If I know anything, I know that."

Coming as it did in the very sunset of his eventful life, it is a closing benediction of the work he had been doing for so many years. A testimony that will ring in memory's ears by those who heard this dying man's statement of his abiding confidence in the work for which he gave his life. Surely that testimony was given after years of sober thought and experience in the great latter-day work; made in a time when no doubt he felt he would soon be called to stand before the great Judge to answer for his conduct and that which he offered to his fellow men here in this life. Yet without any hesitation he left that testimony of his fidelity to the cause of Christ, which he so dearly loved, and for which he labored so zealously to establish.

My knowledge of him as an individual entitles me to say that he was a man who was devoted to his family. He loved them tenderly and with that fatherly affection that would endear them to him. His companion was almost idolized by him. She was the constant object of his love. Never was a family more dearly loved by husband and father than his.

In his death the church here on earth has been made poorer, but the "church triumphant" has been made richer by his passing. His place will be hard to fill. The life he lived while here will serve to give courage and fortitude to those who are left to battle in the affairs of men.

A good and noble man has gone to his well-earned reward. May we profit by his many virtues and be permitted to obtain the crown of life at the end of the race, is our earnest prayer.

L. G. HOLLOWAY.

The Bishopric

Advocate for 1919

"Every Member a Tithe Payer"

As a branch officer God has placed upon you the responsibility of seeing that the members do their duty. Have you acquitted yourself by encouraging all to have their names appear on the tithing books?

Brother branch president, can you say that your branch is 100 per cent tithe payers?

Why not work to that end?

A Testimony

Many times I have had it in mind to write about the goodness of our heavenly Father, and of the wonderful work which is sent to the earth for the last time by an angel. (Revelation 14:6.)

I am thankful the Lord found me, and that I am one of his. I cannot praise his name enough for the wonderful way in which he has led me, both before I knew anything about the gospel, and since I have obeyed his commandment.

In 1869, when I was in the army of my native country, serving the king (as we say), I was saved from a burning building in a way I could not understand. But after I had obeyed the gospel, I found God's promise to his children is that he will bring all things to their remembrance, and I now feel sure that he sent an angel to save me.

I was one of fifty-five soldiers who were sleeping in a large barn, and when I awakened there was fire all around me, and my comrades who slept on either side were all walking out of the burning building, thinking that I was with them. I found that there were no doors or windows on the side of the burning building where I was, but I was saved, and by a power greater than that of man.

Again, in the year 1884, in March, I was crossing the ocean from Liverpool, England, to America, on the boat Illinois. A terrible storm came on us, and we were seventeen days going from Liverpool to Philadelphia. When we were about half way across the ocean, one night I saw a very brilliant light and a voice spoke good things to me and told me the day and hour I would be in my home near Weston, Iowa. I did not believe the word spoken to me—that it would take two weeks to reach my home. But now I find that the One who spoke to me there was He who spoke as man never spoke.

So after forty years in this glorious work, there is nothing to say against it. There is nothing to take from it, and nothing to add to it. But it is our duty to do and say all the good about it we can. If we live and do as we are commanded, it will bring us eternal salvation—and many glad hours while preparing for this condition.

So all who are enlisted in this glorious work, let us try to live the life God would have his Saints live, and not follow after the world, but rather do as Paul says in Hebrews 13:21. The Scriptures say: "He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son." So let us try and not give up. The race is soon run, and our Savior's coming is nearer than many believe. God help us all to watch and pray.

So after having been a soldier for four years in Europe, and after this, for over forty years a soldier in the army of the Lord, I bid you all farewell.

Your brother in the gospel,

PETER ANDERSEN.

"I Admired Him as a Man of God"

I know of no person's death that touched me and wounded my spirit like that of Heman C. Smith. His life needs no eulogy from me, but I loved and admired him as a man of God and as a true friend of mine. I consider him as a stalwart soldier for Christ. I have known the most of his life. I have labored with him in the mission field and found him safe as a minister, clean in his private and public teachings and ministrations, kind and forbearing with the erring, and unflinching in his defense of the truth. In his death the church militant loses one of its ablest soldiers, but the church triumphant receives a welcome guest to the "feast of fat things for the righteous prepared." In his death I lose a true and generous friend. May God comfort his widow and children, is the humble, earnest prayer of,

CHARLES DERRY.

WOODBINE, IOWA, April 30.

Beautiful Lamoni

The 11th of March I left Independence to attend General Conference. After spending seven weeks here I am delighted with the town and its residents. I met some noble Saints, namely, Sister Doctor Greer, Sister Columbus Scott, Sister Nelson, Brother and Sister Williams, who have charge of Liberty Home which is a beautiful place, at one time Brother Joseph's home. There is a fine life-size painting framed and hanging on the wall. What a nice home for those occupying rooms there—every comfort provided.

Rosehill Cemetery, what a lovely place for the city of the dead!

The old folks home is a fine brick structure nicely arranged for comfort and peace for aged Saints. Sister Dancer is in charge.

The Herald Office and high school building are fine institutions. And Graceland, a noble and grand institution from which many noble young women and men have gone out, competent to fill good and useful positions, thankful for such privileges. I have a friend, a young lady, getting a fine education in music and she will soon have accomplished all necessary to complete and fit herself to take her work and compete with the best musicians. There is where one can grow in grace and beauty and accomplish a work that will place us on a higher plane which should be the aim of all the rising generation. Oh, how beautiful is this stake of Zion that is the center of it! The pretty brick church stands on the corner of a lovely shady lawn or park on a green grassy slope, the building being on the higher ground. Lamoni is my ideal of a town.

The lay of the land, the residences far enough apart to have a fine breathing space of pure air, a pretty flower garden, and also there is garden room, all this makes it ideal. Beautiful shade and roomy lawns. I saw a large vacant lot with fine pine trees and a lovely cluster of blooming purple lilacs, another yard with a large cluster of pink flowering almond; it was truly a pretty sight. Who would not enjoy living in a town like this? 'Tis nature's own.

The residences are nicely situated, dotting the hills of green carpets. Then such fine views, looking out over town and country. Then the good spirit that seems to prevail, the sociability of the people. There are many things beautiful about this town which will cause the lover of nature to exclaim, "O beautiful Lamoni!"

I heard a noble sermon at Liberty Home last evening. Brother Frank Almond was the speaker. How I enjoyed the meeting. Surely he will accomplish a good work and I believe will be rewarded for the sacrifices he is making.

I am truly thankful for health and strength and for many blessings in this glorious gospel. I am more desirous of doing something to forward this grand work, let those drop out of it who will, even if the whole quorums of leadership should deny it, I am sure the work is true. There is no doubt in my mind. Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, I am,

Your sister,

M. LUCY WOODFORD.

GRACELAND COLLEGE, LAMONI, IOWA, May 1, 1919.

Editors Herald: One of the students has just paid a little visit to my room. Since his aims and ideals are so characteristic of the student body, I will tell you some of them. He is here for the sole purpose of preparing himself for the most efficient work in the church. He spoke of preparing to become an instructor in the great university into which Graceland is merging, and of taking his place in a foreign mission field. It seems very proper that the missionary and educational arms of the church should work together.

A college debating team, made up of Brethren Lonzo Jones, Daniel Needham, and David Hopkins, is going to lock horns in a friendly debate to-morrow evening with the embryonic ministers of Simpson College. [Later: The decision in the debate was in favor of the Graceland team.—EDITORS.] The topic under discussion is whether state control of education would be beneficial or not. Although the opposing team will probably be about two years older than ours, we confidently bid our men Godspeed. We are justly proud of our athletic and debating record for the year. It requires no great stretch of the imagination to picture these trained debaters nobly and humbly defending the cause we all hold so dear.

The dominant tone of the prayer service in the college chapel last evening was one of reconsecration. Professor R. V. Hopkins presided, Brother Lonzo Jones assisted. How beautiful it is when instructor and student are bound together by that love that makes sacrifice a pleasure. A goodly portion of the Spirit was with us from the beginning of the service. Those who leave the halls of Graceland may forget some of the facts learned in the classes but they can never forget the prayer services. One of our fair young students, Miss Alice Wixom, of El Centro, California, was baptized by her uncle, Elder G. H. Wixom, at the close of conference. She was confirmed at the prayer service by Elders R. V. Hopkins and Ray Whiting. We welcome her as our sister.

I received a letter the other day from the home of Elder Samuel Pope, president of the branch at New Westminster, British Columbia, asking how I enjoyed my first General Conference. I met many of the "dignitaries" of the church. I do not think that I will ever forget my meeting with President F. M. Smith. As he warmly shook hands with me and took the time in the stress of business to be sociable there welled up in my being a feeling of great love and admiration for him, and the feeling of pride that we had so strong and noble a man to lead God's church in these troublesome times. We can truly sing with feeling, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet." As a result of the conference it appears that the church has leaped ahead more than ten years. Zion is being redeemed. The work is progressing much faster than before. I sometimes ask myself: "Can I keep up?" This is the hastening time. We have been told that all that can be shaken will be shaken. Some of us say that we know that this gospel is true. Let us act as if we knew it. Do we know that the temporal law of the church is true? Would we enjoy being in Zion if we held back and let others purchase the lands to make redemption possible? May we stand firm for that which we know is true. If the gospel is worth anything it is worth all the energy we have.

Sincerely,
F. V. ELLIOTT.

LOGAN, IOWA, April 23, 1919.

Editors Herald: The Latter Day Saint church was the center of attraction here Sunday morning, when the glee club, composed of twenty-two voices, under direction of Miss Ollie Derry and Mrs. Rose Adams, gave the cantata, "Christ is risen." The church was profusely decorated, green and white being the color scheme; the attendance was from Logan, its vicinity, and as far east as Persia. Though every available seat was taken, chairs were used in the aisles, yet a number stood during the exercises.

True, the greater number of the glee club are in their teens, but they held the undivided attention of those present from the beginning to the close of the program. A large and appreciative audience greeted the Logan club when it gave the cantata at Woodbine at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon, and the club was likewise complimented when it repeated the Sunday program at Magnolia, at the Latter Day Saint church, Tuesday evening. The words and music of the cantata are by Carrie B. Adams, and are of high standard.

Religio organizations of Woodbine, Pisgah, Magnolia, Missouri Valley, Logan, and other towns of the Little Sioux District are fortunate in having so many members of musical and literary inclinations and ability; it has been demonstrated that greater interest in Sunday school, Religio, and church affairs may be created and maintained by the well-directed use of such talent.

CHARLES L. CROW.

ROCKVILLE, MISSOURI, April 27, 1919.

Editors Herald: Our branch is located far from everywhere, and it is indeed good to have some one from the other branches with us. We have had Brother Robert Oehring, and he has given us some wonderful thoughts, and if we were all as spiritual as he is this would be a wonderful world. He is getting old in years and has had great experiences in life.

Our Sunday school has an enrollment of about thirty. They have put most all the work on me since I have become a Sunday school worker. I am only twenty years of age and feel the responsibility resting on me. My only wish is that there were some one here my age to help me with the Sunday school, that we might have a better one. I get very blue at times when I have no one to work with, but I think the Lord knows best, and press on. I wish I could impress it on the minds of all the young that the harder they work the more they will rejoice in the great work. I can testify that such is the case with me.

Brother Keir gives us some beautiful thoughts, and I agree with him in regard to the theaters. I believe if a person is interested enough in the work he will not have to hunt for a change of amusement, but try to advance the work, and I believe you will get enough joy out of that without taking from the world. I presume that some are different from others, but I never did like the shows. Perhaps it is because some are permitted to go to such things when they are young, and the desire to go grows on them. Do we, as young people of God, realize the great responsibility that is resting upon us? I realize it more every day and I know there is a great work to be done, not only in the old country but here at home. I know this is the greatest work that has ever been started or will be started.

Just stop and think for a moment and see what we are here on earth for and how thankful we should be for his watchcare over us. Think of the nations that have been destroyed by the great war just past. People complain about hard times. If we were in a condition of some of the people across the great deep, we would have something to complain about. I do not believe that God wants a people who are not thankful for what they have. We know not what hour we will pass from this life. We should thank God every night for his watchcare over us and that he has allowed us to live another day.

I have a brother in France and has been ever since August, and I pray that he may soon return to God's country, for he will be a great help to me in my work, I know.

May we have God's blessing with us all the time and not stop with what we have but go on with God's work, and in my weak way I will do what I can. May we have each other's prayers.

CLIVE H. HEATH.

POND CREEK, OKLAHOMA, April 23, 1919.

Editors Herald: You will find inclosed five dollars for tithing. I only wish it were more. I don't have the opportunity to send very much, nor very often.

The elder which Brother Frederick sent here from conference came, and administered to me. I was blessed very much. My ears are better, and the other pain is also diminished considerably. I thank the Saints and these brethren especially, very much.

His coming took me so by surprise that I hardly realized it until after he was gone. Again I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may be healed of my troubles, and be well again that I may be able to see more of the Saints and be of help to others to come into the true church of Christ. Please pray for my husband also. I am the only Saint here and wish there were more near. I have not been to our church for about ten years. I have lost a good part of the faith I had then, but I pray and ask you to pray, that I may receive it all back again. I want to so live that I may, even if I do not have the pleasure of attending the services of the church.

The elders are welcome to come here. If any of the ministry will come to Pond Creek and phone A. V. Archer's, from there, I will come after them in our Ford.

We are building a new house and will have room for any of the Saints who will be kind enough to come to see us. I do not know the name of the elder that came from El Reno, nor any Saints in Enid, but would be glad to talk with a Latter Day Saint once more. Would be glad to hear from some of the Saints, especially from Brother and Sister Chase, whom I knew years ago, when I was Nettie Buell, in Oregon.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. A. V. ARCHER.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, May 5, 1919.

Editors Herald: Since last report the membership here has been saddened by the death of Brother William H. Schweers, who for a number of years rendered humble, faithful service to the branch as presiding deacon. His death came on April 16, after many months of severe suffering, and while his loss is deplored, surely the change must have come as a welcome relief to him.

Our pastor, Brother D. J. Williams, was called by wire the last day of General Conference to preach at the funeral of the infant son of Brother and Sister Charles Stevenson, Ferris, Illinois. The service was held Sunday, April 20, and the morning Easter service here was in charge of Brother James McIntire.

The sacrament service Sunday morning, May 4, was of an especially high order. The attendance was not quite so large as usual, owing to inclement weather, but the feeling was good throughout, and messages of assurance and promise were given to two of the membership; one being to Brother Albert Kunz, who has just returned from the service in France, and who related evidences of the Lord's protecting care amidst the dangers of battle. We rejoice in his safe return.

Preparations are under way for the observance of Mother's Day and Children's Day by the Sunday school, and the general work of each auxiliary is progressing.

CORRESPONDENT.

ADIN, CALIFORNIA, March 26, 1919.

Editors Herald: Sometimes I find it rather hard to keep faith in the church, and things look rather blue. At one time there was a nice little branch of the church here, but now most all the Saints have moved away, and a few have died. Although the influenza had quite a hold here for the past four or five months, no Saints have died with it, that I know of. My father's family and our family have escaped it so far.

We have only heard three sermons in the last four or five years. Brother S. M. Reiste was here last summer; also the summer before, but no great interest was manifested. All our church officers are gone with the exception of the president. The only way we keep in touch with the church work is through the papers we take—SAINTS' HERALD, Zion's Ensign, etc.

We have had an exceptionally good winter for this country. Not over six inches of snow until this month, when it was nearly two feet deep.

We hope to be able to share in the glorious time promised the Saints if they are faithful.

Your sister in Christ,

KATIE E. GUTZMAN.

[Excerpted from an Australian letter]:

The returning of our soldiers from the "infected Europe" seems to be a continuous menace to our becoming "clean." One does not know what to do for the best. Perils and hindrances seem to increase. We are facing conditions new to us out of which anything bad may evolve. Hitherto, we have been a long way outside Old World influences; now we are being drawn out of our long isolation into what we hardly know.

The people generally care little for religion, which creates an environment quite unfavorable to progress and piety.

They are also hopelessly divided into hostile camps vieing with each other in hatred. Every move is watched, and political wire pulling by both Roman and Protestant is rampant. Romans seem to get most of the political plums. Most people consider that the labor party is dominated by Roman influence. The great mass of labor is socialistic and will not listen to anything that claims to be a church. They are long since divorced from so-called Christianity. It is only the middle and upper classes that keep the churches going, probably for social reasons. In this chaos it is hard to make one's voice heard. Our efforts seem like a drop in the ocean. Warnings against Bolshevism are being issued by newspapers. Theaters, hotels, and public schools and libraries are closed indefinitely. Nonemployment is thus becoming a menace. Statistical reports show that we are improving in health from influenza, but the end is not yet. I notice America had its turn. We all long for the time when Zion shall be redeemed.

SOUTH BRISBANE, QUEENSLAND, AUSTRALIA,

March 9, 1919.

Editors Herald: The work in the cause of the gospel and Christ still rolls on slowly but surely. A few are gathered into the fold now and again. About February 1, 1919, Elder Nixon baptized two souls and I baptized one, making three more to our number here. I hear from Kingarcy that to-day there is to be a baptism there.

Trusting this will find you all well in body and spirit and the kingdom of God will increase in the unity of the spirit of peace and good will in Christ our Lord.

Your brother in Christ,

R. C. SCHULZE.

[A brother writes from Australia]:

In continuing my weekly correspondence, I am pleased to say there is no increase of the influenza epidemic in this state, while in Victoria, I see by the daily, it is increasing with alarming rapidity, 2,400 cases and 158 deaths.

What with industrial troubles, sicknesses, etc., of one kind or another the world seems to be in a terrible turmoil. Men's hearts are surely failing them for fear.

It is truly the hour of God's judgment, for after your testimony cometh these things upon the inhabitants of the earth, the Lord hath said. Still men and women go on following their own desires, wearying themselves, many of them, to commit iniquity, and consider they are having a good time. However, we are doing our level best to lift up the warning voice to men and women, to flee from the wrath to come, to seek for the old paths wherein is the good way and thereby receive peace and rest to their souls, but some, like the people of old, say, we will not walk therein.

Last evening I spoke to a fine, interested audience on continuity and uniformity of law, showing that the same unchangeable law lies across the threshold of both worlds, hence only one way of entering, and after entering, our liberty is only guaranteed as long as we keep the law of the kingdom, but if we neglect, how can we escape the result of our acts?

Little Sioux and Gallands Grove Districts will hold a joint reunion in the beautiful park in Dow City, Iowa, August 22 to 31, 1919. Tents may be rented at the following prices: 8 by 10, $2.25; 10 by 12, $2.75; 12 by 14, $3.80, each having 3-foot wall; 12 by 14 having 6-foot wall, $5.40. Canvas cots, 2½ by 6½ feet, at 40 cents. An additional charge of 25 cents will be made for setting up tents. A dining tent in charge of E. R. Butterworth, Dow City, will be operated on the grounds; also a confectionery stand in connection, in charge of the reunion committee. The First Presidency will provide an excellent corps of able speakers. Auxiliary and recreational work will be a very important feature each afternoon, except Saturdays and Sundays. All orders for tents should be forwarded promptly to F. R. Schafer, secretary, Denison, Iowa. Amos Berve, chairman, Logan, Iowa; J. L. Butterworth, treasurer, Dow City, Iowa.

The Bishopric

To the Saints of Oklahoma, Spring River District, and All Whom This Notice May Concern: This will serve to give notice that I have resigned as acting bishop over the above-named territory, having placed my resignation with the Presiding Bishopric, and I request the Saints to faithfully continue to place their tithes and offerings with the agents as heretofore.

I am continually reminded of the advancing weight of years, and believing it best for the general interest of our work, I feel that the time is at hand when the young and more vigorous should take up the work in this splendid field, and I have unbounded confidence in our Presiding Bishopric to provide such changes as may seem good.

After eighteen years of service, which have been gladly given without money or price, the Saints have endeared themselves to my heart, and now as I lay off this part of my armor, I can say your God is my God and his people are my people. I wish to say, too, that Sister Short has labored sometimes beyond her strength to see that the work of our office was not wanting, and the family allowances not slack in going forward; and many times, when funds were not on hand, our own account has been invaded and the means sent forward to meet the demands.

From all agents, solicitors, and the Presiding Bishopric I have received the greatest kindness, and they have proven themselves men of God, and I esteem it a duty, also a pleasure, to offer to them and to the Saints my heartfelt thanks for their loyalty to God and his work; for the Master has said of his people, "By their works ye shall know them."

I trust that I may be able to meet many of you from time to time, and I commend you to God and his divine grace.

ELLIS SHORT,

Bishop of Oklahoma and Spring River District.

Pastoral

I wish to send greeting to the Saints of the Arkansas and Louisiana mission. Having been appointed to labor with them, I pledge my best and all to make my labors a success, and as one of our main duties is to "warn our neighbors," I solicit cooperation in this direction.

Our faith in the church and all its departments is sincere, and our confidence in the men of the church is abiding. This and a practical observation of God's commandments form the only gateway to success. May the spirit of the Master actuate us to a realization of our highest ambitions.

I will labor under the direction of J. T. Riley, Pittsburg, Kansas, 109 West Adams Street. Write your needs to him and he can economically distribute our services to the best interests of all in these parts.

My field address will be Hot Springs, Arkansas, 714 Gulpha Street.
F. A. ROWE.

To the Saints of the Eastern Iowa District; Greeting: After several months' absence from the district, I have returned at least for a while and am now at your service. I will endeavor to render such service as time and opportunity will permit. For any assistance which I may be able to render, please write me at Muscatine, Iowa, in care of Elder C. G. Dykes.

Your servant in the Master's cause,

E. R. DAVIS.

Addresses Wanted

Anyone knowing the address of any of the following members of the Oskaloosa Branch will confer a favor by writing to the branch secretary, R. J. Farthing, Oskaloosa, Iowa: Mrs. Sarah H. Calvert, Mrs. Mary J. Stoner, Alta Hoadly, Mary M. Rhodes, Asa F. Doan, Louvina Ballanger.

Book Reviews

THE OPPORTUNITY OF THE CHURCH.—By Robert Speer, The McMillan Company, 1919. Price 60 cents, 111 pages, 12mo. It speaks of the present responsibility of the church. Its aim is to promote good will and earnest purpose in meeting the problems before us. It includes brief consideration of some dangers and duties of the present; the present business of the church; the effect of the war; the duty of a larger Christian cooperation, and finally, war aids and foreign missions.

Our Departed Ones

WORSENCROFT.—John Thomas Worsencroft was born December 2, 1848, at Bollington, Cheshire, England. Married Martha Johnson, March 30, 1872; 2 children were born to them. Baptized April 9, 1893, and was a faithful member. Died March 25, 1919. Funeral from the Latter Day Saint church in Little Sioux, D. A. Hutchings in charge. Sermon by Joseph Lane. Interment in Little Sioux Cemetery.

TURPEN.—Glaud, eldest son of Elder M. M. and Mary E. Turpen, was born near Pleasanton, Iowa, July 7, 1878. Died October 18, 1918, at his home, Mount Ayr, Iowa, of pneumonia resulting from influenza. He married Miss Nellie M. Spencer, March 3, 1901. To this union three children were born, all of whom with their mother mourn his departure. Memorial services were held on the occasion of his mother's funeral.

EVANS.—Henry R. Evans died December 29, 1918, at his home in Malad City, Idaho, after an illness of a few weeks following an attack of influenza. Born in Wales in 1843. Married Margaret Williams in 1863. They came to America the same year, settling in Brigham City, Utah. Came to Malad in 1866. Baptized in 1870. Leaves to mourn, 2 sons and 2 daughters, his wife and 2 daughters having preceded him. Interment in the city cemetery. Services in charge of E. E. Richards.

CARPENDER.—Visa Pearl Carpender was born June 20, 1883, near Cameron, Missouri; baptized July 1, 1894; died April 29, 1919. Leaves father, mother, three children, and one brother. She was a noble Saint, loved by all who knew her, and although she suffered much in the last weeks of her sojourn here, all who came to call were greeted with a smile and pleasant word. Funeral service in the church in charge of Thomas Fiddick, sermon by Roy S. Budd; interment in Graceland Cemetery, Cameron, Missouri.

JACOBSON.—Andrew Jacobson was born in Veile, Denmark, June 24, 1835; grew to manhood there; married Christina Kruse. To them was born one daughter, Mrs. W. E. Baldwin. Came to America in 1859; lived in Utah until 1865, when they moved to Missouri. Baptized in 1864. Died April 16, 1919. He has contributed liberally to spiritual, social, and financial affairs of the church. Leaves one daughter to mourn, 7 grandchildren, and 7 great-grandchildren. Funeral at the Latter Day Saint church in Guilford, in charge of W. B. Torrance, sermon by E. S. Fannon.

SAYLOR.—Samuel Saylor passed peacefully to his rest March 18, 1919, at his home on College Street, Fonthill, Ontario. He was a stanch member of the church, one of the mainstays of the Welland Branch, faithful to the last. Ordained a priest in 1914, an elder in 1917. Forty years of age. Leaves to mourn, his wife and six children. Service at his home, sermon by F. C. Baldwin, of Welland, assisted by Royden Burnhardt. Interment at Armitage Cemetery, Fonthill.

ELLIOTT.—Ethel F., daughter of William H. and Ellen N. Kelley, born at Kirtland, Ohio, March 22, 1894, passed away at Lamoni, Iowa, March 29, 1919. She was baptized in childhood. Completing her education at Independence Sanitarium in June, 1915, as a nurse she served the sick and afflicted. Married S. C. Elliott, at Denver, Colorado, July 19, 1918. Some months before her demise Ethel was found in delicate health. Continuing critical she finally lost prematurely her baby boy, her spirit the next day following into the beyond. Father, mother, 3 brothers passed before. Husband, 2 brothers, 4 sisters, other relatives survive. Services from Saints' church, Lamoni; sermon by F. M. McDowell; interment in Rosehill.

TURPEN.—Mary E. McNeil was born near Davis City, Iowa, June 20, 1863; died April 10, 1919, at her home near Pleasanton, Iowa, of bronchial pneumonia, after an illness of two weeks. She married Elder M. M. Turpen, September 17, 1876, and to them five children were born, all of whom are living save Glau, who recently preceded her to the "farther shore." Sister Turpen sacrificed much for the gospel's sake, remaining at home and caring for her family that her faithful husband might go forth upon his errand of mercy. This was in a time when it meant much to do this kind of work as the church was not then able to support the families of its missionaries as well as now. But she was one of earth's faithful ones and has earned the reward of the noble of earth. J. F. Garver had charge of the obsequies both at the home, church, and cemetery, J. W. Wight preaching the sermon. A capacity house at her funeral signified the esteem in which she was held. The Eastern Star fraternity held the rites of their order over the remains at the close of the sermon.

NORRIS.—William R. Norris died at Peoria, Illinois, April 4, 1919, aged 46 years, 7 months. Born in Kewanee, Illinois, and lived there for more than half of his life. In June, 1904, married Miss Louise B. Suman, of Moline, Illinois, who only lived for ten months. After her death, Brother Norris came to Peoria, Illinois, to assist in church work. Here, on November 28, 1906, he was united in marriage with Miss Flora B. Norris. To them has been born one son, now eleven years old. Both wife and son survive, and together with the father, Henry Norris, of Kewanee, Illinois, four brothers, James and Richard of Kewanee, Illinois, John, of Oklahoma, Doctor Fred, army of occupation in Germany, with many other relatives and friends, all mourn his early death. Brother Norris had been a member of the church since early youth, and for many years had held the priesthood. He has been in charge of the Peoria Branch for thirteen years, and was much beloved by the Saints for his many excellent qualities. His illness, being cancer of the stomach, extended over a period of more than two years. During that time God's power was manifest in a remarkable way in relieving him of much of the pain and distress incident to that malady. Scores of friends were raised up to minister to his needs. The Saints of Peoria Branch and of the district were more than kind in giving assistance, so that all that love could do was done. He was very patient, and his patience and resignation bore a strong testimony to those who witnessed that the gospel which he had believed was indeed true. The funeral was April 6, and was conducted by F. G. Pitt of Joliet, Illinois, assisted by J. G. Cole of Peoria, Illinois. It was largely attended both by the Saints and by friends. The Odd Fellows assisted with their ritual at the grave.

SACRAMENTO WANTS MISSION PAPER

We are informed that at a business meeting of the branch on April 2, the Sacramento Branch unanimously voted in favor of a periodical especially for missionary work, likely some such paper as has been proposed in these columns in the recent past.

A CORPS OF SPECIALISTS.

"We hope soon to have a corps of specialists in the Des Moines District who will be competent to advise on every department of church work," concludes R. J. Farthing, president of the Des Moines District Religio, in an assignment in the May Des Moines District Dispatch. His method is to assign a special topic to a certain person, furnish literature and personal assistance, and expect that person to qualify in that line especially. Such subjects as library work, programs, organized classes, social and recreational activities, etc., are included, and the ones indicated are to give a ten-minute talk on the subject at the coming district convention. This looks like an excellent plan and should give the results desired. The literature necessary can be had from the heads of the general organizations of Sunday school and Religio.

Individual is not a good synonym for the word person, the dictionaries indicate. To say, "I saw an individual coming up the street" is a violation of good usage.

The bore is usually considered a harmless creature, of that class of irrational bipeds who hurt only themselves.—Maria Edgeworth.

GRACELAND WINS HONORS

The debating record of Graceland College is being well sustained this year. A team of three men from our college went to Indianola and debated Simpson College, of that place, on the evening of the 2d, and were given the decision by Professor Ryan, head of the department of public speaking at Grinnell. He said the constructive argument and delivery of our lads was superior. They affirmed federal control of education. Graceland has a record of five victories, with but one defeat. Next year Simpson comes to Lamoni to debate our team.

From the Wheeling Daily News of April 23, we learn that the students of Bethany College are objecting very strenuously to compulsory military education. It seems that to avoid such training they have withdrawn from their classes. An appeal has been made to the board of trustees, but at our latest advice, nothing definite had been done, as the board was inclined to insist that the students recognize the constituted authority.

The basis of the objection is that even during the war the Government did not resort to compulsory military training in the schools and does not now. Why then should the school? Many of the students are theological students.

It will be interesting to see how the matter results. There is no doubt that the students in good faith object to compulsory military training and are trying quietly to make their objection felt, while the authorities of the college are inclined to treat it as an open revolt.

Sister Abbie Trundy, of Penobscot, Maine, requests the prayers of all the Saints in behalf of her son, Gardner Hatch, that he may be healed of tuberculosis, if it be God's will, that he may be spared to do much service for the Master.

Large audiences are being attracted at the West Side Branch in Chicago, where Brother Augustine Dwyer is now engaged in a series of lectures. The first Monday evening of his engagement was devoted entirely to the priesthood of Chicago. By special request he gave one hour's talk on how to read the Scriptures, with some instructions on how to improve the voice. Instructions to the priesthood upon helpful, educational subjects Brother Dwyer has added to his lecture work. This is done in a systematic way. After each instruction, twenty minutes are given for the asking of questions. This work of Brother Dwyer is awakening a response in the priesthood in many parts of the church, and must result in good. Our men are receiving benefit from the brother's years of study and experience. A brother in New England writes: "I have never had anything benefit me more in my work in the ministry than Brother Dwyer's addresses to the priesthood in Fall River and in Brockton." He is being advertised for similar work at the Minnesota reunion.

W. S. McBurney, Santa Fe Baggage Room, Dodge City, Kansas, wants to know if there are any Saints near there. He has been transferred to that point from Colorado Springs, Colorado. He is night watchman and clock man at the round house.

But in the ordinary circumstances of life this boasted virtue of contentment, so far from being laudable, would be an evil of the first magnitude. It would be, in fact, nothing less than a triggering of the wheels of all enterprise, a cry of "stand still" to the progress of the whole social world.—William Matthews.

Anyone Willing to Work

even a little in telling neighbors and friends of this marvelous work and a wonder, can accomplish most profitable results.

Get a Dollar Library, become acquainted with the 34 tracts and the price list in it. Know the contents, the style, the special aim of each. Then see that others know the message of salvation you have heard.

This is the special mission of the gospel literature workers, but anyone can help in some way. It is important work and should be done right—but it should by all means be done.

In most places the boards are organized to carry on this highly-important work. If there is no such board in your community, yet you have a branch, Sunday school, or Religion, let us know.

Where boards are organized you may help them very much by your service and moral support as well as patronage.

One important feature of such a board's activities is a campaign to secure subscriptions to the church periodicals. It is a real accommodation to the Saints to have some one call and take care of the details for them, suggesting what is available, the offers to be had, the announcements being made, etc. In places where there is a book agent, work with him in this regard. If you want information along this line, write either the Herald Office or the Ensign Office and it will be forthcoming.

You have been warned: warn your neighbor. Do you have one of our instruction leaflets, sent free?

PREPARATION FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS

The matter of preparing for foreign missions is another instance in which Graceland is trying to be of service to the church. One year's preparation would give no more than a basis to overcome some of the preliminary difficulties. The Lord can and will inspire our minds in the understanding of a foreign tongue. We have known this to occur many times, the gift of tongues in speaking when needed, and also in studying in school.

There have occurred instances also, where men have spoken in a language unknown to them, but which was the tongue of the country. This certainly would seem to be within the possibility of this wonderful gift of tongues. Still the glory of God is intelligence; it is in the exercise of intelligence that we should prepare ourselves for the best possible service, and make what preliminary preparations we can. There is still abundant room for divine direction and inspiration.

It should be noted that those who will be enrolled for this course will be selected by the general church authorities. The preliminary clerical work will be done at the college, and necessary information gathered for the convenience of the general church authorities. Some have already been designated, by what has been inspiration to the general church authorities, calling and appointing certain ones to go on this foreign work. Others no doubt will be so designated.

It by no means follows that because one is chosen to enroll in this class that he or she is thereby selected for missionary appointment. It may be that but few will be appointed to foreign missions. It may be that a large part of the class will be so appointed. That will have to be determined when the appointments are made according to the voice of inspiration and of wisdom at that time.

The work is such as to fit one for better service wherever he may go or be sent, on a foreign mission, or on a local mission; or whether some are afterwards released to engage in other work.

Some object to hygiene, sanitation, and nursing. We have met some such people. We must not lose sight of the fact that the laying on of hands with the prayer of faith to heal the sick is a declaration of a great therapeutic principle, but it is especially necessary that those who go upon foreign work should have some training in sanitation, in personal hygiene, and the like, as such training, excellent wherever one's lot may be cast, is necessary there.

We have long thought that the time would come that the Lord would require from us more of personal hygiene. It is the only way in which we can hope for permanent health. The administration of the elders may heal the sick, but how many times has it been our mournful duty to witness those who have been healed by the administration at once relapsing again, because of lack of personal hygiene, lack of proper nursing, lack of proper personal care and wisdom. It forms a very necessary and proper basis for the spiritual administration.

The importance of this foreign mission work is not exaggerated. According to our duty under the word of God, we should move forward more energetically under his inspiration and divine direction; and we should make at least this much as minimum preparation for that work.

The general church authorities will indicate one or more countries, and will determine the customs, languages, etc., to be studied. The business world is applying itself to this study for the sake of American commerce. We should do so for the sake of our high calling as a church.

Graceland College has been designated as the place where this preparation is to be made. To assist in preparing for work in the church is to her a privilege of special service.

This work, however, will be more immediately under the direction of the general church authorities as to the language or languages studied, and what shall be the general nature of the course, and those who shall be chosen for enrollment this first year.

From those so chosen and admitted to the course, some will probably be selected a year or so later, for appointment to the foreign missionary work, as inspiration and wisdom may then direct the general authorities of the church.

THE HIGH SCHOOL EQUIVALENT

---

In the announcement of the special work to be taken up on behalf of foreign missions, one of the requirements of entrance to the course was high school work or its equivalent.

It will be noted that successful missionary work in this country is considered the best equivalent for high school education. Evidently there has been misunderstanding in some quarters concerning this feature. Some seem to think that by high school education or its equivalent, there is intended of necessity school work.

That is by no means the case. Nothing is more clearly recognized by the educational authorities of the church than the fact that some of the ablest men have been developed in work outside of the schoolroom. It is true of Herbert Spencer, in a scientific way. It is true of men like Heman C. Smith in the church. It is true of many others who did not develop to the extent of such men as these named. Education does not mean schooling and nothing else.

We are pleased to be able to submit the following extract from a personal letter from President George N. Briggs of Graceland College.

I would suggest, however, that the subject of the matter of education might well be touched upon, as that has been raised already in a number of cases. As you well know, the educational requirement is that of a high school education or the equivalent, and the best equivalent is successful home or missionary work in this country.

As a matter of fact, thousands of people in this country have the equivalent of a high school, college, or university education and have never studied in any of those institutions. The equivalent of a general education can of course be secured in various ways. The precept to "study all good books," if followed out, will give one the equivalent of the very best education possible.

A person may have the equivalent of a high school education as a result of his general experience as a business man, taking advantage of his opportunities to study, read, attend lectures, and discuss matters with those who are familiar with various problems of life.

He may secure the equivalent of a high school education by having taught school for a number of years and kept up with his profession by reading, attending summer schools, teachers' institutes, etc.

There are various other ways in which the equivalent of a high school education, a college or university education may be secured, but in the judgment of the general church authorities the best equivalent is successful home and missionary work.

The best cultural method we know of is the family life; meeting with people of broad culture. Another method, as indicated, is through reading and attending courses of lectures, even though scattered through years. Experience in business and in life is also of tremendous value.

Some are able to concentrate and continue their own personal study through many years, but these great souls are rare. But there are many others who through association, personal contact, and experience, reading books, attending lectures have the equivalent of a college training or more.

All of these are taken into consideration for the work of the church in general. All of these are taken into consideration for this special work of foreign missions.

But for the missionary work of the church, and for the foreign mission work in this instance in particular, successful missionary work is after all the best equivalent and is so recognized.

PRAYER IN THE CHURCH

---

In a recent number of the HERALD there appeared an article on prayer containing many excellent thoughts. It is by a man who has had long experience in different Christian church organizations and who for the past two years has been a member of this church.

It is refreshing to receive in this way what is for the greater part a criticism of one outside looking in. It will go to show how we look to others, and is worthy of serious thought. It is doubtless true that there is wide room for improvement, especially in public prayers.

Unfortunately in many branches public prayers are by a limited number of individuals and many of these present a rather narrowed scope. We are not as a people given to many great public prayers, but as a rule rather follow the admonition of the Master as set forth in the Sermon on the Mount:

But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut the door, pray to thy Father who is in secret; and thy Father who seeth in secret shall reward thee openly. But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the hypocrites do; for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking. Therefore be ye not like unto them; for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask him.—Matthew 6: 6-8, Inspired Translation.

In fact, the church rather discourages long public prayers and vain repetition. We do not believe that long prayers, repeatedly calling the name of the Lord, avail any more, if as much, as a humble, earnest prayer of few words, supported by that silent, continued praying, by day and by night, which is expressed by Paul in the first letter to the Thessalonians, as prayer without ceasing (1 Thessalonians 5:17), and expressed by the Master in the gospel of Luke, 21:36:

And what I say unto one, I say unto all, Watch ye therefore, and pray always, and keep my commandments, that ye may be counted worthy to escape all these things which shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man when he shall come clothed in the glory of his Father.

The word of God is full of admonitions to pray. He who would live in Christ's kingdom will not neglect these wonderful opportunities for communion with God.

But while we have not many long public prayers, nor prepared prayers to be printed and distributed, nor prayers composed long before hand, we have and have had many wonderful, deep, spiritual prayers as occasions require, both in priesthood meetings and also in the assembly of the Saints. As we write, the number of such public prayers, which come to mind, is very large.

Also we call to mind many earnest private prayers—prayers not only all night long, but some which have lasted for many days and nights, yet were not made public, and only a very few ever knew of them. Nor were these prayers for something that the petitioner desired to gain for himself or his family; they were deep devotional prayers for divine guidance in his service.

It is undoubtedly true that there is less of emotionalism in this church than in other churches. This is shown in the lesser display in that which is done to help the unfortunate in the slums of the city and elsewhere.

This is also because of the realization that something more than zeal is needed. We have known of efforts in the slums carried on in an emotive spirit doing much more harm than good. The glory of what was accomplished was spread broadcast in the papers and in the congregations conducting the revival. The evil that was done was not given the like publicity. Such efforts are often pathoscopic, if not pathologic or even pathogenic. Zeal and emotionalism is not enough. Zeal we should have. But to work with our heavenly Father in the saving of souls, much of wisdom is also needed.

We have, it is true, few millionaires who have prayed all night and then gone forth to tell the story of the Lord in the byways. But we have very many young men and young women, and older men and older women who have prayed long and then have given their all to go forth and carry the glad tidings of redemption to the world. It has taken earnest praying before the young man has gone forth without purse or scrip, before he has left his home folk and has gone into a strange land knowing not where he will lay his head; knowing not with what he will be fed.

It has taken long and earnest praying before some woman has given herself to support his life of sacrifice, and has stayed at home to manage the affairs of the family, knowing not, often, when or how they would be fed; erecting her home, even laying the foundation for the erection of the building, that would house that home.

It is true this praying has not been published. It is true that it is but rarely mentioned. But when critical comparisons are made it should not be overlooked.

We call to mind a brother who is but little given to public prayer or display, who upon a certain occasion was called upon for the benediction. The reverence, beauty, and simplicity of his prayer surprised many, but we were not surprised for we had stayed at his home and had seen the family altar. While we had not heard him pray there, since he extended what he believed to be a courtesy to a visitor, that night we had felt the great, deep peace of a holy place. We had found wherein dwelt the Spirit of God, for there was worship.

In the room where we slept, this spirit of peace and of devotion was very plain. We did not need to be told that it had been consecrated by many prayers, even though it was only a hired house, for he did not even own his home.

In the morning to the usual greeting, "Well, how did you rest?" we replied with something of the thought set forth above. He expressed no surprise, but merely answered: "Yes, this is where I prepare most of my sermons. I usually take my Bible to bed with me." In fact, he usually takes the word of God wherever he goes in a spiritual and a literal sense.

Another man was not one of outward show or pretense, but did much good quietly. How much will probably never be known until the books are opened. He concealed his good deliberately from others. We have never known him to pray in the public assembly of the Saints. But he never forgot his own morning and evening prayer, in his own closet, and on at least three occasions prayed most wonderfully. How many other times, none of his brethren knew, for his praying was done alone and rested between him and his heavenly Father. These few instances of a semipublic nature opened his heart and let the precious fragrance of many silent prayers be known.

These deep prayers were unselfish, even though in some there was a blessing asked for those near and dear to him. But it was with a devotion that he would give anything, anything the Lord desired, if only his will were made known.

Still another comes quickly to mind, of a man not known for his long prayers. In fact, we doubt if he ever prayed long at any time on his knees.

His oral prayers are earnest, full of confident faith, though short. His public prayers are simple and devoted, and with the priesthood at times of marked power and humility.

But he also goes aside to pray alone as he works, it may be in his office, it may be out cutting wood. He prays earnestly for light, for divine wisdom, and the Lord hears him and answers.

But he does not pray on another man's time. We have the story of a man who entered the ranks of the clergy, and one for whom he once worked remarked: "Yes, he's a pretty good man. But I remember when he worked for me, and he was sent out to milk the cows, or slop the hogs, or do some other chore, and he would kneel down and pray for an hour or two before attending to his chores. I did not mind him praying or offering long prayers, but I thought he might have done it on his own time." That is worth thinking of. We should take time to be holy, but we ought not to take somebody else's time, nor do we as a church do so.

But there comes to mind a host, all modest men and women who are not noted for their emotionalism nor for their public prayers, but whose faith and prayers are nevertheless sure. They go aside for silent communion with God.

It is true that one coming from the sectarian churches can very readily be misled, and would fail to hear those deep devotional prayers; prayers of great thanksgiving; prayers of deep thought; yes, and the prayer of communion with God. From observation, this latter prayer is by no means rare. The real prayer is the deep prayer of meditation and fellowship with God.

Prayer may be the heart's sincere desire spoken or unexpressed, but it is something more than that. It is more also than the prayer of thanksgiving, for it should rise to the height of being a communion with God. Our real prayers tend rather to meditation, to consideration, to thoughtfulness, and communion than they do to fanaticism or passion or emotionalism. Mere repetition profits but little. It is a theme well worthy of our best consideration.

Long prayers are in order in our secret closets, not in the public assembly; not even around the family altar; but when we are alone with our Father. Certainly circumstances will direct the length of public prayers or of the family prayers, and at times will justify something more than the usual short invocation or benediction. These are great and comparatively rare times. Wisdom must be justified of her children. But while we should have these periods of prayer, we should do so to the end that we may become more like him, and have in us fulfilled his great promise of his personal presence.

Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him.—John 14: 23.

Behold, I stand at the door, and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me.—Revelation 3: 20.

HOW SHALL THE CHURCH BUILDING BE USED?

---

(Synopsis of dedicatory sermon by President Elbert A. Smith, at Malvern Hill Church, Kansas City, Kansas, May 11, 1919.)

Text: Lord, I have loved the habitation of thy house, and the place where thine honor dwelleth.—Psalm 26: 8.

What is it to dedicate? To dedicate to God is to set a thing apart for his use and service. In effect, to-day, we say, "Lord, here is this church building. It represents the best that we can give at this time and in this place. Take it and use it for sacred purposes as may seem to thee best."

We might pause here to ask, What need has God for any house that we can build? The starry dome of heaven is his cathedral. Its aisles are the reaches of limitless space. His altar is everywhere. Wherever men or angels bow in prayer there is God's mercy seat.

Any house that we might build, no matter how pretentious, would in a way seem contemptible when mentioned in connection with God. It is the purpose that ennobles. We do not build with the idea that we are preparing a house for a homeless and vagabond deity. God does not need the house for himself. He will take it and use it for the salvation of men. Thus we become laborers together with him. We are builders with God.

To that purpose, then, the house is dedicated. In what ways may we expect God to use it?

I. FOR THE PREACHING OF THE GOSPEL

We might ask, why build another church in a city where there are already many churches? Their spires stud the skyline like exclamation points. Each one seems to say, This is the way toward heaven.

But we dedicate a church here that God may have a place for the preaching of that which we term "the restored gospel." Other pulpits are not open to that gospel. When I use the term "restored gospel" I use a term that opens up many lines of thought and is very pregnant with meaning for the Saints. I do not need to enlarge upon the theme to be understood.

For that gospel our fathers suffered martyrdom in an early day. Their bodies were buried in the old well at Haun's Mill. They were driven and

HOW MAY WE HAVE ZION?

(Sermon by Patriarch F. A. Smith, delivered at Independence, Missouri, January 26, 1919. Mrs. A. Morgan, reporter.)

We have a little statement found in the 19th chapter of Matthew, 16th verse, that I shall use as the basis of my thoughts this morning, changing the reading, or the wording, just a little. "And, behold, one came and said, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?" I am going to leave off eternal life, and substitute Zion, "that I may inherit Zion."

You may have heard my position on this before, but it will not hurt us to investigate it a little again; and when we talk about Zion we must recognize two particular features. It is a place or territory which has been established, clearly and distinctly; and while we say clearly and distinctly, we are conscious that there will be some who quibble over that, but they will quibble over most anything.

Some people are disposed to take in most too much territory, in my opinion, and I have reasons for believing that. When we contemplate the thought of the gathering of this people, of the establishing of Zion, of the redeeming of Zion, we surely cannot get the idea into our heads that the little handful of people represented by this church is expecting to redeem the whole United States at once. I don't know but I will be safe in making the declaration, If you will redeem Independence you have got a monstrous task on your hands. I could go further than that. I will bring it down closer than that. If you will redeem the Saints that live in the Stake of Independence, you have got a big task on your hands.

Now, I believe that we are perfectly safe in the thought that Zion as expressed here in this book as the place of gathering, is not so large as some have been desirous that we would make it. We cannot allow our desires to govern in some of these things. One of the things that we have got to learn, sooner or later, is that we must control our desires, and regulate them in harmony with what God has said was for our best good. That is a thing that we haven't yet learned. That is the thing that we must learn sooner or later; the sooner we learn it the better it will be for us; the quicker we will establish Zion, and the sooner we can say to the world, without any question and with demonstrative proof, that we are the people of God.

Now, we have but to turn to the Doctrine and Covenants, and we discover that it designates to us something in the nature of what may be called Zion. Turn to section 57, the place of Zion, in paragraph one:

Hearken, O ye elders of my church, saith the Lord your God, who have assembled yourselves together, according to my commandments, in this land which is the land of Missouri, which is the land which I have appointed and consecrated for the gathering of the saints; wherefore this is the land of promise, and the place for the city of Zion.

That's plain enough, isn't it? Oh, you say, that's all right for the city, but how about the balance of it? I am going to give all the balance of it pretty soon, and he gives us some details that will help us probably to a better understanding of this peculiar feature, for he not only tells us the county, but says something about some others, and we will gradually work our way towards that.

In section 64, paragraph 7, you will find another statement touching this same portion, and I want you to get this question:

Behold, the Lord requireth the heart and a willing mind; and the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days; and the rebellious shall be cut off out of the land of Zion, and shall be sent away, and shall not inherit the land; for, verily, I say that the rebellious are not of the blood of Ephraim, wherefore they shall be plucked out.

I need not read further. You may read it, if you wish. It will give you some good information, but here we have one of the requisites. In fact the requisite. Let me call your attention to it again. The Lord requires the heart and a willing mind, and the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days, and the rebellious shall be cut off out of the land of Zion, and shall be sent away, and shall not inherit the land. Inherit the land of Zion. Shall not inherit the land, is the thought. The rebellious—those who will not be willing to be guided by his law, by his hand, shall not inherit the land of Zion.

When we talk about the inheritance, or the possibility of remaining, then we are face to face with one of the emphatic statements of the master that we must learn to take into consideration, or else our efforts are vain, and we are a failure as a people. We have had one failure. Possibly more. Do we want another? That's one of the important questions that confronts us to-day. We have had one failure, especially in regard to the gathering, and establishing of Zion, and the question looms up bigger and bigger each year, as to whether this people will ever accomplish this work; whether we will be able to reach out and take hold of the opportunities that present themselves, and do what is assigned us to do, and are given the opportunity to do, or are we going to prove a failure, and suffer the consequences of our failure in dispersion and being driven from the locality that we understand to be Zion.

It may require sacrifice on our part. It may require a good many things in order to accomplish this purpose that he assigned for a people that should be one, that will sacrifice; and shall we make that sacrifice grudgingly? Shall we make that sacrifice because of the peculiar conditions that we think will conduce to our happiness, our honor, in the spirit of selfishness? or shall we do it in the spirit of cheerfulness and willingness in the recognition that we are being obedient to God, and that it is right to do that? That's the question that we must be confronted with, and answer.

It is not simply a question of our comfort; a question of our convenience, or things of that description; of our glory; or of our honor. These must be after considerations. The important question that confronts us is the duty that devolves upon us as individual members of this great church of God, and don't any of you think for one minute that you can shirk the responsibility that rests upon you. Neither gather the idea that the leading men of the church, and the chief men of the church, are the only ones that are carrying responsibility. There is no reason why anyone should feel that this church will not go on, if the membership live the lives that they ought to live, in purity and holiness. There is no reason why there should be a fear, or anything of that kind, for the success of this work, if we can only become imbued with the thought that we are one of the factors cooperating with God to bring about this great and important thing.

There's where we stand—the position that confronts us; and to inherit Zion we must reach that point or else we must leave. I remember President Smith making a statement once in talking to the people of this place. Some of these older ones will remember this undoubtedly; he made the declaration that if they came in here and lived honest, pure, clean lives, consecrated to the service of God, they would be blessed; they would be content; they would be happy, and they would remain; but if they came in here, became discontented and dissatisfied, and did not live the clean, pure life that God asked them to live, they would have to leave. They would not be permitted to stay, and they would go away tinctured with the spirit of evil.

You think for a few moments about it, and you will see where we stand. He did not make any mistake. We have seen them come. We have seen them go. We have discovered that his statement was true. Individuals have manifested and demonstrated the truthfulness of the declaration beyond the shadow of a doubt, and it will be done again and again, until God has accomplished his work, and raised up a people who will serve him in the spirit of truth and willingness and obedience, as he has asked them to do.

Let us look at another thought now. I turn over to section 98, paragraph 3, and ask you to look at this just a moment. I shall be able to touch only just a little bit of this, but it carries with it some very important things. We look around us and talk about the failure that was made here, and oftentimes we hear the question why it happened as it did. Let us listen to the Lord while he tells one reason:

Behold, I say unto you, there were jarrings, and contentions, and envyings, and strifes, and lustful and covetous desires among them; therefore by these things they polluted their inheritances. They were slow to hearken unto the voice of the Lord their God; therefore, the Lord their God is slow to hearken unto their prayers, to answer them in the day of their trouble. In the day of their peace they esteemed lightly my counsel; but in the day of their trouble, of necessity they feel after me.

Now, we have before us the reason. There were jarrings and contentions, and strifes and enviousness making itself manifest among them, and by these things they polluted their inheritance, and lost it. Let us keep them in mind a little while. Let us study that statement, and ask ourselves the question, Where are we? Are we losing sight of the things of the past? Are we failing to recognize the causes that produced the effect, and are we allowing ourselves to drink in the spirit of discord and dissatisfaction? Are we bringing ourselves into a condition of jarring, contention, strife, envyings, and other things of that character that corrupt? If so, pray answer the question for yourselves, Are you doing the things that will enable you to inherit Zion?

Now, right in this same chapter, section 98, we have another declaration that possibly we might look at just for a moment, for in it we have a statement as to the territory. Paragraph 9, the latter part of the paragraph:

Therefore, a commandment I give unto all the churches, that they shall continue to gather together unto the places which I have appointed; nevertheless, as I have said unto you in a former commandment, let not your gathering be in haste, nor by flight; but let all things be prepared before you; and in order that all things be prepared before you, observe the commandments which I have given concerning these things, which saith, or teacheth, to purchase all the lands by money, which can be purchased for money, in the region round about the land which I have appointed to be the land of Zion, for the beginning of the gathering of my Saints; all the land which can be purchased in Jackson County, and the counties round about, and leave the residue in mine hand.

That is clear enough, is it not? Purchase all the lands that can be purchased in Jackson County and the counties round about, leaving the residue of the United States in my hands—America—if you wish to use the broader term.

Then, he has made the declaration in another statement that when there is no more room in that place, that he will appoint curtains or stakes unto Zion, to strengthen Zion. I wonder, my friends, if you have ever stopped to think for a few moments how much territory we have taken in now. Have you ever contemplated the thought that we have the stake of Independence, the stake of Holden, the stake of Kansas City, the stake of Far West, and the stake of Lamoni? That takes in all the counties round about, clear into Iowa. Two counties deep in Iowa. Then I ask you to stop and ponder another thought that possibly our membership may reach ninety thousand this year. How many of these counties will it take to hold us? Did you ever think? Have you ever stopped to take into consideration the fact that you can go into the eastern end of this county of Jackson, and put the whole ninety thousand down there and still have room enough to raise food enough to support them.

Contemplate the thought that every stake that you have here, except possibly Kansas City and Independence, has territory enough in which to hold every one of them and give them a good farm, besides a city in which to do the necessary business.

Now, when we talk about redeeming a people or a place, we want to get the thought into our heads that is of vast importance to us, and that is that it is not a question of how much territory God has assigned us in which to gather, but it is a question of gathering and doing what he has immediately mapped out for us, successfully, and making the preparation that he has required. When we have made that preparation and have filled these counties he will give us more room when we need it. There is no question of that.

Now, over in section 102, if you wish to go further along this line, and the 8th paragraph, you will find another statement on this same question as to the territory. Possibly I had better read it. Paragraph 8:

Now, behold, I say unto you, my friends, in this way you may find favor in the eyes of the people, until the army of Israel becomes very great; and I will soften the hearts of the people, as I did the heart of Pharaoh, from time to time, until my servant Baurak Ale, and Baneemy, whom I have appointed, shall have time to gather up the strength of my house, and to have sent wise men, to fulfill that which I have commanded concerning the purchasing of all the lands in Jackson County, that can be purchased, and in the adjoining counties round about.

You have it again, plain enough. Now we have territory enough here in which to work, and work with all our might and main, and not be crowded in the least. You may ask me what about the people that are in there. There's room enough with them there. I don't want to send them out. There is plenty of room there. If you purchase, there won't be any trouble about them. You can buy from them. That's all. Then you will own the county. You will have the rule. He made no mistake. He had a clear, definite idea as to the locality, and how we should get it; and I don't think I am making any great, big, exaggerated statement when I make the declaration that if this church to-day were willing to sacrifice, put themselves on the basis that they ought to live on, sacrifice and consecrate all of the properties and moneys in the hands of this church, we could buy all the land we need to redeem Zion—every bit of it.

So you discover the place is not a question for us to quibble over. The thing that concerns us is that peculiar preparation we must make before we can inherit Zion. That is the thought I am going to ask you to look at next.

In section 94 we have a little statement that I want to notice, for it teaches right along the idea of what may be required at our hands, and will be of interest to us, I presume, unless we are not interested in this question, and I think I am safe in making the statement that this is a live issue to-day. If it is not a live issue, we have been wasting our time, our energy, and talk. Section 94—I will read paragraph 4, and a part of 5:

And inasmuch as my people build an house unto me, in the name of the Lord, and do not suffer any unclean thing to come into it, that it be not defiled, my glory shall rest upon it; yea, and my presence shall be there, for I will come into it, and all the pure in heart that shall come into it, shall see God: but if it be defiled I will not come into it, and my glory shall not be there, for I will not come into unholy temples. And now, behold, if Zion do these things, she shall prosper and spread herself and become very glorious, very great, and very terrible; and the nations of the earth shall honor her, and shall say, Surely Zion is the city of our God; and surely Zion cannot fall, neither be moved out of her place, for God is there, and the hand of the Lord is there. . . . Let Zion rejoice, for this is Zion, the pure in heart.

“And all the pure in heart that come in it, [This temple] shall see God.” Now, that is a privilege, and I do not believe that I could present to you, to this people, to this church, in the shape of a possibility or a privilege one that would be more greatly appreciated than the possibility and the privilege of our reaching the position where we can “see God;” not simply see him in the work of his hands; not simply see him in the work of his magnificent power that may be visible, but to see our God and our Creator face to face, and to be able to consciously know that we are in his presence. Is there anything that you can think of that would appeal to you more than that? Is there anything that you would work harder to get? My friends, if you heard that he was somewhere close by, and by putting forth certain efforts on your part you could meet him, wouldn't you go? Wouldn't you make the effort?

I was in the city of Des Moines not a great many years ago, when Ex-President Roosevelt was to speak in that great auditorium there. I saw people go there, crush, jam, fight, in order to get in to see him; pay individuals money who stood in the door, if they would change places in order that they could get in; just to see that man. What would they do to see God? He has told us how we can do it: what we can do to accomplish it. Are we in that condition now?

"But if it be defiled I will not come into it," he further says, "and my glory shall not be there, for I will not come into unholy temples." We can see, now, the consequences of evil, and the privilege of virtue that stares us in the face. The opportunity is ours. What are we going to do? Make the preparation or not? When I say, make the preparation, I don't simply mean by this that we must take the books, study and read, but we have got to get busy, repent of our sins, put them away from us, cleanse our hearts, get out of that spirit of jealousy, greed, and avarice, and everything that is offensive to God, and make ourselves pure in fact. Until we have done that, we have not made the preparation, and that means work, if you, most of you, are like me. I know how it is, because I discover I am continually running up against something in which I have to put on the brakes. I have to put a check there. I have to stop and consider before I move; and under these circumstances, it keeps us guessing all the time as to whether we are reaching that point or not.

It means, my friends, a consecration of life, a consecration of service, an effort on our part that shall put us right up in the front—if you will let me use that expression—of the great church of God, the pure in heart, holy, free from the evils that contaminate from the world, and destroy the usefulness of man, and take away the pureness of his character. We can never come into the presence of God until we have done it. You think of it.

"And now behold, if Zion do these things, she shall prosper and spread herself, and become very glorious, very great, and very terrible." There is our safety, and we have a slogan now all over the land—"Safety first." How about it? "And if Zion do these things, she shall prosper." That is the thing we have prayed for, longed for, looked for, sung about, and some of these older ones, their hair whiter than mine yet, and older in years than I, have labored all their lives for the accomplishment of this end, and now stand looking into the distance with the consciousness of the fact that their work is about done, and they are asking the question, Are we there yet? Will we ever get there? And I tell you, friends, sometimes when I contemplate the situation and look back to my own life, spent to promulgate this cause and bring about these conditions, and see how little progress we have actually made, although we have made progress—and I confess frankly, it staggers me sometimes, and I am made to wonder if I have wasted my time.

There are others who have labored longer even than I who are looking at it in the same light, and asking the question, Have we spent our lives in vain? I know that we have reached a point where we are higher, in some respects, than before, but have we eliminated those things that blind some, and that the Adversary takes advantage of to destroy us, our hope, and ruin our purposes, and prevent, if possible, the accomplishment of the work that God set us to do?

I ask you to contemplate it seriously, and when you go home to-day, I want you to think, think, seriously and earnestly, and see if you have done your part along this line, your full quota. We haven't done it, my friends; there have been a good many slackers; there's no question about it; and if we hated a slacker in the war, what will God think of the slacker in his cause?

You think of it a little while and you will see that we can sing, we can pray, we can talk of these things, my friends, but that doesn't get us very far unless we put into practice and do the things that God has said we should do. We have got to put forth our effort; our energy. "And the nations of the earth shall honor her, and shall say, Surely Zion is the city of our God. And surely Zion cannot fall; neither be moved out of her place, for God is there, and the hand of the Lord is there, and he hath sworn by the power of his might to be her salvation, and her high tower; therefore verily thus saith the Lord, Let Zion rejoice, for this is Zion, the pure in heart.

We may have the place; purchase the land; hold possession of it; but, my friends, until we have reached that condition of purity in heart Zion is not perfect, is not redeemed; and Zion never can be until we reach that position. There is no use deceiving ourselves; of our patting ourselves upon our backs and coming to the conclusion that we are good fellows and all that. No use putting up things of that description to blind our eyes, or throw dust in our faces, that we may not see what is being done, or not coming up to that standard.

Take away these things. Throw them away from you. Strive to see the hypocrisies and things of that description that have stopped your progress.

Come out and stand for the truth that God has given, and let us see to it that we rid ourselves of these little evil propensities that are destroying the very foundation of our hope in the great gospel of Jesus Christ; that are gripping the very vitals of our being, and taking from us the very life and glory of God itself; and believe this, my friends, we will then be able to see, to know, to feel, and understand the great power and work of God Almighty as we have never done before.

Now, we have not reached that condition, and you know it. We are not all up to that stature and you are all acquainted with the fact. How long must we stay in this condition? It is not that some one else must help you up, must lift you up, push you all the time; but there shall be that keen desire in your heart, earnestness in your desire, that shall push along and make you all the time ready to comply with the peculiar requirements that God has laid down for us. It is not a question of what somebody else does. Not whether this man does right, or the other man does right, or somebody else does wrong. The important question and the only one that establishes us in the right position is, when we reach the point to say, Am I right? Am I pure in heart? If not, then I must remove from me every obstacle that stands in the way of the successful accomplishment of the purposes that we have in view, that I shall be worthy, when God comes, to stand in his presence.

I tell you a pure people, pure in heart, honest in every sense of the word, clean in all their actions, pure in all their thoughts, would stand to-day as the most magnificent monument of the power of the gospel to save mankind of anything in the world. Will you erect such a monument? The temple itself would be but an outward manifestation of what the people were. The monument itself must be in the people, standing in humility, standing in truth, as the people of almighty God, clad with the robe of righteousness, and a heart as pure as an innocent babe's. When that time comes, my friends, we will see the power of God, and we will see the redemption of Zion. Shall we move to that end? Is it a live issue? Does it concern you? If so, may God give you wisdom. May he bless you with that Spirit of repentance and with power to see yourselves as you are, through the great glass that God has given to us—the gospel of Jesus Christ. May his peace and his blessing attend you, is my prayer.

EXPRESSIONS OF MEN OF SCIENCE ON GOD

DARWIN

"An omniscient Creator must have foreseen every consequence which results from the law imposed by him."

No believer in God, the Creator, Supervisor of the universe, ought to object to so lucid a description of the all absorbing question, that is, the wisdom of God.

Darwin discovers the infinite wisdom of the "Divine Mind" intermixed indissolubly with all forms of life, from the amœba to the largest thing that lives or ever has.

THOMAS PAINE

The noted infidel after so much persecution under the established churches and incarceration in prisons because of his advocacy of freedom in religious politics, "the rights of man" as against the tyrannies of the few, after racking his soul for the good, says:

"I believe in one God and no more."

PROFESSOR TYNDALL ASKS:

"Can it be that there is no being or thing in nature that knows no more about these matters than I do?"

"Do I, in my ignorance, represent the highest knowledge of these things existing in the universe?"

Humility is written all across these questions of the great man about his Creator.

Upon this question of the great cause,

SIR OLIVER LODGE DECLARES:

"The universe is governed by law; effect is connected with cause; if a thing moves it is because something moves it; effects are due and only due to agents. . . . This I wish to maintain in spite of controversy."

How confident this man is in assuring the world of the first cause of the great causation of things. There are surely some degrees of faith in God which compel men thus to speak.

Our best expressions fail to express or even grasp the ideas contained in the mind that bade the elements perform his designs; the will that seems to bring order from the midst of chaos; that in defiance of our belief or unbelief, propels the mighty universe forward, continuously changing, absorbing, bringing death out of life, and life from death. Ah, that seems a paradox, but can we grasp the idea of death without life as living?

Again, let us take another man's viewpoint. It is the words of "Haeckel's Riddle."

The anthropomorphic dogma of God he asserts: "It likens the creation and control of the world by God to the artificial creation of the skillful engineer or mechanic, and to the administration of a wise ruler."

Mr. Haeckel continues to compare the human gods of heathen mythology.

As a people we are often accused of believing in this circumscribed kind of a god with fleshly hands, feet, nose, eyes, etc. Why I do not exactly feel sure. A few years back I have thought that we as a people may have placed too literally the attributes of God in the bare language, "God has hands," "He has feet," "Back parts" and so on.

The All Father may have all these and more, but to circumscribe him is wrong. Cowper in his well-known hymn, "God moves in a mysterious way," the second verse has furnished a most wonderful thought.

Judge not the Lord by feeble sense,
But trust him for his grace.

God by his revelation has told us through his Son, Jesus: "God is a Spirit." How much more than that remains to become our possession in respect to his personality must be left for the present.

Mr. Haeckel as a distinguished demolisher of the human demi-god, gives another denunciation concerning "anthropomorphic dogma:"

"It is more intelligible than the modern mystic theosophy that adores a personal God as invisible—properly speaking gaseous—being, yet makes him think, speak, and act in human fashion."

We are led through a maze of evasion, such as protoplasm, monon, that without spirit the world would be a shapeless mass.

Atheism, he says, "has no gods or goddesses." Referring to atheism, he says:

"This godless world-system substantially agrees with the monism or pantheism of the modern scientist."

This is his nearest expression of the great causation:

His farewell on the "Problem of substance" is, We do not know the "thing in itself" that lies behind those knowable phenomena. But why trouble about this enigmatic "thing in itself," when we have no means of investigating it?"

This scientist has to his satisfaction removed Christ, and left no place for him to sit in the universe.

THOMAS JONES.

Perseverance, self-reliance, energetic effort are doubly strengthened when you rise from a failure to battle again.—Anon.

SOCIAL ACTIVITIES

The field of exploration concerning social activities challenges the skill and courage of the ablest workers of our church. It is manifestly a subject that is greatly misunderstood. Social activities as a topic has been roasted, scorched, and even congealed and frozen in word battles, and has undoubtedly exhausted all the words of Webster's dictionary. But it is like a cork; it bobs up again out of the waters of our demands, and insists that we recognize its utility.

Not very many years ago, in fact within the life of some of our aged members, when the pace was not as fast as it is now, the family gatherings, and community groups supplied all of the social demands, and many of these gatherings had the freshness, sweetness, and purity of that "homey" atmosphere, the absence of which is very noticeable in most of our modern forms of social activities.

Yet on the other hand it must be conceded by nearly all, that the old-fashioned methods, with all their goodness, were lacking in a very vital essential; viz: expression of the fires of youth. The children of those days were told that they were to be seen and not heard.

Times have changed. This phrase has in it a far-off sound to many of the aged. The echo of the old church bell in the village, and the singing of the old church choir, still fresh in their dear old minds carries with it memories of those never to be forgotten good old days. Yes, good, dear old folks, times have changed and so have conditions changed.

Conditions have changed until it appears that the whole world has been entirely revamped—made over. With the change of conditions has come a change of our modes of living, our industrial systems, our politics, in fact everything that we can think of seems to have undergone a great change. There are, however, people to be found in this world of ours, with all of its remarkable changes, who still adhere to old methods and out-of-date appliances. It presents a striking picture to observe a modern steam plow at work beside the old wooden plow. Many men have been very slow to adopt modern appliances.

Social activities, like the head and arms of a body moving where the legs take them, have also moved apace of the new conditions. The social demands of human beings of to-day present to us new problems, and as a church we are invited, not to evade them, but to meet them fairly and squarely upon the battle grounds of to-day, not to-morrow; to-day is here, it is in the living now that we are concerned, and not with the future.

If the slavery question, which finally weltered in rivers of blood, had been dealt with in this fair land of ours, when it first reared its haggard visage, it could have been disposed of without so much suffering and sorrow, but by neglecting to deal with it properly at the proper time, by one administration passing it on to another, by one generation deferring it to be solved by the next generation, it finally presented a great mountain of accumulated problems, which like a great log jam broke loose with terrific destruction; a remarkable object lesson of neglect and its results.

The social question as it relates especially to the young people of this generation, must be solved sanely and wisely, as well as definitely, or as a church we will be confronted with a log jam of accumulated difficulties as related to the youth of our fold, with consequent losses. Many of our branches, Sunday schools, and Religios are even now calling for us to throw out the life line to those who have been thrown out into the waters of circumstances.

In our humble opinion the many battles of words which have and are being fought must be crystallized into united action of a real constructive character; "this is a day of warning and not a day of many words."

Our young people are frequently rebuffed on every hand: "No, you cannot use our church building for your social stunts," says one, "You must not indulge in any party games," says another, "You cannot use the church lot for games, as you will profane it," says another; and many other of such cannots and don'ts are in evidence upon every hand. Oh! so many, many don'ts, but so very, very few things to do, and like the poor fellow "over there" who had a baseball sent to him, and when it was received he observed that it was ripped open and marked, "Opened by censor." "But," says he, "I failed to notice anywhere that it had been sewed up by censor." Thus he was deprived of his ball to play with.

With great bars and padlocks of restraint and limitations put up everywhere about them, it is no wonder that our young people break out in revolt. But revolt is wrong and proves harmful as it usually manifests extremes; but who contributed to this wrong?

It has been urged by some that unless we eliminate these worldly amusements from our midst we bring our children up wrong. The term worldly amusements must be closely scrutinized as it is a term that has been greatly misunderstood. Evil as a rule is the result of some good thing carried to excess. Man is a social animal and as such is bound to seek opportunities to associate with others. Groups of people, young or old, are thus bound to seek expression for their feelings of joy and vigor. You might just as well try to cap a volcano as to repress these expressions. A sleighing party of young people is but one of these natural outlets. It offers relaxation from the cares of the day in God's own great outside, and the hearty laughter and merry songs, and loud whoops are real manifestations of life. Many of us have heard boys unexpectedly let out a lusty yell or a loud war whoop, and yet uncalled for as it may seem, it's just natural, simply and plainly natural.

If you mean by "worldly amusements" that class of expressions which are degenerating and immoral in their effects, why then we can all perhaps agree on what should be rejected. But whether we wish to admit it or not, we are bound to make use of the things of the world if they are really good. We do so when it comes to clothes wringers, washtubs, brooms, etc. Let us be alert to the adoption of everything that can be made use of in a proper manner.

It must be admitted by all that we cannot legislate people into good works. It will not reform the heart to take away the thing with which the criminal has done his evil. Some have had the mistaken idea that sending young people to Graceland College would educate them out of evil. The facts are, that if they were evil when they went there, they will do evil no matter how good the surroundings are. It is the function of the college to educate and not to reform.

To say that you cannot do so and so in our church is like underfeeding a sparrow in the little bird house in your back yard; Mr. Sparrow will merely seek other pastures in the great, wide world all about him. It is a short-sighted policy to close the doors of our little places, and assume the stern arbitrary attitude of the old Puritan father, who with firm arm and rigid finger, orders you out into the cold, cold world. Having accomplished his dignified task, he gathers about him his robes of righteousness, and is wrapped in vision amid the thunders of Sinai, and the law of "don'ts."

"Men and brethren, what shall we do?" was the great question of Pentecost. It is the cry of the young to-day, and the manner in which we answer this question, will determine as it did then among the seekers of light, as to whether or not there shall be any added to the church daily. What shall we do? Shall we add to the church, or shall we subtract?

Many a father has failed because he lacked the grace to walk with his boy while he was climbing fool's hill. The beginning of any effort is difficult. Our young people should be dealt with as sheep, that is, led, and not handled like goats, that is, driven. We sing, "Tenderly, tenderly, lead thou me on." Shall we not have the grace to practice what we preach?

Tactful leadership will eventually lead many of our young people out of murky streams of questionable activities into living streams of pure water of the clearest crystal. Tactful leadership involves a policy of moderation in our attitude toward those who are in the formative period. It is undoubtedly true that the young people are deficient in mature judgment and indulge in certain things which to an older and more matured person appear to be evil, but it must not be overlooked that a grave injustice may be done by accusing young people of doing evil when in reality they were just innocently and playfully giving expression to the fullness of youth.

If a child should be found playing on the hole of an asp, or with a loaded revolver, it would undoubtedly be expedient to arbitrarily yank it out of the reach of harm; but cases of this kind should be the exception and not the rule in our attitude toward the young. To lead is to recognize individuality. The free soil of America gave birth to the noblest men of the age. It was a soil in which individuality developed in all its beauty and richness. It will be in the soil of gospel liberty which permits the growth of individuality of the truest and highest type, that will produce the great men and women, worthy to abide in Zion, and a factor that will contribute in a great measure to the proper development of our youth, will be, that we will all have the grace to walk with them through the formative period.

In Doctrine and Covenants 90: 5, we read the following:

Intelligence, or the light of truth, was not created or made, neither indeed can be. All truth is independent in that sphere in which God has placed it, to act for itself, as all intelligence also, otherwise there is no existence.

In other words, intelligence is not made, but is the result of an accumulation of certain experiences, and that the creature involved was intended to enjoy every privilege and opportunity to ripen in the rain and sunshine of life, until it reached a state where it was fully ripened and luscious in the sight of God.

The cold and formal ecclesiastical atmosphere of many of our local activities should be tempered with a social policy that will awaken the youth of our church. The church building and grounds should be thrown open to the young, and many homes should likewise respond to the touch of this policy. The invitation to the young should be freighted with the spirit of that matchless One, who said: "Come unto me," and the spiritual response of the young is bound to reecho in these words: "Tenderly, tenderly, lead thou me on."

Again we repeat; the appeal of the young of our church to-day is: "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" They ask for bread, and shall we turn them away with a stone? Shall coldness and formalism be our policy? We have heard them exclaim, "Oh, you do not understand us!" We preach reconciliation to the world. Let us preach it to our youth; not in the cold formal letter of the law, but in warm terms of social opportunities, as the brood is protected under the protection and warmth of the wings of the hen, until our youth have matured and have reached manhood and womanhood.

Directed forms of social activities, whether they be in the form of choir work, of hikes, whether sleighing parties or indoor parties, baseball games, basket ball, tennis, boating, picnics, taffy-pulls, concerts, lectures, or prayer meetings, are perfectly legitimate and should be encouraged to the fullest extent.

"YE MUST BE BORN AGAIN"

Why do men seek in the wrong direction for happiness? Because they do not know the way of peace. And yet the world is seeking after true and lasting pleasure. It is not in the dance hall, nor in the saloon, but in Christ that we find peace. He has promised this: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you." —John 14: 27.

This term in Christ is often seen in the Bible. It means much to us. If we die in Christ we come forth in the "first resurrection" and upon us the second death shall have no power. See 1 Thessalonians 4: 16; Revelation 20: 4-6.

Christ is represented on earth by his church, and for this reason the church is called the "body of Christ." Read: "The church, which is his body." (Ephesians 1: 22, 23.) "His body's sake, which is the church." (Colossians 1: 24.)

It is logical that when we enter the body of Christ we enter the church of Christ.

To learn how we enter this body, church, kingdom, of Christ we read—

"Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) "And he added to the church daily such as should be saved." (Acts 2: 41, 47.)

Three thousand souls entered the church that day through the door of baptism preceded by repentance and faith, as the Scriptures plainly teach (Acts 2: 38; Hebrews 6: 1-4.) "As many as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (Galatians 3: 27.) Is not this plain? We are baptized into Christ, baptized into the church. But where and what is the church? Surely the word of God will answer these questions:

Are you willing to believe the teaching of the Bible?

Is it not more authentic than the opinion of man? Yes.

Let the Scriptures speak.

We want truth!

It is well to think of good things. The church ministers to the religious needs of the membership and such as desire to come among them. You are invited to make this church your church home. We offer to you the primitive gospel.

Do you know that to confuse the issue by classing the members of the reorganized church with the members of the Utah, or Brighamite church, is to manifest an unpardonable ignorance of history, slander an honest people, and willfully disregard the teaching of Jesus Christ, who said: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them"?—R. W. Farrell, in an editorial in The Messenger, his pastoral medium in Providence, Rhode Island.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

LUXURY, TRUE AND FALSE

The sole purpose of civilization is the development of a larger and richer personality. This means that individuals should become more intelligent, more moral, and more social. That can be done only through the satisfaction of more numerous and more varied wants.

Intelligence from this point of view does not mean that keenness and sharpness for a good bargain, which is so often extolled as the true test of intellectual ability. It may imply a certain alertness and circumspection for economic opportunity, since it is the duty of every man to make provision for himself and those dependent upon him, for the apostle says that, "If any man provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he has denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." (1 Timothy 5: 8.) The Bible, all through the Old and the New Testaments, holds out little comfort for him who means well, tries a little, and fails much. Saint Paul himself was so anxious to preserve his independence that he earned a living by weaving tents while preaching at Corinth, lest he become a burden to the churches. The Talmudic law ordered every scholar to learn a trade which he should ply and maintain his independence, in case he had no private property. Neither is comfort given to the man who by various devices, straight or crooked, amasses a fortune and uses it in a selfish manner for different forms of indulgence. True intelligence moves between these two extremes; it provides a sufficiency, but not an overabundance, lest personality suffer through surfeit.

Morality is the test of intelligence, because it makes a man realize that service should be rendered for whatever one receives. If a proper equivalent is rendered for what we get, there is little danger of plutocracy, since that term implies a large return for a small service, and the wasteful spending of money. The better class of our rich men recognize, or have begun to do so, that they are held responsible for both the manner of getting their wealth and spending it. They try to render as near as possible an equivalent for the privileges which wealth gives. The seriousness with which some of our rich men and women look upon the responsibilities which their position entails, is one of the most hopeful signs of our times. This has come about largely through the teaching of sociology.

Sociality in the true sense does not mean mere urbanity and cordiality. It implies this, but requires chiefly a recognition of the tremendously important fact that most of our modern wealth is the result of the great opportunities which our times furnish, and a consequent endeavor to equalize opportunities somewhat more in line with the capacities of individuals. The manifestation of inequalities may be illustrated in a very simple manner. If two boys go to college, one of whom has all the money needed to devote himself with a single eye to his studies, while the other has to make a living at the same time, they may have the same ability, but the results will certainly differ. A college boy cannot spend five or six hours a day in all kinds of more or less irrelevant tasks without either devoting less time to his studies or overworking and undermining his health. Sociality must strive to mitigate, if not to eliminate, these inequalities.

A rich and large personality, then, means an individual who is intelligent enough to recognize that wealth should not be striven for beyond the needs of what is required for the development of one's faculties; that everything one receives must be paid for by rendering as nearly as possible an equivalent service, and that opportunities must be equalized to a greater extent than they are at present.

How do luxuries contribute to the development of personality? It is plain that persons who are everlastingly kept down by abject poverty are unable to devote time and energy to anything else but the satisfaction of their physical needs. They will remain mere toilers for making a scanty living, and whatever desires they may have will be stunted or stifled. In order to live as a human being, something more is required than mere vegetative existence.

There must be satisfaction of desires for beauty, comforts, and luxuries, since these contribute to what is considered a full life. One can easily distinguish a man who has had to practice self-denial through his whole life from one who had the opportunity to satisfy every legitimate want. Perhaps one of the most pathetic things is a child who has a natural desire for play and for toys, for laughter and for cheerfulness, but who has been denied all of them. His "hungry" look when watching other children at play, his suspicion of the proffered disinterested friendship, his cordial response and deep gratitude when he finds that life after all does not mean an everlasting "no"—all this serves as an intimation of what a dwarfed nature and stifled desires imply. He is, literally speaking, starved as far as spirituality is concerned. Nature has become negative, stunted, congested, restricted. How different the positive, buoyant, expansive, enthusiastic attitude of a child whose desires have been satisfied! This contrast will give an idea of what is meant by living a human instead of a mere vegetative existence.

The writer read a German story some years ago of a little girl in moderate circumstances, who had just one book of travel in her home. It had been found by her father. She read it again and again; many passages she knew by heart, and the desire to see Italy, which the book described, became the one passion of her life. She would climb the hills near her home and longingly spread out her arms toward the south; she would declaim passages dealing with the ancient glory of Rome, Venice, and Florence; sometimes she would refuse to eat in order to save money for her trip. Her dreams, whether by day or by night, were about the classic land of beauty. When she grew into womanhood her hope was that "Prince Charming" would take her on a wedding trip to the land of her desire. Her husband consoled her with the prospects of a later trip when he would earn more money. But the children needed the increased earnings; when they had grown up business reverses interfered, and—the trip was never made. When she died at an advanced age her last word was "Italy."

The objection may be raised that a girl in moderate circumstances must not entertain hopes about a far journey. That may be true; the desire was, nevertheless, perfectly legitimate; and what a pity that it could not be realized. The legitimacy of our desires does not depend on our purse, but on our nature; their satisfaction may and should depend on the former. Yet, every time one of these legitimate wants is not met it means an impoverishing of our nature. Who can tell how much happiness for herself and inspiration and usefulness for others that trip would have meant to the German girl?

The mere fact that a person has money does not make expenditure for a certain purpose legitimate. A person who spends two thousand dollars on a trip to Europe in order to write picture postals to all her friends from every place she visits, and who, after returning, is not able to find any redeeming feature about the cities visited, to whom the costumes were funny and the customs strange—may be legally entitled to the trip, but certainly not morally. No benefit has been derived, there has been no expansion of personality, no widening of the mental outlook; there has resulted only a strengthening of a provincial attitude of mind and the satisfaction of a purse-proud vanity. As far as social and moral benefits are concerned, the money is wasted. The trip was a luxury pure and simple, and an extravagance without any redeeming feature. What, then, is the distinction between true and false luxury?

Whenever a real need of our nature is met, it should be satisfied. When such want is necessary for our existence, it is a need; when it contributes to our well-being, it is a comfort; when it tends to develop or satisfy a refined demand of our moral or social nature, it is a true luxury; when it meets a spurious demand for superiority, it is a false luxury. It depends, then, entirely on the use to which an article is put, whether it is to be considered true or false luxury.

To a college professor a good library is a necessity. This need may, however, be satisfied in two ways, either by resorting to the college or public library, or by having most of the books in his home. In the former case he would have to waste much time and energy—and perhaps money if he fails to return them on time; in the latter, he would enjoy the luxury of a private library. This would be entirely justified, provided he did not divert money required for satisfying the needs and comforts of his family to the purchase of books. If a millionaire buys private editions of costly books to fill up mahogany bookcases, that would be false luxury, since they are a manifestation of his wealth and have been bought chiefly on the assurance of a persuasive book agent that Mr. So-and-So has purchased one and that the edition is strictly limited to one hundred autographed copies to be sold only to the socially—or rather financially—elect. No expansion of personality results from expenditure of this kind, except that of vanity. But to this very same millionaire an automobile may be a true luxury, since it would save him much time in his business, while to a college professor it would be a false luxury, since he can just as well walk the generally short distance from his house to the lecture—usually with great advantage to his health.—Rudolph M. Binder, in Studies in Social Progress, December, 1917.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

Retrospect

[The following poem was written some thirty years ago by Elder Joseph Luff, evidently shortly after his ordination to the Quorum of Twelve.]

"Thy helpful hand, kind Father, now to me extend,
For I am weary of the load 'neath which I bend;
Self, sin, and worldly care have long my soul engrossed,
Emancipate me by thy grace, or I am lost."

So cried my burdened spirit once, when sorely pressed
With consciousness of guilt, and by remorse possessed.
My plea obtained, and by the grace revealed I knew
That those "far off" were welcome and the "word" was true.

The years rolled by and as they sped, delight was gained
In witnessing by word and work of good obtained.
Each year its increase brought of favor from above,
My heart of "stone" to "flesh" was changed—I lived to love.

Thus consecrated at the shrine where mother knelt—
My will subdued, my purpose changed, I each day felt
A joy of sacrifice, and oft a wish expressed
To bear in turn for him who thus my life had blessed.

But love had meaning deeper than I e'er had learned,
The import of these words I had not yet discerned:
"Who keepeth my commands, 'tis he that loveth me."
"Say not Lord, Lord, but do what I require of thee."

"'Tis better to obey than sacrifice." And when
At length these tidings, and "ye must be born again
Of water and of spirit," did my ears salute,
I learned that meek obedience was love's first fruit.

And with this new evangel came what I'd desired—
The privilege to bear for Him my soul admired—
But, ah, love's test was more severe than I had thought,
And pride forbade me use the chance I long had sought.

For kith and kin and lucre-lust and love of fame
Must on the altar go; and I, henceforth, a name
Must bear—the target of earth's cruel hate and scorn—
"A Mormon!" God of truth, have I to this been born?

If so, give courage, and the tide I'll humbly breast—
Content if thou but own in me thy name confessed;
For Christ is dim-discerned where love entails no loss,
And Jesus ill-revealed in life without a cross.

And what I most desire is that thine image, Lord,
In me shall be discerned—be this my toil's reward:
Forward I move and yield to love's divine behest—
My will in thine I lose, and thus my faith attest.

Thus pleading and resigned I came into the fold,
Thus found I truth, more precious to the heart than gold.
Thus did my soul secure foundation for its hope—
Firm as the "Rock of Ages"—broad as reason's scope.

Now rests my life, with joy, upon the altar where
I trembling laid it in that solemn hour, and there,

Through varying vicissitude may it abide
Till mirrored heaven therein proclaims it sanctified.

Nor will I murmur, though the dross-consuming fires
Burn deep to kill the stubble of my old desires;
Though keen the smart, each paroxysm only tells How close self lies, how sure the process that expels.

What though each carnal hope thus to its tomb be led;
With Christ enlarged in me, why should I mourn the dead?
Continue, Lord, till I, with holiness replete
Am for thy presence and celestial glory meet.

JOSEPH LUFF.

The Refiner's Fire

He sat by a furnace of seven-fold heat,
As he watched by the precious ore,
And closer he bent with a searching gaze
As he heated it more and more.

He knew he had ore that could stand the test,
And he wanted the finest gold
To mold as a crown for the king to wear,
Set with gems of a price untold.

So he laid our gold on the burning fire,
(Though we fain would have said him nay),
And he watched the dross that we had not seen
As it melted and passed away.

And the gold grew brighter and yet more bright,
But our eyes were so dim with tears,
We saw but the fire, not the Master's hand,
And questioned with anxious fears.

Yet our gold shone out with a richer glow,
As it mirrored a form above,
That bent o'er the fire, though unseen by us,
With looks of ineffable love.

Can we think it pleases his loving heart
To cause us a moment's pain?
Ah, no; but he saw through the present cross
The bliss of eternal gain.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Woman's Auxiliary Reports

REPORT OF FIRST VICE PRESIDENT

Have been much benefited, and have fully appreciated the privilege granted me by being so closely associated with women who are consecrated to the work which is so dear to my heart, "The woman's work of the church," and only wish that I could have been of greater assistance.

Have done considerable local work, however, where my vision has been clearer and my understanding more complete.

Am very happy in the work and pray ever for its triumph. I sincerely hope that she who is selected to fill the place that I have endeavored to occupy may serve the body more efficiently, while I shall continue to do all that I can in the ranks, and pray earnestly for those upon whose shoulders fall the burdens of directing.

MRS. FRED KOEHLER.

EDUCATIONAL BUREAU

The educational work of the Woman's Auxiliary has grown very greatly during the last year. It has reached such magnitude that it has been necessary to secure the services of stenographers and typists as well as to ask the Bishop to finance some of its work. The spirit of study has increased and we have had numerous inquiries concerning our Extension Courses from almost every state in the Union as well as from the British Isles, Canada, and the Islands. Not only the women of the church, but many men have taken advantage of obtaining instruction through the Educational Department of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Courses have been outlined in all the following subjects: Mother' and Teacher' problems, Psychology, Sociology, Home Economics, Bible Research, Elementary Hygiene, Sex Hygiene, Home Decoration, and Public Speaking. We have instructors in charge of Reading Courses in Current Events, Home Nursing, and Parliamentary Law.

Letters and instructive report blanks have been sent to every organizer as well as the presidents of every local not yet organized in districts. These reports are for the purpose of not only getting data concerning the facts of each body of workers, but also for the purpose of enabling the supervisor to learn the needs and desires of the women of the church. Not all the organizers have returned the report, as it will be necessary for many to wait until after their conferences to get the desired information.

Papers were prepared by the supervisor of the educational bureau for use at the reunions and conventions held during the summer and fall of 1918. All instructors of the various subjects handled by the auxiliary as well as the supervisor, prepared material to be used in the institutes conducted by the auxiliaries of the church. A number of articles have been furnished by the Educational Department for publication in the HERALD.

During the summer of 1918, I visited the reunion of Southern California and assisted the organizer in a three days' Auxiliary program. Much educational work was done at these meetings. Besides the lectures there were regular classes held and the work was given great impetus in this locality. During the conference in Kansas City, February 22, 23, the organizer invited the Educational supervisor to talk to the women on the educational work of the Auxiliary. This talk was made to a large and interested audience.

Although the educational work is but just begun, there is reason to be encouraged because of the great desire on the part of many to become better acquainted with their responsibilities and take advantage of the opportunities offered.

MRS. DORA GLINES,
Supervisor.

Sociology Made Applicable in Daily Life

First, I wish to say that sociology is the science of the associated life of humanity. It deals with the organization and evolution of society in a general sense. It touches life in six different ways, as follows: from an economic standpoint; from an ethical standpoint; from an educational standpoint; from the standpoint of the home; from a medical standpoint; and from a philanthropical standpoint. The five last-named seem to be so dependent upon the first named, that it becomes necessary to first consider sociology from the economic standpoint.

The economic; that is, the wealth-producing and wealth-distributing. Economics is the part of sociology that deals with the getting of the material things essential to life and its full development. Among savage and barbarian tribes sociology is of course not thought of, that is, they have no knowledge of the science of human association. Their means of production is largely individual, done with the bow and arrow and perhaps the fishing line or spear, and is anarchism, that is, individualism. Yet the fact that they exist in tribes compels us to admit that their collective protection is the result of a very limited knowledge of sociology.

A little higher order of human society was an economic arrangement by which a comparatively few men owned many men and lived from their labor. This will be recognized as slavery. With the development of the educational and ethical it became apparent that this could never result in the highest development of human association and has practically become a thing of the past, but not without bitter opposition from those who lost their means of life when they lost their ownership in human beings. Contemporaneous with this and our living has been the feudal system, that is, the ownership of the land by the few and the use of it by the many, the few living in luxury off the fees paid by the many. This existed in France, Italy, northern Spain, Germany, England, and Scotland, in its most complete form about the thirteenth century and still exists there, perhaps somewhat modified in Germany and France, but with no great change in England. It still exists in a way in America.

With the development of machinery there came a new system, called the capitalist system, that is, the few owned the mines, mills, factories, and the means of communication and transportation, while the many operate them for wages. The many live on their wages, while the few who own these means of distribution and communication live on the difference between the price at which goods are produced and the price at which they are sold. This capitalist system is the system under which we now live.

As in the past there have always been those who saw or thought they saw a change of system that might be made that would better the condition of human association, so to-day there are those who have or think they have in view, a better economic condition than a capitalist system.

They believe that the common ownership of all the means of life with democratic control would be productive of an equality that the world has not yet known, and with the elimination of the competitive system and the introduction of a cooperative system, a great waste of duplicated labor and a great deal of unused labor power, that is, the idle class, both rich and poor, could be saved and concentrated upon the production of all that goes to make life worth living, would give more time for the development of the human being—physically, intellectually, and spiritually.

These two systems, that is, the capitalist system and the socialist system are now contending strenuously the world over for the supremacy.

While this may appear to those who have only a superficial knowledge of these things, to be political, I am not discussing them from a political or partisan standpoint, but because all other departments are so largely based on the economic that no one can intelligently think of sociology without taking into consideration the two great systems—the one existing called capitalism, and the proposed new order of things, called socialism. I mention them to draw attention to the fact that from an economic standpoint sociology is the biggest thing in the world to-day.

Getting a little nearer to our church work, the economic is becoming or perhaps I should say, now is, the biggest problem before our people. The redemption of Zion is economic. While it does consist of building temples, buying lands, developing industries, it must not be supposed that this is all. There must be something different from a capitalist or competitive system. These have not been productive of Zion conditions. The method by which we shall get our living and develop our human life must be different, and our relationship to each other as a people must be different from that which the world now has, or it will produce the same kind of human being as the worldly system now produces, and if so, in what way are we to become a delightful people more than they?

With a proper economic condition homes can be provided—by homes, I do not mean houses only. I mean a place equipped with all the facilities necessary to make it the most enjoyable, peaceful, and happy place on earth. It means that all modern household facilities for lessening the labor of the household and consequently the conservation of the time of those who labor in the home, leaving all the time possible for the development of the social, intellectual, and the spiritual, and of course this means that the home must be equipped with the things necessary for the development of these, that is, the best in literature and art.

A home without beautiful pictures, good books, and easy chairs cannot be a real home. It cannot develop the love of the good and the beautiful. It therefore appears to me that the first thing essential to the proper development of our human association as Saints is a real home. I wish, however, not to be understood as saying that this is all that is essential to the development of the human being. It is merely an environment necessary, and there are people who would make wonderful progress could they have but such a home. There are others, however, upon whom it would have but little effect. They could not appreciate the works of art nor the good books and the comfort of the place. Those who do appreciate these things are liable to hold in contempt those who do not, but if they have a proper understanding of sociology, it does not so affect their minds. They recognize that the unappreciative person is a product of his environment, and they see the necessity of first discovering what good or talent there is in the person, and from this they begin to build a condition that will gradually lead them to an appreciation of all that is good and beautiful.

These unappreciative ones might be classed under the head of dependent, deficient, or delinquent, and must be dealt with from one or all of these standpoints. For instance, one who does not appreciate art may be considered deficient in that particular and he may also be dependent, that is, he may have to depend upon some one to point out the beauty to him. A visit to an art gallery by any of us in company with an artist will convince us that we are all deficient and dependent. Alone we may think we appreciate the pictures, but when the artist explains them to us we learn that we really did not understand, and as he is charitable with us in our deficiency and our dependency, so an understanding of sociology will make us charitable to those who appreciate less than we do. The difference between us and them is only in degree.

The present work of the church, as I see it, is the acceptance of the individual in whatever degree of development he may be found, and remember he is a human being for whose redemption the Savior died and in whose salvation is to be developed a man fit for the highest order of human association, that is, the celestial kingdom.

While in some places the study of sociology has met with opposition and ridicule, I would ask those who thus oppose it to explain how they expect to establish Zion conditions with the people who do not understand and do not want to try to understand the science of human association. The lack of such understanding is the cause of all home and neighborhood brawls; with all branch, district, stake, and general church contentions. When we understand the science of human association we will understand how to be agreeable in the home; how to be agreeable in the neighborhood; how to be agreeable in the branch; how to be agreeable in the stake; how to be agreeable in the general church work. Those who then sit in branch, district, stake, and joint councils will be as loving as turtle doves, even though they do hold different views of very important questions.

We have shown that the home life is dependent upon proper economic conditions. Now we wish to briefly say that our development from an ethical standpoint is largely dependent upon the proper home, for it must be evident that those who learn to love the beautiful and the good cannot at the same time entertain in their hearts the love of that which is degrading or malicious, and so a real home is the garden in which grows virtue, truth, and love.

Education is that department of sociology which makes the individual efficient. Our educational system is largely socialistic, that is, society as a whole provides for the development of the efficiency of the individual, which it properly should, owing to the fact that while the efficient individual can better serve himself, he can also better serve society as a whole and is less likely to become a burden to society.

Our medical system is partly socialized and partly anarchistic, that is, we have certain men set apart who are skilled in the art of the prevention and cure of the diseases of humanity, and to them is given the work of keeping the body physically at its best, but the securing of their help is anarchistic, that is, it is left to the individual, who may not know the need of securing medical help or advice, or who may not have the means with which to secure it.

Why we should compel and provide for the mental development of our children by building and equipping schools to make no adequate provision for the care of their bodies, can be explained only by saying it is a result of a lack of understanding of sociology—the science of human association.

There is much that might be said about philanthropy, but briefly I would say that it is only like a patch on the old garment. Proper economic conditions would in a few generations almost, if not entirely, make dependency, defectiveness, and delinquency become a thing of the past.

While we are looking and longing and praying for the redemption of Zion, we cannot look for a great change in the human being by merely moving from the four quarters of the earth to Zion or the regions round about. The Latter Day Saint who does not understand how to associate properly with his fellow man in Maine or California, will not learn the secret by buying a railroad ticket to Missouri. When he gets there he will find he is just as mean as he was where he came from and will continue to be so until he knows something about sociology—the science of the associated life of humanity.

Unfathomable Children

We bought our boy a tricycle with big pneumatic tires—The kind that, when 'tis on display, each little lad admires. It's backed off in the attic now, and he's behind the door, Astride a smelly cheese box some one gave him at the store, While sister hugs a towel with a shoestring for a waist—She's put away her life-size doll! Such execrable taste!

We gave our lad a lovely horse, with real hair and all—The kind he once went wild about downtown in early fall. The horse is in a closet in the nursery, and son Is riding on a broomstick, with a chair rung for a gun. While sister's left the baby cab she cried for so last spring, And hauls her old rag dolly in a thread box by a string.

We bought our heir a handsome sword, with hilt and silken cord—

He's lost it and is playing with a piece of broken board
He picked up somewhere in the street a day or two ago;
And, though we had supplied him with a Humpty Dumpty show,

He still prefers to sit astride a chair and make pretense
The chair's a gilded chariot—how can he be so dense?

We buy our children costly things; they thank us, and proceed

To play with what they'd play with if their parents were in need!

LETTER DEPARTMENT

A New York Invitation

Among the returned and returning soldiers and sailors, there are, doubtless, many of our church boys who are at hospitals or other Government stations at or near New York City.

We have found two soldiers: Sergeant Andrew Johnston, who has been operated on for appendicitis and is getting along nicely at the Norwegian Hospital in Brooklyn, also Corporal Scott J. Falconer, who was wounded in the left leg while in France. He is recovering at the Embarkation Hospital in New York, and while he will need to be treated at the hospital for a number of months yet, he will soon be able to attend our services.

If there are other boys who are now or who will be located near here, we will be very pleased to get in touch with them through the HERALD.

Our church address is Corner Schenectady Avenue and Park Place, Brooklyn, New York. My home address is 1361 Saint Johns Place, Brooklyn, New York.

If any of the Saints having relatives or friends in or around New York will communicate with me, I will be glad to get in touch with them.

In gospel bonds,

C. H. RICH.

On Picture Shows

[A brother writes from Australia to the Presidency, as follows]:

In writing my weekly letter, I noticed in the SAINTS' HERALD of January 15, wherein a brother was writing regarding picture shows.

I had the same position to meet on coming here. I agree that where Saints habitually attend picture shows their spirituality is at a very low ebb, if they have any at all. I made up my mind that whenever opportunity presented itself to discourage Saints, especially children, visiting these places, I would do so.

I found those who frequented these places were the ones who never had anything to give towards furthering the work of the Lord, but could always find time and money to visit pictures when they could be attending the meetings and getting spiritual food; again, those who made a practice of picture viewing are quite certain the shows they visit are educational. Now the question arises, Who are to be the judges in the matter whether a show is educational or not? I think Paul's first letter to the Saints at Corinth, eighth chapter, would fit in well here. However, those who visit the shows now are far back in the minority, while those who attend the meetings are among the most spiritual.

May His Tribe Increase

[The following letter is especially appreciated by the editors and should be a good hint for others. We might say, incidentally, that the former contributions of the brother were such a veritable nightmare to us because of the extra long, single-spaced method of writing, that only occasionally had we felt brave enough to delve into them. Just recently we had a stenographer spend a valuable hour or so typing one or two of them so we could begin to give the subject matter a critical reading.—EDITORS.]

Though I am eighty years old, I have never done any double-spaced typewriting till now, though I have had a typewriter for quite a number of years. I considered double spacing a waste of paper, and had no use for it; and didn't even know, till a few days ago, how to fix my typewriter for double spacing, and did not care to know. But discovering that editors prefer double spacing in articles intended for publication, I herewith inclose a double-spaced article. Editors are a curious set anyhow, "ain't it?"

Yours truly,

The Bishopric

Advocate for 1919

"Every Member a Tithe Payer"

God is generous, only requiring one tenth of our increase for the support and permitting us as stewards to retain nine tenths to enlarge upon our stewardship.

Don't think that because you have paid your tithing that you are at liberty to squander the nine tenths—God wants you to manage your stewardship carefully.

If you will try to pay more tithing this year than ever before, you will find that you will have more at the end of the year than at the end of any previous year. It will be a regulator for every expenditure.

Who Shall Preside?

Having read in the SAINTS' HERALD for March 12, 1919, an editorial entitled "Who shall preside?" a layman presumes to offer a few thoughts on the subject.

In section 43, paragraph 2, Doctrine and Covenants, the Lord says, in the closing sentence:

"For verily, I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me, shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed."

This, the writer has always understood, referred to the late Brother Joseph Smith. If that is correct, may we not safely trust his interpretation of the revelations given for the government of the church? Some one has suggested that Joseph the Martyr was the giver of the law, his son the interpreter of the law, and his grandson the executor of the law. To this I have no objection if the execution of the law is in harmony with the interpretation given by the son.

This teacher of the law first calls attention to the fact that we find no law providing for a presiding elder and two counselors, as the officers of a branch, or separate church. And we do find the priest, teacher, and deacon spoken of as standing ministers to the church, priests and teachers being ordained for that special purpose. He further says: "Whenever usages of the past contradict or contravene the organic or governing rules of the church, those usages should be abandoned, and a nearer approximation to those rules should obtain. (See editorial in HERALD for July 15, 1871, or July, 1889.)

When he came to the church in 1860 he found it the custom in the branches to elect an elder with two counselors. And it was not long after when this was changed.

In an editorial, March 15, 1873, he says: "It is our opinion, and we are satisfied that we are correct in so understanding the law, that where a branch has been organized, and the officers have been chosen by the people, or they have been pointed out by the Spirit, the priest, if there has been one chosen, is the presiding officer of that branch in the absence of the presiding elder. If presiding elder and priest both be absent, then the teacher if there be one. If the presiding elder, priest, and teacher be absent, then the deacon if there be one."

He further says in a later editorial that these, the presiding elder, priest, teacher, and deacon, when duly elected, are the constituted authorities of the branch, and that they constitute the council of the branch, the priest, teacher, and deacon being counselors to the president, and when that officer is absent, he has no right to appoint anyone to take his place in charge, that this passes to the priest by virtue of his election by the branch. March 14, 1900, he says that the presiding priest has the right to call on the other priests in the branch to assist him in the duties of his office without their election by the branch.

Acting on this, the branch of which the writer is a member adopted a resolution authorizing the presiding priest of the branch to call on any and all priests in the branch in good standing, to aid him in the duties of the priest's office as he shall find it necessary. And said priests are authorized to so labor under his direction. This rule was amended to apply to the teachers and deacons as well. The rule has worked well. Under a former rule the branch sometimes elected two or more priests, and when we had ten or twelve priests in the branch, it caused jealousy, those who were not elected refusing to serve when called upon.

It is the opinion of the writer that the organic law did not contemplate a multiplicity of presiding priests, teachers, or deacons, any more than a number of presiding elders. But with one of each order to preside over that branch of the service the work was provided for.

In section 120:2 we are told that: "A branch may be presided over by a high priest, an elder, priest, teacher, or deacon, chosen and sustained by the vote of the branch."

Section 122:9 says: "Where organization has been arranged and the officers have been ordained and set in order; the standing ministry in their order; high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons; the parallels are; in the presidency, the president and his counselors; in the second presidency, the twelve, . . . in the standing ministry, the presidency, second, the high priests; third, the elders, then priests, teachers, and deacons in their order."

This would seem to answer the question, Who shall preside?

In an editorial entitled, "Nominations to office, etc." (HERALD for July 16, 1892) the editor says: "We believe that the right to nominate men to be chosen to preside over a branch should remain with the members of the branch, to be exercised at their discretion, and while they may delegate this right to missionary in charge, the district president, or a committee of their own number, from time to time as they may choose, the right to primarily name the candidates to be chosen by a branch to fill the various offices in it, does not inure to any one or more persons by virtue of the office which they or he may hold."

I think if we keep strictly within the letter of the law as it is taught by him whom God appointed to teach the commandments, we shall be safe.

AMICUS.

GROTON, CONNECTICUT, May 7, 1919.

Editors Herald: In these days of "Lo, here, and lo, there," Holiness, so called, Christian Science, etc., with their many signs and wonders, it is not strange that even sober-thinking people should say to us: "How can you Latter Day Saints claim that you are the only true church, seeing that so many different organizations have the signs following them?"

"We hear them talk in tongues, and many of them claim to be healed, some of them teach the same as you do. They practice baptism by immersion, have sacrament about the same, lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, etc." These are facts that must be met by us, and one of the strongest proofs that we are the only true church is found in Book of Mormon as recorded in 1 Nephi 7:20, where the prophet plainly speaks of the house of Israel and says that God will make bare his arm in bringing about his covenants and his gospel unto those who are of the house of Israel.

He goes on to tell how the Lord will cause all these nations that have oppressed, or were against the house of Israel to turn one against the other.

Also, 1 Nephi 3:51, 52, very plainly shows the conditions that exist to-day and very clearly proves the divinity of the Book of Mormon.

Again, in John's vision on the Isle of Patmos (Revelation 14:6), he says he saw another angel flying in the midst of heaven, bringing the everlasting gospel, warning all nations that the hour of God's judgments had come. If the gospel had remained on the earth since the days of Paul, Peter, and John, there was no need of the angel's coming to bring it again and to warn the nations. But John himself foreknew when he gave as one of the signs of His second coming, these words:

"And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." The Latter Day Saints as a church were established April 6, 1830.

Those whom God had selected as instruments to bring his church forth made the claim of divine inspiration and under the influence of the Spirit of God, a mere boy, scarcely out of his teens, did that which the learned men had failed to do, organized the church of Christ on earth with apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, etc. And they proclaimed that the angel had come and messengers from Jehovah restoring the priesthood and gifts of the gospel.

This young man, inspired of God, sent Orson Hyde to Palestine (as recorded in Church History, volume 2, chapter 21), to bless the land. And on November 22, 1841, Mr. Hyde wrote from Alexandria, Egypt, and gave an account of his visit to Jerusalem and the Mount of Olives, and sent a copy of a most wonderful prayer and prophecy, in which he said that those nations that would not help in the glorious work of restoring the Jews should be utterly wasted. He blessed the land, asking God to restore its ancient fertility.

To-day we see those nations that oppressed the Jew broken and wasted, and those who joined hands with those Gentiles who had held Palestine in their heathen grip hundreds of years, are broken.

Every Latter Day Saint should read this wonderful prayer which has been so wonderfully answered. It is found on pages 554 and 555 of the second volume of the Church History.

Now turn to Peter's statement as found in Acts 3:21, where (speaking of Christ) he says: "Whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."

One of God's prophets, Jeremiah, in the seventeenth chapter, fifth verse, speaks of a man who should forsake God and he would settle in a barren salt land. And when good came to him he would repel those who would show him the error of his ways.

The very fact that Brigham Young fell from grace and turned from the worship of God, teaching many wicked doctrines; teaching that Adam organized this world, and was the only God that his followers had to do with; teaching polygamy; also the shedding of man's blood that his soul might be saved, fulfills the prophecy.

Brigham started for the Pacific Coast and they sent Elder Brennon by boat around Cape Horn. But when Brigham got to the barren salt land he stopped and made his habitation in the parched places in the wilderness, fulfilling Jeremiah's prophecy. The fact that Brigham was once a member of the church and made his habitation in the salt land after turning away from the true way is strong evidence that the original church was true. And the Reorganized Church has proved by its teaching that it is the true and original church reorganized.

The courts of the land also, after hearing Brigham's people and us, decided that the Mormons of Utah had departed from the faith as taught by God's inspired servants, but that the Reorganized Church had continued in the faith and was entitled to all properties belonging to said original church.

A few days ago the above testimony came to me and gave me still more faith in the church.

Everything in the church doesn't go just to my mind. If it were my privilege to have the say as to how things should be run, they probably wouldn't suit me as well as they do now.

It requires a higher wisdom than man's to run God's church, and we all need to examine ourselves to see if we are in the faith. And remember, if we haven't the Holy Spirit, we are weak in the faith.

So let us each and everyone strive to keep ourselves humble and full of love and charity, so that we may have fellowship one with another, even though we haven't as yet arrived at that point of existence where we can all see eye to eye.

And let us pray for those who have the oversight over the church that they may be blessed by our heavenly Father with wisdom to guide us in these perilous times. And remember we have the truth. There is nothing can compare with the angel's message. Like gold, the more you rub it, the brighter it grows. Nothing else will stand as close an investigation.

I am looking for the redemption of Zion and the gathering to be more fully realized.

Yours in Christ,

THOMAS G. WHIPPLE.

TOLEDO, OHIO, May 10, 1919.

Editors Herald: It has been some two years since you have heard from me. I am striving in my weak way to serve my Lord and Master. Though I fall by the way many times yet we know the Lord will forgive.

We are endeavoring to raise money to put the sewer in the basement of the church. A box social was given by the social committee of the Religio at Brother George Pendry's and cleared forty dollars. The Ladies' Aid had a social at Brother Kimbal's and cleared eighteen dollars, and a box social at Brother Amstrong's and cleared thirty-one dollars. Next week a box social at Brother Keill's with the gentlemen packing the boxes and the ladies buying them. We are in hopes that we will soon have the needed amount for the sewer. It has rained so much of late the water stands in the basement almost continuously.

Labor conditions in the city are most alarming. There are four of our largest factories on strike here. Over sixteen thousand men idle on account of this. The State militia are being called out to prevent riots. Street cars are being stoned and some violence has been committed.

It seems to me if ever we needed to try to keep the commands of God it is now. I believe the sifting time is upon us, and many trials that we have never been called upon to meet before, will be upon us and we will have to pass through them. In order to do so we must fast and pray continually.

I think the chart in the last Autumn Leaves used by Chicago Sunday school is good. I believe Satanic powers are always near us and wonder if they will win the day. But if we will sail on the seas of love and unity in ships of faith and prayer, Satan won't win so many conquests.

May God bless you, Mr. Editors, in your business; may he bless all who are striving to keep in the straight and narrow road.

SATIE MORGAN.

PORT ARTHUR, ONTARIO, April 30, 1919.

Editors Herald: Permit me to say that the Master's work is moving along here, but not without some sorrows. Brother David McLean of this city passed away in a peaceful manner at 5.30 a. m. Sunday, April 27. Brother McLean had been a great sufferer for many years. I baptized him one year ago last Thanksgiving Day. He was the second to be baptized in this city by the Reorganized Church. He was confirmed by Brother Samuel Tomlinson when he was one of the missionaries here. He helped much in furtherance of the Master's cause in this place.

May God bless the bereaved.

HOW SHALL THE CHURCH BUILDING BE USED?

homeless. They died at Carthage. They and their children and children's children were ostracized and traduced. Surely it has not lost its meaning for us. We erect an altar here in a community where already there are many church buildings, that we may be free to preach from this pulpit the restored gospel for which our fathers died.

We differ from others in history, in church organization, in doctrine. The differences are fundamental. Our beliefs have to do with the very nature of God as an unchangeable being, and with his attitude toward men, as a God willing to bless and give revelation of his will even as of old.

This is an age of fads. It is an age of revolution and confusion. It is an age of chatter. Carlyle, in writing of the French Revolution, mentions what he terms the "torrent of French speech" that was poured out. Every Frenchman was talking. But to-day there is a veritable deluge of all languages.

Two boys were playing together. I listened to them. One asked a great many questions. Finally the other said, "Paul, you use too many words." The other retorted, "You use words, too." The first replied, "Yes, but I don't use all the words there are."

Humanity is using about all the words there are. In the midst of this confusion and vocal excess, which might well cause the windows of heaven to be closed to keep out the racket, let us not forget that it is our duty to preach the simple, old-fashioned gospel of Jesus Christ. That is our particular mission. "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

Those doctrines that we term the principles of the gospel have by no means lost their virtue and power. They must ever furnish the very groundwork and basis of our message, so long as men need to have faith in God, to repent of their evil deeds, find a new birth under the Spirit, and go forward to perfection.

II. FOR THE EDUCATION OF THE SAINTS

The church building is and should be a center of education in religious matters. We are told that the glory of God is intelligence. In our text, the Psalmist says that the house of God is the place where his "honor dwelleth." How can the glory of God be manifested in this building better than through the intelligence of the Saints? How better can his honor be kept?

First of all in the education of the Saints in this place, as already stated, should be the preaching of the gospel. Sermons should be educational as well as emotional. Some religions are purely emotional, and find expression in most grotesque and absurd spiritual manifestations, such as shoutings, contortions, leavings, and ravings. Others are almost altogether intellectual, and are cold, formal, dead, and damned.

Our religion should appeal to both heart and mind. We are commanded to love the Lord with all our heart, all our soul, and all our mind. We can only love that which appeals to us. To elicit such love from every part of our nature, the gospel must appeal to the whole soul. Every sermon at some point in its delivery should warm the heart and stir the blood. It should seize the imagination. And every sermon should claim for its conclusions the sanction of the critical mind.

In the church, next to the pulpit, perhaps we should place the Sunday school. In the various classes, not only the children, but older people are instructed in the history and doctrines of the church. This teaching has a most lasting effect, perhaps beyond the perception of the teachers themselves. [We have since learned that the branch at Malvern Hill grew out of a very small Sunday school class as a beginning.]

The Religio classes also carry on educational work along religious lines. We note by recent correspondence that the Religio executives are planning a three-year course in doctrine for the Senior Quarterly, so evidently the Religio will carry that part of its work for some time yet.

Then there are lectures, illustrated lectures, classes in public speaking and many other subjects that come to mind, that might very properly be carried on in a house dedicated to God. I do not know how far you are prepared to go along those lines in this little branch as yet. But I regard this gathering and this building as only a promise of that which may be. We hope to see the day when the building to-day dedicated will be but a small annex to a bigger and better church edifice made necessary and possible by a much larger congregation. Every branch should have a large objective in mind. Every branch should affirm and expect growth.

The house of God, then, may well be a center of religious education. I have thrown my lot in with those who advocate education, but I have done so with this understanding, or reservation if you may call it such: that all that we study and learn is acquired with the idea that it may assist us in our own special work, the exposition of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

If one of our ministers studies economics, sociology, philosophy, or science, it is not that he may go out and preach those things, but rather that such knowledge may assist him in his ministry. His message is the gospel.

If Jesus were to come from the carpenter shop, to-day, as of old, with the smell of the shavings still upon his garments, what do you think he would tell the people? Would he discourse learnedly upon economics? Would he talk about the League of Nations? I think he would say, first of all, "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand!"

So we are commanded to cry nothing to this generation except the gospel of repentance. (That, though, is a broad term.) So long as a man is dragged down in the mire of sin and crippled by iniquity, as at present, the gospel of repentance is the most vital theme. Personal regeneration is the message of Jesus Christ, voiced in his most fundamental utterances.

III. FOR SOCIAL INTERCOURSE

At the church, the Saints, far scattered during the week, find opportunity to clasp hands and exchange a few words of greeting. I am not among those who would be too rigid in matters of church decorum. We do not care to imitate those denominations whose members come to church and there enter a cold storage plant of frigid respectability, and at the close of the sermon emerge with scant greetings and are gone in fine apparel and great dignity.

Charles Jefferson has a most biting criticism, to the effect that,

Many city churches are made up of people who do not even know one another, and who do not want to know one another. While too many village churches are composed of people who know one another and are sorry that they do.

God has no rebuke for happiness. He has no frown for sociability. He does rebuke excess of laughter and all levity and folly. There should be no loud talking and unseemly deportment. Remember the church is designated in our text as the place where the Lord's honor abideth.

At the close of service, the Saints may well shake hands among themselves, and especially be thoughtful to greet the stranger. But this should be done in an orderly manner.

We may profitably be admonished as to our behavior before the services. On one occasion I stepped into a church building just before the preaching meeting was to open. A perfect babel of voices greeted my ear. Everybody was standing up, and everyone seemed to be talking. And apparently each one wished to be heard. They were enjoying themselves. It was all innocent, in a way; but at once I caught the viewpoint of a stranger coming into the building upon such a scene. A little silence and reverence at such a time would be a great contrast and relief. It would be well for us to fall into the habit of taking our seats some time before the service opens. Then let us be quiet, prayerful, and reverent, as we should be if our conduct is to presage a good sermon or prayer meeting. Thus indeed our church may be a place where God's honor is kept.

As to so-called socials, or sociables, and entertainments of a lighter nature: I am of the opinion that wherever it is possible to do so a separate room or building should be provided for them. However, I would not draw the line too closely in small branches where our finances are so very limited. In such a case, I would even strain a point to make the church a place where the interest of the young may be held, rather than to permit them to wander away permanently.

If such things are to find place in the church building, a good deal of care and judgment should be exercised in preparing the program. At one time, on Sunday evening, in one of our churches, I listened to a very crude rendition of one of the worst chapters of Peck's Bad Boy. Other very peculiar "stunts" have found place on the program in various places. Let us use judgment and discretion, remembering the character of the house in which we meet.

IV. A PLACE FOR SPIRITUAL REFRESHMENT

Last, but not least, we call to mind those "times of refreshing sent from the Lord" that are properly experienced within the hallowed walls of the church building.

Those who have indeed been born again, some of whom perhaps may look back to this very edifice as their spiritual birthplace, may here from time to time in the prayer services receive spiritual renewal and refreshment.

This, perhaps, is especially true of the communion service of the Lord's Supper. These services are not more important than they used to be; but perhaps we realize more keenly their importance. As a rule, in every branch, the communion service is the best attended of all services. This shows that the Saints realize the need to revive their spiritual strength through the renewal of their covenant, that they may stand amid the trials of life, the sorrows, temptations, and heart-break that comes to everyone.

May such be your experience here. May many in your communion services find the strength that will enable them to stand in the midst of the wars, the catastrophes, the anarchy, the pestilence that are to come.

IN CONCLUSION

We dedicate this house to God, then, anticipating that he will use it as a place where these four functions will be performed: It will be a place where the gospel may be preached, where the Saints may be educated in religious matters, where they may have brief seasons of social intercourse, and where there may be granted to them blessed periods of spiritual refreshment.

And in conclusion: Let us not forget the intimation of the text. This is to be a place where God's honor shall abide. How may his honor be safeguarded here better than in the lives of the men and women who worship here? Let them be clean, honorable, kind, peaceful, and Christlike. So we dedicate this church edifice to God and pray that such a people may here be developed.

Spokane reunion has been changed from the Valley Branch to the Gifford, Idaho, Branch. Will convene June 20, continuing 10 days. Good speakers will be provided, and it is to be hoped the services of a patriarch will be secured. The Gifford Branch is near Culatesac, Idaho. S. S. Smith, district president.

North Dakota reunion will be held same place as last year, on M. D. Graham's place, 7 miles above Burlington, North Dakota, July 4 to 14. Let all make an effort to attend this reunion. We have the promise of some able men to be with us. Those coming by train write to Brother M. D. Graham, who is one of the committee, telling him what train you will come on, and he will arrange to meet you and convey you to the grounds. Warren McElwain, for the committee, Lansford, North Dakota.

Little Sioux and Gallands Grove Districts will hold a joint reunion in the beautiful park in Dow City, Iowa, August 22 to 31, 1919. Tents may be rented at the following prices: 8 by 10, $2.25; 10 by 12, $2.75; 12 by 14, $3.80, each having 3-foot wall; 12 by 14 having 6-foot wall, $5.40. Canvas cots, 2½ by 6½ feet, at 40 cents. An additional charge of 25 cents will be made for setting up tents. A dining tent in charge of E. R. Butterworth, Dow City, will be operated on the grounds; also a confectionery stand in connection, in charge of the reunion committee. The First Presidency will provide an excellent corps of able speakers. Auxiliary and recreational work will be a very important feature each afternoon, except Saturdays and Sundays. All orders for tents should be forwarded promptly to F. R. Schafer, secretary, Denison, Iowa. Amos Berve, chairman, Logan, Iowa; J. L. Butterworth, treasurer, Dow City, Iowa.

Two-Day Meetings

At Coleman, Michigan, June 14 and 15. Everyone invited. Bring your lunch baskets and come with the Spirit. M. P. Umphrey, district president, Bentley, Michigan.

The Bishopric

RESIGNATION OF BISHOP ELLIS SHORT AS BISHOP OF THE SPRING RIVER, KANSAS, DISTRICT, EASTERN, CENTRAL, AND WESTERN OKLAHOMA

Owing to the fact that the work as Bishop of the above territory has been gradually increasing, and on account of his increasing years, Brother Short has felt that for the best interest of the Lord's work it was wisdom for him to resign, that some one else of younger years might be assigned to these duties. Since taking up our work as Presiding Bishop and having had a better opportunity to become acquainted with this splendid man who has always had a keen and abiding interest in the work of the church, we have wished that time in its onward flight might not only be stayed, but turned back a decade that we might have the privilege of continued association with him. It is with regret that we have accepted his resignation, and I know that hundreds of the Saints with whom and among whom he has labored will join me in an earnest prayer of thankfulness for the work of our beloved brother, and we trust that the same splendid support which has been accorded him in his activities will continue with the brethren who are being appointed to care for the work in the various districts.

SPRING RIVER DISTRICT

Brother Albert V. Karlstrom, of 1702 Picher Avenue, Joplin, Missouri, who has been associated with Brother Short as his counselor, is hereby appointed Bishop's agent of the Spring River District. Solicitors who have been acting under Brother Short will hereafter kindly make their reports to Brother Karlstrom.

CENTRAL OKLAHOMA DISTRICT

Brother Earl D. Bailey, R. F. D. 2, Tulsa, Oklahoma, is appointed as Bishop's agent of the above district. Solicitors will kindly make their reports for the month of May and thereafter to Brother Bailey.

WESTERN OKLAHOMA DISTRICT

Brother Lemuel D. Dyke, Eagle City, Oklahoma, will act as the Bishop's agent for the above district. Solicitors will kindly follow the above instructions and report to Brother Dyke.

EASTERN OKLAHOMA DISTRICT

Solicitors of the Eastern Oklahoma District will kindly hold their reports pending the appointment of an agent to whom they will be requested to report later. Scattered Saints of the Eastern Oklahoma District may forward their tithing either to the solicitors of the nearest branch, or to the Presiding Bishop direct.

With an expression of appreciation of the financial support given to the Lord's work by the Saints of these districts, I remain,

Sincerely yours,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

Notice of Silence

To All Saints and Others Whom It May Concern: This is to give notice that Brother George E. Pendry has been silenced from acting in the office of deacon, because of transgression. He took his license with him when he left his home and wife, on May 5, 1919, and since that date nothing has been heard from him.

Respectfully in Christ,

J. F. MINTUN,
President of Toledo, Ohio, Branch.

FROM HERE AND THERE

WET WEATHER IN IOWA

We note from the Weather Crop Report of the Iowa Section the statement that more rain has fallen and there have been more days rainy since February 1 than in any other similar period in the thirty years of State-wide record in Iowa. It covers a period of from February 1 to May 6, a little over ten weeks.

Our readers will be very glad to learn that Sister A.

Carmichael has improved in health the past two weeks, though still very weak. A change of scene is necessary for her recuperation as she is suffering from a severe nervous breakdown. She and Bishop Carmichael expected to leave during the week of May 19 for southern California, where for many years they made their home. We sincerely hope that their stay in California may restore Sister Carmichael to health; and also give Bishop Carmichael a needed change of scene and prevent a breakdown on his part.

Apostle Peter Anderson is on a mission to the Northwest, having visited Salt Lake City en route. Apostles Gillen and Hanson are making a tour of Michigan and Indiana. Apostles Greene, Curtis, Aylor, and Sheehy are attending to the office work of the quorum in Independence.

UNREST IN WESTERN CANADA

An elder writes from Western Canada: "Politics is all upside down in Western Canada, owing to the reconstruction period. Unrest and lawlessness is everywhere. Bolshevism is lighting the fires under the political pot, and although not yet boiling, is getting most uncomfortably warm. The widespread, costly, and persistent printed propaganda of the eastern high protective tariffists has produced in the free-trade West a most stubborn resistance.

"So serious has become the unrest among the laboring classes that the Government has appointed a commission to inquire into the matter. Many look upon the commission as a browbeating cat's-paw of the capitalists and have registered stern reproof and criticism. All western papers have nearly howled them out of the country and a state of near rebellion exists. Profiteering by capital, and more especially the middleman, seems to be the cause of the high cost of living. Strikes, unrest, criticisms, and rebellion appear on the horizon. Religion is the last thought in the West unless it reduces the H. C. L. More and more I see the inspiration of the angel's message, preparing us to see and meet these conditions. If we could but get the world to see—but they will not, only in twos and threes here and there. We have the remedy in the latter-day message for all their political as well as other ills."

A WARNING FROM LA JUNTA

[We regret to be requested to print such a letter as the following. Such a request is indeed very rare, and only after intervals of years. But occasionally there does arise such a case, and it is only fair that innocent people be warned as promptly as possible. The editors have no other information concerning the matter, except this letter. If the man named can justify himself, we shall be more than glad to receive communication to that effect, and to give it like publicity.]

LA JUNTA, COLORADO, May 5, 1919.

Editors Herald: Please publish the following in the HERALD:

This is to warn the Saints of one W. T. Ebert, a member of the church, who left here secretly with his family for other parts, leaving several bills unpaid, without making any settlements whatever; and defrauded another man to the amount of ten dollars for which he promised to get a position. He borrowed money also from the branch here. Aside from this the Saints and outsiders were kind to them, giving them money and other material aid. Also the "Sunshine Aid Society" in the city aided them. This man is an ingrate, also untruthful and unworthy of the confidence of the Saints or anyone else.

W. E. WILLIAMS,
President of Branch.

THE "WAGGING" TONGUE

Probably most of us have heard the old story about the man who complained that his wagon tongue was too long. He said that if it were only too short he could splice it, but as it was too long he was quite at a loss to know what to do.

The man with the wagging tongue presents a problem even more distressing. He alone can apply an adequate remedy, and as a rule he seems quite oblivious to the fact that anything is wrong with himself. True, in an official way, where there is priesthood we may impose "silence." But official silence does not often mean actual silence. Some men talk more and worse after "silence" than before.

Never before in all our recollection have we noted so many rumors as were afloat during the recent General Conference and for some weeks before the convening of conference—and alas, in some localities, during the several weeks that have elapsed since the conference.

Many of the rumors were quite absolutely without foundation of any kind in fact. An example: During the conference the rumor was circulated in Independence that President Smith's resignation had been accepted, and that this action had so affected Apostle Greene that he fainted in the stand, whereupon Apostle Rushton attempted to make a speech, only to have the writer shake a fist under his nose and tell him to keep still. This absurd and foolish tale had no foundation in truth excepting that Apostle Rushton arose and made a speech. No other part of it was true, and it is mentioned only as an example.

We may well ask ourselves, "How do such rumors start?" "How do they find credence among intelligent people?" But that rumor was not by any means in the most deplorable class; because, while there were many idle and foolish rumors, there were also some that were vicious in nature. Whatever the intent of those originating them, they in their very nature were calculated to do harm. They helped to set individuals against each other. They drove a wedge between friends. They promoted strife among brethren. They were calculated to set quarrels against each other and make it difficult to reach unity of understanding and a peaceful and brotherly settlement of difficulties.

If peacemakers are called the children of God, as Jesus says they are, whose children are the strife-makers? The men and women who run from individual to individual peddling rumors which gradually grow into distorted monstrosities as they run, are strifemakers. Their genealogy declares itself to thoughtful minds.

There is a time and a place to state facts. We are not talking about facts. We are talking about rumors, idle gossip, vicious and incessant chatter, of which there has been altogether too much to please our heavenly Father. Truly it is a splendid thing to be able to talk in several different languages. But at times the man who knows enough to keep silent in one language is more blessed.

James gives us a good, straight, hard jolt along that line. He says: "If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridled not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain."

Again, he has a little dissertation on the "wagging tongue," as follows:

If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body. Behold, we put bits in the horses' mouths, that they may obey us; and we turn about their whole body. Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor listeth. Even so the tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things. Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth! And the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity: so is the tongue among our members, that it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature; and it is set on fire of hell."

The writer had occasion to kindle a bonfire some years ago. After the fire had assumed great proportions a little boy ran up and inquired: "Uncle Elbert, did you start all that fire with one match?" One match can start a great fire. So can one unruly tongue, according to our scripture—when it is set on fire of hell.

My bonfire burned rubbish, while the fires of gossip burn men's reputations. They burn men's hearts—their faith—their peace. They burn oldtime friendships. They burn the very edifice of God—being set on fire of hell.

When we hear some one say something reflecting in a way upon another, whence comes the impulse to run directly to that other one and tell all that was said, with diverse additions and distortions? We can guess the results. What power speeds us on the way? It is a shame to a man to be driven by such forces. Let us bear good tidings or none.

When we hear a damaging story about some individual, what is it within us that will not rest until we have run with the tale to our neighbors? Let us cast the Devil out of our own hearts, ere we flatter ourselves that we can dwell in Zion in peace.

When such things come to our ears we may well ask ourselves two questions: First, is it true? Second, do I need to tell it at all? Of course some things must be told, to civil or ecclesiastical officers, in court, or in conference. But we are not talking about that. We are talking about rumors, gossip, chatter, as we have said before. We write strongly, feeling deeply. There must be less of this work or disaster will be our portion. Let us abandon such things as are beneath Saints. We should be indeed Christian gentlemen in both deportment and speech.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

FINDING FAULT

There is not a man but has some fault. If we seek to gather together all the mistakes any man has made, and then add to that all the mistakes we think he has made, we may have quite a considerable collection. The Master referred to it as seeking the mote in our brother's eye. Evidently it has been magnified beyond its right proportions by imagination. In fact, there never has lived one on earth but that some have been able to find fault with him.

Faultfinding is not conclusive proof of the fault existing in the one criticized. But it is usually proof of a fault existing in the one doing the finding. "Seek and ye shall find." (Matthew 7: 7.) For what are we seeking?

While men differ and have their failings, we think it is safe to say that the body of men representing the ministry are at least 99 per cent right, and we are of the opinion that some of them are at least 99.99 per cent right. Shall we then select that one hundredth of one per cent, or even that one per cent and concentrate our whole attention upon it? Or shall we permit our thoughts rather to dwell on those things that are lovely and those things that are good and true?

Many times a sermon is criticised because of one small point with which we do not agree. Sometimes a masterly effort is spoiled because of one flaw. The speaker, it is true, should try to keep out that one flaw, which will work to the injury of his hearers. But if, in a human way, it does appear, should the whole discourse be marred for us by that one mistake? We know that often one objectionable feature becomes the focus of interest, until it grows larger than all that remains.

It is curious at times to note how a discourse on principles is thus perverted, when one reads into it some local happening or some personality that is not necessarily involved, and the speaker himself has made no personal remarks. That happens even with printed articles.

In the work of the missionary, we will find at times that our predecessor has done some things differently than we do. He would find that we do some things differently than he has done, or would do. We should be careful with all diligence to uphold his work, and not try to build by tearing down and casting discredit upon our brother. No real progress is made by that method. It hurts the man, it hurts you, it hurts the church, and in the broad, general definition, it is not in accordance with the real living truth.

But while this unfair criticism and spreading of discontent with regard to the work of a brother hurts the church, this is true in an especial sense of the man called to be the president of the high priesthood. Continued effort to build up our own opinion, or show our own brightness by attempting to tear down another, is to the injury of the work.

Now we make no plea that errors should not be corrected. In a brotherly, charitable way, we can help and should help one another to overcome our individual faults. But the proper method is not by talking them over with everyone else.

If we are workers together with God, we are then laborers with one another, and should try to help one another. Very rarely has anyone been greatly helped with a club, while kindness has won many thousands.

It is indeed discouraging when one is trying to do his best, to find himself unjustly criticized, and to find his defects magnified. It makes the task before him seem discouragingly difficult. Yet by the faith of his associates, by their confidence, he may overcome his shortcomings. This applies to all of us.

It is easier for us to work with the support of our associates.

Evidently when one member makes a collection or the faults of another, it is almost reflex action that the one accused will start a like collection. There then comes confusion.

S. A. B.

WHAT ARE WE GOING TO DO?

What are we going to do on behalf of foreign missions? It is not a question to be decided simply by the general officers of the church, nor even by the general officers and our young people. It will be noted in the General Interest column this week that there is an effort being made to secure one million Methodists as tithe payers in the sense of giving one tenth of their income to help their fellow men.

This church has always been in the front rank in teaching tithes. With other organizations it is comparatively a recent affair. We do not think we exaggerate when we infer that it is the result of the leaven that leaveneth the whole lump. The gospel of the Lord being in the world is benefiting all.

But what are we doing? One million tithe payers in the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States would be the equivalent of thirteen thousand in our own organization. As pioneers we should be able to do better. We should present a larger percentage of names of those who are willing to contribute in this way.

They are raising fifty-three thousand young men and young women to engage in this work. If we do as well on a per capita basis, we should have seven hundred making such special preparation for such special work.

It must be remembered that this is not simply their missionary force, that the ministry are provided for all of their local churches outside of this enrollment. Their traveling ministry as well. It is worth thinking about. What are we prepared to do?

PRESIDENCY, TWELVE, AND HIGH PRIESTS

According to the request of the conference made on the 10th the joint council of the First Presidency, Twelve, and High Priests, which has been holding sessions during this conference, made report, reading:

To the Conference: The Joint Council, in compliance with your request, presents the following report, which embraces what has been agreed upon.

1. Office in the Church of Christ is not conferred to distinguish, or glorify, or increase the importance of the person on whom it is conferred.

2. Office in the church is conferred for the purpose of accomplishing certain results designed in the instituting and establishing the church.

3. All offices in the church come properly under the head of the priesthood. Under this general head all the officers are arranged, there being two orders of priesthood; the Melchisedec and the Aaronic.

4. The scope of the present council is confined to an inquiry into the calling, duties, and prerogatives of the First Presidency, Twelve, and the Quorum of High Priests.

5. The president of the church is primarily appointed by revelation.

6. This appointment is confirmed by the vote of the church properly taken.

7. That the Presidency is the leading quorum in the church. That the duty of presiding over the church devolves on that quorum. That it is the prerogative of the president to preside over the whole church, to bear the responsibility of the care and oversight of the work of the church, in all its different departments, and through the constituted officers of the church in their various callings, according to the laws, rules, and regulations in force and recognized by the church.

8. That it is the prerogative of the president to receive revelations from God and give them to the church for the direction and government of the affairs of the church.

9. That the members of the Presidency are leading interpreters and teachers of the laws and revelations of God, and are of right presidents of the General Assemblies of the church.

10. That the members of the Presidency are to preside over the High Council, and in the exercise of this duty to render decisions on important causes submitted to that council.

11. That it is the prerogative of the Presidency to receive revelations from God through the president and present them to the church.

12. That the Presidency are the counselors of the Twelve and exercise the right of presidency by direction and council to that quorum.

13. That the calling and duties of the high priests are those of standing or local presidency of branches, districts, conferences, or stakes, to the presidency of which they may be called, or appointed by the constituted authorities of the church, in accordance to the law.

14. That "the Twelve" are the second quorum in authority and importance in the general work of the church; and is the leading missionary body of laborers, under the direction and council of the Presidency, whose duty it is to preach the gospel, win souls to Christ, administer in the rites of the gospel, carry the gospel to this and every other nation, take charge of and direct other missionaries; and to do any work within their calling, which the necessities of the work and general welfare of the church may demand.

HONOR OR RESPONSIBILITY

---

As we read the Bible we note that Moses prayed, "O Lord, why didst thou cumber me with this people?"

And Gideon, when the angel of the Lord appeared to him replied, "Alas, O Lord God, for because I have seen the angel of the Lord face to face."

In the presence of responsibility he was sobered and felt his own weakness. Moses had it when he was told to go to Pharaoh. Jonah had it when he was told to go to Nineveh. Isaiah suffered from it when he was sent to preach to the people of Judah. Enoch had it, according to the Inspired Version, when the Lord appeared to him. It was not fear, but a realization of the greatness of the work in which they were engaged. They did not shrink, but went forward and did the work they were called upon to do, yet realized their own weakness and need of divine help.

One with the Lord is a mighty army. Lowell has also expressed the thought, "Life is a leaf of paper white whereon each of us may write his word or two, and then comes night. . . . Greatly begin! thou that hast time, but for a line, be that sublime—not failure, but low aim, is crime." Or as another has stated it, "To dare to fail is noble; to fail to dare is ignoble."

Yet the right kind of man is humble withal and sees not the honor so much as the great responsibility.

The wrong kind of a man looks only for the honor and then is troubled and offended and accuses others of jealousy, because he thinks they do not give him enough honor. If he is fit and does his work, he will receive all the honor that is necessary. But that is not the important issue. The important issue is, can he be depended upon? Will he do his work?

Expressed in different language, too many men take a call to the priesthood to be the sign of divine approval. It should rather be considered a divine opportunity. The fact that the Lord sends a message to call us, does not necessarily mean that he approves of all we are, and shall be. It merely means that he has given us an opportunity to make good.

If a man seek to qualify himself, to prepare himself for whatever the Lord or the church may demand of him, when the time comes he will be ready. The work may be too great for him alone. But for every responsibility, there will be provided a measure of divine help, but provided always that he is humble and provided always that he has sought and is seeking to the extent of his ability to fit himself for the work whereunto God has called him.

A call to the priesthood is a divine opportunity to work with God. The right man sees the responsibility; he sees the greatness of the task; his own weakness; and in humility asks help.

LYNCHING

During the year 1918 there were more than sixty-five lynchings in the United States. In most cases the crime was committed upon untried persons, often for a very slight offense, and sometimes for only a suspected offense.

The Religious Society of Friends of Philadelphia, during one of its sessions in its late Yearly Meeting, gave considerable attention to the subject. A circular from the secretary of the organization says:

It felt this sin to be a shameful blot on the fair name of our beloved land; it felt its injustice and barbarity to its helpless victims, be they innocent or guilty, and its brutalizing and degrading effect on those who perpetrate the crime and on the thousands who often gather to see their fellow beings tortured and killed. Above all it felt this thing to be intolerable and wounding beyond our power to conceive, to the Infinite, Eternal Spirit whose children are not white alone, nor black alone, but of every nation, kindred, tongue, and people.

We are told that a conference on this subject was held at New York City on May 5 and 6, and though the Religious Society of Friends (commonly known as Quakers) have no official connection with it, they are in hearty sympathy with it.

We are hopeful that some effect will be had on the situation, and can assure our friends that no person imbued with the gospel as set forth by the church we have the honor to represent can in any way countenance violence or interference with the process of the law. The rights of every individual are sacredly observed in our church covenants and practices—toward members and nonmembers.

THE SACRIFICES OF THE WAR

(Summary of sermon by Elder John W. Rushton, at memorial service to Graceland students, Sunday, April 6, at 3 p. m.)

[The speaker read 2 Timothy 2 and continued]:

Our present duty is at once pleasing and painful. It is a mingling of grief and gladness. As we rejoice with deep gratitude because of the cessation of hostilities and the return of the men who have served the country in her hour of need, we are also filled with deep sorrow as we memorialize the supreme sacrifice made by the boys who went out of our midst, full of life and zeal to do their part, but now fill heroes' graves in different parts of the world. They went out from our college and we know their homes and parents, we are lonely to-day because they are no longer with us, and we here publicly express our profound sympathy with those who have lost sons, brothers, and friends, but rejoice with them that the place made vacant becomes the shrine of radiant memories before which we gather to-day and pay our homage in gratitude for the service which they so nobly rendered.

The theme, whether the aspect of welcome to those who have returned, or of grief as we mourn for those who shall not return, is wide and deep. We cannot exaggerate, nor express, nor measure its significance. But in a common joy and a common bereavement we are all united to-day in our common joy and remembrance. To the one we give our most hearty welcome and exuberant greeting, to the other we offer our most heartfelt sympathy.

There are six names of the boys and two names of the girls who, going out from Graceland College, have died for the honor of the cause and have placed the stars of gold upon the service flag of our church college, and help to swell the total of casualties which the church in America has given for the common cause of universal right and justice. From these congregations in the United States, our church has given a total of one thousand and sixty-three young men and women to the service of their country, of whom at least thirty-seven have died. This does not include Canada nor Britain nor Australia, but only the United States.

War is always a dismal and tragic business. It leaves its black track of misery and winding trail of wooden crosses. But along this highway of mourning there marches the world's finest and noblest heroism. Through this baptism of devastation and death there is developed a renaissance of national life, and we are given a vision of the divine power which lies at the back of all seen things. There are many compensations for tragedy and sorrow not the least is the discovery of the truth that life gains in value not because of what is enjoyed but rather because of what is suffered.

Not long ago in reading a book which has been described as the most impressive piece of fiction which the war has produced, The Four Horses of the Apocalypse, written by a Spaniard, Ibanez, I was impressed with an incident mentioned by this writer. Desnoyers, a Frenchman who left his country at the close of the Franco-Prussian war and went to South America where he became wealthy and lost his interest in his native land, finally returned to Paris with his family to enjoy the fashions and pleasures of that city. He only had one son besides two daughters, the son being a wild harum-scarum, seeing only the most exciting and questionable pleasures. Shortly after the return of this family to France, the war broke out, much to the annoyance of this old man who could not understand why France was so foolish as to seek to obstruct Germany again, after the calamitous defeat of 1870. He was so sure that France was doomed to a repetition of that experience that he became peevish and critical and endangered himself as a consequence.

One day, however, he happened to be close to the railway station at Paris when a number of soldiers were going to the front and he noticed among the crowd an old veteran of '70 who was clasping a young man's hand and seeking to encourage him, then he noticed a mother dressed in the garb of a widow who was sitting close beside her son, then he observed a little group, evidently a family. There was the woman who was an expectant mother, and a man in uniform, her husband, together with their three little children hanging on to his clothing and enjoying the excitement. In no case was there any expression of grief or distress. All were brave and eagerly waiting the call to entrain. Soon the soldiers were all on board the train, and as it drew out of the station, he noticed that the old veteran was choking with sobs and shaking his fist towards the north, and the widowed mother was striving hard to keep back her tears while she waved her handkerchief to her soldier boy, and the mother of the three children was prostrate with grief. Then it was that Desnoyers came to himself and the spirit of France awakened in his bosom and he envied that old father, the widowed mother, and the misshapen woman who gathered her three little children around her in unutterable anguish, and he cursed his own bankruptcy and longed to have a son who was worthy to take his place and do his part in the great conflict. The sight of personal sorrow and the glory of sacrifice in the interest of a worthy cause transformed him into a new being and from that time he is a Frenchman who lived and worked and sacrificed for France and had his supreme glory realized when his wastrel son finally became a hero and went forth nobly to bear his part as one of the soldiers of France.

We emphasize the glory and joy of sacrifice, and whisper the shame that is inevitable to those who decline to pay the price which must be paid in all ages for righteousness and peace.

These relatives and friends of the boys whose names are our honor to-day know the meaning of the joy of sacrifice. While they grieve because of their loss, yet to-day they would not exchange that sense of joy which is the reward of the sacrifice which they have made for anything which might be offered.

Let us consider briefly the causes of the sacrifice which has been demanded of the nations who have championed the cause of democracy in the hour of menace.

Our civilization is essentially Christian. No matter how much we may fail to live up to our standard or be loyal to all that is involved in our Christian ethic, it is nevertheless true that we stand for the message of Jesus Christ, and own the sovereignty of Christ in our national life and owe to him our gratitude for what we are, and even hope to be. What does the message of Christ signify to us and of what does it speak? Very strange to say the summary is given to us by a German theologian, Harnack, who in the light of what Germany has done, and he himself with many other German scholars has tried to defend, seems to be, with the strange irony of fate, hoist with his own petard; this man says that Christ is concerned with three important features namely, God; the kingdom of heaven; the value of the human soul.

If the German people had believed in these three things this war would never have taken place. The supreme sin of the Teutonic nation is in the fact that they have been disloyal to their own mind, untrue to their conscience, and have sinned against self.

On the contrary it was because the allied nations believe in God, the kingdom of heaven and the value of the human soul that they gathered up their wealth and life and risked all they had and all they were and their future to save all that these three simple sentences mean, and to save the Christian ethic which commands that the "strong shall save the weak," and that a man who will not give his life to save another is not worthy of life. This is the reason that Great Britain and the United States challenged the worst the enemy could do and gathered up their strength to save democracy from the threatening tide of Teutonic invasion; and in the glorious victory which has been achieved, the disaster and sacrifice entailed, it becomes a sacrament to us all.

God for us cannot mean anything less than good. In all goodness God is revealed, and in the revelation of God there is the source of all power. To be aligned with goodness and truth means that the power of the Eternal is reinforcing the human efforts, and "if God be for us who can be against us"? And as we vision God in this wide and philosophic sense, we must stand for a loyalty which carries us beyond the boundaries of geography, of sectarianism, of cast, and unites us in a brotherhood of God upon the true basis of immortality.

The kingdom of heaven must signify at least, the organization of all men and women who love God and find him in all that is good, into a society which is characterized by all that the race has read into the word "happiness," conditioned in truth, whose onward and forward activities are in righteousness and justice. This organization whether called Zion of the Old Testament, the kingdom of heaven of the New Testament, or the New Jerusalem of the Apocalypse, is after all the great objective of all religions and the hope of all humanity. As a church we stand for this ideal and believe that the kingdom of God is within the reach of men. When men shall live their life under the will of God, and in all of the activities of social relationship "will good" then it shall be said "Behold the kingdom of God is within you." But there can be no Zion or divine kingdom for those who ignore or repudiate truth, virtue, and justice.

When we speak of the value of the soul, then, remembering that the word value comes from the Latin valere which means "that which is availing in or for life," from which we get our words valient, valorous, and their cognates, as well as the word value, and that we shall understand that those things only which make for the increased power and greatness of the soul with all the meaning of mind and spirit which the New Testament reads into this word, can be esteemed as valuable; and all things which dull the mind and weaken the will and dim the celestial splendor of the Spirit are valueless and injurious and must be rejected.

Outside of God, the kingdom, and the soul, there is no immortality. All things, all peoples, all men who are living their lives or are being used in such a manner as to impoverish or impair the qualities of the soul, in the nature of things are doomed to obliteration. For inasmuch as in the course of evolution as well as in the word of God, it is clearly shown that he only can survive, then all things which are unlike himself must be cast out, then all of those who are unlike him must sooner or later either become identified with him or be abolished.

It is singular that the three great nations who have been allied in the war upon the common enemy have fought together under the "red, white, and blue." Always these colors have stood for spiritual qualities. The red for the passion of love, white for honor and purity, blue for the immortal.

These are our common ideals. By them we live and for them we die. Without love, honor, and immortality there is no life.

But it is not enough that we shall win the war. The war will not be won until we have proved that we were worthy to win because of the widening and deepening appreciation of these things. May God forbid that we shall cast a shadow upon the glorious victories of our heroes by infidelity to these ideals, but rather by our loyal devotion to them may the angel of the future establish our right to victory because of our moral and spiritual worthiness. This can only be because of our willingness and ability to improve the condition of humanity and the world. We shall give the final proof of this when we have converted our enemy into our friend. This is the supreme test of Christianity. We must love our enemies and make our enemies love us, but love can only love the lovable. Our duty is clear that there must be the uplifting of that which is universally recognized as the lovable, and in our loyalty to that we unite with all loyal people who are loyal in their love of and devotion to that which is the supremely lovable. This will also be the payment of our debt of gratitude to those who have died.

At this point we may pause to consider what shall be a most fitting memorial? What shall we erect to perpetuate the memory of these men who have died for us? It seems to me that the proposed memorial hall in connection with Graceland College would be a suitable monument. For from the college there will go forth those men and women who by virtue of their training in the culture and art of the Christian ethic there will be guaranteed to the world educators who are not only imbued with the passion for intellectualism but for that truer culture which includes will and spirit as well as mentality.

The time is here when all things must be gathered into one. That oneness is the oneness of Christ; for he must be all in all. There is a great need among us for the development of an intellectual basis for our religion, but there is also a great need for the spiritualizing of the world's intellectuality. While it is true that mere intellectualism is a poor substitute for inspiration, yet it is also true that an intellectual mind lit up by the inspiration of the Almighty gives us more of the Apocalyptic vision in which we see the city of God coming down out of heaven.

"HE BEING DEAD, YET SPEAKETH"—A FEEBLE TRIBUTE

---

In the removal from earth life of Heman C. Smith, death has dealt a severe blow to all whose privilege it was to be intimately acquainted with him. Memory of him is an inspiration, and it is impossible to free ourselves from the painful sense of loneliness that the thought of his absence creates. Every station and walk of our church estate is permeated with this feeling, for one cannot enter any of its avenues where the impress and influence of his noble and useful life is not discerned.

Thousands know of him only as his literary contributions reveal him to them, and from their lips the expression is everywhere heard: "A great man has gone. But only those who by reason of immediate intercourse and intimate companionship have learned the value of the man and discerned the richness of his soul and heart competency can truly sense the greatness of the loss the church has sustained in his departure.

To me he seemed the personification of nobility, and it was only necessary to think of him in order to find a sufficient rebuke for the unseemliness that occasionally had exhibit in my own life, and I could go to my extreme in eulogy of his character to-day without entering the realm of flattery.

After the manner of human speech, he is dead, but in me he yet lives and will never die till I have passed beyond the reach and sphere of memory. He lives to be loved—to be emulated—his absence to be mourned as an irreparable loss, and the asperity of the thought of coming dissolution for me is softened by the hope that it will permit my reassociation with him.

My acquaintance with him began shortly after my entrance into the church, and my admiration began with that acquaintance. Meeting him only at General Conferences, I made as much as possible of the opportunities for being in his company, for it always seemed that there was something about him that I desired and needed, and that was communicable.

In the year 1881, I think it was, he made a tearful and stirring appeal to the body for help in his field of labor, and got only expressions of sympathy in response, as laborers were scarce. Rising again he cried out: "Sympathy is all right in its place, but it is not sympathy I want, it is help!" He did not get it at once, however, and I slipped quietly over to his side, later, and asked him how he would like me as a helper for a time; to which he replied, "Will you go?" I answered, "Yes, if appointed," and so good fortune threw us together as missionaries for a few months during that year, in the Indian Territory—the Cherokee Nation chiefly.

The houses were a mile or more apart, the gum-weeds were rank, the prairie grass tall, making foot-travel tiresome; the snakes were abundant and bobbing up every here and there along our path; the ticks homesteaded our bodies where the chiggers had not preceded them; the sun poured its rays in blazing heat upon us most of the time. We had to ford Grand River and make long wearying tramps daily; but with Heman as a companion, every discomfort was minimized and the advantage was mine.

He was uncomplaining and jovial and when he spoke he always said something, and from even the sorriest conditions he extracted a modicum of information and comfort for use of which he found place in his subsequent services as a minister.

Sometimes the food set before us in certain places was such in appearance as to overmaster even his determined to "feel no compunction for stomach's sake," as well as my own, but he was a gentleman and never allowed a word or look to escape him that would reflect on the conditions. Sometimes they were almost insufferable, and after gracefully indulging to the length of his palate's endurance, he would excuse himself and we would wander off and let the emetic get in its work, and then pick and eat wild berries enough to satisfy hunger and tide us over till the next meal at some other place.

One day, after just such an experience, we reached, towards evening, a large, one-roomed log house with only one bedstead in it. The hospitable host and hostess welcomed us and surrendered the bed to us and took their children to the other end of the room, with them to bunk on a pallet which was improvised on the floor. The coverings on that bed were eloquent in odor and color as to the absence of laundries, but tired from long tramping, and almost prostrated from effects of the heat we "turned in." Just outside the building a dog, suffering from the mange, kept up a constant howling and, whether attracted by that music or the warmth of our bodies, or both, need not be told, but from the tombs or crevices of the bedstead, there emerged a host—I will not say innumerable, for we did not try to count them—bent on taking squatter sovereignty on all the territory not previously preempted by the chiggers and ticks on our carcasses. Well, they didn't sleep, nor did we. They kept busy, and so did we. Beds are usually suggestive of sleep and rest; but there are beds and beds, as missionaries in some places know, and poor Heman and I couldn't help thinking, if we did not sing, of "Home, Sweet Home," and how soft a brick pavement would feel back there in comparison with what was then in evidence. After some two or three hours thus spent, Heman reached his endurance limit and quietly crept out of bed and into the yard, where he found an old barn door which had been laid upon some logs, and on that he stretched himself and let that mangy dog sing him to sleep, while, cheered by the same lullaby, I kept up the struggle inside till morning with fate and fortune and vermin.

However, next day we talked gospel, advertised meetings, and then resumed our tramp, and the only regret expressed by Heman was for those people whom heredity and environment had thus fated. Next afternoon found us at the home of Brother Clark—an oasis which we made the most of. We rested and ate and drank and slept—and bathed, with a relish born of long abstinence.

One of the places of blessed memory to us in those days was the home of the late Sister Duncan and her husband. She was a full-blooded Lamanite and her home was a little palace, from the floors of which you could have eaten your food with a relish. They were the embodiment of hospitality and it was a blissful respite to be sheltered there.

Brother Heman always kept the "blues" away from me by the use of the faculty which seemed to be characteristically his, of infusing his own nature or self into every experience in such a way as to make it impossible for me to think of the gloomy occurrences without feeling glad that I had participated in them, because they brought him out more distinctly—he sanctified them to me somehow.

His sermons were such that his audiences—old or young, learned or illiterate, could take them away with them when they left the chapel, and that goes a long way toward spelling success. The bread he fed his hearers was made of whole "wheat." He was a powerful speaker and often eloquent, but he never "played to the galleries." He seldom, if ever, offered pastry to his hungry auditors. He handled only the staple "bread of life." He never harangued an audience. He logically reasoned. He never made a bid for favor in a speech. He stated facts and reasoned from them and the law, regardless of effects upon the listeners.

In meeting a baptist preacher in Texas, in a private prearranged discussion once, he asked the man bluntly if he was honest in engaging in the debate, and the answer was, "Yes, sir, absolutely." "Then," said Heman, "you had better arrange your affairs for becoming a Latter Day Saint at once, for that will be the result of this interview. I advise you to stop before you start unless you are ready for that." The preacher smiled at this apparent display of conceit, but at the close of the discussion, he surrendered like a man, became a Saint, then an elder, and later a missionary.

Heman knew that the gospel he handled was of God, and that fact gave incisiveness to his utterances. He was free from ostentation. He was as humble and approachable as a child, and never jealous of others, let them rise as high as they might. His shoulder was always ready to "boost" a brother toward success. His acquaintance always wore well, and the better you knew him, the keener was your appetite for his companionship. In short, he was a man of God, and God loved him.

It was my privilege and pleasure to perform the ceremony that made him and his chosen Vida one, and to see them start together for California immediately afterwards.

By authority of the revelation of 1887, he and I were enrolled in the Quorum of the Twelve, and by the revelation of 1909 we were both removed therefrom—he to give his time exclusively to the work of Church Historian, and I to pursue medical work. We were told on being released by President Joseph Smith and Frederick M. Smith, that our apostleship remained, and we were only released from active work with the quorum; and always after that at General Conference time, Heman would jokingly issue a call to me for the "Quorum of Apostles at large" to meet.

On the morning of April 4, 1919, I called on him at the Sanitarium, just before starting for General Conference. Though suffering in body, his heart was throbbing with zeal for the gospel and he thought that after a few days of rest and treatment he would be able to make the trip to conference and share in the work of its closing days; but it was otherwise ordered, and thus closed our earthly interviews which had extended over a period of forty years.

His last words to me—like nearly all his others—told of his devotion to principle, his anxiety for the church's triumph, his willingness to remain on its altar, and his fidelity to truth.

Let no reader of these lines think that I regard Heman C. Smith as a man without any of the failings or frailties of mankind. Not at all. I saw in him what challenged my affection and I loved him, and he was one of the men who permitted me to get near enough to him to love him expressively. His going seems to have taken a part out of my life; the lesson he helped me to learn makes me resigned even to that, and inspires me to further toil till I shall be counted worthy to share his promotion.

And as I scan the fields of toil
His pilgrim feet have pressed,
I call each atom holy soil—
Each sand supremely blessed.

For side by side with his thereon,
Footprints I see, which tell
That he who from our view has gone
Walked with Emmanuel.

Companioned thus, no mystery
That he was loved, for who Could read a mortal history
Thus written and eschew?

JOSEPH LUFF.

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES

---

IS THE SECOND ADVENT OF CHRIST NEAR?
WILL THE WORLD BE CONVERTED BEFORE HE COMES?

(Sermon by Elder A. C. Barmore, March 16, 1919.)

As a text for this evening's sermon I wish to use Revelation 22:20 which reads, "I come quickly." This text has been used in two erroneous ways, and by two separate classes of people. Some, and these are of course religious people, have used it to show the early return of Christ as to the time or date of his descent. In this way they have repeatedly built up and torn down their own faith and that of their followers by the frequent excitation and disappointment of their own faith and of their hopes. Sometimes they have grown more cautious and have not repeated their error while in other cases they have altered their plans somewhat and continued in the same folly. The other class referred to is made up of infidels who have taken these religionists seriously, that is, to the extent of accepting their interpretation of scripture and on that basis condemning the whole Bible.

As a matter of fact the explanation of the text is faulty. It does not refer to the date of the Savior's coming but to the manner of his appearing. The sense is, "I descend abruptly." It is analogous to Malachi's prophecy: "The Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple."

NOT FAR OFF

By this we do not mean that Jesus will not soon return. We believe he will, but such texts as these do not prove it. The verses quoted are as much in favor of his coming centuries ago. We prove the imminence of his coming now by the prophecies. It is, indeed, in these that we find the best evidences of the inspiration of the Bible. As a matter of fact, we have lately had and are still having the wars of the last days, and the famines, pestilences, and earthquakes prophesied by Jesus, are, in all their intensity, yet to come. One thing which has led to much error along this line is the tendency to exaggerate the importance of trivial events. For instance, the dark day of 1780 has been used as an evidence of prophetic fulfillment, when it was a very trivial affair, and was caused by forest and prairie fires, intensified, perhaps, by the sudden appearance of a cloudy sky. And besides, it prevailed only in certain of our Northern and Eastern States. Similar phenomena have been observed on the Sahara Desert as the result of sand storms. The same use has been made of the falling of the stars in 1833. This, like the event of 1780, can have no bearing on the second coming of Christ for the "signs in the sun, moon, and stars," are, by the prophets, placed after the great wars of the last days, and also subsequent to the return of the Jews to the Holy Land. (See Joel 2: 10, 31; 3: 9, 10, 15.)

EXACT DATE UNKNOWN

Several attempts have been made to fix the time of Christ's coming. The most notable instance was that of William Miller in 1844. All such efforts turned out miserable failures and must continue to do so. This is so because they are directly opposed to the specific teachings of Jesus who says: No man knows the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh, no, not even the Son himself nor the angels, but the Father only.

When I was in California in 1897 I spent much of my time in Modoc County. At that time there was a class of religionists at work there known as the Gospel Band. They used canvas-covered wagons which were called, "Gospel Wagon No. 1," etc., on to as many as they required. Their methods were similar to those pursued by the Salvation Army in our large cities. Their leader was a Reverend Adams, who, in representation of himself and followers, said to me: "We believe that Christ will come within this century." This was in the nineteenth century. We are now living in the nineteenth year of the twentieth century, and still Christ has not come. In Acts 3: 21 Peter declares that "the heaven must receive" (that is, "keep," or "retain") Christ "until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets." Restitution is equal to restoration. A part of the work of restoration not yet accomplished is the restoration of Israel to their own land, and also their restoration to the favor of God by their conversion to Christ. As to how long it will be after these events before Christ comes, we are not informed.

WORLD NOT CONVERTED BEFORE

A common error is that the whole world will be converted before the Savior's coming. This has led to still others of a similar kind. When, in 1913, I returned to America after eleven years' absence in Australia, I really expected to find Americans so generally converted that I feared there would be no room for evangelistic work. I had been led to expect this from the statements of American evangelists I met in Australia. Really there are more non-members in this country than ever, and of those who belong to church only about thirty per cent attend. Jesus says: "As it was in the days of Noah so shall it be also in the days of the coming of the Son of Man." "Shall be" indicates his future coming, and the prediction also shows that at that time there would be the usual amount of wickedness, if not more.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

FRANKLIN ON THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

[The Des Moines Register for May 13, 1919, reprints an extract on Franklin on the League of Nations, by R. W. Kelsey in the New Republic. The clipping follows.—EDITORS.]

Anent the opposition to the proposed covenant of the league of nations I venture to offer the following excerpts from a statement written by Benjamin Franklin and read near the close of the constitutional conventions of 1787. The likeness of the conditions and problems of that day to those of this was referred to in a recent editorial of the New Republic entitled "The great debate." In like manner the words of Franklin then are full of meaning at the present moment.

"Mr. President: I confess that there are several parts of this constitution which I do not at present approve, but I am not sure I shall never approve of them. For, having lived long, I have experienced many instances of being obliged, by better information or fuller consideration, to change opinions, even on important subjects, which I once thought right, but found to be otherwise. It is therefore that, the older I grow, the more apt I am to doubt my own judgment, and to pay more respect to the judgment of others. . . .

"In these sentiments, sir, I agree to this constitution, with all its faults, if they are such, because I think a general government necessary for us, and there is no form of government, but what may be a blessing to the people if well administered; . . . I doubt, too, whether any other convention we can obtain may be able to make a better constitution. For, when you assemble a number of men to have the advantage of their joint wisdom you inevitably assemble with those men all their prejudices, their passions, their errors of opinion, their local interests, and their selfish views. From such an assembly can a perfect production be expected? It therefore astonishes me, sir, to find this system approaching so near to perfection as it does; and I think it will astonish our enemies, who are waiting with confidence, to hear that our councils are confounded, like those of the builders of Babel; and that our States are on the point of separation, only to meet hereafter for the purpose of cutting one another's throats. Thus I consent, sir, to this constitution, because I expect no better, and because I am not sure that it is not the best. The opinions I have had of its errors I sacrifice to the public good. I have never whispered a syllable of them abroad. Within these walls they were born, and here they shall die. If every one of us, in returning to our constituents, were to report the objections he has had to it, and endeavor to gain partisans in support of them, we might prevent its being generally received, and thereby lose all the salutary effects and great advantages resulting naturally in our favor among foreign nations, as well as among ourselves, from our real or apparent unanimity. Much of the strength and efficiency of any government, in procuring and securing happiness to the people, depends on opinion—on the general opinion of the goodness of the government, as well as of the wisdom and integrity of its governors. I hope, therefore, that for our own sakes, as a part of the people, and for the sake of posterity, we shall act heartily and unanimously in recommending this constitution (if approved by congress and confirmed by the conventions) wherever our influence may extend, and turn our future thoughts and endeavors to the means of having it well administered.

"On the whole, sir, I cannot help expressing a wish that every member of the convention, who may still have objections to it, would with me, on this occasion, doubt a little of his own infallibility, and, to make manifest our unanimity, put his name to this instrument."

How freighted are Franklin's words not only with generous charity but with political wisdom, and how pertinent to the present issue. Well might we wish at this juncture for a senate full of Franklins, generous enough to forget personal or partisan animosities, wise enough to doubt a little of their own infallibility."

[We may add, how weighted are Franklin's words, not only with charity but also in the real sense—true Christianity. If all could only see the vital difference between a consistent effort to bring about proper amendment at the right time and place, together with a spirit of mutual consideration and conciliation on the one hand, and that very different spirit of those who go forth to various fields or states and there point out all the objections possible. It applies in the case of the League of Nations; it applies in the case of government; it applies in the kingdom of God.]

A NEW MOVE FOR CHURCH UNITY

[From time to time we note the effort towards church unity. The intent is doubtless good, for there is and can be but one church of God. But the method of carrying out is erroneous in that every effort we have noted is based upon an attempt at compromise between individuals and separate churches, rather than an attempt to find from our heavenly Father the church with which he is well pleased, and the truth as it exists with him. There has been an effort since last fall to federate the churches of Omaha. Sometimes they had difficulty in securing a secretary, so Sister Audentia Anderson informs us. Then they had long sessions over the constitution to be adopted. Finally seven pastors fixed one up, but the clause on membership was found objectionable, as is set forth in the inclosed clipping from an Omaha paper of about May 11.—EDITORS.]

The proposed union of the Omaha Ministerial Association with the Omaha Church Federation has apparently attracted but little notice, and the writer has felt that the vital importance of the subject to the city calls for a more extended public discussion than was given in the meeting of about twenty-five of the one hundred protestant ministers of the city held Monday morning. What is said here is, of course, the individual expression of the writer.

At the Monday meeting a constitution was adopted by the Ministerial Association, for a new organization to be known as the Omaha Association of Ministers and Churches. The purpose as set forth covers a wide range of splendid activities touching the civic, industrial, social, and religious life of the city.

ADOPT RESTRICTING CLAUSE

After considerable discussion, however, a restricting clause was adopted, which was intended, without any possible question, to eliminate from membership certain churches. There could be no serious objection on the part of anyone, if it is the desire of what may be called the evangelical churches to organize themselves into an association for cooperating in religious work.

The only objection which can be raised is that the organization, after adopting this restricting clause, was not frank and honest enough to adopt a name and an expressed set of objects in keeping with the restricted plan of membership.

If this had been done, the organization, instead of being named the Omaha Association of Ministers and Churches, should have some such name as this: "The Omaha Association of Protestant, Evangelical Christian Ministers and Churches." It might, of course, be even more restricted, to those who accept the Augsburg Confession, or who hold to some sacrament as a saving ordinance.

Any group of ministers has an unquestioned right to organize an association. It is a question whether they have a right to organize an exclusive organization and at the same time adopt so widely inclusive a name; whether, in fact, they have a right, in this day of religious tolerance, to say to the city, "Only those who subscribe to these creedal conditions are entitled to be called ministers and churches."

FOR CIVIC ACTIVITIES

It was the feeling of a majority of the committee which drew the constitution, that there should be in Omaha a federation which might include in its civic activities all the religious organizations of the city. It was hoped that this association might unite in helpful cooperation those who are striving to serve God and their fellow men.

The associations as formed, while a perfectly legitimate organization as far as it goes, does not unite; it divides. It says to Jews and to Unitarians and to other liberals: "You are not churches and we cannot ask you to cooperate in these civic activities."

Furthermore the wording of the restrictive clause not only eliminates organizations but it practically sets up an interpretation of a theological dogma and says that this particular interpretation must be adopted by those who are to become members of this association. It practically declares that there is no room in the religious life of Omaha for those who are thinking, religiously, in the terms of the 20th century.

It would eliminate every effort to reconcile scientific truth with religious truth. It would say that Omaha must go back for its interpretation of religious truths to the dark ages. This, at least, is the inevitable conclusion based on the arguments which were presented in support of the restricted amendment to the constitution.

SAYS TO "PRUSSIANIZE RELIGION"

While this is bad enough I have wondered if there was not also present an attitude on the part of many who supported the amendment which would expose itself something like this: "I believe so thoroughly that my theological views are correct that I cannot mingle socially with those who differ from me, that I cannot take part with them in civic betterment work. I cannot march side by side with them in the great battle that must be waged in the coming days to bring the kingdom of God to pass on earth."

I cannot suppress a feeling that there is an effort being made to Prussianize the religious life of the city of Omaha, whether it is a conscious effort or not. I cannot avoid a conviction that real religious liberty is being smothered out by the oppressive dogmatism of an age that should have passed.

If the great battle for democracy, against autocracy, has not succeeded in eliminating the spirit of the Hun in the religious life of to-day it has to that extent failed, and it will not be surprising if in the coming years the leadership in moral and industrial and social reform passes from the church into the hands of secular organizations.—J. Delman Kuykendall, in Omaha Bee, May 11, 1919.

METHODIST CHURCH DRIVE

[We think the following clipping from the Omaha Bee for May 18, may prove of interest showing the opinions of others concerning the religious crisis before the world. To express it in terms applying to our own organization it would be equivalent to our raising between $1,750,000 and $2,000,000 in a single week's drive. That would only be pro rata according to the number of members. It would not take into consideration our responsibility to let our light shine in an especial degree for the redemption of the world.—EDITORS.]

With their goal $140,000,000 for human betterment, the greatest amount any denomination ever attempted to raise in the history of the world, Methodist Episcopal churches throughout the United States will begin tomorrow a spectacular one-week intensive financial drive.

They are trying to achieve the financial objects of their Missionary Centenary by employing all the methods of a Liberty Loan campaign—newspaper advertising and publicity, bill boards, special pamphlets, dinners, and the rivalry between localities and individual churches, each striving to show an oversubscription.

The country has been divided and subdivided into areas, conferences, districts and sub-districts, and the individual churches are also organized into several units. To each division, down to the individual churches, a definite quota has been assigned.

That the drive is bound to be a signal success is the deduction drawn by leaders at centenary headquarters here from a flood of letters and telegrams showing about two thousand churches already have exceeded their allotment and are pushing on for 100 per cent oversubscription.

Teams of workers carefully organized and drilled by C. S. Ward, campaign manager for many recent war fund activities, will present the centenary message to every member of the church next week. In each city the teams will meet together once a day for luncheon or dinner, exchange reports and get inspiration from speeches and music.

The movement is founded on the belief that the world to-day is at one of the crucial points of its history, and that the war has awakened mankind, but left it confused and likely to follow false prophets, and that a remarkable opportunity for the play of either good or evil forces is open in every land. In this crisis the leaders of the movement declare Christianity should take a strong stand and make unusual efforts to supply the guidance.

But the work to be undertaken with the centenary fund will be largely of a most practical character. Among the multitude of enterprises decided upon are the adoption of twelve French towns on the Chateau-Thierry battlefield for reconstruction, a series of recreation centers like the Y. M. C. A. huts but of a more permanent nature, in war-torn France and Italy, hospitals for the cannibal tribes in Africa and Mohammedans of Malaysia, a large agricultural station to teach American methods of farming in southern Italy and an even larger institution of the same character in Chile; community churches in many American cities and an intensification of all the activities to improve the tone of American life, so as to make the United States the "model Christian nation."

An interesting feature of the drive is the attempt to enlist one million Methodists as tithers, or persons who promise to give one tenth of their income to help their fellow men. So far, well over 125,000 men, women, and young folks have signed this pledge and the gold cards have poured into the centenary offices here so fast that the tabulation is far behind.

Fifty-three thousand young men and women are being recruited from colleges and schools. This army corps will be especially trained to serve in the enterprises of the church as enlarged by the centenary. On the intelligence and personality of the leaders developed, according to the heads of the centenary, will depend the success of the movement as much as on the amount of money raised.

We therefore stand for the Bible ideal of Zion and a literal kingdom of God on earth. We believe that as Christian believers we should unite in making the Christian ethics the basis of our correlated activities, having the glory of God and the increasing of mutual happiness, with the consequent decrease of injustice, inequality, and competitive struggle, as our paramount objective.—G. H. Wixom, in Santa Ana Daily Register.

The Spiritual in Music

That there is a spiritual element in music very few, probably, realize or have given even a passing thought. To the most of humanity music is but a thing of ephemeral fancy, a something to afford present pleasure, having little, if any, meaning beyond the mere pleasing of the moment.

But there is more in song than sensation; more in music than mere pleasing; for there is in it a positive, potent, spiritual force that manifests itself to man, and in a thousand ways influences and shapes his life for good or ill.

That there is a subtle but potent force in music can be readily seen in the many practical ways in which it is employed in the affairs of man. In so many things does it enter into the woof and warp of his intricate existence that we wonder sometimes how he could get along without it; how seriously its loss would affect his welfare and progress. Our armies are recruited under its influence; their drills are made more precise and effectual by its rhythm; the long, wearisome marches are found less burdensome under its reviving impulses; and our soldiers go the more bravely into battle under its inspiring strains. In the camp their lives are made happier, more orderly, because of its influence, and so valued is it that the Government is urging its culture in their after lives as civilians.

In the life of the citizen, music is valuable as a refining, educating influence, and communities are turning their attention to providing proper music for the benefit of all. The most public-spirited of our communities are providing civic centers where municipal bands and orchestras and the municipal organ concerts are abundant and are free to all.

This is as it should be. Society should recognize its opportunity in music and the great possibilities that music holds for it, and should provide for the liberal dispensing of music to all, that its benefits may be shared by all alike.

Never in the history of the race has so much music of good quality been given to man, and never before has so much of a bad or doubtful character been dumped upon the public. The stimulus of unusual musical development has, of course, resulted in a stimulated and increased production and a mass of stuff, some good, some worthless, and much harmful, has resulted. The problem of society is at present the digestion, absorption, and assimilation of all that is worthy of this mass, and the elimination of the great bulk that is worthless.

The effect of music upon men is either good or bad, according to the character of the music partaken of. He who seeks a rendition of Handel's immortal "Messiah" cannot help but have a better conception of the majesty of the great atonement made for the world. He who listens to a symphonic masterpiece cannot help but feel its exaltation. He who hears a tone picture from the pen of a master hand cannot help but feel its ennobling, elevating influence. And so it is; he who seeks the good in music for his own must inevitably receive from it that which immeasurably betters him. But what of the masses of to-day, who are content to regale themselves continuously upon the vapid, cheap, oft-times worse-than-worthless stuff put out under the name of music? How are their tastes being perverted? Is not the unprecedented and astounding growth of "ragtime" in the last decade an evidence that with many the musical tastes are surely lowering and tending to that which is vicious? Is not the musical tendency of the age an adequate reflection of the decadence of society in general, an unflinching indication that society is sinking into that degeneration which will encompass its downfall, and which has been foretold by prophet and sage?

Now, what is the message of God to his Saints who are to live in this age of decay, and who would preserve themselves from the contamination of degeneration? It is that "my people shall stand in holy places." May they not occupy sacred ground in music as well as in other things? Can they live truly uncontaminated lives in every other thing and at the same time satisfy themselves with the low and mean in music?

Saints who have been favored with the divine counsel to "cultivate the gifts of music and of song" should endeavor to seek out and appropriate only the best in music, for life is too precious and too short for any but the best, and the formation of true character too important to admit of trifling with that which is low and vulgar. The best in music is none too good for the people of God, and they should seek out assiduously to find that best and weave it into their lives.

As to the spiritual in music: we should strive to realize that everything in music has a meaning, either for good or for ill. We should try to sense that meaning and to choose such music as will express only that which is pure, good, and noble. The music of our homes should be chaste and of good quality; that of our church dignified, lofty, and without show or pomp.

How are we to perceive the spiritual, inner meaning of music? How are we to discern the good and the evil in music? There is no royal road to a knowledge of music or its spiritual meaning. It is only by acquiring an intimate relationship with the art that we reach its innermost portals. Nothing that is really worth while in life is gained without effort. We cannot understand the hidden meaning of music unless we seek her riches through labor. The secrets of her treasure house that others have delved and striven for are not yielded to us without an effort. As we labor to learn the spiritual meaning of our wondrous faith in God, so must we labor to know that found in the spiritual content of music. God's people should be diligent to cultivate a real acquaintance with this choice art. Therein comes effort, labor, which conquers all things. We must work to know the inner meaning of music if we attain to the divine intention regarding it.

The Church Piano

Many of our churches use pianos as accompanying instruments for their sacred services. In the absence of means or facilities with which to secure a pipe organ, the instrument par excellence for religious service, the piano is rapidly supplanting the cabinet organ as a favorite in our devotional exercises. This is as it should be, for the piano offers so many more opportunities for musical development than the small reed organ. It is with the knowledge that this is obtaining more and more that we have resolved to write some few practical hints concerning the pianos that our churches secure and use, believing that they will be of value to those who have our musical interests at heart. It is also with the further knowledge that so few of our church people really understand how properly to select and care for a church piano that we write, for their practical information.

BUYING THE PIANO

There are many things that too often determine the selection of a piano for the church, and it is with the knowledge that in many instances mistakes are made that we write by way of warning. Frequently the factor that determines what piano shall be purchased is the amount of money that is available. The committee in charge of raising the funds for the piano secure what may seem to them a reasonable amount, say two hundred or two hundred and fifty dollars, and no longer put off the purchase of this important instrument. Now, a really first-class instrument of good quality can no longer be purchased at retail for this amount, and the result is that the committee frequently, in their quest for a bargain, fall into the hands of some unscrupulous dealer, who assures them blandly that the instrument he offers them for this amount is fully equal to the higher priced instruments, and he proceeds to give them a most plausible reason for it, such as, for instance, his piano is not being sold for a high price on account of its reputation. He neglects to state, however, that his piano has no reputation. The devious ways of the piano salesman eager to dispose of his instruments are actually past finding out, they are so numerous; and he who falls into the hands of an unscrupulous piano dealer is a luckless victim. Therefore our piano buyers should look well to their interests, for the motto of the rapacious piano dealer is caveat emptor—let the buyer beware. Also, our piano purchasing committee should wait until their funds are sufficient to warrant securing a dependable instrument that can only be gotten at a fair price.

We cannot attempt to suggest in this article what are the dependable makes of pianos. There are a number of good, thoroughly dependable, honestly made pianos, but there is an even greater number of unworthy, undependable instruments, that should be avoided like the plague. The piano is a fairly good-sized instrument, occupying considerable space in a household, and one would naturally conclude that it is an instrument somewhat restricted as to the quantity manufactured. But the number of different firms that manufacture pianos and vend them to the public is literally into the hundreds, almost into the thousands, in fact. It is therefore a foregone conclusion that with so many makes many of them must be undeserving of merit and should be shunned. One of the invariable practices of the obscure and undependable manufacturer is to seek out the isolated territories, secluded from the centers of musical culture, where people naturally know something about pianos, and there vend their wares. The result is that many country communities are victimized by being flooded with inferior instruments. Therefore let our country churches be particularly watchful, for the sharks have hitherto found such easy victims.

Those who contemplate purchasing pianos should seek counsel and advice from competent judges as to the quality of the instruments inspected. A musician of unquestioned ability, particularly a piano teacher of long experience, is usually good, and if disinterested will be found very dependable. An experienced tuner who has proved his integrity will also be a competent judge; but as many tuners are financially interested in the sale of some one make of piano, they are not always unbiased in their judgment. It might be well to consult both. But the main thing is to exercise good care, secure good counsel and watch that you are not placing yourself in the hands of an unscrupulous person. We will say, in conclusion, that this department stands ready at any time to aid by advice those who are thinking of purchasing pianos.

THE CARE OF THE PIANO

A church building is usually a very poor place for the keeping of a piano, for the reason that the temperature of the room is very unequal, the year round. In the winter time the church gets a good heating up when Sunday comes, and then the building is allowed to get as cold as the outdoors the balance of the week. The result is that on one day the piano is heated up to about seventy-five or eighty degrees Fahrenheit, and during the other six days it may get as cold as ten to twenty degrees below zero. The humidity of the air is alternately dry or very damp, both in summer and winter. This is very bad for a piano. But these conditions can hardly be avoided in our churches, and therefore about the only way to care for the church piano is to see that it is carefully closed after each time it is used, to keep dampness from circulating too freely within it. If this is done the piano will stand the trying condition of the church much better. But the most important thing to do for the church piano is to have it tuned by a careful and competent workman at regular intervals. Many churches wait until the piano gets so badly out of tune that its dissonances harshly affect the sensitive ears of the branch, and then a hue and cry is raised until the instrument is placed in tune again. But this is also bad for the piano. A good piano will last fully twice as long if properly tuned at regular intervals. A church piano should be tuned twice each year regularly; once in the late spring after fires are no longer necessary for comfort, and again in the autumn after fires have again become a necessity. If a piano is thus treated by a competent tuner, who will at the same time keep the delicate action in regulation, it will stand the wear admirably and keep its life and tone qualities much longer. The money thus spent in the piano's care will actually be returned in the maintaining the instrument's vitality and keeping qualities. So don't foolishly economize in the item of piano tuning, for such is being "penny-wise and pound-foolish."

The Psychology of Singing

How seldom does the listener, hearing some one singing or humming about his daily work, stop to consider what a rare and enviable condition of mind the singer is in.

Almost without exception, outward music unconsciously expressed, no matter how untrained, indicates harmony within—the bubbling over of a contented heart.

It is not an unusual thing to hear one member of a family, perhaps in an irritable mood himself, requesting silence on the part of some one whose high spirits have found utterance in song. What a responsibility to assume the "shutting off" of the inner joy that some one, more fortunate for the moment, is experiencing!

By a strange law of opposites, music is also a panacea for the sorrowing heart as well. Perhaps a hidden grief has become almost unbearable. Frequently does the singer or musician along other lines resort to song or instrument as an outlet for his unhappiness.

Certain it is that music bears the closest possible relationship to the inner life and emotions of the individual, and that no other medium can take its place.

Practical Necessity of Piano Study

"Mary has no talent for the piano, so it is no use wasting time and money on her music lessons." How many a misguided parent has said this, in ignorance of what piano study could do for her child irrespective of its talent in the art of music. Doubts would quickly vanish if parents realized that piano practice is almost as helpful and important to the future engineer or physician as to the prospective concert performer.

Only for a relatively small class of children, the specially gifted and those destined for the concert stage, has the study of music a direct vocational usefulness. For all other children, it needs to be included in both home and school studies for its mind and body training value. If talent be present, well and good; if not, the fact in no way diminishes the importance of the music work.

TRAINING OF THE FACULTIES

Consider the one matter of rhythm alone. We may be unconscious of it, but it is certainly true that rhythm lightens labor, makes for grace and poise, lessens fatigue and upbuilds morale. And rhythm can best be inculcated in a child by means of music study.

Through actual performance on any instrument, not only is the ear trained to accurate discrimination, but the eye also is taught to read the notes quickly and accurately. The hand must be swift and sure and all three, ear, eye, and hand, must work in perfect unison, obedient to the alert mind.

Modern music training does not confine itself to the more or less mechanical teaching of sight reading. It teaches the pupils to read simple music readily and accurately, to take down music from dictation and, most delightful of all, to write original melodies. Such training as this both develops the memory and power of perseverance, and fosters the imagination and artistic sense.

KNOWLEDGE OF PIANO A FUNDAMENTAL NECESSITY

Just as Latin is the starting point and cornerstone of all foreign language study, so the piano constitutes the foundation of all music study. If a child prefers the violin or harp, he should, nevertheless, take piano lessons first if possible. The knowledge of the piano gives him the fullest and richest harmonic experiences to be derived from a single instrument, inasmuch as it most nearly approaches the orchestra in its harmonies. For singers, particularly, some degree of proficiency at the piano is almost a prerequisite for vocal success.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Woman's Auxiliary Reception

MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 14

Nearly one hundred women met in social conclave at the high school building, a fair showing considering the inclement weather. Pleasant mingling and chat occupied the gathering hour, and later the women listened to a short but interesting program.

Sister Nelle Atkinson Kelley, of Omaha, sang two lovely songs, in her own artistic and enjoyable manner. Sister Kelley is a great favorite with conference audiences, her clear, pure, soprano voice, highly trained, being capable of much shading and happy interpretations.

Sister Lena Lambert Graham followed with two readings, the first humorous, the second more serious and thoughtful. Sister Graham is meeting with unusual success in her work in Lamoni, especially as coach for oratorical and debating contests. During the conference she went with some of her pupils to Leon, where she was gratified by their carrying off honors in the county contest.

Our general auxiliary president, Sister D. J. Krahl, of Holden, Missouri, was then introduced. She expressed her happiness at meeting so many of the sisters from all over the United States, and voiced her desire to be of service to them, in helping to solve the problems which confront them. She spoke of the wonderful program of activity and service which is immediately before the church, as outlined in President Smith's message, and expressed the hope that every woman in the auxiliary shall feel the impulse to qualify, to the limit of her opportunities, to help carry out that program.

Sister Evelyn Burgess, of Saint Louis, a former general president, was the next speaker. She emphasized the great need of the right kind of home training for the child units of our church. "A child trained in the habits of right doing, of kindness and courtesy, of love and patience, goes out into the world, not only fortified against its evils, but distinctly equipped to help right the wrongs found there."

Sister Frederick M. Smith, of Independence, Missouri, who has served the auxiliary in many capacities for almost twenty years, and who was but now released from service as honorary president, told of her enjoyment of the programs of the convention. She urged the sisters to seek to understand the needs of each other, to mingle in love and sympathy, in a helpful way. Her special message for the evening was in harmony with the work of the auxiliary and was that each should seek to possess a deep, abiding faith. She was thankful that such a faith had been given her, was born in her, and cultivated in her early home, until it had become her rock and refuge at all times. "In times of prosperity so live," she said, "that in times of adversity your faith may still be with you, to comfort, guide, and bless."

Sister Fannie Jones, one of the Auxiliary's charter members, happening to be present, was asked to say a few words. Sister Jones is not now identified with us in church allegiance, but spoke of the good all may do by united efforts. She is identified with several clubs and organizations in her home town, Phoenix, Arizona, in which she is attempting to do good, and let her light shine as she sees it. "Children should be brought up in the fear of the Lord, and the home is the place to instill that fear," she said.

Sister F. G. Pitt, of Chicago, was the next speaker, telling some of her experiences in the missionary fields, especially those that showed the necessity of better training and equipment on the part of mothers and home makers. She said the way to help such women is not to feel above them in any way, but to feel the kindly influences of love and sympathy. It is more often a lack of opportunity than a desire to be shiftless or untidy which causes the pitiful conditions. She paid a high tribute to the Australian parents concerning the good manners which are taught the children over there. "Their children are very courteous; we have seen them stand uncovered while our buggy passed them in the road, and it was not done for display, but was just their native courtesy, and the manners of the country. Their mothers speak to them in quiet tones, with gentle accent, in this way teaching a refinement of manner which our American mothers would do well to emulate."

Sister Fred Koehler, of Independence, was next called upon for a few words. Sister Koehler was our second vice president the past year, and has been quite successful in working out some practical activities in the group form in her home town. She is one of those whole-souled, comforting kind of women to whom one may always turn with confidence in trouble, feeling sure of a sympathetic and ready response.

Sister John A. Gardner, also of Independence, addressed the assembly briefly. Sister Gardner is well known to the Auxiliary, having served it as an efficient secretary for several years. She has also done quite a bit of reunion and field work in some localities, and her new duties as first vice president will no doubt enable her to come personally in contact with even a greater number of our women.

Sister Krahl then made an appeal for a collection for the fatherless children of France, which resulted in a neat little sum for that purpose. Brother Hoxie, and his corps of happy assistants in the musical line, dropped in and led us in some hearty and enjoyable community singing, after which we repaired to the halls, where the local sisters, under the able generalship of Sister M. B. Nicholson, served everybody with punch and—well, it was to have been wafers, but evidently some mischievous and none-too-scrupulous boys had decided they needed the wafers more than the ladies did! No one seemed to mind the loss, however, and the party gradually dissolved, with a general feeling that it was good to have been together that one evening at least!

LETTER DEPARTMENT

The Passing of Brother Heman C. Smith

Perhaps there is no one among those who have aided in planting the work in the Southeastern Mission who is held in higher esteem than the subject of this little sketch. The recollections of association with him in missionary labors in the Southeast are a sort of "wellspring of pleasure" in the mind of the writer, and also, I am sure, to others. Not only were my associations with him pleasant and enjoyable, but they were also valuable, and in many ways helpful. His teachings in private and public seemed always to be in complete accord with the highest moral and religious code; and these were always made effectual by corresponding deeds, so that in the hearts of many he "being dead, yet speaketh."

As a "minister in charge," he was kind almost to a fault, yet was his advice always helpful and fatherly, and could be followed with safety. He had the happy faculty which enabled him to get the men in his charge to do pretty generally what he wanted done, and at the same time getting the men to believe they were doing what they wanted to do. We believe that is the right sort of team work.

As a preacher he stands in the front rank in the estimation of those who were acquainted with him. His sermons were noted for deep thought and lofty inspiration. One could not listen to him while he spoke under the power of the divine Touch without partaking of that spirit of love which makes all the world akin; and consciously or unconsciously being drawn closer to God. Already the mail has brought to me, from the president of one of the districts in the Southeastern Mission, a letter containing these words:

"Was very sorry to hear of Brother Heman's death. It must have been a severe blow to his family, as they seemed to be so devoted to him. To me he was one among the deepest thinkers in the church, and for some time one of its best preachers."

I feel sure this opinion is quite generally entertained by all who knew him throughout the mission. "Brother Heman" is a household word among them, and though it has been some years since he was last among them, they still have happy memories of the man and his sterling qualities. His devotion to the cause of truth, his labor of love and sacrifice by which he translated into terms of actual life the powers of the gospel and the teachings and promises of Jesus the Lord, have won for him this high esteem from the people who have been benefited through his ministrations.

Apostle Heman C. Smith

FAREWELL—BUT NOT FORGOTTEN

Permit me a few words relative to the memory of our brother. Was closely related with him in the Lord's work, of the last days, in the Quorum of Seventy. In 1887 I was unable to attend the General Conference. While walking on the street of the little town of Galien, Michigan, where we then lived, I was in the Spirit, and it said to me in plain words: "James W. Gillen, Heman C. Smith, Joseph Luff, and Gomer T. Griffiths will go into the Quorum of Twelve at this General Conference." The conference was at Kirtland, Ohio, that year.

Our brother was a man of strong character and fearless in what he conceived to be right. He was of more than ordinary ability as an apostle, and as a historian; and a tireless student, careful in research. He was noble in demeanor; faithful to his convictions; and strong in defense of the divine truth and the Lord's great latter-day work which he loved; a man of moderation, yet firm in decision; true to his brethren and the Lord's work; a faithful servant. What more could he be?

Truly he could, like Paul, say: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness."

How cheering these words of Paul are to all who mourn our brother's departure. Should not his faithful, noble, humble-spirited career encourage all who knew him? A solace to all, though absent from them and us, till, if faithful to God, we shall meet him in the sweet by and by! Those like him we miss when severed for the time, yet are encouraged by his undying example. He now sweetly rests in paradise. He awaits a glorious resurrection, an eternal reward, a glorious crown in our Savior's kingdom eternal, with the redeemed of the ages.

"Every Member a Tithe Payer"

If Jesus were on earth you would not permit him to be without funds to care for his necessary expenses. He wants you to be just as interested in his servants and his church, and has provided the law of tithing as a systematic plan for their support.

Was It a Protestant Miracle?

LETTER TO RELATIVES IN CONGREGATIONALISM

If you ever received a divine manifestation—a vision, as you claim and believe, it has been at such time as, forgetting your belief in the false precepts and traditions of men (which hold that the day of inspiration and miracles is forever past), you have exercised faith in the word of God. It was in spite of your false traditions, not because of them.

It is the same with the cases of healing in answer to prayer, that occasionally occur among the orthodox churches. Healing in answer to faith and prayer is one of the gifts of God promised to "them that believe." As of old it is wrought by the gift and power of God, and is the result of faith in his word. And if it was a miracle then, why is it not a miracle now? When such a case of healing is reported, your religious papers will labor to show that it was not in any sense a real miracle.

Such a case of healing was reported in March, 1878, on the person of Miss Jennie Smith, of Dayton, Ohio. The case was substantiated in a letter to the Herald and Presbyter of September 18, 1878, by one who knew the facts. She says: "I am prepared to state, so far as human beings can decide, it is in direct answer to prayer that she was enabled to walk. That up to a certain evening in March last, . . . she had not touched her foot to the floor for seventeen years. That during the progress of a prayer meeting, which was being held in her room on the said evening, she arose from her couch and walked without assistance ten steps, then knelt in prayer." She shows that the healing was complete and permanent, and continues, "That this is what may be termed a 'Protestant miracle' no one who is familiar with the wonderful story pretends to deny. If the age of miracles is past, as most Protestants seem to believe, what is going to be done with this one?"

But the editor of the Herald and Presbyter determinedly sets his foot down on the word miracle. He says, "The term miracle has a fixed theological sense, among Christians, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic. . . . It is a manifest exercise, . . . of powers which belong only to God, and exercised for the purpose of attesting . . . the authority and mission of the agent working the miracle. All these things belong to all true miracles. It is improper, nay, even injurious, to use the term miracle, in regard to anything else; . . . unless there is evidence accompanying it, that it is designed to be a sign from heaven. . . . It is properly to be called an extraordinary answer to prayer, but no miracle. . . . To account for an extraordinary blessing, by calling it a miracle, is to put it upon the high plane with signs from heaven, which is designed to challenge the faith of mankind, and seal the testimony of God, in favor of the revelation of his truth and will."

The Prophet Nephi of ancient America, was shown the present condition of the Gentile churches, by prophetic inspiration, and said of their leaders:

"They shall teach with their learning, and deny the Holy Ghost which giveth utterance. And they deny the power of God, the Holy One of Israel; and they say unto the people, Harken unto us, and hear ye our precept; for behold there is no God to-day, for the Lord and Redeemer hath done his work. . . . If they shall say there is a miracle wrought, by the hand of the Lord, believe it not; for this day he is not a God of miracles; he hath done his work."—2 Nephi 12: 5-8, Book of Mormon.

Those who hold such views in regard to miracles, as expressed by the editor of the Herald and Presbyter, are in just the right state of mind to be deceived, when the time shall come that "the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty." (Revelation 16: 14.) The two-horned beast that "spake like a dragon," does "great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men, and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do." (Revelation 13: 11, 13, 14.) "Even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness."—2 Thessalonians 2: 9-12.

Then those who hold to this "fixed theological sense" concerning miracles, and that they are "powers which belong only to God," will be deceived and ready to follow; for they will see their "true miracles," wrought for the "purpose of attesting the authority and mission of the agent working the miracle." There will be plenty of "evidence accompanying it that it is designed to be a sign from heaven," when they shall see "fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men." Yes, these miracles of devils will be on "the high plane with signs from heaven, which is designed to challenge the faith of mankind." And the Protestants and Roman Catholics, who are blinded by their "fixed theological sense," will be deceived. These miracles of devils will not be wrought for the real and permanent good of men, spiritually as well as temporally, as the miracles of God have been done, comforting and "confirming" in the right the humble and faithful followers of Christ who desire to do right; but they will be wrought in the true sense of this "fixed theological" view.

This "theological sense" is just what led your Congregational minister, the Reverend Mr. W——, to come to me with his bottle of strychnine, as his main argument against the doctrine of the Reorganized Church, and ask me to prove that the promise of Christ recorded in the last chapter of Mark extended to our time, and that the day of miracles and revelations is not past, by taking some of his strychnine. The Pharisaical Jews also had this "fixed theological" view of signs; and even the Devil also understood miracles in this modern "theological sense," when he asked Christ to prove his "authority and mission" by casting himself down from the pinnacle of the temple. Was it not a splendid opportunity to convert the Devil by a sign or miracle, and thus put an end to the opposition of the enemy of all righteousness? What a short cut across that would have been, to millennial conditions! But Christ did not have this "fixed theological sense" concerning signs and miracles, and replied, "It is written again, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." (Matthew 4:7.)

They that will not first believe and obey, have no promise of confirming evidence concerning the doctrine. Christ said, "If any man will do his [the Father's] will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God." (John 7:17.) This promise of receiving divine witness that will give men to know of the truth of the doctrine is for "any man," who will do the Father's will, and therefore it is not limited to any age of the world. But the promise of receiving divine witness and testimony and confirmation is only to those who will first believe and obey the gospel; for the unbeliever has no promise, neither the sign seeker. For the promise is that "these signs shall follow them that believe." (Mark 16:17.)

The Lord says in a modern revelation: "Let the unbelieving hold their lips, for the day of wrath shall come upon them as a whirlwind, and all flesh shall know that I am God. And he that seeketh signs shall see signs, but not unto salvation. . . . Behold, faith cometh not by signs, but signs follow those that believe. Yea, signs cometh by faith, not by the will of men, nor as they please, but by the will of God. Yea, signs cometh by faith, unto mighty works, for without faith no man pleaseth God: and with whom God is angry he is not well pleased; wherefore unto such he showeth no signs, only in wrath unto their condemnation. Wherefore, I, the Lord, am not pleased with those among you, who have sought after signs and wonders for faith, and not for the good of men unto my glory." —Doctrine and Covenants 63:2-4.

How often do we find Christ, or the apostles, after having with brazen face gathered a multitude by sounding a trumpet before them like the hypocrite in giving alms, and taking their station on a prominent street corner or on a housetop, with the cripple or blind man that he has selected for his exhibition, calling out, in the true spirit of this "fixed theological sense," "Now everybody look, while I show you a 'sign from heaven' by working a miracle, to prove to you my 'authority and mission'?" Can you imagine Christ or the apostles doing miracles "to challenge the faith of mankind," or for the "purpose" of making converts out of unbelievers or proving their mission? Remember that "it is improper, nay, even injurious, to use the term miracle in regard to anything else," for there must be "evidence accompanying it that it is designed to be a sign from heaven, . . . to challenge the faith of mankind," according to this "theological sense."

Are there any miracles recorded in the New Testament, with such "evidence accompanying"? If so, how many? Was it when Christ said to the centurion, "As thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee"? (Matthew 8:13.) Here was faith or belief before the miracle was wrought. And the miracle was in accordance with that previous faith, "confirming" it, thus according to the promise, following "them that believe." (Mark 16:20.)

Was Christ's miracle done to create faith and make converts or to prove his mission, when he healed the multitude and "charged them that they should not make him known"? (Matthew 12:15, 16.) Or when he said to the two blind men, "According to your faith be it unto you," and charged them, "see that no man know it"? (Matthew 9:29, 30.) Here miracle came after faith, not faith after miracle. Or when he took the deaf man "aside from the multitude," and healed him, and "charged them that they should tell no man"? (Mark 7:33-36.)

Why this privacy, if it was "designed to be a sign from heaven," and done for the "purpose of attesting the authority and mission of the agent working the miracle"? If this was the purpose, in the midst of the multitude would have been the proper place for miracles, that the greater number might have witnessed the "sign from heaven" and been convinced of his "authority and mission." Or was it when he led the blind man out of the town of Bethsaida, and healed him, and "sent him away to his house, saying, Neither go into the town, nor tell it to any in the town"? (Mark 8:23-26.) If this was the main purpose or design of Christ's miracles, why was it that he "suffered no man to go in," except three of the apostles, who already believed, and the parents, when he raised from the dead the daughter of the ruler of the synagogue, saying to the father, "believe only, and she shall be made whole"? "And her parents were astonished; but he charged them that they should tell no man what was done." (Luke 8:49-56.) Where was the "evidence accompanying" this miracle, "that it was designed to be a sign from heaven, . . . to challenge the faith of mankind"? Here belief was required before the miracle was performed. But their previous belief was confirmed by the sign or miraculous manifestation of power that followed it; thus according to the promise, following "them that believe." While those who believe not, receive nothing, neither promise of anything, except condemnation because of their unbelief.

With none of these was there "evidence accompanying" them that they were simply "designed to be a sign from heaven," or were "designed to challenge the faith of mankind." Therefore, according to this "fixed theological sense," they are "properly to be called an extraordinary answer to prayer, but no miracle." This at least leaves them in the same class with the "Protestant miracle" above cited, and shows that the Lord "worketh by power, according to the faith of the children of men, the same to-day and to-morrow, and forever," as the Prophet Moroni says. And this is why Jesus "could there do no mighty work," in "his own country, and among his own kin," "because of their unbelief." (Mark 6: 4-6.) Because the Lord "worketh by power, according to the faith of the children of men." "For if there be no faith among the children of men, God can do no miracle among them," says Moroni. (Ether 5: 13, Book of Mormon.)

It was because Christ was "moved with compassion," toward the multitude, that followed him on foot to a desert place, out of the cities, that "he healed their sick." (Matthew 14: 14.) It was because he was "moved with compassion," that he healed the leper, kneeling to him and saying, "If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." (Mark 1: 40, 41.) It was because he had "compassion on the multitude," that had "nothing to eat," and had been with him three days, that he fed them with seven loaves and a "few small fishes." (Mark 8: 1-9.) And it was because of his compassion on the cripple, Miss Jennie Smith, of Dayton, Ohio, who had suffered so much for seventeen years, and because of his promise to "them that believe," that he healed her in answer to prayer; for he is "the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever"; and "every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." (James 1: 17.)

The Prophet Moroni says:

"Remember that he is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, and that all these gifts of which I have spoken, which are spiritual, never will be done away, even as long as the world shall stand, only according to the unbelief of the children of men. . . . And now I speak unto all the ends of the earth, that if the day cometh that the power and gifts of God shall be done away among you, it shall be because of unbelief. . . . For if there be one among you that doeth good, he shall work by the power and gifts of God." —Moroni 10: 14, 18, 20, Book of Mormon.

Our Members Made Targets

In my letter to your valuable paper, dated March 25, and published in April 9 issue, in referring to Rawson's book that the ark of the covenant would be found in Iceland, should read, "that the ark of the covenant will be found in Ireland."

John Zahnd, seeing my letter in the HERALD, sent me some of his literature. It only made me more firm in my belief. I could see through his arguments. New members seem to be "targets" for this class of literature.

A sincere sister,

MOLLY BLANEY.

[Extracts of a letter from George S. Lincoln]:

Apostle Heman C. Smith was here in the Northern California District, in 1891. There was a reunion held at Irvington, California, in that year, and September 15, 1891, Apostle Heman C. Smith and High Priest D. S. Mills ordained to the latter office C. W. Harlow and George S. Lincoln. He presided over the reunion.

He preached all over the district, and was very much liked as a preacher and as a man. I was associated with him in his work in San Francisco, as I was president of this branch. He was always congenial and friendly, and had the gospel cause always in mind. I loved him as a brother, and was sorry to learn of his death. He and I spent many hours together studying the word of God and some of its mysteries. He did good work while here, and will always be remembered by all who knew him.

I am sorry I cannot give more information concerning his work among us.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA, May 11, 1919.

Editors Herald: Although this is a cloudy morning, my heart is full to overflowing with love, and I thank God for his goodness to us.

Six years ago this month we came to this city from the little town of Jonesport, Maine. Let me pause to think upon how I loved our brothers and sisters there. Oh! how hard to leave just at that time, when after the faithful labors of our dearly beloved Brother Cushman, with the ever welcome visits of Brother U. W. Greene (how I have wished we might see him walk into our little Minneapolis Branch as we saw Brother Salyards once), with Brother Koehler's labors, and our new church going up so rapidly. But here we are, and although we have clouds and sunshine I trust we will yet be a faithful body with our united effort and God's help.

As we enter in a new year we want to do our best. Our little branch is not large, but I love them all. They gave us such a welcome, and it has been helpful to us ever since.

Although some other family could have done more, we have tried to do our little. We have a fine Sunday school, although our superintendent, Brother Robert J. Wildey, had to leave us, then Brother Curtis had to leave us on account of his business. We thought, "What shall we do?" Then Sister Sadie Johnson came bravely to the front (although she has her little family), and we have a fine Sunday school, growing all the time.

Our Woman's Auxiliary is not doing as well as we hope to in the future; we don't get started right; we cling to the old "aid." We had our annual business meeting Monday evening with a good attendance. I happened to be elected correspondent, and you see I don't know what is expected of me yet, exactly. But this morning my heart felt so full of love I wanted to write, for I love the work. I love my brothers and sisters wherever they are. As we start the new year with Brother Lundeen as our branch president, we know Brother Bennett will be a busy man. And everyone will be blessed if we look to God. Perhaps I will learn my duties before I write again.

SISTER L. D. FRENCH.

CHARLESTON, WEST VIRGINIA, May 11, 1919.

Editors Herald: I thought perhaps some of our friends back in Michigan would like to know where Brother and Sister Burch were and what we are doing, and as I can't very well write to each individually, thought I would write a few lines through the HERALD. After attending the three northern conferences, namely, the Alpena, Beaverton, and Traverse City, we didn't like the idea of spending another long cold winter in Michigan, so climbed into our Ford car and started for the South with no particular destination in view. We stopped a day or so at some of the towns and cities.

We were in Columbus, Ohio, about two weeks. While there we looked up the two churches. But the ban was on, so all we could do was to look at them. We saw a couple of sisters that live near them. They were very kind to us, but the weather began to get cold there and a few flakes of snow fell, so we concluded to move on. We loaded up again and kept traveling south till we landed in Charleston, West Virginia. The weather was fine, so we concluded we would stay as long as the weather was good. We rented some rooms and got settled. The next thing we did was to try to locate some Saints. But whenever we thought we were on the right track, we would find the parties we had been directed to were Brighamites, as there is a large branch of them here. We commenced to think there were no Saints here, but concluded to write to Brother Gomer Wells, which we did and asked him if there was a Sunday school here. He said no, but he was kind enough to go to the Herald Publishing House and find out if there was any paper coming to Charleston.

He found but one, addressed to W. A. Lambert. We had quite a time locating the right man, but at last we found him and he was as pleased to meet us as we were to find him. As I shook hands with him I said: "Is it possible that there is one righteous man in all the city of Charleston?"

And he said: "I don't know about the righteousness, but I am certainly pleased to meet you."

He is a widower with four lovely daughters. They are a grand lot of girls, and would be a credit to any branch. Brother Lambert got busy right away trying to find a place to preach the gospel. At last they found a hall, and quite a crowd turned out for awhile, and among the crowd were seven preachers of different denominations. Neither they nor their followers made objections of any kind, but said yes to everything, then straightway went away and forgot what manner of men they were. They would come back again and take another look in the glass, say yes again, and that is as far as they would go.

But Brother Lambert's oldest daughters were baptized, and we sent for Brother Kirkendall, of Ohio, to do the confirming; Brother Lambert was ordained to the office of teacher.

There are all kinds of denominations here, but, to all appearances, very little religion. There is one class here who call themselves Saints; they immerse their candidates, then leave them standing in the water until they speak in tongues. If they don't speak in tongues, of course they haven't the Holy Ghost. One day last winter they baptized a man and kept him standing in the water one hour and twenty minutes, before the poor fellow could learn to speak in tongues. They think the more excited one gets, the more religion he has. One who doesn't get the power, as they call it, and shout, hasn't any religion at all.

This is a nice climate. The mountains, with their green shades and the rivers below, make a lovely scene. Surely every prospect pleases, and only man is vile.

I think we will soon go where there is a branch. It is too lonesome here without the church privileges and the associations of the Saints.

Your sister in bonds,

EMMA BURTCH.

NEW WESTMINSTER, BRITISH COLUMBIA, May 11, 1919.

Editors Herald: I enjoy the good news of this valuable paper. It is spiritual food to a hungry soul. I hope I always remain hungry, for that is the time to enjoy a good meal. When we lose our appetite for spiritual food, we lose ground, we get thin, it doesn't taste good, we do not enjoy the food, or light, lose the Spirit. We go forth in paths which are crooked, and are often led astray.

Like the Nephites did when they followed Korihor, the anti-Christ, who claimed that an angel came to him and said they were all teaching the wrong thing, and he was the only right; many followed his teaching and he got bold and was anxious to meet some of God's servants. He was so much inspired by this angel that he was able to over-talk some, and that made him bolder. (See Book of Mormon, page 410.) Paul says that in the last days also some would arise. There would be false teachers and preachers (even of your own selves), and many would follow them. So today I see some are fulfilling that prophecy to a letter. Saints, don't be deceived. Ask and ye shall receive. Don't get indigestion. Have a good appetite; eat and drink spiritual food. I will send you the Holy Ghost or the Comforter which will lead and "guide you into all truth." Have you, dear Saints, got this Spirit? If not, why not?

We expect Brother Cornish here next Sunday. It will take a lot of gospel sermons to stir up British Columbia. Too much pride and pleasure.

I expect the world to get worse and worse. It is in the air now, but let us, as Saints of God, be faithful, and full of love, letting our light shine, and be ready for the call to gather to Zion. Let us, as Saints, uphold the priesthood, pray for them that God will bless them with wisdom. Let us get rid of this pulling down business and look at the good in the ones God has chosen. They are the best that God can get out of the poor material to pick from. I believe the ones who are always looking for the bad have a beam in their own eye. The man or woman who cannot see any good in other people, their goods are shoddy or poor samples. I hope and pray for the high priesthood.

God bless his Saints and hasten the day when we will all be one. "Let them alone," say the Scriptures, if they are of God, you cannot hurt them, but if they are not they will come to naught.

Let us watch and pray lest we be overcome.

W. C. REED.

LEON, IOWA, May 16, 1919.

Editors Herald: In renewing my subscription to the HERALD I want to express my appreciation of its weekly visits to me, especially since I am deprived of the privilege of meeting in Leon only occasionally at a sacrament service.

Many times when lonely and depressed have I found help and comfort in reading its pages. I love to read the letters and the many helpful articles. How my heart has been made to rejoice in the great latter-day work through the church publications. I realize we are living in trying times, but I am striving to so live that I may share in the triumphs of the faithful.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. RUTH E. ARCHER.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, May 16, 1919.

A business meeting was called May 7, by Brother D. J. Williams, branch president, at which time a recommendation was offered by the priesthood, and approved by the branch, providing for dividing the membership into three groups or wards, each ward to be in charge of a priest, teacher, and deacon; the system in effect on a larger scale in Independence, Lamoni, and elsewhere. Another resolution from the priesthood was also indorsed, which had in view the improvement of church decorum.

Sunday, May 12, Mothers' Day was appropriately observed by a program during the morning service hour. We were especially glad to have with us for this service, Brother Elmer O. Bierman who had reached home on Thursday from Camp Dodge and the front in France.

On Monday evening, May 13, a rousing welcome was given by the Religio members to Brother Bierman and Brother Albert Kunz who had returned the week before. We hope the time will not be long before we have occasion to welcome the last one of our returning boys, Brother Leon Bauer.

Tuesday evening, May 14, a special meeting was called to consider the question of improving the church or building a new one. The decision reached was for the present location, and a consultation with the Church Architect before further steps are taken.

CORRESPONDENT.

LOGAN, IOWA, May 11, 1919.

Editors Herald: Mothers' Day program drew a large and attentive audience at the Saints' church of Logan this morning. The building was effectively decorated in lavender and white, the mothers were presented with white carnations, and the fathers were given violets by distributors using beautifully designed baskets.

The program from the beginning to the close was entertaining and impressive; vocal and instrumental music, readings, and morning sermon, decoration of the church and the formal presentation of carnations to the mothers and violets to the fathers. Mrs. Rose Adams, Mrs. Frank Hill, and Miss Ollie Derry felt well repaid for the special work incident to preparing the program, and those present felt well repaid for attending the exercises in honor of the mothers.

CHARLES L. CROW.

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK, May 14, 1919.

Editors Herald: It is a long time since you heard from the New York and Philadelphia District, but although we have not reported our progress we have been growing rapidly in a spiritual and material sense. Our conference held in Brooklyn in February was one long to be remembered as one of the finest conferences ever held in the district.

On Friday evening, February 21, 1919, a fine program was given under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary. Some very educational talks and papers were given, and a stirring patriotic pageant, entitled "Victory," was rendered by the Brooklyn girls on both Friday and Saturday evenings. Saturday evening was devoted to institute work. A very splendid talk on the "Boy movement" was given by Brother Jaques, and we are looking forward to big things along this line for our boys.

The meeting most to be remembered in our conference was the sacrament service. God's wonderful Spirit was surely with us in great power. A prophecy was given to the young people urging them to come up higher and to take advantage of the wonderful opportunities which were now open to them and the windows of heaven would be opened and blessings would be showered upon them. Besides two prophecies to individual brethren there was an encouraging one given to the Norwalk, Connecticut, Branch, concerning their work.

I am sure that everyone returned home feeling strengthened and uplifted, and are all looking forward to better times to come.

ETHEL C. JACK.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, May 17, 1919.

Editors Herald: I beg space in the HERALD to make a public acknowledgment. Last March I was holding meetings at a place called Bartlett, Oregon, where there are quite a number of the Russellite faith and among them was one Mr. Wood from whom I bought a book known as What Pastor Russell Said, being his answers to hundreds of questions. I asked Mr. Wood to sell me this book which he did, charging me one dollar and fifty cents for it, at the same time buying a Book of Mormon of me which I agreed to send him.

In looking over some of the publications put out by Pastor Russell, I saw that the largest books advertised in those papers were only about sixty cents, and as in the book I bought of him, I saw on page one hundred and forty-seven where Mr. Russell was advising to do that which is, I consider, dishonest, and as I supposed that Mr. Wood had charged me about one dollar more than the book cost, I accused him of being dishonest, but have lately found out that he was right in his price.

As I have told so many of the Saints of this, and knowing I will have to meet all this at the great judgment, I have taken this means to let them all know that I was wrong; I have written to Mr. Wood and asked his forgiveness, which I trust will be granted. At least I know that by so doing God will forgive me whether Mr. Wood does or not, and I shall surely be more careful in judging any man in the future.

As I have been appointed to labor this conference year in western Montana, I take this means to thank all those dear Saints who have been so very kind to me in administering to my wants throughout the Spokane District, and I pray God to bless them for their kindness to me.

I am sure a crown awaits many of the Saints of this district; and I am sorry to say that there are a number who, unless they wake up to a sense of their duty and put away their pride, and overbearing spirit which has gotten possession of their bodies, they will soon go down and out. But my prayer is that they may wake up before it is too late. The time has arrived when God is going to sift his people, and trim off all the bitter branches. I beg to say to all Saints in the Western Montana District, who think there is any chance to do anything in the way of preaching and getting the angel's message before the people who are yet in darkness, if you will kindly let me know of any such chances, I will be only too thankful to try in my weak way to explain this glorious gospel to the honest in heart, that they may prepare themselves so as to be able to shun the great scourges which are fast coming on this wicked and sinful world.

May we all live as children of God and so conduct our lives that those who are honest in heart may be made to realize that we are surely God's people, but we cannot do this and take up with the things of the world. We are told to love not the world nor the things that are in the world. If any man love the world the love of God is not in him. Pray for me that I may always be found trying to do my blessed Master's will and my prayers will be for you all. My home address will be Kalispell, Montana.

R. NEWBY.

MCKENZIE, ALABAMA, May 17, 1919.

Editors Herald: While in southern Florida during the past winter on a missionary journey, we located several isolated Saints who were very glad to have us call, though uninvited. I am sure that there are others whom we have not located. If any reader of the HERALD knows the address of one friendly to our work who lives on the Florida Peninsula, I would like to have you send it to me. Some of them are on the "lost member" list. They do not take the church papers and are hard to locate. Sometimes they cry for joy that a missionary has discovered them.

It will be easy for the reader to help bring this joy to a soul, and also restore them to the church. It is my desire to do all I can to advance the work in that field this year and shall be glad to hear from anyone friendly to the work in the field. I shall also be glad of any suggestions or assistance you can give.

Yours truly,

E. C. SHELLEY.

NOTICE OF TRANSFER

Owing to the necessity of Elder Joseph Arber remaining near his home for a few months, it has been thought advisable to transfer him from the Northeastern Missouri District to the Kansas City Stake for missionary work. Brother Arber will report to the officers of the Stake and at once enter upon his duty as a missionary.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Pastoral

To the Saints and Friends of the Eastern Oklahoma District; Greeting: For reasons best known to God and the authorities of the church, I have been commissioned to serve you another conference year, and will try to live and conduct myself properly, that I may have your confidence and the Spirit of God, to direct my mind along the line of my office and calling, as your servant.

I wish to ask for your cooperation, and more especially that of the priesthood, missionaries and locals, that we may labor together hand in hand, for the uplift and salvation of souls.

"United we stand, divided we fall,
To the good or hurt of one and all."

Don't forget that I am the Bishop's agent in this district. Please hand, or send to me, your tithes, freewill offerings, etc., by draft or money order, and I will promptly return receipts for amounts sent. Always state how you want it applied.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. C. CHRESTENSEN.

To the Saints of the Kansas City Stake; Greeting: Having been appointed to labor in your midst, and with you, I am the more hopeful of making effectual our work by the greatest cooperation possible.

Our confidence in the church, and all its departments, is firmer to-day than ever before.

To accomplish the advancement of the work, we will evince the same by the loyalty we show.

Our duty to "warn our neighbor" is still of paramount importance, and to do this we hope to commence a distribution of tracts from house to house, in the vicinity of the place where meetings are being held. Are you willing to help us?

For any assistance which we can render you, the undersigned will be pleased to hear from you at his home address, 1517 West Maple Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

Your servant in the cause of Christ,

JOSEPH ARBER.

Reunion Notices

Alabama, August 1 to 10, at Pleasant Hill, near McKenize, Alabama. J. F. Harper, president of district.

Massachusetts, at Onset, July 19 to August 4. Prices of tents, meals, and other information will be given later. W. A. Sinclair, secretary of reunion committee.

Central Nebraska, at Neligh, July 10 to 20, instead of August 10 to 20, as reported. Come prepared to enjoy a good rest and a spiritual feast. F. S. Gatenby, Orchard, Nebraska.

Owing to the department of education of Ontario extending the public school term about two weeks into the month of July, it has been thought wise to change the date of the Erie Beach reunion of Chatham District. It will, therefore, be held July 18 to 28. For further information as to tents, accommodation, price of meals, etc., apply to Stewart Lamont, Chatham, or J. C. Dent, Bothwell, Ontario. John C. Dent.

Seattle and British Columbia, at Bellingham, Washington, August 1 to 10. The committee is already making plans for great improvements over last year. The auxiliary work will receive special attention by competent leaders, also, the social feature will be emphasized. Able ministers of the word will be present—one or more of the chief quorums of the church will be represented. The usual entertainment on Friday evening, August 8, in charge of Sunday school and Religio. Ample accommodations for cooking will be provided for campers. Tents may be rented at reasonable prices. Special information or renting of tents can be had by writing the secretary, Elder G. R. Brundage, 1246 Elk Street, Bellingham, Washington, who will gladly respond. J. M. Terry, for committee.

Nauvoo, from August 22 to 31, at Montrose, Iowa, just across the river from Nauvoo. Price of tent and cots for the ten days are as follows: 9½ by 12, 4-foot wall, $3.50; 12 by 14, 4-foot wall, $4; 10 by 14, 6-foot wall, $5.50; single cots, 75 cents; double cots, $1.10. All orders for tents, cots, etc., should be sent to Arthur Allen, 225 West Fourth Street, Ottumwa, Iowa, as soon as possible, so that we can secure the tents. Money should accompany the order, as we shall have to pay for the tents if we order them, whether we use them or not. There will be a dining hall on the grounds, meals will be served at the following prices: breakfast, 25 cents; dinner, 30 cents; supper, 30 cents; Sunday dinner, 35 cents. Arrange to spend your vacation at our reunion; we assure you a good time, good speakers, and able workers in the auxiliary societies, and recreation for all; and you can visit historic Nauvoo, and see what the church has done to preserve this property. Arthur Allen, chairman of reunion committee, 225 West Fourth Street, Ottumwa, Iowa.

PROPHECY AND AUTHORITY.—A study in the history of the doctrine of interpretation of scripture. By Kemper Fullerton, M. A., Professor of Old Testament Language and Literature, Oberlin Graduate School of Theology. The Macmillan Company, New York, $1.50, 213 pages, with good index. The purpose of the volume is twofold—to discuss the principles of the interpretation of Messianic prophecy in view of the recent revival of millennialist claims, and to reopen the question of the nature of the Bible as a principle of authority in Protestant theology. The author seeks to trace the way in which the methods of interpretation and the doctrine of scripture affect each other in the church's interpretation of prophecy, and to show how the scientific principles of interpretation adopted by the reformers inevitably lead to the abandonment of the millennialist theory and the dogmatic view of scripture, and that these results are at the same time religiously desirable.

THE ADVENTURE OF LIFE.—By Robert W. Mackenna, M. A., M. D., author of The Adventure of Death. The Macmillan Company, New York, $1.25, 12mo, 233 pages. This book is the work of a doctor who has been serving with the British Army. In semifiction form and with vivid description and illustration, there is presented the scientific interpretation of life. As the reflections of a man scientifically trained, who has been for four years in the presence of much suffering and death and can still believe in a just God who is not

Sister Rohrer was from the historical Bailey and Lockwood lineage. She was widely known as "a sweet singer of Israel."

FROM HERE AND THERE

We note from a recent publication of Liberty that forty-seven States have now approved the prohibition amendment to the United States Constitution. Forty-five States which have approved it are given, together with the date when ratified by the Senate and the House. The overwhelming vote would show rather clearly the mind of the people, which caused this amendment to be ratified within thirteen months after submission instead of within seven years.

In reporting the death of John Siddall, a respected teacher of the Attleboro Branch, in Massachusetts, Elder E. B. Hull says: "We are advancing nicely in all departments in this place at the present time. We still have a number of our members in the war, only three having returned so far."

F. M. SMITH IN LAMONI

President F. M. Smith is announced to deliver a series of lectures in Lamoni. The first is Tuesday evening, May 27, at the church, on "The Church and Society." The series will be continued by two lectures at Graceland College on Wednesday and Thursday mornings. All of these lectures are arranged for by the College, and part of a definite plan, given annually as part of the college work. Several men have been appointed and listed in the catalogue as special lecturers. They are, as a rule, men well qualified to act as professors, but whose time is principally taken with other work for the church.

This is the fourth series given during the present college year. Others had been arranged for, but on account of the influenza in the fall, the program was interfered with.

BOY SCOUT WEEK

Our readers will be especially interested in the announcement of the Boy Scout organization that during the week of June 8 to 14 will occur a Nation-wide campaign for 1,000,000 associate members of the National Council of the Boy Scouts of America. This is primarily for adults, and the membership fees to the National Council go to provide funds for the carrying on of the work. Dues are $1 or more a year. Those who pay $2.50 or more may receive for one year Boys' Life, the Boy Scouts' magazine, which may be sent to a separate address if desired. Those desiring to become affiliated with the organization are asked to remit to 200 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

A SERVICE OF UNUSUAL INTEREST

On Sunday morning, the 18th, the West Side Branch, at Chicago, witnessed a service of unusual interest because of the large number present not of our faith. They gathered to hear Brother Augustine Dwyer deliver his lecture on "Why I became a Latter Day Saint." For nearly two hours Brother Dwyer held the attention of the audience that filled the church. A few had come with deep-seated prejudices to gratify a curiosity, but remained to express their impressions of the discourse. Altogether the service was one of solemn and spiritual meaning to all present. At the close of Brother Dwyer's discourse the quartet sang with great effect the blessed old hymn, "Take time to be holy." One who was present writes: "I never experienced anything like that service. It surely seemed as if heaven had opened on earth. We all felt as if something had added to our spiritual life and power." In the evening of the same Sunday another full house greeted Brother Dwyer at the South Side Branch.

WINS FIRST HONORS

Miss Alice M. Smith, daughter of the Reverend and Mrs. Frederick M. Smith of this city, was awarded the highest honors in short story writing contest among the students of the Kansas City Polytechnic Institute, Kansas City. The prize was a sum of money. The editors-in-chief of the three daily newspapers of Kansas City were the judges of the stories.—Independence Examiner, May 21, 1919.

We received announcement cards that the Knobnoster Branch, in the Holden Stake, intended to celebrate the thirtieth anniversary of the organization of the branch on the 25th. Appropriate programs were arranged, with services at 11 a. m., 2:30 and 8:30 p. m. A basket dinner was an advertised feature.

Our latest advice before going to press is that Sister A. Carmichael has recovered sufficiently to travel, and left with Bishop Carmichael and Sister J. M. Case, who will aid in caring for her, for Southern California on Saturday, May 24. They certainly take with them our best wishes for an early recovery.

"I am taking this means of letting the sisters of the Owen Sound District know that I am the organizer of the Woman's Auxiliary for the district and am ready to receive calls for organization at any time. Address 1796 Fifth Avenue West, Owen Sound. Mrs. J. L. Mortimer."

ON THE THRESHOLD OF A NEW ERA

(Synopsis of a sermon by E. D. Moore, at Lamoni, Iowa, May 18, 1919.)

From among the many passages bearing on the theme we have in mind we have selected just one, given to the church in 1831, which reads as follows:

Wherefore, I the Lord have said, Gather ye out from the eastern lands, assemble ye yourselves together ye elders of my church; go ye forth unto the western countries, call upon the inhabitants to repent, and inasmuch as they do repent, build up churches unto me; and with one heart and with one mind, gather up your riches that ye may purchase an inheritance which shall hereafter be appointed unto you, and it shall be called the New Jerusalem, a land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety for the saints of the most high God; and the glory of the Lord shall be there, and the terror of the Lord also shall be there, insomuch that the wicked will not come unto it; and it shall be called Zion. And it shall come to pass among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety. And there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven; and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another. And it shall be said among the wicked, Let us not go up to battle against Zion, for the inhabitants of Zion are terrible, wherefore we cannot stand. And it shall come to pass that the righteous shall be gathered out from among all nations, and shall come to Zion singing, with songs of everlasting joy.—Doctrine and Covenants 45:12-14.

THE SPIRIT OF UNREST

We must observe that in the statement read a condition of unrest and turmoil is predicted, bringing about the insistent need for a "land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety for the saints of the Most High God."

It seems to us that as we look abroad on the world to-day, in every place we find the dominating feeling of discontent, unrest, and fear.

Reading from day to day the progress of the peace conference we realize how far from a millennial condition we are, in spite of the progress made in the league of nations ideal. A hurried glance over the world map shows Russia in a state of anarchy and violence because of the trying out of an impracticable idealism. We cannot but feel that Japan is still resentful over the discrimination against that race in western lands. We note a division among the Jews as to the procedure in the rehabilitation of Palestine, some desiring a national state, some wanting only a home land for the oppressed of the race, under some foreign protectorate. We read that there have been woeful massacres among the Armenians by the Turks even since the signing of the armistice. In Mexico we may note the death of some notorious bandits, yet pause at the announcement that during the year a popular election will take place, that President Carranza is not available for reelection on account of constitutional provisions. The news item intimates that a number of the rebel generals with an armed following each, are proposing to seek election. Past experiences in that line cause us to shudder over the possible outcome.

Thus we might stop here and there on the political map and point out spots of incipient trouble, some active, others bubblingly quiescent.

Yet woven through it all we must recognize the industrial unrest. Nothing is settled. Nobody feels certain about anything. Unemployment, strikes, demand upon demand by labor, threats of resumption of former scale of wages by capital, all cause us to wonder. The scanning of the industrial page of a magazine which devotes itself to such news will show that not only in our own land is there painful readjustment, but elsewhere as well. The great world war has so disrupted commerce that we may never return to the smug, self-satisfied condition we were in early in 1914.

THE OLD DAYS ARE FOREVER GONE

Let us briefly review the events which led to the present condition. We all recall how we wondered at the audacity of those who predicted that a war could last for three years, when we supposed that a blockade would starve out a nation in a short time. We almost believed that all the nations involved would become bankrupt in a very few years. We had not considered the staying power of a line of men in a zig-zag ditch across Europe. The war went on, but it was not our war. We were a neutral nation. In fact some people assured us that the United States as a land of Zion would remain a place of safety and peace, unaffected by the strife on the other continent.

But we began to feel the effects of the struggle. Our dyestuffs were limited and many imported articles soon went off the market. The South was much alarmed over the cutting off of its cotton market, so a campaign was launched to "buy a bale of cotton." Many invested in cotton to assure the planters in the South of a market, even though it was at a very low price.

You will recall that many such experiences were ours when getting accustomed to war, such as the flour shortage, the coal saving, the sugar and fat economies necessary, all coming along to keep us reminded that when the world went to war it could not produce, hence we must spare some of what we had.

The religious difficulty was not a minor one. Just how to justify war from a religious standpoint was too big a problem for many, and they were impatient with those who tried it. Everything that was printed in our church papers was read with suspicion by a large number of our members who were fearful lest we seem to take sides. One of the editors wrote a short article on the causes of the war. Soon he received a severe criticism from a Canadian member who accused him of favoring Germany in her campaign against the allies. Yet the same editorial brought out an objection from a German brother in the States who thought it was written as a thrust against Germany.

Letters and articles began to arrive in which the authors desired to set right certain phases of the situation which had not been clarified. Though we were a neutral nation, it was seemingly difficult for the average person to harbor only neutral thoughts. We were forced as editors to use extreme caution in the printing of these communications. In fact we were convinced that to print some of them would have been to incur the suspicion of the Federal authorities and lead to serious trouble. We were glad they were the exception rather than the rule, for we know the writers could not see the danger involved in the statements they so honestly made and believed.

We recall how a brave pastor here and there began to preach on the war and what it involved. A few tried to show how it was in fulfillment of certain prophecies. Some seemed to see ahead and proclaim that it was a war of ideals and therefore demanded that as a Nation we take sides with those whose ideals were the highest.

Finally, with the declaration of war came a change. It cleared the air at least, though prices soared higher and standards continued to change. It is interesting to meditate over the recent history that has been made and realize a part of what has contributed to our present condition.

A NEW NOTE—SERVICE

As the war progressed and we began to study its details from a personal standpoint, our own boys being in the service, our attention was called to a new situation. We had known the name Y. M. C. A., though only the urban dwellers had been intimately acquainted with its work. We thought also of the Salvation Army as a devoted band of religious enthusiasts who devoted their attention to the Christianization of the lower class, especially in the large cities. That these organizations should loom so large in our war activities we had not thought possible. Yet the letters began to come back written on the Y. M. C. A. and similar welfare organization stationery. Somehow it seemed to have a dominant place in the lives of the lads on the other side as well as in the cantonments. It took the place of home. In spite of the few failures on the part of the secretaries of the organization, we are bound to recognize the great work such an organization of personal service did in the war.

And the Salvation Army lassies who went to the very front trenches with doughnuts and pies and good cheer for the muddy, sodden, bedraggled, and becootied boys who had faced the inferno of hell, touched our hearts with their noble sacrifice and eminent practicability. They went down into the mud and filth and wreckage where the men were—that they might the better serve.

Somehow the questions began to formulate themselves in various minds and to be uttered by various lips—why cannot our church do such things? Why should these people with but the beginnings of the gospel principles be able to outstrip our organization in effective service to humanity?

The questions multiplied. The leaven began to work. Why not a different situation all around, religiously, industrially, politically, commercially?

So we were not surprised some months ago to receive a letter from a young man who had been in the Lamoni Stake several years and finally had gone to a large city in another State to secure employment. It was his candid opinion that the stakes were not a suitable place for anyone except retired elders who had nothing else to do but give advice on this subject that they were not especially conversant with. He had been able to secure employment at about double his former salary in the Lamoni Stake, and since he thought conditions in this place fairly representative of the other stakes, he would advise everyone to avoid the calamity of moving Zionward. The letter was sent on to the Bishopric. The objections are worthy of thought, for upon our solution of the industrial problem in connection with our establishment of Zion depends to a large extent its spiritual success. They are inseparable—the industrial and spiritual. The Lord has recognized the importance of both arms of church work.

But there are several phases that must not be lost sight of in judging the present situation in the stakes and the regions round about. The brother stated further that he was in a place where labor was organized, therefore one of our failures here was in lack of organization of the laboring class. Further than that, if we would only indorse Socialism and follow its ideals, we could become as prosperous as he, and really do something.

While we have no objection to the organization of the laboring class we believe there is a better way of getting results from the efforts put forth. Little consideration is given the Golden Rule. When we divide the workers and the employers into classes there strife begins. Lacking the wholesome motive of "Love thy neighbor as thyself," but rather impelled by the "might makes right" principle, it becomes an industrial battle bound to be serious in its operation and liable to engender many difficulties.

We have known of people being compelled to change their minds after arriving at much the same conclusions as did the brother who wrote us. When a few strikes came along and enforced a cessation of labor the attractiveness of the position lost some of its charm. When heartless employers desired to make changes in the personnel of the force they found methods of doing so which gave little consideration to the desires of the individual. Collective bargaining is the best thing under the circumstances, but we would change the circumstances. While we are willing to consider the matter, we are not nearly so much alarmed over the suggested standstill in our own church progress as some would have us be. And our optimism is based on our knowledge of what has been done and what is proposed.

A letter is on our desk now in which a sister tells of the strikes prevailing in her city whereby some twenty thousand men are out of work. From Australia, England, Canada, they speak of much unrest. In many instances the industrial conditions are beginning to affect our membership more and more. And the end is not yet.

Just a few days ago an obscure news item informed us that the Pacific Coast Metal Trades Council through its representatives had indorsed the Nation-wide strike in behalf of Thomas J. Mooney, convicted for life imprisonment for alleged part in the San Francisco bomb outrage a few years ago during a preparedness parade. This is only one of a number of such manifestations of the popular resentment among labor unions over the verdict of the California courts in this celebrated case. Two hundred and fifty thousand men are included in this one western industry, and many others have likewise expressed themselves.

Those who have followed the development of this situation realize how far-reaching its scope is. Millions of circulars have been printed and circulated, setting forth from Labor's standpoint the injustice of the case, and showing us why the effort to have the case retried is simply an effort to secure simple justice at the hands of the courts, unbiased by financial influences. Whether or not we are affected directly by the outcome of this case, it is generally conceded to be a point upon which may turn many momentous events in our industrial life in the future.

The high cost of living has become more than a joke. Those who live by a stipulated income are finding that in spite of increases that have been made from time to time, the percentage has in nearly all cases been much below the increase in the cost of securing the necessities of life.

The feeling engendered by all these things is to say the least one of aggravated uncertainty. We hardly know in which direction to turn.

THE GATHERING

Conditions are ripening for the gathering. Hitherto there has been no need for haste. There is not now. Yet we must realize that God has many forces at work in the world that we know not of, as we were told here some time ago. The time for haste may come. The old environments to which the Saints have been clinging for years will come to lose their appeal. The new order is going to shake everything that can be shaken, and the need of a gathered condition wherein righteousness in all dealings shall prevail will become more and more insistent.

Somehow we have thought of Zion as a future condition, a vague and mysterious something which might occupy the attention of the bishops but which could be worked out by them and announced to us in due time. We admit that the rendition of the Bishopric on financial matters is to be acceded to, but they know and we must realize, that upon us, the church at large, depends the success of the principles involved. We are the ones to demonstrate their decisions. We must be ready for forward steps. The gathering must be a voluntary affair. We are not the sort of people to listen to a central organization which attempts to say to us, Thou shalt, or Thou shalt not. The ingrained democracy we have acquired would resent that. Yet external conditions will come to speak in more and more certain manner in harmony with the passage we read at the beginning of this discourse.

During the war a young brother in the service overseas wrote us a letter in which he had solved the whole Zionistic idea—to his satisfaction. He had been observing the military service in operation and was much impressed. When something was to be done, an officer was detailed who selected certain men best suited to the task, and it was done. When food was wanted, they merely put in an order to the commissary department, and it came. That was early in his experiences. We wonder sometimes if he feels that way yet. Especially if he happened to fall into the hands of some domineering sergeant or corporal who made life miserable for him. All who desire the military plan for the establishment of equality may have it—we do not.

THE STEWARDSHIP IDEA

Though we get strong articles and letters suggesting the necessity for a socialistic plan for the future of the church and more or less condemnation if we do not, we believe the greatest plan the world has ever known or will know for the solution of its difficulties is the stewardship plan. As we have suggested before, the great organization known as the Methodist Episcopal Church has adopted the stewardship idea in principle at least, and we have noted columns of advertising setting forth the necessity for an observance of the stewardship plan in everything: our wealth, our necessities, our very lives with all that we are. In other words, they have accepted the idea we have long had on the statute books of the church that God is the owner of all, and we are only his stewards who should give a good account of what is intrusted to our care.

We can think of nothing more ideal and better adapted to the application of the gospel principles than the stewardship ideal. It means the good of our neighbor first and the assurance that our own wants and needs, as they are just, will be supplied. It is based on the best form of cooperation. There is no capital and no labor, as we ordinarily think of those terms. It will require both, yet the division into classes, wherein lies so much of the present trouble, is obviated. There should be no classes, and will be none under the true gospel plan. The organizations effected will be to extend the good influence of those associating together rather than to demand more and more for themselves.

The legal phases of a stewardship are important, and we may well await the outcome of the investigations of those who are looking into that. The plans of operation of the cooperative idea will naturally evolve into something which will help determine the best. For instance, we have a few stewardships assigned now. Sometimes there is a question as to where the managerial powers of the steward ceases and the responsibilities of others begin. We have storehouses now, and we have Orders of Enoch. Our storehouses in the stakes are operating under the profit plan. The members sell to them at market prices and get the cash. They sell to us as consumers at a profit, getting cash or its equivalent. In the Lamoni Stake, at least, the poor and needy who must have food yet do not have the money to pay cash, are expected to arrange for aid or credit with the stake bishop rather than with the storehouse, so the apparent hardship or seeming discrimination is made as easy as possible.

Then we had a report sometime ago of a flourishing little Order of Enoch out in Idaho where they were operating on the no-profit plan. The members leave their surplus of one article at the storehouse and draw what they like of another which may be on hand. One man has too much wheat and hauls in a load to the storehouse, pending such time as the rest of the members may need it. Needing the use of an extra horse, he leads home one of those in the storehouse pasture, uses it till the demand is past, and takes him back.

We say that both of these plans are being tried out and we are not yet able to say which is the most ideal. The pioneering is being done and we will profit by it later.

THE BOLSHEVIST APPEAL

Perhaps in each of us there is a submerged tendency which if allowed to develop would lead to revolution. For instance, in spite of our best intentions, the idea will reach the surface that something spectacular ought to be done to overthrow existing wrong conditions and establish equality. We wouldn't do anyone any harm, you know, but the smoldering feeling is that we have far too long been deprived of our rights, all to the profit of others who do not deserve the special privileges they secure.

I think we have as little of that feeling as any people we can think of, for we know the possibilities of the gospel plan, and ordinarily we suppress the first rumblings of such ideas. Yet when Bolshevism made its appeal to Russia, long oppressed by the foreign house of Romanoff and getting glimpses of western democracy, it took root. It looked attractive. It promised much relief. It has spread until millions are involved. It means a nationalization of property. It means the dispossessing of those who control wealth and giving of the property to those who labor. As to representation, it is by classes. The laborers in cotton mills for instance, are allowed delegate representation as a class. Laborers in other trades also send delegates to the local soviet; these elect members of the provincial soviets, and these in turn send delegates to a national soviet. One can hardly expect us preachers to be enthusiastic over Bolshevism because they disenfranchise the clergy! The women are given voting privileges but not the preachers!

THE GLORY OF ZION

But laying aside all personalities, each of us are hopeful for a condition to obtain whereby equality of opportunity will prevail. We cannot see such an outcome in Bolshevism or any similar man-made plan. We have no faith in the isms which are not based on the divine plan. We are confident that while the ballot will have a great influence in maintaining our rights, we cannot legislate righteousness into effect. The best we can do from election to election is to try again, or in some places indulge in the recall privilege. Most of us have but little faith in the ballot as a real solution of our comprehensive problem as a church.

We are not going to quarrel with the brother who told us from this pulpit some weeks ago that he was not in accord with the gathering as a means of safety and repose for those who would escape the conditions in the world. We know he meant well by the suggestion that we should be more concerned with the evangelization of the world than to see that ourselves and our families were safe from the untoward conditions in the world. Yet somehow we think his viewpoint would materially change if he looked at the Zion problem from the inside for awhile. It is true that we should not be so much concerned about our personal safety that we forget the needs of others, yet we submit that under the adverse environments in which many of our people are finding themselves and will continue to find themselves, it will be impossible to continue as staunch advocates of our principles. Lot was told to get out, and he finally went—but you know the story. The attachment to "home," such as it was, proved very strong, and his wife paid the penalty for looking back.

The work in the stakes of Zion in the assimilation of types is as important as the converting of those who know not the sound of the angel message. People from all parts of the land have been coming. Members from all over the world will come. The task of getting these members of all kinds to see in the unity of intelligent comprehension is hardly a reposeful one. From these places where the Saints gather will go out a united band of missionaries and workers whose efficiency under the power of God will astound the world. It is a place for development. Under no other circumstances that we can conceive of would it be possible for the endowment to have full fruition. We are all so constituted that we require social development in order to solve the gigantic social problems before the church.

Brother McDowell, at Graceland College, who teaches psychology, tells us there are three stages through which we pass. 1. The unity of ignorance wherein we can all agree because we know no better. 2. The disunity of conflicting opinion, which always results when we begin to think seriously and express our thoughts. 3. The unity of intelligence, to which we can arrive only after passing through the other stages.

We who have been more or less assimilated, realize the changes through which we passed and believe there is a possibility of an application of these standards in the development of other members who gather.

Still another missionary wanted us to believe some time ago that if we were living as we ought, as Saints of God, there would be no need for the work of the local standing ministry. In other words, the priests would have no occasion to exhort us to pray, for we would pray sufficiently without it. And so on through the list of duties of the local officers. This would relieve them for the work of preaching to nonmembers and the development of the missionary spirit.

If we might believe that conversion to the gospel and the baptism of the convert could mean a sudden transition to practical perfection, we might accept this idea, but we cannot believe that.

The conditions in the world are going to force the gathering. The gathering will develop plans for the perfecting of our characters unhampered by adverse outside influences. A simple application of the financial law the Lord has given will solve our financial problems. When we fully carry out in true Christian fellowship the cooperative plan God has given, we will automatically dispense with the hampering influences which prevent us now, in our scattered condition, from attaining to the condition through which "the inhabitants of Zion are terrible."

When God finds a sufficient number of his people, possessed of the right ideals, equipped with the essential knowledge which will furnish a fit seedbed for the glory of God, which is intelligence, Zion will flourish. The evangelization of the world will result as a natural outcome, and the source of power will come from a people who are not only pure in heart but so situated that they can properly care for those who would not lift the sword against their neighbor but would rather flee to where equality is prevailing under God's plan rather than by man's.

TOBACCO NEXT?

Cynical editors who have fought a losing fight to retain their "personal rights" in the use of liquor are flinging out the question now: "Will tobacco be next?"

While we do not believe that public opinion in general is ready for such a step, it certainly should come. Tobacco has even fewer legitimate uses than alcohol, though the habit is even more universal and is gradually finding devotees among the feminine sex. Its harmful effects are perhaps more insidious than alcoholic liquors.

It has been a source of much pride with us that for many years before there was any appreciable public sentiment against the use of liquors or tobacco, the statute books of the church (the Doctrine and Covenants and Conference Resolutions) and the usages of the church were strictly against the use of tobacco.

Everywhere we go, the vile fumes of tobacco smoke smite one's nostrils. There is practically no escape, for those who use it are usually oblivious of the feelings of others regarding this matter. We know there are thousands of sufferers from the carelessness of others who would welcome a national crusade against the use of the weed.

As might be expected, coffee interests are now advertising their product as a national drink. Their carefully worded appeal would lead the unsuspecting to believe that coffee was a genuine food drink instead of a stimulant with poisonous qualities. Then we see full-page announcements of soft drink manufacturers whose beverages are reeking with harmful coloring, sweetened with saccharine, and some of them frankly basing their popularity on the harmful caffeine found in tea and coffee. It is easy to acquire a taste and finally a seeming need for some stimulant. The habit of indulgence is hard to avoid when once fixed.

Our safety lies in an intelligent observation of the word temperance in its full meaning: An abstinence from things that are harmful and a temperate use of those which are legitimate. This will make "cranks" of none of us, but will enhance our general efficiency many fold. Our bodies are the temples of God's Spirit. Weakened and assailed by intemperance of any sort, we lose capacity for service in this life and fail in that sense to qualify for celestial glory in the life to come.

In our department Of General Interest we are publishing some strong articles on the subject. The fact that at our church college, Graceland, absolutely no smoking is allowed is especially gratifying in connection with the suggestion in "Smoking in the colleges."

THE CALL TO PREPARE

I am speaking mildly when I state that my heart leaped for joy when I read the announcement by the President of the church that the time had come to enter more carefully into the preparation for service in the Lord's work. Above all else was I interested in the fact that the preparation would be one dealing with intensive study of fundamentals. It is the happy mean.

If you are going to South and Central America, you will need the Spanish language; if you go to Jerusalem, you will need the language of that place. We mission workers will not waste time studying the language of the Eskimo unless we are to labor with him. Let each man learn his duty and perform it.

While it is true that our scope of study-material is unlimited, it is also true that our time, here, is limited. It is insane to lose sight of this fact. Time must be wisely, relatively, proportioned. I look upon my reading period of cheap novels as time lost. In the same sense, I can lose valuable time by reading too much profane history and too little sacred history. As a minister I must magnify my calling. I am not called to be a specialist in botany or in any subject outside of ministering to souls diseased.

A general education is good for any man; a specific education is essential for the man who succeeds in specific work. Any young man can waste time by studying nonessentials. What is a nonessential? It is that study which requires time which should be given to other studies. For example, a minister in this church whom God has called to active service in the field should not quit his spiritual work in order to study the science of constructing submarines, unless directed to do so by the Lord. God does not desire his elders to step aside into fields of study that will sap their strength and divert their attention from their specific task of preaching the gospel. I do not think that there is much danger of this being done, and for this reason our President may have felt impressed to urge upon the ministry the necessity of studying, studying, studying. And the stress, by interpretation of some, at least, may have been laid too strongly on the idea of a college education for all the ministry.

We all know that a college education is not essential to success in preaching this gospel. A college education means the possession of a degree. To remove from our ministry all men who have no college degree, would mean to leave comparatively no one to carry on the work. I think that one can count on the thumbs of both hands the men in our ministry who hold important degrees. I do not refer to the B. S., B. E., R. N., and other minor degrees or titles. The knowledge a degree stands for is worth possessing if it is used for God and humanity, but to look upon it as an indication that the one who possesses it is better than his fellow men, is to be blinded to the real value of knowledge.

No; we lose sight of the real issue, if we think that a specified number of class lectures in astronomy, botany, history, etc., are essentials to the foundation of successful ministrations in the holy priesthood. Men who have drunk deep of the waters of inspiration, and have stood as mouthpieces for God, know what reservoir they must tap if they are to labor successfully for him; and they know that the letter alone killeth. These men but smile at the enthusiastic outburst of youth which voices the claim that so much Latin, so much "math," so much biology, so much this, so much that, must be learned before a man is qualified to receive a call from God to preach the gospel.

Nephi said, "To be learned is good, if one hearken unto the counsel of God." He did not say, To be learned is essential to preaching the gospel. Had he said this he would have been mistaken. Nephi, of course, referred to the higher branches of learning; he knew that every intelligent man possessed a degree of learning. Some of the great unlettered men of the Book of Mormon were wonderfully learned in things pertaining to God. We must be careful in our judgment lest we be found on the side of wrong.

I may, in this article, overemphasize the side of this subject that defends the unlettered ministry; but I do not intend to discourage study, for only by it do we please God. We have indeed passed the day when it is necessary for the Lord to fill the ranks of the ministry with men who cannot read. And we have reached the day when more than mere knowledge of reading is essential to the highest success in the ministry. The sooner this point be burned in, the better off will be the church. Men who are lazy mentally, spiritually, physically do not glorify God.

Some members of the priesthood have said that in a year or two only college graduates will be admitted to the ministry. They have made this statement in a critical manner, not agreeing with the wisdom of the move. Such is not to be the case. There may come the time when the Lord will choose the college man, provided he is spiritual and sober. But that this calling in favor of the college man, will obtain in every case, we are not justified in supposing. God will consider every phase of qualification and select the best agent obtainable; he may or may not be educated in the schools of the world. Moses was educated, but it was necessary, under the circumstances, to select Aaron to be his mouthpiece. All men who go to school are not and never will be ministers. Paul tells us that as God called he, Paul, ordained. This is true to-day, so far as calling is concerned.

The man who has learned many valuable things by experience; who has made a careful study of the best of all subjects—human nature, does object to being branded as an ignorant man, or even an unlearned man. He cannot see the consistency of rating him, say twenty, in the field of real knowledge, and giving eighty to some stripling who has read more pages of Latin, geology, grammar, and other books. This man is willing to admit that his little brother knows more about certain books than does he, but he knows that crammed heads are not educated heads. A learned brain is a trained brain. And it is not necessary to go to college to learn to think. Neither is it necessary to attend college in order to study books.

It is an advantage, if opportunity is afforded, to save valuable time by studying under the direction of men who have themselves learned to study. This is the chief advantage offered by our schools of learning. Wisely to use time is to save it, and this is the whole philosophy of education. Efficiency is the word which stands for the fruit of education; lacking this fruit we are not educated. Men are educated in the lines in which they are efficient; therefore, there are educated men who have never attended college, for there are efficient men who have been denied the privilege of college training.

It might be argued that these men succeeded in spite of their handicap. It might be argued that our self-made men might have much eclipsed their record of achievements had they received college training. We do not deny the possibility of this claim. Burns might have written better poems. Shakespeare might have out-Shakespeared himself. (And I do not use the name of Shakespeare to start an argument about his much or little schooling.)

I am glad that the church is coming to a more rational view of the subject of education. When we see facts as they are, there will be no antagonism or jealousy or vanity or simple misunderstanding. And this applies to both sides of the house. One cannot blame our missionary for being resentful when his efforts are held up as a broken reed. He has seen God's power take hold of people and they come in penitence to the door of baptism. In his soul he knows that life is not logic but ethics, in its practical working to-day.

The missionary believes in education, but he does not believe in some of the theories about it that are flouted in his face. He knows that Paul the learned wrote a wonderful message to the Ephesians, but in his heart the missionary knows that James the learner wrote a more wonderful—because of its tremendous practicability—epistle to the twelve tribes scattered abroad.

The missionary force of our church to-day is divided into at least two groups. One group is progressive, one is retrogressive or nonprogressive. How large either group is we do not know, but this we know—that the latter group will in time—long or short—cease to occupy in place of big responsibility. We cannot expect it to be otherwise, nor should we want it to be. A man who would cling to a place in the church when another could fill it better to the glory of God, is selfish, egotistical, or otherwise lacking in church interest. This is not the case with a large majority of our missionaries.

I take my hat off to the missionary in this church. I mean the real kind. The man who does his work without complaining unceasingly; who suffers for the work's sake. I speak of the man who leaves home and goes forth to endure the hardships of his calling.

I have to my credit ten years of intensive missionary labors. I write from the blood-streaks of experience when I say that I know what it is to sleep on schoolhouse floors, on bitter cold nights, eat at tables where bread is embittered by prejudice and bigotry, risk life by walking through forest fires, travel alone at midnight through bear-infested woods of Maine, endure the scorn of the populace, etc.

These men who assemble at our General Conferences bear about the stripes of their Lord, they have tasted the bitter and the sweet of life, they are bearing the burden in the heat of the day. And year after year the pathos of the scene deepens as we observe many of these men growing old in years, with the glory of past days of service crowning their brow, waiting to have their places filled with younger men. The sadness is not in the fact that they must soon lay down the burden but in the thought that they leave us to carry the work on without their friendly association.

Any man who reads the signs of the times, knows that the hour has struck for the ushering in of two distinct features, and one is more efficient ministration. The man who will not "study to show himself approved," must retire that another may take his place. It is not asking too much of our young men to insist that they use careful language; that they become free from glaring blemishes that injure the cause of truth. The personnel of the priesthood is changing. It is just that it should change.

A missionary who will not do his best is not fully pleasing to God. And in this age a man is not doing his best when he is neglecting to improve; when he is ceasing to strive to become a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. Some men see their mistake now, and many in their heart admit it. They neglected to obey the counsel of the word of God. The only thing now for such persons to do is to do the best they can, and one of the best things is for them to encourage the young ministers to study and study. There are places in the field for missionaries who habitually and continually say "I seen," "I have saw," "I done," "They was," etc.; there are places where such language will not especially blemish the thought they try to impress. The church is not arbitrarily turning these brethren down; but their field is limited; they are handicapped. And it may be said that in the future men who are least handicapped will be called to represent Christ to the world. This is only just to Christ. We cannot doubt it.

The day of the tobacco pipe and plug is also past. In my brief career I have seen the old elder with his yellow whiskers, the stain of nicotine. I have seen the thin line disappear. Thank God he's gone! For the sake of a dying world the Holy Spirit has touched the filthy body. But that day is past in the enlightened places of the church. We have ascended the holy mountain. God is ready to give us more power. We have a greater task to perform. A better preparation is demanded.

What I write, then, is not to discourage those who can and should do so, from securing a college education: I write to warn against the underestimating of education received outside of the college. I write to encourage men to study, to prepare intensively for their mission work. I write to express my appreciation of the new move which is to make it possible for our young men and women to receive proper instruction to qualify them for their special work in the ministry. I believe that "this is one of the most important pieces of work the church has ever undertaken."

In undertaking this piece of work, I see Graceland College standing on its feet doing efficient service that will reach into eternity. I see a mission school that can give to the world helpers. I see our teachers enjoying the Spirit of God as they instruct men and women in the knowledge of the kingdom. I see also some of the mistakes to be avoided.

As a church we are resolved to lay no stumbling-blocks in the way of the progress of the word of God for the redemption of the world. We are torch bearers of a distinct light. God has placed this burden upon us and we are willing to bear it. It is pleasant to work with him. With sympathies as wide as the world we must go forth. With a heart full of longing to live in a larger way, and demonstrate to the world that we are the custodians of the "pearl of great price." Let us lift, not lean; let us help, not hinder.

These are the new Dark Ages as well as the new Golden Age. It is the day of the heritage of hate and the day of the heritage of love. It is the day of opportunity. In this day of test where do we stand? We can almost hear the sullen silence, on the one hand; and the glad response on the other.

May we be true to the call of conscience, for we are living in the day of solemn responsibilities, of great privileges. We are engaged in a work in which every man may bear a share. May the Lord God of Infinite Excellency bless us with power to choose that "better part."

THE PATH OF THE WICKED

Solomon spoke wisely in the early days of his wisdom and piety when he said: "Enter not into the path of the wicked, and go not in the way of evil men. Avoid it, pass not by it, turn from it, and pass away." (Proverbs 4: 14, 15.)

While I endeavor to have my own life conform to the ideas herein advanced, I would not enforce them upon others, as I am a firm believer in one's free agency and personal responsibility. However, I think it wise that we elders should have some definite opinions and ideas upon the various subjects that have been brought to our attention so that we may be able to give an intelligent answer to any question that may be brought to us concerning the propriety of indulging in any of the different amusements that we shall presently have under consideration.

DANCING

Leading physicians tell us that dancing is injurious to health. Habitual dancers die at an average early age—men at 31, women at 27; due no doubt to thin clothing, excessive exercise, overheating, physical exhaustion, the taking of improper privileges, leading to lust, sinful indulgences, disgrace, and ruin.

There are exceptions to all rules, and many persons will affirm that dancing has not, and does not injure them; but the incontrovertible fact remains that most of those so affirming are in comparatively poor health, the cause of which can, in most cases, be traced to the dance hall or ballroom.

A vast number of cases of female weaknesses are due to the exhaustion brought on by dancing.

The moral aspects of the effects of dancing are appalling. A celebrated dancing master said: "Out of two hundred fallen women in a certain city, ten confess willful choice; seven poverty and abuse; twenty to drink given them by parents; and one hundred sixty-three out of the two hundred confess the dancing school and the ball." He says, eleven went directly from the dancing school to the brothel within three months.

Another dancing master confessed that in San Francisco there were two thousand five hundred prostitutes of whom one thousand six hundred and sixty-six confess the dancing school and the ball were the causes of their downfall.

A matron of a house for fallen girls says: "Seven tenths of all the girls entering the house say dancing was the cause of their fall."

We elders cannot countenance dancing because:

- 1st. If persisted in, it kills all spiritual life in the soul.

- 2d. It paralyzes the conscience.

- 3d. Severs communication with God.

- 4th. It destroys fellowship with God, driving the Holy Spirit out of the life.

- 5th. It injures one's influence, the chief asset in the Christian life.

It is the source of great pleasure; and whatever causes great pleasure is fascinating; whatever is fascinating is hypnotic; whatever is hypnotic is of the Evil One; therefore dancing is of the Evil One, and consequently should be avoided.

THE THEATER

While I do not affirm that all theaters, actors, and actresses are bad, I do say that the general trend of the theatrical life is downward.

- 1st. It is immodest.

- 2d. It is irreverent.

- 3d. It distorts the views of life.

- 4th. Its influence upon the actors and actresses is demoralizing.

- 5th. As a consequence its general moral tendency is down.

The Reverend Doctor James Buckley, the world renowned editor, scholar, and philanthropist, personally examined sixty of the best reputed plays in New York covering a period of three years. He says: "Nearly every play of popular reputation is open to the following six charges:

- "1st. Christian principles are not accepted as the rule of morals.

"2d. True religion is never praised, but usually ridiculed.

"3d. Wickedness is used to give amusement.

"4th. Crimes that would call down the wrath of God upon the perpetrators are systematically made to provoke laughter.

"5th. Oaths and profane expressions abound.

"6th. If there is a moral it is disposed of in the 5th or last act."

Where then is the good? Remember this, the verdict of one of the world's purest minded men. With Christian principles eliminated, the very foundation upon which the Christian church is built, what is left?

The rules of morals rejected, the whole system is doomed. The constant ridicule of religion tends to poison the minds of those who might otherwise be uplifted by it. Pope says:

Vice is a monster of so frightful mien,
That to be hated needs but to be seen;
But seen too oft, familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pardon, then embrace.

The best plays have as their settings and background vulgarity, profanity, hypocrisy, covetousness, drunkenness, gambling, jealousy, divorce, infidelity, murder, and suicide. The theater appeals to the sensibilities and passions exaggerated in the extreme. Illicit loves, assignations, and intrigues are the constant thought and food of every troupe appearing upon the stage.

An actress was asked by one of her friends to what dramatic school she should send her daughter. "Well," she said, "you might give her a preparatory course in vice." She declared she meant just that; for virtue in its women, and honor in its men, are so rare that when they do occur, they cause astonishment and derision among the initiated. She further says, "The theatrical business is the most corrupt in the world." "Sometimes I am filled with so much loathing for this unholy profession that I am ashamed of the very applause." "Vanity, sheer vanity." "From the moment a girl enters the manager's office, she is almost certainly doomed if she has beauty. If he does not plan her destruction himself, he passes her on to some one who will."

One of the greatest stage managers is noted for the fact that no girl ever withstood his advances and held her position.

Clement Scott, a London critic of matters theatrical says: "It is nearly impossible for a woman to remain pure who adopts the stage as a profession, and the woman who desires to remain pure is doomed to failure in her career."

Here are six reasons why Christians should shun the theater:

1st. Because it is strictly non-Christian with downward tendencies, materialistic, immodest, irreverent, immoral, and sensual.

2d. Because as a class its owners, managers, actors, and actresses are usually immoral with rare exceptions.

3d. Because of the injurious attraction for innocent young people.

4th. Because it is almost inseparably related to and classed with wine rooms, dance halls, gambling dens, and brothels.

5th. Because it destroys spirituality. Neither Christian people nor sinners have confidence in the habitual theater goer.

6th. Because prosperity in the theater means adversity in the church. They are diametrically opposed. Full theaters mean empty churches.

As to picture shows, all are not bad, nor by any means are they all good. They are no better than compelled to be by the State laws and city ordinances. They are visited by more than a billion people a year. They can be used to do a vast amount of good, but the fact remains they do not.

Juvenile court records show that a large per cent of the juvenile vagrancies originated in moving picture shows. Within a few months in New York there were thirty-two offenders sentenced to State prison for crimes traceable directly or indirectly to moving picture shows. Of these, twenty-four were grouped as unmentionable crimes, indecent assaults, and impairing the morals. The committee in its report said the story was a terrible tale of ruined maidenhood and blighted youth.

Doctor Daniel McGurk said in Central Christian Advocate: "I have seen in the children's court the record of five cases of seduction of girls under fifteen years of age. The girls gave only one reason for such conduct—the picture shows."

School records have been shattered, the reform schools are being filled, homes of refuge for fallen girls are overflowing, the victims of the so-called poor man's theater.

Judge Nash, of Buffalo, said that if the laws of that city were enforced, seventy-five per cent of the picture shows would be put out of business.

Judge O'Sullivan of New York, in pronouncing sentence on a man for a foul crime committed in a picture show said: "There are no snares for catching and bringing young girls down to the level of infamy and shame like moving picture shows."

MIXED BATHING

As to mixed bathing, I can say but little, as I personally have no knowledge of it, nor am I aware of any statistics on the subject. But one can very readily draw his own conclusions when viewing the pictures in magazines and journals, of young people at the seashore and other watering places, strutting about in one-piece bathing suits. While in some places the authorities insist on the women wearing a two-piece garment and stockings, the men are permitted to wear a very abbreviated and tight-fitting one-piece suit, which must of necessity have a degenerating effect upon the girls present.

I questioned one young man of the world, who certainly cannot be accused of having any moral scruples with reference to mixed bathing, and he told me of things that are going on right in our own city during the season, that I cannot put in writing, nor would I care to repeat. And yet the same young girls will go there regularly and submit to those indignities. It cannot be offensive to them or they would not go; evidently their moral sensibilities have been blunted.

There may be some who can attend dances without injury to themselves; others who may go to the theater and imagine they are benefited thereby. Some will choose certain pictures and take their families, feeling that they will be benefited rather than harmed, which is quite possible; and still others take part in mixed bathing without injury.

But because they are to a degree immune, does that justify them in entering "the path of the wicked"? Can they not see that they, by going, are supporting and justifying the existence and continuance of the dance, theater, picture show, and mixed bathing, setting an example to others who have not their powers of discrimination and judgment? Are we not our brother's keeper, and as Saints ought we not to be doubly careful as to the example we set to others?

As elders of the Church of Jesus Christ, not only should we refrain from countenancing theaters, picture shows, and mixed bathing, but we should do all in our power to dissuade others from indulging. These are the ways of the world and we will do well to heed the advice of Solomon, and enter not therein.

J. M. HAMPSON.

WHAT NAME SHALL I BEAR?

To some I might appear to be narrow in regard to this matter, nevertheless I adhere to the point, however nice.

The nominal churches of the earth would likely answer my question by saying, "What's in a name?" but our text says, "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." (Acts 4:12.)

Hereupon they say to me, "This we acknowledge, and we are not trying to be saved by any other name." But here is where the contention arises.

Here is where I shall endeavor to point out error.

Jesus told Nicodemus that unless a man be born of water and of the Spirit he could not enter into the kingdom of God. (John 3:5.) The kingdom of God, here, is the church. Some might contend otherwise, but it does not matter. Unless one comes out of the water and out of the Spirit he does not enter into anything different from his present condition.

When a child is born into a home the only name it can legally receive is the name of its parents. Likewise with one of us when born into the church. Upon being born of the Spirit, or being baptized of the Holy Ghost, which is all the same, we have received the Spirit of adoption. (Romans 8:15.) The only church obeying the gospel principles set forth in Hebrews 6:1, 2 is the Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints (Reorganized). I parenthesize for distinction. Therefore the candidate being born into this church by water and the Spirit of adoption has a legal right to that name. In many churches he is adopted without birth. He gains the name without heritage. Into some they are born by water only and some "tarry" days and nights for the spiritual birth without faith in the laying on of hands for that purpose. When, however, they have received a name, it is not the only name because a child born into one family cannot receive the name of another.

Hereupon I do a little paraphrasing: "This my everlasting revelatory gospel of your salvation, of peace, power, and the covenant made to Abraham, this gospel of officers set in the church, which officers are only properly called of God as was Aaron shall be restored to the earth in the day of thundering chariots pulled by steeds of flinty hoofs, then shall the end come." (Matthew 24:14; Revelation 14:6; Amos 3:7; Ephesians 1:13; 6:15; 1 Thessalonians 1:5; Acts 3:25; 1 Corinthians 12:28; Hebrews 5:4; Exodus 28:1; Matthew 17:11, 12; Nahum 2:3-5; Isaiah 5:28-30.)

The above paragraph is inserted to show when men may begin to take upon themselves the only name under heaven given among them. I shall refer to it again. Now, we have been considering the name of a child in reference to its parent name. We shall take another view.

Our text will be found in Ephesians 5:23. For the husband is the head of the wife even as Christ is the head of the church. When a woman is married to a man she takes his name upon herself. It might also be said it is given her by law. In the absolute sense it is not right for her to retain her former name and add to it that of her husband though this is done in many cases. To retain her maiden name is to hold her married name in contempt. Now Christ is the head of the church, the wife of the man being typical of the church, the bride of Christ, whose bride she is. (John 3: 29; Matthew 9: 14, 15.)

The bride's name will be found in Revelation 2: 17; 3: 1; 14: 1. The church is his bride, he is the head, she shall bear his name. How can the Calvinists, the Campbellites, the Wesleyans, the Russellites, etc., call themselves Christians? They may, but can they properly, legitimately do so? At this juncture some one may say, "Well, the Mormons have the name of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." How now? I turn to the Book of Mormon, Nephi 12: 18-20, "Have they not read the scriptures, which say, Ye must take upon you the name of Christ, which is my name? For by this name shall ye be called at the last day; and whoso taketh upon him my name, and endureth to the end, the same shall be saved at the last day; Therefore, whatsoever ye shall do, ye shall do it in my name; therefore ye shall call the church in my name; and ye shall call upon the father in my name; that he will bless the church for my sake; and how be it my church, save it be called in my name? For if a church be called in Moses' name, then it be Moses' church; or if it be called in the name of a man, then it be the church of a man; but if it be called in my name, then it is my church, if it so be that they are built upon my gospel."

Not only is the church to be called after the name of Christ, but it must also adhere to his gospel principles. Who can put forth better logic than the above? A few months ago I paraphrased Matthew 24: 14. It is an easy matter to connect that verse with the above references to the Book of Mormon.

Now as to doing things in his name. Let there be a clear distinction between doing a thing in a name and doing it by that name. If we are named after him we can do things in his name, but if we only assume his name we do things by his name. Therefore we must necessarily bear the name of Christ.

CHARLES DIAL.

The great duty of life is not to give pain; and the most acute reasoner cannot find an excuse for one who voluntarily wounds the heart of a fellow-creature. Even for their own sakes people should show kindness and regard to their dependents. They are often better served in trifles, in proportion as they are rather feared than loved; but how small is the gain compared with the loss sustained in all the weightier affairs of life! Then the faithful servant shows himself at once as a friend, while one who serves from fear shows himself an enemy.—Fredrika Bremer.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

SMOKING IN THE COLLEGES

[We are not in the habit of devoting much space to the tobacco question, believing that as a church our stand is so far above reproach in discountenancing its use that we should be above the need of a constant reiteration of the subject. The editors of the Farm Journal asked us to consider the following article appearing in that magazine for May, 1919, and we feel inclined to do so because not all our young people realize beforehand how easy it will be made for them to indulge the habit. As will be seen by the extract from the article by Frederick Lynch, who writes from England, the use of tobacco is alarmingly on the increase. The following introduction is by the editors of the Farm Journal.—EDITORS.]

The following article was written three years ago, following a series of talks to college students. The manuscript was sent to ten of our principal magazines, including one published especially for young folks. Many editors spoke highly of the treatment, one even saying that the author did not go far enough; yet all declined to publish it, for various reasons or for none at all. The author has nothing to add to the original manuscript except to say that since it was written smoking has begun among the young women students of the university where the talks were delivered. And why not?" "Sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander."

Smoking appeals to the impulses of men rather than to their judgment, for which reason they drift into the habit with less deliberation and less real weighing of pros and cons than are employed in the traditional horse trade, the purchase of a vacant lot, or the choice of clothes, not to mention the selection of an automobile.

Smoking once begun commonly lasts for life with results not limited to the individual, but extending to all with whom he comes in contact—men, women, and children. Certain advantages must come from smoking, else how shall we account for so general a habit with its many inconveniences, its noticeable disadvantages, and its conspicuous infringements upon the rights of people not addicted to the habit? The personal consequences to the smoker are often greatly overstated, except for excessive users, or those especially susceptible to this particular drug.

But, whatever the advantages, many good people, including most women, get on very well without them; and surely in a matter of this importance, the consequences of which last through life like a proposal of marriage or the choice of a profession, it is the part of wisdom to bestow as much critical thought upon it as in the location of a residence or the investment of capital. Upon this point there can be no discussion.

What are the facts encountered by the inexperienced young man; for example, a freshman entering college? What is his opportunity to decide the question of smoking by deliberate judgment based upon all the facts in the case? He finds that nearly all gatherings for men are known as "smokers"; the obvious and expected thing of those who go is to smoke. Large numbers of men indulge the habit only at smokers, frankly acknowledging their dislike of tobacco, yet yielding to the spirit of the occasion. The young man soon learns that in nearly all places where not positively forbidden, smokers assume the right to indulge their habit regardless of the comfort of those who do not smoke.

He finds powerful commercial interests ready to supply pipes and tobacco free of cost for young men's gatherings. He finds the most attractive advertisements and the most costly prizes adroitly designed to increase the use of tobacco. The prominent figures in the fashion plates are of well-dressed young men with cigar or cigarette held jauntily between dainty fingers. The hero of the magazine article or popular novel is shown in careless luxury inhaling the incense of "the fragrant weed." (A few years ago it was a pipe and bulldog. Something seems to have happened to the dog.) Many of the most prominent men in the universities are inveterate, even aggressive, smokers, with just enough bravado and rakishness to appeal powerfully to an inexperienced boy. Against all this he finds very little that is aggressive or even visible. While the smoker is active and assertive, the nonsmoker is relatively absent, or if present, he is inactive and silent as to smoking and often the butt of good-natured banter, thoroughly understood among friends, but easily misconceived by the boy. What wonder that he is swept off his feet, no matter what may have been his bringing up.

Now, if there is one thing that appeals to the young man more than adventure, it is fashion; and if there is one thing he cannot stand up under, it is ridicule. Under all circumstances, he is led as a lamb to the slaughter with scarce a fighting chance to use his own judgment. The active influences are all upon one side, and there is practically nothing to challenge his judgment.

As a matter of fact the habit once formed is altogether likely to become permanent. The real question is not, Shall I smoke or not smoke now? but it is, Shall I smoke or not smoke through life, with all it means to me and to my family? Some men say, "I can smoke or leave it alone"; but the facts are, in general, that once begun men continue smoking through life. A few do quit the habit—just about enough to show that it can be done, but not enough to establish a working criterion. Indeed

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Shall We Lag?

We are happy to present to our readers, this week, Sister Krahl's most thoughtful and splendid address to the women in general convention assembled. Everyone should give this article a careful reading, and each could well ask himself, "Am I a laggard, or am I truly trying to keep abreast of the times?"

Our president has been given a glimpse of the many demands that are made now, or will soon be made, upon our women. If we are to be leaders, if our light is to shine out to show the way, if God has chosen this people to whom to intrust his plans of human redemption in the sin-darkened condition of to-day, surely we must not allow ourselves to be lulled to any false sense of security, thinking comfortably that God will "take care of his own"! It is true he can, and he will, which, in a final analysis resolves itself into this: If God's will cannot be accomplished with my help, it will be accomplished without it! The thing that concerns each of us should be, "Am I, or am I not, a profitable servant unto the Lord? Am I an instrument of worth and intelligence which in his hands may accomplish his will in the world?"

As women, our duty lies plainly before us. It is no longer bounded by the four walls of our homes, for it reaches out, consciously or unconsciously, to those about us, and we are responsible for the character of the influence exerted. Will it be one of good? Will it be one others will instinctively feel leads towards the light? Will it be practical? Is it consistent? Do we demonstrate our precepts by our daily lives? Are we prepared to accept the responsibilities just ahead, including that of suffrage, with intelligent understanding of world conditions? Are we patiently trying to qualify for this and other grave responsibilities placed upon us? Consider—and answer to God.

Report of the President

RETROSPECTIVE AND PROSPECTIVE

A general report of the Woman's Auxiliary has been sent to the First Presidency and General Conference. It seems fitting, however, that this Convention should have the benefit of some observations that have been made by your presiding officer during the year.

On the whole, we think it is quite remarkable that our society has maintained its own so well considering that almost every line of activity has been set aside, to a greater or lesser extent, for the work of the Red Cross and other war relief. The ban put upon all gatherings during the epidemic of influenza interfered greatly with our work. Our financial report shows the receipts of the year in the general fund to be $290, $55.63 less than last year. The Children's Home fund contributions have been considerably less, the amount for the year being only $144.90, $306.03 less than last year, which may be accounted for because of the many financial war demands, such as bonds, special drives, war savings stamps, etc.

The Oriole fund has a gain of $33.88 and the Year-book fund a gain of $60.26.

The running expenses for last year were $376; this year they were $372.11, a small difference of $3.89. All bills for the year have been paid and the total balance of funds on hand is $85.99. Each bureau shows a gain in membership. The total gain is 491. The estimated membership of one organization is 3,376.

In the unparalleled history of the past year, the outstanding feature of interest to us is the achievement of the organized woman power of the Nation in "caring for the bodily needs, and spiritual calls of the men in khaki." Not only this, but the promotion of thrift throughout the country, the stimulation of patriotism and the conservation of the great harvests of bountiful America. The fact of being identified with so noble a part of the Nation's crisis and of having served successfully to the accomplishment of the great end—victory to the allied cause—has not only disclosed the super-strength of the Nation, because of the loyal service of its women, but has given to women the consciousness of their capabilities for the doing of things worth while. Since this organized womanhood of the Nation has accomplished such great things in time of war, it should not now be demobilized, but remain intact for the accomplishment of still greater tasks in this time of reconstruction.

"Physical reconstruction can be wrought by machinery," says Mary Austin in her late book, "but human reconstruction is far more difficult." And what part have we in the readjustment of human affairs. Our program is, and always has been, a constructive one, dealing with the fundamentals of largest and fullest living; but the great disclosures made by the examining boards of the army, of the physical unfitness and rejection of every third man because, in a large per cent, of neglected defects in childhood, make an appeal for a larger and more potential parenthood. A parenthood that will reach out and beyond the confines of the immediate home to the city's and state's unthinking parents and needy children. Not that we would minimize in the least the importance of the study of the unfoldment of child nature nor the fundamental principles of its development, but the necessity for the conservation of the child-life about us impels action and a participation in the various movements for its present and future welfare. In the Year-book of the State of Missouri, the report of the State Board of Agriculture, we find that Missouri ranks first in the production of corn-cob pipes, saddle horses and mules, zinc, etc., but thirty-second in the care and education of her children. Therefore there is much to be done in Missouri in Child Welfare work. We have a comparison between France and America, educationally. "During the past four years that country stuck to her guns and kept her children in school as best she could," "but," continues the editor of the Child Labor Bulletin, "here in America where the war did not touch us as it did France, we plunged headlong into the practice of child exploitation; children were taken out of school when there was no necessity for it, except of course where hundreds of schools were closed down because of the exodus of 40,000 teachers to better paid jobs. Other schools were closed because the children had entered upon their curriculum of child labor."

What shall be said of the church and her children and the development of their four-sided nature. What intimacy is there between the church and the child save the one hour on Sunday morning. The cry comes from every direction, "our young people are slipping, slipping away from us, what shall we do?" The church must not be late—like many parents who finally arouse themselves to the fact that the adolescent period has arrived in the life of their boy or girl, and without preparation or understanding apply such hit and miss rules as they guess may fit the case. What is to be done? Parents must supply in the home every need of the four-fold nature of the child, and when wider activities are sought the church should be ready to supplement the efforts of the home in the expanding young life. And how shall the church be able to do this? Through its various departments. Our children and young people should be able to say, "the church supplies all I need." They should be able to speak of the "church's playground, the 'church's good-time societies,' the church's gymnasium," the "church's library"; when this is the case will the church's prayer-meeting be less attractive than these? If our children had the proper environment for each period of their development the religious awakening for which we so earnestly watch and pray would be, we believe, but a natural consequence.

In our organization this year nine new circles in Home and Child Welfare work were organized. We feel sure this number would have been far greater but for the war work which, temporarily, superceded it, and the illness of the supervisor of this bureau.

In the Young Woman's Bureau we have 700 Oriole girls throughout the church, representing from 150 to 200 active circles. Twenty have been disorganized, either because they have completed the work or in a few cases that we know of there has not been a proper effort on the part of older women to join the girls as monitors. The director of the Oriole girls says, "That which is most needed by the Oriole work is active, earnest women for monitors. If we could only have the monitors we would have the girls." To-night the young woman movement in the church will be set forth by one of its leaders and those who are present may judge whether such a responsibility as this should be theirs.

The Temple Builders will have many aspirants for membership when the Oriole work has been finished by those now engaged in it, as well as in those to whom the work is yet to be introduced. A manual is being prepared by Sr. Alice Mae Burgess, supervisor of this society and of the Young Woman's Bureau, which will assist greatly in getting the aims of the organization before our young women. The "Parthenon," edited by Sr. Burgess, fairly sparkles with the wholesome optimism of its youthful contributors, and we could not well do without it.

The Relief and Service Bureau has a gain of eleven societies this year. In this work lies a field of service almost unexplored but sorely in need of investigators, who, with consecrated hearts will qualify themselves to cooperate with church officers in remedying many conditions of dependence and maladjustment, as well as to gather wisely such information as would enable the Bishop to more effectually minister to those who apply for assistance. The temporary relief that has been extended by our aid societies to families in times of distress, has been fully appreciated. And the fact that many a church house owes its existence and maintenance largely to the untiring hands of these noble sisters is clearly recognized. We still need the cooperation of our aid societies, but the time has come when each individual must prepare to receive and develop his stewardship, and where readjustments are necessary the application of scientific principles will help to solve many problems. We urge our women to continue the study of sociology and prepare themselves for this social service, the need of which is so apparent.

In the Educational Bureau there has been organized 40 new classes. The Public Speaking Course has about 400 students consisting of members of the priesthood, non-official men, and women. The study course has exceeded in numbers our facilities for handling it and we recommended to the Coordinating Committee that it be placed with some other department. The Bible Research Course also received consideration by our request. It was further the opinion of this board or committee that the former Social Purity Commission be abolished and the initiative at least, in this work, be placed with the Woman's Auxiliary. Recommendation concerning these subjects will be made to the Conference by the Coordinating Committee. All study and reading courses of this bureau are important and practical but with them I would urge a continuation of the study of our own language. If we should be able to acquire a liberal amount of knowledge and have not cultivated the medium of expression our ability to use it is greatly reduced while the loss to those whom we could benefit cannot be estimated. We have sometimes heard our sisters say, "If I could only express myself as I would like to." It is possible for all to do this with a few minutes of time each day devoted to its study. It is evident, since the right of citizenship through enfranchisement, is so nearly at our door that women will take a more prominent part in public affairs. Should we not prepare for this service by cultivating the art of proper address, of acquiring a vocabulary commensurate with the needs of any occasion. Should we not become familiar with the new words to express new ideas and to learn the fine distinctions of old ones. Too often we send out our thoughts in careless and unfinished phrases, not always because we do not know better, but because we seem indifferent to the importance of speaking good English. "The French," it is said, "take care of their language to that extent that during the war they had agents in this country inquiring into the teaching of French in our universities to make sure that we had only the best." Says a late writer, "We are full of the experiences of a hundred years of the mistakes and triumphs of democracy and we have no way of saying it finely and penetratingly even to one another." This is foundation work for the progress of our society. We must clarify the meaning of our policies through the medium of language and we should daily practice and acquire the use of words adapted to the unfoldment of our aims. We should also become familiar with the new terms which apply to the new age.

In regard to our department in the SAINTS' HERALD, I wonder if we realize that there have been times when the Editor's desk has been nearly empty as that traditional cupboard, and that we should have gone hungry but for the ready pen of Sr. Anderson who can always give us food for thought. Our work should have a substantial support through our columns, and we trust that the present contributors will continue and many new ones be added to the list this year.

For some time our society has been operated on the financial basis of our per capita assessment and the very small margin cleared on our Year-books. We have felt that our work should be enlarged and upon consultation with Pres. F. M. Smith and Bishop B. R. McGuire we were advised to present a budget to the General Conference that would cover the financial requirements of this expansion. This was prepared and approved by the Executive Committee and is incorporated in our report to the Conference, the amount of the budget being $1,500.

For those who will have the work in hand the coming year I may say there has been secured from district presidents some thirty recommendations for organizers and considerable data from various localities which will be very valuable in prosecuting the work this year. The information contained in the institute reports now on hand will be of great assistance also.

The financial report of the President is as follows:

LETTER DEPARTMENT

A Message of Spring

The change from the hum and rush of city life to the quiet of the country, at this season of the year, is refreshing to the body and to the soul. The season of spring has a message which it would be well for us to heed. Everyone who travels through the country these days, and uses his faculties of observation well, will notice the immense activity displayed by the farmer and gardener. Plowing, clearing, wood-burning, planting, and sowing are going on everywhere. The days of spring have brought golden opportunity. The spring sunshine has called for outdoor labor; and now many a field and garden lie ready sown waiting for the gracious showers to cause the seed to germinate and the plants to strike root and grow. Nature is holding out to man a time of grace which the city dweller hardly appreciates, but which the tiller of the soil is eagerly seizing and using.

These thoughts came impressively to my mind as the train that took me from Chicago to the delightful country town of DeKalb, Illinois, moved over the track.

Spring spoke to me a message as I looked from the car window to the green fields, the newly plowed furrows, and the tilled soil. It was a message that abounded in agricultural metaphors. A familiar passage from the Prophet Hosea came to my mind—a passage I had used as a text for a sermon when I was a sectarian preacher: "Sow to yourselves in righteousness, reap in mercy; break up your fallow ground: for it is time to seek the Lord, till he come and rain righteousness upon you." How searching are the significant words of the Hebrew seer: "Break up your fallow ground." Not satisfied with the definition of fallow ground I found in the dictionary, I went miles into the country to learn from a farmer his definition of it. He not only gave me a definition of fallow ground, but took me to a place on his farm and showed me a large tract of fallow ground, saying as he did so: "When farmers allow their land to pass out of cultivation, it is fallow ground."

That farmer gave me such a clear definition of fallow ground I turned to my text with an enlightened understanding. Fallow ground is ground that produces nothing for the time being. And when ground produces nothing else, it generally produces an undesirable crop of thorns, thistles, and nettles, and much more. If the farmer does not sow the field with good seed, "the idle wind or flighty bird" often sows it with useless and mischievous things.

If a farmer leaves a field alone it will swing back into the wilderness and become as unlovely as the sluggard's garden. As I write I can see the aged prophet, Hosea, looking abroad on the field of his nation's life; he saw vast tracts of it as a fallow field, unworked, uncultivated, and therefore bringing forth useless, mischievous, and poisonous things. The nation of Israel lay there with its magnificent possibilities unrealized, its early promise unfulfilled, and its early activities checked. The soil was there and the capacity was there; but it lay idle and barren because it had not been worked.

How many a life is like that! A fallow life! This was the thought that came to me as I listened to the message the gardens and fields of Illinois seemed telling me through the voice of spring. I thought of the vast stretches of possibility that exist in almost every branch of the church. I thought of the talents and gifts God had lavished upon some of our members, and what they would become if they would consecration themselves to his service and cultivate those gifts to their utmost capacity. Then I thought of the great city of Chicago where I had been laboring for five weeks. In that teeming population of thousands I thought of the many unlovely lives, unfruitful lives—wasted lives, weedy lives, producing nothing that has any value. Thousands of them produce only vice—their very powers are atrophied for lack of use and cultivation.

What a study one finds in the faces of the crowds that jostle in the streets of a large city like Chicago! There are men and women with apparently no intellect, men and women with no faith, no moral purpose or earnestness or vision, and shall I add, men and women with no soul.

They are God's creation, marred, barren, vicious through lack of use or from misuse. How many people you may meet in everyday life whose nature is just a bit of barren soil! Do you ask why? They never cultivated mind or soul as opportunity. Their possibilities were great as those of many others, but they trifled with them, scoffed at them, or presumed upon them. They refused to believe in the need for strenuous effort. Physically, spiritually, and intellectually, they were idle, and life drifted.

During my stay in Chicago, at the request of a Y. M. C. A. officer, I spent a whole day in the large base hospital at the corner of Drexel Boulevard and Forty-seventh Street. While going through one of the wards where on either side of me lay the boys from the Argonne Forest, their bodies gashed with wounds, a mother came to me weeping, saying: "My son needs you most. He is dying. Come and pray for him." I entered the chamber and approached the bedside of that dying boy—a mother's hope, the joy of her dreams through many years. I knelt, and while I prayed, that dying soldier, who fought bravely in that fierce battle of the Argonne, passed away with a smile upon his lips. The mother grasped my hand and said: "It is a hard trial to see him go so young, but otherwise there is nothing to regret. He was faithful to his God and to duty. He cultivated every talent God gave him."

I looked once more upon the face so young, so serene, so peaceful, and felt that in this young man's life, according to the testimony of his mother, there was no fallow ground. His life of usefulness would ever remain with her as a precious memory.

I often think of the wasted lives among the young people of our church. Public libraries are open wide, and they live within their shadow and hardly know of them. How many of our young people fritter away precious hours in idle amusements that profit nothing, neglecting the life of the intellect—steadily refusing to inform their minds through the reading of good books. They go along the same furrow every day, never breaking up a bit of new ground. They never think of feeding their minds with a bit of fine literature or their souls with some noble biography. Perhaps when it is too late, when life is far spent, they will look back and see little more than vast stretches of fallow ground.

Some of our branches may be described as fallow ground. There seems to be no life—no interest. Indeed, it is difficult to get the people to come out to services. Regular attendance is unknown. The officers become disheartened and discouraged, zeal waxes cold. The branch becomes like ground that has been allowed to go out of cultivation. This is the peril of all our branches. I sometimes grow impatient to awaken the capacities that are slumbering in the lives of many of our Saints.

The greatest peril is that the highest reaches of life will fail of cultivation and fruit. There slumbers in every one of us—not something great and famous—but a Saint after the gospel ideal. That capacity is in the humblest of us—educated or uneducated. Woe unto us if as Latter Day Saints this part of us lies fallow. So many of us seem to be only half living. I hardly think the Saints realize the greatness of what God has intrusted to them. I have met many dowered with rich capacities of mind and soul unused, silently unproductive, which if cultivated would make them of most valuable service in the work of the church. Their cultivation would ennoble the faith and adorn the gospel. A few of our branches are like fields covered with weeds instead of a golden crop of wheat. The members may not have any great vices in them, but their lives are fallow lives—they accomplish nothing.

I sometimes think if we would listen we would hear the rebuke of Christ hurled at us: "What do ye more than others?" Ye have the true gospel but what have you to show for it? It is saddening to the soul to see here and there the levity of the world creeping in among our Saints, driving prayer and zeal for the gospel right out of their lives. Their lives, in a spiritual sense, will be nothing more than fallow ground. At the close of a service in Chicago, one born and reared in the church came to me and said: "I wish I had kept faithful through the years, but I have been indifferent so long. I cannot seem to get back."

He had allowed his spiritual life to drift so far that he was disposed to let it go altogether. He had let so much time go that there did not seem much use setting out to be a Saint now. When land has been left alone for long, it seems almost impossible to get it clean and fruitful. So it would seem, but I like to believe that there is no ambition hopeless that sets toward goodness.

There is many a life that supports the truth of that belief. It was my privilege, in my early manhood, to meet the Quaker poet, John Greenleaf Whittier. It was in his home in Amherstburg, Massachusetts. The meeting with Whittier made an impression upon me that lives to this day. The great success of his life had been won, not in easy and ideal conditions, but in conditions that were damaging and almost hopeless. He was the son of an obscure farmer, taught school for a few years in the front room of a humble cottage, then flung full into the work of life, handicapped by ill health, with no chance of further education save a year at Haverhill Academy. Out of these adverse conditions he cultivated and won a life that bore the richest cup of culture. Think of him writing poetry that will live forever!

There are many voices in the air since the General Conference that are telling what should be done, and what should not be done. I do not question the sincerity, but I cannot but believe that many of our difficulties would disappear if we would, as a people, heed the words of the prophet spoken to us in the message of spring: "Break up your fallow ground."

The Bishopric

Advocate for 1919

"Every Member a Tithe Payer"

"When saw we thee hungry and fed thee?"

Why, when you paid your tithing and made it possible for my church to help the worthy, needy ones.

Why give so much attention to our temporary home? Why give so little attention to our eternal home? If all would plan to be associates in the house of the Lord in the life to come, we might be able to strike a balance between the palace and the tenement here in this life. So far as the future is concerned, we are assured that in our Father's house there are many mansions.—Elbert A. Smith.

Mother's Day

This is a day in which every individual, old or young, can join in celebration, in honor of the dearest, noblest woman that ever lived, whether she be living or dead—"Mother"—your own.

This beautiful idea of dedicating the second Sunday in May for the remembrance of our mother was first suggested by a Philadelphia lady, Miss Anna Jarvis. It is said that grief over the loss of her mother gave her the inspiration. So she wrote anonymous letters to editors, clergymen, pastors, leaders of fraternal organizations, and public men. The thought so appealed to the sentiments of mankind that it soon won general adoption throughout the country.

That was but a few years ago; in 1910 it was celebrated in but a few cities of the United States, now there is scarcely a city or village all over the United States or Canada that does not have some observation of the day. The emblem suggested to be worn is a white carnation if your mother is dead, a red one if living.

Mother! What a world of meaning is contained in that one little word. Its magnitude is wonderful. Consider its height and breadth, its duties and obligations. Its possibilities, who can measure? Who can tell?

Most great men have had noble mothers, and many who have attained enduring distinction have been the sons of weak, dissolute fathers; but very rarely have famous men sprung from mothers of low degree.

Confucius, the great philosopher, Alexander, the victorious general, Moses, the prophet of God, Shakespeare, the author, Scott, the poet, Washington, McKinley, and many, many others whose names we cannot now mention, owe a great measure of their success to the teaching of a noble mother. So it is to the early environment of the hearthstone, to the aspirations of noble women, and to the devotion of worthy mothers, the world is indebted for its greatest men.

It is said that Susanna Wesley was the real founder of Methodism. She was her son's constant companion. His love for her was the undercurrent of his career.

The founder of our church had a noble mother, and it was due largely to her great help and assistance that his work was accomplished. It was from his mother he received his sublime courage, and her noble teachings were the basis of his character.

Abraham Lincoln, standing on the pinnacle of success as a statesman, declared: "All that I am or ever expect to be, I owe it to my angel mother."

Speaking of Lincoln, I remember reading a story some time ago of him. It was in the time of our great Civil War, when the sun of peace and happiness was entirely shut out by the clouds of desolation and destruction; the great armies of the South were pushing northward, destroying everything before them, while the armies of the North were invading the Southland, doing likewise. One boy, only sixteen years of age, fired by his ambition and patriotism, ran away from home and enlisted in the Union Army. Things went on very smoothly for a while; he bore his part bravely, performing all the duties that befell a soldier, until one night after a long march on a hot summer day they encamped for the night. This youthful lad was put on guard duty; weary and tired after his long walk, when all nature became hushed and still, he forgot that he was a soldier on such an important duty, sat down. The south wind seemed to sing a lullaby. He went to sleep.

You know the penalty—death. His trial was held and sentence passed. The day was set for his execution. Some way the news was transmitted to a little woman at home. She was his mother! The shock almost overcame her, but rallying all the force of her strength, she immediately set out for the city of Washington. Going immediately to the White House, she asked to see the President. There were special guards placed around the house and grounds, as naturally there must be in such a time of danger, and no stranger was allowed to be ushered into the presence of the Nation's executive without due recognition. The guards told her she could not be admitted. But still she stayed, pleading and begging for just one word with Mr. Lincoln. Finally they were going to send her away forcibly, when it is said Lincoln from an open window heard their angry tones and sent a messenger to inquire the trouble. They told him this woman had remained all day at the gate and would not go away. He gave orders for them to allow her to enter. And when at last she stood in the presence of that great man, the commander-in-chief of all the armies and navy, in whose hands lay the power to do or undo a matter of so grave importance to her, her emotions overcame her, and she sank in a chair, covering her face with her hands while great sobs shook her slender frame. President Lincoln advanced to where she was sitting, laid one hand gently upon her shoulder and asked in kindly tones, "What can I do for you, madam?"

On hearing these encouraging words and looking up into the kindness of his eyes, her courage was renewed and she poured forth her story as only a mother could, emphasizing the fact that he was only a boy, with a boy's ways and habits still.

When she had finished, he reached over to the table and taking pen and paper wrote a few words upon it. It was a telegram to the commanding officer. Handing it to a messenger, he said, "Send this immediately."

Turning to the woman, he said: "You may return to your home now; your son is pardoned."

There in that magnificent room the picture before us, at first we see only the form of the great American, standing fully six feet and four, with his lean, gaunt shape, the unchangeable ugliness of feature, the deep, sad kindness of eyes, but with a soul so big with purpose, so grand, that he stood there as he stands to-day, unshaken in his place.

Yes, but in that same picture there is another truly great character. It is that mother, sitting in her faded suit of brown, her toil-worn hands clasped together, yet with a hope so unshaken, with a faith firmly fixed, with a determination that would not be put aside, interceding for her child.

So it is with all good mothers. I do not believe there is a mother here to-day but would make any sacrifice for her child. She would risk her life in fire or storm, sickness or disease, that her child might be rescued.

A few years ago I made an observation concerning one of our high school boys here in town. He was a straight, healthy boy, especially noted for his strong physique and brilliant intellect. When through school he started out in life to make a fortune or sow his wild oats. He first went to Kansas City, then to Chicago, then afterwards to New York City. In about three years he returned home, but what a change! His youthful rosy face showed only too plainly the marks of dissipation. His health was broken; his ambition was gone.

Our son told me that in conversation with him, when he had been confiding his experiences, that he had lost all confidence in womankind. They were all false and unfaithful, whether married or single. I replied, "Oh, he did not mean that."

"Well, that is what he said."

I replied, "Did you ask him if that included his mother?"

"Well, no, I never thought of that."

Neither had he, for he had a good mother and he knew it. Days went by; she kindly cared for him at home, but as he grew no better she left her home and the rest of the family and with him went to the warm mountainous country, devoting all her time and energies to the one task of restoring his health again. Do you think he trusted that one woman? I do.

The Bible says that the sins of the fathers are visited upon the children. One of our modern writers has given us a counter expression which says, "The virtues of the mothers shall be visited upon the children." How comforting. Listen to the words of the noted Robert G. Ingersoll:

"It takes an hundred men to make an encampment. It takes the influence of but one good woman to make a home. I not only admire woman as the most beautiful creature ever created, but I reverence her as the redeemed glory of humanity, the sanctity of all virtues, the pledge of all perfect qualities of heart and head. The one thing in this world that is considered constant, the only peak that rises above the clouds, the window in which the light burns forever, the one star that darkness cannot quench—a mother's love.

"It rises to the greatest heights,
It sinks to the lowest depths,
It forgives the most cruel injuries.
A mother's love is the perfume of the heart,
It is the real love that subdues the earth;
The love that has wrought miracles of art,
That gives us music all the way from the cradle song to the grand symphony;
That bears the soul away on wings of fire.
A love that is greater than power, sweeter than life, stronger than death."

We can never repay our mother for all her goodness, but we can show our appreciation.

Editors Herald: As there are soldiers "over there" who would like to hear from this part of God's vineyard, I will take this way of writing to them all at once. A few days ago a procession of our dear boys was seen on the streets of San Diego. Surely there were tears of gratitude from many eyes seeing our returned heroes. But how sad the lonely mother, father, sister, sweetheart, at the thought of their loved ones lying on the far-away field of Europe somewhere, for the sake of world peace that we could have so easily if only there were not those who are disobedient to God's laws.

But it is only a matter of a few years, dear mothers, when your loved ones will come forth with glorified bodies. The signs of peace are here. The flying machine school near us sent up daily, hundreds of fliers during the war, but now the characteristic buzz is heard from perhaps four daily fliers.

The main damper on our peace is the necessary putting off of the league: by its delay there are many good people losing in business. If everyone would take the proper interest and keep track of it (as well as to send to our hard-working, sincere President their ideas, if they have the kind that the world needs), we would the sooner lift the burden from the business world, that our living comes from. Let us make it a matter of prayer, for I know, personally, worthy people who will suffer much in financial affairs and consequent nervous breakdowns from which they will never arise unless the league is amicably settled soon, and we should each put an individual shoulder to the wheel, and meetings should be held for that purpose.

The Constitution of the United States was crude at first and gradually became better as ideas came in, and so, perhaps, will be the case with the constitution of the world. The humblest peasant may be the one to give forth the best law, so don't hold back anything of value to the human race. Too much has been held back for centuries. If our astronomers, inventors, sculptors, artists, and scientists had been supported by the Government, this world would be far in advance of to-day.

The world does not conceive the harm it is doing by compelling people of talent and no means to waste time by being compelled to work at anything they are not adapted to just for bread to keep the body alive, when, if they had bread provided, they could use the talent God gave them to benefit thousands of bodies. Saints, what are you going to do with that part of the Scripture where it warns us to make use of the talent God gave, as he will multiply it? If we do not, he will take it from us. How many come under the latter head? He will not punish those who try, but who have to contend with insurmountable obstacles put there by others.

Changing the subject, I wish to suggest to our musical rehearsal leaders, drill your choirs so thoroughly that they need but the slightest suggestion of timekeeping from the master; as the baton, or any figuring, is a detraction from the proper musical impression. If your choir is not sufficiently drilled, and they will sing anyway, let the baton be the finger, not the arm, or place yourself to lead behind an artistic little screen of flowers or anything that does not spoil the occasion. Masters sometimes get so worked up that they do not know they attract attention. I cannot conceive of a heavenly choir with some one undergoing contortions or gyrations in front of them, where each angel has to keep his eye painfully fixed. A perfect choir have their songs memorized, and the cues given in a secret way that only the choir understands. There are times when our people are in need of a decided leader. I am not alluding to impromptu work, or to the hands walking through the street, for I do love to see the beautiful fantastic twirlings, etc., of the leader's baton; but I really have had the Spirit of God taken from me, as it were, in watching a choir singing without spirit and understanding in above stereotyped way.

The Saints used to sing two beautiful hymns which I do not hear any more. Where can I obtain them? One is: "An earthquake seems to shake the globe, and distant thunders jar the land," etc. There are two tunes to it, and both are the most beautiful hymns I ever heard, well worth seeking for. The other hymn is: "O Israel, O Israel, with all your abidings." I never heard anyone but my mother sing them. Her voice was that of an angel, melting us to tears whenever she sang. Since September she is singing in glory.

There are several in the church who need your prayers. Let us hold them up before God when we kneel, or are about our cares. My desire is to be of service to mankind in uplifting to a better life.

Lovingly,
REGINA ROHRER MORTON.

FARGO, NORTH DAKOTA, May 21, 1919.

Editors Herald: Last fall we located here after being isolated for three years. I sacrificed a larger salary to make the change, but the Lord has been with us and blessed us in so many ways that we have been more than repaid by his blessings for the financial sacrifice.

After having been isolated for so long it surely is a treat to enjoy the associations of God's people and to be able to apply the talents God gave us to his work, instead of giving it to a worldly cause.

There is a fine little branch here of about ten families, and though few in number, our united efforts are effective in gradually making our church known in the city. As district and branch chorister, I am trying to build up the musical work, and although I have been handicapped in the district work, we are making some headway in the branch here. We have a nice choir, a junior choir, and Sunday school orchestra of twelve pieces, and more to come in.

We had a special Easter program which was advertised beforehand in the city papers, also by personal invitation, which brought a goodly number of outsiders, who were interested in our efforts and are anxious to come again. Our orchestra, after two months of practice (most of them had not played an instrument before), made their initial appearance and did splendidly. The orchestra is composed of young folks, ranging in age from nine to twenty, and a few older. We are working hard and expect these young people to become useful in musical lines. Several of the boys at Lansford, North Dakota, have taken up the study of orchestral instruments, and we can look forward to an orchestra at the district conferences in the future. It surely is a pleasure to work with the young people we have here, who seem so deeply interested in the church work. We are commencing work on a Children's Day cantata, and planning on other musical activities during the summer.

I have found a fine bunch of Saints in this branch, willing and earnest, and anyone desiring to locate in a branch will make no mistake in locating here. Since coming here there has been one family moved in, and others expect to locate here. I would like to see some with musical talent, and especially more young people, for we have to look to the young folks to carry on the work later on. Fargo seems to be a city with the usual opportunities for work in normal times, and I think those who would desire to locate here, by looking around, would find no trouble to obtain work in their respective professions. Fargo is a city of about twenty thousand people, and is termed the "Gate City."

We have a fine little church. Though not very large, it is neat and attractive and large enough to take care of this branch for some time. It is known throughout the city as the Bungalow Chapel. Elder E. E. Weddle is the local pastor. His address is 1421 First Avenue South, and anyone who might desire to locate here can write him. Brother J. E. Wildermuth, our district missionary, has made his home in Fargo for thirteen years and is home occasionally to help us out. Much credit is due Brother and Sister Wildermuth for their efforts in building up this branch. Though meeting with many discouragements they have patiently toiled until they have built up this branch to its present condition.

We have the usual auxiliaries, Sunday school, Religio, normal work, and Woman's Auxiliary, which we are trying to advance as fast as possible.

As I am interested in the musical welfare of the church, which I believe is so important, I enjoy the columns of the Staff as published in the HERALD, but would like to see more articles on the band and orchestra work of the church, as well as the choir movement. There have been some good things presented to us by Brother Arthur Mills, which have been interesting and beneficial to all interested in the musical work, and I believe similar articles on the band and orchestra work would be helpful to those striving to learn the different instruments. By this I mean articles similar to those appearing in the musical journals; articles relating to the various instruments, what instruments to take up for study, how to practice, the organization of bands and orchestras, etc. I might mention that those who desire to take up the band and orchestra work in their branches, as organizing an orchestra or taking up individual study, unless they are acquainted with this line of work should consult those experienced, either the district musical director or those at the head of the national movements.

I hope the time will come when there will be more to promote the musical work in the districts, and those appointed will be able to work under better conditions as the church grows. This work could be carried on similarly to the missionary work, and the districts bear the expense of the district choristers, then those chosen who would be willing to consecrate their talents and entire time to this work. I do not believe the traveling missionaries should be burdened with any musical work, and, as it is now, those who are appointed to do the work of district chorister cannot travel on their own expense through the districts as the work demands, owing to the expense and being tied down with other work.

I am interested in the efforts which our President, Brother F. M. Smith, is making to promote the foreign mission work, as was outlined in the last HERALD. This is a great undertaking, but will be accomplished if we as a people uphold him as we should.

My desire is to put my time and talents into the Lord's work, cast aside the things of the world, and so live that I might be numbered among the faithful.

Yours in gospel bonds,

FRED E. MOLLISON.

Editors Herald: I am very sorry indeed that our friend, William Lewis, has passed away, as I remember him well as one of the most spiritual men of the church. I wish to thank Brother E. B. Morgan, for the Spirit was manifested through him in such a way that it convinced me before I came into the church that he was a true servant of God, and for that very reason I was baptized by him into the church many years ago. I wish also that I could have the privilege of seeing Gomer T. Griffiths again as I know he was a true lover of Wales. I am sending my respects to him and his family.

I am sorry to say that the work of the Master seems to be a dead letter here, as there is so much to be done and so little material to do it with.

I am delighted to read the HERALD every week and have taken particular notice of this last conference. We are too poor a branch to provide a place of meeting here, and would very much like to have some assistance upon the matter. I understand that the strong are called upon to assist the weak. It has puzzled me a lot of late as to how we are going to get out of the hole that we are in. I know there are many who would like to come to our place of assembly.

It seems to me sometimes that the church is an American organization and is not adaptable to any other country but the United States, as it does not seem to flourish as well in this country as out there.

I have read the policy of the Bishopric and notice the church is not in debt. I have read the fourth proposition and also the recommendation following, wondering in which way it is going to help us over here in our present condition. (For reference, see SAINTS' HERALD, April 23, 1919.)

We have had good times in the past and I long for the same to come again. There have been plenty baptized into the church here, but everything seems to be at a standstill through lack of organization.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

H. C. SNOOK.

DEWAR, OKLAHOMA, May 22, 1919.

Editors Herald: I very seldom trouble the columns of any of our church organs, or boast of what I do, or don't do, as I have always disliked the idea of a person continually blowing his own horn. If my labors are not of enough importance to be mentioned by others, I draw the conclusion that they are of but very little value, and unworthy of mention. Again, small boats stay near shore and let the larger ones venture more.

There is quite a difference between pint, quart, half gallon, and gallon measures, and their contents—they may all be full to the brim. Mr. Pint may step up to Mr. Gallon and say: "I am just as full as you are." And Mr. Gallon may in turn make the same remark. Both have told the truth, but Mr. Pint cannot help the fact that he cannot hold as much as Mr. Gallon. He was made that way, and should not find fault with the Maker.

So I feel content, and thank God that I am full, though but a very small vessel; now and then I notice that some of the gallon measures get so full that they burst and besmear themselves and vessels that surround them. But God's mills keep on grinding as if nothing had happened, and so it will continue to the end.

There was a time in the history of this church that a very heavy pressure came from without, but Satan found that to be a failure, hence he changed his tactics to that of an inward pressure, by bringing about distrust, lack of charity, pride, patterning after the world, etc. Of these things we have been forewarned, hence forearmed, and if all the Saints would keep on hand a good supply of church books and papers, read up and become posted, there would be no danger whatever of being led off by every wind and doctrine and man-made institutions, provided their daily (testimony) walk and conversation gave witness of the Christ life, and the family altar not forgotten, for prayer is the key to heaven's door. But I have noticed in my travels carelessness among some of the Saints along that line, unless the missionary happens to drop in, and not even then at times; some few have neither church books nor church papers, while some have both, and are live wires generally, full of faith and zeal. But where one sees the tobacco pouch, pipe, or snuff box, where the life-giving church literature ought to be, spirituality is at a very low ebb.

Our church books and papers are of the very highest type in the world, and within the reach of all, but in a few cases they have been put to improper use, from my point even window stops, hence complaints about poor binding of view. I have seen books used for arm rests, fans, and I have found our church papers in toilet rooms, or out-houses, and used for wall paper, when to my mind they ought to be given away to ones who might care to read them. They are great missionaries, and valuable as such. Why not make the very best use of them, or put them on file for future use in the family in years to come?

I am short of the 1872 volume of the HERALD, and hope that some one will be able to supply me with that volume. Will be willing to pay a reasonable price for same if need be. I have the volumes from 1865 up to date with the exception of that one. I have every volume of the Autumn Leaves, Ensign, and other church publications, but short of the following numbers of Unity: Volume 1; No. 10 of volume 2; Nos. 2 and 3 of volume 3; Nos 7, 8, 10, and 11 of volume 4. Also Ensign No. 1, January 4, 1917. Who will supply my needs?

Of course, I am on the western slope of life, and they may not prove to be of very great value to me, although I hope to live many years yet; however, the books and papers may come in good play to my posterity. I only wish I was financially able to have them bound, making them more valuable. All our church publications are owned by the church, hence mutually interested, knowing that when we pay out a dollar, more or less, for our publications, we are helping the church and her needs, as well as ourselves.

But now a few words in regard to my field of labor. The Eastern Oklahoma District takes in a part of three States: Oklahoma, Texas, and Arkansas; fortunately or unfortunately for the Saints in that district, I am to be their servant another conference year, and having labored among them the past five years, I have learned to love them, and have no hesitancy in saying that no district has a nobler body of Saints, taking them as a whole. Space forbids my giving names and the nature of their loving-kindness toward me in supplying my just needs. May the good Lord reward them richly, and, God being my helper, I hope to so live, labor, and conduct myself that their trust in me shall not be shaken or betrayed, and at the same time honor my office and calling in the sight of God and his church, the kingdom of God, that I may be worthy of divine aid and help spiritually, and above all, wisdom to lead, but not to drive.

In gospel bonds,

J. C. CRESTENSEN.

SMOKING IN THE COLLEGES

it is doubtful if the percentage of those who discontinue the habit is as high as that of legitimate divorcees.

The effects of tobacco are not confined to the user, but the babe in arms whose father smokes in its face is taking early lessons in the tobacco habit. It is little wonder that many a woman frankly admits that she enjoys the smell of a good cigar. She is brought up to it, and why should she not enjoy it? Yet this is not a natural appetite, for no baby ever failed to winch when the first tobacco smoke drifted into its face, and nearly everybody who smokes must learn the habit with more or less discomfiture.

Smoking is a relatively costly habit. To the wealthy or well-to-do this may be of little consequence, yet most men have more or less difficulty in "making both ends meet"; and in general the prospective smoker should realize that the habit will represent the price of a good library, and he will do well if it does not duplicate the cost of his clothing. The total outlay is enormous, and it comes largely from those who can ill afford it.

Few smokers of middle age will deliberately advise a young man to begin the habit. I have never known one to do so. "Stay out when you can," is the common advice of those who have tried it, however enthusiastic they may be about the use of tobacco themselves.

Smokers may as well understand that tobacco is exceedingly offensive to most people who are not addicted to the habit. They often say in remonstrance, "I suppose that people generally, excepting some women, of course, like the odor of a good cigar." Certainly not, for if such were the case they would smoke for themselves. Many women do really like it, having been brought up to it from babies in their father's arms, and such are deterred from smoking (when they are deterred) only by custom, while others are made positively ill by it. So far as men are concerned, however, it is a perfectly safe assumption that nonsmokers do not like tobacco smoke. Indeed, it is well within the facts to say that it is as disagreeable to them as it can possibly be enjoyable to the smoker. Hence the comparative absence of nonsmokers from men's clubs; hence some of the financial difficulties in keeping the clubs alive.

To obtain the smoker's point of view, I wrote to a half dozen intimate smoker friends, asking two questions:

1. Do smokers understand that in general tobacco smoke is probably as offensive to the people who do not smoke as it is satisfying to the smoker?

2. How can we justify the fact that smokers have taken possession of practically all public places, such as hotel lobbies and dining rooms, smoking freely even in elevators, ladies' parlors, and observation cars?

Quite to my surprise no light was thrown upon either proposition by any of the answers made, except to cite the fact that others than smokers also intrude upon their neighbor's rights—as witness noisy boys and girls, and mothers with crying babies.

The writer cannot of course defend the noisy youngster, the rude boy, or the giggling girl in public places; but the mother has a right to her baby even when she travels, and babies too small to be spanked will sometimes cry. But, if the smoker who makes a nuisance of himself should encounter frowns as promptly and as vigorously as do mothers of crying babies, they would soon be as scarce as the offending infant.

One friend in reply frankly confessed that there is no satisfactory answer to either question. Another said it was all a piece of male intolerance. Still another admitted that his observations led to the conclusion that the smoking habit tends powerfully to the selfish overriding of the rights of others.

One correspondent said that smokers are deceived because nonsmokers so often profess to like the odor of a good cigar, and that hotels permit smoking in lobbies and dining rooms because the vast majority of patrons are smokers. Neither of these answers will suffice, because the nonsmokers who like the odor are mostly women, and because the habit of asking whether smoking is offensive has well-nigh disappeared. When observed at all it is as a kind of aside while preparations are in progress, and of course if one's neighbor already has his cigar in his hand with match suspended, most men will yield with the best grace possible to what seems to be a superior demand.

Even in hotel dining rooms it is a very small minority that indulges the habit. This minority, however, becomes little short of a public nuisance to many guests and makes the use of the dining room impossible for some who have a perfect right to its service. The writer's mother, for example, positively cannot eat with the odor of tobacco smoke; yet who would deny her the right to the dining room? So thoroughly have the smokers taken possession of things in the last decade that I know of no first-class hotel in the United States where I could entertain my mother at meals except in her private room. Is this gallant? Is it right? Can it last?

The smokers of the stories are all young, dashing, and natty fellows. Those of the clubs are either middle aged, comfortable, and complacent, or young devotees struggling by every possible device to imitate, often absurdly, their conception of the ideal man of the world. All this is attractive, not to say seductive, to the young man making his first halting entry into the society of men and desiring above all things to seem very much at ease, if not indeed blasé.

A half century ago women smoked as freely as men, and I am bound to say that they threaten now to resume the habit. Chewing was then fully as respectable as smoking, and generally preferred by young men as more easily concealed from the family. Now, few that pretend to respectability would care to have it known that they chew tobacco even in private, the practice having been fully recognized as intolerably filthy. Compared as to offensiveness honors are easy between the two. There is of course much more that is natty and social about the smoking habit and this is doubtless the chief reason for its being more prevalent.

If smoking is good for men, and altogether desirable for them, then it is equally good and desirable for women. There is, and can be, no good argument against it; yet I never heard a man admit that he desired a smoking woman for a wife. Why not? Is smoking a privilege to be denied to women? Not so, in these piping days of liberty. Men cannot go on indulging in any form of male intolerance without having it speedily imitated, first by their sons and afterward by their daughters.

Do we want the smoking habit fastened upon our women? If so we are in a fair way to have it. If not, we shall need to do some steady thinking, and that speedily. Are the women so much more refined than we, and will their refinement protect them against a habit that we do not approve—for them? At this point even the smoker is in danger of being driven into an admission that the habit is unworthy of thoughtful men.

Here then are some of the considerations that the young men must weigh in the balance over against the seductions of a social habit: Its characteristic drug effect; its probable permanence as a personal habit; its cost as compared with the necessities of life; the fact that in general smokers do not advise it; the fact that it is a habit the effects of which reach all who are in the vicinity; its real offensiveness to many, likely a full three fourths of all the people; its effect upon little children; its undoubted influence upon the finer sensibilities as to courtesy; the condition in which it leaves one in old age, with impaired physical powers and dependence upon others; its inevitable extension to women if the habit continues and is brought into general practice through enforced tolerance; the spectacle of a woman addicted to the use of tobacco as a wife and mother of little ones—all these will be considered by the thoughtful man who has a fair opportunity to think it out before beginning to smoke.

If, after due consideration of all the facts, the man decides to smoke, he must be conceded the right to do so; but this right implies corresponding duties, and his plain obligation is so to practice his habit as not to offend others in any way. If he is certain that he can and will do this, not only now but during all his life, let him smoke; and may God bless him.

INCREASE OF THE TOBACCO HABIT

[The following is an extract from a letter by Frederick Lynch, editor of our esteemed contemporary, The Christian Work. The Reverend Lynch travels considerably and contributes "a weekly letter" recording the significant events and movements of the day, from the Christian point of view. This is a second letter on "English and American traits."—EDITORS.]

The war has greatly increased the habit of smoking among women. In any London restaurant fully half the women are smoking cigarettes. But this same habit is growing almost as rapidly in New York. The most immediate cause of it has been the assumption of men's work and men's apparel during the war. Thousands of girls went into munition factories and other work. They bobbed their hair—every third girl on the streets of London has her hair Dutch cut. As they did men's work, so they acquired men's habits. Thousands of girls have on khaki and caps—they smoke cigarettes as freely as do the soldiers. The strain of war, of course, was a prime cause. Smoking, they said, was a great sedative and helped to pass anxious and empty hours. It has become a universal habit in the trenches and it has become a very common habit with the girls of England as well as with the young men. But as I said, the habit is growing very rapidly in America and in the great cities it is no uncommon thing to see women smoking cigarettes in all parts of the restaurant. The Englishman, after he has outgrown the cigarette stage, takes almost without exception to the pipe. The American and Frenchman like the finer odor of a Havana cigar. The sight of a pipe, to say nothing of the smell, makes a Frenchman sick. One rarely ever sees a French gentleman smoking a pipe. If he cannot afford cigars he will stick to his cigarettes. The American is more like the Frenchman in this regard. But one great calamity of the war is seen in the tremendous increase of the smoking habit everywhere. One cannot escape it. All the restaurants are thick with it. All the trains reek with smoke. Officers and soldiers paid no attention to the signs forbidding smoking, so no one does now. The taxi drivers smoke as they drive you about. Smoking is permitted in all the theaters—with one or two exceptions. The American cities are not far behind. Where will it all end?

INDEPENDENCE STAKE.—At Stone Church, May 5, 1919. Stake presidency presided, assisted by the members of the First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve present. Reports from stake president and stake bishop read. Action of the General Conference providing for the consolidation of all branches in the Independence Stake was concurred in. Twenty-three members were received on letters of removal. The following were approved for ordination: Roy Roberts, priest, and Fred Parman, deacon. Oakley R. Miller was expelled from the church, action based on findings of an elders' court. The following stake officers were sustained: Stake presidency; J. A. Becker, stake bishop; stake high council; J. A. Koehler, pastor Second Church; A. H. Parsons, pastor Walnut Park Church; W. H. Deam, pastor Enoch Hill Church; J. M. Cockerton, pastor Liberty Street Church; C. I. Carpenter, stake recorder. P. G. Fairbanks was elected stake secretary. The following deacons, on recommendation of the stake bishop, were approved as caretakers of the church buildings: Hilton Hartley, First Church; John Soderstadt, Second Church; Fred Parman, Walnut Park Church; H. Hattey, Enoch Hill Church; Louis Resch, Liberty Street Church. The following recommendation in the stake president's report was adopted: That in the choice of local choristers for the several churches, such be referred to the pastor and the choir of each congregation in consultation with the stake chorister, except in the case of the Stone Church. The chorister of the Stone Church will take the oversight of the song service throughout the stake. Paul N. Craig was elected stake chorister. A vote of thanks was extended to Mrs. G. H. Hulmes for her splendid and untiring work as chorister, but who declined renomination. Ordinations were ordered provided for Brethren John M. Lloyd and Royal Brocaw to office of counselors to W. H. Callin, president of the First Quorum of Teachers of the Independence Stake. Privilege was given the stake authorities to move the library books from the present library building into the new building when ready. Walter W. Smith, stake president; P. G. Fairbanks, stake secretary.

Our Departed Ones

GIBSON.—Willard Jarrold Gibson, son of J. H. and Lila Gibson, was born at Independence, Missouri, April 6, 1915. Died at the Independence Sanitarium, May 22, 1919, of bronchial pneumonia. He was a very sweet child and loved by all who knew him. The loss of this fine little boy was a great bereavement to this family and its connections. Services from the Stone Church, in charge of I. N. White, sermon by Joseph Arber. Burial in Mound Grove Cemetery.

WELD.—Mary Weld, at Lamoni, Iowa, May 23, 1919, aged 82 years, 4 months, and 3 days. Maiden name was Olsen. Married George Weld at Ottawa, Illinois, in 1858. Baptized in 1861 and was faithful. Husband died in 1917. Two sons and 2 daughters survive their parents. Francis M. and Oscar L., Mrs. Phoebe Allen, and Mrs. Carrie J. Danielson. Funeral service May 26, Columbus Scott in charge; sermon by H. A. Stebbins.

FARRELL.—Robert Charles Farrell, born in Davis County, Indiana, January 17, 1842, died at his home in Allendale, Missouri, May 24, 1919. Married Sarah E. Young, May 18, 1870. Six children were born to them, 2 sons and 4 daughters. Was baptized December 23, 1889, at Allendale, Missouri, by H. A. Stebbins. Enlisted and served in United States Army in Civil War. Funeral sermon by D. T. Williams.

LOVELL.—Jane Olive Lovell, born in 1837 at Watertown, New York, died in Wilmington, Illinois, May 22, 1919. Married Oliver Lovell in 1856. To them were born eight children, 6 sons and 2 daughters. Baptized by J. E. Wildermuth, May 21, 1905. Lived a good Christian life. Leaves 4 sons, one daughter, 3 sisters, 14 grandchildren, and 12 great-grandchildren, and many other relatives and friends. Funeral sermon by W. A. McDowell.

SIDDALL.—John Siddall was born in England, December 28, 1864; baptized in Plainville, Massachusetts, September 28, 1898, by Charles Coombs. Ordained teacher March 10, 1904, by Richard Bullard and George Smith. Died May 18, 1919, his wife preceding him thirteen years ago. Leaves five children: Mrs. Ernest Chesworth, of West Warren, Massachusetts; John, jr., in the U. S. Army; Lillian, Florence, and Alma, of Attleboro; also one brother and one sister in this country and one brother and five sisters in England. Funeral service in the Attleboro church, E. B. Hull officiating, Charles Coombs assisting. Interment in Attleboro Cemetery.

HOPKINS.—William D. Hopkins was born May 17, 1830, in Wales. Married Grace Jones in 1847. To this union 9 children were born, 4 boys and 5 girls; 7 children survive, with 35 grandchildren and 54 great-grandchildren. Died at Goff, Kansas, May 18, 1919. He was baptized over 70 years ago in Wales and became associated with the Reorganization soon after its organization, and became an elder therein. Was president of the Netawaka Branch for many years. Funeral services in the Methodist Episcopal church at Netawaka, Kansas, with sermon by V. M. Goodrich.

FROM HERE AND THERE

Clippings received from Toronto inform us that the trial, Bishop B. R. McGuire versus R. C. Evans, for an accounting of funds received, began on Monday morning, May 26, at Toronto, Ontario. We are not advised of the outcome at this writing.

FIRST PRESIDENCY

We note on all communications received from members of the First Presidency of late, the notation, "Address all communications to the First Presidency." This will facilitate the handling of necessary matters by either member who happens to be in the office. It recognizes the fact that official matters are passed upon and are the business of the First Presidency. We do not assume that it will prevent personal communications when such are necessary, but will affect the greater part of correspondence, and all official correspondence.

Brother Peter Andersen, whose testimony appears in the HERALD of May 14, desires that we state that he is living in Holden, Missouri, and has been for the past sixteen years.

HOME DEPARTMENT LEAFLET

A new leaflet of instruction has been prepared by the joint home department of the Sunday school and Religion, and should be in the hands of every worker in these organizations. It is a convenient size, explicit enough to give essential details, yet brief enough to be easily readable. Each step in organization and carrying on the important work of this department is plainly told, and the supplies listed with prices. District officers and others especially interested should order liberally of this leaflet. It is No. J39, each 2 cents, package of 10 for 15 cents.

Harry B. Thompson and wife, of Southern Indiana District, ask the prayers of all the Saints for their little Vivian Ruth, who has been unable to walk for months past, being unable to move her legs.

At the sacrament service at Lamoni, Iowa, held June 1, Elder A. J. Yarrington, counselor to Bishop A. Carmichael, was ordained to the office of high priest. The illness of Brother Carmichael's wife has kept him from actively engaging in his work as bishop of the Lamoni Stake for some time, and since the other counselor is R. J. Lambert, of the Ensign staff at Independence, it has laid heavy burdens on the shoulders of Brother Yarrington. Though at the time the Standing High Council indorsed the ordination these things were not expected, the additional rights accruing from this further ordination should be helpful in the situation.

Heavy rains fell at Lamoni on Saturday and Sunday, May 31 and June 1. The local weather bureau reports 5.17 inches of precipitation from Saturday afternoon to Monday morning. A number of culverts and bridges are out, as well as damage by washing fields. As we write this on Monday morning it is still raining some though a cool wave from the north indicates a cessation.

WISE SERVANTS, HARMLESS AS DOVES

[From a sermon by President Elbert A. Smith, at the Kansas City Stake conference, Central Church, May 18, 1919.]

Text: Be ye therefore wise servants, and harmless as doves.—Matthew 10: 4, Inspired Translation.

Our text suggests two lines of thought. On the one hand, under the admonition to be wise servants, it suggests the many lines of activity open to us in doing good, under the general commandment, "Thou shalt."

On the other hand there are certain things that we are not to do, coming in the category, "Thou shalt not." While doing all the good we can, we are ever to refrain from doing harm to any human being.

Jesus makes the latter injunction rather emphatic and striking by his selection of the dove as a symbol. As far back as literature goes, the dove was regarded as a type of purity, innocency, and harmlessness. We have selected the dove as the emblem of peace. The Master's type of mercy, by her very helplessness she claims mercy from our hearts. The Master, himself, alas, coming into the world, found no mercy in human hearts. But upon those who come out of the world and are born again he lays the injunction that they shall be as harmless as the doves.

DEFINITIVE LIVING

Let us examine first the commandment that we shall be wise servants. Those who make no profession of religion may go blundering and blathering through life. Why not? They have no ideals to come short of. They have made no covenant to violate. They aim at nothing—and hit the mark.

But to live a true Christian life, or even an "honorable" life from a purely worldly standpoint, requires thought and study—the Christian contends that it requires prayer.

Any constructive enterprise takes thought. This is illustrated in the most homely and practical matters. As a farm boy I observed that it required thought and skill to stack the sheaves that were brought in from the harvest field. To lay the bundles in regular circular courses, each in its place, and all at a proper angle to shed the rain, to shape the stack properly, and finally bring it symmetrically to a peak, with a properly adjusted capsheaf, and at last to get to the ground without breaking one's neck, was a matter requiring care. The first stack your speaker attempted to build fell down before it was completed—not so the second.

To bring the sheaves from the field and throw them in a shapeless mass without thought would only mean that with the first storm the harvest would be ruined. That is the way some men build their lives. They throw the days, the months, the years together, and call it life, and at the end have only ruin, and must lament, "The summer is over and the harvest is ended and my soul is not saved."

Even to build one of the old log cabins in the forest required thought. The logs were to be hewn and the corners of the building matched and the roof erected after a certain pattern. While we all realize that to build one of the great cathedrals to which the Middle Ages gave their attention, or one of the great skyscrapers of our age, that rise from Manhattan and assault the very heavens, coming nearer thereto we imagine than did the Tower of Babel, required profound study. The architect must make the design with care, and every builder who puts in a stick or a stone or a steel truss must do so with care or all may come tumbling down about the ears of the builders.

NO LISTLESS IMITATION OF JESUS

The character of Jesus Christ has impressed the world for all time. Ingersoll and Napoleon joined with Saint Paul in eulogizing him. Back to him we date our every act. The date line on every daily paper coming from our numberless and noisy presses announces that so many centuries, so many years, so many months, so many days ago a perfect man was born into the world.

His character admits of no careless, thoughtless, listless imitation. The model is set for all time.

It challenges all that is in every man. Well may we heed the advice, "Be ye therefore wise servants." We have need of all that study, prayer, revelation, and experience can give us.

BLUNDERING REFORMERS

Then comes the commandment that we shall be harmless. The world is full of blundering reformers who do evil where they intend to do good. Lenine and Trotsky furnish examples on a national scale. Many examples in a humbler way in private life come to our notice.

We observe something in the life or deportment of an associate that requires correction. But we go at the matter in such a rough, unfeeling, drastic manner that more harm than good results. Perhaps it was after such an experience that Saint Paul hung his head and said, sadly, "When I would do good, evil is present with me."

It is said of Jesus, that he went about everywhere doing good. He never did harm. It is not on record that Jesus ever harmed any man. True, he upbraided the hypocrites, and we would make that our excuse for every bitter assault that we deliver. But even then he did not harm them—and observe that his denunciations were limited entirely to the class of hypocrites in which was included the scribes and Pharisees.

EVERY HYPOCRITE A POTENTIAL JUDAS

Jesus hated the hypocrite, because every hypocrite is a potential Judas Iscariot, waiting only his own time to betray not only Jesus but his fellow servants as well—we have had enough examples to prove that point.

But everyone outside that class was a recipient of the beneficence of Jesus. Because Jesus assumed that in most cases, outside the class of hypocrites, evil was the result of error. Even concerning those who hanged him on the cross, he said, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."

Jesus was always willing to concede that the intent might not be so bad as the act would indicate. But it seems too often to be our nature to slam back at every offender and assume at once that his act was the fruit of deliberate, willful, malicious desire to offend and harm. We wish to "get even."

MORE BLESSED TO RECEIVE THAN TO GIVE—OFFENSES

I heard one woman confess that for a number of years she thought that her husband was "devoid of backbone." She never forgot or forgave an injury. But he would pass one by with a smile and go quietly on. Presently when the offender was sick or in trouble, he would go to the rescue. But she came at last to declare, "It is not that he has no moral courage. He is just bigger than I; and I didn't understand him. He is big enough to ignore little things."

When he considered his course run and his work finished, the Apostle Paul felicitated himself that he had "a conscience void of offense toward God, and toward all men." Happy will we be if we can say as much. When it is all over and the record closed we will not be worried about the offenses that we have received. We will worry then about the offenses that we have given.

The offenses that we receive are not worth a moment's worry. We need not lose a single night's sleep over them. It is the offenses that we give that should cause us concern.

IN WORD AND IN DEED

In what ways should we be careful lest we harm others? First of all probably in word and deed. And of the two we are likely to do more harm in word than in deed. Few of us actually go out and commit assault and battery on the person of another. We don't set fire to anyone's house, or put poison in his well, or anything of that kind.

There is more danger that we will injure others by thoughtless or malicious talk. James says that the man that can control his tongue is a perfect man and able to control his whole body. Certain it is that when the tongue is made to conform to the gospel law by its owner that man's whole life is likely to be found in harmony with the gospel law. Doctors judge a man's physical condition by his tongue; preachers may judge his spiritual condition in the same way, if they are discerning, the one by what he sees, the other by what he hears.

What is it within one that will not let him rest when he has heard a bad story about a brother? What is it that boils around within him demanding that he hasten away and tell it to others? What starts the tongue running in such cases? Well, James, who seems to be something of a diagnostician, says that the tongue is set on fire of hell. Perhaps so, in such instances.

CARRYING BONES OF CONTENTION

Then there is this practice that some are tempted to indulge, to run to and fro between individuals, telling each what the other has said about him. Again I propound the question, if the peacemakers are the children of God, whose children are the strife makers?

Brother Joseph used to tell a story to the effect that a sister came to him at one time saying, "Brother Jones says so and so about you." Brother Joseph retorted, "Well, Brother Jones is no better than he should be." He watched results, and sure enough in a few days Brother Jones came to him very much hurt, saying, "I am told that you say that I am no better than I should be." Brother Joseph looked at him keenly and answered, "Well, are you?" A light broke in on his visitor, and he admitted that probably the charge was true. "Now," replied Brother Joseph, "I did this merely to demonstrate to you that a dog that will fetch a bone will carry one. Be careful how you talk."

It may be necessary sometimes to report derogatory remarks to proper officials. I am talking only about this irresponsible, mischievous, if not vicious habit of running about with a bone of contention. Let us be Christian men and women in both word and deed. The scriptural injunction is, "Who is a wise man and endued with knowledge among you? let him show out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom."

OUT OF THE ABUNDANCE OF THE HEART

Referring again to our mentor, James, we read, "But if ye have bitter envying and strife in your hearts, glory not." Ah, there is the secret of the tongue's activity. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. The tongue gives us an index to the spiritual condition. If the scandal-monger were tongue-tied, he or she would learn to talk with the fingers. The heart will find expression.

Paul gives us splendid advice, "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, if there be any praise, think on these things."—Philippians 4:8.

If we know an honest man, let us emulate his example and establish his good name. Let us think honest and just thoughts. If we know a lovely and virtuous woman, let us admire her and guard her good name, rather than pick it to pieces on the street corner or over the back fence. If we hear a good report, let us spread it, if it be true. These are the things to think: honesty, justice, purity, virtue, praise. If we will do that we will have less trouble controlling our tongues.

In conclusion, then, while we should be all on fire with zeal and enthusiasm, our zeal should always be matched by wisdom—we should be wise servants. Then may we be able to do always good and never harm, that even as Christ said, we may be "wise servants, and as harmless as doves."

"The ethical and moral code of Jesus Christ is becoming the Magna Charta of nations," said Mr. Tom Williams at the Allen Theater last night. "It has taken the world two thousand years to recognize that the moral and ethical code of Jesus points the only way to freedom and happiness."—Toronto Daily Star, February 10, 1919.

DEATH OF ELIZABETH AGNES SMITH

Again are we made sad by the death, on June 6, of Elizabeth A. Smith, the wife of the late presiding patriarch of the church, Alexander Hale Smith. She had been ailing some through the winter, but seemed to be enjoying fairly good health, when she was suddenly taken ill on the night of June 5, and passed away the following morning.

She was born in Marysport, near Liverpool, England, June 16, 1842, as the daughter of Elizabeth and Elder John Kendall. Her widowed mother brought her as a babe to America, and she suffered in those early years the privations of a widow with small children, in a new country, even though among kindly friends and neighbors.

In 1861 she was married to Alexander Hale Smith, at Nauvoo, Illinois. To them were born nine children, two of whom preceded the parents to the other side, while in 1909 the family suffered the great loss of the husband and father, the patriarch. But prior to that event she had lived the life of sacrifice of a missionary's wife for many years. Those who are acquainted with the history of the church, and have read the items from the pen of Brother Alexander will remember how difficult he found it at times to leave home. They will appreciate something of what it meant to the little mother, left alone with her family, for in that age of slow transportation California seemed more remote than the remote parts of the earth to-day.

For several years they made their home in Nauvoo, but shortly after the founding of Lamoni, removed to this vicinity, living on a farm for a time, but later removing to the town of Lamoni, itself, where she continued her efforts as a wife and mother, to do her duty to her family and her church.

After the passing away of her husband, she retained the home place where the family had lived since 1891, and it is there that she passed away. She preferred the independence of her own home, even though each one of her children had established homes of their own. However, several of them lived near to her, especially her son, Frederick A. Smith, the present presiding patriarch of the church, and her daughter, Sister Vida E. Smith.

She united with the Reorganization in its early days, and was always a humble sincere follower of the Lord. She was of a bright and sunny disposition, and so endeared herself to many. She was a mother, not only to her own immediate family, but to others who needed her help. During the past few years, she made a home for her son, Arthur, and his motherless flock of five children. She had reared one grandson to manhood, and bore the undying love, not only of her children and grandchildren in America and Australia, but of many others who were privileged to know her.

She has finished her work, she has completed her course, and has entered into the rest promised of the Father.

OBEDIENCE TO GOD

[Sometime last winter on looking up some matters in the HERALD file, to answer a personal letter, we ran across the following extract from a letter by Frederick M. Smith, published in one of the Salt Lake City papers while he was in Utah.

The extract was reprinted in the SAINTS' HERALD, with an introduction by Elder Heman C. Smith. It appears that, a few years prior to 1906, President Frederick M. Smith had delivered a sermon, some parts of which were afterwards misconstrued in the West, and the attempt made to show that he believed in unquestioning obedience to the priesthood. As this is a perennial question, it seems to us it might be of interest to reread part of what he stated at that time. However, before doing so, we submitted the extract to him, and received it back shortly before the opening of conference; hence its publication has been delayed.—EDITORS.]

. . . We will briefly state . . . that as a believer in the principles of continued revelation, and a believer in Christ's divine mission as a part of God's great plan, we believe in the potency of obedience to God and his commands; but we have not believed, and do not now believe in rendering "unquestioning obedience" to what comes through human agencies. We claim the right to examine and weigh and consider, in the light of the law that God has revealed in the past, everything that purports to be from God, and when that which comes, even though it may have come through one claiming to hold and act by the authority of the priesthood, is in conflict with what has already been given as law, we claim the right to reject it as not being from God. Thus "unquestioning" obedience is not given. As an evidence that we hold to this belief in theory and practice, it is only necessary to state that I have never sworn away my right thus to question what shall come through any man purporting to act in the name of God, and as one of the leaders of the Reorganized Church I can say that that organization does not ask its members to enter into covenants which will take from them this right—the covenant "not to speak against the Lord's anointed."

Obedience to God always; but "unquestioning" obedience to men, even though they hold the priesthood, never. Obedience to God and his commands always; but obedience to commands or purported commands which come through human agencies (agencies in which human liability to err is always present) without first determining them to be in harmony with God's law, never.

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

CANADIAN HERALD

For several years it has been the desire of the Editorial Staff to issue a special Canadian Magazine HERALD. At last we are able to do so. At the suggestion of our Canadian friends, we are endeavoring to make it a Dominion Day Number, which is the big day for Canada. Dominion Day is July 1. It is our intention, if possible, to issue this special magazine number June 25.

As is usually the case with these special numbers, a few extra copies will be printed. But to insure securing extra copies where desired, it would be well to order in advance. By ordering in time (before June 22) as many numbers as is desired can be secured at the uniform price of five cents each.

COOPERATION

We need cooperation, and we need to stand in that cooperation shoulder to shoulder with men of business, with men of means, with poor men, with laboring men, every class of men, from one to the other, of every place, ought to stand together. There ought not to be any insinuation or any intimation or any faultfinding when we go out into our fields of work, after we have met and sustained each other as we have done in this connection, and sow distrust by quiet, sinister remarks concerning this man or that man. Why do we not exercise for each other the confidence that we demand to be placed in ourselves? How can I trust a man who shows a distrust to me? In my association with them I am absolutely compelled to labor in justice to myself and to them under the divine clemency of almighty God. How can I, with the gift of discernment in me, stand side by side with men of whom I know they would desert under peculiar circumstances? How could I do it? And yet, my dear brethren, I have stood face to face with difficulties which required me to know the men by whom I was surrounded and with whom I was associated, and I have been hurt to the quick, knowing that those who have been working with us and with whom I have been associated are frequently found covertly finding fault with us. I am sorry. Let us have done with it. Let us, if we cooperate at all, let us have that confidence, let us have confidence, LET US HAVE CONFIDENCE! That is one thing that we need.

And you may say, "Well, how can we have confidence? How can we?" I will tell you one way that we can have confidence; that is to fill the measure of our own labor just as fairly and as well as we can, and keep our thoughts busy upon it, and let the mistakes of the past that we so much deplore, and

NAUVOO OF 1840--LARGEST CITY IN STATE OF ILLINOIS

Editor of the Democrat, Fort Madison, Iowa,
Dear Sir: Some of your readers have lately asked me to furnish their favorite periodical with some of my stock of unwritten history of Nauvoo. I have been investigating Latter Day Saint history for over forty years, and have discovered some curious facts that will certainly interest the progressive readers of your excellent journal.

By way of introduction, I may say that I am a graduate of Carthage College, a postgraduate of the University of Illinois, have been county surveyor of Hancock County, president of the Hancock County Historical Society, etc.; have had my historical articles published in the Lutheran Woman's Work of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, The Journal of the Illinois State Historical Society, and other magazines; have lately been elected a member of the State Historical Society of Missouri, and for the past year have been in Kansas City most of the time investigating the history of Jackson County, Missouri. So you see that I have extraordinary facilities for getting at the truth regarding the Latter Day Saints.

One of the queerest things, to the minds of some people, about the early Latter Day Saints, or Church of Christ, was their apparent thirst for education. The Encyclopedia of the History of Missouri, by the Southern History Company, says, volume 4, page 484:

The county seat of Caldwell County (Missouri) was established at Far West, and a log schoolhouse was erected in which the courts were held. The town of Far West was laid out on a scale worthy of the magnificent proportions it was to bear in the not distant future. The squares were 396 feet to a side, and there were four principal avenues, 132 feet wide, and all the streets were 82½ feet wide. The temple site was in the great square in the center. The excavation for it, 120 feet by 80, was actually made in the fall of 1837. Joseph Smith built his house, a one-story two-room frame, a quarter of a mile from the temple site; and a number of schoolhouses were erected in the county, for the Mormons were ever careful and diligent in the education of their youth.

In 1844 Nauvoo was twice as large as Chicago, at that time had a great University, an excellent public school system, was the largest city in Illinois, and was the only city in the world that prohibited the liquor traffic. The last part of the above statement, no doubt, sounds odd to your readers, in view of the fact that the underworld of Carthage and Fort Madison of the present day make regular trips to Nauvoo saloons to get intoxicating liquors.

Section 24 of the famous Nauvoo Charter is as follows:

The city council may establish and organize an institution of learning within the limits of the city, for the teaching of arts, sciences, and learned professions, to be called the "University of the City of Nauvoo," which institution shall be under the control and management of a board of trustees, consisting of a chancellor, registrar, and 23 regents, which board shall thereafter be a body corporate and politic with perpetual succession by the name of the "Chancellor and Regents of the University of the City of Nauvoo," and shall have full power to pass, ordain, establish, and execute all such laws and ordinances as they may consider necessary for the welfare and prosperity of said university, its officers and students; provided, that said laws and ordinances shall not be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States or the State of Illinois, and provided, also, that the trustees shall have all the powers and privileges for the advancement of the cause of education which appertain to the trustees of any other college or university of the State.

The Nauvoo city paper of that day, The Times and Seasons, in the issue of January 15, 1841, says:

The University of the City of Nauvoo will enable us to teach our children wisdom—to instruct them in all knowledge, and learning, in the arts, sciences, and learned professions. We hope to make the institution one of the great lights of the world, and by and through it to diffuse that kind of knowledge which will be of practical utility and for the public good and also for private and individual happiness.

The president of the university was William Kelley, A. B., graduate of the University of Dublin.

Professor of English Composition and Languages, Orson Spencer, A. B., graduate of Union College, New York, and the New York Baptist Theological Seminary.

Professor of Mathematics, Orson Pratt, of Brooklyn Academy.

Professor of History, Sidney Rigdon.

Head of the School of Music, Gustavus Hills.

The Times and Seasons for December 11, 1841, says John C. Bennett was elected chancellor, and William Law, registrar, and also gives the names of regents. The university was given supervision of the ward schools, and three wardens were appointed in each of the four wards to assist the regents in looking after the schools.

The Latter Day Saints were not able to finish the university buildings, but they conducted the university classes in other buildings, had graduation exercises and conferred degrees until they were driven from their city by the mob.

That popular standard book of reference, The New York Tribune Almanac, has for years repeated the declaration, "Emigrants from New England settled Iowa." The people of Iowa can hardly conceive of the hatred of the Southern settlers of Illinois and Missouri for the New Englanders, with their New England ideas of education and hatred of slavery. The proslavery Missourians in the 30's expelled both Joseph Smith, and Elijah Lovejoy, the Presbyterian, for their antislavery sentiments. Both went to Illinois and the Illinois proslavery mobs killed Lovejoy at Alton, seven years before they killed Joseph Smith at Carthage. In the 50's the Missourians made war on the Kansas Free-Soil men, and on John Brown and his band of New Englanders; and in the 60's Missouri was itself overwhelmed by the New Englanders, and other Northern men in the Civil War, and it was only through the great influence of Douglas and Logan that southern Illinois was saved from rebellion. No antislavery man could safely speak his sentiments south of Princeton, Illinois, before the war, according to Colonel Clark E. Carr's Illini, and Lovejoy's brother was in some danger in his church in Princeton.

The Latter Day Saints in Nauvoo were upon the frontier and so were obliged to organize the Nauvoo Legion. The Missourians continually conspired to arrest Joseph Smith, whereupon they desired to return with him to Missouri, where it was feared they would murder him. The Missourians had robbed the Mormons of nearly half a million dollars worth of land and property, and they tried to justify this robbery by claiming that the Latter Day Saints were criminals. At every trial held the Latter Day Saints were acquitted. Many of the Nauvoo Legion were members of Wellington's army when he conquered Napoleon at Waterloo, and they were exceptionally well armed, officered, and disciplined, so that the Missourians feared to attack Nauvoo.

Steven A. Douglas and Abraham Lincoln both voted for the Nauvoo Charter. (See records of Illinois Legislature, December, 1840.) Douglas was born in the same State as Joseph Smith, and was in sympathy with him. Douglas had been brought up by a good New England mother, and was finally rejected by the South. Some have thought that because of his friendship for Joseph Smith, that Joseph Smith had abandoned his New England political principles. Not so. The Jacksonville, Illinois, Democrat of November 21, 1840, says:

All the combined factions and fragments and sects of religion, morals, and politics have been arrayed against us. The Abolitionists falsely pretended they were neutral between the great contending parties. Their strength was a reserved force, which fought us in ambush, under the standard of Federalism. The deluded and infatuated Mormons were mustered like so many regular soldiers, by that infamous impostor, Joseph Smith.

You may judge by that how the southern settler of Illinois loved Joseph Smith, and his band of New Englanders. Joseph Smith's grandfather, Asahel Smith, was a captain of Massachusetts militia at the battle of Lexington, and Captain Asahel Smith's father was Captain Samuel Smith, chairman of the Topsfield Tea Committee, and member of the first and second Colonial Congresses of Massachusetts. His mother's father, Solomon Mack, was in General Israel Putnam's company in the French and Indian War, in the Massachusetts Army in the Revolution. Isaac Hale, his father-in-law, was a Connecticut soldier in the Revolution. (Genealogy of Frederick M. Smith, p. 335, Year Book of the Sons of the American Revolution for 1914.)

The list of the chief Mormons of Nauvoo reads like a roll call of the New England Puritan families, from who, indeed, most of them were descended. In their hatred of them, their political enemies invented many slanders about them which are still often repeated. (See Governor Ford's History of Illinois, pp. 330, 331, and 407, where among other assertions you will find the following):

These also were the active men in blowing up the fury of the people, in hopes that a popular movement might be set on foot which would result in the expulsion or extermination of the Mormon voters. . . . Exaggerated reports had been extensively circulated. . . . And at a public meeting at Warsaw, resolutions were passed to expel or exterminate the Mormon population. This was, however, a movement that was not unanimously concurred in. The country contained a goodly number of inhabitants in favor of peace, or who desired, at least, to be neutral in such a contest. These were stigmatized by the name "Jack Mormons," and there were not a few of the furious excitors of the people who openly expressed their intentions to involve them in the common expulsion or extermination. A system of excitement and agitation was artfully planned and executed with tact. It consisted in spreading reports and rumors of the most fearful character. As examples: On the morning before my arrival in Carthage I was awakened at an early hour by the frightful report, which was asserted with confidence and apparent consternation, that the Mormons had already commenced the work of destruction and murder, and that every man capable of bearing arms was instantly wanted at Carthage for the protection of the country. We lost no time in starting; but when we arrive at Carthage we could hear no more concerning this story. Again: During the few days that the militia were encamped at Carthage, frequent applications were made for me to send a force here and a force there, and a force all about the country to prevent murders, robberies, and larcenies, which, it was said, were threatened by the Mormons. No such forces were sent, nor were any such offenses committed except the stealing of some provisions, and there was never the least proof that this was done by a Mormon. Again: On my last visit to Hancock County I was informed that the larcenies of the Mormons had become unusually numerous and insufferable. They indeed admitted that but little had been done in this way in their immediate vicinity; but they insisted that sixteen horses had been stolen in one night near Lima, in Adams County. At the close of the expedition I called at this same town of Lima, and, upon inquiry, was told that no horses had been stolen in that neighborhood, but that sixteen horses had been stolen in one night in Hancock County. This last informant, being told of the Hancock story, again changed the venue to another distant settlement in the northern edge of Adams.

And on page 406 of Governor Ford's History of Illinois:

And not long after this discovery in the fall of 1845, the anti-Mormons of Lima and Green Plains held a meeting to devise means for the expulsion of the Mormons from their neighborhood. They appointed some persons of their own number to fire a few shots at the house where they were assembled; but to do it in such a way as to hurt no one who attended the meeting. The meeting was held, the house was fired at, but in such a way as to hurt no one; and the anti-Mormons, suddenly breaking up their meeting, rode all over the country, spreading the dire alarm that the Mormons had commenced the work of massacre and death. This startling intelligence soon assembled a mob. But before I relate what was done I must give some account of the anti-Mormons. I had good opportunity to know the early settlers of Hancock County. I had attended circuit courts there as State's attorney, from 1830, when the county was first organized, up to 1834, and to my certain knowledge the early settlers, with some honorable exceptions, were hard cases. In the year 1834 one Doctor Galland was a candidate for the legislature, in a district composed of Hancock, Adams, and Pike Counties. He resided in the county of Hancock, and as he had in the early part of his life been a notorious horse thief and counterfeiter, belonging to the Massac gang, and was no pretender to integrity, it was useless to deny the charge. In all his speeches he freely admitted the fact, but came near receiving a majority of votes in his own county of Hancock. I mention this to show the character of the people for integrity.

As to polygamy, there never was a particle of real evidence of the guilt of Joseph Smith. It was promulgated and practiced by Brigham Young and his deluded followers in Utah several years after Joseph Smith's death. Joseph Smith always spoke against polygamy, and all the evidence of real history shows that he had only one wife and no children but hers. Many prominent and reliable men in Illinois could be cited as witnesses in proof of the above statement, but I do not wish to embarrass them by naming them in this article.

As proof of the difference in sentiment in northern and in southern Illinois at the time of the Mormon settlement at Nauvoo I will give one more instance:

The Alton Telegraph, of Alton, Illinois, where the Abolitionist Lovejoy was murdered in 1837, in one of its issues in the fore part of June, 1842, says: "It struck us with a good deal of astonishment that Joe Smith and General Bennett should thus publicly avow their abolition principles."

The present village of Webster, in the east part of Hancock County, was called by the Latter Day Saints, Ramus, and afterward Macedonia. At one time it was larger than Carthage, and had about 800 population to 300 or so in Carthage.

Joseph Smith was six feet tall, blue-eyed, fair, and a well-proportioned athlete. He played ball in Nauvoo, and was a noted wrestler. On Monday, the 13th of March, 1843, he met William Hall, the Ramus champion, in a wrestling match, and threw him.

In the Times and Seasons for October 15, 1841, we find that "Ramus is a Latin word meaning branch."

This place was laid out in September, 1840.

The local situation of Ramus (Webster), its good health, fine water, convenience to mills, handsome timber, extensive pasturage ranges, and the advantages and inducements of agriculture, are a sufficient recommendation to those wishing to locate themselves in this part of the county. Those emigrating from the East will find the most eligible and commodious roads from Springfield (capital of the State) to be through Beardstown, Rushville, Macomb, and Ramus, to the city of Nauvoo.—Times and Seasons, October 15, 1840, p. 573.

The Saint Louis Atlas, in September, 1841, published the following:

An intelligent friend has just returned from a visit to Nauvoo and the Mormons. He has a whole skin—showing neither scratch nor bite. . . . He believes, just as we do, that the Mormons have been grossly misunderstood and shamefully libeled. . . . The people of Nauvoo are very enterprising, industrious, and thrifty. They are quite as honest as the rest of us, . . . some peculiarities they have, no doubt. Their faith is a peculiar one, . . . but it is a faith that they say encourages no vice, nor immorality, nor departure from established laws or usages; neither polygamy, nor promiscuous intercourse, nor community of property. One peculiarity of life is observable among them, and whether traceable to their religion or some other cause will not, we suppose, be quarreled with very generally. Ardent spirits as a drink is forbidden among them, and its sale, except in medicine, forbidden by law. Any member of the church who vends spirituous liquor is first admonished, then expelled from the church. Tobacco is a weed which they seem almost universally to despise. We do not know that the Mormons ought to be extirpated for refusing to use tobacco and whisky, but we hope the question will not be decided hastily against them, nor until the judges have slept off the fumes of their own liquor and cigars.

THE STATURE OF CHRIST'S FULLNESS

---

We have all noticed the change that comes over the earth when the spring sun and rains have been absorbed by the ground. Objects that had seemed dead or of no interest begin to unfold in marvelous beauty and symmetry of form. Renascent life is a wonderful thing, that mortals may not fully understand; but even more mysterious, perhaps, is the growth that this rejuvenating power produces. The insignificant seed expands before our amazed vision and glorifies itself with a more exquisite design than we could have imagined. Delicate in texture, every part helping to complete the perfection of the whole, each lovely flower compels our deepest admiration while charming our senses with the fragrant perfume that in some indescribable manner emanates from it without diminishing its power. Does this mean that the works of nature are intended solely to beguile the idle moments of mortal man? I cannot think so. All experience teaches us that perfect law, and not chance, guides the manifestations of the material world; but to the finite mind the world is pregnant with mystery. The melancholy lines of Thomas Gray remind us that,

Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

But though the divine plan is beyond our full comprehension, it is bringing about purposes that will be revealed to us when we reach the higher life, for there God can trust us with the secrets of his omniscience and immortality. He has informed us that all things were created spiritually before they grew in the earth, and we may thus understand that the objects of nature are inseparably connected with the unseen past as well as with the unmeasured future. This, being true of all other life, must be preeminently so of man who was made in the very image of his Maker.

We have learned how necessary it is that the laws of nature shall be obeyed, in order that our seed may produce that mature and perfect growth which will delight and satisfy our expectancy. The farmer, knowing this, endeavors to provide measures that will insure a proper development of whatever he sows. Otherwise he will be sadly disappointed when the harvest is at hand, for his careful attention or his disregard of the conditions of growth will determine the character of his reward. Surely no one can afford to carelessly treat so important a matter as the growth of his own soul. It is a tremendous thought that, when we look into each other's faces and feel the power of the human emotions that draw us together, we are beholding the image of the Creator. But we note with sadness that too often that image has become distorted; for adverse forces have been permitted to enter the life and oppose the operation of the divine will. It is as necessary for the soul to grow in harmony with the laws of God as it is that the body should grow in harmony with the laws of nature, which are, after all is said, as truly God's laws as though they were written in characters of ink instead of in living manifestations. All things teach us that we should be true to the heavenly precepts that are given to guide our spiritual development so that we may attain to the stature designed for us by the Master Mind.

TWO KINDS OF STATURE

Perhaps when the stature of man is mentioned one most naturally thinks of height in inches and size in bulk; but in reality we cannot measure anyone's stature by such simple methods. Bulk is of inferior significance when the question of value is at stake. The qualities are of more importance than the quantities with respect to practically all objects of man's desire. Some gourds that have the appearance of pumpkins grow to enormous sizes, but would be found hollow and bitter if we attempted to make pies of them. Once while traveling in a certain State I bought an apple of the most beautiful color and perfect shape that I had ever seen. My anticipation of an enjoyable repast was succeeded by disappointment, however, for upon tasting the apple I found it of poor flavor, coarse in texture and dry. How I longed for a good New England apple can be understood best by those who have had a similar experience. The beauty of that apple was of no worth to me, for it would only decay if it were not consumed.

Thus we are constantly being reminded that what constitutes an object's real value may not be discerned by the eye or photographed by the camera. If one should object that this is not true with respect to a beautiful picture, I would reply by asking: of what value would the picture be to you if it did not represent something that you cherished? Unseen memories fill your portrait with associations that form its real worth, without which it would be meaningless to you. When you begin to analyze these memories you will discover why you prize the object that recalls them. Things are by no means less real because not experienced through such senses as the eye or the touch, and their value may consist of none of these. To the novice the physical proportions of two men may be equally admirable, but one may be healthy, vigorous, and muscular, while the other is vitally lacking in them all. It is well known that an individual face may be attractive though its owner has such disagreeable manners that very few people wish to associate with him. This principle is found in the instruction given to the prophet who was directed to indicate the chosen king:

But the Lord said unto Samuel, Look not on his countenance, or on the height of his stature; . . . for the Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart.—1 Samuel 16: 7.

Our real stature is made of more precious things than inches of avoirdupois. The latter we cannot very greatly enlarge, but this is of small importance when compared to that stature which is to endure after the sun of life has ceased to cast our shadow upon earth. To develop a stature of eternal substance that shall radiate with glory in celestial life is the grand purpose of our existence here, and by the grace of God it is within our power to choose and attain to it.

THE STATURE OF CHRIST

Because we would prefer it to be so, we may have thought that Jesus was of most majestic stature and handsome appearance outwardly; but this does not appear to have been the case, if we may determine the matter by what the Scriptures contain. Notice how greatly at variance with certain artists' conceptions is the following portrayal:

He hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him. He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief: and we hid as it were our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not.—Isaiah 53: 2, 3.

Doll faces may be most artistically formed and still be incomparably inferior to that of some homely child. The most glorious beauty is soul deep. Age can never cause it to fade, nor can ugly lines mar its features. Love is ineffaceably written there, and its influence remains with us while memory endures. Indeed, its impress continues even though memory should lapse, and it affects the entire course of our lives. There is such a thing as the stature of the soul. This is what Paul meant when he explains how we may attain "unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." It is what the beloved disciple meant in these beautiful words:

If ye know that he is righteous, ye know every one that doeth righteousness is born of him. Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God! therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure.—1 John 2: 29; 3: 1-3.

The stature of Christ outwardly did not probably excite any particular comment in his favor, and to-day no one knows whether he was tall or short, large or small, as compared with other men; but during the few years of his life among men he towered infinitely above them, and with the passing of many centuries his stature grows larger to the vision of all, for its glory to-day extends over all mankind as the only medium by which to comprehend the nature of God. Of all the living beings of earth he alone could say: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." We need not travel to his birth land in order to behold him, for he promises:

He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him.—John 14: 21.

THE STATURE OF THE SPIRIT

The most potent forces of the universe are invisible. That which quickens all animate or other organic life is both silent and unseen, yet it pervades all within the scope of human observation. The unnumbered forms of life that are revealed to our physical senses are but partial expressions of the power that molded them, somewhat as the physical body is not the complete expression of the spirit which animates it but is rather a servant of the spirit. Even though it is composed of substance that defies the research of the alchemist or the analysis of the chemist, it would be stupid to assert that the spirit is therefore less real than the body. Its power is realized by the results that it accomplishes, and these results are not dependent on some one's ability to tell all the processes by which they are achieved.

As physical birth must precede our maturity, so our spiritual stature must be the outgrowth of a spiritual birth. To be born of the Spirit is as necessary as it is to be born of the flesh; nor is it by any means but a figure of speech, for it is the greatest experience of human existence, and changes the entire outlook on life here as well as hereafter. Yet when Jesus said, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God," his words seemed so strange that astonishment and perplexity were evident in the query: "How can a man be born when he is old?" If the fact seemed impossible to Nicodemus the means by which it is accomplished must have been incomprehensible to him. Jesus therefore appears not to have explained his statement further than to point out the birth of water, and then reply with the analogy:

The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit.—John 3: 8.

The birth of the Spirit does not come at the behest of man, though it will be experienced when he is prepared to receive it, because it can come from God alone. In fact, the Scriptures tell us that to be born of the Spirit is to be "born of God." We should therefore understand that the stature of the spirit is conditioned on spiritual life made possible by conforming to "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus." The results are as certain as are those with respect to the tangible objects within our observation.

THE GROWTH OF STATURE

One of my boyhood experiences, that is still vivid in memory, concerns a little pig that a neighbor gave me when I was about seven years of age. In a short time we became quite constant companions, and wherever I went piggie tagged along very much as a dog would do, obeying my whistle call in a similar manner, and seeming to enjoy my company more than any other allurement. But with the passing of time, unlike others of his species, Bobby, as I called him, never grew. Soon I heard some one remark that he was hidebound, but I did not understand what was meant, and had probably never wondered why he remained so small.

One day Bobby did not respond to my call, and though I searched far and long I could not find him. I am not ashamed to say that I had formed an attachment for my little pet, and all that day I was disconsolate. When night came my mother, seeing that I still grieved over my loss, tried to explain that he could never have been of any value and therefore had to be put out of the way. Of course the explanation seemed vague and faulty to me at the time, and it was only after my perspective of life had become enlarged that I could recognize the justice of the act. But since then I have observed at various times that which has recalled my hidebound pig of youthful days, and have been pained to discover its likeness to human beings who spiritually never grow.

The most pathetic object in all the world is the one who, made in the image of God, never grows. He who comes into saintly association with the Lord's church is living in violation of the divine law if he fails to develop. He cannot truthfully say that he breaks no law, for his life belies his assertion. If a child should fail to exercise bodily functions we would know that something must be radically wrong, and it would be a source of sorrow and anxiety to us. It is as fully true with the child of God who fails to maintain spiritual activities, for he cannot enter the glorious kingdom of heaven. He who deceives himself in supposing that he can become like Christ, without using the ability God has given him, shows a pitiable failure to discern the character of the Master, who was "faithful in all things." The tragedy of the hidebound soul is the saddest of anything in human experience.

Improper habits and ways of living often stunt the growth of the young to an extent that is never recovered from in later life. So also, experience shows that those who neglect to develop proper habits of spiritual activities rarely if ever fully recover from the effects of their slothfulness, especially if continued in for any considerable period. Around such the Devil is fast closing his net. He who neglects his duties to God and his church is gambling with his own soul; and though Satan is on his side the Lord is against him, therefore he must suffer eternal loss. Faithfulness in the Church of Christ, on the other hand, will ensure that growth of stature which will entitle him to the celestial reward.

HOW TO MEASURE THE STATURE

It appears to have always been a favorite method among many people to "measure themselves by themselves." Unfortunately such measurements are almost certain to be defective and deceptive, and are not according to any authoritative standard. The Apostle Paul found it necessary to particularly caution the saints against this fallacious and dangerous habit. If such methods were used in the industrial world loss, suffering, and chaos without end would result. One might sell you twenty inches of silk for a yard, and another might build your house by a measure so small that the parlor would be only large enough for a clothes closet. Each individual would use a measure to suit his own fancy rather than yours, and doubtless each one would be constantly imagining, if not boasting, that his measure must be superior to that of his neighbor. For mutual protection the State makes and safeguards the standard of measurement, and punishes those who use any other.

For almost everything of worth there must be a standard of comparison or measurement, and the more valuable the article is the more perfect and delicate must be the adjustment of the standard. If it is so important to have a perfect standard for measuring things of trivial value, it must be infinitely more necessary that the soul should have a standard in which there is no imperfection. The soul is of more importance than all the treasures of earth. Jesus reminds us of this great truth, in words that sink into our deepest consciousness, when he solemnly declares:

Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me. For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it. For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?—Mark 8: 34-37.

We cannot afford to make a mistake in measuring our souls, for our loss would reach into the vast eternity of ages where we all must soon go. We can trust but one standard, the standard of Jesus Christ: "Take up thy cross, and follow me." It is the only standard that will show us where we lack in measurement, and it has the cherished property of engendering growth in proportion to the frequency with which we use it. Its daily use will be our safeguard.

THE FULLNESS OF CHRIST

It is impossible to approach this phase of our subject without sensing a most profound reverence and adoration for the stainless Redeemer, by Malachi so rightly called the Sun of Righteousness. It is no wonder that the sacred writers of old used a hundred titles in the attempt to adequately express their conceptions of him. But all the languages known to man could not express the sum of his glorious nature, for the most comprehensive words ever employed are too palpably meager to convey the thought, and our finite minds are too weak to fully comprehend.

The longer we mingle with the associations of this life the greater is our amazement that in Jesus of Nazareth no defect has ever been found. All around him was weakness, but he was in every respect always strong. The hard hearts that persecuted him made no inroads on the wealth of his sublime love and tender compassion; nor could the tempter's most subtle lure draw him from his thorny path of sacrifice for undeserving man, even though scarcely a soul heeded, much less understood, his great message.

We can but marvel that in the agony of his Gethsemane, with barely a handful of unimportant and uncertain followers, who failed to watch with him for a single hour, he never faltered; but with every thought true to his great mission, he there proved the loftiness of his divine purpose to save the world from sin.

Wickedly negligent or stony must be the heart that does not thrill at the voice of the Holy Shepherd; that does not yearn for the Living Waters; that delights not in the Rose of Sharon; that will not follow the Star of Bethlehem; that refuses the Bread of Life; that melts not before the altar of the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world. If there is one spark of holy admiration for the Man of Galilee, the zephyrs of heaven will fan it into a living fire that will consume the dross and purge the soul until his image is reflected there. The spiritual forces, awaiting our willingness, pervade the church of Christ, ready to live and vibrate in us and radiate from us. God is asking our full measure of service, calling us higher where befogging mists cannot obscure our vision. May the mantle of Elsha's prayer fall upon those who do not discern the spiritual realities of life: "Lord, I pray thee, open his eyes, that he may see."

ARTHUR B. PHILLIPS.

ALCOHOL AND ITS ALLY, TOBACCO

(The following synopsis of a sermon by Brother George Hall, appeared in the Creston, Iowa, Daily Plain Dealer, for April 2, 1919.—EDITORS.]

Texts used: Proverbs 20: 1; 23: 29-32, and Isaiah 5: 11-14. After presenting from the scripture, the word of God on the subject the speaker said, "No matter if every man in the world declared that alcohol and tobacco were beneficial to the human body, no follower of Jesus Christ should be addicted to their use, since the scripture is so plain in its condemnation of them."

"There are many to-day, however, who are little interested in what God has said and even they should not use a thing that is well known to be harmful to the body." At this point was produced some evidence from some of the most noted physicians, and special attention was called to the similar effects produced by the use of liquor and tobacco upon the human body. Doctor Charles Mayo, one of the famous surgeons of Rochester, Minnesota, is author of the statement, "Alcohol's only place now is in the arts and sciences—National prohibition would be welcomed by the medical profession."

Robert Ludy, M. D., late assistant surgeon, United States of America says: "Wine, whisky, beer, and all other strong drink are classed as alcohol drinks. Diseases of the heart and vascular system, the kidneys, brain, and liver and of the respiratory system, particularly pneumonia and asthma, the predisposition of which is greatly increased by the habitual use of alcohol."

A. C. Morgan, M. D., Philadelphia General Hospital, says: "Excessive imbibition of alcohol causes congestion of the stomach, congestion of the liver and finally destruction of many of the liver cells. It also causes subnormal temperature, in small doses it acts as a cerebral stimulant, while larger doses greatly depress and abolish nervous activity, and check digestion. The habitual use of alcohol is accompanied by a disposition toward fatty degeneration, particularly of heart muscles, liver, and kidney and enlarged and dilated condition of the smaller blood vessels and a degeneration of all nerve structures. The typical beer drinker's liver is a much enlarged organ showing fatty degeneration. The resistance to tuberculosis and other infectious diseases is decreased. Their will and intellectual faculties are greatly impaired, and there is perversion of the moral tendencies."

The following from Doctor Goldwater, Commissioner of Health, New York City, was also presented, "A diminution in the consumption of alcohol by the community would mean less tuberculosis, less poverty, less despondency, less pressure on our hospitals, asylums, and jail. Intemperate drinking cuts into the support of the family. Drinking mothers lose twice as many babies as do sober mothers. More alcoholism is found in the parents of feeble-minded children than in the parents of normal children. The children of drinkers develop more slowly and do poorer school work than do the children of abstainers. Alcohol impairs the tone of the muscles and lessens the product of laborers; it depreciates skill and endurance of artisans; it impairs memory, multiplies industrial accidents, causes chronic diseases of the heart, liver, stomach, and kidneys, increases death rate, lessens natural immunity to infectious diseases."

From a physical and moral standpoint no man can afford to impair his own body and mind, (to say nothing of his spirit) by the use of this enemy. "The evil consequences from the use of tobacco," said the speaker, "are catarrhal inflammation of the pharynx, tonsils, and mouth. Nervous disorders of the heart, palpitation, and insomnia also result. Derangements of the stomach with loss of appetite and impairment of vision, together with paralysis of the optic nerves, nervous tremors, and muscular twitching may result."

Some of the results of tobacco smoking are: It depresses the circulation and produces palpitation of the heart. It causes low grades of inflammatory processes in the upper air passages, catarrhal conjunctivities, mental lethargy, with inability to sustain mental application.

A few years ago it was estimated that about twelve hundred American boys began the cigarette habit every day. This number has no doubt been greatly increased during the late war. A boy conquered by the cigarette is conquered for all else. In the smoke of the cigarette the most precious opportunities of life float away beyond recall.

No devotee of the cigarette ever graduated at the head of his class at Harvard. High school teachers say that "cigarette smokers stand at least ten per cent lower than their nonsmoking classmates, and that they are more untrustworthy, untruthful, and deceitful." Many of the largest railroads, business firms, insurances companies, and banking institutions practically debar the cigarette smoker.

Mr. Will S. Hale, Superintendent of the Oregon School of Training for Delinquent Boys says: "It's my opinion that no boy who smokes or chews tobacco will ever make as good a man physically, morally, or mentally as he would have made if he had left tobacco alone, and in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the victims of this habit are complete failures as men, while a large percentage do not ever reach maturity."—Youth's Temperance Banner, July, 1915.

BOYS HURT BY CIGARETTES

Professor Charles Mohr of Hahneman College, Philadelphia says: "Excessive use of tobacco, especially in the form of cigarettes, dulls the intellect, impairs nutrition, seriously affects the eyes, causes functional and organic heart diseases, and in other ways contributes to physical and mental degeneracy. Boys who smoke cigarettes much are prodigious liars and have been found unmanageable at home and at school, and judges of the juvenile courts have declared, 'that of the incorrigible and criminal class of boys, not a boy has been found who did not use cigarettes.'"

During the past decade the habit of cigarette smoking especially by boys and young men before they reach the age of maturity has given rise to so many cases of chronic tobacco poisoning as to cause legislatures to enact laws preventing their sale to the youthful. Usually and unfortunately, many young adults who use tobacco exclusively, also indulge in alcohol, and in these subjects the use of both poisons often produce atrophy of the optic nerve.

The following graphic description of the cigarette smoker is from the pen of Elbert Hubbard, as published in the Cosmopolitan Magazine. Cigarette smoking begins with an innocent boyish effort to be smart. It soon becomes a pleasure, then a satisfaction, next a necessity. The last stage evolves into a third, a condition of fever and unrest, wandering and mental uncontrol. This may take two years or ten, but finally a flabbiness of tissue results from taking the smoke into the bronchial tubes, where pure air is required to oxygenize the blood, and a nervous weakness follows that leaves the victim unprotected, a prey to any sort of malady or disorder to which he may be disposed or liable. Beginning as a habit, the indulgence finally becomes a vice. The first indication of degeneration is in the youth's secretiveness. He feels his weakness and so seeks to present a bold front.

"Bluff" is his chief characteristic. He tries to make an impression, he talks big, is full of promises, plans, and confidential utterances. He confuses dates, times, and places, and often will tell you he has done a thing when he only intends to do it. The cigarettist is apt to dream over his work, to dawdle indefinitely. He picks things up and lays them down, and proves for us again and again the maxim that the strong man is the one who can complete a task, and not merely begin it. One marked peculiarity of the cigarette fiend is that often he makes the discovery that cleverness, astuteness, trickery, and untruth are good substitutes for simplicity, frankness, and plain, common honesty. The cigarettist has much faith in himself. If his faith wavers, he rolls a cigarette. Often in advanced stages half the day is given to rolling cigarettes. To roll cigarettes gives the defective something to do. Nervous, clutching, scratching, searching, yellow-stained hands, hands that alternately play the Devil's tattoo and roll cigarettes, these are the hands that forge your name and close over other people's money.

The victim has a fixed belief that he is immune and that all men are mortal but himself. He grins at your warning, laughs at the advice of his best friend, and turns your brotherly appeal into a joke. The man who would quit the cigarette habit must see his own folly and convince his own mind of the existence of the vice ere it can be eradicated. The trouble is in his brain. There is no salvation for him outside himself. There is no doubt that the cigarettist is often a man of many good impulses, and over and over again in his heart there sweep resolves to cease all subterfuge and be true, but these maudlin resolves are not to be trusted any more than you hearken to the promises of a "dope fiend." The choice between cigarettes and daily doses of cocaine, morphine, or bromide is very slight. Cigarette smoking is not periodic—it is continuous, a slow, insidious, sure poison. Its results can be foretold as accurately as the expert alienist can foresee the end of incipient locomotor ataxia. Fortunately, most young men who begin the habit quit it before it gets a vital hold upon them. Were this not so, how could the student body, say at Harvard, Yale, or Dartmouth, qualify for "service"? They smoke cigarettes just as they dabble in strange sins when away from immediate restraint of family and home. Later, many of them square away and become pillars of society. But for the young man who has become so calloused that he smokes in the presence of his mother, sister, or sweetheart there is little hope. The poison has already tainted his moral nature, and for him the work of dissolution, disintegration, and degeneration has begun. He is a defective, a physical, mental, and moral defective. Cigarettes stupify the conscience, deaden the brain, place the affections in abeyance, and bring the beast to the surface. It is a busy world, boys, and competition is keen. We need all the strength we can muster. No one thinks more of you because you use cigarettes, and there are those who think less, and these last are the people whose good will we prize. "Let's cut them out!"

"Is it any wonder that God in speaking to his church in these last days has said: 'Behold, verily thus saith the Lord unto you, in consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days, I have warned you, and forewarn you, by giving unto you this word of wisdom by revelation, that inasmuch as any man drinketh wine or strong drink among you, behold, it is not good, neither meet in the sight of your Father,' And again, 'Tobacco is not for the body,' 'avoid the use of tobacco, and be not addicted to strong drink in any form, that your counsel to be temperate may be made effectual by your example.'"

The speaker closed by saying that he was glad and proud to be representing a people that stands 100 per cent against the liquor traffic and among whom tobacco users are few and far between. At a General Assembly of the church at Far West, Missouri, November 7, 1837, it was unanimously voted not to support stores and shops selling spirituous liquors, or tobacco. On July 26, 1838, a council composed of the First Presidency, the High Council, and the bishops court passed the following resolution: That we use our influence to put a stop to the selling of liquors.

MAKING CHURCH WORK MORE ATTRACTIVE

As elders in the Church of Jesus Christ, we indeed have a great responsibility resting upon us, and I am persuaded that in a great many instances we have failed to fully realize and appreciate the privileges and blessings which are rightfully ours, providing we apply ourselves to the arduous task before us.

We are a body of men to whom God has said: "See that my law is kept." It is not only impractical but utterly impossible for men to enforce or supervise a law which they themselves do not understand. Therefore the first essential for us to comprehend as members of this great priesthood, is preparation. The Lord's instruction to Hyrum Smith was: "First seek to obtain my word." We should seek to obtain the word of the Lord by study and by prayer. "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." This was Paul's admonition to his beloved son in the gospel, Timothy. Study for the purpose of being approved of God, not of men, or for the purpose of disapproving the brethren. Paul also mentions the fact in his Roman letter, that some had a zeal but not according to knowledge.

Preaching and presiding are not the only responsibilities placed upon the elders. The eyes of not only members but of nonmembers are continually upon us. And if our everyday life does not comply with our Sunday sermons and public acts, they become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal.

THROUGH HUMILITY

I know of none more qualified to give instructions along this line than the Lord Jesus. Let us note the commands given to his disciples, that they might make the church work more attractive in their day. You will remember that he impressed them again and again with the fact, they were brethren. For example let us consider his instruction given in the upper room.

It seems there has been a demonstration of ill will among the members of the Twelve, outbreaks of temper had appeared. As they take their places around the table, the spirit of envy crops out. Jesus must teach them a lesson; and how does he do it? By taking a basin of water and a towel he proceeds to bathe the feet of the disciples; not for the purpose of cleansing their feet, but that he might teach them humility. He realized the time for him to be with them was very short. And what was the commandment given? "A new commandment I give unto you, that you love one another." Again and again during his sojourn, he prayed that his disciples might be one. He is now going away and the blessing he places upon those who are to have charge of his work is: "That they may all be one; even as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

THROUGH LOVE

Brethren, experience has taught me that love among the elders will do a great deal more toward making the church work attractive than eloquent sermons, where love fails to exist. If real love exists, the whole community knows and appreciates it. How many times have you seen families where the spirit of love had complete control with the father and mother, and did not also show itself in the children? Never, my brethren. When we as elders in the great Church of Jesus Christ display that spirit of love and confidence in each other we will also see the same displayed in the members, and the nonmembers will take note and will admire and appreciate the fact.

Well did the Lord say in latter-day revelation: "No one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love." John gives us a method by which we may ascertain whether we possess the genuine qualities. "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death." "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer." "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us, and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." One who truly loves his brethren and lives that he may be of service to them, surely lays down his life for them. Let us relieve ourselves of all envy, jealousy, strife, and contentions about the law: filling our hearts with love, hope, and charity, that we may disseminate it among those with whom God has called us to labor.

If we are to evangelize the world, if we are to make the church attractive, it will be accomplished more by demonstrations of real gospel principles in our lives, than by flowery sermons. We must remember that our great leader said: "The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal till the whole was leavened."

PLAN OUR WORK

Once a good brother said to me, "I am an elder in the church, I love the gospel and the brethren, but it seems there is nothing I can do." Did he really love the gospel and the brethren? I make bold to say he did not. If one called to this priesthood really loves the gospel he will not cease to study and pray until the Lord will assist him to find his corner in which he is to work. It is well to examine our love to see whether it be genuine.

Well did Jesus intimate that the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light. The individual who is working to attract men and women from God and his church, is willing to spend much time in contriving schemes and devices to make his work inviting and alluring to those he expects to capture. Can we not learn a lesson from this, and be willing to spend a little more time and energy to plan our work against our enemy, Satan? The allurements of Satan are effective when they hold a firm grip on men and women with some nonessential amusement, that keeps them out of church work. The allurements or attractiveness of the church is effective when we adorn the church with such beauty that men and women can see in it more than in the amusements of the world, which will cause them to attend the services and become coworkers with us and God.

No doubt you have already observed that I hold, that when the elders exercise love and unity they attract the members, and when the members fall in line the combination makes the church attractive to the nonmembers. Let us note a few of the problems that to my mind should be considered by this body, as well as pointing to some of the solutions by which they are to be solved.

LEAVE OUT THE PRONOUN "I"

First. It is a sad thing that there is in the church a spirit of distrust or lack of confidence, not only in the local elders but in the general officials of the church. How are we elders to establish confidence in members towards the leaders? A brother elder once said to me: "I have all I can do to look after myself." This is no doubt more than true in too many cases; however, properly considered we are looking after ourselves when we are establishing confidence in the brethren. The most essential thing for us as elders to do, is to live so close to God, the members will feel we are worthy of the direction of the Holy Spirit. If the members do not have confidence in us, it is useless for us to tell them they should have confidence in anyone else.

I think it well that we always allow the members to feel we are their servants, and are willing to give ear to their counsel or suggestions. We elders and members are "workers together with him." Make them feel we have not asked God to place the responsibility of the priesthood upon us, but since he has, we are thankful for the opportunity of assisting our brothers and sisters, and that it is a pleasure to us. The task may be hard, but as the beauty and fragrance of the rose cause one to forget the thorny bush on which it grew, so we enjoy so much the comfort of assisting the members that we entirely forget the difficulties we so many times encounter. Never assume an attitude of being superior. Remember the prayer "that they may be one," "consider the lilies, how they grow," and "you are to be equal."

Try to forget the pronoun I. You have the confidence of your wife when you explain to her your dealings. Notwithstanding you are the head of the house, her counsel and support help in your final decision. Just so with the members. Never railroad legislation; explain and ask their support to that which you feel is proper. Never by being harsh, get the ill will of the young, upon whose shoulders the burden of the work will soon rest. Make them know you are their friend, and that they always have your sympathy. Into whatever folly they may fall, you are the one who will assist them to overcome. It often occurs that by using tact you can weave your way into the lives of the young, until they will confide in you, and come to you for advice even before going to their parents.

REGAINED THROUGH TACT

A branch president was informed that one of the young men in his branch had been gambling. He asked the person informing him not to repeat the matter again. He used every opportunity available to get in close touch with the young brother. Finally after five weeks had passed and nothing had been mentioned regarding the offense, in his untiring efforts the president managed to get on a committee with him. The committee work brought them in close contact, and offered opportunity to speak of the need of pure, righteous lives. After a time he took occasion to tell the young brother how he really admired his good qualities, and spoke encouragingly of his future in the church, providing he was only careful that nothing evil should enter his life.

Putting his hand on his brother's shoulder he said: "I wish I could find words to thank you for your assistance, and to tell you how much joy it gives me to work with you. And I wish also you could understand the pain and sorrow it brought me to learn you had partaken of the folly of gambling. But since I have been with you on this committee work, I have taken great comfort in the impressions that have come to me, which are to the effect that if you have really been guilty of this fault, you have already seen your mistake and by my help and the help of God you will do it no more." The young brother was melted to tears, and said: "Do you think I am a hypocrite?" The reply came: "No, I do not think you are a hypocrite; I know you are a man." With great earnestness the dear young brother gazed into the face of his companion as he said: "I am so sorry it happened, if you will forgive me I will never do it again." Two weeks later the same young brother was going home from church accompanied by a young lady. A brother walking close behind heard the young lady propose something, and the reply of the young brother: "I do not believe Brother _____ (speaking the president's name) approves of us going; however I will ask him, and if he approves of it I will go."

He had won the confidence of the young brother. By using tact he saved him to the church. When we obtain the same of all the members, and we ourselves are led by the Spirit divine, you can see how attractive the church will be to nonmembers.

THE VALUE OF PRAYER

Second. The members fail to pray as much as they should. And why? My answer is, they do not understand the real value of prayer. But, says a brother, teaching members to pray is the duty of the priest. True, it is the duty of the priest to teach that particular part of the law, but the elder as an executive is to see that the law is kept. Elders may preach long, loud sermons, filled with flowery phrases, and deliver with great eloquence, yet their actions speak louder. If you have the confidence of the members as you should they will come to you for advice. You may feel at the very time you know how to answer their question advisedly, but that you may teach them the need of prayer; you may suggest you never like to pass your opinion until you have asked God. If the place permit, suggest he kneel with you. In this way you demonstrate your earnestness and confidence in God, as well as instilling into your inquirer a disposition to ask God himself in time of need. Again you may suggest you do not feel clear to offer any direction just now; "let us continue in prayer from time to time for a day or so, and I am certain God will hear us and send us the relief desired." Example and personal contact is what will bring us victory. When some member is in trouble enter into a fast with him. In these times that you are very near to a person is the time to suggest, the Lord would be more pleased with you if you would assist in the Sunday school, take your part in the prayer meeting, etc.

LIGHTNESS OF SPEECH

Third. The Lord considered it necessary in 1887 to admonish against lightness of speech, among the ministry. Here he recognized the power of example, since it is also necessary that the members avoid the same. Saints and sometimes elders will indulge in a conversation lasting for an hour or more, from which no good is derived whatever. As elders we should not become long-faced but we should endeavor to make all our conversation in some way educational to those who hear. "Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." Never talk unless you have something to say. And never say anything that you would not like to see recorded in the book of remembrance. Many times where the good sisters meet to sew and work, the entire time is spent in conversation, which is in no way beneficial. The same exists in gatherings of men. It is not the desire of any to waste their time. It is a habit, which is contrary to the law, we are supposed to see is kept; therefore it becomes our duty to dig in, and find some method which will assist in overcoming this habit. Always take God into counsel that your methods may be in harmony with all that he has previously given.

LACK OF REVERENCE

Fourth. I have been deeply grieved to see the lack of reverence among the Saints, and at times the elders, the greater part of which I am willing to admit is committed thoughtlessly. Lack of space will allow me to notice only the lack of reverence at the house of worship in part. The church is not a place to visit, especially before and during the service. If conversation is carried on before the service, or while the service is in progress, it shows lack of reverence. I have seen elders, yes, high priests, carrying on a conversation during a service or business session, disturbing those who desired to hear, and have heard the same men find fault with boys who whispered a little while they were preaching. There may be good attention and order during the sermon, but as the last hymn is being sung, at least half the congregation is putting on coats, etc., making arrangements to hurry away after the closing prayer. And at the same time the elder who has been preaching is fixing his books in his case or passing down the aisle, that he may greet the people as they pass out. Why is the song not as much of the service as the prayer? It is equal to the prayer if not greater, because of so many more taking part in it. I would prefer a deacon would adjust the windows after the preaching, rather than distract the attention during the song service.

Few consider the real value of the song service. It prepares the audience to think together. If you are not in sympathy with the song service, try holding a meeting without any singing. The way the people take hold of the singing is usually a good example of how they will take hold of the sermon. I fully believe the deacon should restrain people from entering the building during the song service, the same as during the prayer service. Why not? The song of the righteous is a prayer unto God. "Reverence leads to love. Love leads to obedience. Obedience leads to the gospel. The gospel leads to eternal life." Reverence like charity never faileth.

SELFISHNESS AND CONTENTION

Fifth. I think it quite essential that we touch on selfishness and contention. You have all no doubt seen the evil effects of selfishness in the church. It is exhibited by many in a multiplicity of ways. But is most damaging when it has developed into egotism. All elders are not gifted along the same line. Some are preachers, others are counselors, while others have ability in presiding. However, in all these different lines the Lord offers them the opportunity to develop according to their talents. It is very unkind for one who is especially blessed along a certain line to speak discouragingly of his brother who is not so blessed. "Wisdom is justified of all her children." Therefore he who is talented to preach, let him preach, and those not so talented uphold him in their prayers. The same with the one who is talented in presiding and counseling. Dwell in unity asking direction of the Lord in all. Always try to imagine you were occupying as your brother, and uphold him as you would desire him to uphold you. Selfishness leads to contention. Paul admonished Titus, "Avoid foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the law." And to Timothy he said, "The servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth." Latter-day revelation says, "Contention is unseemly." "Let contentions and quarrelings among you cease, sustain each other in peace." Solomon says, "It is better to dwell in the wilderness, than with a contentious and angry woman." A contentious elder is even worse because of the position he attempts to fill.

LACK OF PATIENCE

Sixth. The lack of patience and long-suffering among brethren often cause hearts to bleed and at times throw barriers in the path of a really great man. All men are subject to mistakes. We should never ostracise a man because he fails to use wisdom in a given task. Allow him opportunity to develop. It may be he is working to a disadvantage, not being talented along that particular line. Jesus is our example. When Peter was contentious with his brethren, Jesus rebuked, and forgave. When his faith failed him on the water Jesus strengthened him. When in a fit of anger he cut off the high priest's servant's ear, Jesus did not say, "Your work is ended." And even after Peter had denied the Lord the third time, he was not turned out entirely. He no doubt suffered a great deal for it, but Jesus, knowing the weakness of the flesh, forgave and continued to use Peter in his ministry. After the crucifixion Jesus had occasion to say to Peter, "When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." So I say to you men, When you are converted, or receive greater light, do not ridicule the brethren, strengthen them. It is all summed up in the statement of Jesus, in his sermon on the mount. "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

FEED FROM A FULL BASKET

These are indeed only a very few of the many things to consider in making the church work more attractive. Let us note one more incident which took place between Jesus and Peter. The disciples are fishing in the sea of Tiberias, Jesus calls to them. They come to shore, and find a meal prepared. After the meal Jesus puts a question to Peter, it is repeated the third time. Peter, lovest thou me? Each time Peter answers in the affirmative. Once Jesus requests of him, "Feed my lambs," and twice admonishes, "Feed my sheep." Jesus desired an expression of his love, before giving the instruction to feed, being assured if Peter loved him he also loved the brethren. It is impossible to feed out of an empty basket. The flock will soon discover the emptiness and will not come to the place of feeding. On the other hand, people like sheep do not forget the place where they receive good, wholesome food. When we preach, or talk in private, let us by study and prayer have something to feed the people that will be nourishment to their hungry souls. A sermon should be interesting as well as instructive; however, it cannot be instructive unless it is interesting. But it does not need to be funny to be interesting. There is nothing more interesting to an audience, whether they be members or nonmembers than for the speaker to be endowed with the power of the Holy Spirit. Take great care to avoid the negative. Ours is an affirmative gospel. A man selling fine fruit does not talk of the inferior quality of other fruit on the market. He displays his own beautiful fruit, feeling sure its superior qualities will attract attention. As elders we need only display the beautiful fruit of the gospel, the fruit that can only be produced by right living and communion with God. Such will make the church work really attractive, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

May we as elders in the church of the living God, so apply his law to our lives, assisting the members to do the same, until Zion shall flourish as the rose, throwing off her fragrance and beauty, until all who come near will recognize the attractiveness, is my wish and earnest prayer.

R. S. BUDD.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5029 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Better Homes Through Concerted Action

(Extracts from the address of Professor Max Carmichael before the Woman's Auxiliary Convention, Lamoni, April 8.)

We are not justified in shifting to the community the entire responsibility for the welfare of the home, but we do maintain that good homes are not possible without concerted action. No mother raises her child to herself; she must take into account the fact that the child is a unit in the community life, and is affected thereby. Community action succeeds only when parents recognize their communal responsibilities and are willing to meet together and work together.

The first step necessary is to instill into the child's mind what home is. Home does not exist without children. Impress upon the child himself that he is the home! This should be done as early as possible. The psychological time to impress the important facts of his communal life upon a child is when he is from ten to twelve years of age. Interest in adult life is then awakening, and is coupled with a great tendency to imitate its activities. You can get girls of that age to take care of babies; you can't get them to do it when they are eighteen. Neither are they then interested in food dietetics, or other phases of child welfare.

This problem of the home and its relation to the community through its children is a very indefinite one, because the child itself is a very indefinite problem. A child does not always respond to given influences in a given or certain manner. The human child does not respond to the push of a button, with a definite and foreseen action. He is, of all creatures, the most uncertain. Thus it is not possible for any woman to study the problem and arrive at conclusions which would be of much value to others, were she ever so consecrated to the task. All women must study the problem together. The Woman's Auxiliary, working on first prerequisites to educating the mass, shows that they do not know all there is to know upon the subjects which concern them. Impress upon girls that they need the education of the masses. We have lots of talk but too often go home and do nothing. Don't be discouraged. If you can succeed in fifteen or twenty years in getting girls to understand that they must study the child, instead of taking it as a mere result of wedlock, you will do well. Meanwhile, never give up.

If you can't get others to do things you see should be done, don't be discouraged. Get the spirit of betterment, and keep it up. Indifference and discouragement make a combination fatal to concerted action. The chiefest of all problems is to get people to work in with each other. This is especially true of women. With them it seems to be a continual job of "preferring one another," when it comes to work of a public nature being performed. You will have no success until you get people willing to work with others, and to subdue, in some degree, their own personalities.

Last reunion, here, a mother objected to her son working in Scout action "with the common bunch." She forgot that he had been working with the bunch in some way or another ever since he was born! When a choir comes to life, concerted action is the first necessity. One must learn to get in the mood, and to chime in with the rest. Some day the mother of that child will unite with others on a common program of entertainment for their children, for this spirit is in the air and will win. As for the present, because you mothers cannot agree on what your children may do together, they are staying out until midnight, playing ball on Sunday, or doing other things you wish they would not. I tell you, the mothers must unite, for the boys will get together, and what one does, another will want to do.

Neighbors, get together, and talk over a program of proper amusements for your children. But one caution—don't be overzealous. This is especially applicable to Latter Day Saint women. Remember you are but an infinitesimal unit in your community, and do not be discouraged if you cannot swing things your way all at once. Start easy and in good nature, but keep going and you'll get somewhere. Ask your neighbors to meet you and talk over the things which concern you all. Perhaps you need not meet very frequently at first, but you will soon find that so much good results from these conferences that you will want more of them.

Another thing, employ the agencies already established in your community. There are plenty of them and they exist to be used. It will often require great tact and wisdom to get indifferent people to see with your eyes, but it is worth the effort. You, yourself, must have a vision of the future in order to succeed in a permanent way. You will admit that the outlook to the Christ on Calvary was smaller than yours at present. His life was near its close, and he was hedged and hemmed in; but you have a wide field before you, and time to work it.

Let me call your attention definitely to some of the actual agencies in every community. First, I would say, as women you should go after the ballot! Join the suffrage associations, pay dues, give money freely, for suffrage is absolutely necessary for the greatest freedom in concerted action. Work it hard! Sign petitions, appeals, anything and everything that is legitimate to bring about the desired end. How many of you belong to a suffrage association? Hardly a one; and yet you want it, do you not? And you know any effort needs money, and you are willing to isolate yourselves—stand aloof, and let these other women work it out without your help? For accomplish it they will, without your help if necessary; but surely, for very shame, you will get on the band wagon, and help boost! The teachers' association of the Nation is trying hard to get bills passed which will raise the salaries of all teachers above the paltry sum many are getting, and yet we see the spectacle of teachers who don't want to pay the dollar a year necessary to join this association which is trying to benefit them.

Other agencies at hand are legislative bodies, the schools, Boy Scouts, girls' clubs, social centers, parent-teacher associations, booster clubs, young mothers' clubs, the courts, etc. How may these be used to advantage, is the next question. We have, first, the problem; second, the need for concerted action; and third, the agency by which it can best be brought about.

I will try, briefly, to give a few hints along these lines. Let us say the problem is some food regulation. Go after the town council, which would be the shortest cut to success in this regard. Now, don't be discouraged and quit, on the first round, if these good gentlemen do not become enthused over your proposition. They, too, must learn, and that is sometimes a slow process. I have had some experience with town councils, both from the outside and the inside. I believe, as a general thing, they want to do the fair thing, the square thing, by the community. But they are not always easily convinced. I would advise you to select the woman in your community who is the most popular, the most influential, whether because of money, social prestige, or intellectual brilliancy. Get that woman back of a live committee and go after the council again. Suppose they laugh because you want the food screened, or the milk inspected! They sometimes laugh, but admit at the same time they are getting their eyes opened. There is no agency so quick and effective as the town council, if you can work it.

Suppose it is the sanitary condition which needs improving. The Boy Scouts are an excellent agency to help out. Get the council to set apart a clean-up week, and make the boys the executives. Don't be afraid to ask for what you want. You may be sure the liquor and tobacco men do not hesitate to approach the town council! Why should you?

Is it the schools that are not properly ventilated? First, find out, scientifically, the exact conditions. Work reforms through the parent-teacher association, but remember you are not entitled to succeed thereby unless you join them! Go after the superintendent of your schools; he's your servant. He should know how things are going in the rooms under his care. Our janitor is sent from room to room with a piece of paper upon which he records the conditions he finds.

Mothers, be tactful, but find out definitely what you want and go after it. See that your children are getting the proper exercise, the proper play. Concerted action will do much for you. Get together, determine how late your children should play in the evening, and under whose care. Agree as to whether or not they should dance in the homes of the neighborhood, and as to what amount of sleep is necessary for their health. You cannot raise your child to himself. Would you deny him association with others? And if their standards do not agree with yours, what is the result? Shall they be together at some entertainment, in a community center, or should some be at home, and some on the street, with no communal life? You say they might not come home directly such entertainment is over? Well, spend a little money for a town marshal, who will see to it that there is no loitering on the streets.

Get together and spend a little money for a public health nurse. There is a bill in the legislature now, requiring each county to have a nurse at public expense. Adenoids, eyes, ears, tonsils—examinations, regular, if superficial, could be made, and reports made that might save many a child from disaster. Some day the state will assume the responsibility of caring for the bodies of its children, as it has for years undertaken to do for their brains. Some day public money will be spent for doctors and nurses, as well as teachers. It is a practical thing for a local community to do now. You can't do it by yourself—and some mothers there are who do not believe in adenoids! Mothers' clubs could put in a dollar a year or a month, and really save money by it—money that is now paid to doctors individually. Walk down the line of children in any school and see the pitiful number of mouth breathers! You can pick them out by their pinched and vacant faces. A community nurse would see that these children had a fighting chance for success in life, even though their mothers might not believe in their affliction!

Another topic worth discussion and action is that of school feeding. Perhaps you do not realize how many children come to school undernourished. Creston pays for the milk wagon to come around to its schools each day and each child is given a drink of milk. Truancy and absence is another problem which needs concerted action to eliminate. Mothers should ask about their children. Sometimes it seems that nobody cares whether or not a child is at school, and on time. I have statistics of truancy, showing, for instance, that three cases of truancy and loafing on the part of freshmen were directly traceable to the influence of a loafing senior. Tell me, do you know? I could tell you exactly how many minutes per week per study a failing child spends on his subjects—but mothers don't ask!

My time is gone, and I have only done partial justice to this matter of concerted action. My plea is that you investigate the plan, and then get busy—together!

In the year between the dates of February 6, 1918, and February 5, 1919, one hundred and fifteen original contributions were printed in our auxiliary columns in the HERALD. Of these thirty-seven came from officers of the organization, thirty-one from other sisters, seven from brethren, and the rest from the Editor. They represent a contributing force of forty-seven. In some respects this does not represent as varied and widely-scattered a support as the department deserves.

The year has been a peculiarly difficult one owing to the demands of war work and the devastating epidemic which has stultified many of the plans and contemplated work of our women. But twelve reports were received during the year regarding the local activities of our sisters. We feel sure that this showing does not truly represent the amount of work that was done. It does show, however, that either through carelessness, indifference, or failure to acquaint themselves with their duty in that respect, the majority of our locals are content with doing, and saying nothing about it. Were the women to realize the extent of good which even brief notices of their live-wire activities can do, when placed where others may learn of them and be inspired to "go and do likewise," we feel sure they would be more careful to elect energetic press chairmen who would deem it both pleasure and duty to allow their local lights to shine out across the wide area of the HERALD subscription.

Sr. Alice Mae Burgess has made a splendid editor for our column in the young people's magazine of the church, the Autumn Leaves. She and the corps of talented workers she has rallied to her side have kept their space filled with short, terse, practical things which have appeal for girls. The name has been changed to "The Parthenon," the artistically designed heading for which (the work of Sr. Ruby Short McKim) combines the emblems of the Orioles and the Temple Builders—our two societies for girls.

Sister Corless having for some time reported for a local paper the activities of the women of her district, was, in the summer, commissioned more officially, with the task of editing a woman's department in the paper, the Glad Tidings, published at Grand Rapids, Michigan. How capably Sister Corless has done this, none but the readers of that bright little monthly can rightly judge.

We cannot but feel that the publicity department of our woman's organization in the church has not, as yet, received a fullness of its proper attention. We are still creatures so susceptible to suggestion, so stimulated by others' successes, so animated by the truths which come from the full heart of our sympathetic brother or sister, that we can but derive great benefit from the "printed word." It is a field entrancingly beautiful, with soft, invigorating airs of freedom and friendliness—and we have but peeped through the gate! May the day speedily come when we may each and all be impressed with the loving service we can do for others by a more liberal use of our publishing privileges. Many are the gems which should be passed on, much the helpful advice and counsel, and valuable the lessons we can glean from the experience of another.

Report of Patronesses of Independence Sanitarium for 1918

We have an enrollment of 100, with 24 active members with dues paid for the year 1918. We meet at homes of members, transact business, and during first part of year as has been our custom we called for volunteers to go to the Sanitarium each Tuesday afternoon to mend and sew. Last spring it was decided to meet on regular day at Sanitarium, bring lunches and stay all day. We feel that a great deal more was accomplished in this way. Sister Rogers had the work and sewing machines brought out on the porch and we spent some very busy and pleasant days. Sister Rogers kindly furnished ice cold lemonade which was very much appreciated. During the recent influenza epidemic we responded to special call from Sanitarium and Stake Bishop to make caps, masks, and gowns for doctors, also to be used by elders while administering to influenza patients in compliance with order from civil authorities. We have an average attendance of 12. Sometimes we have a short program and light refreshments, and feel that the social part is helpful as well as entertaining. We feel encouraged in the work and hope for progress this year.

Any donation of linen from members or friends outside of as well as in Independence are appreciated at any time.
MRS. F. O. THOMASON.

Report of the Auxiliary Members of the Board of Trustees for the Children's Home

We, the members of the Board of Trustees for the Children's Home, nominated by your body, beg leave to report that we have continued our work for the home along the lines indicated in former reports.

As members of the clothing committee we have spent a large amount of time in the care of clothing contributed, in preparing work for the sewing societies, and in the buying of new material. Because of the high prices the outlay of money this year has been greater than heretofore.

We are still indebted to the different sewing societies of this place. The Dorcas Society has been untiring in its service, being the main dependence in the making over of old garments as well as the making of new ones. The Rosalia and Utilis Societies have also given assistance.

Sisters Nicholson and Resseguie are members of the education committee. Sister Stebbins of the admission and dismissal committee.

At one time this winter there were forty-one children at the home—forty-two being the highest number at any previous time.

In addition to our specific duties we have participated in the general work of the board.

The term of office of Mrs. Minnie B. Nicholson expires with this conference year.

MRS. CALLIE B. STEBBINS,
MRS. M. B. NICHOLSON,
MRS. L. L. RESSEGUIE.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Christmas Offering Call

Some four months ago we mailed cards, self-addressed and stamped, to all the Sunday schools, addressed to the one in your branch who received all Christmas offering letters last year, 1918. These cards called for information that would assist us in sending to the various schools proper-sized clocks and helps for their assistance in carrying on the Sunday school "Attendance and offering movement."

Many of these cards have not been returned to us. Has your school received a clock? If not, will you please advise us immediately, giving us the name and address of your superintendent, and we will immediately get in touch with your school and see that you are supplied with these helps. Or if you know who in your school was receiving the offering letters last year, ask them about the card and see if you cannot get it filled out immediately and sent to us. Remember, it is addressed and stamped.

We are getting many encouraging letters every day, and many of the schools are way past their $2.50 per-member mark now. These schools will be listed in our next general letter—try to have your school in this list.

Thanks to the splendid cooperation and support of our many Sunday school workers, the church debt is now a thing of the past, but this does not mean that we are to discontinue our efforts. There is even a greater work before us. We are now in a starting position; are we going to make this start or are we going to remain on the starting line while others run our race? The clearing of the church debt places us in a position to do greater things. Greater things are expected of us, by the world and by our heavenly Father.

At the General Conference this spring, the Order of Bishops recommended that "this year's Christmas offering be used for the purpose of purchasing lands for the creation of inheritances and stewardships, that our less fortunate members might be given an opportunity to purchase their inheritance under favorable conditions." This was adopted by General Conference.

The work we have before us, then, is for a most noble and laudable purpose, and should appeal to every loyal, wide-awake member. So much is to be done, as reconstruction comes after the clearing away of old debts, and we should endeavor to appreciate the stress of present economic conditions and to sense the necessity of setting in motion the Zionie program.

This offering does not in any sense take the place of tithes. This must be a freewill offering. It is not a tax or a prorata assessment. It is an offering from the heart, to be used for a most noble purpose, and God, in his infinite wisdom, will bless abundantly all who willingly and cheerfully give for this good cause.

There are many ways we can help. Many have pledged their best day's wage each month; others are making an offering of proceeds from certain acres of land; others are giving money received from the sale of eggs laid on Sunday. One letter received recently told of the installation service in their Sunday school the day they started the clock system, and how one good brother offered the school two acres of land on which to grow potatoes, etc., the proceeds to go toward the offering for the school.

If all of us could only sense the full meaning of this opportunity and enter into the work with a will, I am sure that the $150,000 that we are trying to raise this year would be away overpaid long before the end of the year.

As suggested in the beginning of the year, if we could only get each member to give just one penny each day for the year, we would go beyond our highest expectations. Can we not do this? What is your Sunday school class doing toward this effort? Are you working together for its success? Have you set an aim so that you will have something to work to? If not, will you not do so immediately and be an example to your school?

Remember this is our privilege, our opportunity, so let us make it our success.

Sincerely yours,

ARTHUR W. SMITH.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, 2903 Sullivan Avenue.

Jots by the Wayside

The Delhi Branch of the London District, Canada, evidently believe that "the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof," as also that other scripture which said, "given to hospitality," as can be testified to by the number of Saints and friends who surrounded those tables spread in the open under the trees and laden with the "good things of the earth" in vast variety and rich abundance, on both Saturday and Sunday, May 24 and 25.

The occasion was the district Religio and Sunday school rally held with Delhi Branch. These auxiliaries to the church are ably presided over by Elder James Winegarden of London, and Elder David J. Withrow of Stratford, respectively, who ably conducted the various sessions, which were quite well attended and a goodly interest shown.

It would have been appropriate to sing, "Give us room that we may dwell," as their neat and beautiful little church was inadequate to supply the demand for seats, especially at the Sunday meetings.

A splendid program of the musical and literary order was held on Saturday evening. Sunday, the prayer meeting was from 9.30 to 10.45, followed by short addresses on live topics in connection with Religio and Sunday school work. We will not name all who took part except a visitor, Brother James Gault, from Detroit. There were two preaching services in the afternoon, the first by B. H. Doty, the second by William Grice.

At least five auto loads were there from London, besides some by train. Also Saints were present from various other parts.

We are not giving the names of those few families of Delhi Branch, lest we omit some one, but the marvel is for the few to do so much and do it so well, but as a motto we give the secret of success as being: They were united and planned and worked together. Notwithstanding we have not had a dry Sunday for months, they had faith to arrange for their meals outdoors, and got good weather.

JOHN SHIELDS.

Patent Medicines

An article appeared in the HERALD of March 26, under the heading, "Patent medicines." In justice to manufacturers of proprietary medicines, it might be well to write a few words in their defense.

It has seemed as though the members of the American Medical Association have been able to get whatever they desired before the public, and as few people take the trouble to verify their statements, the public takes their word as authority.

If we are to condemn so-called patent medicines, why not include the same medicines exploited by the medical profession under the ethical name of pharmaceuticals?

There was a time when medicines were advertised to cure any disease, and were composed of mysterious secret formulas. But in recent years national and state laws have been passed compelling the manufacturers to state on the label the percentage of alcohol, coal tar, and opium derivatives. The word cure has been dropped entirely.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup, the oldest and most widely advertised one, contains no opiates, and but five per cent alcohol. The poisonous acetanilide and other coal tar derivatives appear as official drugs in the latest edition of the Pharmacopoeia.

One can always read the medium dose as stated on the labels of headache powders, or "patent medicines." In some cases the physician prescribes double this amount of poisonous drugs, unknown to the patient. It is true that most all headache powders are cardiac depressants, but when bought in the open market the patient knows whether or not he is taking acetanilide or some coal tar product.

There may be a few tonics or female medicines that have little or no virtue, but the life of these preparations is very short. If they are sold for their narcotic or alcoholic effect in dry territory, the local authorities can and should suppress them, as they have been given ample legal power by the Nation and various States.

The most highly advertised female nostrum on the American market (Lydia Pinkham's Compound) contains fifteen per cent alcohol, and when taken according to the directions would only give the patient one half teaspoonful of alcohol each day.

Hayden's Viburnum Compound, prescribed extensively by the physicians as a female remedy, contains fifty per cent alcohol.

Most everyone will recall the sensational trial held in Chicago a few years ago, in which the manufacturers of Wine of Cardui (female tonic) sued the American Medical Association for statements they made about this proprietary medicine. The medical association employed the most able legal talent obtainable and put prominent specialists and eminent physicians on as expert witnesses. But the manufacturers won the suit.

The greatest violator (as branded by the Government) of the Harrison Narcotic Law, who admitted on the witness stand that he had sold over $100,000 worth of narcotic drugs within one year, was a physician.

I am interested in the passing of any law that has for its object the betterment of humanity, but I am not in favor of "class" legislation. If we start to clean house, let us clean up the whole house.

Very sincerely,
S. J. DENTON, R. PH.

GALESBURG, ILLINOIS.

[The writer of the above letter apparently has missed the essential point. It is true that in the cure of diseases some doctors give in small doses medicine which in large doses would prove poisonous. Nor has any attempt been made to say that all doctors are ethical. We do suggest that when it comes to taking drugs, it is much wiser that it be done under the direction of a person who knows exactly what is being given and how it will act. It is seriously objectionable to take either pharmaceutical or patent medicines, or other drugs or narcotics, promiscuously.

Many are under misapprehension as to the effect of statements in the labels. The Government does not guarantee either foods or drugs to be pure, and many of the medical names are misleading. We have not verified the statements concerning various patent medicines referred to above.—

"Zion, a Place of Safety"

After reading "Zion, a place of safety, its establishment at hand," by Glauco R. Kuykendall, in the HERALD for March 26, I have often felt that I would like to tell you how happy it makes me to read this article. There is nothing this side of heaven that I long for so much as a home in Zion. It is my constant prayer that I may overcome selfishness and all wickedness, and have my heart free from all worldly sins, so that I may be worthy to live there with God's people.

What a picture this letter of Brother Kuykendall's has drawn! To be in fellowship with the Saints, to sing and pray with them, to be where there is no slander or backbiting; only the peaceable and pure in heart. Do you know what that means to one who has been for years isolated from our church, living where the people are all so satisfied with their religion and will smile or scoff and say, "How can you believe in such things?" when the church is spoken of or when I asked them to read the church papers and tracts? They think they are all right; don't want to know any more.

When I talk about our church, some will say they would not change for anything in the world. They say they have the Holy Spirit, and are satisfied. I am the only Latter Day Saint here. My husband is a believer in the church, but he seems contented to live his life out here. Of my five children, only one has obeyed the gospel. Three of them are in homes of their own, and two of my boys are "over there." My heart is sad and lonely, but I am praying for them all and I feel our Father will bring them all in in his own good time. Pray for us.

A MAINE SISTER.

[A brother writes to President Smith from Chicago as follows]:

Sunday was a day of unusual interest and marked effect in both the branches here in Chicago. At the South Side in the morning the house was packed to the doors. There was a downpouring of the divine Spirit which, I believe, was felt by all present. Many outsiders were there and showed a sympathetic interest. The Saints feel most hopeful that several of them, if not all, will ask for baptism. In the evening we had a full house at the West Side Branch and were wonderfully blessed.

The Saints, many of them, have been seriously disturbed by the conference. I believe, however, they are beginning to see matters in a true light. Constructive work is what is necessary at this moment. Whatever the church loses in passing through the fire she can afford to lose. She will only be refined by her sufferings and losses. The people must have brought home to them that the church, like all human institutions, is made out of men, and men are creatures of many infirmities and limitations. Faultfinders, complainers, and mischiefmakers should be silenced and no ear should be given them. There are some people in the church, I am sorry to say, who seem to delight in fanning the fires of suspicion and confusion. They certainly do not contribute any good to the cause. Lying rumors and poisonous gossip can do deadly work if given free scope. They snap the bonds of sympathy and trust.

The effect of the service at South Side yesterday brought the Saints closer together, causing them to cling to the church with a new devotion, and pour into it a fuller measure of their strength and love. Your efforts to bring the church up to the forefront are not lost.

I made it convincing to my audience that we gain nothing by decrying the weaknesses of the church, expressed in members or in leaders. It is the part of wisdom to note the points at which we fail, either as individual members or a collective body, and then, in a spirit of harmony, use all our powers in devising plans by which old weaknesses may be eradicated and new vitality imparted. It seems to me it would be a movement in the right direction to lay persistent insistence upon the attitude of every member toward the church and its leaders, and see that it be a constructive one. Every member should ask himself not what flaw can I discover, what defect can I bewail, but what defect can I remedy, and what added energy can I bestow? Christ loved the church and gave himself for it. We ought to follow the example.

I believe the Doctrine and Covenants are now burning with a new glory as a result of the conference. Yet while this is true, I trust we will be spared ever having such a conference again. Our aim, in all the branches at this time, should be to help the Saints get rid of that spirit of faint-heartedness, which so often expresses itself in lugubrious forebodings, and inspire them to speak in a bolder and more jubilant accent. We should give the deepest possible meaning to the sacrament of the Lord's Supper as one of the most effective means to bring this about. To my thinking, the Lord's Supper is the most powerful agency under heaven for the fusing of human hearts.

The world was never more interesting to me than it is to-day. I am devouring every book I can get treating of the problems of the day. It is plain to see that outside of the church men are learning many things. Men are wondering, meditating, asking questions, wrestling with difficulties as never before. Out of this sweat of intellect and turmoil of heart I believe there will come a harvest to the glory of God. Your world-wide vision of the church as expressed in your message to the General Conference I consider most opportune. Into the new world made by the war you would send the church baptized into the spirit of Jesus and endowed with his might. In time others will come to see the same vision.

NEW WESTMINSTER, BRITISH COLUMBIA, May 27, 1919.

Editors Herald: Elder J. J. Cornish is holding a series of meetings here, preaching four nights in the week, and twice on Sundays.

To-night his subject was the Sabbath question. We noticed among those present, several Adventists and a Baptist minister.

Brother Cornish is enjoying the Spirit to a great degree in his preaching. This is a hard field, but we believe some good will be accomplished. The Saints feel very much encouraged.

LILLIAN E. POPE.

BEARDSTOWN, ILLINOIS, May 28, 1919.

Editors Herald: I am writing this letter to let the world know how the church is growing in this part of the Lord's field. Each and every Sunday there have been two or three baptisms. So we are trying to do a little good anyway in this part of the field. These people that have been baptized are all heads of families.

We have some very fine prayer meetings. The Spirit of Him who lives on high has always been in our presence and that to bless, with its sweet influence for good. And yet we have need of more workers for Christ. It is the same here as in other places. The field is white for the harvest; more workers are in demand. Our Sunday school is progressing nicely. We had a fine program Mother's Day; it was both educational and spiritual. Brother Norman preached at eleven o'clock in honor of our mothers, relating some history concerning the event, and how we should love our mothers.

All of our services are well attended except our morning preaching at eleven o'clock. We are going to have Flag Day program in our Religio society. So you see it is active, too.

Our church is being painted and a new sidewalk is laid in front.

We are sorry to lose our Brother R. L. Fulk, who has been a missionary for four years. Now he is sent to Utah District to labor. He was baptized in Beardstown, and has been a good, faithful worker in this field.

Brother Fulk is a good worker in the service of the Lord. We hope and pray that the Lord will recognize his work in the Utah District, and that the work there may prosper under our servant's labor. As the Saints of the Central Illinois District, the Lord has made known to us that he wants more consecrated service.

To the new missionaries sent to our field this year the Beardstown Branch is open, and we are ready for you to come at any time. We will do whatever we can to help get a crowd to preach to. May the good work which is done still develop until every soul hears the gospel. We desire an interest in your prayers that this year might be the banner of them all. We are progressing fine with Christmas offering. We ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints.

Your brother in Christ,

HARRY JONES.

DEKALB, ILLINOIS, June 3, 1919.

Editors Herald: For two whole weeks the attention of the cultured town of DeKalb was focused on the Latter Day Saint Church by the attraction of Brother Augustine Dwyer's lectures. Despite hot weather and the closing exercises of the school, the church was filled with eager listeners every night.

On the second Sunday of his stay, he delivered his lecture, "My sojourn in Palestine." The subject attracted a crowded house. For two whole hours he held the attention of the cultured audience.

Doctor A. C. Wieand, president of Bethany Bible School, of Chicago, pronounced Brother Dwyer's lecture on Palestine the most instructive and edifying lecture ever given in that noted institution. Doctor Wieand himself spent a long time as a Bible student in Jerusalem. His recommendation has attracted wide-spread interest to the lecture. Through the generosity of one of his benefactors, Brother Dwyer has in store for him a second tour of the Holy Land. HERALD readers may anticipate some articles of thrilling interest from his pen while there.

He goes to Saint Louis where he will give Shakespeare's Hamlet, then to Taylorville. After these engagements he goes to Minneapolis and the reunions of the Northwest.

which have had their depressing effect over our past, pass into the great sea of forgetfulness, and remember only the bright spots and the good things among our fellows, the things by which we can love, esteem them; those things according to the declaration of the apostle, that are of good report, those things that are lovely and of good report. Let us think upon these things. Do you not know that that is a part of our faith? Let us forget the hurts that have come to us, and labor together, labor together, stand together, understanding things as fairly as we can together. Wherein we differ let that difference be an earnest and honest one, but with due respect to every man of whom we should feel an assurance that he is just as honest, just as earnest, just as upright as we, desiring to serve God and find as good a reward at the end of the commission as ourselves. I like to labor with such men as that. I like to know where they are. I like to feel the clasp of their hand. I know when I feel it they are also willing that other men shall have the same right, the regard, and the esteem of others that they themselves wished and hoped for themselves.—Joseph Smith, General Conference Minutes, 1912, pp. 1647, 1648.

AMBITION

In its original sense the meaning of this word ambition is not good, as it referred to going around to get votes, and signified a desire for office or honor. If there exists such a desire among us it should be defeated. The man who seeks office in the priesthood is not the man we want to sustain. The man who, having office in the priesthood, desires preferment or greater power for personal ends, is not a man whom we desire to sustain. And when convinced that any man has ambition in such a thing, we should be right in preventing the injury to the work. We do not justify ambition for personal preferment in any man.

But the word may also be used very much as the Master spake it, as the apostle to the Gentiles spake when he directed that we should covet earnestly the best gifts. Covetousness in and of itself is not good. But here it is used in the sense of desire for the purpose of doing good.

The gifts of the gospel will bless us and prepare us for better service. There is, among the ancients, according to comparative theology, a story that those who covet the divine power for selfish ends, injure not only others but themselves thereby; and for this cause was the divine power taken from earth and for this cause was the world destroyed by water. The divine knowledge cannot safely be used for personal ends.

Also we read of one Simon, the sorcerer, when he would have purchased the gift of the Holy Ghost. His denunciation followed quickly at the hands of the apostles.

Still we may rightly covet earnestly the best gifts—faith, hope, and charity, and the gifts of the Spirit—that they may be used for the blessing of others.

Then there comes to mind the ambition of men of God, not for their own sake, but for the work's sake; men who have seen the heavenly vision and yet have been hampered and hindered in their work by their brethren. It may be by captious criticism, as has been the case with some. It may be from a lack of true, loyal support on the part of their brethren.

It may have been from the lack of financial support, and of the necessary tools with which their work could be accomplished. When we struggle against obstacles without, though severe and hard our work, we gain strength thereby; but when we feel that we have not the support of our brethren behind us, then the work is hard.

Moses partook of the heavenly vision, came down from the mount with a revelation for the people after he had talked with God for forty days. But he found that the twelve princes of Israel and Aaron had, with the people, returned to the iniquity of Egypt. They lost then and there the heavenly revelation and received in its stead a "schoolmaster."

Moses desired to make them a nation of kings and of priests unto God, but they would not. So he was forced to wander with them in the wilderness for forty years, and suffer until he would feel to cry out, "O Lord, why hast thou cumbered me with this people?" He had the heavenly vision, but the people would not enter it. That is wearing to the soul of man.

Then there are the petty hindrances from lack of consideration and lack of support. Men have had to sit idly by, comparatively so, because they have not been permitted to do their real work; because perhaps of jealousy; perhaps for other reasons. After making long preparation, yet is their work hindered.

We can call to mind many such instances under our personal observation. Ambition for self should be defeated. But ambition to serve the cause of Christ and the work better should receive the confidence and support of our brethren. S. A. B.

The Bishopric

NORTHERN WISCONSIN DISTRICT

Owing to the removal to Missouri of Brother Nalmer Johnson, we have arranged with Brother Leroy Colbert to act as Bishop's agent of the Northern Wisconsin District. Brother Colbert is well known to the Saints of this section and we feel that any words of commendation upon our part are unnecessary. We are satisfied that you will give him your loyal support; you cannot afford to do otherwise, for from the observance of the temporal law we receive personal benefits in accordance with the promises of our heavenly Father.

Solicitors who have been reporting to Brother Johnson will kindly send future reports to Brother Colbert.

Yours very truly,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

Married

SCHNEIDER-LEHMAN.—At Independence, Missouri, on the evening of Thursday, May 8, occurred the marriage of Sister Donnie Lehman and Mr. John Schneider, both of Independence, Missouri. It was a quiet wedding, at the home of Miss Edith Bailey, with Elder R. J. Lambert officiating. They are at home to their friends at 705 North Cottage Street, Independence. Miss Lehman served as secretary of the Religio Society most of the past year, filling out the term of James Stobaugh, who resigned to enter the war.

Our Departed Ones

WORSENCROFT.—John Thomas Worsencroft was born December 2, 1848, at Ballington, Cheshire, England, and died at his home in Little Sioux, Iowa, March 25, 1919. Married Martha Johnson, March 30, 1872. Two children were born to them, William of Sioux City, and Priscilla of Little Sioux. He was baptized April 9, 1893, at Little Sioux, and was acting priest of the branch and superintendent of the Sunday school, and served faithfully to the end. He was honored and respected by all who knew him. He leaves wife, two children, and many, many friends to mourn. Funeral from the Latter Day Saint church in Little Sioux, D. A. Hutchings in charge, sermon by Joseph Lane. Interment in Little Sioux Cemetery.

BLUE STEPPING STONES

The annual number of Stepping Stones containing the list of Christmas offerings for 1918 will be issued this week. It is gratifying to note that it has been reduced to practically a double number of the paper. There is only about one third the space used that there was three years ago and there is about eight times as much money reported. It was then about $11,000, and now it is over $90,000. Three years ago about $200 was reported to a page, and now one will find an average of $4,500 to a page.

SUNDAY SCHOOL EXECUTIVES MEET

Both the office editors, S. A. Burgess and E. D. Moore, were in attendance at a meeting of the Sunday school general executive council in Independence on the 7th and 8th. Items of general interest growing out of the meeting will be announced next week.

GRACELAND COMMENCEMENT

The announcement of Graceland Commencement covers the five days from June 7 to Wednesday, June 11. The Athenian graduation is on Saturday evening; the baccalaureate sermon by Bishop J. F. Keir on Sunday, June 8, at 11 a. m. Monday evening there is a graduating recital by Miss Stella Packard, assisted by Miss Gladys Silsby, at the college chapel; and on Tuesday evening, the studio recital at the Brick Church, voice, piano, band, orchestra, and oratory. Wednesday, June 11, is class day, Athenian festival, with picnic dinner and baseball with Simpson College in the afternoon; and in the evening the commencement address by Elder J. A. Koehler, of the Independence Stake Presidency. Thus closes another successful year for our college. There are 56 graduates in all departments.

The Des Moines District Dispatch announces an intensive program for district conference, June 6, 7, and 8, and gives much attention to the coming reunion, also to be held at Runnells, Iowa.

We note the announcement of another district paper in the Southern Nebraska District, The Arimat, with E. E. Long as editor, and J. L. Parker business manager. We have not yet seen a copy of this paper. Its name is an Indian word meaning "of value or worth."

We note from the Kansas City Journal of Sunday, June 1, that the Missouri Valley Historical Society gave a memorial service for five prominent Kansas City men, at their meeting on Saturday: Congressman William P. Borland, Judge John F. Philips, Doctor W. R. Campbell, Marshall B. Wright, and Major Andrew Drumm. These men had died since last January, and bring to mind the early days of Missouri history, Judge John F. Philips is of interest to our readers since he presided in the suit on the Temple Lot, and made the decision in that case. Herbert S. Salisbury, Assistant Church Historian, presided at this meeting.

Those attending the Holden Stake conference, to be held June 15 and 16, at Sedalia, Missouri, should take an "East 13th Street car" anywhere and ride to Montgomery Street which is the last block before end of car line. Then go north two blocks. The Latter Day Saint church is a white store building on the southwest corner of the street. Anyone coming on the train can get a car on Ohio Street, two blocks from depot, southeast. Mrs. E. E. Moorman, Sedalia, Missouri.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

INDIVIDUAL METHODS OF WORK

The statement that every man should learn his own duty and do it may very well be supplemented by the statement that he should learn how to do it. Men cannot all work by the same methods. We are not all cast in the same mold.

Shortly after I entered the ministry I became possessed of the thought that I should not make any preparation before preaching—further, of course, than preparation by prayer.

So upon one occasion I entered the pulpit without having selected any subject, and without any previous thought. My mind was entirely empty. And I must report that I was pained to discover that it remained in that condition during that service.

I suspect that I have observed other preachers in much the same state. We may draw an empty bucket from an empty cistern and go through the motions of pouring out the water of life. But it is a very dry performance, no matter how realistic and eloquent our gestures may be.

That is why elocution alone, or rhetoric alone, or logic alone, or all of them together but without the Spirit, fail in the pulpit. That is why we are told that if we do not have the Spirit we shall not preach. One thing is sure, if we do not have the Spirit we do not preach—though to be sure we may continue to talk.

One has asked us to define the difference between preaching and just talking. That might be hard to do. You might ask a young man to define the difference between kissing his sister and kissing his sweetheart. The physical performance of osculation is much the same. But there is a spiritual difference that he finds very delectable, in the one instance. It is responsible for all sorts of thrills and ecstasies.

Some men may do their best preaching extemporaneously. But in contrast to the experience first mentioned, I recall the many times when the Spirit has brought to mind, like a hint from heaven, some particular subject, perhaps even before the call came to preach. And in meditation upon the subject thus given the Spirit has been present in great measure, bringing light and assurance.

Such a method of preparation does not bind one to a hard and fast adherence to fixed lines when the actual hour of sermonizing comes. And it may not be at all suited to some men. The Spirit is given to every man to profit withal—and the needs of every man are known to the heavenly Father.

In the pulpit and out of the pulpit we should study to learn how we may best do our particular work. We do not have to work exactly as some one else does, or as our fathers or grandfathers did. We are only bound by the restrictions imposed by good taste, common sense, and the law. Those limitations by no means hamper us. They give plenty of room for the cultivation of individual talents, though they may restrict idiosyncrasies and hobbies.

Paul's exhortation is still timely: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."
ELBERT A. SMITH.

So, likewise, the war has opened the eyes of the successful man. It has suddenly jarred him into the realization that, after all, his toiling, his money, and his so-called good fortune are of no particular good to him. After twenty or thirty years he has really no more to offer his country than his totally unsuccessful brother has. He is up against the eternal verities.—Saturday Evening Post, January 12, 1918.

GRACELAND COMMENCEMENT

On Wednesday, June 11, Graceland College held its Twenty-third Annual Commencement. There were 16 graduates in the junior college, 6 from the academy, 8 in the preparatory department (the academy corresponds to high school work, the preparatory to the seventh and eighth grade work), 13 in the commercial department, and one the teachers' course in piano; 15 received State teachers' certificates, including 2 young men, a total of 44. In 1917 there were 7 graduates from the junior college and 3 state certificates granted; in 1918, 10 from the former and 8 for the latter; this year 16 from the college, and 15 state certificates, thus showing a commendable gain.

The college scholarship, for best work during the college course, was won by Christine Roberts, of Lamoni; the academy scholarship by Coral Hatcher, of Cooper, Iowa. Other honors in oratory have been announced from time to time as they were won.

The baccalaureate sermon by Elder James F. Keir, and the commencement address by Elder J. A. Koehler, of Independence, were excellent and were attentively listened to. We hope to have at least a summary for presentation to our readers.

SUNDAY SCHOOL EXECUTIVES MEET

On the 7th and 8th the general officers of the Sunday school held their annual meeting at Independence, Missouri. This was an improvement over the old custom of trying to carry on the business of the association at hurried meetings during the sessions of the conference when it is often impossible for all members to be present.

As a token of the respect and appreciation felt by his former associates in Sunday school work, the Corona typewriter used by Daniel Macgregor in his work was donated to him.

Mrs. A. W. Smith, of Saint Louis, was appointed superintendent of the organized class movement, this being a joint appointment by the Sunday school and Religio.

Mrs. Hazel Burwell was continued as superintendent of the extension work of the home department.

E. F. Yerrington, having acted in that capacity the past year, was appointed to continue the normal department till such time as Graceland College takes over the work, which will be during the present summer.

The convention had referred a statement in the report of the organized class superintendent to the executive council for report, and in consequence a statement was formulated and adopted, which will in due time appear in the church papers. The manuscript for an excellent pamphlet has been written by T. W. Williams for publication the coming year, which will materially help in getting this important work on its feet.

The Sunday school officers fully realize the inconvenience and even serious difficulty that comes from the present system of late issuance of the Quarterlies, and took drastic steps to remedy the situation. While it may not be advisable at present to enumerate all the details of the several alternative steps to be taken, our readers may be assured that something will be done, and that soon, to correct the present trouble. The plans are not temporary, either, for they include work which will extend into the years to come.

An excellent series of object lessons for small children have been worked out at Independence by Mrs. Tessie Smith, and the council appointed a committee to ascertain best methods for putting them into permanent form for use by the schools of the association. They are designed to precede the work of the beginner grade of the Quarterlies.

The proposal of the London District that a Sunday school pin be formulated similar to the one used by the Religio was discussed and referred to the First Presidency with the proposal that a pin to represent membership in the church be designed and used generally. Some would even go so far as to use various colors to designate priesthood, etc., so that the wearer of a pin would often find friends unexpectedly on trips and among strangers. Such an idea has been considered before, and the council hoped it might materialize in this manner.

As a Sunday school representative to cooperate with the college in the normal work, A. L. Sanford was chosen.

The present editors of the Quarterlies are to hold their positions and continue work till such time as other arrangements take effect.

G. R. Wells was reelected as editor of the Sunday school department in Autumn Leaves.

The health of Mrs. H. B. Roberts being in a precarious state, Mrs. Alma Burroughs was chosen as her assistant and the choice ratified by the council.

A resolution prevailed favoring the establishment of Sunday school headquarters and the publishing of the Sunday school Quarterlies at Independence, subject to the approval of the joint council.

The superintendent was voted funds to provide sufficient clerical help to properly carry on his work.

The "winter institute" idea as launched last year and hampered by the ravages of influenza, was indorsed and will be continued. Excellent reports were received from those who had found it possible to carry out the idea.

The superintendent was empowered to make temporary arrangements for revising of Quarterlies.

Another meeting will be held sometime this summer to further complete some of the plans of the council concerning the lessons course.

THE TRUE SUCCESSOR OF THE MARTYR

In December, 1917, we received an inquiry in regard to the appointment by Joseph Smith, jr., of his son to be his successor. It may be of interest to our readers to review part of the evidence, at this time.

Our late President Joseph Smith was very clear in his testimony on this question. On October 1, 1868, he published in the SAINTS' HERALD a statement of which the following is an extract:

In Liberty Jail the promise and blessing of a life of usefulness to the cause of truth was pronounced upon our head by lips tainted by dungeon damps, and by the Spirit confirmed through attesting witnesses.

This blessing has by some been called an ordination from the usual predilection to confound names and terms.

The blessing which marked Moses as the deliverer from Egyptian bondage was not that which Jethro pronounced upon his head.

Subsequent to our baptism in 1843, upon two occasions was the same blessing confirmed by Joseph Smith, once in the council room in the brick store on the banks of the Mississippi, of which we have not a doubt there are witnesses who would confirm the present testimony; once, in the last interview Joseph Smith held with his family before he left Nauvoo to his death. A public attestation of the same blessing was made from the stand in the grove in Nauvoo, some time prior to the murder in Carthage.

We have always felt reluctant to speak in attestation of the position as president of the church, for three reasons:

1st. Every aspirant for that position since the crime that left the church a prey to aspirants, has been loud in his own defense, and has each, in turn, run into vice and folly, thereby causing the cause to be evilly spoken of.

2d. Words are but cheap, protestations are but the breath of one's lips, and wisdom is never very open-mouthed, and the unsupported testimony of any man must fall.

3d. If the Lord has promised, and the work is his, the Spirit which bore testimony to it at the beginning will continue its ministrations.

The silence which in this respect we have hitherto kept, has been variously construed, according to the bias of the minds of the Saints who have been under the various circumstances attendant upon the history of the people since 1844.

Wiseacres, honest in their every conviction, charge fearfulness or hypocrisy; cavilers find cause for doubt, while very many stand aloof from human testimony.

Many concede the right, but deny the manner in which we have been content to accept the honor by ordination, once conferred by blessing.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 14, p. 105; Church History, vol. 3, p. 506.

Again, in the Temple Lot Suit we note his testimony, as follows:

About my selection by my father to be his successor in office, I remember of being called in his office, or into a room adjoining his office, and receiving the laying on of hands, and a prophetic blessing or setting apart, whatever it may be called. I remember that, and also remember that just before his departure for Carthage, with a number of others, I was called into a room in the Mansion House, and there again received the laying on of hands, and the blessing. I was also present at a meeting in the grove near the temple, and I remember my father laying his hands on my head, and saying to the people that this was his successor, or was to be his successor. I remember some of the parties that were on the stand, a few of them I remember, but I do not remember all of them. William Marks, George J. Adams, and I think Willard Richards were on the stand at the time.—Abstract of Evidence, Temple Lot Suit, pp. 40, 41.

On cross examination he reiterated his statements as follows:

No, sir, I did not state that I was ordained by my father; I did not make that statement. I was not ordained by my father as his successor; according to my understanding of the word ordain, I was not. I was blessed by him and designated, well, in a sense chosen, and the word ordain could not be applied in any other sense than by the act of pointing out or indicating only, and he indicated or designated me as his successor.

I do not know what significance you might attach to the word call, but I understood it at the time, and understand it now to have been a blessing conferred upon me, and by the act conferring certain privileges upon me, or to designate me to do certain work, depending, as I understood it then, and understand it now, upon good behavior, and upon any subsequent call I might receive.

I claim to be his successor by lineal right, and by his blessing, and lastly by the right of selection and appointment. It is not necessarily a birthright to be the president of the church. It comes by virtue of fitness and qualification, I may say, good behavior and the choice of the people, recognizing a call or a right.—Abstract of Evidence, Temple Lot Suit, p. 79, folio 126.

Opponents of the church have several times quoted the part in italics, of the first paragraph above, from page 79, to show that Joseph Smith was not appointed by his father, or designated to be his successor. But it will be readily seen that to do so it is necessary to stop in the middle of a sentence. The paragraph as a whole, as well as his testimony as a whole, makes his statement very clear.

He was not ordained in the sense that a man is ordained to an office, so that he becomes the incumbent of that office. His father was still living, and was still the President of the church, but hands were laid upon him to bless him and designate him as his father's successor. There is no confusion for those who desire to learn the truth.

His testimony is confirmed by that of William Smith, his uncle, who as early as 1845 made public declaration that young Joseph is the only legal successor to the presidency of the church, etc. This is to be found in a letter written by one James Kay from Saint Louis, Missouri, on November 22, 1845, in the Millennial Star, volume 7, page 134. This, it is true, became a Brighamite publication. Kay himself apparently sided with the Twelve, but the Millennial Star was not always a Brighamite publication, and in this instance the statement is against its interests and is a valuable testimony in showing how early the succession of "young Joseph" was insisted upon. In 1850 we find William Smith again clearly so asserting, and his testimony to the same effect was also given in the Temple Lot Suit.

James Whitehead's testimony confirms distinctly that of Joseph Smith:

I recollect a meeting that was held in the winter of 1843, at Nauvoo, Illinois, prior to Joseph Smith's death, at which the appointment was made by him, Joseph Smith, of his successor. His son Joseph was selected as his successor. Joseph Smith did the talking. There were present Joseph and Hyrum Smith, John Taylor, and some others who also spoke on the subject: there were twenty-five I suppose at the meeting. At that meeting Joseph Smith, the present presiding officer of the complainant church, was selected by his father as his successor. He was ordained and anointed at that meeting. Hyrum Smith, the Patriarch, anointed him, and Joseph his father blessed him and ordained him, and Newell K. Whitney poured the oil on his head, and he was set apart to be his father's successor in office, holding all the powers that his father held. I cannot tell all the persons that were present, there were a good many there. John Taylor and Willard Richards, they were two of the "Twelve," Ebenezer Robinson was present, and George J. Adams, Alpheus Cutler, and Reynolds Cahoon. I cannot tell them all; I was there too. . . .

The ordination of young Joseph Smith, the gentleman who is now the President of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, took place in the winter of 1843. I do not know the exact date; if I had the history or minutes of that meeting, I could tell you; but history or minutes of that meeting all went to Salt Lake City, and it has been so long that I cannot remember the date. Of course I do not know whether the records ever reached Salt Lake or not; they started for that place; I was not with them; I cannot say what became of them after they left my hands.

The ceremony of the ordination of young Joseph Smith by his father was performed at Nauvoo. Young Joseph was called into the meeting, anointed with oil by his uncle Hyrum Smith, Patriarch of the church. Newell K. Whitney, the Bishop of the church, held the oil, and Joseph Smith, his father, laid his hands upon him, and blessed him and ordained him to be his successor in office. . . .

It was the general understanding and belief among all the members of the church at Nauvoo, that young Joseph was to be his father's successor. I never heard any dissent from it, either before or after the ordination, or before or after the declaration made by Joseph Smith at the meeting at the east end of the temple, that his son had been selected as his successor. That declaration was made to the people.

There might have been three thousand (3,000) or more present; there might not have been quite so many. I do not know the exact number. The people were assembled in Nauvoo, at the east end of the Temple; there was a stand there, and Joseph Smith preached there that day, and made the announcement to the congregation that his son Joseph had been selected as his successor, and that was the time that the people sanctioned it. The people who were there present at that time and sanctioned that ordination belonged to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The people were not called together on the Sunday following the ordination of young Joseph Smith for the purpose of sanctioning the selection and appointment. It was the regular preaching service every Sunday afternoon, there was no calling about it. They gathered to hear the preaching and at that meeting it was declared by Joseph Smith himself that the selection and ordination of his son Joseph as his successor in office had been made, and the people agreed to it, by a vote in the usual way, voting by the uplifted hand.—Abstract of Evidence, Temple Lot Suit, pp. 28, 32, 37.

It will be noted that he uses the term ordain; Joseph Smith does not. If we look beyond the word used, we can see that they are both describing the same act with the same intent. It was not meant that he was ordained to the First Presidency to take his father's place in a way to remove his father from his place, but both agree that hands were laid upon him to the end, and he was anointed to the end, that he should be his father's successor, and was so designated and so accepted by the people. Both of these men bore the same consistent testimony, in writing, on other occasions, as did in fact the others whose names are mentioned in this article.

Lyman Wight on several occasions from an early date related an ordination which took place in Liberty Jail. (In 1838.) He persistently insisted that the Twelve and all other officers should have remained in their place, until the son of Joseph Smith should occupy and take his father's place.

A letter was written to the Northern Islander in July, 1855, in which he states:

Now, Mr. Editor, from what I have written you will discover that what I have done is according to my ordination and calling, having acted in my own place and stewardship, and not in the shoes of any other man. If all had done the same, I think the church would have been in a much higher state of perfection. There was authority enough left to have moved the cause of Zion on, if all the authorities of the church had stepped forward, with the many good instructions given by Brother Joseph, and, heart and hand together, it could have been carried on in perfect good order. Every man standing in his place according to his calling and ordination would have made a firm and sound presidency. And then if one of Joseph's posterity had stepped forth and done his own work (and not his father's), as Joseph's was handed down from father to son by lineage, (and he finished his work,) and handed it down by lineage to his posterity, so should his posterity have done his work which the father gave him to do on earth. Then, and not till then, shall we have a happy kingdom.—Church History, vol. 2, p. 789.

Also an old letter book of Elder Wight's contained the following:

Now, Mr. Editor, if you had been present when Joseph called on me shortly after we came out of jail [Liberty Jail, Missouri.—Ed.] to lay hands with him on the head of a youth, and heard him cry aloud, "You are my successor when I depart," and heard the blessings poured on his head—I say had you heard all this, and seen the tears streaming from his eyes—you would not have been led by blind fanaticism, or a zeal without knowledge.—Church History, vol. 2, pp. 789, 790.

This is apparently similar to the letter written to the Strangites (as the Northern Islander was pub-

THE OUTLOOK--Part 1 Retro-, Per-, and Prospective

BY COLUMBUS SCOTT

O my threshing, and the corn of my floor: that which I have heard of the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, have I declared unto you. The burden of Dumah. He calleth to me out of Seir, Watchman what of the night? Watchman, what of the night? The watchman said, the morning cometh, and also the night: if ye will inquire, inquire ye; return, come.—Isaiah 21: 10-12.

Here is the Lord's invitation to "inquire," "return, come." How solicitous the Lord is that inquiry be made by man, regarding his works, among, and what his purposes are as they relate to man.

A morning and a night coming at the same time. When is that?

This question is propounded to the watchman. Watchman, on Zion's walls, what of the night? Are we of to-day any part of the Lord's threshing? Are we the corn [wheat] of his floor?" Are we being winnowed for his granary? (Matthew 3: 11, 12.) If so, the Lord's inquiry is to us. We of these, "the last days," are concerned. What shall the harvest be?

But what may be said of the retrospect? of the race of men in general? What are the influences which have moved them? What do results now show in general, right or wrong? Has the right conquered or prevailed? Has right prevailed by peace or war? The past and the present are before us. The inquiry can be answered now. What are the primary influences that have overruled man? What, politically? What have his ambitions wrought out? Lasting peace? Enduring grandeur? But one answer can be given. Undue ambition—aristocracy. "Might is right," has been the blind policy, and the world is in the ditch! Examine the fruit. Declare! What of man religiously? Has it been to receive God's laws and fail to observe them? Has this been the case from the beginning? Let results resounding along the ages reply. Love of power; human greatness of riches.

As a result of this, note that the rights of man among his fellows, or equals, have, almost without exception, been vindicated, if at all, by warfare. If right had prevailed, this need not have been. A continuous warlike revolution, with spasmodic exceptions, has been the history of the race.

They have failed to recognize that their "liberty is in the law," and hence have moved out on the plane of license, and bondage has been the result—bondage, the love of unlawful power, power to rule over their fellows. What has been left to the world as a result? Let us look abroad to-day and see! Results and conditions are the outgrowth of certain causes operating back of them. All past history is with us here. It cannot be now reversed. It is too late. The history is a sad one as the history of nations passes in review. When nations have chosen might instead of the right to maintain themselves—to destroy, when undue might lets them, is the result.

Why is it thus through all the past of men and nations? Law carried out produces organized durability, intelligent order, liberty, and peace. This has been the experience of a minority of the human race. If this be not true, why is the world at this time of the world's greatest war in the condition it is?

Man's best efforts when not right are unavailing of good—are a failure. Ignorance has done its share of the failure of the past. We cannot think it all mistaken honesty, misdirected knowledge, that has made all the past so dismal a failure! There are instances of the light of the Divine having been seen in the lives and triumphs of a few of earth's pilgrims—Enoch, Noah, Abraham. Relating to human affairs—Joseph in Egypt, Moses, Daniel, Alexander, and a few others in later times. Kings of Israel were failures. But when, at any one period, has the world all stood in the light? At what time in the past has the world all stood for the light of God? And in human liberty and right? But it has always taken might among mankind to vindicate the right. It is because right has been opposed by—aristocracy.

PRESENT CONDITIONS

What are they as affecting the world? Are the forces now in operation all right, or are they wrong? Is it right to maintain the rights and liberty of man when it can be done? Innately to the right-minded there is but one answer. Justice says, yes. Be free. Let me help you. Be free and happy. Enjoy your liberty, both civil and religious. Be progressive in light—intelligence. Do this by peace if possible. Aristocratic might cannot always prevail. No. Justice, love, and mercy are blended. They coordinate. They are on the upward move. Man will yet be established in his rightful place. This is divinely purposed. The entire line of prophecy so testifies. But, the past and the present are before us. The latter abides. Passing—of the future. What? "A night" and "the morning" cometh. Both coming? Yes. Are we approaching the dawn of one and the twilight of the other? The dawn of the day of the church? The twilight of the world's night? Which are we to enter? Zion's glory the millennium? Are we now entering the period when the day-star is to appear—is coming before us? We can now see the twilight of the one, and the dawn of the other. We are approaching "the time of the end," of the world. (Daniel 12: 9.) But it is "the time of the end." Events to be accomplished do not admit of "the end" coming in a moment of our calculation of time. Please stop. Notice. "In the time of the end," many shall run to and fro, said the angel, "and knowledge shall increase."

Our Savior, too, very strongly indicates where we are in the drama of time, in his discourse found in Matthew 20: 1-16, where he illustrates "the kingdom of heaven," (a phrase by him applied to the church), as it existed in the history of the world, and as it exists to-day.

Jesus answered, Are there not twelve hours in the day? —John 11: 9.

Was not the early hour of the morning representative of the days before the flood, when men were enabled by the gospel to "walk with God," as did the Prophet Enoch? (Genesis 5: 22.) I am aware that the idea of the antiquity of the gospel antedating the times of the Savior's ministry is not accepted as truth with many—even believers in Christ. But let us be considerate.

How will the worthies who lived and died from Adam to Christ's passion be saved? Is there more than one "straight gate," or "narrow way" whereby mankind can be redeemed and saved everlastingly? Let Jesus and Paul answer this question.

Enter ye in at the straight gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: Because straight is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. —Matthew 7: 13, 14.

Where is "the straight gate and narrow way" revealed?

For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, The just shall live by faith.—Romans 1: 16, 17.

Here is God's answer to any and all who may "inquire." Any answer differing from these. Jesus said:

For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting: whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak.—John 12: 49, 50.

By the gospel only, then, can man be saved in God's eternal kingdom, whether in the days of Adam and Enoch, Abraham or Moses, Paul, or John Wesley. How could Enoch of old "walk with God three hundred years," without righteousness? God's everlasting righteousness is revealed only in the gospel. We will fortify here.

ENOCH KNEW THE GOSPEL

And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him. —Jude 14, 15.

Is it possible that Enoch could know about "the second coming" to judge the world of sinners (Matthew 16: 27, and 25: 31-46), and have no knowledge concerning our Savior's first advent and mission, and its eternal consequences to the world of mankind? (1 Timothy 2: 5-7.) Is it possible that Enoch was a subject of the "ransom" given for all men, and he a holy man, and have no understanding of it? Christ was the ransom for all.

Did not the atonement made by the Savior reach back to Enoch, Abel, and Noah? (See Matthew 23: 35.) Noah, by faith, became an "heir," by gospel adoption, to "the righteousness which is by faith." (Hebrews 11: 7.) Was not Christ, the lamb of God, seen as one "slain from the foundation of the world?" Will righteous men who, like Enoch and Noah, live in the "early morning" "hour," fail to be with and sing the song of the redeemed of all the ages? And if they are there will they sing in truth the song there heard? (Revelation 5: 9, 10.) "Thou hast redeemed us by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation." The gospel is based on the eternal love of God and his Son, and consists of eternal "principles" of the doctrine: Christ shed his blood to ratify. (Hebrews 5: 12 and 6: 1-3; John 3: 3-11. See also Hebrews 9: 28; 10: 7.)

We may safely conclude from the foregoing Bible testimony cited that the gospel of eternal salvation was proclaimed in the early morning hour of the world; while those taught looked forward in mighty faith to the cross, as we now believing look back to the mission, infinite, while obeying and living those principles.

"THE THIRD HOUR"

And he went out about the third hour, and saw others standing idle in the market place, and said unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard, and whatsoever is right I will give you. And they went their way.—Matthew 20: 3.

"About the third hour," would be not far from nine o'clock a. m., at the time of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Melchisedec, priest of the Most High God, King of (Jeru)Salem. Was the gospel preached in the days of Abraham? What was the mission of the king of righteousness—Melchisedec—at that period of the world? It is the duty and prerogative of a priest of the Most High God, of the Melchisedec order, to administer in the law of God relating to the salvation of dying man. What was this great high priest doing when administering "bread and wine"? Were they celebrating the Lord's supper, and by faith in the gospel looking forward to the coming of Christ to be the Redeemer of the world?

Was Abraham made acquainted with the gospel—the way of salvation?

To the unbelieving Jews Jesus said:

Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day; and he saw it, and was glad. Then said the Jews unto him, Thou art not yet fifty years old, and hast thou seen Abraham? Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Before Abraham was, I am.—John 8: 56-58.

Abraham was "the friend of God." (2 Chronicles 20: 7; Isaiah 41: 8.)

"But thou, Israel, art my servant, Jacob whom I have chosen, the seed of Abraham my friend." Is it possible that Abraham was God's "friend," and yet God left him ignorant of the great salvation brought to light through the gospel of his Son? Let the Apostle Paul answer:

And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed.—Galatians 3: 8.

"The Scriptures" referred to here, no doubt, are those that embody and relate to the covenant that God made with Abraham four hundred and thirty years before the covenant made with Israel, at Sinai. Paul said:

Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ. And this I say, that the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect. For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise: but God gave it to Abraham by promise.—Galatians 3: 16-18.

According to these statements of Paul, Abraham was an adopted heir of the gospel by the gospel covenant. For "the gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth," both Jew and Gentile.

The gospel preached to (and we say by), Abraham; that in him and his seed which is Christ; is the gospel as it was preached by the apostle, and as we believe it. Let us read:

For the promise that he [Abraham] should be the heir of the world was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith.—Romans 4: 13, 14.

Abraham then, by the gospel preached to him, and his faith in and obedience thereto, "became the heir of the world." Yes, so also are all those who "Walk in the steps of the faith of our father Abraham."

How many of us down here in "the eleventh hour" of the world's day are walking in the steps of that faith? By that faith he talked with God. God talked with his friend and constituted him the heir of the world, and the father of the faithful. But further: Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were not only heirs of God, but were missionaries as well, of the message of salvation. (Hebrews 11: 9, 10.)

By faith he sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise: for he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. . . . These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth.—Hebrews 11: 9, 10, 13, 14.

Will anything short of obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ, and the work of the righteousness therein, save us? Is God a respecter of persons? (Acts 10: 34.)

Would anything aside from this save Abraham, Melchisedec, or Isaac, and constitute them heirs of God, the world, and him the Father of us all?

These are most wonderful considerations as relating to the future of God's children! What is it to be the heir of the world? To inherit eternal life? Immortal glory? The kingdom of heaven? And the earth? (Matthew 5: 1-9.)

Can these constituting the reward, inheritance of the redeemed, come to any of God's children independently of Christ? Independently of the gospel? If so, is Christ "all and in all?" If the eternal inheritance can be attained and not obey the gospel, how? If one could, cannot we all? "God is no respecter of persons." Then did Abraham and others, hear, believe, and obey the gospel in Abraham's day? In "the third hour" dispensation of the gospel and "the kingdom of heaven?"

But again:

When they went from one nation to another, from one kingdom to another people, he suffered no man to do them wrong; yea, he reprov'd kings for their sakes; saying, Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.—Psalm 105: 13-15.

Did God "anoint" these prophets just to go among the nations visiting? Did he constitute them prophets to sport in kings' courts and feast? Did God rebuke kings to insure their safety to "gallant" among the elite as gentlemen of leisure? What is an "anointed" one as referred to here by David? It was to be under God and Christ a "Savior."

What are the chief duties of a prophet?

Of Israel's return from Babylonian captivity, Nehemiah said:

Thou gavest them saviors, who saved them out of the hand of their enemies.—Nehemiah 9: 27.

And saviors shall come upon Mount Zion to judge the mount of Esau; and the kingdom shall be the Lord's.—Obadiah, verse 21.

Savior, in the subordinate sense, is an instrument in God's hands to save. The prophet's duty is to reveal God's will and law, and to proclaim the divine word, and declare that which is to come—to prophesy. What they said and did religiously may not all be found in the Bible now; but it appears evident from what is said there, on this theme, that the kingdom of heaven existed then; and that God's people in Abraham's day labored in his vineyard for man's eternal salvation—eternal—as called and sent "laborers."

And I say unto you, That many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven.—Matthew 8: 11.

If those then living did not do the things that Jesus taught, what will be the result? Answer:

The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised.—Luke 4: 18.

And why call me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say? Whosoever cometh to me, and heareth my sayings, and doeth them [not some man's interpretation of them], I will show you to whom he is like: He is like a man which built an house, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock: and when the flood arose, the stream beat vehemently upon that house, and could not shake it; for it was founded upon a rock. But he that heareth, and doeth not, is like a man that without a foundation built an house upon the earth; against which the stream did beat vehemently, and immediately it fell; and the ruin of that house was great.—Luke 6: 46-49.

Who in any age or clime can be saved without doing what Christ says? Will those of Abraham's day, who did those things Christ taught be found in the kingdom of God? Hear the testimony of Jesus:

Nicodemus saith unto him, how can a man be born when he is old? can he enter the second time into his mother's womb, and be born? Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.—John 3: 4, 5.

In verse 11, Jesus declares:

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen; and ye receive not our witness.

What do you know, our Savior? What do you testify? I know that except mankind are born of the water and of the Spirit, they cannot enter the kingdom of God. Strange! Yet eternally true! This is the gospel.

The "laborers" of the third hour of the day; therefore administered the gospel. Men obeyed it, lived it, and were saved by it. Obedience thereto. Obedience, a faithful life spent in observing it brings the inheritance.

THE SIXTH HOUR

"Again he went out about the sixth and ninth hour, and did likewise."

Inasmuch as the subject of the Savior's discourse is "the kingdom of heaven," the laborers are his ministry, those who are called, authorized, and sent by him to labor in the vineyard.

Referring, doubtless, to the laborers of the earlier hours of the world's day, Jesus, when on earth, said to his then chosen laborers—disciples:

I sent you to reap that whereon ye bestowed no labor: other men labored, and ye are entered into their labors.—John 4: 38.

The laborers of "the sixth" hour must have been those sent in the days of Moses, along about fourteen to sixteen hundred years B. C. and perhaps afterwards. Of the coming of the children of Israel out of Egypt, in Exodus 18, we read of an eminent man, a priest, Jethro by name, the father-in-law of Moses. After Israel had been brought out of Egypt, Jethro came to visit Moses, no doubt to converse about the wonderful work accomplished by God through Moses. Jethro seemed to have lived and labored and ministered in the land of Midian. We cannot think for a moment that Moses had married the daughter of a wicked, idolatrous priest, or that Moses would have taken the counsel of such a priest in the work of God which Moses had been authorized of heaven to do, to lead Israel out of Egypt. (Exodus 18: 17-24.)

"So Moses hearkened to the voice of his father-in-law, and did all that he said." Would God have sent an idolatrous priest to give his servant Moses counsel regarding his great work of bringing his people, the children of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob out of bondage, and leading them to their promised land? Well, hardly. Moses had been commissioned of God direct to do this work. (Exodus 3.)

Jethro was evidently a priest, laborer, divinely sent. God's angels were also connected with Moses in his great mission. No idolatrous priest ever counseled Moses.

According to our common Bible chronology, Moses was born about 1580 to 1500 B. C. He lived to be one hundred and twenty years of age. (Exodus 2: 1-3; Deuteronomy 34: 7.) Another eminent character, Job by name, lived contemporaneously with Moses and Jethro. He lived in the land of Uz. "And that man was perfect and upright, and one that feared God, and eschewed evil." (Job 1: 1.) "Sons of God," Saints, lived in his day and country. (Job 1: 6; 1 John 3: 2, 3.) Men became sons of God in the days of John, by obeying the gospel. Job was a man of broad, tolerant mind. He understood the gospel, knew of his "Redeemer," of the resurrection, and of the second coming of Jesus to raise the dead. Like the Apostle Paul, he believed in Christ's coming in glory. (1 Thessalonians 4: 15; Job 19: 23-27.) He speaks as one understanding the science of astronomy, the earth's revolutions (chapter 22: 12-14; also Proverbs 8: 24-27; Isaiah 40: 22), as taught by men of God from the beginning.

When Job was so seriously tried, so deeply afflicted, his unyielding hope in the Lord sustained him until his wonderful recovery. His saintly patience is commended by the Apostle James as exemplary. But as to understanding of science, he further speaks of the sun and earth. (Job 22: 14; 26: 7, 8.) "He stretcheth out the north over the empty place, and hangeth the earth upon nothing." How did he know the earth was hung upon nothing, suspended in space, as it travels in its circuit? (See also Proverbs 8: 27; the margin here for compass gives us circle. See also Isaiah 40: 21, 22.) Job discourses positively, as viewing his future life but did not hold it perfect without the resurrection.

If a man die, shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come. Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee: thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands.—Job 14: 14, 15.

Is this language true? Is it gospel truth?

It is written in the prophets, And they shall all be taught of God. Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me. . . . Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me hath everlasting life.—John 6: 45, 47.

Job spoke as one who knew. And to know is a long step in advance of faith, or belief. Faith in God's word leads to obedience; and knowledge follows after. (Read carefully, John 17: 20, 21; Acts 2: 37-39; Acts 8: 12-20; Acts 19: 1-7.)

How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent? as it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things.—Romans 10: 14, 15.

Paul the Apostle bases his great argument in favor of his and our hope of eternal life, on the fact of Jesus Christ's resurrection from the dead (Acts 24: 14, 15; 1 Corinthians 15: 1-14), and that the resurrection of the righteous dead will be at Christ's second advent. Job's faith in God and the eternal life to come seems as clear to him as did Paul's hope to him. Job understood that he should wait till the appointed time, and then God would call for him. (Job 14: 14, 15.) But Job gave a strong testimony as to his hope in God, and the second coming of Christ, and the resurrection of the dead; and that he should then see his Redeemer in his flesh. Hear him in the darkest hour of his trial:

Oh that my words were now written! oh that they were printed in a book! that they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock forever! for I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me.—Job 19: 23-27.

How like the gospel Job's testimony of the resurrection, his hope here reads. He not only believed his "Redeemer" lives, but said he knew this to be true. Like Noah, Enoch, and Abraham, he also knew of his Redeemer's second coming to resurrect, to judge, and reign on the earth.

The Prophet Isaiah knew of the doctrine of the resurrection. Like Job and Enoch he was enabled to know of a certainty of this eternally wonderful truth. To ancient Israel he declared:

Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead. . . . For, behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity: the earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain.—Isaiah 26: 19, 21.

How wonderful these testimonies, though given at different periods, as to the second coming of our Savior and the resurrection of the righteous dead at that time, and the realization of their wonderful hope of eternal glory, then!

As it relates to the truth of the proposition that the gospel was proclaimed in, or under "the sixth hour" call, let us hear the great Apostle Paul, who learned the gospel from Jesus Christ only. (Galatians 1: 8-12.) Speaking of Israel's deliverance from Egyptian bondage, Paul said:

For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them: but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it.—Hebrews 4: 2.

This would seem to be conclusive as to what was done by the "householder" in "the sixth hour." Why should it be necessary for God to call a ministry into his vineyard at these several periods of time in the world's history? A pertinent question is this. We answer: Because of a period between these "hours" there was a gradual departure from God, the truth; intervening these several hours, an apostasy occurred, and therefore, men had to be called to take up the same work anew, when darkness came over the earth and gross darkness the minds of the people. The work of the salvation of men, and the building up of "the kingdom of heaven," must be done in the Lord's way—the gospel way, and by heavenly authority.

Authority, legitimate authority, can come in one of two ways only! If it be to build up God's kingdom, it can come from God only. If it be to build up a human government, the authority to act—minister—it can be vested in those called to act for the people, only by the voice of the people. The two classes of ministry must administer in accord with the law that governs, respectively. In the Republic, the authority comes ascending from the people up to those called to minister. In the kingdom of God, all authority comes from heaven to man. And, that man may receive this authority, and the divine direction to minister, the King of heaven must speak; and man must hear. And the authority comes descending from God, in whose kingdom they are laboring.

THEN AND NOW

In the course of human events, men and women are allowed the right to change in their attitude toward any government and either indorse the constitution under which they exist, or rebel against that which they believe to be against their liberties. It is not the purpose of this article to cause misery to an innocent people, but more expressly to call attention to some facts of history that need to be known by those who are not in possession of this necessary information affecting a certain class of religious believers of to-day.

There has been an effort made in the very recent past on the part of certain officials of the dominant church in Utah to place that church in a favorable light before the people of the world, in representing that church as always being loyal to the Government under which they have existed. While we do not question their loyalty at the present time, we do question the loyalty of their leaders in the early history of Utah, when without doubt they were in open rebellion to the Government of the United States. In the recent pamphlet published by the Mormons in which the question is raised as to the attitude of the church as to its loyalty, the facts as we believe, are misrepresented. On page one of the pamphlet known as Pertinent Facts on Utah's Loyalty and War Record, appears the following:

The Latter Day Saints who settled Utah in those early days were, therefore, exceedingly loyal, naturally so because of their faith and devotion to the church of which they were members.

The above statement is challenged by the writer as to its truthfulness. We believe every student of history is acquainted with the facts well enough to know that the church is not presenting the facts as to the loyalty of the people who at one time were in open rebellion to the Government.

If the utterances of the leading representative men of that church correctly represented the church, then beyond all question they were at one time in rebellion, and therefore not loyal, as the claim is now made.

We shall content ourselves with quoting some of the statements made at an early day by men who stood at the head of that organization in the valleys of the mountains. We shall not attempt to give nearly all that was said by these men. But only enough to show the spirit of the people.

When it became known by Brigham Young and those associated with him that the Government was going to remove him as Governor of the territory, and place another in his stead, it was decided that he would not allow any person to have that position who might be sent by the general Government. When this became known an army was sent by the United States to enforce the order in removing Brigham Young and in the seating of the person appointed. About that time Heber C. Kimball, a counselor to Brigham Young, made the following statement:

In relation to those soldiers coming here, they can never come, so long as the Lord God Almighty gives us strength to resist them. And that is not all. There is no man that can rule over this people but Brigham Young. (The congregation shouted, Amen.) As long as we uphold him as the man holding the keys of this kingdom, he shall rule as governor of this people. What a foolish thing it would be for us to drop Brother Brigham and say that a wicked man shall have that position.

This same speaker went on to say that "We have declared our independence." (Journal of Discourses, vol. 5, pp. 274, 275.)

As the army under General Johnson approached Utah they were met by men under the direction of Brigham Young who did all they could to prevent their coming into Salt Lake City. It is a well-known fact that Young defied the Government, and did all he could to prevent the execution of the laws enacted by the legislative bodies of our country in the government of Utah. For years they were in constant rebellion, until it became necessary to confiscate their church property and hundreds of the leading men were either in hiding or serving sentences for their rebellion.

While we would not hold men of to-day responsible for that which was clearly in opposition to the laws of our country at that time, yet we do believe men of to-day should not attempt to misrepresent the fact that is so well known by all. We can afford to be charitable with all people, but we can never feel that men are honest when they knowingly and willfully tell that which is an untruth. If the leaders of the Utah Church to-day would have us believe in their honesty, let them come out and frankly admit that their leaders under existing conditions prevalent at the time when these things were in evidence, made a mistake, then and only then can we have any confidence in their honesty now. By no rule can we have any confidence in the honesty and integrity of any class of men who attempt to take advantage of people, who they think are ignorant of the facts as presented in history.

The Reorganized Church in contrast to the Utah church has never had to come out and defend its loyalty and seek to cover up the history of the past as to our attitude to the governments under which we have existed. In every land and in every clime where our representatives have gone we have never come under the ban of the law. Our leading representatives have always stood for the governments and laws, asking the Saints to abide by the same. Joseph Smith the founder of the church and his son, the late Joseph Smith, were law-abiding citizens. They were never in rebellion to their country. The present president of the church, Frederick M. Smith, following the noble example of his predecessors, is regarded as a man who is intensely patriotic and loyal to his country.

As compared to this nearly every president of the Utah church has been convicted of crime. Even the late president of their church paid a three-hundred dollar fine for unlawful cohabitation. We regret to mention these facts, and were it not for the question raised by that body of people in the very recent past we would not do so, allowing the memories of the past to be forgotten. When they themselves raise the question, for the sake of honest men and women we are willing to speak and let the facts be known. To show their honesty let the leaders of the Utah church come out and state their loyalty now to our Government. We can believe that the people who now are members of that church want to be patriotic and loyal, but if there is an effort made to misrepresent the opposition waged by their leaders in the years of the past against the Government of the United States, then we have no confidence in their statements of their loyalty now.

When men prove themselves untruthful in one matter, how can we have any confidence in them? Much could be said coming from the leading men who spoke in the past, but we will not attempt to give their words as it would not make the case any stronger. It is too well known at this time what the history of Utah has been for men to seek denial now as the means of escape from just condemnation. In the pamphlet referred to above the effort is made to cause people to think that Utah has always been loyal which is not true. Let us hope that from now on they may be loyal and cease defending that church when it was antagonistic to the Government of our beloved country.

AN OBSERVER.

EFFECT OF CHRISTIANITY IN THE WORLD

The inspired writer has said:

For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater; so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return to me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereunto I sent it.—Isaiah 55: 10, 11.

If there should be any disposition on the part of anyone to doubt the effects of Christianity upon the world, the above statement would remove such doubt taking for granted its inspiration.

Its effects are so numerous and so far-reaching that with our limited comprehension we are not able to fathom the depths nor scale the heights, nor to penetrate unto the utmost corners of a darkened and benighted world to search out the marvelous and wonderful effects it has had upon the race of mankind. Even those nations who have not formally accepted Christianity are walking in the light of it and receiving its benefits.

CIVILIZATION

Christianity's effect upon civilization is easily discernible. The highest degree of civilization can be attained by those only whose standard is the highest, whose thoughts, acts, and aspirations are based upon a true conception of their duties and responsibilities toward God and their fellow men; hence Christian nations whose laws are based upon the divine laws of justice and righteousness are those who stand the highest in the scale of civilization.

If by Christianity we refer to that system of philosophy which was taught by Christ and his immediate followers, the effect will be the moral and spiritual regeneration of the world, as it is traceable to that endless fountain of purity and goodness out of which the stream of crystal purity and goodness flows, and has been the eternal stream of all true progress and all true civilization in all ages.

What has heathenism contributed to civilization by which peoples and nations have risen higher in the scale of development in all that pertains to true progress and true greatness? Nothing. The pages of history record their fruitless efforts as well as their downfall. On the other hand, Christianity has contributed everything worthy of note either directly or indirectly through its inspirational light, and thus has given greater power of comprehension and development.

If such wonderful progress has been brought about, as is manifest, by only a partial allegiance to the cause of Christ, we may well surmise the result of an unreserved, full and complete submission and fidelity to the principles which he taught. As a result we may expect greater degrees of spiritual light and power to explore and develop the spiritual, moral, and mental forces in contradistinction to the brute force and animal passions of the natural man.

"THE GLORY OF GOD IS INTELLIGENCE" (DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS 90: 5)

When the time shall come that the earth shall be lightened by his glory, it will be a glory of God-given intelligence to men on the earth as a result of perfect correspondence to a perfect Christ-system—Christianity in its fullness.

Now, we only enjoy in part the effects of Christianity, because we only yield a partial submission to its requirements, and are not able to perfectly correspond with the provisions.

Through an intelligent comprehension of the forces in nature and the laws governing the same, God evidently intended that man should search out, harness, subdue, and have dominion over the earth, not by brute force; but by a comprehension of the forces in nature, men might bring these into requisition for their use, pleasure, and benefit. May we not also assume that in this, the age of ages, God has marvelously endowed men with power to accomplish this—to have dominion over earth, sea, and air? Yet it is only the beginning of what the great millennium will develop.

Intelligence—what is it? It is the great moral and spiritual thermometer of civilization; the thermometer which records all our deeds, as they may be expressed in our social, religious, and political functions, and in our law and lawmaking assemblies, and all of our outgoings and incomings, one with another. If these things are of a high order, that great thermometer will tell us so; if low, it will so indicate. If God's glory is intelligence, can man's glory be anything else?

Intelligence, then, binds God and man into such close relationship that we are forced to the conclusion that men were taught of God. Intelligence then, is the effect of Christ-ianity (Christ in us in unity).

FRATERNAL AND CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

With intelligence developed, but with sympathy and kindness undeveloped, we would have a one-sided Christianity. But this is not the case. Abundance of evidence abounds everywhere to prove that the gospel seed is producing an abundant harvest. The humanitarian side of life is in every nation, in the various societies and organizations effected for the alleviation of the suffering, destitute, and distressed in every land and clime where the name of Christ is known. Fraternal orders exist in every community who care for their sick and dying. Nations assist each other in dire distress and calamity. Charity workers are everywhere to look after the sick and afflicted, the poor and the needy. We have the national and international order of the Red Cross society, ready and willing to face danger and even death, for the service they may render to humanity; thus offering themselves upon the altar of service a living sacrifice, that they may follow the example of him who died upon the cross to save others. True heroes and heroines indeed, in the service of humanity, effected by God-inspired motives to do good. What greater effect could Christianity produce?

WICKED AND EVIL FORCES

With the birth of Christianity, was also brought into existence opposing forces, seeking to destroy, and, in various manners, counteract the effect of Christianity. But regardless of every opposition and every hindrance, it has continued to flourish to the present time, and thus the word of the Lord is verified: "It shall not return to me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereunto I sent it."

Nothing could be more convincing of the effect of Christianity, than the courage and absolute fearlessness with which those who had embraced it met the opposition of these wicked and evil forces, and the martyr's crown became the crown of millions who sealed their testimony to its truth with their blood.

War, yes, war and strife was the natural result of Christianity introduced into a wicked world—not the effect of it. The Master said that he did not come to bring peace, but a sword, knowing as he did, the great forces at work, seeking to destroy the effect of his teaching. But thanks be to God, there have always been men, fearless men, who have not been afraid to stand for the right and oppose the wrong with an abiding faith in the ultimate success of the work of God. Should the time ever come that Christianity should fail to produce such men, then and not until then can we say that the effect of Christianity has failed.

LAWS IN GENERAL AND WOMAN SUFFRAGE

Ancient laws were in favor of the rich, the noble, and the mighty, suppressing the rights and privileges of the poor and less fortunate. But also in this respect do we see the handwriting of God on the wall, and laws are changing to bring about an equality before the law. As a sample of oppression, of unjust laws and governments, we only need refer to the dissatisfaction and discontent which arose in the American colonies when oppressed by unjust laws of the ruling power of England. This dissatisfaction is best expressed in the Declaration of Independence, which says: "The history of the present king of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute tyranny over these States. To prove this let the facts be submitted to a candid world." Then follows a series of, no doubt, just charges of his tyrannical and despotic government, which these noble framers of this immortal document had the courage and conviction to sustain by the force of arms, when there was no other earthly power to appeal to for relief. They asserted that all men are created equal. Why, then, should laws be inaugurated to make men unequal?

Just a few years after the Declaration of Independence, and the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, the Lord spoke to the church as follows:

That law of the land, which is constitutional, supporting that principle of freedom, in maintaining rights and privileges belongs to all mankind and is justifiable before me; therefore, I, the Lord, justified you, and your brethren of my church, in befriending that law which is the constitutional law of the land; and as pertaining to the law of man, whatsoever is more or less than these cometh of evil. I, the Lord, maketh you free; therefore, ye are free indeed: and the law also maketh you free.—Doctrines and Covenants 95: 2.

Again the Lord says in section 98: 10:

Therefore, it is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another. And for this purpose have I established the constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood.

Thus we discover that one of the greatest boons that has come to man in this world as a result of Christianity is the establishment of a government of freedom and equality directly inspired of God that all men might be free and equal. But as yet we have not reached that equality before the law as we contemplated. Article 15, sections 1 and 2 of the amendments to the Constitution, says: "The right of the citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. The Congress shall have power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article."

Who are the citizens of the United States? Are not both sexes (considered) citizens? And yet women are not yet allowed to vote in many States, though power is given to Congress to enforce such legislation. We have not yet fully come out from under the spell of the Dark Ages, when woman was only considered a slave and inferior to man. This is yet true in many countries, and in no country has woman approached to an almost equality with man, except in the United States. But until she is placed on an absolute equality, we are not living up to the provisions of the law, and the will of him who inspired that law which is constitutional is not honored. God made both equal in the beginning and the effect of true Christianity is to make both equal now. It is not Christianity to consider one sex above another. Both are equally necessary in the consummation of God's eternal purposes.

THE LIGHTS OF THE AGES

Since the dawn of creation many lights, dim and small, have arisen, and millions of the sons and daughters of men have walked in those lights, and do yet; and so far as members are concerned are yet in the majority, while Christianity is in the minority.

Gautama Buddha, the reformer of Brahmanism, became the founder of Buddhism, which to-day has a following in India and surrounding country of upward of five hundred millions. But what is the result and effect of this system? Their standard of civilization and their progress is the answer. They are weighed in their own balances and found wanting.

Confucianism has been the religion of China, with a population of about four hundred million. The result and effect of that system is written across the pages of history and needs no comment.

Shintoism is the religion of Japan and is adhered to by its millions. And while Japan has made wonderful progress in civilization, it is all due to her coming in contact with western civilization which had adopted Christianity as its beacon light. What progress had Japan made more than any of the Asiatic countries before she began to borrow of the light of Christianity?

Zoroastrianism is the religion of the Medes and the Persians, founded by one Zoroaster, the renowned sage and prophet of Persia, who combined in himself the threefold character of philosopher, poet, and prophet.

Mohammedanism is a system of religion founded by Mohammed in the seventh century A. D., whose followers numbered in 1893 about one hundred and twenty-three million, and what has it accomplished in the way of progress and civilization? It is rather more notorious for its uncivilized condition and cruel barbarities.

Brahmanism is the religion of the Hindus who, in 1893, numbered one hundred and twenty million, who were divided into four castes: (1) the priests; (2) the warriors; (3) the tradesmen; (4) the servants. This religion was the religion of India until the arrival of Gautama Buddha who was the son of a powerful prince, and who became the reformer of Brahmanism.

To show the evident position that some of these occupy religiously, I will just quote the language of a Brahman priest of high standing, at the Chicago Parliament of Religions. He said: "The science of religion will become perfect when it discovers him who is the life of the universe of death, who is the constant basis of an ever-changing world, who is the only soul of which all souls are but manifestations."

This evidently sounds the keynote to many of the heathen religions, showing that they are groping in darkness, trying to discover, trying to find him who said: "I am the life and the light of the world."

While Christianity is in the minority, so far as numbers go, yet the great majority must come and borrow from that light which guides their destiny, realizing that their own light is insufficient to accomplish the results which they see accomplished in Christian nations.

In closing these few thoughts, I will do so by using the language of Reverend A. J. Canfield, one of the editors of "Rays of Light from all Lands":

As the bending sky surpasses the clouds which drift across it, so stand the everlasting laws of justice, truth, and love. Whenever and wherever those laws are read aright, the human soul will recognize amid its infinite diversity of operations a blessed unity more glorious than that which binds the suns and systems of countless constellations into one harmonious whole.

Then will occur the glad consummation for which the wisest sages of all ages have longed, which the inspired prophets of every religion have foretold, and which the minstrels and poets of aspiring humanity everywhere have spent their lives in singing—the "One far-off divine event,

To which the whole creation moves," and which can be nothing less than the triumphant coming of the kingdom of him who is to gather in one all things, both that which is in heaven and that which is on earth—the Christ that is to be.

Thus will finally be brought about the great triumphal effect of Christianity when at last we in him shall live and move and have our being.

S. K. SORENSEN.

This church is the pioneer in modern times of what is popularly known as "faith healing," believing that God is both able and willing to "help our infirmities;" practicing the admonition, "Is any sick among you?" let him call for the elders, and let them pray over him and anoint him with oil in the name of the Lord (James 5:15), and that the power of God in the lives of the people can and does produce the same results which gladdened the hearts of the early Christians, as outlined in 1 Corinthians 12, also Mark 16:16-20.—G. H. Wixom, in Santa Ana Daily Register.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

BETWEEN YOU AND ME

[Under the above title, an article by A. A. Jensen appeared in the Utah Labor News, for May 17, 1919, and has been kindly forwarded to us by C. A. Smurthwaite. This statement of the position of the church will not be new to our readers, but is of interest in appearing in a Labor newspaper. Much yet remains to be done, but we hope to see steady progress to accomplish our ideals, social and economic, for the good of the man who works.—EDITORS.]

There is no question but that the labor party will accomplish wonders if all signs do not fail and we hope that the different church denominations will be able to see their way clear to give them a helping hand. In our own country there is at least one church organization that has tried to follow the path of true Christianity and has for several years past practiced the principle of a social responsibility toward its membership. Mr. John W. Rushton of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints in part, says:

"The church has from its beginning been interested in the application of the Christian ethics and ideals to the social and economic aspects of life. With more and more clarity we are beginning to appreciate the fact that life is not a desiccated association of non-related interests and that we cannot successfully think of dividing it into separate compartments. But that all the varied day's work and experiences, whether physical, mental, or spiritual, are intimately related to each other; and indeed frequently, if not always, identical in their bearing upon character and destiny. The time, place, and the manner of life, together with the educational, cultural, and religious influences are important factors in contributing to the sum total of character wherein lies the secret of 'destiny.' While it is true that the church cannot become the instrument of politics, industry, and commerce directly, and as a matter of fact it seems that every time she did so or attempted it, the church was in serious trouble, yet together with the home and the school the church is one of the great and primary agents in the development of character, the modification in environments and the generating of activities making altogether for better social conditionings. It is just as true that when the church tried to divorce herself from the things which were near and real to the life of men, she was not only worthless, but became an actual menace to the public weal.

"'Salvation' was a term which meant much more than merely personal preparation for heaven. It was a very practical thing and included the reactions for goodness, justice, and truth which an individual Christian would set up in the community in which he lived. Even the judgment was interpreted by him to be an investigation by God of the way in which our alleged Christianity had resulted in the alleviation of human misery, the abolition of hunger and poverty, together with the heroic devotion of ourselves to the uplift of our fellows from the slough of despondency into which they had sunken."

He states that the Latter Day Saints from the beginning have been greatly interested in this aspect of the Christian hope, and have persistently preached a "literal Zion" upon the earth, which would have its beginning at Independence, Missouri, and widening out more and more, until the whole earth should be filled with the "glory of God." To these people the kingdom of heaven also meant the literal organization of men and women, who, accepting the Christian ethics as the rule of conduct, would bring the collective life under the immediate control of God. To remove the curse of poverty, and resultant hardships by giving to all men equal opportunities, so that each would be fair to all and do all for the communal weal, to impress the wealthy with the truth that they were "stewards" and should use their means, opportunities, and power to insure the greatest happiness to the greatest number, and not for their own ends or selfish purposes. He says that while it is true that several attempts have been made to realize the ends in view they may not have produced any revolutionary results, yet at least it is sure that the people have become saturated with this idea of social religion and have made some heroic progress to give concrete expression thereto. For it is still true that what men dream of they have power to be.

THE ORDER OF ENOCH

At the present time an auxiliary order, consisting of church members, called by the rather antiquated and possible pretentious name of 'The Order of Enoch,' because of the tradition that Enoch's people were pure in heart and no man considered what he had was his own, so there was not any poor because no man was rich, is the agency through which the efforts to apply the religious principles to economics and industry is being made.

He claims that so far as the church is concerned it is the purpose of the presiding bishopric, the financial department of the church, to cultivate in the consciousness of the people the idea of "stewardships," by which is meant in a liberal sense, that whatever means, business, employment, or profession any may have or be engaged in, will be regarded not as an instrument for securing personal gains or ends, but rather as the "ministry" through which service on behalf of the mass may be rendered. The good and well-being of the community will be the first consideration and not the enrichment of self, the providing of a fortune for the family will be characteristic.

What has been and is being accomplished is more impressive for what is promised and portended than for the actual and immediate, which is also the statesmanlike way of evaluating things and persons as well as enterprises.

Already, however, many have been assisted to find a way for themselves through the mazes of the economic and industrial problems. Some as individuals or groups, according to ability and opportunity, have been given starts in various businesses, some in manufacturing, some in mechanical ventures, others in retail stores, and others in securing professional or academic courses and again others in agriculture, coal mining, and even extending to light and power plants for municipal demands, and all of these with the idea of ministering for the good of the societal whole first rather than because of what Ruskin calls the "fee." Wages, dividends, and interests under this scheme become to be regarded as "honorarium" in the highest and the most ethical sense.

In this brief sketch there is much unsaid perforce, but this must not be allowed to escape our attention; in the very nature of things, the success of the enterprise depends more on the spirit of the members and the cultivation of sense interdependence of each unitary part rather than upon either rules or mechanism. For in all such cooperative methods it must be remembered the union of persons motivated by this high spirit of service for others is more than union of means; and only insofar as men are loyal to the cause and the principles for which the cause stands can the movement be triumphant.

SHORTENING THE HOURS OF LABOR

---

There are times in everyone's life when it is necessary to use the reserve capital of nervous strength which nature provides, but it does not follow that this ought to be an everyday procedure. To economize on rest, sleep, and fresh air is to be penny-wise and pound foolish. In modern studies of efficiency it has been found that more work is often accomplished by shortening the hours of labor. A committee appointed to study the health of British munition workers found that the hourly output of one hundred women who were making fuses increased 23 per cent when the weekly hours of labor were reduced from 68.2 to 59.7, and the hourly output of twenty-seven men at heavy work increased 24 per cent when their hours were reduced from 61.5 to 56.2 each week.

What is the explanation of this? In all that we do, either consciously or unconsciously, the nervous system is the controlling power; it not only directs all the movements of the muscles, but it also regulates the heat and controls the secretions of the body. The cells of the nervous system are built up during rest and sleep, and it is necessary that the body should be rested and a sufficient amount of sleep taken to enable the nerve cells to recuperate.—Literary Digest, for May 10, 1919.

PROFESSIONS OR TRADES

What is the difference between "professions" and "trades"?

According to Doctor C. Stuart Gager, of the Brooklyn Botanic Garden, in an address before the school of horticulture for women, at Ambler, Pennsylvania, there is a decided difference between a "profession" and a "trade"; in other words, there is a decided difference between horticulture and gardening.

This distinction he makes to consist of the fact that a trade may be learned solely by one's experience. To acquire a profession, the experience of others must be added. One's knowledge must exceed the anticipated demand upon it. A trade is content with rule-of-thumb methods. A profession will yield contribution to its own progress.

There are, of course, superficial differences such as, one holds a position and not a job; is employed by the month or year, not by the day; he earns a salary, not wages. But these are all superficial. There exists, however, fundamental distinction.

"First. The nature of the preparation required.

"One may learn how to raise vegetables and flowers with success by beginning as gardener's helper, imitating the experienced practitioner, substituting in his absence, and thus gradually acquiring sufficient skill to proceed independently, and, in turn, pass on his information and skill to other apprentices. But, with rare exceptions, what the journeyman has learned is all that he can pass on; like father, like son. But where is the opportunity for progress here? The history of agriculture in China or Palestine, or with our own aborigines, gives the clear answer. There is little or no opportunity for progress. Cloth would be spun on hand looms to-day had no other factor been introduced into spinning than the instruction of daughters by mothers. This kind of instruction does not make for progress; it can never convert a trade into a profession. The spinning jenny was not invented by a spinner, nor the wireless telegraph by a telegraph-operator, nor the science of agronomy by practical farmers.

"Progress depends upon a fullness of preparation exceeding the limits of anticipated requirement in practice. This is why I have never liked the phrase 'teachers' training class.' Horses may be trained, and a well-trained horse may be depended on to do accurately and promptly the tricks that are taught him. But place him in a new situation, or confront him with a new problem, or an old one somewhat altered, and you may then learn clearly and easily the difference between training and education.

"In order to become a horticulturist, as distinguished from a practical gardener, one's knowledge must exceed the anticipated demands upon it in practice. He must not only know how and when to cultivate, but why; not only the names of his plants, but the nature of plants—why leaves are green, what flowers are for, how seeds are formed, how roots absorb moisture, how plants feed, the nature of plant diseases (as well as when and how to spray), the nature and kinds of variation, the basis of selection, why some varieties tend to run out, why corn 'mixes in the hill.' This is the knowledge that gives power, this is the basis of progress. I do not mean that such fullness of knowledge is always necessary in order to raise good crops—to be a good gardener; but it is necessary in order to be able still to raise good crops in spite of unforeseen obstacles—the new insect or fungus pest, an excessive drought, a season of unusual weather in general; it is necessary in order to raise increasingly better crops, in order to introduce improvements in practice, in order to become a horticulturist.

"Horticulture is an art, and, like all arts, it is based upon certain sciences; a knowledge of these fundamental sciences is necessary—soil technology, economic entomology, the elements of botany, with special emphasis on plant physiology; something of plant pathology, the principles of plant breeding, ecology or the relation of plants to their environment; something of physics and chemistry, plant geography, and the history of cultivated plants. Moreover, one should know the history of his profession, be acquainted with the classic publications, the names and lives of the founders and leading horticulturists. One can never keep abreast of the times (let alone becoming a leader) who does not keep in touch with the new and modern books, and the current periodical literature of the subject. Membership in local and national organizations of gardeners or horticulturists is stimulating, if not essential."—The Literary Digest, May 17, 1919.

Doctor Gager also suggests that we should have one or more hobbies, or outside interests, and quotes with approval President Eliot of Harvard University, who tersely defined a liberal education as knowing "everything about something and something about everything."

The further distinction between a "trade" and a "profession" is in the personal attitude, which makes of profession a life work. It makes it a first, though not exclusive interest. Such a one seeks to keep in touch with the advanced idea of his profession, and is not content with rule-of-thumb. His library will show his special interest, both in books and in magazines. With a professional man, his vocation is not merely a means of earning a living. It is for the sake, not only of practical things, but also of beauty; and not alone to secure culture in practical affairs, but also the spiritual development to make the world a better place in which to live.

SOCIETY OF NATIONS

Foi et Vie for February 10, 1919, is largely taken with the society of nations; which very strongly favors the right and Christian solution. They refer to the past history, as far back as Jeane d'Albret, a minister of Henry IV of France. His plan was the creation of a Grand Council General of the representatives of fifteen powers with a number of lesser councils which could appeal to the Grand Council. Decision of the Grand Council would be obligatory upon all nations, and would be upheld by the military power of all the states' representatives.

Twenty years later the plan was enlarged upon by Cruce. Seventy years later William Penn suggested the idea of a parliament of nations. In 1729 the abbe of Saint Peter proposed, after the peace of Utrecht a grand international parliament, representing an irrevocable alliance of the states. His was the first clear idea of a confederation. Jeremy Bentham, 1786, advanced the new idea of disarmament and the emancipation of all the colonies. And finally Emanuel Kant, the German philosopher, in 1795, united all of these ideas, and conceived of a permanent international congress. All the associate states would be republican in form, and each person would be a citizen of the world, just as we are citizens of a place. Kant specifies that to insure the peace of the world each nation should surrender something of its sovereignty.

Nor should we forget the efforts made by the Czar Nicholas, in the nineteenth century, of which the results were paralyzed by the opposition of Germany. There have been various representatives of divers nations who participated in the elaboration of this grand concept, but the French and the Protestants have been the first and most numerous.

For the American concept of a league of nations, credit is given to Albert K. Smily in 1895, and to President Wilson in 1915. It then adds:

"To complete this very brief history let us add that all has been well said and well explained by a great man of the eighth century before Christ. This passage is found in our Bible. (Isaiah 2: 2-4.)"

And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

The writer takes the position that the society of nations may be summed up in two words, meaning, "it is necessary," and "it is difficult." It is extraordinarily difficult, but infinitely more necessary.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

The Home

(Extracts from President F. M. Smith's address, April 7, 1919.)

The home is fundamental in all phases of society. It is the bulwark of the Nation—the cradle of the church. In its influence upon our homes, I stand unequivocally for the Woman's Auxiliary. As chief executive I have realized the necessity for a woman's organization in the church. One reason for this is the need of women to act in group form. A meeting of the men is provided for in the priesthood activities. Very few men but have expression in some quorum where they may discuss problems which concern the church—incidental as well as main issues. Women come to prayer meetings, church, Sunday school, and Religio, but these do not meet their whole needs. There is a necessity for an organization distinctly for women, where problems which concern women may be considered.

Another reason is that the "woman movement" of the world of to-day is a progressive one, which will never go backward, and unless the church gets in front of such a movement within its boundaries, trouble is likely to ensue. There is no need for the saloon-smashing type, but earnest, live, brainy, active women need a legitimate and satisfying outlet for their energies. Tradition-wrapped and hidebound, are the theories which are conspicuous in the attitude of some so-called "leading men," towards women.

Too great emphasis cannot be laid upon the importance of the home. If the home is rotten, all the social fabric is in danger. This Nation is shot through and through by immorality of home. Get behind the up-to-date movements to protect the home from invasion, for, mark you, influences that are outside of us are at work. Town, county, state, and nation are involved and none can be eliminated from the universal effort to elevate the home and its environs. Home welfare is fundamental. Any social reform which ignores this fact will not be successful, nor can any home hope to be reached by such futile effort. Woman is primarily the home-maker, and therefore she is the natural preserver of the home. In its efforts to stimulate our women to perceive this duty I am heart and soul with the Woman's Auxiliary. Our church needs it. Every successful organization has its woman's auxiliary. Part of the success of the British Army is due to the solid organization and splendid service of the British women. If this is true in war, what cannot be done elsewhere?

Woman is the natural sponsor for education. Any woman who does not believe in education is a handicap to her family. A young missionary, naturally endowed, is studying very hard to overcome a handicap given him by a mother who discouraged such effort when he was young. A letter from him the other day told of his pleasure at receiving from his teacher in grammar, a compliment on the great improvement in his language. I hope there are not many such short-sighted mothers as this man had, but some are still with us, I fear. If the Woman's Auxiliary stimulates a demand for education they have made a most valuable and definite contribution to the progress of the church.

The opposition to the Woman's Auxiliary from some quarters shows that some men still think of women in terms of inferiority to men. I am reminded of an instance when a young girl was getting fitted to shoes in a modern shoe store. She made objection to one pair which was put upon her feet, saying they looked like boys' shoes. The clerk replied: "Well, do you not know, miss, that there is nothing quite so much like a girl's foot as a boy's foot?"

Science proves that a woman's brain is identical to that of man, and outside of size, no scientist can tell which is masculine or which feminine. If woman is inferior to man, it shows she is not using the brains she has got. To the inconvenience of some men, in many ways woman has excelled.

Woman has been at times loud in proclaiming her equality with man. Personally, I always held that she was of a higher order than he is, and she really comes down from the pedestal upon which I had placed her when I am compelled to admit her his equal. I never placed her inferior—as a mass. God made Eve equal with her mate, and did not intend that she should be inferior. If she has become so, it is because she has been content to be dominated. I hope the women of the church will arise and demonstrate that their souls are as important and worth saving as those of their brothers.

As I view it, the Woman's Auxiliary has only begun to enter in upon its mission. If you men feel that they are setting a pace, you will have to get busy, to keep out of the way. For they will keep hustling! Some quorums of the priesthood are still discussing problems of fifty years ago! No progress made, apparently, but the women are becoming alert to the problems of to-day.

Certain biological differences make women different in function from men; there are also mental and spiritual differences. One cannot occupy where the other does in certain lines. In some cases women are superior, in other lines, men may be superior. Don't get away from that fact. There should be no jealousy or strife, but adjustment. God intended men and women to exist side by side. The danger in the political world is that these fundamental differences are not kept in sight. One danger in our church lies in the inertia of the methods of the elders. Tradition causes some to cling with tenacity to some so-called "law." A hangover comes from Paul. I don't believe in it. The Pauline doctrine concerning women was a tradition of old, thrust upon him by the customs of the age. In defining our attitude towards women, we must consider the customs of our day. Hats on, in the churches, or hats off,—no spiritual law is broken either way. If left on, they can be seen to better advantage than if lying on the seat! Were Paul here to-day, he would undoubtedly be led to speak of the wide diversity in dress evident, for he was always influenced by the custom of the times. "Wives, be subject to your husbands," was but a reflex of Pauline times. To-day she is not the property of her husband! We are all subject to the powers that be, and woman's relative position has changed considerably since

Paul's far-off day. Yet to-day some men obstinately continue to hide under Paul's statements, distorting them from their true perspective. They were consistent then, but out of line to-day. Were he here to-day, Paul would reflect to-day. To-morrow will see yet more change, and some day, even biological differences may be eliminated, for we are told that in heaven there will be neither marrying nor giving in marriage, but we shall all become as the angels.

So I say to the women, hang on to what you have, enlarge upon it as you are given vision and wisdom, and let the good work go on!

From Other Pastures

---

(Notes from the National Congress of Mothers held in Kansas City, Missouri; last month.)

Mrs. Frederick Schoff of Philadelphia, President of the Congress, presided, assisted by Mrs. Milton P. Higgins, of Worcester, Massachusetts, and Mrs. David O. Mears of Cambridge, Massachusetts, vice presidents.

The meetings were held in the spacious, artistic, and comfortable assembly room of the Hotel Baltimore. Sister A. L. Yingling was chairman of arrangements and much credit was given to her for the success of the congress.

Mrs. Eugene Crutcher of Tennessee said that to popularize a movement insured its success. In a survey of a school district, twenty-eight out of thirty-eight children needed medical attention. This attention was given and now all the children and parents are clamoring for a standard of health to be maintained. Health has become popular in this district.

Mrs. Sherman, in speaking of school and home gardening, said that one year ago one and a half million children were given legitimate recreation in gardening. Now three million are engaged in such recreation. Profitable gardening should be made a regular subject in school work. In crowded districts children who went to school hungry are now being better fed, they are busy, they are kept out of court, and a useful bond of fellowship has been established. They are learning lessons of thrift and morality, each one contributing something to his support—and all this because of their gardens.

Doctor Valeria Parker of Connecticut said: "The United States was the first nation to establish a prevention of immorality in army camps and navy yards. Prior to this movement of the Government, city officials near camps refused to close places of immorality because they expected to make lots of money. The first move towards prevention was the establishment of a five- to ten-mile zone. Statistics prove that there was five times as much vice outside, in the cities and country as in the army. Therefore our responsibility for the enforcement of our moral laws is very great, and our duty is to elect officials who would enforce them." Doctor Parker spoke also of the necessity for educational work among children, to fix in their minds the right ideals regarding the beginning of life. She told of the boy who hears from one that his baby sister came from a doctor's bag, a neighbor girl who hears that her baby sister came down the chimney, another that her baby brother came from a cabbage, another brought by a stork, and so on until the child's mind becomes confused. He finally hears the story of life in the coarse, vulgar language of the street and playground, until there is nothing beautiful in the chaotic idea he has formed. The Y. W. C. A. are sending out doctors to instruct mothers in communities to know how to tell the story of life to their children and to supplement the mother's work by holding educational meetings with the girls.

An interesting number of the congress was that given by Miss Alexander of Texas. She secured about fifteen high school girls from the Kansas City schools and had them pass in parade, their dresses and hats demonstrating their own handwork and the appropriate styles for girls in and out of school. By the use of charts she illustrated the most becoming lines in dress for large and for slender women, the becoming collars for round-faced and thin-faced women, etc.

Miss Elizabeth Harrison, of kindergarten fame, said, "There are three requisites in correct play for children: 1. It should interest the child. 2. Develop some art. 3. Have some worth-while content. . . . The home and kindergarten should cooperate, the home furnishing the three elements of health, viz: right food, right exercise, and right sleep. A mother avoids pie, tea, and coffee and thinks she has done her duty, but she has not trained her child to know what food is for. . . . A child of one district plays in alleys, trash cans, and dramatizes the police arresting a drunken man. The child of another district gazes in windows, touches flowers longingly—and that is the extent of their play exercise. Give them the constructive play exercise, dramatize the constructive child plays. Certain rules concerning size and shape of rooms for such worth-while effort, their location, etc., need not be followed arbitrarily, but just secure the best equipment and location available, make a beginning, and go ahead!"

Mrs. Hence Orme of Indiana is a rural woman and spoke on rural problems. She said that she had been asked why she did not move to the city for city advantages, etc., and she had replied, "I have a mission on the farm!" Dissatisfaction with social conditions on the farm is what sends the boys and girls to the city, and the police officers in many cities say their great problem is that of the rural boy and girl. . . . The church is not meeting its privileges in this regard, and the future of the rural communities will rest largely with what the churches will do socially. A community spirit should be developed, and one hindrance to this objective is a certain element which in these modern days is coming to the farm—that of the city farmer with servants and automobiles. An inactive farmer is a nuisance. Occupying land owners only can raise the standard of the farm life. A movement for better rural schools should be encouraged. The boy who finishes the ordinary rural school has nine months less training when he enters high school than does the city boy with whom he has to compete. Discouragement and failure may result."

MRS. J. A. GARDNER.

Activities in the Northwest

Dear Sisters of the Auxiliary: I would beg a little space in your cozy corner for a letter from far-off Saskatchewan.

We feel that the Auxiliary work here is but in its infancy, since it was only begun a little over a year ago. Our people are scattered, branches being from twenty-five to one hundred and twenty-five miles apart. The sisters mostly live on farms, and have their time more than occupied. In spite of these handicaps, however, we are delighted to report that the work is flourishing in several localities.

During August and September of last year we traveled through the northern half of Saskatchewan, visiting practically every branch and Sunday school in the district. We succeeded in organizing seven different locals. One other has been organized since, so now we have a total of eight.

We appreciate very deeply the courtesy and consideration shown us by the members everywhere, and especially the presidents of the branches. Everything possible to facilitate our work was done, and those two months thus spent will always be remembered with gratitude and pleasure.

Shortly after this effort, the influenza (which, by the way, must be weary of shouldering the blame for so many omissions,) swept down upon us, and two locals have not yet recovered. The others, however, are meeting, keeping fingers and minds busy at the same time.

One local Oriole Circle was organized in the Artland Branch. We find girls everywhere anxious to take up the Oriole work, but Saskatchewan seems to be strangely lacking in young girls in groups. The superintendent of Oriole work in Alberta kindly volunteered assistance in organizing.

At our district conference in Saskatoon last July, the Auxiliary held a sale of work, which netted us a substantial sum. I believe the various locals are preparing to hold another this year, on a much larger scale. Last year most of the funds so raised were turned in to the Christmas offering.

At the conference we were also granted an afternoon for our own special work. We advertised our meetings in the city daily, and had several hundreds in attendance. Sister Daniel Macgregor gave us a most inspiring address on "Love"—parental, conjugal, brotherly, patriotic, etc. Red Cross work was discussed in many phases; and we are glad to say that most of the locals have worked industriously for that organization.

I fear I have occupied more than my share of space already, so will conclude, asking our sisters everywhere to remember those in Saskatchewan, who, although many of them overburdened and weary with home cares, are yet striving to be faithful to the business of the Father. I cannot close without thanking our president, Sister Krahl, and the other Auxiliary officers, for their kind assistance and unflinching patience towards us.

Your sister in the faith,

MRS. C. E. DIGGLE,

Organizer Saskatchewan District.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Training for Foreign Missions

I have been deeply interested in the various articles appearing in the HERALD relative to a mission training school, and at the risk of being thought presumptuous I am giving expression to my opinion of the matter. Briefly, I may say that not only is it "one of the most important evangelical works which the church has undertaken," but also it is one of the most sensible policies which the church has adopted for the accomplishment of that most holy duty. It constitutes in every way a revelation of the Divine Mind, as remarkable and as necessary as anything in holy writ. It is a step forward and upward, and is another powerful witness that inspiration is still with the church. One has but to glance over the proposed training course to see how completely it will furnish the missionary with the qualifications necessary for his work:

1. Divine calling.
2. Consecration and qualification.
3. The preparation of mind and body.
4. And perhaps most important of all, the impetus which will be obtained through association with those who correctly interpret and value the ideals of Christ.

Who will say that a missionary force so constituted and qualified will fail to win the world to Christ? We cannot overestimate the value of these things, for history furnishes ample proof that the willing mind, the buoyant heart, and sound body have changed the course of dynasties and nations, have enlarged the borders of empires, and from the four corners of the earth have brought treasures pleasing to mind and body. The morale of an army is as effective for conquest as armament, but one without the other is of little value. We can easily conclude that as we have the best armament religiously that the world knows, we must qualify to make our arms victorious through intelligent and consecrated use. Surely no one will seek to hinder the carrying out of such a splendid policy which not only bears the earmarks of superior human intelligence, but is also a glimpse of the Divine Mind. We cannot subdue the thought that God is still at the helm, all is right with the church. How it may appeal to others I cannot nor will not say, but as for me I receive more evidence of the divinity of our work through observing the sane policies which we are seeking to carry out.

In December, 1918, in London, Ontario, during the course of a round table talk at which President F. M. Smith presided, I was impressed to ask him if he had in mind any school for training young men and women for foreign and domestic missions, but refrained from asking, for reasons which I shall not express here. I was convinced then, my conviction is stronger now, that the policy which the Presidency has adopted for foreign missions is divine, and I pray that God may speed the right. As a young minister of the church speaking for hundreds of young people who no doubt feel as I do, I can only say, "Give us but room to stand, and we will move the world."

Deem me not boastful, my brethren, the strength of our convictions is not born of the flesh but of God, and through the power of the Spirit we seek victory for the right. Remember that consecration and qualification are the means by which a minister must magnify the divine calling, and great or small the service we can render, our only regret is that we cannot do more.

I shall subscribe myself, just a youngster,

GEORGE C. TOMLINSON, JR.

SAINT MARYS, ONTARIO, June 7, 1919.

The Bishopric

Advocate for 1919

"Every Member a Tithe Payer"

Some regard the paying of tithing as a duty rather than an opportunity.

The man who gets his job done on time is the man who will eventually run the boss a neck-and-neck race for his job.

So

The man who pays his tithing when due, and then prays, will run the man who prays and then pays his tithing a neck-and-neck race for eternal life.

Things to Be Remembered

Adam sinned and brought death. God sent his Son, who died to save us from our sins, or atone for our sins, if we believe on him, and give life eternal.

God is with us always. In all our days and nights, all life is full of God. What blessings come to us when we are faithful!

There are friendships in this life which never reach their depth of richness and beauty, playing only along the shore, while the great ocean of love lies beyond.

Happiness drawn from mere earthly sources is as changeable as varying sources can make it; but the peace of Christ is a constant abiding peace. Let us bear about in our hearts the gladness which his Spirit doth reveal. For he who learns of Christ is emptied of self, of pride, of love of supremacy, and there is silence in the soul. We love to look to Jesus, waiting for his voice to lead, his hand to guide.

LOUISE STRICKLIN.

"Unto Whom Shall We Go?"

"Unto whom shall we go; thou hast the words of eternal life."

The Apostle Peter spoke these words to Jesus after many had fallen away, and Jesus asked the Twelve if they would also forsake him. And this is my answer to all those who are sending literature to our church members, endeavoring to get us to turn away from those leaders that he has set over us.

While I (perhaps because of having been brought up a Quaker) cannot agree with some of our leaders in their war policy, and believe it a sin to encourage our young to educate themselves with the aim in view of being of military use in case of war, still I am confident, even certain, that no other organization on earth can compare with this Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints as being in harmony with the word of God.

One writer makes the claim that the Prophet Joseph appointed fifty-three princes, and endeavored to set up an earthly autocracy. I have been in the church twenty-seven years, and have read all the standard books, and never heard of it before. But the church has never taken the ground that the Prophet was faultless. Moses smote the rock in the wrong spirit, and was not permitted to enter into the promised land. Still he was a true prophet. Joseph may have committed some overt act that caused his God to take him away, even as Moses was taken, before his natural strength was diminished, or his eye dimmed. But that does not exempt us from heeding God's commands given through him. It is very easy for the feet to say to the eyes, "I have no need of you."

All Saints know that God gave a revelation through the Seer for the Saints to purchase all the lands around about Independence, Missouri, which could at that time have been purchased for only a few dollars per acre. But like Israel of old, they were slow to heed the word of God, and let the golden opportunity pass by.

He also failed to heed the word of God "that warreth, entangleth himself with the affairs of this life, that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier."

In those early days, worldly ambition crept in, and even the leaders got mixed up in politics and the affairs of this life, and because of these things, God moved the church out of her place, and the church became disorganized. And that man of sin was revealed whose heart departed from God and who taught that he should become a god, even greater than the one that he said created this earth.

But the faithful were called together and reorganized under the power of God, and from 1852 until this day, God's chosen ministry have been trying to get the people to come up higher. I know the reason we have not been gathered sooner is largely the fault of the members. If our leaders have erred, it has been in not being severe enough. I believe that no person who has not paid his tithing (or tried his best to do so) should be disfellowshipped; and all our surplus should be put into the Bishop's hands as the beginning of our tithing. As the church of God, we should be ashamed at the showing we are making in comparison with some of the churches of men.

Our leaders have not enriched themselves at our expense; neither do they receive a big salary out of our tithing money. Many of them have stifled their ambition and left good financial positions in order to give their full time to the work of the Master. Many of these men I am personally acquainted with, and they are able men that were in the way to make a success in business. And to-day they are living on an allowance from the church that is only a fraction of what they might have if they would leave the ministry. But they know that God has called them, and, like Paul, they feel to say, "Woe to me if I preach not this gospel" (that God has called me to carry to the people).

Our leaders are men subject to the same passions as the rest of us, and I expect that like the servants of God in all ages, they will make some mistakes. But all of us who are living our religion know that God is working in our midst, and Satan is raging and trying in every way to stir up discord. Can you or I afford to be one of his allies and, like some others, endeavor to stir up discord among God's people?

Satan knows how large the Christmas offering was, and how the Bishopric are really starting the gathering, and he is trying in every way to stop our progress. He knows that the best way is to make division, for he is well aware that "a house divided against itself cannot stand." Are we going to help him sow discord and make divisions, or shall we put our shoulders to the wheel and help push the load along?

We have made great progress in the last few years, and for one, I am determined to be a worker together with Christ and my brethren in this glorious work that the Master has committed unto our care.

Yours for unity and progress in the work of Christ,
 THOMAS G. WHIPPLE.
 GROTON, CONNECTICUT.

THE TRUE SUCCESSOR OF THE MARTYR

lished in their interests on Beaver Island).

Further statements make it clear just whom the boy was. An address in 1851 shows clearly that it was "young Joseph."

A paragraph in the Gospel Herald, August 31, 1848, is to the same effect with regard to Lyman Wight's testimony that young Joseph was his father's successor. John H. Thomas testified to the same effect in the Temple Lot Suit. His testimony is given on page 255. Part of it is as follows:

Brigham Young stated at that conference himself that no man could stand in Joseph Smith's place, because he said he had seen him ordained, set apart to fill his father's place, and that place belonged to him by right, and God would take care of him and bring him forward at the right time; there was no trouble about that at all. There were a great many people present there who heard the same thing said by Brigham Young that I have just testified to, and there are a great many of them living to-day.—Abstract of Evidence, Temple Lot Suit., p. 255.

John H. Carter's testimony was also given in the Temple Lot Suit, as follows:

I was present at a meeting in the city of Nauvoo, in the State of Illinois, at which something was said or done about the successor of Joseph Smith. It was held in the Bowery, right north of the Temple, and Joseph Smith was on the stand. I cannot tell you when it was, but it was not long before he was killed. This happened in Nauvoo, in the Bowery that was erected right north of the Temple, where they held meetings before the Temple was finished. Yes, sir, Joseph Smith who was called Junior, was on the stand. It was on a Sunday. There was a congregation gathered there on that occasion; it was a large gathering. It was the people mostly from Nauvoo who had gathered there, and when they got together on these occasions there was a large gathering.

. . . Joseph Smith came on the stand leading his son, young Joseph, and they sat him down on a bench at the Prophet's right hand, and Joseph got up and began to preach and talk to the people, and the question he said was asked by somebody, "If Joseph Smith should be killed or die, who would be his successor?" and he turned around and said, pointing to his son, "There is the successor," and he went on and said, "My work is pretty nearly done," and that is about all he said in regard to his son. He said in answer to a question that was asked as to who should be his successor in case he should be killed or die, and he pointed to his son, young Joseph, who was sitting at his side, and said he: "There is your leader."—Abstract of Evidence, Temple Lot Suit, pp. 180, 181.

Many other witnesses could be cited, as for example, Sophia K. Cook, of Provo City, Utah, who was a niece of Martin Harris, made an affidavit as follows:

With no other motive than that the truth may be known by all men to whom this affirmation may come, I, Mrs. Sophia K. Cook, do hereby solemnly swear that I was born near Pontiac, Michigan, July 28, 1828. I was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in Missouri in my girlhood, my parents having previously united with that church. I am now a member of the church of Latter Day Saints, the headquarters of which are located at Salt Lake City, though I do not indorse polygamy; that I was present in a meeting held in the Bowery in Nauvoo, Illinois, the date of which, to the best of my recollection, was the spring or summer of 1843 or 1844; I was sitting west from the speakers' stand, only a few feet. At this meeting I heard Joseph Smith, president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, say in substance: "I have often been asked who would succeed me as the prophet to the church; he is here in the stand." He turned and led his son Joseph before the audience and said: "My son Joseph will be your next prophet." Approximately, I should say there were several hundred people present at this meeting.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 13th day of September, A. D. 1900.

JOHN U. BUCHI, Notary Public.

My commission expires February 5, 1904.

(Seal.)

—From The Interpreter, page 38.

According to the above, he was blessed and anointed three times, and set apart by the laying on of hands to be his father's successor.

First: Lyman Wight relates the laying on of hands in Liberty Jail. This would apparently be in December, 1838, when Joseph Smith was only six years of age, hence before he was baptized. Joseph Smith also refers to this, though so young a boy at the time.

Second: A meeting was held of the church dignitaries in the office in Nauvoo, and he was again blessed, Hyrum Smith anointing; Joseph Smith confirming the blessing. This was after his baptism in 1843. Joseph Smith, the late president of the Reorganized Church testifies to this, also James Whitehead. John H. Thomas states that Brigham Young stated that he had seen him ordained or set apart to fill his father's place. Other evidence includes Emma Smith, probably Lyman Wight, and others.

Third: He was shortly thereafter presented to the church, three thousand being assembled in the grove, and was then presented to, and accepted by the people to be his father's successor. To the witnesses already named, we may add John H. Carter, Sophia K. Cook, and others.

Fourth: Joseph Smith himself states that just before his father left Nauvoo for Carthage, he laid his hands upon his head and again blessed him and designated him to be his successor. This being just prior to his departure for Carthage was evidently nearly his last, if not his last official act, and showed his intent at that time.

Some other witnesses' testimonies are not so clear cut, nor do all designate which ceremony they witnessed, but still clearly testify that he was to be his father's successor and was so designated. (See SAINTS' HERALD, volume 39, page 339.)

According to Doctrine and Covenants 43:1, 2, Joseph Smith, jr., would have the right to appoint his successor and designate him as that to the church. It seems plain that he did so, and it is also plain who was the one designated, and that this was his son, Joseph Smith, the late president of the Reorganized Church.

This is not new to those who have borne the heat of the day defending the work, but there are many who are not in touch with the evidence. This is our only excuse for re-submitting. Also because some have attempted to misrepresent his testimony as above indicated. The law as accepted by the church is that through revelation to the Prophet, his successor should be appointed. This was done. His son was so designated.

Conference Minutes

POTTAWATTAMIE.—At Crescent, Iowa, May 25, 26, 1919. District presidency presided. The following resolutions were adopted by the conference: "As some of the branches of this district are now operating under the plan of a branch president and all other ordained men laboring under his direction, Therefore, be it resolved; that we as a district conference, look with favor on branch presidents nominating, subject to the branch approval, one or two associates. Be it resolved that we, the district conference, request all the branches of our district to select their officers for a period of one year, the election to be held during the month of December and the new officers take up their work on the first day of January following. And, be it further resolved that the date of said election be left to the president of each branch, and the branch presidents are hereby requested to confer with district presidents before setting date for said election of branch officers." Because of his many duties as Bishop's agent, Brother J. A. Hansen, district president, submitted his resignation, which was accepted. Brother Orman Salisbury was elected president. Counselors: J. A. Hansen, B. S. Lambkin. A vote of thanks was extended to Brother Hansen and G. J. Harding for their services to the district as presidency. Next conference to be held at Hazel Dell, Iowa, October 3 and 4. Elsie Lapworth, Secretary.

Canvas cots, 2½ by 6½ feet, at 40 cents. An additional charge of 25 cents will be made for setting up tents. A dining tent in charge of E. R. Butterworth, Dow City, will be operated on the grounds; also a confectionery stand in connection, in charge of the reunion committee. The First Presidency will provide an excellent corps of able speakers. Auxiliary and recreational work will be a very important feature each afternoon, except Saturdays and Sundays. All orders for tents should be forwarded promptly to F. R. Schafer, secretary, Denison, Iowa. Amos Berve, chairman, Logan, Iowa; J. L. Butterworth, treasurer, Dow City, Iowa.

Addresses

Elder V. M. Goodrich, 1404 Charles Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri.

Book Reviews

READING THE BIBLE.—By William Lyon Phelps. The Macmillan Company, New York, $1.25. Among the many good books on this general subject, this one will stand out as one eminently worthwhile. The author does not pretend to special theological training, consequently does not attempt to treat the subject from that standpoint, but merely from a literary point of view. It furnishes pleasant inspiration to the reading of the pages of Holy Writ, by giving us a human interest touch to the following chapter headings: Reading the Bible, Saint Paul as a letter writer, and short stories of the Bible. Speaking of Paul's reference to baptism for the dead, he says: "Paul seems to have believed in the efficacy of this superstitious rite." But this is the worst criticism we can make of the book, and the author is not to be blamed for lacking a further knowledge of this God-given rite such as is given in the three standard books of the church. The book is chiefly valuable for the comprehension it gives one of the Pauline epistles, though the other chapters are of interest and value.

THE BOOK OF FREE MEN.—By Julius F. Seebach. George H. Doran Company, New York, $1.25. It is the story of the Bible in quite a new way, giving the facts and proof of the transcending influence of the Bible in the civilizations of the world, and particularly with reference to the settlement of the United States. It deals with the development of the Bible, with its completion, and its various translations; how it was submerged during the Middle Ages, and other substitutes offered, until it became a book forbidden to the people. Then how through the Renaissance and Protestantism the book was resurrected and became a special reservoir of our speech. The Bible is considered in Catholic America and in Protestant America, with different views of the value of the book; and especially summing it up as The Book of Liberty. A bibliography to the Bible is also included in the 235 pages of this volume. There also are brief extracts from the statements of famous men concerning this Book of books.

HIDDEN TREASURES.—A very recent book by John Thomas Simpson, published by the J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, at $1.50 net. If we could think of a way to induce every young lad among us, especially the farmer boys, to read this book, we would adopt it. It is a fast-moving story that the most vigorous boy will not tire of, yet it is packed full of information that will inspire anyone with the possibilities of hidden treasure on the home place. Knowing the difficulties of providing reading matter for the boys which will be given a warm spot in their hearts and be worthy of that place, we believe this is such a book, and welcome it as not only a good story but a really valuable contribution to young people's literature, so badly needed these days.

Pastoral

To the Saints of Western Oklahoma and the Panhandle of Texas; Greeting: The powers that be have deemed it proper for me to labor with you another year. I therefore address this epistle to you to let you know that I am anxious to serve you. Our field is large, and the membership is widely scattered; it is therefore difficult for us to reach you all in the course of a year. We, however, trust you will give us your hearty cooperation and support, that the interests of the church may be advanced in this part of the world.

Our late General Conference was an important one, and marked an epoch of growth and development in the church. The church debt has been paid, and the Bishopric are now looking toward the purchase of lands for the purpose of granting stewardships with the Christmas offering funds. Let us renew our zeal and make this year a banner year for the church. The hastening time is upon us, and it requires the best there is in us to keep abreast of the times.

Brother J. D. Shower is associated with me in Western Oklahoma, and we feel sure that he will render us efficient and profitable assistance. He will devote the greater part of his time to the eastern and southeastern part of the district. Those desiring preaching or other ministerial work in those parts, should get in touch with him. His address is 106 North River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri.

As in the past three years, I will devote a goodly part of the time to the unorganized portion of the field, and the Panhandle of Texas. We particularly desire to hear from the isolated members, and will make every effort to serve you. We will be glad to receipt you for tithes and offerings, or you may send it direct to the Bishop's agent, Brother L. D. Dyke, Eagle City, Oklahoma.

My address is 1302 West Maple Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

Very truly yours,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

To all Saints in the Southeastern Mission; Greeting: Having been appointed to labor among you as missionary in charge during this conference year, I desire to call your attention to a few points which may be of special interest.

THE TIME IS PASSING

Already about one fourth of the year (counting from conference to conference) has passed away and we should be warned that the remaining portion of the time will not wait for us, but if we are to secure or reclaim the divine grace of blessing that comes to the diligent, the days as they pass, must be employed in useful and faithful service.

COOPERATION OR TEAM WORK

To secure best results, our work must be cooperative, and without jealousy or strife. If the missionaries and local authorities will cooperate, and seek to help and encourage each other in their work, laboring along lines of mutual agreement, and in the spirit of prayer and humility, having an eye single to the glory of God, and hearts set to do his will, then I am sure success will crown our efforts; and no dark regrets embitter our song of triumph at the year's close. "We may be helpful to some if we try" says one of the song poets. Let us all try.

THE ISOLATED ONES

I wish all who live in the outlying places, away from the branches and especially where there has been no preaching by the elders, would write me as to the prospects for mission work; and their desires for preaching in their respective localities. We desire to push the work into as many new fields as possible this year. Any assistance we can get from any one will be very much appreciated. If any Saints anywhere, have friends in the Southeastern Mission, whom you would like to have the missionaries visit, please write us, giving their address and we will try to visit them. Give us the name of railroad as well as town.

REPORT FROM MISSIONARIES

Statistical reports from the missionaries are expected the first of each month. Please be prompt so report can be made to the Presidency or Twelve in good time.

TITHES AND OFFERINGS

Last year the record of tithes and offerings was quite gratifying. It is hoped that we may do better still this year. The Christmas offering this year is to be put into the fund for the purchase of land for the redemption of Zion. This is one of the most important moves the church has made. The Bishop's hands should be upheld and strengthened in this work. It is a forward movement. Let us do our full share along this line.

THE CONFLICT

The fight is on and we must win. Satan with a host is arrayed against us. Loyal service to Christ, faithfully and diligently keeping his word, will give us the victory. In no other way can we succeed. With the help of the Lord the church must fight its own battles. The world will not help us. Some have thought the great war through which we have passed would soften the hearts of the people and cause them to be more easily influenced by the gospel message. But we must not depend on outside influences. Every inch of ground we gain, every evil we subdue, every soul we convert to God, will be by and through the power of the gospel just as it has always been. Realizing this, let us not put confidence in any worldly or outside influence, but move forward in faith, presenting, by precept and example, the gospel of Christ to the people, "For it is the power of God unto salvation."

INDIFFERENCE

Be not indifferent. It hides the beauties of the gospel from the eyes of others, and soon destroys one's own spiritual life. Indifference exerts an influence or power that is as deadly as some of the outbreaking sins that we do not tolerate. Why tolerate the sin of indifference?

My home address is 316 South River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri. For short times, my mission address will be, Paris, Tennessee, care of J. R. McClain.

In gospel bonds,

T. C. KELLEY.

FROM HERE AND THERE

VISIT NAUVOO

Bishop George Lewis of Wells End, Australia, and Bishop James F. Keir of Independence, Missouri, were pleasant callers last Tuesday. They belong to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and were here to give Nauvoo a look over, and they expressed a kindly feeling for the old town. They informed us that it was a beautiful site for a great city and hoped that some day it would grow and grow. Bishop Lewis of Australia said his country was becoming a wonderful one, and a delightful place to live in.—Nauvoo Rustler, June 3, 1919.

AUTUMN LEAVES FOR JUNE

A leading article in the June number is one by Augustine Dwyer on "What shall we read?" The collection of poems is exceptionally good, all contributed for the good of the cause, some by those not members of the church but who were attracted by the work Autumn Leaves is doing. "The brotherhood of man" is the title of a Graceland oration by Fernell Briggs. There are timely editorials on "Foreign Missions," "June Brides," "Poor Rich Girls." There is a cartoon by John Collin; a mission experience by one of our men in the field; excellent chapters of the two serials, "The call at evening," and "Book of Mormon evidences," and the departments contain matter of special interest.

Elder George H. Wixom, president of the Southern California District, visited at Des Moines, Independence, Saint Joseph, and elsewhere on his way home to San Bernardino, and then he had scarcely arrived before he accepted an invitation to go to El Centro, where he spoke in the Christian Church, and also performing the wedding ceremony for two couples. The latter occurred in San Bernardino, one party of each couple residing in that city.

At the Lamoni Stake conference at Hiteman, June 12 to 15, occurred the ordination of Elder Cyril E. Wight, a son of J. W. Wight, as a counselor to John F. Garver, president of the stake. This completes the stake presidency, Elder D. T. Williams having been ordained as a counselor nearly a year ago.

PRESIDING PATRIARCH ON TOUR

Last week Presiding Patriarch Frederick A. Smith left for Minneapolis, Minnesota, on an extended tour of the reunions of the Northwest. He is accompanied by Elder W. R. Dexter, a competent stenographer, who will render efficient service in the reporting of blessings. The reunions of Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana, Spokane, Seattle, and British Columbia, Northern and Southern California are included in the itinerary.

JOINT COUNCIL MEETS

The meeting of the joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric are to meet this week, beginning on the 16th. The appointment of missionaries and a number of other important items of business are to be taken up.

Doctor John R. Green has just returned home after ten months in the military service. He has served in the Base Hospital, Camp Upton, Long Island, since the close of the war in charge of the surgery of the chest and lungs at that place, and has just been able to obtain his release since the work in this line has been finished as the various Eastern divisions of the army have been demobilized. Doctor Green prior to entering the military service was a surgeon in attendance at the Independence Sanitarium, and the Sanitarium is pleased with his continued good work in the army service, a part of which appeared in the Journal of the American Medical Association in reporting on the medical research work, which promises to be of much use in this line.

The case in the civil courts of Toronto against R. C. Evans, asking for a financial accounting closed Saturday, June 7. The decision in all probability will not be handed down before September or October.

A letter from Saint Louis advises us that Elder Ralph W. Farrell and family have reached their field of labor, and hope soon to be settled. There is a splendid field for service in that city. He no doubt can be reached for the present, care of G. S. Trowbridge, 5032A Devonshire Avenue, Saint Louis, Missouri.

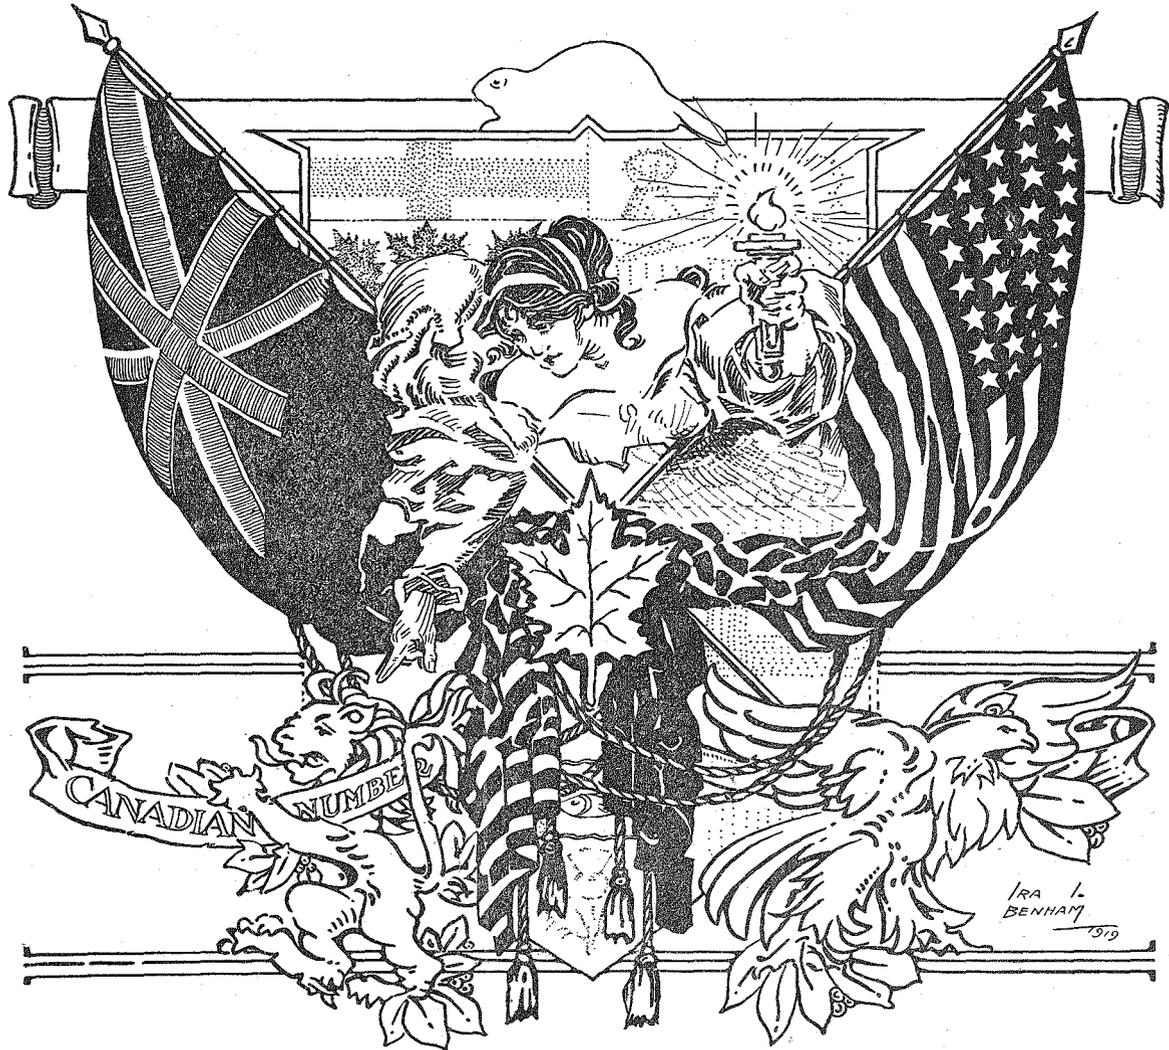

Elder Daniel Macgregor has been quite busy since conference. He engaged in a short debate on June 1 and 2, at Battleford, Saskatchewan. He is busy doing his work, and hence is happy.

SOME INTERESTING BOOKS

In our book review department of this issue some excellent books are noted this week, and we call the attention of our readers to them. The admonition to become acquainted with all good books requires that we keep in touch with the latest developments in this line, that we may know which are the best for our special needs.

Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Regular Sunday school 10 a. m. Remember our aim—"a Christmas offering of $1,000." Preaching at 11.30. Social meeting at 3 p. m. In the evening at 8.30 Bishop George Lewis of Australia will be the speaker. Choir practice Thursday evening, 8.30. Religio Literary Society Friday, 8.30 p. m. Quarterly conference at Sedalia next Saturday and Sunday.—The Holden Progress.

THE MAPLE LEAF FOREVER

(National Song of Canada.)

In days of yore, from Britain's shore,
Wolfe, the dauntless hero came,
And planted firm Britannia's flag
On Canada's fair domain!
Here may it wave, our boast, our pride,
And joined in love together,
The Thistle, Shamrock, Rose entwine
The Maple Leaf forever.

Chorus:

The Maple Leaf, our emblem dear,
The Maple Leaf forever!
God save our King, and heaven bless
The Maple Leaf forever!

At Queenstown Heights and Lundy's Lane,
Our brave fathers, side by side,
For freedom, homes, and loved ones dear,
Firmly stood and nobly died;
And those dear rights which they maintained,
We swear to yield them never!
Our watchword evermore shall be,
The Maple Leaf forever!

Our Fair Dominion now extends From Cape Race to Nootka Sound;
May peace forever be our lot,
And plenteous store abound;
And may those ties of love be ours
Which discord cannot sever,
And flourish green o'er Freedom's home,
The Maple Leaf forever!

On merry England's far-famed land
May kind heaven sweetly smile;
God bless old Scotland evermore,
And Ireland's Emerald Isle.
Then swell the song, both loud and long,
Till rocks and forest quiver,
God save our Queen, and heaven bless
The Maple Leaf forever!

DOMINION DAY

Canada, Canada, land of the maple,
Queen of the forest and river and lake,
Open thy soul to the voice of thy people,
Close not thy heart to the music they make.
Bells, chime out merrily,
Trumpets call cheerily,
Silence is vocal, and sleep is awake!

Canada, Canada, land of the beaver,
Labor and skill have their triumph to-day;
Oh! may the joy of it flow like a river,
Wider and deeper as the time flies away.
Bells, chime out merrily,
Trumpets, call cheerily,
Science and industry laugh and are gay.

Canada, Canada, land of the snowbird,
Emblem of constancy, change cannot kill,
Faith that no strange cup has ever sobered,
Drinketh to-day, from love's chalice her fill.
Bells, ring out merrily,
Trumpets, call cheerily,
Loyalty singeth and treason is still.

Canada, Canada, land of the bravest,
Sons of the warpath, and sons of the sea,
Land of no slave-lash, to-day thou enslavest
Millions of hearts with affection for thee.
Bells, chime out merrily,
Trumpets, call cheerily,
Let the sky ring with the shouts of the free.

Canada, Canada, land of the fairest,
Daughters of the snow that is kissed by the sun,
Binding the charms of all lands that are rarest,
Like the bright cestus of Venus in one!
Bells, chime out merrily,
Trumpets, call out cheerily,
A new reign of beauty on earth is begun!

PRAYER FOR DOMINION DAY

With head uplifted toward the polar star,
And feet half buried in vines and corn,
Our country, of the nations latest born,
Stretches one hand the Atlantic's waves to bar,
The other to the setting sun afar—
Rolls back the Pacific towards the morn!
And yet methinks distracted and forlorn
She looks—from things that were to things that are—
With doubtful eyes, that all uncertain sweep
The wide horizon, as if searching there
For one strong love to make her pulses leap
With one strong impulse! Wayward passions tear
The heart that should be set in purpose deep,
And cloud the eyes that shall be raised in prayer.

O God of nations, who hast set her place
Between the rising and setting day,
Her part in this world's changeful course to play,
Soothe the conflicting passions that we trace
In her unrestful eyes—grant her the grace
To know the one true, perfect love that may Give noble impulse to her onward way—
God's love that doth all other loves embrace!
Gird her with panoply of truth and right
In which she may go forth her fate to meet—Ithuriel's spear, to crush with angel might
The brood of darkness crouching at her feet;
With faith to nerve her will and clear her sight,
Till she shall round a destiny complete!

—Agnes Maule Machar.

“Half the men in the world are hiding behind the excuse,
‘the spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak,’ when they really mean, ‘the flesh is able, but the spirit is not willing.’”—E. A.
Smith, in Joe Pine.

THE CANADIAN NUMBER

BY S. A. BURGESS

It has been the wish of the editors for several years to have prepared a special Canadian number, and now at last that wish is fulfilled.

We thought at one time of preparing it for Empire Day, May 24, but one of our good Canadian missionaries expressed a preference for Dominion Day, July 1.

As pointed out by Elder Daniel Macgregor in this number, the American Revolution brought indirectly to pass the like consequences for Canada; so that her several separated states were brought together and formed a federation in 1867. This included then only the four provinces of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia, or Upper and Lower Canada and Acadia.

But since then Canada has shown remarkable development and has organized the several states of the West and Middle West, and represents indeed a far-reaching dominion, just beginning to receive its development.

By proclamation of Queen Victoria, on the 22d of May, the new constitution of the federation came into effect on the 1st of July. This day was then fixed by statute as a public holiday and is annually observed as Dominion Day. What the day means to them is emphasized in Elder Macgregor's article in this issue.

For Canadians this is the Dominion Day Number. It is for all the issue devoted to Canada and the work there.

A BRIEF SKETCH OF THE WORK

BY S. A. BURGESS

On October 5, 1833, Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, and Freeman A. Nickerson started from Kirtland on a mission to Canada, which proved to be very successful. They reached Canada by the 17th, having preached on the way; Brantford, Mount Pleasant, Colburn, and Waterford are mentioned. A number were baptized at that time, and E. F. Nickerson ordained an elder. Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon returned to Kirtland early in November.

Then at the meeting of the High Council in the following February the question was raised, What elders present would go to Canada and preach the gospel to that people? for they had received a number of letters asking for help. Lyman Johnson and Milton Holmes, Zebedee Coltrin and Henry Harri-man, Jared Carter and Phineas Young, were appointed to go. This work was evidently in Ontario, and in the part between the Great Lakes. The work was pushed there, but we are able to find but little further reference to it in the history of the early church.

On August 11, 1838, Joseph Smith states that he left Far West to visit the brethren on the forks of Grand River in Missouri, who had come from Canada with Elder Babbit. It would seem possible that others may also have moved Zionward, but we have no direct reference to the number, or as to how energetically the work was pressed. The conditions in Missouri and Illinois evidently took most of the attention of the officers of the church.

Some early efforts were made there by the Reorganized Church, as we note as early as the fall of 1860 letters were being received from Canada for publication in the HERALD. The Church History remarks that the closing of 1864 found the work being pushed in the Dominion of Canada.

By 1875 reports were being received from Nova Scotia, as well as Upper Canada, but evidently the work was established around London, Canada. Joseph Luff and J. J. Cornish were busy there in 1876. In fact, London appeared to be the center of the church work, from which it radiated out to the neighboring fields.

As to the districts, the arrangement appears to be different now from what it was in the seventies, as we notice reference only to the Kent and Elgin District (this became later the Chatham District), and the London District. There were evidently branches at Lindsley and Blenheim, as well as at London, and an effort made to secure a church building in Toronto, though the Saints there were poor and were having a hard time. Despite their difficulties, they still continued most earnestly their efforts. In 1882 ten were baptized at Green Ridge, Manitoba, by W. H. Kelley and George H. Blakesley, Brother J. F. Burton was renewing the work in Nova Scotia. In 1897 the visit of President Joseph Smith to Ontario on October 12 is referred to in the SAINTS' HERALD, volume 44, page 662. He visited Blenheim, London, Saint Thomas, and Niagara Falls, as well as Chatham and other points.

There were sixteen branches in the Chatham District at that time, with a membership of six hundred. He also made other visits to that field, especially Ontario, visiting Toronto among other places.

In the brief time at our disposal just now, we have not discovered just when the Chatham and London Districts were organized, nor when the Kent and Elgin District ceased to exist. However, the work was established in Canada early, and principally in Ontario, later in Nova Scotia and Manitoba.

In 1909 the province of Manitoba was organized into a separate district, to be known as the Winnipeg District. The Saskatchewan District was also organized, consisting of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. The London District in Ontario was divided at the same time, and formed the additional district of Toronto.

In 1913 the Saskatchewan District was divided upon petition to form the new district of Alberta. And in 1916 the Owen Sound District was formed out of the Toronto District. The following year, upon petition of the Spokane District, that part of British Columbia lying east of meridian 120 was included in the Spokane District. Before that the Seattle and British Columbia District had been organized. In 1918 the Saskatchewan District was divided to form the Northern Saskatchewan and Southern Saskatchewan Districts.

So it will be noted that it is within quite recent years that the work has been built up in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia. The great western plains were but very lightly settled until within the past twenty years.

Yet an examination of the list of members in the four Ontario districts will show that four fifths of the church membership in Canada is still located in that province. The development in Saskatchewan and Alberta has been indeed remarkable within recent years.

The names of those who have done the work, gone through the hardships on the firing line, are mentioned in the articles which follow.

Some men are so excessively acute at detecting imperfections that they scarcely notice excellencies. In looking at a peacock's train they would fix on every spot where the feathers were worn, or the colors faded, and see nothing else.—Archbishop Whately.

CANADIAN MISSIONARIES

BY S. A. BURGESS

There are four hundred and eighty-four ministers listed for Canada, holding all degrees of the priesthood. These are men who earn their living in secular employment and give their time on Sunday and at such other times as they can spare during the week to the service of the church.

Besides these a number of missionaries have been appointed, but apparently none are appointed to the East, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, or Newfoundland, though part of Quebec would come within the field of Elder Pement, at Ottawa.

To Ontario there has been assigned in the Toronto District, in addition to Philemon Pement, J. W. Davis at Hamilton, T. W. Williams at Toronto, and George E. Harrington, J. A. Wilson, and James Pycock to the district at large. Elders Pement, Pycock, and Wilson are appointed as missionaries; the others are given local appointment.

In the London District, B. H. Doty and William Grice are appointed; to the Chatham District, Cornelius M. Clifford, Wilbert Woods, J. H. Yager; to the Owen Sound District, J. L. Mortimer and Samuel G. St. John. Elder John Shields has been appointed to the Owen Sound, London, and Chatham Districts.

To the west of Ontario, Nelson Wilson is appointed to Winnipeg; J. W. Peterson and T. J. Jordan to Saskatchewan; William P. Bootman, Fred Gregory, and William Osler to Alberta; J. D. Stead to north-west Canada; and S. S. Smith to Seattle and British Columbia District.

HOW MANY IN CANADA?

BY S. A. BURGESS

It may be a surprise to some of our readers to learn that the largest number ever baptized in Canada for any one year was for the year 1918—751. The next largest was apparently 1917, when 648 were baptized; the third largest in 1914, when 437 were baptized.

In 1891 there were 1,572 members in Canada, which included 6 in Manitoba, and 47 in Nova Scotia. In 1900 there were 2,784, a gain for the nine years of 1,212. In 1910 there were 4,931, a gain of 2,147 for the decade. In 1919 there are 7,840, a gain of 2,909 for the nine years.

The membership doubled in the eleven years from 1891 to 1908, and more than doubled in the next fourteen years to 1916.

The credentials for the Canadian districts show in Alberta 421 members; Chatham, 1,505; London, 1,016; Nova Scotia, 43; Northern Saskatchewan, 340; Owen Sound, 1,618; Toronto, 2,221; Winnipeg, 239.

The above figures are for 1919, with the exception that those for Alberta, Nova Scotia, and Winnipeg are for 1918. No figures are given for Southern Saskatchewan, but in 1918 Saskatchewan as a whole reported 552. Seattle and British Columbia District reports 758 members; and the Spokane District reports 600; but they do not show the number in British Columbia. Part of British Columbia is in the Spokane District.

This would mean a gain of 215 not directly accounted for, which might be partly accounted for by Alberta, Saskatchewan, Nova Scotia, Winnipeg, and British Columbia; and which may also be partly accounted for by the adjustment between the end of the year and the time of reporting membership in connection with credentials to conference.

The work is apparently onward, and the spirit of the Master is working with the church in Canada.

CANADA AND CONFEDERATION

BY DANIEL MACGREGOR

The confederation of Canada, effected some fifty-two years ago, inaugurated the birth of a nation destined to occupy a commanding position in the council of human governments. Prior to that time the country was divided into contentious colonies, animated by adverse policies, religious, political, and racial.

The story of Canada is divided into three great periods: the first as a colony under the French; the second as a colony under the British; and the third as a self-governing nation in association with that group of nations comprising the British Empire.

The first period marks an era of two hundred and sixty years of political and religious intolerance, during which the country made no progress, save in the development of an enslaving system, answering the orders of the papal hierarchy. Rome had placed one foot upon the neck of Mexico, and the other she had set upon Canada, from whence she purposed to conquer and control all America.

But an overruling Providence ordered otherwise. It was ordered through the inexorable agency of war. France and Britain, those ancient adversaries of medieval times, found occasion to renew hostilities, and their combats were carried to America. The conflict was long and bloody, in which the genius of George Washington first showed itself on the side of the mother country, Great Britain.

Canada is undoubtedly indebted to the colonists of New England, who, true to their political ties, rallied to the support of Old England in a war against the aggressor and aggressions of the north.

Eventually the struggle was decided. It was deecided on the immortal field of the Plains of Abraham, where Wolfe, the British commander, expired in the hour of triumph. In 1760 peace was declared, and all of Canada was ceded to Great Britain. Under British administration, the day of political liberty dawned, and Canada began her development.

There was another event which contributed to the laying of a splendid foundation for the country. It was the setting up of the free American Government in 1776. The Declaration of Independence found a ready and appreciative response in the bosom of every true-born Canadian, and undoubtedly influenced the colonial policies of the motherland from that time henceforth.

DANIEL MACGREGOR

Upon the close of the War of the Revolution, thousands of the New England citizens who did not countenance what appeared to them as drastic measures to acquire self-government, and who did not relish separation from Old England, removed to Canada, settling in the unsettled regions of Acadia and Ontario. To this bold and hardy race of pioneers, Canada will be eternally indebted for that vigor, vitality, and trueness of character that has made her name respected, and her citizens revered.

A word in reference to the administration of Great Britain. If Britain has erred it has been on the side of over liberal terms accorded the French colonists at the time of taking over Canada. She continued to them the unrestrained use of the French language in all parliamentary and judicial proceedings, together with the perpetuation of the now famous "ne-temere decree" which gave the Romish Church a disturbing prestige, particularly in the Province of Quebec, where the French element dominated.

Needless to say, the French people, fond of their mother tongue, and enslaved to the papal church, have not hesitated to promote the interests of both. The result has been an unfortunate demonstration of racial and religious narrowness, insofar as it affects the people of Quebec.

Thus matters stood at the time of confederation. The country was divided into three great political camps, Acadia, Upper Canada, and Lower Canada.

The first comprised the Province of Nova Scotia, Cape Breton, and Prince Edward Island; the second, the Province of Ontario; and the third, the Province of Quebec.

The industry of the country at that time was chiefly fur trading, lumbering, and fishing; the first holding the preeminence. And a country so rich in natural wealth, notably in minerals and agriculture, was bound in process of development to solve its internal difficulties.

Aside from the French Canadian, the country was endowed with the brawn and brain of those hardy sons of toil, the Celt and Anglo-Saxon, a race that has left its mark in the development of many nations as the greatest colonizers the world has ever known.

With such an administration and with such opportunities for exploit and investment, it was not long until the Goddess of Commerce pushed into harmony the erstwhile discordant racial and religious notes.

Accordingly, a council of the country was called. A galaxy of great men were brought together. They were drawn from all parts of the land, and were justly termed, "The Fathers of Confederation."

Sir John Macdonald of Ontario, Sir Charles Tupper of Nova Scotia, and others of note were the commanding personalities, and eventually those princes of politics effected the unity of Canada, and all under the sovereignty of the British Crown.

In matters of self-government, Canada is absolutely free and independent, unrestricted and unrestrained by any rule or regulation of the mother land.

The growth of the nation has been phenomenal, particularly in the development of an export trade that goes well beyond the billion-dollar mark.

In territorial expansion few countries can compare, and this, too, has been accomplished without the shedding of blood. The great northwest territories, held and controlled by the Hudson Bay Company, passed into the possession of Canada by purchase, and to-day, with the cultivation of the prairie provinces of the West, still in its infancy, Canada has earned the well-named title of "The Bread Basket of the British Empire."

Three great transcontinental lines belt the land from ocean to ocean, while millions of acres of untilled fields await the tiller's tools.

There is no state church in Canada, and men are free to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own conscience, while the schools and universities are modern and progressive in every respect.

As a field for effective gospel work, Canada is unexcelled and rarely equaled. The character of her citizens, plain and unpretentious, honorable and upright, energetic and ambitious, offers a splendid soil for the seed of faith and service. Indeed, we may judge by results. The church in Canada is stronger numerically and financially than in any other country of the world, the birth country of the church alone excepted.

CANADA AND HER RESOURCES

BY STEWART LAMONT

Canada has an area of nearly three and three quarter million square miles. It comprises all the territory north of the United States with the exception of Alaska and Newfoundland. It forms about one third of the British Empire and is only a little less in size than the continent of Europe.

The United States, without the territory of Alaska, is smaller than Canada by more than seven hundred thousand square miles. In other words, if the United States without Alaska were placed upon Canada, the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, and one third of Saskatchewan would be left uncovered.

There are nine provinces in Canada, namely, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia.

Canada has five marked physical divisions, namely, the Acadian Region comprising the eastern Maritime provinces and the southeastern portion of Quebec; the Lowlands Region, which forms a great portion of Quebec and the land bordering along Lakes Ontario, Erie, and Huron; the Laurentian Highlands Region, composing about 2,000,000 square miles of the northern part of Ontario, Hudson Bay territory, and Manitoba; the Central Plain Region, from Manitoba to the Rocky Mountains; and the great Mountain Area, from the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific Ocean.

Fertile soil is found almost everywhere throughout the Dominion, and favorable climate for such occupations as grain growing, stock raising, and fruit growing, naturally making agriculture the chief Canadian industry. Wheat growing for export is now confined entirely to the Prairie Provinces. Dairying and stock raising are common in every province. The hardier fruits grow chiefly in the eastern provinces.

Much of the wealth of Canada lies in her forests, of which there are several district regions. The southern region extends from Western Ontario to the Gulf of Saint Lawrence and the Atlantic Ocean, and stretches northward to the fiftieth parallel in western Ontario, and the forty-ninth parallel in central Ontario and Quebec; and all the northern area across the continent is densely wooded with all useful timber. Lumbering in Canada is second in importance to agriculture, and in addition to supplying the ever-increasing home market, a large export trade is carried on with Great Britain and the United States.

Minerals of commercial value are found extensively in Canada. In order of economic value, the most important produced are iron, coal, copper, nickel, silver, gold, lead, cement, and asbestos. The mining districts lie chiefly in the East and extreme West. Northern Ontario and British Columbia practically supply the world with nickel.

The fisheries of Canada are extensive. The most valuable fish for commercial purposes are found in shallow, cold water, where food is abundant. There are in the world three great salt water centers in which these conditions are found. One is in the North Sea and the Atlantic Ocean east of Iceland; the other two lie adjacent to the coasts of Canada, one in the North Atlantic Ocean, and the other in the North Pacific Ocean.

The Arctic current brings to the shallow waters of the coast of eastern Canada, vast quantities of algae, upon which the fish feed, and the facilities afforded by the ten thousand miles of coast for the taking and curing of fish, and the canning of lobsters, render the North Atlantic fishing center the most important in the world. The cod and lobster fisheries are the most valuable, although the herring, mackerel, salmon, and other fisheries are also important.

Canadian, British, French, and United States fishermen find employment in this fish center. The eight thousand miles of coast waters of British Columbia abound in excellent fish, salmon, and halibut chiefly.

The numerous fresh water lakes and rivers abound in valuable food fish. There is a storehouse of wealth in the Hudson Bay and her northern seas. The Canadian Government expends large sums in preventing the capture of fish during spawning season, and in establishing hatcheries in which fish culture is used to supplement natural production.

In trade and commerce the vast resources of the Dominion are extensively being developed, and consequently the trade and commerce of the country are correspondingly increasing. Seven eighths of the trade is with the two great English-speaking countries, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Trade in some respects has increased fifty per cent the last few years, principally agricultural products as grain, apples; animals and their products, as cattle, bacon, cheese, butter, and furs; products of the fisheries; products of the forest, as lumber and timber; products of the mine, as copper, nickel, and asbestos; manufactured products, as flour, agricultural implements, wagons, carriages, automobiles, and auto trucks, leather, and other articles too numerous to mention.

The principal exports are horses, cattle, sheep, hides, skins, and furs, products of fisheries, lumber, shingles, lath, pulp wood, and the products of the mines.

In transportation, Canada is well supplied, having three transcontinental lines, the Canadian Pacific, the Canadian Northern, and the Grand Trunk Pacific; also numerous radial steam roads. Canada's waterways are unequalled by those of any other country.

The chain of Great Lakes which lie between Canada and the United States, and their connections form by far the best inland system of water transportation in the world, besides numerous navigable rivers and canals.

From water power 1,825,200 horse power is produced with 18,803,000 if required.

Canada has developed wonderfully during the last few years. British and American capitalists have recognized the opportunities open for development.

Canada's seat of government is at Ottawa, each province having a legislative assembly. Canada's population is nine million, but her territory is large, and she is only in her infancy as far as development is concerned, and we believe there are more opportunities and privileges open for development in Canada than any country in the world. There is lots of elbow room for the downtrodden people of other countries.

We used to hear the old slogan "Canada for the Canadians." If that be true, let us all get out and leave it to the Indians for we are all the product of emigration. We will admit, with all our territory we have not populated as vastly as the United States, but we believe it is for the best.

Moses in prophecy refers to Joseph's Land as being choice above all lands, and we know Canada forms a great part of Joseph's land, and he refers to the abundance of fish, and the chief things, coal and minerals of all kinds, and the precious things of the everlasting hills (the gold of the Rocky Mountains) and the fullness of the earth. Where is there a country that will produce more grain? Put the prairies of the golden West under cultivation and we could feed the world.

Moses refers to having the good will of him who dwelt in the bush. Scientific men say that this land was once a bush. So the Jaredites and Nephites were the pioneers of early history and cleared the bush and left the great prairie lands for future cultivation, and so the squatter who goes to the prairies has the good will of the early settlers who dwelt in the bush.

Of the blessings which would come to Joseph's land, the gospel came in New York State. Nephi, 600 B. C. was shown the future of Joseph's land; its discovery by Columbus, the emigration of the Pilgrim Fathers, the Revolutionary War and the Declaration of Independence. In Canada we have great respect for our American friends and brotherhood in the church for the work we love so well. Its headquarters are in Uncle Sam's territory, but your country is extensively populated, while we in Canada have lots of room to spare.

Moses referred to Joseph's glory and power and compared his power to the great horns of the unicorn, and with this power (the gospel as established here) God would push the people together to the ends of the earth, and among them would be the ten thousands of Ephraim and the thousands of Manasseh.

So when we look over the situation of the world to-day after the great war, people will have a desire to get away from monarchy, militarism, and oppression, and we believe we have abundance of room for such in Canada, and we look forward to immense emigration and development of this vast Dominion of Canada.

EXPERIENCES

BY R. C. RUSSELL

From August 23, 1867, I have had a goodly share of the joys, but not very many of the sorrows of earth life, for which I am very grateful.

I was born on a farm near Dundack, Ontario. Came of Irish parentage, of Presbyterian faith, who, like most of the old school, saw that the Lord's day was kept holy.

Most of my young life was spent in school, until I eventually graduated as a teacher, spending the first three years as a pedagogue in the school where I had been taught by my father, who was of the same profession.

While teaching I was passionately fond of athletics, and spent much of my time in that enjoyment, not alone with the amateurs, but eventually taking third place in racing at a world's carnival. Being quite a believer in the saying that a person is just as old as he thinks himself to be, I quite naturally associated with the young of like temperament (for which the Lord commended me by prophecy of which more will be said later) for surely we grow old too rapidly, even though striving to the contrary.

ELDER R. C. RUSSELL

I had paid but little heed to any outward show of religion, though in a quiet way I followed the moral teachings of my parents, in which they were exceedingly strict. At one time I tried the mourners' bench as a means of entrance to the kingdom of God, but as in the case of Saul of Tarsus, it was the wrong road, and proved a failure.

I see now the peculiar leadings of the hand of God from my childhood, whereby he directed a family to locate in our neighborhood for a few years prior to their going to Michigan, during which time I chose the second daughter as my life's companion. Remaining but a few months in Canada after our marriage, we went to Hillman, Michigan, to which place her parents had preceded her.

One evening, as I lived a couple of miles out of Hillman, a man by name of Thomas Hunt came to ask if I would allow one of the ministry of his church to preach in the school in which I was teaching.

I knew nothing of his religion, but he bore the reputation of being the finest man in the country, and people said it was the effect of his peculiar religion. I readily consented, proposing to attend to the fire and lights. The next evening he brought Elder Benjamin Blackmore, who for several nights preached most excellent discourses to many people, who listened quite attentively to the strange doctrines so forcefully presented. Two were baptized.

The following spring, two of the ministry of the same church, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, came to continue the services so ably begun by Elder Blackmore. Among the many attendants were my wife's people, Mr. John Moran and family, as well as my wife and I. Soon many were ready for baptism and then persecution began in many ways. However, about thirty-five entered the kingdom, among whom were my wife and her people and myself.

Though the ratepayers of the public school for years had petitioned the school board to continue hiring me, they now petitioned to the contrary, as they said they wanted no Mormon to teach their school.

In December, 1894, I was called to the office of teacher, with the following promise: "If faithful, thou shalt be called higher and higher and higher and still higher," which was fulfilled in priest, elder, seventy, and in 1909—apostle.

In 1901, with my wife and family of two children, I returned to Canada, where for one year I entered the commercial arena.

Knowing by the inspiration of God that his divine purpose in creating me, and peculiarly leading me in the past was that I might volunteer for his service, I therefore, after being called to the eldership in June, 1904, accepted a mission that I might go forth to the harvest of the Lord and show to others the benefits of being a citizen of the kingdom of God.

For some few years I labored as a missionary in Ontario, going to Pennsylvania in 1908, from which place I went to General Conference in Lamoni in 1909, where I was called and ordained to the apostolic office. Being with Apostle U. W. Greene, placed in charge of Canada and the Eastern States, I remained in Canada while U. W. went East, and since that time my work has been chiefly in the United States in different missions.

In the Lord's divine economy, our natures vary as widely as our features, and mine has apparently been ordered of the optimistic class with a vision of brighter things ahead, in which the now young of our church will be mighty men and women of the Lord, carrying forth the glad message of truth to the convincing of the honest in heart and the salvation of their souls. By prophecy, the Lord has specially commended me for the interest I manifest in his young folks.

I am a staunch believer in providing the necessary amusements for the betterment of the health and habits of those who feel their youthful blood crying out for legitimate pastime, so that in mind and body they may develop to be perfect men and women, that as the cares of life come with age, they may grow old gracefully.

When the war of 1914 broke out, I was residing in Saint Thomas, Ontario, and believing that my son, then seventeen years old, would soon desire a place in the army of the allies, we took up our residence in Michigan, his native State, that with the men of that State he might go forward to meet the enemy of all good, and with others of that State he enlisted in the Students' Army Training Corps.

When I entered the work in Canada as a missionary, there was a band of good, devoted men who went forth with might and main to evangelize the country far and wide, and a great work was accomplished every year. Some of those have gone to a worthy servant's reward, one of whom I speak of in particular, Elder A. E. Mortimer, as a most companionable, as well as capable fellow traveler, and upon whom I could fully depend as a worthy collaborer through trial and worldly persecution.

Some have, through lack of finances and other adverse circumstances, stepped out of the missionary work for a time, whom I hope will soon return; while some have worse than burned the bridges behind them.

The work, however, in Canada is now being ably cared for by a mixed force of Canadian and United States missionaries, and is on a more solid basis than a few years ago.

My faith in this latter-day work is as unshaken as ever in the past, and I hope to be faithful to the end of life.

A RETROSPECT OF FORTY YEARS

BY JOHN J. CORNISH

By special request of my uncle, John Taylor, of Bothwell, Ontario, in December, 1871, I left London, Ontario, to visit them. I was sickly at the time with what the doctors called consumption. They claimed I had not many months to live.

On this my first visit to his home, he informed me that they had the gospel of Christ as it was when Christ was on earth; that it had been lost but was restored again with all its gifts and blessings, and he thought if I would try to get an understanding of it and obey it in good faith, with a determination to live faithfully before God that I would be saved in his kingdom; and he had no doubt but I would be healed of my affliction.

I believed all he told me, and after getting a fair understanding of it by explanation and hearing the ministers preach on different subjects, I determined to ask God for an evidence of its truthfulness.

In February, 1872, I went into the woods and prayed to God for a manifestation; that I might feel the Spirit in my body as others testified they had. This I did not mention to any person. In the prayer meeting that Sunday evening the Lord spoke through Elder M. Haskins in the gift of tongues. In the interpretation he said (in part): "Inasmuch as you have inquired of me this day to know of the truthfulness of my gospel, I now reveal it unto you and give you a manifestation of my Spirit by which you may know it is true." Immediately a power came upon me; my body trembled; the Spirit of God thrilled through my body from head to foot and my soul was filled with joy and gladness.

About a week later, February 22, 1872, I was baptized. In confirmation I was promised if faithful, that I should be healed and that I would be called to work in the ministry.

Shortly after I went to Blenheim, Ontario, where I secured light work. I boarded with an elder, bought a New Testament and had him mark the places referring to the principles of the gospel, the officers, the resurrection, etc. At that time words with more than three or four letters I would have to spell. I tried to learn to read, and having the book before me and with the memory of what I had heard the elders preach, I began to understand it so I could tell it to others.

About eight months after my baptism I had gained in body and was quite strong again. I then returned to London, Ontario, where I talked to all who would listen to me. A young lady, a few years my senior, believed. We went to Bothwell where she was baptized and confirmed. We returned to London, and when opportunity presented we would talk to one another about the gospel.

I then interested and explained the gospel to a young man, a fellow workman named Harvey, and when an elder passed through London Brother Harvey was baptized. This made three Latter Day Saints in London.

Shortly after I arranged for Brethren Robert Davis and Arthur Leverton to come to London to preach. The meetings were well advertised but few came. However, I had two well satisfied that the gospel was the same old Jerusalem gospel. Brother Leverton baptized three, including these two, at these meetings. Three Saints by the name of Sparks who had a few weeks previously come from London, England, saw the advertisement in the paper and made themselves known. Now we had nine members in London. The last meeting was a prayer meeting, at which time I was called and ordained a priest. After the dismissal of that meeting, before we separated, it was suggested that we give out an appointment for preaching for the following Sunday, and that I be the speaker. I told them I could not preach.

"Yes, you can," said one.

"But," said I, "I cannot read."

Brother Sparks said: "I'll open the meeting and read your hymns and Bible lesson."

"But," I answered, "I cannot preach."

Then first one, then the other, would say, "You have been called and ordained."

"Yes!"

"Well, then, open your mouth and God will fill it."

"Yes!"

"Well, then, say you will preach; say yes."

I said, "Yes." Oh! then how I trembled and sweat. I slept very little that night, but prayed continually to God that he would help me and I would make an honest effort.

On Sunday afternoon we met at the home of Brother and Sister William Burch, who were not yet members. Brother Sparks opened the meeting. I took the little Testament; and a verse, so often quoted by ministers, and which I could with many other verses recite from memory, I used. But you know I was a preacher and must read the text, so I read Acts 2:38.

"Now," thought I, "what will I say next?" But words came to me; I said them and kept on saying until I had talked twenty-five minutes. While this was happening I thought, "It is all right. I am doing it," and in my mind said, "Thank God," not because I thought I would be a preacher, but because I would be able to tell others about this beautiful gospel. Then before I had time to consider, I said, "Preaching next Sunday at 2.30."

Again I trembled, and a short discussion went on in my mind: "What will you say? Well, what did you say?" Then, "I didn't do that. It was God who did it through me and he will do it again." By the help of my Master I preached the following Sunday and on Monday baptized two young men.

I kept on preaching and baptizing until the fall of 1875, when I was ordained an elder. It then saved us the trouble of sending and waiting so long for an elder to come to confirm those whom I baptized from time to time. We continued preaching, baptizing, confirming, and administering as occasion demanded until I had baptized over one hundred people, and soon we had a nice little church building and a branch organized.

It was in this branch in December, 1876, when Sisters Taylor and Lively were baptized, that God so gloriously manifested himself when he caused the heavenly light to shine upon us and filled us with the power of his Holy Spirit. A sound like a rushing mighty wind, and a round shaft of light came down from heaven, and a voice spoke to Brother William Clow, saying: "These are my people. You must not laugh at them." About thirty people were present encircled in that great light, which enveloped not only the people but that part of the river where we were baptizing, and continued until the baptism was over, when it ascended. Only Brother Clow heard the voice of God speaking to him. All who witnessed this scene and were not then members, were afterwards baptized.

When the child of Brother and Sister Cambridge swallowed deadly poison, a few drops of which the physicians said would kill any child, an older brother of the child was sent on the street car for me to go to administer to him. I left my engine in the care of one of the brethren and hurried to the home of Brother Cambridge. There I found the child lying across his father's knees making a low groaning sound, and the mother in another part of the house crying. I got the oil, gave the child half a teaspoonful, poured three or four drops on his head, and, kneeling by the chair whereon the father sat, I put my hands upon the child's head and in a few words begged our heavenly Father to destroy the power of the poison and heal the child. At the prayer meeting the next evening I saw Sister Cambridge and asked how the little boy got along. "Oh," she said, "he was running around with a piece of bread and butter in his hand in ten minutes after you left, thank God."

"Thank God!" said I, and who would not praise and thank him under such circumstances?

About that time or a little later, Brother John Harvey (now of Kansas City) had the misfortune to cut off two fingers of his right hand. He came downstairs where I was running the engine and holding the hand with the other said, "I've cut my hand."

"Oh, what shall we do?" I asked. After a pause of a few seconds he said, "Unite your faith." In a flash it came to me: "You have been ordained an elder, administer." Immediately I laid my left hand upon his head and lifting up my right hand, prayed thus: "O God, in the name of Jesus Christ I pray thee to stop the blood and heal the hand." It stopped instantly, and I bandaged the hand. When the doctor, whom our employer ran for, had come, he ordered the bandage removed. John said, "No." Our boss and the doctor raged. The doctor said, "I'll bet five hundred dollars that the cords will draw up to the wrist, then it will mortify and the hand will have to be taken off at the wrist." I then stepped in between Brother Harvey and the doctor and said: "The God that stopped the blood will heal the hand." And he did. In sixteen days Brother Harvey returned to work.

Our dear Sister Hunt was afflicted with what the physician called black-bone erysipelas. It started at the toes and had spread above the knees and had gone from the fingertips above the elbows. The doctor said she could not be cured and as soon as it met from the hands and feet to the heart she would die. That night they sent for me to administer to her. I found her limbs were black with shades of purple and blue. I put oil over all the afflicted parts, and anointing her head said to those assembled there: "Now, unite your faith with me." Then laying my hands upon her head I prayed, being filled with the Holy Spirit. I cannot tell what I said, the power was so great. We sobbed. Some cried aloud and gave praises to God, and Sister Hunt was healed. In a few days her skin was as natural as it was before the affliction came upon her. She lived and died in the faith at a good old age.

Oh! had we space we could mention so many cases in the early days in Canada. But passing over forty years of our work and the scores of blessings we have enjoyed all along the way, we come to the last few weeks of our ministerial work and we can see the hand of God still leading and blessing us.

Sister Mae Butterfield of this place (New Westminster, British Columbia), who was suffering with double pneumonia following influenza, was taken to the hospital. Everything that medical skill could do was done, but without avail. The doctor and the head nurse said it was impossible for her to recover, and upon one occasion she was placed upon what was called the "death bed." The Saints, however, kept up their prayers for her and the local elders administered. I was also called to the hospital to administer and we exercised all the faith we had, praying that our heavenly Father would stop the ravage of the disease and spare our sister to her family. As nothing more could be done she was taken to her home. The Saints continued their prayers, and one night they met in our assembly room, everyone offering up a special prayer for her recovery. The disease was rebuked, much to the astonishment of the nurses and the physician, the latter making three special examinations at her home to assure himself that she was recovering, then astonishingly remarked, "Well, you've made it."

The sister who is the mother of six children is now well, doing her own housework and looking after her family. As we again see her in the assembly of the Saints, attending all the special services now being held, we feel constrained to give God the glory and praise for healing her when she was past the powers of man.

While in the home of Brother and Sister Davis, of Centralia, Washington, I was sitting talking with a young brother upon the restored gospel, when Sister Davis rushed into the room past us into another room, holding one hand with the other and saying, "I've scalded my arm." Instantly I was by her side, and as she poured the oil on the arm, which looked like a piece of fresh raw beef, I lightly spread the oil all over the red part, and putting both hands on the scalded part, I said: "O God, the eternal Father, draw out the power of heat and heal this hand and arm and make it well, that it will leave no ill effects. Amen!" As I turned to go back to the room I saw the young brother with his head bowed and his hand up to his face. I think he was breathing a prayer with us. I said: "That is the way, pray for one another, two or three, and the blessings will come." The sister (a sweet singer) was healed, and in ten minutes the red was gone, and she felt no ill effects.

At that time her baby had been sick for some time and had been administered to, seemingly without result. I then suggested that the mother and father fast and pray with the administrator, and at the end of the fast, administer. We did. A few days ago I received a letter from Sister Davis, her husband adding a few lines, in which she said: "Our baby is well and good natured. She has not been bothered any more since she was administered to that night. The Lord is so kind to us all. I wish we could show our appreciation to him more than we do. Also Brother Oppelt bore testimony that he was helped from administration and has had no further trouble since then, which is a great relief to him."

This Brother Oppelt was troubled by the power of the Evil One, as were many others in the days of our Savior while he was among men, going about doing good, casting out devils and healing all manner of sickness. He gave his servants power to do likewise, both in former and latter days. This evil power against Brother Oppelt was so great that he said it seemed sometimes that it would press the life out of him, and at one time told him: "If you do not cease resisting my power I shall see that one of your babies is taken from you."

I said, "My brother, Satan cannot do it. God won't let him while you do right." No blame should be attached to anyone by reason of the efforts of Satan trying to get power over people now, more than in former days, and the power of God is as great now as in any other age.

I told the brother to be administered to. He said that he had been repeatedly. Then replied I: "This may be a kind that goeth not out but by fasting and prayer."

Arrangements were made, and Brethren Heading, Rhodes, Cato, and myself agreed to fast and pray with the brother, and under the fast administer. By the power of God through the priesthood the Evil One was rebuked, and as the brother relates in a letter to me: "Well, thank God, I have not seen him since . . . since the administration I have felt much better, physically and spiritually."

Oh! it is not the golden past only. I thank God for the golden now. I have never in all of my ministerial life had better freedom of speech in preaching the gospel, nor greater blessings following my administrations, than now, and for the last few months.

Dear readers of the HERALD—members and non-members; with me God is not the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob only, but he is the God of Joseph and Hyrum, the martyrs; the God of Joseph and W. W. Blair, and likewise the God of Fred M., Elbert A., and all latter-day Israel, and as the days go by let us double our diligence, upholding by our faith and prayers the men of the church upon whom so great a responsibility rests, "being humble and full of love," then greater power will be given to the church to that extent that the kingdoms of this world will be constrained to acknowledge that this is "the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ," and will desire to become subject to its laws.

GOSPEL WORK IN OTTAWA

BY PHILEMON PEMENT

Propagating the restored gospel in Ottawa is a most difficult task. It appears to me in that light at least, and I am speaking after more than four years' experience.

Truth does not appear to be any more popular today than it was in the days of the Master, and the man who sets about to teach it, and especially along religious lines, can expect, to use a common expression, to be strictly up against it.

Religion seems to have the power to warp most men's minds. The vast majority of men do not seem to have the ability to grasp the gospel as Jesus and the apostles taught it, and this is the direct result of human tradition, and Ottawa is brimful of such teaching, hence the difficulty confronting the gospel message.

It is not that men are not solicitous for their eternal welfare in this city; they certainly are; but the same condition exists here that Paul found in Athens, which stirred his spirit when he beheld the idolatrous condition of that people.

Religious strife and determined opposition between Catholicism and Protestantism seems to be grounded in the very soul of most of the people here. And the reader can imagine what kind of a task it is to get these people to see that both parties are in error, expressed by the Lord when Joseph Smith asked which of the contending churches he should join.

The opposition manifested against the plain and simple teachings of the doctrine of Christ, as I have tried to set them forth since coming to this place, has proceeded mainly from those who sing, "Cling to the Bible." The ministerial association of this city passed and published their resolutions of disapproval against my effort here, shortly after it became known that I came here as a representative of the restored gospel. They were pleased to call it Mormonism, and that was sufficient to prejudice and harden the hearts of many, who, I am convinced, would otherwise have lent an ear to our message.

One old gentleman said to me when I spoke of building up a branch of the church here: "Well, it will be a wonder if you do," and I rejoined with, "Well, it will be a wonder if we don't." And we did.

My first effort at holding meetings in a tent had some very discouraging features about it. I opened up, without any human assistance, on Saturday evening; had about 150 people present; the cry of Mormonism immediately went up, and that gave me an opportunity to promise a sermon on Mormonism the following evening. But lo, and behold, about three o'clock Sunday afternoon a rain and wind storm laid my tent flat with the ground, and tore it in several places. This pleasant experience was immediately followed by the cry that the Lord had destroyed my tent as a mark of his displeasure. Well, I do not know how other missionaries are built, but I will fight harder and more determinedly in the midst of opposition than when I am left alone; and the greater the opposition the greater the fight on my part. So, as I was not to be downed by any storm or wind or cry of God's displeasure, I set to work to get a new tent, and on Monday night I was at it again, in a better tent, and in a better place. I realized that, while I had no human assistance, I was not left alone, for the promise was verified which says: "I will never leave you nor forsake you." To God be the praise for what measure of success attended my feeble effort.

I believe it is a serious mistake to send out a green, raw missionary into a new field alone. As far as I can ascertain I am the first missionary the Reorganized Church ever sent into this part of the field. I knew no one connected with the church in this place when

ELDER PHILEMON PEMENT

I arrived here. There were three members of the church here but even they did not know of any other Saints in this place, and they did not know of each other. Through certain articles appearing in the papers they learned of my presence and in that way we became acquainted. They have proved faithful to their covenant, and have been of very material assistance to the work here.

Many blessings have been experienced by the Saints, given them by the Lord, and they so recognize them. The testimony that the work is true is held by most of them, and that is, after all, the real, abiding consolation.

OUTLOOK AND PLANS FOR THE FUTURE

I have never lost faith in the future of the work here. I really believe that with some little assistance to carry on tent work, we could do a good work and reap a harvest of souls into the kingdom. One man alone cannot successfully carry on tent work anywhere. He must have help. And I am looking forward with considerable hope that such assistance will be given this summer. I have the promise of the district president that he will lend some assistance along this line. The Saints here are quite young in the work and have done marvelously well in the service to the Lord. May his Spirit abundantly remain with them.

The ground for my faith in the above hope is founded on a vision given me twenty years before coming to this city. I have gone literally through a part of what was shown me, and I believe the balance will follow in due time, and that the work will be more fully established than it now is. It will require faith and works to bring this about, and I pray for the exercise of both these, as well as all other virtues of the gospel of our Lord. May his peace abide with us and let us be faithful.

THE WORK IN TORONTO

BY A. F. MCLEAN

The Saints here are rejoicing in the gospel of Jesus Christ. Never before was it so dear to them nor did it mean so much. For years past they have been active, building rapidly and rushing headlong without a thought of the testing time just ahead.

There were warning signals by the way; but they were passed unnoticed until the crash came. Only those present on the fateful night of June 5, 1918, can realize those tragic moments when about six hundred Saints, who had worked together in storm and sunshine, were called upon to line up for or against the church. The gathering out of the faithful Saints was the work of but a few moments, during which time family ties and friendships of long standing were broken.

The sifting time was upon us. Many officers in the branch, Religio, Sunday school, and Woman's Auxiliary went down in the smash, but we soon reformed and pressed on, never losing a single service through it all. It was an ordeal, but those who have come through are greatly benefited by it. Our vision of the work is different; our aim is different.

The general good of the church, its members, and the spreading of the gospel is our first care.

Individualism has gone. "Toronto" no longer is our boundary line. That is too narrow. The line between the Toronto Branch and the general church has vanished. We realize we are a part of the general church, and its interests are ours.

When the season to open the theater services arrived, the branch went forward with a determination to succeed. The fine new Allen Theater was rented, and the campaign went along the usual lines with the exception of a more democratic control and a new speaker. Elder T. W. Williams, of Los Angeles, California, was the man to fill the vacancy, and he measured up to the task.

We conducted the services throughout the entire winter, closing in time for Brother Williams to attend General Conference. We labored under more adverse conditions than ever before, because of the slanderous pamphlets and articles appearing in our city papers. However, the season was a success. Our audiences increased, the last two nights being the largest. Many new friends were made; and a good solid work was built up.

It was a critical season but we feel the situation was well handled; and the prospects for next season are good. We are now in a position to carry out a constructive program. The Saints are all loyal to the church; and ready to "carry on" with more vim and energy than ever before. Our object is a definite one. No personal aims to be considered, and to God only be the glory.

The lawsuit, McGuire versus Evans, is over. It lasted seven and a half days in the Supreme Court of Ontario, before Judge Sir Glenholme Falconbridge. Judgment will not be given for some time yet. This case being over, the Saints are now preparing for their reunion at Lowbanks, July 26 to August 10. We are looking forward to the best reunion ever held by our branch. It will be our aim to make all who come feel welcome and at home.

Our elders are going out to near-by towns and villages, opening up new places to preach, and are thus kept busy. All are anxious to work in the Master's cause, and feel a freedom and liberty hitherto unknown. The work is progressing, and we feel confident of a bright future.

Our members have been through the mill. We know what it is to be on the hilltop of achievement and prosperity, to face almost overwhelming adversity, to live together in peace and love, and to meet in bitterness and strife. We are battle scarred, but we trust the milling will develop a body of veterans who will have learned to trust God in sunshine and storm, and glory in the opportunity to fight for the cause dear to every Latter Day Saint.

There can come no ultimate defeat to those who are in the struggle for truth. Our experience has taught us that the sun always shines after a storm. We have never seen it fail and never will, unless our vision becomes so dimmed that we cannot see when the sun shines. Toronto Branch rejoices in the latter-day glory.

OWEN SOUND DISTRICT

BY JOHN SHIELDS

This district has a record of change of name, as it was first a portion of the old London District when it contained some fifty-four branches, or all Canada except Chatham District. Later it formed a part of Toronto District, until a few years ago, at Arthur conference, Owen Sound District came into existence, with Brother D. B. Perkins its president, and Sister Hannah Leeder, secretary. The latter held such position formerly both in London and Toronto Districts. The former had served as president of Toronto District likewise. Both are retained in those offices respectively.

I might go on in the biographical strain, but in so doing would have to mention such a multitude who have used time, talent, finance, and, I must say, much sacrifice for the upbuilding of the work in the district, that the HERALD itself could not contain all that should be written. However, as my task really is to give "the present situation and future outlook," I must confine this to a mention of the branches, their name and membership, with an occasional remark that may come to mind.

Arthur: W. J. Goulding is president, and Effie Goulding secretary. Membership 94, absent from the branch 57. Names associated with the work are Daniel Macgregor, J. L. Mortimer, S. W. Tomlinson, R. C. Russell, and George Buschlen. Had the last-named remained in the branch and continued his splendid work there, it might have been much better. We would like to mention many there, but must mention Brother Thomas Berry and family as faithful stand-bys.

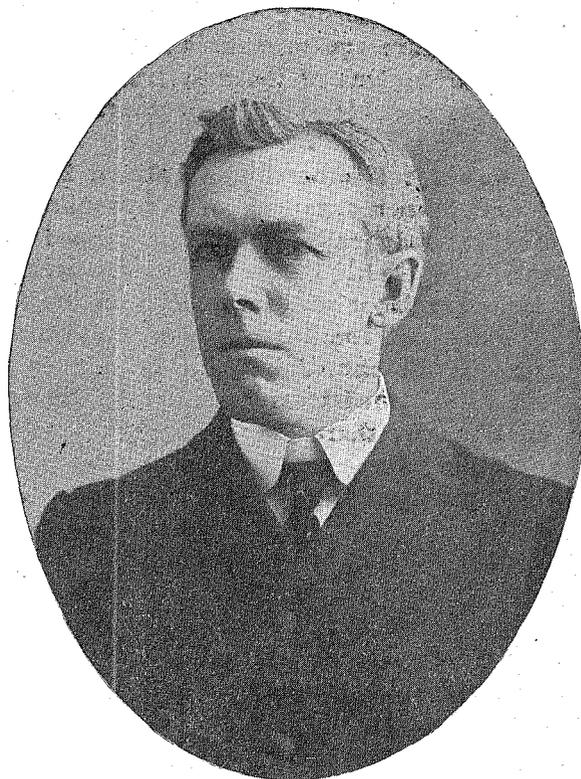

Cedar Valley: R. W. Tarzwell president, Sister M. M. Tarzwell clerk. The work was started there by John Shields some twenty-nine years ago, the first persons baptized being the said Brother and Sister Tarzwell.

Clavering: Membership 81, absentees 30. D. B. Perkins was the first resident of the village to be baptized. He had studied for the ministry of the Baptist Church, but not being satisfied he had a divine call, he was engaged in mercantile business when this work found him. Elders James Gerrie and J. T. Thompson are associated with the rise and progress of the work at Clavering, also J. L. Mortimer and John Shields. On one occasion the latter and others were kept in the building after meeting till the mob had exhausted their supply of ancient eggs on the building when some one would open the door in an attempt to leave. At another time they took away the cart he was driving and dumped it over a bridge and into a creek, breaking one of the shafts.

Cockburn Island: William and James Gerrie preached some sermons while there on business, followed by a missionary effort by John Shields. Here persecution took the form of shooting off guns and throwing stones. Membership 18; Malcom McPhee president, Bella McPhee clerk.

Colpoys Bay: We believe Fred Gregory should have the credit for the existence of this branch.

ELDER JOHN SHIELDS

Membership 65, absent 44. Ralph D. Waters president, Frederick Whenham clerk. Brother Waters and wife were once earnest workers in the Salvation Army.

Egremont: Membership 69, absent 51. D. W. Cameron president, George McCall secretary. This is the oldest branch in the district, being organized June 2, 1880, by Elder Robert Davis, who also did the first preaching and baptizing. William H. Kelley, G. T. Griffiths, J. A. McIntosh, T. A. Phillips, and W. J. Smith are mentioned among the early missionaries performing labor in the branch. We are only aware of two branch presidents having occupied in all the years: the late Walter Morrison, and the incumbent, D. W. Cameron. Here the writer attended his first conference in June, 1884.

Garafraxa: Membership 153, absent 44, John H. Taylor president, Mrs. R. J. Thompson clerk. Here the writer, when a priest, made his first opening in the fall of 1887, and on the 3d of December baptized his first candidates, five in number, the first to enter the water being John Taylor, father of John H. and his seven brothers, all becoming members of the church. Later, that grand, good man, Alexander Clark, and a number of his family became members of this branch, being baptized here. Of these we might mention the late Ada Smith, wife of our late President Joseph Smith.

Guelph: This branch has been organized during the past year and has 55 members. King Cooper president, Christena Demmons clerk. Brother Cooper gave us a morning walk of eighteen miles nearly thirty years ago to make an opening at Damascus, Ontario. One of the first fruits of our labor there was the late William Brothers, president of Buffalo, New York, Branch.

Manitowaning: Membership 87, absent 37. This was the first branch organized on Manitoulin Island with the first man called to the priesthood as its president, W. R. Smith, Chester M. Smith clerk. The first missionary labor was performed on the island by S. W. and G. C. Tomlinson, who also did the first baptizing. B. StJohn, John Shields, Walter Bennett, and R. B. Howlett are mentioned among the early missionaries there.

Owen Sound: Came into existence under persecution and opposition from other religious bodies, through the labors of J. L. Mortimer and John Shields. The woman, in whose unfinished house the latter was preaching, brought a lady school-teacher to show him how foolish he was to believe the Book of Mormon. The sequel is that a son of the first woman to give this elder a meal and place to lodge has occupied acceptably as branch president all those years, and the then school-teacher has been his helpmate and faithful wife. Benson Belrose president, R. J. Wilcox clerk. Membership 137, absent 52.

Port Elgin: Organized in July, 1901; church built the same year. Had for its first missionaries Daniel Macgregor and J. L. Mortimer (or vice versa). N. E. Leeder and James A. Phillips (now president of Sarnia Branch) were among the first to be baptized and were present when J. L. Mortimer and John Shields were before the magistrate for "disturbing the public worship of Almighty God within the walls of the German Evangelical Church." However, it was the members of said church who made the disturbance, and used mob violence toward these brethren, who merely desired an announcement that the Reverend Dierlam's misrepresentations might be replied to. The building where these brethren were tried has since been given by the town authorities free of charge for conference meetings. Membership 102, absent 34; N. E. Leeder president, Hannah Leeder secretary.

Proton: We believe was the second branch organized in the district. Membership 146, absent 70, James McLean president, W. C. Wale clerk. Samuel Brown, J. A. McIntosh, and Willard J. Smith are named among the early missionaries.

Ravenna: Membership 35, absent 6, Alexander Brown president, Mrs. Galloway clerk. Brother R. C. Russell, under conditions of persecution and opposition, raised up the work here.

Redickville: The older members here were first part of Masonville, one of the early branches; missionary work was performed by J. A. McIntosh, S. Brown, W. J. Smith, R. C. Evans, John Shields, and others. Many of your readers will want to know if Elder John Wilson still lives, and he does so far as we know. They will remember the Masonville church on his farm and the kind hospitality of himself and family. John Wilson, Bowley Arnold, and Robert Whitehead are named as being branch presidents. Please pardon our digression to mention Masonville which was disorganized by removals before Owen Sound District had being, but its history could not be written without Masonville being mentioned because of the work going from there to so many places. Membership 83, absent 24, Martin L. Snell president, Lillie Snell clerk. Brother Snell, family and others there have worked hard and sacrificed much that a house of worship might be built and the cause maintained at Redickville.

Sault Sainte Marie, Ontario: Membership 54, absent 17. We think Elder G. C. Tomlinson was one of the pioneer missionaries there, and Brother John Tomlinson held presidency of branch. The incumbent is M. K. Brown, formerly of Manitoulin Island.

Southampton: Membership 47, absentees not given, Albert Gibbons president, Sister Gibbons secretary. When we first held meetings in Owen Sound Maggie Belrose played the organ for the services. Albert Gibbons used to come to see her. He did not want to hear us and wanted Maggie to take a walk, but she remained and did service; he stayed, too. Sequel above.

Spanish Station: Membership 28, absent 8, W. E. Aelick president, Sister Aelick clerk. Organized by J. F. Curtis on November 19, 1916.

Sandfield: This second branch on Manitoulin Island was organized by J. F. Curtis on November 29, 1916, with Arthur Gordon president, and Margaret Arnold clerk. Membership at organization 16, now 31.

The disorganized branches in the district are: Grand Valley, 4 members; Masonville, 60; Oliphant, 11; Riverview, 10; Saint Edmonds, 12; Stokes Bay, 43. These figures, kindly furnished me by Sister Leeder, are all taken from last year's reports, which ran up to June 30.

The priesthood of the district consists of 1 patriarch, 1 seventy, 24 elders, 28 priests, 22 teachers, and 22 deacons.

The officers of the district are: D. B. Perkins president, Benson Belrose and N. E. Leeder assistants, Hannah Leeder secretary, James A. Morrison Bishop's agent and treasurer, S. M. Shute librarian, A. Taylor chorister, Laura Taylor member gospel literature board.

The future outlook for the district is full of promise of much good to be accomplished, provided we continue the righteous endeavors that have brought about, under the blessing of God, the successes of the past.

OPENING WORK IN WESTERN CANADA

BY ALVIN KNISLEY

The writer was not the first missionary to the Canadian Northwest. Preceding me were Frederick Gregory, Thomas McMillan, and Walter Bennett, who went jointly, and J. L. Mortimer, respectively. The first and last named of these brethren had made, I believe, more than one trip each, leaving their families and loved ones behind for many months at a time, destined to make the best of it on a light allowance and careful management.

Under the pushful administration of the forgotten and at that time invincible R. C. Evans, then of the Presidency, the writer made his initial trip to western Canada in company with J. L. Mortimer in the fall of 1903.

As Oliver Cowdery says in describing their exalting experiences in translating, "Those were days never to be forgotten." Bro. Mortimer and I took ship at Owen Sound on one of the three large liners operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway, which for a long period was the only company having such a thing as a transcontinental line. Owen Sound is on Georgian Bay. We had a pleasant passage through the bay, and all went well till we reached and passed the gap into Lake Huron. Then it seemed that the very imps of the infernal pit were combining to intercept the voyage of men whom they knew were destined to reduce their strongholds and succeed against them. For it was very rough during the remainder of the voyage, some four or five hundred miles. The fate of our bark was in question and I was as sick as a dog nearly all the way.

I was glad when we were able to emerge from our sick bed and a veritable hospital into the open air of Port Arthur the fourth day after our passage began. Soon we were on the train pulling through shapeless rocks and the forsaken waste of western Ontario. When we reached Winnipeg it was intensely cold.

After spending a couple of weeks or less time in that neighborhood, I went to Treherne, Manitoba, where Brother Nelson Wilson and his wife were resident, six miles in the country, my companion moving northwesterly to other points he had in view.

Against preachers and prejudice, the opposition of the local paper, and all that hell could invent to impede our marches, having to begin with only the sympathy of three or four unofficial but prayerful and zealous members, I trudged on till I had, in this new place never before visited by any of our ministry, baptized no less than twenty-three.

From there I went, after about three months'

ELDER ALVIN KNISLEY

time to Weyburn, Saskatchewan, in answer to a request from Brother and Sister Toovey who had taken up a homestead there. There again I raised up a congregation with the help of the Master and of those earnest souls who supported me, till, in a very short time, I won other support. When I went to this place the Methodists were in possession of the right of way, were the only thought, holding the only services held in the schoolhouse. On my return or second visit thither, after a brief absence, they had abandoned the place and we had captured the crowd, had all to ourselves, no others competing, no other services. But, of course, opposition was not dead. Where I accomplished the most I had the most to fight and hell was the hottest.

It is proper to say that I made openings at Disley and Saskatoon, baptizing about nineteen at the latter place in fulfillment of a dream I had as I was about to visit the place. I opened the work at South Melfort, where I debated with the Non-Progressive Campbellite minister, the Reverend Jones, whom I hear has since fallen a victim to insanity. At Saskatoon I debated with the Roman father, J. C. Sinnett, and also with a Presbyterian, the Reverend S. G. Lawson.

My work in the Northwest was the putting on the map of the church, Treherne, Weyburn, Halbright, Disley, Saskatoon, and South Melfort, for I went first and alone to each of these places. And save as to priority of visit, Winnipeg may well be placed in the same category.

I believe that British Columbia is also a part of Western Canada. It would be the height of ingratitude to ignore the efforts of Daniel Macgregor there, and his first trip, soon after his marriage, alone, till eventually his devoted companion was permitted to join him in that remote field.

In those blessed days we were without the present conveniences of travel. Railroads were far between, trains were few, and such a thing as a missionary having an automobile was a dream. But it seemed that the more we cheerfully accepted of hardship the more we were blessed and the more power we had. By the time this is in print I expect to be on my circuit through the northern part of Wyoming, wife and boy accompanying me in the interior of our massive new car where we have sleeping accommodations and can almost take in roomers. I seldom see the inside of a railroad coach from April till December or January any more. And I am in the market for the first practical aeroplane within my financial reach that will always stay up, till I am ready to come down.

So far as I am concerned, and I presume that other participants will likewise testify, the work in Western Canada was built up with much sacrifice, fasting, and prayer, the same as it must necessarily be done in Europe, Asia, Africa, or the oceanic islands—or anywhere else.

For nearly two years I saw not the face of any other occupant of the priesthood in my field, and heard no voice but my own in proclamation of the message. But I had power and I saw the promises of the Lord to his representatives verified. The instances of miracle, of manifestation of power, of remarkable experiences, healings, etc., in that field would call for much more space than my allotment. God is in sympathy with inventive genius and is in favor of our employment and utility of useful means and articles in rapport with our fellows, but some of his means and some of his utilities and plans are not subject to modification and must be observed without variation for all time to come. So in missionary work.

There are some men who have never believed enough to doubt. There are some who have never thrown their hopes with such earnestness on the world to come, as to feel anxiety for fear it should not all be true. But everyone who knows what faith is, knows too what is the desolation of doubt.—F. W. Robertson.

THE EARLY WORK IN ONTARIO

BY A. LEVERTON

It was in the year 1867 that I first heard of the Latter Day Saints (or Mormons as they were then called by almost everyone, as the people did not seem to know the difference between the two organizations) being in Canada. It is true there were a few Saints in Canada previous to that time. I think there was only one branch, namely, the Buckhorn Branch, now called the Blenheim Branch, and the people looked upon them (the Saints) as being such a poor, ignorant, and insignificant class of people, that they would never amount to anything religiously, numerically, or otherwise. In fact it was predicted by some of the world's people, that old Joe Shippy's ox team and sleigh would be a sufficient conveyance to carry all the Mormons that would ever be collected together in Canada. This has proved to be a false prediction, thus verifying the word of the Lord, that there should be false prophets in the last days.

ELDER ARTHUR LEVERTON

About the year 1866 (as near as I can remember) the gospel was introduced into a place called Lomsville (seven miles east of Chatham City), by Brethren John Shippy and James W. Gillen. A number believed the gospel, and obeyed, namely, John Traxler and wife, George Shaw and wife, Asa Vickery and wife, George Green and wife, and others that I do not now remember. This group of Saints was organized into a branch called the Lindsley Branch.

In the fall of 1870, or about that time, the gospel was preached at Wilksport by John Shippy and others; also in the township of Moore. On or about this time, James Robb, David Johnston, Robert Davis, John McKenzie, Phelan Shaw, and others obeyed the gospel, and the Olive (now Kimball) and Wilksport Branches were organized.

In 1870 and 1871, Brethren John H. Lake and Joseph S. Snively came into Canada on a missionary tour, and they labored with the local brethren in the different localities. God blessed their efforts, and numbers were gathered into the fold. Sixteen or twenty were baptized into the Blenheim Branch.

This addition to the membership of the branch rather overcrowded Brother Joseph Shippy's ox sleigh and made transportation a little inconvenient in that line.

The people might "rage and imagine a vain thing," yet the marvelous work and a wonder pushed its way on, and the Botany (now Ridgetown) Branch was organized, with Brother Peter McBrayne as president.

Also about this time the gospel was preached in the township of Zone and, as in other places, some came into the church. Among the first to obey were Thomas Badder, Norman Blakely and their wives, and A. Leverton, Brethren John Taylor and Joseph Snively officiating, and the Zone Branch was organized January 12, 1871.

Well, dear reader, about this time the people did "rage and imagine vain things." We were accused of believing in polygamy, free love, and the like, and some of our neighbors with whom we had been acquainted for years, looked upon us as though we were escaped convicts, shunned us, and said all manner of evil against us. The churches united to fight against us and the work, and sent to Woodstock and secured the services of Professor Crawford to come and annihilate the whole thing, but he failed. Others were sent for, and they also failed; which proves to be true that consoling statement, "If God be for us, who can be against us?"

But we were surprised at the conduct of people whom we had thought before were good Christians. Still the Lord's work proceeded, and about this time (1872) I baptized my first convert, J. J. Cornish, who at that time was quite young and as full of mischief as an egg is full of meat, and we were very much surprised when the Lord told us in his confirmation that he was a chosen instrument, and if he would be faithful he should be the means in the hands of God of bringing many into the church. We are thankful for the fulfillment of God's promise.

The work about this time extended to the township of Osborne, through the efforts of Brethren John Taylor, Myron Haskins, and A. Leverton. Some were baptized. Here again the people raged, and resorted to mob violence, but the Lord watched over and protected his children. We were told (and it appeared to be by good authority) that a number took an oath that there should not be another one baptized in that locality, and that they would shoot the man dead who attempted to do so.

Well, it pleased the Lord to send your humble servant, with Brother John Taylor, back to that place again, telling us that we should baptize some before we returned home. Shortly after arriving there, a certain one came to us as a friend, warning us of the intentions of the mob coming out against us, and advising us to leave the place immediately, for he said he was afraid there would be harm done to us if we did not go at once. I thanked the young gentleman for his kindness, and told him the Lord had sent us there to do a certain work, and neither men nor devils could force us away until that work was done. He expressed alarm for us, but I told him we were under the Lord's protection, and it would be all right.

I preached that evening, and some offered themselves for baptism. We arranged for the baptizing to take place the following day at noon. After the meeting that night, the mob came out to take us, but we escaped being captured by them. But through them and their influence we were robbed of the privilege of sleeping on a feather bed that night, and Brethren John Taylor, John Hartnell, and myself made a bed among the leaves beside a log in the woods, and there reposed until the sun was shining brightly the following morning. We then arose, shook ourselves, and as we were near the banks of the creek, we sought a good place for baptizing, and then returned to the house to find that the mob had caught Brother John Hartnell, sr., the night before and shaved the hair and whiskers off one side of his head and face, and left them all on the other side, which made him rather an odd-looking sight.

Noon came, and according to appointment we all proceeded to the waters of baptism (and here let me say that we received God's blessing and protection in a marvelous way, but it would make my article too long to repeat it all in detail). So we came to the place where we had selected for the baptisms to take place; we sang a hymn ("Lo, on the water's brink we stand"), had prayer by John Taylor, then I went down into the water and baptized ten before I came out. And the mob did not shoot me according to the oath they had taken, for the Lord was between them and us, and had so ordered matters that the mob knew nothing about the baptisms until afterwards. That night the mob came out in full force and rage, but the Lord, in a miraculous way, delivered us from their grasp and power, not suffering any harm to come upon us.

About this time, through the efforts of Brethren J. J. Cornish, Brother Robert Davis, and myself, the gospel work was opened up in the city of London, which has proved to be a good gospel field.

Much more could be said in regard to the gospel work in Canada, but as this article has exceeded the limit, I close by saying, Although people may rage and imagine vain things and use slander and ridicule against the angel's message, and some may make shipwreck of faith, yet the Lord's work is onward, for if God works with us, none can hinder.

THE PRESENT AND FUTURE OF THE CHURCH

BY FRED GREGORY

My first contact with the latter-day work was in the city of Saint Thomas, in the year 1888. I was then a young man working at the printing trade, which trade I followed for several years after. E. K. Evans, a priest in the church, was also an employee of the Journal, and it so happened that I went to board at his home. While we walked together to and from our work the conversation generally ran along church lines. I soon became convinced though I did not express myself openly, and late one very stormy night in April, after some hours of listening to argument between Brother Evans and two other young men, I surprised the little company by offering myself a candidate for baptism, which was attended to the same night. As I remember it distinctly, it was a very rough night indeed, but four of us, notwithstanding the darkness and rain, made our way to Kettle Creek which we found to be greatly swollen. However, we were too much in earnest to be denied, so in the blackness of the night, and in the face of apparent danger, I was baptized, since which time I have considered myself a Latter Day Saint.

From that time to the present I have constantly (with some slight intermissions, of course,) made effort to experience the best the church could give in a spiritual way. I remember with pleasure the labors and sacrifices of my earlier life, side by side with my brethren, some of whom have crossed over to the other shore, while others, losing their grip upon the work of God, have been overcome in the cloudy day.

As a minister of the church I have experienced many lonely hours, but I have no complaint to make. I gave myself to God and the church and have enjoyed the service. At times while alone in meditative prayer I have been fairly immersed in the Spirit to the joy and satisfaction of my soul, and the divinity of the work I have never doubted. God has been my stay and in him I shall continue to trust.

My past is seldom thought of, as I am not the reminiscent kind. The past has never met my expectations along any line. I have truly been blessed and have as truly waded through some deep sorrows. I cannot associate the miraculous manifestations of the Spirit with my past as so many others can, but I have just as surely been in communion with God in ways less demonstrative, and the truth just as effectively burned into my soul. At least I feel it is there to stay. Rather than keep looking back to buoy up my hope and courage, I prefer to live in the fullness of the present and in full confidence of the future. God surely lives to direct his work and enlighten his trusting children.

My joy will increase as I see the spirituality of the church increase, for the spirituality of the church to-day is but a stepping stone to something infinitely higher and better. The future is unmistakably big with promise, the vision of which urges us all onward and upward to greater spiritual attainments. Possibly the hour is upon us wherein we shall see many important changes. We seemingly cannot stand still, and we dare not go back. We must move forward like Israel of old if we would see the salvation of God, and this is the hope of the church.

Our difficulties are not insurmountable. Faith in God and in ourselves will dissolve the mightiest of them. Fear paralyzes all our faculties and inevitably leads to failure. Let courage lead the way, and by throwing all our energy—physical, mental, and spiritual—into the struggle we shall never know defeat. God is on our side and we cannot fail providing we remain within the hollow of his hand. But it requires only a glance to note a serious lack of knowledge concerning ourselves. Not so much a lack of knowledge concerning the outer man as it is a lack of knowledge concerning the inner man—the real, true, spirit-man God made in his own likeness and image. This is the man Jesus appealed to, and only as the inner man catches the beauty of the Savior's counsel can we hope to manifest that beauty in any outward expression.

How often do we find ourselves questioning the possibility and even the practicability of the Lord's requirements. We have almost come to think we are unequal to the task, and in every conceivable way try to excuse ourselves. The fact that God has commanded us to build up Zion is positive and undeniable proof of our ability. We have not the faith in ourselves that God has in us. It must be that we do not understand our higher powers—the abilities of the inner man—and so fail to grasp the situation.

In my judgment the outer man, governed by the physical senses, will never build Zion. He must die and stay dead. We all know that he was supposed to be buried in baptism, but alas! he gives evidence of being very much alive. We simply need to give the inner man more prominence, for "that which is born of Spirit is spirit," and the "Spirit beareth witness with our spirits" that we are the children of God, so that guided by the Spirit of God the inner man would soon lead us to higher and holier conditions. Along this line there awaits us as a people, perhaps in the near future, a great awakening, and when we see the open door which has been so long open, with ourselves contentedly sitting upon the doorstep, we'll likewise see the open windows through which the light of God may constantly stream into our souls, bringing with it that joy and peace unspeakable.

We need a clearer vision of the real Christ and his unselfish life, and when the mind of Christ is in us by choice then we may reasonably hope for better things.

REMINISCENCES AND TESTIMONY

BY R. C. LONGHURST

I believe what I may have to say, as a native and citizen of the Dominion of Canada, must be a mixture of reminiscence and testimony. In the month of July, 1886, my wife's sister (Sister Janrow, now of Detroit, Michigan,) brought R. C. Evans, then known as "The Boy Preacher" from Saint Thomas, Ontario, to see her father. They came to my home. We understood he was a Mormon, our only information on the latter-day question being Fanny Stenhouse's history, and we were prejudiced indeed.

In course of conversation I said I would like to hear him preach. A hall was secured. On the Sunday morning Evans told us that the night before he had a vision of three men (preachers) coming to the hall, and described the men. We knew there were no men of that description anywhere in this vicinity. Sure enough they came, but from the city of Brantford, sixteen miles distant, their object being to put a stop to Evans's work; however, they were worsted in the encounter from a Bible standpoint.

I was baptized on September 7, 1886, and I believe I was the first in Norfolk County under the Reorganization. My wife and a number of others likewise came into the church, and later Vanessa Branch was organized. Brother John H. Lake was then missionary in charge of Canada. I wish to relate, here, one of the first evidences of divine power we discovered in the church. It was at a prayer meeting in our home when Brother Lake spoke in the gift of tongues, and after earnest prayer the interpretation came through R. C. Evans. The promise was then made to us that the work would extend south and east of us. In course of time I took Brother Evans south to Lynnville where a number were baptized. Later we went east to Waterford.

An instance comes to mind of attending my first conference at Corinth Branch, Brother John Shields and I meeting and rooming together, both being priests. Brother John was there called and ordained an elder, but the instance I started out to relate is this:

At the prayer meeting Brother Lake (who had been failing in health for some time) expressed himself, somewhat like Paul of old, as being in a strait between desiring to live for the benefit of the church, or for his own benefit to depart this life. At once R. B. Howlett arose in the gift of prophecy, telling Brother Lake that his health would be restored and that he would live yet to accomplish a good work in the church. He then addressed R. C. Evans, telling him that he would meet the Goliath, but if he would use the pebbles of God's truth as David used the smooth stones from the brook, he would conquer. Some time after this Evans was challenged to meet the Reverend T. L. Wilkinson in debate at Waterford. Propositions were signed for an eight-night debate. Evans entered the debate after thirty-six hours' fast, with the Bible as his only book. Wilkinson, who had met one of our elders in a four-night discussion and another in an eight-night debate, stood the Waterford debate for two evenings and twenty minutes the third, packed his books and left the town. Next morning the Waterford newspaper bore in large type headlines, "Goliath slain by little David," a remarkable fulfillment of the gift.

I wish here to mention a blessing in our own home. A daughter was born to us. The doctor, a friend of the family, came to me and said, "She is a frail creature and may die; it would be a God's blessing if she would as she will be deformed for life." She lacked any bone for three fourths of an inch where the ankle joint should be. Neighbors said it was a judgment on us for joining this church. Brethren Lake and Evans administered to her and their prayer was that when she was old enough to walk that her foot would be all right, and so it was. That foot is as perfect as the other.

As stated, I was first a priest in the church; later an elder, and then high priest, presiding over the London District for twenty years. At one time the district contained fifty-four branches. That was when all Canada was included except Chatham District.

I cannot in the limited space mention the many evidences of divine power as manifested in the restored gospel that have come under my notice, or the efficient labor of the many missionaries who have occupied in our field during that time, or yet the many branch officers who gave us words of encouragement as we passed along, or their families and others who have so kindly entertained us at their homes; but my heart and mind goes out in fond remembrance of our pleasant association together, and though now prevented by the weight of seventy years and certain infirmities of body from meeting with the Saints in the various branches as I once did, my heart is still in the work because of the certain knowledge that has come to me of this latter-day work being the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth.

I have seen humble men arise and shine, whose light is still burning. I have seen stalwarts become exalted, or ambitious of worldly things, and fall, but the fall of none from this faith has grieved me more than that of the once humble, blessed, and as a consequence, brilliant R. C. Evans. For I roomed with him when he received at Port Elgin that wonderful gift to himself as well as others, a portion of which says: "Tear not down another's structure, seeking thus to build thine own; each shall answer for his conduct, when he stands before my throne."

It is indeed pleasant to think of the blessed (to me at least) association of past years with the Saints, at the conferences and in the several branches, and I hope to be able to endure to the end so that such pleasant association may be renewed, but under the better conditions that shall obtain in the rest that remains for the people of God.

WHY I JOINED THE SAINTS

BY JAMES HENRY TYRRELL

James Henry Tyrrell. Born June 26, 1854, near Blenheim, Ontario, Canada. Baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints on June 23, 1873, by E. C. Briggs and confirmed by Joseph Snively. Ordained a priest, March 21, 1884, by Arthur Leverton, Samuel Brown, and Peter McBrayne. Ordained an elder, July 30, 1894, by W. W. Blair, John H. Lake, and George Green. Married Elizabeth Booth of Dunn Township, June 16, 1880. Of this union two sons, Levi Henry and Roderick Alexander were born.

Not having any religious experience until about the year 1870, while I was living in Blenheim, Ontario, I attended a sectarian revival meeting, during which the minister pictured the awfulness of hell. This stirred up my young mind to inquiry about leading a religious life, but I became perplexed to know which church to unite with. There were four churches in the town, all of different faiths. I stood at the parting of the ways for three years. During this three years my mother joined the Saints, and my associates called me a Mormon, causing me to become discouraged and I felt very much disgraced.

Mother brought home the Book of Mormon and I was curious to read it, but she refused me, saying that she wished to read it first to see if it was fit and proper for me to read. However, after reading it she recommended it to me. I read it and was delighted with its plainness of speech and the very high morals it taught.

I was informed that the Saints enjoyed the gift of unknown tongues, and through curiosity I attended several meetings and unexpectedly the gift was manifested. I was greatly amazed and puzzled to hear the gift through a person I knew could only speak English. It was certainly new to me, and to make it more wonderful, part of the gift was to me, telling me what the Lord would do for me if I would obey the gospel.

I felt in my mind that the gift was all true, for it sounded so old-fashioned like the Bible times. I accepted the heavenly invitation and found that God was true to his word, as he gave me a testimony that the latter-day message is true. It has kept me from many a snare of the enemy.

HEALING

The good Master has used me as his instrument with his ordinance of the laying on of hands to cure the diseases, when the doctors said the patient could not live.

CONSECRATED OIL

I learned the good effects of the Lord's consecrated oil before I joined the Saints, by being healed with it when all other means had failed. Also another instance, Brother E. W. Long, then of Chatham, Ontario, had the misfortune to have his hand burned with gas so badly that he could not open it. I was called upon to administer to him and as soon as I poured the consecrated oil into his hand, he began opening and closing it and exclaimed to his wife, "See how

I can open and close my hand. It is free from pain." This with many others has occurred while I have been officiating in the elder's office.

ELDER JAMES H. TYRRELL

TITHING

I have found this tithing law of the Lord's to be true. Having collected tithes and offerings in this Chatham District for nearly twenty-six years, acting as Bishop's agent under four bishops, and collecting thousands of dollars, I know God protects those who obey this part of his royal law.

One instance of the many that happened to me: I am engaged in the musical instrument merchandise business, and I sold an organ to a man on a lien contract; he afterwards took the instrument away and hid where I could not find him or the organ. I was advised to go to a clairvoyant for information as to where the instrument could be found, by one who had found lost articles by this plan. This did not appeal to me as I was in business with the Lord. I felt that I would rather lose the instrument than go to the power of the Devil for information, because I believed the Lord would protect his people by his own royal law.

Sure enough, in a short time upon arriving home from the country the organ was sitting on the store floor. I had reported the theft of the instrument to the firm I purchased instruments from. Their traveling agent was on the lookout, and one day while on his travels his attention was drawn to a man, and his curiosity caused him to ask the street car conductor who this man was. As soon as he heard the man's name he exclaimed to himself, "That is the man who stole the organ from Mr. Tyrrell of Chatham." Inquiry was made as to where the man lived. He at once went and found the organ and had it expressed to me, so you see the Lord used the agent to return the stolen organ to my possession again. This is to me proof that God will protect his tithers.

A life of nearly forty-seven years in this latter-day work teaches me that it is folly to trust in the puny arm of flesh. The Apostle Paul knew what he was talking about when he said, "Looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith."

Let us have "faith in God," for he can save to the uttermost.

A TESTIMONY

BY LUCY YERKS

The editor has invited us to participate in the Dominion Day HERALD. We appreciate the invitation, also the Canadian HERALD. It is our privilege to write a testimony or reminiscence.

When quite a child our young mind was made to feel there was something unusual, something stirring, something going on in the town adjacent to our country home. It was the advent of a Latter Day Saint minister in our burg.

We recall hearing of such a commotion, the like of which had not been before or since. Everyone was running about with a Bible, and talking religion, aroused by something thought to be new. But it was the old, old story, told by the priesthood of the God of Israel.

Opposition was a strong factor. In opposition there is trade. Result—the men of God established a branch in the town. Though it has had its bright and gloomy times, it came to stay and still remains. Please God may it stay until its work shall have been finished.

Some seventy and more years ago, the martyred Prophet had stood in this same town and proclaimed the angel message.

At the time before mentioned, the latter-day work was gaining headway in this community, and many earnest persons were hearing the message and obeying the call. Some in our home, though they were stanch members of another church, were listening to the word taught.

A little later we thought it rather smart to go with father to hear the Saints. Let me state right here that it takes a young mind to make an indelible impression on.

As those in the home became more interested, we constantly heard the work being talked and argued. As we grew older, "pride ruled our heart," and we were less anxious to hear and made our visits to the chapel less frequently, until a time came when we united with another church.

When father and one of our brothers were about to be baptized, life to us was no longer worth living. We surely were disgraced. A few hours in our life at that time—well, we refrain. But those who witnessed them should take it as a testimony that when we joined the church in after years, there must be something in this work.

Father in his quiet way would talk the gospel, though little encouragement was given him at times; yet it kept impressing. In mentioning the time when Christ would visit the Jews and they inquired from where did he receive those wounds, and he replied, "In the house of my friends," we bowed our head to hide the tears, and thought if the Saints are right, we want to go with them. We love God as well as they, and do not want to be left out. When father would be away working, we would read the tracts and study them with the Bible.

The work was unfolding before us, until its spirit bore witness with out spirit; until we were called upon to acknowledge the divinity of the work, to embrace and defend it.

In 1899 a conference was held in London. Father invited us to go, which we did. Those entertaining us perceived our interest and asked us to be baptized. We thought to refuse, thinking the people of Waterford might say we had to go away to be baptized. On second thought we accepted, as there were no regular meetings at home other than the sacrament services, which we had not attended, and had already put it off for some time.

Elder Frederick Gregory baptized us. We have not always been as "valiant in testimony for Christ" in word and deed as we might.

We have had to pass through our Gethsemane as others have, and the fact that earlier in the work we bore our testimony that though we may go down and out, we once knew the work was true, helped save the day for us when it was dark and dreary, for we never could forget that testimony.

Many pleasant experiences and associations have been ours to enjoy. Our real friends we have kept, and gained many more, dear to us because of the gospel bond.

God is good. The church is true, and worthy the best from all. This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world. We are honored to be privileged to understand it, and contribute our mite in work for it.

AN INCIDENT

BY MAGGIE MACGREGOR

Twenty-two years ago my husband and I were doing missionary work in and around the little village of Cedar Valley, Ontario, when a request came from Brother George Buschlen, "the village blacksmith" of Arthur, to come over and help them.

Elder J. L. Mortimer was then living in Arthur and working at his trade of stonemason in the surrounding country. Being home on Sundays he had procured the use of a schoolhouse and conducted weekly services. Two had been baptized from these efforts and the work had reached a point where the few Saints living there thought it necessary that nightly meetings should be conducted, hence the request for the services of a missionary.

Arriving on the scene, Brother Macgregor at once commenced a series of meetings. It seemed as though the whole country side was aroused and a splendid interest was awakened.

Exceptional liberty was granted the speaker, which was quite unusual with Dan in those days, for his ascent to liberty and ease in the pulpit had been a long, hard climb, with frequent stumblings in which he would have to sit down in shame and defeat after a struggling effort of ten or fifteen minutes.

This new experience of continued light and liberty was certainly a very welcome and encouraging change and made all labor pleasant and every task a song of joy.

The work went merrily along for over forty nights without a single failure, and some thirty precious souls were brought into the kingdom.

In the midst of this unprecedented success our district conference convened in the city of Toronto, and we hied away with joyful hearts to meet the Saints from other parts in our semiannual assembly.

But this was to be no common conference, for the long-expected and earnestly looked-for was about to happen: Brother Joseph was coming. I believe it was his first visit to a Canadian conference—at least it was the first time the great majority of the Saints of the London District had ever had the privilege of meeting the Prophet.

It was a great event; we were all excited and on a tension of expectancy, and everybody was on his best behavior—or trying to be. From Toronto wire messages were sent out all over the district from friends who had arrived and had learned for certain that Joseph was to be present, and were wiring their loved ones at home, "Come at once, Joseph is coming."

It was a great conference—in point of numbers at least—for the Saints literally swarmed in from all sides, and our district at that time numbered about three thousand souls.

At length Brother Joseph arrived. With what reverence we viewed him! How respectfully distant we held ourselves, scarcely deeming ourselves worthy of an introduction to "the Lord's anointed." How whole-heartedly we sang: "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet," and how glad we all were that Brother Joseph was such a humble, unassuming, approachable person.

The usual routine of business, preaching, and prayer meetings obtained, and, would you believe it, although there must have been some very fine sermons preached there, yet there was only one that made sufficient impression on my mind to be remembered through the years, and that was the poorest one among them.

Dan was called upon to preach. What a wonderful honor—and responsibility. He had never before been considered capable of attempting such a task as preaching at a conference; and then to be asked to preach before Joseph, the Prophet! It was surely an august occasion, and we both felt it. But what if he should fail? Oh, it was not to be thought of; he must not fail! And then there were the forty days of unwavering success just past, and we felt he surely would succeed.

We both fasted and prayed that the desired blessing would come, and Dan chose a subject that he had enjoyed exceptional liberty in presenting only a few days previously. I remember it well, it was a comparison between the events at the Tower of Babel and conditions in the latter days.

As Dan entered the stand I almost rose in my seat in the energy of my prayer that God would grant him liberty. But no; it was not given. He staggered through a half-hour's discourse on the confusion of languages and the confounding of tongues, and sat down feeling that he was an excellent example of his subject.

Immediately on the close of the meeting he came to where I was standing and said hoarsely, "Come on"; and we quietly slipped out, not waiting for the congratulations of our friends. We walked down the street in "silence deep as death" for a considerable distance, before Dan broke the spell by an abrupt, "Well, what did you think of it?" I cautiously replied, "Oh, it was not too bad." Another silence, and then, from my other half, in very decided tones: "Well, if the Lord doesn't want to bless me he doesn't have to." And turning aside to a fruit stand, he bought some fine bananas and ate six of them, and in a few minutes his mental outlook on this mundane sphere was considerably improved.

NOVA SCOTIA

BY LOIS G. JOHNSON

In this province with its population of 500,000 there are about forty Latter Day Saints. There are two branches, Williamsdale with a membership of twenty-nine; and South Rawdon, fifteen; but of that number, some are living in the United States, and some have not heard a sermon for years; and do not take the church papers.

There are about fifteen names on the Bishop's agent's report for our conference year, July 1, 1916, to July 1, 1917; tithing $354.75, and Christmas offering $112.

There are two church buildings; one at Williamsdale, and one at South Rawdon, about one hundred miles apart. The district owns a good tent with chairs, which we hope will be used sometime.

The greatest loss to the work in Nova Scotia was the removal of Elder H. J. Davison from our province, for while he was appointed to Nova Scotia all the isolated Saints were visited once a year, and cheered, strengthened, and encouraged to go on in the work. He will never be forgotten, and we are often asked by those outside the faith, "When is Elder Davison coming back?"

As I have spent most of my life in Cumberland County, I am familiar with the work here. It was first preached by Elder Joseph Burton, who, with Sister Burton, in 1883, left Rawdon, Nova Scotia, en route to Cape Breton, going by Parrsboro and Amherst, around the historic "Basin of Minas," famed in Longfellow's "Evangeline." They spent two weeks at Parrsboro, and baptized Mr. and Mrs. Layton; then a few days were spent in Amherst (now a city), at the home of Mr. D. F. Quigley. Many interesting hours were spent talking of the gospel. A few years later Mrs. Quigley went to Lockhartville and was baptized by Elder Davison, and some years afterwards, her daughter (now Mrs. Dunlap of British Columbia) was also baptized at Mr. Davison's home.

About the year 1889, Mrs. Page, now of Independence, visited her native country, and she requested an old couple who were friends of hers, to entertain an elder if one came here (Williamsdale), and acting on a letter received from Mrs. Page, Elder Davison came here in 1890 and secured the schoolhouse to preach in. Previous to this five had been baptized in Parrsboro.

Quite an excitement was aroused in the community when the report was spread that "a Mormon" was going to preach.

Elder Davison had good attendance at his meetings, and in the spring he returned and baptized the first two here on July 15.

During the summer of 1891, Elder F. M. Sheehy came with Elder Davison. I was teaching in a nearby section, and heard several sermons. I had always believed in baptism by immersion, (though I did not have a relative who did) and as yet I had heard nothing about "authority," so had joined the Baptist Church.

In October, 1891, Brother W. H. Kelley came to South Rawdon for conference, and later to Cumberland. At that time there was a branch in Kings County, named "Cornwallis Branch."

In 1892 Elder M. T. Short visited Nova Scotia. My connection with the work began in 1894. I was teaching in Williamsdale, and superintendent of the union Sunday school. I attended a series of meetings held by Elder Davison during the winter, and when Elder U. W. Greene and Elder Davison returned I, with five others, was baptized on July 1. In the same year two others were baptized, and in 1895, Brother Leander Johnson (my husband) was baptized. Before leaving I turned the first sod for our church building.

In 1895 Elder George W. Robley was in Nova Scotia, and I was then teaching about three miles from Amherst, where I secured the schoolhouse, and after one week's meetings, two sisters accepted the gospel. One (afterwards Sister Phillipin) died in London, Ontario, several years ago. As we were forbidden to use the schoolhouse, Elder Robley returned to Providence, Rhode Island.

With one or two exceptions, a conference was held each year. Among the ministry laboring in Nova Scotia from 1897 on, we note: Elder Frank M. Sheehy; Apostle Joseph Luff, who in 1898 made a short visit, preaching at Williamsdale, South Rawdon, and Amherst; S. O. Foss, W. W. Blanchard, and especially Elder H. J. Davison. These latter three organized the Williamsdale Branch, with nine members, in 1900, and made an opening at Glenville. In 1912 the River Philip Branch was organized, but after a few years was disorganized and the members enrolled with the Williamsdale Branch.

Returning to Williamsdale in 1901, after an absence of six years, for nearly eighteen years our home has been the elders' stopping place.

In 1906 we note as laborers in this field, and visitors, Elders R. W. Farrell, and Thomas Mills, of Ohio. In 1907, Elder E. E. Long made a new opening in Westville, Picton County. During 1909, Brother Farrell, as president of the conference, held tent meetings at River Phillip, Oxford, and Amherst, conducting conference at Glenville, in the district tent. Priest John P. Buschlen assisted him. In 1911 Elders Daniel Macgregor and John F. Sheehy attended the conference at Williamsdale, and Sister Macgregor organized a Sunday school. Meetings were held at Springhill, a mining town, with excellent interest, and two were baptized. We have always felt that many more would have heard the gospel if the meetings had been continued, but the interest was never followed up.

Elders William Anderson and O. D. Shirk came in 1912; Elders F. J. Ebeling and Rushfelt in 1913. In 1914 Elder Ebeling returned for a conference, and in 1916 we enjoyed a visit from Elder I. M. Smith and wife. In 1917 Brother Ebeling again came to assist in the conference at Glenville, and in 1918 Elder Sheehy was present at the conference which was held at Williamsdale.

For 1919, so far we have not heard of any appointment for Nova Scotia. The work is at a standstill—almost past reviving. The tent is idle, churches unused, but we believe the spark of faith yet to be found in many hearts can be fanned into a living flame, and we have not given up hope yet of seeing the work built up in many towns where as yet the message has never been proclaimed. We believe some will accept the truth if they only hear it.

BY WILLIAM OSLER

The subject of the following life-sketch came into this world to stay for a probationary sojourn beginning on November 15, 1884, at the ancient city of "Bonnie" Dundee, Scotland. My father, now deceased, was of old Lowland Scotch descent, and mother, who still lives in my native town, is of mingled Highland and Lowland. The family consists of three sons and two daughters. The writer is the youngest of all.

The facilities of the liberal public school education of Scotland benefited me greatly. Good-by was said to my school days in my fifteenth year, and for about two years I worked with father who was a lathing contractor.

Having a continual longing to see the big, far-away world, a longing which nothing could remove, I finally left for Melbourne, Australia, in my eighteenth year. I worked there for about one year on a bread delivery rig, then left for Westralia, the Golden West of Australia. In three years' time, many and varied were the experiences of life in the goldfields back of Kalgoorlie.

It would unusually lengthen this narrative to relate any feature of them. With "billy" and water bag, I "humped bluey" many hundreds of miles and tasted of the bitter and the sweet. With all the ups and downs, failures and successes of my youthful days in the land of the Southern Cross, even now the harp of memory has no strings of regret save for the follies and indiscretions of youth.

My wandering footsteps wended homeward again, but wanderlust could not be satisfied there, and the next two years found me an overseer on a large sugar estate in Demerara, British Guiana, South America. Although successful there in my occupation, the moral laxity of the white man's life never appealed to me, and again I roamed.

In the Queen City of Toronto, Ontario, Canada, I stayed about one year. In all these years I never claimed any church relationship. Skepticism and infidelity were my argumentative positions on matters of religion. In my crowded young life, I had floated on the ebb and flow of life's tide, and came to view with suspicion all manner of organized religion, whether Christian or non-Christian.

I read some placards announcing that President R. C. Evans would lecture in the Majestic Theater the following Sunday evening, and I determined to go and hear him. You may smile, dear reader, but I really thought he was the president of some infidel society. When the curtain arose, I soon realized my mistake, but concluded to hear what the speaker had to say. As the talented preacher clearly told of the justice and mercy of God in the bliss of eternity, a power or influence came upon my whole being, and dispelled was the feeling of cynical doubt and in its place was implanted the investigative happiness of hopeful desire.

After three months attendance at every preaching service, reading and meditating, by divine help, self was humbled, and during February, 1908, I was baptized. Whilst being confirmed, the Spirit came upon me again in power, in a literal baptism, and the spirit of prophecy, through Elder R. C. Evans, told me of future responsibilities in church work, some of which have been fulfilled so far.

Three weeks after baptism, Toronto was left behind, and I journeyed to Alberta, intending to settle there. As a hired man I learned more about farming than I had ever known before.

By divine guidance I was led to Ribstone, Alberta, where I homesteaded. In this locality a live branch of Saints were making a success of life in their new surroundings. The branch was ably presided over by Elder J. R. Beckley, lately of Michigan. Here I stayed for five years, and earned my title to my homestead, and with the true-hearted Saints of the Master enjoyed the sweet privileges of the "angel message" gospel. Here, in February, 1913, I was ordained to the office of elder by Elders J. R. Beckley and A. W. Burton.

I had officiated in the activities of auxiliary work in local and district capacity, and therefore felt a degree of humble self-confidence whilst preaching. I received General Conference appointment in 1913, to labor in Alberta. During this year, the Saskatchewan District was subdivided, and Alberta organized into a separate district. On recommendation of Apostle J. A. Gillen, who was in charge, I was chosen as district president, which office I hold at present.

In 1915 Sister Ruth Cowley, of Edmonton, whom I had baptized the year before, and I, were united in marriage.

Under the hands of Apostles Gillen and Aylor, and the president of the Saskatchewan District, T. J. Jordan (high priest), I was ordained high priest in 1917. Have been steadily under General Conference appointment, and have sought to labor in my calling. I have received numerous personal evidences of the divinity of this work, and my relative work therein.

I am enlisted to the end, and desire to become more capable of representing the gospel in word and deed.

Alberta holds glorious possibilities for the homeseeker, with its magnificent acreage of fertile soil, and its bracing climate. Saints are prospering, and are watching, praying, and working for Zion's redemption. The average tithing each year for the district is about $4,000, which means an average per capita of about $14, and still increasing.

Having an intimate knowledge of the true conditions in sunny Alberta, the evidence is that the Saints are striving to interpret the divine message into loyalty to the Master; loyalty to his church; and loyalty to his people.

With zeal for service to God and humanity, Alberta District desires to maintain the honorable righteousness of the Saints of the land of the Maple Leaf.

THE LONDON BRANCH AS A SCHOOL

BY SAMUEL POPE

As my thoughts revert to the past, I think of the years spent in London, Ontario, for it was there that I first heard the gospel. Elder George Mottashed with whom I was working was a Latter Day Saint and he talked to me regarding the angel's message and gave me literature to read. As I investigated I became convinced that this was the true church of God. I was not prejudiced against the church because in Devonshire, England, from whence I had recently come, I had never heard anything regarding Latter Day Saints or Mormons. Some of the men working with me told me much against the work, but it did not change my opinion.

The first preaching service I attended was on September 11, 1887, in the old Maitland Street church. Elder R. B. Howlett was the speaker. At the close of the service it was announced that two persons were to be baptized the next night. I left the church, debating in my mind whether I would be baptized or not. Finally I made my decision and returning to the church asked for baptism. The following evening I was baptized in the River Thames with the other candidates, and thus began my experience in the latter-day work.

Shortly after this, Albert Martin and wife, now of Independence, were baptized. They were members of the Methodist Church and became interested in the doctrine of our church. Before deciding to obey, however, they asked their minister, the Reverend Doctor Rickman, to their home, also inviting Elder R. B. Howlett. The two gentlemen debated until midnight, Reverend Richman becoming so confused that he could not retain his seat but walked up and down the room. This and other visits from Elder Howlett convinced them of the truthfulness of the gospel.

The first conference I attended was at Corinth. The missionaries of those days were J. H. Lake, R. C. Evans, John Shields, J. A. McIntosh, Willard J. Smith, and Samuel Brown. I well remember when a young boy offered himself for baptism. He is now known as Elder William Fligg, one of our missionaries.

Amongst my memories is the time when the Quarterlies were first issued for the Sunday school, and when the Religio was organized in London. My soul has rejoiced as I have watched the progress of these auxiliaries. I feel that many of our young men and women, who are now doing a noble work for the church, gained a solid foundation by their experience in Religio. Many young men who were active in the London Religio have since been called to the priesthood.

On November 24, 1895, when we were assembled in prayer meeting, I was called through R. C. Evans to the office of teacher and was told that I would yet minister before the Lord in places which I had not yet seen, so I understood that I would not spend all my days in London. The fulfillment of this prophecy came when in 1909 I left London to reside here in New Westminster.

I have often heard some of the old-time London Saints tell of a prophecy which came through Elder J. J. Cornish, saying that the London Branch would be a school, and that many would obey the gospel there and carry it to the east, the west, the north, and south. We believe that this has been fulfilled in a remarkable manner. Many people now living in various parts of the Dominion and the United States have once been residents of London, in which place they learned the truths of the marvelous work and a wonder. Surely the Lord has something to do with fixing the bounds of our habitation.

On October 21, 1900, I was called and ordained an elder. I acted as priest of the London Branch for some time. I used to visit the Saints in their homes, especially the sick to whom I took the sacrament every month. Many with whom I labored have passed away and I feel glad that I was permitted to serve although in a small way.

For the last six years I have presided over the New Westminster Branch. Although the Saints here are few in number compared with many places, yet they are alive to the interests of the work and enthusiastic in their efforts to promote it.

It is a little over thirty years since I united with the church, and I rejoice to see the advancement it has made. I was never more confident than now that in spite of all obstacles it will succeed, for the "works and the designs and purposes of God cannot be frustrated, neither can they come to naught." Dear Saints, let us all with one heart and mind unite our efforts as never before that Zion may arise and shine and put on her beautiful garments and be an ensign to the nations.

A WORKER FOR THE GREATER DOMINION

BY WILLIAM FLIGG

I cheerfully comply with your request to add my mite to the magazine number of the HERALD in honor of our great and fair Dominion.

I was baptized March 19, 1888, in the River Thames, at just about the place where so many of the early Saints of the London Branch were baptized, and where that wonderful light was seen, a picture of which I saw while at Independence this spring.

The following winter I was called into the ministry, to act in the office of priest, being appointed priest of the branch, also secretary, and held office in the Sunday school.

The following year, I think, I was called to the eldership, and was elected branch president, and for fifteen long years, without a break, I tried to answer the demands of all in sickness, in death, and by the preaching of the word and with the assistance of some of my brethren. I was let out for one year, then returned for a little better than two more years, wherein I grew discontented, and surely paid for my discontentment.

However, God did not forsake me. Our family had grown to six in number, all in the work that were old enough, and our oldest boy and girl with myself, just a little over a year ago, were interested in the meetings of Elder Macgregor, held at Saint Thomas, just a little distance below London. The children played in the orchestra.

A debate was to be held with an Adventist preacher. The interest was great. I was appointed chairman, and when the vote was called, Dan had swept all before him.

I stayed all night for the Sunday services next day, and at prayer meeting in the morning we all surely enjoyed a feast of glory and power; prophecy and tongues were enjoyed, and by the Spirit, through Elder Macgregor, I was told to offer my services for field work, with promises of future blessings and direction.

Well, I knew our district pretty well, having been over the ground thoroughly; also holding a district office. So I sent in my name the beginning of February, 1918, and never heard any more till April 17, when I read my name as being appointed to the Eastern Michigan District, a stranger in a strange district.

But God has been with me, and now I am trying in the discharge of my duty, to prepare for the greater dominion that we will all enjoy with Jesus and the loved ones gone before.

CHATHAM DISTRICT

BY JOHN C. DENT

I was born January 7, 1880, about one mile from the village of Merline, Kent County, Ontario. My father and mother were both Canadians by birth, so you see I am very much Canadian.

I have two brothers and four sisters living and one sister gone to the other shore. My two brothers are married, as also two sisters. My father passed away about twenty years ago.

I was blessed when I was about six years old by John H. Lake. Baptized October 19, 1890, in Lake Erie, near where I was born; Brother Samuel Brown officiating, as also at my confirmation. Was married to Mary E. Jacklin, September 30, 1903, by Elder Samuel Brown. Was ordained an elder October 20, 1907, at Wabash conference by Elders R. C. Evans, R. C. Russell, Arthur Leverton, and B. St. John. The following Sunday Brother John Taylor (now deceased) resigned as president of Zone Branch, and I was chosen to preside, which place I have occupied since. This branch was organized about fifty years ago and the following men have presided at different occasions: Arthur Leverton, Norman L. Blakely, John Taylor, and the writer. Our present enrollment is about 110.

The branch changed its name from Zone to Bothwell. It formerly was a country branch, but most of the members moved away. Some came to Bothwell and others were baptized in and near the town, so the headquarters were changed and finally the name.

We had a nice little cement block church out in the country which was built very largely by the push and help of Brother R. C. Russell. When our headquarters changed we sold it and built a red, pressed-brick church in the town. There are no rich among us, yet we wanted to build a building that we would not be ashamed to ask the Lord to come to as well as our friends. Our church cost about seven thousand dollars and was paid for and dedicated in twenty-two months after the lots were bought. Apostle J. F. Curtis preached the dedicatory sermon and the patriarch offered the prayer.

Bothwell Branch is in the Chatham District. In this district is Blenheim Branch, which is said to be the oldest branch in the province. Lindsley Branch is still using what is said to be the oldest church building in the province. Our district has been presided over at different times by George Cleveland, George Green, Arthur Leverton, David Snobelen, and at present by the writer. There was a time when the name Latter Day Saint was ridiculed, but by the earnest efforts of the Saints they are now respected and honored.

For a number of years I occupied as assistant superintendent of Chatham District Sunday school, and at the same time as one of the vice presidents of the district (church). At London conference in 1912 I was elected as president of Ontario quorum of elders and was ordained by Apostle Frederick A. Smith and others. At the fall conference of 1917 I was elected president of Chatham District and was ordained a high priest on February 5, 1919, by Apostle Paul M. Hanson and Patriarch John Shields.

In 1912 we held a reunion in this district with about twenty tents at Erie Beach, a beautiful summer resort on Lake Erie, twelve miles south of Chatham. It has steadily grown from year to year until last year we had over one hundred and fifty tents. One of the noticeable features of the reunion is the presence of an army of young Saints who attend and the interest they take in the work.

My father was engaged in the lumber business while he lived. My brothers and I carried on the business until ten years ago, when we closed it out and bought a hardware business in Bothwell and added several other lines to the business, such as automobiles, carriages, and farm machinery.

My two brothers and I have always been united in a business way. If I have been of any value to the church at all, much credit is due to my brothers. Being a family of only moderate means I could not have given as much time as I have to the church, had they not insisted that I go and they would look after business.

A PIONEER IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

BY WILLIAM JOHNSON

In the month of April, 1898, the undersigned left the State of Iowa, and located in Nanaimo, British Columbia, on Vancouver Island, employed as a coal miner.

I believe I am right when I say I was the first Latter Day Saint in British Columbia. I know I was so far as the western slope is concerned. We endeavored to get the gospel before the people, but it seemed impossible to arouse an interest. An appeal was made to the Presidency of the church, with the result that Brother Daniel Macgregor was sent to do missionary work, in 1899 (if memory serves me right).

His labors as a worker were all that could be desired, but so far as interest was concerned on the island, it was a failure. He subsequently moved his field to Chilliwack, British Columbia, where he did a good work, baptizing some thirty-odd people, and where a branch was organized by R. C. Evans.

Two families moved into the province from California, Brother James Butterfield and family (a noble family, it must be admitted), also Brother James Rainey and wife (nee Nellie Butterfield). This was the nucleus for a branch there. Brother Rainey, being ordained an elder, was elected president of the branch, and was a most conscientious man. He was a street car conductor, and as such met a tragic death.

In 1904 ye scribe was given his first mission, associated with Brother Will Pender and wife. Our field of operation extended three hundred and forty miles south from Vancouver, British Columbia, to Vancouver, Washington, on the Columbia River. We still retain in memory the benefit of their association.

After the death of Brother Rainey, the supervision of the branch at Westminster fell upon Brother Isaac McMullen, who for a number of years ably watched over the flocks at Westminster and Vancouver. We may add that the two cities are twelve miles apart, connected by interurban, but were really one branch. Afterwards it was considered wise to hold services in each place every Sunday.

Brother Samuel Pope and most excellent family moved from Toronto to Westminster. He was in turn made president of the Westminster Branch.

When we refer to those men as stanch defenders, we are in nowise disposed to overlook their wives. We are not partial to any, but space will not permit us to mention all, and we feel that if the sacrifices so often made by the Sisters Emily and Gertie McMullen, Sister Jessie Butterfield, and Nellie Rainey-Holmes were not mentioned, this article would not be complete.

Then there came on the scene, a son of the Emerald Isle, Brother James Johnston (as he was sometimes pleased to say, a ton of Johnson), who had a helpmeet indeed in his most amiable wife. The visiting missionary would miss his shoes in the morning, if he stayed at Johnston's, but would find them most beautifully shined by some one. Guess who?

We have left till last, but not least of the supporters of the work in that vicinity, Brother Harry Butterfield, a man who has the faculty of speaking louder than words, and whose right hand knows not what the left hand does. His wife Annie came to him as indeed a helper in time of need.

In the Chilliwack Valley, nestled at the foot of Mount Cheam, resides a branch of true Saints, principally the product of Daniel Macgregor's work. Some, of course, have been added since. This branch has had but one president, Elder Henry Stade, a man whom to know is to honor. He had made it his first work to do his duty to the church. He has had an uphill pull, but has succeeded in saving many to the church.

Among the number to speak of, and not flatteringly, is Sister Smith, of Chilliwack, who labored early and late to be an independent factor, raising a family of seven girls and one boy, giving them a required education, and bringing all of them, except one, into the church.

We have in mind the hospitality of James Muirhead and his family; also his mother and several brothers.

We drop back to a spot in the bush at Clayburn, where we find Brethren John, Richard, and William Hartnell, Saints of ye olden days, men of the highest character, men who have been tried with fire (the mill). We must refrain from being too lavish in our praise of them, but we mean what we say. Their families are included, even if some of them do suggest antisnorers.

The fourteen years of my association with and as president of the British Columbia District was the happiest period of my life, and to every Saint in the District, I salute with greeting, with these presents.

WESTERN CANADA

BY T. J. JORDAN

We have had our successes and our failures, and the gospel work is progressing, but I must be frank in saying that our spirituality is at a lower ebb than I desire to see it. However, where there is life there is hope.

During the fourteen years I have been in western Canada, I have met and labored with some noble men and women. Our many successes are traceable to such men as our President F. M. Smith, Apostles Kelley, Griffiths, Greene, Wight, F. A. Smith, Russell, Gillen, and Aylor; missionaries H. J. Davison, J. L. Mortimer, Frederick Gregory, Daniel Macgregor, John W. Peterson, Birch Whiting, John J. Cornish, James C. Page, E. E. Long, and no doubt there are others whom we have forgotten for the moment.

While we recognize we have troublesome times before us and shall be beset with danger on every hand, yet as seen in our vision, many, many Saints enter the ark of safety, having their garments clean and white in the blood of the Lamb. So we look to the future with hope, faith, and charity, that God's work, which is our work, shall finally succeed in every land.

There are before us some golden opportunities, if we shall whole-heartedly enter in and occupy. I know of no better field for gospel work than in this western clime. But it requires young, active men, prepared to meet and surmount most any difficulty that may present itself.

Further, it requires energy and zeal, but above all, consecration to the work. It is almost useless to send men in here to labor who are not acquainted with conditions under which they shall be called to work. It usually takes a year or two for them to get their bearing, and by that time they are discouraged and their zeal and energy has vanished, or at least subsided a great deal.

Western Canadians are, in the main, big-hearted, whole-souled individuals, looking for big things to be accomplished. When a missionary comes into the neighborhood and demonstrates to them that he is on the job, and knows how to tackle problems with determination, to a man they are behind him with their energy and money. Thus you hear them say: Why don't you send us Elder So-and-So? He seems to take with the people; he can and does deliver the goods.

The world wants the men and women who can deliver the goods. We cannot use the missionary who cannot locate and make his own new openings, who cannot be at least the leading factor in filling the places of meeting. Western Canada holds out some splendid opportunities for intensified missionary effort, even to the saturating with our work dozens, yes, hundreds of communities.

But where, oh where, are the men? When we stop to think of the size of Western Canada, over 400,000 square miles, with thousands of villages, towns, and cities where gospel work can be done; with thousands upon thousands in population, and only three or four men to represent Jesus Christ and his church, having been authorized thus to do, and most of them doing their utmost under a handicap, is it any wonder we feel we are being neglected and get discouraged?

But there, we were born an optimist, and you won't believe it if we continue in this train of thought. In closing, we are hopeful for the future, but are made conscious we are passing through a crisis, both in the church and in the world. But we have faith in the church and her leaders. We felt it required big men to win the world's war, but feel it requires bigger men to stem the tide and the crisis after the war has been won. We have these men with us. All they lack is our loyalty, faith, and prayers. I have always admired Nelson of the British Navy fame. He said on one occasion before entering a then world's crisis as he addressed his sailors: "Remember England this day expects every man to do his duty." History proves they were loyal; they did their duty and the world passed the crisis successfully. We are approaching, if we have not already entered a greater crisis.

Saints, the church of Jesus Christ expects every Saint to do his duty. Shall we fail for Western Canada? I can but answer, and I imagine I hear ninety per cent of our people answer with me, No, we shall not fail. We shall pass the crisis by loyalty to the trust imposed.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Reunion Notices

Northern Wisconsin reunion August 22 to 31, on the beautiful grounds known as "The L. D. S. Reunion Park," densely covered with pines, the lake on one side (full of fish), the main street of the city on the other, while the Wisconsin Trunk Highway No. 11 runs by the auditorium. Dining hall and refreshment stand, all large and well-equipped. Tents or rooms as desired, furnished free of charge. We own our cots and springs, come and use them free. The only cost to visitors is at the dining hall; breakfast 25 cents, dinner 25 cents, supper 30 cents. The usual dollar collection will be "interesting" as each name is recorded from year to year on the roll of honor of the district records. We expect to pay the last of our indebtedness this year. Each member of the district should help, so come. If impossible to come, send your dollar or more. Arrange early for accommodations. Send all correspondence to Leroy Colbert, secretary, Chetek, Wisconsin.

Massachusetts, on camp ground at Onset, July 19 till August 4. Those desiring tents notify E. L. Traver, 154 Cedar Street, Somerville, Massachusetts, at once. Prices for tents for the two weeks: 10 x 12, $6.50; 12 x 15, $7.00. Prices for meals at the commissary: Breakfast 35 cents, dinner 60 cents, supper 35 cents, or $8.50 per week. We are expecting a large attendance this year, and are looking forward to one of the best reunions ever held in the district. Everyone who can possibly do so should attend. Any of the general church officers or missionaries expecting to attend the reunion should notify the committee as soon as possible, so proper arrangements can be made for their convenience. Edward L. Traver, 154 Cedar Street, Somerville, Massachusetts; Daniel F. Joy, 742 Broad Street, Providence, Rhode Island, Committee.

Pastoral

To the Saints of the Spring River District: Having been appointed to your district for the coming year, I am now ready to respond to calls for my services as evangelist, and would very much like to get in touch with the various presidents of branches as to the needs of the work in my line. Will you kindly write me? H. O. SMITH.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 711 South Fuller Avenue.

Quorum Notices

Pacific Coast Quorum of Elders: Take notice that at the first meeting of the quorum, held not less than three months after the date of publication of this notice, that an amendment will be proposed for number two of the Rules and By-laws. The action will be made to strike out the present rule and by-law and substitute instead thereof the following: "Number Two.—officers of the quorum shall be elected or sustained at some meeting once in each year."

BENJAMIN BEAN, Secretary.

Two-Day Meetings

Two-day meetings preceding the reunion of the Far West Stake will be held as follows: Sweet Home Branch, June 28, 29; Ross Grove Branch, July 12, 13; Fortesque, July 19, 20; Bedison Branch, July 26, 27; Guilford Branch, August 2, 3. Other branches will be provided for following the reunion. R. S. Salyards, for Stake Presidency.

FROM HERE AND THERE

News from Toronto advises us that Elder A. F. McLean, Bishop's agent for the Toronto District, received a letter from a solicitor for R. C. Evans notifying him that they intend taking out an injunction to prevent the church holding a reunion at Low Banks. There is quite a history connected with the securing of those grounds and the present situation. They hope for an early and favorable decision.

GRACELAND EXTENSION DEPARTMENT

In accordance with action taken at last General Conference the Public Speaking course of the Woman's Auxiliary, the Normal Training Department of the Sunday School and Religio, and the Lecture Courses of the Religio will be handled by the Extension Department of Graceland College, effective July 1.

All correspondence relative to these departments should be addressed hereafter to

THE PRESIDENT
GRACELAND COLLEGE
Lamoni, Iowa

Pending further announcement, no changes will be made in these courses further than indicated above.

ASSISTANT EDITOR QUARANTINED

Just as we are in process of going to press the Assistant Editor, Elder E. D. Moore, is placed under quarantine with his family on account of diphtheria. Fortunately, at latest advice, it is a light case. Those having personal correspondence with him will please take notice as he can not answer directly at present. Important matters will, however, be handled at the office with the assistance of telephone. We are glad to say there are no serious complications, but there will be a little inconvenience for the time.

Daniel Macgregor left Lamoni as soon as the conference was over and has been having an interesting and active time ever since. We have received indirectly word that he held one short debate or discussion with the minister for another church. He is making his headquarters at Saint Thomas, Ontario, the city of his birth. He is busy and happy as usual.

THE BISHOPRIC ADVOCATE FOR 1919: "EVERY MEMBER A TITHE PAYER"

Every act of obedience makes you a stronger man.
"This is a day of sacrifice and of the tithing of my people."

DOCTOR T. W. WILLIAMS HONORED

Word reaches this office that Doctor T. W. Williams, son of Elder T. W. Williams, who did such excellent work at Toronto last year, has made an especially good record in his army experiences. He entered the service as a private and was promoted until he was first lieutenant at the time the armistice was signed. He was at the front in the battles of Argonne Forest and Saint Mihiel, and has been doing service in Germany since. A "composite infantry regiment" has recently been formed, and is known as the "Third Army Composite Regiment." Officers and men of this regiment have been selected for their record in the present war, and soldierly qualities demonstrated by them at all times. A band competition was held between bands of the First, Second, Third, and Fourth divisions, each division being represented by its best band. The winner of this competition was selected as the band for this regiment. Doctor Williams is one of two surgeons selected for this regiment. This regiment is to act as escort of honor to the commander in chief, American Expeditionary Force in England, Belgium, and other places as may be directed. Had Doctor Williams not been selected for this post he would have made the trip to Berlin, acting as "Courier Diplomatical from Coblenz to Berlin."

We are sorry some of the photos for pictures in this number arrived too late for insertion.

WORK OF THE JOINT COUNCIL

The Joint Council of First Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric closed an important two week's session June 28. The missionary list was gone over and some important changes made. The missionary force in the field was divided into groups and group supervisors appointed. These will be announced later.

Some important appointments to foreign fields were made. These include: A. V. Karlstrum to the South Sea Islands, to be accompanied by Sister Karlstrum. Brother Karlstrum was recommended for ordination to the office of bishop, and will be the first bishop for the islands since the death of Metuaore; Jacob Halb to Switzerland, to be accompanied by Sister Halb; Harry Passman to the Holy Land; and Virgil Etzenhouser to Honolulu. Sisters Passman and Etzenhouser are to accompany their husbands.

Walter W. Smith was selected for Church Historian with Heman Hale Smith, son of the late Historian, Heman C. Smith, as assistant. Heman Hale Smith will probably occupy in the department of History in Graceland College. Walter W. Smith will establish his office at Independence.

A change also was made in the Recorder's Office, Elder C. I. Carpenter being released from that office and appointed to the Kewanee District, Illinois, as district president. Elder F. A. Russell was selected to succeed C. I. Carpenter as Recorder.

In the main the meetings of the council were highly satisfactory. A very pleasing amount of unanimity of opinion prevailed. The brethren grew closer together and mutual confidence was greatly increased.

The Saints may be interested to learn that during July President Frederick M. Smith is to sail for the British Mission, to be gone for a period of three or four months. Apostles John W. Rushton and Paul M. Hanson are to sail for Australia during September. They will be accompanied by Bishop George Lewis of Australia.

PREPARATION AT GRACELAND FOR FOREIGN MISSION WORK

A committee appointed by President Smith to outline a preparatory course of study for foreign mission work reported June 23, 1919. We have held their report pending action by the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric.

The report was taken up by the council on the 27th. We are pleased to note that it was approved without a dissenting vote, only one member of the council present refraining from voting. The report follows:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, June 19, 1919.

Pursuant to the call of President F. M. Smith, the following committee met with President Smith in his office to organize for the purpose of outlining the course of study to be pursued by the foreign missionary class at Graceland College: W. W. Smith, R. V. Hopkins, Lonzo Jones, and C. E. Wight.

President Smith advised that he would ask the Twelve to appoint a fifth member.

W. W. Smith was appointed chairman and C. E. Wight secretary of the committee.

Adjourned to meet at the home of W. W. Smith at 9 a. m., Friday.

Friday, June 20, 1919.

The committee met as per appointment, Paul M. Hanson being present as the fifth member of the committee.

The following tentative outline of the course of study was drawn up.

DEPARTMENT OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

1. Department of Church Doctrine (five hours).

 Story-telling.

Adjourned at 11.30 to meet at 2 p. m. Dismissed by Brother Hanson.

The committee met at 2 p. m. and were led in prayer by C. E. Wight.

It was suggested with regard to the work on church doctrine, that approximately one half of the time be devoted to lectures on the various subjects as outlined, the balance of the time to be devoted to quiz work, outside readings, etc.

Work was started on the outline for the lecture course, which appears below in completed form.

The committee met at 9.30 a. m. Saturday morning and were led in prayer by Lonzo Jones. Work was continued on the outline. Adjourned at 12 m. and dismissed by Brother Hanson.

The outline follows:

1. Religion—What is it? (one hour).
 Lecture by W. W. Smith.
2. The Godhead:
 (a) Self-existence (one hour).
 (b) Personality (one hour).
 (c) Trinity (one hour).
 (d) Attributes (one hour).
 Lectures by W. W. Smith.
3. Agency.
 (a) Man; self-conscious (one hour).
 (b) Conduct (one hour).
 Lectures by J. A. Koehler.
4. Atonement:
 (a) Christ's work (one hour).
 (b) Man's work (one hour).
 Lectures by J. F. Garver.
5. Principles of the Gospel:
 (a) Doctrine (one hour).
 (b) Ordinances and sacraments (one hour).
 Lectures by J. A. Gillen.
6. Authority:
 (a) Origin (one hour).
 (b) Purpose (one hour).
 Lectures by J. A. Gillen.
7. The Church:
 (a) Origin (one hour).
 (b) Organization (one hour).
 (c) Object (one hour).
 Lectures by F. M. Smith.
8. Revelation:
 (a) Necessity (one hour).
 (b) Mode (one hour).
 Lectures by F. M. Smith.
9. The Holy Spirit:
 (a) Gifts (one hour).
 (b) Fruits (one hour).

Lectures by Elbert A. Smith.

10. Zion:
 (a) Necessity (one hour).
 (b) Factors (one hour).
 (c) Processes (one hour).
 Lectures by Benjamin R. McGuire.
11. Liberty and Government (one hour).
 Lecture by S. A. Burgess.

Following the adoption of the report the council selected a committee to pass upon applicants for the course. The committee consists of President George N. Briggs, of Graceland, Elders Walter W. Smith, R. V. Hopkins, Cyril E. Wight, and Apostles U. W. Greene and J. A. Gillen. Qualifications and calling of applicants will be considered. The question of divine calling will be safeguarded as carefully as at any time in the past. It is not the aim to make missionaries as one might manufacture a garment or an implement. The aim is to help equip men who are actually called of God to missionary work. Mere enrollment will not necessarily guarantee missionary appointment. In the last analysis all appointments will be made by the quorums as formerly. Also, every man must make good, so that having been called he may also be chosen.

In addition to the lectures listed in the report, it is understood that under the head of "apologetics" lectures will be given by experienced seventies or others intended to prepare the men for actual conditions that are likely to confront them, including objections to our work that they are likely to have to meet and refute in any and every field. Also, in all probability, lectures will be given on auxiliary work by heads of the various auxiliaries.

This work is not regarded as being in any way a departure from historic customs of the church. If anything it is the beginning of the return to the work begun in Kirtland. The Lord told them then, when the church was scarcely two years from the date of organization, what they should do that they "might be prepared in all things" when he should send them forth to magnify their calling as missionaries.

This program is essentially in harmony with the fundamental principles of preparation outlined in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21. Anyone interested in this subject will do well to reread that paragraph.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

If the boys of our church are actuated by selfish motives, we might reemphasize a greater remuneration going to the trained man, a larger paid to college men, the better pay that the Government gives especially to the man who has been educated and prepared for service. But our church does not offer that inducement of higher pay; it does offer the inducement of greater service.

INDEPENDENCE DAY AND POLITICAL LIBERTY

July 1 is Dominion Day for Canada, signifying the peaceful union of its provinces. July 4 is the American Independence Day, when we declared certain set principles which now are fully recognized, not only in Canada and the United States, but in Great Britain as well.

These are principles which are being emphasized as affecting the history of the world and the political efforts of the nations of the world.

After the Revolutionary War some residents in the states who were Tories, or preferred to continue under the flag of Great Britain went to Canada, but at the same time, we must recognize the help which was given by other English-speaking people, and by the attitude of many in Great Britain herself. The English, as a people, have long stood for individual and political liberty.

Fortunately the establishment of the United States as a democracy with a republican form of government was successfully accomplished. When we consider the efforts made in ancient times, and later, unsuccessfully, we find our faith confirmed in the statement in the Doctrine and Covenants, that the Constitution of this land was formed by wise men, raised up for that purpose.

This does not mean that every word is inspired, and that it cannot be adjusted to changing conditions. But for its age, it represented a wonderful advance.

Its benefits were felt not only directly in the United States and indirectly in the British colonies, but also throughout the world its effects have become gradually apparent.

The French Revolution starting shortly after the establishment of this constitution, through many difficulties after four score years established a stable republic, which has now continued for nearly fifty years. The Swiss Republic was formed about the same time, and introduced therein the initiative, the referendum, and the recall which have since been adopted in this country.

The Republic of Portugal is a very recent development of the present century. The revolution of 1848 in Europe marked much of progress, even though it did not produce many permanent immediate results. But the seed was sown which is now producing a crop with several score of monarchies ceasing to exist and democracy showing marked growth and strength. The changes undergoing in eastern and central Europe are almost too recent for historic discussion, but they illustrate a progress of political justice and freedom.

During the past century much progress had been made from an absolute monarchy to constitutional form of government gradually among the various nations of Europe. This effect is seen in the political independence of Italy. It is shown also in the independence gained in the last fifty years by Greece and in the Balkans, and the gradual reduction of Turkish power.

Some governments still royal in form, are in fact, but a form to-day, as Great Britain is one of the most democratic of governments in fact.

Since the fall of Don Pedro in Brazil, the American continent has been kept free from monarchial government despite its difficulties at times. Egypt, South Africa, and Australia have felt the effect towards justice and liberty under British supervision. China has recently become a republic. Japan within the past half century has established a liberal constitution. Siberia is affected by the changes in Russia, and Russia has progressed until real political liberty and self-government are within her easy reach.

Self-government is to be found well established in most of the British colonies, particularly Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa.

Persia has also established a constitutional government, as is the case as well with Turkey.

It is surprising to note how much of this has been accomplished since the opening of the present century.

But speaking of it historically, the start is in the American Revolution and Declaration of Independence. The immediate effects of that revolution were felt in Great Britain and her colonies and in the formation of the French and Swiss republics.

Then about 1848 there came a revolution which produced certain results, but did not apparently accomplish very much substantially, though it did accomplish a work of preparation.

The gain of political liberty has not been by sudden spurts, but has been gradually achieved. Around 1870 we note the establishment of the present French republic, the freedom of Greece, the freedom of Italy, and the liberal constitution of Japan. Shortly before this date the completion of the Civil War reestablished the union of the United States, and made possible the removal of Maximilian from Mexico. There were also reforms in Russia about this time, and the establishment of the Dominion of Canada.

Since the opening of this century we note in Portugal, a republic; the Persian Constitution; in Turkey a reform government; the change in the Balkans, and the recent changes in Russia, Poland, and Central Europe. Also in Asia the Chinese Republic has been established, and the developments made in India and Siberia.

In Africa the establishment of South Africa, and greater practical freedom to the natives. In view of the successful termination of the war, and the return of many of our soldiers to America, this 4th of July is an especial day for the celebration of the principles of freedom and of justice. The significance of the day is large for those who consider it carefully, in political liberty, religious liberty, and personal justice, with all that they mean to all the nations of the earth. July 4, 1776, marks the beginning, the planting of the seed, to-day we view the world-wide fruit.

REUNION MUSIC

---

The reunion season is already fully upon us. Attention should be given to the article on "Reunion music" in this week's issue of The Staff. We have all attended reunions at which this feature of the work has been sadly neglected, and some more or less indifferent singing has been indulged in. After a hot day, a few minutes of special music at the evening service will have a wonderful reviving influence.

Music is of no special value, if it is simply given as a task and merely as a necessary part of the service, something to be gone through with. If it is rendered with the Spirit, and as a special service, it has an excellent effect, both on the speaker and the hearers, and is refreshing both to the natural man and the inner man.

All too often this feature is neglected until the last minute. The chorister contents himself with beating a little time, instead of rallying his musical forces to make that one of the best features of the reunion.

LOVE

Love is a word of only four letters. Yet it or its equivalent is as old as creation. We imagine that it was the first message that ever fell from human lips.

After Adam was fully aroused from his "deep sleep" I doubt not that the first words he uttered, were, "Eve, I love you." And he may have added, "You are the first woman I ever said that to." In that event Eve knew that he was telling the truth. There was some advantage in being the first lady of Eden.

I imagine, too, that love is the password of the angels. They leave the courts of glory and come to earth to watch over little children, to ease the load that men and women bear, to smooth the pillow of old age. And when they return, the austere angel at the gates makes them repeat the watchword.

If they should forget it, here below in the grime and sins of the world, they could not return to the holy places. They could not continue as ministering angels to those who should be heirs of salvation. Only love can minister.

Love furnished the dynamics of creation—and continues to do so. The human animal at birth is the most helpless of living creatures, and will very quickly perish if some one does not furnish food, and clothing, and shelter.

We come here without property. We cannot pay for a single meal. We must run in debt for our first suit of clothes. Our only recourse is to the bank of love for currency that is as old as humanity.

So some one has very truly said, that every individual, looking back through all the many generations of his ancestors, to the very beginning, may say, "If love had failed at any link in all that long chain, I would not be here."

If love furnished the dynamics of creation, it must also furnish the dynamics of redemption. So we are not surprised that it is written, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son."

That statement must be remembered in every study of the atonement. The Methodist Discipline has the fact reversed where it says that Jesus came into the world to reconcile God to man. As though God had gone astray and must be reconciled, or had lost interest in man and must be revived, or was so bitterly angry that he must be propitiated.

God loved the world before Jesus came. That was why he gave his Son. Paul has the correct version where he says that Jesus came that he might reconcile man to God. Man was astray, Jesus came to lead him back. Jesus came to teach men to pray, "Our Father."

How extensive and powerful was that love. Paul tells us that neither life nor death nor any other thing can separate us from the love of God which is in Jesus Christ.

Some years ago in company with some others we attended one of Billy Sunday's meetings. He may not have known us at all, but he surely did stop in

BY COLUMBUS SCOTT

THE NINTH HOUR

The ninth hour is about three o'clock in the afternoon. This corresponds admirably to the times of the ministry of Christ and the days of the ancient apostles, and others of the ministry of that age.

As the New Testament and early church history gives much of what was done by Christ and his ministry, we need not dwell lengthily on the evidences relating to the "ninth hour."

The work, especially that done by our Savior while here, was foretold by many of the prophets who lived before he came. His name and the work of his great and infinite mission was portrayed by them quite vividly.

As in the introduction and carrying on of the work of God in the preceding "hours," the "ninth hour" "dispensation" was introduced by the ministration of angels, or heavenly messengers, and prophets; and was supported by prophecy. An angel, Gabriel by name, seems to have been chosen of God to make known the opening of "the hour." He came to the Lord's priest, Zacharias, as he ministered before the Lord in the temple at Jerusalem, and announced the coming of John the Baptist, who should come soon as a preparer of the way for the first advent of our Savior. (Luke 1:1-20.)

A few months after this event, the angel Gabriel came on another mission, this time visiting Nazareth, a city of Galilee. There to announce that the time was at hand for the long anticipated "Redeemer" to make his first advent.

A short time subsequently, "wise men" from the East came to Jerusalem to worship the new born King of the Jews. (Matthew 2:1-3.) And when he was born at Bethlehem of Judea, an angel announced to some shepherds who watched their flocks by night, the heavenly news, that Christ, the Savior, had arrived. And immediately the angelic choir were singing: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men!" About thirty years after these wonderful events, John and Jesus began the opening of the gospel work of the "ninth hour" dispensation.

At 30 A. D., as John the Baptist's work as the forerunner of Christ began to close, our Savior entered upon the more advanced stages of the work of God. (Luke 4:14-22.)

In this hour came the light of the personal ministry of Christ. The gospel unchanged was revealed anew. Laborers were called into "the vineyard," called, ordained, authorized. The church, or "kingdom of heaven," began to be organized. Men and women were converted; repented; were baptized. "Such as should be saved" were added to the church; heaven's will developed.

As that relating to man's salvation began to be proclaimed throughout all Judea, it attracted the attention of many, and aroused investigation of some—derision and opposition in others. A certain few accepted the wonderful gospel message, while strong persecution was launched against the Savior and his apostles and followers as they struggled along, proclaiming: "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." (Matthew 3:2.)

And again:

Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God. And saying, the time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye, and believe the gospel.—Mark 1:14, 15.

When the time came to extend the proclamation of life eternal, and the work of the ministry, he chose others than the apostles whom he had chosen and ordained to preach.

Then saith he unto his disciples, The harvest truly is plentiful, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest.—Matthew 9:37, 38.

Christ and his apostles continued to labor on until the time was at hand for Christ to consummate his great mission in man's behalf. We read:

After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himself would come. Therefore said he unto them, The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth laborers into his harvest. Go your ways: behold, I send you forth as lambs among wolves.—Luke 10:1-3.

A divinely authorized ministry, chosen, authorized, and sent of "the Lord of the harvest," is the divine example set before us by the King of the kingdom of heaven. When was this principle of the divine truth changed?

When and where did the custom of churches and men choosing their own ministry and sending them to preach originate? With God? When? Where?

According to the Bible, in any past age during Bible times, wherever and whenever men were to do a work for God, in behalf of their fellow men, God called such ministry; commissioned them, told them when to begin, where to begin, and what to do. (See Exodus 3; Numbers 27:15-23; Deuteronomy 34:9.)

Returning to "the ninth hour" we invite attention to God's unchangeability. We read that to the elders of the church of Ephesus, Paul said:

Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood. For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock.—Acts 20: 28-30.

This shows us that whenever and wherever God has been heard from, he has called and sent through revelation, the ministry of his church, when it was on the earth. We read of no true servant of God that ever taught to the contrary.

CHURCH ORGANIZATION

After the introduction of the work of God in "the ninth hour" dispensation, it was not long until the church was established as an organized body. All who availed themselves of the purchase Christ gave for mankind became members of the church—his body. (Ephesians 5: 25-32.)

Before our Savior ascended to heaven, he promised to "build" his church (Matthew 16: 15-20). And Paul tells us that the church, in Christ, is a "building, fitly framed together, groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord: In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." (Ephesians 2: 21, 22.) Jesus calls it "my church," and here Paul calls it—"the building fitly framed together," "an holy temple." Not churches or temples—not plural, but in the singular number. Again:

For by one spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit. . . . Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular. And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues. Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret?—1 Corinthians 12: 13, 27-30.

Paul, the apostle, here in this chapter shows: First, that the church of God is one, not many churches, nor divided. Second, God organized the church, the body of Christ, as it pleased him. Third, all officers have not the same office, no more than the differing members of the human body, such as the eye, perform the office of the mouth, or the foot.

Since God organized the church in "the ninth hour," as it pleased him, when did it please him to change it? God is unchangeable in all his purposes. (Malachi 3: 6; Acts 15: 18, 19.) God's purpose in the church, as he organized it is the eternal salvation of mankind.

And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved.—Acts 2: 47.

Again: the Holy Ghost, the Spirit, the power, life, that animates, gives life to the church of God, as the spirit of man animates or causes his body to live.

Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all.—Ephesians 4: 3-6.

Seven divine unities. It takes the same divine power to continue, and keep the church organized, as to organize it at the beginning. The Holy Ghost, who is sent to inhabit, and cause the church as a united body to live, grow, and guide, directs the church in harmony with the will of God; never will divide; will never create schism, or inspire a contrariety of doctrines—religious divisions in organization, spirit, or doctrine.

Bearing in mind now, that Jesus said: "On this rock I will build my church," let us hear what Paul, who learned the gospel of Jesus only, further said, descriptive of how Jesus builded; and what the officers, and their official names and duties are, as set in the church as integral parts of it.

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ.—Ephesians 4: 11, 12.

Paul, how long will God continue these named officers in the church, and for the purposes herein stated?

Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ; from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love. This I say therefore, and testify in the Lord, that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind.—Ephesians 4: 11-17.

Was the church, as thus described by the Apostle Paul, an open, visible expression of the will of God, as to how he would have the church of his well beloved Son organized? Are the officers here named by the Apostle Paul, their official work, and the length of time they are to continue—"till we all come to the unity of the faith," (How long will that be? Verse 13) the expression of God's will? Or has God nullified his will as here and in 1 Corinthians 12 revealed? Is this by the revelation of another will? If so which of the wills shall we be saved by? Just as soon as men leave God's will as originally expressed, they begin to divide religiously. (See Hebrews 10: 9-12.)

Christ having done the will of God by delivering the gospel, making the atonement, thereby consecrating the law, will, and by organizing the church to the salvation of all who accept him by obeying this will, said: "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God."

Now if we leave the church in the New Testament described, in organization and doctrine, with officers by him named and authorized in the New Covenant, Testament, or Will—if we depart from this, can we be certain of being saved? No. No. Never! A division of the earth, filled with people existing without a constitution and a harmonious code of law, devoid of organizations, without classes of authorized officers, is not a government. They are not a united government if living under differing codes. Proof? Look around you! Without unity they cannot be saved. Note peoples disorganized. Where is their protection? Uncivilized and semicivilized peoples know this. Would God have mankind in such a condition and leave them to work out their own salvation? Then, why man-formed disciplines? The difficulty is, man's ways have ever differed, in the main, from God's ways. (Isaiah 55:8.) Look over the world. Then turn to the New Testament and study God's procedure in his purposes. His "how" of doing things never changes till accomplished! Never. "Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life." (John 6:63-68.) "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life."

As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed.—Galatians 1:9.

Paul here doubly affirms a curse on man or angel that seeks to impose any other gospel on us than the one he learned; not of man, but of the Lord, Jesus Christ! If man, then, seeks to impose any other gospel on us than this, let him be accursed. Again:

If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness; he is proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmising, perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth supposing that gain is godliness: from such withdraw thyself. But godliness with contentment is great gain.—1 Timothy 6:3-6.

We are firm believers in all truth, learning, and true science, but even if all these were offered as a substitute for the gospel as preached by our Savior and Paul, "it is foolishness with God," it will give no one eternal life. (1 Corinthians 3:18-20.)

By the foregoing, we learn the solemn truth, that a divided, and subdivided faith, and a divided and subdivided church is anti-Christian, not of God. Doubtless this is sufficient as relating to the call of the laborers and the character of the work done in "the ninth hour." Let us therefore turn our attention to a consideration of the work of the final warning given the world before the second coming of Christ and the millennium.

"THE ELEVENTH HOUR" DISPENSATION

And about the eleventh hour he went out, and found others standing idle, and saith unto them, Why stand ye here all the day idle? They say unto him, Because no man hath hired us. He saith unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard; and whatsoever is right, that shall ye receive.—Matthew 20:6, 7.

Please let us remember our Savior is here illustrating the work of the laborers in the several dispensations of "the kingdom of God," during the world, from the creation of man till the "even"—sunset—or the end of the world.

Be it noted particularly that in the several hours of the world, the laborers did not go into the vineyard to labor till they had an understanding that they were authorized—sent by the owner of the vineyard with the words "go ye." In each hour "he did likewise."

The question might arise: "Why did the "householder" go out at the opening of each "hour" represented, to employ men to work in the vineyard? We answer: Because a season intervened between the hours named during which intercommunication between man and God ceased. Why? Because man would not let God speak with him. And why was this? Lack of faith—and for the same reason so many men to-day will not let him! Stop right here, O man, and consider seriously, Why would you refuse to heed God's word if he should speak in our age of the world? In our lesson Jesus teaches that God will speak, and call men into his ministry in "the eleventh hour" dispensation.

Do you believe this? How will you know when "the eleventh hour" call is due—is to begin, or be opened up? Where shall the work begin? By whom? Will the work to be done "in the eleventh hour" in any wise contravene the work done in the earlier dispensations? The closing hour of day is succeeded by the night. Isaiah the prophet foresaw the work of "the eleventh hour" of the world-day, and made the declaration:

The watchman said, The morning cometh, and also the night.—Isaiah 21:12.

The work done in "the eleventh hour" is the dawning of the morning of the day to the church of God. (Matthew 20:8-16.)

Let us here give the testimony of Isaiah to this "eleventh hour" call and work—this eventide work of this world.

For the Lord shall rise up as in Mount Perazim, he shall be wroth as in the valley of Gibeon, that he may do his work, his strange work; and bring to pass his act, his strange act. Now therefore be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong; for I have heard from the Lord God of hosts a consumption, even determined upon the whole earth.—Isaiah 28:21, 22.

Not just a part of the earth.

Stop here. Let us think. In the various ages of the past when God has sought to accomplish his work with ancient Israel, and the gospel work, that work and his servants have been "persecuted" and "mocked" by the people to whom it and they were sent. Even God's own chosen people, Israel, did thus all along their history.

And the Lord God of their fathers sent to them by his messengers rising up betimes and sending; because he had compassion on his people, and on his dwelling place; but they mocked the messengers of God, and despised his words, and misused his prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose against his people, till there was no remedy.—2 Chronicles 36: 15, 16.

Mocked at God's word and his prophets till there was no remedy? What then? A penalty? A seventy years' captivity.

Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man sows, that shall he also reap.—Galatians 6: 7; Hebrews 11: 36.

Now let us note in particular that God's act, his strange work, here noted by Isaiah, is to just precede "a consumption, even determined upon the whole earth." This consumption is not decreed upon a continent, or a nation, or on four continents out of five, but "upon the whole earth!" When is this to be? One thing is certain, it will be consummated at the second advent of our Savior. It will begin just a little while before, when the earth is covered with the harvest, and will be the "night" of the world—the wicked! (See Isaiah 24: 17-23; also verses 1-6 of the same chapter.)

Who will say the period here referred to has not now begun? (Jeremiah 30: 1-7.) And a little later on from now: (Jeremiah 25: 32-38; Daniel 12: 1-3; Zephaniah 3: 8, 9.) Note here in Zephaniah just after the Lord deals with the nations of the earth, as there described, the beautiful era "peace" begins. "For then will I turn to the [God's] people [the saved] a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent." (Also see Matthew 24: 29-31; 1 Thessalonians 5: 1-3; 2 Thessalonians 1: 6-8, and to verse 10.) So much, so far as it relates to the "consumption" which Isaiah says God has decreed to come on the whole earth after God's work, strange work and act.

The work the laborers are, by the direction of God, to do, is to proclaim the gospel—which Christ denominates "this gospel of the kingdom"—to all the nations, and then will the end of the reign of the wicked come, called the "end of the world," or "the world that now is." (Matthew 24: 14, 15; 2 Peter 3: 3-7.)

The character of the work of God in the eleventh hour is:

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS

The Apostle Peter associates this work closely with the second coming of Christ. He refers to it as "the times of restitution" of all things, "spoken by all the holy prophets since the world began."

(Acts 3: 20, 21.) The Apostle Paul refers to the work of "the eleventh hour" dispensation thus:

In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace; wherein he hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence; having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself: that in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in him: in whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will: that we should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ.—Ephesians 1: 7-11.

The dispensation of the gathering of all in Christ, in one, both who are in heaven and who are on earth, God purposes and wills this, so Paul, the apostle, says. God wills this closing dispensation. It is his "pleasure" that this be done. Will it be done? Dispensation—act of handing out, as to dispensing clothing or bread to the needy. Dispensation of the fullness, (completing) of times. Closing dispensation of this world. All God's people gathered in one! All in Christ.

That part of the "dispensation" relating to the gathering of all in Christ in one, on the earth, in the last days, is the part of vital, eternal, and infinite interest to mankind in our age of the world. We are approaching rapidly the close of "the eleventh hour" work, and the reckoning time! My friend, are you ready for this? (See Matthew 20: 8.)

So when the even was come, the lord of the vineyard saith unto his steward, Call the laborers, and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first.

This closing dispensation of divine mercy is opened up—introduced—in the some manner the work of the preceding hours were begun. They were opened up and carried on by new revelation from God, as we have hitherto shown. Man can discover things in this world by research, discovery. But when it comes to finding out the things relating to that other world, heaven, and God's purposes, and his will relating to us, they cannot be found out by man's discovery. These can only be found out by revelation from God!

Why the restitution? you ask. Why the "reformation" beginning with Martin Luther in Germany about four hundred years ago? Why taken up and repeated by others so often since then? Why did the learned reformers differ so widely from each other in their respective efforts? No two of the great movements of reform agree. Why not? In the light of the New Testament order of gospel doctrine, and the original church organization, which one of all these differing reform movements is right? Please answer us for we are earnestly seeking eternal life. The original gospel or will of God as set forth by Christ and the apostles was the doctrine of God, and provided for the building up of the church as God willed it, as we have before seen.

Is any differing doctrine and tabernacle or church ratified or consecrated by the blood of Christ? Which one?

The reformers all taught that along after the apostolic age, a great apostasy arose. A long dark age set in. This testimony of the reformers is by them taught as the reason for their several church movements. No one who reads their teachings and the history of their differing church histories will deny our statement here. We have no interest in making these statements, aside from an intense regard for the truth and the eternal salvation of man in eternal glory! Jesus taught the doctrine of God, and God says of his Son, "Hear ye him." (See Matthew 17: 5.)

While the great and good honest reformers cried reformation, the Bible teaches the restoration, as it relates to the last days. Restoration—"Act of replacing in a former state." So says Webster. But again; why a restoration? Why replace the gospel of Jesus Christ? Because we cannot be certain that anything differing will save us. Why "replace the church in its original state" and organization? Has he promised to save us by any other? Since Christ established the gospel, and the gospel church, as described in the New Testament, there arose through uninspired men in the Dark Ages, from the second to the fourteenth century after Christ, not less than forty-six to fifty differing churches or sects. Now fallen and gone forever from the earth! We cannot therefore belong to them.

Since the opening of the fourteenth century, one hundred great church denominations have been brought into existence, no two of which agree either in doctrine or organization! Shall we conclude from this that there is no true religion or church? Are they all wrong because no two of them agree? Do you expect man to enlarge and improve on God's work or works? No. It could not be expected that the finite could improve on the works of the infinite God! Can there be a false anything unless the genuine first exists? There can be no counterfeit money without the genuine.

In view of the experiences of all this, do you still ask why a restoration? Mankind who persist in differing about religion do not seem to care much for our Savior's teaching or prayers, or his efforts.

After Jesus Christ had committed to man the divine authority to act in his name, and had delivered to them the word of reconciliation and eternal life, to be consecrated to its purpose with his own blood, (Hebrews 9: 23-28; Matthew 26: 26-28; Romans 5: 6-10), he prayed for his apostles to his Father thus:

For I have given unto them the words which thou gavest me; and they have received them, and have known surely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou didst send me. I pray for them: I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me; for they are thine. And all mine are thine, and thine are mine; and I am glorified in them. And now I am no more in the world, but these are in the world, and I come to thee. Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are.—John 17: 8-11.

But again, in the same chapter, in the same prayer, Jesus prays for you and me, if we believe on Jesus through their testimony.

Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me.—John 17: 20-23.

By this prayer of Jesus, it is clearly revealed that God intends that those who believe in God through the testimony of the apostles are to be brought into the unity of the faith—be united—believe alike; all be one body; all one church, united in their obedience. All live by the same rule.

And all this that the world may believe and come to know; that God has sent his only begotten Son, as the Savior of mankind! The unity in faith and spirit and obedience and works is the world's unquestioned and convincing evidence that Jesus is the Christ! How long will the religious world remain divided, and operate against God's will, and Christ's work, and per consequence, against the gospel salvation of mankind?

Can we now see why the restoration of the original gospel and church organization growing out of its operation is essential?

Who but Jesus Christ and his divinely authorized ministry can do this—restore the church?

(To be continued.)

Christians do not grow like mushrooms. Things that grow quickly die soon. Things that are of slow growth possess the greatest longevity. You can look at nature and determine that. It is the annuals, the plants that grow up and die in a season, that grow quickly. That that lives through the winter and continues to live and grow and develop for years, grows more slowly and lives longer. That principle will have to be remembered in our growth. But do not take that as an excuse that we ought not to be making an effort to grow, notwithstanding our nature may be that of great longevity. Things that are naturally long-lived die when the principles of their life are violated, and so will we.—Heman C. Smith.

SERVICE NOTES

SERIES SIX

The General Conference and associate meetings interrupted our notes, hence the delay. However, we are very glad to say that the need of them no longer exists and this will be the closing number as very many of our boys are back home and others are expected ere long.

The following items of information have been gathered since our last number which will be of interest to our readers:

Sunday, February 23, there was a memorial service held in the church at Warrensburg, Missouri, and at that service a very handsome bronze tablet presented by the captain, officers, and crew of the United States transport Northern Pacific in honor of Wilmer C. Andes who was lost at sea, August 8, 1918, was unveiled. The writer made the address and a large congregation paid tribute to the memory of our brother who was called away under such tragic circumstances.

I received notice that on Sunday, November 17, 1918, a special service was held at Windsor, Ontario, Canada, and the service flag was dedicated. Brother Paul M. Hanson preached the sermon. The service flag had sixteen maple leaves and one star. The maple leaves representing the number of Canadian boys in the army and the star representing one American boy.

We were all made sad to hear of the death of Sergeant Gold, who was wounded just a few minutes before the close of the hostilities and died of the same a few days later. Our brother was well known in Independence and throughout the church, as his letters had been very interesting, and the fact that he was ordained at the General Conference of 1918 under circumstances which brought him into publicity. Great things were expected of this young man and his death was a serious loss to all. While he is no longer with us as part of the church militant we congratulate him on taking his place with the church triumphant.

I also have the report of the death of Charles T. Grigsby, of Toronto, Canada, who passed away October 12, 1918. He had a military funeral.

William Pfarr of Andes, Montana, was killed in action, no date or particulars reported.

We regret to report the death of the mother of Orion and Walter Adair, both of whom are with the American Expeditionary Force, and extend to them sympathy in this sad loss.

Captain A. W. Teel, M. D., of Glendale, California, who is with the army of occupation at Ruhleben, Germany, writes very interestingly of his experiences. He is in charge of a group who are caring for the eyes of the Russian prisoners. He has succeeded in interesting a young Jew in the gospel and has put him in touch with Bishop May of London. This young man is acting as an interpreter. There are no news of the doctor's return at present.

We had news of Lieutenant Ward Williams, son of Brother and Sister T. W. Williams, who is a surgeon with the third army in the American Expeditionary Force. He is selected as one of the composite regiment made up from the third army to act as escort of the Commander in Chief on his visits to Belgium and England. This regiment consists of those who have made a good record during the war and for their soldierly qualities. Ward Williams is one of the two surgeons selected for this honor.

Raymond C. Scott of Lamoni, Iowa, son of Brother and Sister Columbus Scott, and Battalion Sergeant Major of the 339th F. A. was selected about December 1, as a stenographer for the American Peace Commission and is now in Paris. Brother Scott received his training in Graceland College. We congratulate him on this honor.

Sergeant Frank R. Leaverton who used to live at Warrensburg, Missouri, has been recommended for the Distinguished Service Cross for extraordinary devotion to duty and disregard of personal consequences in remaining at his post during the period of October 16, to November 1, 1918, at Saint Juvin. Though he was badly gassed and so weakened that it was only with the greatest difficulty that he could perform his duties, yet he stuck to his post until relieved. All the time he was exposed to shell and machine gun fire and to the rain and cold and poison gas. Captain G. W. Ruge of the 326th Infantry reports that our brother's brave conduct came under his personal observation and vouches for the correctness of the report. Sister Ella Leaverton lives in Independence, Missouri, and surely must be proud of the record of her son. We share with her the feelings of pride and appreciate this tribute.

James A. Ballantyne of Lamoni, Iowa, is with Company A. 301, Sig. Bn. A. E. F. and writes very interestingly of his experiences. He sailed from Montreal and landed at Cardiff, Wales. He was among the first American troops to land there in a body and the parade through the streets of the city was enjoyed. They went into camp at Winchester and remained there about three weeks and then went to Longres, France. From there he went to the front at Saint Mihiel and was under heavy shell fire. He is glad the war is over and hopes to be back soon. He speaks a good word for the Y. M. C. A.

While we were in Independence, Missouri, we had the pleasure of meeting with Harry Roberts who was sergeant in Company B., 355th Infantry of the 89th Division. He saw extensive service and was wounded and gassed and returned to the United States to recuperate. Harry looked fine and was glad to be home again.

We were in Bisbee, Arizona, last week and were pleased to be among those who could welcome home David W. Davis from the war zone. He had a great experience and was at Chateau Thierry, Belleau Wood, and the Argonne but came through without a scratch. He looked very fine and healthy and was glad to be home again.

Sunday we met at the Los Angeles church a brother who belonged to the First Chicago branch, he had been in the war and lost a leg. Our hearts were made sad to see this fine young man limp into the church on crutches. But he was cheerful and bright and not at all disposed to be sorry for himself, at least in public.

A few weeks ago Captain Charles Bogue who married Sister Viola Adams of Los Angeles, returned and has resumed his civilian life. He had a very interesting experience while with the A. E. F. in France. He very kindly gave a sketch of his experiences one evening at church and concluded by telling that religion was appreciated by the soldiers not because of creeds but because of the conduct and character which after all were the things which counted.

We noticed at Ontario, California, Brother Will Swain was back with a bride whom he has secured in Brooklyn. They were happy and contented and we were pleased to pass along congratulations and enjoy a meal with them in their new home. We also met Brother Wilbur Blair and several other soldiers who had returned from France and was privileged to be at the service of welcome and was invited to deliver the address on that occasion. We also met Brother Johnson of San Bernardino who was back with us again. These young men are very useful to the Southern California District and we hope for good service from them. Brother Johnson is a violinist of promise, Brother Blair was the district Religio president and is now the one in charge of our Boy Scouts. Brother Swain is also a reliable Religio worker.

Well, we find our minds have drifted away from the war and we are absorbed in the ways and doings of peace. We are hoping that by the time this appears in print the Germans will have signed the amended peace terms and that the world will be able to give itself exclusively to the big task of reconstruction which is before it. We have witnessed three great events in the realm of aeronautics in the flight of the American Naval machine across the ocean to the Azores and then to Portugal and finally to Plymouth, England. We read of the intrepid flight of Hawker and his companion and for several days were sorry, believing that they had perished in the Atlantic, but were pleased when we read of their rescue later under conditions more romantic than anything which even a Jules Verne had written. Then comes the news of the success of the two British aviators in their Vickers Vimy flying from Newfoundland to Ireland.

Then we cannot close without saying a word with reference to our church and the Graceland College matters. The first Sunday of the conference in Lamon, there was held a memorial service and also a welcoming home, in which the church and college together expressed sympathy with those who mourn the loss of loved ones who fell in their country's service and to pay our tribute of respect to the memory of these noble souls and also extend the glad welcome to those who had returned and were returning to us. The two big things we want to accomplish are these; We want first to erect a suitable memorial to show our undying appreciation for those who gave their all to save us and our homes and freedom. To do this it has been decided that a Memorial Hall be added to the Graceland College buildings and dedicated to the education and preparation of the youth of our church, that they may carry on the good work, which these who died hoped to see accomplished.

Secondly, we went to see the large army of the church's youth give themselves to the great and splendid task of building up the kingdom of God and the calls emanating from the church for such to give themselves in the spirit of consecration to the service of Jesus Christ, and take the necessary training that shall increase their efficiency in this work.

There never was a greater need, never a nobler work, and never a finer opportunity. Our future depends upon our fidelity to the duty of to-day. Let the youth of the church respond with the same spirit and high sense of chivalry to meet the demands of peace as they did to meet the demands of war. Graceland is ready and the church invites; who will come?

Let the three cardinal qualities of our lives be bravery, purity, and truth and may we join with Robert Freeman in his prayer:

White Captain of my soul, lead on:
I follow Thee come dark or dawn.
Only vouchsafe three things I crave:
Where terror stalks, help me be brave!
Where righteous ones can scarce endure
The siren call, help me be pure!
Where vows grow dim and men dare do
What once they scorned, help me be true!

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

What is this day supported by precedents will hereafter become a precedent.—Thucydides.

WHERE STAND YE?

For thus saith the Lord to the men of Judah and Jerusalem, Break up your fallow ground, and sow not among thorns.—Jeremiah 4: 3.

Why does the Lord, who is a God of justice and mercy, permit the innocent to suffer with the guilty, is a question that is often propounded by those who would doubt the justice of Divinity, as portrayed in the Scriptures.

While preparing for my crop here at the Children's Home I was plowing and often turned under a strong, healthy plant of the same variety that I was preparing to sow. The question came, "Why plow them under?" Of course the answer was obvious, for to leave them would simply devote the field to weeds, with only now and then an isolated plant of any value, and that so choked with the tares that it could bring but little if any fruit to perfection.

Is it not thus with this world, which the Savior has declared is the field of the Son of Man? (See Matthew 13: 37, 38.) Here and there are "Children of the kingdom," but so choked by the surrounding tares that it is with difficulty that fruit is brought to the honor of God. That he may have a people prepared for his coming he has decreed that the Saints shall gather together, to prepare and be prepared in all things.

Must there not be a breaking up of the fallow ground, and is not the Master doing this through the various agencies of destruction which we see at work in all the world? Surely there shall be safety only in Zion, but who shall prepare this place of refuge? Shall not that be the work of the church in this day, "the day of his judgment"? And should not the people of the Lord have been spared much suffering and disaster if they had heeded the warning which was sent abroad in the early days of the nineteenth century, to gather upon this continent and build a city of holiness unto the Lord? Of course there are some who, of necessity, must be on duty out on the frontiers of the kingdom, on the "firing line," and to such there is his promise they shall be "taken," to "wheresoever the body is," but for the great residue is the command to gather, but to have all things prepared before them. Are we heeding this command and intelligently trying to make this preparation, not only in temporalities, but in our hearts?

It is written, "Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power," and surely the great latter-day work has manifested much of the power of God to those who have partaken of the blessings of the restored gospel. Will it still take the power of his judgments as poured out upon the world at large to make them fully appreciate the necessity of being planted in "holy ground"? And shall we not "stand in holy places," that we be not overwhelmed in the preparation for the regeneration of the world? For there must of necessity be a plowing ere the Master may "Cast abroad the fitches, and scatter the cummin, and cast in the principal wheat, and the appointed barley, and the rye, in their place." (Isaiah 28: 25.)

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE SOCIAL MESSAGE OF JESUS AND THE INDUSTRIAL CRISIS

[The following is from a sermon by Doctor Horace Westwood, at the First Unitarian Church at Toledo, Ohio, May 18, 1919, and printed in the Toledo Blade as an advertisement in display type.

It appears that there is a serious strike on at that place. Matters are somewhat obscure, but great bitterness of feeling has developed. The sermon is reprinted in Commerce and Finance, for May 28, 1919.

A great deal is being written on this question of the necessary cooperation of capital and labor, but for justice a third element must be added; that is the consumer. There must be justice, not only between capital and labor, but it must be just to the public at large, which in the end is themselves.—EDITORS.]

In the first place, running through all the teachings of Jesus I find one principle which is fundamental. To use a technical phrase, it is the "homocentric" principle. That is, God may be the dominating factor in Christ's universe, but man is the center and goal.

Let me illustrate. It is recorded that on a certain Sabbath the Master was walking through the cornfields with his disciples and they being hungry began to pluck the corn and eat. The onlooking Pharisees and Scribes immediately began to reproach him for allowing his disciples to break the Sabbath Day. In his discussion with them and in reply he enunciates this law: "The Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath."

But can we not see that we have here a principle which applies not only to religious observances but to the whole of life? In fact, in the teachings of Jesus there is no divorce between religion and life. For religion is life. It requires no stretch of imagination then to see its application to our social and political institutions. "Religion was made for man, not man for religion." "The state with all its institutions exists for man, not man for the state." "The law was made to uphold the majesty of man, not man for the majesty of the law." "Commerce and industry were made for man, not man for them."

Now when we come to apply this to our modern civilization we find that in many ways it runs counter to this spiritual law.

In spite of our tremendous productivity and growth in material resources the conditions of our time led Alfred Russel Wallace, the co-discoverer with Darwin of the theory of evolution, to say that our whole system of society, "and the social environment as a whole, in relation to our possibilities and our claims, is the worst the world has ever known." Why? Because we have subordinated man to production. We have made material growth and industrial development ends in themselves. Just as we have been prone to measure men by what they possess, so in the world of labor we have measured men by their ability to produce rather than by their capacity for character and personal growth.

This has been intensified by competitive production for the sake of trade supremacy. Success has been measured by the ability to rival one's competitors rather than by the benefits conferred upon society as a whole. Hence production, distribution, and commerce have become ends in themselves. It is almost impossible for us to measure the full effect of this, but I am convinced that it is this which is largely responsible for rivalry between the nations and for the class-warfare within the life of humanity to-day. Our standard of measurement has been wrong. Thus we have bred the spirit of the jungle rather than the family, the competition of strife rather than the competition of emulation, the strife which kills rather than the cooperation which binds and heals. I can imagine Christ, if he returned to earth to-day, saying something like this:

"You are suffering from a sort of inverted psychology. In the world of industry you have overturned the fundamental spiritual law which must underlie all enduring society. You have made machinery, production, and competition in trade the ends of your industrial regime. You have ignored the great truth—'industry exists for man, not man for industry.'"

In the second place, running through the social message of Jesus, I find the fundamental principle of democracy which might be described as "Each for all, all for each."

You will remember that several times the disciples quarreled among themselves as to which among them should be greatest. Christ always rebuked this by enunciating the law of service. Though there are many instances of this, let me quote from one recorded by Luke:

"And there was strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest. And he said unto them, the kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors. But ye shall not be so; but he that would be greatest among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve. . . . I am among you as one that serveth." On another and similar occasion he says, "Call no man Master."

I have not chosen these sayings because of their actual words but because of the temper of mind they indicate. As we shall see in the subsequent discussions they go right to the heart of the problem of industrial relations. The crux of the present world-wide situation, the center of the whole issue is this—Who are the rulers in industry? The owners of machinery or the men who operate them? The employers or the workers?

How does this law of Christ work here? Put in another way it is simply this, "He rules best who serves most." Not possession, not position, but service is the test. But does it not go even further than this? Does it not imply, "Ye shall not lord it over one another, but serve each other?" This does not square, however, with the psychology of modern industrial relations. In fact it is entirely foreign to it. The present atmosphere is rent in twain by the cries: "What can labor get from capital, and how much? What can capital gain from labor, and how much? The whole situation reminds one of the bargain table where all are striving to obtain the prize of profits. The first step towards industrial peace in our modern society is that labor must recognize that it is the servant of capital. Capital must recognize that it is the servant of labor; both must recognize that through mutual service they are servants of humanity. Conflicting rights must give place to joint duties and common responsibilities. Class consciousness must give place to the consciousness of humanity.

If time had permitted I should like to have said something about the gospel of the kingdom and the social abuses arising out of the concentration of wealth due to monopoly in natural resources, manipulation of taxation of the many for the benefit of the few, since all of this constitutes a large factor in our social unrest. Yet I feel that I have accomplished what I set out to accomplish if I have made you feel some of the passion for social righteousness which filled the heart of the Nazarene, if I have made you feel that the great hope of Christ was the kingdom of God upon earth and that this was the social dream of a world made new.

No dream such as this can be without bearing upon the problem of our industrial crisis. In fact I venture to say that if the Christian church had been true to the ideal of God's kingdom upon earth there would be no problem in industry to-day. Due to causes, however, which I cannot enter into now, the tragedy of Christianity is that it was traitor to the dream of its founder, and we are not true to this hope to-day.

How oft indeed have we assembled ourselves in the house of prayer and repeated those beautiful words from the Lord's Prayer—"Thy kingdom come." Yet how heedlessly we have let them fall! The lips have repeated but the heart has not felt the pulsations of the mighty purpose beneath. We have not visualized the great dream that gave it birth.

But surely after the searching experiences of the great war the Christian world calling upon the name of Christ will not be heedless to-day! We cannot—we dare not be!

Rising above the disputes of the hour we hear once again the challenge of the Galilean youth. As of old it rings across the centuries—"Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all other things shall be added unto you." And coupled with these words we hear the promise of the ancient prophet—"And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and confidence forever."

THEIR NEEDS

---

A new principle is creeping into wage relations—the principle of payment according to needs. It has come so gradually we either have not noticed it or think it has always been there.

Hitherto wages were fixed according to the market. The employer, criticised for the misery of his employee, replied, "I pay what the market requires."

Wages were then what the commodity, "labor power" cost. They are coming to be what the human being who works requires. This is the economic side of the principle first announced by American unions, later written into national legislation and now embodied in the greatest of international documents, the principle that the labor of human beings shall not be treated as a commodity.

Progress to this point has been painfully slow. Economists insisted that movement in this direction was impossible and undesirable. Lawmakers were unanimous in declaring such action impracticable. Employers swore that any attempt to interfere with the fixing of wages by "the higgling of the market" would destroy industry.

In the first half of the last century a few people began to say that the race dare not let competition fix the wages of little children. It was but yesterday that the social conscience, here and there, was quickened to hurt arising from permitting the labor of the mothers of the race to become an object of unrestricted barter.

So the idea of the minimum wage for women crept upon the statute books and through the courts and into the shops to stand as a barrier to economic pressure applied to the wages of women. These laws insist that the human being back of the labor power be the first consideration in determining wages.

It was inevitable that voices should soon arise asking why if living standards for women and children were to be protected when they entered industry, why should they not be equally protected while the father stood between them and the factory. Labor was revolting against the principle of the "dutch auction," with the job awarded to the cheapest bidder, being applied in the labor market.

The war came. Human strength and human life were spent so freely that they became expensive commodities—if they were still considered commodities. Half-starved people could neither fight nor work effectively, nor would they sacrifice and die for a country that rewarded them with semi-starvation—at least not in a democracy—and was the war not being fought for democracy?

Wherever governmental agencies were established to deal with the wage disputes that sprung from the rising prices, these bodies did not dare set up the old "labor market" standards. The War Labor Board in the United States gave no heed to the quotations on the "labor market" until it first determined if they were high enough to maintain health and efficiency.

We have not reached there yet, but the goal is in sight, where needs and not bargaining power will fix the minimum of wages everywhere. The industry that cannot pay this minimum must disappear and not remain to live, vampire like, upon the blood and strength of a weakened working class.

Above this minimum a regulated struggle will still, for some time at least, tend to bargain collectively over the exact amount of wages.—Des Moines News, June 5, 1919.

---

G. S. Birkhead of Windsor and Ben. D. Gillispie exchanged pulpits Sunday morning. The Christian Church will put on its every member canvass next Sunday preparatory to closing the year's work and arranging for the next. As Mr. Birkhead has had some practical experience in tithing, there being about thirty of his congregation at Windsor who keep strict account of their income and allot one-tenth to church and charity funds, he was called to start the canvass. The "old man" who by the way is developing into a mighty strong preacher, had a vigorous discourse, dealing with tithing in all its phases. He presented the statement of one member of his congregation, whose total income for the past three years had been $1,300; his tithe would have been $130, but he gave $170 instead.—The Holden Progress, June 12, 1919.

STEWARDSHIP

G. S. Birkhead preached a vigorous sermon Sunday morning on "Stewardship," a subject of which the average "giver" in the church is blissfully ignorant. Incidentally he told this story: A minister was once talking on this subject, laying stress on the point that our earthly goods are given to us as stewards and the least we can do is to render to the Almighty a tenth of the income. The preacher was interrupted by a sanctimonious old skinflint who poured forth an unctuous spiel to the effect that "all he had belonged to the Lord and dedicated to him, etc." The preacher stood it as long as he could and broke in: "That may be, my brother, but I believe the Lord would give you 50 per cent discount for cash."—The Holden Progress, June 12, 1919.

EXTRACTED FROM HISTORIAN'S REPORT

The volume of office work is increasing, and the time is near when if the department meets the demands made upon it, both from within the church and from without, the Historian will need to leave the clerical work to others while he acts only in a supervisory and advisory way.

During the year we have taken some time in investigating old stories that have passed as history. As an instance we examined the court records in the case of Porter Rockwell, who report says was indicted for the attempted assassination of Ex-Governor Lilburn W. Boggs, at Independence, Missouri, in 1842. We were surprised to find that Rockwell was not even indicted for this crime, but the most serious indictment found against him by the grand jury of Jackson County, Missouri, was for "breaking jail." On this indictment he was found guilty as charged, and sentenced to five minutes' imprisonment. That is all there is to the story that has so long been circulated about O. P. Rockwell shooting Ex-Governor Boggs, and Joseph Smith being accessory before the fact. Much more research along these lines should be made, especially in New York, Ohio, Missouri, and Illinois. The truth should be known and exposed, regardless of the effect upon friend or foe, but so far as our research has gone the results have been very gratifying to those interested in the good name of the church and her early defenders.

... I am not prepared to nominate a successor to Elder Daniel F. Lambert, in fact to supply his place in point of ability will be difficult. We contemplate, however, that in the future we will not only find it necessary to nominate one, but possibly several assistant historians, among whom should be those adapted to make the research work spoken of above.

I am at the service of the church in this capacity, so long as the interests of the church can be best served by my occupying, but I trust I shall not be sustained here when the cause can be better served by another. Then I hope to be able to serve elsewhere or retire as the general good may demand.—Heman C. Smith, General Conference Minutes, 1911.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

Soliloquy

And shall I ever know defeat?
Not while I have faith,
And hope in Him who over death
And hell holds sway;
I never, never will retreat,
Not e'en when I am called away:
For then, 'twill only be that I Shall enter upon larger work
Which he shall give,
In fairer mansions and on high—
Where God and Christ and angels live.

PHILEMON PEMENT.

Solace

Many a stone along life's road
Was put there just to be turned;
And many a thorn and bramble bush
Has flourished but to be burned.

Many an unkind word or deed
Has helped us to grow strong,
And patience has had its perfect work
In our strife to avoid the wrong.

Many an insult we pass by
In the interest and good of the whole;
For many a thorn the flesh must bear
For the good it does the soul.

Our Lady of the Roses

(To my mother, born June 15, 1842; died June 6, 1919.)

Our Lady of the Roses
Is lying there asleep,
Where all the Junes of ages
Their fragrant watches keep—Asleep and unforgotten
While roses fade or bloom
And leave in vase or vial
Their matchless sweet perfume.

Our Lady of the Roses!
 She came when roses came;
 So every rose that nods and blows
 Is sacred to her name.
 They grew for her and bloomed for her,
 On her they seemed to wait.
 To-day they lift or droop for her
 Who lies asleep in state.

Our Lady of the Roses!
 Mother, sister, friend.
 'Tis good, 'tis meet that roses sweet
 On your demise attend.
 For sacrifice, and love, and joy
 Are typified, they say,
 In this blest life, the mother, wife,
 Who lies asleep to-day.

Our Lady of the Roses
 Will waken—blessed thought—
 And find eternal roses
 And loved ones she has sought.
 O Lady of the Roses,
 For you I wait until
 This form of mine shall sleep near thine
 In our beloved Rosehill.

Some Plans for Music at Reunions

Even if it were not for the published notices in HERALD and Ensign we would be mindful of the fact that the reunion season is near at hand, for the blood of many of the Saints is tingling in anticipation of these annual gatherings. Many are the plans now being made for the successful conduct of these spiritual gatherings, which mean so much to many of our members.

In all our calculations we should not forget to make plans for the music work of our reunions, for the spiritual work of these gatherings can be greatly enhanced by good music. We know; we have visited a number of reunions in the past and assisted in the development of the music work at them; and we have witnessed the truth of this demonstrated. We have seen the sociability of the people awakened, their sensibilities and perceptions made more keen and their spiritual natures caused to respond in a marked degree. A lively, energetic musical service will conduce to a spiritual reunion as nothing else will. Let us illustrate a case in point. In the summer of 1917 it was our privilege to be present at a number of reunions, presenting the work of the General Choir Movement.

At some of these reunions we were given charge of the conducting of the singing while there. A special song service was held before the regular hour for the evening preaching services, and the people were urged and induced to sing the good old hymns of the church that had welled up from the hearts of the people. In every case we witnessed their hearts mellow into warmth and glow with gospel ardor, and their minds become more receptive to the gospel message that was to follow. It is needless to say that the message delivered from the sacred desk in response to such favorable conditions carried more of the gospel fire and vigor than usual. Given a consecrated speaker and an expectant, receptive audience, enthused and prepared by concourse of sweet song, but one result can follow: the spiritual delivery and the spiritual reception of the divine message: a perfect union under divine grace. This is that most potent partnership of speaker and hearer under the influence of the "Spirit of truth," described in Doctrine and Covenants 50:5.

Paul understood its value when he wrote to the Colossians (Colossians 3:16) to teach and admonish one another "in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord." "The song of the righteous is a prayer unto me," said God (Doctrine and Covenants 24:3); and when our congregations devotedly engage in the singing of our spiritual songs, they effectually place themselves in a prayerful attitude before God.

So let those who shall be in charge of the work of our coming reunions, if they would greatly enhance the spiritual ardor of the assemblies, take some effective steps to provide plenty of music for these important gatherings. Let district choristers everywhere "get busy" and rally all the musical resources of their districts in preparation for these reunions, resting assured that results will amply repay for all the efforts made.

We will detail a few suggestions of things that may be done in the way of development for the musical work of the reunions. Those concerned may, of course, modify them according to their several situations and conditions.

The music work of reunions naturally resolves itself into the following divisions:

1. Congregational. Besides the regular hymns sung at the various services, many of these services (especially the main preaching ones) should be preceded by congregational singing in which the people sing en masse. The reasons for this are outlined in the early part of this article. The people are becoming more appreciative of community singing and the demand for it is growing.

2. Choral. There should be had at the beginning of the reunion, if it cannot be accomplished sooner, the formation of the "reunion choir," which should comprise first the members of the various choirs of the district in attendance, together with individuals of known ability who can sing with them. If these several choirs sing anthems and same can be secured, it would be well to have them practiced and sung by the reunion choir, together with such special choral features as may be secured.

3. Vocal. A list of the various singers of the district, competent to serve in solos, duets, etc., should be made and they should be urged to attend, prepared to "do their bit" with individual offerings. These, when present, should be pressed into service as often as practicable.

4. Instrumental. All who play various instruments that are suitable for solos or duets, in combination with other instruments, should be urged to be present with their instruments, prepared to render selections during the reunion. They, too, should be pressed into service. Before we leave this section we will state that an abundance of vocal and instrumental solos, duets, etc., judiciously scattered through the various services will greatly heighten the enjoyment of the reunion.

5. Orchestral. If there are some orchestras in the district urge them to attend, and from those present who play upon orchestral instruments form a reunion orchestra, which shall serve to accompany the congregational singing. A feature of this kind greatly heightens the ardor of the congregation in its singing. If this reunion orchestra can render individual selections at some of the services, so much the better.

6. Educational. If possible, some educational features concerned with the work of music in the church should be had, under the direction of the district chorister in conjunction with the reunion and district authorities. An address might be given on some aspect of our church music work. A "round table" is an excellent thing to stir up thought and enthusiasm among those musically interested. It is conducted by allowing the audience to ask questions on musical topics and having those in charge, or competent persons in the audience, answer them.

7. Social and Spiritual. Social functions for the musical forces sometimes pay good dividends. "Hikes" by the musically interested, parties, and other "stunts" help keep the interest up and enthusiasm glowing. But there is one thing that should be seriously considered, for its needs are apparent, and that is the spiritual aspect of the music work. The musical forces present should be made to feel that theirs is a service; a necessary service and a blessed service, upon which they should ask God's blessing. Therefore the spiritual in their work should be kept before them. A prayer meeting of the musical forces may fittingly be held and in it should be offered prayers for and talks upon the spiritual character of their work.

The foregoing are, in brief, some suggestions whereby the musical work of our reunions may be made of great benefit to the Saints who attend. We pray that these suggestions may be found valuable to those who are seeking help in advancing the work of our many mid-year gatherings.

The Ragtime Age

Why is this the first war not to have produced songs worthy to live with its memories?

One writer attributes it to the age of machinery. This was a machine-made war, and there is no song in gas masks and wireless telephones. Another attributes it to the very bigness of the war. No song could compass the whole magnitude of it, and the individual was too lost in the mass to be worth singing.

May we not rather attribute it to a cause with which the war has nothing to do? Not the war, merely, but almost everything else, has long remained unsung—save only the white lights of Broadway. We have grown too citified to sing. We have substituted ragtime and jazz for music, not because we thought them any better, but because they helped out our citified pretense of being too sophisticated to want things good. To take things seriously; especially to have honest emotions and to be moved by the beautiful expression of them—that is countrified; which is to say, the one unconfessable disgrace. If we may, for the moment, descend to the almost equal shame of highbrowism, it is the spirit which Horace described as nil admirari—stare at nothing, wonder at nothing, think nothing important, if you would pass for the urbane citizen of Rome. So there is nothing new under the sun, not even the sophistication which is ashamed to be genuine or intelligent.

Into this atmosphere music does not fit. For music is the expression of the emotions. If emotions must be neither expressed nor repressed, but passed off with light urbanity, something else than music must be used to express this bored pretense that life is a joke. So ragtime was wrenched from its legitimate use of expressing the real light-heartedness of plantation negroes, and made to serve the hectic hilarity of a Broadway cafe. Then, when something hotter was needed, the Chief Fiend released jazz for the temporary use of his associates above.

Broadway is, to be sure, an infinitesimal fraction of America. But it is the part that teaches the rest of us to sing. Our grandfathers, in the Civil War, had learned to sing in churches. So there was nothing incongruous in their marching to the terrible inspiration of the Battle Hymn:

"Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord;
He is tramping out the vintage where the grapes of wrath are stored;
He hath loosed the fateful lightning of his terrible swift sword,
His truth is marching on!"

But we learn to sing from the vaudeville "artist," who learned it from somebody who learned it on Broadway. To their guild, Broadway is the only heaven. And, lest we confess to less sophistication, we supinely suffer them to initiate us in that cult. So they sing to us, after the spirit of Broadway, even about country things. As, for instance, by way of contrast with the "Battle Hymn of the Republic" and "We are coming, Father Abraham," try these on yourself:

"Good bye, maw!

Good bye, paw!

Good bye, mule, with the old hee-haw!

Crraw!!"

Or this:

"Howrya gonna keepim

Down on the farm,

After he has seen Paree?"

As a matter of fact, both of these atrocities reflect a genuine sentiment. But don't dare confess any such sentiment. You must pretend to be too bored with life to be even disgusted with it. A couple of cocktails might make it worth while to eat, and if a song has "pep" enough, you might watch somebody dance to it.

Our soldiers are of course not this sort of supersophisticated persons. They are just ordinary boys, who have been through a tremendous experience and must have brought back tremendous emotions from it. But they will not even talk about it. It is not good form. Why, then, should we expect them to sing about it—especially in a ragtime age, when nobody else dares sing, either, and jazz has taken the place of the meaning and the majesty of music?—The Fresno Republican, June 3, 1919.

Decorum in the Choir

On first thought it may seem that an article on this subject is superfluous, but our observation is that counsel in this direction is not untimely. Words fitly spoken are "like apples of gold in pictures of silver," and we think our counsel may find such lodgment and answer such need as to amply justify its utterance.

There are two occasions in which the choir most commonly functions: one is the regular practice (preparation), the other is the regular sacred worship of the church (service). At both of these functions decorum should have its proper place and receive its proper consideration.

At the choir rehearsal the chief object is preparation for the service of the church. The choir has met to practice and perfect its offering, given for the adornment of the worship and the glory of God's cause. Nothing should be allowed to enter which will disturb or prevent the proper attainment of this great object. In some of the choirs that have come under our observation we have seen not a few members who seemed to think that the choir practice was an occasion for social relaxation; an opportunity for merriment and gayety, sometimes mounting to hilariousness. To them social enjoyment seemed to be the main thing and the practice of the work in hand a secondary matter. The result was, of course, much disorder and confusion, destructive of the best results.

This should not be. Our choir rehearsals should at all times preserve intact the great prime object of their existence: the preparation for the sacred services of the church. When assembled for practice their work should be conducted in an orderly, systematic manner, until this result is reached: the perfection of the offerings they shall present for this service. Nothing should be allowed to prevent the consummation of this object, and the decorum of the members should be such as is conducive to that end.

We do not mean to advocate that our choir rehearsals should be solemn, funereal, straight-laced affairs; far from it. These rehearsals should never be occasions of gloom or bitterness, but should be cheerful in their nature, wherein gladness of heart prevails. God does not want his people to express their song sentiments in sadness and bitterness of spirit. Cheerfulness of heart and radiant hope should be the inevitable accompaniment of all our song service. Therefore our choir leaders should endeavor to make the choir rehearsals occasions of pleasure and happiness: pleasure in the character of the work done and happiness in its accomplishment. While the work of practice should be diligent, it should not be grinding. The maxim, "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," applies here very forcibly, and there should be frequent pauses and moments of relaxation, when dissipated energies may be recruited, "breathing spells" be had, and some quiet, harmless social enjoyment may be at this time indulged in. But in all this there should not be lost sight of the real object of the practice.

It should be unnecessary to write very much upon the matter of decorum in our church services; every choir member should appreciate the importance of good behavior at such times. Yet the indecorous conduct of choir members during the hour of worship is too often a matter of notice and comment. It is true that choir members, seated before the congregation, are more easily observed than individuals seated in the body of the church, and therefore their conduct does not so easily escape observation and criticism. But choir members should constantly keep in mind the knowledge that, as they occupy before the congregation, they are servants of the church, doing the service of the church for the glory of God. Therefore they should be examples of proper behavior, that those whom they serve may be influenced towards higher ideals. God's house should be a house of order where the spiritually minded may find rest and communion, and not a house of confusion; and in the choir there should be neither talking, laughing, nor unseemly conduct of any kind. We are not an advocate of sanctimoniousness, but we decry that misconduct that tends to destroy the spirituality of the service. Misconduct in the congregation is not any the less reprehensible than in the choir, but when choir members misbehave, their misbehavior works more harm, that is all. Therefore our choir members should realize their exemplary station and act accordingly.

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

"I am not proud. I always speak to everyone, no matter what their circumstances are." Do you? How do you do it? Are you sure you have the tone which puts them at their ease? Is it any more than just "How do you do" that would freeze and not warm their hearts toward you? "Well, I am not particular about their friendship." Oh, but you might be, if you only found out what was hidden away in that nature waiting to be brought out.—Mary J. Garner.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Temperance in Dress

The subject of dress is one of the foremost among women to-day. It is true that it is a very important subject, but should not be cultivated to such an extent that it will eliminate the more essential things of life.

Really it is a matter of environment and custom. Stop just a moment to think of the different modes of dress among the nations to-day and some of them have been in vogue for years. Let one of us dress in the gown of a Japanese, or in fact, a gown of '76, and walk down the streets of Kansas City, you can imagine the outcome, and will also realize that it is absolutely necessary that we dress in accordance with the times, but let it be in moderation and in accord with the instructions the Lord has given us.

Often when I see a "faddily" dressed person I think of the statement of Jesus in Matthew 6: 28, 29: "And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow: they toil not, neither do they spin: and yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." Did you ever stop to consider those lines? It is true the Lord was speaking of faith, but I have also gleaned other thoughts. These are simply impressions that have come to me and may seem very trivial to others, and right here let me say it is often the small things in life that bring the most happiness, the greater blessings, or make the deeper impressions. However, I have thought those who are prepared to enter the celestial kingdom might be likened unto the lily. Just consider a few points of the flower: it is severe in lines—quite plain beside some of the more gorgeous flowers, and yet it is beautiful and its beauty lies in its simplicity; its straight stately stem; its color the symbol of purity, and the smooth, velvet-like surface of the flower impresses one with refinement.

How true the words of Christ, "Even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." Solomon with all his wisdom, riches, and gorgeous robes was not in comparison with that simple, yet beautiful, little flower.

We cannot always judge a person's worth by his attire. This thought is very nicely portrayed in an editorial by Bruce Barton, a portion of which I will read:

"God sends great souls into the world clothed oftentimes in curious attire. And one misses much good-fellowship who thinks that from what men seem to be, he can determine off-hand what they are.

"Along a country road in Palestine a group of tired men walked one afternoon toward sundown.

"'Go ahead to the next village,' said their Leader, 'and see if there we may find a place to sleep.'

"After a little time they returned to say that the village would not receive them.

"It was a busy day in the village; the inhabitants were preoccupied and proud; what were a few travel-stained pilgrims to them! They trusted their first impression; it was a group of weary fishermen whom they supposed they had refused.

"And so they lost for themselves and their village forever the opportunity to entertain Him and his disciples."

First let us clothe our souls properly and it will be easier to clothe the body. By reading 1 Peter 3: 3, 4 you will readily understand what I mean by clothing the soul. "Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." Learn to clothe the soul—raise it to that high plain which God has designed. Remember

"Life is real, life is earnest,
And the grave is not its goal."

Should we then spend all our time in adorning the body, lavishing upon it gowns of splendor and fad? They will neither bring us friends, riches, nor eternal life.

Not long ago I read a statement which impressed itself greatly on my mind.

"A woman's home, a woman's clothes and her manner of wearing them express her habits of thought. One who is gold at the core will not wear tinsel; one whose instincts are refined prefers to dress simply and neatly so that the true kernel of life itself may be the attraction."

In Doctrine and Covenants the Lord has said, "And again, thou shalt not be proud in thy heart; let all thy garments be plain, and their beauty the beauty of the work of thine own hands, and let all things be done in cleanliness before me."

How very similar in thought these quotations are. The first is the conviction of a woman who knows not the Lord as we do, yet it is an appeal for simplicity and neatness and is in accord with the instructions the Lord has given us. This woman realizes that if our spirits are properly developed we will choose simplicity in all things; we will become such dynamic forces among people that we will not have to resort to the artificial for attraction. Why? Because we are building characters that will stand the test of time and eternity.

Have you not met people and after talking with them a few minutes forgotten their manner of dress; their personality led you from the thought of material things whether it be for good or evil, and as I said before, if the spirit is developed in the higher, more noble things of life we will naturally desire that our bodies be clothed accordingly. It is necessary then that we study ourselves and our possibilities; that we awake to that power within us to do good: let us cooperate with God and who can say what the outcome will be?

However, all people do not believe as we do and have formed customs which we are obliged to accept to a certain extent; in other words, we have to partake of our environments, but let them not overthrow us.

I believe it is a duty for all to be well groomed, to have pride in oneself. I have heard it termed vanity, but is it—that is the question? I can but answer for myself, and, as I stated before, I think each and everyone should be interested enough to be modern, but it should be within the bounds the Lord has designated—that neatness and simplicity prevail. Remember, well dressed people are not given to extremes and fads—by fads I mean the nonessentials.

Harmony is the keynote of a well-groomed person. If each one would study the harmony of outline and color in choosing a garment, we would be surprised in the change of appearances. It isn't so much the cost of a suit or gown, but whether or not it is suited to you. I might very much admire a strictly tailored suit, but it would be absurd for me to buy one because it wouldn't be suited to me, or someone real stout might be partial to ruffles and drapes, yet she shouldn't wear them.

It would be impossible to say how many changes one should have, or the price to pay, because the business woman needs a greater variety of one kind of gowns than the woman at home, and vice versa. It really has to be left to the judgment of each individual. Awake to this fact—that each is his steward and will have to answer to his Maker for all things. The Lord has given instructions regarding this and it is for us to fulfill them.

How can we impress others with the gospel if we adorn ourselves with many costly changes of apparel, or an overabundance of less costly garments, while some one less fortunate than we is in need? Is that the doctrine that Christ taught? Think these things over; now is the time to change our mode of living, if it needs changing, for the Lord has warned us the time is near when man's work is done. How are we building? Let us hope on a sure foundation—one that will stand the test.

"Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea."
ESTELLA HARTNELL.

Training Little Children

SIMPLE PLAYTHINGS

A worsted ball makes an excellent plaything for a little baby. If it is suspended from his carriage or crib it will help him to learn to focus his eyes, and he will be amused by it for a long time. When the child is a little older, let him sit on a quilt on the floor and play with several balls in the six primary colors, red, orange, yellow, green, blue, and violet. Each ball should have a worsted string of the same color attached to it. When the child is a little older still, play simple little games with him, such as rock-a-bye baby, pendulum of a clock, swinging the ball back and forth and up and down and in other ways that will occur to every mother. Unconsciously the child will acquire a sense of form, color, motion, and position by these games. Say to him, "See the pretty round balls." "See the pretty <sup>ALL</sup>aper," and the child will delight to find and bring to you <sup>er</sup> things that are round like a ball, and red like the <sup>er</sup>per. A set of worsted balls in the six primary colors can be obtained from the kindergarten supply houses—Milton Bradley Company, Springfield, Massachusetts, or E. Steiger and Company, 49 Murray Street, New York.

Clothes pins make an excellent plaything for babies. They can be used for babies or soldiers, or to make fences, trees, log houses, and many other interesting things. Playthings that can be taken apart and put together again are good to have; also blocks with which the child can build all kinds of objects—engines that he can push along the floor, balls to bounce and throw, doll carriages, washing sets, etc. Dolls with clothes that button and unbutton and come off, may be used to teach the children how to dress and undress themselves.

Kindergarten beads are very useful and helpful. They are in the form of half inch wooden balls, cubes, and cylinders, in the six primary and secondary colors, and also in the natural wood. A shoe lace is used for stringing them. I would suggest, to begin with, that the child string balls only, and all in one color. After he has made a long string of these, ask if he would like to use two colors. He will probably string them in irregular order at first, and if so it will be necessary to suggest alternating the colors, putting on two of one color and one of another, and so on. In this way he will soon learn all the colors, and numbers perhaps up to six or eight, and will know one form. Form is the most difficult subject for the little child to grasp, and for this reason the different forms should be introduced last in these little lessons.

What else is there with which little children's hands can be kept occupied? First of all, sand. Just turn the children loose in a pile or table of sand, with a spoon, a pail, a cup, or anything with which they can dig or shovel. I personally do not like to have sand in the house, but if you have a suitable place for it, it need not make any trouble. An old kitchen table turned upside down with the legs cut short and put on the other side, makes a good table for sand. A piece of burlap or denim placed under the table keeps the sand from being scattered over the house.

With clay, a simple little cradle may be made. The child first rolls a piece into a ball, cuts it in half with a string. One of these halves forms the lower part of the cradle. The other he cuts in two, using one piece for the top, and remodeling the other into a "ball for baby."

Birds' nests with eggs can be made with clay; also apples, oranges, cups and saucers, and even animals may be attempted. Plasticine is the best kind of clay to use, as it is easily handled and is always ready.

For little children, before they are old enough to use scissors, tearing paper is an engaging occupation. Tear a piece of old newspaper into an oblong shape, it may be any size, about two by four inches we will say. By folding this in the middle, it will make a little tent. Again, fold in thirds, one piece turned up and one down, for a chair. Turn both ends down, for a table. The child can tear paper into trees, a ball, doll babies, and many other simple shapes.

When the child is old enough he can begin to use scissors, but be sure to provide a pair with blunt points that cannot possibly hurt him. These will afford endless hours of amusement and profit. Have you found that "he cuts papers all over the floor"? Of course he does, but use this occasion to teach him neatness. Let him have his own little wastebasket, and he will delight in picking up the papers.

Have him cut pictures from old magazines, and paste them into a book, made from manilla wrapping paper. To make the book, take any desired size of paper, fold several sheets in half, and sew them together along the crease. A picture might be pasted on the front page, or the child could draw one on it. This will take many days' work, but all the time he will be learning many lessons in patience, concentration, neatness, and accuracy, and will be developing artistic talent if he is apt at drawing. If, in his cutting, he comes to a picture that has a story, tell it to him. Do not criticise his work, as this may discourage him, but see to it that he does the best he can.

Let the child draw with colored crayons or "crayolas." You will be surprised at how soon and how well, under proper guidance, he will be able to use this means of expressing himself.—Mrs. Princess B. Trowbridge.

A Twilight Reverie

ON THE EVE OF A FRIEND'S WEDDING DAY

There's exquisite perfume afloat in the air!
 No attar of roses with it can compare!
 It quickens my fancy, and prompts me to see
 Both fruitage and bloom, on a tropical tree—
 That breeze-wafted perfume, when traced to its source,
 Is fragrance of sweet orange blossom, of course.

From whence comes that musical strain that I hear?
 Its mystical melody falls on my ear
 With cadence delightful! Ah! Loudly it swells
 Out into the chiming of glad wedding bells!

They tremble and tinkle, then burst into peals,
 Their loud, jolly jingle their message reveals:
 Each bell-tongue expresses a jubilant strain
 And every vibration rings out a refrain.

I listen, and muse on the World-Builder's schemes;
 Two human souls joined, like two confluent streams,
 Impelled by love-promptings, the maid and the man,
 Work out the details of God's marvelous plan!

Those joy bells cause thanks to emerge from my soul,
 Arising like incense, in fleece clouds they roll,
 Till, reaching the limit of memory's trend,
 I see the fair face of a dearly loved friend!
 She sits by her husband, and there by their side,
 Stands D——, their daughter, bedecked as a bride!
 Beholding the joy on her love-lighted face,
 Fond wishes flit out from my heart into space,
 And flutter around the dear child, as she goes
 Forth, pure as a diamond, and sweet as a rose—
 Oh, may she in sheltering arms be enclasped,
 And wifehood in all its full meaning be grasped!

Now, custom declares, at the grand nuptial rites
 All friends should bring gems from the mountainous heights,
 Golden gifts from the mine, or pearls from the sea—
 Rich, dainty, and rare should a wedding gift be.
 I proffer no treasure of this kind, my dear,
 Instead, here's a tribute of love and good cheer
 With orisons fervent for guidance aright
 To keep your feet firm in paths flooded with light,
 So that when the church bride in splendor appears
 To meet her Liege Lord, amid angelic cheers,
 You will hail the Bridegroom, who is richly adorned—
 Not wearing the crown that was heavy and thorned,
 But one made of clarified, bright, living stones!
 They alone are the pearls which His Majesty owns;
 He calls them his jewels, counts each one a guest,
 And ushers them all into mansions of rest.
 May you and your husband be there, and aspire
 To stand in the ranks of his glorified choir!

Then when those great wedding bells tinkle and clang,
 You'll think of the time when your own sweetly rang,
 And thank God anew, for the dawn of that day,
 When, wrapped like yourself, in a mantle of clay,
 One stood at your side, and there publicly vowed
 That nothing should part you, but casket and shroud.

Ah, yes, for real bridal wreaths cast not their bloom;
 Marriage vows are not canceled this side of the tomb;
 Souls, true here in wedlock, will there reunite,
 And bask in pure God-love, with thrills of delight.
 With such consummation of your vows to-day,
 You see, my dear D——, that surely you may Rejoice and be glad on this fair eventide,
 Assured that life's gateway is opening wide;
 When portals eternal shall burst into view,
 And may you, in glorified splendor, pass through!

ALICE E. COBB.

Faith stands on the edge of the known and looks out into the vast spaces of the unknown, makes an excursion in those unexplored regions and brings back reports of that hitherto unknown country. Thus faith is a sort of advance guard, blazing the way and marking out the road over which experience must later travel.—Samuel F. Halfyard, in Cardinal Truths of the Gospel.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Jots by the Wayside

The first June Conference held for a number of years in any part of Ontario, Canada, was that of the Owen Sound District held at Wiarton, June 14, 15. An old-time missionary—still in the field—and who has labored in various parts of Ontario, as also Ohio and Pittsburg Districts, remarked to us just before the closing service, "This is like some of the conferences we used to have about fifteen years ago, when we were all one district" (meaning the then London District).

This was spoken not only in reference to the good spirit prevailing throughout all the sessions, but referred to the attendance.

The conference secretary and those giving meals estimate the Saints in attendance at about three hundred on Sunday, which must be considered large, considering that Wiarton is in the remote corner of the district, divided from Manitoulin Island and north shore parts by Lake Huron and Georgian Bay waters.

The prayer meetings were spiritual and the testimonies borne of continued knowledge that this latter-day work is truly the gospel of the Son of God, restored in this the last dispensation, bore witness that the "boat" has not been shaken to anywhere near capsizing by any "one" predicting its submersion in the waters of overthrow.

To the contrary, this conference and conventions preceding it show a spiritual awakening, with renewed activities along all the lines of work in connection with this church.

The conference reports show an encouraging increase by baptisms, while the Bishop's agent reports increase in tithes and offering.

Brethren King Cooper, of Guelph, and Peter Mason, of Wiarton, were ordained to the office of elder, and Brother Harvey Sagle, of Manitoulin, to the office of priest.

The preaching hours were occupied by S. W. Tomlinson, J. A. Morrison, J. T. Thompson, and G. E. Harrington, respectively.

Meals, amply abundant in character, were provided in a large stone building formerly used as woolen mills.

J. SHIELDS.

Southern Nebraska

I arrived here the 17th and found Brother Parker already negotiating for a new tent authorized by the district conference. If we succeed in getting a tent, we will likely begin operations in Lincoln. Prospects for missionary work in the district seem to be good, judging by the number of scattered Saints there are, which should furnish the nucleus of a branch. We will esteem it a favor if the Saints will write us of any opportunities to preach the gospel. No matter if previous efforts have failed. Give us a chance to try again. With your cooperation, grand results may be accomplished. Remember, we are "workers together with God," and faith, zeal, and courage will remove mountains of opposition and drive Satan to cover. Let's write "Success" on the map of Southern Nebraska District in big red letters. You will feel a genuine thrill of joy, and a commendable pride telling others how we did it.

E. E. LONG.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA, June 21, 1919.

This to be Our Best Year

I think we have reason to believe that this will be the biggest and best year in the history of the church. We are making this our slogan in Warrensburg. I have asked the people to try to make it the best and richest year in their lives individually, which, of course, is the basis of the whole thing.

I believe I can see a gradual improvement in the work and in the lives of the Saints. I want to do very intensive work toward this end. I also believe that constructive work on the inside is one of the greatest issues of our church at this time.

FRED A. COOL.

WARRENSBURG, MISSOURI.

COLUMBUS, KANSAS, June 22, 1919.

Editors Herald: In these days of trouble, turmoil, and terror, it may be no easy matter for some who have made an honest, earnest, and determined effort to serve our heavenly Father, to make a success of it. But we may if we will, for the Father has said we shall not be tempted above that which we are able to bear.

In order that we may be able to overcome, we must needs heed the admonition, "Come out from the world [spiritually] that ye be not partakers of her evil deeds." This also is quite hard to do when we allow ourselves to become members of various organizations that are formed, fostered, and featured by those who are really antagonistic to Christianity and true religion. Those of the world are, as a rule, trying to evade individual responsibility, circumstances, conditions, and other agencies, over which they claim to have no control. Truly, how deceptive and destructive are the wiles of the opposer of our desires, determination, and endeavors to continue faithful to the end.

Dear Saints, let us renew our efforts, striving for greater faith in God and his promises, that we may not be sifted out and lost.

Your brother in the gospel,

C. C. RANDALL.

the middle of his discourse and look hard at us and say, "These men who say that there is any such thing as salvation after death are all liars."

If true, that was hard on us, but much worse for the millions of Chinamen, Africans, Egyptians, Hindoos, Assyrians, and all pagans and heathen of every age and clime who never heard the great revivalist or anyone else preach Jesus in this life.

But a greater than Billy Sunday says that neither life nor death can separate us from the love of God. That love will reach out after every man born of woman, and sometime, somewhere it will find him. It is not written that God so loved a few men that he gave his only begotten Son. Those who having experienced the love of God turn from it, become the sons of perdition. But no one can be eternally condemned until he has had his chance.

A confectionery and lunch stand will be run by the committee. Good speakers will be provided and a special feature will be Children's Day exercises on Thursday. Come prepared to camp with us for 10 days and have a good time. Pasture will be provided for stock. Those coming by rail notify J. R. McClain, R. F. D. 5, Paris, Tennessee. J. R. McClain, for committee.

Tents for the Clinton reunion at El Dorado Springs, August 8-17, can be had for the ten days at the following rates: 10 by 12, wall tent, $3; 12 by 14, wall tent, $3; 10 by 14, family tent, two rooms, $4.75; 12 by 14, family tent, two rooms, $5.25; 12 by 16, family tent, two rooms, $6. Bed springs, 25 cents. Those desiring tents should notify the undersigned at once.

Seattle and British Columbia District will hold its annual reunion at Bellingham, Washington, August 1-10. For information pertaining to accommodations and the renting of tents, etc., correspond with Brother George R. Brundage, 1246 Elk Street, Bellingham, Washington. Conference session will convene at 2 p. m. on the 5th, and the auxiliaries in the afternoons of the 6th and 7th. Come prepared to take part in a program to be rendered same evening. All having performed labor in the district, other than as a branch officer, please report to the undersigned immediately, for the six months ending June 30. Branch clerks please report for the same period. It is expected some of the traveling ministry will be in attendance. Frederick W. Holman, secretary, 3633 Whitman Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

The Eastern Oklahoma reunion will be held two miles northwest of Fort Towson, Oklahoma, in a nice grove; to begin at the close of district conference, August 4, and continue over Sunday, the 10th. Then follows the big and much talked of debate on church propositions, on August 12, between Elder J. F. Curtis, of the Latter Day Saints' Church, and J. W. Chism, of the Christian Church, to continue six days, two sessions each day. Arrangements will be made to hold our Sunday school convention, conference, and reunion in a 40 by 60 tabernacle. Let everybody come prepared to camp on the grounds and have a good, spiritual time. You can live as cheaply there as you can at home. Pasture for stock has been provided for, as well as water. It will be time well spent. Good speakers of the missionary force will be there, including one or two of the Twelve, and a patriarch, if possible. Send in your order for camping tents at once to J. C. Chrestensen, Haileyville, Oklahoma. Cost of tents: 10 by 12, $3 for a week; after that 30 cents per day. 12 by 14, $3.75—38 cents; 14 by 16, $4.50—45 cents and freight added. Bring your bedding and eatables. J. C. Chrestensen, G. C. Thompson, L. Cappell, reunion committee.

Southern California reunion will be held at Convention Park, Hermosa Beach, August 1-10. Tents, 10 by 12, $4; 12 by 14, $5; 14 by 16, $6; chairs, 15 cents; tables, 25 cents. All orders for equipment must reach me before July 25. All are urged to be prompt. Do not delay. Peter Kaufmann, Box 26, Montebello, California.

The reunion of the Far West Stake will be held at Stewartville, Missouri, beginning Friday, August 15, and closing the 24th. Prices of tents and cots: Tents 10x12x3, $3.00; 12x14x3, $3.50; 12x16x6, $5.50; spring cots, 2½x6½, 75 cents. Address orders to Elias Hinderks, chairman tent committee, Stewartville, Missouri. Orders must be in early to secure tents. Don't wait until you reach the grounds. All campers are expected to be located and ready for the opening meeting, Friday, August 15, at 10 a. m. Abundance of shade, good water, fine grounds; let everyone come prepared for a spiritual season. R. S. Salyards, for stake presidency.

Southeastern Illinois, with the Springerton Branch, August 15-24. R. H. Hensen, president; Ruf Stalling, secretary.

Northern California, at Irvington, California, August 14-24 inclusive. For rooms apply to J. H. Driver, Irvington, California. Tents rented: 7x9½, $2.75 each; 9½x12, $3.25; 12x14, $3.75. Box mattresses, double, 75 cents; single, 50 cents; springs, double, 50 cents; single, 25 cents. Order early from C. W. Hawkins, 615 Spencer Avenue, San Jose. Breakfast, 25 cents; dinner, 35 cents; supper, 30 cents; children from 3 to 8 years, half price. Cecil Hawley, secretary, 1955 Napa Avenue, Berkeley, California.

The Northeastern Illinois District reunion, that was to begin August 22, will now begin August 29 and run to September 7, inclusive, at Plano, Illinois. The change in date is owing to the fact that there is to be a chautauqua there, beginning August 22 and lasting 6 days. So the district conference voted the change as above. Wall tents with 3½ foot walls, 10 by 12, will be furnished at $4; 12 by 14 wall tents at $5.50; 14 by 16, $7.50. The dining tent will be operated at the lowest possible price for meals. We hope to furnish meals by ticket at 25 cents, and transient meals at 35 cents, children under 8 years half price. Please send orders for tents not later than August 15, to J. O. Dutton, 315 First Street, Evansville, Wisconsin. Any obliged to order later address Box 400, Plano, Illinois. Jasper O. Dutton, for the committee.

The price of meals at the Northern Wisconsin reunion will be 25 cents for breakfast or supper; 35 cents for dinner (instead of 25 cents as previously announced). Those interested please take note. Leroy Colbert, secretary.

Lamoni Stake, Lamoni, Iowa, July 31 to August 10. Order tents of A. J. Yarrington, Lamoni, and to insure service order at once: Low wall, 10x12, $4.25; 12x14, $5.25. High wall, compartments, 12x12, $8.25; 14x14, $11.50. Excellent grounds with adequate equipment. Meals on grounds. Session opens with sacramental service at 9 a. m., the 30th. To avoid confusion and make for the best results, let all be located for the first meeting. For further particulars write J. F. Garver, Lamoni.

Two-Day Meetings

Following the conference of the Southwestern Texas District, to be held at Pipe Creek, August 8, 1919, there will be a 10-day meeting. It is hope that as many as can will attend. E. L. Henson, T. J. Jett, jr., G. M. Hiles, committee.

Notice

SENIOR QUARTERLY FOR MISSIONARIES

If ministers under conference will drop me a card stating they are under appointment, giving field address, we shall be glad to place them on the mailing list for one year for a free copy of the Senior Sunday School Quarterly. All previous addresses are canceled. This applies to all except those who have given me their names since conference.

GOMER R. WELLS, Superintendent.

TO NORMAL CLASSES AND TEACHERS

On July 1, Graceland College Extension Department will have been organized and ready to take over our Religion-Sunday School Normal Department. We are anxious that our records shall be up to date when transferred. All those who have diplomas, seals for advanced work, etc., overdue, will confer a favor by writing again, to the normal superintendent, Brother E. F. Yerrington, 315 Pearl Street, Hartford, Connecticut, repeating the particulars. A transfer of office last year was made necessary by resignation of former superintendent and it may be that some letters were mislaid or lost.

G. S. TROWBRIDGE,
President Religio Society,
G. R. WELLS,
Superintendent Sunday School Department.

Notice of Appointments of District Chorister

To Whom Concerned: Brother D. E. Jones, of Bevier, Missouri, has been recommended by the conference of the Northeastern Missouri District for appointment as chorister of said district.

We hereby take pleasure in publishing this, his appointment, and heartily recommend Brother Jones to the musical forces of that district, urging them to cooperate with him in every way for the accomplishment of his work.

ALBERT N. HOXIE,
General Church Chorister,
By ARTHUR H. MILLS,
General Secretary.

Approved by the Presidency:

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

June 20, 1919.

The Bishopric

OWEN SOUND DISTRICT

Owing to the fact that Brother J. A. Morrison is moving about considerably, which militates against his handling the work of the Bishop's agent, he has submitted to us his resignation and we have arranged with Brother F. B. Stade, of Harriston, Ontario, to act as Bishop's agent of the Owen Sound District.

Brother Morrison has been a very careful and efficient agent and it is with regret that we have accepted his resignation, but are glad to commend to the Saints Brother Stade as one fully qualified to continue this work.

I trust that the Saints of the Owen Sound District will sense the needs of the Lord's work under the peculiar conditions existing in the world at the present time and the great desire of the church to reach out and enter new fields of activity and that they will support the cause, not only by their faith and prayers, but by their substance as well.

Sincerely yours,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

PRICE.—Sister Albertina Pallardy Price, born July 4, 1853; died June 10, 1919. Leaves husband, two sons, and an adopted daughter to mourn. She was a sufferer from heart disease for several years. Funeral at the home, sermon by D. F. Tucker. A large audience was present.

SNELL.—At McPaul, Iowa, June 17, 1919, occurred the funeral of Marjory Margaret, daughter of Brother and Sister Silas Snell. Born June 11, 1919, and died June 16, 1919. Leaves father, mother, three brothers, and one sister and a host of relatives and friends. Funeral sermon by M. M. Case.

HARMON.—Mary E., oldest child of James M. and Ann EWING Dayton, was born January 5, 1863, near Sycamore, Illinois. Married October 21, 1884, to Herbert E. Harmon. Died June 11, 1919, at the old Dayton home, Sycamore, Illinois. Baptized at Dekalb, Illinois, about twenty years ago. Sister Harmon was a woman of strong type, intelligent, upright, honest, and of pure and noble life. A large concourse of friends and neighbors were present at the funeral services, held at the home, June 13, 1919. Sermon by F. M. Cooper, of Plano, Illinois.

OEHL.—Sarah A. Oehl, daughter of Brother and Sister C. E. Crumley, was born October 16, 1890, at Alleghany, Pennsylvania. Baptized June 3, 1900, at Los Angeles, by C. E. Crumley; confirmed by C. E. Crumley and T. W. Williams. Died with pneumonia, May 31, 1919, at San Bernardino, California. Services at the Saints' church, San Bernardino, June 2. Sermon by George H. Wixom.

FROM HERE AND THERE

THE ARIMAT

A copy of the first number of Arimat has just come to our desk, and in it we note that it is published by the Southern Nebraska District, and that H. A. Higgins is one of the editors, as well as E. E. Long. Elder Higgins is the president and Bishop's agent for the district. J. L. Parker, the associate president is the business manager; Elder Long is the missionary to that district.

The name Arimat is stated by them to be an Algonquin Indian name, meaning a valuable thing. While not published for a price, they suggest fifty cents for the twelve monthly numbers, in order to meet the necessary expense.

"WE THOROUGHLY ENJOY EVERY PAGE"

"I take Autumn Leaves and I think it is getting better all the time. 'The call at evening' is the best story I have read so far. It is splendid for the young of the church. Although just my sister and I are Latter Day Saints, mother and father look forward to the coming of the Leaves each month. Brother Dwyer's articles make one want to meet him personally. Being isolated, we thoroughly enjoy every page of this good magazine."—Molly Blaney, Swanton, Vermont.

THE MISSIONARY COURSE

The general church authorities expect soon to pass upon the applications of all candidates for the course for foreign missionaries to be offered at Graceland College this year.

All who are interested should write at once for full information so that the best interests of all as well as the church can be conserved.

This new movement to meet one of the most important needs of the church is vital and the general church authorities desire that no one interested in making the necessary preparation should be denied the opportunity. A considerable number of applications have already been received and it is hoped that all will be in by the time the authorities are called together to pass upon them and select those to receive the training.

For full information write The President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

The Blue Stepping Stones for 1919 shows that Alberta gave for the 1918 Christmas offering, $689.65; British Columbia $385.86; Manitoba $178.65; Saskatchewan $1,231; Nova Scotia $142; Ontario $7,101.32, a total of $9,728.48. Canada certainly did her share in maintaining the general average.

The striking cover design on the Canadian issue was drawn by Elder Ira I. Benham, for thirteen years a resident of Canada, but now of Indianapolis. He is devoting his time to art work at the latter place. Autumn Leaves is privileged to use one of his designs on its covers each month, and some most excellent work has been done for that series.

The past few weeks have developed some noteworthy events. Lieutenant Reed of the United States Navy was the first to cross the ocean in an airship, going first to the Azores, and from thence to Portugal, and then to England. But after only a few weeks' lapse of time, Captain John Alcott and Lieutenant Arthur Richard Brown sailed, June 14th, directly from Newfoundland for Ireland, and made the trip in sixteen hours and twelve minutes. This is the first non-stop airplane flight across the Atlantic. This with the other efforts made within the month, more or less successful, marked indeed a new era in the history of the world.

FUTURE FOR WIRELESS VERY BRIGHT

A letter from Charles D. Guthrie, United States Radio Inspector, New York City, points out the ever-increasing demand for skilled radio operators and the necessity for a thorough training at a good school. Portions of this letter follow:

"Sir: The demand for commercial first grade radio operators is increasing every day, and experienced men holding licenses need not remain out of employment. The salaries are $110 per month for senior operators, and $85 for junior operators. This includes meals and quarters on board ship, so that a man has a chance to travel to various parts of the world, which should appeal to many, and save money at the same time. Men able to handle a typewriter and do clerical work on one-man ships are able to make more money, depending on the circumstances.

"It is therefore advisable for those interested to go to a reliable radio school and learn modern methods of commercial work; as the United States Merchant Marine is growing every day operators will always be required."

The wireless field, besides requiring thousands of operators, also requires radio mechanics, radio electricians, radio engineers, radio draftsmen, and many other men who have special training in wireless telegraphy. The work is very profitable, fascinating, and offers splendid opportunities for advancement. This comparatively new profession should appeal to many of the young men of the church who are interested in science.

The Graceland Radio Institute, a department of Graceland College, offers two splendid courses in wireless telegraphy which are fully described in the new Graceland catalogue. Those interested should write the President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, for a copy of this new, illustrated catalogue.

We are glad to announce that Elder E. D. Moore of the Editorial Staff has been released from quarantine with his family, and is now fully able to resume his work. It is rather trying for an active person to be confined, so there is much rejoicing around the office over his early release.

MINIMUM SALARIES FOR TEACHERS

By law passed by the last Iowa State Legislature a teacher who has completed a two-year course in Education in a school whose diploma is recognized by the State Board of Educational Examiners and who holds a State Certificate is entitled to a minimum salary of $80 per month and after two years' successful teaching experience the salary is $100 per month.

This law puts Iowa in the front rank of the States providing a minimum salary law for teachers. Graduates of Graceland come within the provisions of the new law and already most of the graduates of this year's class have been elected for next school year at salaries ranging from $80 to $120 per month.

Graceland's illustrated catalogue is just off the press. Write for it or for other information to The President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

President Frederick M. Smith has been invited by the ministers of Decatur County, Iowa, to deliver the memorial address on the morning of July 4 at Leon, as part of the county celebration, and has accepted.

George H. Wixom was among the speakers at the annual memorial services of the Woodmen of the World, held at Colton, California, and was well received.

THE EFFECT OF THE WAR ON RELIGION

During the war we were not surprised to learn that humanity in general was turning to religion. There was a common bond of unity in the world calamity, and with one accord men sought consolation in the Divine Power which gave them life and which would eventually receive their souls when death claimed its own.

From all over the world keen observers sent in reports that a spiritual transformation was in progress. As an example, we quote from Willard Price, who wrote to the American Review of Reviews in June, 1916:

A new experience has come to the missionaries. Now they know what it is to have their churches actually swamped with converts. The war has a sobering effect upon the world, and there is a wholesale turning to Christianity that is bewildering and staggering the missionary forces abroad. Three thousand converts a week in Korea! An Oriental Billy Sunday leading thousands of Japanese up the sawdust trail, this being the first time in history that the unemotional Japanese have so responded! Seven thousand of the strongest leaders of China, scholars, officials, and gentry, accepting Christianity! A waiting list of 150,000 in India who have been refused baptism for the present because the missionaries have not schools and churches enough to accommodate them! . . . Churches are packed to the doors in Mexico.

He sums up these situations as they were reported to the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at its quadrennial meeting of that year.

We say that we were not surprised that such should be the case during the world's baptism in blood and terror, but all the time we were wondering if it would continue. When the special incentive of personal danger was removed, would there be a reversion to former conditions, and even beyond?

Students of sociology inform us that the reaction is on now—the usual results that follow each great war. A general laxity concerning morals prevails, resulting in waves of crime and a general increase in immorality.

But while this is true, is there no permanency in the religious sentiments engendered by the world strife? We cannot but believe that those who found something tangibly applicable to their spiritual needs have retained it with appreciation. Surely the great wave of spiritual introspection has not been entirely fruitless. Certainly many pertinent questions propounded by anxious souls have remained unanswered, but the seed has been sown and will germinate when proper conditions are furnished.

We were much interested in the following from the pen of Doctor William T. Ellis, who is in the Near East for the New York Herald, and who included these statements in the conclusion of his description of the Isle of Patmos, where John the Revelator saw the wonderful vision of the apocalypse:

It was but a few days ago that the Sultan of Turkey, himself the accepted spiritual head of 200,000,000 Moslems throughout the world, told me of his yearning for a prophet to come from God to lead aright the stumbling feet of the world. In this he was but one of a dozen with whom I have conversed since leaving New York Harbor—a much decorated British general in a high administrative post confessing himself baffled unless there shall arise a great spiritual leader for the race; Venizelos, the one man who is Greece's greatest asset, speaking wistfully of a spiritual rebirth; another, a romantic figure from the desert, a hero and a champion, talking not of battles but of whence and how we may expect a new interpreter of the Eternal; another, a powerful and wealthy business man with whom I dined in Paris, freely declaring that the social tangle of the times cannot be unraveled unless there shall come a clear Voice calling to the spirits of men, "This is the way, walk ye in it"; others, American officers in France, ripened by their own great deeds, musing upon the possibility of a Personality who may merge the distracted and divergent minds of men into one common purpose of good will; still another, himself a soldier saint, troubled in soul because in his America there had arisen no great spiritual leader to call in prophet tones the nation back to God.

It would be less than honest journalism did I fail to report that amid the welter and turbulence and discordance of world politics which is my present assignment I find among thoughtful men of every creed and country a decided note of spiritual wistfulness and expectancy. We are too serious now for the mercenary and mechanical methods of a noisy evangelist uttering only safe and remunerative sensationalism; we want a man from some Patmos who can say, "Thus saith the Lord." As democracy and its imitations spread the world's need of the one King becomes greater.

The eyes of humanity are strained with looking for leadership. They will not be satisfied with the husks of sectarianism, but crave the soul-satisfying gospel of Jesus Christ in its comprehensive fullness. Until that is offered them the famine for the word of God will continue.

Eminent religionists are coming to realize the situation and are seeking a remedy, so far in vain. In a recent issue of The Christian Work, Frederick Lynch, its able editor in chief, says:

We have recently had the pleasure of discussing with several distinguished Englishmen the status of preaching in the British pulpits. Without exception the men with whom we talked insisted that its one conspicuous weakness was the lack of the teaching element in preaching.

In 1916 some important committees were chosen to study certain conditions in the Church of England. These were printed and have had a large sale. From the report on "The teaching function of the church," we quote:

The second charge of practical failure comes from the side of those who are strenuous upholders of the faith and order of the church. The complaint is that the church has failed to teach successfully its definite creed and its system of devotional life. It is pointed out, for example, that in our army, while seventy per cent of the soldiers are described as Church of England, only an insignificant proportion has any real knowledge of what a churchman is supposed to believe or any practical appreciation of the use of the sacraments.

And according to the conclusions of Mr. Lynch:

One reason for the sudden awakening of the church's weakness at this point was the discoveries made during the war. The chaplains were thrown into most intimate contact with the thousands of young men at the front. They suddenly discovered that not one out of a hundred of these young men gathered out of the parishes of England could give any intelligible account of what Christianity really was, even when they had been brought up in a Christian church, or knew anything of the doctrines.

The chief element of concern for us in this weakness is that it furnishes a basic situation from which we may realize results. To find thousands of intelligent men and women hungering and thirsting for righteousness because of the failure of the average church is at once both an opportunity and a responsibility. We have in the gospel as Christ taught it, the little stone "cut out of the mountain without hands" that shall roll forth till it fills the whole earth. Yet if our recent experiences as a church and as individuals have not clarified our mental atmosphere and deepened our spiritual devotion, our message will be as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal—a mere emptiness.

But a superficial glance over the religious situation convinces us that Doctor Ellis has seen a true vision. The need for "one mighty and strong" to deliver the people is coming to be more and more insistent. This is a day of violent contrasts. It will be so till the end.

Then shall two be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left.—Matthew 24: 40, 41.

A review of our own situation is hardly necessary, as it is so well known. The gratifying increase in tithes and offerings and in the special Christmas offering has been noted often. Only recently we inquired of one in charge if in the enthusiasm for a large Christmas offering the tendency had not been to overlook other progressive features necessary to real progress. Positively no, we were told, with the possible exception of a very few places where zeal had outgrown wisdom. The general and almost universal result was to increase individual appreciation of the church and its work. Those who pay liberally toward the support of an institution or a branch of it, are more deeply interested in its progress. When we are all vitally interested, we will be greatly concerned. We will demand much but give more.

Leadership is the dominant need among us. It can come only from intelligent men and women who have heard the great, throbbing pulse of humanity's heart and known the meaning of its sound. The war has brought us sharply face to face with some of the latent issues. We should have opportunity to show our courage in meeting them. The world is scanning the horizon for what we have. Shall we heed the call as messengers of salvation?

THE HISTORICAL DEPARTMENT

In looking over the reports of our late general Church Historian, Heman C. Smith, for the last several years, in order to prepare suitable data for The Journal of History, we discover that he set forth rather clearly certain ideals, which he believed should be attained in this department, but which he was unable to accomplish because of lack of the necessary financial and other support.

The needs of this work as outlined by him will still be of interest to the church, especially now while the subject is before us in the selection of a new Historian. Briefly, and much condensed, these principles and ideals or policies were as follows:

First. In 1912 he stated that the time was soon coming when there would be needed not one, but several assistant historians, and that the general Historian should be able to turn over most of the details to others, and give his attention in an advisory and supervisory way, and to those matters demanding his personal attention.

Second. That among the immediate needs are the preparation and publication of the fifth and probably the sixth volume of Church History; this for the purpose of preserving in permanent form material which is still in need of preservation. Much of the manuscript for the fifth volume has already been prepared, and part, at least, of it has been passed upon by the committee on the revision of church history.

Third. In the fall of 1914, by special appointment by the First Presidency, he made a trip to the East, visiting the points of interest in connection with the early history of the church, and also the homes of the various progenitors of the Smith family for generations back. He also did research work in Philadelphia and Washington, and proved eminently successful in securing much needed and valuable information. He hoped that he would be able thereafter to make another such trip, and place the results secured in a more permanent form.

He urged that provision should be made, financially and otherwise, for a great deal more of such research work, and the Historian empowered to travel from branch to branch in the interest of his work, and from place to place where it seemed advisable to make personal research with regard to the past history of the church. He did not urge that this work must be done by the Historian personally, but that he should be in a position where he could secure what was being done by competent persons.

There are many assertions made from time to time which are utterly unsupported by facts. Critical investigation would so demonstrate.

Fourth. The Journal of History should be continued and more liberally supported by the members of the church. It was first instituted in 1908, for the purpose of preserving valuable historical documents in a more permanent form. The church members should be interested in receiving and preserving copies for their own use.

But aside from this, the publication of the Journal has done much to set the church right before the world. It has brought a number of valuable exchanges to the office. It is worth much to the church by what it is able to accomplish, even on the basis of missionary work.

Fifth. Provision should also be made so that the church may be properly represented at many more of the meetings of historians, than has been the case in the past. Such attendance would prove profitable both to those who attend on behalf of the church, and would also assist in a better and more accurate understanding on the part of those with whom they associate. Something has been done in this way, but not as much as should be.

It is the historians who write the histories, prepare the encyclopedias, and prepare many of the articles to which objection has been taken. The best way to meet them is frankly and fairly, not to wait until wrong has been done, and then raise objection. The Journal of History, and attendance at their meetings lays a basis for more accurate and correct representation.

The result has been that our late Historian was called upon in many instances, to pass upon or assist in preparing articles for publication in different encyclopedias and histories. Those who were to give lectures felt free to consult him, because of the impartial way in which he approached the problems at issue. Much as has been done in this line, much more remains to be done.

To this we might possibly add the further suggestion, that the answering of articles in newspapers and magazines throughout the country may be placed under the supervision of this department when recognized. In the classification of department work, the Bureau of Publicity may be under the direction of this department.

There remains before the church, a splendid opportunity in this department. It is not enough to choose one or more men to do this work, but they should be supported by the church financially and otherwise, so that the work can be properly attended to, and the interests of the church conserved as they should be.

WALTER WAYNE SMITH

While Walter W. Smith, the new general Church Historian, is well known to the church, it may be worth while to give a brief review at this time of his work for the church.

He has been engaged exclusively in church work for nearly twenty years. He was first appointed as a priest by General Conference to labor in the Far West District; in 1901 was appointed as an elder to the Northeastern Missouri District; in 1902 to the Independence Stake; after a year in Far West, he was appointed as a seventy in 1904, to the New York and Philadelphia District; he was ordained a seventy in 1903. In 1907 he was ordained a high priest, but continued in Philadelphia till the conference of 1916, when he was duly chosen as president of the Independence Stake, in which position he still continues.

In the earlier days he was vice president of the Religio for a few years, and took an active interest in its general work. In the East he organized summer Bible schools and the Philadelphia Institute, and conducted pastoral work in an exceptional manner. At Independence he has organized and presided over the Independence Institute. He has acted also, since 1916, as a member of the general High Council, editor of Zion's Ensign, on the committee with the Church of Christ, besides serving on numerous other important committees of the general church.

While he was in Philadelphia he applied himself earnestly for several years to study in Temple University, in addition to his pastoral duties and the school work which he organized at the church there, and so secured his bachelor degree. He also took great interest in church history, accepting the unusual facilities which the East offers with its large libraries and bookstores.

We do not know how far he has been able to continue this study in Independence, but we know he has long been interested in the early history of the church.

In all of his work in the years that are past he has been ably supported by his wife, Eunice Winn Smith. Without doubt she will continue to support and assist him in his very important and arduous work as Historian. May success with the blessings of God be theirs.

TRUTH AND SOCIAL CHANGE

Truth crushed to earth shall rise again—
The eternal years of God are hers;
But error, wounded, writhes with pain—
And dies among his worshippers. —Bryant.

The man who wrote that certainly had a touch of inspiration and a faith in the triumph of the good and the true. For a time the way of error seems to prosper, but truth will finally triumph.

We have had occasion as the years go by to note also the fulfillment of the statement of the Master, that the kingdom of heaven is like leaven which was hidden in three measures of meal until the whole was leavened. (Matthew 13:33.)

Since the coming forth of this latter-day work, in various instances the teachings of the religious world have been changed, and the practice of humanity brought to conform more nearly with the plan laid down by our heavenly Father.

It is seen in the case of administration for the sick, anoint them with oil and pray over them with the prayer of faith, and the Lord will raise them up.

It is seen in the passing of the doctrine of infant damnation. It is seen in the passing of the terrorism of hell and emphasis on the love of God.

It is seen in the growing belief in modern revelation, and that God is not beyond a sky of brass, with no hopes of any further communication to the sons of men.

It is seen in the changing order, and between man and man. The Rochdale Weavers Cooperative Store did not start until fifteen years after section 42 was given, nor for ten years after sections 101 and 102, and there were times when even that movement was considered a strange thing. To-day the talk is all of cooperation and of service, and of the social needs. It is so, not only with college professors, but many of the thinking leaders in Wall Street itself.

We have noted recently and in last week's issue some of the literature of other churches and other organizations with regard to stewardships and tithing, and we also published a further article under the heading "Their needs," from the Des Moines News of June 5.

In 1831, there was given, by revelation to the church, the rule that the bishops should appoint to this people their portion, every man equal according to their families, their circumstances, their wants and needs; that provision shall be made for our needs and just wants. We are glad to see that progress is being made, and the justness of this plan being fully recognized. Surely it is time that we move forward as a people to the accomplishment of the work entrusted to us.

WAR SAVING STAMPS

The war is over, but that does not mean that all of the necessary expenses have been paid. There is still taxation to be met to raise the necessary funds. And in addition, there are War Saving Stamps for the balance of the year 1919, at least.

War Saving Stamps represent two factors. In the first place the proceeds raised help the Government to meet current expenses made necessary by the war and the expense of bringing our boys home.

In the second place, the lessons of thrift learned during the war should not now be lost, but we should continue to exercise reasonable, intelligent economy, and so be able to assist both the Government and the church, as well as ourselves.

CONFIDENCE AND RIGHT DOING

Confidence in our brethren that they are going to do the right thing is a tremendous force for righteousness and to securing from them right action. When a man is finding fault all the time with you, it is hard for you to react to him as you would like to do "for the work's sake." An attack secures at once a like reaction and prevents that agreement of mind necessary for the carrying on of the work of God.

Poverty is not a calamity, but a nice Hooverized method of existence. The preachers are not bothered by Hoover, they have been Hooverizing all the time. One of the advantages of poverty is that it makes so little difference what happens.—William Quayle.

OUR RELIGION

(Synopsis of sermon delivered by Elder T. W. Williams at the Lamoni Coliseum, Sunday evening, April 13, 1919.)

It may be advisable in this time of stress and storm, to offer a contribution from Kipling as a prelude to my address. It may compose our minds and enable us to appreciate the fact that the old world is not so bad after all and that God is still working in his universe. This poem is entitled "Rewards and fancies."

If you can keep your head when all about you
Are losing theirs and blaming it on you;
If you can trust yourself when all men doubt you,
But make allowance for their doubting, too;
If you can wait and not be tired of waiting,
Of being lied about, don't deal in lies;
Or being hated, don't give way to hating,
And yet don't look too good, nor talk too wise;

If you can dream and not make dreams your master;
If you can think and not make thoughts your aim;
If you can meet with triumph and disaster,
And treat those two impostors just the same;
If you can bear to hear the truth you've spoken
Twisted by knaves to make a trap for fools,
Or watch the thing you gave your life to, broken,
And stoop and bind 'em up with worn-out tools;

If you can make a heap of all your winnings
And risk it all on one turn of pitch and toss,
And lose, and start again at your beginning,
And never breathe a word about your loss;
If you can force your heart and nerve and sinew
To serve their turn long after you are gone,
And so hold on when there is nothing in you,
Except the will which says to them, "Hold on";

If you can talk with crowds and keep your virtue,
Or walk with kings—nor lose the common touch,
If neither foes nor loving friends can hurt you,
If all men count with you but none too much,
If you can fill the unforgiving minute
With sixty seconds worth of distance run,
Yours is the earth and everything that's in it,
And which is more, you'll be a man, my son!

I do not care to waste my time or yours in discussing theology. Ritualism, dogma, creed, are in the discard. The world is hungering for religion—real religion!

Religion is the reason of the mind finding expression in the soul. It is God manifest in the flesh. Most, if not all, of you are conversant with the doctrinal part of our religion. That you may not misunderstand my purpose, I will say that I have no desire to cause you to lose faith in the essential unity of the doctrine of Jesus Christ.

In the light of this optimistic contribution from Kipling may we inquire: Have you in your inner consciousness something which sustains you when everything goes dead wrong; when the skies are heavy and the entire universe seems askew?

If religion does not supply mental and spiritual poise under all the vicissitudes and experiences of life then it is not worth while. If religion will not supply the essential elements to compose every difficulty then it is not worthy the heroism, sacrifice, and service which is the willing contribution of a contented people.

RELIGION IS PROGRESSIVE

Religion is sometimes more than doctrine, or tenets, or philosophy. You cannot get religion out of a book. It cannot be classified and set to mathematical rules. It is not stationary. It is ever progressive. Any book claiming our spiritual confidence and belief must necessarily be buttressed by religion. The Bible does not give us religion. Religion gave us the Bible. Religion does not come out of the Bible. The Bible has come out of religion. The Doctrine and Covenants is not the source but the product of religion.

We are able to measure and determine the religious concept of any age by an analysis of the literature of that age. This is clearly indicated in our study of the Bible. As we analyze this great work we recognize the gradual unfoldment of the divine will expressed, as it is, in the idioms and vernacular of men. All true religion is necessarily progressive. As men respond to the impulses of religion they grow and develop. Each succeeding epoch of the church necessarily registers a higher revelation of the Infinite than the preceding one. This must be true so long as the church is functioning as God would have it function.

RELIGION IS UNIVERSAL

Back of all Scripture stands religion. Religion is as old as the universe. It antedates literature. It is much older than the Bible. It is older than the human race. It is one with God. Religion has neither beginning nor end. It always was. It always will be. There is no limit to the expression of real religion. No church can bind or shackle it; no creed fetter or priest destroy it. It is circumscribed in its manifestation solely by the capacity of the instrument through which it seeks expression.

One man cannot prescribe a religion for another. Each must seek that manifestation of religion which best accords to the light which is within. I am not amenable to the concept of other men. I must square my life with religion as it appeals to me or be condemned in my own mind. I am answerable to the revelations of God to me. Condemnation and punishment inures when one fails to be true to the truth as it comes to him. He need not wait for retribution. The betrayal itself brings its own compensation.

A UNIQUE DEFINITION

A small boy once defined faith as "believing in something you know ain't so." This may amuse but, if the attitude of all too many people on religious questions is to be accredited as faith, then the little fellow was not far wrong. How can a man believe what he does not understand?

The three great stepping-stones in the evolution of a religious experience are: Doubt; Faith; Knowledge. A man cannot have faith until first he doubts. To doubt is to inquire. This involves investigation, examination. It is putting thesis to test. Necessarily investigation produces results. Gradually doubt is dissipated and faith appears. But faith is not knowledge. "Faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." As faith progresses there wells up in the individual consciousness the overwhelming evidence of the verity of the proposition which has been entertained and faith is swallowed up in complete knowledge.

A God who would damn an honest man would be unworthy the faith of every other man. Jesus said, "And this is the condemnation, [there is no other] that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil." Universal justice makes a man his own judge and jury.

RELIGION—A MEASURE OF MAN

God gives to every people a religion equal to their capacity. The religion which Moses gave to ancient Israel measured Israel's capacity, not God's. The various types and shadows, the burnt offerings, the sin offerings, registered the mental capacity of the people. It was the only medium of approach for them. God, in his wonderful adaptability to human limitations, took men as he found them, with all of their vagaries, abridged and distorted conceptions of his beneficence and, through the medium of their own traditional concepts, discovered himself and in an abridged and modified way lead them higher and higher until with safety he could direct them to discard the swaddling clothes made necessary by their ignorance.

There is no place among us for much of the religion of the early Israelites, and why? Simply because we have progressed to the point where the Almighty is able to reach men in a more direct and straightforward manner. In the upward trend there is more of the Divine and less of the human. "And the times of this ignorance God winked at." Throughout the ages God has necessarily winked at the ignorance of men. He is winking at our ignorance in the same way that he winked at the ignorance of the Israelites. He is waiting our arrival.

REVELATION CUMULATIVE

All revelation is progressive. There never has been, there never will be a revelation coming through human instrumentality which can measure God, or fully define him. Each revelation of God measures men, not God. Each revelation indicated the human capacity and possibilities. No revelation can fully describe the Infinite. Each and every revelation is a reflex of the intelligence and purpose of its recipients.

Let me illustrate: Suppose I have here a gallon bucket and by its side a pint cup. The bucket is full of water. The cup is empty. I now proceed and pour some water from the bucket into the cup until the cup is full. While the same material is found in the cup as is contained in the larger vessel yet there is much more water remaining in the bucket than is contained in the cup. This illustrates capacity. Now as to degree. Electricians tell you about voltage. In every large city there are what we call power houses or distributing centers. In order to make it possible for people to use electricity in their homes for lighting it becomes necessary to reduce the voltage else this great commodity would become an instrument of death and destruction. Again, you know how, when there is an eclipse of the sun, people will take smoked glass in an endeavor to make it possible for their eyes to endure the great light emitted from that luminous body. The colored glass does not permit a correct and complete view. It does make possible a hazy, indistinct, and possibly inaccurate view. This is better than no vision at all. This illustrates the human concept of God.

There is another phase of this question. No revelation which man has ever received is wholly inerant. This would be impossible. God must reveal himself in the language of men. I do not apprehend that God needs any language himself. All human language is necessarily imperfect. Men could not comprehend if God spoke to them in a language beyond their capacity. The perspective of men is necessarily abridged and defective. The whole purpose of revelation is to permit the Infinite a larger and ever increasing opportunity to discover himself to us.

RELIGIOUS CONCEPT CHANGING

Necessarily, as we grow we revise our registered conceptions of him. This is true of the individual as well as the collectivity. If every man and woman here to-night would proceed in the most painstaking manner to write a definition of God registering, as it would, his highest concept and would then place same in an envelope and lay it away for a year and, before referring to the definition in question, would then proceed to define God as he appeared to you after a lapse of a year you would discover that if you had proceeded along the lines of development provided in the divine plan, the definitions would not be identical. The latter one would be higher and more complete than the former one. There need not be any essential contradiction. There would be an unfoldment. The man who entertains without change, the same idea of God and his purposes from year to year is not progressing. The church which retains the same concept of God throughout the years is atrophied. It has lost its salt. It is void of real revelation. It has closed the windows of heaven to the larger vision. Revelation is progressive.

When God placed primeval man in the Garden of Eden he gave to him his choice or, in other words, agency. This implies the opportunity to take one of two or more courses. Agency inheres in all free life. It is essential to progress. Humanity learns by one of three mediums: Intuition, observation, experience. There is no other way whereby men can gain knowledge. Intuition is the shortest cut to knowledge. This embraces revelation. It is the process whereby the human mind arrives at truth without following the tedious paths of observation and experience. Even then revelation simply takes the sum total gleaned from past experience or observation and crystallizes it into prophecy.

Intuition, according to Kent, is synonymous with perception. It is beholding—seeing. To a man's intuitive powers God makes first appeal. He exhausts his efforts to thus direct man in the attainment and application of truth.

Failing in this, his next process is to direct man to the accumulated wisdom of the ages as reflected in the experiences of men, chief of which is the record of his dealings with the Hebrews. Here we study the history of the past. We can thus reason from cause to effect and note the result of given actions on the lives of other men and women. We observe that which has produced happiness and blessing. We contrast with other acts which have produced misery and cursing. We may carry this into the present and make observation of the things which are transpiring all around us. We should learn by observation.

If men will not learn by observation or intuition there is only one other avenue available and that is experience. Experience is the last extremity of God. Despite the purposes of the Infinite most men learn by experience. Lessons thus learned are more vivid and lasting. It is, however, the longest way home.

In order to learn, the intelligence of man always must be appealed to. He must understand the great cosmic law of the universe—"As a man sows, so shall he reap."

Religion is harmony. Harmony is love. Love is God. The man who is in harmony with himself, with the entire universe, with God—is truly religious.

DEDUCTION—INDUCTION

We may arrive at truth in one of two ways. We may reason by deduction; that is we may reason from assumed principles or statements and proceed to our conclusions. This is the process which has most generally been used by religious people throughout the ages.

We may, on the other hand, reason by induction. This is the process largely used by the great scientists of the world. They take nothing for granted. They do not even assume that the statements of those who have gone before are infallible or even sufficiently reliable to base a thesis upon without submitting them to the laboratory of the present. They only arrive at a conclusion when all the forces and evidences which go to establish that conclusion blend and unite.

In deduction we begin with a general truth or position already proven or provisionally assumed, and seek to connect it with some particular case by means of a middle term or class of objects, known to be equally connected to both. In induction we reason from a part to a whole, from particulars to generals, or from the individual to the universe. There are times when we may with propriety employ both methods.

It does not pay to take anything for granted. Our creeds are built through the deductive process almost exclusively. This is the reason most, if not all, of them are wrong. The creed makers assumed certain positions to be absolutely correct and thereupon closed their eyes and ears refusing to consider anything which did not jibe with their assumed position. Such people would run through the Bible to find some passages which would bolster up their assumption and absolutely refuse to consider any other passages which did not accord therewith.

HOW A BOTANIST WORKS

A botanist works largely by the inductive process. He goes into a new country and, desiring to learn the flora of that country, he assumes nothing. He collates his specimens and subjects them to analysis and the closest scrutiny. He accepts the evidences to which all such specimens converge. He accepts the evidences even though they may disprove everything which he may have held to before. He says, "I do not know, but I will find out." He has no place for prejudice or superstition in his laboratory. All truth is correlated and therefore harmonious. The thing which is true jibes with every other truth. The botanist does not reject the conclusions which have been handed down to him by the botanists of the world, but he constantly subjects these conclusions to the acid test of present-day experiences. He knows that any principle of truth will bear the most grilling analysis and that any investigation which he might undertake will only make the truth appear more enduring.

THE TEST OF RELIGION

We should apply the same principles to religion. If I desire to unite with some church shall I assume that the church my father or mother adheres to is the right church and, without investigation, ally myself therewith? Shall I take for granted that the creed or doctrine of some particular institution is correct and proceed to reject any and every thesis which does not accord therewith? This is the course generally assumed by people on the question of religion. Would it not be far better to assume nothing but to start out as does the botanist and work upon the principle that truth is demonstrable and thereupon refuse to accept anything which does not square itself with reason and analysis?

Let us affirm: We do not know whether the religion of our fathers is correct or not but we propose to find out. As I said to a large audience in Toronto last winter; "Let us be willing even as members of this church to throw our religious beliefs into the great melting pot, the religious laboratory, resting assured that if they have sufficient merit to be worthy our support they will come out burnished and refined from this experience." All truth is demonstrable. No man is warranted in accepting anything which he cannot demonstrate to his own consciousness.

WHY I AM A LATTER DAY SAINT

I am a Latter Day Saint because I have gone in and out and found pasture. No one of us has all the truth in the world. At best we are only arriving. We are learning day by day and necessarily must revamp and revise. We turn around and back up. We readjust ourselves to the cumulative evidences which necessarily shape and mold our thoughts and ideas. What is true of the individual is true of the collectivity. This applies to the church. We must open our eyes to the fact that no institution which comprises human beings is perfect. The church has made mistakes. It is making mistakes. No conference action is infallible. Any conference resolution may be wrong. It becomes our duty to subject the positions of the church, her edicts and decrees, her practices and institutions to both the deductive and inductive laboratory tests. We cannot err in giving up the lesser for the greater; the half truth for the whole truth.

I am not irrevocably wedded to this church. I remain with the church because I believe it to be the repository of truth. I am with the church because I find therein more truth or truth with less alloy than anywhere else in the world. After all I may be mistaken. No man this side of the Great Revelation can afford to assume infallibility. So long as a man is fallible so long is he liable to be mistaken.

I may be mistaken. This church may not be the institution I believe it to be. Its enduring power cannot be maintained by closing my eyes to this possibility but rather by subjecting its claims to the severest tests. Many better men than I am have been as sure of their position as I am of mine tonight. Many other church adherents have been as confident of their position as we are of ours; they have even laid claim to divine confirmation and blessing as we do of ours and yet they have been mistaken. It is possible for all men to be mistaken. There is no revelation which can come into my life with sufficient power to secure my safety or salvation which impels me to close my eyes to the world of facts and the essential forces for growth and progress. A revelation which makes a man contented with himself and induces mental and spiritual inertia is not of God. All true revelation inspires an unrest with things as they are and whets the appetite for the attainment of things as they ought to be.

BE TRUE TO YOUR CONVICTIONS

The time may come when I can no longer accord to the general teachings of this church. If that time ever comes I do sincerely hope that I will have the manhood to be true to my convictions let them lead me where they may. If, in the process of my evolution, (mark you I do not say devolution) I shall find an institution which presents the truth of Jesus Christ in better form and with more divine power than this one, I will affiliate therewith, "Ah," says one, "but this is the church!" Granted. But this is relative and not absolute. The evidences that this is the church of Jesus Christ must be in the present tense and not entirely in the past. No testimony of yesterday can suffice to establish divinity to-day.

One great writer has well said, "When a man has so far corrupted the chastity of his own mind as to subscribe his professional belief to the things he does not believe he has prepared himself for the commission of every other crime." It follows then that a man must be true to the light which comes to-day though it may lead him to the rejection of the things which he believed to be the manifestation of light on yesterday.

As some new truth comes to me I find myself instinctively going back and, under the new vision, testing the abutments of my faith. Instinctively, I shake the foundation to see whether it is secure. I am constantly putting the whole position of the church to the supreme test. This I must continue to repeat and repeat as new truths unfold to my vision. The deductions of yesterday may be wrong in the light of the revelations of to-day. Our safety consists in recognizing that nothing is absolute but God; nothing infallible but God; nothing permanent but God.

A DEFINITION OF REVELATION

I believe in revelation. The revelations of God fill all space. They are not limited to a given age, a given nationality, a special family, or a certain individual. The revelations of God are awaiting man's arrival and application. We must be in tune with God before we can receive anything from him. Any man in any age, at any time, and in any clime, may commune with God providing he equips himself to take the message from the skies which God is ever flashing out to him. Again, let me repeat that no revelation is absolute. All revelation coming through human instrumentality is relative only. It is not wholly divine. It possesses human limitations. It is more a measure of man's capacity than of God's infinity.

Again, we have erred as individuals and as a church in our interpretation and application of the revelations of God which have come to us. Many have wondered why God has permitted us to make this mistake. It is inherent in our educational processes. The lessons which we can only learn in this way owing to our condition justifies God in his silence. If everything was thought out and all the experiences of the church were anticipated and provided for in such a way that we had no part therein the whole objective of the church would be destroyed. The church is a means, not an end. As now constituted it will sometime pass away. Some functions of the church have in the process of growth become obsolete. Others will become obsolete. The church is a divine expediency made necessary by human limitations.

It is not God in the distance which is going to save us. It is the God here and now. It is the God within as well as the God without. I have no desire to separate the God within from the God without for God is everywhere. He is in his universe. He is working throughout all the universe and with every infinitesimal factor of that universe to consummate his purposes. God has called men from all walks of life and in all ages of the world to carry out his purposes and oftentimes the individual himself does not even sense the workings of the divine. Who dare question that God has had something to do in shaping the destiny of nations in this great world conflict? Would I be considered a heretic if I affirmed that I verily believe that Lloyd George has been the mouthpiece of God in matters of state? I so affirm.

LAW OF COMPENSATION

The law of compensation is always operative. Men reap what they sow. Thank God for pain. Pain is oftentimes God's handmaid to bring men to the truth. A little boy ate some green apples. As a result he was stricken with excruciating pain. The doctor was sent for. On his arrival he proceeded to make a diagnosis of the trouble. Reluctantly the little fellow divulged the fact that he had eaten the unripe fruit, whereupon the doctor began to reprove him. The little fellow interrupted by saying, "Oh, never mind the apples, what I want is to get rid of this pain." The boy was wrong. The pain was all right. It was the apples; what I want is to get rid of this pain." God's means of seeking to preserve his life and incidentally to teach him a much-needed lesson. Many of us grown-ups are as short-sighted as the boy. We clamor for immunity from pain while indulging our passions and appetites. Religion is not instituted to destroy pain but to get rid of the things which cause pain. So long as boys eat green apples they will have stomach ache and, it is well, else boys would eat and die and be none the wiser. If men and women could eat the forbidden fruit of passion and appetite with impunity the race would be destroyed and the great purpose of God would be frustrated.

GOD IS IN HIS UNIVERSE

God is in his universe, working out his wondrous purposes. He never sleeps. He keeps eternal vigil. He is supreme in his realm. He cannot fail. All things are converging towards the ultimate objective. The eternal years are his. His purposes are immutable and will prevail. To work with him is our duty, aye, our only hope.

Religion is a growth from within and not a bequeathment from without. It is the impelling influence Godward. It is the God in man seeking affinity with the God in the universe. It is not limited to age, nor clime, nor person. It is the spirit of uplift and altruistic purposes which runs like a silken thread throughout the fabric of human experience and purpose. It is that something which makes all the world akin. Its source is God; its manifestation, love; its objective, universal fellowship. It is fully enunciated as the "Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man."

OF GENERAL INTEREST

EARLY TO BED AND EARLY TO RISE

Reveille at 6. Taps at 10. The early to bed, early to rise habit, which has been implanted by the war in the habits of four million of our young men who have been in the national service will not be quickly lost. Employers are learning to utilize the increased economic efficiency of the ex-soldiers and sailors who share this habit. They find that a soldier or sailor who has gone through the mill is much better developed physically and mentally than the man who stayed at home and slacked in the Great War.

Thousands of employers have written Colonel Arthur Woods, Assistant to the Secretary of War, that they are ready to grant special privileges to the men of their employ who entered the United States service.

REJECTS CIGARETTE ADVERTISING

The Detroit Times is one of the newspapers that does not carry into the homes of its patrons the seductive advertising of the cigarette manufacturers. It charges an extra cent a copy for its paper and advertises itself in the following manner:

Is wholesomeness worth an extra cent? Three cents a copy, twelve cents a week, insures a newspaper that leaves your vision unoffended, your fire-side unsullied.

The Times rejects thousands of dollars of advertising to be a home-builder and a health builder. It does not permit cigarette-makers to daily glorify pictorially a vicious indulgence before the eyes of impressionable boys and girls in the formative period of their lives.

Such a newspaper deserves the hearty support of the friends of this cause. It does not even carry cartoons that display the ever present cigar (advertising that the cigar manufacturer ought to pay for) and takes a square stand against the cigarette.—No-Tobacco Journal.

No proposition can be more easily established from the ongoings of mankind than that the wages of sin is death. Evil thoughts, words, and actions work themselves out in moral and spiritual disaster. Greed, cruelty, and selfishness leave their impress upon the mental and moral structure of the sinner and finally compass his ruin. The mark of Cain is upon every offender of the law of God. So says the Bible. So says human life.—Samuel F. Halfyard, in Cardinal Truths of the Gospel.

Our Officers and Supervisor for the Year 1919-20

At last we are able to publish a list of our officers, with their addresses. Those acquainted with the difficulties encountered at the annual convention last spring, will understand the delay. In our efforts to act in harmony with the coordinating committee, and the unforeseen delay in getting that committee together at the conference, many of the offices were unfilled even at the close of our convention. However, we are happy to say, that most of our efficient workers have been retained, and we are strengthened by the addition of two well-qualified sisters.

One of these is Sister Leona Salisbury, who will serve as both recording and financial secretary. She is the wife of Brother Herbert S. Salisbury, Assistant Historian of the church, and as practical mother and home maker will be able to render valuable service in the executive councils. All moneys and dues should be sent to Sister Salisbury.

The other new officer is Sister Henry C. Smith, formerly Sister Mabel Knipschild, well known to the educational circles of our church through the authoritative addresses and articles she has prepared for us along various lines. She is to have charge of the Relief and Service Bureau, a position for which her recent study and research in the East has well qualified her. Her equipment is equaled by her consecration, and we are justified in expecting this most important branch of our work as women in the church, to take long strides forward, under her capable direction and stimulation.

Help for Reunion Committees and Workers

A few summers ago the number of reunions held by our church people could be counted on our fingers. Later years have trebled that number until now we can announce about thirty reunions in the United States—from Maine to Washington and California.

At first the programs consisted of one prayer meeting and three sermons a day. Especially during the afternoon did our older people appreciate this excellent opportunity for their "nodding time," while the young people who went to the services, either slipped out after the singing, or dreamed wonderful dreams as they looked past the canvas-draped sides of the big tent, into the cool depths of the shade trees just beyond—dreams in which neither the preacher's words nor thoughts had time or place. You may take time now to see those same visions and be young again if you choose, but please keep in mind the following announcement, and if you are holding a reunion in your district, call the attention of your reunion committee to it.

The nature of the reunion program has changed. The young people have their own prayer meetings; the Sunday school, the Religio, and the Woman's Auxiliary have hours during which there is some educational work being carried on according to their respective standards and ideas of work. Priesthood meetings and workers' conferences are held. The young people are privileged to have their playtime and social "stunts," which make very welcome the reunion time. Does not all this add very greatly to the popularity of our reunions? A whole family may plan to take the vacation at reunion time, knowing that spiritual, recreational, and social needs will there be satisfied.

The Woman's Auxiliary has kept pace with this development and is prepared to furnish material for workers' conferences, charts, printed leaflets for distribution, and suggestions for social and recreational hours. Each bureau will be represented, and the material as practical and workable as our supervisors are able to make it.

The entire plan, including all suggestions, may not be applicable in all reunion programs, but we suggest that you write to us and tell us your needs, and let us help you all we can—please.

Address

MRS. J. A. GARDNER,

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 711 South Fuller Avenue.

The Child Welfare Panels

The Woman's Auxiliary is glad to be able to offer sets of these valuable panels for use at some of the reunions. Those who attended the meeting, last April, at which Sister Gardner gave brief explanations of some of the charts, will remember the general interest which was thereby aroused in this work. It is conceded that one of the best avenues of education is through the sight, and these clever pictures, large enough to be easily seen by all in an ordinary-sized congregation, serve to emphasize and carry home the lessons portrayed by each, in a manner more convincing than is possible by the mere recital of facts.

These panels are in two sets, one called the "Baby Book," and the other "Childhood and Health," both dedicated "To the Mothers and Fathers of America, who, through the care of their babies, are laying the foundation for the civilization of to-morrow." They illustrate many important items in the care and nurture of children, and put the lesson before us in a terse, concrete way, which impresses them upon the memory. Here follow a few sample sentences, taken at random from the set.

"The Best Food. Mother's milk is the most perfect food. This baby has five times as many chances to live as the bottle fed baby. Mother's milk may be spoiled for the baby by improper diet, alcohol, overwork, worry, anger, or fear. Don't wean the baby without the doctor's approval!"

"The Baby Asleep. Sleep is the baby's best growing time. Let the baby sleep alone in a quiet, darkened spot, where there is plenty of fresh air, protected from flies and mosquitoes, in comfortable, loose clothes, never on feathers."

"What Not to Eat. Fried foods overtax the stomach of the growing child. So also do pickles, pastry, highly seasoned foods, too much meat, unripe fruit, coffee, beer, tea. The child who is allowed to eat whatever he likes, whenever he likes, as much as he likes, is forming a weak character as well as a weak body."

"Care of the Eyes. Only one pair of eyes for life! Dangers at home: Avoid—facing the light, reading in the twilight, reading when lying on the back, using the 'common' towel. Dangers at school: Avoid—facing the window, shiny blackboards, fine print, glazed paper, non-adjustable desks, rubbing eyes with dirty fingers. When the eyes water, blur, or ache, or the school doctor reports defect, consult an oculist. Headaches, indigestion, and other troubles may be due to defective eyes."

The above extracts will serve to give an idea of the manner in which the panels appeal, and the little lectures which go with each one are all written out, so it is an easy task for any bright and interested person to interest an audience of adults in these subjects.

Write Sister Gardner at once in regard to them, and if you miss getting them for your reunion, arrange to have them come for your district conference, or even your local gatherings. You can ill afford to miss the educational advantage they afford, for, as Saints, we believe in the light of intelligence versus the darkness of ignorance. All sin can be traced to ignorance, and, possibly, all illness, also. At least were our wisdom and intelligence perfect, as well as that of all our forbears, we might reasonably hope to have as perfect health as may be vouchsafed to human beings. At any rate, let us attempt to give our children the benefit of all the health-giving light which may be abroad in the world to-day.

The only expense these panels will cost you will be that of postage, and, in requesting their use, be sure to state exactly when you desire them, to whom you wish them mailed, and where delivered. We suggest that the latter be the reunion grounds, if possible, for they are heavy, and burdensome to carry about. Also please remember that they must be used promptly, and returned as promptly, according to instructions received, that other reunions may not be deprived, through your negligence, of their use.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Important Reunion Announcements

(May we call special attention to the notices Sister Krahl and Sister Gardner are making in regard to reunion activities? Although coming a bit late for some, we feel sure many will welcome the aid offered by these sisters, which will help to make their reunions memorable and profitable. Such will lose no time in communicating with either our president, Sister D. J. Krahl, or Sister Gardner, our publicity chairman.—A. A.)

We are pleased to inform our readers of a new office created in the executive board, that of publicity chairman. Sister J. A. Gardner has been elected by the board to fill this office. The publicity department will supply material for reunions, stake and district conferences, and will be the medium of advertising to the General Auxiliary various forms of helpful material for use in our work. We solicit your inquiries in this direction for supplemental help in the prosecution or introduction of the Woman's Auxiliary work.

Address Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 711 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

MRS. D. J. KRAHL,

President.

All organizers or persons interested in having the assistance of a general field worker at their reunion please confer with local reunion committee and advise the president of the Woman's Auxiliary at once of their desires.

Though our forces are limited, we can supply a reasonable number of reunion calls, if we can be advised in time to arrange for them.

MRS. D. J. KRAHL,

President.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Heman C. Smith in Southern California

Believing that a few references to the work of our departed Brother Heman C. Smith, which he did in this city and district would be of interest to your many readers, I offer the following:

In the spring of 1886 Brother Smith was appointed in charge of the Pacific Slope Mission, and during the year he traveled a great deal, acquainting himself with the conditions of this large field.

Early in 1887 the Saints of San Bernardino were delighted to learn that Elder Smith and wife had decided to make this point their headquarters and that they were to make this city their home.

A comfortable little cottage was secured for them on the north side of the city. Here it was possible to obtain a view of the Coast Range Mountains which stand just a few miles to the north and in line with "Old Grayback." This is a mountain peak just east of their home which towers into the clouds some 11,500 feet, and is covered with snow nearly all the year.

The Saints of the San Bernardino Branch were quick to appreciate the presence of this gifted speaker and leader, and at once elected him to serve as their pastor. In this Brother Smith labored until 1892 when he and his family moved to Lamoni, Iowa.

Brother and Sister Smith soon won their way into the hearts of not only the Saints but of all who knew them, and they left an influence and a memory that is still bright and green in the lives of all who still remain as survivors of those happy days.

Into this home in San Bernardino, the messenger of love brought four little children to bless and to cheer their sojourn here on the earth. Of these, Heman Hale, Vida Inez, and Anna Earлита are living. Lois Elizabeth, after arriving at the age of womanhood, was called from this life in answer to the call of our heavenly Father.

Being in charge of the Pacific Slope Mission, Brother Smith was often called to other parts of his field. In his absence the work here was cared for by the local men, including Elders D. L. Harris, William Gibson, and others.

He was associated with Elder Daniel S. Mills, one of the greatest preachers of the West, in traveling over the mission. I shall never forget, as a boy of twelve years, attending two lectures and listening to these men preach. The morning sermon was by Brother D. S. Mills on the subject of the apostasy; and the speaker of the evening was Brother Heman C. Smith on the subject of the restoration of the gospel. Although nearly thirty years have passed since I sat at the feet of these good men, I can almost hear their voices now as I sit in reverie.

All admired Brother Smith for his fearless defense of the truth and for the frank way he had of dealing with a situation. One day while riding on the train in company with Elder David L. Harris, it was noted that a Roman Catholic priest had taken a seat near them in the coach. After riding a short way the priest proceeded to take from his pocket a cigar, lighted it, and began to enjoy himself by blowing the smoke towards these two brethren. Brother Smith called his attention to the fact that this was not the smoking car, but that he could find the smoker just a car ahead. The priest looked over at him and replied, "You don't know who I am. I am the holy father!" Brother Smith replied: "You may be the holy father but you can't smoke in this car." The priest left the car at once.
