He introduces quotations from such prominent men as Burgess, Ashley, and West to maintain his contention for concentration of power in the President. None of these men support in conclusion his theory. This writer falls into an error common to cursory reading and confounds statement of what exists and is subsequently criticized with the opinion of these authorities as to what should obtain. Doctor Burgess argues in his work that government should be reduced to a minimum and that personal and individual liberty is the great end of government. He says:

Genuine constitutional government rests upon two fundamental principles which, whatever else it may be, it is not genuine constitutional government. These two principles are, first, that it must be representative government and, second, that it must be limited government.—Page 370.

On page 379 he pleads for a "government which will be proof against the usurpation of a despot." And on page 380 he affirms, "It is high time that we call a halt on our present course of increasing the sphere of government."

Henry L. West says:

It is not a healthy symptom when we, as a people, are urged to "stand by the President" as if the other branches of our tripartite government were of no concern whatever.—Federal Power, p. 160.

Speaking of the power of the President, he says (page 165): "Unless that power is safeguarded more carefully than at present, the door of danger is opened wide." On page 201 he contends that "The President should be deprived of the right to veto legislation." On page 205 he avers: "The government must not be centered in a President, to which point we have arrived, but must be directly administered by the people."

Man Like Unto Moses

It has been urged by several writers that the President of the church should be "like unto Moses." The men who have taken issue with the President have been compared unto Dathan, Korah, and Abiram, princes in Israel who revolted under Moses and were swallowed up in the earth. It has been urged that these men's sin consisted in saying, "Ye take too much upon yourself, seeing that the congregation is holy, and the Lord is among them."

Strange interpretation this. Previously the Lord had said that this congregation of people were holy, so they did not sin in this. Jethro had before told Moses that he took too much upon himself, and in this they did not sin. The fault of these princes was in assimilating the functions of the holy priesthood, and it cannot be shown that any of the open letter advocates have done this, for each one of them holds the high priesthood, and not one of them aspires to the place of the President of the church. Hence, there is not one analogy between these princes of Israel and the open letter group.

We may add that Moses was a very meek man. He led the people away from monarchy towards democracy. He was unalterably opposed to any king idea. Instead of centering power within himself, he distributed it to others. There were limitations, however, which barred Moses from the promised land.

Let the People Rule

John F. Garver grows excited and asserts that some of us will agree to abide the decision of the people if that conclusion agrees with us. This is byplay. It is merely a war of words, just words. Up until two months ago the supreme directional control advocates in their speeches and conversations were quite emphatic that it would be dangerous to allow the people to rule. The whole impulse of this document on church government and the propaganda growing out of it is adverse to the people ruling.

Now that they have canvassed district conferences far and wide and have seen to it that wherever possible “safe and sound” delegates have been chosen who may be depended upon to vote right, they now cry, “Let the people rule.” But what people? Why, the people who are committed to the supreme directional control program, of course. Wherever possible they have seen to it that none others have been selected as delegates.

It is clearly evident that if some of these men have their way that all those who are opposed to this program will not have any opportunity to even assist to rule, for those who cannot agree therewith are to be “eliminated,” as the suggestion has gone forth, “If you do not agree with us, why don’t you resign?” We say, Let all the people rule. All the people cannot rule unless they have free and untrammeled opportunity of expression and action.

Dead Yet Speaketh

Heman C. Smith has been enlisted as a witness for supreme directional control. He is not here to answer, but his words while living clearly indicate his attitude. I quote from his letter to President F. M. Smith accompanying his report to the conference of 1919. He says:

I look with favor upon coordination properly and legitimately executed. I understand coordination to mean, however, harmony of action between different units of the whole, where each unit though in a sense independent, acts in harmony with all other units composing the whole; but where the functions of one or more units are so enlarged upon as to swallow up or obliterate the functions of other units, it is not coordination, but dictation, and a system of dictation posing as coordination is a misnomer, and dangerous in its tendency.

That Sermon on Loyalty

After being forced into the open, Elbert A. Smith, replying to our criticism that he was “silent and complacent” when Frederick M. Smith made his unjust and vicious assault on the character and ministry of leading church officials, applying to them the bitter burning brand of apostate, seeks to justify himself in these words:

I am in the clear on that matter. I wrote to President Smith from Onset, where I was at the time, protesting that sermon.—SAINTS’ HERALD, March 25, 1925.

From the foregoing the reader may easily conclude that Elbert A. Smith was at Onset when Frederick M. Smith delivered this sermon and made his protest at this time. A reference to the record shows:

On Sunday morning, December 3, 1922, Elbert A. Smith delivered a “communion sermon” in the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri. On the evening of this same day Frederick M. Smith preached his now historic sermon on loyalty. Elbert A. Smith was present, heard the sermon and, by his own confession, offered no remonstrance at that time.

The loyalty sermon was published in SAINTS’ HERALD January 10, 1923. Elbert A. Smith was in Independence at the time. He was associate editor of the HERALD. Did he then object? The HERALD for March 14, 1923, carried vigorous and emphatic protests from John W. Rushton and Paul M. Hanson against the attack and demanding explanation and redress. The first intimation the public had that Elbert A. Smith objected in any way to this sermon is found in the HERALD for March 25, 1925, over two years later. Inasmuch as Brother Elbert claims that he is “in the clear” on this matter, we are justified in accepting his statement as meaning that he did not share President Smith’s indictment of his fellows.

According to the record Elbert A. Smith was in and around Independence for over six months after this loyalty sermon was preached. During all that time he was silent and complacent. He left Independence for the East on June 20 and arrived at Onset July 25, over seven months after President Smith’s attack. By this time it was apparent that the ministry throughout the church, both those who favored President Smith and others, deprecated the sermon.

Allowing the greatest possible license to the statement of Elbert A. Smith, while leading officials suffered under the indignities heaped upon them by President Smith, yet he said not a word until he reached Onset the following July.

But this protest was not made public until our criticism became so strong that he was forced to do so in self-defense. Inasmuch as he confesses now that he did not indorse the sermon, why has he waited so long before informing the church of his attitude? It is evident that, so far as he was concerned, the men thus slandered could have gone to their graves with this unjust aspersion against their character and work without any public attempt at vindication by our brother. May I presume to suggest that even now he exercises the functions of his high office to see that the President make the amend honorable?

One counselor to the President now openly registers himself against this sermon on loyalty? May we not expect that the other counselor will do likewise? And we have the right to request and insist that the President of the church make public reparation, as far as possible, so that the men whose integrity and loyalty have been attacked and clouded and their families and friends humiliated may stand in their offices without handicap, as God intended. If the President will do this it will go a long way towards “unifying the priesthood.”

The issues are clearly drawn. Both sides have put forth their best arguments. Let ALL the people decide. And every man must judge for himself. And as he judges, he must answer before the Judge of all the earth. May God help each and all to judge righteous judgment.

To Give Concert for Radio Piano Fund

Although the radio drive went nicely “over the top,” the subscriptions did not include enough to purchase a much-desired Duo-Art or Ampico reproducing piano for the radio studio. To create a fund for purchasing such an instrument, Brethren Arthur H. Mills and Eugene Christy have offered to put on a concert, the date for which has been arranged as Tuesday evening, April 14.

The concert will be given in the main auditorium of the Stone Church, and in order to accommodate the conference crowds the program will be reproduced by latest type loud speakers in the lower auditorium and in the dining hall. Hearing such a program through loud speakers will be a distinct novelty to many.

The ability of Brother Mills as a pianist is well known to many throughout the church, and there are few Latter Day Saints who have attended conference that have not enjoyed Brother Christy’s remarkable tenor voice. A rare musical treat is assured those who attend their radio benefit concert.

No admission fee will be charged. A collection will be taken, so that those attending can give according to what they are able. It is felt that many will desire to contribute more to the worthy purpose of this concert than would ordinarily be paid for the price of tickets.

K L D S will broadcast the concert, so that thousands who cannot attend conference will be able to hear this and other special programs. Listeners in their “reserved seats” will also be invited to add to the collection via U. S. Mail.

K L D S to Broadcast Conference News Bulletins

Beginning April 6, each afternoon at 5.30 K L D S will take the air and radiocast news bulletins of the General Conference. A Duo-Art tuning-in selection will precede the announcements.

Business sessions will not be broadcast. The number of special evening programs that will be broadcast is not certain. In event a Class B wave length has been assigned K L D S by conference time, it is probable that there will be no night broadcasting other than Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays.

Announcements concerning the radiocasting of special programs will be made in the SAINTS’ HERALD, including the special Daily Herald.

Conference Program

Organization of the conference 10 a. m., Monday, April 6. Business session at 2 p. m., Monday, and thereafter as may be determined.

Announcements of speakers for preaching services and teachers for class work will be made each day.

Tentative Evening Feature Programs

Wednesday, April 8, Oratorio, “Creation.”
Thursday, April 9, Oratorio, “Creation.”
Friday, April 10, Graceland College night.
Monday, April 13, Sanitarium night.
Tuesday, April 14, Arthur Mills-Eugene Christy radio benefit recital.

Wednesday, April 15, Independence Music Club reception.

Special Easter services will be held in all churches on Sunday, April 12; speakers to be announced.

Your Daily for General Conference

It will contain the doings of the conference in business and all other sessions, including write-ups by musical people of the activities of the Department of Music; the Department of Women and their doings; the educational classes and their successes.

At the present time the subscription list to the daily edition is not sufficient to defray the expense. You should get your subscription in at once and help meet the emergency.

Send 35 cents for each subscription, with plainly written or printed name and address, to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

FIRST, THE AUTHORITY OF THE PEOPLE; SECOND, CENTRALIZATION VERSUS DIFFUSION OF AUTHORITY; THIRD, A SINGLE-HEADED VERSUS A PLURAL-HEADED ORGANIZATION

1. Due Respect to the Authority of the People

A brother writing in the Herald for February 25 says:

Elbert A. Smith in his editorial, “The true philosophy of church government,” ridicules the idea that in the church of Jesus Christ any authority is derived from the people, and concludes:

“If we trace authority back to the congregation (to man, no matter how greatly augmented by numbers,) it is of men.”

—SAINTS’ HERALD, October 29, 1924.

Joseph Smith, on the other hand, recognized that authority is derived from God and the people, and within the church this authority must converge.

My position is that authority is derived primarily from above, from God. But every minister properly has back of him the authority of both God and the church. Or as is specifically stated regarding the President:

The president of the church is primarily appointed by revelation. This appointment is confirmed by the vote of the church properly taken.—General Conference Resolution of 1894.

I was fully aware that I was running counter to the idea some hold, which was set forth again so recently as in the Herald for March 11:

The fundamental thing about democracy is, it puts the seat of authority within the individual. Especially is this truth brought out in the Reformation movement in religion in which the conscience and spiritual experiences of the individual are the foundation of faith and morals... the center of gravity in religion has shifted from authority to experience.—SAINTS’ HERALD, March 11, p. 264.

This, conveniently enough, illustrates the attempt to trace our primary authority back to man, “The seat of authority within the individual”; to “shift the center of gravity in religion” from divine authority to human experience, and look for it in human conscience. I cannot so read either our history or our philosophy as a church.

The authority of God was the center of gravity in our work from the beginning. He moved to bring about the Restoration in his own way and time. Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were ordained to the Aaronic priesthood by angelic hands before there was a church. They were also called to the Melchisedec priesthood and moved forward under authority of heaven to organize the church. But they submitted their calling to the congregation of six on the day of organization, and it was approved by unanimous vote. They had back of them primarily authority of heaven and secondarily the authority of the people of the church. Both are essential.

But when the brother thought me to be “ridiculing” the authority of the people, he evidently overlooked the following statement on the same page from which he quoted:

I was traditioned under the late President Joseph Smith, who gave full value to the principle of democracy in the church. But under him I was also traditioned to a belief in the very great importance of revelation (theocratic guidance)...

Therefore, having given due place to the voice of the people, I now affirm that while the voice of the people is a big thing in the church, the voice of God is the big thing.—SAINTS’ HERALD, October 29, 1924.

Also the brother must have failed to see the following in the same editorial from which he quoted:

In the foregoing article I have set forth clearly the rights of the people:

First, to accept or reject the president and prophet (or any other general church officer).

Second, to reject or accept his policies and what comes through him either as revelation or suggestion.

Third, to initiate legislation in both general and local conferences, this right belonging to membership as well as priesthood.

If that be ridicule, heaven pity and Saints forgive me—but be prepared for a frequent repetition of the offense.

I hold that one of the greatest menaces to the authority of the people is the doctrine of extreme individualism now so persistently taught; the idea that each man in the church is without superior officer and subject only to “self-direction” or “self-control” under his own interpretation of the leadings of the Spirit to him. That doctrine challenges, first, authority of directing officers; and later, ordinarily, in its very nature, the authority of the majority as expressed by conference action.

Such doctrine more than anything else tends to defeat the authority of the people, for under such regime the people may legislate wisely and often; but without centralization of power among the executives of the church, each man on his own account may execute the will of the people in his own way, or not at all. He may even go out and deliberately frustrate the will of the body and do it with the seal of the church on his papers; and centralization of authority having been repudiated and “effective discipline” having been made a thing to scoff at, his act would be as authoritative as that of any other man.

I believe very firmly in centralization of power in the church—but hold, as set forth in “The true philosophy of church government,” that in the executive line this authority in action is to conform to the constitutional law of the church, i.e., the revelations... of God, as approved by the people, and to General Conference legislation. This position is met by those who repudiate centralization and argue for diffusion of authority.

II. Centralization of Authority—Is Our Authority Like the Old Definition of the Sectarian God?

Belief in centralization of authority is both logical and scriptural. There seems to be no common understanding on that point among those opposing the document on church government. For while some contend stoutly against centralization, others, the Presiding Bishopric included, hold that all executive authority in “temporal” matters is gathered up in the Presiding Bishopric, they to be “directed by the law and not by the Presidency;” (HERALD, March 4, p. 230)—and moreover, they themselves are to interpret the law. Never at any time or place has the President more definitely and openly asked for centralization of power.

So those holding to the position just set forth would in logic and reason have no quarrel with us on the general principle of centralization of power. Those who ask for it themselves in their department cannot condemn others who ask for it in order to do their work. Their only argument would be as to points of centralization and where the highest point of centralization in the church should be—in the First Presidency, or in some secondary presidency, or in the heads of a department.

The real opponents of centralization are those who deny it and say that authority should be diffused, not centralized.

It is interesting to note that whereas the Constitution of the United States is now acclaimed as a great democratic document, and often mentioned during this discussion, in the days of its probation, while it fought for adoption, it was denounced because it centralized authority. For that reason its many and powerful opponents fought it. Its advocates defended it for that reason. They saw clearly that the people of the loosely confederated states could indeed express their will; but to execute it they were very nearly helpless once the fervor of common resistance which held them during the Rebellion had subsided. The Confederation with its diffusion of authority was not practical.

The far-seeing fathers of the Constitution clearly saw the need of centralized authority; but saw, too, the need to guard it that in its execution it might be powerful, yet righteous, and responsive to the will of the people. To “reconcile local liberty with central authority,” as McLaughlin puts it, was their aim.

Or as Bancroft expresses it: “To reconcile the due supremacy of the Nation with the preservation of the local authorities in their subordinate usefulness.” Strange as it may seem, they believed in supreme central authority and in subordinate subsidiary authorities, nor thought such views in conflict with the essential principles of freedom and equality.

The checks and balances noted in the Government and so often commented on were to safeguard the exercise of centralized authority, not to deny it.

The opponents of the Constitution were able men. Patrick Henry gave us the slogan, “As for me, give me liberty or give me death.” But in actual practice, when construction was needed, he had little to contribute. He was a fine orator but not a safe leader. He opposed the God-inspired Constitution because he believed it to centralize authority and enslave the people. “The President,” he declared, “would become a tyrant; America would be enslaved.” Thus he “exclaimed and expostulated in a turbulent stream of rhetoric.” (The Confederation and Constitution, McLaughlin.)

Note the following statements from the pen of an authority on the Constitution:

In truth, the Constitution had many foes to meet. There was a little band of irreconcilables who could see no good in making the central authority efficient, who had already opposed the extension of national authority, and knew not how else to act. They were men of wide influence, like Samuel Adams, who had said so much about liberty that they were not conversant with the arguments for government.—The Confederation and the Constitution, by McLaughlin, p. 278.

In watching the contest over the Constitution, we see the dangerous element of extreme democracy, vehement, suspicious, and talkative. . . .—Ibid., p. 291.

Many there were who believed in individualism pure and simple, the right of the individual to do as he chooses. They did not care where government rested; they wished themselves and their neighbors let alone. All these influences were making, not for imperial organization, not for law and system, but for personal assertion, for confusion that might threaten the foundations of all reasonable order. If these influences were overcome, it must be because the wise and strong succeeded in winning control.—Ibid., p. 42.

The fear of central authority persisted and was a chief factor later in dividing the Union temporarily into two parts, and threatened to divide and subdivide the Nation further and still further—for in the last analysis that tendency leads always to the supremacy of the individual rather than the collective will.

John C. Calhoun was the great opponent of centralization of power. He more than any other single individual was responsible for secession.

It was upon the principles of Calhoun’s resolutions that the South took its stand; it was upon the principles of Webster’s answer that the North fought the Civil War . . . when his [Calhoun’s] life was ended, the South was already prepared for the fatal leap from the precipice to which he had led it.—Chadwick, in Causes of the Civil War, pp. 44-47.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
It is of passing interest to note that Joseph Smith had a discussion by correspondence with Calhoun relative to securing Federal redress for the wrongs of the Saints; and Calhoun, true to his belief in "diffused" authority, as ever the inveterate enemy of central authority, held that the Government had no right or power to interfere to protect citizens of a State.

To which Joseph replied, advising Calhoun to re-read the Constitution, and grasp "the sublime idea that Congress, with the President as executor, is as almighty in its sphere as Jehovah is in his."

Replying to Calhoun, Webster took his appeal to the Journal of the convention which drafted the Constitution, and said:

The very first resolution which the convention adopted was, "That a national government ought to be established, consisting of a supreme legislature, judiciary, and executive."—American History Leaflet No. 30, p. 39; Webster-Calhoun Debate.

They proposed to have a legislative department with a supreme lawmaking body, Congress; a judicial department with a Supreme Court; and an executive department with a supreme executive, the President.

In the church we have a supreme court in the judicial department. Elders' and bishop's courts are subordinate to the Standing High Council. We have a supreme legislative body. Branch and district conferences are not equal to General Conferences and General Assemblies. But when we come to the executive department—lo, there the trouble begins. There is a persistent effort to divide and diffuse authority, or create something ahead of or independent of the first executive.

This is but the outcropping of opposition, not necessarily to centralization of authority in the Presidency—though that may be the present talking point—but rather toward any centralization at all. Or as was expressed in the resolution presented to the conference of 1923, which resolution was laid on the table without discussion:

Resolved, This General Conference hereby expresses disapproval of centralization of power by ANY administrative officer or officers, and maintains the right of full expression of the will of the people.—Conference Minutes, 1923, p. 3464.

Hamilton, Wilson, and other defenders of the Constitution argued that through their legislative assemblies the people of the Colonies already had free and full expression of their will; the execution of that will demanded central administrative authority. If that authority were denied, "diffused," defeated, by so much the authority of the people themselves was denied, "diffused," defeated.

This editorial may not apply to those who recognize centralization of authority but wish it well directed and within the law. To those who are opposed to the principle of centralization it is pertinent.

For under their philosophy, which diffuses authority through the body and centralizes it nowhere, the foot and the hand and all other organs of the body may say to the head, "We have no need of thee." And our authority becomes like the sectarian God, its center everywhere, its circumference nowhere, having a form but denying the exercise of the power thereof.

And that is no new philosophy. More than fifty years ago Joseph wrote:

Among the inconsistencies of the latter days, one of the strangest that the reasoning mind finds to account for, is this: that of expecting the principle of government to be supreme, its center local; and yet every man his own judge and interpreter of the law.—True Latter Day Saints' Herald, February 1, 1868.

III. One Head or Many

In the light of the foregoing, recognizing the right of the church to legislate, and the need of centralized executive authority to administer, I approach a statement made in the Herald for February 25, 1925:

Elbert A. Smith makes merry and would laugh the open letter advocates out of court. He remarks:

"Power of direction must be focused. Two or more heads belong to monsters, freaks of the zoo, or dragons of Revelation. The church in Revelation had one head, crowned with twelve stars. Her opponent that sought to destroy her and failed had seven heads. Too many heads."

It is a long, long way back to the Apostle Paul but, under the circumstances, I trust I will not give offense if I choose to accept the apostle's serious and impregnable statement in preference to this flippancy and irreverent pleasantry of our brother. Paul wrote:

"But I would have you know, that the head of every man is Christ and the head of the woman is the man; and the head of Christ is God."—1 Corinthians 11: 3. "And he Christ is the head of the body, the church."—Colossians 1: 18.

Here we have God the head of Christ, and Christ the head of the church, and Christ the head of the man, and the man the head of the woman. Will our brother here exclaim, "Too many heads—monsters—freaks of the zoo"?

No, indeed. I am willing that Christ should have a head, and the church have a head, and the man have a head, and the woman have a head, even that each should have a physical head and a figurative head, as in Paul's simile. What I was talking about was creatures or organizations with two or more independent directing heads, like the Siamese twins, interesting but impractical.

Being duly thankful that I escaped the charge of blasphemy along with that of "flippancy" and "irreverence," I hasten to say that there was no intention to be merry or to laugh the open letter brethren out of court. At no time, in pulpit, or Herald, or circular or private letter have I ridiculed or insulted them or questioned their integrity. Nor was I irreverent or flippant toward the church or anything divine—perhaps I was irreverent toward the many-headed monsters of Revelation; but the brother should not feel bad about that.

And so with due solemnity and reverence and in all seriousness—or as much as I can command—it is still true that in nature and in business creatures whether that be one man or a board or council (as the trinity of three in heaven) makes no difference with the principle involved.

That brings us to one of the focal points in all this discussion. Has the Presidency any right to direct the Presiding Bishopric in the handling of so-called temporalities? It has been said that they have not, as the Bishop holds money and property as a trustee. But for what purpose is it held in trust? Obviously to be expended in church enterprises which have a spiritual content of primary importance. How about the directing of these enterprises? Is there any chief or "supreme direction"? If so, does the Bishop have it? Or is there no direction? Or supreme indirection? There must be direction. And there was never direction without a director.

Here enters the fear that the President will control the money of the church. But he has said that General Conference should determine the regular expenditures of the year, so far as they can be foreseen; and extraordinary expenditures be determined by a competent council. And conference may have its say as to that council. All this in the larger sense is legislative, and outside the scope contemplated under "directional control"; and six of the apostles have stated in the HERALD that President Smith said that neither he nor the Bishop should be supreme in that regard. Naturally so, since it is a legislative matter. I quite agree that neither of them should have free power to determine the channels into which the money shall flow. Let the church do that.

But how about the execution of enterprises involving the expenditure of money already approved by conference? Why not consider the project and not alone the money involved? Who is chiefly responsible as administrator in the carrying out of the project? Is it the Presidency? Or is it the Bishopric? Are the bishops in all such enterprises indeed directed only by the law and never by the Presidency?

When conference shall approve the erection of the temple, who among the various executives of the church shall chiefly direct (have directional control) in its design, its location, its erection, and its control and management after it is erected? Here is a "temporal" project, so called, which after all is but the material shell of a great spiritual undertaking, as is in varying degree every so-called "temporal" affair of the church.

In spite of oft-repeated denials, opponents of the document on church government from week to week have represented us as holding that democracy "has no legitimate place in church government." They have said that we wish to set up a "theocratic-autocracy"—to go back four thousand years to monarchy, slavery, popery, etc.

This is the sort of interpretation had in mind when I said that I could not accept the document if given the "extreme interpretations" put upon it by its opponents. Who could? And because it is possible to put such extreme interpretations upon the document, some now say it should not be adopted. What document, including the word of God, could escape such logic? And only on the basis of these extreme interpretations is the charge of apostasy made possible.

As before remarked, the proponents of the document on church government must be met where they stand—not where some one says they stand. To talk about "terrible monsters from the dark monarchical jungles" and about apostasy and rejection does not meet the issue; but merely assumes the issue to have been met by the creation of these extreme interpretations and their subsequent demolition by their own creators.

IV. A Sane Interpretation

First of all, the document says that the church is "a theocratic-democracy," and affirms that form of government to be "divine government" among the people, for the people, and for the glory of God and the achievement of his purposes toward ideal conditions." Who denies that position?

Under the theocratic phase of church government, the authority of God is primary. It is "God with us"—and He the big factor in the equation.

Under the democratic phase, man works with God in the church. In legislation the people consent to proposed measures, or reject them, or originate legislation; this right belongs to membership as well as priesthood.

This government, the document affirms, works "through priesthood." Both God and the church execute their purposes "through" priesthood. This has been the scriptural rule since time immemorial. God "set in the church" the priesthood for the work of the ministry and the perfecting of the Saints.
The priestshood so conferred was endowed with all the rights, privileges and authority to bring forth the church of Christ, conduct its expansion and watch over its development and welfare until the coming of Christ.—President Joseph Smith, HERALD, May 21, 1902.

In formulating the articles of incorporation of the church, our fathers said, "The church government consists of"—then they enumerated the different grades of priesthood. Any "extreme interpretation" may be put upon that statement of our fathers that is now put upon this one. Why not say that they made "no provision for the people to have part in church government?"

When the people in conference assembled have approved enterprises that have been presented for their consideration by revelation or in other ways (or through their own initiative), there are various executives to carry out those enterprises. Chief among them is the First Presidency. All quorums and departments work under their direction, so stated in revelation and in conference resolution.

This in no way interferes with the rights of General Conference, or yet with the rights of the so-called "three coordinate quorums." Here is a specific illustration:

Suppose it is contemplated to open a mission in South Africa, with all that is implied in missionary work, financial expenditure, organizing and conducting branches, equipping and operating headquarters and mission press, etc. Conference would have a right to say whether or not such work should be undertaken. But once it is approved and ordered, the Twelve would work under the Presidency in that enterprise in mission work; high priests would work under their direction in the newly organized branches and districts; and the Bishopric would finance the undertaking under their direction and not merely as independent executives.

In the event that for some reason the determining of this enterprise should be referred to the "three coordinate quorums," the three of them (or any two, if unanimously agreed) could approve the enterprise. If the Twelve and Seventy were opposed to such an undertaking, the Presidency would not by any means attempt it. But in the event it should be approved by the three quorums, then would begin the actual administration of the project. The Seventy employed in the undertaking would be under direction of the Twelve, and both under direction of the Presidency; as would be the high priests; and the Bishop in financing the project. This is lawful and orderly and robs no quorum or person of initiative or rights. This is but an illustration, and barring errors in method of statement will stand analysis.

The document declares also for "effective discipline." In the illustration mentioned, apostles, seventies, elders, high priests involved would be expected to do constructive work; to work in harmony with the project agreed upon. In case of willful refusal or failure, they could and should be disciplined. If the Presidency as chief executives should in any way betray the enterprise, they should be disciplined. They are subject to removal, reprimand, and court procedure.

This in the shortest time possible sets forth some of the salient features of the document in their true light.

A Cheering Testimony

In the HERALD for March 18, Brother Warren E. Peak considers the necessity of choosing a new president, together with procedure involved. This ostensibly based on a statement by the undersigned to the conference of 1922 that in the event of certain failures the church would of necessity select a new presidency. Naturally, tenure of office, even life itself is uncertain. Moreover, in case the church should decide that the Presidency has failed, the Presidency has no recourse excepting to step aside. Procedure in selection of a successor should follow the law.

But the brother may take courage. Possibly success instead of failure may ultimately crown our efforts. Some years ago he bore testimony through the HERALD to an inspired dream. In this dream he conversed with the late President Joseph Smith and asked him very important questions; among others as to who is the one "mighty and strong." He was told that the term referred to each succeeding president:

That every president of the church was "mighty and strong," in the sense that the term was used by the seer, as a result of his official position; it was also his duty and calling "to set in order the house of God," and do the work outlined in this letter when such work was necessary.

Concerning the work of President Frederick M. Smith, Brother Peak received the following assurance of victory and success:

He (Joseph) told me Brother Fred M. would do his work as the president of the church successfully as his father and grandfather had done their work. He gave me to understand that the church would meet difficulties and overcome them under Fred M.'s administration as the church had done in the past. That there would be no wonderful display of miraculous power, such as some were expecting; the Lord would enable the Saints to redeem Zion, but it would not be an easy victory.—Warren E. Peak, HERALD, September 12, 1917.

That testimony, supposedly divine, did not foreshadow failure, but rather ultimate success, such as had attended the administration of the father, though this success should come only after very great difficulty.

Trusting that we may come to a more united un-
The argument concerning supreme directional control is over so far as the HERALD is concerned except as to what may be presented by way of rebuttal.

A brother under the caption, "Executives in church government," has covered many phases of the question involved, most of his articles being presented in an affirmative way, but some of it is by way of reply to what the writer had written. I do not see the necessity or propriety of attempting a general answer to the brother's presentation. I have no inclination to do so, as I believe the important points have been answered in previous articles, and am glad to close my part in the preconference debate. However, there are one or two things in his article which, perhaps as a matter of propriety, demand some attention.

The brother devotes almost a page (222) in calling attention to partial quotations, and remarks:

Some of them he [I. A. S.] may have made by mistake, as an oversight is possible with anyone, but not all can be accounted for in this way. These references are not intended to censure the brother, but simply to present the facts in brief so as to include points on which he criticized my work.

This statement makes the conclusion unavoidable that the alleged erroneous quotations not "by mistake" were intentional. Again on the same page I am charged thus "... this omission again appears on page 59 of the HERALD this year, hence could not have been by accident, it would seem."

Now I am not conscious of having twisted any quotation or of having left out anything that would not properly represent the writers from whose works I have quoted. The brother's complaint that I "condemned" him "or others" for what I myself "had repeatedly done," must be due to a misunderstanding of the thought I tried to convey. I have not criticized anyone for quoting only in part except where in my opinion it has been so incomplete as not to reveal the real meaning of the original writer. In such instances I have endeavored to present sufficient of the setting so that the readers might judge as to whether or not my criticism was well founded without having to refer to other publications which might not be accessible.

There is no rule of logic or reason that quotations must be given in full. Sufficient need be quoted to convey the writer's thought upon the particular subject in mind. To go beyond this would complicate the subject and weary the readers. Such a requirement is impossible and has not been attempted in HERALD articles.

Nevertheless, my writings have been scanned and a list of instances given wherein quotations appear in part. Criticisms of this nature might be made against the writings of anyone who has contributed at any length to the present or any past discussion. Such a play on words would only be begging the real question, and I would not ask the Saints to follow me through such a useless presentation.

My first offense is set forth as follows:

In the HERALD, page 752, the brother ends his quotation at a semicolon, or as he would put it, "in the middle of a sentence." In doing so he omits words which show that the Twelve should exercise "supervisory jurisdiction" concerning certain work of the bishopric. (See Resolution 238: 7.)

Yes, I ended my quotation from General Conference Resolution No. 238 at a semicolon. The semicolon appeared and was followed by the ellipsis which plainly indicated that the quotation did not include the whole resolution. This important resolution, which I wish all would read and study carefully, occupies over six pages of the Book of General Conference Resolutions. I thought it was too lengthy to quote in full in connection with the phase of the subject I was then handling. Nothing more could have been done than was done to show that it was a partial quotation, so that the criticism advanced is not only unfair but unfounded.

I am thankful for the above criticism in that it calls attention to the supervisory jurisdiction of the Twelve "according to previous arrangement and agreement with the Bishopric." I could have had no reason except brevity for giving the quotation in part, because both in council speeches and HERALD articles I have earnestly contended for the observance of the principles of General Conference Resolution No. 258, which is known as the "Basis of adjustment." In Doctrine and Covenants 122: 5, the Lord clearly indicates that its application should be continued and that the jurisdiction of the Twelve in connection with the moneys and properties of the church was to be "in accordance with the agreement hitherto made." Doctrine and Covenants 123: 24 makes it plain that this statement has reference to the resolution from which I was quoting. Supreme directional control violates every principle of this basis of agreement, and, as might have been expected, is proving to be a basis of disagreement. The two documents should be judged by their fruits.

My second offense is set forth:

One quotation begins at a comma, page 1089, and stops at a semicolon, but uses a period in doing so. He leaves out the words "of the bishopric" before the words "taken as a whole," and directly applies the modifying clause contrary to the wording of the revelation.

The statement is not very clear. Evidently what the brother mistook for a period is part of the ellipsis I used to show that words were omitted. The more completely and often Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10 (from which I was quoting) is held before the Saints the more pleasing it is to me, because as long as it remains in our organic law the adoption of supreme directional control is legally barred. Instead of there being anything in the law of God I fear to quote, I wish all that has been given to us could be held before the Saints as the Lord commanded former day Israel:

And these words which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart: . . . And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house, and on thy gates.—Deuteronomy 6: 6-9.

Another criticism reads:

On page 56 his first quotation adds several words not found in Resolution 81, which he cites. His second quotation is placed directly following the first, and he adds to it several words which seemingly make it refer back to matter in the first quotation. To do this he not only added words not found in the resolution cited, but dropped out of the sentence nineteen words, without indicating any omission. (See Resolution 238: 5.)

I have heard of a man being made an offender for a word, but in the above I am made an offender for the type in which my words appear. A clerical and typographical error occurred in placing in quotation form two statements which should have appeared as separate paragraphs and in the regular sized type of the article. The "added words" were my own and the omission of the "nineteen words" was not indicated because when originally written in long hand I did not quote but merely expressed my own thought. If the readers will refer to page 56 of the HERALD of January 21, 1925, they will see that the introductory words in the two paragraphs are such as should convince the most skeptical that they were not intended to be quotations.

On page 1088 he incorrectly quotes President Smith in the April council, and does not fairly represent either the atmosphere or the occasion of what was said.

I have never understood that my statement of what President Smith said in the April council has been controverted or denied. If I am wrong, at least the brother makes no effort to give a correct statement. A denial by the President of having used the words, or similar words (because I did not attempt to quote exactly), would probably be more authoritative than the brother's charge as quoted above.

And so far as not fairly representing "the atmosphere or the occasion," I admit I may have failed to do so, but not intentionally by any means, because I sincerely wish I could get before the people a true realization of both the atmosphere and the occasion, and I am sure I did not overstate the facts in the least particular.

It has long been said of our ministry that they could open the Bible at any place and what they read would support the doctrine of the Restoration. In the present discussion I have found the same principle true in regard to what is published in the Doctrine and Covenants, General Conference Resolutions, the history of the Reorganization, and the writings of the late Joseph Smith. Throughout the authoritative records of the church I find nothing but support for the principle of checks and balances in church government, and certain equalization of quorum powers. In regard to the prerogatives of the leading quorums Historian Heman C. Smith once said:

I read that one quorum has the same power as another, and their decision has the same weight. And so on around until I undertake to put my finger where the balance of power rests, and I cannot find it. There is no such place.—SAINTS' HERALD, June 24, 1903.

I welcome a full presentation of the law and testimony of this church. I have found no such place wherein the position I have attempted to defend is better served by a partial quotation. Truth harmonizes with truth at all times and places, but error must make careful selection or its folly will be exposed.

With this closing statement, if I may do so, I wish to say that I have tried to be true to myself and my God, though I know some are crediting (or discrediting) me with motives which have never influenced me at any time. While I desire the church to keep on safe grounds, my personal fortunes or interests have not been considered. If they had been, I probably would have adopted a different course.

I trust that out of the present travail of the church will in due time come a better understanding of the divine law and a united people moving forward towards the goal set by God.
A Correction and Protest

In the HERALD for March 25, 1925, appears the following from the pen of Apostle T. W. Williams:

This advisory council was held behind closed doors. The work of the council was irregular. The general church was not apprised of what was taking place. The President would not even allow minutes to be kept. When some of us, who questioned the wisdom of such secrecy, supplied members of the general ministry with copies of documents considered and passed, we were curtly informed:

"It was understood that these documents should not even be loaned for reading outside, to say nothing about being distributed."—Letter of Frederick M. Smith to T. W. Williams, June 18, 1924.

This attempt to represent the council as meeting under some sort of reprehensible secrecy requires correction. The council was an advisory council to the Presidency, and minutes were regularly kept by Brother P. G. Fairbanks and Brother O. W. Newton. These minutes have constantly been, and are yet, available to all members of the council or other responsible persons.

The documents given out to the council members during the sitting of the council included numbers of papers and reports from the Presiding Bishop, covering not only the financial condition of the church, but also such items as mortgages, personal notes, both payable and receivable, bequests, etc., which should not be scattered broadcast; and the request that all documents be returned to the speaker's desk and not loaned outside the council was made with that thought in mind more than for any other reason. And we understood the Bishop to concur in that arrangement, which seemed wise and necessary, and to which no one objected. This was first suggested by a member in the body of the council.

The final decisions of the council were reported to the public in detail by the President of the church through the HERALD. And in so doing the President was acting as the chairman of a committee of three appointed by unanimous vote of the council from among their membership, to publish council proceedings and conclusions as their judgment dictated. Indeed, it was at all times expected their conclusions would reach the people; if not before, then through the General Conference.

The council observed no more secrecy than is necessary and consistent with the dignity of the business of any council in the church, the decisions by which may well be made public, but whose members speak freely to each other in the process of reaching those decisions, not expecting their extemporaneous remarks thus uttered in the council chamber to be reported and scattered abroad by those who sit with them.

And in this connection, the undersigned, in their own behalf, and in behalf of their fellows of the April council, take this means of protesting the broadcasting of statements attributed to members of the council as has been repeatedly done by word of mouth, by letter, and through the HERALD: Statements not reported at the time. Quoted from the memory of council members unfriendly to the majority action. Without submission for verification to the person or persons making them. Without reference to the qualifying context. And thus made to serve a purpose neither intended nor justified.

Our brother’s criticism by no means represents the spirit or the purpose of the council.

“The Law of Succession”

BY W. E. PEAK

Under the above subheading Brother J. F. Garver, in the HERALD of March 18, criticizes my article of February 18, 1925. The brother misunderstood my article and misrepresented my position. Hence this rejoinder.

I believe that it is much better for each man to state his own position and make such arguments to sustain his position as he sees fit. The better way to settle the complicated questions that are now before the church is for us to treat others as we would like to have them treat us. We shall refer to Brother Garver’s article just as little as possible and only when it is necessary to make our positions clear.

In the HERALD of December 3, pages 1172, 1173, is a lengthy argument to prove that the president of the church “alone” has the right “to designate his successor.” I made a brief argument against this position, in an affirmative manner.

My Position

“The president of the church . . . is appointed by revelation,” section 99, but the “revelation” that makes this appointment need not come through the president of the church.

I am sure now my position is correct, for Brother John F. Garver says: “That Joseph Smith (the late president) might have been chosen president without a revelation through his father, Yes.”

“Who dares” go into the conference now and oppose this position. President Elbert A. Smith said “from a feeling of compulsion,” that one of “the duties” of the Presidency was “to unify the high priesthood” and stated:

But it seems to me that if presently there does not come more unity the time will come when we [the Presidency] of necessity must step aside and permit you [the Saints] to select some one else who can perform that work.—Minutes of General Conference, 1922, p. 3245.

Is there more unity than in 1922? This statement is clear, concise, and definite. Everyone can understand it. We believe he meant just what he said, and we prefer to believe that this “feeling of compulsion” was produced by the Spirit of God. The principle presented is in harmony with the teachings and practice of the church. When a president of a branch, district, stake, or quorum fails to keep unity in the group he presides over, he is removed, and the members are permitted “to select some one else.” Especially is this true when the division and contention is caused by the president’s personal conduct and official acts. There is no revelation or resolution making an exception of the president of the church.

I would much rather believe that the Spirit prompted Brother Elbert to make this statement than to conclude that he suggested the Presidency should “step aside and permit you to select some one else” with the secret hope that he would finally be selected as the president of the church. Personally I have seen nothing that would cause me to say, if I were the President, “Brother Elbert wants my job.”

President F. M. Smith’s Statements

In the next verse after President F. M. Smith offered his resignation at the Lamoni conference in 1919, he says: “This will give you (the Saints) an unhampered opportunity to decide the policies and select a leader to whom you can intrust the task of carrying them out.”—President’s message, p. 6, verse 27.

The late Joseph Smith testifies under oath in the Temple Lot Suit: I could have been properly ordained under the laws of the Reorganized Church to the office I now hold (president of the church) without a revelation to that effect from my father.

Yea sir, you understand me correctly; I claim I could properly be ordained and qualified and put in possession of the office which I now hold, without a revelation to that effect to my father. I make that claim.—Plaintiff’s Abstract, p. 63.

How May the President Be Called?

Joseph testifies:

As a rule, before a president or high priest can be ordained there must be some kind of a manifestation in regard to it individually, before he can be ordained to any office in the Melchizedec priesthood.—Ibid.

The “manifestation” was given to Joseph “individually,” and to hundreds of others when he was called to take the place of his father. The Spirit so taught, guided, and instructed the Saints, so the faithful ones everywhere were prepared to accept Joseph, when the Spirit directed him to go to them. He met with them at the Amboy Conference and gave them to understand that God had called him to take his place as president of the church. Then, “On motion of Isaac Sheen, it was resolved that Joseph Smith be chosen prophet, seer, and revelator of the Church of Jesus Christ, and successor of his father.” (Church History, vol. 3, p. 260.)

“If my servant Frederick M. Smith prove unstable and unfaithful another may be chosen, according to the law already given.”—Doctrine and Covenants 127: 8.

Should We Understand the Law of Succession?

I was not the one to “protrude” this subject into the HERALD, although I believe it should be understood by the Saints, as the following quotations show:

President Smith under great pressure arose and stated that his resignation as President of the church was in the hands of the council, and that he would not meet with the council as long as that man (Apostle F. M. Sheehy) remained in the body, after which he retired. Brief submitted by the Quorum of Twelve, at the Lamoni conference, 1919, p. 6, verse 41.

Again, we find his resignation presented in the following words:

With my knowledge of the long-existing friction and my study of the relations of the two quorums as reflected in the books of the church, and in the light of the generally accepted rules and principles of organization, I see no compromise in the issues now existing, hence I see no other course open to me but to hand you my resignation, together with a brief and perhaps inadequate presentation of the issues in the form of a brief statement of some of the things I have stood for and do stand for.—President’s message, General Conference Minutes of 1919, p. 2695.

Again in the advisory council of last April we have the following report of resignation:

Early in the council when the President made his charges against the Presiding Bishop, he used language similar to the following: “If I am right, I want this council to say so; if I am wrong this council says so, I have the decency and manhood to get out, to resign,” and other things from which, in connection with the words quoted, we could conclude nothing else but if Bishop McGuire was decent and had manhood he would resign. These facts should be known.—Israel A. Smith, HERALD, August 6, 1924.

A president that has talked so much of resigning is apt to do it sometime. If he gave the advisory council to understand that he would “resign” unless the majority voted as he wanted them to, what will he do if the majority of the votes in General Conference are against him? Again, Brother Elbert suggested as quoted, that under certain conditions the Presidency should “step aside.” With these statements before us, it seems very necessary for us as a church to understand how to proceed to "select a leader," as President F. M. Smith expresses it, or "select some one else," as expressed by President E. A. Smith.

Consider the Late Joseph's Selection

After years of turmoil and confusion, the Lord gave Joseph to understand that he should preside over the Reorganization, and the Lord also gave the great majority of the Saints to understand that he was the man. They were not mistaken. This was the proper working of a theocratic-democracy; God manifesting his will to and through the body. God directed the masses how to vote. The great majority of the Saints had a testimony from God that Joseph was the man. It is much better for every man to know by the Spirit how to vote than to have one man or one quorum to tell him how to vote. How much longer must turmoil and confusion exist among us before the Lord will direct the Saints "to select" some one who can bring peace and unity. Consider this with Brother Elbert's statement. This theocratic-democracy can always be relied on when the Saints look to God for direction instead of looking to some man or set of men. Brigham Young taught "obey counsel," and he led the Saints from a theocratic-democracy to an autocracy (one man or one quorum ruling). Give the Presidency "supreme directional control," and we will have the church directed by one man, assisted by two counselors. These two counselors may be dismissed by the President, if his "effective discipline" fails to keep them as obedient as he desires. Reread the statement concerning Brother F. M. Sheehy.

Supreme directional control destroys the theocratic-democracy of the church (God directing the majority of the Saints by his Spirit) and makes an aristocracy or autocracy.

"Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departed from the Lord." No man "trusteth in man" till his "heart departeth from the Lord."

"Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord" (Jeremiah 17: 5-7). A faithful man "trusteth in the Lord," and when the prophet gives a revelation the faithful man trusts in the Lord to that extent that he follows the law which teaches, "Let the prophets speak two or three and let the other judge." (1 Corinthians 14: 29.)

Why judge? Because the Lord knows every man is liable to make a mistake. But give the prophet "supreme directional control" with power to use "effective discipline" to bring those to time who happen to decide against him, when they judge, and you will nullify Paul's instructions. You close the avenue by which God works through the Saints. You make it impossible for the Saints to "trust in the Lord" and follow the directions of his Spirit; but you compel them to "trust" in those who have "supreme directional control" with "effective discipline" to force them to follow their directions.

To give the Presidency supreme directional control will be a longer leap towards apostasy than was ever taken by the Brighamites at one time.

Revelations Tested

To "judge" even the revelations given to the church by the President or Presidency is granted to the quorums. Shall we consider their mere conclusions of greater value and more reliable than their revelations? Think of it. They cannot force their revelations on us by "effective discipline" nor the policies contained in them. Shall we say they can force their mere conclusions? Their uninspired plans? Their policies that no one claims are presented by inspiration?

It has been the "doctrine" of the church from the beginning that no revelation was binding on the church till it was "indorsed by the quorums." Not by some of the quorums but by all the quorums. This has been preached in public and in private from the beginning. This "doctrine" was never questioned till the General Conference in 1922, when a purported revelation was adopted by a majority vote after it had been rejected by the Twelve, Seventy, and Presiding Bishopric; and when it was adopted, over forty per cent of the votes cast were against it. The doctrine of adopting revelations has never been changed. It was simply violated and disregarded by this conference. It is a step, and a long step, away from the old path. Will it bring peace and success? It has not yet. Better remain in the old path. The old path has brought to the church peace and unity in the past. When we left it, peace and unity left us. We had better return.

If we as members and officers of the church of Jesus Christ will have the love for each other that the Master of men displayed, we will have little trouble in formulating a policy that can be accepted by all. Each man has a right to his opinion, but we are all sufficiently grounded in the fundamental principles of the gospel, so we can accept a policy that will bring peace and unity. But if we permit jealousy, suspicion, and a determination to have our way, rule us, we are apt to remain far from peace and unity. The other fellow has some rights and is entitled to some consideration. Let us apply the golden rule as much as possible.

The Religio and the Naked Truth

BY JOHN M. LLOYD

The object of the Religio was correctly represented by Brother McDowell in his article last week, as far as he went. He should, however, have emphasized the fact that the primary object of the Religio was to interest the young people in gospel work, and to train them for service in the church. The study, the programs, the various activities operating through the committees, were all planned with that object in view. Another thing: there was a due regard for proportion. There was some recreation, but it was a minor feature. It never assumed the prominence that is given recreation in the Department of Recreation and Expression, whose very name makes recreation the prime object of the department. Bear this in mind, Brother and Sister Delegates. In asking for the reorganization of the Religio, we are asking for the society that made the spiritual its prime consideration as contrasted with a department that makes pleasure its chief object. As shown in the quotation Brother McDowell cited, the Religio did not lose sight of the social needs of the young people, but it sought to keep the social where it belonged, subordinate to the higher purposes of the society. To-day, we maintain, too much encouragement is being given pleasure, until in the church, as in the world, Paul's prophecy is finding fulfillment, and we are becoming "lovers of pleasure," etc.

Reference is made to the fact that the Religio, as well as the Sunday School Convention and other bodies, adopted the report of the coordinating committee that declared the Religio "primarily interested in social and recreational development." It is sadly true; that was the entering wedge, and from that time it was sought to divert the Religio from its original purpose until it was killed altogether, and disorganized. Why? Was there design against the Religio that was not suspected by the convention that innocently accepted the report of the coordinating committee? I quote from a letter sent to me in 1919 by President Frederick M. Smith, which reads in part as follows: "The Religio has outlived its usefulness to the church." Let me now ask, Has President Smith changed his mind since 1919?

We do not say that the prime object of the Religio was the study of the Book of Mormon, but we do say that as a means to the end the Religio sought, namely of preparing the young for gospel service, the study of the Book of Mormon was and is of paramount importance. In proof of this I submit the following: Previous to the disorganization of the Religio, the profits from the sale of the Book of Mormon quarterlies was sufficient to maintain the general Religio Society, and when Brother McDowell took over this department he had a surplus of several thousand dollars which he used in the new department. The quarterlies printed under his instruction were published at a loss. Since the reprint of the original quarterlies from a few thousands the demand has increased materially. I submit this for your consideration as to whether the people want the Book of Mormon as a study.

The Department of Recreation and Expression is claiming credit for the publication of the reprint of the Book of Mormon quarterlies. We gratefully acknowledge our debt to the department for them, but Brother McDowell should explain that it was not the department that took the initiative in restoring the quarterlies, but the issue was forced upon him by the Independence local of Zion's Religio-Literary Society, and after objections from Brother McDowell himself. When it was seen that we were determined to have the quarterly, if we had to reprint it ourselves, Brother McDowell consented to publish it through the Department of Recreation and Expression. I have letters from Brother McDowell referring to this matter when I was asking for his cooperation, and it was then his wish, quoting from his letters, "that you leave the matters as they are"; that you follow the study course outlined; "that you do nothing further." This will give you some idea of his willingness to help, and especially when you will recall that it is not more than a year ago that he sent out a list of subjects to be studied in this department—twelve subjects in all—and the last subject on the list was the Book of Mormon; or in other words, there were twelve preferences to the angel message.

Brother McDowell urges that the work of the department is almost identical with that of the Religio. If it be true that they are seeing the folly of maintaining a movement under church auspices for recreation and expression primarily, as the name of the department says for itself; if the department is swinging back to the plan of the Religio, the logical thing to do is to declare the change of heart and change the name back to the Religio. If the department has so far reformed in spirit and intentions, let it do itself justice and take the emphasis off of recreation and give recreation a subordinate place, as the Religio did.

We are not seeking another organization. The Religio was on the ground first. It was killed, and another organization calling itself the Department of Recreation and Expression took its place. We want the Religio back, not in part, but in whole; in aim, in spirit, in working plan. We want again the organization whose chief object was to interest the young in the cause of Christ and train them to carry the banner of King Immanuel.
NEWS AND LETTERS

Far West Conference

"Good." "A delightful occasion." "Certainly a fine spirit!" "If I could hear preaching like that seven days in the week I believe I could do some worth-while thing in the world." Such is the character of the remarks heard here and there by the writer during the conference of the Far West Stake, which was held at Saint Joseph, March 6 to 8.

It was a good conference. No one can say truthfully now that we cannot have a business meeting where everyone apparently is pleased with what is said and done—just a good, friendly, cheerful way of doing what needed to be done. That's all. And that's enough. More than that would have been too much. Each branch in the stake nominated one delegate to General Conference. The Presidency are ex officio delegates under a stake rule. The remaining delegates were nominated by the Presidency, and the whole list of nominees, save one, was made the choice of the conference. Every member of the high council of the stake, except one, is on the delegation. That member does not expect to be in attendance at General Conference.

Priesthood meetings? Yes! No; not just "meetings," but "priesthood" meetings. And if any who were present did not know it before, they surely learned then that there are big, brainy, spiritual, good-hearted, dependable men in the leading quorum of the church. Such counsel! It was great! "On! On to victory! On to Zion. Service to mankind. Not this crowd nor that crowd; but mankind." The idea of the universality of Latter Day Saintism will not soon be lost to view to those who "tuned in" on these lectures. Something to DO! "Let's do that!" was the advice of our president.

Well! I thought we never would be free from council meetings: 9 a.m., 11 a.m., 1:30 p.m., 5 p.m., 8 p.m. Any time most was time for council meetings. We had business to do, also, and it was done, and done in Christian style. "Justice," "A square deal," "Be kind." "Still in dealing with individual cases we must not fail to protect the interest of the work as a whole." That was Far West Stake High Council sentiment at this conference. That is the sentiment at other times too, but it certainly was on top all the way during the conference sessions. The problems of the high council were general, local, and individual. I have O. K.'d the action all the way through, so rest assured it is O. K.

Then we had social services. Yes, that's the same thing as a prayer meeting, except in the points where it differs. There were too many talks for me to count. And we were advised to take the needs of the general church to heart and pray about them, with the promise that direction would be given to meet the present exigency if the attitude of the people was right.

The following ordinations were authorized and attended to: George Glenz, Holgard Pedersen, and Archie B. Constance to the office of elder; Roscoe Peterson to the office of priest, and Wallace Burlington to the office of deacon.

"Boom!" instead of "Zing!" (by the bishop of the stake) was the only thing that marred the Thursday evening musicale under the direction of Paul N. Craig. That "Boom" in the "Italian street song," by the writer, is a sign that stake bishops spoil otherwise good singing. Mrs. Harold C. Burgess sang the solo parts, and Miss Edna Christensen (for whose services other churches in Saint Joseph have made a number of bids) handled the organ and the piano. Sister Edna Christensen is one of those consecrated musicians of whom we hear and read. Talented, and on the job all the time, without money and without price. There must be a splendid reward awaiting that service. The musicale was given by the L. D. S. Choral Society of Saint Joseph, which, during the last two years, has had the services of our lovable and praiseworthy director, Paul N. Craig, of Independence, Missouri.

A good cook, an efficient and untiring corps of women workers, plus a good-natured crowd, which ate 1,200 meals, made meal times quite satisfying. No direct charge was made for meals. Collections were taken to defray the expense. The average cost of such meals as you would be glad to buy in a restaurant for forty cents (if you could get them), was about fifteen cents. Sister Ora Liggett, the head of the stake Department of Women, was in charge of the dining room. It would do your heart good to see those sisters in action. System! Yes, they have it. No delays. Just good meals served at the lowest cost, in a satisfactory way.

The visiting workers (we all agree that they were workers) were Elbert A. Smith and Floyd M. McDowell of the First Presidency, and Miss Blanche Edwards, general head of the Department of Women. The workers were kept at work. This was our first introduction to Sister Edwards. How she does talk. One hour and twenty minutes and no watch winding yet! I learned that she trained under the foremost teacher of public speaking in England. I said she was "trained." You know you cannot temper lead. A wonderful message, with the ability to put it across, in the impression that Sister Edwards left with our people. Those messages to the old, the middle aged, and the young surely must bear fruit in the lives of our people. It was those messages that caused at least one young man to say out loud, "I believe I could do something worth while in the world." Here are some of the themes: "The prophetic calling of Joseph Smith"; "Keeping the faith"; "What are our girls worth?" "The great people of the world"; "Our boys and girls: That's you"; and so on and so forth.

L. D. S. Students at Kansas University

LAWRENCE, KANSAS, March 4.—For some time the thought has been with the members of the little mission at Lawrence that the readers of the Herald as well as the officers of the church would like to know how some of the young people are feeling and how they are acting toward the problem of education or the preparation of the young to carry on the future burden of the church, or perhaps the solution to the present problems.

This article is representative, we believe, of what many other groups of the church young people are thinking that are attending colleges, universities, or other institutions of learning.

There are at the present time about thirty young people attending the University of Kansas who are members of the church. This number exceeds any year heretofore at this university. During the year 1923-24, our student group met about every fourth Sunday in a rented room located on the campus. Being a small group and the most of the members working their way through school, it necessitated a sacrifice on our part to pay the rent and other expenses connected with the services. We are grateful to the Bishop's office in Independence for taking care of the speakers' traveling expenses. We can say that we enjoyed hearing from such men as Brothers Hopkins, W. W. Smith, President McDowell, Apostle Edwards, Bishop Keir, and others; for they gave us the spiritual education towards which we were guiding our other educational endeavors.

Because of our religion we were not necessarily excluded from school activities. We were represented on the varsity football squad, swimming club, orchestra, band, and in other organizations. Several of the members were initiated into sororities and fraternities.

During the present year, 1924-25, our meetings have held much encouragement for progress, even over that of last year. At an early date individual student members expressed themselves as favorable to more meetings and suggested that we call a meeting and get the group to vote on the question. Accordingly, at a meeting held at the home of Sister MacLaren, Brother Ray Whiting, the only member of the priesthood in the group, was elected to take charge of the meetings. Regular Sunday services were to be held and expenses of rent, and so forth, were to be taken care of. Since then we have held services almost every Sunday, and we have enjoyed fine talks from such out-of-town speakers as we could get. Professors on the campus have willingly and gladly taken the opportunity to speak in our meetings. When we have been unable to get other speakers, members of our own group have taken advantage of the time.

A great deal of interest has been shown by our students, and we have been fortunate in locating several families of Saints here; others are moving in. Twice this year our room has been filled to capacity by attendance, which is about forty. Our average is from 22 to 25.

Through the efforts of a committee, we have purchased a piano, which we needed, and placed it in our meeting room. We are also fortunate in that four members are teaching in educational institutions here, which are: the Haskell Indian School (the second largest in the United States), junior high school, and in the university.

The field of study represented by the students ranges from music, engineering, Journalism, mathematics, chemistry, law, to that of home economies and sociology.

In our recent meetings, especially the sacramental services, we have felt that the Spirit of God was still meeting with his Saints. The desire of our entire group seems to be that of service, and undivided service when our preparation is complete.

We have tried to find all of the Saints in Lawrence, and those going to the university here. If any have been missed, Brother Whiting would be very glad to hear from them.

Flint Branch

March 11.—The branch at Flint, Michigan, has been enjoying many social functions as well as association in the services during the last few weeks. The present showing proves the worthwhileness of attending the many meetings of the branch and assisting in making these better. The attendance at the morning prayer services has been encouraging, and from the spirit manifested at these meetings there seems to be an earnest desire to assist in bringing the work to a higher plane.

The valentine social held in the lower auditorium of the Newall Street Church was a success socially and financially. It was sponsored by the Department of Women, and the many present showed interest in making this one of the leading events of the season. The social was in charge of Sister Nevada Badham, and the program was in charge of Sister Beatrice McNamara.

February 18 the local membership gathered at the Newall Street Church to hear Apostle E. J. Gleazer. It was his first visit to Flint, and while he was with us only three days many became well acquainted with him. He made a tour of the city and had the pleasure of making a trip through the Buick Motor Company's plant. It was a wonderful sight to watch these cars come off the assembly line, each man in his own place and doing his own job to make the Buick a good product to represent Flint.

The annual Father and Son Banquet of the year was held at Newall Street Church March 10. Some ninety-five dads and sons assembled, and after an enjoyable dinner served by the Temple Builders after those in charge of Department of Women had prepared the meal, a program of high order was rendered. The orchestra of twelve pieces in charge of Brother Charles Everhart played during the dinner. Their music was appreciated, and all felt like congratulating Brother Everhart for his assistance and wishing his organization success.

The address of welcome was ably handled by the president of the branch, Elder A. H. DuRose. William Kugle, one of the scouts of the church troop, told the dads what he expected of his dad. One thought dropped by him was: "I hope the influence of my dad will so assist me that I may make a better dad for my children when my time comes to take my place in my own home." Mr. E. L. Mason, scout executive of Flint, responded with "What I expect of my son."

The main address of the evening was delivered by Doctor A. E. Duplan, rector of the Christ Episcopal Church, which is a close neighbor of the Newall Street Church. Doctor Duplan took for his subject, "The four pillars of the home," and with the aid of a drawing attracted the attention of all. He told his story in a pleasing way that cemented the friendship that has always existed between the churches. In his forceful way he told of the place of the father, the mother, the son, and the daughter in the home, who were the four pillars. His points were strengthened by the poems at his command. Those who heard him expressed a desire to hear him again. Brother Matthew W. Liston acted as toastmaster, and the arrangements for the banquet were in charge of Rollie Proveost, Max Crum, and Jerry Anspaugh, these men representing each church in the city.

Many of the local Saints are planning to attend General Conference, and plans are being made for special arrangements over the Grand Trunk lines to Chicago. They will join the Fort Huron, London, and Lansing Saints en route.

Los Angeles, California

On Sunday, March 8, the Saints of this city realized the fulfillment of their hopes, that for which they had labored and prayed for a long time. Their new church was formally opened in the presence of a congregation which filled all the seats and overflowed into the adjoining smaller auditorium. This is a beautiful church, commodious and well arranged to care for all the activities in which the Saints may wish to participate. It was built by the gifts and sacrifices of those who love the work here. Credit is due to many, among whom are the finance committee headed by Sister Anna Mather, who carefully gathered the pledges and saw that money was ready to pay when it was needed. The building committee spent much time on the project, both before and during the building. It was universally regretted that Brother Willard Badham, chairman of that committee, was unable to present and turn the keys of the building over to the Board of Trustees; but he is a member of the state legislature and is in Sacramento at the present time, attending sessions; he is accompanied by Sister Badham and small daughter Irma.

The keys, however, were proffered by another member of that committee; who has had a special part in the building; namely, Brother Henry C. Danielson, civil engineer and builder, who built the church. He utilized considerable volunteer labor, worked by day, planned by night, accepted and considered bids and contracts, and succeeded in building the church for about $6,000 less than the estimate, and amount authorized to be spent for the building. This saving enabled the purchase of carpet for both auditoriums, stairways, and halls, as well as good oak pews with prayer benches for the main auditorium; and a substantial payment on the pipe organ, on which the choir is planning to finish payment. It also enabled us to have such better things as art-glass windows, through which the light falls softly; solid oak finish in our main room and front stairway, and many other improvements not originally planned, and for which builders usually receive considerable extra.

The auspicious day began with the Sunday school, in charge of Superintendent Wilber D. Gillen, and his assistants, Mrs. Billy Carpender of the adult division, Miss Bertha Ball of the young people's division, and Mrs. Eunice Winn Smith of the children's division. All teachers and officers were present. The junior department reported an attendance of one hundred per cent, and there was a large attendance of regulars and many visitors. Most of the departments have rooms to themselves, and the possibility of better teaching and giving of religious training is very good.

At eleven o'clock the choir, wearing new surplices, filed in as Mrs. Dana Crum played the voluntary, and the morning service was on. Apostle T. W. Williams, who presided here as pastor for many years, again presided. On the platform with him were Apostles John W. Rushton, Myron A. McConley, and Paul M. Hanson; of the district presidency, Elders N. T. Chapman and Frank Van Fleet; Elder H. W. Savage of the seventies; the pastor, Walter Wayne Smith, and his two associates, Doctor A. W. Teel and Elder Ray Knowlton. After the opening hymn, the invocation was offered by Brother Chapman, and the choir followed with a song prayer, under the leadership of Sister Stella Kelley. A solo was sung by Sister Mildred Nesser. The offertory was played by Sister Margaret Wickes and the morning offering taken.

Then the ordinance of baptism was administered by the pastor to seven candidates. The baptismal font is located in one corner of the room, screened ordinarily by velvet curtains, which may be drawn aside during the service, and baptism thus becomes a part of any service, with all in the room witnessing. The first sermon was preached by Apostle McConley, who reached Los Angeles on Friday, accompanied by his wife and daughter Alice. Brother Rushton consecrated the building in a prayer of great beauty; Sister Kelley sang, "How lovely are thy dwellings"; Brother Danielson formally presented the keys to the trustees; Doctor Teel accepted them with fitting speech; the closing hymn and benediction were offered, and the Saints greeted their friends from most of the branches of this district, and received their congratulations. We do not wish to seem too proud of this church, but it has been a great project, and during the four months of the actual building a great company of the members of this branch have given most of their thought to it.

The evening sermon was by Brother T. W. Williams, who also baptized six candidates at the close of the morning sermon. Apostle Paul M. Hanson presided at night, and while many of our guests had gone home, still the church was comfortably filled, and a number of nonmembers from the neighborhood were there and made themselves known.

The church work here is going forward in all departments. Besides the Sunday school, we have also the Religio, Sister Carpender presiding, assisted by Sister Eunice Smith and Brother Bruce Crayne; and the Department of Women, under the direction of Sister Mather and Sister Ball.

On Saturday night the teachers and officers of the Sunday school are meeting in a supper table conference, at which the guest of honor and principal speaker will be Doctor Cheverton, of the California Christian College. On Tuesday evening the Good Time Club will entertain in the smaller auditorium with a Saint Patrick's party. This organization exists for the purpose of providing a happy social occasion each month. The New Year's Eve watch party was largely attended, with Apostles Budd and D. T. Williams as guests. The February party filled the upstairs foyer and parlors.

One of our missions, Belvedere, has grown until it was organized into a branch last Wednesday evening, with V. L. Lum, elder, Henry Backer, priest, Joseph Farley, teacher, Albert Gardner, deacon, Jennie Paulson, clerk, and Wallace Farley, music director. This branch is to be known as the East Los Angeles Branch. This will take some fifty or sixty members from our roll, and though we regret to see them go, we hope to soon enroll others who are in the city and as yet unconnected.

The golden California sunshine makes this place a goal of many tourists, among whom often come Saints. We regretted to say good-by to the D. H. Crick family and the Bert Peterson family of Independence; also to Sister Howland and her daughter Bessie who went back to live in Zion. We are always glad to welcome any Saints who come to live or come to visit. Sister Rosa Tier and Brother Lemuel Vail of Independence have both been here most of the winter. Sister Tier has been entertaining Brother and Sister Weingarden, of London, Canada, Sister Mortimore of Boston and Sister Briner, once of Kansas City, have been with us of late.

Brother R. Wayne Smith, who is teaching in a high school in San Diego, spent the first Sunday of the month with his home folks, the pastor and family.

Midlands District Reunion in England

It has been my privilege to attend the reunion of the Midlands District, held at Leicester on January 10 and 11, and it will remain in my memory for some time as the young people's reunion, for the spirit of our young people was the predominant factor throughout, and a great appeal was made by them for consideration to be given from the older Saints.

Saturday evening was taken up by talks from the leaders of the various departments, and from the very commencement and in every speech there was the cry from the youth of this district to be allowed to do things. It was infectious, and prevailed through the services of the day following. It was a splendid feast to both old and young, and one that we shall not easily forget.

What a peculiar thing, that this district is presided over by three men, two of whom represent the young element, and the third, the older Saints.

Elder J. E. Meredith is one of the older Saints who has proved himself a man of God. He represents the wisdom of age, and he is ably assisted by Elder T. Bailey of Birmingham, a bright young man, son of an illustrious father, Elder John Bailey of Manchester (killed in an accident), and also by Elder Joseph Holmes, of Langwith, Derbyshire. These men reminded me of Aaron and Hur, ever ready to hold up the hands of the president of the district. May God bless this district.

I also attended the Southern District conference, held on the \footnote{The Saints' Herald for April 1, 1925} week-end following, and it seemed as if the spirit of the Midlands District had invaded this Southern District as well, for the theme here was also, “The young of our people, and their place in the work of the church.”

Brother Judd, the district president here, is a man who has great sympathy with the young, and he endeavors to encourage them. This is fitting, seeing that he has been appointed the supervisor of the Sunday school work in this land.

Following the conference in Leicester, I stayed over and gave lectures on the Book of Mormon for five nights, showing slides that I had received through the kindness of many friends, and a good interest was manifest, for the Saints and friends turned out in force every night.

After the Southern District conference, I also gave two lectures, on the Wednesday and Thursday following.

On Saturday, January 24, a social was held at the Enfield Branch, and a splendid display of talent was made, vocally and instrumentally. A real pleasant time was spent. Go ahead, Enfield! Let the folks have more of that kind of a night, and when possible let me be present, will you?

A new spirit seems to have come into our work in this mission, and we pray that it will continue. May God help us to be considerate for each other, always, for therein lies the secret of success.

ABEL HALL

Stockton, California

February 25.—The attendance at most of the services continues good, considering the heavy rains which we have had with but few days intermission throughout the past month. They have been truly showers of blessing, as some folks were beginning to fear another dry year such as last. At the present time, crop outlooks are very promising, and as a consequence a prosperous year is expected.

Recently we had the church interior redecorated; also the lighting system has been rearranged and all new fixtures installed, with a few additions. In the near future, improvements are planned for the basement.

On February 5, the Department of Women held a cafeteria supper which netted about $22. These suppers are held monthly and are for the purpose of raising funds for the various needed repairs and improvements.

The branch has just erected a tombstone over the grave of H. J. Davison. He endeared himself to the Stockton Saints by his faithful and untiring service while laboring here. We are sure there are many others who have not forgotten him—one of the church’s long-faithful missionaries. “Faith unto death” is the inscription placed on the stone.

All departments are active and under able leadership.

Onset, Massachusetts

On February 5 the campers at Onset gave a surprise party for Elder Coombs in honor of his seventy-seventh birthday. It has been his custom to have a party or gathering at his home every year on that evening, but this year nothing was planned, so it came as a complete surprise to him. There were singing and games until ten o’clock when a buffet lunch was served. The feature of the lunch was dried apple fried cakes made by Sister Coombs, which were delicious. Brother Coombs was presented with a bronze reading lamp, the presentation being made by Brother Herbert Floyd. All spent a pleasant evening.

This is only one of the many good times we have had here since summer. Quite a number of the Saints here having birthdays have given us an opportunity to plan some good times. Our Christmas activities were splendid and gave great cheer and satisfaction.

There are only seven families of Saints here on the grounds, and we are trying to keep the camp fires burning until reunion time comes again. For the benefit of those who are not in touch with us, but who spend part of the summer here, we would like to have you know what we are doing. After preaching at a quarter of eleven in charge of Elder Coombs, we have Sunday school at noon, with three classes represented. At half past seven in the evening a Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants study class is held, and prayer service is held each Wednesday night.

A bean supper and Valentine party is planned for Saturday evening, February 14. This is our first attempt at a supper, but if it is successful it will not be the last. You have no doubt heard of the famous Boston baked beans. We are serving ours “A la Onset” and hope they will become as well known. The proceeds will go to the Christmas offering.

Coldwater, Michigan

February 18.—The old branch that was organized here June 2, 1864, is still on the map. All of the old members, active at the time of the organization, have passed to their reward, and their children are now considered the senior members. We often think back on our childhood and cannot refrain from shedding tears when we think of the sacrifices the older Saints made in those days. But what blessings they enjoyed! They fasted, and prayed fervently, seeking for blessings promised to the obedient, and they received them. Surely sacrifice brings the blessings of heaven. Do the Saints in this age desire spiritual gifts and seek for them as the former Saints did?

We are in a fairly flourishing condition. At the business meeting in January, for the election of officers, Brother Star Corless was chosen president, with Brother Roy Bailey as superintendent of the Sunday school and Brother Morris Johnson as the Religio president.

Some of the classes in Religio are studying the Book of Mormon, and others are using the Doctrine and Covenants. After the lesson study and program a short period is given over to games and recreation. During the winter the Religio has been held in the homes on Thursday evening.

Sister Mae Scott is head of the Department of Women. These sisters are studying church history, besides having programs, and occasionally a social evening with light refreshments. To help the finances of the branch, the women give suppers and public bake sales.

Services for Sunday are as follows: Sunday school, 10 o’clock; preaching and prayer meeting at 11.30; preaching at 7 in the evening. When Brother Scott is in the city he often occupies both morning and evening, except the first Sunday in the month, when sacrament service is held. The local men are always willing to do their part when called upon and are frequently in the pulpit.

As a branch we feel we have much to be thankful for, and expect to labor on as best we can.

Our correspondent from Waterloo, Iowa, writes that the attendance of Saints and nonmembers has been increasing somewhat. They are having their church building repainted inside and repaired, Brother W. H. Wood, experienced painter, and several helpers doing the work. The Religio is holding a series of entertainments, the programs consisting of recitations, dialogues, vocal and instrumental music, and other attractive features.
Minneapolis, Minnesota

The Saints of the Minneapolis Branch have been kept busy with all the things that have been going on the last month or more. For the last ten days Elder L. G. Holloway has been holding a series of missionary services and will be here until March 22 at least.

On the 12th a proceedural was given, the proceeds going to the building fund. A special musical program was put on March 5, and was enjoyed. Another social event, a Saint Patrick’s Day party, added to the recreation features.

The young people’s prayer meetings are being held every Sunday morning before Sunday school and are of benefit. The Sunday school teachers’ class, meeting Sunday afternoons and taught by Brother A. M. Smith, our Sunday school superintendent, is well supported. Many important subjects have been taken up, and the discussions have been very helpful.

The branch was saddened by the death of Sister May O’Hara on February 11. The funeral was held at the church February 14.

Sister Shakespeare has left the Saints in Minneapolis for some time and is now working in Waterloo, Iowa.

February 22 Bessie Jordan was married to Eric Johnson, and they are now on their honeymoon.

The young people presented a play for the benefit of the building fund February 19, “Neighbors,” by Zona Gale. Some very clever acting was displayed by Cecil Freeman as “Mis’ Abel,” and Wesley Elvin as “Peter.” The remainder of the cast also did very well, and everyone enjoyed the play. A large part of the credit is due to Leslie DeLapp, who was the director.

Elder Adams, of Jasper, Minnesota, visited the branch recently and gave the Saints a very interesting talk.

Brother Kress, our pastor, has been away from the branch for the last week or more and is holding a series of meetings with the Saints of Frazee, Minnesota. The interest is very encouraging.

Fort Collins, Colorado

February 27.—The first Saturday in January the Department of Women began holding a light lunch sale at the home of one of the members, and have continued each Saturday since, and expect to keep it up. It really started with a chilly sale, the proceeds to start a building fund. As the weather became milder, and not conducive to a chilli appetite, the menu was changed; in fact it is changed nearly every week.

By the end of the month, a church was found with a “For Sale” sign on it, the necessary arrangements were made, and purchasing contract was signed. The building is located just two blocks from the magnificent new high school building, on the corner of Edwards and Peterson Streets.

The Saints are fortunate in having purchased a piano in the early fall, as they would not feel now that they could buy a piano, with all this burden of church debt on their shoulders. The seats are yet to be installed, as they are still using some old seats and borrowed pews from a neighboring church, but all are hopeful and happy with the increased capacity for service and working together in earnest.

Brother Frank B. Almond of Denver came February 15 and preached both morning and evening. The choir rallied to service after months of inactivity owing to inadequate room in the cottage where meetings were held. On this day of days for the Fort Collins Branch there were visitors from Longmont, Greeley, LaSalle, Wellington, Timnath, Laporte, and from Cheyenne, Wyoming. Some of these Saints, though members of the branch had never attended services here. It is hoped they will come often.

Brother Bruce E. Brown, our district president, visited the branch, and held services during the week. He came when negotiations were being made for the church, and was indeed a welcome guest at that time, as he always is.

Any missionaries or other Saints passing through the country from east to west, or otherwise, will be heartily welcomed. Let all feel themselves cordially invited to visit Fort Collins, Colorado.

Pensacola, Florida

The real news of the Pensacola Branch may be summed up in just a few words; namely, a series of meetings. Yet those few words speak volumes. God has sent his Spirit to rest upon Brother J. Charles May in telling the gospel story. The attendance is excellent and the interest beyond our expectations. Many are the ways people are expressing themselves as being glad to have heard Brother May’s sermons.

We believe we will be better understood in this part of the city, because of a sermon delivered on the vast difference between the true church and the western faction. Many have remarked, “Well, isn’t that strange? I surely thought they were the same,” and they seemed delighted to find that their neighbors were strictly against polygamy and its kindred evils. Ignorance can be excused, but it has kept many an honest soul in this place from hearing the pure gospel of Christ.

A number of our people have been ill with the influenza, but all are able to be up now.

We could not hold meetings on Monday and Tuesday, February 23 and 24, because of Mardi Gras festivities, but will begin again on Wednesday evening, and continue through the week.

We have tried to sow the seeds of truth as God would have them sown, and we are willing to leave the rest with him, but we feel that if not now, there will be a harvest to reap.

The Sunday school attendance is still holding its own, and the Religio meetings prove very interesting.

The agitation in the church does not seem to have any bad effect upon our work here, for as soon as Brother May began mingling with our people, he said he felt the spirit of unity and peace. We pray that all may be blessed thus, and that we may be able to retain this spirit of love.

Persia, Iowa

PERSIA, IOWA, March 11.—Since our last report we have had a visit from District President Joseph Lane. He was with us for the sacramental service this month, and after administering the sacrament he addressed the Saints on the duties of church members. It was a profitable time. Brother Lane also preached in the evening.

Arrangements have been made to hold meetings every Sunday this summer. We have tried several times to have prayer service, but it has not been a success, though they have been successful in Nauvoo where Brother Amos Berve, who used to be in Little Sioux District, is in charge. We feel that the meetings here should be a success also.

We were pleased to read the news from Wichita about class work. They have two classes, one in church history. This is in compliance with instruction given the church years ago, and many have been profited thereby.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Oakland, California

February 23.—The election of officers was a little delayed. Brother Virgil Etzenhouser, city missionary, was chosen president of the branch by more than a two-thirds majority. He has the backing of Saints and officers, and work is progressing.

The Department of Women has just completed the building of an additional room to our church with funds raised last year. Sister J. D. White, president, is a very earnest and able worker.

The Religio announces a social evening February 28, at which there will be an exhibition of the work of some of the classes, consisting of millinery and lamp shades. Sister Ethel Christensen, superintendent, is holding good attendance.

Sister Insee is putting life into her Sunday school department work that keeps attendance at an excellent mark considering our scattered condition.

Brother Albert Carmichael gave us an excellent lesson in church government and authority. His illustrations were very plain and convincing.

Melrose Mission

Melrose Mission is under the direct charge of Brother Virgil Etzenhouser and is enjoying a spirit of cooperation and good fellowship.

The Department of Women has a temporary organization three weeks old. They have already given a pie social by which they raised over $17 to assist them in buying material. The social was held at the home of a mission member and was supported almost entirely by members of the mission. Sister Nellie MacDougall was chosen as their leader, and wonderful enthusiasm is shown at their meetings.

Last Tuesday evening fifteen mission members set out on an "enthusiasm tour" in three automobiles, ending up at the home of Sister W. D. Love, recently of Seattle, just in time to help uncrate their furniture. The evening was so successful that we have decided to devote an evening a week to those tours.

Sacramental service was held here for the first time February 1. A choir has been organized with regular practice nights appointed. All are happy in their new work.

Fanning, Kansas

The work here is still onward. A few families have moved to larger branches, and all are missed, but we hope others will have their presence at the meetings.

The Department of Women was entertained last month at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Long, quite a number being present. Sister Long offered her resignation as vice president of the local department; they are moving to Kansas City, Missouri. Sister Margaret Dittemore was chosen to fill her place. Fancycraft was given out for the sisters to prepare for the bazaar to be held this fall. A food sale was also planned, to be held at Troy on March 7. The bazaar was a success, $35 being realized.

Brother R. L. Tilden is quite a radio man. He has installed several radios throughout this part of the country and has a large one in his home which is connected with the school building, so the school gets to hear the programs put out by the Kansas State Agricultural College each day. They also heard the inaugural program and the President's address. It was a great privilege to hear this program. We always try to hear the church station and are thankful when we are successful. Keep the good work going.

Sister Schmidt of Troy has been very sick for the past month or so, but is much improved at this time. Douglas Burbridge, also of Troy, has been very sick with mumps, but is improving.

Pisgah, Iowa

Our branch president for the year is Brother George Meggers, with Mark Hutchinson for Sunday school and Charles Wall president of the Religio. Brother Meggers feels his responsibility very much, but he is a capable man and has the help of a number of faithful Saints, and Grandfather Lane is ever ready to lend a helping hand. He was our pastor for years, and his ever-beaming face gives all encouragement when he is in our midst.

Brother Mark Hutchinson is a new man here, having moved from Bozeman, Montana, last year. We are glad to have him and his family with us, as they are splendid help, and our branch had begun to feel the need of worthy helpers, for a number have moved away.

Sister Pearl Van Eaton is the head of our Department of Women. Her health has been very poor most of the winter, but she is improving and is planning to attend conference. The Department of Women here is a success, and the sisters have all the work they can do. They have a building on the church lot for their meetings and social gatherings.

Deacon Charles Van Eaton is in charge of the branch finances. Sometimes he finds it hard to keep ahead, but he does not give up and finally gets his hands on our hearts and pocketbooks, and we are safely sailing again. Last fall he was in need of money to help paint the church and reshingle the south side, so one sister, with the help of others, successfully planned and carried out a chicken social. Cards were sent to all the members, as well as a number of nonmembers, asking them to bring one or more chickens to Van's store. When all were weighed and shipped, they had a check for $54. The men were so pleased that they set a day and began work on the church, and in a few days the church came out in a new coat. In the spring it will be papered and electric lights will be installed.

Central Michigan

Bay City, March 9.—March 2, Apostle E. J. Gleazer came into our district. His first stop was at Saginaw where he delivered a very fine discourse. The Saints were disappointed that he could not give them more of his time. His intentions were to spend a week in the district, so he could not remain long in one place. His next stop was at Midland, where District President Matthew Umphrey was holding a very successful series of meetings, and to date twenty-one have been converted to the restored angel's message, and have been admitted by baptism into the fold.

Brother Gleazer was given a very hearty welcome by these noble people, and they were able to catch the vision of Zion and her ideals as he ably set them forth among them. Wednesday he journeyed by automobile to Coleman, where Brother John Grice from the Eastern District had been holding successful gospel meetings, and ten more were added to the church by baptism. Brother Grice gave way for Brother Gleazer to occupy in the evening an audience of about two hundred people, many of them nonmembers. His subject was Zion, where character building had reached that state where man would be able to feel it is more blessed to give than to receive, and that man was born to serve and be his brother's keeper.

After the close of the service, the brethren drove over to Beaverton about thirteen miles and rested for the night. Thursday evening about one hundred and thirty-five where Elder Gleazer delivered another address to distinct voice, and is blessed with the Spirit of God, so that hold our district conferences. then took his journey across country about twenty miles to other parts. We felt to say, God bless and keep him, that he might be able to give service to others as he had rendered us. The Saints went to their homes with a deeper sense of responsibility and with a greater vision of what it means to be a true follower of Christ, feeling the need of a practical demonstration of our ideals of stewardships, so the world may be able to see Zion indeed.

We also felt assured that in the coming General Confer­

Blessings Succeed Trial and Labor

Wells, Michigan, March 3.—It has been several years since any news from this place has appeared in the Herald, but we have been busy and have enjoyed reading the church paper.

About seven years ago we left Marion, Michigan, and went to Jennings, where we found a few Saints who were in need of spiritual food. This we imparted as best we could. After some struggle we began to see fruit from our labor and were able to gain friends to our work, soon establishing the different departments of the work. The influence that goes out from this work began to reach the outside, and we were invited to join in a union Sunday school in the Meth­odist church. We saw an opportunity here, if we moved wisely, and as a result got the gospel before these people. We soon had some of our supplies in use and some of our people teaching, while I was appointed superintendent at the next business meeting. They had no minister, so I was invited to preach in their church. We had good attendance and fine interest, and all went well until we baptized some of their people. Then we received a visit from the district superintendent, and we were forbidden to use their church. However, we baptized the secretary of the Sunday school and several others, eleven in all. The minister announced he would preach in the church, but by the time he had preached a few times no one came to hear him. We then had a larger building and the crowd.

Due to need of employment we had to leave this place, as the mill was about to shut down. We were directed to Wells, Michigan, and three of those we baptized came north with us. The work was entirely new, in a strong Catholic locality, but we put up the gospel standard and began in our homes with regular meetings. Soon we had invitations to hold meetings in the homes of some of the neighbors.

We came here the first of August, and in February we lost our baby girl. In March I was taken suddenly sick, and conditions became very serious. Three days later my son Allen was taken sick, while the doctor said I had slight chance to pull through, and that was by going to the hospital where I could be given the most careful attention. I was taken to the hospital, never to see my boy again, for he passed away while I was struggling for life. I have felt many times that my companion could not have endured these trials had it not been for the hope she had and the prayers of the Saints. After several weeks of suffering the Lord saw fit to spare my life.

At this time Elder A. E. Stark, then the district president, sent to our aid Elder Matthew Bereley. He was the first older we had met since crossing the straits, and he proved to be a true servant of God. When we think of this experience we remember this brother. Later we got in touch with Elder R. D. Davis and Brother Charles C. Howe, who administered to me when the doctor and nurse had very little hope for me. God saw fit to bless their administrations and raised me up. My heart goes out to him for this blessing. We later learned that the Saints in different places had been fasting and praying, and the Lord raised up friends around us. We had been here only six months, yet strangers far and near offered their services, and I learned before leaving the hospital that food, clothing, money had come to my companion, while many came and insisted on helping in some way. Many times I wondered how I could meet all the expense, and one day two well-dressed women came into the room and told me not to worry about my family for they would be cared for. They also told me not to worry about my hospital bill, for they wanted to see me get well and return to my family. My astonishment and joy were so great that I could not freely express my gratitude. However, it was sufficient, and God came to my rescue so that they were greatly impressed and have been as mothers to me and mine. At the factory where I worked the men were approached by my foreman and all did what they could to help. I only mention these things to show how God answered the prayers of his Saints in raising up friends for us.

Following this the way opened up for our work. When I was strong again I did some baptizing. The first one we have record of in these parts was my daughter Mabel; then others followed, one or two at a time, until our two-day meeting held last July, at which time eight were baptized. This winter we had the most successful meetings of all, thirty-five being baptized, making our membership seventy-three. It will be five years next August since we came here, and it has been about three years since the branch was organized, which was started with two families. About one year ago we bought a church in Gladstone, near here, which will be the central place, as Wells is not permanent.

Though we have suffered much, we have enjoyed many great blessings. We have a wonderful field to work and a great many still to be gathered in. God surely recognized us and heard our prayers. Before we put on the series of meetings, we had special fast meetings and prayed that God would bless the effort and that the people might be drawn out to hear. Some good people had been attending for some time, and they passed it on, so that attendance rapidly increased, and soon they began to obey.

We have a lot of fine Saints in Gladstone and some good talent among the young people as well as the old. We should have a good missionary located at Gladstone to work from that point. This would bring good results to the church, for the field is ready for harvest.

It will be interesting to Laman Saints to learn that Brother Jesse Denio is now active in the work and is enjoying great blessings. His family is becoming interested and express themselves as favorable to joining the church. They are now taking part in the Sunday school and are attending the meetings regularly.

Alliance, Ohio

March 4.—Elder J. C. McConnaughy of Barberton met with the Alliance Saints January 25, and was the speaker at both the morning and evening services. We enjoy his sermons and look forward to his visits in our homes.

On February 15, Sister Saunders was buried at this place, though not a member of this branch. She was sixty-eight years old and had been staying with her daughter during her last illness. She was buried from the United Brethren Church four miles in the country, Elder McConnaughy preaching. Many years ago he preached in their home in West Virginia. The United Brethren minister offered the opening prayer and was kind in many ways, thanking Brother McConnaughy for the analysis of the Scriptures which he gave, stating that he thought it very fine. There was a large crowd of nonmembers, and the sermon presented phases of our faith in a plain and simple manner.

Brother Louis Gintz, district field worker for the Department of Recreation and Expression, with his wife, of Akron, met with us February 22. He gave a very interesting talk on the work of the department, and was the speaker at the evening service. His illustrations were a little different and very good. The old, old story told in a different way.

A sad circumstance happened among us in the death of Sister Gertrude Thomas's little four-year-old girl, who passed away with pneumonia. She died at the home of her sister in New Philadelphia where she had been visiting for a week. Sister Thomas and two little children at home were quarantined with diptheria, so could not attend the funeral. Her husband and four children are now on the other side. Our pastor, Elder R. A. Smith, preached the funeral sermon.

A Civic League was organized in our city, and our people given a special invitation to join with them, which several did, its object being to promote better conditions in our city; its membership to be composed of people with good moral reputations and standing in the community. Our pastor has been chosen as a trustee, and one of the sisters as secretary. We feel this speaks well for our standing in a moral way.

East Los Angeles Branch

Los Angeles, California, March 5.—A new branch was organized in East Los Angeles on March 4. This branch has grown out of a mission begun about nine months ago in this vicinity to take care of about fifty of the Saints living in Belvedere, Boyle Heights, and the suburbs east of Los Angeles, many of whom found it difficult to make the trip to the Central Branch.

Those of the ministry present at the organization were N. T. Chapman, district president; Walter W. Smith, pastor of Central Branch; Apostles John W. Rushton, T. W. Williams, and Paul M. Hanson.

The following officers of the priesthood were elected: V. L. Lum, pastor; H. F. Backer, presiding; Albert Gardner, deacon; Joseph Farley, teacher.

The Sunday school has an attendance of from fifty to sixty each Sunday.

Another department which is active is the Department of Women, meeting each week. Material aid has been given to some who were in need both in the church and outside, and from a bazaar given last November about $200 was raised, which enabled the Saints to purchase chairs and secure a piano for the rented hall which they occupy at 5437 East Fourth Street.

God has been pleased to grant unto us his Spirit in all our meetings to a wonderful degree, and the Saints are united in their desire to assist in building up the kingdom of God in that locality.

Hamilton, Ontario

March 12.—The activities of the branch are progressing, with Elder Hannah in charge. An all-day meeting was held March 1, Elder Fred Gregory being the speaker, with Bishop McLean of Toronto assisting. Elder Gregory continued his lectures through the week, which were interesting and inspiring. Cottage meetings were also held this week.

Sunday school is well attended, and all work together for the advancement of the cause which must eventually go to the world.

February 12 the Department of Women, under the direction of Sister Osborne, who is president, gave a successful birthday social and entertainment, about seventy-five enjoying the good things prepared by the sisters, a noticeable feature of which were two large birthday cakes. The admission was one cent for each year of age. A good sum was realized. This department also received $18 from the Parisian Laundry by seventy-six sisters and their friends visiting the laundry.

The Saints' Herald for April 1, 1925
Independence

Stone Church

Sunday services were all well attended. In the morning Apostle Clyde F. Ellis, just returned from the Society Islands, gave a very fine sermon, and in the evening Apostle M. A. McConley from Australia was the speaker.

The First Independence Sunday school will function as usual in all departments on conference Sundays except in the adult department. The space used by classes of this department will be used to care for the visitors. Having insufficient room for the regular sessions, it was thought absolutely necessary to ask the older ones to give way to the children and young people at these particular sessions of conference.

Two improvements have recently been made in the Sunday school facilities. The beginner department has four new screens, making ten in all, with blackboards and tables. The intermediate department has six more curtained classrooms, making twelve in all. The six installed one year ago have been such a great help to the teachers that the small expense is trivial in comparison. The policy of the executives is to give one hundred per cent cooperation to the teachers by special training courses and conferences, also by improving permanent equipment.

Independence will be a busy place during the General Conference. Already visitors are beginning to arrive, although activities do not begin until Thursday morning, when the priesthood has been called together for preliminary services. Sacramental service will be held Sunday morning, and Monday morning the conference will be organized at ten o'clock. Special programs are being arranged for the evenings, which will be of interest to all.

Second Church

Bishop Charles J. Hunt delivered a splendid discourse Sunday morning on keeping the financial law. Sunday's evening sermon was by Elder A. M. Baker, who drew a large congregation.

The juniors were taken to the Walnut Park church Sunday morning in order to permit them to hear Brother John F. Martin's sermon to children, and those who conveyed them feel well repaid for their effort.

The church has been placed in the hands of the First Presidency until after conference, and they will order all meetings and appoint the speakers. The first meeting they have announced is the sacramental service for Sunday morning to be in charge of Apostles Hanson and Williams. At 7:30 Apostle D. T. Williams is to be the speaker.

The seven-weeks infant of L. C. and Sister White died Saturday and was buried in Mound Grove Cemetery Monday afternoon. Brother William H. Kelley delivered a beautiful and comforting sermon as a part of the service at the home.

A sad accident occurred late Monday afternoon in Kansas City when Brother Tullis Gordon, of this congregation, and one of his associates were crushed beneath an elevator on top of a large building under construction. He leaves a wife and six children. Brother Gordon held the office of priest and was active in choir work, so his loss will be greatly felt by the congregation as well as by his interesting family. The sympathy of the community is unusually enlisted. Funeral arrangements are not yet complete.

Walnut Park

The sermon last Sunday evening on "Taking Christ in earnest" was a fitting close to the series of sermons preached during the past week by Patriarch John F. Martin. Attendance at services during the series has been exceptionally good, reaching its climax on the closing Sunday with an attendance of over four hundred both in the morning and in the evening.

Brother Martin not only made a special appeal during the week to the young men and to the young women, but he also did something that is seldom done in a series of this kind. He preached a sermon especially for the little folks, and their demonstration of interest proved the value of the service to them. All of us, both young and old, benefited by the week of services.

A round table was conducted Sunday afternoon at half past two by Brother Martin, and after his talk about "doers," a committee was chosen by those present to take steps toward the accomplishing of some of the things he placed before us for consideration. If these plans bear fruit, Walnut Park will be a little nearer Zionic conditions.

Liberty Street

The Temple Builders held an open meeting the evening of March 30, at which time Patriarch Ammon White addressed a good-sized audience. The program was opened with a chorus by the Laurel Circle of the Orioles, which was followed by two numbers by the Temple Builder Quartet. Then after a number by the Girls' Quartet of Liberty Street, prayer was offered by Pastor J. M. Baker. In all, the program proved to be very interesting, and all enjoyed the talk by Brother White.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey preached last Sunday morning on the subject of truth, and in the evening Elder J. W. Metcalf concluded his series of sermons on gospel subjects, taking for his closing subject, "Eternal Judgment." This series has proved profitable to all who attended.

Sunday afternoon occurred the funeral of Brother Louis Allen Innan of this city, who passed away March 27. Brother Innan was born in Walkerton, Indiana, and was baptized by J. C. Foss in 1882. His wife, son, and one daughter preceded him, leaving two daughters to mourn his death. The funeral was held from Liberty Street church, with sermon by Elder J. M. Baker, assisted by Brother W. D. Bullard. Interment was in Citizen's Cemetery.

Enoch Hill

Sunday the 22d we were pleased to have Elder J. W. A. Bailey as our speaker in the forenoon. He delivered a very forceful sermon to a crowded house. At 7 p. m. Apostle T. W. Williams preached a powerful gospel sermon which was well received by a large congregation.

Last Sunday we had the pleasure of having Apostle P. M. Hanson with us. He occupied the morning hour with a very fine talk on his experiences in the Holy Land. At the 7 o'clock hour Bishop J. F. Keir delivered one of his usual forceful sermons to a large and appreciative audience.

The usual Sunday school hour was given over to rally day exercises. The church was crowded to capacity. Sister W. L. Cowan, superintendent of Sunday schools in Zion, was with us and gave a very fine address which was both instructive and helpful.

The young people at their Wednesday night prayer service this week are expecting to have Elder J. Charles May with them. He will address them and encourage them in their work.

Monday and Tuesday, the 30th and 31st, at 8 p. m., Elder J. W. A. Bailey will deliver two sermons. Friends are invited.

Spring Branch

Next Friday night Brother Harvey Minton, recently returned to Independence from his mission field in Maine, will tell some of his experiences in missionary work. He will greatly add to the interest of the talk by showing pictures which he has taken and made into slides. Visitors will be welcome to come and enjoy this treat with us.
Sunday morning Apostle M. A. McConley was the speaker. All are interested in hearing what these returned missionaries have to say, for their experiences have been wide and varied.

Last Friday evening the Religion program was given by visitors from the Stone Church. The small congregations are always glad to have others come in and help out in the good work.

Englewood

The box social held recently was quite a success, and $12 was raised to add to the building fund. The Saints here are anxious to begin their new church, and work will be begun as soon as $1,000 in cash is in hand. All are hoping that the ground may be broken before many weeks have passed.

Elder J. E. Vanderwood, who has been for some time in the missionary field, was the speaker Sunday morning. The evening hour was occupied by Brother J. W. Paxton.

East Independence

On March 27 Brother Harvey Minton entertained the Religion by relating some of his experiences in his missionary work. The talk was supplemented by stereopticon views taken by Brother Minton at Vinal Haven, Maine.

There was a large attendance at both the morning and evening services Sunday, Brother A. H. Parsons being the speaker in the morning and Brother Harry Friend in the evening.

At Sunday school several changes were made in the classes for the new quarter. A meeting was announced for Tuesday evening to discuss ways and means of helping to improve the work of the Sunday school.

Lamoni Stake Items

LAMONI, IOWA, March 29.—The stake chorister, Miss Mabel Cardile, has been doing double duty this week. Among her main accomplishments, however, are concerts given at Chariton and Hiteian by the combined northern stake choirs. She regards this stake choir work as among her most successful projects. There is a group of very talented, consecrated musicians in the northern part of the stake who have taken up this work with a zeal and have worked hard all winter for the advancement of the work of the stake, with the result that the concerts this week were a splendid success. They were rendered to crowded houses at both places, and if expressions from leading musicians of the town and urgent invitations for return engagements are any index, they were greatly appreciated. No doubt much good will be accomplished in this way and much prejudice overcome which otherwise would remain intact.

The northern stake musicians are very grateful to a group of singers from Lamoni who aided them not only in the concerts but in their regular practice during the winter.

The Lamoni-Graceland Oratorio Society is hard at work on the Elijah, expecting to give the second annual rendition during the Young People's Convention in June.

The call of the wild has been strong this month, and various picnics and hiking parties have been in order. Among them was a hike to North Woods, a distance of five miles, taken by Leonard Bish and his pack of Wolf Cubs. The Cubs divided into two sections and went different roads. The first group to arrive hid in a secluded spot in the woods, leaving behind them trail marks. It was great sport for both searchers and searched, and their hiding place was so well selected that it was not discovered except by a wolf call from the leader. An afternoon of games, supper cooked over a bonfire, and a tired bunch of boys arrived home about half past eight in the evening.

A problems meeting held two weeks ago, led by A. Max Carmichael, elicited considerable interest. Mr. Carmichael has a splendid faculty of asking most unheard-of questions which jar the most alert reasoner and then failing to answer them, leaving the student to think it out on his own resource. Mothers are still wondering.

The speakers last Sunday at the church were Apostle D. T. Williams in the morning and Elder Peter Muceus at night.

Elder L. G. Holloway returned this week from holding a successful series of meetings in Minneapolis, Minnesota.

The air is full of whisperings of, Are you going to conference? Lamoni will send a large representation.

Holden Stake Conference

The conference of Holden Stake met at Lexington, Missouri, March 7 and 8. The first session was a prayer service Saturday morning, Brethren C. L. House and G. W. Rodger in charge. It was a splendid introductory service for the conference. The Spirit was present in power.

At eleven o'clock the business of the conference was taken up. The stake presidency and the general officers present were associated as the presidency of the conference. The secretary of the stake acted as secretary of the conference. The stake musical director was given charge of the music. Reports were received from the stake presidency, stake bishop, stake epitome, stake recorder, stake Sunday school superintendent, superintendent of the Department of Women, superintendent of the Department of Recreation and Expression, stake musical director, and elders' quorum. Report of the auditing committee on accounts of stake bishop, certifying same to be correct, was adopted. At noon the conference adjourned to the lower auditorium, where luncheon was served by the Lexington Saints.

A meeting of the elders' quorum was held at 1:30 p.m., Elder C. L. House, president of the quorum, in charge. At the same time the Aaronic priesthood met, with Bishop A. B. Phillips in charge. Right of voice was extended to all members of the church present. The following ordinations were authorized: Charles H. Belkham to the office of elder; Garfield Coleman to the office of teacher; Ray W. Eddleman to the office of deacon; and A. C. Brock to office of priest. Sixteen delegates were chosen to General Conference, as follows: D. J. Krahl, A. B. Phillips, Lola A. Johnson, F. A. McWethy, W. S. Macrae, C. V. Hopkins, R. F. Moorman, R. E. Burgess, C. F. Searell, I. M. Ross, G. W. Beebe, G. W. Rodger, R. B. Cook, D. R. Carmichael, Sister I. M. Ross, J. W. A. Bailey.

At 7:45 Saturday evening a musical prelude in charge of the stake musical director was given, which was followed by a sermon by Apostle J. F. Curtis, assisted by Elder Charles Martin.

On Sunday morning at 8 o'clock Elder C. V. Hopkins and R. E. Burgess were in charge of the prayer meeting. At 9:45 the regular session of the Lexington Sunday school was held with local superintendent, William T. Beard, and C. F. Searell, stake Sunday school superintendent, in charge. At the same time the department superintendents met the workers of their respective departments, discussing problems relative to their special work. The 11 o'clock service was in charge of Elder Alvin Knisley, and the sermon was by Apostle J. F. Curtis. Two children were blessed at this service. An offering for conference expenses was taken up, which amounted to $18.77.
Conference adjourned at noon to the lower auditorium for dinner, where they were again entertained by the Lexington Saints. Beginning at 1:30 a thirty-minute musical program was rendered. At 2 o'clock the conference met in a short business session and to listen to sermons from some of the visiting brethren present. A vote of thanks was tendered in the hands of the stake presidency and bishopric, the question of holding a reunion in 1925 was rendered. At 2 o'clock the conference met in a short session.

The Lexington visiting brethren present. A vote of thanks was tendered in the hands of the stake presidency and bishopric, the question of holding a reunion in 1925 was rendered. At 2 o'clock the conference met in a short session.

The matter of holding a reunion in 1925 was by motion left in the hands of the stake presidency and bishopric, the question of holding same to be determined by circumstances and conditions prevailing. The matter of church building on the Milton Road was referred to the stake president and bishop in harmony with a similar action previously passed by the high council and bishopric. Sermons were given by Bishop J. F. Keir, Elder W. D. Tordoff, Bishop A. B. Phillips, and Elder E. A. Davis. These were very interesting and highly appreciated by the Saints. Brethren A. C. Brock and Ray Eddleman were ordained priest and deacon respectively by Elders W. S. Macrae and G. W. Rodger. The Saints in unison repeated the Lord's prayer, after which the benediction was pronounced by Elder R. F. Moorman. Conference adjourned to meet at Sedalia, Missouri, in June, at the call of the stake presidency.

Sunday, March 15, was observed by the Religio as rally day. At eleven o'clock a splendid program was rendered. Brethren Freekin Hampton and D. R. Carmichael, the local and stake superintendents, were in charge. A basket dinner was held at noon in the Home auditorium and a young people's prayer meeting at three o'clock at the church. A special program was given at the regular session at six o'clock. Brother Carmichael gave an address in the evening. It was an enjoyable day.

Holden church has lost two of its very faithful members of late, Sister William W. Owens and Brother W. H. Walrath. Sister Owens died on the 14th inst. She had been a member of the church for fifty-five years, uniting with the church at the age of eleven years. Brother Walrath, who died on the 19th inst., was a teacher, and a member of the church for nearly fifty-four years. He was very particular in regard to his church duties. Though suffering much and of a good old age, eighty-seven, he was always at church when possible. These two faithful Saints will be greatly missed.

At the writing and spelling contest of the grammar grades of Holden and western Johnson County, Sister Lois Ament was awarded first prize in penmanship and Sister Margaret Ament second prize in spelling. There were forty contestants.

Grandview

The Grandview Saints have been enjoying some splendid sermons from the visiting ministry. Sunday morning, February 22, D. J. Krahl was with us and occupied. March 15 Richard Bullard was with us and occupied both morning and evening, giving some splendid food for thought. He was also present at the junior choir in the afternoon and gave us some good advice in regard to the music department of the church.

Sunday, March 3, R. D. Weaver was a visitor. During the morning hour he discoursed on "What profit a man, though he gain the whole world and yet lose his own soul?" giving an original but forceful interpretation to the text. In the evening his theme was "The mission of the Christ." There is always a hearty welcome awaiting Brother Weaver at Grandview, and he leaves the Saints uplifted and encouraged.

A number of the Saints here attended the stake conference at Lexington. They report a most enjoyable time and feel they were amply repaid for the trip.

Lees Summit

Wednesday night, March 4, thirty-eight attended our regular Wednesday night prayer meeting. A good spirit was present, and each felt repaid for his effort. Wednesday night March 11, thirty attended.

Both the senior and junior choirs are busy working on our Easter cantata. Thirty were present Tuesday evening to practice. Sunday morning, March 15, Bishop James F. Keir was the speaker. He gave us a splendid and uplifting sermon. A good crowd attended. Our pastor, Wilfrid D. Tordoff, gave us a fine sermon in the evening. Twenty-five non-members were present, making a total of eighty.

Mr. Robert Shepherd, a good violinist and one who has been helping us with his violin, was baptized Sunday, March 15, by Elder C. DeFuy at Independence. The Saints who attended the baptism remained for the afternoon prayer meeting in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church. A spiritual feast was ours to enjoy. Brother Ammon White delivered a message of encouragement and warned us to be more humble and prayerful.

Lexington

Since our last items we have been a very active group. In February we were privileged to have Brother E. A. Davis with us, and his sermons gave us something we will not soon forget. He preached one week, and we wish he could have continued. At our sacramental service we were blessed with the Spirit that caused us all to rejoice. The Holden stake conference was held here March 7 and 8. We had a fine conference—a large attendance and some very able speakers. The sermons were all enjoyed by our people. Since our last items we have had two more baptisms: Sister Elizabeth Nance, an aged sister, who said she had been looking for a church like this for forty years, was baptized by J. A. Brendel and confirmed by H. E. Moler and M. F. Beebe; Dale Beebe, eight years old, was baptized by Finis Beebe and confirmed by J. A. Brendel and J. E. Johnson.

Sunday, March 15, Brother Finis Beebe spoke in the morning and J. E. Johnson at the evening hour.

Vinal Haven, Maine

March 14.—Elder Harvey V. Minton delivered his farewell sermon March 14, to a good-sized audience. A wonderful spirit was present, and it brought sadness to the hearts of the Saints, for the next day Brother Minton and his family expected to depart for Independence to attend General Conference.

The Saints regret the loss of such active workers for the Master as Brother Minton and his companion, who deserve praise for their godly cooperation with the Saints. Their departure will recall many happy hours to the Saints here of labors together, and our prayers will be with them as with all in the faith.

Brother Minton recently closed a series of meetings which lasted two weeks. There were no baptisms, but good seed was sown, interest aroused, and we hope results will be apparent in the near future.

Quite a number of the Saints here have been sick. We ask prayers in their behalf.

The sisters have started a series of suppers to be held each fortnight to help defray the church building debt.

Requests for Prayers

I have been suffering all winter with rheumatism. My hands are swollen and my fingers are becoming sore and stiff, I ask the Saints to pray for me for the first Sunday in April, that if it is God’s will I may be healed; also that I may be blessed with more of the Holy Spirit, and that my sons and daughters may become members, helping to build up His kingdom. I know nothing is impossible with God, and the prayers of the righteous avail much.

The General Conference

The atmosphere which surrounds the gathering of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in General Conference is a distinctive one, and a genuine attraction.

Attending a reunion is very good; two-day meetings and quarterly conferences are enjoyable; but General Conference—that is what every Saint desires to attend, and having attended once, the barrier must be an effective one if he does not drift back to attend again.

About April 1 the feeling that always accompanies a conference of the elders and delegates began to become very strong, and as the members of the priesthood presented themselves in the Stone Church auditorium at ten o'clock on the morning of Thursday, April 2, in response to the call issued by the First Presidency, one was able to find representatives from all parts of the mission field, and that cosmopolitan feeling first experienced by many in their first attendance of a General Conference came strongly again.

President Frederick M. Smith called the meeting to order. He was assisted by his counselors, Presidents Elbert A. Smith and Floyd M. McDowell. Characteristic old-time Saints' hymns were sung, and the great volume from the men's voices was good to hear.

Fervent prayers opened the session. Consecrated, devout, humble men of the ministry continued the importuning of the Father and the Son, and the burden of the petition was that God might bestow peace upon the church and instruct his servants.

At the close of the season of prayer President F. M. Smith arose and stated that he supposed everyone present had sensed the feeling of reserve that had been there. He stated that the year had been one of anxiety and turmoil and that the General Conference opened under this condition.

He held in his hand a bunch of pamphlets which were a reprint of his contribution to the HERALD of June 18, 1924, commonly known as the report of the April council and containing the document on church government. He stated that he was submitting it to the priesthood of the church and asking them to assemble in their quorum capacities and take it under consideration, that the work of the conference would depend largely on the way in which it handled this document, and the work could be expedited, very largely, in this manner.

He later appeared before the several quorums and called attention to the other portions of these minutes of the April council and asked that secondary consideration be given to the general economic program of the church as it is stated in the latter portion of the document, and also to the portion which deals with the rehabilitation of the auditorium fund and the building of that structure.

The assembly was broken and several new ones formed, and the afternoon was spent in the consideration of the matter presented by President Smith.

Friday and Saturday were largely occupied by these same matters, and Monday morning many of the quorums came to a vote upon the document. It was voted upon with such understandings and modifications as to not be clearly indicative of the opinions of the quorum membership. However, the matter will go to the early business sessions of the conference and will soon be decided there.

The seventieth annual General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints met in the main auditorium of the Stone Church in Independence, Missouri, at 10 a.m., Monday, April 6, in first session.

The scene was reminiscent of the conferences of other years and quite unlike that of October, 1922 and 1923, when the General Conferences were held in great tabernacle tents.

By opening hour the building was filled by the ex officio, delegates, and visitors, and those not able to get into the main building were accommodated in the basement and dining hall, where loud speakers were installed so that all could hear the speakers on the conference floor even though they could not witness the historic scene.

Seating of the Conference

The quorums were arranged in the usual order. Presiding on the rostrum were the First Presidency:
Frederick M. Smith, Elbert A. Smith, and Floyd M. McDowell. Back of them were the members of the Quorum of Twelve, all twelve of whom were present. To the right of the Twelve were the Presiding Bishopric, Benjamin R. McGuire, James F. Keir, and Israel A. Smith. The rest of the rostrum and choir loft was filled by the Order of Bishops, High Priests, and Order of Evangelists. The Seventy occupied the center section of the main auditorium, and the elders and delegates were in the wings.

Conference Declared Open
At 10.15 President Frederick M. Smith declared the conference in order and announced hymn number 158, “Redeemer of Israel,” according to the time-honored custom of conferences stretching back through years.

Prayer of President Elbert A. Smith
The opening prayer as offered by President Elbert A. Smith was as follows:

O God, our heavenly Father, we look unto thee, not only as the author and creator of our beings, but also as the great founder and builder of the church. We come to thee conscious that in the scenes of the past, many times thou hast looked upon gatherings of thy people, great and small, hast seen their vicissitudes, their struggles, trials, and triumphs, and though we come unto thee with perplexing problems before us and with some degree of misunderstanding and difference of opinion in our minds, yet, Lord, we feel to desire that we may have some of that serenity and confidence that is thine—with all eternity in thy view.

Knowing thy great power that is in the church that was founded upon the rock against which the gates of hell shall not prevail; that even with a degree of thy divine confidence, untroubled in our souls, we may go forward, confident in the victory and triumph of thy church, we come, Lord, we trust not too greatly divided in heart. We are divided in mind, but we feel, Lord, that there is within the great body of thy people a general desire that thy will should be done. We may differ in our opinions as to what thy will is, but we seek after it, Lord, and we pray that in all things we may be led eventually to say, Not our will, but thine be done.

So, Lord, we look to see not our way, but thine. We pray that thou wilt lead us individually and as a church, and direct this conference, that out of its deliberation shall eventually come a time of union that shall be astonishing to us as we look back, and a degree of happiness and peace; that an era of peace may come to thy people. And may we go hence with a feeling of happiness that we do not now feel possible, and that by power and the demonstration of thy Spirit that was promised to thy children in these last days.

Hasten thy work, we pray, and may we be thine instruments. In Jesus' name; Amen.

Apostle J. A. Gillen and Elder A. C. Martin made a motion that the First Presidency preside over the conference, regulating the order of meetings and the general program, and empowering them to complete the organization by the appointment of such assisting officers as were necessary.

Elder Daniel Macgregor, of Canada, made objection from the ground that many questions in which the First Presidency are supremely interested were to come before this conference for decision, and he thought it fair to all that at least their presidency might be supplemented by the addition of a member of the Order of Evangelists, and he nominated Evangelist Frederick A. Smith to assist in presiding. The conference decided that the First Presidency should preside and rejected the amendment adding the presiding patriarch.

The Committee on Credentials report as published in the preconference reports was presented. A motion was made to adopt the report.

Petitions objecting to the seating of delegations from Lamoni Stake and Northern California were called up and upon request were read.

A motion of consideration obtained.

The motion was divided and the petition objecting to seating Lamoni delegation was taken up. The reasons assigned by the petition were that the delegation was chosen in violation of the rulings of General Conference, and that nominations had all been made by one man without opportunity for others to participate.

The Lamoni delegation was seated. Denial of the charges was made, and it was stated that opportunity had been given for nominations from the floor.

The matter of seating the delegation from Northern California was taken up and after full discussion was seated.

The session adjourned just before six o'clock.

Elder Frank B. Almond was the speaker in the auditorium Monday evening.

The Presidency made appointments to complete the organization:

Secretaries: R. S. Salyards and P. G. Fairbanks.

Stenographers: Howard Harder, assisted by Iva Gould, Mrs. A. M. Dobson, and Mrs. Lena Young Jones.

Press committee: C. E. Wight, W. W. Smith, and M. C. Fisher.

Ushers: The local deacons.

Organist: Robert Miller, assisted by Mrs. Russell Ettenhouser, and Mrs. J. A. Curtis.

Business session convened again Tuesday at ten o'clock, President Frederick M. Smith in the chair.

The question of approving the report of the Committee on Credentials consumed the time until 11.30. Objections were made to seating delegations under instructions unless they be seated according to the rules of the church relating to such delegations. But the report of the committee was accepted, the judgment of the conference being that further investigation was not necessary.
A question was sprung by one of the credentials committee as to the determination of number of delegates to which a body is entitled, and from this grew the action of the conference as follows: In the future the basis of representation shall be calculated on the membership of respective bodies at the time of the holding of the conferences.

The reports to the conference as published were presented and received.

President Frederick M. Smith then presented that portion of the proceedings of the council of April, 1924, referring to church government.

A substitute was presented by motion of Apostles J. F. Curtis and John W. Rushton, which states another view on church government.

Discussion began, Elder E. E. Long having the floor.

A motion limiting the time of speeches to thirty minutes for the remainder of the conference had been adopted.

The afternoon session opened at two o'clock and continued the debate on these questions.

Fair and Impartial

Despite Danger of Impartiality, We Can Afford no Other Course

A minister for Christ should never contend primarily for personal victory, nor to impress his own views. To attempt to suppress all that does not appeal to him as favoring the position he has assumed, to set aside as unimportant all that does not meet his personal approval is unworthy.

Yet the contingency of time must be considered. It is not practicable to quote every article or book in full to which reference is made. But there should be an effort made for fair quotation.

To omit essential words from a sentence is of course an extreme misrepresentation, and one fortunately we rarely run across.

As for example, a patent medicine man received a letter, "How on earth you can have the gall to sell your worthless medicine for fifty cents a bottle is more than I can see." His clerk asked, "What shall I do with this letter?" "Why," he said, "strike out 'have the gall to' and 'worthless' and publish it in our next advertisement."

Again our attention has been called to a case where the testimony of Joseph Smith in the Temple Lot Suit was changed by breaking off in the middle of a sentence and paragraph. The question was, Did Joseph the Seer designate his son to be his successor? The paragraph is as follows:

"No, sir, I did not state that I was ordained by my father; I did not make that statement. I was not ordained by my father as his successor; according to my understanding of the word "ordain," I was not. I was blessed by him and designated, well in a sense chosen, and the word "ordain" could not be applied in any other sense than by the act of pointing out or indicating only, and he indicated or designated me as his successor?"

The writer in quoting stopped in the middle of the second sentence. That is, he quoted as follows:

"No, sir, I did not state that I was ordained by my father; I did not make that statement. I was not ordained by my father as his successor."

To do that was necessary to misrepresent the whole effect of his statement both in this paragraph, and his testimony as a whole. Joseph Smith had repeatedly stated that he had been set apart and designated by his father to be his father's successor.

That was no striking out of intervening words. The words were quoted correctly as far as they were quoted, but a stop was made in such a way as to misrepresent not only this part of his testimony, but his testimony as a whole.

It does not follow that stopping at a semicolon in a quotation is misrepresenting. It does not follow that stopping at the end of a period or paragraph is necessarily a fair quotation. The context will have to show. Has the author's position been fairly given, considering context and circumstances? It is not primarily a matter of words, but of ideas. Sometimes the occasion when uttered is vital to a fair presentation of the author.

On the other hand, there are those who would make a man an offender for a word. While he has accurately quoted and presented the views of the writer whom he has quoted, great stress is laid upon some collateral immaterial statement he has made during the course of his remarks, and great pains taken to disprove such an irrelevant statement. Or great stress is made in the omission of unimportant words, which do not modify or change the thought.

One who would be fair must quote that part which is material, that part which is relevant to the question at issue, but should not be made an offender for a word.

Impartiality

Again, Charnwood in his book on Abraham Lincoln has rather clearly stated what impartiality is, and shows that it is not the failure to take a position. "Nor should the writer shrink too timidly from the display of a partisanship which, on one side or the other, it would be insen­sate not to feel. The true obligation of impartiality is that he should conceal no fact which, in his own mind, tells against his views."
That is indeed a test of fairness. He should present all of the facts, being especially careful not to suppress facts which are against his point of view. This is by no means easy, and is the harder because of the dangers of impartiality.

Dangers of Impartiality

Some men see only their own side, and disregard all inconvenient facts. Some men, like one brother who wrote us lately, take a position and then search for proof to uphold that position. This brother wrote that having taken a position, he ignored all versions which did not agree with that position. Others quote simply the Bible texts which please them and ignore all passages which do not uphold their claim.

Many people, unable to see more than one position at a time, do not want frankness. A statement which gives that which is favorable to the views urged and also that which is unfavorable, so the force of the facts indicate the true solution, is both fair and just. To a thinker, the true solution is thus clearly marked. But to one who thinks superficially, there appears only confusion. "Which side is he on?"

There are some who therefore strongly urge that there be no discussion. Instead they favor authoritative statements from a few leading thinkers. It is doubtless true that there are some, indeed many, who prefer such a method, who prefer to be told what to think and who are disgusted if anyone challenges the accuracy of the information so presented.

There is again the difficulty that real impartial thinking is not usually appreciated, because the ordinary hearer discounts the argument and gives increased respect to the admissions. Particularly is this true between two orators, one of whom argues only for his own view, and deliberately suppresses all that does not support his own view, while his opponent attempts to present the issue with exact fairness. An average of the two is not near the truth.

As A. Max Carmichael pointed out in a recent Herald in dealing with the education of children, though the same is true with children of older years, a clear-cut assertion carries more weight with the unthinking than does a strong argument, for an argument implies that there is some possible doubt, or that there are some who would question the position.

Some speakers therefore ignore inconvenient facts known, or which they should certainly have known, and argue simply to achieve a victory, being satisfied of their own final good intentions.

On the other hand, we have seen some men who have been quick to correct any man's statement, though made by those favorable to their own views. Yet we have seen that this integrity is entirely unappreciated by many at least of those who were present and voted.

We recall at least one such case where a delegate afterwards wrote, "They had to correct such and such a man's statement, and no doubt if we knew the truth, there was a lot more that was said that was not so." The writer ignored entirely the fact that the correction was voluntary. It was not forced. It was an indication of integrity, that these men would not accept in debate any statement unless they held it true, to the best of their knowledge and belief, though favoring their position.

Does the End Justify?

But there are those who will contend that the end justifies the means. This is an old ecclesiastical argument. It is alleged to have been held by quasi-Christian churches in the past, and has been held by other strongly centralized organizations in the history of the world. Such men have such confidence in their own integrity that they look to the general results, and believing that victory to their position is essential to progress, they correct no misstatement unless unfavorable to their views. They will pursue methods that they will denounce in others, believing that the end justifies the means. But such necessarily involves that they place their own judgment as to the righteousness of their position as being the sole and final criterion.

We have been repeatedly warned that the coming of the Lord is already at hand; the time of hastening is before us. Can we hope that anything but absolute integrity will help us before the throne of grace? It is a very grave mistake to view the questions in dispute as merely between two groups of men contending for victory. The victory of either side in a controversy is of trivial importance compared to our individual and collective standing before the throne of grace.

If such a man as G. Stanley Hall could reach the conclusion that "the Eternal Powers fight always on the side of right," if the poet was convinced that "truth crushed to earth will rise again," can we, as children of God, believe that anything other than exact honesty and fairness can possibly accomplish the design of the building up of Zion?

Could the powers of righteousness permit a successful attempt to build Zion, based on any other plan than a sure integrity, a willingness and unselfishness sufficiently great to sacrifice personal pride and even suffer humiliation, if thereby the cause of right can be promoted?

Was the Naked Truth Concealed?

BY F. M. McDOWELL

The HERALD of April 1 contains an article bearing the title, “The Religio and the naked truth.” Here indeed is promise. Our hopes are, however, soon blasted. In a few paragraphs the brother succeeds in concealing the aforementioned truth beneath a heavy covering of misrepresentation and inconsistency. Even such might be overlooked were the credit of that society on the books of this office became

Misrepresentation Conceals the Truth

As an example of the so-called “naked truth,” the brother says: “When Brother McDowell took over this department he had a surplus of several thousand dollars which he used in the new department.” This assertion finds no support whatever in fact, as the following letter from Bishop B. R. McGuire will show:

FLOYD M. McDOWELL, March 31, 1925.

First Presidency,

Dear Brother: Pursuant to your request relative to the status of the Department of Recreation and Expression fund as shown by the books of this office, we are pleased to submit the following:

On July 1, 1923, the balance due the Zion’s Religio-Literary Society was $2,487.10. During the period from July 1, 1923, to December 31, 1924, there were charges incurred in connection with the Department of Recreation and Expression amounting to $408.60. The credits to this fund during this period amounted to $43. [This does not show profits from sale of quarterlies.—F. M. McD.] Assuming that the Department of Recreation and Expression is a continuance of the Zion’s Religio-Literary Society, and that the funds to the credit of that society on the books of this office became the property of the Department of Recreation and Expression, the balance to the credit of this department as of January 1, 1924, about the time you were placed in charge, would be $2,121.50.

During the following six months’ period, or from January 1, 1924, to June 30, 1924, in the absence of a budget appropriation, the expenses incurred amounted to $404.17 and were also charged against the Department of Recreation and Expression, reducing the original balance to the credit of Zion’s Religio-Literary Society to $1,717.33 as of July 1, 1924. According to the books of this office, however, the balance to the credit of Zion’s Religio-Literary Society on July 1, 1924, amounted to $2,460.37. The amount charged to the Department of Recreation and Expression as of this date amounted to $743.04.

In the absence of definite action relative to the status of Zion’s Religio-Literary Society account, the expenses incurred by the Department of Recreation and Expression during the period from July 1, 1923, to June 30, 1924, were not actually charged against this account. Since July 1, 1924, the expenses of the Department of Recreation and Expression have been charged against the appropriation provided for activities of this department.

Sincerely yours,

BENJAMIN R. McGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

What Are the Facts?

The “several thousand dollars” referred to was in reality but $2,487.10. The books of the Bishop show that this fund is still intact and that at present the balance to the credit of the Zion’s Religio-Literary Society is $2,460.37.

However, looking at it in another way, let us presume that the expenses of the Department of Recreation and Expression are to be charged against this account. Then as the above letter shows, the balance to the credit of this department when the writer took charge of the department was $2,121.50. During the following six months, there being no budget appropriation, the expenses incurred by the Department of Recreation and Expression were $404.17. Let us presume that this should be charged against the above fund. This would leave on July 1, 1924, $1,717.33. Since July 1, 1924, the expenses of the Department of Recreation and Expression have been charged against the budget prepared by that department, which leaves the account at present at $1,717.33. This reduces the several thousand dollars which the writer is supposed to have spent for the department to $404.17. Against this amount the quarterly account at the Herald Publishing House shows a credit of about $1,200. It is difficult to see how the statement of the brother could have been more unfair or misleading. The books of the Presiding Bishop as they now stand show that the fund referred to by the brother is still intact. No charges will be made against this fund unless authorized by the proper authorities.

Further Misrepresentation

In an endeavor to show that the present administration had not been willing to cooperate with him in the work of the Religio, the brother selects isolated phrases from purported correspondence in the following fashion:

I have letters from Brother McDowell referring to this matter when I was asking for his cooperation, and it was then his wish, quoting from his letters, “that you leave the matters as they are,” “that you follow the study course outlined,” “that you do nothing further.” This will give you some idea of his willingness to help.

After reading this, one is reminded of the individual who at one time justified thieving by quoting the Bible as follows: “Let him that stole, steal.” Certainly, the Bible teaches stealing!

The writer is convinced that if the full corre-
In the church.

Just what are we to understand is the purpose of this move? Is there any indication that this purpose will be the same to-morrow that it is to-day? What are we to believe? First the brother wants a Religio that "has but one intent, and that is to promote the study of the Book of Mormon, and for this reason we do not want to divide our efforts.

If we understand the English language, this means that the society that is to be reorganized will limit its activities to the study of the Book of Mormon. With this conclusion in mind it is interesting indeed to read in a later HERALD the following written by the same brother:

were printed, the only desire being to assist Religio workers and the Herald Publishing House in handling orders. Nothing could have been more natural or logical than to have listed all available quarterlies in the order in which they were published.

Inconsistencies Conceal the Truth

The real purpose of this demand for reorganization of Zion's Religio-Literary Society is concealed by the inconsistencies of the brother.

The HERALD of March 4 contains the following statement of the resolution under discussion—the resolution upon which the conference is asked to decide:

We do not say that the prime object of the Religio was the study of the Book of Mormon, and whereas, in Zion and many other branches throughout the entire church, the Zion's Religio-Literary Society has been reorganized to meet more fully the demand for the study of the Book of Mormon, and whereas, the work of these societies has been a source of comfort and strength to the Saints; be it resolved that the Saints of Zion in conference assembly hereby petition the coming General Conference to express itself in favor of these worthy movements by authorizing the reorganization of Zion's Religio-Literary Society for the primary purpose of the study of the Book of Mormon wherever demanded.

In the same issue Brother Lloyd states:

Our Religio has but one intent, and that is to promote the study of the Book of Mormon, and for this reason we do not want to divide our efforts.

With these statements fresh in our memory it is interesting to read from the pen of the same brother the following found in the HERALD of April 1:

What Are We to Believe?

We do not say that the prime object of the Religio was the study of the Book of Mormon, but we do say that as a means to the end the Religio sought, namely of preparing the young for gospel service, the study of the Book of Mormon was and is of paramount importance.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
We want the Religio back, not in part, but in whole; in aim, in spirit, in working plan. We want again the organization whose chief object was to interest the young in the cause of Christ and train them to carry the banner of King Immanuel.

If this statement means anything, it means that the reorganized society is to take up all the former activities of the now historic Zion's Religio-Literary Society. As shown in the HERALD of March 25, and as admitted by the brother himself both in his article and by his own record in this society, this would include a wide range of social, recreational, and expressional activities.

Now just what are we to believe is the purpose of this move? Have we any assurance as to which one of the above statements we are to take seriously? Does anyone know what is in the mind of the brother? If the reorganized society is to be of the former type, having one intent, it must be opposed as being unwise and impractical. If it is to attempt to carry on all the activities of the former society bearing that name, then we must certainly insist that it is unnecessary and will be a constant source of confusion.

Other Considerations of Importance

Our brother infers that the purpose of the Department of Recreation and Expression is pleasure. In reply we quote from the pamphlet which has been in circulation for over a year entitled, "Instructions and suggestions for workers in the Department of Recreation and Expression."

The aim of the church is undoubtedly the bringing of mankind to the fullness of the measure of the stature of Christ. The aim of the Department of Recreation and Expression may be stated as that of furnishing such supervision of the social and recreational activities of church members that these shall be made to fit in with the program of the church as a whole. . . . This department has continued to publish quarterlies and to encourage study. There is every reason why our people should be encouraged to study at every opportunity.

Again the brother seems concerned lest we should forget that one of the prime objects of this department was to interest the young people. The writer is surprised to have this charge made against him. We are quite willing to leave with the church the verdict on this point. As superintendent of this department, the writer had supervision of the Second International Young People's Convention. Under this department also a great number of district and stake young people's conventions have been held. Throughout the church there has been a revival of activity among the young people, and always it has been insisted that such activities be made to fit in with the program of the church as a whole, which has as its end the building of Christlike characters and the establishment of God's kingdom. We are willing to let the young people of the church speak as to our interest in them and as to the nature of the leadership which we have furnished them.

The Matter of Quarterlies

In discussing the Religio Quarterlies Brother Lloyd says:

The quarterlies printed under his instruction were published at a loss. Since the reprint of the original quarterlies, from a few thousands the demand has increased materially. I submit this for your consideration as to whether the people want the Book of Mormon as a study.

The quarterlies referred to are those listed above, with the exception of the reprint of the Book of Mormon. That our church people should study subjects of this kind is so obvious as to make unnecessary any discussion of the matter. We are glad to leave the verdict in this matter to any or all who have grasped a vision of the work to be accomplished in the redemption of Zion.

But what about the loss mentioned above? Here again the brother deals in generalities, and here again his statements are misleading. During the year just preceding the reprint of the Book of Mormon Quarterlies, those so-called new quarterlies brought to the department a profit of $303.25, and this in spite of the fact that the price charged for these quarterlies was less than that charged by the Sunday school.

Our income was increased after the publication of the Book of Mormon quarterlies. This is due in part to the increased demand. It is also due to a raise in the price of ten per cent per quarter and of twenty-five per cent per year. It should also be mentioned that reprinting former quarterlies meant the practical elimination of editorial expense. As a matter of fact, we admit that there is a large demand for the Book of Mormon Quarterlies, but we beg to repeat that this demand is being met and will be met by the departments as now organized. None of this, however, can be taken as evidence that quarterlies on other subjects should not be published.

Quoting once more and finally from Brother Lloyd:

We gratefully acknowledge our debt to the department for them, but Brother McDowell should explain that it was not the department that took the initiative in restoring the quarterlies, but the issue was forced upon him by the Independence local of Zion's Religio-Literary Society, and after objections from Brother McDowell himself. When it was seen that we were determined to have the quarterly, if we had to reprint it ourselves, Brother McDowell consented to publish it through the Department of Recreation and Expression.

We gladly admit that the publication of the reprint of the Book of Mormon Quarterlies was forced upon us by the Independence local of Zion's Religio-Literary Society. This is not the point. The sig-
Speaking of an ages and more in accord with present-day pedagogy. The consulting board was employing an editorial program approved by the three departments and by the general church was then in process of being carried out. At the very time of this forcing process, the consulting board was employing an editor to provide courses of study in the Book of Mormon which would be more suitable to various ages and more in accord with present-day pedagogy. Any objections offered by us to this forcing process were due to this fact. When it became obvious that the Independence local was determined, no matter what our plans, to enter the field of preparing quarters in competition with the general department, we thought it wise to comply with their demand. Upon doing so we immediately put the newly employed editor to work upon another course of study.

In a word, it was the determination upon the part of Brother Lloyd and his local Religio to have their way irrespective of the plans of the general department and the interest of other parties concerned that we are objecting to. This spirit characterizes the demand for the reorganization of the society asked for in the resolution. We have repeatedly shown that such a move is unnecessary and unwise. We have shown that, if passed, this resolution would interfere seriously with the editorial program already being carried out. Finally, we have shown that the matters mentioned in the resolutions are now being adequately provided for. To force through this resolution overlooking these facts would be sheer folly.

Book of Mormon and Religio

BY EDWARD RANNIE

In the Herald of March 25 there are two articles in reference to the Book of Mormon and the Religio, and they have suggested to my mind to write of another phase of the subject. It is true that the constitution does not mention the Book of Mormon or that it was organized for the special purpose of studying that book. That is the letter of the document. It also says:

The object of this society shall be to interest and enlist the energies of the young in the field of Christian usefulness before them; to promote sociability and the spirit of brotherly solicitude and helpfulness among them and to help them to qualify themselves, spiritually and intellectually, for service in the church.

That is the spirit of the constitution, and will not the study of the Book of Mormon help to reach the goal marked out in that clause?

A Glance Backward

Between thirty and forty years ago, in the various branches of the church the need of helpful measures for the young was realized. In some of the branches societies were organized, having in view the welfare of the young, and such names were given them and such studies taken up as suited the fancy of the members. As time passed on it was realized by those interested in the young that a general society throughout the church should be organized that would better meet the needs of the young people than those purely local, so the Religio was organized. Like all new societies, it was necessary to do a great deal of experimenting. The annual conventions formed a clearing house for the workers to tell their experiences and suggest changes that would improve the society. Among the number of devoted men and women who met in those conventions there were always some of the general officers of the church. There were so many good, true, and loyal men and women known to many now living that I would not take the risk of naming them for fear I might omit the names of very worthy ones. Among the difficulties to be met was the provision of lessons. It seemed as if we just grew into the study of the Book of Mormon. In the General Conventions and in the local societies we had prayer meetings, and being a people who believed God would help us in time of need, is it not reasonable to believe that in answer to the many earnest prayers for divine help that our loving heavenly Father would come to our rescue and guide those doing the work by his Holy Spirit? Are we not in the faith of our blessed Lord when we so believe? What difference does it make whether it was in the preamble or the constitution when the Lord was able to put it into the hearts of those who were so faithfully doing the work of preparing the lessons? There is no law of the Lord providing for Wednesday night prayer meetings, but who among us would believe that the Lord does not approve of them?

Why the Study of the Book of Mormon Proved a Success

When Lehi and his family left Jerusalem, provision was made to keep a record of the important events of that family and their descendants, and it was done for nearly a thousand years. For about one hundred and sixty years, two records were kept, one their political history and the other their religious history. During the lifetime of Mormon, he was commanded of the Lord to write an abridgment of the history of the Nephite people, and it is a fair presumption that when he was carrying out the command that he would have divine help. The Book of Mormon is a wonderful book; its moral and spiritual teachings are not surpassed by any book to which we have access. The Lord knew it would be a blessing to all people who would believe and practice its teachings. He preserved it for fourteen hundred years and brought it forth at a time when in his wisdom it would best serve the interests of his people. It is like a great drama, portraying the blessings that come to those who are obedient and the sorrows and misery to those who are disobedient. To the honest student, and especially if he has an intelligent and faithful teacher, it is a fountain of living water that never runs dry. The same Spirit that blessed the writers will also help the reader and teacher; that is why so much joy comes to so many who read it.

Why Other Books Are Not So Interesting

The Book of Doctrine and Covenants cannot be made as interesting now to the young as the Book of Mormon, because it is a law book. The Book of Mormon is portraying real living characters in the great drama of life. To the young mind, the Doctrine and Covenants is like reading Blackstone's great law books or some American writer giving an exegesis of the Constitution of the United States. When the time comes that we have carried out the ideals of Jesus Christ and have a real Zion, such as was had among the Nephite people, we can place before the young people in a historical narrative in association with the Book of Doctrine and Covenants the results of obedience. It will be something real; the young much prefer to read about things accomplished than to speculate on theories.

In a sermon at the Stone Church President Smith made in substance the following statement: "There are twenty-four hundred men in the church holding the priesthood, and if I were to ask each one to give me a definition of stewardships I would receive sixteen hundred different answers." Our people are still in the speculative mood, and when we pass from that condition into the realm of fact we can interest the young people. We tried lessons in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants and we soon went back to the Book of Mormon, because sufficient interest could not be created in the Doctrine and Covenants. We tried the study of social problems, civics, and others of a kindred nature, and so far as my observations went in the several districts in which I labored, it was almost impossible to keep the Religio going. In one branch the Religio died; a return to the study of the Book of Mormon revived it and doubled the attendance.

Recreation and Study

In forming conclusions as the result of my experience and observation in the work of the church, I am forced to the conclusion that we are making a mistake in placing too much stress on the subject of recreation, which really means pleasure.

The condition in which we find the people in the church and the world is such that we should not be stimulating the desire for pleasure, because it takes too much time and money that should be used for better and more desirable ends. The effort should be made to persuade people to curtail their desires for pleasure. What we need is restraint, not stimulation. We should teach the doctrine of self-control, and of being temperate in all things. We should emphasize study that will develop our intellectual and spiritual powers. The body should be brought into subjection to the mind. Our minds should control our physical powers; the reverse is the most common. The poet said:

> Though I could reach from pole to pole,
> And grasp creation in my hand,
> I must be measured by my soul,
> The mind's the measure of the man.

NEWS AND LETTERS

Sainthood Triumphs in Death

In the death of Sister Bertha Belle Myers, of Akron, Ohio, the Akron Branch sees a breach which, for the present at least, seems impossible to fill. Deceased united with the church eight years ago at Alliance, Ohio, but being misinformed of the church by a clergyman of her former religious connection she remained inactive for a number of years; however, truth eventually triumphed in her soul and she threw herself wholeheartedly into the work of the church. Being desirous of improving the lot of the young women of the church she assumed the responsibilities of leadership in the local branch and by prayer, consecration, and study proved herself an efficient and loved leader. The young women of Akron Branch are indices to the book of her remembrances.

It was the writer's privilege to be associated with Evangelist A. R. Manchester in the imposition of hands, in obedience to her request. The silken cords were fast fraying, and she was soon to be severed from earthly ties. Of this she was fully conscious.

Following the anointing, a noticeable recovery was made, and with firm voice she made preparations for the funeral rites and disposition of her earthly remains. The following hymna, selected by herself, disclose her thoughts at the closing hour: "God is marshaling his army," "There's an old, old path," and "I would be true."

Death to her was romantic, because Christ to her was a reality. To her "death was gain." Said she: "I cannot understand why people are afraid of death; it's a pleasure, the greatest pleasure of my life." This may be accounted for when it is understood that this woman received the visitation of Jesus Christ and of angels—to this she testified on her deathbed.

She thought of her Temple Builders to the end. Just a few hours before she smiled her farewell, she conveyed these words to them: "Young people, keep the social purity league going; study all good books and continue the circulating library. Tell the girls I love every one of them, and I want them to live right so that when they leave this life they will be able to meet their Master, and I know they will if they..."

strive. They are all good girls, every one of them.” What an incentive to these young women!

Death, which took place at the People’s Hospital, Akron, Ohio, 10.45 p. m., Sunday, March 8, was due to internal developments necessitating an operation.

Interment took place at Kirtland, Ohio, on the eleventh, and was witnessed by a number of saddened relatives and friends. The service in the temple, presided over by Evangelist G. T. Griffiths, Bishop Charles Fry, and Elder McConnaughy was very impressive. Sermon was by the writer.

Deceased was the wife of Clyde E. Myers, of Akron, Ohio, and sister of Joseph Gordon, of Alliance, Ohio; Arthur Gordon, of New London, Connecticut, and Samuel Gordon.

Till life’s last hour is fled,
And, with a pure and heavenly ray,
Lights up a dying bed.”

Pleasantview Branch

TRYON, NEBRASKA.—The Saints here have been made glad because of God’s blessings. Elder C. W. Prettyman came here February 18, and on the 29th commenced preaching, with large attendance and good liberty. The Spirit was present in power and continued through all the meetings.

Brother Prettyman spoke to the Saints of the gathering, telling them they must prepare to move out of Babylon, for God has so spoken.

The meetings closed the evening of February 25, with the Saints refreshed. Brother Prettyman urged that the meetings be continued and that a Sunday school be organized. The teacher of the branch was in charge of the meetings and will continue them.

A meeting was held March 1 to see about continuing branch services, organizing Sunday school, and providing for prayer services. All feel thankful that God sent his humble servant.

Tracts were given out, and some took different ones, handing back the ones they had read with the comment that they had enjoyed reading them. Several nonmembers were present at the meetings and seemed interested.

Pray that the good work may rally and a people from here be ready to obey the call of God’s servant to come out of Babylon. We have greatly felt the need of help here and are thankful for what we have received.

Elder May Tells of the Year’s Work

I know that your readers are always interested in the activities of the missionaries, so I have decided to write a few lines.

During the present conference year I spent four months and a half in the British West Indies, and the rest of the time in the Kentucky-Tennessee and Florida Districts, embracing part of southern Alabama and the State of Florida.

The missionary work this year has been quite successful so to interest in the gospel message, as much so as in any other year of my work. The results from these efforts have not measured up to our expectations in some places where the interest was great.

In all meetings held since last General Conference, over sixty have been baptized. Twenty of these were baptized by Elders B. L. Booker and J. E. Vanderwood, while the writer was associated with them, and forty-one were baptized by the writer while associated with these brethren and while alone.

I have found the Cayman Islands as interested as ever in the gospel message, and many excellent openings in the two districts on the mainland. In fact, there are more urgent calls for missionary work than the few men in the field can possibly reach. The fields are white, and the harvesters but few. This condition, I realize, is general throughout the world.

I have not found the prejudice quite so great during the past year as in times past, and the people have seemed more eager than ever to hear the truth, and to reason upon the gospel principles. It has truly been said that prejudice was the first great antagonist of the early Christian faith, and that the way of the world is to praise the dead saints of ages ago and persecute the living ones, yet the prejudiced person who will reason often reasons his prejudice away.

The HERALD letters and articles are always of great interest to me. May the gospel light continue to shine out through its pages.

Your brother in Christ,

J. CHARLES MAY.

Anxiously Awaits New Radio Station’s Operating

BON ACCORD, ALBERTA, February 28.—We are twenty-eight miles from a branch and seldom hear a sermon, but now we are hoping to hear some sermons, as we have a radio. We have received Kansas City, but have not yet been able to get Independence.

We have often wondered if the radio will not be the means of preaching the gospel to the world. If Sister Burton should see this letter I would like to have her write.

I am inclosing money for the HERALD and Autumn Leaves, for I am lost without them to read.

Dedication of Ontario Branch Church Building

February 15 was an epoch in the history of the Ontario, California, Branch, brought about by the dedication of the church building to the services of God.

This branch was organized December 15, 1907, and at that time was known as the Cucamonga Branch. The branch consisted of sixteen charter members, as follows:

The present membership of the Ontario Branch is ninety-five.

Brother F. B. Van Fleet was elected president of the branch, J. S. Swain was ordained to the office of teacher, and Edwin Johnson was elected clerk of the branch. The meetings were held in Brother F. B. Van Fleet’s home in Cucamonga until November 22, 1914. This branch was known as the Cucamonga Branch until July 6, 1913, when by motion the name was changed to the Ontario Branch, and it has remained under that name until the present. The name was changed because of the fact that most of the members lived in Ontario, and on this account the Woodmen’s Hall in Ontario was rented for the meetings and used up until the year 1918, when our present building was pur-Chased. This building was not completely paid for until January, 1925.

Dedication services were held at the church on 315 West Grove Street, Ontario, California, February 15, 1925. The services were in charge of our able Brother N. T. Chapman, president of the Southern California District, assisted by Apostle T. W. Williams of Los Angeles. Sister Wickes of President of the Southern California District, assisted by Los Angeles had charge of the music. Brother T. W. Williams offered the dedicatory prayer. A good spirit was in evidence all through the services. Brother T. W. Williams gave a very interesting sermon in the morning, and Brother N. T. Chapman spoke in the afternoon. Brother Williams was the speaker again in the evening. A very good attendance was in evidence all through the day.

Now that we have disposed of the church debt, we hope to put forth renewed efforts to spread the gospel in this region and branch, and a greater knowledge of the kingdom of God. We ever pray for the success of the gospel message and the redemption of Zion.

The Young People's Convention, Midland, Michigan

The young people of Central Michigan District held a very successful convention at Midland, February 28 and March 1. This is the first one to be held in central Michigan, and was the result of efforts of Brother Otto Bartlett, district superintendent of Recreation and Expression, with the district officers. Surely thesebrethren are to be commended in their excellent efforts in their initial undertaking. We are looking forward to many more of these gatherings.

A meeting convened on Saturday afternoon for the purpose of effecting the organization, after which a round table talk was taken up. Many questions of interest were discussed at this time. Saturday evening at 7.30 there was preaching by Elder Matthew Umphrey. After reading the 35th chapter of Isaiah, he took for a text, “Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth.” Brother Umphrey handled the subject in his usual able manner, emphasizing the need of more consecrated service to God, and the sermon was very inspirational and uplifting. Sunday morning at 8.15 a priesthood meeting was held, followed by Sunday school at 9.15. At 10.15 prayer meeting opened with Elders A. E. Burr and Earl Burt in charge. This meeting was very largely attended, the church being filled to capacity. Many testimonies, prayers, and songs were given, which were very inspirational. There seemed to be a spirit of unity characterize the whole meeting, and the spirit of service and consecration was evident among all present. All seemed to rejoice in the Holy One of Israel and express their hope of the ultimate triumph of this work. The young were encouraged to press on and fight the good fight of faith that Zion may be redeemed.

We feel proud of our young people, without boasting, and are looking forward to much good being accomplished through their efforts. We also have a great number of noble Saints among the older ones who are of great assistance to the young people and will continue until they reach the highest possible standard of their efficiency. With the noble band of workers enlisted in this great cause, and knowing that God is at the helm, this church must move on. Satan will seek to overthrow, but if we are humble and seek God in mighty prayer we will surely overcome. “Not to the strong is the battle, not to the swift is the race; yet to the true and faithful, victory is promised through grace.” Never before have I been more optimistic over the outlook in the work of the church. While we see Satan getting in his work in the church, we also see evidence of greater consecration among many of our people, and increased activities in all departments of church work; and many have expressed the hope that a greater endowment will soon be poured out upon the church. It was given through one speaker at our prayer meeting, “This is only a foretaste of the blessings to follow if you are faithful”; so if God be for us, who can be against us?

On Sunday at 2 p.m. we had another round table. This discussion proved very interesting and educational, as several questions were discussed relating to activities of the old and young, their attitude towards each other, etc. I believe a better understanding now prevails along that line. There was also much discussion relative to recreation for the young through avenues of church service. Immediately following this session Elder E. S. White preached. He used as his text, “For every house is builded by some man; but he that built all things is God.” From this he delivered an inspirational discourse on character building. The evening preaching was by Elder S. T. Pendleton. Brother Pendleton’s sermon was along the line of the “different spirits that have gone out into the world.” The hearers received some real spiritual food at this time. Brother Pendleton is one of our most able men, and taking a keen interest in the young his sermons are of great benefit in promoting the interest and welfare of the young people.

Last, but not least, we desire to mention the wonderful hospitality of the Midland Saints. There were no efforts spared on their part in making our convention a success, since they not only contributed nobly to the spiritual needs, but also the temporal needs of the people. They provided excellent meals, and cared for us in every way in a manner not soon to be forgotten by the visiting Saints. They are a little band of consecrated workers in the Master’s cause.

We are also looking for great development among our young people in this district. We feel extremely fortunate to be associated with this little band of zealous workers, who will eventually make up a part of the great church which Jesus the Christ is going to come and accept as his bride, and we hope to be counted worthy to mingle with God’s people in the building up of his kingdom, until the consummation of his great purpose.

Several Ready for Baptism

Frazeez, Minnesota, March 17.—We have no branch here at present, but hope we may have one organized before long.

Brother C. A. Kress of Minneapolis has been holding a series of meetings here the last week, and great interest has been aroused among nonmembers, and we know a good work is to be done in this community, as there are many honest in heart that are earnestly seeking for the truth.

We were all sorry to lose Brother Kress, but he was going to General Conference and had to leave. He is planning to return after conference. Our little chapel was filled with those eager for spiritual food, and there are several ready for baptism, waiting his return.

We ask the Saints to pray for us that we may soon hear more of the truth preached in our community.

Graceland Chats

Excitement is running higher and higher as each succeeding game of basket ball is being played. Certainly one of the most exciting games the college students had ever seen was the one played on Thursday night between the Alpha Pi Sigma and Niketes men's teams. From first to last the game was fast and furious, but under the splendid officiating of Coach Gilbert and his able assistant, Charles Curtis, the play was of a very high order; clean and thoroughly sportsmanlike. At the end of the first quarter, the Niketes men led by one point. At half time they were still one point ahead. Again at three quarters, the Niketes men still retained their meager leadership, and when time was called, the game was a draw. It can easily be imagined how intense was the excitement, and how wrought-up the spectators were. It surely was very amusing to see apparently staid and sober-minded philosophers jumping and yelling like schoolboys. Five minutes more play was granted, and again a draw was scored, so that the time was extended another minute and a half, and during that time the Niketes managed to pile up a lead of five points, the score finally resting at 34 to 29 in favor of Niketes. As we watched the progress of the game, we could not help but marvel at the splendid development and control of the boys participating. Their conduct spoke volumes for the high ideals of sportsmanship and of clean living. The church can certainly be congratulated on such a high type of manhood.

Graceland's first Intersociety Musical Contest was held last Saturday night, March 14, in the College Chapel. The weeks that had preceded the contest had been full of concentrated effort. At all times, in season and out of season, practice of quartets, choruses, and college songs, smote one's ears. It was really surprising how many musical people blossomed into song during those weeks. There are one or two points in connection with this contest that are certainly worthy of note. In the first place, group work was emphasized rather than the starring of individual performers. Further, it brought into participation more contestants and involved more general all-around activity than any other contest of the year.

Four divisions marked the contest, and each society was entitled to one entry in each division, which gave a total of sixteen items. The first division was a quartet, which might be male, female, or mixed; next came a chorus for at least ten singers. This was followed by an orchestral or instrumental division requiring at least five instruments, including the piano; and finally the society song, where participation of at least three fifths of the society membership was demanded. The mixed quartet of the Alpha Pi Sigma secured first-class honors, with "Where my caravan has rested." First place for the chorus division was awarded the Victorians for their rendition of "Come where the lilies bloom."

As far as the orchestral division was concerned, there was really no competition at all, since the Alpha Pi Sigma Society was unusually and outstandingly the best item in this division offered. Their rendition of "The poet and peasant" overture was quite good for an amateur orchestra. The last item in the contest, the social song, was what gave the really keen enthusiasm to the whole program. Other items were highly appreciated, but to this group must go the credit for working up the greatest appreciation. Again the Alpha Pi Sigma scored first place, and well they deserved it, for their "Sweet and low" was indeed beautiful to listen to.

Evidently the audience caught the spirit of the occasion, for while waiting for the judges to make their decisions, Mr. Roy Cheville conducted a community sing that was participated in with the keenest enjoyment. The rafters rang, and the room resounded, as one after another of the familiar songs were sung. Altogether the evening was most enjoyable and demonstrated how much latent musical ability there has been on the Hill.

On Friday evening the boys of Herald Hall entertained on rather an extensive scale, that ambiguous of all parties known to the initiated as a stag party. Just what occurred we are at a loss to report, but certainly fun and frolic were there in abundance.

The student body is very earnestly at work, for the end of the third quarter is near. This means examinations and a testing time to see if they have made the advancement they had hoped.

In addition to this, the college authorities have decided to close school from April 9 to 14. This will give many of the students an opportunity of attending General Conference for a few days. They are, therefore, very busy getting their work in such good shape that the few days of absence will not work any hardship upon their grades.

Not only is the student body working strenuously, but any night last week passers-by could see the lights burning in the offices of the departments until well on in the evening.

So in an atmosphere of fun, friendly rivalry, and keen searching after knowledge, Graceland continues her happy career.

Detroit District

March 11.—The activities of the Detroit District have been many and varied this year. The Department of Recreation and Expression have their program outlined for the entire year of 1925 and have been busy putting over the many things planned for each local. The dramatic class of the Detroit Central Church are playing "Farm folk" with a very creditable cast. They have played at Flint, Pontiac, Mount Clemens, and different places in Detroit. Other classes are planning their plays, which will be available soon.

Elder E. J. Gleazer, of the Twelve, has just completed a tour of the district. He arrived at Flint on the 18th from the Eastern Michigan District, and for three nights held forth at the Newall Street Church, with the other churches joining in making it a union meeting. On the 21st he went to Detroit to attend the quarterly young people's convention and preached three fine sermons. The following three days were spent at the East Side, Highland Park, and River Rouge churches. Thursday he went to Orion and Friday to Otter Lake, which is located about twenty miles northeast of Flint. The following Sunday he visited Pontiac and addressed the ministerial conference. He preached the closing sermon, which completed his tour, making a visit to every group in the district. This was perhaps the first time for years that every group in the district had a visit from one of the Twelve. He left for Saginaw on March 2 to tour Central Michigan District. It is the hope of the district that he will be permitted to return soon, as his visit produced much good.

The young people's convention was the best ever held. The feeling of unity that prevailed was encouraging. The surprise of the day was the unexpected presence of Bishop B. R. McGuire, who was passing through Detroit for Cleveland and was prevailed upon by Elder G. R. Kuykendall to stay over. He finally consented and preached at the morning service, leaving at the close of the evening.
At the close of the Saturday evening service all were invited to the lower auditorium of the Central Church for an evening of good fellowship. Games were played, in which old and young joined. Following these a lunch was served, after which several songs were sung and all were dismissed by Brother McGuire's benediction.

The morning prayer service at eight o'clock Sunday was of a high order. The calm influence of the Spirit of God was felt at the opening of the meeting and continued throughout. The testimonies were of an encouraging order, and from the expression of youth, there will be no shortage of workers for the advancement of the work. The preaching services followed: at a quarter of eleven by Bishop McGuire, and by Apostle Gleazer at a quarter after two and seven.

The ministerial conference of the district at Pontiac on March 1 was one long to be remembered by those attending. At an early hour the priesthood began to gather and enjoyed a prayer service, which was followed by the quorums meeting at places which had been arranged. At the afternoon session when all members met in mass conference, Apostle Gleazer addressed them and led up to the round table discussion, which was very helpful to many that availed themselves of the opportunity of attending. This being sacrament Sunday for March, all the branches were asked to postpone the meeting for one week, so the priesthood could be present. This was done throughout the district with only one exception.

Thus the work is progressing. Many places are available for new work, but the workers are scarce, as we have only one missionary, and his time is divided between us and another district.

El Reno, Oklahoma
March 9.—We were pleased recently to meet Brother E. A. Kaler on our streets. He is a chef for the Rock Island Railroad. He is the son of Elder John Kaler, one of our foreign missionaries of the past, and was born in Australia.

Brother G. C. Lewis has removed his business from this place, having located at Kingfisher, twenty-four miles north of here. We are sorry to lose his help in church work, especially as Sunday school superintendent. He will visit us occasionally.

Some needed renewing is being made on the church building by way of varnish and paint, and repairs to make it more secure.

February 15 Brother Crownover, pastor of the Calumet Branch, preached for us a well-received and profitable sermon. Brother Crownover was born in the Sunny South; his speech betrays him.

Brother Rex Rowland, one of our prosperous agriculturists and faithful church workers, was chosen as Sunday school superintendent to succeed Brother Lewis. Brother Rex is our tithing solicitor also, and is manager of a large farm about eighteen miles in the country. He will surely make a success of the work in hand.

Brother H. K. Rowland gave us one of his mild yet forceful sermons on the 8th. He drew some wonderful lessons from the experiences of Peter and Paul. Brother Rowland and his wife are ever ready with tongue and purse to help the blessed cause.

The Religio is moving along in the study of the Book of Mormon. Brother Lewis Dalton, one of our present and coming workers, has charge and is setting a good example of promptness and energy. Such are highly appreciated.

Spring is upon us in this southern country. Pansies are in bloom, trees are bud ling, and the wind blows. Wife and I expect soon to return to Independence to attend conference, and after that the future is undetermined. We are loath to leave the people here who have grown dear to us, and we love the Lord's work.

Yours in the harness, with all confidence for peace and success in the great cause,

J. M. TERRY.

Colorado Springs, Colorado
March 6.—The Saints here were pleased to have with them recently Brother Eben Miller. They are also glad to report three baptisms.

Missionary J. D. Curtis has been with us a few days, preaching some very fine sermons. He also effect ed a new opening about thirty-five miles east of here, where he arranged for appointments for the local brothers to fill twice a month. We also expect to make an appointment for twice a month at Cripple Creek.

The ladies of this branch are to be commended for their activities. The church is nearing completion. A picture of it will be taken when it is completed.

Since attending district conference we have a greater determination to go on in the work. The sermons that were delivered by the President were indeed food for the hungry and gave us a better insight into the intended program. All the Saints who heard have a better conception of President Smith than they have had. We are praying for the General Conference, that it may eliminate all contention and advance by leaps and bounds afterwards. We have no time for contention if we would go on to perfection.

W. E. ROGERS.

Duluth, Minnesota
March 5.—On February 7 Elder William Sparling, of Minot, North Dakota, started a series of meetings here. His subjects were handled in a very fine manner and were accompanied with the Spirit, making the sermons a power for good. Five thousand handbills were distributed in the city, but the response was not noticeable. We pray they will bear fruit in due time. However, the Saints received a clearer understanding of the gospel. After the close of the meetings Brother Sparling went to Two Harbors, where there are three members of the priesthood and thirty Saints.

At the sacramental service March 1 we had a foretaste of a real latter-day service, when the spirit of unity, love, and prophecy was given, bringing much joy, peace, and confidence to the Saints. District President G. W. Day met with us and assisted Brother C. B. Freeman and Brother Sparling. He returned home before the evening service.

The Saints here were made sad over the death of Sister Ruth Johnson. She went to the hospital for an operation, where she fell out of bed to the floor. In spite of all they could do for her, she passed away February 21. She was a ray of sunshine to everyone with whom she came in contact. Her funeral was held from the newly acquired church, with the biggest audience ever in their place of worship. Brother Sparling preached the sermon to many who had never before heard this latter-day message.

All the departments are showing that there is work to be done in this place. The Sunday school, in charge of Sister V. Freeman, wife of the pastor, is showing a fine record in attendance these days on account of the contest which was held. The Religio is being held Friday evening at half past seven and is steadily striving to push forward. The Department of Women is active under the able leadership of Sister Mollie Foathers. They meet every two weeks at the homes of the members.

The Publicity Department is pleased with the response of

the Saints all over the country to the call for papers. To date 2,004 Ensigns have been distributed since January 1. We are thankful for the papers and hope they may bear much fruit and reach the honest in heart, drawing them to God's kingdom. We can plant, others can water, but God gives the increase.

Our prayers are that when General Conference convenes all matters of controversy will be settled and that the church will go forward to the goal as set by God, that Zion may be redeemed and put on her beautiful garments of righteousness.

Southern Nebraska District

The conference of the Southern Nebraska District convened at Nebraska City Saturday, March 7, at eleven o'clock in the morning, Apostle F. Henry Edwards and Elders Ed Robertson and H. F. Chapin presiding. The morning hour was given over to short addresses by members of the priesthood.

At two o'clock in the afternoon conference again convened, and after the usual routine of business the election of officers was taken up. On motion Elder H. F. Chapin was made district president until such time as the appointing powers should send some one to the district to act in that capacity. He chose as his associates O. W. Garrett and M. J. Hughes. The present secretary, Blanche I. Andrews, was sustained. Delegates to General Conference were chosen as follows: F. H. Higgins, E. F. Robertson, Blanche I. Andrews, H. A. Higgins, and G. R. Wells. A resolution prevailed providing for two-day meetings to be held in all the branches the coming summer.

The business of the Sunday school was also cared for during this session. Brother H. F. Chapin was made district superintendent on the same basis as he was made district president. Blanche I. Andrews was reelected secretary and treasurer.

The Sunday program was a full one, with prayer and testimony meeting at half past eight, Sunday school at nine forty-five, preaching at eleven, baptismal service at two, confirmation and preaching at three, and evening service at half past seven. The time and place for the next conference were left to the district presidency.

The conference was well attended, and it is believed that it was thoroughly enjoyed by everyone present. We were fortunate in having Brother Edwards with us, and his cheerful presence was encouraging. His sermons were helpful and inspiring. May he come again. The Saints of Nebraska City have completed a basement to their church, of which they are justly proud. Here they served dinner and supper to the visitors, making it possible for all to mingle during the intermissions. Thanks are due the Nebraska City Saints for their lavish hospitality.

Many of the Saints throughout the church will be grieved to learn that on January 8 George Parr, the husband of Sister Amy Parr of Nebraska City passed away. He had not been well for two years, but his last illness was of short duration—only one day. "Uncle George," as many called him, was not a member of the church, but the church people were welcome in his home, and the missionaries could always find a home and a welcome there. He was a kind and courteous gentleman and had many friends. His widow is a daughter of our beloved Uncle Mark H. Forscutt, of reverend memory. The funeral services were conducted by Elder H. A. Higgins, a friend of long years' standing. Interment was in Nebraska City.

Blanche I. Andrews.

San Francisco, California

March 8.—The Christmas offering last year amounted to $474. A valentine party on February 14 cleared $30 to help in building the assembly hall on the rear of the church.

February 22 Elder Cecil Hawley, of the district bishopric, preached in the morning, and in the evening Bishop Albert Carmichael gave an address on "Consacration." His instructions were much appreciated. The other preachers have been Missionary Virgil Etaenhouser, Emery Parks, H. B. Simpson, and George S. Lincoln. Brother Sheridan from Idaho was one of our visitors.

Apostle M. A. McConley and his family arrived from Australia on March 1 and took part in the sacramental service. They were as glad to reach America again as we were to see them. They visited Oakland Branch in the evening where he addressed the Saints, leaving next day for Independence.

All is going nicely here. Those who have been afflicted are much improved and fast approaching restoration to health. The Relief and Sunday school are both doing well. The social committee gave a boiled dinner Friday night which was well worth the fifty cents charged. The funds are for the assembly hall, which we hope to have some day. The sisters are splendid workers.

Modesto, California

March 9.—The Saints here have been very busy the past month trying to improve the branch, and they have succeeded to some extent. Two adults have been added to the branch by baptism, one a young mother, the other an older mother. Three children have also been baptized. Another young sister was baptized recently, Sister Mary E. Whitenack, who was converted while taking care of Sister Minnie Johnston. Even in all her affliction she is letting her light shine out to those who administer to her wants. The Saints are rejoicing and are striving to live better. One baptism occurred yesterday, and the Spirit of the Lord was felt in every prayer. The sermon delivered by Priest E. A. Frazier was surely inspired.

The Department of Recreation and Expression held a banquet in the basement of the church last Tuesday evening which was much enjoyed by all. The guests of honor were Elder E. B. Hull and all those whose birthdays came in the first quarter of the year, making fourteen at the guest table. Elder I. A. Phelps was the toastmaster. A hot meal was served, and just enough was charged to cover expenses. Sister Lottie B. Rose is at the head of this department and is making a success, for she puts her whole soul into it.

The young people's club will hold their semimonthly meeting Friday evening. This club is formed of the young people's class in the Department of Recreation and Expression, with Brother Earl Cook as president.

The junior class in the Department of Recreation and Expression is doing fine under the leadership of Elder I. A. Phelps.

The Orioles meet every two weeks and have good meetings. Last week they were entertained at the home of Mrs. Goodie, a nonmember, in the country. They all enjoyed the outing.

The Department of Women has taken up the study of the gospel in subjects, and they hope to be able to improve their minds and be able defendants of the cause.

Missionary E. B. Hull, who has been with us for the past month, is very much improved. His voice seems as strong as ever, although it still bothers him some. He has gone to other branches to encourage and strengthen the Saints as he has here. The desire and aim of the Saints of Modesto is to see the whole church prosper and Zion redeemed.

Nauvoo, Illinois

March 25.—As Brother Berve arose to deliver the evening discourse on March 8, word was brought him that Bishop George P. Lambert was very ill. He and Brother Layton drove to Rock Creek and found Brother Lambert suffering intensely. His old trouble had returned, and although everything was done that human hands could do, it was of no avail, and he passed away early the next morning. At the close of the reunion last summer, Brother Lambert was taken to Kekuk and a very serious operation performed. His recovery was remarkable, and the Saints hoped he would be spared for many years to come. He was in Nauvoo on business the Wednesday before he passed away and was apparently as well as ever, so his sudden death came as a blow to his many relatives and friends. He was respected by the entire community and will be missed as are few men.

At the close of the Sunday school hour March 16, a special program was given in honor of our little cradle roll baby. Several passages were read on the blessing of little children, “Welcome to Sunday school, baby dear” was sung by the school; Brother Berve gave a short talk, and Brother and Sister Henderson presented their six-month-old baby, Mable Elizabeth, to be blessed. This child was born the day her little sister passed away, and her life has hung by a thread. The prayers of the Saints have been offered in her behalf continually, and at last these prayers are being answered, and she is showing a marked improvement.

A very enjoyable evening was spent on Saint Patrick’s Day at the home of Brother and Sister Lewis in honor of the eighty-fifth birthday of Tamzie Newcomb. A short program was rendered; then each one present was called upon to give his favorite quotation from the Bible and tell why it was a favorite.

A junior service was held last Sunday morning in charge of A. L. Sanford. The beginner class sang a special song, a story was given by Sister Sanford, and the orchestra rendered “The palms.” Brother Sanford then produced his “mystery bag,” which he always carries to these services, and to the delight of the children it was found to contain a little puppy, several little guinea pigs of various colors, and a little chicken just out of the shell. With these he drew a lesson on the wonderful works of God.

Another family is soon to be added to our number. Brother Will Wood, of Onset, Massachusetts, has purchased a home and expects to move to Nauvoo with his wife and son in the near future.

Owen Sound Branch

Recently Patriarch John Shields paid a visit to our branch, he being requested to take charge of the funeral service of Elder J. L. Mortimer who passed away the evening of February 27.

Elder Shields’ visits are always enjoyed, wherever he goes. His presence at the special day services last summer were of great worth to the Saints throughout the district. We sincerely hope that we will be able to have special services this summer, giving opportunity to the Saints to gather together and enjoy the associations which only the Saints or the children of God can experience.

The evening of March 17 was made enjoyable by the efforts of the Department of Women to hold an Irish entertainment. The church was comfortably filled with the Saints and their friends. A lengthy program was enjoyed, which included many Irish numbers.

Apostle Ellis Sails for America

Papeete, Tahiti, March 9, 1925.—Apostle Ellis was the speaker at a farewell service held in the Tarona church tonight, preparatory to his departure for America on the S. S. Mahanui to-morrow morning. His stay of nearly four months with us in this mission since his return from Australia in November has been a very busy period, including the work of the mission conference in December, a missionary tour among the Tuamotuan Islands, and a great volume of miscellaneous labors difficult of comprehension to those not acquainted with the peculiar conditions of this mission and yet quite essential to the solidity and permanence of our work here.

During the above mentioned period, Brother Ellis had the pleasure of baptizing eighteen into the church, while another five were baptized by the writer, twenty-three in all. The recent mission conference has given new life to the work here, and prospects are good for marked advancement in some lines this year. Our missionary brethren, Paia and Tarutarii, are at present in Papeete, but Tarutarii and wife will depart on the first boat for Tubuai, about four hundred miles southward, where the first branch of the Latter Day Saints Church in the Pacific Ocean was organized in the days of Joseph the Martyr.

We are praying for spiritual blessing upon the church during the General Conference which is now near at hand.

R. J. Farthing.

New York District Conference

The New York district conference met with the Buffalo Saints March 14 and 15, in the nest little church at Midway and Hutchinson Avenues. The program was nicely arranged and was well carried out. Everyone seemed to be at his best, despite the fact that the weather was extremely unpleasant.

A beautiful spirit of unity and peace prevailed throughout, and the time was well filled. At every service local talent, both of members and nonmembers, rendered excellent service with solos, duets, vocal and instrumental, readings, etc. Surely credit is due them for their good work.

During these sessions two baptisms were attended to—one a little boy of nine years, son of Brother and Sister George Shafer; the other an Indian maiden of mature years, Elkie Elms, who is working earnestly and diligently for the emancipation of her race. She seemingly is much interested in this work and bids fair to be in the front ranks. Elder P. L. Weegar officiated.

All seemingly enjoyed themselves. The election of delegates to General Conference and other business that needed attention was taken care of. The conference went into history as one of the very best in the New York District.

A. E. Stone.

In sending in her subscription to the Daily Herald, Sister J. C. Ulam, of Parkville, Missouri, writes: “If I attended conference I could not hear what was said, as I am very deaf. We have a radio, but I cannot hear over it. How I wish I could hear the wonderful sermons that will be broadcast at conference time. I would like to come to Independence so the elders could administer to me, for I know I would get better. However, I have no way to get there, so am asking all to pray for me that if it be God’s will I may be healed of my affliction.”
Fall River, Massachusetts

March 15.—Apostle J. A. Gillen spent March 3 and 4 in Fall River. His father organized this branch over sixty years ago. All enjoyed his sermons and association.

On March 8 Elder Raymond Bradshaw of Attleboro was the speaker. There was a good attendance in the evening and the listeners were blessed and edified. Alma Coombs was the morning soloist, and Joseph Cliff sang in the evening.

There were no services March 15, for many had gone to the Southern New England conference at Somerville.

Class Three of the Sunday school held a bean and cold meat supper March 7. They cleared over thirty dollars for Christmas offering. Several of the members have already earned the Christmas offering buttons.

The funeral of Sister Thirza Linney was held from the church March 3 at two o’clock. The church was filled with relatives and friends, and the floral offerings were many and beautiful. The services were in charge of the pastor, James W. Heap, and a trio sang, “Some day he’ll make it plain to me,” and “The Lord knows why,” and at the grave “Rock of ages.” Sister Linney was seventy-nine years of age, and her voice was always heard in song and testimony.

The Temple Builders are working on a play. They are also planning a house party March 31 at the home of Florence Sheehy.

Jefferson City, Missouri

March 21.—With the Lord’s help the gospel work is being established in this capital city, the heart of the “Land of Missouri.”

A few weeks ago Elder J. W. A. Bailey of Independence delivered a series of splendid lectures at the home of Brother and Sister M. R. Walker, which resulted in the organization of a Sunday school, also a regular coming together of the Saints on Sunday.

We feel that the eyes of the church are upon this city and want to do our best to firmly plant the work. We desire an interest in the prayers of the Saints, that our efforts might be crowned with success.

A. H. Wintermeyer

Haverhill, Massachusetts

March 12.—The Saints of this city feel proud for more reasons than one. It will undoubtedly be remembered that this city is the home not only of the Quaker poet, John G. Whittier, but also of Hannah Dustin, in whose memory a monument has been erected in one of the parks.

The branch here is in a fine spiritual condition, and the young people are active in the work, taking part in the various activities of the branch.

We have just had with us Brothers O. L. Thompson and J. A. Gillen. Brother Thompson gave a series of meetings which were greatly enjoyed, but Brother Gillen was able to be present only one night. Even this short stay was appreciated. We are glad that Brother Gillen could be here at this time as he was given an opportunity to speak to some of the mothers and teachers of the schools on cooperation. We have had some favorable comments on his address.

We were sorry to hear of the sickness of Brother Thompson after he left us, but are glad to hear that he is on the road to recovery.

We are ever praying for the success of the work and the unity of God’s people.

Birmingham, Alabama

March 19.—The Saints are trying to do what they can in the Master’s cause, but we have the usual handicap of cottage meetings, in that we are unable to get nonmembers of the vicinity to come to our services. Most of them are churchgoers and have no time for other services. However, we have one regular attendant who is a Methodist, and one Baptist.

We had an enjoyable and profitable time at our last sacramental service, which was held at the home of Brother and Sister Booker of Bessemer. It was decided sometime previously that the services on the first of each month should be held at Brother Booker’s home.

Brothers T. C. Kelley and W. D. Bullard have both been here recently and delivered some very forceful and beneficial sermons. Brother Kelley preached one evening, and Brother Bullard preached Sunday, both morning and evening. We appreciate the ministrations of these brothers.

Our meetings will be held at 419 Fulton Avenue until further notice. We ask the prayers of the Saints to supplement our efforts for the success of the cause in Dixie.

Watertown, Ontario

March 19.—After Religio a week ago last Thursday night, which was held at the home of Elder D. B. Perkins, a crokinole contest was held. Young and old seemed to enjoy themselves. Another contest will be held this week after Religio.

Last Sunday special services were arranged for the aged of the branch, it being the ninetieth birthday of old Sister Rydall. Another of our members also celebrated his seventieth birthday. Others between those mentioned were present and occupied the front seats.

With pretty flowers decorating the interior of the church, the first service began at half past ten in charge of District President D. B. Perkins, assisted by Elders John Shields and S. G. St. John. It consisted of early acquaintances made by Brother Shields. Then Brother St. John gave some experiences in the field, relating them as nearly as possible to the aged ones present. Upon request, one aged brother who is very hard of hearing bore his testimony, to the enjoyment of all present. With other testimonies and several earnest prayers on behalf of the aged brothers and sisters in the faith, the meeting was brought to a close.

A special lunch was prepared by the sisters of the branch, and all who could stayed and enjoyed the repast together.

At one o’clock Elder Shields preached, taking his text from the 37th Psalm, verse 25: “I have been young and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread.” He related his experiences as a missionary, verifying the words of the Psalmist.

Brother S. G. St. John occupied at the evening service. Special music was rendered at the different services, which seemed to lighten and cheer the hearts of those present. After the evening service we tuned in our radio and had the pleasure of hearing for the first time K L D S. We got the last number of the ladies’ quartet, a song from the Hymnal, and the sermon by Brother Martin. Chicago stations interfered some, but we were pleased to get as much as we did. The music was fine, and Brother Martin’s clear, distinct voice helped greatly. We expect to listen again to-night and will be glad when the 1000-watt station is in operation.

Tulare, California

TULARE, CALIFORNIA, March 11.—A pleasant event of the season was made possible by the kindness of the superintendents of the girls' and boys' department, Iva Powell and Durward Harper, who entertained the girls and boys at a picnic and wild-flower picking in the hills on Saturday, February 21. A beautiful spot was reached by noon. Large baskets of luncheon were prepared for the noon repast. The baskets were carried to the top of a hill and the contents spread on rocks and wild flowers. After luncheon everyone hiked over the hills, picking and discussing the different wild flowers. A ball and bat were taken along to play a game, but a space level enough could not be found. The day was wonderfully spent by the girls and boys and by the parents who went along.

The Temple Builders are kept busy working on different articles for the bazaar.

The Department of Women bought aisle runners for the church as a Christmas present to the branch. Although they were not presented until Sunday, March 8, they were very much appreciated.

March 8 Elder H. C. Powell and wife attended services at Fresno and Brother Powell preached for the Saints at eleven o'clock.

March 1 we enjoyed the usual service, partaking of the sacrament and engaging in song, prayer, and testimony.

The Sunday school and Religio are moving forward.

Santa Ana, California

Elder T. W. Williams visited the Santa Ana Saints on February 22, and preached on the bar of God and offices and callings in the church. These subjects had been previously announced as a part of our special Sunday services by the young people. Elder Williams has many friends in Santa Ana.

The pastor and wife and Sister Taressa Keonce enjoyed a pleasant visit with Sister Boynton at El Toro, seventeen miles out. Before returning we also called on her father, Brother Thompson, who was one of the active elders in the days of Elders Burton, French, Mills, Jones, and others. Brother Thompson, though too old to be at church often, still retains his love for the work, and delights in telling of his experiences while engaged in it.

The Saints here were pleased to see Sister Gladys Melton admitted into the kingdom through the door of baptism on March 1. Sister Melton is a telephone operator. May she ever merit God's help and blessings in her new faith.

Miss Leona Rabe was recently obliged to come home from Graceland because of the condition of her mother. She hopes to return to Graceland again in the fall.

Sister Rogers, district superintendent of the Department of Women of Long Beach, met with the women at the parsonage on March 11 and gave them on interesting talk on the work of their department.

March 15 our series of fifteen special Sunday services on the fundamentals of the everlasting gospel came to an end. Attendance and interest were fair, and some nonmembers were present at every service. In addition to the baptism of Sister Melton it is difficult to say how much good was done, but we hope and pray that our efforts shall bear fruit in strengthening the faith of some.

The Saints in Santa Ana are praying for the peaceful and righteous settlement of the controversy.

San Jose, California

March 12.—The Department of Women has taken the responsibility of redecorating the church, the nature of the work to be tainting and papering. The new heating capacity, new lighting system, new carpets, and many other improvements will add to the comfort, taste, and convenience of our already good building. The assuming of such responsibilities bespeaks the integrity with which this department is moved and the reliance that can be placed upon it.

The Sunday school work is moving along nicely under the superintendence of two faithful young men: Brothers Oscar Bradley and M. Smith, who are thoroughly competent and have proved themselves worthy the position they fill. They are working hard for attendance and Christmas offerings.

The choir leader, Sister Ruth Bradley, is one of the most accomplished and amiable in the branch, and Sister Lena Christopher, organist, is an artist in music. They are receiving excellent response from the choir and have taken double work upon themselves in preparing a beautiful cantata for Easter in addition to the regular choir work.

The Department of Recreation and Expression is not behind, and all possible effort is being made to create interest. This work is superintended at present by the pastor, Brother B. R. Gilbert, ably assisted by Secretary Russell Place, who is acting as first assistant.

The branch is not lagging, and with the assistance of valuable allies the pastor feels assured that nothing but good will, peace, and spiritual uplift can be the end.

Stockton, California

March 25.—Another spiritual feast was enjoyed by all who were present at the March sacramental service. We had with us the district president, W. H. Dawson, of Sacramento, his brother, and Brother Albert Frazier and family, of Modesto. Many strengthening testimonies were given, several of them by children. A special degree of the Spirit prevailed throughout the meeting.

The cafeteria supper held this month was for the purpose of replenishing the branch funds. About $25 was the amount raised.

Owing to a severe winter following a hard year, many people suffered hardships and want. The local community chest seemingly could not look after everyone, so Stockton Branch, filling its place in community work, discovered a family in destitute condition. Lamoni Old People Have Radio Receivers

LAMONI, IOWA, March 16.—In answer to a letter published in the HERALD of December 31, asking for donations to help install radios at the old people’s homes in Lamoni, we are happy to say that checks, money orders, and bills immediately began to be received, and seemingly the end is not yet, for just recently we received a letter from Sydney, Australia, containing ten shillings for the radio fund. Brother Frank Lofty, of Moherly, Missouri, donated a fine loud speaker, and others were as liberal in their donations, the result of which is that five tube Neutrodynes, with loud speakers are now established in both the homes. We wish to take this means of thanking all who contributed toward this cause.

SAINTS’ HOME.

F. L. SAWLEY.

Cherokee, Iowa

March 20.—With the return of good weather and good roads, our attendance at Sunday school is much better. Many were present last Sunday who have not been with us for many weeks. There were also four visitors. The superintendent is doing all in her power to improve the school.

The attendance at prayer services is very good, and we enjoy some spiritual blessings. The testimonies of the little folks are very interesting.

The Department of Women is taking up the study of food and the body and expect to gain much good therefrom. The Department of Recreation and Expression gave a Saint Patrick’s social at the home of Sisters Abbott and Kolarich. The rooms were prettily decorated for the occasion and a short program was rendered, after which games were played. Lunch was served and all departed for home feeling the evening had been well spent. The next social will be in charge of the little folks.

There was a large attendance at the sacramental service March 1, at which the Spirit was present with power. The prayers and testimonies of the Saints were inspiring and helpful to all present.

The Department of Recreation and Expression is doing a fine work at present under the leadership of Albert Haynes. One senior class is taking up the Young People’s History of the Church; another is studying the Book of Mormon; while the little folks are given story periods. For entertainment each family is to furnish not to exceed four numbers for a program on the Sunday evening assigned to them. The Saints respond nicely to this arrangement and furnish some very fine programs. Interest and attendance are increasing.

Elder A. R. Crippen has been unable to fill any appointments on account of illness. Elder E. L. Edwards was the speaker Sunday morning, March 16. He is always a welcome visitor to the branch. Elder William Shore attended services last Sunday for the first time after an illness of several weeks.

Last Sunday we enjoyed a fine lecture on church etiquette by Vernon Spence. This was given under the auspices of the Department of Recreation and Expression, and the truths he told should indeed be a lesson to all who heard him. Saints are sometimes very careless of their behavior in church.

March 22 was set as rally day for Christmas offering, but for various reasons it had to be postponed. However, the attendance at Sunday school was the largest of the year. The Christmas offering drive is coming fine, and we see quite a number of the club buttons being worn.

All are anxiously awaiting reports from General Conference. We have been praying for God’s divine guidance and direction in the conference so that we may smooth out the rough places in our path and spread the gospel. Truly God’s plan cannot be frustrated. We believe this will be proved to us before long and that God’s people will come together and rejoice over the privilege of being laborers in his vineyard.

Many of the Saints have been victims of the “flu,” which is prevalent here, but all are now on the road to recovery.

Bevier, Missouri

March 25.—Elder F. T. Mussell, of Des Moines, Iowa, came here to attend the Doctor Mason funeral February 26 and assisted Elder J. W. A. Bailey of Independence, and Reverend O. L. Angel of the Christian Church of Macon. Brother Bailey’s sermon has been highly commended by many of the large congregation present. Although the weather was threatening and very cold, it was probably the largest funeral ever held at Bevier. Anticipating a big crowd, the Christian and Baptist church buildings near by were heated and opened up to take care of those not being able to find room in the large Congregational church building.

All three churches were filled, top and basements, and the People’s Hospital and near-by residences besides. It took over an hour for the solid stream of sorrowing friends to pass the bier, and then there were several hundred who did not enter the building.

While Brother Mussell was here, he was called upon to conduct two other funerals. One service, that of Mrs. Earnestine Loake, was held in the Saints’ chapel March 2; the other was March 4, for a young World War veteran who died from tuberculosis contracted by being gassed in France, Louis G. Mullinix. The remains were taken to Lagonda for burial. While the widow was attending the funeral, her home was destroyed by fire. Both of the deceased were nonmembers.

Missionary E. F. Robertson visited us for about a week and occupied Sunday night, March 15, with a splendid sermon. From here he went to Higbee and will visit Hartsburg, Missouri, before going to General Conference.

Announcements have been received of the birth of a daugh­ter to Mr. and Sister Marvin L. Landers, at Baker City, Oregon, March 12. She was formerly Neola Thomas of Bevier. A son was born to Brother and Sister Rhodes Burton, at Huntsville, Missouri, March 19. Sister Burton was formerly Lydia Hoppell of Bevier.

The mines have been closed down here for one year with no prospect of opening up at this time.

Sister A. R. White of Kansas City attended Doctor Mason’s funeral.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Moorhead, Iowa

March 26.—As usual, a few of the Saints of this branch changed location this spring, although most of the changes were local. Brother Frank Larson, who moved to Colorado, went the greatest distance. He was compelled to make this change owing to the condition of his wife's health.

Quite a number of the Saints from this branch attended the quarterly conference at Logan. Branch President T. O. Strand was on the delegate list chosen to represent Little Sioux District at General Conference.

District President Joseph Lane made a short visit to our branch two weeks ago.

Out of sympathy and respect for the Lawrence Nelson family, of Castana, Iowa, who formerly were residents in this vicinity, several of the Saints attended the funeral of Mrs. Loren Means, formerly Rebecca Nelson. Mrs. Means was instantly killed when she lost control of the car she was driving Monday afternoon, March 22, as she tried to escape an approaching storm. Her sister was seriously injured, but hopes are entertained for her recovery. Two children were also in the car, but escaped injury.

Brother and Sister Pitt Come North

April 1.—We arrived home last Monday, after a very pleasant winter in sunny Florida. We decided to come by the shorter route this time, but never again, as we found the roads through some parts of Tennessee and Kentucky were rough, in some places almost impassable, and the mountain roads very narrow and really dangerous. So hereafter we prefer going via Washington. We reached home in safety, however, having been but seven days en route. Brother Dan Joy, of Providence, Rhode Island, accompanied us and assisted wife in driving the car and making our trip more pleasant.

Our opportunity for gospel work was somewhat limited on account of the scattered condition of our members and other hindrances. Our first location was in Leesburg, from where we went on to Tampa and Saint Petersburg, then retracing our steps to Orlando, "The City Beautiful."

While in Leesburg we drove to Howey, the new blue-print city being built, about fifteen miles distant, and held meetings several times in the schoolhouse auditorium, as there is not a church edifice in the city. We always met with a warm welcome by interested audiences. We have no members there, but the people seem to love our message, and we hope to see a good branch there in time.

We sometimes wonder why it would not be well for our members who visit Florida in winter to locate in some one spot instead of scattering all over the State, thus having the benefit of each other's society and a more concentrated effort in spreading the gospel. I know of no better spot for this purpose than in and about Howey, situated in about the center of the State and the highest point in Florida, in the midst of sixty thousand acres of orange grove land, the beauty spot of Florida and an ideal spot for a home when considering climate, soil, pure drinking water, health, and other advantages. At least this is as we see it, and we intend to build our home there next winter, the Lord willing, as it is the best place we have found for a home in all our travels. We are promised a lot without cost for a church home as soon as we are able to build. We hope as a church we shall not fail to avail ourselves of this offer, and shall get in on the ground floor.

We would like to tell you more about this beautiful place but fear it would read too much like an advertisement and our letter only find place in the waste basket. At the same time we feel the Saints should know all that is possible of Florida, where so many thousands are now directing their steps. If we can be of any help in this direction, we shall be happy.

In Tampa and in Saint Petersburg we found a few members and held some meetings. We also spoke in the public park, where three or four thousand were assembled, and led the community singing. In Orlando we found brother Dan Joy working among the few members there, and we tried to do our part in assisting him. We had the pleasure of seeing him lead two precious souls down into the water. Others there seem to be near the kingdom.

While in Orlando we made our home a part of the time with Brother and Sister W. T. Enreric, formerly of Peoria and Chicago. Sister Enrican's friends will be pleased to know this sister is still in the faith and is one of the bright lights in that city. The hospitality of these good people will not be forgotten.

We like Florida and believe it has a wonderful future. Its advantages are beginning to be known and are the cause of so many locating there. We hope as a church we shall be able to do our part as the Lord would have us.

In gospel bonds, F. G. Pitt.

Sarnia, Ontario

March 16.—During the first part of January Brother Joseph Yeager of Warton was with us one evening and gave an interesting address on his experiences in missionary work. The Department of Women here is active and keeps busy quilting and sewing. They held a Christmas sale of home baking and sewing which netted them about $23.

The branch is holding a contest to continue over one year, the returns of which are to be donated to the building fund. The sides are captured by Brothcr C. Lewis and Brother J. Clatworthy. The sides are putting on some social events alternately, every two weeks. In this we hope to clear off the biggest amount owing on the church.

We have been listening over the radio for K. L. D. S., but so far have not had the privilege of hearing our station. We are looking forward to the coming of General Conference and hope it will be one grand success wherein the Lord's hand will reign. We ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints for the success of the work in this branch.

Lily M. Swainson.

San Antonio, Texas

March 18.—The Southwestern Texas district conference was held at San Antonio February 28 and March 1, opening Saturday at three o'clock in the afternoon with a well-attended business session, Saints coming from different parts of the district. A good spirit was manifest throughout the meeting. The following delegates to General Conference were appointed: D. S. Palmer, W. H. Manrrning, G. W. Hiles, Harry Robinson, and Mrs. Sophia Ferguson. A resolution was passed to hold the next reunion at Bandera, Texas, the time being left with the district presidency and missionary supervisor. Brother Crowfield Jackson was the speaker at the Saturday evening service.

Sunday school was held Sunday morning at a quarter of ten in charge of local officers, and preaching was had at eleven and half past seven by Brother D. S. Palmer. Sacramental and prayer service was held at three o'clock, and was well attended. A marked degree of the Spirit accompanied.

On Thursday evening, March 5, the Religious gave a banquet at the "Original Mexican Restaurant." About fifty-five were present to enjoy the fine program that was given, and a vote of thanks was given to those in charge.

The Department of Women is planning an Easter bazaar to be given April 10 and 11. The Sunday school is improving in attendance, there being only eleven scholars absent last Sunday.

March 8 Pastor T. J. Jett, jr., was the speaker in the morning. In the evening Brother C. E. Miller talked principally to the young people, encouraging them to use their talent. A large audience was present, and the sermon was well received.

Kearney, Nebraska

March 27.—The Saints of Kearney feel very much encouraged with the growth of the work here. A short time ago three families were meeting for Sunday school in our home, but now we have built a small church and have an average attendance of forty-five.

We have Sunday school and preaching in the morning, choir and orchestra practice in the afternoon, Religious in the evening every Sunday, and prayer meeting Wednesday night. Nearly all of the young people take part in the prayer and testimony meetings.

A short time ago five were added to our number by baptism.

The orchestra, which consists of piano, two violins, clarinet, cornet, alto horn, slide trombone, drums, and an unfin-ing leader, affords us much pleasure.

The Saints here are praying for the leaders of the church and believe God's blessings will continue with them.

William F. Godfrey.

Senlac, Saskatchewan

March 18.—Elder W. J. Cornish left home on Wednesday, March 4, to meet Elder Fred Scott, his associate in the district presidency, at Bigger, and together they will meet with the Saints in the Ruthilda Branch to aid and encourage them; then on to Prince Albert, and perhaps other branches in the district as the needs may demand.

A new baby boy appeared at the home of Priest E. Leslie Mogg on March 9. He may be listed in the lightweight champion class, as his weight is a little over five pounds.

On March 9 a similar boy came to the home of Brother John Harper and wife, and they made him welcome. This is the fifth boy coming to live in the branch this winter.

Among recent social events was a Valentine party at the home of Elder A. J. Cornish. They reported a good time.
On Valentine's Day twenty-five guests assembled at the home of Elder W. J. Cornish to witness the wedding of his eldest daughter, Eva R., to Brother Robert Pentland, Elder W. J.
Cornish officiating. Sister Grace Huggett acted as bridesmaid, and Brother Rudolph Cornish, brother of the bride, as best man. The ceremony was at three o'clock in the afternoon, and the guests partook of a substantial feast. The young couple are at home within the limits of the branch.
Last evening Brother and Sister Pentland gave a reception in their new home, and a pleasant time was enjoyed.

But while these pleasant social events have been enjoyed,
On March 8 Doctor G. F. Hull preached a powerful sermon on going forward. We know he practices what he preaches, for we understand he is planning to build a new home and enlarge his practice. We rejoice that he has decided to stay with us.

Other sermons were preached by Brothers E. O. Clark, David Dowker, and J. L. Parker, all inspiring us with their faith and ability to carry on God’s work.

A banquet was given by the Altrumist Chapter of Temple Builders March 14 at the community club rooms of the Rollins Hosier Mills. A wonderful program was presented, and a delicious repast was partaken of by all attending. A nice sum was raised for the new church.

March 21 the Department of Women superintended a banquet at the Grotto Hall for stationary engineers, and $90 was raised for the new church, which proves the women are endeavoring to go forward.

A missionary board has been formed among the elders of the branch. Brother J. L. Parker has been chosen chairman, with Brothers F. O. Wilkinson and Norman Anderson as his assistants.

New London, Connecticut

March 31.—Apostle James A. Gillen visited New London Branch February 24, preaching in the evening of that date. The sermon was convincing and highly edifying. The following evening Apostle Gillen preached at Westerly Branch, and quite a number of the Saints went there to hear him. It is about seventeen or eighteen miles to Westerly Branch, but those who went were well rewarded by the splendid sermon they heard.

Elder Frank S. Dobbins, of Brockton, Massachusetts, preached here at the morning and evening services of Sunday, March 22. The sermons were inspiring and encouraging. The Saints will surely miss Brother Dobbins when he goes to Maine.

Patriarch J. D. Sutliff and family were here from Providence, Rhode Island, Sunday, March 29. Patriarch Sutliff preached at the morning service. His talks are highly spiritual.

Brother Duncan Sutliff, district superintendent of the Department of Religious Education, gave a talk to the Sunday school, which was received with interest.

Pittsburgh Conference

PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA, March 22.—The district conference was held March 14 and 15. On Saturday afternoon the business of the district was transacted by departments. We are indeed thankful to have harmony and a very fine class of willing workers in the district, as well as in Pittsburgh Branch.

Saturday evening the conference was given an interesting entertainment by talented and faithful workers in singing, recitation, and music. The band was indeed a great success, especially when we realize the small amount of time they have had for practice, and we hope they will not weary of the good they are doing.

Visitors were present from DuBois, Punxsutawney, Fayette City, and Lock 4. We were pleased to welcome Brothers Gomer T. Griffiths and W. C. Neville, who are known almost throughout the church. These men are loved by us and are a strength and inspiration to those with whom they come in contact.

It was hard to select delegates to General Conference, as so few knew whether they were going. We pray that those who do go will do so with prayer.

Spring is here, and with beautiful days we feel that there are no heights to which we could not climb. Although not perfect, we feel that the branch is in good condition, and the Saints are advancing, while love and fellowship is felt in the priesthood.

The regular Religio meetings have been changed from Friday evening to Sunday evening before preaching service. They expect to meet two evenings a month.

We again extend an invitation to visitors to Pittsburgh to make this church their home. We are located at Realty and Tomapah Avenues (Beechview). Our branch president is L. F. P. Curry, 1518 Grandin Avenue (Dormont). He, as well as the branch, will welcome you.

Sacramento, California

March 25.—Brother George Wixom has just closed a two-week service in Lincoln, a small town about thirty-five miles from Sacramento. He had very good attendance and much interest, which culminated in the baptism of one, leaving a number of others investigating.

Brother and Sister Curry are the only Saints in Lincoln, and they made it possible for the meetings, not only by their untiring efforts, but in a financial way, as a hall had to be rented. Brother Curry has organized a union Sunday school so as to keep the interest of the investigators.

The Sacramento Saints are glad to have Brother Wixom back, and all feel it has been a treat to have him with us this winter.

The interest shown in the various departments is very encouraging. The Department of Recreation and Expression, in charge of Brother C. E. Ball, is well attended, and Brother Ball has made special effort to obtain talent for our programs. The Sunday school, in charge of Sister C. H. S. Bidwell, who gives much time to her office, is a revelation. Each Sunday has its special program, much to the delight of the children and the interest of the adults. The junior church closely follows the Sunday school and is provided each Sunday with a short, appropriate program and a sermon.

Flag Day was very impressive. Doctor Whidden, a local physician, gave an address on “The birth and growth of our flag,” using large colored pasteboard flags for illustration. A small boy recited, “Your flag and mine,” and a non-member sang, “On Flanders’ field.” The campfire girls’ demonstration from the Y. W. C. A., with their songs and flags, was also appropriate. Following this Brother Wixom gave a patriotic sermon, which made the services of the day complete.

The junior choir, under the direction of Sister Birdie Clark is not only furnishing us with music but is also keeping the children interested in attending church.

March 15 was also a day of many events at our church. We were surprised at the close of Sunday school to hear the announcement of a wedding that was to take place at once. Sister Myrtle Sharp, daughter of the late Adam Sharp, and Mr. George Burdusia had requested Brother W. H. Dawson to perform the ceremony. The couple left immediately after the ceremony, but not before they had been showered with rice, as some quick mind had taken advantage of the corner grocery.

After Sunday school, which had an attendance of over one hundred, Brother Wixom delivered a sermon on baptism, after which three were baptized.
Saturday and Sunday, March 21 and 22, Sacramento had a two-day rally. All who could come were invited to attend, and a special invitation was extended to Brother Ruhton and Brother Hull. Brother Ruhton was the principal speaker, delivering two very instructive sermons. The weather was ideal, and picnic lunches were served for both the noon and evening meals. All seemed to have an enjoyable time.

La Junta, Colorado

March 30.—The branch of Saints here is still on the map. When we first came here two months ago the branch was at a very low ebb. However, through efforts of Brother Bruce E. Brown, district president, and Brother Paul Darnell, branch president, conditions have changed. New interest has been aroused and the blessing of the Spirit has been ours to enjoy.

There are about sixty members enrolled here, many of whom are scattered. We have a large Sunday school with a goodly number of young folks who not only come for Sunday school but stay for preaching services. They are also interested in the midweek prayer meeting to such an extent that they are present nearly every week.

Brother J. D. Curtis, of Colorado Springs, held three weeks of meetings here just before the district conference February 23. We had a very good attendance at these meetings and at times could not seat everyone. Many nonmembers were interested and attended regularly. One was baptized and we feel that others are near the kingdom. We enjoyed having Brother Curtis with us, for we were hungering and thirsting for a few old Jerusalem gospel sermons, and we hope and pray that he may be able to come back soon and finish his work here.

A number of the Saints from this place attended the conference at Denver, which was much enjoyed, especially the sermons by Brother F. M. Smith on the redemption of Zion. We hope that we may be able to do our bit in helping on this grand work and that we may all be able to abide the day of His coming.

May the blessings of the Spirit abide with the Lord's people.

The Reward

_By Mary Bradley_

A huge black cloud has covered The sun’s bright face and glad; My life in grief is smothered By sorrows great and sad.

But soon I know the darkness Will all be cleared away, And in its place come dawning The bright and lovely day.

’Tis so I know the Master, In kind and loving way, Will guide me through the tempest And all my deeds repay.

High Points in President Smith’s Address on Church Government

President Frederick M. Smith was requested to prepare for publication in pamphlet form the interpretation of the document of the council of April, 1924, contained in his speech on the conference floor Friday morning. We give here the contents of the pamphlet, which was delivered to the conference simultaneous with the making of the motion for the previous question:

“The church is of divine appointment.” (I have picked out the words of that first paragraph which set out its meaning.) Will any man question that? And let me suggest to you that there evidently is a group in the church who have a disposition to hold that no longer is divine authority the foundation stone on which this church is built. I mean to say by that that this church is very fast becoming unique (with perhaps one other exception) in its belief that it is necessary to have an authoritative religion. And this comes from the effort to democratize the church. And let me suggest to you with all the earnestness of my soul that this is the thing to which the delegates and ex officios of this conference and the church throughout the length and breadth of the land must give careful attention. Are we as a church about to be swept off the foundation of divine authority? So far as I am personally concerned, from my study of religions as fostered by man, I have reached the conclusion that when I yield the question of divine authority and say that religion is democratic I shall cease to be a member of any church.

“The government of the church is by divine authority through priesthood.” I challenge the statement that has been made on the floor of this conference that priesthood is not limited to group. It is if we are to believe the doctrines of the Latter Day Saint Church, for it is clearly set out, not only in Holy Writ so far as the Bible is concerned, but even more specifically so far as Holy Writ to Latter Day Saints is concerned, that men are ordained to the priesthood and that by the function of the Holy Spirit through those laying on hands. And that creates a group so far as priesthood is concerned. And we have affirmed that no man has a right to represent God unless he has this authority. Is that Latter Day Saintism or is it not? This means, if it means anything, that ordination is by the Spirit of God operating through those who are ordained, and authority is not bestowed by the voice of the people, but the voice of the people is used in expressing whether or not that authority will be exercised in their behalf. So no man, even though he might be properly ordained of God, has a right to represent the people without their voice.

“Common consent” has been mentioned. I want to give you an illustration of one aspect at least of common consent which is too little considered by this people. I sat in the conference of the Northern Wisconsin District not long ago, and there was a total of about fifty-nine votes, and yet that conference did work for the whole church, for an elder was selected by them after a call having come through proper authorities, and the man’s ordination was authorized by a vote of fifty-nine; and the ordination was had. And the voice of those fifty-nine and the ordination following imposed authority upon that elder and gave him the right to officiate among one hundred thousand Saints throughout the world, and by common consent the rest of the church accedes to the action of the district named. There should be a distinction made between common consent and formal approval or assent, if you please. And what is taking place in that district is taking place throughout the length and breadth of the land.

The difference between a district conference and this conference is this, that while they represent a locality, this is the church assembled in legislative capacity and hence becomes the voice of the people, the whole church. And so we can here by resolution speak legislatively for the whole body of the church, and the rest of the church by common consent accedes to what is done here.

In the discussion of government I submit that there is a great deal to be said distinguishing between a democracy and a representative government. This church is not in a sense a democracy for the reason that its legislative body (this conference) is representative, is republican in its character; it is not democratic. And every day we prove this by excluding from our assembly those who are not delegates or ex officios.

“God directs his church through clearly indicated channels.” We believe in revelation. We believe in inspiration. Hence we say that God directs his church, but being a God of order (I might even say a God of Supreme Directional Control) he insists, he demands that it shall be done in certain ways and through certain channels. It is true that inspiration may be granted to every man or every woman in the church who is functioning as an individual, but no individual is going to assume it is his right to “direct the church”; at least he ought not to. There have been individuals who have done it but not according to law.

Now coming to the paragraph beginning, “In organic expression and functioning there must be recognized grades of official prerogative and responsibility,” I will say that when that paragraph was indicted there was in my mind’s eye, not the legislative branch of the church, not the judicial branch of the church, though there can be organic expression and functioning in each of these, but we had in mind the idea of expressing in concrete form the method of attempting to carry out the policies and instructions of the General Conference, policies, instructions, and law which had been received by prophetic instruction, approved by representative vote, and those policies that may have originated with the people recognized and functioning in their right to initiate legislation. And so we have recognized in our study of organizations that there must be a systematic and orderly arrangement of those who constitute the administrative machinery. And I do not use the word machinery in an obnoxious sense. I mean the machinery through which this body expects to have its will carried out. This body is a legislative body and cannot carry out its will in the interim of conference, nor even in conference itself without that machinery functioning. So we have said that in order to reach efficiency and the proper presentation and finally complete the expression of the will of this people, there must be an organic form of expression that will be as orderly as God himself intends it should be and that he has said must be.

I was about to overlook something very important in that paragraph, "supreme directional control." Now what is meant by those words? It is simply this: If this body's will is to be carried out, there must be an expression and a manifestation of its will through its proper machinery that does not allow of its work being frustrated by a contention between two heads that are supposed to be equal. It cannot be done. It never has been done in organizations, and it will not be. The tendency of every body is to so arrange its organization that there is one person or one place whose responsibility can be fixed and an accounting called for. And so far as what was in the minds of those who presented this document to the council, (and I assume it was in the minds of the big majority who adopted it, thus becoming an expression of the Joint Council) is that this applies to the administrative affairs of the church. We were not dealing with the judicial. There is no reason why we should have attempted to do so there. The statement that was made on this floor (and which was absolutely uncalled for to put it in the most mild form), that the President of this church has at any time attempted to excommunicate a person without a proper court trial is false and never should have been uttered on this floor. There should have been a disposition in the name of fairness to find out what was done in the case rather than to come here with such a statement as that. I challenge anybody to show with any remote degree of exactitude that I have, or that any member of the Presidency has, attempted to manipulate the judicial machinery of the church in any way.

There is a sentence here interjected which has been mentioned a number of times that would not have been in this document if there had been a disposition on the part of "my friends, the enemy," to do anything else than presume that my desire and the desire of my fellow members in the Presidency was not to execute the work of the church with its beneficent purposes in view. And so we say that this directional control over the administrative affairs of the church in attempting to carry into effect the will of the body "should be presumed to be beneficent." If the purposes of the church as you, the General Conference, believe them to be are not carried out, you have recourse, for any General Conference of this church by a majority of one can say to your President, "Get out," and he has no recourse. Not even reasons have to be assigned.

I might say in an attempt further to relieve the disturbed minds of some of my brethren as has been reflected in their speeches on this floor, that so far as the Presidency is concerned the words "supreme directional control" had only reference to the administrative line of work.

"To carry into effect the purposes of the church, effective administration is imperative, and organic solidarity is maintained only by effective discipline which is in consonance with the beneficent purposes of the church, and yet strongly enough administered to prevent the purposes of the organization being frustrated by individual caprice and rebellion. Authority to be effective must be respected." My friends, there has been reference made in a number of speeches on this floor to that phrase in regard to effective discipline, and yet in only one single instance has there been an attempt to discuss it in any other way than in its punitive aspects. When discipline has a function so much expanded beyond a mere matter of punishing a man who has gone wrong, why should we spend so much time discussing the punitive aspects and leave untouched the matter of directional discipline? Here is what I have in mind. I believe it was mentioned before. A young man coming into this church, or an old man is assigned to a new work, and he comes to the office saying, What must I do? It seems to me it is something to be greatly desired that there shall be an effective discipline directed toward constructive discipline, and yet in such a manner that the end results of his work in the quickest way possible because constructive discipline is had. The word discipline was used there by the framers of that document in its broadest sense. The Methodist Church issues a book called the Methodist Discipline, and you will be very much surprised, if you have not read it, to find that there is not a word said there about going to jail or laying on the cat of nine tails or something of that kind.

I have kept still and have been, accused of doing so from an ulterior motive. Why, bless your souls, I saw some correspondence in which it was intimated that the President of this church was keeping still because he was afraid to talk.

In the closing paragraph of that document there is this language: "This view of the organization of the church affirms the interdependence of departments and coordination of action and holds General Conference as the instrument of the expression of the will of the people." In my opinion the only weakness in that paragraph is that it does not make it quite strong enough. We were unfortunate in presenting it in the negative sense, hence it was changed. In the original which was presented by the Presidency these are the words used: "This view of the organization of the church does not admit of independence of departments." That is where our trouble has been, in independence of departments. At the same time it goes on and says this view also holds the General Conference to be the instrument of the expression of the will of the people, speaking in a general sense. We know of course they have a chance to express their will in other ways such as in branches and districts, in business meetings and conferences, and they have expressed their will perhaps in some other ways; but the chief way for the general church to express its will is by General Conference enactment, though its will may be expressed by common consent to general administrative acts, which of course are always subject to legitimate review. And this also, it seems to me, presupposes the idea that the legislative body shall function as a legislative body and not as an administrative body. It is not a sitting of the board of directors. That is the basis on which I answered the question which has been distorted in an attempt to have it work to my disadvantage when I stated that the General Conference should not presume to issue orders to any man. Unless some man has been guilty of an official infraction of his responsibility to this body, the will of the body should be expressed in laws and an expression of policy. It has a right to call in question its officers, and in that way it may issue an order.
when an officer of the conference has violated the proprieties or his responsibilities to it. The Congress of the United States does not attempt to issue orders, but it does adopt laws, and immediately the law is adopted it is referred to the administrative department of the United States to execute it, which is why it is called the executive department. That is true here.

I am going to pass just briefly over this “Proposed basis of agreement.” That does not settle the main thing at issue which was considered by the Joint Council and which has been so disruptive of our organic solidarity, the relationship of the quorums, because it recognizes the right of the President over the high priesthood but lets go some other things that are extremely important so far as this difficulty is concerned.

Marriage in the United States

A great many articles have been printed, some of which have been referred to in the SAINTS’ HERALD, concerning the decline in family life and marriage and the amazing increase of divorce.

It now appears, according to the American Magazine for February, 1925, that Doctor William Fielding Ogburn, professor of sociology, of Columbia University, has completed an analysis or census of the United States at the request of a Bureau of the Census to secure exact figures for the status of marriage in this country.

He reports that in 1890, 55.3 per cent were married, but this is probably of those considered of a marriagable age, which is often taken at quite a low age, over fourteen years. In 1920, 59.9 per cent were married, an increase of 4.6 per cent. The increase was slight for the first decennial, but at the end of twenty years it had increased 2 per cent, but in the last decennial period had increased the remaining 2.6 per cent.

The greatest increase of marriages was between the ages of twenty and twenty-four, with the peak at twenty-one for young men and nineteen for young women.

In 1890, 18 per cent of all persons in the United States between the ages of fifteen and twenty-five were married; in 1920, 23 per cent were married of all persons in that age period. This shows a greater willingness of the present young people to marry, and that at quite an early age. It may be noted that the marriagable age is taken quite low, namely at fifteen years.

In 1920 the general figures are given that at the age of twenty years one fourth were married; at the age of twenty-one, one third. Of those aged twenty-four, one half were married; twenty-seven years, two thirds were married, and of those residing in 1920 in the United States thirty-five years of age, four fifths were married. Other figures infer that there are ten per cent who never marry. This would seem relatively a small percentage, and smaller than what has been generally supposed from ordinary newspaper discussion. The figures indicate that there are even more early marriages now than thirty years ago, and that the relatively small total percentage of married persons is because there is still a considerable percentage who do not marry until later than twenty years of age.

Divorce

A great deal of emphasis has been made of the increase of divorce. The rate has more than doubled within the thirty years. According to the census of 1890 three tenths of one per cent of the married population were reported as divorced. Twenty years later the percentage had arisen to seven tenths of one per cent. For the year 1920 alone there would appear to have been one eighth as many divorces as marriages. This is naturally a very serious figure, even though the resultant total percentage of the marriageable population divorced is still relatively small. The large numbers of families which remain united for many years naturally greatly decreases the percentage of divorces in the total population. It is too high, but not disastrously so.

An Insurance

Doctor Ogburn further reports that there is a smaller percentage of married people who go insane or go to jail or become paupers, and that married people live longer than the unmarried. That is, between the ages of thirty and fifty the percentage of bachelors who die is double that of married men. This may indicate that the people who get married are naturally more law abiding and have better sense. It hardly indicates that they are naturally more healthy, because widows and widowers die as readily as single people. There seems to be here an indirect testimony to the general success and happiness of married life. However that may be interpreted, the figures speak for themselves and rather tend to confirm our general observation that most people are law abiding and have proper respect for the institutions of society.

“Autumn Leaves” Wanted for New York Public Library

We have a call from the New York Public Library for volumes 1 to 16 (1888 to 1903), the first sixteen volumes, of our church magazine. The librarian says, “It is our intention to preserve the file permanently, and we feel it most important that it should be complete.”

If any of our readers possess all or parts of the volumes wanted and will so inform Sister Christiana Salyards, editor of Autumn Leaves, arrangement can be made to grant the request, and without duplication. It is almost as important that this be done as that the publishing house or church library possess a complete file, for America looks to the New York Public Library for the history of its literature, and many students and authors gain from its files their knowledge of our church. Let us remove from any such the excuse that our literature is not accessible even in this great library.

General Conference Debates Church Government

Five Days' Sessions Spent on the Subject; President Smith and Bishop McGuire Speak at Length

The discussion on church government which was taken up the second day of the conference in the morning session came to vote on Saturday afternoon, and the vote was completed before six o'clock in the evening. The discussion had been earnest and at some times even sharp, but for the scope of the matter and its wide meaning to the interests of the church and of individuals, it was remarkably free from personalities and the clashing which results from passion. Many of the leading men of the church were heard, and as it often happens, there were some the church would have been glad to hear who were unable to get the floor because of the strong demand that was made for time.

Before the discussion opened, a time limit of thirty minutes was set upon speeches during the remainder of the conference. This rule was suspended in the cases of President F. M. Smith, who spoke one hour and twenty-five minutes; and Benjamin R. McGuire, who probably spoke three hours on Friday afternoon and Saturday morning. The great majority of all those who claimed the floor occupied the full thirty minutes and crowded it with matter, many of them missing the goal which they had wished to reach, leaving the most important things they had to say because of the fall of the gavel.

The discussion of the seating of delegates instructed to vote for the document on church government adopted by the advisory council of April, 1924, crept in during the entire discussion, charges being made against the fairness of such a procedure and answer being made again that it was within the right of any branch to instruct its delegates so that the delegation would properly represent the thought of those who remained at home.

The regularity of the procedure of the April council was discussed pro and con; the composition of it, the scope of the work that it attempted to do, the manner in which the business was done, and practically all things pertaining to it were canvassed in the speeches of those discussing the question.

In order that our readers may have before them the issue as it appeared to the conference, we are presenting here the document that President F. M. Smith submitted for the Presidency and "The proposed basis of agreement" as signed and submitted by the Presidents of Seventy and supported by a strong majority of the Seventy and by other members of the conference:

To the Church: In April, 1924, in response to call from the Presidency, a council met in Independence comprising the following officials: The First Presidency, the members of the Quorum of Twelve who were in America (eight), and the Bishops (except those in foreign fields). The genesis of this council has been presented in the HERALD for June 18, 1924, and needs not repetition.

Among other things accomplished by this council was the adoption of the following, which the Presidency presents to the General Conference with the recommendation that it be adopted:

This church, as defined by the late Joseph Smith, is a theocratic-democracy—not man-made, but of divine appointment and origin. (Matthew 16: 18; Doctrine and Covenants 1: 5; 17: 7; 1 Nephi 3: 221; 3 Nephi 10: 1.)

The government of the church is by divine authority through priesthood. (Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4; 104; Acts 20: 28.) The government in its objective is beneficent, and its purpose is betterment of human conditions. The divine authority becomes operative through the consent of the governed—the common consent indicated in the law (Doctrine and Covenants 25: 1; 27: 4). It is divine government among the people, for the people, and for the glory of God and the achievement of his purposes towards ideal conditions.

God directs the church through clearly indicated channels (Doctrine and Covenants 48: 1, 2; 27: 2); and his voice is the directing power of the church; but to this the assent of the people must be secured.

In organic expression and functioning there must be recognized grades of official prerogative and responsibility (Doctrine and Covenants 104; 122: 9), with supreme directional control resting in the Presidency as the chief and first quorum of the church (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 2, 9; 104: 42). This control it is presumed is beneficent. Protection against prostitution of this power is amply provided in the law.

To carry into effect the purposes of the church, effective administration is imperative, and organic solidarity is maintained only by effective discipline, which is in consonance with the beneficent purposes of the church, but yet strongly enough administered to prevent the purposes of the organization being frustrated by individual caprice and rebellion. Authority to be effective must be respected.

This view of the organization of the church affirms the interdependence of departments and coordination of action and holds General Conference as the instrument of the expression of the will of the people.

It is, we feel certain, quite generally apparent that under existing conditions this matter should

www.LatterDayTruth.org
receive attention and the issue settled early in the conference, hence we suggest and recommend that the conference give its entire attention to this matter until settled.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
For the Presidency.

PROPOSED BASIS OF AGREEMENT
(An Appeal to the Priesthood, Delegates, and Membership.)

In order to unify the forces of the church, we the Presidents of the Seventy offer the following as a basis of agreement:

The church is a theocratic-democracy—not man-made but of divine appointment and origin. (Matthew 16: 18.)

The government of the church is by divine authority and the common consent of the people. (John 15: 16; Romans 10: 13-16; Doctrine and Covenants 1: 2; 25: 1, 2; 27: 4; 38: 5; 42: 5; Mosiah 13: 34-40.)

Under the theocratic phase, the authority of God is primary. Under the democratic phase, the people (priesthood and membership) exercise the right to consent to, reject, or originate legislation.

This government is administered through priesthood, which consists of different grades as enumerated in the law. The First Presidency have the burden of the care of the church and presidency over the high priesthood. All quorums of priesthood and departments work under their direction according to the provisions of the law in the revelations of God and the General Conference resolutions.

God directs the church through clearly indicated channels (Doctrine and Covenants 48: 1; 27: 2; 125: 14), and his voice is the directing power of the church, but to this the consent of the people must be secured.

In organic expression and functioning there must be recognized grades of official prerogative and responsibility (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 9; 104) with general oversight vested in the Presidency as the leading quorum of the church.

To carry out the purposes of God through the church, effective administration is necessary. Adequate means for maintaining discipline are amply provided in the law. (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 19-23; Matthew 18: 15-17.)

To protect the rights of the people and provide the necessary checks in case of conflict, the law provides three quorums having concurrent jurisdiction. (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11; 122: 10; 126: 10.)

This view of the organization of the church affirms the interdependence of quorums and departments and coordination of action, and holds that General Conference is the instrument of the expression of the will of the people.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 3, 1925.

The church was particularly interested in the situation as reflected by the leading quorums, the First Presidency solidly supporting the document; the Quorum of Twelve being divided, eight supporting the document and four rejecting it; the Presiding Bishopric being solidly against it, and the other quorum so highly regarded in the law, the Quorum of Seventy, being divided by voting 38 for the document and 17 against it.

One of the matters which prolonged discussion and brought a great deal of feeling into it was the presentation of a protest signed by a large number of individuals, a number of them being prominent in the councils of the church, and which we here reproduce:

Whereas, the document on Church Government, now before the General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, grants to the First Presidency supreme directional control over all the affairs of the church, spiritual and temporal; and

Whereas, because of the irregularities attending the introduction and development of the doctrine of supreme directional control, together with the threat of "elimination" made by the President of the Church against some of the leading church officers who are opposed to the document on Church Government, and because of the illegal selection and instruction of certain delegations to the General Conference; and

Whereas, this document on church government limits the legislative rights of the General Conference to assembling or consenting to the proposals of an autocratically controlled priesthood; and

Whereas, the existing unhappy division in the church growing out of the attempt to force upon the church this doctrine threatens its very existence; and

Whereas, this demand for a completely centralized government with supreme directional control, which would in fact rest in the President, would fundamentally change the established order of the church; and

Whereas, this change from a theocratic-democracy to an autocracy of a hierarchy with final and supreme directional control in the hands of one man strikes at the very heart of the principles of church government contained in our standard books (the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants) and General Conference enactments, by which the Reorganized Church in the Temple Lot suit established its rights and claim to be the true church in succession; and

Whereas, should this document be indorsed it would be tantamount to apostasy—a departure from the accepted principles and practices of this Reorganized Church;

Therefore, we solemnly declare that we will not support nor countenance this attempt to change the fundamental principles of government given of God, and will consider ourselves justified in taking such steps as will protect the constitutional rights of the officers and members of the church against this insidious departure from the faith.

Further, as a group holding allegiance to the faith and principles established from the beginning of the Reorganized Church, we pledge ourselves to carry on the work of God in harmony with his law.

This protest was vigorously attacked by President Elbert A. Smith and President F. M. Smith and interpreted by them as absolutely improper and treasonable to the interests of the church, but the framers rejecting such interpretation just as vigorously and claiming their right to protest everything there protested. The situation became acute when President F. M. Smith demanded that Bishop McGuire and his associates as officers of the church remove their signatures from the document, and when Bishop McGuire asked the President to retract the attack of treason made against him for signing the document.

Notwithstanding these clashes and the depth of sentiment that ran through the discussion, we have never witnessed a debate that was upon a higher plane of intellectuality and good feeling. The most objectionable parts are here set out for the people to know and in harmony with the general policy which we believe to be correct of doing our business in the open.

Many surprises were met in the final line-up for the vote, and both those for the church government document and those against it lost devotees which seemed to be sure and steadfast, and there were others who did not vote at all when it was expected that their vote would count for either the church document or the basis of agreement offered by the seven-ties.

The vote began at twenty minutes of three on Saturday afternoon and was a delegate and ex officio vote taken in two sections, first on the substitute, the entire vote being recorded thereon, and later on the original motion for the adoption of the document on church government after it was determined that the substitute had lost. The figures on the substitute are: Ex officio, yea, 166, nay 354; delegate, yea, 228, nay, 582; total, yea, 394, nay, 936.

The meeting at which the vote was taken adjourned long before the secretaries were able to announce the exact vote, though it was not a close one, nor was it considered so at any time. Between nine and ten o'clock Saturday evening the vote on the main question was announced: ex officio, yeas, 344, nays, 166; delegate, yeas, 575, nays, 239; total yeas, 919, nays, 405.

Easter Sunday at the Conference
One of the most beautiful and balmy days April ever produces in this section was given to the Saints for the celebration of Easter Sunday in the General Conference. The crowds were early and continuous at the services of the day. In the Stone Church there was no early prayer meeting, the first service being the Sunday school. Sunday school was also in session in the various churches throughout the city, and all of them were crowded to the limits of their space.

The Stone Church Sunday school was a surging mass of regular attendants and visitors, but the crowd was remarkably well handled by the officers, and many witnessed the work of the school to their satisfaction and instruction.

At the session of the Second Church Sunday school, one which numbers some 275 enrollment, there were something over 400 in attendance, all the classes being overrun, and the primary department showing an attendance of about 125. This was representative of the condition throughout the city.

An early prayer meeting was held at the Second Church, convening at 8 o'clock and dismissing shortly after 9. This is normally a young people's prayer meeting, but there were a number of visitors of middle and advancing age who enjoyed the activity and devotion of the young in great measure. The spirit of peace and contentment and still of earnest activity was manifested by the young and very young, and the desire to press onward with the work was never more evident in a body of young people than was manifested at this service. Several other early prayer meetings occurred in the city, and all report a good spiritual condition.

Elder Walter W. Smith, of Los Angeles, delivered the sermon at the Stone Church at 11 o'clock, being supported by the regular Stone Church Choir and having a hearing of probably more than seventeen hundred people.

At the Second Church Apostle J. W. Rushton delivered the sermon, being supported by Sister Laura Weir, who read “The walk to Emmaus,” and by Brother F. G. Pitt, who sang and led the congregational singing, the house being crowded with visitors from other parts of the city and visitors to the conference from abroad.

The Walnut Park congregation had the pleasure of witnessing a short Easter program at the close of Sunday school, followed at eleven o'clock by a very fine Easter address by Apostle Paul M. Hanson. In the evening the Junior Choir, under Orlando Nace's direction, gave a song story, “The disciple,” appropriate for Easter, and E. A. Davis gave the evening sermon.

Following the regular Sunday school service at Liberty Street, an Easter program was given by the Lower Circle of Orioles and the Primary Department, which was followed by an Easter sermon by Elder Charles J. Smith. This congregation also had many conference visitors.

These four churches are all easily accessible to conference visitors, but the attendance at Latter Day Saint churches was not limited to these. Every single congregation in the city had church services and good attendance, and some visited the outlying branches, some even undertaking the trip to Holden fifty miles southeast. It was an ideal day for this visiting and general witnessing of the development of congregations and the work of the church in Zion and her nearest stakes. Kansas City had many visitors, and some of her farthest outlying branches were crowded to capacity.
Likely one of the most distinctive features of Sunday's activities was the lecture delivered by President Elbert A. Smith Sunday evening entitled "Milestones in the life of Christ," which was accompanied by many splendid illustrations. The atmosphere of this lecture was particularly attractive and reverent, and many were renewed in their faith and worship of Jesus Christ because of having come in touch with this work.

Monday morning was slightly rainy and cloudy, but at half past seven large crowds were on the steps of the Stone Church awaiting admittance to the early prayer meeting. The business session at ten o'clock opened with a very large crowd anxious to see the completion that business would assume.

Immediately upon the opening of business Monday forenoon, President Frederick M. Smith presented the following with reference to the Auditorium question:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 6, 1925.

To the Church: The council of April, 1924, assembled at the call of the Presidency and which was in session some ten days or thereabouts, discussed among other matters the general question of the Auditorium, and adopted the following:

"1. The Auditorium should be built without delay. There is imperative demand for such building. If it were unnecessary the undertaking would be ill-advised.

"2. Plans should be made to spend such portion of the amount of subscriptions as fast as available in erecting such part of the ultimate building as will meet our present needs, any unused portion being invested in safe income-bearing securities for the benefit of further future expansion of the Auditorium Building.

"3. To effect this end, location and plans should be determined as expeditiously as possible, and the Auditorium fund should be rehabilitated without delay.

"4. The rehabilitation of this fund should be effected with the full purposes of the church in view and with especial regard for our work in solving our social problems.

"5. Unutilized properties should be sold, and the proceeds applied in returning the loans to general funds. This also applies to the investments of the fund.

"6. Lands desirable for promoting our social program or church extension should not be sold to rehabilitate the fund unless the exigencies demand.

"7. The High Council and the Presiding Bishopric shall designate the list of properties to be sold to rehabilitate this fund.

"8. With a bona fide start made on the erection of the building, the collection of the remainder of the subscriptions to the fund should be undertaken."

The Presidency submits this action of the Joint Council with the recommendation it be adopted.

A motion came from the floor that the recommendations be adopted.

Next came a motion of the previous question, which carried almost without negative vote.

Questions were asked as to where the Auditorium would be erected. President Smith answered the question, stating that there is only one place for it, and that is adjoining the Temple Lot on the south. He had advised the Bishop of the church to acquire all the necessary land in this quarter, and he could not state just what had been accomplished as to this.

Bishop James F. Keir stated that some property had been acquired, options had been taken on other pieces, and that while not everything was in hand which is desirable, yet much progress had been made.

President Frederick M. Smith presented the following, which was adopted without discussion:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 6, 1925.

To the Church: The Presidency submits to the conference the following action of the council of April, 1924, with the recommendation that it be adopted:

1. Be it resolved that we favor the immediate initiation of a program looking towards the establishment of Zion and the application of the law of stewardships, which program is as follows:

2. That the Bishopric secure completed financial statements by the selection of a corps of men qualified by special training (if possible) who shall be assigned territory with a view to securing these financial statements by personal contact.

3. That financial statements be provided which are especially designed to serve these purposes.

4. That the members of the church be requested to file their financial statements annually.

5. That arrangement for the payment of tithes due the church should be made at the time of filing of the inventory.

6. That all who are willing and desirous should be placed upon the stewardship basis, either individual or group, as they shall manifest the essential qualifications.

7. That books, tracts, etc., expressing the social ideals of the church should be published without delay.

8. That ministerial propaganda of the church include the presentation of the social ideals of the church with specific reference to the law of tithing and consecration, that they may cooperate in the education of the Saints, particularly young people and inquirers.

9. That the people of the church should be urged to gauge their expenditures in accordance with definite budgets to be formulated with the idea of maintaining an equitable standard of living consistent with the attainment and perpetuation of their maximum efficiency and the needs of the group.

10. That in looking to the completion of the surveys of man power, capital, markets, territories, etc., a bureau of research and service should be established.

11. That the determination of the order of economic development should be given immediate consideration.

12. That the surplus consecrated from stewardships in operation should be set aside for, or at once used in the establishment of other stewardships.

13. That in view of the extension of our social organization, there will be necessity for providing vocational guidance and training."

Respectfully submitted,

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Frederick M. Smith.

Report of the First Presidency

The Presidency then reported the following:

April 6, 1925.

To the Conference: The Presidency has, under the trying conditions of the past conference year, labored assiduously to advance the interests of the church. The heavy correspondence at the office, covering as it does a wide range of subjects, response to calls for preaching, visiting district conferences, reunions, conventions, and the various church institutions, with other details demanding attention, together with teaching and writing of articles, all have placed a burden of work upon us as a quorum and as individuals which has been far from easy, the tasks being made the more difficult by reason of the unfortunate conditions existing in the church.

In responding to the various calls, the members of the Presidency have visited points in the following States: Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Illinois, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Michigan, Wisconsin, Ohio, Ontario, Pennsylvania, New York, Massachusetts, Maine, Colorado, California, and the District of Columbia, and were at some twelve reunions and about thirty district conferences.

As is perhaps well known to the members, since May the Presidency have not been editorially responsible for the HERALD, though one member (Elbert A. Smith) has acted as "contributing editor" to the HERALD. The junior member (F. M. McDowell) has continued his work on the faculty of Graceland College, and has handled the details of the departmental work, as that report shows.

As far as it has been possible for us to do so, we have kept continuously in touch with the various departments and departmental workers. The reports which have been submitted to conference indicate the activities. Changes in the personnel have been made only where unavoidable.

Foreign mission work has remained at a rather low ebb, and we sincerely hope the time may soon come when there will be sufficient unity to permit a wholesome expansion of this work.

Very much to our regret we have, to present the resignation of Doctor G. Leonard Harrington as physician to the church. Appreciation of his splendid work in the Health Department and his social vision gives rise to a hearty wish that he might still give us his services in these lines. We wish him well in the larger fields of activity into which he feels he has moved.

Shortly after the first of the calendar year, Albert H. Knowlton presented his resignation as church auditor, which we finally felt compelled to accept. We appointed George W. Eastwood to the position, which appointment we present for your approval.

In submitting herewith the report of the publicity agent, we call attention to the fact that this department was brought into existence by appointment of the Presidency. After the appropriations committee last June disallowed appropriation to that department, the agent (Arthur E. McKim) accepted a position with a Saint Louis firm and left Independence. After consultation, the Presidency suggested to Brother McKim the advisability of resigning so that we could make temporary appointment or assignment of the work to some other office at headquarters. But Brother McKim refused to resign. We submit herewith his letter of December 12, 1924:

December 12, 1924.

PRESIDENT F. M. SMITH,
Office,
Dear Brother: I was surprised to have your letter of December 4, asking my resignation as general Publicity Agent of the church.

You do not specify your reasons why my resignation should be tendered, but seem to base it on the fact my arrangements are not satisfactory to you. I do not understand that the personal satisfaction of any officer is the standard by which other general officers are to be entirely governed, but that we also bear a responsibility to the General Conference which authorized the departments and which sustained us all at last General Conference.

As I wrote you in my former letter, I was under the necessity of obtaining employment for a livelihood, due to the fact that the Appropriations Committee saw fit to disallow any funds for the operation of my department, and in planning for my work thought that I could do as much under the circumstances as anyone else. Since I was willing to carry on this work without expense to the church, I thought my efforts would be sought rather than discouraged. I still feel that way about it. Do you know of any way this work can be handled without money to better advantage? I will be glad to consider your information on that point and believe you must realize that there is no one more deeply concerned with the publicity work than I am, who have given years in building up the department.

I cannot see the consistency of your requesting or my tendering my resignation at this time, therefore beg you to understand this letter as declining to relinquish this work until General Conference has opportunity to direct in the matter.

Very sincerely yours,
(Signed) ARTHUR E. MCKIM,
PUBLICITY DEPARTMENT.

We still feel that under the circumstances Brother McKim should have resigned as per our suggestion. And we recommend his release so we can reorganize the department in some form.

Report of Publicity Department

SAIN'T LOUIS, MISSOURI, March 1, 1925.

To the Presidency and Conference; Greetings: There is little to report regarding the Publicity Department since last General Conference. In April it was sustained along with the other departments of the church at the conference, but in June it seems that the Appropriations Committee disallowed any funds for this work. The reasons for this action were never disclosed to the general publicity agent; in fact, no notifications of any kind came to the department regarding the matter.

However, in response to the unofficial news of the committee, the Publicity Department laid out no plans involving the expenditure of church money after July 1, and has spent not a cent since that time except to supply tracts to the missionaries. This literature was charged to the special tract fund.

The actions of the Appropriations Committee seem to have been entirely negative in this matter, and, so far as we have been able to ascertain, no provisions were made for taking care of the large publicity organization that has been built up throughout the church.

There are now active publicity agents in nearly every branch of the church, and rather than see this splendid organization go to pieces for lack of direction, we notified them through the HERALD to carry on as best they could, and that they might call on the general office for help as usual, provided only that it did not necessitate the expenditure of church funds.

The general publicity agent found it necessary of course to take up other employment, but feeling that he could perhaps do as much in the publicity work without funds as any

The Call of the Church to Youth

Sermon Number One, by Patriarch John F. Martin, at the Young People's Convention, Lamoni, Iowa, June 9, 1921.

My scripture lesson is found in the 119th section of Doctrine and Covenants, paragraph 8:

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.

Arctic travelers tell us that in those far waters icebergs are sometimes seen plowing steadily on against wind and tide, as if they possessed the power of self-direction. The solution is found in the fact that the larger part of the iceberg extends down into the deep undercurrent of the sea, which bears it on resistlessly.

In these days we find many ebbing and flowing tides of tendency, causing many conflicting surface currents and many veering winds of opinion, blowing from all points of the doctrinal compass. The result is much doubt and confusion.

When a man becomes conservative, with the years, his habit, his ideas, and his character have become so fixed that he is little affected by the changes taking place in the world around him.

With young people, however, it is different. Habit has not yet gained much momentum, and their opinions have not yet hardened into conviction. Their characters still have that sensitiveness and flexibility of youthful growth. They are more easily affected by environment and more easily disturbed by conflicting opinions.

It is not strange, then, that they should be perplexed by the many ideas with reference to life and duty which we find in this period of transition through which we are passing.

When a young man or young woman is in doubt as to the meaning of life, he or she does not know what to do with life; and if that be the case, it is pretty certain that not much use will be made of it. Many fail because they do not discern the signs of the times, and many succeed because, consciously or otherwise, they push out into that tide in the affairs of men which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune.

Carville thought that cooperation with the real tendency of the world indicated the insight of genius, and well might this be true, for the real tendency of the world is given to it by the hand of its governor. So, if we can get hold of truth deep enough to reach down to the undercurrent of civilization, it will reveal to us the direction of true progress, which, we must admit, obeys the divine purpose. If we can, then, intelligently and genuinely yield to that divine purpose, we will be little disturbed by conflicting surface currents and shifting winds of doctrine.

In the undercurrent of civilization, there are few things which have made for progress to the extent that industry has. It is not strange, then, that the industrial revolution of the past century should produce a new civilization. This industrial revolution was brought on by the substitution of mechanical power for hand power or muscle power. When the power was muscular, it was necessarily distributed. Then a man could make a living by himself. It was the handicraft stage of civilization. The good wife could take the wool as it came from the back of the sheep, card it, spin it, dye it, and make it up into clothes. The husband could not only till the soil, but also build the house and make the furniture.

With the advent of the steam engine, power became centralized. Manufacture forsook the home for the factory. The hand gave place to the machine. Industry became organized, and with the organization of industry there came a more extended organization of society. Communities began to depend upon each other until finally the life of the nation was industrially one. Now nations are becoming dependent upon each other, and the world life is developing, all growing largely out of the organization of industry.

Man has at last come to realize that he cannot do as he pleases in this world. He has come to see that what he does or does not do affects thousands of people. The fundamental movement of the times is from an individualistic to a social or collective type of civilization.

It is not strange therefore that in the undercurrent of true progress accompanying these great changes in the world of ideas, and in the physical world, there should be a corresponding change in the conception of Christianity. The conception of Christianity is changing from an individualistic to a social or collective idea. There was a time, and some still have this concept, that salvation consisted in saving the individual alone. But thinkers are coming to be dissatisfied with that idea because it is selfish, it is narrow, and they need a religion which can include all of the great things that have come along with progress in this world. And that is what I want to speak about.

Along with the development of the affairs of this world there has developed a social conception of Christianity, and God in his wisdom foreknew it and told Enoch of it many years ago. And we are standing in that day and age of the world when the opportunity has come to the church to satisfy that demand of the human family for a social religion; and that, to my mind, is the call of the church to youth, to arise and take advantage of the opportunity which is given to the church to-day to establish in this world that condition spoken of by the Lord to Enoch.

I do not know what you expect me to say with reference to the call of the church to youth. To my mind, the call can be divided into two fields: First, the establishment of Zion, the city of refuge, a place where the people of God can be gathered from the four quarters of the earth and prepare themselves for the coming of the Lord. And second, the evangelization of the world, carrying the message of the gospel to the nations of the earth. That spells the work which lies before this church. And when I say that, I say that upon the youth of this church, those who are now the youth of the church, much of that responsibility rests.

It would be useless for me to attempt to say anything in addition to what President Smith said on last evening. It seems to me that no one could go away from this tent last night with any other idea than that God prompted the words that man spoke, and that all should do their utmost to work out the principles which we have been preaching for many years.

When I think how long we have had these fundamental principles and how little progress we have made, I am filled with chagrin. And yet that same problem confronts the youth of the church to-day.

We are under the necessity of carrying the gospel to the nations of the earth. "Oh, well," some one says, "we cannot all be preachers; we cannot all be bishops. How can we help? We cannot carry the gospel to the nations of the earth; we cannot take care of the finances of the church." Oh, my good young friends, there is room for every talent; there is room for all the ability that God has blessed you with, and there is a place in the church work where every one of us can fit in. There is something each one can do, for the Lord says, "All are called, according to the gifts and callings of God unto them." "Well," one says, "what can I do? I cannot preach; but say, I can sing a little! Will that help much in the establishment of Zion?"

I just want to use a little illustration here to show, if I can, the power of music; the power of a simple hymn. One of our missionaries was conducting a series of services in a certain place, in a very rough neighborhood, and attending his meetings was a young lady about eighteen years of age. She had been going from night to night, but one night as she came home from the meeting her father met her and said to her, "I understand that you have been attending those Mormon meetings?" "Yes, father; I have been up there; but, father, they are not Mormons." "They are Mormons," he said. "I know more about it than you do. Don't you go there any more. If you do go, I will whip you to within an inch of your life!" The girl replied, "All right, father." The next evening came. The appeal was too strong; she could not resist; she went to the meeting regardless. When she came home that night, her father said, "So you disregarded my counsel, did you?" "Yes, father; I could not stay away." "I told you I would whip you, didn't I?" "Yes, father; you did." "Well, I am going to keep my word. You may prepare yourself for the worst whipping you have ever had in your life." The girl answered, "Before you whip me, father, there is one request I want to make. Let me sit down at the organ and play and sing a song." The father answered grudgingly, "Oh, well, go ahead." The girl sat down to the organ and began to play a hymn:

Jesus, I my cross have taken,
All to leave, and follow thee;
Though I'm poor, despised, forsaken,
Thou, henceforth, my friend wilt be.

As she sang, tears began to trickle down the old man's cheeks, and when she got through the song, she said, "Now father, you may proceed." But the father broke down and said, "If that man's preaching has had that effect in your life, it must be all right. I will go with you to-morrow night!" They then went together to the meetings until finally both were baptized.

Friends, that is an experience showing the effect of a simple hymn on the hearts of those who have become calloused and hardened against religion.

So I say to the individual who says he can sing a little, indeed it does help. God has spoken from on high and said, "Cultivate the gifts of music and song."

Another says, "I cannot preach or sing; but say, I have a machine here, and any time the missionary wants to go out and preach in the country around I will take him out." All right, that is a good offer. That is the missionary spirit. Another speaks up and says, "I cannot preach; I cannot sing; I haven't any car; but, say, I work and I get a salary. I have a little over my expenses, and I can pay my tithing, which I have not been doing." That is fine! God commands that.

Another says, "Brother Martin, I cannot preach; I cannot sing; I haven't a car; I do not have a great deal of money, but I am a school-teacher. Will that help?" Well, I should say it will help. I do not know a nobler profession, especially for girls and women, than teaching or nursing. Zion will depend as much upon teachers as upon preachers. Another will say, “I haven’t much of anything but a home, and I have a nice little home out here. Whenever you want to hold some missionary meetings, just come out.”

Here we have a group of people who say what they are going to do. I go to one and say, “When are you going to sing?” She says, “Well, you know they have choir practice on the night we have girls’ club down town. If they would change the night of choir practice I would go.” To another I say, “When are you going to pay your tithing?” “Well, I am thinking about getting married, so I am buying a little house out here, and I haven’t got it paid for yet. When I get it paid for and get my wife, I’ll pay my tithing.”

I speak to the man who has the car and who offered it for service and tell him that I want to go out where there is an opening and ask him if he will take us out. He replies, “What town did you say? Oh, no; I couldn’t think of going there. I have friends there who belong to the same society I do, and if they find out I belong to the Latter Day Saints Church they will just ostracize me. I guess you will have to excuse me this time. You can use my car some other time.”

Then I ask the lady who said I could use her home for missionary work if we could hold a series of missionary meetings in her home. She says, “Well, you know I haven’t cleaned house for a long time, and I have been thinking of getting the house papered, and after I get the house cleaned and papered you can come out.” These people were always putting God’s work last.

God first in everything and ourselves last would be what I would impress upon you young folks. If that idea permeates our lives, they will be a success.

There are three laws upon which our success in doing this work depends. Those three laws are service, sacrifice, and love. Our success in anything in life depends upon these, and certainly our success in responding to the call of the church depends upon these three principles: service, sacrifice, and love.

I might draw from the life of Jesus an incident or two to illustrate what I mean. There comes to my mind an experience in the Master’s life which has always made a profound impression upon me. It was on the occasion that he introduced the Lord’s supper. He had given his disciples instructions to meet in a certain place to celebrate the feast of the Passover. The custom in that country was that the caller was to be met at the door by a servant who would take his sandals from his feet and wash his feet so that he might enter the room barefooted. When Jesus and his disciples met, there was no servant at the door to greet them. They began to contend among themselves as to who would play the part of the servant. I can imagine I hear Peter, impulsive Peter, say, “Well, I won’t wash James’s feet!”

But there was one there whose great heart was filled. He felt sad that, notwithstanding he had been associated with these men for three years, they had not learned the beautiful lesson of service, self-sacrifice, and humility. So he took the basin of water and the towel and proceeded to wash his disciples’ feet. He came to Peter, and Peter said, being ashamed, “Thou shalt not wash my feet!” But Jesus said, “If I wash thee not, then thou hast no part with me.” Peter perceived somewhat what the Lord meant, and he said, “Not only my feet, Lord, but my head and my whole body.”

There Jesus taught the beautiful lesson of humility, of service. Shortly after that he said, “My commandment I give unto you, that you love one another, even as I have loved you.” And in the demonstration of his love he humbled himself to the point of servant and washed his disciples’ feet. He finally suffered and bled, and died an ignominious death on the cross for sinful humanity.

Another instance in the life of Jesus which illustrates the quality of his love: I like to think of that experience when a certain woman was brought in to him, dragged by the hair of her head and accused before the Master of a grave sin. They said to the Lord, “This woman was taken in this sin; the law says she shall be stoned to death.” While they accused her, the Master wrote upon the sand with a stick. When they had finished, he said to them, “You say this woman was taken in this grave sin?” “Yes.” “According to the Mosaic law, the penalty is death by stoning?” “Yes.” “And you want to know my opinion?” “Yes.” “Let him that is without sin cast the first stone!” When they heard that, they sneaked away like a lot of curs. What did Jesus say to the woman? “You ought to be ashamed of yourself. I have no time for you. Out of my sight!” Is that what he said? No. This is what he said: “Woman, where are thine accusers?” She answered, “I have none, Lord; they are gone.” Then Jesus said, “Neither do I condemn thee; go and sin no more.”

Did Jesus approve of the act she did? Did he approve of the sin she had committed? No; but he recognized in that woman a spark of hope, a spark of womanhood. He spoke of the good that was in her. His love was so great that he could look beneath the surface and see inside. He could see the quality of her soul, the possibilities there, and he gave that woman hope that she might some day become what he would have her be.
And so when I say that love is one of the principles upon which our success depends, I mean just that kind of love, that kind of love which does not stop with relatives and friends, but goes out to the woman and the man who are down and gives them the helping hand and lifts them up. That is the kind of love the church and the world need. That is the kind of love that the establishment of Zion and the evangelization of the world depend upon. Without it we cannot hope to succeed.

And when I speak of sacrifice, I am going to refer to an incident in the life of one of your Lamoni boys, for he is certainly still a boy in attitude; a man who is now an apostle in the church. We are inclined to refer mostly to the apostles away back in Jesus' time for our examples. Possibly one reason we do that is because we do not see the bad in them. Only the good appears in the Scriptures. Sometimes we forget that to-day we have apostles who are having like experiences as they had, and we are sometimes inclined to see their weak side and forget their better sides.

I am going to refer to Brother John F. Garver, with apologies to him for being so personal. He had an experience which I heard him relate one time which made a profound impression upon me. Brother Garver, after having spent some time here in Graceland, and using up the money he had saved for an education, took a mission for this church. He went out and served the church nobly. Finally he found himself in the East. He had been away from home for a long time, and he had a desire to get back home. He wanted to take a little gift back to the family. He found himself without any money. He had met with opposition and had struggled hard. Now he felt that he had done enough, and it was only fair and right that he should have an opportunity to go back and see his family and take back a gift with him. But he could not do it. There began to develop in his heart a feeling of rebellion. He complained against God. He realized that unless he could get rid of that feeling he would not be a success in the field; that he would have to quit. He went out and pleaded with God for hours until finally he was able to say, “Yes, Lord; I will go where you want me to go; I will be what you want me to be; I will do what you want me to do.” He went to the Kirtland Temple and went upstairs to the second floor. As he entered the room a feeling of solemnity came over him. As he stood there a voice spoke to him and said, “John, lovest thou me?” “Yes, Lord; I do.” “Do you love me sufficiently to take a mission for me to a foreign land?” “Yes, Lord; under this Spirit I would.” “Would you stay for a year?” “Yes, Lord; under this Spirit I would.” “Two years?” “Yes.” “Five years?” “Yes.” “Ten years?” “Yes, Lord; under this Spirit I would stay for ten years, and if necessary let my bones bleach on the sands of that country.” “John, will you go now?” Oh, that was different! To go then meant that he would have to go in a direction opposite from his home, and he had already been away from home for some time. But as that Spirit burned in his bosom he could only say, “Yes, Lord; under this Spirit I would go now and stay ten years, or as long as you wished.”

What is the lesson? Simply this, that when he tore the idol from his heart, when he removed the obstacles and placed himself in the proper attitude towards God, there came into his heart a spirit that enabled him to say, “Yes, I will make the supreme sacrifice.”

That is the lesson, friends, I would like our young people to get. If we have no reservations, if we lay ourselves wholeheartedly upon the altar of service and sacrifice, we will obtain a Spirit from God that will enable us to make any sacrifice cheerfully.

I say if I should try to tell what the call of the church is to the youth of the church, it would be simply this: the church calls you to consecrate your life to the program of establishing Zion and spreading the gospel to the nations of the earth, and there is room in that program for the use of every talent you possess. God wants you to cultivate that talent to its highest capacity. And remember this: the greater extent to which you develop that talent, the more useful you will be to the church and to humanity.

Oh, some one says, that is a mighty program for one hundred thousand people to attempt! Some think it cannot be done. When I hear that, I am always reminded of a drunken fellow who was coming down the street one night, reeling from side to side and taking up pretty much the whole street. Finally he reeled up against a telephone pole, and, pulling himself up, he glanced around. Just ahead of him he saw the following moving picture sign all lighted up: “Home, sweet home, in three reels.” He shook his head ponderously and murmured, “It can’t be done!”

There are plenty of people just like that. When they think of the great problem which is before this church, in the light of their own human weaknesses they say, “It can’t be done.” But even as God moved the waters so the children of Israel crossed the Red Sea, so will God divide the waters of opposition and remove the obstacles that confront this church, and with his help we shall be able to reach the promised land.

In conclusion I am going to read something to you that is the result of my meditation of this day. When I went home from the service last evening, I pondered over what had been said by President Smith and the wonderful things that had been expressed in the service, and as I awoke this morning the same thoughts entered my mind and they took the form of poetry. I am going to read to you the result of what has passed through my mind this day.

Convention Poem

Is there a youth with soul so dead,
Who on this campus hath not said,
"This is my own God-given task?"
While messengers of God appeal
With power divine and righteous zeal,
And in God's love I bask,

Can I, in selfishness, withhold,
The sweetest story ever told,
While countless thousands plead?
Can I in idleness sit by,
And turn a dull ear to their cry
While hearts in anguish bleed?

While millions daily seek relief
From man's oppression, sin, and grief—
Shall I refuse the boon
That through God's Son has come to me,
O King of all humanity,
Can I forget so soon?

Can I forget the vision clear
That, given through Thy servants here,
My inmost soul has thrilled;
Shall efforts have been made in vain,—
The pledge I gave Thee, but remain
A promise, unfulfilled?

Ah! no, dear Lord, I cannot fail
To let Thy precious love prevail
Nor from Thy purpose swerve,
While in my hands I have the key
To solve Life's every mystery:
O help me, Lord, to serve.

While youthful vigor still is mine,
Though for vain things of life I pine,
O help me to be true;
And may I never from Thee depart,
But faithfully, with all my heart,
Some loving service do.

How long, O Lord, must Zion wait,
While vain ambition, strife, and hate,
And selfishness prevail?
How long must countless thousands plead
For swift relief from sin and greed
And still Thy Kingdom fail?

O God, send forth Thy mighty power
In this, Thy people's trying hour,
And help each one to see,
That only by the law of love
As emanates from God above
Shall Zion e'er be free.

And speed the day when strife shall cease
And loving fellowship increase
And men see eye to eye:
Ah! then shall Zion's banners shine,
And truth go forth with power divine,
And Satan's host shall die.

So, is there one with soul so dead,
Within this tent, who hath not said,
"My labor's but begun:
I'll consecrate my life anew,
Till love prevails, the whole world through,
And Jesus says, 'Well done'?"

Teamwork and What It Stands For

When we choose a captain to lead us in any game, we pledge our support to him. If we did not, then we could not expect him to accomplish very much.

If we went to the election just to see that he was put in as leader and then went home and said that the result of the game was up to him, we would not be doing our part.

Could the captain do all that was to be done to win? No; there is a work for each one of the team to do before success is won. The captain is to lead and direct in those things that will help to make the game a success. If a member fails to heed those things the leader directs him to do, then he is not following out the things he pledged to do when he helped to elect his leader.

This also applies to our church work. If we elect some one over a certain local, then we must assist him in order for him to do all that is possible for the betterment of that local. He cannot do as much good alone as he can if we help him.

If he could accomplish all the work, then he would get all the credit. But we wish to get some credit for work done while on this earth. When there is an important game to be played, all the players get out and practice, whether they are on the regular team or on the substitute team. The Sunday school and Religious are stages of practice, getting us prepared for the bigger game of leadership.

So let us get in and practice hard in order to be privileged to play the game clean when the time comes.

ARKANSAS CITY, KANSAS, BOX 552.

JAMES H. MADDEN.

Make yourselves nests of pleasant thoughts. None of us yet know what fairy palaces we may build of beautiful thoughts, proof against all adversity; bright fancies, satisfied memories, noble histories, faithful sayings, treasure houses of precious and restful thoughts, which care cannot disturb nor pain make gloomy, nor poverty take away from us—houses built without hands for our souls to live in.—John Ruskin.
NEWS AND LETTERS

San Francisco, California

March 30.—Our regular Sunday services are Sunday school at half past nine, preaching at eleven and fifteen minutes to eight, Religio at fifteen minutes to seven, and sacrament at eleven o'clock on the first Sunday of each month. All these services are quite well attended and are peaceful and inspiring. Strangers are almost always present and are made welcome.

On March 8 we had with us Brother W. H. Dawson and wife from Sacramento. He is one of the vice presidents of the district and gave us a fine sermon.

Brother H. B. Simpson preached his farewell sermon here March 29, as he and his wife leave April 1 for Independence where they may make their future home. We are giving them a reception this evening. They have made their home in San Francisco for sixteen years. Our blessings go with them.

Our preachers of late have been Elders E. B. Hull, V. B. Etzenhouzer, H. B. Simpson, Emery S. Parks, and George S. Lincoln. We enjoy a good spirit at all our meetings.

The chief feature of the Religio March 29 was the reading of a paper, of which Sister Simpson was the editor. We will miss her very much, as she has been an active member and was always present at choir, Sunday school, and Religio.

Sister Hattie Putney has been seriously sick for some months. She is much improved and is attending church again. Sister Ruth Thoman and her son are both in the hospital with smallpox. Their condition is not serious.

Some of our members are preparing to attend General Conference, for the success of which we all pray. May the peace of God be with all Saints.

Duluth, Minnesota

March 30.—District President George W. Day was here on March 22 and occupied at the morning and evening services with his clear, understanding sermons.

The quarterly business meeting of the branch was held Monday evening, Brother Day being with us and assisting as chairman. Much discussion was held. A motion was sustained asking the conference through our district president to assign a high priest to this branch that the work may be enlarged by having some one at the head who could give his full time to the work.

The evening of March 15 Elder Samuel Sloan, assisted by Grant Byce, both of Two Harbors, preached a fine sermon. We hope he may come again.

Mrs. Sallie Kuppenhaven, of Gordon, Wisconsin, spent the week end of March 8 with Brother and Sister W. C. Stanty, taking in the services. Although she is not a member of the church, her heart and desires are with the Saints, and she is only waiting an opportunity to be baptized. One of her daughters is a member of the church, and we hope the time will soon come when they will be united in the work.

A scout troop was organized March 19 with Brother P. G. Schnuckle as scoutmaster. They are to be called the Wolf Patrol Number 23. Eight boys passed the tenderfoot test the first night, and on the 27th the award of honor met at the Longfellow School when the boys received their badges and were given a fine oration by the scout commissioner of Duluth.

In order that all may know where our church building is located, we are again giving the address, 302 North Sixtieth Avenue West, or Corner of Sixtieth Avenue West and Bristol Street. We are always grateful when others visit us, helping us grow in knowledge of the truth.

Lucasville, Iowa

March 24.—The branch here is awake to the work of the Master. Brother Mark Crabtree was ordained a priest on February 21, and he is a live wire. The Spirit of the Lord is with him. The priesthood is working for the upbuilding of the work here.

At the prayer service on March 22 the Spirit was present to such a degree that it was felt by nearly everyone present.

On March 19 Brother J. D. Shower was with us and preached a spiritual sermon. We are glad that such a man can stop with us and feel that the good work will grow to a higher standard in this branch.

Brother Mark Crabtree had the pleasure of baptizing the eight-year-old daughter of Brother and Sister Roy Culp recently.

The Saints are made sad to-day because of the fact that four brothers from the McDermott Branch, eight miles from here, have been called away the last few weeks. They are: Brother Clarence Currant, elder of the branch; Brother John Kose, deacon; Brother James Shap S and Brother Sprages, members. Our loss will be their gain, as the heavenly Father knows best.

Woodbine, Iowa

March 30.—On the first day of the month our branch met in fasting and prayer for the spiritual guidance of the church, and a goodly degree of the Spirit was manifest in the meeting.

The midweek prayer meetings are growing numerically and spiritually. At the last meeting the leader of the young people reported much activity. At the same hour the older members held a cottage meeting at the home of Aunt Mary Houghton, a faithful Saint of many years.

Our aged Sister Gamet, whose life has hung in the balance for several weeks, is not suffering so much at present.

Elder Fred A. Fry has been giving a series of Sunday evening lectures on the following subjects: Intermediate state; Resurrection; Thief on the cross; Angelic ministration; Book of Mormon; Restoration; etc.

On March 24 and 25 Patriarch Frederick A. Smith delivered two excellent sermons, refreshing our minds on the things that make for practical religion, and calling attention to the many opportunities we let pass by unimproved because we were "too busy" to act. Another statement made that impressed us was, "We are too self-centered to be conscious of our needs.

Others that have delivered the word to our upbuilding are Brothers W. R. Adams, H. H. Hand, Joseph Lane, Joseph Seddon, and perhaps some we do not now call to mind.

In one month another General Conference, we trust, may not have gone down in history only as a lively stone in the building of God's work, but on the tablets of men's hearts may it have been so impressed as a meeting wherein God dwelt, that with an abundance of the Spirit every man may sing, "How sweet to my soul is communion with Saints."

Tawas City, Michigan

March 24.—We Saints of Tawas City felt blessed indeed when on the evening of March 6 we were permitted to listen to a wonderful sermon delivered by Apostle E. J. Gleazer, who came to us with a message such as we had seldom heard. Local ministers are faithful in their endeavor to keep the flock together, but Brother Gleazer's message was as the voice of one who said, “I am the true vine.” We hope the brother may come again.

On March 8 Elder W. A. Sommerfield and Sister Sommerfield were in Bay City where Brother Sommerfield attended the ministerial conference.

A community Bible class was held recently at the home of Sister E. L. Pringle, when members and nonmembers joined in the study of the New Testament. Questions were asked and discussed, which was a source of help to all.

Last Sunday evening a carload of live Saints drove over from Oscoda to attend our evening service. A hearty invitation is extended for them to come again. On March 22 Elder W. A. Sommerfield held services with the Iosco Branch.

Topeka, Kansas

March 31.—Most of the meetings have been well attended recently, and things have been going along smoothly. The coming of warm weather is expected to increase attendance.

Preparations are now in progress for the Easter program to be held at the church Sunday evening a week preceding Easter. This is done in order to allow members who wish to attend the conference in Independence Easter Sunday.

Brother Hayes of Kansas City, whose given name was not available to the correspondent, formerly of Topeka and at one time pastor of the branch here, preached Sunday evening, February 16. At other services the pulpit has been occupied by various members of the local priesthood, of whom we have several.

The Sunday school has put into effect a plan to increase the Christmas offering, badges being awarded to members according to their contributions throughout the year.

Brother Harold Carr, teacher of the young people's class, recently took first place in a debating contest at Washburn College, where he is a law student.

The Department of Women has been showing good activity. Since January 1 they have turned in $75 toward the church debt; this sum was derived from a rummage sale and two food sales. They have plans for raising additional amounts during the year. At a recent meeting they were addressed by Doctor Whiting, a lady physician connected with the Y. W. C. A. This department has an enormous power for good, both in the branch and in the general church, and we are glad to see the sisters receive the interest and recognition they deserve.

Sister Vera Twombly, district director of music, who is attending college and Kansas University in Lawrence, visited over Sunday in Topeka recently. Among visitors from out of town who visited us March 29 were Elder and Sister Trego of Independence; Sister Marie Phelps and a Miss Phelps of Coffeyville; Brother Ross and family of Ottawa; and Brother and Sister R. G. Francis, formerly of Sand Point, Idaho. Brother Francis is connected with a national cooperative association and is covering territory in Kansas. He and Sister Francis have met with us several times in the past few months, often driving quite a distance Sunday morning to attend services. We are glad to have any of the Saints meet with us.

Brother C. J. Sheets, our local deacon, has received nomination for commissioner of streets in Topeka, and it is thought he stands a good chance of being elected.

Brother Clayton Crooker was recently elected president of the Department of Recreation and Expression to succeed R. J. Holman, who resigned. This department is conducting a class in Doctrine and Covenants and one in current events.

The branch is grieved to learn of the death of the mother of Sister C. J. Sheets, which occurred at Lawton, Oklahoma, early in March. The Saints will be glad to have Sister Sheets return, for she has been greatly missed.

Brother and Sister J. C. Alfrey and Sister Ira G. Whipple attended the funeral of Sister Tilden at Fanning, Kansas, whose recent death is grieved by those who knew her.

Brother and Sister J. G. Juergens are the proud parents of twin boys born February 2.

Brother Leonard Pitsenberger, who has been severely ill for several months, was so far recovered as to be able to attend the sacramental service March 1, where he testified to the benefit he had received from administration and prayer. He afterward took sick again and is now reported to be slowly recovering.

A large part of the Topeka membership will attend General Conference part of the time. All are praying that this conference will accomplish much good, tending to stabilize certain conditions in the church, that the gospel may be carried forward in power and a greater unity of spirit and purpose.

The Northeastern Kansas district conference will be held at Scranton, Kansas, twenty-five miles south of Topeka, shortly after General Conference adjourns.

Lord Has Blessed Their Branch

Moundsville, West Virginia, April 3.—At this date I am made to realize how soon General Conference is to convene, and I trust that as a body of God's church we will call in mighty prayer to him in behalf of the conference, that the Holy Spirit may be the predominating power and all present be made to realize that God stands at the helm, while we exclaim, “Lord, thou hast designed the ultimate destination, May we be willing to serve and carry out the divine purposes.” My prayer to the Lord is that all may be willing to consecrate their lives anew to the task with which we have been intrusted, to forget the past and look for the beautiful in the future, and where radical differences occur between leading representatives of the body it shall not take place in the columns of our church papers.

But let it be remembered and bring to our minds these beautiful words:

When through fiery trials thy pathway shall lie,
My grace all sufficient shall be thy supply.
The flame shall not hurt thee, I only design
Thy dross to consume and thy gold to refine.

I love these words and find much comfort in them because I know God will have a tried people, and I feel the testing time is at hand. Will we be loyal soldiers?

The Lord has graciously blessed us as a branch. I for one have been able to see how good God is to his covenant children, and I feel it a pleasure to try to serve my Master, for I doubt not the Lord nor his goodness, having proved him in times past.
I trust that when General Conference comes together there may be that oneness of purpose that the Holy Spirit may be the leading director to lead in the ways of all truth and righteousness.

Grays Harbor Branch

ABERDEEN, WASHINGTON, March 31.—The work in this territory is still progressing nicely. A lady, the wife of a prominent Greek resident of Hoquiam, was baptized recently, and we are hopeful that others will join.

The Saints here desire a home of their own and hence are devising ways and means of raising funds to build a church. They want to build for future needs as well as present ones.

The Department of Women has raised in various ways $100 for the building fund.

The Saints have made provision for the organization of the Department of Recreation and Expression March 31.

There has been some sickness in the branch, which has prevented some from attending.

Saint Thomas, Ontario

April 6.—Although little has been written or said concerning the progress made in this part of God's vineyard, nevertheless a deep yearning can be felt for more devotion, a clearer vision, and a deeper love whereby God will be pleased to sustain and uphold his people.

The sisters of the branch are making rapid strides, and a condition of unity is felt among them, which if considered a clearer vision, and a deeper love whereby God will be obey the gospel.

Sixty-Sixth and Honore Streets

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—The sermon by Brother Harry Passman last Sunday morning appealed to us as being especially needed at this time. He used for his text, "Have faith in God." He first impressed upon our minds the truth that we cannot get something for nothing. Though it may have cost us nothing to receive the gospel, it cost some one else something to bring it to us and must cost us something to pass it along. He informed us that we have a revelation saying God is going to work with his people according to their faith, and added, "It is possible for every individual to have faith." A boy neither good nor bad, placed among bad boys, will become bad. The same boy placed in a good environment will partake of the spirit of his environment. So a person in the environment of faith will obtain faith like those around him.

Why do we meet together? First, we create an environment of faith and are better able to serve our Maker when we go away. Who falls under temptation? The individual who does not attend services. His faith diminishes. The philosopher Freud says, "We cannot live on probabilities. The faith in which we can live bravely and die at peace must be a certainty." The faith of the early Christians in the catacombs was a certainty. The most powerful things in the world are not necessarily the things we see with our eyes. We cannot see electricity. We cannot always base our faith on things we can see. But "God is a rewarder of those that diligently seek him."

Brother Baldwin's sermon Sunday evening on "Influence and example" also hit the mark with such truths as: "My brother's safety is my own welfare. Eliminate selfishness." "Sunday is the Lord's day, and it is the duty of every individual to be present at the services." "Unto each mortal who comes to earth a ladder is given by God at birth" (Ella Wheeler Wilcox). "What you are speaks so loud I cannot hear what you say." "Christians are sculptors carving Christlike lives." "The brighter the light; the less people remark about the lamp."

The prayer meeting this week, though not especially well attended, was strengthening and truly represented an atmosphere of faith.

Concerning the Health Pageant, in the Hyde Park Herald we find this clipping: "Among the thirty who acquitted themselves with honor in the examinations for hemoglobin, blood pressure, height, weight, vision, teeth, and chest, was Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Tonks, who acts as nurse at the Chicago Home for Incurables, has lived in Hyde Park for almost three decades, and is an enthusiastic member of the W. C. T. U."

Sister Tonks is an enthusiastic believer in keeping the letter of God's law and gives praise unto him continually, whatever the topic of conversation may be. As she never leaves any uncertainty as to her faith in the mind of anyone she meets, we feel that the honor which she has received reflects creditably upon latter-day revelation, and we wonder why more of us have not that "faith in God" which would insure us the same record.

The Department of Women have been active the past few weeks. At an "experience meeting" and "box social" they took in over $87, which was added to the building fund.

Brother and Sister Gene Keir and their children are here visiting parents and shaking hands all around once again. Also Sister Faye McDonald's parents, Brother and Sister Burke.
The choir and Sunday school are working overtime preparing for Easter services. The spirit of fasting and prayer for conference pervades the branch.

London, Ontario

April 25.—The Department of Women of this branch entertained the elderly grandmothers at the church Tuesday afternoon, March 24.

The meeting was opened by Sister Vashinda, president, after which the grandmothers were welcomed by Sisters Vashinda and Koehler.

After a program of solos and readings, short speeches were given by Grandmas Proctor, Harrison, Guy, Brown, Lott, Judkins, Timbrell, Fikens, Clarke, Roberts, and Horwals.

Refreshments were then served, and each grandmother received a pretty basket with a dainty handkerchief and Easter eggs.

Reflections on Work of the Church

PERSIA, IOWA, April 8.—The sacramental meeting this month was a spiritual one, and those who took part seemed to realize that the Lord blesses his people. In the early years of the Reorganization, there was quite a difference of opinion among the members as to how often the sacrament should be administered. Some thought it should be administered every Sunday, and others were in favor of one Sunday each month. The members finally centralized their views and came to an understanding that it did not make any difference when they partook, but agreed to partake once a month, and that on the first Sunday.

The more I think of the marvelous work and wonder that this latter-day work is, and the great achievements it has accomplished, the greater is my admiration for it, and my desire to see it forge ahead. The gospel has been preached the world over, in many countries and churches; has been planted in this country as early as 1830; in England, in Denmark, in Sweden, and in many other countries, and it will continue until it has sent its warning voice the world over.

FREDERICK HANSEN.

Tampa, Florida

March 24.—We have organized a Sunday school here, and although it is not large, all are regular attendants, Brother Geleneau and family driving forty-five miles every Sunday to attend. We feel we have taken a big step by organizing a Sunday school in this place, as children can be gathered here.

Brother T. D. Harnish is in charge. We have not yet a public meeting house, but hope to have one in the near future. At present meetings are held at the home of Brother and Sister Chevalier.

While the tourists that are here will soon be leaving for their homes, we have every confidence that the few faithful ones left will be able to keep the work going.

We have been benefited by some good sermons from those who were passing through Tampa. W. D. Bullard was a great help while here, and Brother H. H. Robinson has given us some wonderful sermons; also Brother F. G. Pitt, who was located in Saint Petersburg, met with us occasionally during his stay in the South.

Just now we are made sad by the illness of Sister Chevalier, who has had to undergo an operation. She is improving nicely, and we hope and pray she will have better health in the future.

We hope those who come to Florida next winter will locate in Tampa. Much good can be done here, and those who can locate here could do much to help and would be more than welcome. We ask an interest in your prayers for the success of the Lord's work in this part of the vineyard.

REVA GRANT.

Lincoln, California

March 24.—A Sunday school, which will be a mission of the Rocklin church, was organized in Lincoln, California, March 24. Earl R. Curry was chosen superintendent, to be assisted by Elder Roy Barnmore, who also presides over Rocklin Branch fifteen miles from Lincoln.

This Sunday school is the result of work done by Brother and Sister Curry, who have circulated our literature among their friends in this place. About a year ago Missionaries George H. Wixom and E. B. Hall held meetings for two weeks in the home of Brother Curry, and a month ago Brother Wixom held another series of meetings for two weeks in the Women's Club Building, with the result of one being baptized.

Brother Curry has held round table meetings in his home every week for a number of months. This week a Sunday school has been organized, and the interest justifies our belief that many more will be baptized in the near future.

Brother Curry and his wife are the only members of the church in this place, until the brother who was added to their number last week. Members from Sacramento church have visited and encouraged the little band of investigators from time to time the last year. May the good work go on.

Book of Mormon Lectures Hold Interest

WIGAN, ENGLAND, February 26.—The week of February 14 we had Elder Abel Hall with us for a series of lantern lectures. These lectures were very much enjoyed each evening by the Saints and friends. He used several series of pictures: building, sculptural, fort, cliff dwelling, earth in cracks and seams, pottery, and prophecy fulfilled. He first placed on the screen a text from the Book of Mormon referring to each series; then it was followed by the pictures in the order given. Every night the congregation increased, and the last evening the lower room of the Total Abstinence Hall was full.

Our old friend, Mr. William Rigby, a minister of the Church of Christ and president of the Total Abstinence Society, presided over the meeting. He gave us a short address, encouraging us to keep on with the good work we have in hand, and we were proud to have these encouraging remarks from such a noble man.

On Saturday night the Religio held a social evening at the home of Brother and Sister Taylor. Songs and recitations were given by young and old, after which refreshments were served. Brother Arthur Smith, president of the branch, and Brother Abel Hall gave short talks of encouragement. Brother Albert Spargo, superintendent of the Religio, presided over the meeting.

The Sunday school, of which Brother William Fawcett is superintendent, and the sisters of the Department of Women under Sister Fawcett, are doing good work, giving support to the branch.

We hope that Brother Hall will be able to come again soon. Ever praying for the uplift of the gospel,

WILLIAM SPARGO.

Preparation and Consecration

Twenty-two years ago this first day of March, I accepted an ordination to the ministry and began at once to enter the active work connected with my calling. At that time I was young, untrained, inexperienced, and ill prepared for the work; it is true, but I went ahead and did such things as I could; and all along the line I have found joy in the discharge of duty. Looking at it from this side, I see my limitations much better than I was able to see them at that time, and I wonder now how I had the courage to attempt. Could I have known my limitations then as I do now, I doubt seriously that I would have undertaken the great task; but as I told a friend just recently, those were the days when ignorance was bliss. Well, I started out to proclaim the message of life to a dying world, and I applied myself daily in order to be equal to the demands that were then made upon me. I appreciated in a small way the excellence of the work, but at that time the magnitude of the work had never occurred to me. It seemed then that the most important thing was to get people into the church; but now I see that the most important thing is to get the Spirit of Christ into the lives of the people of the church. I hope I shall not be misunderstood here, for I wish to say that the important thing is to be able to regenerate the children of men and help them to get a proper concept of life.

There are two things that I have found to be of great value to me, without which I never could have continued my work; they are study and prayer. That you may understand me better, I wish to briefly analyze both of these and point out what to me seems to be their richest value. When I speak of study, I am trying to include such things as research, reading, thinking, meditating, and writing. At a very early time in my experience, I saw that if I was to become qualified for my work I would have to learn to think on paper; that is, reduce my thoughts and ideas to writing so I could see how they looked when they got cold. When I undertook this task I found that it necessitated more study, for I not only had to possess the subject matter, but I must also acquire the use of adequate language in order to express it properly. It was while I was the busiest with my study work that I learned the most about prayer; in fact, I found that neither would be complete without the other. I hope you will be able to get my meaning here, for that which I wish to say is of vital importance to us. When I studied I found it was very necessary for me to pray for both light and wisdom; light that I might be able to discover, and wisdom that I might be able to rightly interpret the discoveries made. I soon realized, on the other hand, that it was of but little value to pray for direction, for understanding, and for knowledge, unless I was willing to go out from that season of prayer and search the fields that were open before me until I had been successful, and could cry in fond appreciation, Eureka! So I wish to say again that I found prayer and study the most fruitful sources of knowledge.

While engaged in this course, I was made to realize as I could have done in no other way, the office work of the Holy Spirit; for often when I was pursuing new studies, the things of the past would open to me with such a clear and broad meaning as to cause me to marvel. Not only was this the case, but when I would be carefully reviewing the old paths my mind would be led out into new fields, and some very rich and valuable discoveries were made. Often when I would read the title of a book in a list of other books an intuitive something would say to me, That is the book you need next, and I could never rest until it was acquired, and in every case it provided the very thing I was needing to equipping me for the work whereunto I had been called. My only regret is that I did not see the necessity of this kind of a course of study much earlier in life. I would like to urge the necessity of careful and persistent study and prayer, for I know that without both we are going to fall short of the things that are to be acquired through their exercise.

Of course I would not have you get the idea that it is all sunshine and flowers, for there are some hardships to be endured, and there are some trying times; but I do want to say that the consolation of the Spirit that accompanies this work is more than compensation for all the trials and hardships that are required to endure. Then, everyone who has shared the joys that accompany athletic feats will agree with me that the hardest earned victories are the ones that give us the greatest satisfaction; that which costs us the biggest price is the thing we value most. So it is in the church work; that which has demanded the most of us has yielded the greatest comfort when the task has been completed; when the victory has been won. It is often said, “If there is no cross, there will be no crown”; so also, where there is no self-denial there is no enlargement of the soul. I am able to appreciate in a small way what our Lord meant when he said: “He that saveth his life shall lose it, but he that loseth his life shall find it.” That is to say, if any man tries to get by on the lines of least resistance, he is going to make a dismal failure of life. He who would triumph must go to the bottom of the thing; he must exert himself to the uttermost; he must pay the price. The man who seeks to get by will lose all there is of value, both in this life and in the life to come, but he that is willing to make sacrifice for truth’s sake, who is not afraid to endure hardships, who is willing to forget all about self and selfish desires in his endeavor to acquire truth and serve mankind, is going to find life that is life indeed.

The twenty-two years of my ministry have been a source of many rich experiences, as well as of a number of sad disappointments; but in every case I have found the Lord true to his promise; and I have, after passing through them, gained in faith as well as in experience. I am quite conscious that my work has fallen far short of what it ought to be. I have known my limitations then as now, and I have accepted what without both we are going to fall short of the things that are to be acquired through their exercise.

The twenty-two years of my ministry have been a source of many rich experiences, as well as of a number of sad disappointments; but in every case I have found the Lord true to his promise; and I have, after passing through them, gained in faith as well as in experience. I am quite conscious that my work has fallen far short of what it ought to be. I have known my limitations then as now, and I have accepted without both we are going to fall short of the things that are to be acquired through their exercise.
of us the best there is in us. Are we going to arise and discharge our duties? or are we going to allow human weaknesses and trivialities to hinder us? Surely there is nothing too good for the cause! Christ gave his precious blood for it; many of the apostles and prophets sealed their testimony with their blood. What are we doing for its advancement? Surely there is much that we can do if we consecrate ourselves to the work; but let us remember: "No one can assist in this work, except he is humble, and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things, whatsoever shall be intrusted unto his care." This demand is great, but it is the word that the Eternal One has spoken, and it is worthy of my careful thought. I ought to ask myself in what way I am able to qualify as an assistant in this work. Are we really making the preparation we should make along this line?

Personally, I want to rededicate myself to the work, and by this I mean that I want to be able to give to the church the best possible service. I want to train my mind, my hand, and my heart for the work, so that the years that are before us will find me more nearly approximating the requirements of the law quoted; that in deed and in truth I may be able to assist in this work, and be one who, with the rest of the church, may be found worthy to build up and establish the cause of Zion. But in order to do this we must have faith in God, and in the law he has given to us by which Zion is to be built. We are told in that law that, "The laborer in Zion shall labor for Zion, for if they labor for money they will perish." Again we are told that, "Zion is the pure in heart." So getting the thought that these two statements express, we have this: The laborer who is pure in heart must labor for the pure in heart, for if he labors for any other purpose, or with any other motive, they must all perish. You see it is very evident that if one has any other purpose or motive he is no longer pure in heart, and for that reason he is unable to assist in the cause.

Let me say it once more, I want to be able to give the church a better service during the years that are before me than I have been able to give her hitherto, because I am now a little better prepared to serve, by reason of having the equipment that has been acquired through the years I have been engaged in the work. Let us one and all rededicate, and reconsecrate ourselves to the work, that we might be able to move forward the cause of Zion in mighty power. God will bless and prosper our efforts if we will humbly seek to prepare ourselves for the work and then use the means available, the meantime praying that he will bless and prosper the effort put forth by us.

Yours very truly,

E. VANDERWOOD.

Features Book of Mormon at Reunion

ENFIELD, MIDDLESEX, ENGLAND, January 31.—The reunion of Midland District was held here January 10 and 11. The attendance was very poor, but those who came had a good time.

Sunday was a day the Saints enjoyed, especially the fellowship meeting which convened at three o'clock in the afternoon. Testimonies were given telling of the power of God in this work, and each one felt the presence of the Spirit. The meeting was very encouraging.

Elder Abel Hall was in attendance and gave some of his experiences in witnessing the power of God, and testified to the truth of the gospel. He was also the speaker at the evening service.

The following week a series of lantern lectures was delivered by Brother Hall, beginning Monday, January 12. These lectures were on the Book of Mormon, showing that these people had been builders. Pictures also were shown of finds in America which showed they were builders of no mean order. The lecturer showed a slide of page 202 of the Book of Mormon, telling of the huge stone that was found, and of the engravings upon it which when interpreted told a story of their history. This was followed by showing the engravings, pointing out that when man has discovered the complete secret of these engravings we shall know a great deal more of these people. He also dealt with the forts built by Moroni and after that presented pictures of the broken condition of the land, the remarkable pottery found in the cliff dwellings, the cliff dwellings themselves, the sacrificial knife, crystal skull, shield, their wonderful carvings in wood toys, human skulls incrusted with Mosaic, and skulls with inlaid gold teeth.

Brother Hall was assisted by John B. Etheridge, whose lantern was used for showing the pictures. Two hundred and fifty slides were shown, which completed the series of lectures. At the close Brother Etheridge showed a film for the amusement of the Saints.

The Saints acknowledge the value of a man like Brother Hall, who does the Saints good when he comes among them. We pray that God will bless him in his labor for the vindication of that wonderful book of the ancient inhabitants of America.
Gertrude Copeland, that institution has made some much needed improvement and is now in excellent condition.

Statistically, for a period from January 1, 1924, to December 31, 1924, the report is as follows:

- Number of patients in hospital January 1: 90
- Number of patients admitted during the year: 1,027
- Total number of patients during year: 1,057
- Number of patients discharged during year: 1,023
- Remaining in hospital December 31: 94
- Number of days' treatment of patients: 11,856
- Daily average number of patients in Sanitarium: 83
- Number of minor operations: 280
- Number of major operations: 254
- Number of deaths during year: 62, or 6%
- Cost of maintenance per patient per day: $4.45

Financially the Sanitarium has, with the contributions made to it in the way of gifts, about held its own; but we hope to see the time come soon when this very worthy institution shall have been endowed in such a way as to permit an expansion of its activities to meet other needs.

Besides general repairs and many minor improvements, the old equipment of the X-ray room has been replaced by new—an up-to-date and efficient one. Two other much needed improvements are (1) laundry machinery to do the heavy laundry work at a large saving over present methods, and (2) an addition to the building for the maternity department, which has grown till the present quarters are inadequate.

Respectfully submitted,

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

President's Recommendations Adopted

It was moved and seconded that the recommendations of the report be adopted.

The report was not discussed. The previous question was ordered.

The recommendation for release of publicity agent was adopted.

The appointment of George W. Eastwood to fill the place of church auditor, vice A. H. Knowlton, resigned, was approved.

The resignation of Doctor G. Leonard Harrington was accepted.

Graceland College Program

Visitors to the General Conference were given an entertainment by the A Capella Chorus on Friday evening, assisted by Miss Florence Juergens, reader.

Business sessions in the forenoon and afternoon had been long and strenuous, and quorum and other sessions between times had filled the day to the brim. The congregation gathered a little more slowly than usual, but at eight o'clock the seats were all occupied, and the ushers began sending belated arrivals to the choir loft. It was a wonderful opportunity to get before the representatives of the church from all parts of the world which have been opened to the sound of the restored gospel, a few words of explanation of the work of Graceland College, and an exemplification of the work of some of her departments.

The atmosphere created by arrangement of furniture and decoration was one of dignified simplicity—one of democracy. President George N. Briggs, president of Graceland College, and any who have visited Graceland within the years of President Briggs's administration felt the usual serenity which pervades that institution.

The chorus made its appearance immediately following the hour of eight o'clock and were accompanied to the rostrum by Miss Florence Thompson, accompanist, and Miss Florence Juergens, reader. Miss Mabel Carlile, director, took her place, and at the first note of the "Star Spangled Banner" the audience arose and stood at attention during the rendition. The chorus is composed of the following persons: Sopranos, Aliene Brackenbury, Florence Thompson, Gertrude White, Doris Gieselman, Irene Layton; altos, Louella Wight, Dora Dexter, Wanda Derry, Margaret Anthony; tenors, Ewan Fry, Thad Howland, Melvin Wells, Roy Chevillle, Frank Holmes; bass, Edward Wells, George Gates, Roy Henderson, Reese Wells.

From the chorus the ladies' quartet is selected: Aliene Brackenbury, first soprano; Mabel Carlile, second soprano; and Louella Wight and Margaret Anthony the alto parts. This quartet is an attraction in these programs.

The work of Miss Florence Juergens in character readings is most excellent; and although an a b c group had been given near the close of the program, the audience insisted on her coming back, and were once more pleased when she gave an Italian dialect number as her encore. Miss Juergens is also strong in dramatic numbers which she gave.

Miss Aliene Brackenbury and Miss Doris Gieselman sang the solos, Miss Brackenbury demonstrating the worth of careful training on a voice of exceptional sweetness. Miss Gieselman is an artist of considerable experience and strength, and her work appealed very strongly to the General Conference audience.

The work of the chorus was a dream of delight from the first number until the last of the program. The modulation, the complete control, the unassuming airs of the artists, the democracy of their attire and personal appearance, commended itself very strongly to the cosmopolitan audience before them. They were received with a great deal of warmth and appreciation. Their work was understood and appreciated, and Independence will always have a large contingent when a like performance is promised.

One peculiarity in the composition of this chorus is that three of the men out of the nine are members of one family, the sons of Elder and Sister Gomer R. Wells, of Lamoni, Iowa. Saints of fifteen to thirty years ago will remember the voice of Elder Wells in the General Conference singing, and many of the Saints know the sweetness of the voice of Sister Wells. This quality of musical appreciation and execution seems to have been transmitted in large measure, and we have as members of this chorus, Melvin in the tenor, and Edward and Reese among the basses.

The program rendered was as follows, not including the encore numbers:

Delays in Using New Radio Station
A formal opening program for the KLDS studio was broadcast as scheduled for the night of the 7th, but the increased power was not available for use. Since that date, wiring of the 1000-watt broadcaster has been completed and the outfit tested. Unfortunately, two of the big water-cooled transmitting tubes proved defective and had to be shipped back to the factory. With only one spare tube, this circumstance caused further delay.

Every effort is being made to get the new tubes as soon as possible, and when they arrive the set will be put into use, with a power output of 500 watts. When the Government inspection is made and the station approved for Class B License, the power will be increased to 1000 watts.

Arrangements have been made with WOS, the State Marketing Bureau Station of Missouri, Jefferson City, to divide time with them on a wave length of 441 meters. Under the agreement, KLDS will have Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday nights, and Monday’s business sessions, the 13th, were very important, and a larger amount of important business was done than at any other time during the conference.

General Conference Prolonged

A strong resolution was presented condemning the publication by the Ladies’ Home Journal of the extended biography of Brigham Young, in which many damaging statements are made regarding Joseph Smith the Seer. These resolutions were referred to a committee consisting of President Frederick M. Smith, Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire, and Mrs. B. M. Anderson, for examination and report to the conference.

The following preamble and resolutions were read, coming from the Southern Saskatchewan District:

Whereas the Lord has laid a great burden of responsibility on the church, to send the gospel to the nations, and
Whereas the finances are being diverted to carry on a social program not provided in the law; and
Whereas the missionary forces have been continually reduced as a result;
Therefore, be it Resolved, that we, the Southern Saskatchewan District in conference assembled, most earnestly protest against any policy or program that interferes with the missionary program provided for in the law; and be it Further Resolved, that a copy of this document be sent to the General Church Secretary, to be presented to the next General Conference.

The motion was made to adopt, but was denied.

Name of Department of Recreation and Expression Unchanged

A recommendation was read, coming from the Pittsburgh District, recommending a change of the name of the Department of Recreation and Expression to that of the Religio. The motion to adopt was denied.

On Editorial Supervision

The following motion was presented:

Whereas, the editing of the church periodicals is clearly a spiritual work and stewardship,
Therefore, be it Resolved, that the editorial supervision of the church periodicals shall hereafter be directly under the control of the First Presidency.

It was moved to adopt. The previous question was moved, but denied. Moved to amend, and that the Board of Publication be notified to comply with the wishes of this body as expressed in this resolution. The following substitute was moved:

Be it resolved that the Presiding Bishop be and is hereby instructed to take such steps as shall properly provide that hereafter the Board of Publication shall consist of one of the First Presidency, one of the Quorum of Twelve, one of the Presiding Bishopric, and two persons to be elected by the conference of the church on nomination by the Presiding Bishop with the approval of the First Presidency. And the Presiding Bishop is hereby instructed that he should make nominations to this conference in harmony with these provisions.

Be it further resolved, that in the interim between conferences no one should be removed from the Board of Publication or vacancies filled on the said board without the approval of the First Presidency.

Be it further resolved that the Board of Publication should recognize the First Presidency as being in general editorial charge of the various periodicals of the church.

After discussion this substitute was adopted.

A Call to Reorganize the Religio

A resolution from Independence conference calling for the reorganization of the Religio was read and a motion made to adopt. The proposed resolution reads:

Whereas, the Saints are admonished to study the Book of Mormon, and whereas, in Zion and many other branches throughout the entire church, the Zion’s Religio-Literary Society has been reorganized to meet more fully the demand for the study of the Book of Mormon, and whereas, the work of these societies has been a source of comfort and strength to the Saints; be it resolved that the Saints of Zion in conference assembly hereby petition the coming General Conference to express itself in favor of these worthy movements by authorizing the reorganization of Zion’s Religio-Literary Society for the primary purpose of the study of the Book of Mormon wherever demanded.

It was moved and seconded that we adopt the resolution. A motion that the motion lie upon the table was made and carried by a large majority.

Chairman Frederick M. Smith stated that the table was clear, with the exception of matters growing out of the published reports of the officers and departments. He also advised the Quorum of Twelve, the Quorums of Seventy, and the Order of Bishops to go into session as early as possible, in order that business might not languish.

Tuesday's Business Session

A report from the Quorum of High Priests stated that Elder Alonzo H. Parsons had resigned his position as counselor to the president, and Elder W. S. Macrae had been chosen by the quorum to succeed him. The report was approved, and the ordination of Brother Macrae was ordered.

A time limit was set for the introduction of new business, it being determined upon the recommendation of the President that no new business could be entertained after 2.15 p.m., April 16.

The date for meeting of the next conference was set as April 6, 1926.

Selection of Standing High Council

Certain rules for the selection of members of the Standing High Council were adopted by the conference of 1923. It was moved that these rules be repealed. The resolution was in this form:

Be it resolved, that the action of the last General Conference, 1923, providing for the selection of members of the Standing High Council, be rescinded and the laws governing this matter prior to the adoption of said resolution, particularly section 99, be reaffirmed as the constitutional law of the church.

The text of the 1923 resolution is as follows:

Inasmuch as the decisions of the Standing High Council are of grave concern to the church, and it is fitting and desirable that the members of this council shall be selected in harmony with the law so as to establish the greatest confidence in its functions, guaranteeing justice and equity to all; therefore, be it

Resolved, that the principle and method providing for the selection of the members composing this Standing High Council, be and hereby are reaffirmed, viz:

"Those who were presented by the high priests for ordination to their number, if approved by the council of the high priests now present, and the conference, may be ordained; and from their number there may be selected by a committee of conference composed of one of the first presidency, the president of the twelve and one other to be chosen by the council of twelve, the president of the high priests and one other to be chosen by that council of their number, a sufficient number to fill the vacancies now existing in the high council, that the high council may be properly organized and prepared to hear matters of grave importance when presented to them. And this committee shall make these selections according to the spirit of wisdom and revelation that shall be given unto them, to provide that such council may be convened at any General Conference when emergency may demand, by reason of their presiding at or near to places where conferences may be held."—Doctrine and Covenants 120:9; and further, be it

Resolved, that members of the Quorum of Twelve, Order of Bishops, and Stake Presidencies shall not be eligible to appointment to this Standing High Council, and further be it

Resolved, that all resolutions conflicting with this be and hereby are rescinded.—General Conference Minutes, 1925, p. 3492.

When the vote was taken the motion to annul was carried by a decisive majority.

Two members of the High Council, John F. Garver and Walter W. Smith, presented their resignations, and these were accepted by the conference.

The committee to whom had been referred the protest against the Ladies' Home Journal articles reported the resolution, and it was adopted. It follows:

Whereas, the Ladies' Home Journal has admitted to its columns within the past four or five months a series of articles under the caption "Brigham Young," in which certain statements reflecting upon the character and mission of Joseph Smith are gross misrepresentations, to the hurt and irreparable injury of the church he founded, and

Whereas, these facts have been brought to the attention of the editor of said magazine, and whereas he has been informed of the findings of the courts of the land in which the said church, founded by Joseph Smith in 1830, was absolved from the charge of responsibility for the introduction and practice of polygamy, and,

Whereas, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has been, by the same findings, declared to be the true and lawful successor of said church, and

Whereas, appeals to the editor of said magazine have not resulted in any published correction on his part, therefore,

Be It Resolved, that we, the ex officio and delegate members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in General Conference assembled, do hereby solemnly and vigorously protest against these false attacks made upon the character and ministry of the founder of our church, and

Be It Further Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions, together with copies of the findings of Judge John J. Phillips in the United States Circuit Court, Western Division, Western District, State of Missouri, and of Judge L. S. Sherman in the Court of Common Pleas, Lake County, Ohio, be forwarded by the Presidency of the church to the editor of the Ladies Home Journal, with the earnest request that they be published in said magazine with such prominence and emphasis as shall rectify the mistakes that have been given such wide circulation through its columns.

Ministry to Go From Conference With an Affirmative Message

The following was moved:

Whereas the law of God has warned the church that no person is to be permitted to frustrate the commands of the body in conference assembly, and has directed that those who oppose what may be presented to the conference should voice their objections in the conferences, and not in the fields of labor (Doctrine and Covenants 125:16); therefore, be it

Resolved, that the conference appointees and ministry be required to go forward from this conference with an affirmative message in consonance with the voice of the church as set forth in the constitutional laws and legislative enactments.

An amendment was presented to amend the resolution by substituting the word request for the word require.

The amendment was put and carried.
The motion as amended was put and carried.

A committee on boundary lines was appointed, and matters having to do with boundaries of districts of the State of Oklahoma were referred to this committee.

It was moved and seconded that we adopt the ten recommendations contained in the report of President Floyd M. McDowell, of the Department of Recreation and Expression.

1. That we continue the policy which recognizes as the principal function of this department the proper supervision of social, recreational, and expressive activities.
2. That this supervision be so maintained that the program of this department will blend with the program of the church as a whole.
3. That the policy of the closest cooperation between the general departments be continued so that there shall be gradually worked out a nicely coordinated program of religious education for all ages, all groups, and all needs, a program which will see to it that all the activities of life are directed toward one great goal, the establishment of the kingdom of God.
4. That the department continue in every way possible to encourage the work of the Consulting Board so that there will be available a great variety of courses of study for the purposes mentioned in No. 3, it being understood that this Consulting Board will secure the best talent available and put it to work in the preparation of courses of study in the standard books of the church as well as in a variety of other subjects.
5. That in the meantime this department continue to publish quarterlies and encourage study and that every local be given an opportunity to maintain regular class work in any of an increasing variety of subjects.
6. That the Book of Mormon quarterlies be printed by the department in such numbers as are adequate to meet the demand and until such time as the Consulting Board is able to prepare a number of courses in this important subject suitable for various ages and needs.
7. That the department continue to stress the importance of training of qualified leaders, recognizing that the type of leadership maintained in the supervision of activities of this department has more to do with the success of our efforts than any other one factor.
8. That we use the departments already organized to the maximum of their possibilities rather than the organization of any new departments or the establishing of complicated machinery.
9. That the various young people's activities of the church should as far as possible find their expression through existing departmental machinery.
10. That we continue our policy of gradually educating the Saints to feel that our effort is church work in the truest sense and not some side issue or a more or less unnecessary adjunct to the church.

The recommendations were adopted by a strong vote.

Graphic Arts Bureau

The work of the Graphic Arts Bureau in the making of slides for illustrations in lectures, sermons, entertainments, etc., was brought to prominence, and the quality of the work was stated to be very fine and unexcelled anywhere.

Graceland College Trustees

A report from Graceland College Trustees as to the membership of their body was read. The actionable part is as follows:

Because of the fact that there was no conference held in 1921, nor in April, 1922, and not until October, 1922, and that the term of office of the members of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College expires in April three years after election, and that due to overlooking these facts in both the conference of October, 1922, and October, 1923, and that there was no conference in 1924, and in order to make the record clear and to conform with the requirements of the Articles of Incorporation of Graceland College, an examination of the minutes of the conference shows the following facts:

1. The term of office of A. Carmichael and Walter Hayer, elected in April, 1920, expired in April, 1923.
2. There being no conference in 1921 and not until October, 1922, the terms of T. A. Hougas and C. B. Woodstock, elected in April, 1919, expired in April, 1921, and they served until October, 1922, when their successors, F. M. McDowell and A. Max Carmichael, were elected to serve until April, 1924.
3. The terms of J. F. Garver and J. W. Wight (succeeded by appointment of C. E. Wight) and G. N. Briggs, elected in April, 1919, expired in April, 1922, but due to previous failure to elect, held over until the General Conference of October, 1922, and were reelected for the term expiring in April, 1925.

There are therefore the following trustees to be elected:
1. Two to succeed A. Carmichael and Walter Hayer for terms expiring April, 1926.
2. Two to succeed F. M. McDowell and A. Max Carmichael for the term expiring April, 1927.

In order to conform with the requirements of the Articles of Incorporation of Graceland College, it is recommended that these vacancies be filled.

It was moved that we proceed to the election of trustees of Graceland College. The motion carried.

Myron A. McConley was nominated to succeed Walter E. Hayer. He withdrew his name. Daniel Anderson was nominated to succeed Walter E. Hayer.

It was moved that A. Carmichael and Walter E. Hayer succeed themselves as members of the Board of Trustees.

Previous question was ordered.

The name of Bishop A. Carmichael was approved to succeed himself.

Walter E. Hayer was chosen to succeed himself.

Floyd M. McDowell and A. Max Carmichael were chosen to succeed themselves.

Sister Frederick M. Smith took the floor and made the statement that the college was no longer the place where children got their first ideas on the subject of biology. The parents would be obliged to take their children from the public schools if they would escape the teachings so objectionable to many who have just now talked.

Sister Smith nominated Sister Blanche Edwards to succeed Apostle John F. Garver, and made remarks supporting her candidate.

Sister Vida E. Smith was nominated to succeed Cyril E. Wight.

President George N. Briggs was nominated to succeed himself.
Apostle J. F. Garver was nominated to succeed himself.

Elder Cyril E. Wight was nominated to succeed himself.

A motion that the first three nominees be declared elected was made and prevailed. These are Sisters Blanche Edwards and Vida E. Smith, and President George N. Briggs.

Thursday's Business

The conference approved the choice of Arthur E. Stoft as secretary of the Quorum of High Priest to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of A. H. Knowlton.

Department of Women reported recommending the choice of Sisters Ida Etzenhouser and Callie B. Stebbins for members of the Board of Trustees of the Saints' Children's Home at Lamoni, Iowa, to fill the vacancies caused by the expiration of the terms of Sisters Etzenhouser and Ida Monroe.

The Committee on Rules of Representation were instructed to consider the matters referred to them in 1922, 1923, and 1925, and submit their report for publication in the HERALD thirty days preceding the conference of April 6, 1926.

Shall the Presiding Bishopric Be Released?

The Order of Bishops made a report, as follows:

April 16, 1925.

To the First Presidency and Conference in Session; Greetings: The Order of Bishops met in the office of the Presiding Bishopric at 9 o'clock a. m., April 15, at which time the following bishops were present:

The Order met again at 9.20 a. m., April 16, with all of the above-named brethren present except Bishops J. F. Keir, E. L. Kelley, and C. E. Irwin. At this morning's session the following: preambles and resolution were adopted by unanimous vote of the bishops present with the instruction to report the same to you for your consideration, the members of the Presiding Bishopric having withdrawn during the consideration and adoption of the document.

Whereas, as a result of the meeting of the Order of Bishops held on the 15th of April, 1925, with eighteen bishops in addition to the Presiding Bishopric in attendance, and a further session of the Order held on April 16, 1925, with an attendance of sixteen bishops in addition to Bishops B. R. McGuire and I. A. Smith of the Presiding Bishopric, it has become finally apparent that, owing to the conscientious scruples held by the Presiding Bishopric, Benjamin R. McGuire, J. F. Keir, and I. A. Smith, conditions exist under which a continuance of the ministrations of the Presiding Bishopric is incompatible with the action of the present conference, and

Whereas, there is no reasonable hope that conditions shall be so changed as to make a unity of effort possible, and

Whereas, we believe that the affairs of the Presiding Bishopric have been administered conscientiously and with integrity according to their understanding and convictions of the matters and conditions prevailing, and

Whereas, in justice to the church in general we believe that the Presiding Bishopric should be composed of men who are in conscientious accord with the enactments of this General Conference, and

Whereas, we believe the Presiding Bishopric desire the welfare of the whole church but hold conscientious scruples against voluntarily laying down a divinely imposed trust,

Therefore, be it and it is hereby resolved that in furtherance of the general and financial interests of the church and in justice to the present Presiding Bishopric it is the sense of the Order of Bishops that the Presiding Bishopric be honorably released from their present positions.

Order of Bishops,

J. A. Becker, Acting Secretary.

It was moved that the recommendation of the report be adopted, by Apostle E. J. Gleazer; seconded by Bishop Ellis Short.

Bishop B. R. McGuire was requested to make a statement to the body before his withdrawal. He had stated that the Presiding Bishopric would withdraw during the consideration of the question.

Brother McGuire said:

Mr. President, Ex Officio and Delegate Members of this Conference: When on April 6, 1916, the General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints asked us to assume the responsibility of the office of Presiding Bishop, we cheerfully responded to the call. We have as cheerfully given service in that office. Our only regret is that the service given has not been better and more to the advancement and the building up of the kingdom of God. From our record we believe that no matter what the action of this body shall be to-day upon the question pending before it, you are warranted in believing that we shall continue to strive to be honorable, law-abiding members of the church of Jesus Christ. I believe I also speak the sentiments of my colleagues. However, so far as I am concerned, they are at liberty to express their views. I pray that our heavenly Father, in his love and mercy, may grant that each ex officio and delegate member of this conference shall have that measure of his Spirit that he may be able to know what is right, and have a sufficiency of his grace to do the right that the determination of this conference upon the matter now before you for consideration shall be to his praise and his glory.

It was moved that we limit the time of speeches to twenty minutes. Motions were also made to limit to fifteen and ten minutes, in the form of a substitute and an amendment to the same.

The previous question on the whole matter was moved and seconded, but failed to carry.

The motion to limit to fifteen minutes was adopted. It was moved as a substitute that we sustain the Presiding Bishopric.

The previous question on the matter of sustaining the Presiding Bishopric was moved, but failed to carry.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
The subject for the evening is, "The church and the young man." The Scripture lesson is found in the third chapter of Proverbs, the first 14 verses:

My son, forget not my law; but let thine heart keep my commandments: for length of days, and long life, and peace, shall they add to thee. Let not mercy and truth forsake thee: bind them about thy neck; write them upon the table of thine heart: so shalt thou find favor and good understanding in the sight of God and man. Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths.

In order to get a text for the evening's talk, I want you to go with me in imagination to a place across the sea, to a room in a beautiful palace. In this room there lies a king upon his bed. He is about to pass out of this sphere of action. He has but a short time to live, and he has summoned his son to his bedside in order that he may give him a few parting words before he dies. Outside the palace there are a number of people wondering what the father is going to say to the son. They think that the responsibility of caring for them will as much as the responsibility of caring for them will now fall upon the son's shoulders. But when the son heard the words of the father, they were not strong. They had no reference to finances; they had no reference to governmental affairs; they had no reference to family affairs. There were just these six words, "Show thyself to be a man!" He had called the boy from many miles away just to tell him that!

The one great difference between the weak and the strong, the high and the low, is the difference of character. At no time in the world's history has strength of character been more indispensable than at the present time. Education, being more widely diffused than ever, has refined human aspiration and given greater scope to ambition. But all too often in seeking the goal of their ambition do men forget that the only right road to happiness is the road of righteousness, the road of character. And so when this old king said to his son, "Show thyself to be a man," he had reference to character.

What is the definition of a man? There are some in the world who would measure a man by his physical prowess. There was a time in Rome when a man who was physically strong, who was a good athlete, who was very proficient in the matters which had to do with the use of his muscles—that man was worshiped. That was the measure of a man in those days. With other people, there are those who consider a man one who is very strong intellectually. There are others who are exceedingly religious who hold that a man who is religious, notwithstanding he may not be strong physically or intellectually, is a man.

But your speaker believes that when that father told his son to show himself to be a man, he meant that he should be a man physically, intellectually, and spiritually—in other words, well balanced.

We should not underestimate the importance of the physical man. There has been the tendency in days gone by to underestimate the value of physical development and physical strength in peoples, and especially among religious peoples. There used to be an idea in the world to the effect that in order for one to be really religious, he must get away from the crowd, get away from society, go into seclusion, and crucify the flesh.

There was once a man named Saint Simeon, the founder of the sect called the "Pillar Saints." For a long time he lived in a monastery; but finally he built a pillar or tower about seventy feet high and four feet in diameter. He went up on the top of this pillar and spent thirty years there, until his teeth rattled out and his bones rotted with the dews of the night, and his hearing left him, and his eyes became dim with looking at the sun. That was his idea of serving God—crucifying the flesh in order that he might be spiritually developed. The result was that he died a miserable death, having done no good in the world.

But I believe that character is developed where men can rub elbows with each other. God does not want us to crucify the flesh. He wants us to remember that the body of man is the tabernacle of God's Holy Spirit, and God has given it to him for a purpose, a divine purpose, if you please, and that that body should be properly cared for. So in order for a young man to show himself to be a real man, he must develop physically. And do you know, as the Judge said the other evening, thirty-five and a half per cent of the young men who were examined for service in the army during the recent World War were rejected because they were not, physically, men. Fifty-eight per cent of those who were accepted were unable to carry guns and march during the war.

Statistics show that forty per cent of the high school students of to-day are unfit physically for the responsibilities that devolve upon them. Are they, therefore, capable of assuming the responsibilities of home life? Are they capable of assuming the responsibilities of social life? Are they really men?

In order to be well-balanced, a young man must be a man physically. "Oh," some one says, "sometimes nature determines that. Sometimes we cannot help ourselves." That is all very true. Where it is impossible to improve our physical condition, there is some excuse. And there have been times in the world's history when men who have been physically handicapped have been able to accomplish a great good; but it is the exception. And those who have been able to accomplish a great good in that way could have accomplished more good had they been more physically fit.

There have also been times when individuals have been physically handicapped who by effort and struggle have been able to overcome their handicaps and measure up to a high physical standard. I have in mind Caesar. When he was a young man, he was tubercular. He liked to go to the Forum and listen to the debates. He made up his mind that some day his voice would be heard in that Forum. He knew that he never could realize his ambition in the physical condition he was in at that time. He would have to overcome his physical handicaps. Near his home was a large hill, and he made up his mind that he was going to take advantage of that hill to help develop his lungs. He memorized one of the orations that he heard at the Forum, and every day he would climb that hill, reciting the oration. For a long time he kept that up, and finally he developed strong lungs. He developed his intellect, too, and the time came when Caesar delivered one of the most wonderful orations ever presented in that Forum. He was physically handicapped, but he overcame it.

But while it is essential that we have a strong body, it must also be remembered that through the body comes most of the temptations of life, and that while we should have all the forces of our being fully developed, yet they should be under full and absolute control. And unless a young man keeps in control these tendencies, these hidden forces, they will lead him into actions and conditions that will result in his destruction.

During the adolescent period, there are three tendencies which are especially strong and seek expression. One is the social instinct; another the mating instinct; and another the sex instinct. We deceive ourselves if we think it is wrong for these instincts to seek expression. They are God-given. It is as natural for them to desire expression as it is for us to want to eat. It is not for one to seek to kill these instincts, but to properly supervise and direct their expression, that they might make for the young man's and young woman's happiness. But at this period of life there comes into the young man's heart a desire to sow his wild oats, after which, he thinks, he will settle down. He does not calculate that sometime he will have to pay the price. It is a good bit like a story I once heard of Willie and Mary.

These children had been taught to pray at home. One day mother was not there, so when night came they decided to get down on their knees and try to pray alone. They did so. Mary got through before Willie did. She looked down at Willie's feet, one of which stuck out from under his nightgown. She reached down and tickled it. Willie kicked out very vigorously. Presently Mary reached down again and tickled the bottom of Willie's foot. He again kicked out even more vigorously than before; but he was not through praying yet. She again reached down and tickled his foot. That was too much for Willie. He prayed, "Lord, excuse me a moment until I knock the stuffing out of Mary!"

There are a lot of young fellows who think, "Lord, excuse me a while until I knock the stuffing out of my character." It is this false philosophy which is so nicely expounded in a little poem which I shall read, written by Y. Wheeler Wilkes:

The Price That He Paid

I said I would have my fling
And do what a young man may,
And I didn't believe a thing
That the parsons have to say.
I didn't believe in a God
That gives us blood like fire,
Then flings us into hell because
We answer the call of desire.

And I said: "Religion is rot,
And the laws of the world are nil;
For the bad man is he who is caught
And cannot foot his bill.
And there is no place called hell;
And heaven is only a truth,
When a man has his way with a maid,
In the fresh, keen hour of youth.

"And money can buy us grace,
If it rings on the plate of the church:
And money can neatly erase
Each sign of a sinful smirch."
For I saw men everywhere,
Hotfooting the road of vice;
And women and preachers smiled on them
So long as they paid the price.

So I had my joy of life;
I went the pace of the town;
And then I took me a wife,
And started to settle down.
I had gold enough and to spare
For all the simple joys
That belong with a house and a home
And a brood of girls and boys.

I married a girl with health
And virtue and spotless fame.
I gave in exchange my wealth
And a proud old family name.
And I gave her the love of a heart
Grown sated and sick of sin!
My deal with the Devil was all cleaned up,
And the last bill handed in.

She was going to bring me a child,
And when in labor she cried,
With love and fear I was wild—but Now I wish she had died,
For the son she bore me was blind
And crippled and weak and sore!
It was so she settled my score.

Perhaps this picture is overdrawn, but I bid you to remember, young man, that just to the extent that you sow wild oats, just to that extent will you pay the price. It is a false philosophy to think that we can indulge in the lusts of the flesh without having to pay in the end. Either we ourselves pay physically, intellectually, or spiritually, or some one else suffers as the result of our sin.

So when the old man said, “Show thyself to be a man,” he wanted his son to show himself to be a man physically. However, it is possible for a man to be a giant physically and still not be a man.

That brings us to the next phase of the question—the intellectual man. Thirty per cent of the high school students fail to measure up to the standard of ordinary intelligence. Think of it! And yet we have had people in our church who say, “You don’t need to go to school. Study the Bible; study the Book of Mormon; study the Doctrine and Covenant; that is all you need.” I hope, friends, you will not misunderstand me, because if there is anyone who loves these books more than I do I do not know who it is. I am indebted to the things contained in the sacred books of the church for the fact that I am here. But I want to say that if we confine our knowledge to that which is contained in those three books, we will limit our possibilities and opportunities. We must not underestimate the knowldge that men have been able to gain outside of this church. And if our people by study can obtain that knowledge and put it into action in their lives, is there anything wrong about that?

Some one says, If they get education it spoils them. Well, anyone who would spoil with an education would spoil anyway. All truth is God’s truth.
The truth about astronomy, the truth about science, geology, mathematics, is God’s truth just as much as it is true that baptism is essential to salvation, that the laying on of hands is a divine ordinance, and that the resurrection of the dead is something that we can consistently look forward to. It is all God’s truth, and if our young men and young women by study can obtain that truth and help build up
Zion with that knowledge, is it not a work for God?

Let us turn for a moment to a statement in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants that will give us an idea as to what God would have his people be intellectually:

Also, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall coninue in prayer and fasting from this time forth. And I give unto you a commandment, that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been;
things which are; things which must shortly come to pass;
things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations; and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms, that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again, to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you, and the mission with which I have commissioned you.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21.

Did you notice there, friends, that astronomy was spoken of? that geology was spoken of? that history was spoken of? that current events were spoken of?
God told his ministers to become acquainted with these things so that when he sent them out they would be qualified to properly help to build up the kingdom.

So I would like to encourage the young men of the church to develop intellect; to study. Don’t be afraid of science. Don’t be afraid of geology.
Don’t be afraid of astronomy. Study those things with prayer, of course, and God will enable you to glean from your study precious principles of truth which will enable you to become a better man, a bigger man, and a better servant of the Lord. There is room for the expression of every talent that God ever gave to the human family. And if you, young man, feel that God wants you to obtain a knowledge of some of these things I have mentioned, for the sake of building up Zion, that is your call, and God will bless you in it just as much as he

blesses the man who is called to go out and preach repentance, baptism, and the laying on of hands.

To be a man means that we must be developed physically and mentally. But it is possible to be strong physically and strong intellectually, and at the same time be a demon. The worst crooks in the world are educated crooks; because of their knowledge they are able to devise more perfect means to secure the things they want by evil means. So, I say it is possible to be developed in those two lines and at the same time be a demon. So we must couple with them a spiritual development which will bring us in touch with God, which will guide us in the use of our physical and intellectual powers.

The wise man said, “The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge.” What did he mean by that? The fear spoken of by him is not a peculiar notion that God is going to strike one dead or is holding over one’s head a figurative club which he will bring to bear upon him if he does not acknowledge God. I believe the fear of the Lord mentioned there is a reverent sense of God’s presence in the world, of God everywhere. Do you know, when you get that fear of the Lord it gives you a new vision of life.

John Bunyan, the writer of Pilgrim’s Progress, was at one time a drunkard. The people among whom he lived never dreamed that he was worth anything. There came a time, however, when John Bunyan was made conscious of his need of God. In other words, he was converted to Jesus Christ. From that time on there came a change in his life. There awakened within him possibilities he had not realized before, which had been lying dormant all this time, and it took the inspiration which came as the result of contact with God to awaken within him a desire to do something worth while. It changed his life. Bunyan began to make a mark in the world. Many other men, some here to-night, got their viewpoint of life, got their vision of service as a result of coming in contact with the divine influence of the Spirit of God.

Such a spiritual influence was thrown around me when a boy at home, and it is to that influence I attribute the fact that now I am trying to tell the gospel story, and I am trying to help other young men to see that with that spiritual influence and the development of their physical and intellectual powers they will measure up to be men that will please God.

Young men, there are some of you whom God wants to carry this gospel message to those who are in darkness. Will you show yourselves to be men and respond to the call of the Master? For there are millions, yes, millions, who are pleading for that which we have in our possession. Will you young men lay yourselves upon the altar of service and of sacrifice and say, “Lord, here am I, use me”? I can assure you of this fact, that if you go willingly you will be cared for and be blessed and directed just as men of God have been blessed and directed in days gone by.

I like to look back to a little experience in my life which shows that God’s spiritual forces are operating in the interest of his servants to-day as they did in Bible times.

One time I found myself in Wheeling, West Virginia, which town had once before been my home. While there I was asked to go to a branch in a town near by to preach on Sunday. I had to borrow twenty-five cents from my mother to get there. I went down there and preached for them twice that day, but nothing was said about my car fare. To my surprise the middle of the next week they called me again, asking if I could come the following Sunday. I went and preached there again, but again no car fare was given me. My mother had arranged to go to my home the following day. So I took her to the train, and while waiting for the train she handed me a dime and said, “You had better get me a paper, so I will have something to read on the train.” I went to get the paper. It cost three cents, leaving seven cents change. When I handed it to her she said, “You had better keep that nickel and ride back this morning.” I said, “All right, I will just keep these two pennies, too. I promised to visit a sick lady in Martin’s Ferry this afternoon and the two pennies will take me across the bridge and back.”

Now, I had planned to go to a place called Barnsville, Ohio, the following day to hold a series of meetings. It would take five dollars to get there and pay for my advertising. Well, I went down to my mother’s home and sat down to think it over. I will admit I was somewhat provoked. I felt to complain about Saints who could ask a man to come and preach for them twice and not even pay his car fare.

At length this scripture came to mind, “Seek first to build up the kingdom of God and establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.” I thought, I am trying to build up the kingdom of God. I am trying to establish his righteousness. I am doing the best I can. If the Lord wants me to go to Barnsville to-morrow he will open the way. It was just a few minutes after that that I heard a knock at the door. I went out. It was the mailman. He handed me a letter. I looked at the name at the top and wondered why that man should be writing to me. I had never before received a letter from him. I dumped the contents out into my hand. It was a five-dollar bill and this note: “Just to let you know I have been thinking of you and the work you are doing.” Now, what was that? Just a strange coincidence, friends? No; that was the gift of heaven. God had anticipated my needs, and he prompted that man to think of me and send me that five dollars. And with that five dollars I went to Barnsville and held a series of meetings and baptized some precious souls into the kingdom of God.

So I can say, young men, from actual experience, that God will take care of his servants. You will possibly not have the luxuries of life. You will be called upon to do things which will make you feel very lonely. You may be discouraged often, but that same God who has guided the destiny of his people in days gone by will take care of his servants today. God wants you to consecrate your lives to that sort of service.

And you who are called upon to remain at home, I call upon you to consecrate yourselves more fully to the Master's work. You could do nothing better than to give your life to Christ and his cause. I am assuming, however, that most of you, if not all of you, have already done that. May God help every one of you to "show thyself to be a man," to be well balanced, mentally, physically, and spiritually, is my prayer.

Building the Little Sunday School

BY FRANK B. ALMOND

(From an address to the conference of the Eastern Colorado District, February 20, 1925.)

Are our Sunday schools in the district so attractive that the people round about us are telling each other what splendid little Sunday schools we have? Are the teachers so enthusiastic, are the rooms so neat and clean, the scholars so attentive and earnest, the lessons so clearly taught, that the whole Sunday school session is one of inspiration and light and joy?

Or is it not rather that the average Sunday school is a very uninviting place? Bare walls and pillars; scattered chairs and tables; old, dingy-looking bookcases, piled in any old way with dirty, worn books; no blackboards, or at the most one upon which the chalk will scarcely make a mark; torn song books; and much else of like character—is not this the picture of the usual Sunday school? Children and older people coming in and going out at all times; all classes reciting in one or two rooms; attendance perfunctory, pupils coming when they please and as they please. The teachers usually have not their lessons ready; or, if they have, it is after a mere skipping through the text, perhaps ten minutes of preparation. In the face of this medley of ignorance, noise, and confusion, is it not pertinent to ask the question, Is the Sunday school really performing its full part in the building up of the body of Christ?

We are deeply concerned in finding a remedy for this state of things. Every Sunday school worker in the audience, and every individual who recognizes the tremendous value of this feature of our church work, will be interested in knowing the methods of Sunday school administration and organization through which the schools of our district shall become a power for good and an inspiration to every community.

We realize the almost insurmountable obstacles of each local's problems. For me to tell the Utleyville people just what definite steps to take to develop their little organization into the best little Sunday school in the church, might have no bearing upon the special problems, let us say, of Fort Collins. And similarly, to suggest ways and means of removing the troubles from the Fort Collins school may have no effect whatever upon the school at Colorado Springs. In spite of this, I am led to believe there are fundamental principles of administration which apply to every local, which, if fully carried into effect, will make our Sunday schools without equal in the whole church.

A Definite Vision

In the first place, the Sunday school must have a vision of its purpose—a vision unobstructed by expedients and precedents. So many of our Sunday schools do not see clearly what it is they are to do. The work for them lies shrouded in a mist. Everything is hazy. They walk like men in a fog. Confusion and disorder and a jumbled-up state of things is the result.

Let us put this concretely. If I were to ask you separately for your opinion of what the Sunday school is, I would receive as many different answers as there are people here. Oh, says one, the Sunday school is to teach the Bible. Another says, It is to increase membership in the church. But the vision of the Sunday school which I would like you to have, and which I would were burned deep in the heart of every officer and worker, is this: The Sunday school is the church itself engaged in the study of its message.

Do you see the value of such an ideal? It means that the Sunday school should no longer be considered as a separate part of the church. The Sunday school should be the church, and the church should be the Sunday school. On Sunday mornings we have the preaching service; that is the whole church at worship. In the evening we have the prayer meeting; that is, the whole church at prayer. We have our Department of Recreation and Expression; that is the whole church enjoying its social life. We have our missionary department; this should be the whole church evangelizing. And the Sunday school should be the whole church studying.
A superintendent with such an ideal in his heart will not be content to see that the Sunday school attendance is kept up to normal, or even that it is increasing. He will not, he cannot, rest until the whole church in his locality is actively engaged—fathers, mothers, and children—in Sunday school work. Such a superintendent will be an integral part of the branch, an under-shepherd caring for the flock, following their wanderings, and by every conceivable way bringing them to the Sunday school.

And after he has got them there—what? Will he be content to leave them in a haphazard manner to divide into classes as they please? to come and go as they please? to receive instruction in whatever manner it suits them? No; the superintendent, with a vision of his school as the whole church itself engaged in the study of its message, will be deeply concerned as to the ways and means by which the glorious gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ shall find a lodging in the hearts of the scholars whose faces he sees every Lord's Day. With the children he will think the thoughts of a little child, will study their habits, will learn their limitations and possibilities. With the young people he will be a young man; he will fathom their powers, grasp their ideals, see their goals, and adapt himself to their views of life. With the older people he will be mature; see the sober, serious message of the gospel as it applies to the stream of their life as it nears the ocean of eternity. In short, the superintendent will, with Paul, "become all things to all men," that by some means he might save a few. He will not be satisfied with any haphazard way of doing things.

Planning Ahead

And how shall he go about it, this superintendent with a vision, to reach his goal of the whole church systematically studying its message? If we think of him as a builder, we can at once see the necessity of his making definite plans. What is a builder but a man who makes and follows plans? Before the first shovel of earth is turned for the foundation, specifications have been accurately and painstakingly drawn. Builders never dash ahead, not knowing whether they are going. Every little detail—the depth and thickness of the foundations, the length and composition of the walls, the dimensions of every room, the location of every door and window, the position of every pipe and wire and chimney—a thousand details are thought out and fixed before the stones are blasted from the quarry or the first load of lumber is ordered from the mill. It is not the way of builders to plunge blindly into their work, trusting to the inspiration of the moment or some happy conjunction of events to guide them in the shaping of the structure for which the world is waiting.

So the builder of the little Sunday school must plan as well as vision. He should not wait for each Sunday to come before thinking of his school. Hours and days and even months must be spent by him in making a program and devising methods which shall assure the fullest success. Let us see; we are now in February, are we not? Before next school year begins in the end of September, we have six months. If we intend that the Sunday school shall no longer continue in a haphazard way, these next six months must be spent by the pastor and the Sunday school workers in outlining and developing plans which, so far as human ingenuity under the inspiration of God's Holy Spirit can promise, shall guarantee a measure of successful cooperation from the whole branch.

Here, for instance, is a branch of forty members with thirty children who are not yet members of the church. How are these divided? How many little children, how many young people, how many adults? How many of these will make teachers for the classes? Be not concerned so much as to whether they will teach as to whether they can. I am of the opinion that, given a constructive, definite policy, the Sunday school will not want for good, talented teachers. It is our slipshod method of letting any old system of teaching pass as good that dissuades good teachers from contributing their part.

How shall the school be graded? What instruction shall be given? Where shall we have each class? These and a hundred and one other details must all be worked out during the summer. What shall we have for Christmas, for Easter, for Children's Day? How long shall we spend on the lesson each week, and how much time on song and worship? What system shall we have for promoting scholars from one grade to another? How many new hymn books do we need? What system of reporting and checking up on the scholar's attendance shall we have? How shall we get the scholars to study their lessons? And as we delve deeper and deeper into the problems of the little Sunday school, we shall be amazed at the complexity and seeming futility of trying to solve them.

Grading

But keeping in mind the big vision: "The whole church itself engaged in the study of its message," all these problems will begin to solve themselves. Let us look, for a moment, at the mooted subject of grading. It is my opinion that any school which permits its scholars to grade themselves and to go wherever they please is an unmixed evil and a failure. The little Sunday school should be graded as definitely as school in the little red schoolhouse around the corner. Surely if it can be done with one, it can be done with the other.
In the public schools we have eight grades and the kindergarten before going into high school and college. Why not have the same system in the Sunday school? At the present time we have five grades of Sunday school classes: the beginner, primary, junior, intermediate, and senior. In the ideal little Sunday school I would have the beginners under six in the kindergarten. Then the primary, junior, and intermediate classes would be arranged in the grades of the public school system. On reaching the eighth grade, the pupils would then be graduated into the senior Sunday school.

It is to be regretted that until the value and purpose of the Sunday school are firmly established in the minds of our church people and parents, the business of passing pupils from one grade to another will continue to be done in a haphazard way. But the time must come when good work in a class will be recognized, and a premium placed upon it to the exclusion of work done in a negligent fashion and with no spirit of pride in accomplishment.

My ideal Sunday school would make Children's Day, the second Sunday in June, as graduation day. On that day those in the eighth grade would be graduated into the senior school. A special program would have on it the names of all those who graduate, and all those who pass from one grade into the next. Those who graduate or pass honorably would receive certificates, engraved cards, while the others who have not done satisfactorily in their work, who have been late too often, and absent too much, would merely be noted as passing from one grade to the next.

Such a system would inspire and encourage the parents to see that their children are regularly attending school and have their lessons ready. A new spirit of achievement would be seen, instead of the lackadaisical method of getting along in any old way, going to Sunday school because others go.

My ideally graded school would then have a senior school, divided perhaps into three sections. First the senior school, made up of a four-year class arrangement similar to the high school. This would bring the graduates of the senior school to about the age of seventeen. Second, there would be a normal class, in which graduates of the senior school would study for active work in teaching the Sunday school. This class would make a special study of the lessons ordinarily given in the school the week following, and each would be prepared to substitute the following Sunday if the regular teacher were absent. Besides the senior school and the normal class, there would of necessity be what is known as the adult, or perhaps we might term it, the post-graduate course. Subjects in these classes would be elective, and would be along special lines, such as the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and Church History.

I have gone into detail in order to show you that there is pressing need of a definite solving of the question of class work, of graduating, of promoting, and of so arranging the courses as to fit in exactly with the needs of the intellectual life of the members of the school. It is not my intention here to make ironclad rules as to the grading of a school, for each local has its problems in the way of numbers and of talent. But I cannot too strongly reiterate the thought that no haphazard method will build up the little Sunday school. It must take into consideration the proper methods of developing the scholars efficiently and properly from one standard of religious attainment to another.

Securing Teachers and Workers

After the question of classes has thus been settled, the next problem would be the securing of good teachers. The little Sunday school should be a place where the teachers are just as enthusiastic over their scholars and their studies as are the public-school teachers. Under our present system, however, of letting anyone teach so long as he is willing, the status of the Sunday-school teacher has become so weakened that there seems little incentive to the talented teacher to occupy. This barrier must be removed. Teachers must be chosen because of their loyalty to Christ, because of their devotion to the school, and for their ability to hold the attention and respect of their pupils. Any other way of choosing teachers is bound to fail. But more than this, when good teachers have been chosen, it is nothing short of criminal to curtail their opportunities of teaching by having the secretary read minutes, by making a long string of announcements, or by cutting the time of the lesson period from the usual. These things should never be done in a Sunday school that is aiming at one goal, that of having the whole church studying its message. All things that tend not themselves to this ideal are extraneous and should not be tolerated.

I wonder, too, if it is realized how much help or how much trouble a secretary can give a Sunday school. You may have good teachers, you may have an earnest superintendent, and you may have a splendid spirit to begin the new year of school work, but if your secretary is inefficient, slipshod, and careless in her methods, you may as well mark your work a failure. The secretary is more than a report maker. The secretary should be the connecting link between the Sunday school and the home. It is sheer laziness to imagine that the Sunday school secretary has nothing more to do than add up the list of scholars each Sunday and report to the school. Her work... is far bigger and more important. She should send out report cards to every home at least every two months, showing the grading and deportment of the scholars in the grades. She should keep track of the attendance of the older ones, and be ready to assist the superintendent in prodding those who are beginning to backslide. She should see that the school has full supplies and that the district and the general church is hearing of the good work being done by the school.

It is not my purpose to go into every detail of the program which must be prepared in the summer months. But now, let us say the program is all ready to be brought into action; plans for grading, teacher supply, report blanks, school supplies, lesson arrangements, room conditions, and every other detail is worked out for a splendid school year. What now must be done to get the whole branch and the children to the school? How shall we get the whole church to see the vision we have, and how shall we enlist their cooperation and full support? Here lies the crux of the whole situation. All the careful planning and arrangements will peter out into drab failure without the motivating power of a united enthusiasm. How shall we get that?

Well, we will suppose that by the first of September the plans have been completed. From then until the last Sunday in September the program should have been advertised, talked about, discussed from house to house, invitations to everyone should have been made, and by the time the last Sunday in September arrives, everything has been staged for a big rally of all the church, every arrangement has been perfected, and the whole thing is ready to be started off. By arrangement with the pastor, the whole Sunday morning is given over to the Sunday school for the opening and installation of the work. Inspiring addresses are made, the teachers are installed, the classes are arranged, cards made out, lesson courses outlined, and under a big wave of enthusiasm the Sunday school work in Fort Collins, or in Utleyville, or in Wray, or let us say in any of these live branches of the district, starts out on a new trail toward a bigger goal, a more glorious ideal. Its success will then depend upon the perfection of the plans conceived and the ability of the superintendent to carry out his program.

I have not been concerned with expedients, nor have I gone into the many little details of method. I simply have emphasized, and I reemphasize, that if the little Sunday school is to be the power it is intended for in the life of the church, it must turn right about face; it must give up its easy-going, careless ways of doing things; it must above all catch the vision of its ideal, and plan and work definitely toward that ideal.

And is not this all worth while? To build not for the moment, but for a generation; to see the little children going on in the steps of the gospel progress; to see the whole church a studying church; to see the whole membership able to give a reason for the hope that lies within them. This is the work and the opportunity of the little Sunday school. And with enthusiasm upon the part of the scholars, joy and confidence in the hearts and minds of the parents, a new and wonderful spirit and expectation throughout the whole branch—this will be a prophecy, a prophecy of intelligent and loyal gospel workers for the future work of the church.

Judgment

BY E. G. HAMMOND

If the world be a harp, justice windeth up the strings, stirreth the fingers, toucheth the instrument, giveth life to the airs, and maketh all the excellent harmonies.—Sir F. Hawkins.

For a long time we have held forth the indispensable importance of the fundamentals of the gospel, the last of which, in the order of enumeration, and the least of which, probably, in the order of application, is the principle of judgment.

Not much has ever been said or done about it, so far as I know; not much effort has been made to work in the principle as a substantial ingredient of our program, so that it might be reflected and its influence felt in all our doings. Not because we do not love justice, but we have fallen into the error of supposing that it is only to be had and enjoyed in the great hereafter.

So often has the helpless floundering by which judgment has tried to come to its feet made it necessary for mortals to appeal to the Bar Above, that we have come to the way of thinking that about all the business should be referred to the higher court, forgetting the gospel provides a system of representation whereby to bring to earth a little bit of heaven, to bring justice and judgment into terrestrial affairs, so that on earth may be bound what shall be bound in heaven.

We would not think to defer baptism, faith, or repentance till the hereafter, and for the deferring of judgment we are as little excused. No matter how many other good things are found in the program, if it lacks the flavor of justice and judgment whereby to attune discordant elements, it cannot pass.

This quality was conspicuously absent in the record of the Jews, as is reflected by the words of Jeremiah, saying:

> www.LatterDayTruth.org
Run to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, and see, now, and know, and seek in the broad places thereof, if ye can find a man, if ye be any that executeth judgment.—Jeremiah 5:1.

I have no doubt that application may be found among us for the words of Isaiah found in the 59th chapter:

None calleth for justice.
There is no judgment in their goings.
Judgment is far from us, and neither doth justice overtake us.

We look for judgment and there is none.
And judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off, and equity cannot enter.

When he came in person, the Lord pointed out the same laxity, so that the credit he allowed the Jews for that part of the gospel which they had kept was more than covered by the condemnation pronounced upon them because they had "omitted the weightier matters of the law, justice, mercy, and faith."

That we shall be held responsible for doing judgment is argued further by the fact that we are given the organization whereby to perform it, the instruments wherewith to establish it, and they are expected to function. For example:

He that observeth not his prayers before the Lord in the season thereof, let him be had in remembrance before the judge of my people.—Doctrine and Covenants 68:4.

As we have deacons to keep order in the congregation, priests to baptize, and elders to administer, so we have judges to exercise judgment, and to do justice, and that here and now, in the earth.

Perhaps we should realize, however, that we are not all appointed to be judges, any more than we are all authorized to baptize or lay on hands; and we should doubtless be careful of assuming authority in the one function as in the other. "Judge not," we are commanded, "that ye be not judged. But and if you judge, judge righteous judgment."

Too many of us suppose ourselves to be in harmony with the first portion of that commandment so long as we do not tell our judgments. So long as we do not publish our judgments abroad it seems all right to nourish any conclusion to which we feel inclined. But that sort could not be righteous judgment; first, because the court has no jurisdiction; and second, because the accused has no opportunity to be heard in his defense. The commandment is not that we should not tell our judgments, but that we shall not judge.

Saints will know what your judgment is, whether you tell it in words or not; for actions speak. And that which you nourish in secret will be spoken upon the housetops, for you may be assured there is nothing hidden that shall not be revealed. Better never try to smuggle through a feeling or attitude that cannot live in the open, for that is the sort of judgment the Lord does not want. It is out of place.

As there is a mine for silver and a place for gold, where they refine it, so is there a place for judgment. And everything in its own place bespeaks order and propriety, so that we do not expect to find brass in a silver mine, nor unrighteousness in the place of judgment. But that we may be somewhat fortified, and the better able to exercise that vigilance by which all things are kept in place, we had as well understand that it has sometimes been possible for iniquity to enthrone itself in the judgment seat. As it is written, "I saw the place of judgment, that wickedness was there."—Ecclesiastes 3:16.

Not all the courses by which the king of iniquity enters that sacred place can here be set forth; but it may be sufficient to stimulate a greater alertness than we have been accustomed to, to point out some of his most frequently used avenues, the first and favorite of which is the Dilatory Way, by which the complaint of those who have been wronged is deferred, till the wrong does its work.

When one suffers injury, he may not avenge it himself, if he is a good man and lives up to the terms of his covenant, but must endure the wrong till it can be judicially ascertained and redressed. And so long as the action of officers is delayed, the injury keeps working, and crushing out his life, till, if the delay be prolonged, he sinks beneath the load. The wrong doer sustains no pain the while, and as he makes no pretense of living according to his covenant, he may freely spread his propaganda whereby to array the sentiment of saints and officers in his favor and cast suspicion on the one who has suffered and has been saint enough not to spread the matter. This accords with conditions when it was observed, I have seen the wicked to whom it happeneth according to the works of the righteous, and the righteous to whom it happeneth according to the works of the wicked.

That sort of thing is made possible through delay and the deferring of judicial action unnecessarily. Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil.—Ecclesiastes 8:11.

It is said that justice delayed is justice denied. And that some rate of speed should be manifest in its administration was considered of such importance in the great English scheme of justice that in Magna Charta were incorporated the emphatic words:

To none will we sell, to none deny, to none delay either right or justice in his goods, land, or person.
And therefore every subject, saith Coke, for injury done him, . . . may take his remedy by course of the law and have justice and right for the injury done to him, freely without sale, fully without any denial, and speedily, without delay.—Blackstone, vol. 1, p. 143.
The Constitution of the United States shows the founders of this Government to have been aware to the same necessity wherein it guarantees to everyone "a speedy, and impartial trial."

But the spirit of delay comes to its proper and perfect setting in the story of the woman and the unjust judge. We recognize the fact that the chief purpose of this story was to teach faith and persistence; but the picture of the unjust so much resembles what we have seen of him that it is considered allowable to refer to it in this connection:

There was in a city a judge, who feared not God nor regarded man. And there was a widow in that city, and she came unto him saying, Avenge me of mine adversary. And he would not, for a while.—Luke 18: 2, 4.

Hear what the unjust judge saith, "For a while."

Had he been in charge of stock, and heard the complaint of sheep being torn by the wolves, or of a horse being fast in the stall, he would no doubt have exhibited what we call "double quick" action. But when a man crieth out, he is deferred, for a while. Action anything like as swift as would be taken in the care of cattle would eliminate opportunity to see influential citizens and get what they think about the matter, and shut out the occasion to be persuaded by men, and all the argument and influence of public sentiment.

It may be admitted that at times counsel is allowable, if that is not taken to imply that it is also valuable. But certainly it may be insisted that there are times where counsel is not desirable, cannot be considered valuable, and it is in no degree permissible.

In the early days commandments were given for the stated purpose, "that man should not counsel his fellow man, neither trust in the arm of flesh."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 4.

Authority to exercise judgment and to do justice is a most sacred trust and difficult of execution: and men who are unpracticed in meeting and resisting those influences that corrupt the way of justice often err, with good intentions, by allowing themselves to be exposed to the persuasions of men, supposing they are dutifully taking counsel.

A good lesson for us is afforded in the experience of Joseph, the Martyr, who had been intrusted with the most sacred things; but not at the moment realizing there were some matters to which men could not be admitted to fellowship, he yielded to the persuasion of a man whom he took to be a good man, and to whom God himself showed great honor, and nearly lost everything.

Perhaps it was because he was so unpracticed in meeting and directing the influences that worked error that the Lord forgave him, but with this rebuke, which we shall do well to remember:

Behold you have been intrusted with these sacred things, but how strict were your commandments;... behold, how oft you have transgressed the commandments and the law of God, and have gone on in the persuasions of men.—Doctrine and Covenants 2: 3.

He had been invested with sacred duties in the performance of which he was to be governed entirely by the law and commandments of God, and not in any degree by the opinions and persuasions of men. The law was his rule, as Blackstone says again; "The law in England is the supreme arbiter of every man's life."

Beware of letting in the persuasions of men under the heavenly garb of counsel, or of fellowship, or of expediency, or of any other consideration in the matters committed particularly to your own charge.

A case worthy of record of such ancient date as makes the mention of it safe at this time was told me by an old man that had been appointed on an elders' court by higher authority, and the appointing officer had often been honored highly of the Almighty, and approved by great demonstrations of power and gifts. The old brother had been selected for the court designedly, as it later turned out, and with the expectation that his decision would be in sympathy with the appointing officer; but the brother did not know it in time and, being incorruptible, did not think of any guidance but the law, and decided the case on his own responsibility, adversely to what had been desired. After it was all over, it was made known to him plainly in a dream that his decision was not well received by men, but I dare say he was not worried, having the consolation that it pleased God.

I would like to command words fit to praise a man of such character as that, who will not vary from the right for friend or foe.

As with the element of delay, so the pernicious use of the persuasions of men finds in the Bible its most perfect expression.

The soldiers were set to guard the tomb, but when the Lord arose they fell back as dead men. Then they went into the city and told the high priests, and the high priests assembled with the elders—more devout men—and when all these prominent officials took counsel they gave large money to the soldiers, asking them to tell about the city that while they slept the disciples stole him away, and promising faithfully that "if this matter come to the governor's ears we will persuade him, and secure you." (Matthew 28: 13.)

It was doubtless considered that a word from men of such prominence and influence in the community would go a long way and be ample security for most any breach of the law, and we have seen such things... play a telling part. Of course the Adversary knows better than to make a direct application of this influence. But if he can work it in under the guise of good counsel where counsel is not permissible, the results will be the same.

Let us therefore, as well as retaining faith and repentence and baptism, have a little judgment and justice below. And let us remember in the effort to establish these that they are opposed by influences which the sufferings of mortals have very certainly ascertained, and which operate on rather definite lines.

Judges and officers shalt thou make thee in all thy gates,... And they shall judge the people with just judgment. Thou shalt not v wurst judgment: thou shalt not respect persons.—Deuteronomy 16:18-21. Justice and judgment are the habitation of his throne.—Doctrine and Covenants.

The Oratorio “Creation” by Haydn

BY WILLIAM T. GOULLEE

As from the power of sacred lays
The spheres began to move,
And sung the great Creator's praise
To all the blessed above,
So when the last and dreadful hour
This crumbling pageant shall devour,
The trumpet shall be heard on high,
The dead shall live, the living die,
And music shall untune the sky.

—Dryden.

There is no one who can do everything—namely be waggish, and then move us profoundly, and excite our laughter, and again touch our hearts deeply, and all this with equal mastery—except Joseph Haydn.—Mozart.

Those of us who have had the pleasure of listening to Haydn's music in any form, can truly agree with Mozart. Perhaps no composer has ever given greater or purer pleasure by his compositions than is given by "papa" Haydn; there always seems an unceasing flow of cheerfulness and lively tune in his music. Even in the most solemn pieces, as in his Masses, the predominating feeling is that of gladness; as he once said to Carpani: "At the thought of God my heart leaps for joy, and I cannot help my music doing the same."

Haydn's family were of the people, his father, we are told, being a master wheelwright at Rohrau, a small Austrian village on the borders of Lower Austria and Hungary; and his mother having been employed as a cook in the castle of Count Harrach, the principal lord of the district.

Joseph Haydn was born on March 31, 1732, being the second child; and as his ten brothers and sisters came into the world, it can easily be understood that his lot was not a luxurious one. His parents were simple, honest people of the laboring class but, like most German peasants, had a love for and facility in music, not quite so common in other countries. We read that the village schoolmaster, who could play the violin and whom little Joseph watched with wondering and longing eyes, soon had an effect on the young boy, as a few years later we find him accompanying his parents in their singing. From an incident round about this time, an important change came in his life; a relative (a distant cousin as Haydn called him), Johann Mathias Frankh of Hainburg, thinking he saw an aptitude for music in the boy, offered to take him into his own school at Hainburg, where young Haydn went at the age of six years. There he remained for two years, making rapid progress in singing and in playing all sorts of instruments, among others the clavier, violin, organ, and drum. He said afterwards with the unaffected piety, far removed from cant, that was characteristic of him, "Almighty God, to whom I render thanks for all his unnumbered mercies, gave me such facility in music that by the time I was six years old, I stood up like a man and sang masses in the church choir, and could play a little on the clavier and violin." Of Frankh, a very strict but thorough and painstaking teacher, he also said afterwards, "I shall be grateful to that man as long as I live for keeping me so hard at work, though I used to get more flogging than food." In Haydn's will he remembered Frankh's family, leaving his daughter a sum of money and a portrait of Frankh himself, "My first instructor in music." It is interesting to note here the absence of his parents, and we are told how young Haydn missed especially his mother. In his old age he acknowledged the many obligations to their care. While with Frankh, a decided rise came in the life of the boy. It seems Reutter the Vienna Capellmeister and court composer, visited Anton Palmb, the pastor of Hainsburg, and while there inquired if there were any boys who could sing sufficiently well to be chosen as choristers for the Great Saint Stevens Church at Vienna. Little Haydn, then eight years old, was proposed, and Reutter immediately sent for him to the schoolmaster's house. Haydn, according to the custom of the day, and for the sake of cleanliness, wore a bobby wig, and his dress was as poor as possible. "I was a queer little urchin," says Haydn himself.

Besides his duties of singing in the choir, naturally he had to study music, also Latin, writing, and arithmetic. It was to this school it may be remembered that Schubert was afterwards admitted and owed much of his musical training. Haydn remained here for about five or six years, but unfortunately he was dismissed for playing a practical joke with some of his school fellows. After this for a few years he seems to have lived a miserable, struggling life, giving lessons, playing the organ in churches, and studying when and where he could, and we are told he took pupils and studied the compositions of Emmanuel Bach. Life was now hard, but he was constantly at work, and having made the precious find on an old book stall one day of FUXS, Gradus ad Parnassum in a very dilapidated condition but very cheap, he was now ardently preparing himself for the life he now vowed should be his—of a composer. All who have read George Sands' charming romance, Consuelo, the best story of artistic life that has ever been written, will remember the part that Joseph Haydn plays in it, and how by Consuelo's advice he enters the service of Porpora, the Italian composer, for the purpose of obtaining instruction from him. This is actually founded on fact, for it is undoubtedly true that Haydn was engaged in a menial capacity in Porpora's household for a time and was afterwards promoted to the post of accompanist during an artistic tour which the Venetian composer made in Germany. Things still went on improving, and Haydn, who was always lucky in the patrons he secured (at least according to the notion about patrons which then prevailed), was invited to the country house of Herr von Furnberg, a wealthy amateur, to stay there and compose quartets for him, a style of music for which von Furnberg had an especial liking. To his prompting it is that we owe the lovely series of quartets which Haydn wrote, still, when played by Joachim or Norman Neruda, Rise, Strauss, and Paitti, as fresh and full of serene beauty as when first tried over by the Virtuosi of Winzirl.

His next appointment seems to have been as director of the band and composer to Count Ferdinand Morzin at Lukavec near Pilsen, and here in 1759 his first symphony was written.

During this period he contracted his unfortunate marriage. In 1761 Count Morzin was compelled to give up his band, but fortunately Haydn did not remain long without employment, as Prince Esterhazy, who had heard his symphonies at Morzin's house, engaged him to assist Werner, his old Capellmeister. As director of Prince Esterhazy's Band, Haydn was fated to remain for many years, living at "Esterhaz," the prince's country seat, composing there nearly all his operas, songs, and many of his symphonies. In 1766 Werner died, and naturally Haydn took his position. It is interesting to note at this time that Haydn's compositions were known outside his own country of Austria, his music being performed in Leipzig, Paris, Amsterdam, and London. We are told his symphonies, sonatas, trios, and quartets could be had in print as well as manuscript. When we consider the great amount of music composed by Haydn, we perhaps wonder at the reason for it. I think at this time Haydn had a wonderful opportunity for trying over his compositions as he produced them. He not only had the encouragement of constant approval, but as conductor of an orchestra he could make experiments, observe what produced an effect and what weakened it, and was thus in a position to improve, alter, and make additions or omissions and perhaps be as bold as he pleased. He says, "I was cut off from the world, there was no one to confuse or torment me [perhaps referring to his wife], and I was forced to become original." We are told he lived a thoroughly contented life, seeing as little as possible of his wife, loved by his band and singers, and liked by his patron.

In 1785 he received a commission which showed the wide reputation he had then gained. The Chapter of Cadiz Cathedral requested him to write some instrumental music for performance on Good Friday. "The seven words of our Savior on the Cross," was in consequence written by him.

Several invitations had been sent from England for Haydn to pay a visit there, but it was only after Prince Esterhazy was dead that he was prevailed upon by Salomon to cross the sea. A characteristic conversation between Haydn and Mozart, which took place before he undertook this (in those days) formidable journey, is recorded. "Papa," said Mozart, "you have no training for the great world, and you speak too few languages." Haydn replied, "My language is understood by all the world."

He set out on December 15, 1790, and did not return to Vienna till July, 1792. In London, where he wrote and conducted a number of symphonies for Salomon, he was the "lion" of the season, being in constant request for conducting concerts and paying visits to the nobility. Of these symphonies Salomon once said to him, "I am strongly of opinion that you never will surpass this music." "I never mean to try," was the answer. But this must not be taken to mean that Haydn had given up striving after the truest perfection in his art, and it probably meant no more than that, for the time, he was satisfied with his work. Far more like the genuine expression of the feeling of the great artist was his utterance, just before he died, to Kalkbrenner, "I have only just learnt in my old age how to use the wind instruments, and now that I do understand them I must leave the world."

He visited Saint Paul's Cathedral on the day when the Charity Children assembled there to sing. There is this note in his diary: "I was more touched by this innocent and reverent music than by any I ever heard in my life."

A second visit was paid to England in 1794, and more symphonies were then composed for Salomon. A "Haydn rage" had then set in in this country; he was feted and followed everywhere, and, as a
How England Influenced Haydn in Composing

"The Creation"

Haydn, when he started writing "The Creation," found himself in what may be called ideal circumstances for the evolution of the best work. He had just returned from his second visit to England, and as a result of the fame and emolument which fell to his lot there, he was enabled to settle down in a suburb of Vienna, where he could compose without molestation and be free from all anxiety and worry. His successful visits to London had also wrought a marvelous change in his appreciative nature and had brought him even upon the borders of his three score years and ten into a state of artistic rejuvencescence. The enthusiastic plaudits of the English people kindled and kept burning in his breast a subconscious strength which he knew not he possessed, or knowing, was unaware of its true worth. It was not only his countryman who acknowledged that English enthusiasm had taught them what a great man had been born in their midst, nor the Emperor Joseph II who is reported to have said that he learned from abroad what a musical hero he counted among his subjects, but Haydn—modest Haydn himself—whose life up to the time of his visit to England had been spent in a secluded Austrian town who states in the plainest language that it was through a foreign people that he became conscious of his strength. "It is England that has made me famous in Germany."

Great as the work accomplished in his youth and early manhood unquestionably was, it remained for his old age to accomplish his greatest work, and that by which he is best known, the oratorio of "The Creation." Shortly before his departure from London, Salomon offered him a poem for music, which had been compiled by Lidley from Milton's Paradise Lost before the death of Handel, but not used. Haydn took it to Vienna, and when Freiherr von Sweiten suggested his composing an oratorio, he handed him the poem. Von Sweiten translated it with considerable alterations, and a sum of 500 ducats was guaranteed by twelve of the principal nobility for its production. Soon after leaving London, where the words had been given him by Salomon, Haydn set about composing the music. "Never," he says, "was I so pious as when composing 'The Creation.' I knelt down every day and prayed God to strengthen me for my work."

It was first given in private at the Schwarzenberg Palace on April 29 and 30, 1798. The impression it produced at the first public performance was extraordinary; the whole audience was deeply moved, and Haydn confessed he could not describe his sensation. "One moment," he said, "I was as cold as ice; the next I seemed on fire. More than once I was afraid I should have a stroke. No sooner was the score engraved (1800) than "The Creation" was performed everywhere. Choral societies were founded for the express purpose, and its popularity was equaled only by that of the Messiah. In London, Ashley and Salomon gave rival performances, the former on March 28, 1800, at Covent Garden and the latter on April 21 at the concert room of the King's Theater, with Mara and Dussek in the principal parts and a concerto on the organ by Samuel Wesley. In English provinces, the Three Choirs Festival, Worcester in 1800, Hereford in 1801, and Gloucester in 1802, produced it with much popularity.

One of his constant aims was perfection in his art, and we are told he was a devout Christian and attended to his religious duties. His genius he looked on as a gift from above for which he was bound to be thankful. In referring, himself, to this period, he is reported to have said: "I was never so devout as then. Daily I prayed for strength to express myself in accordance with His will." He invariably inscribed all his scores with some such mottoes as, "In Nomine Domini;" "Laus Deo;" etc. Ten years after the completion of "The Creation," he is said to have spent three years of thought and work upon it, a striking contrast to the twenty-seven days' scoring of the Messiah.

Haydn appeared, for the last time in public, to witness a grand performance of his masterpiece in celebration of his approaching seventy-sixth birthday. Salieri conducted, and many noble patrons, as well as foremost artists, including Beethoven and Hummel, were present. As the aged composer was carried to his chair, the audience rose to their feet as a sign of love and respect for the much-esteemmed "Father Haydn." When the glorious major fortissimo chords were reached at the words, "And there was Light," the old man stood upright in spite of his feebleness; and, in response to the rapturous applause of the audience, is reported to have exclaimed, "Not from me, but from Heaven, comes all!"

Haydn had what Bach lacked, a vital hold upon the admiration of the rank and file of musicians in his own day, so that what he did had an immediate effect upon the standards of style. Undoubtedly, Haydn was first of all an instrumental composer, principally for chamber and orchestra ensemble. His style was matured in this field, as Bach's was in that of the organ. But it is not alone as a writer of graceful and beautiful music that he has a claim of honored remembrance; he has been truly called "The Father of the Symphony." Mozart once said, "It was from Haydn that I first learned the true way to compose quartets; and 'The Creation' which must ever be acknowledged one of the masterpieces of oratorio music." What Haydn did for music and what his feelings were with regard to it—the willing service he rendered to art and his delight in ministering to the happiness of others—we can but express our love and veneration and exclaim with gratitude, "Heaven endowed him with genius—he is one of the immortals."

In conclusion, I wish to express my indebtedness for information derived from Groves' Dictionary of Music and Musicians; also to Doctor Annie W. Patterson for helpful details on the oratorio, and lastly, my sincere thanks to Miss Flossie Tatman for helpful assistance in preparing this study.

Friday Morning Business Session

The following resolution was read, and moved by two brethren from the floor:

Moved and seconded that further consideration of this matter be deferred, and that we seek the Lord through the prophet, in fasting and prayer, for direction.

A short discussion ensued, the previous question was ordered, and the motion of reference to the Lord through the prophet was carried.

Boundary Lines of Oklahoma Districts

Two reports on boundary lines were presented and recorded, one of them reading:

To the Presidency and General Conference: Your committee to which was referred a document designed to effect changes in boundary lines of the Oklahoma District recommend:

Inasmuch as there is much difference of opinion among the Oklahoma delegates concerning various changes in boundary lines of said districts, we recommend that the present boundaries remain, and that the several districts consider and act upon the proposed changes; also upon such others as they may desire to recommend, having in view the interests of the work in the entire State. That the missionaries appointed to that State also consider the question, and that such districts and missionaries report their conclusions to a committee composed of E. S. Salyards, Edmund J. Gleazer, and Roy S. Budd on or about March 19, 1926, which committee shall consider such reports, and recommend action to the General Conference of 1926.

A Patriarch Chosen

A report from the Quorum of Twelve recommending the selection of Elder J. A. Gunsolley as a patriarch to the church was presented to the conference. It was moved and seconded that we adopt the recommendation.

The season of prayer was begun immediately, and business session was set for the next afternoon.

Saturday's Business Session

At the opening of business April 18, five men were recommended to be ordained high priests; namely, James A. Thomas, G. Scott Daniel, Thomas S. Williams, Bruce E. Brown, and John F. Sheehy. The ordinations were authorized.

The Revelation

President Elbert A. Smith stated:

This morning early I was called to the home of President Frederick M. Smith, who delivered a document addressed to the church into my keeping which was copied and copies delivered to the quorums with the request that if possible they report at the afternoon session. This document is as follows:

To the Church: Before and since the decision of the conference to have a season of prayer for divine direction in the matter before the conference I have presented to the Lord the needs of the people; and through the voice of inspiration I am directed to say to the church: It is wisdom that the brethren of the present Presiding Bishopric be released from further responsibility in that office, and that Albert Carmichael be ordained to act in the office of Presiding Bishop for a time, he to choose from among the bishops two to act as counselors.

It is well that the documents from the Joint Council of April, 1924, have been approved; and the church is admonished once again that the great task laid upon it cannot be accomplished if contention continues. The hastening time is here and greater unity than ever before is necessary if the forces of opposition are to be met; and such unity will prevail if those holding the priesthood will remember their commission to preach the gospel, and each officer will strive to discharge his own duty and magnify his calling.

The promise has been given that no power shall stay the hand of God in the accomplishment of his purposes among his people; and as the church shall move forward in its great work, the fulfillment of prophecy may cause the Saints to tremble at the exhibition of divine power, yet they shall rejoice in the protection of His grace.

The authorities of the church whose duty it is to appoint men to missionary tasks should remember the previously given instructions to send out by twos; and so far as practicable let the missionaries be so sent. There is wisdom and safety in this.

Your servant,

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, April 18, 1925.

Apostle James A. Gillen moved that we accept the document for what it purports to be, the will of God to the body.

A discussion started at once and continued to the end of the session, after five o'clock. The chairman announced an evening business session at eight o'clock.

Almost immediately after the session opened, the previous question was moved, and ordered by a vote of 256 to 185. The vote on the motion to adopt the document presented by President Smith for what it claims to be was then taken, 351 voting for it and 97 voting against.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Bishop Albert Carmichael was called to the body and spoke very briefly. At the close of his speech, he was asked to nominate his counselors, and he chose M. H. Siegfried and stated he would very soon choose another. This choice was approved.

At a meeting in the Stone Church Sunday at eleven o’clock, the ordinations thus setting apart of Bishop Carmichael, M. H. Siegfried, counselor; J. A. Gunsolley, patriarch; John F. Sheehy, Bruce E. Brown, James A. Thomas, G. Scott Daniel, and Thomas S. Williams to the office of high priest.

Business Session April 20

Bishop Albert Carmichael nominated for the Board of Publication, of which he is an ex officio member and president, the following: Frederick M. Smith, Roy S. Budd, Mark H. Siegfried, Fred B. Blair, and R. R. Redfield. The conference approved the nominations.

The Appropriations Committee made report, and the report was adopted, as follows:

April 20, 1925.

The Appropriations Committee also considered the following preambles and resolutions and report favorably thereon and recommend that the matter be referred to the First Presidency and Order of Bishops with power to act:

“Whereas the financial support of the institutions of the church, including Graceland College, has been under consideration by the leading quorums and General Conference for many years, and

“Whereas the leading quorums of the church have adopted the policy of maintaining a fully standardized and officially accredited college of recognized standing in the educational world, and

“Whereas the standardizing and accrediting associations of the country have recently revised their standards relating to endowments, fixing $200,000 permanent endowment for Junior Colleges and a minimum of $500,000 for four-year colleges, and

“Whereas the matter of an endowment for Graceland College has been under consideration by the leading quorums of the church for several years and by resolution been favored by the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric as well as by the Standing High Council, and

“Whereas all income derived from permanent endowment will reduce by that amount the appropriations required from the General Conference for current running expenses, “Therefore, Be It Resolved, That we favor the policy followed for many years of maintaining and supporting a fully standardized and officially accredited institution of higher learning at Graceland College, and

“In view of the fact that in order to maintain a Junior College an endowment of $200,000 is required and for a four-year college an endowment of $500,000 is required by the accrediting associations of the country,

“Be It Further Resolved, That we favor the raising of an endowment for Graceland College of $200,000 at once in order to maintain our present Junior College and an additional $300,000 at the earliest possible date for the accrediting of a full four-year standard college.”

In the administration of this fund when raised, it is suggested that in the development of the stewardship plan of the church lands may be purchased and resold, the interest on the purchase price to be used for the maintenance of the college to meet its endowment requirements, or

It may be loaned to the general church at interest secured by properties held by the church and on which money is now borrowed, the interest being paid to outsiders.

Appropriations Committee,

(Signed) By J. A. Becker, Secretary.

A vote of thanks was tendered the Presiding Bishopric for their services to the church in the work of the Presiding Bishopric. The motion was made by Bishops R. T. Cooper and Myron C. Fisher.

NEWS AND LETTERS

Ottumwa, Iowa

April 14.—The Saints of Ottumwa were made sad on hearing of the death of Brother George P. Lambert. We are sure that those who knew him had learned to love him. We were made more sad by the fact that we did not know of his departure until a few days afterward, for many would have left everything to attend the funeral.

The Saints of Ottumwa also regret the loss of two good members, Brother and Sister John Jones, who moved to Minneapolis where Brother Jones found better employment. Brother Jones was our deacon. Prior to their leaving, the Saints, under the supervision of the Department of Women, held a farewell party and presented Sister Jones with a gift as evidence of the tie that binds us in Christian love.

But the work here has not all been regrets. We have heard some very good sermons and have enjoyed the presence of God in our meetings. On March 29 and April 5 we were happy to have with us Brother Leonard Stiegel, pastor of Rock Island Branch, who gave us two fine sermons. There was a good attendance at the sacrament service April 5. The Spirit of the Master was present in its fullness, touching the hearts of all present. The spirit of prophecy was also manifest.

The Saturday before Easter the Department of Women held a bazaar and home-cooking sale in the heart of the city, which proved successful and netted them quite a sum of money.

Easter Sunday the Sunday school, under the superintendency of Brother Bakér, gave an interesting program in the evening. Both the children and adults took part, the children's program being in charge of Sister Gladys Collins. The adults presented a pageant entitled “Easter dawn” portraying the resurrection of Christ. The committee in charge of the pageant were Sisters M. Richards and R. Lewis. Brothers Glen McMickle and Thomas Richards had charge of the lighting system, which made the scenes more effective. A large audience attended the program, and all seemed to enjoy it.

We had the pleasure of having with us at Easter the wife of Apostle D. T. Williams, as she is visiting her mother and sisters here.

Angeles, California; T. G. Neville, of Kirtland District; Fred A. Fry, of Woodbine, Iowa; and Virgil B. Etzenhouser and D. O. Cato, of Independence, Missouri, were recommended by the Quorum of High Priests to be ordained high priests, and the recommendations were approved and the ordinations ordered.

President Frederick M. Smith stated there are four vacancies in the Standing High Council, caused by three resignations and the death of John M. Cockerton. He nominated Robert T. Cooper, C. Ed. Miller, D. O. Cato, and Beauford J. Scott to fill these vacancies, and the conference approved the nominations.

Brother C. LaPoint has been appointed treasurer of the branch.

Although we cannot see the Saints in distant places, we feel the bond of fellowship that exists between us, and our desire is that we may all prepare ourselves so we may some day meet together in the land of Zion.

Vinal Haven, Maine

April 5.—Today is Easter, and the Saints are enjoying themselves by having in their presence Riley Beal from Jonesport, Maine, who is a great soloist and has taken part in every service of the day.

Brother Riley Beal preached at the eleven o'clock service and delivered a fine sermon. This is his first sermon, as he has just recently been called to the priesthood to occupy as a priest. A fine spirit was present, and the Saints were all happy and joyful.

The Saints here are praying for the success of General Conference and are desirous of seeing the great work move forward at the direction of God.

The different departments of the church are working together here, hoping to do good to help in some way to spread the gospel. We pray for the other branches and hope soon to receive glad tidings from General Conference. We remain faithful, trusting all to God.

Tulare, California

April 8.—On Sunday, March 22, the Saints enjoyed a very pleasant visit from District President J. D. White. Brother White delivered a very instructive sermon at the morning service. After a business meeting in the afternoon Elder A. J. Damron and wife, Sister J. T. Smith, and Brother White motored to Fresno to meet with the Saints there at the evening service.

At our last monthly business meeting a motion was passed that we start a building fund. Brethren James Damron and Frank Shively are on that committee. We are looking forward to having a new church some day.

Sunday school is well attended, and all are working for the advancement of the cause.

There is good attendance at Relief, and the Book of Mormon is studied.

The sacramental service April 5 was well attended, and a very good prayer and testimony meeting was enjoyed.

As a branch we feel we have much to be thankful for, not only for the blessings of everyday life but for the blessed rainfall of the past week which has helped to drive away the fear of another dry year. The prospect for a good crop looks more promising.

Spring Brings Renewed Activity

ORCHARDVILLE, ILLINOIS, April 13.—With the return of spring and good weather, the Saints in the little brown church, known as Skillet Fork Branch, elected Sunday school officers for the year, and on March 29 started out with zeal and good interest.

The district conference is to be held here the first Sunday in June, and the Saints here plan to do all they can to make it a success. A program is being planned for the Friday night preceding the convening of conference on Saturday, and a good time is expected. We have always felt the good Spirit at such meetings, and a good spirit is always present at regular meetings as well.
I love to work for my Master, and wish I were able to do more. I enjoy reading church literature, but my eyes are so poor that I cannot read as I could at one time. I want the Saints to pray for me that my eyes may become normal so I can read and be able to help carry on this latter-day work.

We are hoping and praying for a good General Conference, that the will of the Lord may be done and peace come to the church, causing it to flourish as the rose and rise and shine.

From Denmark

It is just one year to-day since I landed in Aalborg, my old field of labor. I found Brother Nels Hansen and the Saints glad to see me back; most of the Saints had remained faithful to the covenant they had made with their Lord, and others had become lukewarm and indifferent; but we hope that they some day may awaken and be glad to come back to the fold. All we can do is to pray for them and leave the rest to the Lord. We have a few very good Saints here, some that you can depend on at all times, and I am very thankful to the Lord for the few.

When I take a survey of the year's work here in Denmark, it looks as though very little has been done. A young man was baptized last summer, while Apostle Paul M. Hanson was here, by Brother Nels Hansen, and confirmed by Apostle Hanson and the writer. He is a very fine young man, and I have great hopes that he some day will be of great use in this mission.

We have three very fine young men here in Aalborg, and at our sacrament meeting the first Sunday in January it was told them through prophecy, by the writer, to prepare for the work the Lord had for them to do in this mission; and to the young man mentioned, it was promised that if he would be faithful, humble, and prayerful, the Lord would in due time call him to be a minister for him, and he would loosen his tongue, and his voice should be heard declaring his gospel; that he should be a blessing to many people. The Saints were told to live very near to the Lord; to forgive one another and live in peace with each other, and if they would do that, the Lord would pour out blessings upon them that they never had thought of. We had a very spiritual feast, and all were made glad. One sister told us, in the meeting, that she had prayed very earnestly before coming that the Lord would verify his promises to us in this far-off land of Denmark by the signs following the believers. She said that her prayer had been answered in a way that had proved to her that the Lord was in this work, and the signs do follow them that believe. This was the first time they had ever heard anyone speak in prophecy. It was a great strength to their faith. This was the first sacrament meeting of the New Year, and we hope that this blessed Spirit shall mark all our meetings through the year. I have been wonderfully blessed in my preaching so far this year, and I hope and pray that I may be able to retain that blessed Spirit, because when you have the Spirit it is easy to work, and without it we cannot teach; but the Adversary is trying his best to get in among the Saints, and we must be on our guard or he will get in his work.

We were made glad last summer to have Apostle Paul M. Hanson with us here in Aalborg. It was a great strength to all of us, and especially to the writer. Brother Hanson stayed with us over three Sundays. He spoke in the hall every Sunday evening and at the homes of the Saints on Monday and Thursday evenings, giving to us some very good instructions and lots of encouragement, which we all needed. The Saints were glad to meet Brother Hanson, even though they could not talk to him except through interpreters, and this was my first experience as one. Brother Hanson thought I did well, and the people seemed to be satisfied, so I ought to be. We tried to show Brother Hanson all of interest in and around Aalborg, and I think he enjoyed his stay.

Brother Hanson and myself left Aalborg about the middle of August for Copenhagen. I had to go with him as interpreter. On our way over, we stopped one day at my sister's. I wanted Brother Hanson to meet some of my relatives, and I wanted him to see where I was born and where I spent my days till I was sixteen years old, when I left for the States. My folks were very glad to meet him. I wanted them to meet one of our leading men. They knew Apostle Peter Anderson well and thought highly of him as a man, and Brother Hanson took well with them also. Next day we left them for Egtved, the place where Brother Hanson's mother was born, and where his grandparents were born, and where they lived till the time they left for America. I had been there several times before, as my wife's mother and Brother Hanson's grandmother were sisters. So Brother Hanson and myself are related, as my wife's mother and Brother Hanson's grandmother were sisters. So Brother Hanson and myself are related, as my wife's mother and Brother Hanson's grandmother were sisters. So Brother Hanson and myself are related, as my wife's mother and Brother Hanson's grandmother were sisters. So Brother Hanson and myself are related, as my wife's mother and Brother Hanson's grandmother were sisters. So Brother Hanson and myself are related, as my wife's mother and Brother Hanson's grandmother were sisters. So Brother Hanson and myself are related, as my wife's mother and Brother Hanson's grandmother were sisters. So Brother Hanson and myself are related, as my wife's mother and Brother Hanson's grandmother were sisters. So Brother Hanson and myself are related, as my wife's mother and Brother Hanson's grandmother were sisters.

It was indeed a great treat to Brother Hanson to be there, even though he could not understand the sermon. A little baby was baptized that day, so Brother Hanson saw how that was done. We visited the birthplace of Brother Hanson's grandmother and my wife's mother, and where they had lived till the time they were married. The dwelling house was the same as when they were there except for a few changes. The birthplace of Brother Hanson's mother is no more.

Brother Hanson took some pictures of the place and also of the church. We left there on Monday morning, August 18, for Copenhagen, but stopped in Velle a few hours. I have two cousins living there, and they knew we were coming. We had dinner with one of them, left there about noon and arrived in Copenhagen about nine in the evening.

Brother Hanson has a cousin living there. They knew we were coming and met us at the station. Brother Hanson has another cousin living at Oslo, Norway, and he and his wife were spending their vacation with his cousin in Copenhagen. They were all at the station, and his cousin from Norway can understand and talk a little English. Brother Hanson got along nicely with them, so I turned Brother Hanson over to them, and went to some of my good friends who had invited me to stay with them while in Copenhagen.

We have a few Saints in Copenhagen, and we met with them in sacrament meeting while there and had a very good meeting. We were but six in all, but the Lord verified his promise to us, that where two or three gather in his name there he will be to own and to bless. Three of the Saints had not had the sacrament for over nine years, or since the time Brother H. N. Hansen did missionary work in Copenhagen. Brother Paul Hanson spoke words of encouragement. He told us that the Lord was in our midst, but we did not see him. Their hearts were made glad, and their faith was strengthened, and it created within them a stronger desire to press on and to live closer to the Lord, so the Spirit that had marked our meeting could always be with them. They were all very glad to meet the apostle, and they told me after Brother Hanson left that they felt that he indeed was an apostle of the Lord, because he carried with him the spirit of an apostle.

While at Copenhagen I went over to Helsingborg, Sweden, to visit the few Saints we have there. We have only three there now, Brother and Sister Appelkvist and Sister Nelly Poulsen. I stayed with Brother Appelkvist's while there. We have a Brother Karl Iakson living at Billesholm's Grava, about three Swedish miles from Helsingborg. Sister Appelkvist went with me out there, as I did not know the way. We were there only a few hours, but we had a very good visit with the brother and his little family. We made good use of the time in talking about the gospel, and before we left had a little prayer meeting and enjoyed the blessed Spirit of our dear Lord. We were again made to know that the Lord is ever near those who faithfully serve him. We left them glad in heart and strong in faith, and with a stronger desire to press on to the mark of our high calling which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

I had to promise to come again when I came to Copenhagen. I returned to Copenhagen the same evening, and in a couple of days Brother Hanson left Copenhagen for Stockholm, Sweden. I stayed in Copenhagen a week after Brother Hanson left. I had another meeting with the Saints. I tried in my weak way to encourage them and to create within them a stronger desire to serve their Lord and Master.

I returned to Aalborg after an absence of about a month, and the Saints and our many friends were glad to see me. The work here in Aalborg is moving very slowly. We have some good people who have been following our meetings for a long time. They are very interested, and I hope in time they will be able to see their way clear to be numbered with us.

I am alone again, as Brother Hanson has left Aalborg. He is visiting his relatives in and around Copenhagen just when he will be leaving for the States, I do not know. I hope the church will be able to find a man to come here to take up the work, as I should like to return to the States before winter sets in again. My health is not just what I would like it to be, and the winters in this country are very hard on me. My nerves have been in bad shape for a long time, and the doctor told me I ought to have a rest, and a good long one. I told him there was no rest for the wicked. and it would be of no use to talk rest to me as long as I was in this mission. He then asked me if I would take something for my nerves. I told him I would. I think his medicine has helped me. I came to the doctor because I had twisted my left ankle badly, and I thought it was broken. So did the doctor, and he ordered me to the hospital to have an X ray of my foot. Nothing was broken, but my foot was in bad shape for a long time, and I have not been able to get around as I would like to for some time. It is better now.

My nervousness is caused from my ears being bad. I hope that the good Lord will bless me with health so I shall be able to fill my mission and stay my time out, but the climate is against me. It is heavy and damp, and that is very hard on my ears. I am glad that summer is at hand.

I hope that the coming year will bring greater blessings to the church and to all its members than the old one has been able to bring, and that peace again may come to the church, and that contention may cease.

Best wishes to all HERALD readers from a lone missionary, and your little brother in the one faith,

P. T. ANDERSEN.

EDITORIAL

"Thy People Shall Be My People, and Thy God My God"

Ruth is reported to have said to Naomi:

Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God: Where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried: the Lord do so to me, and more also, if ought but death part thee and me.

Naomi was in a period of distress. But with steadfast faith and love, Ruth went with her and found Bethlehem and her own bridegroom, and from her line came David—and the son of David. Blessing came to both Naomi and Ruth. But Orpah, who turned back, was not further heard from in the record of the Lord.

The church came to us, brethren, with blessing, and joy, and promise of salvation through the gospel. She came also with the call to service. To some of us she came at one time in life and to some at another. I found her waiting me in the earliest hours of consciousness, my fathers and mothers having engaged in her service. To you, perhaps, she came in later life through the sacrifice and devotion of some missionary.

But to all of us she came as the biggest and best thing we have ever known. The glory of her countenance has been upon us. Through her we have heard the voice of our Lord and our Master. In her we have found the finest of human fellowship hallowed by the presence and the revelation of the divine fellowship.

There may perhaps come to us periods of depression: times of trial, as to Ruth and Naomi. And at such times some, like Orpah, have turned back to their former gods and their own people. That happened in the days of Christ. Even he could not so diplomatically state his doctrines and beliefs and so gently declare his mission as to avoid offense. Even he could not so outline his ideals and work with such kindness and love as to avoid estrangement. And the record says that many were offended at him and his people. That happened in the days of Christ. He could not so outline his ideals and work with such kindness and love as to avoid estrangement. And the record says that many were offended at him and his people.

"Thy people shall be my people, and thy God shall be my God.

"Thy people shall be my people, and thy God shall be my God.

More easily under human management estrangements occur. We are all emotional as well as rational, in varying proportions, and often out of the deep surging of our emotions we speak our conclusions in a way that hurts and estranges. And for this and for various other reasons, from time to time men and women have come to that which for them seemed the parting of the ways.

But happily with most love and faith triumph, and to the church, the church which has given us so much in comparison to our small return, we say: "Whither thou goest, I will go. Thy people shall be my people, thy God shall be my God."

We may not hope to see altogether alike. Particularly so in times of great stress. To some the path chosen may appear the best and most direct. They can easily say, "Whither thou goest, I will go." Others may have cherished a different opinion; yet from love of the church they can yet say, "Whither thou goest, I also will go."

Some may see a true and fine revelation of God and can joyfully exclaim, "Thy God shall be my God." Others may have their own perplexities, yet from faith in the church, faith founded on long and blessed experience, they can yet say to her, "Thy God shall forever be my God."

Some may have had unbroken fellowship, and from tranquil minds can reply, "Thy people are my people." Others have had hurts and even wounds; nevertheless, without reservation, to the church they can say, "Thy people shall always be my people."

My faith in the church is not diminished. My love for the church is not decreased. I do not profess to fully understand God. But I have felt his love and sensed his power and to a degree understand his purposes. This God that the church brought to my knowledge is the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob. He is the God also of Cumorah and of Kirtland. The God of Joseph and Oliver and of David and Alexander. He is still moving in the church and for the church and for the redemption of men and the building up of Zion. I can still say to the church, "Thy God shall be my God."

With this people I have found the fellowship and joy of friendship. Truly the net gathers of all kinds, and within our communion are many types. We sometimes differ; personalities sometimes clash. Diverse opinions create a degree of friction. Nevertheless these people are my people.

This people have given me fellowship such as the world does not afford. They are my brothers and sisters. They are more than friends in the ordinary sense, for the bond of friendship is sanctified by a common belief in the gospel of our mutual friend Jesus Christ. So I can say to the church from the depths of my heart, "Thy people shall be my people."

And I have faith and confidence in the church that eventually with her we shall come, like Ruth, to Bethlehem and there find the Bridegroom. With that profound conviction we can then say, "Whither thou goest, I will go." — ELBERT A. SMITH.

Policy of “Saints’ Herald” Announced

The Presidency once more take up the editorial responsibility of the HERALD with some degree of relucrance, yet feeling that the interests of the church will be best served by our doing so, and we do so with the firm belief that the Saints in this as in other official matters will give us whole-hearted support. The HERALD, to function as the official organ of the church, must be so conducted that our religious and social philosophy is properly presented and the interests of the church generally are conserved; and in our opinion these ends are not reached by filling the columns with contentious articles. So we hope to present those articles, letters, and news items which will be helpful and calculated to build up the work. Our editorial policy will, we hope, not only become known throughout the church in due time, but recognized as wise and helpful.

The struggle through which the church has passed has been severe. Damage has been done, and wounds have been left; but we are encouraged to believe that with the united efforts which will be put forth the work of the church will move rapidly and surely forward. "Let contention cease" is the admonition we have repeatedly received, and a good way to "cease contention" is to find something helpful to do. "What can I now do to help?" should be on the tongue of each Latter Day Saint, and once alert for chances to help, more will be found than we can improve.

Before us lies our great goal, Saints, and we must be about the Father’s business with vigor, keenness, and faith. The work is onward; do your part.

— FREDERICK M. SMITH.

A Call to the Membership of the Church

The question of how the finances of the church are to be affected by the last General Conference has, of course, been many times raised; but surely there can be but one answer; for what the majority (large majority) has done cannot but meet with general approval. Already it is quite apparent that there is a distinct brightening of financial prospects, born of the hope that there will be a quickening of our progress towards the objectives of the church, which ought to be clearly the view of all, and which calls upon us all to do our full duty for the church and its interests.

We purpose to labor towards the accomplishment of the work of the church, and we feel certain of the support of the Saints. We feel that God is directing the work, and that it is onward.

Yours for the work,

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

A. CARMICHAEL.

Organization and Work of the Board of Publication

The General Conference of 1925, just closed, reorganized the Board of Publication, retaining just one of the former board, Bishop Mark H. Siegfried.

In compliance with an order passed early in the second week of conference sessions, Presiding Bishop Albert Carmichael, just prior to the close of the conference, submitted his nominations for members of the board, to include a member of the First Presidency, a member of the Quorum of Twelve, and one of the Order of Bishops. His nominations were President Frederick M. Smith, Apostle Roy S. Budd, Bishops Mark H. Siegfried and Fred B. Blair, and Brother R. R. Redfield, an Independence business man. These nominations were approved, and these men now form the church’s Board of Publication.

April 22 the members met for the purpose of organization and the transaction of business. Bishop M. H. Siegfried was chosen president; Bishop F. B. Blair, vice president; Brother R. R. Redfield, secretary and treasurer.

The First Presidency of the church was asked to assume editorial charge of the SAINTS’ HERALD; Apostle John F. Garver was selected as editor of Zion’s Ensign; President Floyd M. McDowell was chosen editor of Autumn Leaves; Estella Wight was reelected editor of Stepping Stones and Zion’s Hope. Elder Samuel A. Burgess, Church Historian, was selected to act as editor of the Journal of History. Sister F. H. Edwards was chosen to assist Brother McDowell as editor of Autumn Leaves, and Richard J. Lambert was selected to assist the editors of...
SAINTS' HERALD and Zion's Ensign, and as office editor.

Brother O. W. Parker was retained as business manager, and Brothers Parker and Budd were detailed to institute a campaign to increase the subscription lists of the periodicals.

Another meeting of this important board is to occur during the present week and is expected to be important.

With this issue the HERALD passes into the hands of its new editors. As soon as it is possible for Apostle Garver to finish up work already in hand and pressing him for his entire time and strength, the Ensign will be passed to his direction. Sister Christiana Salyards completes her work as editor of Autumn Leaves with the forthcoming number.

KLDS Changes Schedule

Beginning April 28, KLDS broadcasts at eight o'clock on Tuesday and Thursday nights instead of at nine o'clock as heretofore. When the old schedule was arranged, hours were selected which would not conflict with those of any Kansas City station. At that time receiving sets were not sufficiently selective to tune out local interfering stations.

Under present conditions it is felt that KLDS will reach many more people on Tuesday and Thursday nights, broadcasting from eight until nine or half past nine.

Two changes are also contemplated in the Sunday broadcasting hours. It is likely that the Radio Vesper Service will be changed from five to half past six, and that the half past seven schedule will be changed to nine o'clock. The first change under consideration is largely due to complaints from local listeners who desire to listen to the International Sunday School program broadcast by WDAF. The second must be made because of time division arrangement with WOS, Jefferson City, Missouri.

Under the agreement KLDS may broadcast at any time on Sundays except half past seven to nine when WOS radiocasts by remote control from six of the churches at Jefferson City. KLDS also has the air Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings.

Instead of broadcasting the Sunday night services from the Stone Church, it is planned to radiocast a special service from the radio studio, beginning at nine o'clock. This schedule will enable many western listeners to hear sermons and sacred music from KLDS who would be unable to tune in the station at an earlier hour.

No change is contemplated for the Sunday forenoon schedule. The eleven o'clock service at the Stone Church will continue to be broadcast.

Please note that there will be no immediate change in the Sunday schedule, only in the Tuesday and Thursday evening time—eight o'clock instead of nine o'clock. The Sunday schedule will not be changed until the new transmitter goes on the air with the new wave length (probably 441 meters) and 1,000 watts power. Further announcements will appear in this paper.

The Church and the Young Woman

Sermon Number Three by Patriarch John F. Martin, at Young People's Convention, Lamoni, Iowa, June 10, 1924.

In one way I believe I have been a bit unfortunate during these meetings. On Monday evening I was expected to preach on the call of the church to youth. On the night preceding it, President Smith issued the call, so on Monday there was nothing left for me to do but to echo. I am now in a like situation. Those of you who were here to-day and heard the splendid talk by Sister Edwards will agree with me when I say she not only stole my thunder but my rain and sunshine and everything else. However, I think maybe she left me a little ray of sunshine. If I can give that I shall be happy.

The scripture lesson is found in the 31st chapter of Proverbs, beginning with the 10th verse:

Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies. The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her, so that she shall have no need of spoil. She will do him good and not evil all the days of her life. She seeketh wool, and flax, and worketh willingly with her hands. She is like the merchants' ships: she bringeth her food from afar. She raiseth also while it is yet night, and giveth meat to her household, and a portion to her maidsens. She considereth a field, and buyeth it: with the fruit of her hands she planteth a vineyard. She girdeth her loins with strength, and strengtheneth her arms. She perceiveth that her merchandise is good: her candle goeth not out by night. She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff. She stretcheth out her hand to the poor; yea, she reacheth forth her hands to the needy. She is not afraid of the snow for her household: for all her house are apparelled with calf-skin. She maketh herself coverings of tapestry, her clothing is silk and purple. Her husband is known in the gates, when he sitteth among the elders of the land. She maketh fine linen, and selleth it; and deliverrh girdles unto the merchant. Strength and honor are her clothing; and she shall rejoice in time to come. She openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness. She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness. Her children arise up, and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her. Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all. Favor is deceitful, and beauty is vain: but a woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised.—Proverbs 31:10-30.

I do not assume to understand young women. It is my theory rather that a young woman is not understandable. In that regard I am somewhat like the colored preacher who one morning was very much embarrassed to find that some one had pasted the leaves of his Bible together, and he started out to read and it sounded about like this: "And Cain went into the land of Nod and there he knew his wife," then turning over the pasted leaves he continued, "which was made of gopher wood. The length thereof was 300 cubits, and the breadth thereof was 50 cubits, and the height thereof was 30 cubits." He said, "Brothers and sisters, dat am in de Bible, but I never see it dar befoah. All I got to say is dat Mrs. Cain was very peculiarly constructed."

Sometimes I feel about like that myself when I am considering women. But some things are interesting as long as they remain a mystery; so perhaps it is well that we men do not know so much about women. However, I do want to bring out two thoughts: one is that man does have some conception of the value and the power of women in the world; and the other is, if possible I want to urge upon young womanhood the importance and value of her opportunities and possibilities.

In ancient times women occupied a station inferior to that of men. Among the ancient Hebrews, women occupied the most exalted sphere of any of the old-time nations, but even here the husband was lord of his wife, and the brother superseded the sister. In Greece the woman was anything but the equal of the man. The favored few meekly took what the lords of creation granted them, while the majority were consigned to servitude. In Rome the girl was the property of her father, to be sold by him to the suitor who paid the highest price, and then the husband became her dictator. In China, girl babies were frowned upon, while boys were welcomed with great festivity.

This conception of woman has not been confined to the Far East, nor to the ancient old west, but may be observed in more recent civilizations of the newer west, such as in Germany, England, and Italy. For instance, in 1814, according to the record, there were thirty-nine cases of women being sold at public auction in England. The record says that in September, 1814, the wife of John Hall was sold at public auction for two shillings and six pence, with an additional six pence for the rope with which she was led. That will give you an idea as to the value at which women were held at that time by some people. That may sound strange to your American ears, but if we examine our own history we will find that the Puritans brought a tincture of that idea to our own shores. No public school established within twenty-five years of the landing of the Pilgrims had any place for girls. Harvard College when established was for young men but not for their sisters. It was a half century before the public schools were opened to both sexes alike. That was at a time when a woman if found addicted to scolding was required to sit in public with her tongue held in a slit stick, or else be dipped three times in a public ducking pool. That will give you an idea of the esteem in which women have been held in days gone by. The modern woman, however, has been finding her rightful place in the world. Her development, her progress, has been slow and tedious. It has been held back by tradition and a false idea as to the value of women. But, I say, she is gradually finding her rightful place in the world, and already has she demonstrated that she is the equal of man in any field of endeavor in which she is given an equal chance.

You may take the literary field or any other endeavor in life where she has been given an equal chance, and she has demonstrated that her brain is as big and capable as a man's. For instance, in the literary field we have Elizabeth Browning, George Eliot, Julia Ward Howe, and scores of others, whose pens have been wielded as strongly as men's, who might be mentioned as having proved to the world that woman when given a chance is capable of demonstrating that her work is just as good and important as a man's.

So we say that woman's place is right alongside that of man. Woman has great possibilities, and she has great power, and I am going to make a more amazing confession, and that is that a woman has the power to lead a man to the heights of heaven or to degrade him to the lowest hell. History shows that to be the case; that a woman has been able to lead a man to the heights of heaven, but on the other hand, when she sought to do so, has led man to the lowest hell. When the young women of this world make up their minds to speak out and the time comes when they will, and say that the young man who indulges in liquor, whose hand deals in games of chance, whose lips are stained with tobacco, shall never have anything to do with her, and that she will not tolerate a double standard, things will be different. I say when woman speaks out and makes that demand from the young men, this world will grow in leaps and bounds in its progress towards morality and better living. The young woman, however, does not always speak out. Very often she does not take advantage of the power she possesses to wield this influence in life. There are many contributing causes for this. She has many temptations to meet in this day and age of the world. She has much opposition to confront her. It seems to me that among the many influences which have a tendency to prevent the young woman from wielding the influence she should in life and very often does not do, is the modern dance.

Now, I have thrown a bomb into the camp. But just briefly I want to mention the modern dance and give you my reason why I think the young women of the Latter Day Saint Church, the young women of the world who want to keep themselves pure and clean and examples of virtue and purity, should not indulge in the dance. We hear a great deal of opposition to it, but seldom do we hear a good reason why young people should not dance. We have been inclined to be a bit too modest in answering the young people in this regard. They frequently say, Why does the church take the position that dancing is wrong? If it isn't a good thing for you to do, why isn't it? And the answer is sometimes given, Because it isn't a good thing for you to do. That is about the answer they get. I will tell you why I think it is not safe for a girl to indulge in the modern dance. As I said on last evening, when we come into this world we possess certain instincts, certain primary tendencies, certain driving forces which make for our welfare in life. If we carefully control, supervise, and direct those tendencies, they will make for our happiness and development. On the other hand, it is possible for us to allow these tendencies to control us instead of our controlling them. And as a consequence we very often drift into wrong actions.

Some of these instincts are the social instinct, the mating instinct, and the sex instinct, which are particularly strong during young manhood and young womanhood; and because of this fact it is not right, it is not safe, it is not proper for a young man and a young woman to embrace each other in the way it is done in the modern dance. It is just as natural for one's sex instinct to be aroused when a young man and young woman embrace each other as it is done in the modern dance as it is for the sense of smell to be aroused if we place a flower beneath the nose. It is perfectly natural. It was intended by the God above that such would be the case. But that is only for the time when those two individuals are each other's companion, made by holy wedlock.

For that reason no young man and young woman have the right to embrace each other as is done in the modern dances. "Well," some one says, "how about dances in the parlor with your friends that you know are all right. Would that be safe?" My answer to that is the answer Brother Elbert A. Smith gave at one time: "You cannot change the nature of a tiger by dressing him up and bringing him into the parlor and calling him a pussy cat." Because of these hidden forces and impulses within us, it is dangerous to dance even in the parlor. I see no harm, however, in the classical dances, such as we enjoyed the other day in the Maypole exercises. However, what is true of the dance in that respect is true also of any association of young people wherein they assume that physical attitude, whether it be spooning or joyriding in the automobile, which by the way has come to be more disastrous than dancing in that regard. It is not the moving around that is wrong, because that is natural. I can understand why the darkly who could not keep his feet still when the band played said, "Mister, let me tell you, when the music starts I can't keep still. I got a feelin' in my shoes that comes against my will." And I can understand why a young person would want to dance. It is not safe, however, as you can readily see, for the reason I mentioned a moment ago. Therefore, girls, if you want to avoid these temptations, don't take the chance.

Seventy-five per cent of the young people who came before a juvenile judge in New York City to whom he put his question: “To what do you attribute your start on the road to sin?” answered him, “The dance.” Now, if seventy-five per cent of those young people who came before that judge acknowledged that they got their start at the dance, is it safe for Latter Day Saint girls and young men who want to be clean to go that far and to play with fire?

We are hoping that our girls will keep the standard that is held before them here in Graceland College, that they will live apart from unclean things, that they may always keep themselves fit tabernacles for the indwelling of God’s Holy Spirit. You know we are called the temples of the living God. Back in the temple of Solomon there was a place called the most holy place. It was laid with gold and beautifully decorated with precious stones. But the significant thing about that most holy place was that it was always dark except when lighted by the presence of God. That may be applied to our own lives. We are the temples of the living God. Unless our most holy place is lighted by God’s divine presence, our lives are dark, and you will find that you cannot keep your temple holy in the dance hall. Therefore, why take the temple of the living God to a place where God would not go?

Woman has wielded an influence in this world that is immeasurable. In the opinion of your speaker, woman has her greatest work in the calling of motherhood. The woman who creates and sustains a home, and under whose hands little children grow up to be strong and pure men and women, is a creator second only to God. It has been my privilege as a representative of this church to be in the homes of many of the mothers of the church, and I have been permitted to observe them at their daily tasks. I want to say that as I have watched them toiling from early morning till late at night for the welfare of their children, sacrificing the things of life for the welfare of those they love, and sometimes toiling and almost wearing their finger ends off for their children’s sake, I have mentally bowed in reverence to motherhood. I say again, there is nothing more beautiful, no example of love so sweet as a mother’s love for her children; and that to my mind is woman’s first and greatest work.

We do have, however, some women in the world who think that motherhood is too much of a task and who deliberately avoid this responsibility. They think it ties them down too much. That reminds me of a poem which I have here, written by Edgar Guest, which I wish to read:

Tied Down

"They tie you down," a woman said, Whose cheeks should have been flaming red With shame to speak of children so. "When babies come you cannot go In search of pleasure with your friends, And all your happy wandering ends. The things you like you cannot do, For babies make a slave of you."

I looked at her and said: "'Tis true That children make a slave of you, And tie you down with many a knot, But have you ever thought to what It is of happiness and pride That little babies have you tied? Do you not miss the greater joys That come with little girls and boys?

"They tie you down to laughter rare, To hours of smiles and hours of care, To nights of watching and to fears; Sometimes they tie you down to tears, And then repay you with a smile And make your trouble all worth while. They tie you fast to chubby feet And cheeks of pink and kisses sweet.

"They fasten you with cords of love, To God divine who reigns above. They tie you, whereso’er you roam, Unto the little place called home; And over sea or railroad track, They tug at you to bring you back. The happiest people in the town Are those the babies have tied down.

"Oh, go your selfish way and free, But hampered I would rather be; Yes, rather than a kingly crown I would be what you term tied down; Tied down to dancing eyes and charms Held fast by chubby, dimpled arms. The fettered slave of girl and boy, And win from them earth’s finest joy."

Now, do not misunderstand me, friends, when I say that in my opinion woman has the greatest work as a mother, and because I complain against those who deliberately avoid that responsibility. There are women in this world who because of circumstances over which they have no control have been denied this great joy, but in their own way they have expressed their mother instinct. They have been able to mother some one else’s boy or girl, some one else’s children. They have been able to care for them; and sometimes those who have no children of their own have been the best mothers this world has ever known. But I am speaking against those who deliberately avoid this because of selfishness. In other words, they would rather carry a poodle dog in their arms than a baby. Jesus never said, “Suffer little poodle dogs to come unto me.” What he said was, “Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven.”

It is wonderful the influence that women have wielded in this church. I want to say this, that back of almost every good man’s work in this world there has been the influence of some good woman. It may have been his mother; it may have been his wife, or a sister, or possibly a sweetheart, but the motivating influence, the inspiration back of him has been some good woman.

For instance, there is the mother of the late Joseph Smith—Emma Smith. You recollect how when her husband was killed, when Joseph was murdered, that left her with a family. She had the privilege of going back to her own people and living in luxury if she would denounce the things her husband had taught, but she refused that. She had also the privilege of going to the Utah Mormon Church along with others and there to have ease and luxury. She refused that likewise. She stayed where she was and reared her boys. The result was that when the time came she turned over to the church Joseph, the one who presided over this church for over fifty-four years. And she turned over to the church Alexander, who was the Presiding Patriarch of the church for a long time. She gave also to the church David, who was the poet of the church. In addition to that she kept in her possession the manuscript of the Inspired Translation of the Bible and guarded it safely. What might have been the case if that mother had not been true to her task? if she had not brought up her boys in the knowledge of the truth.

We sometimes forget the power and influence that woman has wielded in shaping the destiny of this work. I say, all honor to them. Their work has been just as great and as noble and as wonderful as the work of the men in this church. We may point to some who are living to-day, right here in this town—Sister Walker, who has done a noble and a wonderful work. Can we say that there is a man living or who has lived who has done more in a consecrated way than she? If I understand her life aright, I think it was placed upon the altar of service and sacrifice when she was a young girl. She was the editor of Zion’s Hope. She also founded Autumn Leaves, and she edited the “Mothers’ Home Column” in the SAINTS’ HERALD. She instituted the Christmas offering, and many other noble things has she done. There are others living—some right here to-night, who in their quiet ways have done a wonderful work for the church. And there are many others here who, back in their home towns, are wielding a like influence. Very often when we go into a branch we find that the women are the mainstay of the branch. Some of the men spend so much time finding out about what time that cock crew back there in Peter’s day that they haven’t time to do the work, and the women are going ahead with it. So I say, all honor to them.

And the women or the girls who sit before a class in Sunday school and teach them the principles of life, the principles which make for their eternal happiness, those women are doing as great a work as any member of the priesthood that was ever in this church. And the girl who goes out and teaches school, or who goes into the sick room and ministers to the wants of the sick and dying people, is doing a service for Christ just as much as any man who ever stood behind the sacred desk. In my opinion she is. The women can wield a great and mighty influence for the welfare of this church.

I like to think of the spirit which has been manifested on the part of the women during the early days of the organization of this church. It has been my privilege to be the custodian of the Kirtland Temple for a season, and I have been permitted to take thousands of people through that place. But occasionally, when I have had some spare moments, I have enjoyed going into that building and sitting there in meditation, letting my mind go back to the people who were responsible for its erection. I like to think of the sacrifice of the women along with the men during that time. We have on the outside of the temple a cement work in which there are pieces of broken glass which causes the cement to shine or sparkle in the sun. That glass was put into the cement as the result of the women breaking up some of their dishware in order to do it. Other women cut off their hair and sold it to help pay for the temple. Of course, that would not be much sacrifice to-day, but it was a sacrifice then, and they gave their hair cheerfully.

I like to think, too, of the sacrifice manifested on the part of the wives of the ministry. As the ministry went out in the field to preach, the women remained at home and sacrificed. They did not get the allowances that the missionaries’ wives get to-day. I have here a poem written by the wife of one of our early missionaries. This missionary’s name was Glaud Rodger. He was sent to Australia, as you know, and for a long time he was alone, going up and down through that country endeavoring to preach the gospel. I have heard that sometimes Brother Rodger would walk all day long carrying his grip, until finally he would find a Latter Day Saint home to stay in, and some of the old women were telling Brother Patterson, whom you all know, that it was common for Brother Rodger to come in. after a long journey all exhausted and sit down in a chair and be unable to take his shoes off, and that blood would trickle from his shoes. But he was able to so labor because he had back of him a wife who had the missionary spirit, the spirit of sacrifice, the spirit of love. This poem I am going to read was written by Sister Rodger.

FAREWELL TO MY HUSBAND
Glaud Rodger, who left California for Australia, November 3, 1873.

Good-bye; ere the words are spoken
Heaves my heart a bitter sigh;
Choking words I feign would utter;
O 'tis hard to say good-bye.

Yes, beloved one, thou are going
Perhaps for years—perhaps forever;
Dearest treasure, thou art leaving,
But we'll not forget thee, never.

From thy little ones departing
Christ's commandments to obey;
Oft in vision you will see them
As you journey on your way.

If we now would seek the comforts
Of a peaceful happy home.
How could we expect the blessings,
Or to hear the words, "Well done."

Many souls through want of laborers
Have not heard the gospel plan;
Who would seek for peace and safety
And not warn their fellow man?

We have heard the glorious message;
Shall we then ungrateful prove?
The command to all is given,
"As thyself thy neighbor love."

No, I would not wish to gather
To fair Zion's favored land.
Till your mission here is ended;
Then we'll join that happy band.

May God bless us in your absence,
Be our father and our friend;
If our earthly friends forget us,
We will trust him to the end.

I will strive to do my duty
And my daily prayer shall be,
That the Lord may bless your labors
And return you safe to me.

Guard him, O my heavenly father,
'Gainst the tempest's fearful blast.
But if 'tis thy will to take him,
May we meet in heaven at last.

That is why Glaud Rodger could go forth in the face of those difficulties and accomplish such a noble work, because there was back of him the influence of that noble woman, along with the fact that God was his protector and his stay.

But while we have had those women there in that day, I am pleased and proud to say that the same spirit has characterized the lives of young women to-day in our church.

So girls, I say, God bless you for the noble inspiration you have been to us men, and for the consecration that is manifested in your testimonies at this convention. And as you go forth from this meeting to your various affairs in life, may you always carry that spirit with you. May you continue to take your place in the service of the church and implant in the hearts of the men, women, and children that beautiful spirit which has characterized your lives at this convention. May God bless you to that end is my prayer.

Use of Oil
BY S. A. BURGESS

Sometimes questions are asked with regard to the oil for administration—how widely it has been used, and, more particularly, why olive oil is used. One writer asks that only the Melchisedec priesthood should be permitted to have or retain in their possession consecrated oil.

Widely Used

A review of the subject of oil and anointing may be of interest to some of our readers. Heathen nations have used different substances as an unguent, but fairly to discuss such uses and their significance would justify another article. Grease and oils have long been used for a wide variety of purposes.

They have been and still are used for the sake of the body as cosmetics. For this purpose different substances were added, both in ancient times and today.

Again, they have been used for the sake of health, both in hot and cold countries, to prevent excessive perspiration. Such uses extend to the whole body, and for like purposes is used after bathing and was used in Greece and elsewhere before the games.

Anointing with oil has been common among some nations, including the Jews at the introduction of feasts or festivals.

Then, in its refined state, it has also been used ceremoniously for the ordination of priests or of kings and rulers. It is presumed to grant a divine unction. It is used for anointing for the healing of the sick; for the purpose of bringing new life; for the newborn babe; for youth at puberty; at the time of marriage; and after death.

The Olive

Throughout the Near East, the olive has been for thousands of years used both as a food in its natural state and also as an oil. The oil has been taken for

for the oil for the anointing of the sick is what interests us most at present. Why is olive oil used? Plainly, because the oil of olives is that which had been used from remote ages by the Semitic people, and was used among the Hebrews to the time of Christ and since. When James wrote his letters about the anointing of oil, there was no doubt about the oil, that it was olive oil that should be used. When Jesus anointed with oil, it was the oil of the olive. It is not surprising, then, that olive oil is the oil used throughout Christendom from earliest times, and is used by the Roman and Greek Churches.

The importance of anointing with oil is clearly seen in the terms ascribed to Jesus of Nazareth. As the Messiah, he was "The Anointed One" to the lover of the Hebrew tongue. To the Greeks, the term Christ at once signified "The Anointed." The term chrism, used in the Roman Catholic Church, is from the same root.

In the anointing with oil for the healing of the sick in the Christian church, the laying on of hands is a very vital part of the ordinance. Faith is placed not so much in the virtue of the oil itself as in its symbolic use in the conveying of divine grace, which is especially conveyed through the laying on of hands and the prayer of faith. It is the "prayer of faith" which "shall heal the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up." (James 5: 16.)

From the early days of the Christian church, oil was used as the symbol of the Holy Spirit. In the Roman Catholic Church, candidates were anointed both before and after baptism: the former to drive away the evil spirit and the latter with the laying on of hands to convey the Holy Spirit. In this latter anointing, the oil was placed on the head, heart, mid-rib, and other portions of the body as a symbol or sign.

Roman Catholic Use

Before proceeding more particularly to the usage of the church, it may be of interest to note that the holy oil or chrism in the Roman Catholic Church is consecrated on Maundy Thursday, the Thursday before Easter, with the following prayer:

Send forth, 0 Lord, we beseech thee, thy Holy Spirit, the Paraclete from heaven, unto this vessel of oil, which thou hast designed to bring forth out of green wood for the refreshing of mind and body; and through thy holy benediction may it be for all who anoint with it, taste it, touch it, a safeguard of mind and of body, of soul and spirit, for the expulsion of all pain, of every infirmity, of every sickness of mind and body. For with the same thou hast anointed priests and kings and prophets and martyrs with this thy chrism, perfected by thee. In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The chrism must be blessed by a bishop and is the oil used for the anointing of baptism in the Roman Catholic Church.

Chrisk consists of oil and balsam, according to the Oxford Dictionary, and also Webster’s Dictionary; though according to the latter, spices are sometimes added.

Olive oil is the oil, and wine and aromatics are combined in the Eastern Church. This chrism is used in baptism, confirmation, ordination, and consecration of church and altar. The same word is sometimes used for the oil of catacumen or for the oil of the sick.

It will be noted that certain objects dedicated to God, as church buildings, gifts, the altar, were anointed with oil in the Roman and Greek Churches. It will be noted, however, that there were two or three different oils: first, the oil of catacumen, used before baptism; second, the oil of chrism; third, the oil of the sick. The Greek Church also used olive oil for the church lamps. Olive oil was very freely used by the Jews and was the oil of anointing provided in the law of Moses. Olive oil is also the oil used in both the Roman and Greek Churches.

Greek Church

In the Greek Church, also, oil is used for the anointing of the sick. It usually is especially prepared. It is better if seven priests be present and join in the anointing, though five or three may officiate. Each one prays in turn.

In the Roman Catholic Church the anointing for the sick does not ordinarily occur, but they do have extreme unction, which is the anointing of those who are believed to be about to die. In the later Middle Ages it was considerably disputed whether a person who had received extreme unction could ever receive it a second time. The ruling made was that for most practical purposes such a person should be considered as dead, that he or she should not walk on the ground unshod, should not eat meat, nor live with his wife or her husband. But this strict rule has been modified, and it is recognized that extreme unction might now be received two or more times, as circumstances may require.

Early Christian Church

The early Christian church, of course, speaks freely concerning the use of the oil for the anointing of the sick. The process of change was a gradual one through the Middle Ages. Tertullian mentions the healing of Servius, the father of the Emperor Antonius.

Enos the first also mentions the anointing for the sick, but not for the moribund. In the eighth century extreme unction developed with the remission of sins. Therefore it became a sacrament with a penance. Chrysostom mentions unction but does not mention it as a sacrament. By the twelfth century it had become fairly well established and finally was approved at the Council of Florence, in 1439.

That the olive oil must be consecrated by a bishop was so firmly established that Gregory XVI, in 1842, held that in even extreme emergency no other oil could be used. To meet the necessity of the fact that the oil must be consecrated by the bishop and on Maundy Thursday, it is necessary that the priest prepare several vessels for the different kinds of oil sufficient in quantity to last through the year. If there is a shortage, the need is met by adding new oil to the old with the belief that such person would still receive contact with a portion of the old oil which had been consecrated, and the new oil coming in contact with the old was also thereby sanctified.

In the Eastern Church the excess of oil was set aside to be used in the lamps. In the Eastern Church it is also considered preferable that the sick, if possible, shall come to the church and the anointing and blessing for the healing of the sick take place in the face of the church. But where this is considered impracticable, the priests go to the home.

Healing of the Sick

Reference is made above to the use of consecrated oil for the healing of the sick. It was so used in the early Christian church and was used to a lesser extent through the Middle Ages. This is a primary use in the Christian church, according to practically all writers on the subject.

Some have been disturbed lest the oil is not kept sufficiently sacred and that it be made a fetish. There is danger, of course, in both directions. Some no doubt have considered it merely a ritual and have failed to appreciate the deep necessity of faith and prayer.

Still, it is true that olive oil has of itself a great food value. Furthermore, that it can be used advantageously for external anointing in the case of wasting sickness. It is good used both internally and externally, nor does the fact that it has been consecrated prevent such use. The elders anoint the head and anoint the affected part only when it is an ordinarily exposed part of the body. This does not prevent but rather permits the proper anointing by the proper members of the family of the whole body.

We have known of cases where an invalid could partake of no food, yet was kept alive by cleansing alcohol baths and a thorough anointing of the whole body with oil twice a day. We are informed that in such cases our late President Joseph Smith advised that the whole body be well anointed. Nor need it be too much to accept such use of the consecrated oil as carrying with it the blessing of the Spirit as well as the natural healing qualities of the oil itself.

Since a person may take internally oil that has been consecrated or set apart, and since such anointing of the body is usually better performed by members of the family, there exist certain reasons why the oil should be left in the hands of the Saints and should not be retained solely by the priesthood, as has been the case, as above indicated, in some other organizations. At the same time it is well that oil which has been consecrated should be cared for in an intelligent manner, cared for so as to prevent its natural beneficial qualities being lost. To preserve it, it should be kept in a cool place and in the dark.

Oil for Food

Oil used for food is ordinarily placed along with the other food partaken of at the table. Oil, even olive oil, used as a lubricant does not need a blessing. Oil that has been consecrated and set apart should properly be considered as holy oil and so used by the family.

On the other hand, comment has been made in the past on the use of fetid oil. One could not reasonably expect the same benefit from oil which has not been properly cared for, whether used externally or internally. It is not a fetish, but is in its natural state a gift of God through nature, and through the prayer of faith an added source of blessing.

Again, olive oil is customary. It was used by the Jews of early Christian churches and other churches to-day. In answer to inquiry, President Joseph Smith stated that olive oil should be used as a rule, but other oil could be utilized when olive oil was not available.

Question. What kind of oil should be used?

Answer. There is nothing specifically stated in the law as to the kind of oil to be used. From the fact that the oil of the olive was in universal use in Jerusalem and other parts of the Holy Land, it is presumable that it was olive oil that was used by the Savior and the early saints. The olive

The practice of the church has been quite uniformly for the use of olive oil where practicable and as clean as possible.

The manner of consecrating the oil is discussed in the Millennial Star, volume 15, page 620, and also in the Saints' Herald, volume 40, page 102:

We then stretched our right hands toward heaven and blessed the oil, and consecrated it in the name of Jesus Christ.

In the revelations of God, the use of oil stands well established. The wisdom of this use is shown by its known food value as well as medicinal value. In the administration of the sick, however, we do not hold alone for these natural benefits, but also our prayers in the blessing of the oil are that the blessing of the Holy Spirit may be with those who partake of or are anointed with or use the oil rightly. It is true we have not a ritual for the blessing of the oil as have some other churches, but the purpose undoubtedly is that the one using or anointed with the oil should receive the blessing of the Holy Spirit, as well as the natural benefits of the oil. When this consecrated oil is used for the administration to the sick, it should be clear to all that it is then only incidental and is largely a symbol for the anointing with the Holy Spirit.

Those who are interested should also see editorials in Saints' Herald, volume 41, page 83, and volume 58, page 1107.

Facts About the Bible.—No. 10

BY A. B. PHILLIPS

One who studies the various forms of religion and particular beliefs of the peoples mentioned in the Bible can hardly fail to be impressed with the thought that at some time there may have been a common source of at least some of these teachings. The study of ecclesiology reveals many striking similarities in this respect that history may help to clarify, particularly in cases where industrial, political, and social contact are shown to have existed. The manner in which the influences thus exerted manifested themselves is of great interest in many instances, and sometimes support the biblical record to a remarkable extent, assuring us of its credibility. This of course implies that reliable sources of information inspired the sacred narrative.

There seems to be convincing evidence to show that such doctrines as immortality, a supreme deity, good and evil, divine revelation to man, miracles, accountability to deity, and future rewards and punishments, were widely believed in very ancient periods, and probably were derived in part at least from teachings having a common source. After the ancient teachings had been handed down for ages, it would be natural that ideas should become changed to accord in part with later teachings and beliefs, or other peoples with whom assimilation or close relations developed. This would in some measure account for the similarities and incidental differences of beliefs held by such peoples, which history shows existed among them.

Priesthood and Religious Teachings

The ministrations of a priesthood characterized most of the more cultured nations, and national stability was greatly affected by the closeness of relationship existing between the religious and civil organization. In Egyptian as well as in Hebrew life, the ruling monarch was limited by the powers exerted by religious leaders and the rules they supported. This was also the case in the older Babylonian government. On the other hand, the priesthood had officials who performed civil functions of a more or less important nature. Egyptian high priests sometimes arose who were known as Great Seers, which reminds us of the same term applied to certain of the prophets of the Bible. The costumes worn by priests were sometimes of an emblematic nature, but differed among those of various religions, as might be expected.

Many high principles of ethical conduct were taught and observed among the biblical nations of culture, though these differed in accordance with ideals and purposes, developed doubtless from past experiences and habits. The belief in the existence of a good and an evil spirit was quite clearly held by the Hebrews, as the Bible shows, and it appears that it was about the time of Moses or a few centuries later that the Zoroastrian religion began to promulgate the same doctrine with certain modifications. But what connection there may be between these facts is not easily determined. Other similarities include a belief in the future judgment, a reign on earth and a resurrection, and the final overthrow of the evil spirit. It seems quite probable that some interchange of thought made its impression upon the religious ideas then held.

Bible Countries and Communication

It is presumed that at some remote period the various countries were settled by small clans or families who for various reasons decided to explore the regions beyond where they lived, with whom were from time to time united other peoples, or who were subject to the misfortunes of war and conquest. The complete history of such countries will never be written from the records of the past, but some very interesting facts are a matter of record that Bible students should know. While the Scriptures are the chief source of our religious knowledge concerning the earliest nations which it mentions, much other material has come to light in the records of the ancient Babylonians, Assyrians, Egyptians, and a few other peoples, that is of absorbing interest. Josephus and more ancient historians also supply many facts.

With geographical discoveries came commercial relations between the peoples represented. The Egyptians and Assyrians have left many records of discovery and conquest, while the Phoenicians were great sailors and colonizers, and at one time were employed by Solomon to carry various articles of commerce by sea. Their valuable knowledge of geography was extensive, and reached to the straits of Gibraltar and the tin mines at Cornwall by the fifth century B.C. However, the Greeks were the earliest known inventors of a comprehensive system of geography, and soon rivaled the Phoenicians as seafarers. The first map of the entire known world is supposed to have been that of Anaximander in the sixth century B.C., around the Ægean Sea countries being its center. Very early surveys or maps, however, were made by the Babylonians and Egyptians nearly or quite a thousand years before that date.

All these activities and records facilitated more extensive intercourse between nations and countries. The world as then known was small compared to its known extent to-day, and was largely water and desert or rugged hills and mountains. Noah's posterity are commonly believed to have come from Ararat, a word that in the Authorized Version is twice given in the marginal text for Armenia, and is supposed to have been in eastern Armenia at a place known to the Persians as "Noah's Mountain." Assyrian inscriptions of the ninth century B.C. and later repeatedly mention Urartu or Ararat. The first known ruler of Armenia was known as Haik, a descendant of Japheth who ruled about 2100 B.C. It was here that were built Christian churches supposed to represent the earliest form of Christian architecture, the Armenian Christians claiming to be the most ancient representatives of the religion.

Bible Names and the Inscriptions

The names given in early biblical history are largely identified with other names for the same places. Aram is called Syria, Asshur is known as Assyria, Cush is usually translated Ethiopia, Elam is known as Persia, and Mizraim is generally called Egypt. The boundaries of these countries were not always the same, and the names did not therefore always represent the same geographical areas. Various other names are also found in the Bible that have been identified with countries and areas as known to ancient nations, often by other names.

The tracing of biblical nations to their sources cannot always be done with certainty, but many interesting facts bearing upon the subject have become known which tend to give considerable assurance that the Bible is a credible witness to the antiquity of peoples therein named. It is very interesting to learn that the biblical Ellasar (Genesis 14:1) was the Larsa of southern Babylonia, over whom Eri-Aku (Arioch, Genesis 14:1) was king, but was succeeded by the control of the noted Hammurabi (2300 B.C.), supposed to have been the Amraphel of Genesis 14:1, known as king of "Shinar," which some think was the Sumer mentioned in Babylonian inscriptions. Many towns and cities and other evidences of a vast civilization, including a great system of canals, are still traced in extensive ruins found in Babylonia.

A considerable list of countries, cities, and persons are named in the new Helps to Bible Study, that are mentioned both in the Bible and in the inscriptions recently discovered at various points. Some historical references in the inscriptions accord with the biblical account, and thus is the Bible shown to be a reliable witness of the facts it recites. This is the more remarkable when it is considered that the chronologies of some of these separate sources are given sufficiently to show convincing agreement between the two records.
Basting Threads
BY MRS. F. B. VAN FLEET

Basting threads are the first threads to go into a garment and the last to come out. “The first shall be last and the last shall be first.” Is it not a significant fact that everything, including customs, habits, and life, evolve around this statement?

The ancient things are coming into prominence. The patterning of styles, architectural display, even life itself reverts back to the past, for there is childhood, old age, and then childhood again, followed by death with its promise of eternal life.

The righteousness of the saints has been the first and last concern of the Master; for this he came into the world and went out of it unappreciated, unthanked, and unhonored. He left the robe of righteousness unfinished. The Bridegroom cometh, the end is drawing near. It is the hastening time. Skillful hands are needed, for there is much to be done, and the finishing touches make or mar the beauty of every garment. Can we accomplish this task before us?

“Be ye perfect” has a ring of possibility in it, for his yoke is easy and his burden is light. “The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak” is the song of the siren, the call of the flesh thundering down through the ages of man.

Religion! We have no time for it. Righteousness is impossible; and besides, who ever saw a perfect man or woman? It is all right for the other life, but we are human. So let us go on with the dance, for we have no time for religion. One has married a wife. Another has stopped to bury his dead, while out of the whirlpool of this indifference there comes a cry, faint but clear. It is the cry of a lost child seeking its own.

You are astonished at the criminal with bloodstained hands leaving the happy, crooning baby in its cradle unharmed; at the savage building his god at its cradle unharmed; at the rat eating from the plate of a prisoner in a dungeon cell; and yet all of this is religion, a turning back to something they cannot explain, a reaching out for something which is greater than they. It is a relationship, for were they not made in the image of their heavenly Father? But they have not found him. Well might they say with Stephen, “God forgive them, for they know not what they do.”

There is much to be done. It is the hastening time, and there are all the basting threads to come out, the cleaning and final pressing before the garment is presentable. We, of all people, are the most blessed, for this is the day that the ancient prophets saw and called the day of the Lord. We have all those rich experiences of the past, all the wonderful knowledge of the present, and the exquisite unfoldment of the future before us. Like manna, the precious truths have fallen here and there, little by little, adding line upon line and precept upon precept to the robe of righteousness, which though yellow with age has been hidden away by priestcraft and stained with the blood of martyrs. Look to the part our mothers have played. They have been ignored and spurned for their weaknesses until in the very dust at their feet is the handwriting of a savior, and lifting up their heads they rejoice in their redemption.

In everything give thanks.

Is it possible that we have feasted at the table of our Father, and glutted ourselves until we have neglected to thank him? Have we made of our religion comfortable churches and settled down to sleep? Our Bibles are thumb worn, and yet we do not love our neighbors. Our children can memorize the golden words, “Do unto others as you would have them do unto you,” and still they will covet their neighbor’s property and will not rejoice in his prosperity.

The preachers have become discouraged trying to tell us that God is love, and the sones of the congregations have drowned out the call to come up higher. Have we grown weary of well-doing? Or have we lost our powers of appreciation? For, you will recall, in the law of compensation, unappreciation means loss. If we have not been thankful for everything, if we have not encouraged our brother, then we have lost the good he might have done, for he has lost heart. Come, let us go back and thank him, because our thanks will pave a path of flowers for him; our loving appreciation will lighten his labor. There must be love, for love lightens all tasks, and there can be no love where there is no appreciation.

The last peach upon the bough seems the sweetest, and the fragrance of the only rose in the garden means more to us because it is the last. There is a tragedy in the withered flowers on a mother’s grave:

The loving words she longed to hear
Were withered blossoms on her bier.

Have we lost our powers of appreciation? Or like our ancient brethren, have we grown weary of manna and are calling for quail? Or has the food been warmed over so often that, like a clever housewife, it must be changed, disguised, and camouflage. We are strange creatures, but God himself knows this, and has provided for this very thing, our changeableness, and given the various fruits and vegetables with each changing season. Back we come again to the evolvement of “The first shall be last and the last shall be first.” You cannot force

the human mind. "You may lead a horse to water, but you cannot make him drink." Nobody, excepting idiots, criminals, and lunatics, is forced; and when force is necessary, as in the case of extreme surgery, it should be done by a master hand.

The consideration of the rights of others makes a wonderful camouflage, and if it is practiced there will be no need of the Prophet Elijah coming down to turn the hearts of children to the fathers and those of the fathers to the children. They will honor one another, serve one another, and love one another, for love is service.

The aged will not forget the gladsomeness of their youth.

They will gird up the loins of their minds and think no evil, and they will be clothed with the robes of charity, for it preventeth a multitude of sins. Then they will rejoice with the young as well as weep with them, and the young will love and honor them, for they will have grown valuable with age, like old lace and fine violins, and the prayer we have prayed for ages, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven," will also take its place of human reverence.

God recognizes our will here. When we murmured he sent quail, though the cries of the slaughtered innocent ascended up into heaven. When we clamored for kings, they came with their slavery and bondage; the rights of mothers were taken from them, and they bore sons that men might slay them.

Must this go on forever, this war of strife and hate?
For the innocent are slaughtered, while the women watch and wait.
They have stood on the threshold, and watched their dreams go by,
With hearts too heavy for sorrow that there were no tears to dry.
Must this go on forever, this war of strife and hate?
For the innocent are slaughtered, while the women watch and wait.

Is the robe of righteousness completed? Are the basting threads ready to come out? Is our faith sufficient? For without faith, it is impossible to please God. By faith are we made perfect, and faith is the basting threads which hold the garment of righteousness together.

When that which is perfect is come, that which is in part will be done away. Is our faith sufficient? Are we of one mind? Do we think no evil? Do we practice the consideration of the rights of others, rejoicing in their prosperity, and doing unto others as we would have them do unto us? Are we giving thanks for everything—loving, appreciating, and serving? The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak. Let us crucify the flesh and nail it to the cross. If thine eye offend thee, pluck it out. Let your flesh serve you, and make it consider your neighbor's rights, and let us get back into relationship with God by recognizing the brotherhood of man.

NEWS AND LETTERS

Trenton, Missouri

We are holding services regularly, and the Sunday school has employed a taxi to gather up the scattered children on Sunday morning. It seems to be very popular, as our numbers are increasing. The Sunday school pays for this service from the general fund.

Easter Sunday a program was given, after which twenty-five of the Saints and their friends motored out to Brother Horn's, about two and a half miles west of Trenton, where they had an old-fashioned egg and wiener roast dinner. After dinner all spent the time in gathering wild flowers, and in games and other amusements. Elder J. D. Proffit preached both morning and night at the church, in the morning on the "Purpose of Easter" and at night on "The golden rule."

We are meeting in the basement of the church at present, as the seats have been removed from the main auditorium, and a new ceiling is being put on, after which the church will be treated to a good coat of varnish and frescoing.

We hope to have J. A. Koehler for ten days' meetings when we get the church finished which we hope will be about the first to the fifteenth day of May.

We are proud of our Department of Women, for they have just presented the branch with a piano, which they purchased with the labor of their own hands, and for which we are very thankful, as it will be a great aid to the service.

Some of our Saints are not very active at present, but with spring weather, a nice clean new church, and a good series of meetings, we hope we may go into the summer's work with renewed energy.

We have framed the following motto and hung it in our church:

"The church member of to-day goes and sits through sermon after sermon wondering why more people do not go forward and join the church. He wonders why the pastor does not do this or why he does not do that. The reason why more do not join the church is because the very church member who is wondering does not bring people to church to hear the sermons, people who do not already belong to the church. Nine tenths of all church congregations are made up of people who are already members of that church. The pastor is not responsible for bringing people into the church any more than the members are. If every member of every church would bring one person to church next Sunday, and then try the same thing every Sunday, Trenton would not have to worry about finances.

"Trenton would not need a Welfare League, there would be no such thing as a "scab," there would be no girl problem, no boy problem, no big six, no boycotting, no Ku Klux Klan, and none of the thousand evils which are trying to tear the heart out of Trenton. It is the only answer to the conditions in Trenton to-day.

"Bring some one to church with you next Sunday, and then bring a different one each Sunday. You are more responsible for your church and its condition than the pastor of your church."

Encouraging Condition at Pensacola

PENSACOLA, FLORIDA, April 17.—In summing up the news of the Pensacola Branch for this month we can say that the work here is still developing. Attendance is very good at regular meetings, and the blessings of the Spirit have surely been felt by the Saints.

Brother Rudd has for a long time been in need of local help, and we are indeed thankful that now Brother Lomax Gurnigan, of Brewton, Alabama, can be with us Sundays for the eleven o'clock service. His sermons are refreshing to the Saints and give Brother Rudd encouragement, for he is able to be prepared for the evening services.

Our last sacrament service was a feast for the souls hungering for spiritual food. The Saints who have been isolated from church work a long time know how to appreciate such privileges.

A very interesting program was given Easter Sunday by the Sunday school pupils, Brother Rudd giving a fine talk to the parents on the good of having the child in the Sunday school where he can learn beautiful lessons from the life of the Redeemer, who gave his life to save them; and how the parents should help the child to apply these lessons.

We are looking for a greater work to be done here, and trust we may truly be recognized of God as his children and always be found a band of true and valiant soldiers.

Spiritual Meetings; Seven Baptized

PANA, ILLINOIS, April 14.—We feel that HERALD readers will be glad to know of the progress made in church activities here.

Brother E. J. Lenox, local missionary of Central Illinois District, recently held a three weeks' series of meetings. Splendid interest was shown from the beginning, and although the attendance was small it steadily increased. The services were instructive and encouraging, and the Spirit was present in great abundance as we grasped the new vision of Zion's ideals presented by Brother Lenox.

It has been almost two years since we had a missionary in our midst, so we were glad for this opportunity. We also enjoyed some spiritual prayer meetings. As a result seven young people were baptized.

At the close of the meetings, Saints and friends gathered at the home of Edward Nowack for a social in appreciation of the work of Brother Lenox. We are grateful to Mrs. Duck, a nonmember, who suggested the social and did much to make it a success.

We are all looking forward to the return of Brother Lenox.

Weston, Iowa

April 20.—The Saints here are not asleep.

About two weeks ago the old roof was torn off the church and was replaced by a new one. Good help was given by some nonmembers. The sisters at the same time gave the interior a thorough cleaning and served a good dinner for all the workers.

It is our intention to have the church papered and varnished before long, and we will then have our house of worship in good condition for several years to come.

Besides our local men, we have had the pleasure of listening to Patriarch Joshua Carlisle and Bishop's Agent T. J. Smith.

It is our hope that the church may prosper, not alone in this corner of the world, but all over.

Many Move From Eldorado Springs

ELDORADO SPRINGS, MISSOURI, April 22.—The Coal Hill Branch has lost several of its members this spring. Brother Roy Reynolds and family have moved down near Walker; George Bronson and family to Independence; Brother Walter Williams and family and Brother Isaac Williams and son to Oklahoma; Brother Odess Killibrew and family to Kansas; and besides this loss several are away working. The branch now is only about half as large as it was a year ago. But in spite of our loss in number the work goes on as before. The only noticeable change is the loss of many dear faces and the decrease in attendance.

Sister John Andes and her mother, Sister Ross, have been in Independence during General Conference.

Sister Lois Adams closed her school here April 5 and has gone to her home near Caplinger. We miss her very much in the church work.

Brother John Andes and his son Hollis are working in Independence, and Sister Sarah Reynolds is living with her son in Nevada.

Elain Blystone will graduate from high school this spring. She plans to attend Graceland. We understand that Sister Mirla Williams will also graduate.

The Saints here are looking forward to the reunion at Eldorado Springs.

Alexander, Kansas

We have been silent for two months, as not much change has occurred.

Those attending General Conference from here were: Peter Schaben, his wife and two children; John A. Teeters, wife, and two daughters. They report pleasant times and a pleasant trip, and much interest in the main issues of the conference. Sister Teeters was called home by the death of her mother, Grandma Coddington, who passed away April 9.

Sister Coddington's funeral sermon was preached by Pastor Alva Reed. She was seventy-seven years old, and will be greatly missed.

A little girl came to the home of Brother and Sister Pete Doege April 2.

A few Saints are attending our Sunday services who are not in the habit of attending. Brother John Teeters preached April 19, telling of his trip to conference. He returns full of hope, faith, and zeal for God's work.

Let us all so live and work that this latter-day work may reach the pure in heart, and may all of God's people sustain and bless our Prophet is our prayer.

Will Soon Have New Church Location

TRYON, NEBRASKA, April 20.—The Saints here are very happy over the change the Master has made in us here. We feel to sing, "Oh, for a faith that will not shrink," when we recall how discouraged we have been and see the change that has taken place.

Brother C. W. Prettyman has been ill, but we trust that he will soon recover. The sad news reached the Saints while at General Conference. The Saints would like to have him come and preach for us again.

Brother and Sister J. P. Johnson were out to our Easter program, although Sister Johnson was not very well. They do not get out very often, because of her poor health, and she gets discouraged. These people will be remembered by Independence Saints.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Mr. Levi Powell, of North Platte, Nebraska, and Miss Amelia B. Stoddard of Tryon, were united in marriage April 7, at Julesburg, Colorado. She is well known by many.

Regular meetings have only recently been resumed here. Prayer and testimony meetings were arranged for each first Sunday in the month, and the Sunday school is doing fine. A notice of the first meeting was sent to the Tryon Graphic, the county paper, which the editor used in the form sent. A good crowd was present, though some of the Saints were missing, and the one who was to make the address was unable to come.

Next Sunday we are to decide on the church house lot, and the building will be moved as soon as a suitable place is found.

First Chicago Branch

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—Elder F. McDonald occupied the pulpit for the morning and evening services March 15, with a goodly number in attendance.

On Saint Patrick’s Day the members of the Department of Women held a “Skinem Hookem Circus” in the basement of the church. The circus was more than a success, and it did not take much to make one imagine he was attending a circus. There were peanut and popcorn vendors, a pink lemonade stand, fortune tellers, and various amusing attractions in the side shows. Brother Passman surprised all present with his ability as an official announcer for the side show, and to the delight of the children the troupe of clowns performed their usual antics.

Our district president addressed the Saints the morning of March 22 on the subject of Zion. He pleaded with us to again feel as kindly and enthusiastic toward her as when we first heard the gospel, and not get into the habit of looking toward its fulfillment as beyond our time. Much favorable comment was made concerning the message long after our brother had departed.

On March 24 the Department of Recreation and Expression gave a roller skating party for the young folks, many of them taking advantage of attending in a body.

Prior to attending conference, Patriarch Richard Baldwin occupied the morning of March 29. The Saints here are hoping he will be returned to Chicago. The Department of Recreation and Expression turned its study hour into a prayer meeting. Brother Sidney Barrows is to be commended for his efficient work in this department. In the evening Priest Clyde Bullard gave an interesting talk, using a chart for illustration. All love this young brother since he came to our branch, and his discourse gave proof that the Father had not chosen unwisely.

The weather of sacrament Sunday was ideal, and many availed themselves of the opportunity to attend. The Spirit was present, and four of the brethren were called to the priesthood. The pastor occupied in the evening, using for his text Mark 10: 46-54. Preceding the sermon, Sister Cleve Pettersson sang a solo, “Show me thy way,” which was appropriate to the text. The Religio members enjoyed an interesting talk on physical training by Brother Russell Anderson, who is to be baptized soon.

Easter Sunday, instead of the regular preaching service, the hour was devoted to the singing of the Easter cantata, “Our living Lord,” under the direction of Sister Ruby Newman. The rendition showed what consistent training and preparation can accomplish, for the presentation was masterly.

The early Easter program by the Sunday school children, in charge of Sister Grace Edstrom, primary superintendent, was enjoyed by all and was an inspiration to the choir in giving its cantata.

The evening service found Brother Harry Passman occupying the pulpit with an Easter sermon. His discourse was the more vivid and real due to his close association with the Jews in his recent missionary labors in Jerusalem.

Sister Laura Scott, teacher of elocution and dramatic art, gave two readings at the Religio hour, and all are looking forward to her next visit. Miss Scott puts her whole heart and soul into her work, which makes her readings realistic.

Sylvania, Ohio

April 16.—The evening of April 12 the Sylvania Sunday school gave a pleasing program which was largely attended, the church being filled to capacity. Many splendid numbers were given which consisted of musical selections, recitations, dialogues, monologues, and a pantomime. Some of the best numbers were a saxophone quartet, violin solos, and a violin, cello, and piano trio, all by nonmembers. The orchestra of sixteen pieces, which was organized January 22, made its first public appearance. Nearly all were beginners, but they are getting along fine under Mr. Herbert F. Mey, a gentleman who has played in different orchestras throughout the State. At present he plays with the Sandusky Cement Company Band. He is of fine character and a splendid leader.

The work of the branch is progressing slowly but surely. We expect in the near future to enlarge our building to accommodate the needs of the Sunday school and church.

We would be pleased to have officers of the church call upon us at any time. It has been some time since any of the Twelve have been here. We have a nice group of young people who are taking an interest in the work and hope they will continue to be interested throughout their lives.

May God help us to live closer to him, that at some future time we shall meet again and dwell with our Savior through all eternity.

FLOYD L. CLARK.

Sioux City, Iowa

April 23.—One of the most pleasing programs put on at this place was given on Easter Sunday, in two parts. The junior department presented theirs at the morning hour. It consisted of readings, recitations, music, and song. The intermediate department presented the cantata, “The light of the tomb,” in the evening. It was thoroughly enjoyed by all. Mrs. Charles J. Smith supervised all the music. The soloists, Genevieve DeHarty, alto, and Beatrice Miller, soprano, did exceptionally well, and now we are expecting more from our young singers. A freewill offering was given in the morning, part of which will be used in purchasing chairs for our little folks.

Elder George W. Thorburn, of Deer Lodge, Montana, was our speaker at the Sunday services, March 29. He and his wife were on their way to General Conference. The Saints were edified by the message he brought.

Elder Charles J. Smith went to conference as a delegate from this district. Elder Benner, of Wagner, South Dakota, was also an elected delegate from the Little Sioux District. The “booster” buttons in the Sunday school are proving to be all that they stand for. Up to date we have enrolled seven in the Blue-Button Division; eleven in the Red-Button Class; and thirty in the Green-Button Club, with about fifty very near to the last-named division. It has been the policy of the Christmas offering treasurer to send all such offerings direct to the Presiding Bishop at the close of each month. There is wisdom in this, the Bishop says, and we agree with him.

Slide screen pictures and orchestra numbers have been features on our Religio programs the past month. At the March business meeting of the Sunday school and Religio, a constitution was adopted for the local Sunday school, copies of which have been given to the members. At the April meeting a constitution for the Religio will be presented by the committee.

A special feature number of the Saints' Pilot, published in this place weekly, was published Easter week by its editor, J. E. Keck. The Easter lilies on the front page were taken from the cover page of the Autumn Leaves for April.

A pretty wedding occurred early Easter Sunday at the church, when Miss Mary Baker, youngest daughter of the pastor, Elder W. W. Baker, became the bride of Mr. Francis Moore. The happy couple were the recipients of showers of congratulations and many useful gifts. They have a host of friends both in and out of the church who wish them joy and happiness.

_Sears Summit_

Brother William Bath gave us a splendid sermon on the morning of March 29. In the evening our pastor, W. D. Tor-doff, preached on 'Why I left the faith of my fathers.' It was enjoyed by all. Nonmembers were interested. On Wednesday night we have our usual midweek prayer meetings with good attendance. Monday night, March 30, we started our cottage prayer meetings for the General Conference. Twenty were present. We hope to continue these throughout the conference. The children as well as the older ones are very much interested in their Book of Mormon lessons on Friday nights at Religio. We have been having some interesting programs.

April 5 the senior and junior choirs and the Sunday school gave their Easter cantata. The church was nearly full. Everyone enjoyed the production. Brother E. F. Brace, our Sunday school superintendent, gave us a splendid talk as part of the program. Sacrament was held at half past two with Brother Peter Whalley and our pastor in charge. It was a fine meeting. In the evening Brother Whalley preached for us. Most of the Saints attended General Conference Sunday, April 12. The regular meetings were held in the church, with Brother DePuy preaching at the eleven o'clock hour; also at eight o'clock in the evening.

_Marshall_

We enjoyed a wonderful prayer and sacramental service to-day in which the Lord was pleased to speak twice to us. It pays to come with fasting and prayer.

Brother T. I. McCormick spoke at half past seven. There were a number of strangers out. We are glad to welcome Brother McCormick and family back from Blackburn. He and Brother Ralph Ridge are presiding over this group at present. Brother H. C. Thayer is improving. He was able to attend sacramental service.

Sunday April 19. The Saints here enjoyed a real refreshing to-day through the visit of Brother and Sister C. L. House of Houstonia. Brother House preached a very touching and inspiring sermon at eleven o'clock; and at half past seven in the evening he again delivered the gospel with wonder ful liberty to a good audience.

We feel there is a work here yet to do and are thankful to know that God is still at the helm guiding us heavenward. Sister Effie Banks was operated on at the Fitz-gibbons Hospital April 5 and is doing extremely well. Thanks to the prayers of the Saints.

_Atherton_

March 15 Brother George I. Hansen occupied in the morning and very ably handled his subject, "Divine wisdom." In the evening Brother W. M. Ware occupied, and his advice and counsel were timely. March 22 we had with us Bishop J. F. Keir, who very definitely outlined that which should characterize the life of a Saint. In the evening Brother Amos T. Higdon occupied. He preached on America. Last Sunday morning Brother E. E. Willard, from the Second Independence Branch, was with us, and his subject was, "The church is our homes turned inside out": food for thought and serious meditation. In the evening a full house greeted Brother J. Charles May, who gave us a typical Latter Day Saint missionary sermon. Brother Anway came with Brother May, and they entertained us with special music. At the close of the sermon Brother and Sister May sang a song in the Tahitian language.

Hear Conference News With Joy

In spite of the fact that the previous quarter set a high mark in interest and attendance, we were able to report an increase at the quarterly business meeting of April 8. Santa Ana Saints are proud of the fact that in spite of heavy financial burdens they were far ahead of every branch in southern California, except Los Angeles, in last year's Christmas offering. Surely giving to the Lord's work does not impoverish. We shall have to defend our place and reputation in 1925.

As is doubtless true in all the church, Santa Ana has been intensely interested in the reports from General Conference. At least fourteen conference dailies were taken by the Saints here, and each issue was looked forward with keenest interest. The suspense and tension of the past nine months has been terrific, and naturally we all hope and pray that now the issues have been decided a period of unexcelled peace and progress shall come to the church of our Christ. Upon reading the late revelation to the church, we experienced a feeling of joy and spiritual conviction of its divinity. Surely God in his wisdom has sent this message in harmony with preceding revelations.

The Saints here have expressed their confidence in the ability and integrity of the new bishop, Brother Albert Carmichael.

We had a fine program Easter Sunday, with a nice talk from District Sunday School Superintendent Laura Burton. Sister Lola Mitchell, our whole-hearted worker, voluntarily filled the gap when the superintendents found themselves prevented from carrying out the program, and a large audience appreciated the efforts of all.

Sister Clapp has left Santa Ana to live in Glendale. She served as branch clerk and superintendent of the Sunday school, and in every other way it was possible for her to help. All keenly regret the loss of such a steady, loyal, devoted worker.

Deacon H. L. Parks was recently operated on for the removal of a growth in his neck and lower jaw. The wound is healing steadily, and he expects soon to be back at work, better than ever.

Stone Church

Sunday was gloomy and cold and constantly threatened rain, yet the spiritual atmosphere about the Stone Church was cheerful and comforting. One hundred and twenty-five were present at the young people's prayer meeting at eight o'clock, and a spirit of reminiscence prevailed, some speaking of the time when a few young people banded together for early morning prayer. Missionary John Lentell, who was one of the charter members, spoke feelingly of those days and of the splendid results that followed the initial movement. The Sunday school recorded an attendance of over one thousand three hundred, and the orchestra added their usual good cheer and attractiveness to the service. Should anything happen to the orchestra, they surely would be missed.

The evening meeting was in charge of Elder D. O. Cato, assisted by Patriarch H. O. Smith, nine hundred being present. The musical program consisted of a double mixed quartet directed by Paul N. Craig, a beautiful solo by Mrs. Neil Atkinson Kelley, and organ numbers by Robert Miller. The sermon by Apostle Paul M. Hanson on the boyhood of Jesus, a subject near to the heart of every Saint, was very fine.

As Brother John M. Lloyd has resigned as the president of the Stone Church Religio, the work of that department is at this time in charge of the assisting officers: Brothers F. A. Cool, Clifton Resch, and Francis Holm. Religio meets Sunday afternoon at six o'clock.

The funeral of Brother F. M. Sprague was held Saturday afternoon at three o'clock, at his home on West Maple. Brother Sprague passed away April 28, after having been invalid for nine years. However, he had received much comfort from his radio, which enabled him to enjoy many of the church services. He came to Iowa at an early age and learned the printing business at Des Moines, later working in the Herald Office for some time. The pall bearers were old associates of the Herald Office force. The sermon was by Patriarch F. A. Smith, with David Krahl in charge of the service, and R. S. Salyards offering the prayer at the grave in Mound Grove Cemetery. Brother Sprague is father of Sister Claude I. Carpenter.

Second Church

The young people of the South Side were in their places at the early morning prayer service and conducted a creditable meeting. There is a disposition to put forth extra effort and to make the most of every opportunity which means the safety of these young Saints.

At the invitation of Superintendent P. A. Sherman, Deputy Constable Miller made an address to the Sunday school, in which he told of some conditions obtaining on the roads of the township, involving the conduct of the boys and girls, young men and women of our city. He did not have sufficient time to go into some important phases of his subject, but has accepted an invitation to speak at eleven o'clock May 10. His advice to parents, that they should know the whereabouts of young people, is timely. Saints are especially under solemn obligations in this regard, as a reading of Doctrine and Covenants 88: 4 will testify: "As much as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized; and their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of hands: and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord. And the inhabitants of Zion shall also observe the Sabbath day to keep it holy." The parents of young people are invited to be present and hear Mr. Miller on May 10.

Bishop Albert Carmichael was the speaker at eleven o'clock Sunday morning, and he received an attentive hearing. His subject was the necessity of forwarding the building of Zion, and he stressed the necessary preparation and the fundamentals of faith and love, fatherhood of God, and brotherhood of man.

The altar rail was a beautiful sight all day Sunday, the Saints having decorated it with blossoms of the season—tulips, iris, spirea, pansies, and the verdure background. The house of the Lord is a fitting place for the display of the first fruits of the flower garden.

Elder A. C. Martin, who got some of his earliest experience as a minister in the South Side congregation, was the evening speaker, where he met numerous friends and he and his message were well received.

Walnut Park

Sunday School Superintendent Chester Constance and his family having moved away from Independence, Brother Roy Barnhardt was elected on last Sunday to succeed him.

Sunday speakers were Apostle Clyde F. Ellis and Elder Hubert Case.

Liberty Street

The regular meetings of this congregation were held when possible during conference. Last Sunday Apostle Roy S. Budd spoke in the morning on "Faith the foundation," and in the evening Apostle J. A. Gillen used for his subject, "On to perfection." Both sermons were of a very high order and were greatly appreciated.

The upper circle of Orioles, made up of the older girls of the congregation, who are too young for the Temple Builder work, has been organized with Sister Juanita Wilkie as leader. Already a great deal of interest has been aroused among these girls.

Spring Branch

During conference the Saints of this congregation enjoyed visits and sermons from conference visitors, all being appreciated. Patriarch F. A. Smith was present and preached both morning and evening April 28.

Friday evening, two weeks ago, the Religio had as visitors...
Brothers Koshiway and Hare who entertained the audience with talks and singing songs. Both testified regarding the truth of the gospel.

Last Friday night the Bennington Heights Saints from Kansas City presented a pageant, "A questionnaire," which proved interesting and entertaining.

The Christmas offering goes over the top every month.

East Independence

Most of the preaching at this church during conference was by visitors, which proved to be profitable. There was large attendance at all the services.

The Saints met in the new basement for services April 26, many attending both Sunday school and morning preaching service. Several visitors were present, and special music was furnished by members from Independence. Bishop Roderick May offered the opening prayer, and Bishop Earl D. Bailey was the speaker. At the close of the sermon two silver vases were presented to Brother and Sister Parsons, as they will soon leave to make their home in Florida. The choir presented to them a beautiful bouquet.

In the evening Brother A. M. Chase was the speaker, and his son favored us with a beautiful solo.

Englewood

No services were held here during conference except on Sunday, when visitors to conference gave the sermons. Last Sunday Bishop Charles Fry was present and preached in the morning, while Lyman W. Fike occupied in the evening.

The time for Religion has been changed from Sunday evening to Friday evening at half past seven.

The women held no meetings during conference but will begin meeting again next week, May 5.

East Los Angeles Branch

337 East Fourth Street

Los Angeles, California, April 18.—One of the recent social events of the branch was a surprise on Pastor L. V. Lum and family, where games and refreshments were enjoyed. Two of Brother Lum's daughters and their families have recently come to California, and this social gathering gave all an opportunity to get better acquainted.

The choir, under the direction of Wallace Farley, is meeting at the homes of the choir members; and after a season spent in practice, they try each week to have a little social time.

On April 5 the Saints came together fasting and praying, and the Lord remembered us in a wonderful manner. A message came to one brother especially, and all present were caused to rejoice.

The Friday before Easter the Sunday school officers and teachers gave a picnic for the children in Hollenbeck Park. After lunch the children played games and then were given a treat of colored eggs, Easter candy, and baskets. The day was beautiful and warm, and older ones as well as young pronounced the picnic a success.

The Easter program was a great success; the children taking part appeared to be happy in doing their share. A beautiful anthem was also given by the choir.

We are missing some of our faithful members who have gone to General Conference. Brother and Sister H. F. Backer have been away about a month. Our Sunday school superintendent, Sister Catherine Exley, expects to leave with her husband about May 1 for a three-month trip. Sister Charlotte Linabury also expects to go East next month. But while some are leaving us for a time, our number is not reduced, as we are discovering continually members of the church located near our branch who had not yet heard of our location. Our little hall will soon be too small for our needs.

Fanning, Kansas

The workers here and at the mission in Troy are still busily engaged in keeping the banner afloat amid some discouragement by sickness and other conditions over which we have no control.

The branch has suffered the loss of a dearly beloved sister, Agnes Tilden, who passed from this life March 29. She was an untiring worker in both Religion and Sunday school and was for the last few years president of the aid society at Fanning. Her only child, a son, R. L. Tilden, is now convalescing in a Saint Joseph, Missouri, hospital. Both he and his family were very sick at the time of her death, but all are now much improved, for which we are thankful. Sister Schmid of Troy has also been sick but is improving.

Brothers F. G. Hedrick and Samuel Twombly of Fanning attended General Conference, and Brother Hedrick gave a report on the 19th, in which all were edified and strengthened.

Brother Holmes F. Dittmore, who has been in Honolulu for the past two years with Uncle Sam's Eleventh Tank Company, writes he will probably come home on leave for two months, arriving in June.

Johnson City, New York

April 24.—Two of the families that attend our little Sunday school have so far to come that they found it almost impossible to attend during the winter months. But with the return of spring we hope to have a larger attendance.

We are now holding midweek prayer meetings on Thursday evening, and we all enjoy them. They are a spiritual feast after being deprived of this privilege.

We have Sunday school every Sunday morning, and on the first Sunday in the month sacrament service is held.

In the near future we hope to have some kind of a meeting-house.

Savanna, Illinois

April 21.—We are trying to carry on the work here and keep the tiny flock in green pastures. For the past month our hearts and minds have been centered upon the General Conference, and we have been drawn closer together because of our common interest and anxiety in this great work, and a realization that the time is short and the sifting time near.

We have had no addition to our number for nearly a year, but we are enlarging our church building and erecting a cozy basement so that we may have a greater variety of services and better accommodations for those who come. The work has all been donated by brethren and friends, and we feel quite proud of what has been accomplished.

We expect that the June district conference will be held here and anticipate a goodly number of visitors to partake of the feast of spiritual things, such as was enjoyed at the young people's convention at Rock Island last November. Our district will never forget what Brother McDowell and Sister Blanche Edwards gave us at that time, and the inspiration received from them will live forever and blossom into roses of consecrated lives from those who were privileged to attend.

The Department of Women gave a surprise party recently which resulted in winning a number of friends to the cause.
and developing a deeper bond of fellowship among us. A lively group of Orioles has also been organized which promises to become an interesting and worthy factor in our branch.

May we all labor to hasten the time when Zion may be established, and we shall move as one great branch to fulfill our mission to the world.

Lucasville, Ohio

The program of services for April 19 was Sunday school at the regular time, ten o'clock, prayer service at eleven, and preaching in the evening by the branch priest, who delivered a spiritual sermon. This is the regular schedule of services, and our brother always gives us good spiritual sermons.

The branch is going along fine, and the Spirit of the Master has been present in most of the services. We are thankful that we have the spirit of prophecy in our midst, for through it many are comforted.

Brother Mark Crabtree had the pleasure of baptizing little Eleanor Culp, the young daughter of Brother and Sister Charles Altman; and Edith Commer, making five in the past few weeks.

We have had fair attendance at all services except the Wednesday night prayer meeting, which was so poor that we decided not to hold this service for a while. This community needs an elder, as there is no one here to confirm those baptized, and many sick need administration.

May God bless every effort for the building of his church and kingdom here on earth.

War Veteran’s Death Laid to Shock of Cold Water Plunge

DELAWARE, OHIO, April 10.—The Christian ceremony of baptism by complete immersion and modern law were weighed in the balance of “simple justice” here to-day.

E. S. Owen, county prosecutor, began an investigation of the death of William H. McCoy, World War veteran, who died from the shock of cold water in which he was baptized by the Reverend J. H. Pennell, Christian minister.

“The circumstances in this case are of a most delicate nature,” the prosecutor said. “Modern law must recognize the rights of religious freedom and religious ritual. We cannot judge McCoy’s death by any standards save those of simple justice.”

Wife Favored Baptism

Owen said he expected to question the minister and J. M. Wilson, McCoy’s father-in-law, who assisted in the baptism, the dead veteran’s wife, and his foster parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Glassborn.

McCoy, who never had been baptized, was believed to be near death from tuberculosis, resulting from a gas attack in the war. His wife, Bertha McCoy, asserted her husband desired the baptism, and the foster parents say he was opposed to it.

McCoy was submerged in a trough of water which had been brought into the sick room. An autopsy, performed during the night, indicated death resulted from shock, but that the tuberculosis infection would have claimed his life within a few days.

Shock Causes Death

Doctor M. W. Davies, who performed the autopsy, said McCoy was dead when removed from the trough.

Wilson, the father-in-law, told the prosecutor he attempted to prevent the ceremony but was overruled by Mrs. McCoy. He said he sought the advice of two physicians and that they told him the least shock might cause McCoy’s death due to his weakened condition.—Kansas City Post, April 10, 1925.

Mothers of Israel

"An ounce of mother is worth a pound of clergy."
—Old Spanish Proverb.

In the beginning, man and woman were together in Eden. Together they lost Eden. Together they must regain it if it is ever regained. In fact, the nearest approach to Paradise regained is in a good home where love reigns. Mark Twain, in his "Diary of Adam," pictures Adam standing over the spot where Eve was buried and saying, "Where she was, there was Eden."

The old Spanish proverb, that an ounce of mother is worth a pound of clergy, is true in this sense: A good mother is worth more to children than sixteen preachers who may attempt to save them later, because she has them in the formative years of life. Preachers may remodel. She builds.

The Mother of Moses

In a special way God has honored women from time to time with his most priceless trusts. A woman of the tribe of Levi bore a son, and because of the orders of Pharaoh that every Hebrew man child should be slain, she hid him in the ark of bulrushes and placed him among the flags at the edge of the Nile. When the daughter of Pharaoh found Moses and adopted him and desired a nurse, miraculously one was at hand to nurse the baby. For wages? No, for love.

This child was the future lawgiver. When he rested in the arms of that Levite mother, God intrusted to her the fate of a nation. She held the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in her motherly arms. And in due time at Amboy she gave the young man Joseph to be its president. A little later she gave Alexander and David, who came, each with his own peculiar contribution.

The poet wrote:

Joseph, Alexander, David, three remaining pillars still,
Like the three remaining pillars of the temple on the hill.

But it was Emma Smith who under the grace and favor of God and with his divine guidance and wisdom erected those three pillars in the days of their childhood and caused them to stand on their feet and become indeed pillars to the church. God trusted Emma Smith without bonds, excepting that every good mother is under the bond of her very nature to safeguard, to teach, to build, if necessary to die for, but always to give herself for that soul intrusted to her care.

Mary the Mother of Jesus

There was another woman to whom a son was intrusted. The Son of God himself as a baby rested in a mother’s arms. As he grew she ministered to his needs. She washed his face, bound up the finger that he had cut with Joseph’s carpenter tools, prepared his evening meal of bread and dates, or milk... and honey and such foods as a poor family might possess.

She taught him to pray. She admonished him to tell the truth. No doubt often she repeated the mother's formula, that sinks into the subconscious mind of the boy and later comes to the surface in crucial moments to help him—we can imagine her saying to him, "Now, Jesus, be a good boy."

When she cradled him in her arms, she held the destiny of the whole human race. God so loved man that he gave his only Son—he so trusted woman that he gave his Son into her care. She, too, under the bonds of her motherhood received, cherished, safeguarded, and finally delivered the Deliverer, fully grown, man-sized, God-ordained, but woman-mothered, ready for the great work which was his. Once more a motherhood had kept the faith. One Mary had been worth more than sixteen rabbis to the child Jesus.

The General Lines of Woman's Work

These are great and special instances from history. They stand out among but they are not different from but rather are typical of the great work constantly done in all ages by righteous women.

Woman may succeed in many lines of work. She may be quite as versatile as man. But her greatest success, her most splendid contribution, will be along the general lines for which nature has fitted her. Her most vital, fundamental, and beautiful service will be along lines of home making and character building.

Woman is preeminently a home maker. The Chinese say that a thousand men can make a camp; but it takes a woman to make a home. The wife and mother gone, the home becomes a building: a house at best, a jail at worst. It has been said that every woman should know how to make a home out of the raw material.

Zion a Collection of Homes

Zion indeed will have churches and factories and stores and farms. But fundamentally and primarily Zion will be a great group of homes. The late Patriarch Alexander H. Smith was accustomed to exhort the Saints to make their homes as nearly as possible like their ideal of heaven. Such an undertaking would be a real effort towards building Zion and in a true sense would utter forth the prayer, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven."

Here, then, woman will make one of her finest contributions to Zion. Such an ideal will sanctify otherwise menial tasks. Is it drudgery to peel potatoes and wash dishes? Not for those whom you love. Is it slavery to bake bread and broil meat and prepare the other foods for the table? Not when wholesome foods well selected and well cooked mean for the children of to-day, who will be the men and women of to-morrow, strong bodies, good color, sound nerves, a clean outlook; while poor foods carelessly selected and ruined in preparation mean rickets, tuberculosis, general undernourishment, and failure before life is well begun.

Is it too great a sacrifice to walk the straight and narrow path? To give up idle and vicious pleasures of the world? To be clean and wholesome and religious? To be a full-blooded and full-souled woman? To be like the mother of Moses? Or like Emma Smith? Or like the mother of Jesus? Not when you stop to think of all that is at stake.

In the midst of the rush and crash of modern life, wherein material things claim such constant attention, it is well at times to pause and think on spiritual values. Mothers' Day furnishes such an occasion. On Mother's Day men everywhere are reminded that there has been in their lives something greater than stocks and bonds, or railroads or mines or steamships or factories or farms or any such thing; something intangible yet powerful, wholly spiritual, something that they could never buy, something not for sale at any counter in the universe—mother's love.

And the occasion may remind the women of the church of the particular and peculiar lines along which they may best work for the redemption of Zion: individually, to be home builders; collectively in an organized capacity to study and master the problems that affect the homes of Zion.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Our Program

We must not lose sight of the "program" which was adopted by last General Conference—the program which came from the Joint Council of April, 1924. The adoption of that program has rearoused hope which in many hearts had been lulled by the apathy, the indifferences, or the opposition in quarters where we might well have expected there would be boundless zeal for the "redemption of Zion."

It is easy to criticize; it is not so easy, but still easy, to outline a program; but the difficult task lies in carrying the program into effect. That requires leaders. Critics abound, while leaders are few. Critics are loud, while leaders are quietly at work.

"Our program" must be carried out. That spells work. And the kind of work demanded is that in which different individuals play different parts, but in which each individual activity is a contribution to a well-designed whole. We call it "team work" for want of a more comprehensive term. Envisaged from a longer perspective, it might be termed coordination of effort and enterprise springing from or motivated by social telestes. That demands a large social consciousness. We cannot doubt that such consciousness will be among us, if not already here; for latent though it may be it will be quickened into activity by the functioning of the Holy Spirit among us.

"No power can stay my hand," is the divine promise, and in this lies a great encouragement to labor for the achievement of the goal of "our program."

Renewed Interest in Stewardship

It has been heartening, greatly heartening, to see the strong impetus which the late General Conference has given to the study of stewardships. Of course always there has existed among Saints a deep interest in this doctrine in a theoretical way; but the interest seems to have been greatly deepened by an awakened hope that the practical application of stewardships is imminent.

Among members of the priesthood, as well as among the youth of the church, there has quickly developed a desire to organize groups for intensive study of the practical application of stewardships. We welcome such moves. Let the movement expand till the whole church is afire with the divine impulse to make stewardships a vital part of our religious and social life.

The Forward Look

At the sacramental service at the Stone Church in Independence, Sunday, May 3, President Frederick M. Smith called particular attention to the scriptural text, "He that endureth to the end shall be saved."

The sacrifices and sufferings of the past have had their place in the development of our characters; but they are not sufficient for the future. We must not dwell upon them and think of them as being sufficient (or perhaps more than sufficient) and thus become content to relax our efforts. Nor should we allow them to embitter our minds and conclude that either God or the church is at fault and has required too much and so ask no more.

The work of to-day and to-morrow must be done. That work claims our attention to the exclusion of the past, excepting as the past may have prepared us for the work of the present and the future, or as it shall yield us its lessons for present and future application. Paul's motto was, "Forgetting past things, I press forward."

The great work of the church is largely in the future. Our fathers and mothers worked and sacrificed, and we honor and admire them for their devotion. But they did not do our work for us. The great work of preaching the gospel to the world, of gathering the Saints into branches and groups where they may be properly developed under wise pastors, of gathering them to Zion and there working out the Zionic order of things spiritual and temporal—all that and more remains to be done. The time is all too short.

No one can afford to say, "Lord, I have done enough. I will do no more." Rather wait for the Lord to say, "Son, you have done enough. I ask no more."

The monthly priesthood meeting at Independence the first Sunday in May was one of the best ever held in point of attendance and spirituality. It was something of a revival. The determination of the missionaries present, apostles and seventies, the pastors and visiting officers, and the bishops and other financial agents seemed to be to go forward with redoubled energy.

There is no reason why there should not be a revival, both financial and spiritual. Let us put the past out of mind for a time and with courage and hope move out upon the work of the year, praying and working for more unity and divine guidance and blessing. If we will do this and do our part faithfully, the Lord will surely respond and keep his promises touching Zion and her children.

The exact allocation of some of the States may be determined in council later. It is not advisable to draw too hard and fast geographical lines, and the Twelve should be so situated that they may be able to respond to calls where necessary, and so that if necessity requires there can be a shifting of fields during the year.

We bespeak for these men the confidence and support of the Saints.

Third International Young People’s Convention

The third Young People’s Convention will be held at Lamoni, Iowa, June 4 to 14. The plans for this convention, and consequently advertising and publicity, have been delayed by the General Conference and other circumstances beyond our control. We are now asking that the readers of the HERALD will do everything in their power to help us make up for lost time. With but one month remaining, we must work hard and fast. We are sure that those who are acquainted with the work of the first two conventions will need no further inducement than this simple request.

The church now faces opportunities and responsibilities which are greater than at any time in its history. We must now have an army of trained and consecrated workers in every department. In arranging the convention program, we have had these needs in mind; consequently we have arranged a large number of highly specialized courses. These courses will be taught by the ablest teachers available, our aim being to send back to the districts and branches leaders who are qualified to go to work with enthusiasm and intelligence.

As will be observed below, the courses this year are being grouped under departments, each department being under the direction of a well-qualified individual. Under the director in each department will be several teachers as stated above, the best available.

The following courses have already been provided:

Special Conference of the Lamoni Stake

Elder Cyril Wight has tendered his resignation as president of the Lamoni Stake. This step is taken that he may spend a year or more in secular work in an effort to relieve himself of certain financial burdens. Bishop Albert Carmichael having been called to the Presiding Bishopric, there is a further vacancy in the stake organization. Hence the Presidency has called a special conference of the Lamoni Stake to convene at Lamoni, Sunday, May 17, 1925, at 10 o'clock. At that time the Stake Presidency and Bishopric will be reorganized.

New K L D S Station to Broadcast Midnight Test Program

Everyone interested in broadcasting will welcome the midnight test program from K L D S next Tuesday morning, May 12, 12 (midnight) until 2 a.m. Transmission during the first hour will be on the old wave length, 268 meters, but at 1 a.m. the wave will be raised to 441 meters.

Special permission from the Government has been obtained to test on the higher wave length between midnight and 10 a.m., these hours being practically free from all regular broadcasting.

This special test will be conducted to give all radio fans a good opportunity to tune for K L D S at a time when there should be little if any interference from other stations.

The power used during the test will be 500 watts or possibly higher. It is likely that some experimental changes will be made in the amplifier and the modulator equipment, reports on which, if noted, will be appreciated. In fact, reports are requested from all who listen, so that those in charge of the station can get as much information as possible from the test.

A similar unannounced test conducted at midnight, April 26, brought many reports from all over the country, including the Pacific Coast.

In this connection, west coast listeners should listen from 10 p.m. to midnight (May 11) Pacific time. They will probably experience some interference at 268 meters. Those using mountain time will tune in at 11 p.m. (May 11). Our eastern friends had better go to bed early and set the alarm clock for 1 a.m., Tuesday morning. They should have no interference from other stations.

Tell your radio friends about this test, and ask them to report results to K L D S, Independence, Missouri.

ARTHUR B. CHURCH.

Forty years ago there were but two schools in this country for prospective teachers of physical training. To-day there are more than a dozen special schools of this kind, and 55 colleges and universities are giving courses leading to a degree in this subject, according to the United States Bureau of Education.

A Saint

BY CHARLES FRY

If you can bow before your God
With humble, contrite heart;
And diligently seek his aid,
To help you do your part;
If you can search his holy word,
With truth yourself acquaint;
And live to learn, and labor on—
You are indeed a Saint.

If you can keep the narrow way,
A-leading on to God;
When friends all turn the other way,
To walk the world's high road;
If you can keep your heart aright,
When others weary, faint;
And live to love, and labor on—
You are indeed a Saint.

If you can keep your temper sweet
When others rail or pout;
And still believe in God above,
When others turn to doubt;
If you can keep truth's lamp aglow,
To shine without restraint;
And live to love, and labor on—
You are indeed a Saint.

If you can crush within your soul
Ambition's selfish plea;
And make your will conform to God's—
Your works with his agree;
If you can down each fleshly lust,
And keep from every taint;
And live to love, and labor on—
You are indeed a Saint.

If you can stand when strong men fall,
And keep your faith intact;
And go in love to God in prayer,
When friends on you turn back;
If you can still press on toward
The goal without complaint;
And live to love, and labor on—
You are indeed a Saint.
The scripture lesson for the evening consists of extracts from three chapters of Nehemiah:

Then said I unto them, Ye see the distress that we are in, how Jerusalem lieth waste, and the gates thereof are burned with fire: come, and let us build up the wall of Jerusalem, that we be no more a reproach. Then I told them of the hand of my God which was good upon me; as also the king's words that he had spoken unto me. And they said, Let us rise up and build. So they strengthened their hands for this good work. But when Sanballat the Horonite, and Tobiah the servant, the Ammonite, and Geshem the Arabian, heard it, they laughed us to scorn, and despised us, and said, What is this thing that ye do? Will ye rebel against the king? Then answered I them, and said unto them, The God of heaven, he will prosper us; therefore we his servants will arise and build: but ye have no portion, nor right, nor memorial, in Jerusalem.—Nehemiah 2: 17-20.

So built we the wall; and all the wall was joined together unto the half thereof: for the people had a mind to work.—Nehemiah 4: 6.

Now it came to pass, when Sanballat, and Tobiah, and Geshem the Arabian, and the rest of our enemies, heard that I had builded the wall, and that there was no breach left therein; (though at that time I had not set up the doors upon the gates;) that Sanballat and Geshem sent unto me, saying, Come, let us meet together in some one of the villages in the plain of Ono. But they thought to do me mischief. And I sent messengers unto them, saying, I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down: why should the work cease, whilst I leave it, and come down to you? Yet they sent unto me four times after this sort; and I answered them after the same manner.—Nehemiah 6: 1-4.

This scripture brings to our mind one of the great events of the Israelite people and shows what can be accomplished by a united people following a leader who is inspired by a noble purpose. The story tells us of a man named Nehemiah. At the time the story begins, this Nehemiah was in Babylon. He was a Jewish man away from his home country, but because of loyal and faithful service he had found favor with the king. He was at this time cupbearer to the king. News is brought to his ears that his beloved home city, Jerusalem, is lying waste, and the walls thereof are broken down. It brings sorrow to his heart, and it brings him to his knees in prayer, and he pleads with God that he might be permitted to find such favor in the eyes of the king that the king would permit him to go back to Jerusalem and rebuild the city and the walls. So he went to the king and explained to him his desire, and the king hearkened to his request. It meant a lot to Nehemiah to leave the place where he was, for it meant that he would have to leave the old king who had been kind to him; he would have to leave the elegant and luxurious palace where he had been comfortable; he would have to go back to a work which would require much sacrifice and self-denial on his part and labor among a people who were bitter enemies of his own people. But Nehemiah had a dream that some day Jerusalem might be rebuilt and possibly be more beautiful than ever. So he goes back to Jerusalem; and after making a few preparations and observations, he calls his people together and delivers to them his message, telling them what his desire, his hope, his ambition is, explaining to them that the king is willing to assist; and they make up their minds they are going to accomplish what he wants them to do. So as the story just said, they built the walls of Jerusalem.

There are four factors in this story which, I believe, were largely responsible for their success. The first one is that their hands were strengthened for this good work. The second one is that the people had a mind to work. The third one is that when they were tempted and others from the outside tried to entice them from their work, they said, "We are doing a great work and will not come down." The fourth one is that knowing they were engaged in a good work they had the assurance that God would prosper them.

Now, I believe that story has a present-day application, and if we can bring something out of it in connection with the theme of the evening we shall be happy.

During the evenings we have been here, we have tried to send out the call of the church to youth. We have tried to show that the church is so situated that the great work of establishing Zion and the evangelization of the world devolves largely upon the youth of the present day. We shall consider tonight the answer—youth's answer—to the call of the church. I bid you keep in mind, young people, that this answer cannot be given when you go back home; that this answer must be given when you go back home; that this answer cannot be given in a few words; that this answer must be given in your everyday actions; that the answer to this call is the sum total of your acts in the affairs of men; and that the answer that you give must be made when you go back home and will take up your entire life in making it. So I am going to try to speak of a few things which I believe will reveal your answer to the call of the church.

One of the ways in which the answer to the call of the church will be revealed is in your business attitude. In other words, it means that in your business life you are giving a square deal, whether you are an employer or an employee. It means, too, that you will be faithful to your employer if you happen to be an employee. It means that, if you agree to do a certain amount of work for a certain amount of money, you will do that amount of work at least.

It means, too, that if you expect to progress you will do more than the amount of work agreed to for the amount of money that you receive, because you cannot expect more money unless you do enough work to entitle you to more money. It means, too, that in your business affairs you will be honest. You may think that this is immaterial, but I have been surprised to observe that some Latter Day Saints, very few I am thankful to say, think that sometimes little crooked methods are justifiable in business affairs. And then you will find employers who are crooked and will request of some young people that they assist them in their crookedness.

I remember one time just before the holidays. I was in the field, and I did not have any money, and I wanted to get some little things to send to my family. There were but two weeks before Christmas, and I thought I would pick up a job during the holidays. I took up the newspaper, and in examining it
I noticed an advertisement about like this: “I want an experienced salesman for the holiday season.”
Well, I was not an experienced salesman, but I thought I would apply. I went. The store happened to be a Jew store. I said to the man, “I came in response to the add I saw in the paper.” The proprietor said, “Are you an experienced salesman?” I said, “No, sir; I am not.” “Well,” he said, “I am sorry, but I want an experienced salesman.” I started out the door. “Wait a minute,” he cried, “you look pretty good. You are honest. You tell the truth. Lots of men come in here and untruthfully say they are experienced salesmen. You come and tell us you are not an experienced salesman. I think I give you a trial.” So he gave me a trial. A few days after that it happened that I was substituting for one of the salesmen who had gone out to lunch.
His stand was just across the aisle from my employer’s stand. I took the position, and soon a man entered the door and came up to me and said, “Do you have any blue overalls here?” I said, “No, sir; but we have some khaki ones.” After the customer had departed without buying the overalls, the proprietor came to me and said, “My, my, my, young man! you don’t want to tell them we ain’t got nothing. Tell them you think we have upstairs. Get them to go upstairs, and maybe they will take something else.”
I looked at him, and from the way I looked it evidently came to his mind that he had hired me on the strength of the fact that I told the truth, and he qualified his statement by saying, “You know you don’t have to tell a lie, but don’t tell them the truth.”
That is what I mean when I say that some employers will try to get you to lower your standard of honesty.

But, young men and young women, as you go back home the church is calling you to be honest in your business affairs; to give a square deal, whether employer or employee.

Another way in which your answer to the call of the church will be revealed is in your moral conduct.
In this day sin is painted in beautiful colors. It apppears harmless upon the surface; but underneath it is full of poison, and if we indulge in these things they will be the death of our ambitions and hopes and character. It is always best, you know, not to take the first step.

I have in mind a certain family that followed the stage. It was the work of the women of this family to appear before the footlights handling serpents.
Finally there came into the family a very beautiful little girl. From childhood she was fascinated by the work of her mother as she handled the serpents and played with them before the audience, and she could be often found hovering about the place where the serpents were kept. The mother, foreseeing that the child would be very strong in this work, gave to the child a small snake for herself. The child fairly worshiped this snake. In time the snake grew to be quite a large serpent, a monster; the girl grew to be a very beautiful maiden, and she learned also to ap-ppear before the footlights and fascinated large audiences with her exhibitions. In order that the scene might be more effective, the stage manager arranged at the back of the stage a miniature jungle from which the girl was wont to call the snake. One night the snake did not respond to the call. The setting on the stage seemed to awaken within him the demon that he was. She called again. Finally the snake rushed out upon the stage and thrust his massive body upon the girl and twined himself around the girl’s body, and there before the horrified eyes of the vast audience he crushed the girl to death. What should the girl have done? She should have killed the snake when it was small. That same thing applies to the evils of this world that are facing our young people. As they go back home they will find crossing their pathway these apparently small serpents, but if they play with them and hold them to their bosoms they will find that they will grow to be great monsters and in time will crush the very virtue out of them.

A traveler once went to Niagara Falls, and there he saw an eagle feasting upon the carcass of a sheep which was encased in a cake of ice. It was floating down towards the falls. Occasionally the eagle would lift his head and look towards the falls, seeming to say, I know it is there, but I have plenty of time. In time I will lift my wings and soar out of danger. Finally when it got close to the falls and spread its wings to fly away, alas, it found to its sorrow that its feet had frozen to the ice, and as a consequence it could not lift its feet and finally went over the falls to its death.

Very often we find young people who are in a position similar to that of the eagle. They feast upon the lusts of the flesh and indulge in the things which are destructive. They see the danger ahead, but they think, "Oh, I have plenty of time." But finally when they reach the danger point they discover they are bound to the habits of the past. Their will has become paralyzed, and as a consequence they are doomed to go over the falls of sin and disgrace. So the better thing is not to indulge in them at all; to try to keep apart from that which would develop habits which would bind them to sin.

Sometimes in seeking to live good moral lives, it is necessary for us to have the courage of our convictions, even in the face of ostracism from society. You perhaps have heard of that man, Tom Brombey, who was with Admiral Dewey in the battle of Manila. There was being given a banquet in honor of the hero of Manila, and Tom Brombey was there. The leading social group of the place was having this banquet. The time came for the drinking of the champagne, and when that time came Brombey hesitated a moment but finally stood up and said, "Ladies and gentlemen, I cannot drink this wine. I trust you will not consider it a breach of etiquette, but I prefer, if you please, to drink just water," and he sat down. There was not a glass of wine touched at that table that night. That was one of the greatest sermons ever preached for prohibition. Tom Brombey said afterwards that during that moment he burned up more nervous energy than during all the fighting of the fleet at Manila, but he had the courage of his convictions.

So, young people, as you go back home, one of the ways you will be answering the call of the church will be in your moral conduct from day to day.

Another way in which your answer will be revealed will be your attitude towards your home life. It is the duty of every young person to assume a certain amount of responsibility of the home. It is the duty of every member of the family to radiate a certain amount of cheer and optimism to make that home pleasant and happy and the association sweet. If you are answering the call of the church, you will do that very thing, because the church calls you to do that.

There are some here who are older, who may have some children of their own. As they go back home, in answer to the call of the church they should seek to develop in their home a spirit of companionship, which is sadly lacking in many homes. I mean by that, there should be between the parents and the children a bond of love, a bond of companionship. They should be pals to each other. I look back with great pleasure to my own home and the influence that my mother wielded upon me because of the tie of association which existed between us. She was one of those mothers who had the spirit of youth. She did not say to me, "You stay out of the parlor; that is for visitors." I was welcome in any room in the house. Further than that, mother said to me, "Bring your friends to the house. Let them play here if they want to. There is the parlor; there is the piano; help yourselves, just so you don't break up the furniture." I did that. I brought my friends to my own home, and they learned to call my mother "ma," the same as I did. I am grateful to-night to mother for that fact. It developed within my heart such a love for home that I could never forget it. I think, then, that is the spirit that should be developed by the parents and the children. My room was fixed up fully as nice as my sister's. There was no distinction.

Then, too often there is not that spirit of companionship between father and son. In my Sunday school class in a certain town, I had a young lad about the age of fifteen or sixteen, full of pep, the best pupil I had in my class. He could answer any question right off the bat, but he had plenty of time for mischief, and he was constantly sticking a pin in the next fellow, or punching him, or something else. Some said he should not be in Sunday school, or he should be in a class by himself. I said, "If I can direct the energy of that boy in the right channels he will be the biggest one in the class; he will amount to something. He has just got some energy that ought to be directed." Because of that attitude towards him, he liked me. His mother observed that. One day she came to me and said, "Brother Martin, I wish you would talk to my boy, Jimmie. He has got a notion he wants to go away and leave us." I asked her what that was for, and she said, "His father doesn't seem to take much interest in him." I said to her, "His father is an elder in the church, isn't he?" And she replied, "Yes, he is; but he doesn't seem to sense his responsibility." It finally turned out that I had an interview with Jimmie, and in the course of our conversation I said, "Jimmie, I understand you are going to pull up stakes." He said, "Yes, I am." "Why? What seems to be the trouble?" I asked him. "Oh, they are all old fogies around here. They don't seem to take an interest in a fellow. They don't have any interest in what a fellow wants to do. Now, there is dad, for instance; time and again I have gone to him with my problems, but he has his nose in a newspaper, and he constantly puts me aside and says, 'Don't bother me now.' It has been that way all the time. I can't stand it. I am going to dig out."
Who was to blame? That father was an elder in the church. He went to church regularly, but all the time he was missing his opportunity. He lost his place in that boy's heart because he was not a pal to him. The boy's problems seemed to be simple to him, but to the boy they were mighty big ones. The father did not sense the significance of the bond which should have bound them together. The boy went away.

That is what I mean, friends, you that have children. When you answer the call of the church, it means that when you go back home there shall be developed between you and your boy or between you and your girl such a bond of friendship and love that when they have problems they will not take them to somebody else; they will take them to you. And you are the one to whom they should take them.

Another way in which your answer to the call of the church will be revealed is in your loyalty to your home branch and the work thereof. It means that on Wednesday nights you will not be at the moving picture theater when there is prayer meeting on at church. These things may seem small, but, after all, that is one of the best ways of determining how much religion you have. When efforts are being made to build up the spiritual strength of the people and we turn aside from those opportunities and select the things of the world, it means that our spiritual standard is not very high. That is one of the ways. When you are asked to teach a Sunday school class; when you are asked to do something else, perhaps in the Department of Recreation and Expression, it means that if you are going to answer the call of the church you are going to do your part and help make it a success.

Another way is that you will respond to the temporal law of the church. It is surprising to know how many of the young people think that law does not apply to them. One was written the word Tithing, and on the other the word Savings. She taught him that whenever he got a dime, the first penny should go into the box on which was written the word, Tithing. That made a profound impression upon him. It was habitual that whenever he got any money one tenth of it always went into the box. Even in after years, when he got out into the world and did things he was ashamed of, he always sent back one tenth of his increase to his mother and asked her to send it to headquarters. Even though he forgot some of the precepts that had been taught to him in other lines, he never forgot his tithing. To-day that man is a missionary.

I think we could save lots of contention, lots of controversy over the question of temporalities, if we would teach the children to obey that law and explain to them the meaning of it. So, if we are going to answer the call of the church, that is another way in which we shall do it.

It means, too, that we shall not use this argument, which is frequently heard, “Well, I don’t like the way they are handling money up there at headquarters. I am not going to send any money up there to be used in that way.” When you stand before the judgment bar of God, the Lord will not ask you how so-and-so used the money, or what was done with the money, but he will ask you how you responded to your part of the law. He will say, “What does my law say? It says one tenth of the increase is tithing. Did you obey that law?” And you will have to answer, “No.” Friends, other men’s failures will never save you. You will not have to answer for what some one else did. You will have to answer for how you obey the law. So will each one of us. So, young people, in answering the call of the church, that is one way in which you will reveal your answer, by your response to the temporal law.

Another way will be by your service to your neighbors. A friendly visitor once found a family of her neighborhood in destitute circumstances. There were quite a number of children in the family. The father was addicted to drink. The burden of the home fell upon the shoulders of the mother. This friendly visitor, observing these conditions, went to that home one day with a cheerful countenance and a basket of vegetables upon her arm. She won the friendship and love of those people. One day when she thought it an opportune time she asked one of the little girls if she would not go to Sunday school with her the next Sunday. They went together. The little girl liked it very well, and when she went home she went to her mother and began to cry. Her mother asked her what was the matter and she said, “I wish we were Christians. Those people seem to be so happy. Those people seem to have something we can’t have.” It made the mother sad. The next time the friendly visitor came she asked her about it, so the friendly visitor had an opportunity to tell the story of Christ to that family. The mother and the other children went to Sunday school and to church. In time it made such a change in that home that the father felt it and became ashamed of his life, and in time he, too, overcame the drink habit, and that whole family came into the church. That was the result of doing some service in the neighborhood. That is a duty and a pleasure which devolves upon all. If, then, we are going to answer the call of the church, the church wants us to do that kind of service.

This brings us, then, to the conclusion that some of the ways in which we as the youth of the church are going to answer to the call of the church shall be in our business attitude, in our moral conduct, in our home life, in our loyalty to duty—the duties in our church including the temporal law and in our service to our neighbors. These are only some of the ways in which we shall give our answer. Our answer shall be the sum total of the actions of our life.

Coming now to the story of Nehemiah and his people: What were the four factors which contributed to their success? First of all they strengthened their hands for that good work. You young people have come to the convention here to strengthen your hands for the good work before this church, and day after day you are becoming better qualified and made more efficient as the result of the splendid class work you are engaging in, and from the other activities of this convention. You are going home strengthened for the work that lies before us. Then, as the result of this convention, there is developing within these young people a mind to work. Anyone who could sit under the influence of the spirit which is in the class work, in the prayer services, and the other activities of this convention, without developing a mind to work must be mentally dead. Thirdly, you are going to be engaged in such a great work that you are not going to have time to come down from that great work to the cheap levels of the world. You are going to be so busily and earnestly engaged in the work of establishing Zion that you will not come down from that standard. Again, knowing that you are engaged in a mighty work, you have the assurance that God is going to prosper you. He will prosper his people when they apply these principles to their lives.

I like to tell the story of a shepherd in Scotland and a Collie dog as an illustration of the devotion that I think our young people will give to the work of this church. This shepherd used his dog to help gather the sheep. On stormy days, if he returned and discovered some sheep not in the fold, he would send the dog out after them. One night during a storm he observed that two sheep were not in the fold. He went out to the barn where the dog kept her family to get Collie. He held up two fingers and said, “Go.” But this time she complained. She looked up into his face as much as to say, “I have never failed before; can’t I stay this time?” But he only continued to hold up his fingers and point to the door and say, “Go.” With a fond look at her family, Collie went out the door into the storm. The shepherd went to his bed. About midnight he heard Collie scratching at the door. He went out to the barn where he found one of the sheep. He went to Collie again and holding up one finger said, “Collie, go.” Collie complained more than ever, being tired and worn out from her work, but he only continued to say, “Go.” So with a farewell look at her family Collie again went out into the night. The shepherd again went to his bed. About three or four o’clock in the morning, he awakened to the feeble scratching at the door. He went out, and there was Collie with the last sheep. He took the sheep and put it into the fold. Then he remembered that dogs are very sensitive to rebuke or praise, so he went back to the barn to praise Collie. There she was with her family. He said, “Collie.” But this time Collie did not look up. He called again. No response. He walked to where she was and pushed her over, and there lay Collie dead. She had given her life for the sheep for the sake of her master. That actually occurred in the hills of Scotland and is evidence of a dog’s love for her master.

Friends, young people, that is the kind of love that I think will characterize the lives of our young people; that regardless of the sacrifice, regardless of the calls that may come, if they are at all reasonable, we shall respond to the call of the Master and go forth for the sake of the sheep in answer to the shepherd, whether that be in our home branch or whether we are asked to go across the sea. And we shall say, “Yes, Lord, here am I; use me.” That is the way, friends, you can answer the call of the church. Be ready at all times for any task for the sake of the Master.

A Dedication

Thou, whose unmeasured temple stands
Built over earth and sea,
Accept the walls that human hands
Have raised, O God, to thee.

And let the Comforter and Friend,
The Holy Spirit, meet
With those who here in worship bend
Before thy mercy-seat.

May they who err be guided here
To find the better way;
And they who mourn, and they who fear,
Be strengthened as they pray.

May faith grow firm, and love grow warm,
And hallowed wishes rise,
While round these peaceful walls, the storm
Of earth-born passion dies. —W. C. Bryant.
Recreation on the Sabbath Day

BY S. A. BURGESS

There was a time when children were compelled to attend services all day Sunday to their great weariness. A natural reaction resulted, especially as the church services were not at all adapted to the understanding of children or even the adolescent. To-day we are confronted with a different situation. To-day the problem is the grave tendency of young people to make of Sunday a day of pleasure. We were going to say a "holiday," but a holiday is basically a holy day, and they do not make of Sunday a holy day, but to the contrary neglect the service of the church and all religious activities. They make it a day primarily for amusement, and so Monday morning finds them jaded and played out.

A Holy Day

Yet the discussion of Sunday amusement continues, even though any discussion of Sunday amusement directly is dealing with a secondary and not a primary question; for after all the question is, What is the real purpose of the day? and that is plainly and unequivocally answered in the word of God. The rule or law is laid down without equivocation. The Old Testament clearly states, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," On this day rest. A good concordance gives a long list of passages to this effect. Special reference may well be called to the promise in the prophecy of Isaiah (58: 13, 14). So far as the Old Testament record is concerned, there can be no doubt. It was the day of the Lord, the day of worship, especially set aside.

In the New Testament there are a few clear statements which sometimes are quoted and sometimes misquoted. Jesus declared himself the Lord of the Sabbath. He plucked corn on the Sabbath; he healed the sick on the Sabbath day. He taught that it is right to do good and necessary service on this day, for the Sabbath is made for man, not man for the Sabbath. (See Matthew 12: 1; 12: 10-12; Mark 2: 23, 24; 3: 2-4; Luke 4: 16-31; 6: 1-9; 13: 10-17; John 5: 8, 18; 7: 22, 23; 9: 15, 16.) Then in modern revelation one of the clearest statements is Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2-4. Every day should be a day of worship, but this the Lord's Day should be especially so. "Thou shalt do no other thing on this the Lord's day." This whole passage will repay a re-reading, so is repeated here:

And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day; for verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High; nevertheless thy vows shall be offered up in righteousness on all days, and at all times; but remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy sacraments, unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord. And on this day thou shalt do none other thing, only let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart, that thy fasting may be perfect; or in other words, that thy joy may be full. Verily this is fasting and prayer; or, in other words, rejoicing and prayer. And inasmuch as ye do these things, with thanksgiving, with cheerful hearts, and countenances; not with much laughter, for this is sin, but with a glad heart and a cheerful countenance; verily I say, that inasmuch as ye do this the fullness of the earth is yours.

Again Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4 states clearly, "The inhabitants of Zion shall also observe the Sabbath day to keep it holy," and 119: 7:

The saints are to observe the first day of the week, commonly called the Lord's day, as a day of rest: as a day of worship, as given in the covenants and commandments. And on this day they should refrain from unnecessary work; nevertheless, nothing should be permitted to go to waste on that day, nor should necessary work be neglected. Be not harsh in judgment, but merciful in this, as in all other things. Be not hypocrites nor of those who make a man an offender for a word.

From the above it is apparent that we cannot take "Thou shalt do no other thing" in the very strictest possible meaning of the word, as necessary labor may be performed, and it is well to do good. Nor should we make a man an offender for a word. Christianity is not in the making of a lot of technical rules, changing discipline to rote, and thereby defeating the spiritual purpose of the law of God. Right intents, right habits, right attitudes, the desire of the heart to do the will of God, is the essential basis of the Christian dispensation, not the carrying out of certain overt acts.

But this fact does not change the clear law of God nor the purpose of the day. It is primarily a day of worship, a holy day to the Lord. This does not mean simply attending the church services. We may do that and not worship. It does mean carrying out the purposes and spirit of worship. Religion is, after all, the greatest recreative force in the world. The day is therefore recreative in the best sense of the term. It is a day for drawing near to God and evaluating our life as a whole, and considering how we can do and live better, offering our prayers and oblations to the Most High, not in sadness but with joy; not with excessive laughter (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 18, 37), but nevertheless with joy, so as to receive the real benefit of the day.

Doctor Harrington recently emphasized for nervous and other diseases the great value of religion. The day was made for man that he might worship God and feel under him the great eternal arm, that he might worship God and feel himself akin with the Infinite; that he might worship God and realize the divine spark within him to do and to dare great things.
A Day of Rest

But the day is also a day of rest. It is recreative in that sense of the term. We never understood this so clearly as after listening to a lecture by Doctor Cowles at Clark University. He drew a series of horizontal lines, stating that when man got below 80 per cent of efficiency, he became nervous; below 60 per cent, melancholy; below 40 per cent, mania set in; below 20 per cent chronic mania and death. A man goes to work on Monday morning and uses up a certain amount of energy. By night he is below his normal figure of the morning. He has a good night's sleep and regains much of the ground, but not all. Each morning he is a little farther behind, so that Sunday morning finds him several per cent below Monday morning, and in fact below each of the preceding days. But Sunday being a day of rest, he recovers so that by Monday morning he has again returned to his 100 per cent efficiency. The Sabbath was made for man as a day for rest from his labors, especially from unnecessary labors; a time to recuperate, to re-create through religion.

Evidently any form of amusement which detracts from the purpose of the day is not good. Any form of amusement which lessens spirituality and the spirit of worship is not good. Recreation, as now indulged in by the young people, which leaves them exhausted Monday morning, defeats the very purpose of the day, and those who would quote "The Sabbath was made for man" by way of excusing this abuse, grossly misconstrue the text, for it was made for man for rest and worship, thus for a time to recuperate, to re-create through religion.

Personally the writer would suggest that any activity which does not defeat these primary purposes is not bad and is probably good. Playing baseball on Sunday has the objectionable feature that it tends to detract from the spiritual attitude; that it is violent in its form; and that those who play baseball on Sunday not only are as a rule unspiritual, but that their profanity, especially in the cities, is a noteworthy factor of Sunday baseball.

It is true that some can enter the woods and the great temples of God, though alone, and feel the spirit of worship; just as it is true that some can enter the cornfield and can there do their studying and do not need a school. But the facts are that not one in a thousand does go out to view nature on Sunday in a sense of worship, just as very few will apply themselves continuously to study outside of the routine of school.

The Sabbath Day is the Day of the Lord. It belongs primarily to his service. Neither psychologically, pedagogically, nor in any other way does man suffer from the necessity to break the great truths of the revelations of God. The day is a day of worship and of joy, a day of rest and of recreation.

Facts About the Bible.—No. 11

By A. B. Phillips

After Palestine the most important country to students of the Bible is doubtless that of Babylonia. The smaller kingdom of Babylonia existed for ages before the establishment of the great Babylonian empire, and from recent explorations discoveries have been made that are of remarkable interest, showing dynasties existing in the time of the biblical Ur (Genesis 11:19), and tracing back its rulers for more than a thousand years before that time.

The name of Babylonia was derived from its ancient capital, Babil, which in Hebrew is Babel, though it became known to the Greeks and Romans as Babylon, a name that was also used in scripture for the whole country at times. Many records have been found that are not yet fully deciphered, but from the history thus far determined it appears that the cities of Nippur and Lagash dominated much of central and southern Babylonia about 4,000 years B.C. and earlier. As early as 3800 B.C. Palestine had been invaded by Sargon of Akkad, the ruler of Babylonia, four invasions being recorded during his reign, when all Babylonia was united in one kingdom.

Foundation Stone of Naram-Sin (3700 B.C.)

The inscriptions of Nebuchadrezzar show that he was a descendant of the great Naram-Sin, son of Sargon, who ruled about 3700 B.C., and later became known as the god of Agade, a form of Akkad, and was called "king of the four zones." The culture of this period may be inferred from the fact that marvelous examples of gem cutting have been found recently. An inscribed Foundation Stone of Naram-Sin has also been discovered, the characters of which are beautifully executed.
It is believed to have been some time after the reign of Naram-Sin that the seat of the empire was removed to Isin, and to Ur. At the latter place two Semitic dynasties existed as early as about 3000-2400 B.C. During this period Sumuabi, which is interpreted “Shem is my father,” ruled for about fourteen years in northern Babylonia, the southern part having been taken by the Elamites, whose capital was at Larsa, the biblical Ellasar (Genesis 14:1), over which Eri-Aku or Arloch (Genesis 14:1) was king.

Various other biblical names are identified with the names found on the recently discovered inscriptions of Babylonia, among which are Eden, Erech, Shinar, Amraphel, and Nebuchadrezzar. The records tend to show that early connection existed between the ancestors of Abraham and some of the old Babylonians, which may in part account for the scriptural names that have corresponded with names on the inscriptions, as the history of subsequent times tended to preserve them. In the arts, sciences, and agriculture of this early time we find revealed a wonderful development, in some respects second to none of the centuries that followed, and on which the later peoples in a great measure built.

The Old Egyptian Civilization

The peculiar interest attaching to Egypt is not alone due to the period of Hebrew occupation there, but also to the undeniable influence that from an early time was exerted by Egypt upon surrounding nations, and to the remarkable remains of her splendid civilization that have been found in profusion at various points, from which many events and facts of great importance have been ascertained. Some of these have had an important bearing upon the history of other nations, including the land of Palestine.

The Latin >Egyptius, derived from the Greek, is the name of an ancient Egyptian king from whom the country appears to have been named. In the hieroglyphics the name is Kem, meaning black. In the Bible the name that is translated Egypt more than five hundred times is Mitsrayim, but in a few instances we find the name of Mizraim thus rendered. The desert nature of the country is shown from the fact that of its area, consisting of about 400,000 square miles, only about one fifteenth part is fertile, the rest being desert. It was divided into Lower and Upper Egypt from the earliest known times, the latter being at times called Pathros in Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel.

We derive our information concerning Egypt mostly from Egyptian, Babylonian, Assyrian, and Greek sources, besides the biblical references. The antiquity of the country is a matter of uncertainty, being traced in the Egyptian records through four periods that embraced thirty-one dynasties variously estimated to cover from two to five thousand years. But before the beginning of the first dynasty Egypt had been settled for a long time, though the whole country was not under a single ruler in the earliest prehistoric period, so far as known. It was during the fourth dynasty that the Great Pyramids were built, but the so-called step-pyramid of Sakkara was built some time before this.

Pharaoh and Later Rulers

During the thirteenth and fourteenth dynasties, variously assigned to periods between the eighteenth and thirtieth centuries B.C., the Hyksos, presumably from Palestine and Syria, came into possession of Egypt, and remained until about the eighteenth dynasty. From them came the use of various Semitic words in the Egyptian language. In the eighteenth dynasty reigned some rulers of great ability, including Rameses II, who is believed to have been the Pharaoh of the Oppression, though this is uncertain. His colossal statue of himself at Thebes, and the store cities of Pithom and Raamses (see Exodus 1:11), were constructed during his long reign of sixty-seven years.

After many centuries of remarkable history Egypt was brought under the dominion of the Persians. Some think this was in fulfillment of the word prophesied by Ezekiel (30:13), that Egyptian rulership should cease. At any rate, from the time when Artaxerxes III of Persia conquered Egypt, it has never been ruled over by a native Egyptian, though having short periods of independence. From the time of Alexander there arose the historic Hellenic culture that Greek officials fostered, and which became an important influence in the civilization of other nations surrounding them.

From this brief sketch, more fully detailed in the new work, Helps to Bible Study, it will be seen that recent discoveries are connecting the names, periods, and events mentioned in the Bible with the records that these ancient peoples have left behind them in commemoration of their remarkable past. The wealth of information already available is astonishing, but is only a beginning of what will doubtless be unfolded to us when the records and inscriptions recently discovered have all been deciphered. Both Babylonia and Egypt are yielding riches of this character that no Bible student can afford to be ignorant of, the value of which is daily becoming more and more apparent.
Problems in the Primary Department

BY MRS. A. A. JOHNSON

Paper read at the officers' and teachers' meeting of the local Sunday School and Religious Departments at Sioux City, Iowa, February 25, 1925.

People of all religions and of no religion have been forced to note that our progress depends largely upon the attitude of our young people concerning religion.

We are told by juvenile judges that boys who go to Sunday school regularly do not come before them, and judges paroling a boy usually demand that he go to Sunday school during the term of his parole. A juvenile judge in one of our eastern cities recently made the statement that "of the four thousand boys who had been brought before him, only three were Sunday school members at the time the crime was committed." In fifty-five per cent of the homes in this great land of ours, there is no religion.

There are many groups of people to-day who are striving to bring the world to a saner, healthier, and more wholesome outlook on life. Many are preaching the gospel of a cleaner life and a less selfish one. These groups are undoubtedly doing a great work in cleaning up the Nation physically and morally, and it is only fair that we should acknowledge the improvement they are making in helping people to live on a higher plane.

While we as Latter Day Saints are grateful for this, we realize that good health and good morals are not sufficient; they will not carry us far enough. We must give to the child of to-day something finer and stronger than these. We owe to the child a thorough training in religion in order that he may have the opportunity of realizing the best that is in him. It is our duty to teach him the great truths of our religion; to bring to his life a knowledge of the experiences in the lives of noble men and women of the past, to provide him with opportunities for service and to help him render this service.

The Sunday school of to-day is the church of to-morrow, and the primary department is the foundation of the Sunday school. There are many children who do not attend Sunday school. We learned from a report brought back by a delegate to the General Convention of the Parent-Teachers' Association that only one child in seven attends Sunday school. Where are the other six?

A child is naturally religious and continues to be religious in increasing capacity if continually and properly nurtured in religious education.

This kind of religious growth is more permanent than that of a sudden nature. Man's nature cannot be transformed over night. We can expect more permanent results by nurturing the child steadily than by letting him become steeped in sin, and then by spending many dollars in missionary funds to convert him from that in which he has schooled himself during the years of impressionable childhood and early manhood.

When we stop to think of what depends on the primary department, we should not hesitate to give our best to keep the interest of the children we have and to encourage others to take up the work.

Whenever it is possible, we should have teachers trained in primary work to teach in this department especially.

The aim of the primary grade is to teach the first principles of the gospel, by telling stories from the Bible. We should encourage and stimulate our primary children to work well with other people in activities that are worth while. One of the great needs of children of the primary age is to learn to work together, to be helpful to one another, to their parents, and to their friends.

Sunday school home work should be encouraged by the parents. Encourage children to talk over their Sunday school lesson. A good time to do this would be on Monday, during family worship. Children are very fond of anything that is the product of their own hands. So we have the handwork, which is used only to supplement the lesson and impress an important thought. It should not be made too prominent, but the teacher should see that some part of the lesson is touched by it.

The deepest and most lasting work will be done in the homes, and however fine the work of the Sunday school may be, it can only supplement the teachings of the family.

But we want to make the work of the Sunday school as effective as possible. In order to do this, it is vital that the officers and teachers have the active support of the parents. We need their prayers and their presence.

The District President

BY J. E. VANDERWOOD

In this treatise the writer sets a pattern by which the office of district president may be properly magnified.

The work of the district president differs somewhat from that of the missionary, while in many respects it is similar. The very nature of the office makes the district president a pastor to the entire membership of his district. Not only should he care for and feed the organized branches in his district, but he should search out ways and means of instructing and stimulating the scattered members. This is one part of the work that has in a measure been overlooked by many of us; but it is worthy a little time and thought, and I urge that we should give this matter most serious consideration. For, if there is joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, surely there is joy also over one repentant person kept alive and growing intellectually and spiritually.

It is the task of the district president to feed the flock with the bread of life; to lead them to the Living Fountain, that they may drink. In other words, he is to enlarge their souls and cause them to get a clearer vision of life and its possibilities. To do this successfully he must acquire a Christlike disposition, for no one can give that which he does not possess. He must be kind and gentle with all men and in this way lead the erring to a better condition in life. He must learn to be a brother to the local ministry as well as to the membership. He must be awake to the best missionary opportunities and possibilities and be able to cooperate with the missionary arm of the church so as to be able to put over the missionary work in a successful way. But when the work of the missionary has ended, that of the district president has but fairly begun; for now he must feed the flock that has been gathered in. He is to take the new convert, the beginner, and develop him into a full-grown man in Christ Jesus.

That this work might most successfully be carried on, he should organize the local priesthood; get them so awakened and so organized that they will be able to work together systematically and efficaciously. He must enable them to coordinate their work; that is to say, they must so organize and systematize it that each man will understand his work and then push forward and do it.

Having succeeded in this he may with the cooperation of these local brethren profitably hold one or more good revival meetings in each branch during the year. This would have to be determined by the size of the district. In these revival meetings it should be his purpose to enable the membership to see that if we are to successfully carry out the program that is intrusted to the church we must make the Word flesh. That is to say, we must do more than preach, more than talk the message; we must vitalize it; we must live it; we must reflect the life of Christ in our attitude towards men and things about us. As the pastor, it is his task to enable the membership to acquire the very nature of the blessed Master, if he is to discharge his whole duty as a shepherd to the flock.

Now comes the problem of the isolated member. He should gain a knowledge of the whereabouts of the scattered ones, and after mailing them a general pastoral letter, he should organize this part of the work so as to write one personal letter to each isolated member in his district at least once a month. By this means each member in the district would receive twelve spiritual communications each year; thus they would not only be kept alive spiritually, but would come to realize fully that the church is profoundly interested in them, and that they must be interested in and concerned about the church. He should encourage the isolated members to keep in touch with the development of the church through the church papers, and in every possible way try to assist them in their study, reading, etc.; so that as they advance in years they may also advance in understanding and spirituality.

If he does this work, the district president will have little time for joy rides or trivial things; but in fully and methodically utilizing his time, he will teach his flock the value of time, and they will come to emulate him. Not only must a man inform himself, if he would teach thus, but he must learn to live close to God; he must strive daily to acquire the power of meekness, that he might properly instruct and uplift the flock that has been intrusted to his care. His is indeed an arduous task, for the fate of a whole district is quite largely left to his supervision and care. It is his most sacred privilege to lead the church to the feet of the Master, that there they may find the peace that alone can satisfy the soul and give them a hope with all who are sanctified.

BY MINNIE E. WARNOCK

Oh, God! When I behold the rising sun,
My knees incline to bend; mine eyes look up.
My heart, in renewed thoughts of reverence
Doth worship thee and marvel at thy power,
Thy faithfulness, thy goodness, and thy grace;
For I behold the emblem of thy glory
Bursting upon my enraptured vision—
The sun showing thy celestial splendor.

Like thy beneficence toward mankind,
Its penetrating rays dispel the night
And make the earth once more a gladsome place;
And fill her children's hearts with new-born hope;
And light and cheer and comfort and good health.
And all thy trees, they quiver with delight
As they reflect the glorious light of dawn,
And waking flowers, they lift their little heads,
And all thy wondrous vegetation seems revived
As it emerges from out the mists of night.

And the first soft twitterings of little birds!
How sweet and lovely are thy works, oh, Lord.
“All thy works praise thee, praise thee, oh, God.”
Oh, I thank thee that above all these
I have the gift of words to tell my joy—
The adoration that doth swell my soul,
When I do feel sweet nature's song of praise,
And see the signs that tell of thy great love.
And the soon coming of thy blessed Son.
Oh, the marvelous breaking of the day!
The rising of the glorious, glorious sun!
“All thy works praise thee, praise thee, oh, God!”

Welsh Saints Appreciate Book of Mormon

GILFACH GOCH, GLAMORGANSHIRE, WALES, April 16.—We are glad to report favorable prospects in this part of the Lord’s vineyard.

We were favored recently by visits from Elder H. R. Price of Llanelli, our district president and missionary, accompanied by Elder Abel Hall of Manchester. During their stay with us Brother Hall gave a series of lectures on the Book of Mormon, which were given a wonderful effect through the use of the stereopticon. The scenes portrayed were beautiful, showing the ruins of ancient America and specimens of curious workmanship which proved without a doubt the divinity of the Book of Mormon. We can well sing, “It is truth’s triumphal car.” We feel sure that this brother is one of God’s own messengers. He is the right man in the right place.

Our hearts have been stirred to their best aspirations, and we look forward with longing desire for such champions in the cause of truth.

Brother Hall is an eloquent speaker and holds the audience in awe. We can truly say, Like Paul of old, he has planted, sown, watered, and do our part in bearing the increase.

We will always have sweet recollections of the visit of our brothers, and we pray that God will continue to bless them in their efforts. We should like to see the Book of Mormon published in the Welsh language, and also Welsh missionaries sent to Wales—men like Captain Dan of olden times, fired with zeal for the work—who would arouse Wales from her slumber and cause her to arise in the strength of our Lord.

May God help us all to do our part in bearing the standard of love and liberty.

Activities of the Department of Women

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO, April 25.—At this time the activities of the Department of Women stand out in the branch as of most importance.

The Department of Women is supervised by Sister R. J. Wilcox, and associated with her are most of the women of the branch.

Since the first of January they have purchased fixtures and some necessities for the basement and have them almost paid for. They are at present making an initial quilt containing two hundred and forty names, eight names to a block. The blocks are so arranged as to form the spokes of a wheel. After its completion it will be sold, and the money will be used in the interest of the work.

An effort is being made to put on a play entitled “The flower of the home,” by members of the Saint Thomas church, to be given in the basement of our church, proceeds to be divided according to agreement.

Sister J. L. Mortimer is at present in the hospital for a slight operation. The Saints sincerely hope for her early recovery so she may again enjoy her activities with the Saints. We ask prayers in her behalf.

“Father Terry” Again in Zion

After bidding farewell to the precious flock in El Reno on the last day of March, my companion and I sped on our way Zionward and after a pleasant journey of three hundred and eighty-one miles arrived in Kansas City, the Heart of America, where we were met by Brother and Sister McKeveit, under whose hospitable roof we found a welcome.

We were loath to leave the little flock in El Reno, but a combination of circumstances seemed to demand it. We learned to love them very dearly and hope the loving Shepherd may care for them and keep them in the fold.

It is a great pleasure to follow in the steps of a laborer about whom one never hears a word of criticism, but only words of commendation and praise. Such was our happy lot at El Reno in following Brother Hubert Case.

Since returning to Independence we have passed through the very eventful experiences of the General Conference. We are pleased to state that our confidence in the great work and the integrity of the chief quorums is more firmly planted, and under added courage we press on and feel an additional urge to do more for the cause.

We were greatly delighted in meeting so many Saints of past associations—from Chicago to Seattle and San Francisco. Truly the precious gospel tie is sweeter than all others, and we find this tie very strongly manifest among the Saints.

By invitation we visited the Fourth Kansas City Branch and spoke to them from, “Run, speak to this young man.” It was boys’ day, and the services were in charge of “us boys.” A lad about twelve years of age offered the prayer and benediction, while another boy had charge. Of course the pastor, Elder Oliver Worden, was looking on and was the power behind the throne. There were about twenty-five boys on the platform. It was a pleasing service.

J. M. TERRY.

Union Branch at Clitherall

BATTLE LAKE, MINNESOTA, April 27.—Those returning from General Conference, namely Brother and Sister Almer Tucker, Sister Ethel Tucker, and Brother Lester Whiting, branch president, are well pleased with their conference experiences and with the results of the legislation of the church.

Some who did not attend subscribed for the Daily Herald and thus kept tab on conference activities. It is very gratifying to those who are isolated to see evidence of good feeling and friendliness even among those who differ in opinion. It is only in that spirit that the differences may in time be erased.

Owing to the rush of spring work, church services have not yet begun.

Good Prospects of an Ingathering

CROSS TIMBERS, MISSOURI, April 6.—We feel that we have a right to be proud of the little group of Saints here when we stop to consider the condition under which they have labored for so long. There is no branch here, and for years none holding the priesthood have lived in our midst. Sometimes months have elapsed between visits of elders, yet they have kept the Sunday school going, and now that conditions have changed some, we find them willing and anxious to come to the services to study and learn.

Some of the young men are taking hold of the work, and we are looking for some good workers among the young people in the near future.

Brother Haden was here for a week last fall and baptized six fine people, and as soon as he can return we believe there.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
will be a few more ready. We are happy in the glorious work and hope and pray for the onward march of the gospel. The Saints here were called to mourn March 29 to learn of the death of one of our beloved young men, Brother Archie Black. He had been a patient sufferer with what was supposed to be tuberculosis for several years. The last few months it was plain that he was losing ground each day. He was a patient sufferer, never complaining, and always thinking of the comfort of those around him. RALPH MURDOCK.

Expecting a Branch Organization

KENNETT, MISSOURI, April 27.—We rejoice in reading the testimonies of others to the divinity of this latter-day work and of the goodness of the heavenly Father to them. I have had many testimonies that this is the true church and believe that it will finally come out triumphant, clothed and prepared for Jesus Christ.

The isolated Saints realize very much the need of the gathering. Several families moved here from Louisiana, and Brother A. M. Baker came here in March and organized a Sunday school and selected a leader for the group. We are hopeful that soon we shall be organized into a branch. We have over sixty members, with seven holding the priesthood.

A Religio was organized last Saturday night, and those placed in charge began at once to make it a success. The Sunday school is doing good work. The prayer meetings are well attended by the young people, and they are taking part in bearing their testimonies. The local priesthood is doing well, and all manifest a desire to help with the cause of the Master.

For four or five months we had no services of any kind. Some of our boys were spending their spare time in town seeking the pleasures of the world. But now they are attending the services of the church. Our boys and girls must have entertainment, and we should provide for them as much as possible.

Our prayers are that Zion may be a reality. We hope to have Brother Baker with us soon. J. A. PHILLIPS.

Cherokee, Iowa

April 27.—We are very much pleased to hear the good reports from General Conference. We will be glad to welcome Brother F. T. Mussell back to our district again.

The weather has been ideal this spring, so our attendance at Sunday services has been excellent, and we are much encouraged over the work here. We are striving to keep our light shining before the world and trust some souls may be brought into the kingdom by our light.

Sunday school, under the direction of Brother Vernon Sponse, is growing, and interest is increasing every Sunday. Christmas offering already is about to pass the amount we raised last year, and we have only started to boost.

Brother W. A. T. Peterson and family of Albert City were visitors here Easter Sunday, and also on the 26th. The Sunday school presented a short program Easter morning, after which Brother William Shore, who has been sick for a long time, delivered an excellent sermon. Elder A. R. Crippen gave a fine sermon on the resurrection at the evening service.

Many of the Saints have been victims of the influenza the past month. The elders have answered many calls for administration, and we are pleased to report that all who placed their case in the hands of the Lord were blessed.

Grandma Yarrington was eighty years of age April 20. The Saints remembered her with many greetings and flowers for the occasion. Sister Ellen Bruce, who is past eighty, is very ill and is not expected to recover.

Elders A. R. Crippen, William Shore, and J. T. Spence were absent from all services April 19 on account of illness of members of their families. W. W. Reeder filled both morning and evening appointments.

Cherokee Branch expects to entertain a big crowd for district conference June 6 and 7, as all the Saints will want to hear the reports from General Conference. There are a number of matters of interest to be discussed at this time.

Nauvoo, Illinois

May 1.—Although our numbers have been few, owing to so many attending conference, yet it has been very encouraging to see how the young people came to the front, especially in the prayer meetings, and moved forward with their prayers and testimonies. It speaks well for the future of our branch that such a faithful band of young people are engaged in the work here.

The Sunday school, under the leadership of Brother T. J. Henderson, rendered an Easter program at the eleven o'clock hour on Easter Sunday. The rostrum was prettily decorated with potted plants; and songs, recitations, and dialogues were given by the various classes. In the afternoon, cars were provided, and the Sunday school drove to the Union Church in Sonora Township, where a rally day service was being held, and lent their assistance by rendering an Easter song and a selection by the orchestra. This church is a typical "church in the wildwood," as it is built in the heart of the timber and is reached by following a winding trail for a mile or more through the woods after leaving the main road. Sunday school is held each Sunday, followed by a preaching service whenever the services of a preacher can be obtained. The Methodist minister occupied that day with an Easter sermon.

Brother A. L. Sanford was elected president of the Parent-Teacher Association at a recent election of officers. Meetings are held monthly in the new school building, and a good interest is manifested in this work. Some very fine programs have been put on by the various grades, and as the meetings are held in the evening, the parents and friends of those taking part are able to attend, and the auditorium is always well filled.

All the young people of the Protestant denominations met together one evening and organized a Young People's Christian Association, electing Sister Florence Sanford as president. Our young people have always felt that their needs were amply provided for by the Department of Recreation and Expression, but they were asked to meet with the rest of the young people of the town, and rather than hold themselves aloof, thought they could possibly use their influence to help others by joining with them. They are to meet every other Thursday night, a short program will be given, games will be played, and refreshments served.

Brother Jesse Fisher and wife are the proud parents of a baby girl. Mrs. Fisher came to Nauvoo a bride from Kentucky a year ago. The Department of Women prepared a surprise bag for her, which contained thirteen packages, one to be opened each day. These packages contained pretty and useful gifts for the new baby.

Another of our cradle roll babies was blessed at the close of the Sunday school hour: Robert Lee, son of Kenneth and Blanche Grotts Booz.
Independence
Stone Church

The young people's prayer meeting was well attended and quite spiritual. It is good to see those young in years bear such strong, fervent testimonies. The hope of Zion lies in great measure in the youth of the church.

The attendance at Sunday school was 1,306, enough to make a good-sized village. The church is not large enough to accommodate all these classes, so the Church of Christ on the Temple Lot, the dining hall, the Library Building, and the Institute Building are used for classrooms.

There was an unusually large attendance at the eleven o'clock sacramental service in the upper and lower auditoriums. In the upper auditorium the meeting was presided over by President F. M. Smith. He made instructive and comforting remarks on the subject of prayer, exhorting the Saints to pray fervently for one another. "Pray for Zion, and then help the Lord to bring about the fulfillment of your prayers." Patriarch Ammon Whité, who was on the stand, delivered a stirring message to the people in the name of the Lord. Part of it was instruction to the Saints that the work of the church was not only to preach the gospel but also to better man's social condition. This will be brought about by putting into practice the principle of stewardship and then establishing Zion. The assistant pastor, C. E. Miller, admonished the Saints to be diligent and faithful in building up the forty-three groups in Zion. If we have the Spirit of Christ, we will infallibly bring forth the fruits of that Spirit. The Spirit is the cause, the fruit is the effect. We obtain that Spirit by much prayer. Apostle R. S. Budd made the opening prayer, a tender appeal for God's blessing upon the meeting, and God surely heard the prayer to our spiritual good.

The meeting in the lower auditorium was presided over by Elder E. A. Curtis.

The afternoon prayer and testimony meeting in charge of Patriarchs I. N. White and U. W. Greene called out over two hundred Saints and was another much appreciated service.

The Religio at six o'clock had an attendance of 232. A business meeting will be held next Sunday to elect officers.

The attendance at the regular monthly priesthood meeting in the Institute Building taxed the auditorium to its capacity. President E. A. Smith was in charge. Associated with him were Apostles R. S. Budd and F. H. Edwards. The intention was to have a few short addresses, then to enter into the regular quorum work, but the leading of the spirit of the meeting directed toward a continuation of the speeches by some of the brethren, and developed into fine, optimistic, spiritual testimonies. As the brethren were leaving the room, many said, "This is the best priesthood meeting we have had for a long time."

During the priesthood meeting Brother D. O. Cato was ordained a high priest and a member of the Standing High Council.

Our new Presiding Bishop, Albert Carmichael, preached in the evening to about five hundred interested and perhaps somewhat anxious people. He touched on the fundamentals of stewardship and the great social program of Zion in a clear, strong way. He emphasized the stupendousness of the undertaking in putting it over, and the great promises of God's special help and cooperation. It is a subject to engage the Saints' most sincere and earnest interest and attention now, and although the task seems almost insurmountable, they must not, cannot turn back, for the glory of Zion is as the apple of their eye, and they must move forward with all zeal. In the work of the bishopric there will be no double standards for the rich and the poor, for men and women, for black and white; no class legislation, and no infringement upon the divine right of free agency. There will be no recognition of an aristocracy except the aristocracy of character. God recognizes and honors the aristocracy of character.

Mrs. Daniel Shirk passed away at the Independence Sanitarium Sunday night, having lived in Independence sixteen years. She leaves her husband, who is very ill at the Sanitarium from the shock of his wife's death; three children; three sisters; and two brothers. The funeral was held from the Stone Church Wednesday afternoon at three o'clock.

The junior church has been reorganized with Mrs. Ethel Westwood as chorister and first assistant to Mrs. Alice Cowan. Hereafter it will meet every Sunday morning at eleven o'clock in the dining hall, so that more music may be given. Next Sunday a special Mothers' Day program will be given.

The regular open meeting of the Department of Women will be held Friday, May 8, in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church. There will be special music, and a health talk by Mrs. Kate S. Bartlett of Kansas City. Following this meeting at four o'clock there will be a business session of the W. C. T. U. All of the women of Independence are invited.

Next Sunday evening a Mothers' Day dramatization, "A little child shall lead them," will be given by eight of the Budd Park Christian Church Sunday School members sponsored by Mrs. Gaw. This will be followed by a short address by Pastor C. Ed. Miller.

Second Church

Sixty or sixty-five young people were in attendance at the eight o'clock prayer meeting Sunday morning.

Every seat on the main floor and choir loft was occupied during the sacramental service at eleven o'clock, when three bright babies were blessed, and the remaining time was occupied in active testimony.

Apostle Clyde F. Ellis was the speaker at half past seven, and the attendance was good. There is no disposition to rest or slacken effort, and such sermons as the one Sunday evening are enjoyed and properly appropriated.

Next Sunday morning Constable Miller will address the Saints, and a short Mothers' Day program will be rendered. Sunday evening at six o'clock the priesthood will gather, and it is hoped every ordained man will be present.

Liberty Street

More of the Saints attended sacramental service Sunday morning than had been out for a long time, and a very fine meeting was held. The sermon in the evening by Missionary J. E. Vanderwood on "And when they had lifted up their eyes, they saw no man, save Jesus only," was appropriate and well applied.

The evening of May 15 the Lower Circle of Orioles, and the boys of the Sunday school of the same age, are giving a program at the church. An offering will be taken to help the children pay their share on the budget.

The Temple Builders entertained the Temple Builders of the Stone Church group last Tuesday night. A program of readings and musical numbers was presented, and Sister Fannie Pender gave a splendid talk on the opportunities the girls of our church have for the uplift of humanity. Refreshments of fruit salad, cake, and lemonade were served, and after singing many songs the girls went home declaring they would never forget the evening they had spent.
Walnut Park

Though attendance at the eleven o'clock sacramental service was less than usual, the time was as fully occupied, and testimonies were strong and hopeful.

In the evening Apostle Roy S. Budd was the speaker and taught how, from the depths of trial and affliction, through humility and effort we are caused to rise to higher, safer levels than we enjoyed before our trials.

On the evening of the 8th, Religio will convene at half past seven instead of eight o'clock, to permit of a longer program than usual, to be put on by Sister Bertha Constance's class.

The women of Group 29 are again meeting each week. They do quilting every Monday afternoon at Mrs. Orlando Nace's; and while they work, church history is taught by Mrs. Mellie Davis.

Kansas City Stake Items

Central Church

The speakers April 26 were Patriarch U. W. Greene in the morning and Apostle Clyde F. Ellis in the evening. During the past month the pulpit has been filled by conference appointees, as has also been the case at the other churches of the stake.

Easter programs were given in all the churches of the stake.

Fourth Church

This up-to-date congregation is putting in full time in all departments, which effort is rewarded by good attendance at all services.

Speakers recently have been, aside from the local force, Apostle Roy S. Budd, and Elders J. Charles May, A. M. Baker, John Dowker, H. A. Higgins, T. J. Elliott, and J. M. Terry.

At the recent “penny day” offering, $21.54 was collected, the Try (boys) Class leading with $5.18. They will join in the spirit of boys' week by showing their appreciation of their own boys as well as the neighbor boy, by inviting him to church.

Northeast Church

A series of meetings with Evangelist Ammon White as speaker was held from February 22 to 27 with fine attendance. Stake Missionary W. I. Fligg followed with another series from March 8 to 22, which was full of cheer and instruction to the people.

Grandview

A banquet was enjoyed by the Sunday-school teachers and officers and their companions Friday evening, March 20, in the church basement. Brother E. D. Moore of Independence was present and gave a talk on Sunday school problems and their solutions.

Tuesday evening, March 24, was spent in a trip around the world. The countries visited were Ireland, Holland, Japan, Italy, Mexico, and the United States. Refreshments of their favorite food were served at each country. A pleasant evening was spent by young and old.

Argentine

The new pastor, R. E. Browne, has been able, with the help of willing associates, to get things in good working order since he took charge. This is shown in a greater interest and attendance in the various departments.

Speakers not of this congregation have been George Jenkins, Elmer Smith, and Herbert Cresse of Chicago, Illinois, and William Anderson from California.

Fargo, North Dakota

April 27.—The Sunday school, in charge of Sister Cora Dehn, gave a program on Easter Sunday morning, and another program is being planned for Mothers' Day.

The Department of Women, under the leadership of Sister Worth Couie, plans to give an open meeting during the month of May.

We have had no visit from missionaries for some time, until April 26 the Saints had the pleasure of having a fine sermon from Brother J. E. Wildermuth of Illinois. They enjoyed a good visit with him. District President Thomas Leitch also spent Sunday here, and Elder Eli Bronson passed through Fargo on his way to Oregon from General Conference. Saints would have been glad if he could have spent several days here.

We have been anxious over the outcome of the conference and hope it will work out for the best, a better unity be established, fresh courage be taken, and Zion be redeemed. We can afford to spend our time in pushing the work as a mighty army for God, for in unity there is strength.

A baby girl was born recently to Brother and Sister E. E. Weddle. Sister Weddle is still in the hospital and has been there for the past eight weeks. The prayers of the Saints are for her speedy recovery.

Holden Stake

Atherton

During conference we had the happy privilege of having with us Elder Jonathan Koshiway and Brother Hare, our Lamanite brethren. Brother Koshiway preached a very interesting sermon followed by a few remarks from Brother Hare. Both sung for us. Apostle R. S. Budd assisted in the service. April 19 Elder John R. Grice preached the morning sermon, and in the evening Elder J. J. Cornish occupied.

Last Sunday Elder Amos T. Higdon occupied the morning hour and Elder Harvey V. Minton in the evening.

We are sorry to lose from our midst Brother and Sister D. R. Carmichael, who moved to Independence. Sister D. R. Hughes was chosen by the Department of Women to act as leader of the girls in the vacancy made by Sister Carmichael's resignation.

Sedalia

The Saints here were glad to have Elder J. E. Bozarth of Warrensburg with them to-day. He occupied at the morning service, giving a very interesting discourse on the Resurrection. Elder C. L. House occupied at the evening hour, his topic being, “The perfect law of liberty.”

Those who were in attendance at General Conference are home, thus increasing our attendance some. All services except morning preaching services were held during conference with a good attendance and interest. Sister M. A. Ferguson had charge of the Sunday school both Sundays.

April 13 Brother James King spoke at the evening hour and told some of the wonderful experiences he has had in the gospel work. Brother King is seventy-five years old, and this is the first time he has occupied for thirty years, but his talk was much enjoyed by all present, even the children.

Elder R. E. Bozarth spoke the next Sunday night, giving a splendid discourse on “Obedience.”

Brother and Sister R. F. Moorman and Sister Mount have gone to Indiana. Sister Mount expects to be gone some time.

Warrensburg

Almost daily new students are arriving to attend the State Teachers' College, and by the opening of the summer term, early in June, the enrollment is expected to reach 2,500.
Many of our church people are included in the student body. We have a neat church here on Washington Avenue, between Market and Culton Streets, where a cordial welcome awaits both members and strangers. W. S. Macrae, 202 Clark Avenue, is pastor.

The sixteenth anniversary of the organization of the Warrensburg Branch will be observed with appropriate services Sunday, May 17. Letters will be sent to as many of the former members as can be reached; and others whose addresses are not available are hereby invited to attend. Elder George W. Hancock, a former resident, worshiped with us recently and occupied the pulpit very acceptably.

Denver Branch

LITTLETON, COLORADO, April 27.—With the ground too wet to plow in Missouri and floods threatening in Montana, Colorado is suffering from the worst drought for many years. Unless rain comes soon the sugar beet crop will be a complete failure, as there is no moisture enough in the ground to sprout the seed. There is but little water for irrigation, and the supply for domestic purposes has been curtailed. Still further shortage is threatened unless it rains.

Brother L. R. Holmes is recovering from an operation for appendicitis. He was taken seriously ill and had to undergo an operation immediately. However, he rallied quickly and will soon be out again.

Brother W. B. Patten, one of the old-timers from Montrose, Iowa, stopped off on the 18th to visit the family of E. F. Shupe, with whom he has been acquainted since boyhood days in the sixties. He was on his way to join his family in Washington.

Brother H. G. Merryman, formerly of Cripple Creek, now of Montrose, Colorado, is in the city on business and is a regular attendant at church services. Sister Kennedy, cousin of President F. M. Smith, is making her home with Sister Anthony at 1523 South Lincoln Street.

Most of the conference visitors have returned. Pastor E. J. Williams returned in time to be the speaker at the morning service April 19, at which time he told of what was done at conference. His talk was of great interest to those who did not attend. Elder Clarence Bruno was the speaker in the evening.

The Sunday school is a real live wire. Eighty-five were present April 26, after most of the young people had gone to the mountains to hold their session and have a good time. Sister Brannaman is making a success as superintendent. The weather was quite cool, but there was a fair attendance at both morning and evening preaching services.

Moorhead, Iowa

April 27.—Many of the Saints here, as well as others, have had a siege of the influenza, and some have had it in quite a severe form, but we are pleased to announce that nearly all have recovered at present.

Easter Sunday was appropriately observed. Pastor T. O. Strand delivered the message in the morning. The day was beautiful, and the attendance was somewhat larger than usual. It might have been called "Baby Day" with us, as so many new babies were in attendance. Three little ones were blessed under the hands of Elders John Boswell, T. O. Strand, and Mark Jensen. Brother and Sister Claude Mann and family of Missouri Valley, and Mr. and Sister Keith Goeham, spent Easter at the home of their parents, Brother and Sister Perry Mann.

A union Sunday school has again been organized at the Jordan Church. In order to help the people of that community to carry on the Sunday school, several Saints have sacrificed their individual feelings and will attend there instead of at our regular Sunday morning service. This was also done last summer and should be appreciated by those living in that community who cannot attend other services. It means quite a sacrifice to the Moorhead Branch to have its membership thus divided, but we trust that good may be accomplished. Brother Chester Davis has been chosen to act as their superintendent.

On April 26, after the morning services, the Saints enjoyed a picnic dinner in the orchard on the Tornow farm, east of town. A pleasant social time was spent, and all were ready for the evening service as usual.

Elder Mark Jensen was the speaker at Pisgah Sunday morning, April 26. He was accompanied by his daughter Aurilee.

Brother Jennings Coffman of Omaha visited Saturday evening and Sunday at the Fred Pellissier home and attended services Sunday morning.

Several from the branch are planning to attend the Young People's Convention.

Grandma Bollinger has recently returned from her winter's trip to Nebraska and is pleased to be in attendance at the services again. Brother and Sister Dale Wilson of Ute frequently drive down to attend services here.

Brother O. M. Outhouse has been seriously ill with pneumonia but is recovering nicely now. Sister Clara McDonald has recently returned from a two weeks' stay at the Jennie Edmundson Hospital at Council Bluffs. Her condition is much improved, but an operation is considered necessary for complete recovery. She and many other afflicted ones have been remembered in the prayers of Moorhead Saints.

Deacon Ira Wilson and Mrs. Pearl Southworth were married at Denison the first of last week and are receiving the congratulations of many friends.

Brother Carl Bateman and family of Logan visited last Sunday at the home of her brother, Bert Mann, and family.

The Bond of the Prayer Service

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI, April 30.—Since our last letter in the Herald we have received letters from different ones in the church who have passed through Springfield not knowing there was a branch here. We feel perhaps it would pay to advertise, and maybe we shall have more visitors, who will surely be made welcome.

Last sacramental service was exceptionally fine. The attendance was good, and Pastor Ansley has a wonderful influence in presiding over a service of that kind. When all who desire have prayed, the testimony service is started from the priesthood in front, then each row in turn, until all have had an opportunity to take part. It is very encouraging to see the activity all take in the service.

As we knelt in the opening prayer, I glanced across the aisle and beheld a beautiful sight—a mother and her children, the oldest about twelve, all kneeling side by side for prayer in the house of the Lord—and the thought came to me that though time and vocations of life may separate this family, there will always remain with them the memory of such happy association.

So it is with the membership of any branch. As they have worshiped together and shared each other's joy and sorrow, they have learned to love.

My wife and I had the privilege of attending church in Independence April 12, and there we met many of the broth-

Our Social Program

The subject of stewardships involves in its final analysis the whole social philosophy of the church. This philosophy has been taught since the church was established in 1830, and sporadic attempts have been made at times to put it into some form of practice; but no attempt has been made to have its principles generally applied throughout the whole church. It has been hoped and believed that we were surely (though slowly) moving towards the time when it would become the practice of the church as well as a theory.

This hope was warmed in 1894 by the divine instruction that “section forty-two . . . is as if it were given to-day,” and again in 1920; yet in neither case was there a follow-up movement towards practical application. There has been a further encouragement of that hope in the action of the conference of 1925 in adopting the “social program” which had been previously adopted by the council of 1924, which program looked “towards the establishment of Zion.”

The program as adopted by the conference is as follows:

1. Be it resolved that we favor the immediate initiation of a program looking towards the establishment of Zion and the application of the law of stewardships, which program is as follows:

2. That the Bishopric secure completed financial statements by the selection of a corps of men qualified by special training (if possible) who shall be assigned territory with a view to securing these financial statements by personal contact.

3. That financial statements be provided which are especially designed to serve these purposes.

4. That the members of the church be requested to file their financial statements annually.

5. That arrangement for the payment of tithes due the church should be made at the time of filing of the inventory.

6. That all who are willing and desirous should be placed upon the stewardship basis, either individual or group, as they shall manifest the essential qualifications.

7. That books, tracts, etc., expressing the social ideals of the church should be published without delay.

8. That ministerial propaganda of the church include the presentation of the social ideals of the church with specific reference to the law of tithing and consecration, that they may cooperate in the education of the Saints, particularly young people and inquirers.

9. That the people of the church should be urged to gauge their expenditures in accordance with definite budgets to be formulated with the idea of maintaining an equitable standard of living consistent with the attainment and perpetuation of their maximum efficiency and the needs of the group.

10. That in looking to the completion of the surveys of man power, capital, markets, territories, etc., a bureau of research and service should be established.

11. That the determination of the order of economic development should be given immediate consideration.

12. That the surplus consecrated from stewardships in operation should be set aside for, or at once used in the establishment of other stewardships.

13. That in view of the extension of our social organization, there will be necessity for providing vocational guidance and training.

It becomes the duty of every minister of the church, and especially so of those under appointment, to support this program and make every effort possible to put this program favorably before the Saints.

It is multum in parvo and should be carefully studied by the ministry, for it will furnish topics for a series of sermons or lectures; while, efforts to comprehend its bearings and scope will afford material for many hours of study and meditation to the members of the church.

We rejoice because the church is so apparently determined to move towards the establishment of Zion in a practical way.

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

Mothers of Israel

"God could not be everywhere, and therefore he made mothers."—From an old Jewish Proverb.

In our last number we reviewed the story of the mother of Moses, the mother of Joseph Smith, and the mother of our Lord. These were reviewed to remind us how God trusts and honors mothers, and to remind the women of the church concerning their high calling. There is only an occasional Moses to be mothered; and in all time only one Jesus of Nazareth. But always there comes on a new generation. of children the masses of whom will constitute the church and the state of to-morrow and among whom are the potential great leaders in church and state. Mothers not only bring these new recruits to the army of humanity; they also have the direct personal oversight and care of them during the formative years of life.

Protectors of the Home

Man may protect the home in a physical sense. Soldiers and the police are usually masculine. We depend upon men to keep out foreign invasions and to chase the burglar from the premises. This they do after a fashion, with a great deal of noise and some bloodshed. In a moral way the protection of the home rests largely with the women. They are home keepers—not house keepers.

Here are some of the enemies of the home that must be met. First, immodesty: Immodesty in dress and deportment tends to hasten the decay of morals. Unnecessary exposure of the person due to extremes in fashion which seem to demand scanty clothing of diaphanous texture must have its effect upon the character of the girl herself, while it throws unnecessary temptation in the way of the young man.

The Match to the Powder

The results are only too often apparent. An old miner complained that when he dropped a lighted match into a keg of gunpowder “half the blamed stuff burned up before he could put the fire out.” Society to-day seems determined to fling the lighted match of sex appeal into the couchant, terrific reservoirs of youthful desire. The explosions are disastrous to society and to the home in particular.

Mothers should teach their children the old-fashioned virtue of modesty. They should teach it by example, in dress, in speech, and in deportment. But the “young set” now complain that they prefer to go to affairs without chaperons because their elders are a little too rank for their taste. There is work in Zion for the mothers of Israel.

Dancing to—What?

Second, the modern dance: The modern dance, particularly as it finds expression in the public dance hall, is a menace to the home. One prominent judge stated that seventy-five per cent of the delinquent girls brought before him trace their first downfall to the dance.

The overstimulation from music and light and motion, coupled with the unrighteous and immodest physical contact characteristic of the modern dance steps, fling the lighted match into the waiting powder, and the bursting flames that reply burn up the grace and innocence and dignity and promise of young womanhood and manhood, and not only blow the foundations from under the homes where these young people now abide, but also from the potential homes which to-morrow they should be building with the sanction of the state and the blessings of the church in honorable marriage.

Low Ideals of Marriage

Third, divorce: The divorce rate is increasing alarmingly. Some claim that this is a preventative of immorality. Is it not rather too often a result of immorality? Is marriage to become only a civil contract, hastily entered into and of short duration. Peggy Joyce is reported in the dailies to have scored a triumph in that she has “married three millionaires and one count,” and the game is only just begun.

There must not be an infiltration of these loose ideals into Zion. The Book of Doctrine and Covenants contains the ideal marriage covenant, “You both mutually agree to be each other’s companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each and from all others, during your lives.”

That covenant presupposes loyalty. Life-long loyalty in the family is the only basis on which a home can securely rest. And the home largely exists for the children. The walls, the hearthstone, the roof-tree are built around the child. Every thoughtful person knows that to-day the home as an institution is in danger. Here is work for the mothers of Israel. But no woman can do it who is not herself true to the ideals of the church. You cannot build a home or rear a family without loyalty to God and society and the marriage covenant.

Clean Marriage

Third, social diseases: These diseases are on the increase. To give figures might disgust you. You can get them from your family physician. They disrupt the family. Clean marriage is basic in family happiness and continuity. Bitter, blasting disappointment otherwise comes, with attendant disruption of the home. Every mother should strive to rear her children in purity for clean marriage. And any mother has a right to ask from the young man who seeks her daughter’s hand a clean bill of health from a reputable physician. It is no offense to ask it; the man should be proud to give it. Otherwise the story may be that told in the poem by Wilkes recently quoted in the Herald by Brother John F. Martin in his sermon, “The church and the young man”:

So I had my joy of life;
I went the pace of the town;
And then I took me a wife,
And started to settle down.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
I had gold enough and to spare
For all the simple joys
That belong with a house and a home
And a brood of girls and boys.

I married a girl with health
And virtue and spotless fame.
I gave in exchange my wealth
And a proud old family name.
And I gave her the love of a heart
Grown ailed and sick of sin!
My deal with the Devil was all cleaned up,
And the last bill handed in.

She was going to bring me a child,
And when in labor she cried,
With love and fear I was wild—
But now I wish she had died.
For the son she bore me was blind
And crippled and weak and sore!
And his mother was left a wreck.
It was so she settled my score.

Mothers' Day Reminders

These are but a few of the enemies of the home. Every unrighteous and unclean institution and agency menaces the home. Righteousness, virtue, honesty, industry, loyalty, these conserve the home circle. The mothers of Zion must not only safeguard their own homes, but, through their children, safeguard the homes of the future.

Mothers' Day came not alone with a bouquet of flowers or a box of candy for our gray-haired mothers. It came not alone with a sigh and a tear for the mothers who have gone on before and who are yet missed and mourned, even though their children may themselves be fathers and mothers. It came also with an appeal to the young mothers who still have children under their care and who are even now in position to work with God in character building; and for the women of the church individually, and in groups and societies, to help in that work.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

National Hospital Day

May 12, yesterday, was National Hospital Day, and the Independence Sanitarium kept open house, receiving large numbers of visitors from two o'clock until five o'clock in the afternoon, members of the Patroness Society acting as hostesses. Refreshments were served in the Sanitarium dining room.

Saturday, May 16, an endeavor will be made to raise one thousand dollars to be used as a Free Bed Fund, and if you desire to help in this good and necessary work, send your remittance to the Patronesses of Independence Sanitarium or the Independence Sanitarium Committee.

Last year Tag Day produced $740.77 for this fund, which cared for thirty-two patients for 244 bed days, and paid for four X-ray and one laboratory test for patients not admitted to the hospital. Surely this was much accomplished, but it can and should be increased materially.

Joint Council Meetings

Following the adjournment of General Conference, the Presidency and Twelve continued in session several days, considering appointments referred for post-conference action. These appointments have been or will be published in the HERALD. Adjournment was then had for several days.

Tuesday, May 5, the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric again assembled and spent the greater part of two days together. A great deal of the time was taken up in comparison of views and exchange of ideas, particularly regarding the year's work immediately before the church.

Each member of the council in turn expressed himself very freely as to the situation, the methods to be employed in field work, the outlook of the church, and his personal determination and feelings. A very gratifying unanimity of opinion prevailed, which enabled the president of the council to gather up the various observations made and epitomize them for reading at the closing session. The benefits of this exchange of ideas, while largely personal to the members of the council, will without doubt be passed on to the Saints in the various fields where they shall labor.

Without exception, there was manifested a determination to press vigorously and with faith and courage into the work of the church that lies before us. Unfailing trust in God as the author and finisher of our faith and in the integrity and final triumph of his church were expressed by every member. The general feeling seemed to be that we "should not shun to declare the whole counsel of God"—we should preach a well-rounded-out message comprising the restored gospel in its fullness and purity, and let the special undertakings ordered by the conference fit into this program, each in its place with its own due portion of importance.

The College, the Auditorium, and, greatest of all, the doctrine of stewardships, all of which were specifically mentioned by the conference, will be presented, no one of them as a hobby but all as incidents, though important incidents, to the present work of the church in preaching the gospel of the Son of God and the salvation of human souls.

The meeting adjourned following a statement by President Smith that the Presidency would probably call one or more similar meetings for council during the conference year. The next one is expected to be in September.

The Twelve spent some time together, informally comparing notes on their respective fields and perfecting their methods of reporting and keeping in touch with the missionaries under their direction.

If we can judge correctly, the members of the council will go out with the spirit of revival. They will seek to revive the Saints and to build up the church both spiritually and financially. The very good spirit which prevailed throughout these sessions should help them in their work and should spread abroad throughout the field. E. A. S.

Blue Pencil Notes

Patrons of the Dump Heap

Did you ever live in a rather small city? And if so, was there contiguous to it one or more “dump heaps”? Places where all sorts of cast-off articles are thrown into some gully or ravine? And if so, did you have a small boy? And did you ever send this boy to the “dump heaps” with his express wagon loaded down with old junk that you wished to be well rid of? Then we know what happened. He indeed deposited your rubbish, but returned with a bigger load of your neighbor’s cast-off junk. Such a junk pile has an irresistible attraction for boys. There may be found old roller skates, baby buggies, automobile parts, worthless lawn mowers, tin cans, etc., etc. All quite outworn and thrown away—yet very interesting to the boy. How foolish of the youngsters to trade their own junk for the neighbor’s junk!

But did you ever go to the neighbor’s with a lot of idle gossip and foolish rumors? And being rid of them, did you return with a lot of your neighbor’s idle gossip and foolish rumors? Every community has its junk pile. Every community thus swaps its old, worthless, vicious scandals and its idle gossip. This is true of church circles as well as worldly circles. If the boy is foolish, how about his elders?

The story which you bring back from the neighborhood scandal pile may be more worthless than the useless old bicycle, minus handle bars, with punctured tires and no pedals, which your boy brings home to clutter up your back yard. And despite the condition of the bicycle, your find may be much less sanitary. It may be an old, exploded bit of gossip about some church man, never true, made in hell, thrice disproved and discredited since it came from the factory, thrown out on the community scandal heap, yet you pick it up and bring it home and take it into the family and try to put it into shape to run again. And it does run again. Such things always have more “miles left in them yet” than any old Ford. But the Father on high must sometimes wonder at the folly of his children. They pass by his jewel shop to go to their own dump heap.

It would be better to keep away from the community dumping grounds and on our own premises erect a sign: “Leave No Rubbish Here”!

Midnight Test Program K'LDS

The men at K'LDS experienced some difficulty in transferring to the new wave length of 441 meters Monday evening at midnight, and Tuesday morning. Satisfactory reports have been received from near-by points, but reports from distances have not as yet been received. The new wave length adds approximately fifty per cent to the radiation.

Those tuning in Thursday evening and Sunday may get K'LDS at the old wave length of 268 meters unless arrangements are completed between now and then to use 441 meters, which is the same as station W0S, at Jefferson City.

Send your reports of the test program Monday night as early as is possible.

Bishop Israel A. Smith is in Colorado transacting church business. He will be joined by Bishop A. Carmichael, who will extend his trip through Kansas into Colorado and likely Lamoni Stake before returning to Independence.

Bishop Mark H. Siegfried made a visit to the Indian farm in Nebraska the first of this week.

President Frederick M. Smith delivered a baccalaureate sermon at Pisgah, Iowa, Sunday, called at Omaha, Nebraska, and visited the Indian farm northwest of Omaha the first of the week.
Looking to the Redemption of Zion

Sermon by President Frederick M. Smith at the Stone Church, Sunday, April 5, 1925.

Behold, this I have given unto you a parable, and it is even as I am: I say unto you, Be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine. And again I say unto you, that the enemy in the secret chambers seetheketh your lives. Ye hear of wars in far countries, and you say that there will soon be great wars in far countries, but ye know not the hearts of men in your own land. I tell you these things because of your prayers; wherefore, treasure up wisdom in your bosoms, lest the wickedness of men reveal these things unto you, by their wickedness, in a manner that shall speak in your ears, with a voice louder than that which shall shake the earth; but if ye are prepared, ye shall not fear.

And that ye might escape the power of the enemy, and be gathered unto me a righteous people, without spot and blameless: wherefore, for this cause I gave unto you the commandment, that ye should go to the Ohio; and there I will give unto you my law; and there ye shall be endued with power from on high, and from thence, whosoever I will, shall go forth among all nations, and it shall be told them what they shall do; for I have a great work laid up in store, for Israel shall be saved, and I will lead them whithersoever I will, and no power shall stay my hand.—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 6, 7.

And again, if there shall be properties in the hands of the church, or any individuals of it, more than is necessary for their support, after this first consecration, which is a residue, to be consecrated unto the bishop, it shall be kept to administer unto those who have not, from time to time, that every man who has need may be amply supplied, and receive according to his wants. Therefore, the residue shall be kept in my storehouse, to administer to the poor and the needy, as shall be appointed by the high council of the church, and the bishop and his council, and for the purpose of purchasing lands for the public benefit of the church, and building houses of worship, and building up of the New Jerusalem which is hereafter to be revealed, that my covenant people may be gathered in one, in that day when I shall come to my temple. And this I do for the salvation of my people.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 10.

Wherefore, I the Lord have said, Gather ye out from the eastern lands, assemble ye yourselves together ye elders of my church; go ye forth unto the western countries, call upon the inhabitants to repent, and inasmuch as they do repent, build up churches unto me; and with one heart and with one mind, gather up your riches that ye may purchase an inheritance which shall hereafter be appointed unto you, and it shall be called the New Jerusalem, a land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety for the saints of the most high God; and the glory of the Lord shall be there, and the terror of the Lord also shall be there, insomuch that the wicked will not come unto it; and it shall be called Zion.

And it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety. And there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven; and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another. And it shall be said among the wicked, let us not go up to battle against Zion, for the inhabitants of Zion are terrible, wherefore we cannot stand.

And it shall come to pass that the righteous shall be gathered out from among all nations, and shall come to Zion singing, with songs of everlasting joy.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 12, 13, 14.

Hearken, O ye elders of my church saith the Lord your God, who have assembled yourselves together, according to my commandments, in this land which is the land of Missouri, which is the land which I have appointed and consecrated for the gathering of the saints: wherefore this is the land of promise, and the place for the city of Zion. And thus saith the Lord your God, If you will receive wisdom here is wisdom. Behold, the place which is now called Independence, is the center place, and the spot for the temple is lying westward upon a lot which is not far from the courthouse; wherefore it is wisdom that the land should be purchased by the saints; and also every tract lying westward, even unto the line running directly between Jew and Gentile. And also every tract bordering by the prairies, insomuch as my disciples are enabled to buy lands. Behold, this is wisdom, that they may obtain it for an everlasting inheritance.—Doctrine and Covenants 57: 1.

These passages are read from scripture which by Latter Day Saints is considered sacred, and point out clearly not alone the great goal of the church in achievement, but indicate with an exactitude beyond question the land or territory on or in which we are to win our objective and fulfill the purposes of God in our organization.

So pregnant with meaning to our people are these quotations (for they are multum in parvo) that a few salient points.

We are admonished to heed the warning and commandments of God to us and by obedience to him escape the calamities to fall, rather than wait for the “wickedness of men to reveal these things unto us.” And instructions are given, by following which we can “escape the power of the enemy.” The heartening, stimulating, comforting promise is given, “If ye are prepared, ye shall not fear.” By preparation, then, we can escape that greatest tormentor of man—fear. Let us be assiduous in activities of preparation, even while we build. Look ahead, “for Israel shall be saved.” This is “the great work laid up in store” for us to do—“the salvation of Israel.” The task is great, envisaged from afar, but there is heartenment towards endeavor in the promise that God is leading and “no power shall stay” his hand.

It is a fact quite generally recognized that greed, or the accumulation of wealth for self-serving purposes, is responsible for much of the world’s misery and crime. There is plenty and to spare, of this world’s goods, for the needs of all mankind, if hoarding for self can cease. And so in the principles of our social philosophy, touched upon in the passages.
read, the ax is laid at the root of the tree of evil by the command to consecrate the surplus. This is a yielding up of selfish or self-serving gains, and the religious basis for this social reform is set out in the very word used, consecration—made holy by devoting to sacred purposes.

There are those even in our own organization who look upon the doctrine of consecration (stewardships) with illy concealed fear, for they have not caught the great vision of service. But it emphatically can be said that the application of the law of consecration (a fundamental of the doctrine of stewardships) will be a willing surrender of accumulated goods (or talents) rather than a forceful taking. The pressure of conscience will doubtless be a factor in the surrender to the law, as it was (or is) in the application of the law of baptism, and the pressure of the common social motif arising from the common concept of the law as applied towards social betterment.

Even in the brief passages from the law which we have read we have not been left without knowledge of how the accumulation of consecrated individual surpluses shall be used, for the purposes are specified. Some of them it is well for us to note:

1. The public benefit of the church is to be promoted by the purchase of lands. It ought to be beyond question, it seems to me, that the words public benefit must be viewed in the light of the objective of the church socially and religiously; and this would indicate that the public benefit from lands purchased should be sought in directions other than rentals or income from landlording. It should be sought in furthering the application of the doctrine of stewardship and the law of consecration and the promotion of social reform through our own social philosophy. Hence lands purchased from consecrations for the public benefit of the church should be for the purposes of colonizing, for group stewardships, or for establishing individuals on the stewardship basis.

2. Building Houses of Worship. I am wondering if we can lay any claim to having even begun to carry out this instruction? To be sure we have built houses of worship; but how? Have we in any instance built them by a formal application of the law of stewardship consecration? I submit, Does not the mention of this instruction in this connection engender a vision of a great building program, carried on systematically from the results of stewardship, a program which will not be the haphazard one of the past, but one unified by the clearly visioned needs of Zion, the application of the Zionic law, and a balancing of the needs and wants of the people of the whole church, a program which envisages the gathering and establishment of the people permanently, and in a manner socially righteous and religiously sound?

3. We are reminded of the blending of the temporal with the spiritual, the interaction of social conditions upon religious development, the application of religious motivations towards the betterment of social conditions, the literality of our parallel material and religious development, by the expressed application of consecrations for the building up of the New Jerusalem.

And why the New Jerusalem? Oh, what a wealth of meaning to us as Latter Day Saints there is in the words which answer that query, "For the gathering of my covenant people!"

And why the gathering? Cannot God work out his purposes with us scattered throughout the world? Whether he could or not is a bit beside the question in the light of the words commanding to gather, and for the reason assigned, a reason the expression of which cannot but cause the heart of every Latter Day Saint to swell with gratitude to Divinity and words of praise to pass our lips from the depths of our souls, for the voice of inspiration has said that God would have us gather to save us; for the purpose of the gathering is expressed in these pregnant words, "For the salvation of my people."

4. The elements of reform in our work are touched indirectly by the expressed duty of the assembled elders to call upon people to repent. And then the building program is again mentioned in the command to build up churches.

5. And with unity gather together our riches for specific purposes. Let me suggest that we have in the last few years had some remarkable demonstrations of what can be done by unity in gathering riches for well-understood purposes. The general Auditorium drive yielded $850,000 in subscriptions; the limited drive to secure means to purchase the Campus brought $50,000; the radio drive brought $16,000 more; a total of about $900,000 with more than one half million paid in, and the rest forthcoming in my opinion when we show a determination to keep faith with the donors to the Auditorium Fund.

The special purposes of collecting the riches mentioned are stated to be the purchase of the inheritance, the New Jerusalem; and how clearly is it set out that this is something more than a mere spiritual condition of a scattered people, for it shall be a Land of Peace. How much there is need to-day for a land of peace, where industry and social conditions as well as the spiritual attainments of the people all promote and maintain peace. It shall therefore be a place to which peace-loving people may go if they would find peace.

6. It shall be a city of refuge for those is distress. And this means that because of its sacredness and its righteousness it will be a sanctuary for those who would flee the troubles to come. And our hope points to it even as a bulwark of defense against the enemy of mankind; a shelter for the weary.

7. It shall be a place of safety for the Saints. Safety is sought from danger, and danger there will be according to prophetic forecast, danger which shall be the ensemble of the multiplied dangers of to-day augmented by growing social unrest and unrighteousness.

It shall be a place wherein shall be the glory of God. The glory of God is manifest through obedience to his law, and thus shall the glory of God be there. And where his glory is there also will be terror to those who refuse compliance with his will.

And it shall be called Zion! Zion, our goal! Zion, our social perfection!

The unhappy conditions which will exist in the world, against which Zion the Beautiful shall arise as a protest, are indicated by the statement, prophetic in its character, that among the wicked there shall develop such a state that “every man that will not take up his sword against his neighbor must needs flee unto Zion for safety.” The sword has always stood as the symbol of war. And so general shall the use of the instruments of war be, so widespread the confusion of antagonisms and strifes, that “the people of Zion shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with the other,” while the cosmopolitan character of Zion as a land, a city, a people, is set out in the statement that to Zion shall be gathered people from every nation under heaven. And though fear will be banished from Zion in its righteousness, among the wicked shall prevail a fear of Zion, for the inhabitants thereof shall be terrible in their righteousness and nearness to God.

It is difficult to understand how Latter Day Saints can fail to see the concrete aspects of Zion as well as the subjective ones reflected in the words of our books. The land of Missouri “is appointed and consecrated” (made sacred by being devoted to holy purposes) of God for the gathering of the Saints. It is the land of promise to latter-day Israel, and there is fixed very definitely the place for the city of Zion—while Independence is designated as “the center place.” Being the center, from it shall radiate the influence and activities making for the progress and development of the church. It is destined to become and must become the great civic center for the church, the nucleus of our great building program as the center of our spiritual and religious activities. It must become the center of our industrial and social movements looking towards greater liberty—liberty not emanating from license and individual caprice, but the liberty arising from obedience to law.

For the accomplishment of all this, as the basis of initial operations, came the command to buy land. Buy land, not at random in various parts of the world or country, but every tract lying westward to a certain boundary, and in the regions round about, according to language in other places. Who will say we have obeyed these commandments? And who can measure the losses we have suffered by our reluctance or unwillingness to obey. But who can fail to glimpse what our present condition as a people would have been, economically considered, if we had obeyed?

Peace! Refuge! Safety!!!

Are they needed to-day? Is there peace? Are not governments in turmoil, breaking overnight, changing with a frequency and rapidity which is baffling to the students of political history? The forces of political dissolution seem everywhere at work. Political parties are split, and reforming of lines is everywhere going on. Families are divided in strange and devious ways by the forces of evil. In churches there is quarreling between factions, and our own beloved church has had its progress temporarily checked by factionalism. All organizations are struggling against the forces of dissolution working through the avenues of discontent. Established leaderships are overthrown or struggling against untoward forces. Would-be leaders are augmenting the spirit of restlessness by denouncing present orders. They would ride into power on the wave of discontent, failing to recognize that an institution established on disloyalty is as a house built on the sand. Nothing is too sacred to be touched by the marring hand of shortsighted reformers. Disrespect for authority is being taught with no regard being given to the direful consequences which will follow; for law is based on authority, and disrespect for authority breeds disobedience to law, and disobedience to law spells social dissolution. Liberty means obedience to law, yet license to-day comes disguised in the garb of liberty and would establish itself. Is the picture overdrawn? Ask any student of society.

While not all our duty as a church organization is set out in the scripture we have just read, I suggest that there is so much presented that we cannot afford to pass it lightly, for it comes as a commandment.

The great work laid up in store for us is to save Zion, to free her from the bondage in which she is to-day. This can be accomplished only by redeeming it. To redeem it means to change it from present conditions into those pointed out by divine instruction as being righteous. To buy it is not necessarily to redeem it. The manner of its occupation must coincide with God’s purpose. The land as well as the people must be converted to God, be reconciled to him. This must be achieved by consecration of surplus springing from land occupation as well as individual endeavor.

But to do this demands the establishment of safety, freedom from danger, and this safety must appear under at least four forms: political, social, moral, and industrial or economical.

Political safety lies in respect for authority and obedience to law and righteous enactments. And one of our great tasks is to aid to the full extent of our ability and power in establishing political safety by creating a society (by reform) in which there shall be reawakened, if slumbering, or regenerated if dead, respect for authority and obedience to law. And everywhere in our organic activity must this promotion of political safety appear—in branch, in district, in Sunday school, in department work, in home, in school.

To establish social safety one of our prime tasks is to reestablish the home as the unit of society upon the firm basis of permanency, solidarity, and cleanliness. Its permanency can be secured only by meeting the forces which are deteriorating the home by weakening the marriage bond, decreasing the influence of parenthood, lowering the standard of child rearing. The task is heavy as an evaluation of the forces to be met will reveal. The solidarity of the home for us can be secured by raising the standard of home life throughout the whole of our people till it is uniformly above that of to-day. To establish the cleanliness of the home, our homes, attention must be given to the physical, the moral, and the religious aspects of home life. In the modern home the standard of its physical cleanliness may be said to be higher on an average than formerly, due to the progress of sanitary engineering, but there is much yet to do in this line to raise the general average to where it will meet our needs and aims. But who will say that the moral and religious standards of the modern home are what should be in Zion the redeemed? I cannot contemplate the Zionic home being anything other than the highest type, morally, physically, religiously, which has ever been established. Here lies one of the great fields for the Department of Women.

Not only the home must be raised in its standard, but it shall be our task to rebuild or reform or reconstruct the community (the collected homes) on the basis of the relationships and social interactions of man to man as determined by religion, our conscious attitude towards God.

And this spells the great task, our task, of constructing a social order in which the fear of God will function towards the erection and maintenance of higher ideals of individual endeavor, endeavor consciously correlated with community weal—the great task of changing the objective of individual and group functioning from self-serving to that of neighbor-loving.

We cannot now enumerate all the details which must have attention in our task of establishing moral safety, but in general it must be achieved by creating an atmosphere in the home, on the street, in the school, in the community, which will not be inimical to moral development and growth, by saturating our youth with the highest religious ideals and developing a keen sense of moral responsibility, by universally inculcating and preserving the consciousness among all our people, that each person is responsible to the extent of his powers and capacities for the welfare of all others. As difficult also would be the task of outlining in detail our task of establishing industrial safety, which can be accomplished only by preserving all that is good in the present order while eliminating the much that is out of joint with God and the Christian philosophy; by developing a consciousness that the industrial endeavor of individuals is right only when there is always had in view as the end results of such endeavor, the social weal; by developing the consciousness in all members of our society that the exercise of talents, the effective display of capabilities, the emoluments of personal endeavor should be in terms of service; that self is or should be served secondarily or reflexively, not primarily or directly.

And lastly, but not as a leastly, let me say that we must establish industrial safety, by making our social ideals other than matters of lip service. Have we not made ourselves liable to the charge that we, too, are saying, Lord, Lord, but doing not his will?

I have thus briefly set out a part of our great task. What have we done towards its accomplishment? The road stretches out before us, the gate is standing wide open for us to enter. The goal in the distance gleams invitingly, the great objective of the church beckons us to almost superhuman endeavor, but we have been slothful in heeding the commands of Deity. What can we expect as a reward? “When ye do what I have commanded, then I am bound; but when ye do not the things which I say ye have no promise.”

We might build the most resplendent buildings in the world; we might erect and dedicate the most exquisite and richly appointed temple; but if we fail to demonstrate in a practical way the social import of the gospel of Jesus Christ, we are falling short of our goal and purpose as an organization. We might develop to the highest possible degree individual righteousness or religiousness; yet if we do not so organize that this individual refinement from religion shall issue in better interrelation among men, among groups, we shall fail.

Salvation of the individual is impossible without the more abundant life which springs only from the purest, richest, highest social life. The riches of God, with which he desires to bless us, can be had only when we, because the gospel of Jesus Christ, the power of God unto salvation, finding place in our hearts, will socially issue in making available to everyone full opportunity for development and expression of talents, and when all shall be willing, nay, desirous, that the cumulative fruits of right endeavor shall be the common heritage of all; when the will of God shall be done on earth as it is done in heaven—a consummation not easy of achievement, but which imposes a social and religious task which can be accomplished only by a people with their faces set firmly towards the future and with their eyes clearly seeing the goal towards which they are working—a goal which is brightened by the illumination of inspiration.

That goal has long been beckoning us. For nearly one hundred years have we been proclaiming the principles of Zion and her redemption, the law of stewardships. I contemplate the progress made, but see also the long stretch yet lying between us and it. The disturbed conditions within the church may temporarily dampen our zeal and slow at times the progress towards the Zionic conditions of the books. And yet when we falter would cease our efforts and turn towards activities less strenuous, yet more remunerative from a worldly standpoint, we are recalled by visions of the Zion yet to be. "The righteous shall be gathered out from among the nations, and shall come to Zion singing, with songs of everlasting joy," is the promise. And so our eyes are lifted from the sordid earth by visions of Zion, and the harmonies of our soul are caught by the vibrations brought from afar when under that same spirit of inspiration we hear the songs of the hordes of Israel coming to Zion, to the land redeemed; for ringing as a golden chime through those songs is the theme of everlasting joy, till even the land resounds. And then there comes the entrancing vision of our redeemed Zion, a land wherein the activities of home, the devotions of the church, the revelations of education, the rustle of the marts, the sounds of industry, the tillage of the soil, even the lowing of the cattle on a thousand hills are all in tune with God, for all are serving his purpose.

The beauty of Zion calls us up and on, and in our human weakness we cannot but call out, "Help us, God, to do our part to bring it all about!" while in the ecstasy of inspiration we praise God for the glorious vision.

My people, when shall Zion be?

"To do the right thing at the right time without being directed to do it is the test of worth. The big prizes of this world go to the men of initiative."—F. L. Brittain.

Repentance the Principle of Adaptation in the Kingdom of God

BY E. J. GLEAZER

Text: "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel."

In this language the Master introduces his ministry. The call to repentance had been heard before. The message of repentance had been proclaimed by the prophets in their attempt to prepare the people for the Christ kingdom, but now the startling announcement, "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand." The time was now; the new kingdom was about to be brought into existence, hence the necessity for repenting.

Repentance in some form or other is usually recognized as a prerequisite to church membership among Christian people. However, the forms vary from the simple confession of the one seeking membership, to the requirement of some religious organizations that the one seeking membership must not only confess the wrongs committed but do all in his power to bring to pass an adjustment.

A study of scriptural repentance reveals the following as manifestations of repentance; sorrow for sins committed; confession of sin and its renunciation; restitution as far as possible. Isaiah clearly defines repentance as a ceasing to do evil; a learning to do well. The Greek word most frequently used in the New Testament means a change of mind, a mental state fully appreciative of the moral deflection, and a desire to alter a course of conduct. It is a recognition of the fact that sin is a violation of divine law, is against the moral government of God, and must be exercised toward God. Repentance as required by the scriptures is reconstructive; the whole life is reconstructed in harmony with the will of God. The old ways of sin are renounced, and a new order of life in conformity with the demands of God is pursued.

Repentance, then, is not simply a doctrinal principle to be observed by those seeking membership in the church, for it concerns those who are already members as well. Just as long as it is necessary for us to learn to do well, repentance will be practiced. Not alone in the sense that individuals will fall away after uniting with the church, and hence the necessity for their coming back manifesting exceeding great sorrow that they made such a mistake, but in the sense that as long as we are imperfect there will be the need of a continual adjustment of our lives to God. In our attempt to conform with the divine, we are repenting. "Get right with God" is only another way of crying repentance.

When Jesus called upon the people to repent, he used the word in its fullest sense. He not only desired to see manifest a sorrow for sin committed, or the principle observed simply as a means of uniting with his church, but the attempt made by those who would receive him to adjust their lives to the new condition about to be realized as a result of the coming forth of his kingdom. Repentance is the principle of adaptation in the kingdom of God.

Certainly the conditions which should obtain when the Christ kingdom was established would be vastly different than the conditions prevailing when Jesus made the call to repentance. Continued correspondence with the old environment meant death and desolation. "Except ye repent ye shall all in like manner perish."—Luke 13: 3. To live it was necessary to correspond with the new environment, the kingdom of God. The story of the prodigal son illustrates the principle of repentance as the principle of adaptation. The boy had left his father's home (an environment which we have every reason to believe was good) for a far country, where the environment was destructive. The condition of the boy, the depths to which he had fallen, reveal the nature of the environment with which he was in correspondence. He came to himself. He was sorry for the terrible mistake he had made, but sorrow did not restore him to his father's home. No, he had to leave the environment where we find him and retrace his steps to the wholesome environment which he left when he forsook his father's house. In that long journey he was repenting. It was an experience which he must pass through. No one could make the trip for him, not even his old father who loved him so dearly. He must make his own adjustment. No one could repent for him. After reaching his home again, his conduct was certainly different from his conduct in that far country. He could never have remained in his father's house and have behaved as he did when engaged in riotous living. To remain with his father, he found it necessary to adapt himself to the condition that prevailed in that home.

In the experience of Zacchæus, Luke 19: 1-9, we have another illustration of the principle of repentance as the principle of adaptation. Zacchæus was selected by Jesus to be his host while he was in Jericho. As soon as he heard the announcement that Jesus was to be his guest, he immediately attempted to correspond with the new condition or environment. Before he could feel at home in the presence of Jesus, it was necessary for him to do some repenting. However, he was in a position to do it. He seemed glad of the opportunity. "The half of my goods I give to the poor; and if I have taken anything from any man by false accusation, I restore him fourfold." No wonder Jesus said, "This day is salvation come to this house." Zacchæus had demonstrated his ability to correspond with the Christ environment.

All men are not as ready to repent as was Zacchæus. A rich young man came to Jesus wanting to know the way of eternal life. The Master explained what it was necessary for him to do. He could not conform. He went away sorrowful. He was unable to make the proper adaptation.

Repentance is just as necessary to-day as it was when Jesus made the call. The kingdom of heaven is at hand. While it is true that to-day there is great wickedness, while in other quarters righteousness is on the increase, this state of affairs is in harmony with prophecy. The increase of wickedness itself is one of the signs of the second coming of Christ. In the revelation of God to his church to-day, we are told: "The Devil shall have power over his own dominion; and also the Lord shall have power over his saints. . ."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 6.

The kingdom of God is at hand. The new environment is in process of formation. Leading men in government and business the world over are realizing as never before that the Christ principles must be applied if civilization is to endure. The law of survival applies to governments and to business organizations even as it applies to individuals. Sin destroys the sinner. The wicked slay the wicked. No wonder Jesus said the meek will inherit the earth. The meek are teachable. They are willing to be taught. They are capable of changing. In other words, they can repent. As the new environment is ushered in, they will make the necessary adjustment to be in harmony with it. The proud are not capable of making the adjustment, hence they perish. Not being in a position to abide the new condition, they perish with the old. Malachi, the prophet, had this thought in mind when he said, "But who may abide the day of his coming?"

The kingdom comes gradually. (Daniel 2: 44, 45.) Here, it is likened to a stone cut out of the mountain without hands. It had a small beginning, but eventually it was to become a universal kingdom. The story of the mustard seed also reveals that the kingdom was to have a small beginning, and its growth would be gradual. It is well for us that this is true, or we would be incapable of making the necessary adaptation. It is impossible for any of us to become perfect in a day; that is, to harmonize our lives perfectly with the divine: hence the necessity for repenting daily. As new truth is revealed, we should make the new adjustment. God and truth never change, but our conceptions change. The nearer we approach God and truth, the more perfect our adjustment becomes, hence the more perfect our repentance.

God is anxious for our repentance. He is doing all in his power to introduce the new environment. The gospel in its fullness has been restored, but we must make the application.

Shall we make the mistake that the inhabitants of Jerusalem made when they refused to correspond with the new environment? (Luke 13: 34, 35.) The kingdom was in their midst, but they ignored it, and they perished. I trust we are as capable and as anxious to repent as Zacchæus. If so, the coming of the kingdom will be a blessing; if not, it will be a curse.

May God help us to heed the cry, "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye, and believe the gospel."

Quetzalcoatl

BY PAUL M. HANSON

The purpose of this article is to direct attention to a remarkable ancient American divinity.

Edward Seler writes:

As observation of the stars was the duty of the priests, the morning star, it seems, was even regarded as connected with the deity who was considered the first priest and the inventor of every art, of art handicrafts as well as of the special sacerdotal art and science, of the calendar and the soothsaying art, with Quetzalcoatl, the hero of Tula, the king and lord of the Toltecs. . . . They said that Quetzalcoatl died when the star became visible, and henceforth they called him lord of the dawn (Tlauizcalpan tecutli). They said that when he died he was invisible for four days; they said he wandered in the underworld, and for four days more he was bone (dead, or emaciated). Not until eight days were past did the great star (the morning star) appear. They said that Quetzalcoatl then ascended the throne as god.—Bulletin 28, Bureau of American Ethnology, pp. 359, 360.

San Juan Teotihuacan, twenty-five miles northea of the city of Mexico, stands easily at the head of the ancient cities of Mexico. This city, a great center of population and culture, is generally attributed to the Toltecs, mentioned in traditions of the Mexican and Central American races. They were a civilized nation, intelligent and powerful, and their reign extended over a long period of years.

W. H. Holmes writes of them:

The art remains indicate a culture differing decidedly from that of Tenochtitlan—the Aztec capital, now the capital city of Mexico—differing from it in so many ways as to warrant the inference of a distinct nation; but at the same time the analogies are so close and numerous that the two peoples, if not of the same stock, must have been closely associated for a great number of years.

The nature and arrangement of the principal structures and features of the city would indicate the dominance of religious motives in their construction, and this, coupled with the well-known fact that ceremonial life among the native peoples in general was of vast importance, warrants the conclusion that Teotihuacan was in a sense a religious center. . . . It is noted that among all the monuments and relics of art there is a singular absence of indications of a warlike spirit. . . . It is probable that agriculture was the chief resource of the people, though many other arts and industries flourished.—Archaeological Studies Among the Ancient Cities of Mexico, pp. 289, 290.

Our knowledge of the Toltecs rests chiefly on traditional legends, transmitted to us by the nations that came after them. They employed the use of hieroglyphs. They possessed many useful arts, a high code of morals, and a pure and simple religion. They were great architects. Ruins are still visible of some of their great cities, like Tula.

Besides building palaces of cut stone, without mortar, or wood of any kind, they were "cunning artists in working gold, precious stones, and other curiosities."

Clavigero says of this advanced nation:

It is certain that they built in honor of their beloved god, Quetzalcoatl, the highest pyramid of Cholula, and probably also these famous ones of Teotihuacan in honor of the sun and moon, which are still in existence, though much disfigured.—History of Mexico, vol. 1, p. 88.

It is well to keep in mind Désiré Charnay's words:

We cannot sufficiently impress on the reader that in America the pyramid was synonymous with temple, or used as basement for temples and palaces.—Ancient Cities of the New World, p. 132.

The pyramid of Cholula, possessing a base larger than the base of Cheops, had an altar on its top, dedicated to Quetzalcoatl.

Humboldt records the following:

The reign of Quetzalcoatl was the golden age of the people of Anahuac. At that period, all animals, and even men, lived in peace; the earth brought forth, without culture, the most fruitful harvests; and the air was filled with a multitude of birds, which were admired for their song, and the beauty of their plumage. . . .

He preached peace to men, and would permit no other offerings to the divinity, than the first fruits of the harvest. From Cholula Quetzalcoatl passed on to the mouth of the river Goasacoalco, where he disappeared, after having declared to the Cholulans (Chololtectales) that he would return in a short time to govern them again, and renew their happiness.—Researches in America, vol. 1, pp. 93, 94.

Quetzalcoatl was intimately identified with the institutions and civilization of the entire Nahua race.

John T. Short says:

We cannot, however, dismiss this the most primitive period of the growth of the Nahua nations, without a reference to the reputed author of the higher phases of their civilization. We refer to that semi-mythical and semi-divine personage, Quetzalcoatl. The numerous legends concerning this culture-hero, scattered chronologically over hundreds of years of Nahua history, may have originated in the life and character of some noted personage—the leader and civilizer of the most ancient branches of the Nahua family, or in the personification of an ideal deity, a nature-god whose chief attribute, whose distinguishing office, was the fertilization of the earth, the revivification of the slumbering forces in nature, and consequently the author of prosperity, agriculture, and the arts of peace. In either case the name of the original Quetzalcoatl, were he either man or deity, was eventually inherited by a line of individuals who became the priests of his worship, or the representatives of his teachings, and the incunablers of the most humane and noble principles which entered into the ancient civilization.

He is described as having been a white man, with a strong formation of body, broad forehead, large eyes, and flowing beard. He wore a mitre on his head, and was dressed in a long, white robe, reaching to his feet, and covered with red crosses. In his hand he held a sickle. His habits were ascetic; he never married, was most chaste and pure in his life, and is said to have endured penance in a neighboring mountain, not for its effects upon himself, but as an example to others. Some have here found a parallel for Christ's temptation. He condemned sacrifices, except of fruit and flowers, and was known as the god of peace; for when addressed on the subject of war, he is reported to have stopped his ears with his fingers. . . .

The Cholulans, out of respect to Quetzalcoatl, placed the government in the hands of the recipients of his blessing. His status was placed in a sanctuary on the pyramid, but in a reclining position, representing a state of repose, with the understanding that it shall be placed upon its feet when the god returns. . . .

No wonder when the fleet of Cortez hope in sight on the horizon, almost in the same place where Quetzalcoatl's bark had disappeared, that the Mexican, who had been waiting centuries for the prince of peace to return, believed his waiting to be at an end. No wonder that he inquired of the distant and mysterious Tlapalla. In this state of expectancy we find a most natural and fruitful soil for the operations of the Spanish conquerors.—North Americans of Antiquity, pp. 267, 268, 271.

Humboldt says:

This Quetzalcoatl, whose name signifies serpent clothed with green feathers, from coatl, serpent, and quetzalli, green feathers, is the most mysterious being of the whole Mexican mythology.—Researches in America, vol. 1, p. 92.

The quetzal (pronounced kez'al) is the national emblem of Guatemala] and is decidedly a bird of freedom, as it never survives captivity, even when taken in earliest life. In ancient days not even the royal family could wear the beautiful plumes. At present the Indians bring the skins from the mountains in considerable numbers, their value depending on the length of the tail plumes, which sometimes exceed three feet.—The Land of the Quetzal, p. 97.

Squier says:

The most celebrated is the Quetzel, which was the imperial bird of the Quiches. It is best known in the museums as the Trogon Rappelente, and is found only in the Mountains of Merendon, in Honduras, and the Department of Quezaltenango, in Guatemala.—Notes on Central America, p. 195.

Quetzalcoatl is compounded of quetzalli, a plume of green feathers, metaphorically signifying anything precious, and coatl, a serpent.

It should be remembered that the symbol of life and power among the Mexicans and Central Americans has always been a serpent. Of this one is constantly reminded in going through the National Museum in the capital.—Sketches of Mexico, p. 91.

The symbol of life and power among the Central Americans and Mexicans has ever been a serpent, a fact which may have derived its significance from the meaning of the name of the Votanites together with the power attained by Palenque.—North Americans of Antiquity, p. 208.

With this explanation it can be seen that the name Quetzalcoatl could most appropriately be applied by the ancient nations of America to the deity whom they regarded as the founder of their institutions and national life.

A priesthood appears to have been founded who perpetuated the doctrines of this deified man.—North Americans of Antiquity, p. 279.

Among the Quiches the name of Quetzalcoatl was Gumeatz, and among the Mayas, Cukulcan, which, singularly enough, means the same in each language, namely, "plumed serpent." The first named was no tribal hero, but belonged to the entire Nahua race, and some believe that he was called "feathered or plumed serpent," after the brazen serpent which Moses lifted up in the wilderness.—Sketches of Mexico, p. 117.

The most magnificent and beautiful front in America is that of the Serpent Temple [Uxmal, Yucatan]. . . .

The marked feature of the sculpture is the formation of square panels by the intertwined bodies of two huge stone serpents with monster heads, surmounted by plumes and interlocking between the jaws of each a human face. A head and tail as shown above occupy opposite extremes of the front. This may be a representation of the plumed serpent of the Central American mythology. The stone lattice work (a feature of Uxmal sculpture), underlying the serpents and covering the panels formed by their folds, is more complicated and beautiful than any other in America. . . .

If the reader will but turn to our cut of the serpent temple at Uxmal (p. 394), the same symbol of Cukulcan or Quetzalcoatl, the feathered serpent, will be seen. Doctor Le Plongeon, in his recent researches, is convinced that Uxmal was built, or more properly rebuilt, by Nahua invaders, who afterwards became amalgamated with the Mayas. Most of the Mexican historians represent Quetzalcoatl as the founder of the Nahua civilization. Torquemada states that he was their leader when they first arrived in Mexico. If the "Feathered Serpent" was the founder of their institutions, it was not inappropriate for the Aztec artist to place the hero's face at the bottom of the stone, and represent the symbols of the cycles as huge scales upon his body, since the influence of the civilization which he established had been felt throughout their entire history.—North Americans of Antiquity, pp. 394, 457.

The following words of John T. Short in the conclusion of his book, are significant:

The doctrines of the benign and saintly Quetzalcoatl or Cukulcan must be classed among the great faiths of mankind, and their author, alone of all the great teachers of morals except Christ himself, inculcating a positive morality, must be granted a precedence of most of the great teachers of Chinese and Hindoo antiquity.—North Americans of Antiquity, p. 515.

Quetzalcoatl remains to be explained.

The Book of Mormon records that Christ after his crucifixion visited his church on the American Continent. With the passing of time there occurred a total apostasy of his people from the true faith. Consequently only fragments of their original belief remain to be discovered.

May not Quetzalcoatl be the Christ of the Holy Scriptures?
Facts About the Bible.—No. 12
BY A. B. PHILLIPS

It is not possible to locate with certainty all of the countries that are first mentioned in the Bible. Such are Ethiopia, Havilah, Shinar, and Ur, though some idea of their approximate locations as anciently known is still held, as most of the events with which they are connected help to identify them in some measure. Boundaries were also subject to great changes, so that territory once indicated might be different from that subsequently referred to. Most of the post-diluvian events of biblical mention took place near the Mediterranean Sea or to the eastward in the country known as the Levant, particularly in the river valleys such as the Nile, Euphrates, Tigris, and Jordan.

Sketch of the Holy Land

Of overshadowing interest to Bible readers is that portion of country known as the Holy Land, because God selected it for his Chosen People as the place of their divinely appointed inheritance. The extent of this country has also changed from time to time, and even its name has been variously known in different periods. Perhaps the most ancient biblical term applied to it was that of Canaan, supposed to have been derived from Canaan the son of Ham, whose descendants settled on the Palestinian seacoast in an early period. The Phoenicians are reckoned among these ancient descendants, but the Hittites, Zidonians, Hivites, and other tribes also were in that country at an early period of the Genesis account.

The name of Palestine appears to have come from the Philistines who occupied the country, being derived from the Hebrew word for that people, and mentioned over two hundred and eighty times in the Bible. The Hebrew word,Palesheth, first occurs in Exodus 15: 14, but in the Authorized Version is thrice rendered Philistia in the Psalms. It means "migration," hence the land of strangers. Abraham was acquainted with the Philistines and lived among them for a time, though his home had been in Padanaram, Mesopotamia. It was to Abraham that Canaan was given by the Lord, and therefore became known as the "Promised Land."

It is noteworthy that the whole territory embraced in the Holy Land is only about 180 miles long, or about as long as the State of New Jersey, and aver-ages in width about sixty miles. But on account of its position it has been the scene of many bloody battles. It had been subject to Babylonian rule prior to its conquest by the Kassites, who founded the Elamite dynasty in 1780 B. C. Egypt held the kings of Palestine in vassalage in the fifteenth century B. C. and had colonies there, but seemed to have held uncertain control after the following century. It is believed by many that Merenptah II, son of Rameses II, was the Pharaoh of the Exodus. In 1896 an inscribed stele of Merenptah was found which contained the words: "Ysirael is desolated, his seed is not." But it is uncertain as to what is meant by the statement.

It was not until David's time that the Promised Land was completely conquered, though the conquest of Gilead, Bashan, and Midian were accomplished under Moses, as this land east of the Jordan was in the line of the Hebrew march. Under Joshua the land on the west was to a large extent taken. Other

SOLOMON'S POOLS (See Ecc. 2:6)
These pools are located between Jerusalem and Hebron, and anciently supplied water for Jerusalem through a system of conduits.

Four centuries of Greek influence followed the rule of Alexander, though Palestine was an Egyptian province during the third century B.C. In the second century B.C. it was for a while under the Syrians, but the Maccabean revolt resulted in the establishment of the independence of Judea until the Roman conquest of 65 B.C. From this time onward the land of the Jews remained under foreign rule, and in the time of our Lord such privileges as they were permitted to enjoy came to them by Roman grant or sufferance.

Physical Features and Climate

Small as is this country, its physical features are among the most varied on the globe. For this reason the temperature varies greatly in different places, in summer usually ranging from 80° to 90° in the mountains, but in parts of the Jordan Valley sometimes reaching 120° or even much higher, while in the winter it drops at night to near the freezing point occasionally. In eastern Palestine the greatest changes of temperature occur, sometimes varying fifty degrees in a single day, and in winter snow covers some of the higher mountains.

Observations taken by the British Government and others record rainfalls of from 20 to 30 inches in a year, though in unusual years more has fallen. The “former rain” of scripture usually begins during the month of November and continues more or less intermittently until April, the month of January being generally the most rainy season. The “latter rain” comes in the latter part of Abib and the early part of Zif, nearly corresponding to our April, after which a long dry season follows when the perennial streams become dry. Many hillside streams, however, compensate in part for this lack of moisture, while a large number of cisterns may still be found scattered over the fields and hills, as in the days when the book of Kings was written (see 2 Kings 18:31).

The three Pools of Solomon anciently supplied Jerusalem with water by means of great conduits extending for about twenty miles. The remains of aqueducts may still be seen in various places on both sides of the Jordan. Many other scenes of remarkable interest greet the traveler, and the landscape in charming variation may be seen for many miles in the clear atmosphere. Many other interesting details concerning the climate, fruits, flowers, and fauna are given in Helps to Bible Study, that this brief article cannot contain.

We hear of young men and women bearing their breasts, lamenting the fact that all opportunities have been embraced. There are yet wonders to unfold, discoveries to be made beside which the airplane and wireless are simple as two and two.

NEWS AND LETTERS

“Easter Dawn” Pageant Is Impressive

STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA, April 28.—Missionary E. B. Hull spent about two weeks with us, during which time he visited every family in the branch, giving everyone an opportunity for more intimate contact with his congenial and happy spirit, which was enjoyed by all.

Brother Hull was persuaded to remain over Easter Sunday, as it was a special event in Stockton Branch. It was a beautiful day, both in the weather and in the hearts of the Saints. A short Sunday school session was held, after which the primary department gave their program of music and recitations. Brother White spoke at the eleven o'clock hour and made our hearts rejoice more in the gospel. All were made to feel that all will yet be well with the church.

A luncheon was served in the basement of the church at half past one. We had with us Brother and Sister J. D. White, with other Oakland Saints; also Elder W. H. Dawson and Brother John Dawson from Sacramento; and Brother and Sister Hintz of Chico.

An ordination meeting was held at half past two when four of the local brethren were ordained: Brothers George Vallem and Samuel Dagen to the office of priest; Brother Coryl Holden, teacher; and Marion Cross, deacon. The Spirit was greatly manifest throughout. The meeting was then turned over to a symposium, and all present felt to rejoice, being greatly edified by the influence of the Spirit.

The Temple Builders and Department of Recreation and Expression joined their forces at half past seven and presented the pageant, “Easter Dawn,” which pictured in the minds the resurrection of Christ; also the characterization of Pilate, his bodyguards, the tomb guards, the women at the tomb, and the beloved disciples of Jesus were presented. It brought more vividly before us the wonders of the resurrection—scenes that will not soon be forgotten.

All departments are moving along nicely, and a spirit of learning exists.

Seven Baptized in Florida

PENSACOLA, FLORIDA, May 6.—The work in the branch is moving forward, not with great rapidity, but with a surety which is very encouraging.

On Wednesday, April 28, down by an old mill stream, as the last rays of the sun were shining, seven precious souls were led into the waters of baptism. These our brothers and sisters have been thoroughly instructed and tenderly led along, until they surrendered the keeping of their lives to their God.

Mr. Raley, a soldier stationed at Fort Barrancas, has been a very active member in the Baptist Church, holding a teachers’ certificate from the Southern Baptist Convention, at Atlanta, Georgia. He was a good Bible student and put up a bold fight when he came in contact with this church, but having been convinced he cheerfully accepted.

Sunday being the time for sacrament, it was decided to have the confirmation service at that hour also, and truly God’s Spirit was felt in power. Many were the testimonies of God’s love and protection to his children. Some few were greatly impressed, having the sweet assurance that God is among his Saints, making them to know the truthfulness of this gospel. Having been thus touched by the Spirit, the testimonies were valiant.

Mrs. Harris, one of our new members, was very pleasantly surprised when she returned home Monday night after having had supper with Sister Farinas, to find a room full of her friends waiting to wish her a happy birthday. Refreshments were served, and we left her rejoicing to know she was remembered.

We have been having choir practice Tuesday nights, and it proves to be a great help in learning the songs, as our people here have not had such privilege before.

A supper will be served underneath the large oaks on the church ground May 12, by which we hope to raise money to finish painting the church and offer unto God a finished structure.

Brother Rudd is indeed happy to see the work here doing so well, and feels to say it is only the bud in its beauty, and by trusting and obeying we hope to see the flower of the latter-day work burst into full bloom in this place.

Mapleton, Kansas

May 3.—We are pleased to report that the young men who were recently ordained to the priesthood are moving out nicely in their work. Brother Orion Dennis has preached a number of times here and at Fort Scott and has done splendidly. This is as it should be, for when one is doing his duty the Lord will surely bless his work.

The Saints take great pride in their little church at Mapleton. They are having the floors and woodwork all varnished anew, which will greatly improve its appearance.

Brother Hollie Dennis and family have returned from western Kansas, where they moved a year ago. We hardly know whether it is the association of the Saints that draws this family back, or home ties. We do not blame Brother Dennis for desiring to be near his father and mother. Whatever it is that draws him back, the Saints are glad to see the happy faces of this family and to again hear the voice of Brother Dennis in defense of the latter-day work.

As Brother Lee Quick will again go out in the mission field we will need Brother Dennis in his place.

The Religion is progressing nicely. The young people will meet at Brother Ward Wellington’s for their next recreation meeting, where they are to have an address along the lines of recreation.

Duluth, Minnesota

May 5.—The sacramental service on April 5 was not as largely attended as before, there being considerable sickness in this territory.

The Sunday school gave a fine program in the evening Easter Sunday, which was enjoyed by all.

We have had quite a number of visitors of late months. Brother Earl Innis, who is first mate on the steamer S. H. Robbins which laid up here for the winter, and his friend, Floyd McConnell, met with the Saints in several services. Sister Russell, of Clontarf, Minnesota, took in several services while visiting her daughter here. Brother and Sister Jay Walters, of Carlton, took in the Easter program on the 12th.

The local priesthood is occupying in the different services, striving to bring to the Saints food that will help to build them up. The Saints here are glad that the controversy is ended, so the church can go forward in building up the kingdom of God, establishing his righteousness, so that Zion will soon blossom as a rose and put on her beautiful garments and the pure in heart soon be gathered in, upon whom the world can look as an example.

We met again in sacramental service May 3 and had with us Brother W. E. Shakespeare, our missionary, and District President George W. Day. Many earnest prayers were offered, and the testimonies were from hearts overflowing with love for God and showed a sincere feeling for the work into which each has been called in these last days. The power of prayer was testified to, also the many blessings which God has bestowed upon the people in this portion of the Lord’s vineyard—in healing the sick, administering to the sad, opening the way for carrying forth the gospel, to the Saints in obtaining a house of worship. May his work continue, and all work in unity, love, forbearance, and patience, endeavoring to hold fast to the rod of iron that will ultimately save us all in the kingdom of God if faithful to the covenant we renewed this day, and striving to go onward and upward until we become perfect in Christ Jesus.

The Saints were made sad on April 25 by the death of our aged brother, Sylvester B. Silverthorn, following an operation at the local hospital. He was born August 20, 1852, and was baptized April 22, 1921. He leaves his wife, a staunch Latter Day Saint, five daughters, one sister, and two sons. Pastor C. B. Freeman officiated at the services at the church, and interment was in Oneota Cemetery on April 28. We ask prayers for his aged companion, who says if it were not for the gospel she would not be able to stand the blow that has come to her. But in the gospel there is life more abundant to all who will seek and abide.

San Antonio, Texas

May 6.—An Easter bazaar under the auspices of the Department of Women was held on April 10 and 11, which netted them a nice little sum. After Sunday school was dismissed Easter Sunday, the crowd repaired to a quiet place on the San Antonio River, where the children enjoyed an Easter hunt, and all partook of a splendid dinner. In the afternoon the crowd was entertained by Brothers Rob and Tommie Jett, who gave some good old-time music on the violin and guitar. An Easter sermon was preached in the evening by Brother E. L. Henson, and the choir furnished special Easter music.

At the morning service on April 26 we were favored with a sermon from Brother D. S. Palmer, who had just returned from General Conference, his theme being charity. At four o’clock in the afternoon seven children were baptized, Pastor T. J. Jett officiating. Brother R. E. Miller was in charge of the service and made a nice talk to the candidates. Two other churches had met there for the same purpose—Baptists and Christians. The Baptists gave way to our people, as their pastor had not yet arrived, so they witnessed the baptism of the Saints, and some of the Saints stayed to witness their baptism. The Christian people moved further down the river and did their baptizing. The confirmation meeting was held at the church in the evening. Brother E. L. Henson was the speaker of the evening, using for a text, “Whatsoever you sow you shall also reap.”

The first Sunday in May a splendid spirit was present at the sacramental meeting, quite a number taking part, among whom was a young girl who had been baptized the Sunday before, Sister Ione Dorrow, who asked the Saints to pray for her. Brother Henson occupied in the evening, having splendid liberty and good attendance.
Our Religio president, Sister Laura Buck, left for California some weeks ago. The Religio gave her a farewell party at the home of Brother and Sister J. D. Edwards on the night of her departure, where all enjoyed a social evening. The young people feel the loss of Sister Laura to the extent that they have decided to discontinue the Religio for a while. The grandmother of our pastor, who is very sick, needs the prayers of the Saints. She is ninety years old.

East Saint Louis, Illinois

May 4.—Our General Conference visitors have all returned, and this branch is showing quite a bit of life.

The sacramental meeting last Sunday was very special, Brothers Bean and Jones both speaking through the Spirit. Many of the young people testified, and not a minute was wasted during the two hours the meeting lasted.

The Temple Builders recently gave a play entitled “Doctor Cureall” at Religio. The play was in two acts and showed some excellent talent. Sister Marie Carroll, as the doctor, was especially good.

The two Bible classes of the Sunday school have just finished a contest in attendance, and the ladies’ class, taught by Sister Rella McLean, defeated the men’s class taught by Brother Henry Brunkhorst.

We are working on a Mothers’ Day program for Sunday, May 10, which promises to be a success.

Portland, Oregon

May 4.—On March 22 Brother John Hanson baptized Leonard Holler and his wife, Anna. They were confirmed the same day. Sister Holler had been healed of a severe illness a short time before, through administration, after several doctors had given her up. She testifies that she is glad the doctors failed, for it showed her the power as well as the love of God as nothing else could have done.

The Portland Sunday school won a recent contest between the schools at Portland, Seattle, and Spokane. The contest ended in March.

Friday evening, April 3, a number of the students of the Ted Bacon Studio, under the direction of Henry L. Livingston, one of our young priests, gave a very fine concert at the church consisting of orchestra numbers, a violin trio, vocal solos, piano solo, and other like numbers. The concert drew a large audience and was highly appreciated by all lovers of good music, which includes most of us.

Easter was celebrated by two programs. One was a short but beautiful little program by the little tots of the junior Sunday school just after the regular Sunday school session. The evening program was a cantata portraying the life of the Savior from the manger to the resurrection and ascension. The cantata was rendered by the Portland choir under the direction of Mrs. Fay Buchanan, assisted by Mrs. Esther Dudley, pianist, and several soloists. The service was both impressive and beautiful.

The work on the church basement is practically completed and is ready for use for Sunday school classes and other purposes, such as a social center.

While some of the Saints were disappointed with the outcome of General Conference, and many of us were made sad by reports of some we have learned to love being no longer in active service, we are yet hopeful for the future progress of the work and the redemption of Zion.

At the sacramental service the morning of May 3, many testified to the goodness and mercy of God and to their faith in him and his church, voicing their determination to press forward and prepare for the things the near future will surely bring forth.

Fort Worth, Texas

I have received many papers and tracts from Saints in widely scattered places and am very thankful to those who sent them. I can assure everyone that they have been well distributed over the city.

We are still holding prayer meeting each Thursday night at eight o’clock, and preaching Sunday evening at the same hour. We have a new location, and our mission hall is at the corner of Park Street and Galver Avenue. Any visiting Saints would be welcome to drop in and see us.

The work is growing some. One sister has just moved in, and three additions have been made by baptism.

Let us all work together in harmony in all things God has given us to do, and pray for the Saints here in Fort Worth. We are expecting Elder S. S. Smith back with us soon.

Route 1, Box 385

J. A. WYNINGER.

Mallard, Iowa

May 5.—The delegates who attended General Conference agree that it was a wonderful meeting and feel that now the work will go forward.

On March 29 the Sunday school took an examination on the past quarter’s work, and our teachers are much pleased with the results.

The Department of Women sent twenty ready-made articles to the Indian missionary bazaar April 1.

Sunday, April 5, we had for visitors at our sacramental service Brother and Sister Larson and children, Brother and Sister Peterson and children from Albert City, Brother and Sister Will and family from Ayrshire, and Sister Barker from Rolfe, making thirteen visitors in all. We are always glad to welcome any who desire to meet with us.

Brother and Sister Arthur Jordison and baby, of Coalville, were visitors with us on March 22.

The Department of Recreation and Expression held a social at the home of Brother and Sister Cockefair on April 24. The children furnished a program, after which a marshmallow roast was given. Brother and Sister Edwards were guests of the evening. All present report an enjoyable evening.

The news has just come to us of the death of Brother A. L. Whiteaker at Chetek, Wisconsin, on May 1. Brother Whiteaker was ordained a priest in November, 1876, an elder in April, 1878, and a seventy in 1900, and has for these many years been a minister of the gospel—more than forty-three years. He was a spiritual father to the Saints throughout the district in which he labored. Northern Wisconsin has been his field for many years, and for some time he had been pastor of the branch at Chetek. The funeral sermon was by J. L. Cooper, assisted by the Adventist pastor. Interment was in the cemetery at Blair, Wisconsin.
Independence

Stone Church

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 10.—This being Mothers' Day, all the meetings and services rendered tribute to her love and devotion.

At the early young people's prayer meeting about one hundred and twenty-five reverent young people, presided over by Brethren D. O. Cato and C. B. Hartshorn, enjoyed the tender influences of the Spirit as they recounted in their testimonies the great things mother love had wrought in their lives. The testimonies touched deeply the hearts of those who heard. The older people's meeting had fifty in attendance. Elder H. S. Lytle reports one of the best meetings had for some time.

There were 1,519 in attendance at Sunday school, and their spirits were enlivened by the charming orchestra music. One number was especially interesting, composed by Lucien Denni of Kansas City and entitled “The mystery of night.” He had his inspiration from an ancient Chinese poem and made of it a real tone poem. There was also a pretty musical reading, “Are you half the man your mother thought you'd be?”

The eleven o'clock service was well attended. Preaching by Apostle R. S. Budl assisted by R. T. Cooper and J. F. Curtis. The theme was “Mother love.” He recounted many touching instances where mother love had stood the test of the fiery furnace heat and had come through godlike in its endurance and stability.

He told how, in his own life the strong, purposeful influence of a good Latter Day Saint mother had dominated his career and set his feet firmly in the paths of righteousness. She worked with God in preparing him for his future work. She had faith he was to be a preacher, so when he was a little fellow in school she encouraged him in “speaking pieces” and getting up before the public at every opportunity. When he felt timid she buoyed him up by a warm hand pressure and whispered words of assurance. After his baptism she said, “Roy, my son, mother has been responsible to God for your sins, but from now on you must answer to God for all your own accounts, but mother will keep on praying for you, advising and helping you just the same.”

When he was ordained to the priesthood she said, “Now, my son, you not only have to answer to God for yourself but for others—those for whom you labor ministerially.”

Thus he paid a tribute of deep appreciation to his mother's influence and power for good in his life.

The afternoon prayer meeting was presided over by Brethren I. N. White, U. W. Greene, and George Jenkins. There were three confirmations. The meeting was lively and interesting, and sometimes three or four were on their feet at once. Blessed mother love lined up with gospel influences and work was the general inspiration of the meeting. It came to a close with reluctance, for there seemed to be many more who wished to speak.

There were 280 present at the six o'clock Religio session. After the lesson period there was a business meeting in which F. W. Holm was elected superintendent with F. A. Cool and Harry Barzo as assistants. Superintendent Holm announced there would be no change of policy so far as he was concerned regarding the study of the Book of Mormon. Many of the young people remained for the evening service to witness a twenty-minute dramatization of “A little child shall lead them,” given by young people from the Budd Park Christian Church of Kansas City, Missouri. The playlet left a splendid impression. It struck at jealousy, vain display for personal honor, and taught faith in the Lord and the beauty of service to men.

The pastor, C. Ed. Miller, after the playlet, delivered a twenty-five minute sermon on “The spirit of motherhood.” He said pioneers had to be strong, sturdy people. Rough, hard work did not give opportunity for development of the finer instincts, but when the virgin forests had been conquered they developed a taste for culture and books; then poetry, art, and the sciences entered the home. Often the pioneers had ridiculed, as effeminate, cultural development. Nationally we are emerging from primitive conditions. Nationally we have laughed at the finer things. When a senator suggested a day be set apart for Mothers' Day his motion was ridiculed, but Mothers' Day is here to stay. The mother spirit pervades all nature. The birds will fly thousands of miles to their nesting places, fish will swim for days and days to the spawning territory. Children in all lands have some form of doll. Old women have traveled the seven seas in search of lost children. That mother spirit is an echo from the divine soul.

It was rainy Wednesday evening, but still there was a good attendance at the young people's prayer service.

Of to Their Missions

One of the post-conference appointments that will be of interest to the Saints is the appointment by the Presidency and Quorum of Twelve of Brother John W. Rushton to Saint Louis as pastor. Brother Rushton met with the Saints at Saint Louis Sunday, May 3, and the following Wednesday evening a business meeting of the branch was held at which he was duly elected as pastor to succeed Brother H. A. Higgin's, who goes to Des Moines. Brother Rushton returned to Independence, but expects to be in Saint Louis Sunday, May 17, to take up active pastoral work.

Elder J. W. Metcalf, who has been in Independence for several months, partly because of severe heart trouble, went Wednesday to his mission field in Indiana, his first place of stopping to be Indianapolis, where district conference convenes May 9 and 10. His field address will be Marengo, Indiana.

Elder J. Charles May left May 7 for his field in the South, his first stop being Mobile, Alabama.

Elder J. W. Peterson also started May 11 for his mission in Ontario. Many others of the ministry have gone from Independence to take up their work for another conference year.

Hospital Day at Independence Sanitarium

Tuesday, May 12, was National Hospital Day, and a cordial invitation was extended to the public to visit the Independence Sanitarium from two to five o'clock in the afternoon. The Patroness Society received and served refreshments in the dining room.

On May 16 it is hoped to raise at least $1,000 for a free bed fund. Last year's tag day netted $740.77 for this fund, which cared for thirty-two patients for 244 bed days, also paid for four X-rays and one laboratory test for patients not admitted to the hospital. Any contribution sent direct to the Sanitarium for this fund would be very much appreciated.

Brother Henry N. Davis, who came to Independence nearly thirty years ago, passed away at the Sanitarium May 6, after a long illness. He was a faithful, diligent servant and worker, a patient sufferer.

Second Church

Elder A. K. Dillee went to Blue Springs Sunday morning to help them in the Sunday school and preach for them at eleven o'clock. His Sunday school class and the class of Sister Jennie Willis accompanied him and took lunch, enjoying the fine day in the country.

Notwithstanding the absence of these more than thirty young people, the morning prayer service was well attended and enjoyed. Thankfulness for mother's care and influence predominated in the testimonies.

The eleven o'clock service was unique. Deputy Constable W. A. Miller addressed a good congregation, urging upon the parents the necessity for closer surveillance of their children. He told of the hazardous conditions which exist on the public highways of the county and related several instances where girls of tender years had been found on the highways as late as half past one to three o'clock in the morning, in company with men of mature years, in automobiles parked without lights. His advice to parents was emphasized and supported by the pastor.

At half past one in the afternoon Brother J. E. Poulsks baptized his grandson, Aubrey Story, and the meeting which followed at half past two is reported as very good.

The priesthood of the section met at six o'clock, and were present almost to a man. Interest was such as to hold them right up to the time for evening service. Surely these men are ready for the work which will magnify their calling.

Elder Charles Edmunds spoke at the evening service upon the subject of the Holy Spirit and its work. Attendance was good. The day was a successful one.

Brother Martin, deacon of Group 16, and caretaker of the church property, has traded his town property for a home southeast of the city and is moving to his new home this week. He will care for his group work the remainder of the month, but has relinquished the care of the church property.

Walnut Park

Walnut Park began early to show loyalty to mothers, the Religio program on the 5th being on that theme, at which time a bouquet of flowers was presented to the oldest mother present, Sister Lavina McEvers, aged seventy-three, mother of Sister David Condit. Sister McEvers is a regular attendant of the church history class in Religio.

At Sunday school, the 10th, Elder Birch Whiting gave a reminiscent talk, full of devotion to his own mother and others.

The Department of Women, Mrs. F. R. Schafer, superintendent, had Charge of the Sunday services at eleven o'clock and in the evening. The mothers were seated in one section of the church, and decorations were lovingly and beautifully arranged, as was the forenoon program of songs and readings by children and young people, the endeavor to carry it all out in a quiet, orderly way being unusually successful.

The day closed with a most appropriate sermon by President Elbert A. Smith.

Liberty Street

The pie supper given by the upper circle of Orioles netted the girls a nice little sum of money, which is to be used to help buy uniforms for the members of the circle.

Friday, May 15, the lower circle of Orioles, ranging in age from ten to fifteen, assisted by the boys of the same age, will give a play, "The Model school," portraying an old-fashioned country school being taught by one of the students. There will also be readings and musical numbers. A collection will be taken to help the children buy their share of the budget.

Sunday morning Apostle Paul M. Hanson preached, using as a basis of his remarks the story of Hannah. This sermon was in honor of Mothers' Day. In the evening Elder J. W. A. Bailey preached on "Jesus Christ the anchor."

Members from the Bennington Heights group, of Kansas City, recently gave a play at Liberty Street Church, "The questioner," which did more to bring home to the audience the lesson it attempted to teach than does many a sermon. The play illustrated how a man assailed by doubt and drawn by worldly pleasure was brought to see life in its true light through the ministrations of various heavenly messengers in the garb of death, gold, his fellow beings, wisdom, nature, history, reason, religion, experience, sorrow, faith, love, and joy. The time of the play was the "day of enlightenment," the scene being laid in "the courtyard of the inn called Life."

The director of the junior choir, Sister Mabel Sellers, has charge of the music for the church service next Sunday, and the children will do the singing.

East Independence

There were three baptisms this last week, all being children of Saints. The confirmation took place at the Wednesday night prayer service.

Brother Harvey Minton went to his mission field in southwestern Kansas this last week. His wife and children will visit with relatives in Indiana and Illinois for some time.

The Department of Women held a meeting Thursday afternoon. At this meeting it was decided to meet the first Sunday afternoon of each month, hoping in this way to have better interest and attendance.

There was a large attendance at the Sunday morning services, where a good spirit prevailed. Bishop Roderick May was the speaker at the evening hour.

Two names were recently placed on the Cradle Roll. They were Jellis Carter Thatcher and Floyd Junior Thomas. These children were blessed a few Sundays ago by Brothers D. T. Williams and J. J. Teeter.

The Willing Workers will hold a bake sale at B. C. Harder's store next Saturday, May 16.

Brother M. F. Gowell was the speaker both morning and evening May 10. In both sermons he urged the Saints to move forward in carrying out the great program of the church.

Englewood

The Saints of this congregation enjoyed a splendid sacramental service this month. Brother J. G. Roberts, from Enoch Hill, was present, and spoke in prophecy to Pastor J. E. Warne, commending him for the work he has been doing and admonishing him to continue his effort, promising him the blessing of the Lord in his work. The Saints also were admonished to continue faithful and active. Mrs. Haggerty, the mother of Sister Dalzell, who has been blind for twenty-seven years, was administered to, receiving the promise that she would yet receive the blessing for which she asked.

The attendance on Mothers' Day was excellent. A short program was given just after Sunday school, after which Brother Warne preached on a subject appropriate to the day. George Willis, teacher of the group, preached in the evening.

The attendance at Religio is improving since the time of meeting has been changed from Sunday to Friday night.

The Department of Women meeting is to be held Wednesday at half past one, when class work, under the direction of Sister Mollie Davis, will be resumed.

Spring Branch

A full house attended the sacramental service May 3, where a good spirit was present. In the evening Pastor John Soderstadt was the speaker.

On Mothers' Day a special program was given in the morning, at which time Evangelist U. W. Greene gave a short talk that was much appreciated. Elder J. M. Terry spoke in the evening.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Next Friday night the Religious will have a pie social to raise money to help build the addition to the church.

Next Sunday Englewood, Spring Branch, and East Independence congregations are to join in an open-air service east of Independence. Preaching service will be held in the morning, after which a basket dinner will be held, and in the afternoon a special program will be given. Visitors will be welcomed.

A report on the Christmas offering for the first four months of the year showed just a few cents less than fifty dollars raised, half of the amount set for our goal for the year. This is a good average for a small group, and if such enthusiasm continues, the record will go far over the top.

Kansas City Stake Items

The quarterly stake conference will be held the 17th and 18th, with devotional services on Sunday and a business session on Monday at 7:45 p.m. The best speakers obtainable will dispense the word, so we anticipate a time of spiritual refreshing, as is our usual experience in our conference activities.

Mothers’ Day exercises were observed at the various churches of the stake to-day, made impressive because of special decorations. From the tiny to the older ones a wide range of talent was found who willingly took part in the programs, emphasizing mother’s great worth in endearing terms.

Central Church: The speaker at the evening hour was Elder Alma R. White.

Grandview Church: Elder Elmer Ohlert, who has been a missionary to Germany, was with them Sunday the 3d, gave an interesting talk to the Sunday school, and also made the opening remarks at the sacramental service at 11 o’clock. Patriarch Ammon White was the speaker at the evening service. They have had as recent speakers Elders J. W. Davis and Apostle F. Henry Edwards.

Argentine Church: Missionary William I. Fligg to-night commenced a series of special meetings at Argentine, to continue as long as interest keeps up. The usual method of advertising is employed, that of distribution of announcements in the vicinity of the church building.

Malvern Hill Church: The pastor, Brother S. N. Gray, has found it necessary to return to Joplin, his former home, on account of the poor health of his family, which necessitated the resignation of his pastorate. He is succeeded by Elder W. O. Hands, as Brother Hands was Sunday school Superintendent, he relinquished this office in favor of Brother Glen Faler, who was installed to-day. During the past few weeks they have been favored with several of the conference appointees as speakers, including Elder J. J. Cornish, of Canada. The speaker at night, was Bishop F. B. Blair; subject: “Mothers, ancient and modern.” On last Tuesday night they were favored with the rendition of the pageant, “Questioner,” put on by the Bennington Church young people, with a cast of twenty-two characters, the proceeds amounting to $8 net going to the building fund of the Bennington Church. It is said to be a great success in moral tone and the lesson it teaches. This same cast have presented the pageant at the South Side church, Independence; also at Enoch Hill and Liberty Street and Spring Branch. The expect to fill engagements in Lees Summit and Atherton, in the Holden Stake; at the Fourth Church, and Grandview Church, finishing the circuit at Bennington, their home church, here in the stake.

Bennington Church: Brother William I. Fligg was the speaker at the morning session of the women’s day exercises, and Brother Frederick J. Cleveland gave a lantern slide lecture on the Book of Mormon at 7:45.

Second Church: Apostle Clyde F. Ellis was the speaker to the mothers at eleven o’clock, and a crowded house greeted him and his exceptionally fine message. Pastor F. A. Evans held forth in the evening.

Quindaro Church: The Saints at this place had the pleasure of listening to Apostle Clyde F. Ellis in one of his masterful discourses at the evening hour. Brother Ellis gave a stereoptican lecture, using South Sea subjects, to the Saints at Armourdale last Thursday night to a good-sized audience and will present the same lecture to the Second Church next Friday night.

A Bishop Relates a Spiritual Experience

Permit me to say to the thousands of Saints who read the HERALD that my soul, body, and spirit have been re-dedicated to the service of this church, and that I am enjoying a blessed assurance and stronger hope in the final triumph of the cause of Zion than ever before. For several days the following inspiring lines of hymnology have enlarged my vision and cheered my heart:

“Shout the tidings of salvation! To the aged and the young; Till the precious invitation, Waken every heart and tongue.

“Send the sound, the earth around, From the rising to the setting of the sun, Till each gathering crowd shall proclaim aloud, The glorious work is done.

Thirty-three years ago this church gave me a mission, and I have tried to be valiant in service. Over one year ago the appointing powers changed my field of labor and the nature of my work to some extent. This latter direction has made it necessary for me to hold special meetings in several districts, and in many branches, laboring in conjunction with the officers in charge, and they have extended to me a real welcome and brotherly support for which I am very grateful.

It was also my duty as well as pleasure to take active part in four district reunions last summer, accounts of which have been published. In performing my humble service, preaching tithes, offerings, etc., I have also tried to emphasize the great value of “faith, hope, and charity,” and to “seek first to build up the kingdom of God.” Years of experience as well as observation have demonstrated the fact that wherever the above inspiring themes are diligently taught the church is built up. It is also gratifying to know that many young men and young women are preparing for responsible work in the church, and the time may be here when it is no longer a question of having enough men qualified to fill the needs of missions, but a query as to who shall be designated to the positions of great trust. This fact should inspire every tithing payer to greater activity.

With your permission, brother editors, I will relate briefly a spiritual experience I had thirteen months ago when going from my home in Independence to the Union Station, Kansas City, an hour’s ride. Upon entering the street car at the Temple Lot, the Holy Spirit filled my soul, and I was soon in deep thought on the sacredness of my appointment and mission as a traveling bishop. I considered my letter of assignment from the Joint Council of the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric a sacred trust by the Lord's church militant, the progress of which the church triumphant is deeply interested, feeling as I did that I should keep in mind both peoples—on earth and in heaven. Tears of joy blinded my eyes. Soon I was silently humming the hymn, "We thank Thee, O God, for a prophet"; then followed the words, "When earth in bondage long had lain"; after which that hymn of prayer and promise, "Redeemer of Israel, our only delight." I rejoiced in tears, trusting the good Spirit would be with me in all my labors. Several hours later I was in a distant State, preaching this glorious after which that hymn of prayer and promise, Tears of joy blinded my eyes. Soon I was silently humming the greatest spiritual as well as temporal program ever presented. It was needed, and I thank the Lord and the conference for the prospects and possibilities for advancement before us.

"Earnest workers for the Master,
Send the word along the line;
We shall never know disaster,
Trusting in the power divine."

At this writing I am preaching to Saints in the southwestern part of Missouri, and am assured that the church will be benefited spiritually, financially, and numerically this year by their faith and works.

New London Branch

GROTON, CONNECTICUT, May 7.—An interesting Easter program was given by the Sunday school, in which the children took part. The program consisted of recitations, songs, and a piano solo. Each child was given a potted tulip by the Sunday school. The decorations were of ferns and flowers attractively arranged.

Elder F. S. Dobins preached a farewell sermon here Sunday morning April 26. The subject, "We are laborers together with God," was explained impressively. The Saints have enjoyed the brother's visits and regret that he must go so far away.

The Sunday school is preparing a brief program for Mothers' Day.

Shellbrook, Saskatchewan

Since our last writing we are pleased to report a visit from Elder William Cornish, our district president, accompanied by Elder Fred S. Scott. They were heartily welcomed by the Saints of this place, and the excellent spirit manifested and the good words of counsel and encouragement will linger long in our memories. We feel that both are truly earnest workers for the Master.

A number of boy babies have recently arrived in this community. Some have been heard to remark that this is a sign of an approaching war, but we have strong hopes that at least two of them will prove good soldiers in the army of the Lord, as they came to Latter Day Saint homes, one the son of Fred W. Smith and wife, the other of Brother and Sister Andrew Filby.

The scattered condition of the Saints, as well as much unfavorable weather, proves quite a handicap in meeting together regularly, but usually an excellent spirit is manifested when they are able to gather. As the time of year for good weather and roads is with us, we are anticipating some enjoyable gatherings.

Minden City, Michigan

May 4.—The district held their Sunday school convention here April 25 and 26, and it was enjoyed by all who were privileged to attend. Several branches of the district were represented. Among the speakers present were Elder William Grice, district president, Elders John R. Grice, T. Richards, Thomas Rawlin, William Davis, also Louis Grice, a wide-awake Sunday school worker who is able in his talks to give us lots of good things to think about after he is gone, which if put into practice would greatly benefit our Sunday schools.

Some of the young people of this branch furnished a program Saturday evening after service for the benefit of our visitors. The program consisted of several recitations, two short plays entitled, "The dentist," and "The changed housewife." After the entertainment all present were treated to some fine homemade candy by some of our young ladies.

Brother and Sister Fred Volk had the misfortune to lose their home by fire on April 27. Their loss is keenly felt by them in their declining years, as it has been their home for over fifty years. This home was prepared for them when they were married, and they lived to celebrate their golden wedding anniversary in the same home.

Am I a Worthy Son?

In the dark womb where I began,
My mother's life made me a man.
Through all the months of human birth,
Her beauty fed my common earth,
I cannot see, nor breathe, nor stir
But through the death of some of her.

Down in the darkness of the grave
She cannot see the life she gave.
For all her love, she cannot tell
Whether I use it ill or well,
Nor knock at dusty doors to find
Her beauty dusty in the mind.

If the grave's gates could be undone,
She would not know her little son,
I am so grown. If we should meet,
She would pass by me in the street,
Unless my soul's face let her see
My sense of what she did for me.

What have I done to keep in mind
My debt to her and womankind?
What woman's happier life repays
Her for those months of wretched days?
For all my mouthless body leched
Ere birth's releasing hell was reached?

What have I done, or tried, or said
In thanks to that dear woman dead?
Men triumph over woman still,
Men trample women's rights at will,
And man's lust roves the world untamed.
O grave, keep shut lest I be shamed.

Mothers of Israel

Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies. The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her, so that he shall have no need of spoil. She will do him good and not evil all the days of her life. She seeketh wool and flax and worketh willingly with her hands. She is like the merchants' ships; she bringeth her food from afar. She riseth also while it is yet night, and giveth meat to her household, and a portion to her maidens. . . . She perceiveth that her merchandise is good; her candle goeth not out by night. She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff. She stretcheth out her hand to the poor; yea, she reacheth forth her hands to the needy. She is not afraid of the snow for her household: for all her household are clothed with scarlet. . . . She openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness. She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness. Her children arise up, and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praieth her.—Proverbs 31: 10-28.

In the beginning this was intended to be a Mothers' Day editorial. Like some other things, it seems to have outlasted its day. Let us hope it has not outworn its interest.

In the scripture reading at the heading of this editorial, the wise man has pictured the virtuous woman in correlation to her husband, her children, and her household. The splendid tribute that he paid her was won by the fact that she had related herself to all of these in such a way as to merit honor and credit. Note, for instance, his statement: "The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her, so that he shall have no need of spoil." Some of the finest, most promising, and brilliant young men that I have known have come into dishonor and discredit because the extravagant and incessant demands of their wives for money with which to gratify the desire for pleasure or finery have driven them to one form or another of crooked dealing. The virtuous woman, the real helpmeet, will help to fit the family budget to the family income. She will help her man to keep within an honest salary, so he will "have no need of spoil." Moreover, with the aims of the church in mind, if at all possible, she will aid him to create a surplus with which to help spread the gospel and redeem Zion. A part of the work of the women of Zion will be to put their homes on an honest and a consecrated basis.

Let us consider some of the very homely items in relation to the work of mothers in Israel. The word homely in its present usages as applied to women may be offensive. Originally it had a good and wholesome meaning.

Food Purchase and Preparation

Ordinarily it falls to the part of woman to purchase the provisions for the family. Here is an opportunity for her to study economy, purity, and nutritious values. She may spend most of her available money for luxuries or on the other hand go to the other extreme and keep her people on too rigid diet. There is excellent opportunity for her to display wisdom.

Solomon said of the housewife, "She is like the merchants' ships; she bringeth her food from afar." To-day the housewife goes to the market or the telephone and buys oranges from California, sardines from Norway, bananas from Central America, and the great staple foodstuffs from the Middle West.

Ordinarily, too, it falls to the lot of the woman to prepare these foods for the table. It is true that there are male chefs in the great hotels and in some homes, but as a rule women yet cook the food of the world. Is this sort of work drudgery? Is it drudgery to buy groceries, peel potatoes, bake bread, scrub floors? It is not drudgery when it is done for those whom you love. It is not drudgery when you realize that good and wholesome foods, well chosen and well prepared, make for rosy cheeks and healthy bodies; while soggy bread, burned meat, and anemic, tubercular, emaciated pies mean bad health and perhaps ruined constitutions. Solomon said, "She riseth also while it is yet night, and giveth meat to her household, and a portion to her maidens."

An old cynic being approached by a young wife who desired to know how to treat her husband, condensed his advice into three words, "Feed the brute." Not only does she feed the animal that may be in man, but also she feeds the angel. This sort of work is getting down to the very mainsprings of existence.
Purchase and Preparation of Clothing

Ordinarily it falls to the lot of woman to buy and sometimes to make the clothing. Here she has opportunity to combine economy with durability, beauty with modesty. “She perceiveth that her merchandise is good: she is not afraid of the snow for her household: for all her household are clothed.”

The Care of the House

Ordinarily it falls to the woman to care for the house, to see that it is clean and sanitary and attractive. It might be well, however, for her to see that it is not too clean. I recall a good sister who passed away some years ago of whom it might have been said that her copper boiler never knew the stain of any sort of tarnish, no cobwebs were ever found in the remotest corner of her ceiling, there were no flyspecks on her windows, and her husband never had an hour’s peace. You brethren know what the annual housecleaning means. What must it have meant to dwell in perpetual housecleaning. The housewife should see not only that her home is homelike; she should see that it is home. Carpenters make houses; it is the work of women to make homes. “She looketh well to the ways of her household.”

The Home Where Peace Dwells

It is the task of the women of Israel to make real homes; and certainly the following beautiful verses from Edgar A. Guest are suggestive in this connection:

A man can stand the fight by day
If peace be his at night,
For he can put his doubts away
If home with love is bright;
But let him come to grief or care,
Let quarrels break his rest,
Then with the burdens he must bear
He’ll never do his best.

The things which make a man supreme
Are courage, strength, and skill;
But one with these may often seem
To falter and stand still;
And heavy heart and troubled mind
Can seldom bravely fight,
For man must know that he will find
A welcoming smile at night.

Give him a wife whose love is true,
And children well and strong;
And he will brave the battle through
Although the day be long;
But once let fear or rage disturb
The great heart in his breast,
On strength and skill there is a curb,
And he’ll not do his best.

For those he loves, a man’s a man,
And not for selfish gain,
The heart does more than courage can,
And more than flesh or brain;
The home he keeps has bitterer foes
Than those he leaves to fight.
By day a man can stand the blows,
If peace be his at night.

Solomon put it in other words, “The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her. Her children arise up, and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her.” Fortunate is the man whose heart is at rest and in whose home peace abides. A woman can make or break her husband. I think that I have seen instances wherein men in the church have been embittered by the constant nagging of their wives. Who, for instance, can withstand the daily and hourly suggestion that he had not been fairly treated or that the church is going all wrong. Much better for him to find a courageous and hopeful attitude and one always at his side in the home who has an optimistic and faithful outlook upon life.

Some years ago Sister E. L. Kelley made a statement to me something as follows: “When Bishop Kelley retired from the Bishopric, I said to him, ‘Edmund, we are getting old. There is a generation of younger people coming on who are sure to do things differently from the ways to which we have been accustomed. Moreover, you have given over to a high and important position. Let us resolve that no matter what comes we will keep sweet.’” Bishop Kelley hardly had it in his nature to become embittered; but certainly such a gracious, courageous, and sweet-tempered attitude on the part of his companion has made it easier for him to grow old gracefully and to set the splendid example that he daily sets before us all.

The Spirit of Motherhood

I will close this editorial with a tribute to the spirit of motherhood. You are most of you acquainted with the series of cartoons entitled, “When a feller needs a friend.” There is in the life of each of us a time when he particularly needs a friend and that is when he “arrives upon this scene of action.” Fortunately for us, mother love asks no questions. The mother does not go to the counter and pick out her baby. She takes what God gives her and is satisfied. Why should she not be? She has staked her life for that thing which comes to her.

There is a story about a Scotch gardener who took to himself a bride. His mistress said to him, “Sandy, I suppose your bride is very beautiful.” Being Scotch and withal truthful, as well as cautious, he replied, “Weel, she is the Lord’s handiwork, but she is na his masterpiece.” Every mother is sure that her babe is not only the Lord’s handiwork, but also his masterpiece. She may be a black woman, two or three generations from the jungles of Africa; a brown Sioux Indian woman; a yellow Chinese woman; a lovely Anglo-Saxon woman, the flower of the ages, her welcome is the same. To the little stranger she says, "Are you cold? Come warm yourself at my breast; Little one, are you hungry? Come eat of my flesh; Are you naked? Here are these soft, white garments that I have worked on for nine months. The stitches have been set with love, with tears, with pain, and with joy."

The First Law of Nature

There is an old statement that self-preservation is the first law of nature; but motherhood brings to our attention a law that is before the first, that is higher than the highest, the law of love. She does not put self first; she puts her children first. There is one waiting us when we come into the world who does not say to us, What can you do for me? Instead she says, What can I do for you? This great dynamic which is akin to the love of God and presents the finest revelation of the love of God that we have, in that it defies death, must be a great power in Zion if we can only yoke it up to the ideals of Zion.

Our tribute is not alone to physical motherhood, but also to potential or spiritual motherhood. Why is it that women are the best teachers of small children? You never see a man teaching kindergarten or in the primary grades. It is because these women teachers, some of them little more than girls, have in their hearts the spirit of potential motherhood and gather the little children about their knees and are more mothers than teachers. Why are most nurses women? There are very few male nurses. It is because women naturally take to their hearts the sick, the broken, and distressed. It is the spirit of motherhood that enables them to become tender and skillful nurses. And our tribute may well be extended to foster mothers, those who have opened wide the doors of childless homes to admit the homeless child; who have, as some one has said, loved into maturity those whom some other woman loved into being. We have had many beautiful examples of such service within the church; and in the nation we are reminded that a foster mother, a stepmother, reared Abraham Lincoln and gave him to his great task.

The United Order of Motherhood

Our tribute, then, is to the spirit of motherhood, not only to those who have steadily borne the trial and pain of motherhood, but those who have in their hearts—teachers and nurses and all women who through any avenue of service give expression to that spirit which is in them. Our tribute is to the united order of motherhood.

And to the women of the church we wish success in their war against sin, sickness, ignorance, and wickedness, and in their struggle for health, intelligence, and righteousness. May they in Zion be the great power for good that Almighty God intended them to be when he gave them the spirit of motherhood.

ELEBRT A. SMITH.

Will Reply by Radio to Werner's "Ladies' Home Journal" Articles

The new 1000-watt church broadcasting station will be used to tell the world of discrepancies in M. R. Werner's articles on "Brigham Young." In these articles, which have appeared for some months in the Ladies' Home Journal, Mr. Werner has made frequent allusions to Joseph Smith the Martyr as a polygamist, and has also failed to properly differentiate the Brighamites and the Reorganized Church.

Elder Ralph W. Farrell will deliver this series of radio lectures on the "History of the True Latter Day Saints Church, with a reply to the M. R. Werner articles running in the Ladies' Home Journal." Elder Farrell possesses an unusually fine "radio personality." His sermons and lectures from K L D S and W H B (the Sweeney School station at Kansas City) have made him very favorably known to many thousands of radio listeners.

It is hoped that before beginning the broadcasting of this series, K L D S will be assigned the 441 meters wave length. This wave would make it possible to reach tens or even hundreds of thousands of listeners instead of the thousands who are able to hear at 268 meters. Interference on the shorter wave length has become very severe.

This series of sermons by Elder Farrell will be broadcast on the nine o'clock schedule each Sunday evening. A half-hour program of fine music will precede each sermon.

Every Latter Day Saint will want to listen for this series, and should tell his friends and neighbors to tune in K L D S during these sermons.

New Hour for Radio Vesper Service

Beginning next Sunday, May 24, the radio vesper service will be broadcast at 6.30 p. m. instead of 5 p. m. The change of schedule is primarily to enable people living in greater Kansas City (including Independence) to hear both the K L D S vesper service and the International Sunday School Lesson, which is broadcast at 5 p. m. by the Kansas City Star, W D A F.

If the 441 meter wave length is obtained soon,

Interesting Results in Midnight Radio Test

Hundreds of Latter Day Saints fought old Morpheus to hear the midnight test program from the new K L D S radio station; 800 watts was the power used during the test broadcasting. During the first hour the old wave length of 268 meters was employed. Without the interference usual to this wave in the earlier hours of the night, K L D S made some good records. Many listeners who ordinarily are unable to hear K L D S reported clear reception.

At one o'clock A. B. C. requested listeners to stand by and tune to 441 meters. Some difficulties in changing over the wave length of the new transmitter caused a delay of nearly one half hour. Reports indicate that many gave up receiving K L D S on the 441 meter wave and went back to bed before the program was resumed. The great majority of those who didn't give up, however, were well rewarded for their loss of sleep. The program on 441 meters was splendidly received, according to most of the reports.

Several minor changes in equipment and adjustments were made on the broadcasting apparatus while using both wave lengths. These occasionally interfered momentarily with the reception, but since this was a test period listeners were not expected to be too critical.

At this writing no reports have been received from the Pacific coast. Mail has hardly had time to come from the extreme West. On a previous unannounced midnight test, several letters were received from California and other Western States, commending the transmission. A number of reports have come from the extreme eastern part of the country; several are published with this article.

Reading the following letters, which indicate only a small proportion of those received, will indicate one very interesting fact. Many listeners tell of the superior transmission on 441 meters, while others claim no better results than on 268 meters. With a receiving set equally efficient on low and high broadcast wave lengths, little difference in reception on the two wave lengths should have been noted. It is a peculiar fact that most neutrodyne receivers are more efficient on the low than on the higher waves, although very few of them are designed to properly tune the lower waves, the dial settings up to 300 meters being extremely congested. The writer of the furthest report received to date (from Nova Scotia) used only a 2-tube set and claimed loud-speaker reception all over the house.

The fading effects reported by some listeners are not mentioned by many others and must have been due, at least to some extent, to local atmospheric conditions.

Enid, Oklahoma.—Your test program came in like a ton of brick—loud, sharp, and clear. Give us the full 1,000 watts.—Eugene H. Rabun, 517 North Fourth Street.

Apalachin, New York.—“Yearning for you” came in on 441 meters at 800 watts perfectly, so your new machine must be O. K.—Charles Cafferty.

Windsor, Ontario.—This is the first time I have been fortunate enough to hear you. The reception was fine.—F. H. Neal, 465 Bruce Avenue.

Richmond, Missouri.—Program came in well over old wave length, but on new wave length seemed clearer and stronger. We were about to give you up in despair when you were changing wave lengths. We appreciate your excellent way of announcing.—Edith Craven.

Council Bluffs, Iowa.—Congratulations to radiophone station K L D S. It came in clear, with very little static. When I first tuned in, I thought it was W O A W (Omaha), it was so loud and distinct on my set. Dial settings (at 441 meters) on my Fada 5-tube neutrodyne were 48-48-48.—Doctor W. J. Berringer, 733 Avenue East.

Colorado Springs.—Received most of your test program this a. m. The concluding number on 441 meters came in like a house afire. However, your early Sunday morning program about two weeks ago came in just as good if not better on 268 meters. I use a 2-tube Crosley.—H. V. Briston, 1624 West Colorado Avenue.

The Calling of the Latter Day Saint Church

BY BISHOP J. A. KOEHLER

It is the purpose of this article to set forth some of the reasons why Latter Day Saints should undertake, without delay, and with as much speed as our circumstances will permit, to promote the social program formally approved by the late General Conference. Common consent, as I understand it, is, on the one hand, a widespread acceptance of some proposal arising either from an apprehension of its worthwhileness or else from a belief that those who make the proposal speak authoritatively and merit our trust. And if that be true, an examination of some of the scriptural grounds which justify our program should serve not only to increase our faith, but also to enlist our energies in the accomplishment of the task which we have set before ourselves.

It is commonly believed that the purpose of the church is to point out the paths that lead to God and help men to prepare themselves to pass the test of worthwhileness when they stand before him who shall judge man’s fitness to dwell in the tabernacle of God. And if we find that that test has to do with the social conduct of men, with men’s actions in the midst of men or as members of the human family, we, individually, surely must give our approval and our support to any endeavor on the part of the church to promote right social conditions or relations among men.

From among the mass of witnesses, we have selected Moses, David, and Jesus, because they speak pointedly and specifically upon the question. Moses had an unusually intimate acquaintance with God. Moses talked with God and God talked with Moses. Of the ten commandments given through Moses, the first three have to do with man’s attitude toward God, and the last seven have to do with man’s conduct in the midst of his fellows. Surely no one will deny that these ten commands are tests of individual worthiness in the sight of God.

And what is the general character or nature of the duties that God imposed upon Israel in the ten commandments? Let us enumerate them:

1. Fixing the number of days of economic toil.
2. The treatment of servants in industrial life.
3. Duties of children to parents; that is, domestic relations.
4. Personal rights and obligations of men in association.
5. Sex relations, particularly as they bear upon the welfare of the group.
6. The rights and uses of property.
7. Personal attitudes towards associates: their persons and properties. Such is the nature of the duties that God imposes upon men, the fulfillment of which is demanded as the price of divine favor.

But we should read further. The 20th, 21st, and 23rd chapters of Exodus are in the main a mass of specific rules for the government of the individual in the midst of his fellows and the treatment of the individual by the group. Evidently in those days God did not think that a social program was either too worldly, vulgar, or impious a matter for the ministry of the church to concern itself with, as he made it the duty of the priesthood to see to the promotion of that program of social construction or reconstruction (as the case may have been).

Our next witness is the Psalmist David. And again we select one of the jewels from the mass of his testimony. Let us read the 15th psalm. The question it asks and answers is the question we have asked and to which we seek the answer: Are right social relations tests of individual worthwhileness before God? Hear this man of God:

"Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill of Zion? He that walketh uprightly, and speaketh the truth in his heart. He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor. In whose eyes a vile person is contemned; but he honoreth them that fear the Lord; swarreth not falsely to hurt any man, and changeth not. He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved."—Inspired Translation.

Yes, sir. "He that doeth these things shall never be moved," but he shall be worthy to abide in the tabernacle of God. And what is the nature of those tests? In every single stipulation, without exception, the test is right social relations.

The writings of Solomon, the son of David, are concerned almost exclusively with social relations and personal conduct. Let those who rank him high as a witness for God when he says: "I know that whatsoever God doeth it shall be forever," etc., give ear while he testifies to the nature of the thing that commends a man to God. This is the general character of his testimony:

These six things doth the Lord hate; yea, seven are an abomination unto him: a proud look, a lying tongue, and hands that shed innocent blood. A heart that deviseth wicked imaginations, feet that be swift in running to mischief, a false witness that speaketh lies, and he that soweth discord among brethren.

This statement of fact is put in negative form. The affirmative equivalents are too obvious to need enumeration. This man regarded the establishment and maintenance of right social relations as the price of favor with God.

Our third witness is Jesus, who was God on exhibition in the flesh. Before “Him” “shall be gathered all nations,” and he shall judge every individual, both priest and lay member, and declare their worthiness or unworthiness to abide in the tabernacle of God. And what has he decreed shall be the test? Let those who seek the answer read Matthew 25: 31-46, and also the fifth, sixth, and seventh chapters of Matthew.

This man, acting in his office as the Christ, championed the cause of social reformation and reconstruction and the regeneration of the individual as a unit in society. And he tells us in unmistakable language, that he who is instrumental in building up and maintaining right social relations between men is a man of God, and he who does not is no friend of his.

Business conduct that dispenses justice; the promotion of economic enterprise in the manner which meets the needs of the hungry and the naked, and the thirsty; consideration for even the stranger in social conduct; all such matters are tests of worthiness to the Son of God.

Is it probable that that man of God, whose aim was the salvation of the race, and who organized that work of human redemption and called it “my church”—is it even possible that he would say to those who have been organized under his direction for the purpose of preparing men to meet their God that they, either individually or as a group, should have nothing to do with correcting the evils of society which shut men out of the kingdom of God? Let the teachings of the Son of God answer.

The Religion of the Bible

James says that pure religion is expressed or is to be found in right social relations. Under the rule he specifies, business must be conducted with due regard to child welfare, the needs of old age, provision for widows whose husbands have been taken away by industrial accidents, and the like. To James, a “faith” which does not find expression in “works” of social righteousness (see James 2: 14-18) is not the faith of the Christian religion.

That apostle of love, John, (see Third John) expressed his Christian sentiments in language like this: “He that doeth good is of God,” and he that doeth evil is not of God. Well, what is “good”? And what is “evil”? “Good” is whatever advances or contributes to well-being; whatever supplies human needs, whether those needs are physical or mental or devotional. All good is spiritual; and every truly spiritual person is one who seeks to do good. And shall it be said of the members of the Christian church, every one of whom (if he is not a make-believe affair) has the spirit of good will welling up in his soul and seeking an outlet for expression—shall it be said of them that they have no business to organize as Christian men for the purpose of social reform or social reconstruction? Who else should we look to to organize the forces for righteousness in the world, if not the men of God?

And now let us take a passing glance at the religion of Micah and Isaiah and Joel and Paul and Jude, and the whole constellation of Christian stars. What is the nature of their religion? Is it merely to preach the word of life? Is it merely to talk to people about doing good? Is it merely to praise God for his goodness to them? No, indeed no! “What doth the Lord require?” says Micah (6: 6-12) but “justice” and “mercy,” and all possible forms of social righteousness? And of whom does God require the dispensing of justice and the extension of mercy, and in what fields of action? Are the men of the church, “the salt of the earth,” “the light of the world,” to be exempt from such obligations? Who then, more than all others, should have a social program and seek its promotion?

Isaiah tells us in his writings (1: 10-18 particularly) that godly religion is on the one hand a program of social righteousness. And if society is wrongly constituted, what else can Christian men do, if they are to fulfill their obligations to God and to men, except to organize as there may be need and opportunity to set the world an example of right social relations? Love of God and of neighbor cannot fail to do this. Love seeks outlets of expression always; and when the object of love has a need and the lover has an opportunity for expression, certainly we expect to see measures instituted that are suited by nature to solve the problems of the objects of Christian affection.

A New Testament Program

The time of the church's greatest spiritual prosperity was a time of its concern about social questions. True, the big job of the early Christian church was to spread the teachings of Jesus and to give evidence and bear testimony that he was the Son of God; but nevertheless, in the midst of the most energetic missionary effort that was ever made, the apostle had time to provide for social needs. See Acts 2: 44, 45; 4: 32-35; and 6: 1-6. The details of this program we do not know. It is mentioned only incidentally. The apostles didn't make much fuss about their examples of Christian love. It probably was regarded as a matter of course that hearts filled with Christian love would concern themselves with whatever needed to be done in order to serve the interests of their fellows. At any rate, if the record is to be relied upon, the men of the apostolic church did not believe it to be beneath the dignity of their calling to set out plans and get under way movements for the solutions of their social problems. This was the outstanding characteristic of their applied Christianity. Of course Christianity is the doctrine of love of God and love of neighbor applied to the concerns of life. The particular manner in which love of neighbor expresses itself is determined always by the circumstances of human living.

The Kingdom and Social Action

The Psalmist declared that “justice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne.” (Psalms 89: 14.) Now justice and judgment are terms which have no significance aside from social relations. Justice means to conform in conduct or in practice to the principles or laws of right living. And judgment, too, is uprightness and rectitude in conduct. The force of David’s language then is this: That God lives and his kingdom is to be found in the life of a people whose social affairs or relations are governed according to the rules of right as they are understood. That is to say, that God’s people have a social program. We repeat, that just what that social program is, is determined by the circumstances of human living together—what needs to be done, what are our facilities, and what are our opportunities for doing.

And then when Isaiah foretold the reign of Christ in his kingdom, he said his government would be established “with justice and with judgment.” (Isaiah 9: 6, 7.) Certainly; it is not so many people called by a given name, and so on, that makes the kingdom of God a fact; but it is the expression of the will of God in the life of the people, the dispensing of justice and judgment and mercy; it is the righteousness (the rightdoing) on the part of the people that makes the kingdom of God a fact. “Righteousness,” and “judgment” and “justice” and “mercy” are social principles that have expression only in social living, in the dealings of men one with another in society. The kingdom of God is a social affair.

Again; listen to the Apostle Paul: “The kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.” (Romans 14: 17.) Can there be righteousness except as men act right one toward another? Can there be peace where men’s lives are out of adjustment with each other? Can the joy of the Holy Ghost abide in the life of a people who are not at peace with each other, because they do not order and establish their affairs with righteousness and with judgment? Surely not! To have the kingdom of God we must have right social relations; and that means that to have the kingdom of God we must have some sort of social program.

The Calling of Latter Day Saints

Every Latter Day Saint believes that this church is called to build the kingdom of God. That’s our calling! That same Jesus who preached the gospel of social righteousness to the people of Palestine, said also to the people on the American continent (see Book of Nephi 9: 86) that he would gather Israel in the latter days and that he would again establish his Zion. Many years before that, the angel of the Lord told Nephi (see 1 Nephi 3: 187) about the coming forth of the Book of Mormon and said: “Blessed are they who shall seek to bring forth my Zion in that day, for they shall have the gift and power of the Holy Ghost.”

Now, Latter Day Saints believe that Joseph Smith was the prophet that God called to raise up his church and kingdom in the latter days. That being true, this instruction from God to the church should have some significance (Doctrine and Covenants 19: 2): “Thus saith the Lord, him [i. e., Joseph Smith] have I inspired to move the cause of Zion in mighty power for good.” Again, in writing for the History of All the Religious Denominations in the United States, compiled by I. D. Rupp, and published in 1844, in setting forth the doctrines and practices of the church, as well as its historical facts, Joseph Smith said this in the very first paragraph of that statement: “The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was founded upon direct revelation, as the true church of God has ever been, according to the Scriptures. And through the will and blessings of God I have been an instrument in his hands, thus far, to move forward the cause of Zion.” On four other occasions (see Doctrines and Covenants 6: 3; 10: 3; 11: 3; and 12: 3) before the church was organized (and not after Joseph Smith had been influenced toward doctrines of communism by men with whom he became acquainted in later years, as some would have us believe) the voice of God to four men, Oliver Cowdery, Hyrum Smith, Joseph Knight, and David Whitmer, was this: “Seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion.”

Let us stop just a moment and ask what is a “cause” as used in this connection? The definition of that term is this: “A great enterprise or movement supported by moral reasons and motives.” In whatever way the word Zion may have been used by other peoples at other times or at different times by the same people, one thing is certain, we must judge of what that prophet of God called this people to do by his own explanations of what this Zion consisted in. In other words: what is the calling of Latter Day Saints as set forth in the message of God delivered to us by this prophet?

Remember, “Zion” is a “cause”; a great enterprise or movement supported by or grounded in moral reasons and motives. At this juncture, all that has been said about the kingdom of God being “ordered and established” “with justice and with judgment”; all that has been said about the religion of the Bible; all that has been said about the kingdom of God being “righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost” should be recalled and set up by the side of this announcement of Joseph Smith, which is that the calling of Latter Day Saints is to enter upon a great enterprise or movement that is grounded in moral considerations and supported by moral reasons and motives; that Joseph Smith and his fellow laborers were instruments in the hands of God for the putting forward of a moral undertaking, a social enterprise (for all morals imply social relations), a system of administration of social affairs, an undertaking which has to do with the practices, the conduct, and the spirit of men toward God, themselves, and their fellows, and which has to do with questions of right and wrong in the affairs of human society and to obligation to duty. That very fact brands Joseph Smith a prophet of the God who says that the test of a man’s worth is his actions toward his fellows; for if he had given to the world anything less than the thing the world needs to-day, if his message had been anything less than a solution to the problems which confront men individually and collectively, and upon the solution of which the salvation of the world depends, he would have appeared without satisfactory evidence of his prophetic calling.

Every prophetic leader is called to meet the special needs of his time. And every student of society knows that with the increase of population, with the invention of multitudinous mechanical devices, and with the advancement in arts and sciences, society has come to be so complex, men and communities have come to be so interdependent, the interests of individuals and of groups have come to be so interlocked, and the actions of each individual or class of laborers have come to affect the lives and welfare of one another to such an extent, that some solution to the world’s problem is needed if the world is to be saved from social disaster. And from what source do we expect to get that solution? When the souls of men are being damned by the circumstances of their social life; when men are being kept out of the kingdom of God and are being lost in sin because they individually cannot find their way to God under the blinding and deadening influences of a social system; under such circumstances, what should we expect of a prophet, and what should we expect of those who accept his message except that they are called to put forward a program of social reconstruction? Nothing can be the power of God unto salvation except that which is able to save the people under the circumstances in which we find them. The church must solve the world’s problem if it is to supply the world’s need. That problem is the social problem.

The Latter-Day Message

Without attempting to argue the economic justification or the ethical grounds for the social program of this church, we wish to direct attention to some of the revelations to the church which justify the action of our late General Conference. We will simply quote certain portions of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants in order to direct attention to the kind of thing with which it is the business of this church to deal.

(1) Doctrine and Covenants 44: 3: “You must visit the poor and the needy to administer to their relief, that they may be kept until all things may be done according to my law which ye have received.” This is a clear intimation that when the law of God to this church shall govern the affairs of the people of the church that the conduct of the affairs of the church will bear upon the solution of that social problem—“the poor and the needy.” What is that law which was given?

(2) Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8-11 is a general statement of a social program which has to do with business conduct, with the disposition of the moneys of the members of the church, and with the supplying of the temporal wants of the people.

(3) Doctrine and Covenants 58: 7: “This is the law unto every man that cometh to this land to receive an inheritance, and he shall do with his money as the law directs.” That is, he shall “lay his moneys before the bishop of the church.” This is a social program in which the life of the individual is wrapped up with the life of the group.

(4) Doctrine and Covenants 70: 2, 3: “This is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship” (to consecrate his surplus to the cause of Zion). “And none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God.” That is to say, Latter Day Saints are called to be parties to the social program that we call “stewardships.”

(5) Doctrine and Covenants 72: 3: “According to the law every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before the bishop.” That is, Latter Day Saint doctrine sets out a social program which is to be put forward by the men of the church as church men.

(6) Doctrine and Covenants 106: 2: “All those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties . . . or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you.” Otherwise “it shall not be a land of Zion unto you.”

(7) Doctrine and Covenants 128: 8: This section relates to industrial associations, and gives instructions to the church to promote such a social program, and sets out the purpose to be, on the one hand that the things of this world may be used “in the manner designed of God, that (or in order that) the places where they occupy may shine as Zion the redeemed of the Lord.”

“Faith without works is dead.” Here are some of the works which God says Latter Day Saints are to do. And God declares that it is the doing of these works as a people that will make our group the abode of God, the place out of which God will shine. These stipulations in the law of God to us are marks of our divine calling; they enjoin upon us the doing of the very things which the Holy Scriptures declare to be the test of our worthiness before God. Our calling is to a social undertaking in which we both individually and collectively give to the world a living example of the Christian life.

Zion Is the Kingdom of God

“Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ.” “Therefore let us become subject to her laws.” (Doctrines and Covenants 102:9) When we build Zion, we are building the kingdom of God. The reason is obvious. Zion is a social life grounded in justice, judgment, mercy, and faith; and that is the very thing that the kingdom of God is. Zion is a life expressing the righteousness of God, and that is precisely what the kingdom of God is. “The Lord called his people Zion because (by reason of the fact that) they were of one heart and one mind and dwelt in righteousness.”—Doctrines and Covenants 36:2. “And it came to pass that Enoch built a city that was called The City of Holiness, even Zion.”—Doctrines and Covenants 36:3.

Our calling is a holy calling. Our calling is to the life which saves; it saves us, it saves those who follow in our steps.

We Must Put Forth Our Social Program

As early as May, 1831, the Lord said that we must engage in this work of social organization. See Doctrines and Covenants 51:1-4; also Doctrines and Covenants 102:2. The imperativeness of the command is sought to be impressed upon us in the decree that if the church did not organize according to the laws of God it would be “cut off.” That makes social undertakings a duty of the church. Again, in March, 1832, the church was given this instruction (Doctrines and Covenants 77:1): “There must be an organization of my people in regulating and establishing the affairs of the storehouse for the poor of my people.” This is to be a “permanent and everlasting establishment and order to the church.” Its purpose is “to advance the cause which you have espoused.” And the outcome of obedience is “the salvation of men.” This is the purpose, too.

Again in Doctrines and Covenants 101:1 the church was commanded to promote the economic program of the gospel, with the promise of salvation to those who were willing to do so.

Such is Latter Day Saintism; such is Christianity as interpreted through the latter-day prophet. And we have every scriptural reason to induce us to give that social program our hearty support, because it provides for the doing of the very things which the scriptures declare to be the things that we must do to have the favor of God. Students of social and particularly economic problems believe in the letter of our program. They wait, as they have a right to wait, to see if the people who are called to such a noble life have the courage of their conviction and the spirit to do the thing that God has called them to do.

Law of Libel and Slander

BY S. A. BURGESS

We have been asked several times to discuss in the HERald the “law of libel and slander as affecting action before church courts.” A few years ago, an item appeared in one of our Southern papers which gave the impression that the Supreme Court had held in a case from Georgia that a church is liable for preferring charges against a member. An examination of this case proved that the decision was one of the Supreme Court of Georgia. But the facts in the case were that the pastor one Sunday morning, without previous notice, stated charges publicly from the pulpit against a member of his church—before his wife and children and neighbors and friends. The member protested that the charges were not true and asked for an investigation. This the pastor refused and said they were going to exclude him and also shut out any member who voted to retain him. Upon this alleged intimidation, the vote was twenty-eight to six to exclude. The pastor then said that the six would be given until the next meeting to make acknowledgment or they would also be excluded. The petition alleged that this was knowingly and maliciously false; that its only purpose was to injure him and resulted in defaming of his character and standing. The defendant pastor in church filed a demurer, and it was upon this that the decision was made.

The decision, in fact, was: First, that the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States denies, conclusively, the power to make any law respecting religion or prohibit the free exercise thereof. There is no limitation on the States, but the state constitution has this provision in every State of the Union.

Second, When an individual becomes a member of a religious organization, his uniting with it is his voluntary act, and he becomes bound by the rules of the organization. As to all matters ecclesiastical, he is bound by the decision of the tribunal of the organization to which he belongs.

Third, The law recognizes the necessity and propriety of investigation by the church of alleged misconduct on the part of its members, and charges may be preferred either orally or in writing, and the bona fide discharge of such a duty will be held as privileged communication and will be thus accounted when made in good faith even though they should, in fact, be entirely erroneous.

Fourth, But if such charges are actually known to be false at the time they are entered and are maliciously and willfully made with the purpose and intention of injuring another, that cannot be regarded as privileged, and the occasion and circumstances of their making are afterward no protection.

It will be noted that instead of this decision limiting or preventing proper investigation by church officers, it defines the right quite clearly.

The law of libel and slander would now fill a good-sized volume, but there are the fundamental principles which can be readily reviewed. The difference between the two terms is that libel is written defamation of character; slander is oral defamation of character. As a rule, a libel is considered the greater offense.

There are many terms, which, applied to another, will be held as libel per se, whether written or spoken. These include, in general, words importing commission of a crime, words exposing another to ridicule, contempt, or degradation, words reputing moral turpitude or the commission of dishonorable, dishonest, or immoral acts, words impugning mental capacity and words impugning lack of chastity, words touching another in his office, trade, profession, or business.

Words which are actionable, per se, will avoid a judgment even if no actual damage is shown, such judgment covering at least the cost of the case and possibly a small sum as one shilling or one cent damages. If there are actual damages, they will be added by the jury.

Malice will be inferred from the uttering of the words. If actual malice is proved, then punitive or exemplary damages may be allowed. The actual damages may be recovered, regardless of whether actual malice is shown.

The person who utters a slander or publishes a libel will, as a rule, be held responsible for the actual damages arising therefrom without regard to the fact that he did not originate the story. The fact that some one else has told it to him is not a defense, and it may not even show lack of malice; though if the story was repeated in good faith, one is not, as a rule, held libel in punitive damages. It may sometimes be a defense that the statement is true, though such is not the case if it is a criminal libel.

The transaction of necessary business of government requires that certain communications shall be privileged. This includes judicial proceedings, legislative proceedings as well as utterances of executive officers, and communication between officers. If the statement is believed to be pertinent to the business before the court or other body, it is absolutely privileged and is always a qualified privilege between those who are placed in a position to each other of confidence and trust. This includes many different relations in business, in the privacy of the family.

In this class of qualified privilege are the proceedings in the case of church discipline, and it is well established that church organizations have authority to deal with their members for immoral conduct, to hear complaints, decide, rebuke, censure, suspend, or excommunicate. To this jurisdiction, every member, upon entering the organization, submits. Since the proceedings are quasi judicial, those who complain, give testimony, act and vote, or pronounce the findings orally or in writing, act in good faith and in the scope of their authority, and not falsely make such findings a pretense, are protected by law. This privilege has been held to extend to one not a member who makes complaint to a church against one of its members. This privilege is not prevented by the fact that the church proceedings are illegal.

But this is no protection if actual malice can be shown, nor is it any protection if an officer of the church communicates such offenses to others who are not proper officers, such as the members of the choir or other persons whose duty it is not to make the necessary investigation.

Charges against a minister are likewise privileged communications where there has been investigation with the proper opportunity for defending and hearing the charges where the matter has been handled in the regular course of church discipline. The protection is not forfeited by the fact that the result of the investigation is published in the denominational newspapers. Where the ecclesiastical courts find a minister, as they honestly believe, unworthy and unfit for his office and, therefore, in performance of what they believe to be their duty, published, in good faith, in the church papers, the result of their inquiry, and there is reason for the publication, it will be privileged. The fact that it may thus be brought to the attention of others who are members of the church will not take away its privileged character.

The proper procedure of an ecclesiastical court to hear the case upon due notice to all parties concerned is also privileged, and any testimony offered is likewise privileged unless the evidence they offer is not only false but is known to be such and is malicious. If a case for libel or slander is filed in the civil courts, the burden of proving malice will rest upon the complainant, and he or she must prove it by clear evidence, as it will not be inferred. The presumption is very clear that if the officers of the court and the witnesses are proceeding in legal course and according to the accustomed form, that the presumption is very strong that the communication is privileged. No person need be afraid to give frankly before a court of the church testimony that he believes to be true concerning any matter before the court. No court need be at all backward in performing its just duty, and where the circumstances warrant publishing the findings in the official publications of the church; yet no person is safe in trying to use the courts of the church maliciously for the propagation of personal defamation.

Civil courts have no jurisdiction to refute action of competent church authority in expelling a member. Such a decision is not refutable by a civil court, even though the evidence is not sufficient. The decision of competent church tribunals on purely ecclesiastical matters is binding and conclusive. When a civil right or right of property depends on some ecclesiastical matter, such as direct discipline or church government, the civil courts where the question arises may take the ecclesiastical decisions as it finds them, accept those decisions as matters adjudicated by another jurisdiction. But such ecclesiastical tribunals have no right to decide civil right or right of property per se, though in some cases a church court has been duly appointed a board of arbitrators according to the law of the land and hence can give a decision on purely civil rights or right of property the same as any other board of arbitrators.

When a member is expelled, appeal lies to the higher tribunals of the church, not to the civil courts, according to the established decisions of the civil courts.

The law of the church is clear and places the matter on a higher basis than does the law of the land. The rule of the Master to do unto others as you would have them do unto you and the new commandment which was from the beginning, that ye love one another, will prevent any danger of liability to the civil courts for libel or slander or to the courts of the church for evil speaking and backbiting. A few of the statements of the Bible on the subject follow. We find these passages in both the Old and New Testaments. To this is added one statement out of several from the Doctrine and Covenants. To these passages we might also add the third chapter of James and, as we read these statements of the law of God, we will clearly recognize that all who keep the law of God have no need to break the law of the land.

Two questions growing out of the law of libel and slander are: First, libel concerning the dead; and secondly, the law governing words touching another in his office, trade, profession, or business with particular reference to the criticism of public officers.

As to the first, there is no civil right of suit for libel upon the dead, because the individual in such a case is not among the living, and libel and slander are a matter of personal offense; but libel tending to blacken the morality of one who is dead is indictable in certain instances, and the list is gradually growing. The libel must be such, as a rule, that its tendency is to create a breach of the peace by exciting the friends and relatives to avenge the insult.

Imputations tending to injure one in his office, trade, profession, or business are actionable, as a rule, without proof of special damages, even though such words, if spoken or written of an ordinary person, might not be actionable per se.

On the other hand, there is existing a qualified privilege concerning communications addressed to the general public on matters of general interest. The better view appears to be that any citizen has the right to publish to the general public a fair criticism on matters of public concern, but he will not, as a rule, be protected if he goes forth and publishes false statements of a defamatory character against an individual.

Where a communication does not concern the public at large, but only a limited number of persons, this privilege will be lost if the public is, by means of newspapers or circulars issued to the general public, made aware of the findings.

The official acts of public officers may logically be made the subject of fair comment and criticism, not only by the press but by the members of the public, but words charging a criminal offense or moral delinquency are not privileged if false, though made in good faith concerning the acts of an officer in the discharge of his official duty. To this, however, there are exceptions in certain jurisdiction.

When one becomes a candidate, any elector has the right to discuss his fitness for the office and may lawfully communicate to other electors any facts within his knowledge concerning the candidate’s character or conduct and express his opinion thereon so long as he states as facts only the truth and has expressed only his honest belief. The publication of falsehood is not thereby justified. (See American and English Encyclopædia of Law, vol. 18, pp. 1041-1043.)

This right to comment on matters of public interest appears to be well established. Such comment and criticism has sometimes been spoken of as privileged. There is, however, an important distinction between fair criticism upon matters of public interest made fairly and honestly and the privilege existing in a case of answers to inquiry about the character of a servant, or some other qualified privileged communications. The case of a qualified, privileged, former case, what is privileged is criticism, not statements, and if a person takes upon himself to allege privileged, however honest his motive, if the allegations are not true. Therefore, it is only when the publisher goes beyond the limits of fair criticism that his language passes into the region of libel and slander at all. The question as to whether those limits have been transcended is for the jury.

This same principle applies to the official acts of public officers who are subject to fair comment and criticism. A person not a public officer or a candidate for public office may, in like manner, occupy a position respecting the public that will render his conduct subject to this rule.

The same principle applies both to art criticism and literary criticism, however much damage it may cause by preventing a sale, providing there is no misstatement of any material fact, and that the critic does not go out of his way to attack the character of the author. If, however, he attempts to use his right of criticism to make an attack upon the author, he will be liable for libel or slander.

It is for these reasons that a public officer is often placed in a position where he cannot readily defend himself, even though the attack be unfair. It is for such reasons that in common courtesy, as well as Christian forbearance, it is due to the officers of the church, on behalf of the church, our fair support, not countenancing, it is true, wrongdoing in any, but, at the same time, not presuming and inferring wrongdoing in such a way as to attack maliciously not only the individual, but to injure the organization itself. There is a courtesy due to presume good and a responsibility of defense on our part to the officers whom we have chosen and supported by our votes. It does not mean that those whom we have supported by our votes should always be supported by our voice, but an unfair reflection upon them attacks the body that has chosen them and exposes ourselves to shame. At the same time, this right in a democracy for a fair consideration of matters of public interest ought not to be curtailed. It is for the safety of the body that questions be fairly canvassed and determined.

But as members of the church we should act in accordance with the law of the church, and among these laws one most prominent is, “Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.” If you are guilty of wrongdoing, you should correct it in the same spirit, and to the same extent may our honest effort be extended in the case of our brother; and as none of us appreciate adverse criticism and comment, we should do unto others as we would have them do unto us.

Exodus 20:16: Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor.
Exodus 23:1, 7: Thou shalt not raise a false report: put not thine hand with the wicked to be an unrighteous witness.

Keep thee far from a false matter; and the innocent and righteous slay thou not: for I will not justify the wicked.

Leviticus 19:16: Thou shalt not go up and down as a talebearer among thy people: neither shalt thou stand against the blood of thy neighbor: I am the Lord.

Psalms 15:1-3: Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill? He that walketh uprightly and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor.

Psalms 34:13: Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile.

Psalms 50:19: Thou givest thy mouth to evil, and thy tongue frameth deceit. Thou sittest and speakest against thy brother; thou slanderest thine own mother's son. These things hast thou done, and I kept silence; thou thoughtest that I was altogether such an one as thyself: but I will reprove thee, and set them in order before thine eyes.

Psalms 101:5: Whoso privily slandereth his neighbor, him will I cut off: him that hath an high look and a proud heart will not I suffer.

Proverbs 10:18: He that hideth hatred with lying lips, and he that uttereth a slander, is a fool.

Proverbs 11:13: A talebearer revealeth secrets: but he that is of a faithful spirit concealeth the matter.

Proverbs 20:19: He that goeth about as a talebearer revealeth secrets: therefore meddle not with him that flatteth with his lips.

Ezekiel 22:9: In thee are men that carry tales to shed blood: and in thee they eat upon the mountains: in the midst of thee they commit lewdness.

Luke 3:14: And the soldiers likewise demanded of him, saying, And what shall we do? And he said unto them, Do violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely; and be content with your wages.

Romans 1:29: Backbiters, haters of God, despiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents.

1 Peter 2:22, 23: Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth: who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously.

Ephesians 4:23: Wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbor: for we are members one of another.

Doctrine and Covenants 17:11: The teacher's duty is to watch over the church always, and to be with and strengthen them, and see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking; and see that the church meet together often . . .

James 4:11: Speak not evil one of another, brethren. He that speaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law: but if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge.

Ephesians 4:31: Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice.

James 1:26: If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain.

1 Peter 2:1: Wherefore, laying aside malice, and all guile, and hypocrisy, and envilies, and all evil speakings.
Improve Your Present Opportunities

An address to high school graduates by Apostle D. T. Williams. Reported by Elder Howard Harder.

It becomes a very happy privilege to greet such a wonderful audience and also to extend greetings upon your behalf to the graduates and alumni here.
If there is one thing better than another in which young men and women might engage themselves, that thing is preparation for life's work. By the assistance of sympathetic instruction these young people are ready to render a service to the community in which they live and the God whom they acknowledge, which will prove of benefit to the former and of glory to the latter. To the end that this might be an accomplished fact, considerable effort has of course been necessary. These who have come to the period of graduation have put forth that effort.

From this experience they go seeking other degrees of learning, or perhaps seeking that character of service in which they might continue their struggle towards that state of development possible with them.

Under the spirit of this occasion we hope to say a few words which will help you, the classes, and you, the audience, to lift your heads and your hearts for the accomplishment of greater things.

"Know, oh, man, that God exists," is the sentiment with which the mighty Emerson begins his contribution to the thought and literature of the world. This great philosopher has been denominated a Greek head screwed on Yankee shoulders.

Whether this be the case or not, we are confident that he has here uttered a very significant truth.
The thought of God's existence, to the Christian, becomes the basis of every worth-while accomplishment. This is true because the acknowledgment of God's existence presupposes the immortality of man.

And if the human soul is immortal, then those things for which the soul strives, those things for which men struggle, if not in themselves immortal, must of necessity have immortal-consequences.

If we could have this truth thoroughly grounded in our minds, how careful we would be each day in the task we undertake to accomplish; how careful we would be to see that that which we were doing be done right. For after all, it is not the things we do that make us worthy of heaven; nor is it the things we do or do not that make us subject to condemnation. It is rather the effect of the things that we do upon our development. A man may give thousands of dollars to charity and yet his attitude be that of selfishness. His gift may be given only to the end of self-advertisement. Under such conditions what effect would such a contribution have upon the contributor? But if some man out of all that he had, which was but little, gave of that little to the uplift of humanity and the service of human souls, what a wonderful effect it would have upon his salvation! Jesus called attention to those who came to the treasury to cast in their contributions.

Some cast in liberally, although none of their gifts were equal to the donation of the poor widow who cast in her two mites. "She gave more than they all," was the comment of the Master. She gave of her penury while they gave of their abundance. The amount we give or the number of deeds we do does not necessarily indicate the extent of our worthiness nor the degree of salvation we are likely to obtain hereafter. But the effect those things have upon the development of our souls should be a matter of grave concern to each one of us.

This being true, my young friends, I would advise you in the language of Saint Edmund of Canterbury, "Work as though you would live forever, and live as though you would die to-day." Those who are obedient to such a mandate will lift up their souls in service and find their work effective for good. In works so wrought, one will find comfort when he stands before the majesty of God's judgment throne.
Work, indeed, as though you would live forever.
That is to say, Do your work with all possible perfection; give to it of your strength, of your very soul.
Again, let us live as the admonition instructs, as though we would die to-day. When such an amb­

OPPORTUNITY

Master of human destinies am I!
Fame, love, and fortune on my footsteps wait.
Cities and fields I walk: I penetrate Deserts and fields remote, and, passing by Hovel and mart and palace, soon or late,
I knock unbidden once at every gate!
If sleeping, wake: if feasting, rise before
I turn away. It is the hour of fate,
And they who follow me reach every state
Mortals desire, and conquer every foe
Save death; but those who doubt or hesitate,
Condemned to failure, penury, and woe,
Seek me in vain and uselessly implore—
I answer not, and I return no more.

—John J. Ingalls.

The poet here is speaking of that single opportunity which comes this minute and is gone the next. It is before us with all of its promise, with all of its possibilities to-day, and has fled upon the morrow. But another poet has spoken of opportunity not in the sense of its single approach, but rather in the sense of its collection of privileges, and herein we have set forth another beautiful truth:

OPPORTUNITY

They do me wrong who say I come no more
When once I knock and fail to find you in;
For every day I stand outside your door,
And bid you wake and rise to fight and win.

Wait not for precious chances passed away,
Weep not for golden ages on the wane!
Each night I burn the records of the day,
At sunrise every soul is born again!

Laugh like a boy at splendors that have sped;
To vanquished joys be blind and deaf and dumb;
My judgments seal the dead past with its dead,
But never bind a moment yet to come.

Though deep in mire, wring not your hands and weep;
I lend my arm to all who say, "I can."
No shamefaced outcast ever sank so deep,
But yet might rise and be again a man.

Dost thou behold thy lost youth all aghast?
Dost reel from righteous retribution's blow?
Then turn from blotted archives of the past
And find the future's pages white as snow.

Art thou a mourner? Rouse thee from thy spell;
Art thou a sinner? Sins may be forgiven;
Each morning gives thee wings to flee from hell,
Each night a star to guide thy feet to heaven.

—Walter Malone.

In every sphere of activity there are those, be they rich or be they poor, be they high or be they humble, to whom the opportunities of life come, asking that they be seized the moment of their approach, for the next moment they are gone if we refuse them. In this there are no respecters of persons; they come to each and all alike, and from all and each flee in like manner. Our chances are manifold, our privileges legion. If we seize upon these diligently, we do that which will be for the service of the world and the salvation of our own souls. We should not consider our opportunities only from the standpoint of material benefit, but also from the viewpoint of spiritual uplift. The individual who takes advantage of these with a desire for righteousness will find his possibilities ever growing and brightening.

We should then ask ourselves, What is to be our attitude towards these opportunities which call with no uncertain tone? If we seek these to the end that we might accomplish good, good will come back to us. If we seek them only to the end of the accomplishment of self-interest, wealth, or aggrandizement, then we can expect that only the fruitage of self-centeredness will be our return.

You say, I have but little to lay upon the altar of the world for human service. Be it so, but lay that little there. It was the Apostle Peter who stood at the gate of the temple and said to the man who had been a cripple from his birth, "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I thee." It may be that you do not have wealth amassed by your parents which you might use to the benefit of humanity, but you have something greater than wealth: you have a soul to lay upon the altar of human progress; a mind which you can give to the uplift of the world. And these mean much more than any material thing that the world can possibly afford.

A man is not a failure because he was not born rich. He will not be a failure of necessity because he has continued poor. Was Socrates a failure because he had no wealth and because at the end of a long and useful experience an ungrateful generation compelled him to drink the hemlock? Was Epictitus a failure because he was born a slave and died a pauper? Was the Apostle Paul a failure because he was compelled to fight with the beasts in the arena at Ephesus and because his crimson blood sprinkled the white sands of the Roman arena? Was Lincoln a failure because when he had reached the summit of his possibilities an assassin made his body, which was the home of an immortal soul, a vacant tenement? Was Jesus a failure because he passed through his thirty-three and one half years' experience and came to his passion week without a penny to pay his taxes and without friends sufficient to protect him against his murderers?

Success as we see, is not of necessity counted in wealth. Success is measured rather in the development of the soul. We may have wealth and be successful in its use, but he who seeks the acquirement of wealth to the end that he might lavish lux-

uries upon himself, that he might set himself upon a pedestal before his community, will find indeed that he has made the most sorrowful failure of life. When one of the wealthy citizens of Athens signified to Socrates that he was going to make him wealthy, Socrates said to the servant who bore the message, "Tell your master that in Athens four quarts of meal can be purchased for three half-pence and the fountains flow with water."

Why, then, we ask you—you who are upon the verge of your graduation—why have you sought learning? Why have you sought knowledge? I pray that you have sought it to the end that the world might be benefited as a consequence of your having lived. Seek it further that you might be of more service to your nation, to your community, and to your God.

"There are some," says Saint Bernard, "who desire to know with the sole purpose that they may know, and it is base curiosity; and some who desire to know that they may be known, and it is base ambition; and some who desire to know that they may sell their knowledge for wealth and honor, and it is base avarice: but there are others, also, who desire to know, that they may be edified, and it is prudence; and some desire to know, that they may edify others, and it is charity."

For what, I ask you, my young friends, is your quest? Are you seeking knowledge that you may serve from the consideration of self-interest? that as a consequence of that service you might gather to your own advantage opportunities that come in the present; do the things at hand. Do them well, for the great things in life are the small things accomplished. And if we do the small things well, the greater things will of necessity take care of themselves.

You need not search for your life's work. Many young people have come to me in my travels and asked, "What is my life's work?" I have said to them, "You need not seek for your life's work. If you do the duty that comes to your hand each day and do it well, your life's work will be seeking you." It is a thing for which you need not search. You may feel that the thing that is at hand is a small thing, an unworthy thing, a trivial matter, but, my friends, as I say, that small thing well accomplished is the big thing after all.

It was a very small thing that Watt, the inventor of the steam engine, should watch the vibrations of the teakettle lid as the steam sought a way of escape, but it was a great thing that Watt should take that small thing which brought home to him an idea and give it expression in that which has revolutionized our social activities and our commercial world. It was a small thing that Whitney should notice one night from his bedroom window a cat sitting upon a crate of chickens, pushing its paw down through the slats of the crate, and see that feathers came out but no chickens. It was a small thing, but it was a great thing that that man could take the idea there born and invent for the good of humanity the cotton-gin and turn the penurious lot of the Southern planter to affluence and power. It was but a small thing that Thomas Edison, speaking over the telephone, should notice that a needle point lying in the transmitter moved at the sound of his voice, but it was a marvelous thing that he could take the idea there finding birth and give to us the phonograph. It was a small thing in the days that are hardly passed when De Forest, wizard of the wireless, noted the fluctuations of the gas light and from that got the idea that made possible the broadcasting of the human voice, as it is broadcast to-night.

Oh, yes; these are small things, but when accepted, when the opportunities are received and appreciated, they become wonderful, magnificent, powerful. And so we say to you, young man and young woman, to you, boys and girls, watch for the opportunities of life and do not let them slip. Take advantage of them as they come and you will find indeed that you are being blessed for not only the service which you render to your own soul, but also to the souls of those who are needing your services.

Booker T. Washington in one of his greatest speeches made in the Southland, used an illustration of a ship off the South American coast at some distance. It had been there day after day, caught in a prolonged calm. As a consequence their water casks were empty and the crew was famishing with thirst. Of a chance there came another vessel when the winds began to blow and they had not yet found a harbor. When this other ship came into view, the distressed vessel ran up to its masthead the signal, "Water; water; send us water." To their astonishment the answer came back to them, "Let down your buckets where you are." Not appreciating what this meant, they again sent up the signal, "Water; water; send us water," and again came back the reply, "Let down your buckets where you are." Still not appreciative of that which was included in those few words, they sent again to the masthead this message, "Water; water; send us water or we die"; and again went up the message from the friendly ship, "Let down your buckets where you are." Giving heed at last to the warning, they let down their buckets where they were and drew them up full of fresh water. They discovered that they were in that great stream which goes out into the ocean as a consequence of the flowing of the Amazon River. They were floating in what to them was life and they knew it not.

If I would give advice to young men and young women who are seeking a place in which they might render their service, I would say to them, "Let down your buckets where you are." Here is your opportunity. Here are your privileges. Let down your buckets where you are. Do what you can here and now. Taking advantage of present opportunities and now is what will cause you development and growth; and the day may come when from a flickering flame that does not yet mean much to the community, you may grow into a powerful beacon which will be a searchlight to those about you and a guiding light to those afar off.

The night Oliver Cromwell died there was a terrible storm in England. It swept the British Isles from end to end. With the howling of that storm as it swept around the Imperial Building in London, the soul of Oliver Cromwell passed away. But while Cromwell was dying a boy sixteen years of age was out in the midst of that storm. He was making a long jump with the gale and then making another jump against the gale and then figuring the difference in these jumps with a jump he had made upon a calm day. This boy was to be a greater man even than Oliver Cromwell. He became Sir Isaac Newton, the discoverer of gravitation. He was in this instance letting down his bucket where he was. He was using what he had been placed in his hand. Even in those early years, in that childish manner, he was beginning a life's work which was to revolutionize the world.

While I was meditating upon this even this afternoon, there came to me this rule which we might use and which if used will impel us towards success: "Do all you can with what you have at the time you have it." That is just what Sir Isaac Newton as a boy was doing. He was doing all he could with what he had while he had it. He had no instruments that had been arranged to a nicety. He only had his power of a jump against the storm, and then his ability of a jump with the storm, and then the calculations of the difference of these jumps with the jump he had made upon a calm day. And in this way he was in some degree, though perhaps very cruelly, able to tell the force of the gale.

Like Sir Isaac, Let down your buckets where you are! Use what you have at the time you have it with all the power that you possess, and success will come to you. There is no question about it; it will come to every man who thus labors. That does not of necessity mean that every man is going to be rich. It does not of necessity mean that every man is going to be a governor, a senator, a representative, or a president. No; success is not counted by the greatness of the position we obtain in life. Success should be counted from the viewpoint of the development within. If we do the best we can with what we have and at the end of life we find ourselves engaged in digging ditches or carrying orders, we should know that even in this God has graced our lives with that perhaps many other men who have attained material success and power were never privileged to have—that is, character. Character is the gauge of success, and not the money one may have in the bank. Yes, if we do these things and do them well, our opportunities will continue to grow in number and become more evident and greater in magnitude as the days go by.

We have a wonderful heritage—a wonderful heritage indeed. For this heritage the race has lived and died, has toiled and sweat, has bled and sacrificed, and all of their toiling and sweating, all that they have given in broken bones and crushed flesh and rivers of blood comes to us to-night in the privileges of the present, the heritage of freedom and of spiritual possibilities. Those of us who make the best of our opportunities now are simply answering the prayers of those who have sacrificed to make our success a possibility, for indeed millions of heroes have perished upon the fields of carnage that we might have what we have. Millions of martyrs have sighed away their souls in the flames that we might enjoy what we enjoy to-day. And so the best way in which we can repay such unselfish sacrifice is to give that service which will continue to magnify the efforts of the past and to extend into the future the blessings which have come to us with the added contribution possible with us.

This is not to be done outside of character. That individual who seeks character will be able to accomplish good. As Ruskin has said, "Would you paint a Winter coats were quite comfortable Sunday.

The young people’s prayer meeting at eight o’clock was spiritual and encouraging. There was an earnestness and consecration voiced in the testimonies of the young Saints of Zion that speak well for the future of this church. Their Wednesday night meeting was also good. At this same hour services are provided for the comfort of the older Saints in the upper auditorium of the church.

The Sunday school missed 514 of its members, only 1,143 being present. Last Sunday 1,319 were present. It is a pleasant place to go. The hum of many earnest voices discussing righteousness is music to the ear. In one class one of our good bishops explained the principles of inheritance. The music from the orchestra was good.

At eleven o’clock the preaching was by Patriarch F. A. Smith, assisted by Elder Edward Rannie. The organist played Beethoven’s beautiful “Moonlight sonata,” and the choir sang, “How beautiful upon the mountains.” At this same hour two other meetings were going on, one in the lower auditorium for young people under twelve years of age, and the other in the dining hall for those over twelve. A song service of musical numbers and a sermon held the interest of the children. Parents must feel grateful for this arrangement which gives their children benefits and whole-great picture, be a good man; would you carve a perfect statue, be a pure man; would you make a wise law, be a just man.” Here we find the basis of great deeds, of great acts, of wonderful accomplishments, and these things cannot be obtained without effort.

One day while Michelangelo, perhaps the greatest sculptor that ever lived, was toiling in his study, a friend came in and looked over the masterpiece which he was then bringing to perfection. This friend went out and came in a week later and looked again upon the work and said to him, “Why, my dear Angelo, you have not done much in the past week,” to which Michelangelo replied, “Oh, yes, I have done much.” His friend began to inquire wherein was its manifestation, and Michelangelo replied, “I have given more strength to this limb, more speed to this foot, more beauty to this cheek, and more life to this eye.” “Oh, yes,” said his friend, “but these are only trifles.” The reply of Michelangelo was, “Trifles indeed, but remember, my friend, that trifles accomplished make for perfection, and perfection is no trifle.”

My young friends, I would say to you, seek ye therefore to do all that you do with the thought of perfection in mind, and if I may repeat those noble words I would remind you, “Work as though you would live forever, and live as though you would die to-day.”

some entertainment while they themselves can sit in peace through the regular service.

The afternoon prayer meeting was conducted by Patriarch L. N. White and Brothers Walter Self and Alma Booker. It was a good meeting, taken as a whole. Some loyal, stirring testimonies were given, and two audible gifts of the Spirit.

The Religio spent a little time in electing officers. As it stands now, Brother Francis Holm is president, with Brothers F. A. Cool and Frank Hershey as assistants. With these efficient, earnest leaders the Religio can look forward to happy accomplishments. A new class was launched with the burden of stewardship and the social program in the west wing, with E. D. Moore as teacher. The age limit has been set at thirty years, and here is where some who would like to join the class feel the weight of their precious accumulation of years.

In the evening Apostle M. A. McConley occupied the stand, assisted by D. O. Cato and J. M. Terry. The evening preacher is at somewhat of a disadvantage, because the audience is usually a bit weary from a long day of service, yet Brother McConley’s vigorous style and his timely, vital message, kept his audience alert. Robert and George Miller furnished the music numbers on the organ and piano.

The United Order of Enoch will hold its annual business meeting of the membership Monday, May 25, at 10 a. m. in the Council Chamber at the Battery Block. A new board of directors will be elected, besides other business of interest to the order. All members are urged to attend.

President F. M. Smith was in Magnolia, Iowa, for the week-end, where he delivered the high school baccalaureate sermon Sunday. Brother Elbert attended the special stake conference in Lamoni Sunday.

Bishop A. Carmichael was in Lamoni last week preparing to move to Independence.

Of the Quorum of Twelve, J. A. Gillen, D. T. Williams, and J. F. Garver were in Lamoni for the stake conference; E. J. Gleazer is in Michigan; R. S. Budd in Oklahoma; P. M. Hanson is busy in western Iowa and will return by way of Lamoni where he will deliver the college baccalaureate sermon. Apostles McConley, Curtis, and Ellis are in Independence. Brother Curtis has been indisposed, but will soon be able for work again.

Second Church

Sunday morning’s prayer service at eight o’clock was well attended. An active banch of young people made a profitable and enjoyable hour.

It is rather exceptional to see a bunch of young boys and girls attend the church services for so long a period as many do at Second Church, beginning at eight o’clock, going next to Sunday school at half past nine, and then to the junior services in charge of Brother Lane Bolt and assisted by Brother F. W. Chappelow; a period of nearly four hours, with only two very short intermissions.

Apostle J. F. Curtis was the speaker at eleven o’clock Sunday morning, and the auditorium was well filled with interested listeners. Sunday evening’s sermon was delivered by a favorite among Second Church attendants, Evangelist Frederick A. Smith.

Sisters J. A. Curtis and Frank Good took their choir to the radio studio at five o’clock and rendered the musical numbers of the program broadcast at that hour, consisting of quartets, double quartets, and the hymns of the faith. The choir is doing very commendable work under the direction of these sisters.

J. T. Curtis’s Religio class promises an entertaining and profitable playlet Friday evening.

The Saints were made sad Tuesday to learn of the death of Brother V. W. Gunsolley, who passed away after many months of suffering. Brother Gunsolley had endeared himself to these Saints through his patient and untiring efforts on behalf of the musical work in this congregation. He is responsible to a great extent for the development of both the choir and the orchestra, and worked devotedly under the handicap of ill health long after many would have given up. The fight to retain life and usefulness which Brother Gunsolley has made should be an inspiration to many.

Two especially good sermons were enjoyed Sunday. The one in the morning by Apostle Clyde F. Ellis was on, "We know that thou art a teacher come from God." The evening sermon was by Bishop B. J. Scott who used for his subject: Work out your own salvation.

The children's program that was given by the Lower Circle of Orioles and boys of the Sunday school of the same age last Friday night, will be repeated this week. The weather was so bad that the attendance was very small, and many have requested that it be given again. A collection will be taken to help the children pay their share of the budget.

Enoch Hill

Mothers' Day was celebrated at the morning service May 10 with special music and an appropriate sermon by Pastor W. J. Brewer. Bishop B. J. Scott was the evening speaker.

On May 12 the local priesthood met in their usual monthly meeting at eight o'clock to organize for the new conference year. They had the pleasure of welcoming Pastor C. Ed. Miller, Bishops Mark H. Siegfried and J. A. Becker. All three made appropriate talks urging all to concentrate on the work in hand and stressing the importance of united effort.

Last Sunday Bishop Becker was with us for the morning and preached on stewardships. Elder F. J. Lewis occupied in the evening.

The local church debt is again calling for concerted action on the part of all in this community, and the priesthood is busy organizing with the intent of wiping out the balance of the debt this year. Regular meetings are being called, and a definite, constructive program is being worked out.

The Sunday school continues to forge ahead, and with the busy and consecrated band of workers in this department we hope for continued expansion, although we certainly need more room.

Ottumwa, Iowa

May 11.—The work here is still maintaining its own. We have heard some good sermons, among which was one on the need to press forward to the accomplishment of the work before us. The Saints are anxious to go on.

The communion service the first of the month was of a very high order.

The Department of Women is alive to its opportunities. At the last meeting twenty-one were present, all enjoying a social afternoon at the home of Sister Price.

The city of Ottumwa has a population of 27,000, but like a number of other places, we need a new church building, which would add much to the opportunity of increasing our membership. It has been quite a while since we had any missionaries visit us.

A special service was held at eleven o'clock on Mothers' Day. A very fine solo was sung by Sister Jean Santee, also one by Brother John Baker, and a reading was given by Brother LaPoint. The pastor's address was based on the love of mother.

A Silver Musical Tea was given by the Doreas Club of Central Church, Thursday, May 7, at the home of Mrs. George H. Hidy, 3918 Holmes Street. The program was furnished by Mrs. Lester C. Conley. Piano solo, Miss Rea Tucker; Mrs. A. D. Hitchcock, vocal solo; and Mrs. Paul A. Johnstone gave a lecture on "A child's place in the home." There were seventy-five guests present. A silver collection was taken, which will go to the church building fund.

The Plus Ultra Sunday school class has arranged to have a home-coming for its past members, Sunday, May 24. The class hour will be observed as usual at 9.30 o'clock. The eleven o'clock service will be given over for short talks and musical numbers from the ranks of the class. A picnic at Swope Park has been planned for the afternoon. The Independence radio orchestra will give a short concert at 7.30 in the evening, and President Floyd M. McDowell will be the speaker. The class believes it has outlined a splendid time for the entire day and urges all the past members to attend. The aid of all present members is solicited, and a cordial invitation is extended to all interested in the class.

Armourdale Church

The pastor, Elder John Gross, has been on the sick list for several weeks, not being able to attend to his pastoral duties. He is reported on the road to recovery now, so it will not be long till he will be at his post of duty, it is hoped.

Apostle Clyde F. Ellis was at Armourdale on the evening of the 7th and gave a very interesting slide lecture on his work in the South Sea Islands, which was very much enjoyed by those present. They hope to have Brother Ellis with them again. The Department of Women served ice cream and cake before and after the lecture. The Sunday school is growing. There is an average attendance of 90 with an enrollment of 110. They stimulate larger offerings by giving a banner to the class that has the largest collection, and to the class that wins the banner the greatest number of times during the year, they will give the members a button, bearing the words, "Banner Class for the year 1925." On the evening of May 15 the Religio gave a fine program, followed by a pie social in the rear room of the meeting place. A good-sized crowd was out to enjoy the occasion. The Department of Women has been quite active lately. As a result of their efforts much needed repairs have been made on their meeting place. They have leased three lots adjoining their place and are getting them into shape so they can hold meetings on them during the summer months, as also socials and suppers. Attendance at all services is increasing. They are trying to make an enthusiastic worker of every member of the church.

Chelsea Church

We feel that we have had quite a treat in the recent past in having with us various missionaries. Apostles D. T. Williams and Elders Amos T. Higdon, J. J. Cornish, J. E. Vanderwood, O. W. Okerlind, and Thomas Newton have been very acceptable speakers. On May 10 we enjoyed a very fine Mothers' Day program, under the direction of Sisters Sarah Dawe and Alice Weedmark, and on May 14 Apostle Clyde F. Ellis gave an illustrated lecture on the South Sea Islands, which was excellent. Our men's volleyball team have played Grandview, Quindaro, and Independence, Missouri, losing only the latter game, it being played on the Independence grounds the 7th. We are glad to say that several of our young people are planning to attend Young People's Convention at Lamoni in June.

The special meetings conducted by Missionary W. I. Fligg are attended by capacity crowds, which are paying good attention to the message he brings them. They will continue at least till the 24th inst.

Holden Stake

The communion service held on the first Sabbath of the month was one of unusually high spirituality. The Saints rejoiced in the fact that the Lord is still remembering his people.

Mothers' Day was observed at all church services on the 10th. The morning service was given by the ladies of the Priscilla Club of the Department of Women. Readings and music made up the program. The audience entered into the service with those who gave the numbers. It was a splendid observance. In the afternoon the Priscillas repeated a part of their program at the Sunday school at the Home.

The Religio in the evening also gave a Mothers' Day program. At eight o'clock Sister Lola A. Johnson, staker director of music, spoke on mother, home, and music. The day was closed by a talk by Brother F. A. McWethy.

Bishop Albert Carmichael visited us during the conference and spoke at the church. Brother Holden boy, visited with us and preached. Brother Barton is now located in Colorado. William O. Hands and wife of Kansas City visited with Brother Hand's mother, who is living at the Home. He assisted in the sacramental service.

Knobnoster

Speakers at the church recently have been Bishop A. B. Phillips, J. P. Petre, E. E. Petre, F. L. Mortimore, and R. E. Burgess. Brethren C. B. Cook and C. L. Redfield have recently moved their families to Independence, Missouri, where the brethren have employment. Brother and Sister I. M. Ross of Holden visited our branch April 26.

Sister Tressa Weeks, our chorister, who has been employed at Independence, is home again.

A beautiful sacramental service was held May 3 at eleven o'clock and was presided over by Pastor F. L. Goode and J. E. Bozarth of Warrensburg.

Grandview

The fine weather and good roads have been instrumental in bringing an increasing attendance to our services. On March 29 it was our pleasure to hear Brother George Jenkins preach two inspiring sermons.

April 12, Brother John Schreur, of Freesoil, Michigan, occupied both morning and evening. The Saints were well pleased with the efforts of this elderly brother.

April 19 we were favored with the presence of Brother C. E. Harpe, of Lamoni, Iowa, who occupied during the morning hour. Again God favored us with the presence of his Spirit, and the meeting was enjoyed by those attending. Brother C. V. Hopkins occupied during the evening hour. As a large number of the Saints had not had the opportunity of attending General Conference, he told us of the business that had been transacted, which was heartily enjoyed by those who had been forced to remain at home.

Wednesday evening, April 15, Brother Anderson of California was present at our services and gave a lengthy talk on "Charity" as described by Paul in the Corinthian letter.

Wednesday evening, May 13, President Floyd M. McDowell delivered the address to the graduates of the high school in the high school auditorium, before a large audience. His theme was, "Making right choices." Many favorable comments have been heard from the nonmembers concerning the address, and the Saints feel greatly pleased that Brother McDowell was selected and could arrange to speak here.

Lexington

Our sacramental service of May 3 was one to be remembered by the Lexington Saints. Helen Brock was baptized by her father, A. C. Brock, and confirmed by J. A. Brendel. The Spirit was keenly felt during this service and the communion, which caused all to thank God for the gospel and the many blessings it brings.

Sister Esther Furness, eighty-four years old, of the Holden Home, spent two weeks here visiting her son, Fred Furness, and family. Her visit and wonderful testimonies of the work were greatly enjoyed. Fred Furness has moved to the Kansas City Stake and will attend at the Central Church. We regret losing Brother and Sister Furness.

Sister Lola A. Johnson, Holden stake chorister, visited Warrensburg, Holden, and Sedalia in behalf of the Department of Music last week.

Brother W. W. Snell and family have moved to Dover, Missouri. This is not very far, and we hope they can establish the work there. Their labors here will be missed very much.

Brother R. D. Weaver is holding a series of meetings here. He is a fine speaker, and with the help of the Spirit presents the work in a wonderful manner. The attendance has been good, and the interest grows each night. The Saints are much encouraged, and we hope others will be brought into the church. We have received much happiness and many blessings as a church in the last year. We hope this may continue through the coming year, and that we may do our part in bringing about the consummation of the program of the church.

Atherton

Brother Richard Bullard was asked to preach the Mothers' Day sermon for the Saints at Atherton, but owing to a sudden illness he sent to fill his appointment Brother T. W. Williams, who gave us a very interesting and pleasing sermon in behalf of mother. In the evening, a Mothers' Day program was given, which was in charge of Mrs. Stephenson, a nonmember. The program was well rendered and very much appreciated.

The young folks have been active in a young people's prayer meeting held each Sunday morning. These meetings began over three months ago and are proving a success. Several previous attempts to have a young people's prayer meeting failed, but now there is created an interest which we believe is lasting, and much good will result therefrom.

Sedalia

A splendid spirit was present at our prayer and sacramental service to-day, the Saints having come in fasting and prayer. The voice of the Spirit was heard with a message to both the pastor and the membership, giving cheer and encouragement. We are glad the Lord is still over his church and trust we may be united in our efforts that the work may be built up here and Zion be established.

Monday, May 4, about sixty gathered at the home of Brother and Sister King in honor of Brother King's seventy-fifth birthday and the birthday of Brother M. A. Ferguson, both coming on the same day. Brother Ferguson came to help surprise Brother King and was also surprised to know that he was an honored guest.

May 10 was observed as Mothers' Day. A special program was given at eleven o'clock under the direction of the Department of Women, which consisted of songs, and readings by the children, young people, and several of the mothers, concluding with a talk by the pastor, Doctor G. W. Rodger. Some splendid thoughts were given, which we trust may not be forgotten. We were glad to have our Sunday school superintendent, R. F. Moorman, in charge again to-day, for the first time since his accident. He has fully recovered and has resumed his duties.

The Religion gave a special program Friday night in observance of music week. Stake Music Director Lola A. Johnson was with us on Monday in the interest of this department.

Elder C. L. House of Houstonia has been quite ill. The elders went from here to administer. We trust he may soon be at his post again.

Lamoni Stake Items

LAMONI, IOWA, May 17.—Lamoni Stake is wide-awake and on the job, even though the correspondent may have been napping. We have felt somewhat like sheep without a shepherd since conference, both our president and bishop having left us. The work has not suffered, however, but has gone on under the efficient direction of their counsellors, W. E. Prall and A. J. Yarrington.

Two weeks ago Brother C. E. Wight preached his farewell sermon, and left the next evening for Kansas City, where he is employed by the Kansas City Power and Light Company. Brother Wight gave as reasons for resigning his ministerial charge for a time the fact that he had some financial obligations which he felt impelled to discharge. Sister Wight and her mother, Sister Emma Benedict, who is convalescing from a very serious operation, are still in Lamoni. Sister Wight will not join her husband for a few weeks. They will be greatly missed here, both having been prominent and influential workers in both church and civic circles.

Brother A. Carmichael is at home for a short time in order to close up his business and prepare to move to Independence, where he has taken up the burdens of the Presiding Bishop of the church.

A special stake conference has been called to convene here to-day, for the purpose of selecting men to act as stake president and bishop.

One of the most effective programs ever held here was given at the church the evening of Mothers' Day by the grades, assisted by the adult department. The choir loft was filled with the junior choir of eighty voices, which was indeed an inspiring sight. They sang two selections. The junior choir work of the years has been under the able direction of Sister C. E. Wight for a long time. The most of the program consisted of a diversity of numbers by kindergarten and grade children, throughout which ran the theme of the occasion.

The closing tableaux in three scenes made a beautiful climax which left few dry eyes in the audience. The scenes were representing three ages: "Baby days," showed Sister Merrill H. Miller and her baby under the spotlight while Mrs. Oscar Watts sang "The slumber song" behind the curtain. The second scene, "The story hour," showed Mrs. Oscar Anderson seated with Doris Ellen, William Lee, Ardath, and Marion Kelley around her knee, absorbed with interest in the story she was telling them. Lastly, Mrs. Charles F. Church was reading "a letter from my boy," while Job Negiem sang "Mother Machree."

The Department of Recreation and Expression is sponsoring a public playground Saturday afternoons at the athletic park in Lamoni, which is proving very successful. The Lamoni local is assisted by Andover, Oland, Bloomington, and Evergreen locals. Volley ball and playground ball furnish the principal amusements. The ground is largely patronized by rural people for a period while in town for the half holiday.

A Religion convention for the northern branches of the stake, including Lucas, Creston, Chariton, Centerville, and Hiteman, will be held at Chariton May 22 to 24 inclusive. Among the activities planned are a mixed program of music, readings, and a one-act play Friday evening; class work, social service, round table, and business meeting, recreation, basket supper, and an evening reception on Saturday. Among the speakers scheduled for Sunday are W. E. Prall, D. A. Dowker, and Mrs. Ward L. Christy.

The following recent baptisms are reported from the Bloomington Branch: Mrs. Dell Wiley, Hazel Carr, and Dan Mann.

The air is full of plans for the Young People's Convention. Every day reveals something new, and we understand that Brother McDowell still has a few plans under his hat that will be announced later.

Omaha, Nebraska

Our regular writer, Sister Audentia Anderson, has just arrived home after five or six weeks of most strenuous work; first as a delegate to our General Conference, also as reporter to the Omaha Bee, one of our prominent daily papers. She had to rush from conference and journey to Washington to attend as delegate the annual Congress of the National Society Daughters of American Revolution; the Conference of the National Society Daughters of American Colonists; the Associate Council of United States Daughters of 1812, and the Quin-quennial meeting of the International Council of Women. At this meeting forty countries and 40,000,000 women of the world were represented. After attending to these duties, she did considerable research work in the Congressional Library.

I personally believe we have the best branch in this part of the country. The intelligence is above the average; if any doubt my statement, let him come and linger among us for a week or two. The reason is that the people are studious. The priesthood are meeting their problems as quickly as they arise. Meetings are well attended; our prayer meetings are of a splendid spiritual character. The Saints here have witnessed their prayers answered on several occasions, especially among their sick. We do much visiting of hospitals because Saints from other cities come here for treatment, and they let us know and we are glad to go and see them.

Our Sunday school is every member's pride and is a splendid organization of efficiency. The superintendent, Sister Rose Adams, and her staff of splendid workers are beyond praise. They have easily made the Sunday school in its every department a sound one hundred per cent organization. At our last teachers' and officers' meeting, more than seventy people attended, and fifty-five stayed to the prayer service! Can you beat it? No, you cannot. Why? Because you don't know our system. We have come to the point where we have to seriously consider making our building larger, and the Sunday school is out to get one thousand dollars towards it, and they are going to do it.

The Department of Women is a real star society, with Sister Wellman at its head. They are making themselves felt and heard. As pastor, I am an invited guest at their meetings. These women are out for the same purpose as the Sunday school, to help enlarge our building. They do not stop at just working for our branch, but go out and serve suppers and dinners for other organizations.
Last Sunday was Mothers' Day. Our little church was packed clear to the front doors. The Sunday school gave a splendid program of instrumental and vocal renditions. A young lady not of our faith came and played us a song appropriate to the occasion. And our sweet singer, Sister Nell Kelley, sang with her splendid voice the songs that mother used to sing. When the last note had left her lips, there was hardly a dry eye in the church. Every mother was presented by the Sunday school with a beautiful flower in token of the day. The church was sweetly decorated with festoons and flowers.

This branch is progressing. The people are willing, and cooperation is doing it.

Yours sincerely,

PETER S. WHALLEY.

Writers of Mothers' Day Program

GRAND JUNCTION, COLORADO, May 10.—I am at present isolated from church services as I am traveling for the Western Rug Manufacturing Company of Salt Lake City. To-day is the first opportunity I have had in three weeks to attend service.

I passed through Montrose, Colorado, en route to this place, and while waiting for the next stage I walked out to Brother Woodruff's near the fair ground. I found that the Saints were meeting at the home of Sister Perkins, so I went to her place to find an interesting group of Saints assembled and a Mothers' Day program in progress. I was sorry I was a little late, as the program was well rendered and very interesting. I might mention that little Elmer Rose, the son of Brother Arthur Rose, recited, telling how good his mother is and how much he loves her. He also brought out the fact that our fathers should come in for a good share of our love.

A service like this does us all a world of good. The program was complete, and was followed by a sermon by Brother Morse on the subject, "What a man thinketh, so is he." He gave much food for thought and brought out very forcibly that a mother's love and training could wield a mighty influence over boys and girls. He compared the love of Christ and our heavenly Father to mother love.

I wonder how many boys and girls there are to-day, away from home and the direct influence of their mother and father. Did you write to them? Did you try to show in some way your love and respect for them? Did you succeed in bringing a smile of joy to the face of your mother? If we could only be made to realize that our mothers are given us only for a short time! If we could only sense the responsibility that rests upon her who brought us into the world and cared for us so lovingly during our childhood days! If we could only sense that fact, we would show our love for her in everything we do and say.

As our mother's time is limited, would it not be much better for us to try to lighten her burdens than to wait to put beautiful flowers upon her silent bosom after she cannot appreciate them? I lost my mother when I was a lad of fourteen, little realizing then what a treasure I was losing. I am sure I would be a better man now, better fitted to shoulder the responsibility of fatherhood, if I could have had the influence of my mother's love and guidance a few years longer.

I was warned in a dream a few evenings ago that my father was not long for this world and that he would pass away quietly and peacefully. The dream came to me with such force that I awoke at three in the morning resolved in my heart to write to my dear old father and the only mother I have known for many years outside of my wife's mother, who is a dear little woman. I had almost lost track of time and did not know it was nearly Mothers' Day.

I do not know whether my father is among the living or not, as I have not had a chance to get any mail for three weeks, but I feel sure that our heavenly Father is merciful to him, even though he is not a Latter Day Saint.

We will be permanently located here about the second week in June, and I will try to organize a Sunday school. We desire all Saints who may find themselves here to be sure to call on us.

LOGAN SCOTT.

Good Reports From Western Iowa

WOODBINE, IOWA, May 6.—Once more our congenial district president, Brother Joseph Lane, has visited us with good cheer and encouragement.

Brother Joseph Seddon, although afflicted, occasionally stands behind the sacred desk, telling of his hope in the gospel and spiritual experiences of the past.

Brothers Howard Reynolds and Frank Fry are magnifying their office and calling in the preaching of the gospel as along other lines of work in the priest's office, thus showing by their works that God and service should be first in the mind and heart of every true Saint. We are very thankful for both the old men and the young.

Recently the junior Religions gave a program which was entertaining as well as talented.

Our beloved Sister Gamet, in her eighty-seventh year, is recovering from an operation for tumor, and on last Sunday she was in attendance at the sacramental service, which was a feast to the weary soul, as with power God's Spirit dwelt therein, evidencing that the gospel is true and that his watch care is over those who will humbly serve. Could we but lay our reservations aside and say, "Here am I, use me," how soon would the dark places be made light, the rough places smooth, and the glory and power of God shine forth in the lives of men, causing hearts to beat as one in the grandest and noblest work that has been committed to mortals. Then can we in faith say, "Lead thou me on; . one step enough for me."

Rhodes, Iowa

May 9.—The death angel has again visited our branch, this time taking our aged Brother Thomas Hughes, affectionately called "Uncle Tom" by the Saints. He took the influenza early in January and never fully recovered, though he improved as spring approached and planted a little early garden. About the middle of April he suffered a second attack and grew rapidly weaker until he passed away April 17 at the age of eighty-five years. Brother Thomas was baptized in March, 1884, and his faith in the work never wavered. He cheerfully did all in his power for the advancement of the work. He leaves one brother, J. B. Hughes, of Webster City, Iowa, and two sisters, Mrs. D. E. Garis, of Maxwell, Iowa, and the little crippled sister, Mattie Hughes, who has kept house for him for many years. Besides these there are a large number of other relatives and friends who will miss "Uncle Tom."

There has been a great deal of sickness in the branch the past few months, but we are glad to report that at this writing most of them have recovered.

Brother George Luing, who has been sorely afflicted for months, still lingers, though physicians hold out no hope for his recovery. He is anxious to get well, and we know nothing is impossible with God. We ask the Saints who read this to pray in his behalf, that if consistent with the Lord's will, he may recover.

Pastoral

To the Membership and Friends of the Gallands Grove District; Greeting: Another conference year is before us. The appointing powers have seen fit for me to return to labor with you, and we would like to hear from as many as we can as to your desires and wishes for the year’s work, and especially in the isolated parts of the district. So will you please let us hear from you, that we may be able to arrange our work to be of the best service to as many as possible with the means at our disposal.

Our district conference will be held with the Cherokee Branch June 8 and 7, at which time we would like to have a goodly number attend. Efforts are being made to have one of the general officers present. The prospect for the work is more hopeful than in the recent past, and by a united effort we can easily surpass the efforts of former years; hence we count on your support. Members of the local priesthood, may I urge you to see to it that those near you are having the privilege of hearing and accepting the gospel message by means of your getting out and improving your talent, as well as helping those that need your help to know the way of light and truth. The district is large, and there are only two of us sent to the field, but with the help of the local men we can accomplish more than has been done.

We would also urge all to remember the Bishop’s agent of the district, Brother E. L. Edwards, Pomeroy, Iowa. Try to see to it that he has more work for this year than he has had since being in the office, and I am sure he will appreciate the same and feel grateful that he can be of service.

Let us all put forth, and manifest our faith by our works, and at the close of the year we can look back with satisfaction, feeling we have done what we could.

Sincerely your

Earling, Iowa, May 12, 1925.

F. T. Mussell.

Zion the Land

In discussing the problems of Zion, its location, the gathering, and kindred subjects, we have often spoken of Independence being in the center of a region highly favored naturally. We have even spoken so highly of it that we might easily have been charged with boasting. It is therefore interesting to note the following which appeared in the New York Evening Post for May 8, 1925:

Chicago, May 8 (AP).—The “Heart of America”—the Central West—prepared by geologic forces for man's use for a thousand million years was pictured as the most favorable place for developing a great civilization by Professor Forrest Ray Moulton of the University of Chicago in an address here at a preparatory school conference.

“The time and the place in which we live are the most favorable the world has had or ever will have for the development of a great civilization,” he said. He embraced the territory from western New York, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia, to Kansas, Nebraska, and South Dakota, and from the Great Lakes to Tennessee.

Once covered by a shallow ocean, he said, the region was made rich in mineral deposits and soil fertility.

“There is not in the whole world another area in one body of equal extent that has so fertile a soil,” he said. “The climate is about all that could be desired for the production of food for mankind and for stimulating him to his best efforts.

“Enormous quantities of timber, grain, live stock, and fruit are produced in this area. About one half of the corn of the world is grown there, and, just beyond, nearly one half of the cotton of the world is produced.

“In all this region,” he continued, “a single language is spoken. Its inhabitants are largely of a single race. There are no frontiers to restrict and hamper trade. There is not a single fortified town and no body of troops to be supported.

“Within this circle there live approximately 50,000,000 of people, who are the wealthiest, best fed, best sheltered, best clothed people in the whole world, of this or any other time.”

A worthy bit for our elders' notebooks.

Churchmen in Western Iowa Addresses

We had noted from the columns of the daily press and elsewhere the frequent appearance of our men as lecturers and orators in school activities of western Iowa. We spoke of this to President Smith, and at our request he gave the following brief account. It is particularly interesting because of the fact that the Reorganized Church has had a representation in this wonderfully productive section from the very first of its organized activity, and the demand for our men has steadily increased.

R. J. L.

We have been kept busy for several week-ends responding to calls for baccalaureate sermons and commencement addresses. On May 10, at Piscataway, Iowa, the baccalaureate sermon was in the high school auditorium, and we enjoyed talking to an attentive audience which taxed the capacity of the building.

May 17 a full house greeted me in the auditorium of the high school building at Magnolia, Iowa, where fine attention was given to the baccalaureate sermon.

The night of May 22 found me at Little Sioux, Iowa, where in the opera house I delivered the commencement address at the exercises of the Little Sioux High School. I enjoyed the occasion, and splendid attention bespoke the interest of the audience which filled the building. Brother Hale W. Smith has been superintendent of schools at Little Sioux the past year.

These three points are all in Harrison County. While I was at Little Sioux, Brother Floyd M. McDowell was the speaker at the commencement exercises of the Moorhead High School, also in Harrison County (Brother Charles Field superintendent), Brother Paul M. Hanson having preached the baccalaureate sermon there Sunday night, the 17th.

At Dow City, Iowa, on May 28, Brother McDowell will be the commencement orator.

Participation in such educational activities, while closely allied to the general activities of church men, afford an enjoyable diversion. It is pleasant to encourage the young people in their school work.

Class B Inspection for K L D S Promised
This Week

Many Latter Day Saints have been tuning to 441 meters to get K L D S on the new wave length but have been disappointed. Inspection was to have been made May 21. A telegram received from the radio supervisor’s office advised that a change in their inspection plans was necessary, and that inspection of the new K L D S station for Class B license would be made before the end of the month.

So far as those in charge of the new station know, the equipment meets all class B requirements. There are comparatively few “homemade” broadcasting stations however, that have passed the stringent Class B inspection and examination. Ours is almost entirely “homemade”; consequently some anxiety is felt by the builders. Many reports have been received highly commending the quality of modulation from the new station, and good modulation is one of the most important features.

It is possible, even if the Government passes favorably on the new station, that there may be a little delay in running the reports through the so-called red tape of departmental channels. But with good luck, K L D S may be using full power on the new wave length next Sunday—the 31st. Try dial adjustments for 441 meters if you don’t get K L D S on the usual dial readings.

Canadian Census

There have been some complaints received with regard to the census in Canada not properly representing our church membership.

We therefore took the liberty of writing Honorable R. H. Coats, Dominion Statistician, Ottawa, Canada, giving him the number of members in Ottawa and in the particular districts. His reply is as follows:

Dear Sir: Replying your favor of the 17th instant. According to the last census taken as of date June 1st, 1921, there were reported for the whole Province of Ontario 5,791 persons as belonging to the various branches of the Mormon Church. This number included 5,405 who gave their religious denomination as “Mormon,” 285 as “Latter Day Saints,” 14 as “Reorganized Latter Day Saints,” 25 as “Reorganized Church of Christ,” 6 as “Reorganized Church of Jesus,” and 48 as “Reorganized Church.” The religious belief of no one was designated as “Utah Mormons.”

In your letter of the above date it is stated there are 5,070 persons belonging to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in four districts of Ontario, while according to the census only 576 so reported themselves.

Our instructions to enumerators were very specific that they should record the religious belief of every person according as it was given them by the person whose census was being taken, and from investigations made at various times we are reasonably sure that our instructions in this regard have been faithfully carried out by our officers in the field, and we, therefore, think it probable that the alleged discrepancy is due to the manner in which the information was given by the people themselves.

We thank you for having brought this matter to our attention and would request you to furnish us with the localities in the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta in which members of the denomination you represent are located. We take a census of these provinces next year, and such information would be of value to us.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) R. H. Coats,
Dominion Statistician.

It would seem from this that none gave a really accurate answer or else the enumerators did not properly list them or write out the full name, “Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.”

A census will be taken in the three provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta the coming year. In 1930 another census will be taken in the United States. If our church is to be rightly represented, it is necessary that the members answer correctly these questions with regard to church affiliation and membership and church interest.

The Social Service Bureau says that the problem of finding places for boys and girls as temporary homes often arises, and it is often a difficult task. These children are not for adoption, but are usually cases where the family is in temporary distress and wishes to place the children until they can adjust their difficulties.

At the present they are looking for homes for two boys, ages fourteen and thirteen, and one girl, thirteen. The boys prefer locating on a farm. The bureau would like to locate them not far from Independence. These could be placed for an indefinite period, or as long as is agreeable to both parties.

If you are interested in any of these children, communicate with the Social Service Bureau, Box 255, Independence, Missouri; or call at their office in the Battery Block.
Young People's Convention

June 4-14, 1925

The Opening Day, Thursday, June 4

The following program of the opening day will indicate something of the nature of the extensive plans that have been made for this year's convention. The program given below is quite typical of that provided for all the remaining days of the convention, with the following exceptions: Each morning at seven thirty a prayer service will be held; the forenoon classes after the first day will be one hour in length instead of one half hour; and finally the special topics for the various courses may be varied from day to day. Each person enrolling may take as many as five courses if he so desires.

"THIS YEAR WE SAIL ZIONWARD, WHICH IS OUR COURSE"
God Will Have a Tried People

Sermon delivered by President Elbert A. Smith, at the General Conference of 1918.

Looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God. For consider him that endured such contradictions of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds. Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin. And ye have forgotten the exhortation which speaketh unto you as unto children, My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him: for whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. If ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons; for what son is he whom the father chasteneth not? But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons. Furthermore we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits and life? For they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure; but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness. Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby.

I have read part of the twelfth chapter of Hebrews. My theme to-night is, "God will have a tried people." I believe it is a theme that is very appropriate to the times. The whole world is under trial at the present moment. The English poet, Masefield, while lecturing in Des Moines not long ago, told the old story of the leper who was assured that if he would visit a home in which there was no sorrow he would be healed. He visited every home in the city but remained a leper. To-day he might visit every home in continental Europe and Great Britain and still remain a leper. And the same may soon be true of America. The Prussian bayonet is probing every heart in the world.

Whom the Lord Loveth

But if it is true that the people of the world are under trial, it is equally true that the people of God must expect to receive their testing and their discipline. Last fall, at the Southern California reunion, I stood talking with a Brother Garner, a man who has suffered very severely from both misfortune and illness, (and at this time I was trying to swallow my own bitter dose of illness without making too much fuss about it,) when a third brother approached us, a man in vigorous health. He said, "You men must have done something terribly wicked to be so severely punished." Brother Garner instantly answered, "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son that cometh unto him. Where do you come in?" Of course, that was all good-natured raillery, but it brings to mind the thought that those who are the Saints of God must be disciplined, and if they do not receive discipline, they are, as Paul very baldly says, not sons at all.

Testing the Seed

This discipline, to a certain extent, comes in the nature of a test. In Iowa it is a very important thing to test seed corn. They send out experts from the agricultural colleges to teach the farmers how to test their seed corn. I remember the late Bishop Roberts telling that he had planted a certain number of kernels of corn for testing, and when the time came to take them up, some of them had grown and some had simply "swelled up." We are told that we are God's husbandry, and Paul tells us that baptism is like a planting. God is testing his seed; some of us grow and some of us simply swell up.

We might say, "Does God not know what a man is before he tests him?" He certainly does, but the very process of testing is the process through which he eliminates that man from his church if not worthy; he gives him opportunity to grow, but if he simply swells up, he, in course of time, swells out of the church.

Sickness, Sin, Poverty

When I started in to consider this theme and try to catalogue a few of the things that are trials to the people of God, I got caught in a cross current, a "rip-tide," they might call it on the Pacific coast, and I did not know whether I would get safely to the shore again or not. The cross current was this: some things that try the people of God, to my mind are not from God at all—at least not primarily. For instance: there are the three great afflictions of sickness, poverty, and temptation. I do not believe that any of these are primarily from God. I think they are from another source.

I do not believe that God wants men to be sick. We read that Jesus went about healing the people, not making them sick. I do not believe that the germs of tetanus, infantile paralysis, and tuberculosis were ever evolved in the laboratories of heaven.

I do not believe that God wants men to be poverty stricken. We hear a great deal of talk about the benefits of poverty, much of which is moonshine, and most of which comes from people in very well-to-do circumstances. John D. Rockefeller can talk for hours about the benefits of poverty, but he did not stay poor a day longer than he could help. God's plan is that every man shall receive according to his just wants and needs.

And so with temptation. If I thought that temption, in and of itself, was beneficial to humanity, I would say, “Let us build a saloon or a gambling hall or a brothel on every corner,” or anything else that would tempt the average individual. The thing that tempts one man does not always tempt another. The old colored preacher marveled that Adam and Eve threw away the Garden of Eden for the sake of an apple. He said, “Now, if it had 'a been a water-melon——”

Jesus taught us to pray, “Suffer us not to be led into temptation.” So, I believe I agree with John Alexander Dowie that sickness and poverty and sin are all of the Devil, and as Jesus Christ came to destroy the works of the Devil, these things will, in process of time, be destroyed.

Yet, these things have been in the world from time immemorial, and though we may not be of the world, we are in the world; and though these things may not be primarily from God, we do suffer from them, and he sometimes permits us to undergo great affliction. I will not say but that sometimes he may send some of these afflictions upon a person. I want to leave a hole that I can crawl out of when some of these overkeen critics come after me. That is where a preacher sometimes makes a mistake, in not safeguarding his line of retreat.

Historic Examples

It is not yet the millennium. We face facts and conditions as they are now. You will remember that Job lost all his property; he became afflicted with boils; and he was tempted, and yet God said that he was a very good man, and he is to-day the historic scriptural example of patience. Our own late President, Joseph Smith, who among us all most nearly approached the character of Christ, himself suffered severely for years and finally went down into the Valley of the Shadow of Death, blind. Writing to me shortly before his death, he said he believed that possibly his afflictions were permitted to come upon him that he might set the church an example of patience and godly endurance.

So I concluded that while these afflictions in and of themselves may not be good, the way in which we bear them may result in a great blessing to ourselves or others. And that is the way I escaped from the dilemma mentioned a few moments ago.

I might cite you to a great many examples or instances from both sacred and profane history to illustrate my point: Blind Milton, John upon the Isle of Patmos, and Paul and Silas in jail at midnight singing their hymn. All these illustrate how the heroic bearing of trials and afflictions became a blessing to the individuals. I might cite you to a great number, I say, but instead I will give you just a homely little illustration from near at hand.

A Modern Example

Probably all of you have heard of the cartoonist, “Ding,” as we call him. He is an Iowa man, and we are proud of him because he is probably the best cartoonist in America to-day. His drawings are published in more than fifty daily papers. Some years ago, when on a hunting trip, he had the misfortune to fall and strike his right elbow, and as a result finally lost the use of his right arm to the extent that he could not draw with it. That was something like a preacher losing his voice, excepting that Ding had another arm, and the preacher has only the once voice. He set to work immediately to learn to draw with the other hand, and after working steadily six months, he could draw just as well with his left hand as he had ever drawn with his right.

A little later he went to New York and met a specialist, and his right arm was restored to use by an operation. So that now he can draw with either hand, or with both. He can draw the Kaiser with one and quarter him with the other, if necessary. Now it was no blessing for him to fall and strike his elbow, but the way in which he met the disaster became a great blessing to him.

After all, it is the man that counts! When Edison lost his buildings, supposed to be fireproof, by fire, President Joseph Smith at the time was on his deathbed, and he heard the story of the disaster with a great deal of interest. He closed his eyes and pondered it for a while and then said, “Did Edison lose his head?” Being told “No,” he replied, “It is all right, then; he can get other buildings, but he could never get another head like that.” You see it is the man: nothing else counts in the sight of God but the development of the individual.

The Test of Duty

I will turn from my consideration of these trials that come to us as disasters, some of which are not good in their nature, and I come to certain tests that, to me, are more pleasing, because there is no question that God himself imposes them upon us. The first is the test of duty. God will have a tried people, and the call of duty is the supreme test that tries the individual.

God says that every man must learn his duty. Jesus said, very early in his life, “I must be about my father's business.” It was a business proposition with him. Yet how often do we shrink back from the call of duty or try to evade it or avoid it in some way. Yet the question, “What must I do to be saved?” is just as vital a question to-day as it was on the day of Pentecost; and it is just as vital on this side of baptism as it was on the other side.

The Test of Service

The second test that is imposed upon us is that of our relationship toward our brethren. Jesus Christ said that if a man would be greatest of all, let him become the servant of all, and that is one test God imposes upon individuals that to some of us is a great trial. The test of service betrays what is in the individual.

I lived for some time between two families that were very close friends, but in course of time one of the ladies gave a wedding and invited the other lady to help serve at the table. This immediately precipitated a quarrel, and they became just as bitter enemies as they had been warm friends. If she had been asked to come in and superintend the wedding, she would have been delighted to do so, but to come in and serve was another proposition.

If we wish to partake of the wedding supper of the Bridegroom, we must be willing to serve the Bridegroom and serve each other. "Become servants of all," if necessary.

The Test of Sacrifice

I notice next the test of sacrifice. We are told that this is a day of sacrifice. We are told that this is a day for giving up things. It is a day, we have been told, not many years ago, of economy, and we were warned that we should practice the repression of "unnecessary wants." That tries the individual sometimes. It tries the people of God to repress their "unnecessary" wants, for those are the ones that clamor the loudest. It is easier, sometimes, to give up necessities than to give up luxuries. A great many girls will go without nourishing food in order to buy finery. Men and women show equally great mistakes in judgment. But we are told that we should repress unnecessary wants; that we should be willing to make a sacrifice. In what way are the people sacrificing? Ask the missionary who goes out, leaving his wife and little children, if he is making a sacrifice, and if you are not convinced that he is, just ask the wife who remains at home if she is making a sacrifice. Are we all willing to make an equal sacrifice? I might use an illustration that I have used before and perhaps one that is familiar to some of you.

The Iron Ring

Once in a while we meet a man who tells his boy, "Now whatever you do, don't be a missionary. Just remember what I went through." Once in a while we meet a woman who tells her daughter, "When you marry, don't marry a missionary." Shortly after the World War began, and before America had entered into it, I was talking with an old German in the city of Burlington, who said, "I will tell you, Brother Schmidt, why the Germans are so successful. It is because of the vinnims they have back of them." Well, there was something in that. You remember that in the beginning of the war, the German women took their golden wedding rings to the Kaiser to be melted and cast into the public treasury, and received in their stead iron rings to wear as mementoes of their devotion. I wonder if our girls are willing to give up the diamond-studded ring of the banker and put on the iron ring of the missionary's wife? Surely the German women do not love the Kaiser more than we love God? Shall we permit them to exceed us in the sacrifice we are willing to make? I trust not. If they thus served the man who has plunged the world into oceans of blood and war, how should we serve the Prince of Peace who will bring joy and salvation to all?

All of these tests, all of these trials, are for the betterment of the individual, and are in line with all the processes of nature by which anything of value is developed. There is no great excellency without great effort.

The Diamond Ring

I sometimes illustrate it in this way: Presuming that I have upon my finger a ring that is set with a beautiful diamond. Of course, this ring is entirely fictitious and will probably always remain so. As you look at this ring, you will see that the stone reflects the sunlight of heaven. Has it always done so from the beginning? No, indeed. It was once in the heart of the earth, under tremendous pressure, until it crystallized. In the course of time it was worked to the surface of the earth by natural processes, or some one mined it and brought it to the light. Then I suppose it flashed back the light of heaven? No, indeed. If either you or I should find it in its crude state, lying in the street, we would not pause to pick it up.

I heard Doctor Conwell, in his famous lecture, "Acres of diamonds," relate the story of an old Persian who owned a farm on the River Indus. This old man became possessed with the thought that he wanted to go out and hunt for diamonds. So he went, but he never found them. Later, on that same little farm which he had sold, was developed what is known to-day as the great Golconda diamond mine, the greatest in the world. The old Persian had seen diamonds lying about in his garden or in the little brook from which his cattle drank, but they did not appeal to him. They were but pebbles.

The diamond must first be cut into shape roughly; then it is put upon a rapidly revolving wheel, and every little angle is ground and polished. And finally, it comes forth a perfect diamond with a heart full of light.
So must we pass through heat and under pressure, with blows and friction, until we are filled with the light of God and flash it back to everyone who will receive it.

Our Lord's Example

In all of this we have, of course, a very great example in the person of our Lord and Savior. He does not ask us to endure anything that he did not endure. He was tested and tried in all ways. He responded to the call of duty. He made his sacrifice. He became the servant of all. And not only that, he suffered every bodily misery, hunger and cold, heat and thirst. He was weary, yet he had no bed to lie upon and no roof to cover his head. He suffered every mental anxiety. He was betrayed by his friends, hated and persecuted by his enemies. He hung upon the cross, and he passed through his Garden of Gethsemane. And it seems to me that the saddest chapter of the whole history of Jesus Christ is the chapter that tells us that when he was watching in the garden there was not a man to pray with or for him. They were asleep!

And so one of the messages I want to leave with you is this, that in the bearing of these trials we are to pray for one another. About two years ago I was approached in Kansas City (after finishing a sermon) by a brother who said, "Brother Smith, we have family prayer in our home, and every night I remember you and Brother Frederick M. in my prayer." That touched me very deeply, to think that some one was remembering me every night in prayer. It made me feel that I never could betray such trust and such support. It does not do me any good to realize that some one is making an alphabetical catalogue of my faults; but if I remember that some one is praying for me every night, I cannot help but be a better man! How many of you are cataloguing the faults of your brothers and sisters? How many of you are praying for them?

The Simplicity of Children

And remember, when we pray we must become as little children, as Jesus Christ said. I received a letter from my wife at a time when I was in the field. She said that the little boy kneeled down to say his prayers some nights before. After arising he said, "Mamma, do you know what I prayed for?" "No." "Well, I was praying that my little red hen might want to set." You laugh at that, but that was a serious matter with him; and two days later the little red hen took to her nest—the first of the flock. Why should not children receive answers to their prayers? A little girl in this town went out into the woods, and while there lost her sister's gloves. When she discovered the loss, she felt very bad and started in search of them, but she could not find them. Finally she went into a little thicket and knelt down to pray about it, and when she arose, there were the gloves; she had been kneeling on them.

I repeat, Why should children not receive answers to their prayers? They expect to receive an answer. They do not doubt that they will receive an answer. So, if we would become as little children and feel that assurance when praying, possibly we could better endure the trials, and if we would form a chain of prayer throughout the church and support the individual who is under trial, possibly he would endure and receive the blessing that is really in store for each and every one who is faithful.

Personal Testimony

I think that I will not talk longer excepting to bear a little personal testimony. It is a year and a half since I have even tried to preach until to-night, and I feel quite like a beginner. I feel like a musician who has not touched his instrument for a long time, when he begins to dust it off and runs his fingers awkwardly and clumsily over the keys. So to-night, if my sermon has been dry in places, it is just the dust from the keys. This is the testimony I want to bear: One year ago I was not permitted to meet with you. I was sitting in my wheel chair trying to forget that you were holding a General Conference. I was despondent to the point of desperation, and thousands of times I wished that I had died while yet I was permitted to engage myself in church activities; but, at such times, you know we have an anchor that reaches within the vale, that people of the world do not have.

And I felt that I had the prayers of the Saints round about me and for me, and all I could do was to try to respond and struggle up the hill. And so my testimony, from my personal experience, is that the gospel of Jesus Christ is the power of God unto salvation. Amid all trials and all temptations and all tribulations the gospel of Jesus Christ is the power of God unto salvation. It was not meant alone to deal with trifles light as air, but with all the tragedies of this life.

May God be with us to bless us, that under discipline, at every task, through every trial, we may pass safely, until at last we shall indeed be the people of God, is my earnest prayer.

At the battle of Marengo a general, fearing his army would be lost, ordered a drummer boy to beat a retreat. "I cannot beat a retreat," he cried, "but I can beat a charge. I can beat a charge that will wake the dead." And victory perched on the banner of the drummer boy's army.—F. L. Brittain.
Christ Is the Pattern for Saints

Sermon of Clyde F. Ellis at Walnut Park Branch, Independence, Missouri, April 26, 1925

I shall read for a lesson this morning a few verses from the 17th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. Commencing with the 22d verse, we will read to the conclusion of the 31st verse:

Then Paul stood in the midst of Mars' Hill, and said, Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious. For as I passed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, To the unknown God. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you. God that made the world, and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands. Neither is worshiped with men's hands, as though he needed anything, seeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things. And hath made of one blood all nations of men, for to dwell on all the face of the earth; and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation. That they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us. For in him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain also of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring. Forasmuch then, as we are the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and man's device. And the times of this ignorance God winked at, but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent. Because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead.

I desire to use, in connection with the verses just read, a short statement found in the 2d chapter and 10th verse of Paul's writings to the Saints at Colosse: "And ye are complete in him."

There are three divisions in this statement which I shall emphasize this morning, viz: First, the meaning of the word ye; second, the meaning of the word complete; and third, the meaning of the words in him. I think this text has a greater meaning to Latter Day Saints than it has to any and all other people. At least it should have, because of our position in the religious world, and the belief which we have held for nearly a century, and which I hope we shall ever hold as the days and years come and go. Because of that, this statement has, and I trust ever will have, a deeper and more significant meaning for us as a group of people. If there is a group of religionists who should believe thoroughly and deeply in the message of Jesus Christ, it is we, of this church. Notwithstanding the fact that we occupy so unique a position in the world, and base our strength upon the belief and the doctrine of restored authority and the efficacy of the atonement of our Lord, I think many times we are wandering from him and are failing to sense or realize the potency in the message that he has delivered unto us.

We recognize Christ as a universal Savior, and the message he brought to the world as a universal message. It is a message that must be taken to all men. Christ is the Savior who must save all men, and when I say this, I say it with the meaning that Christ, the Son of God, has come to the world as a Savior of all men, in that there is couched within his message and the power which surrounds and emanates from him, that which will save the races of the world to the extent of their good works. And if they will but subject themselves to the requirements of the gospel law, they will receive the fullness of salvation.

The word ye may be used in its broad application and made to refer to all men. This is in harmony with the statement of the angel when he delivered the message of the birth of our Lord to the earth. I love to think of that statement. It seems there was no chorus upon earth that could sing sweetly enough, no voice that could express fitting melody and harmony in announcing the birth of the Son of God. Angels were sent from the courts of glory to announce that birth, and as they proclaimed it, they sang, "Glory to God in the Highest; and on earth, peace, good will to men." The angel who preceded this chorus sang: "Fear not, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be unto all people."

Thinking of this, it is well for us to note the fact that there is revealed here a contrast. Here is an angel from heaven singing and announcing the birth of Christ; there are the shepherds upon the plains of Judea watching their flocks; here is heaven in its majesty, heaven in its glory, in its wonderful supreme power; there are the lowliest and meekest of men, shepherds, watching their flocks by night. We have the contrast of the divine in its greatness, in its excellent and magnanimous power, and men, the shepherds of Judea, in their lowly, meek, and humble life. And yet, notwithstanding their lowliness and humbleness, it was possible for the power of heaven to reach unto them. It is possible for the influences which surround the God of heaven and his Son to reach even to the lowliest of men. The message that was delivered unto them is delivered also unto us: "Fear not; for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people."

This pronoun ye, then, in our text, in its broad application can and no doubt does refer to all men, to all races of people who live upon the earth. Christ comes as the universal Christ, as mentioned by the Apostle Paul in his writing to Timothy, wherein he says in the 6th verse of the second chapter of his first epistle; "Who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified of in due time."

Simeon, when he took Christ up in his arms to... bless him, when Christ was but a babe, said in that blessing prayer, "Lord, now lesett thou thy servant depart in peace according to thy word: for mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory to thy people Israel." In other words, he comes as a power or means of salvation unto all men.

In latter-day revelation, in the very incipiency of the latter-day work, in the introduction that was given to the revelations of the Lord to the church, in the first verse of the first section, we have this language:

Hearken, O ye people of my church, saith the voice of him who dwells on high, and whose eyes are upon all men: yea, verily I say, Hearken ye people from afar, and ye that are upon the islands of the sea, listen together; for verily the voice of the Lord is unto all men, and there is none to escape, and there is no eye that shall not see, neither ear that shall not hear, neither heart that shall not be penetrated; and the rebellious shall be pierced with much sorrow, for their iniquities shall be spoken upon the housestops, and their secret acts shall be revealed; and the voice of warning shall be unto all people, by the mouths of my disciples, whom I have chosen in these last days, and they shall go forth and none shall stay them, for I the Lord have commanded them.

This is the Lord's statement in the first verse of that revelation which he gave as an introduction to the Book of Commandments, or book of revelations to the church.

It is but reasonable for us to think that the Lord would speak unto all men, that his voice would be unto those who are upon the islands of the sea and in all lands, for it is he who created them. This is in harmony with the words of our lesson from the 17th chapter of Acts, where the apostle says, God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitations." Because of the fact that he is the creator of all men, it is but natural that he should be interested in their salvation and send his Son to them with the message of life, light, peace, and power, that they might be brought from their condition of unrighteousness, and be transformed from their humanity into that state of divinity that shall give them salvation in its fullness in the great kingdom of our God.

While the message of salvation is unto all men, and while Christ comes as a universal Savior, or as a Savior to and for all men, we must remember that there are degrees of salvation. Especially should this truth be kept in mind in these days when there is such a growing tendency upon the part of the people of the world and members of the churches of the world, to discountenance and discredit the need of the church of Jesus Christ, in saying that it makes no difference where we go or what we believe, inasmuch as we are honest, and conscientious in our attitude and position. It is well, I say, for us to remember in this day when such a belief is rife, when it is growing by leaps and bounds, when it is not only having an influence upon the members of other churches, but is taking many from our own ranks, that the degree of our salvation will be determined by the extent of our obedience to the full law. The statement of Paul, "Ye are complete in him," while it may have in a sense an application to all men, has, more strictly speaking, an application to those men and women who will fully subject themselves to the requirements of the gospel. Yes, to you and to me who have faith in God, and repent of our sins, and are baptized for their remission, and go forth in obedience to the principles of his gospel, thereby becoming members of his church and kingdom. To us, and to those who will so occupy, this message has a deeper significance, means more, and that salvation is deeper, it is higher, it is broader, it is fuller, it means more to them and to us than it does to any other people.

There are degrees of salvation. There is the celestial salvation, there is the terrestrial salvation, and there is the telestial salvation. We, of course, are looking forward to and are striving for salvation in the celestial kingdom of God.

I want to read one or two verses which prove that fact; although I think we are cognizant of it, yet it is well that it be brought closer to our minds. John makes the statement in the 9th verse of his second epistle: "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son."

I read this to emphasize a statement I made a few moments ago to the effect that it is necessary for us to obey the gospel in its fullness in order that we may realize the growth or development in the fullness of Christ, which we, as a people, are striving for and which will ultimately, in its final fruition, be resultant in an entrance into the celestial kingdom of God: "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son." Men and women who will abide in the doctrine or law of Christ, not only in its fundamentals but in all of its requirements, have not only God, not only Christ, but they have both God and Christ; they have that correspondence with them that will give them assistance in the development of their Christian characters.

There is a statement in the Book of Mormon to which I want to call your attention, which emphasizes a similar thought. It is found in 2 Nephi 13:16, and says “that if ye shall follow the Son with full purpose of heart, acting no hypocrisy and no deception before God, but with real intent, repenting of your sins, witnessing unto the Father that ye are willing to take upon you the name of Christ by baptism . . . behold, then shall ye receive the Holy Ghost.” I want you to notice this statement, that this repentance must be a repentance void of deceitfulness of heart. I think there are times in our Christian lives, and in our occupancy in the church, when we do not give a full service. It is not an unreserved service, but a service, may I say, of deceitfulness. Many of us fail to fully repent and do not enter wholeheartedly and occupy unreservedly in the discharge of our duties as Saints. We repent reservedly. We live for those things that are of a worldly nature. Perhaps many of them are not very pronounced evils, and we think we can continue in them and still serve God and the church and develop our lives into that state of righteousness that will please God. I want to say to you this morning, Saints, that it is impossible for us to do that. If there was ever a time in the history of the world, in the history of this church, when the people professing to be Saints were required to enter wholeheartedly and occupy unreservedly in service, it is now. We must do it now. Satan in all of his adroitness is striving to overthrow individuals and organizations to the destruction and disruption of the purposes of God, and to his own glorification. The only way we shall be able to thwart this purpose of the Adversary, and succeed, is through true repentance or adjustment and an entrance into the service of the church unreservedly, wholeheartedly, and occupy with faithfulness in our places of activity. If we will do this, there will come to us the blessing the Lord has for his people.

Our text, then, may apply to all men in its unreserved sense, but in its restricted and truer meaning it refers to those who will obey the gospel in all of its requirements. Instead of all men in the world, although they may be conscientious in their religious convictions, being made “complete” through their sincerity, we believe it is necessary to embrace the gospel of Christ in its fullness to bring about this condition.

We pass on to the next thought: “Ye are complete in him.” Did you ever stop to think that the completeness of our Christian development, the growth of our characters, can be realized only in Christ? That it can be sensed or brought about only as we coordinate our lives to, as we co-respond with, and as we grow into that which is complete? Christ stands out as the central figure of salvation and power in the whole world. He came in the meridian of time physically, but he has existed in power from the very commencement of the world, and will remain as the great Savior, as the central figure, until the end. He is who is the Son of God. He is who was sent to the earth to redeem mankind. He is complete and full in the power that characterizes divinity.

In a statement of Paul in his Colossian letter, in the 1st chapter and 19th verse, we have this language: “For it pleased the Father that in him should all fullness dwell”; and in the second chapter and 9th verse he also says, “For in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead.” In this Godhead are God, Christ, and the Holy Spirit. It pleased the Father of this Godhead, and the Father of the human family, that all fullness should dwell in Christ his Son. In other words, Christ is the channel through which there comes to mankind upon the earth, power, redemptive power, transforming power, to raise them from their humanity, from their baseness into that which is high, exalted, powerful, and great.

I am not referring to exaltation and greatness and power, after the manner of the world. That is another question altogether. Christ is the channel through which the power of the Godhead is manifested; he is the avenue through which the power of heaven is revealed to mankind. The only way you and I can get in touch with God, the Father of the universe and the Father of mankind, is through Christ his Son, as there is seen in him this fullness; and through him only God designed it to be revealed. I want to emphasize that thought this morning. Those who obey the doctrine of Christ, who obey his law in its fullness, are complete, and as we shall see a little later on, that completeness and fullness comes in and through Christ, and him alone.

What is this completeness of which we speak? I speak of that threefold development which you and I are striving to bring about in our lives. That of the physical, of the mental, and of the spiritual. I believe Christ stands out as the greatest, as the supreme one, who has developed this threefold development to its maximum; and because of that, it pleased the Father that all fullness should be reposed in him as the channel through which we, who have not yet reached that condition, might obtain the fullness of the celestial kingdom.

In the 2d chapter of Luke, in the 40th and 52d verses, Christ is spoken of as being strong in spirit, filled with wisdom and the grace of God, increasing in wisdom and stature and favor with God and man. He developed physically. I believe he was the ideal, physically, of all men. He grew in stature, and with that growth and development physically he grew in wisdom, so much so that at an early age, through the help the Lord gave him, he was able to confound the teachers and lawyers in the temple. Not only did he grow in wisdom and in stature, but he grew in favor with God and man. Did you ever stop to think, my dear Saints and friends, that we can grow in favor with man only as we grow in favor with God. We cannot grow in favor with God and correspond with him unless we grow in favor with one another, and co-respond with one another. Our greatest, our surest avenue of success in this growth and our surest and greatest avenue of an ultimate realization of this thing that we are striving for, is in and through that which we see and that with which we are surrounded. In other words, we cannot expect to have faith in God whom we do not see unless we have faith in one another. We cannot expect to love him unless we love one another. We cannot expect to grow into God unless we grow into one another as members of the body of Christ.

Paul, in the 4th chapter of his epistle to the saints at Ephesus, speaking of practically the same thing, says one of the reasons for the placing of the officers in the church is to teach until “we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.” The Lord has designed a plan whereby you and I are enabled, through an obedience to its requirements, to grow into that fullness, “unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.” That is what Paul meant in the first verse of the 6th chapter of Hebrews: “Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ”; or, as the Inspired Version says, “Therefore not leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection.” This perfection that we are to go on unto, or grow into, is Christ. He is the fullness of all things, because there is within him the fullness of all principality and power, heavenly power; divinity in its fullness is reposed in him and courses through him. We should get in touch with him and his plan if we are to attain unto this ideal. I trust we may sense this more keenly than we have ever sensed it before. I wish we might see the need of this threefold development. I hope we do—even this growth physically, mentally, and spiritually, harmoniously developed as it is revealed in its fullness through Christ our Lord. I want to emphasize the fact that Jesus Christ, the Son of God, our Savior, is the very personification of all that is high, noble, and good.

We pass a little farther, and as we do so let me call your attention to the fact that this growth into the completeness of which Paul speaks, cannot be realized or brought about spontaneously. We should not become discouraged because we do not realize as quickly as we think we should, certain conditions in our development. Let me ask you this question: Do you know of anything of any value that grows spontaneously or bears its fruit spontaneously? What thing is there, whether it be a tree, a flower, or whether it be anything of very much value to man, that grows spontaneously, matures and bears fruit as quickly? Did you ever stop to think that many times that which takes the longest time for its development, the greatest number of years in its growth, is of the greatest service to man? Man himself is helpless for months and for years. For years he prepares himself for service. Beasts run—some of them—nearly as soon as they are born; but a few years afterwards they are of little value, and in a few years more their usefulness is ended. Man is different. The stately, beautiful tree that we love and do all we can to preserve, takes years to grow. This is true, too, with us in our character growth. It cannot come all at once. I have learned that the man or woman who grows quickly spiritually, dies just about as quickly. This has been my observation. The man who from outward appearances grows rapidly spiritually will become discouraged as easily; and happy for him if he does not lose his faith. He is not able to bear the heat of the sun and storms that come upon him.

Let our growth, then, be that steady, sure growth that will warrant us in believing it will be permanent, and if it is so done in our individual lives, that same condition will go on into our group and into our Zion development. It will be firm, sure, and will not be moved. In fact, the only safe way to insure that solidarity for our group or Zion or church plan or program is to make sure that individuals are growing after that manner; because we are only integral parts of the group. The group is composed of men and women who grow after that manner, or vice versa.

I pass on to the last consideration of our text: Ye who have obeyed the gospel, ye who have subjected yourselves to its divine requirements, are complete, are full; even as a seed which is sown and which grows through the influence of the earth, sun, and air, until ripe and ready for use. So also will be our growth if we will but remember that this completeness is only realized as we grow “in him.” I want to emphasize that thought this morning, Saints, so strongly that as we go from this place we will sense that we are of little value, so far as we ourselves are concerned, and that we cannot grow into this condition of ourselves, because we are human and subject to error, and many times do make mistakes. This, then, is realized as we concentrate our forces in him and grow in him, our Lord, in whom all fullness dwells. It is interesting to note in the epistles of Paul where he refers to this principle of which I have spoken, that he refers to it as a growth in him, as a walk in him, as a building in him; refers to it as being rooted in him; refers to it, too, as a body in Christ. He never refers to our relationship to one another and our relationship to the author and finisher of our faith in any other way than being in him, and he in us.

Now, we are not speaking of it in a literal sense. We think you understand that. We are speaking of it in the same manner that Jesus spoke to Nicodemus who came to him and asked him what he should do to be saved. Jesus said, You must be born again. Nicodemus answered, How can that be? He didn't understand. He looked upon the birth of which Jesus spoke as being a physical birth, but Jesus said, It is not so. I am speaking to you of another birth—a spiritual birth. So it is with this. We are not speaking of being in Christ physically, for that is an impossibility, but we are speaking of being in him in a spiritual sense. We must grow in him spiritually; and when I say that, I mean there are forces that surround him, that emanate from him, and that make potent his message that we must grow into, in order that this be realized. The forces of meekness, of faith and love, of joy and peace, of temperance; the forces of harmony, the forces of melody—these forces are those things that represent Christ. They are Christ in the spiritual sense. Do not misunderstand me and infer from what I say that I do not believe in Christ's physical birth; that he was born as you and I are born, and that he was immaculately conceived. I do believe in that. I am speaking, however, of the number or compare ourselves with some that commend themselves; but they measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, are not wise.” Isn't it a fact that we do that sometimes? We measure ourselves by ourselves. We think we are just about as good as we can possibly be, and sometimes we find ourselves commending ourselves, comparing ourselves among ourselves, and we say, “I am as good as he” making him the standard. We think if we come up to the standard of some one we have filled the requirements of the law; but it is not so. Although we may think we are as good as our brother or sister, and they may be noble and true, so far as we can see, let us not make them our standard, although they may occupy in positions that demand our profoundest respect. Let us remember who is our measure, our only standard, and then grow into him in the spiritual sense. And if we will do this, we shall be privileged to live with him, both here and in that condition of immortality toward which we are all looking.

Our text this morning says, “Ye are complete in him.” May God bless us to so develop; and finally may we all have grown until we shall indeed be “complete in him,” our Lord, is my prayer.

In last week's issue we told you about our test program given the morning of May 12, also some of the reports that were received commenting on its reception. You will remember we broadcast first on 268 meters, and then changed to 441 meters. Following are a few more reports received commenting on the reception by the different wave lengths:

Detroit, Michigan.—Last night for the first time I heard your program. I was at a brother's house listening. Though there was some static here, you came in as clear and loud as our two local stations, WWJ and WCX. I'm glad I contributed toward the new station, and if possible I will help again.—Royce E. Holland (no street address given).

Lamoni, Iowa.—Your test program certainly came in fine. Best I have ever heard you. When you changed to higher wave length, it came in equal to any other station.—Joseph Shakespeare.

Flint, Michigan.—I tuned in K L D S. It came in quite loud and clear but seemed to have a slight fading tendency. The change in coupling did not seem to appreciably affect reception. At times there seemed to be considerable static, particularly while announcing. Very good quality and volume when Herman Lukens sang, "When you and I were seventeen." Momentary interruption two or three times. Volume and clarity on 441 meters not so good as on 268 meters. I was listening when you signed off, but reception got worse and worse on account of static [Note: Static is purely a local condition and has nothing to do with transmission. It affects the receiving apparatus, not the broadcast­ing set.—A. B. C. J., fading at times to almost nothing. Taking it all together, the reception on 268 meters was much better than on 441. Maybe this doesn’t sound nice, but I am sure you would rather have the facts as we see them. I am using a home-built 5-tube neutrodyne. My reception is ordinarily as good on a high wave length as a low, but for some reason you came in very “fuzzy”; not clear cut on 441 meters.—Arthur H. DuRose, 2716 South Saginaw Street.

Lucasville, Ohio.—This morning the 268 meter broadcast­ing came in plain and clear, but when you changed to 441 meters we could hardly hear you.—Martin Luther Crabtree.

Minneapolis, Minnesota.—I was on with you until A. B. C. signed off. You came in fine as a rule, except that you were inclined to fade. This was especially true on 268 meters. You were late in getting back on 441 meters, but I stuck, except that I went out to San Francisco and picked up K P O while waiting for you, leaving them all too often in order to be there when you arrived. Static was bad last night, and I am convinced that ordinary tube sets would find it next to impossible to get through.—George W. Turner, Temple Court.

Denver, Colorado.—Sat up until 1 a. m. (mountain time) listening to your test program. It came in extremely well. An almost “no-static” evening was a contributing factor to the perfect reception of various stations—nevertheless, K L D S came in as well as the best of them.—Mrs. Esther R. Foster, Box 1348.

Cottage Grove, Tennessee.—This morning about one o’clock I began trying to tune in for you. At that time W H T, Chi­cago, and K F R U, Bristol, Oklahoma, were on the air. But at 1:55 I picked you up. At first you did not come in so good. Before the last number, you stated you would make a change in power amplifier from resistance to impedance coupling. After that you came in good and strong—as well as the best. I was using only a one-tube set.—Curtis L. Ross.

Dunkirk, New York.—I heard your test program this morn­ing clearly on loudspeaker. When you came back on 441 meters, you were weaker, but you kept coming in stronger after a few minutes.—Leonard Lutz, 18 Middle Road.

Olathe, Kansas.—The programs have been good, but it is much louder now. You were on last night about the same time as the Kansas City Nighthawks, with a test program. Radio is surely a great invention. I am sure happy my school is out.—Amy Catherine Rice.

Florence, Colorado.—I was agreeably surprised last night about 11:30 when I dropped in on the fine test program you were broadcasting. I did not know that Independence was fortunate enough to have a fine station such as you undoubtedly possess. Your program came in fine, and it was first class in every particular. Glad to hear you are changing your wave length and getting out of the congested position. We hope to be able to tune to you often on your new wave length.—Irvine Meek.

Stonington, Maine.—We tuned in your test program this morning. Got it all right and heard the announcer very plain. On account of a great deal of static, we were bothered considerably at times. We think if it had been a good clear night here your station would have come in as loud as any of our eastern stations. Our set is only a two-tube Crosley Model 51.—Bessie Eaton Noyes.

DeKalb, Illinois.—I listened for your station this morning until 1:35 before detecting you, at which time you were broadcast­ing a piano solo . . . “Mother Machree,” very good and clear; almost the same good results as local Chicago stations, sixty miles away. Not once could I have told from what city the broadcasting came from the announcements, which were not distinct. I am giving my impressions frankly, wishing, as do you, our station to be the best in the world.—O. A. McDowell.

Belen, New Mexico.—I tuned in K L D S with my 2-tube set. Fine reception. All O. K. except announcing, which was weak, but it came in plain.—James E. Gideon.

Truro, Nova Scotia.—I wish to report reception of your program at about 2:30 a. m. (Atlantic standard time) this morning. Reception on 2-tube regenerative set was loud enough to fill one story of house on Magnavox. Very good modulation, and steady volume. I took down the following notes. . . . This was, with the exception of W B Z, the loudest of the stations I received to-night and was undoubtedly the clearest.—A. A. Cumming.

Coldwater, Wisconsin.—Heard you perfectly this morning. Volume and modulation fine. Have heard you before but never so good.—H. H. Scott.

Detroit, Michigan.—I was greatly pleased with the results received here on the test program. It came in loud and clear. We enjoyed the whole program broadcast while on the high wave length. I have also received K L D S on the old wave length, but interference absorbed the clearness.—A. Adolph, 4093 Parker Avenue.

Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, Canada.—Thank you for your most pleasing program of Monday night. I use a 5-tube neutrodyne. Test program fine, good volume, modulation perfect. Weather conditions favorable here.—G. L. Wilson, 1906 Algoma Avenue.

Lamoni, Iowa.—Well, A. B. C., I certainly am pleased with the way K L D S came in this morning. Wife and I got up to hear the new apparatus perform. The old wave length came in nicely with both inside aerial of the wall-curtain kind and outside aerial. But the new wave length came in so loud and clear that I did not need all my power on the inside aerial alone. Came in stronger than Des Moines, Omaha, or Kansas City. I think this will enable us to get K L D S at all times, if the volume you turned out last night continues. May K L D S long send the sound the earth around.—T. H. Hinderks.

Chicago, Illinois.—Every number of your test program was fine, especially the piano solos which were magnificently played. When you know that we have daylight saving time here in Chicago and your program lasted until 3:30 a. m., you will realize how fascinating the program was. Believe me when I say that the program was about as high class as one could expect to hear. Would that everyone who possesses a radio had been fortunate enough to listen to your test program.—Mrs. Charles A. Sweet, 1812 Eddy Street.

Westerville, Ohio.—I listened to your station the night of May 12 and enjoyed your test program very much. If you will please send me any literature on your church station, I will appreciate it, as I am very much interested in the churches’ work in radio.—Marvin Gasho, 103 North Vine Street.
Lansing, Michigan.—We listened to your test program in the wee still hours of Tuesday, May 12. It came in fine. We enjoyed all the numbers; those on the piano were immense. We congratulate you and hope to hear many more programs from K L D S.—Mr. and Mrs. Verne E. Harris, 701 River Street.

Lexington, Kentucky.—Your program coming in fine here. First time I have ever tuned you in.—Mrs. J. C. McCombs, 166 North Ashland Avenue.

Bozeman, Montana.—We heard part of your program on your try-out. Static bothered a great deal and prevented us hearing clearly.—Mrs. R. M. Eggar, 817 South Third Street.

Lovilia, Iowa.—Your test program on 268 meters came in fine, with more volume than W H O (Des Moines); but when you raised to 441 meters, the signals would come and go at times. We cannot get your programs in the short-wave mix-up. May God bless the radio work of K L D S.—Five of the Robert Zimmerman family.

Shenandoah, Iowa.—I was about sick last night and did not feel able to sit up and listen, but our operator stayed up and got the whole thing very nicely. He said that on the high wave length there was not so much static, but no more volume than on the low wave.—Henry Field.

Detroit, Michigan.—Your test program on 441 meters was fine. Perfect modulation.—Warren C. Pratt, 541 East Philadelphia Avenue.

Applegate, Michigan.—Just a few lines to let you know we tuned in your midnight test program. We could hear you fine. The change you made first didn’t make much difference. When you came on the air with 441 meters, we could hear you better. The piano was so much clearer than we hear from other stations. This is the first time we have been able to reach your station, and we certainly enjoyed it. We are looking forward to the time when we can hear those good sermons broadcast.—Mrs. Emma Haag.

Bangor, Wisconsin.—Got up at 12.15 and listened to your test program to the finish. I was delighted over results, as we have been unable to get you for some time. Every change you made was an improvement. Modulation perfect. The last change before signing off apparently increased volume. With much appreciation.—Mrs. G. E. Hemstock.

Omaha, Nebraska.—Heard your station on the test program this morning, getting in on the last two piano selections which came in wonderfully. The reception was clear, and I had no difficulty.—Bob Peterson.

Youngstown, Ohio.—Just a line to let you know that your test program on 441 meters is coming in perfectly. “Alabamy bound,” sung by Herman Lukens, came in with exceptional volume and good modulation. “Rondo Capriccioso,” now being played on the piano, is all that could be desired.—J. N. Hogg, 129 South Whitney Avenue.

Iola, Kansas.—Your new station came in loud and clear here this a. m. I have never been able to get you satisfactorily on your low wave, but your new station came in fine on 441 meters. We certainly appreciate your efforts in getting this new station on the air, and I am sure it will be enjoyed by a great many. Hope you will be able to use it regularly on the new wave length soon.—L. E. Clark.

Windsor, Ontario, Canada.—The following notes on your midnight program are forwarded to you in response to your request: Equipment, 5-tube neutrodyne, 4 tubes in use, aerial 80 feet long; 30 feet high, running east to west. Weather clear, cool, but static heavy and increasing during program. 1.30: Change to resistance coupling; penetration, volume, and clarity greatly improved; hear you 300 feet. . . . Some fading . . . Piano excellent. . . . Voice slightly inarticulate. 2.38: Static as heavy as on 268 meters, much less volume. 3.00: Volume still below that of first hour, reproduction clear, static heavy, some fading. . . . Previous attempts at listening on your programs were marred by interference. The program has been much enjoyed. At 3.20 volume is still kept down by old man static. Best wishes.—Harry E. Depew, 1249 Dufferin Place.

Kenora, Ontario, Canada.—Your test program coming in fine. The volume is very strong and clear. The program has been very much enjoyed by all the members of the Kenora Fire Department, for it helped to pass the lonely hours of the night watch. The higher wave length is a great improvement.—R. H. Budd.

Los Angeles, California.—Received the latter part of your test program with regenerative set, using ear phones. Reception on speaker too faint. Fairly steady with little fading. Modulation excellent.—R. W. Cooke, Box 844.

Edmonton, Alberta, Canada.—Heard you Monday night on 268 meters, later on 441. You came in fine and clear. Enjoyed your program. Thanks. Am using 3-tube Harkness-reflex, homemade.—George Palmer, care of A. & G. W. R. R.

Ashland, Wisconsin.—When I first tuned you in, there was interference from a single circuit regenerative set, but I tuned you in just the same. When the operator made the change (on 268 meters, from impedance to resistance power amplifier coupling), your signals seemed much broader and somewhat louder. Your new station is a great improvement over the old, I think. I heard no other station interfering with you. I used a one-tube homemade set and a bedspring aerial exclusively.—John Engebretsen, 1517 Sixth Street East.

Shenandoah, Pennsylvania.—I am a blind listener. I heard your station broadcasting a piano solo, “Melody in F,” and a vocal number, “I love you truly.” This is one of my favorites.—Gus Wathhaus, 230 West Center Street.

Manteno, Illinois.—Tuned in your station while on 268 meters; heard you fairly well on 268 meters; some interference with Chicago stations. Tuned in on 441 meters at 1.30 and heard you fine. Signals came in loud and clear. I am only fifty miles from Chicago but heard you as plain as K Y W.—V. Leslie Rogers.

Akron, Ohio.—Received K L D S at about the time you came on the air. Your change in the amplifier (to resistance coupling) made the reception a little plainer. Announcing faded occasionally. Good volume. Plenty of static here. The 441-meter wave very weak but no interference.—Roy C. Brown, 1215 Grant Street.

Cameron, Missouri.—In the small hours this morning, I tuned in and picked up your station from among the other nighthawks. You came in stronger than any I have heard of late. The strength and volume compare well with that of the Kansas City Star in the cold weather before their wave length was reduced.—L. F. Hartshorn.

NEWS AND LETTERS

California Saints Are at Work

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, May 3.—We have been holding meetings several Sundays without Pastor J. A. Saxe, who was attending General Conference.

Elder L. B. Shippy preached on the 12th, when attendance was the smallest we have had for a long time. The front seats looked lonesome. The attendance was better in the evening, at which time Elder Emery S. Parks preached. Elder George S. Lincoln preached both morning and evening on the 19th. Attendance is improving.

Our returned pastor preached the evening of April 26, giving an account of his trip, the places visited, the steamer Langley, airplane carrier, visiting here with the fleet of Uncle Sam's war vessels. Over one hundred of them are now anchored in our bay.

Seventy-five attended the sacramental meeting to-day, which is quite an improvement over recent meetings. What we lack in numbers we make up in quality. Strangers are always present, many passing through our city who attend a few times and then pass on to other fields. Many have heard the gospel here, and some have been baptized who did not remain here. One was recently baptized by Brother Emery S. Parks.

We are slowly adding to our numbers. We have some stanch and true Saints here, firm in the faith and unshaken by passing events. The Sunday school, Religious Department of Women, and all are doing well. They are alive and active.

Missionary E. B. Hull has preached several times lately. He is always welcome. He is always accompanied by Sister Hull.

There is very little sickness among the Saints now, our afflicted ones having recovered. All is well with us.

Hold Conference in New Church Building

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA, May 14.—The one hundred and twenty-eighth conference of the Southern Indiana District convened with Indianapolis Branch May 9, in the new church building at the corner of Chester Avenue and Pratt Street, with a goodly number of earnest Saints in attendance.

Elders O. J. Hawn and J. W. Metcalf, of the missionary force, were selected to preside over the conference. Saturday evening Apostle F. Henry Edwards arrived and was indeed a most welcome visitor. His ministrations were of an uplifting character.

The conference was a successful one, and those present were enthused with an earnest desire to do more in the future for the progress of the work. Some changes were made in our work, the time of conference being changed from May to September, so there will be no other conference until September 10 to 12, 1926, at which conference a report of ministerial labors for the conference period will be expected from all members of the priesthood.

Sunday was appropriately observed as Mothers' Day, and Apostle Edwards paid a very fitting tribute to "Mother."

During the conference meals were served in the basement of the church under the direction of the Department of Women, a special table being provided for the small children, which seemed to be much appreciated by them.

We received many compliments from our visitors upon the new church home, which were appreciated, for we are proud of our church and welcome any visitors to our services. —Charles H. Fish.

Columbus, Ohio

May 11.—The members of the Second Columbus Branch have been enjoying the special music given by the choir Easter Sunday and again on Mothers' Day. A good interest is manifested by the membership in various movements toward advancement. The Brothers of Jared have taken up the study of the Book of Mormon.

The Temple Builders and Orioles have been organized under the Department of Women and are working industriously for the preparation of their formal initiation. These girls intend to aid materially in any way they can to help attain the Zion goal.

The Sunday School Department is preparing for the convention, to be held May 22, 23, 24, and all are looking forward to receiving instruction, advice, and encouragement from Brother A. Carmichael, whom, we hope, will be able to attend. The membership seems to be steadily increasing in the primary department, despite the lure of the great outdoors.

Minneapolis, Minnesota

May 14.—During the last month and a half, a number of interesting events have occurred in the Minneapolis Branch. The first of these was the Fathers' and Sons' Banquet, given by the Boys' Club on April 27. The program on Easter Sunday given with the assistance of the young people's class of the Sunday school was very much appreciated.

While General Conference was in session, things seemed to drag somewhat because of the absence of several of the branch leaders. Brother and Sister Kress and family, Brother and Sister Johnson and family, Leslie DeLapp, Wesley Elvin, and DeWayne Fisher were all in attendance at the conference for the greater part of the time. They came back encouraged and eager to move forward with the work that lies before the church.

The sacramental service held on April 5, preceding the opening of the conference, was a significant one, because it expressed the desires of the Saints that the difficulties before the church might be solved, and the assurance that God was in the work and would see us safely through to the end.

When Brother Kress came back from Independence, he brought a message of hope and encouragement. He called attention to the high spiritual character of the prayer meetings, to the many admonitions that were given that the hasting time was now at hand, and to the sincerity of all who took part in the discussions. It had been a time to try men's souls, but he felt that after going through his Gethsemane, he was ready to say, "Thy will be done" and go forward and do that will.

A number of other visiting elders have been in the branch and addressed the Saints: Brother Page from Montana, Brother Fisher, from Waterloo, Iowa, Brother Sparling from North Dakota, and Brother Henderson from Illinois.

The branch was saddened by the death of two elderly sisters recently: Sister Irene Dobson, who has been living at Wayzata, and Sister Clara Cooper.
Missionary cottage meetings have been started again and are being well supported. The midweek prayer meetings, held in the Saints’ homes, are also well attended and much enjoyed by the Saints and visitors.

The Department of Recreation and Expression and the Sunday school put on a joint picnic on Saturday afternoon, the 9th of May. In spite of the rain in the morning, which threatened to spoil it all, the sun came out about noon and dried things up sufficiently for a couple of baseball games and volleyball games and to attract a fair-sized group of Saints. Everyone enjoyed the outing.

On Monday night, the 11th, the annual banquet for the branch membership was given. Over one hundred and thirty were present and had a banquet in the basement of the church, followed by a program and speeches.

Gray’s Harbor Branch

ABERDEEN, WASHINGTON, May 8.—The work in Gray’s Harbor is alive and progressing satisfactorily. We have all the departments organized, holding Sunday school at two in the afternoon, preaching at three, and Recreation and Expression at seven. The Department of Women meets every other Thursday.

We have been favored in our preaching services by Essex Cox, of Independence, Missouri, who is here to visit his son, S. P. Cox, who was a delegate to General Conference. The Saints enjoyed the sermon he preached at Gray’s Harbor on May 10. This is a great commercial center, and we have a period of depression. Some of the Saints are out of employment.

Deselm Branch

MANTENO, ILLINOIS, May 12.—With the opening up of spring, work at Deselm has taken on new life, and visiting Saints and friends are present nearly every Sunday, which encourages the faithful few.

The sacramental service May 3 was characterized by the Spirit of the Master, a prophecy being given which commended the Saints for faithfulness and admonished them to press forward, as the blessing received by the branch will be in proportion to the service rendered. Sister Belle Loverin, an isolated member of our branch who was baptized about eighteen months ago, was permitted to meet with the Saints and partake of her first sacrament. She is letting her light shine, and her interesting letters are a source of inspiration to the home department workers. Those attending from a distance were Mr. and Mrs. J. H. McGuire, of Hammond, Indiana; Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Loverin and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Loverin, of Chicago Heights; Charles Reed and nephew, of Bonfield; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Dumke and family, of Joliet; Elmer Kaler and family, Miss Harriet Bell, and Mrs. Reginald Jones and son, of Wilmington; and Mr. and Mrs. William Bell, of Manteno.

Elder Elmer Kaler and daughter Pauline, and Elder Earl D. Rogers attended General Conference and returned with hearts stirred by the power of Israel’s God.

Our young deacon, Earl Shreffler, has taken special interest in making the hall look attractive the past few Sundays, which has added much to the services.

Sister Philemon Pement of Chicago is the guest of her son Paul and family. We are always pleased to welcome Sister Pement in our midst.

Elder Victor Eklof preached an interesting sermon April 12, his theme being, “The resurrection.”

Sister Rita Brumbaugh and husband, of Hollowayville, Illinois, attended church services April 26 and had their infant son blessed by Elders William Bell and Earl D. Rogers. Sister Brumbaugh has been unable to attend church services for a number of years, but still holds to the Latter Day Saint faith.

Sister Elmina LaBaugh, of Wheaton, Illinois, called on Deselm Saints May 5.

Our male quartet gave two pleasing numbers at the morning service May 10, and Sister Edith Rogers sang a solo, “Mother,” which recalled fond memories. Our Sunday school superintendent, Sister Emma Studtman, presented a Mothers’ Day greeting card to each one present. The sermon, appropriate to the day, was preached by the pastor, Earl D. Rogers.

All in all our flock has received many blessings during the past few months. We are hoping to accomplish much good during the summer of 1925.

Colorado Springs, Colorado

May 11.—We are pleased to announce the arrival of a young lady at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Patton. Mrs. Patton was formerly Helen Curtis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Curtis. Both mother and babe are hale and hearty.

We have had the pleasure of having good speakers since General Conference, as Brothers J. D. Curtis and C. H. Rich have both been with us. Brother Rich has been assisting us at the new opening which he effected and in which the local brethren have been helping. Several are intensely interested.

On May 10 Brother Rich baptized a Mr. Baker. Both Sister Baker and her daughter have been members for seven years. We are happy in the thought that the family is united in the church as well as in the home.

The program committee provided an appropriate program for Mothers’ Day.

Visitors so far this month are C. H. Rich of Maine and Sister Rose Graham and a lady friend from New Mexico. Sister Graham informs us that she will be here all summer.

At the prayer service the first Sunday in the month, the Saints were requested to pray for rain, as there has been no rain for seven months. It started raining the next day and has rained almost every day since—a blessing for which we are indeed thankful.

As this is the beginning of a new conference year, we hope all the Saints will move forward and accomplish more than ever before. We know that God stands ready and willing to bless his people when they are willing to work with him and one another. There is no room in the church for a contentious spirit, so let all move forward and be not slothful in their Master’s work, for we have no need of idle hands.

Anaconda, Montana

May 12.—Elder Peter Helstrum gave us a splendid sermon the afternoon of April 26. He spoke on the restored gospel, and because of the greatness of this work and the large amount of material to speak on, he will continue this subject the next time he speaks.

William Staton, because of prevailing conditions, resigned as superintendent of the Department of Recreation and Expression. The young people are zealous in the accomplishment of good and did not allow this to disappoint or dishearten them. They elected Brother Bert Brooner on May 3 to take the place of Brother Staton.

The Saints meet as usual every Wednesday evening.
Lamoni Stake Items

Lamoni, Iowa, May 24.—Sunday, May 17, was a busy day here. Sunday school was dismissed early to permit all to attend the special reorganization meeting called for eleven o'clock.

President Elbert A. Smith presided at this meeting. Following congregational singing and prayer by Apostle J. A. Gillen, Brother Elbert made a short introductory talk, congratulating Lamoni Stake on the progress of the past and for the high position held by the church people of the various branches socially, educationally, religiously, and financially. This has been due largely to the administration of the stake officers. Lamoni has always been free from any embarrassing situations caused by the unrighteous conduct of her officials. The church has been built along lines of good citizenship as taught by our loved leader who dwelt among us so many years, Joseph Smith.

The resignation of C. E. Wight as president of the stake was read and accepted. Brother Wight, being present, was asked for a statement, and he said that while he had found it necessary to give over his main time to commercial activities he did not expect to be idle in a religious way, as already he had been called upon to labor locally, finding more to do than he had time for.

The Presidency, E. A. Smith as spokesman, then nominated Brother W. E. Prall to fill the position of stake president. The nomination was unanimously accepted. Brother Prall has served as counselor to Brother Wight for several years and is in a position to handle the work efficiently. He made a speech of acceptance, offering his best service to the church and the stake.

Elders D. A. Dowker and Roy Cheville were nominated as counselors, each in turn stating his willingness to serve. Brother Dowker is not so well known here as are the other two, but he won the hearts of his listeners by his frankness and sincerity, and the vote of acceptance was unanimous, as was also that of Brother Cheville. The especially outlined work of the latter is among the young people, with whom he has labored as dean of Graceland and as head of the intermediate department of the Sunday school, and has been very successful.

Next the resignations of Bishop A. Carmichael and his counselor, A. J. Yarrington, were presented and accepted, and the name of Bishop A. B. Phillips placed in nomination by the Presidency for stake bishop. Brother Phillips spoke somewhat of his vision of the scope of this work and of the good work of his predecessor and stated his willingness to accept the call to the office. The vote was again unanimous, as it was also for A. J. Yarrington, whom he asked to be his counselor.

In the case of each retiring officer a vote of thanks was tendered for past services, the motions being made by Apostle J. F. Garver.

At half past two the conference again assembled for a confirmation meeting. President Elbert A. Smith was again in charge. After singing the opening song, Apostle D. T. Williams offered prayer. Another song was sung after prayer, after which Apostle J. A. Gillen preached a short ordination sermon, talking mainly of the duties and responsibilities devolving on the priesthood and quoting freely from the Doctrine and Covenants. The ordination prayer was offered by President F. M. McDowell, after which Brother E. A. Smith addressed the brethren to be ordained.

The ordinations were as follows: W. E. Prall by E. A. Smith and J. F. Garver; A. B. Phillips by F. M. McDowell and J. A. Gillen; D. A. Dowker by J. A. Gillen and D. T. Williams; Roy Cheville by J. F. Garver and J. A. Gillen; A. J. Yarrington by D. T. Williams and J. F. Garver.

Following this meeting the members of the Lamoni Branch assembled and elected the stake officers to serve the branch in the same capacity.

The stake conference was quite largely attended from the following branches: Chariton, Pleasanton, and Creston. The people of the stake are generally pleased with the personnel of the new organization, feeling that in these men we have a working unit that will be able to accomplish much in the way of progress.

The night meeting was the baccalaureate service of the local high school, the address being given by A. Max Carmichael, former superintendent. Appropriate music was given by the A Cappella Chorus and by Miss Aliene Brackenbury, soloist. Brother Carmichael delivered a strong discourse, which was a plea for a courageous, unbiased search for truth in an effort to solve present-day problems. It was well calculated to stimulate thought. There were thirty-seven graduates this year. Thus closed a long, eventful day in the history of the stake and the local branch.

Stake Conference

The thirty-fifth quarterly conference of the Kansas City Stake was held May 17, 18, 1925, at Central Church, Ninth Street and Lydia Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri. The devotional services on Sunday were marked by their spiritual uplift. Sunday school had an attendance of 268. At the 11 o'clock meeting, Patriarch U. W. Greene was in attendance and offered the opening and closing prayers. The sermon was by Apostle Myron A. McConley, using the first verses of Matthew 5, the Sermon on the Mount, as a foundation for his discourse.

At the same hour a junior service was held in the church parlors, in the interest of the children under ten years of age. The Elders' Quorum had their regular monthly meeting at 1:30.

Social meetings were held in north and south rooms, simultaneously, by the young folks and those of the older Saints, at 2:30, at which there were twelve songs sung, twelve prayers offered, and twenty-four testimonies borne. A tongue and its interpretation, a prophecy, and a spiritual instruction to the young were received.

At 4:15 the ministry meeting was held, in charge of the stake bishopric, addressed by Apostle F. Henry Edwards. Also at 4:35, the Department of Women held their regular monthly meeting, which was addressed by Sister Sarah Hawkins.

At the evening hour the speaker was Apostle Clyde F. Ellis. The day will long be remembered as a day of spiritual refreshing. The business meeting was held Monday evening at 7:45 in charge of the stake presidency, J. A. Tanner, S. S. Sandy, and C. D. Jellings. A report of the stake presidency was presented, showing the present condition of the stake, commending the efforts of the various workers, acknowledging the goodness of God since we last met as a conference. A financial statement was read from the bishop, as follows: Cash on hand January 1, $2,591.29; received since, $8,387.57; total, $10,978.86. Expenditures, $9,326; balance, $1,652.35. The auditing committee's report was read, they having found the report correct with exceptions of a minor entry, which did not change balances. A recommendation in their report, suggesting that an up-to-date double entry set of books be installed for the bishop's use, was referred to the general Presidency and Bishopric, and stake presidency and stake bishop's meeting to be held in Independence the 26th inst.

Elder Sidney N. Gray had resigned as pastor of the Malvern Church and Elder W. O. Hands had been appointed to fill the vacancy, which appointment was ratified by the conference. Brother Hands resigned as superintendent of the Sunday school at Malvern, and Brother Glen Fuler was appointed as his successor, which was concurred in by the conference.

The high council recommended the name of William Casselman to office of deacon and Joseph Ray Lloyd to office of elder, which recommendations were approved and ordinations ordered. Since the meeting of the high council, the name of Eugene Zink to office of priest, Clyde Graham to office of teacher, and Rolla Dunz, at the Second Church, were recommended for ordination, and were referred to the high council with power to act.

On account of Brother H. L. Shippy resigning as superintendent of the Religio at Grandview, Brother Ernest Goen's name was submitted to fill the vacancy; this was ratified by the conference.

Reports were read from the stake historian, reporter, deacons' and priests' quorums, Department of Women, and Boys' Department and were made matter of record. Those of the Women's and Boys' Departments were especially interesting because of the work outlined for the ensuing three months, the latter organizing a junior scout organization. The auditing committee ordered by the last conference, appointing of same being left in hands of the stake presidency, is Robert Winning, J. O. Worden, and Lott Sandy.

The necessity of a new church or extensive repairs to the present building for the Central congregation was presented. It was thought that it would require the expenditure of at least $5,000 to repair the old building, and when done it would not be adequate for the growing demand of the Central Saints. The stake presidency and bishopric had under consideration a church property for sale by the Episcopal Church, located at Thirtieth and Tracy Avenue, their offer being for $50,000, with a cash payment of $10,000, the proceeds of the property at Ninth and Lydia, and the balance in five annual installments, at six per cent interest. The property has a frontage of 169 feet on Tracy and is 250 feet deep; the building is a stone structure and has capacity for about six hundred people. It has a good pipe organ. On the rear of the lot there is a parsonage of ten rooms, with steam heating plant which heats both buildings. The matter was referred to the stake presidency and bishopric and Sister Minnie Paxton of the Department of Women with power to act. A financing proposition was submitted by the bishopric to assist in financing the purchasing of a new church property for the Central congregation by securing loans on the Fourth, Bennington, Mount Washington, Malvern, and Quindaro churches for $15,000. It was pointed out that the Central Church people had paid $12,000 into the building fund, and the above method would make their money available. Some remodeling would have to be done on the contemplated building, and the money thus raised would be used for this only so far as absolutely necessary. The plan was by motion ordered carried into effect.

Central Church

The officers of the Department of Recreation and Expression met Sunday afternoon, May 17, to discuss matters and difficulties that come before us in this line of work. Each branch seems to have its difficulties; the larger branches especially lack the cooperation of the parents.

Each branch is studying the Book of Mormon, using the quartiles, which have proved very successful. After the class period, a program is rendered by several members, by way of vocal or piano solos or other line of entertainment.

Central Branch dispenses with regular class meetings during the summer months, but this summer we have planned to meet every Friday night, out of doors, and have a picnic lunch, carrying on recreational work exclusively. In this way we will not have the difficulty of getting our members together when we take up our regular class work again.

There is a lack of interest among the younger set of high school boys and girls in all the branches, many other things occupying their time. The Book of Mormon should be considered very seriously among our church people, and the parents should feel they have neglected one of their duties if they do not urge their children to learn more of their forefathers.

One brother in our meeting said there were a few faithful ones who continued to "hang on." Let us not become discouraged; it is the faithful ones who accomplish greater things, and if we can continue with the faithful ones, if it be but a few, they will be the ones we may depend upon to defend our church.

Second Kansas City Church

Sunday school is gradually increasing in numbers and interest. Religio is doing well also. The order of our meetings has been changed and will be as formerly: preaching on Sunday morning and Religio on Friday night. The conference appointee who visited us and preached for us were H. A. Higgins, W. P. Bootman, J. Charles May, and Clyde F. Ellis. A heavy storm prevented many from attending Brother Ellis's very interesting stereopticon lecture on the 15th. Temple Builders are active; a social was given by them a short time ago; they are busy along other lines of work as well. Three were baptized last month.

Malvern Hill Church

May 17 was conference Sunday for the Kansas City Stake. Malvern, along with the other churches, closed its Sunday school early and went to Central Church for the rest of the day. Here they enjoyed a spiritual and busy time.

They are making rapid progress in musical lines. A vocal class has been formed under the direction of Sister Bernice Griffith, and a choir under the direction of Sister Blanche Hott. We expect to render some good music before long.

Persia, Iowa

April 13.—We were glad to have with us on April 19 Elder R. C. Chambers of Idaho who stopped here on his way home from General Conference. He preached both morning and evening, and his sermons were good and instructive.

On April 26 Brother D. R. Chambers of Magnolia was with us for the day. We have arranged with Brother Chambers to be with us the last Sunday of every month for the summer. When that day comes, we gather to hear his spirited instructions and feel blessed in coming together.

On sacrament Sunday the Lord's supper was administered by the president after a few remarks on the occasion, and the time and purpose for which the sacrament was instituted.

Brother W. R. Adams of Logan was with us morning and evening of May 10, the morning sermon being appropriate to Mothers' Day; the evening sermon was on stewardships, setting forth the necessity for it and its benefits, showing that we should enter into activity without delay, for the time demands it. We should not be found working against stewardships.

Stone Church

Sunday was another cold day, and the Sunday school carried on with 1,187 present.

At the eleven o'clock hour Apostle J. F. Curtis was the speaker. He found his text in Matthew 15. He said we must conform to the law—"to the law and to the testimony." We cannot worship God correctly if the heart is not right. It is the truth which awakes the inner man and makes him free. Everything which is not truth must pass away. When one gets a little truth it makes him hungry for more. Do not be too noisy about your religion. People will see by your action how much you have. Imagine people trying to be religious when their hearts are wrong—full of all manner of evil. They must change before Christ can enter in.

The afternoon prayer service was well attended. From the chair came the request that those in the habit of speaking frequently kindly refrain, so others might occupy. Did they do it? No, they did not.

The Religious met at six o'clock with 573 in attendance, 85 more than last week. An interesting event was the starting of an adult class in stewardship under the direction of the Bishopric. Bishop Carmichael was unable to be present, so Bishop J. A. Koehler conducted the class of about one hundred interested people and explained the purpose and benefits of stewardship.

In the evening Elder Cyril E. Wight delivered the baccalaureate sermon to twelve graduating nurses from the Sanitarium. "He saved others; himself he could not save," was the basis of his sermon. In giving our lives in the service of others, we spend our strength, our vitality, our life—we cannot save ourselves. It was indeed a beautiful and inspiring sermon.

Next Sunday evening at half past seven a special service will be held for the high school graduates. There are about fifty of these graduates, and three of them will make addresses, after which President F. M. Smith will speak. Graduates from any of the various institutions are requested to be present.

The Kansas City Law School this year has a graduating class of ninety-five students. Three of this number are Latter Day Saints, Arthur B. Taylor, Virgil A. Julian, and Kenneth L. Fligg. An interesting event of the school year was the selection of the senior class debating team, which was made up of three Latter Day Saint men. Arthur B. Taylor was elected by unanimous vote as one of the class speakers at the commencement exercises. This is considered quite an honor, but was easily won by Brother Taylor as a result of his good work on the school debating team. Brother Taylor also passed his bar examinations several months before completing his work in the school. Brother Julian, in addition to being a member of the class debating team, spoke on behalf of the senior class at the school's annual banquet in the Muehlebach Hotel last February. Kenneth Fligg was a member of the school debating team, giving him a record of four years' work representing the law school in debates with other law schools and colleges. He was also president of the senior class and as such presided as toastmaster at the annual banquet above referred to.

Two children have been called away in the past week. Robert Scott Cochran, the three-year-old son of J. Scott and Thirza Cochran, died the evening of May 22. He had been ill only two days. He was seized with convulsions about five in the afternoon and died at seven. The funeral was held from the home of J. W. Chapman, a brother-in-law of Brother Cochran, Saturday afternoon. This little child's mother passed away in April. The bereaved father has the sympathy of all.

Also the evening of May 25, Brother and Sister Harold Bowman lost their year-old child who had been ill about two weeks with whooping cough. At the time of going to press no definite arrangements had been made for the funeral. These young parents have the heartfelt sympathy of many Saints and friends in Independence as well as other places where they are known.

President Elbert A. Smith left last Thursday to be gone about ten days. He will visit Windsor, Ontario; Kirtland, Ohio; Niagara Falls and Toronto, Ontario; Buffalo, and other points. Presidents F. M. Smith and F. M. McDowell are in Independence.

Second Church

Religio session on Friday evening was given over to a religious play prepared and given by the class of Brother J. T. Curtis. The hall was filled to its capacity, and for more than two hours paid the best of attention to the story of the conversion of a man of the world to the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Several classes and members of the Sunday school made a trip to Lawrence, Kansas, Sunday, visiting the Saints and points of interest.

Elder Frank B. Almond was the speaker Sunday morning to a congregation somewhat depleted in numbers because of many being out of town, but those present were pleased and inspired to careful and consistent self-discipline.

The daughter of Brother and Sister Henry Hershey was baptized at 1:30 by Elder D. A. Whiting and confirmed at the afternoon service.

Sunday evening Apostle Paul M. Hanson delivered one of his best sermons to an interested congregation of Saints. It contained several educational features which should be of great worth to the Saints.

Monday evening Saints from all the groups met in the church to say farewell to Brother and Sister Frank Veenstra, who left Independence Tuesday evening for the East. Saturday they will embark from Hoboken, New Jersey, at Foot of Fifth Street, on the Steamer Rymond, for Holland, to do missionary work for the church of their choice. A short program was rendered by friends. Brother Veenstra spoke feelingly and at some length of their plans for work, and he and Sister Veenstra sang a song in their native tongue. The assembled people then retired to the basement and were treated to a bountiful service of ice cream and cake while social good cheer reigned. None can be gloomy where these genial people are present. The company gave the missionary pair a sum of something more than thirty dollars as a token of esteem and to help make them comfortable on their journey. Many are sending a card of farewell cheer to Brother and Sister Veenstra at their embarking address, given above.

Liberty Street

Two good sermons were listened to by the Saints of this congregation last Sunday. In the morning Pastor J. M. Baker spoke on "The program that will compel us into Zion's conditions," using the fifteenth psalm as the basis for his remarks. In the evening Bishop J. A. Koehler gave the essential elements of the Christian character, also taking the fifteenth psalm as the foundation of his sermon.

A good crowd attended the children's program last Friday night, and they received quite substantial help in raising their budget fund.

The upper Orioles will give a pie social the evening of May 29 at the home of Violet Barnett, 128 South Bowen.

The Liberty Street congregation wished to express their appreciation for what Brother V. W. Gunsonley had done for them, and even though the funeral was on the afternoon of a week day, many got off from their work to attend. The place he left vacant at this church will be hard to fill, and he will be greatly missed by these Saints. His kind and patient disposition won the hearts of all, and his memory will live in the hearts of those with whom he worked so long.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Walnut Park
On the 17th, Pastor Glaud Smith was the eleven o'clock speaker, reading from the Doctrine and Covenants and talking pointedly on the responsibilities of Latter Day Saints. In the evening the congregation appreciated hearing a sermon from Missionary J. E. Vanderwood.

One of Walnut Park's most popular and accomplished girls, Sister Iris Burdick, only daughter of Brother and Sister Ira Burdick, was married on May 16 to Brother Douglas Byrne. These young people are among the active workers of District 3 and will receive the best wishes of the community. They are living with the bride's parents temporarily.

Superintendent R. Barnhardt called an early morning meeting for the 24th for Sunday school officers and teachers, which was quite well attended and made interesting by a discussion of some hoped-for improvements. The teacher training class conducted at Religio not filling the need of the regular teachers' meeting, these meetings will be resumed. The leaders in the primary and beginner departments gave the following plan for helping their teachers: After the lesson period, Sister Barnhardt gathers the children into one room for closing exercises, while Sister Bertha Constance meets all of the teachers in another room and goes over the next Sunday's lesson, helping them to be prepared for good work.

Apostle J. A. Gillen preached at eleven o'clock May 24, and gave a most emphatic call to diligence. He is so conscious of the imperative need of prompt and faithful action on the part of the Saints who would be found worthy to endure that he declares he is more eager than ever before to be out in the field teaching the law at this critical time.

Bishop B. J. Scott, in the evening, was especially earnest and forceful in his admonition to repent (forsake sin) and yield entire obedience to the Word. His sermon was made even more effective by a duet following it, "Some one will enter the pearly gate. Shall you? Shall I?" etc., by Sisters John Schwab and W. C. Norman.

A meeting of the priesthood at the church has been called for Sunday, the 31st, at half past four, and the pastor especially urges that at this time every officer shall be present.

The Religio session will give way the evening of the 29th for a benefit concert, a special program prepared by the Walnut Park Orchestra. A collection will be taken for the purchase of orchestra music. These musicians have become known by their work in various churches and by radio, and a full house should respond next Friday evening at eight o'clock to encourage them in their excellent efforts.

Eunuch Hill

Last Sunday we had Bishop A. B. Phillips with us. He delivered a very interesting sermon in the morning.

At seven in the evening we had the pleasure of hearing Elder Frank B. Almond again, who preached a splendid sermon on "Outlets of power." He received many expressions of appreciation, especially from the young people.

Next Saturday at four o'clock, the local Saints are engaging in a strawberry festival. Brother Briggs has promised all the strawberries we can eat. These will be supplied free from his very large patch. Games will be played, and our orchestra will be in attendance. A collection will be taken up for the benefit of the local church debt. Friends are invited.

The committee appointed to deal with the question of wiping out this local encumbrance are actively engaged in providing ways and means to accomplish this thing. It has been decided to open up a special drive which will extend until October 1. Envelopes are to be distributed to all our local members with the slogan, "Every member a nickel a day," printed thereon. The committee recommends that every member, as far as possible, put away a nickel a day and at the end of every month they will be waited upon and the savings collected. We hope to collect the desired amount by October 1.

A meeting of about thirty choir members was held at the home of Mrs. J. T. Jones on the evening of May 25 for a social time. After enjoying several games a business session was held and a choir organized with the following officers: Eugene H. McKeon, president; Mrs. Jones, secretary; Rilla Cox, treasurer; Ruth McKeon, librarian. Charles Warren will continue as director. After the business session strawberries, cream, and cake were served.

East Independence
The speaker of the morning hour Sunday was Brother Alvin Knisley. He presented the truth in a pleasing manner by giving some of his own experiences in the gospel. He told these truths in such a way that even the children could understand.

Plans are being made to meet at the church Decoration Day and spend the time in cleaning up the grounds. A basket dinner will be held in connection with this work.

The Department of Women met at the church last Wednesday afternoon. After a short business session a social hour was spent. A short program was given, after which ice cream and cake were served.

Brother M. F. Gowell was the speaker in the evening. He urged the Saints to invest their all in the gospel work.

College Awards
For several years the college administration has had under consideration the advisability of recognizing other collegiate activities besides athletics as worthy of awards. A committee which has been working on suitable regulations for the past two years recently presented its plans, which were adopted by the faculty and the administration. The regulations adopted grant awards in the following activities: music, scholarship, journalism, athletics, intercollegiate debate, forensics (in case of performance of exceptional merit). This list of activities may be added to or subtracted from at any time by action of the awards committee. A gold seal of the college will be awarded a college student meeting any of the following requirements:

Two years' service in the A Capella Chorus, upon recommendation of the head of the department of music and approval by the awards committee.

The three ranking highest in scholarship graduating from the Junior College. (All collegiate work must have been taken in Graceland College.) Recommendation by the academic dean. Approval by the awards committee.

Serving as editor or business manager of the Graceland Record or Acaelia, upon recommendation of the faculty member supervising student publications, and approval by the awards committee.

In athletics the official athletic "G" shall be awarded to a student meeting the following requirements: Athletic participation meeting the requirements of the Athletic Council and recommendation by the director of athletics; also approval by the awards committee. The awards committee sanctions only one activity each year, the proceeds of which shall be used to defray part of the expense of sweaters which athletes secure in accordance with the regulations of the athletic council.

The gold seal of the college will be granted in forensics to performance which the director of forensics judges as meriting a recommendation for the award. Approval by the awards committee.

A gold "G" (design to be approved by the awards committee) shall be awarded to students participating in two intercollegiate debates on different subjects in a single year, or two intercollegiate debates in each of two years, upon recommendation of the director of forensics and approval by the awards committee.

The awards committee may upon unanimous action of the committee also grant a gold seal of the college to a student for an outstanding piece of work done in any department. This committee is composed of the president of the college, who shall act as chairman, the dean of the senior college, college registrar, business manager of the college, director of forensics, head of the music department, academic dean of the college, supervisor of student publications, and director of athletics. When awards in other departments are added to the list, the head of that department shall automatically become a member of the awards committee, and if awards in any department are taken from the list, the head of that department is automatically dropped.

Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds Resigns

Early in April A. E. Bullard, more popularly known to the students as "Dad" Bullard, left Lamon for Denver, Colorado. Brother Bullard had been superintendent of buildings and grounds for the college the past five years, and during this time has accomplished a great deal for the improvement and beautifying of the campus. The Friday evening prior to his departure, the industrial employees of the college who have been working under his supervision, gave a farewell party in the new gymnasium.

Robert Roush and Sheldon Shafer left with Brother Bullard for Denver, where they expect to do carpenter work for the next few months. We were sorry to see these boys leave us, but they assured us it was an absolute necessity.

The new superintendent will be Brother S. E. Mifflin, of Chatham, Ontario. This is not Brother Mifflin's first introduction to work at Graceland, as he was here a few years ago.

Lambda Delta Sigma

The April meeting of the Lambda Delta Sigma Society, Alpha Chapter, occurred in the home economics room to indulge in a cafeteria luncheon, which was much enjoyed. The members then gathered in Room 112 for the regular program which was in charge of Miss Irene Layton. Miss Christine Roberts discussed the modern novel in a well-chosen and pleasing manner. Two examples of the modern novel were reviewed. The Forsyte Saga, by John Galsworthy, was presented by Carol Gillen, and The End of the House of Alvard, by Shelia Kaye Smith, by Dorothy Mabbot. During the short discussion that followed, the members were drawn to the conclusion that the modern novel is not so very much different from their styles, since it is an expression of the lives, thoughts, hopes, and fears of really live men and women.

Sunday School Convention

Several members of the Graceland faculty participated in the convention of the southwest division of the Decatur County Sunday School Association at Davis City. George Mesley talked on boy activities and his visit at the international jamboree of scouts; A. Max Carmichael upon adult religious education; and Roy Cheville and H. H. Gold on program materials and methods. Nelle Curtis, Mary Gouldsmith, and Mercedes Rasmussen conducted a story-telling hour for the children. The studio department was represented by a mixed quartet and solos by Job Nogieme and Aliene Brackenbury. This marks the first participation of Graceland folks in the association.

Graduate Recital

The piano department presented Miss Loene Kibler in a graduate recital Friday night, April 24, in the chapel, assisted by Miss Florence Juergens, reader, and Miss Aliene Brackenbury, soprano. A driving rain thinned the audience to some extent, but the two hundred and fifty who greeted Miss Kibler in her initial appearance were more than ordinarily quiet, attentive, and appreciative. Miss Kibler is an extraordinarily pleasing artist, and the phrasing, interpretation, and expression seem to have been well thought out and consequently faultlessly executed. She is to be congratulated on the result of her recital, and Miss Norris, her instructor, deserves a share of the praise for the success of her pupil.

The audience also very much enjoyed the finished work of Miss Juergens and the beautiful solos of Miss Brackenbury.

Annual Oratorical Contest

The annual oratorical contest was held April 28 at the Brick Church, before an audience of a scant one hundred and fifty people. This event has always occasioned much more interest in the past, but owing to threatening weather and a meeting of the Community Club, the audience was thinned down to a select few.

The program was opened by Miss Aliene Brackenbury, who gave two numbers in her usual finished and winning manner. The first orator was Paul Goodrich, who discussed quite ably the problems of education in a democracy. He believed every word he said and tried to his utmost to get his hearers to see his viewpoint.

Allan Houghton came second with "The return of the Indian," which depicted the romantic glory of the one-time red man, drew a gloomy picture of his present state, and ended with a plea for a better understanding and cooperation between the whites and the Indians. He had collected some excellent material and spoke with a convincing earnestness.

Esther Grimm had for her subject "The challenge of the future," and after discussing the unsatisfactory conditions of the world to-day, she ended with a plea for real whole-hearted application of Christianity to the situation. Her content matter was good, her words and phrases well chosen and neatly fitted together.

Paul Fishel, concluding the oratory with his stirring and patriotic oration, "Our Flag," swept himself into first place on a flight of flowery language. After dwelling briefly on the history and symbolism of the Flag, he pleaded for more respect for the true principles of Americanism for which the Flag stands. Fishel has an ideal voice for an orator, and his stage presence shows the ease of much experience.

The decision of the judges, based on the results of the three judgments on the content, preliminary delivery, and final delivery, awarded first place to Paul Fishel, second to Esther Grimm, and third to Paul Goodrich. The contest as a whole resulted in forty-four points for the Kappa Deltas, thirty-four for the Victorians, and five for the Alpha Phi.

was represented in the medley relay of colleges and made a creditable showing, coming out sixth in a field of twelve. Through all the race Graceland was either fourth, fifth, or sixth, but at no time did she threaten to win. At the finish the difference between first and sixth places was only a few yards, so we feel quite proud of the showing the boys made. The competition in this event was unusually keen, as men from all universities and colleges may enter.

The Drake Relays were unusually good this year, consisting of teams from all parts of the country and affording great competition for track honors. The fact that many of the Drake Relay records were broken, both in track and field events, shows that the relays this year were better than ever before.

Visit to Chatham District Young People's Convention

The matter would seem to need some explanation. The following are the real facts in the case: I had told my friends in Independence quite freely that I was going to Windsor, Ontario. And the evening I left, the Kansas City papers came out with big headlines: "Fifty thousand thirsty Americans head for Windsor to celebrate the lifting of the ban on beer!"

It was one of those instances that illustrate the dangers of circumstantial evidence. As Peter Whalley would say: "I have seen men shot for less than that in the army."

Reports have it that the other forty-nine thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine Americans found the new libation Bacchus thin, sloppy, and unsatisfactory. The new ruling permits the sale of 4.4, or as it is called, "four-point-four" beer. A current local story is to the effect that a Scotchman called it "forty-four," because, being Scotch, he could not see the point. Complaint was made by the grims that the low alcoholic content conveyed no kick—it left them thinking and walking straight, which is distressing to a tippler. Why drink he spent six dollars and might as well have stayed at home and drunk river water'—a thing to be looked upon with disgust and contempt by a tippler.

The real occasion of my visit was an invitation to attend the young people's convention of the Chatham District, May 23 and 24. The program announced an age limit of one hundred fifty years. Certainly, one who had lived one hundred and fifty years who would still stick around young people's conventions would be lacking in a sense of the proprieties, and in a kind but firm manner should be admonished to move out among those of his own age and give us young people a chance to develop.

I was domiciled at the home of Brother Andrews, president of the Windsor Branch. This is a fine, wholesome Latter Day Saint family, with three sons and five daughters.

The convention was under the able direction of the district officers. Robert T. Brown, former missionary to the South Sea Islands, and son of the late honored and revered missionary, Samuel Brown, is district president; Brother Anthony Hewett is district secretary; Brother Coburn, district chorister, directed the music; and our missionary, B. H. Doty, had charge of recreation.

A preliminary prayer service was held Saturday, May 23, at 11 o'clock. A good spirit was present, and divine aid was sought for the enterprise. The afternoon was devoted to games and visiting at the park convenient to the church. In the evening a musical program was rendered. The district might well feel proud of the talent displayed at that time. Three short addresses also were given, by Brother Clatworthy, a member of the district presidency, Brother B. H. Doty, and the undersigned.

Sunday the weather was very unpleasant—cold, with rain, and one flurry of snow; but the attendance was excellent, some driving from quite distant points. Windsor, Amhurstburg, Blenheim, Chatham, Erie Beach, Longwood, Merlin, Olive, Ridgeway, Sarnia, and Wabash were represented. Also visitors from London, Owen Sound, and Detroit Districts.

The prayer service at nine o'clock was a spiritual feast and a source of revival and strength. At eleven the congregation moved to the auditorium of the school building on Assumption Street near at hand, as the church was not large enough for the audience. The writer was the speaker.

At half past two, following a musical program, a round table was held, devoted to the theme, "Preparation." The Master's statement, "I must be about my father's business," was used. "The business" that Jesus had from the age when he uttered those words (twelve) until he began his mission seemed to be one of preparation. Luke says that Jesus grew in wisdom (intellectually), in stature (physically), and in favor with God (spiritually). These three lines of preparation were discussed, physical, mental, spiritual. The proper balance of recreation, work, education (college or otherwise), and spiritual growth were considered with considerable interest and profit, numbers speaking to the questions raised.

In the evening the writer was the speaker, closing a happy and busy day. The good fellowship and warm-hearted support of the Saints of the Chatham District will not soon be forgotten. They are a splendid band of Saints, with promising young people coming on to carry the work forward.

A degree of sorrow came to the convention Saturday with the word that Bishop J. C. Dent had suffered a paralytic stroke. Prayers were offered for him at the Sunday morning meeting, and by unanimous standing vote a telegram of sympathy and good wishes was ordered sent to him. He is loved and respected throughout the district. Sunday afternoon brought word that he had greatly improved.

Monday evening the writer took the boat from Detroit to Cleveland en route to Kirtland, from which point he may write later.

Yours in gospel bonds,
ELBERT A. SMITH.

A Time to Use Your Influence for Law Enforcement

In the recent months there has been renewed determination upon the part of the organized body of lawbreakers known to Americans as the bootleggers, to make utterly ineffective and finally break down the Eighteenth Amendment.

Supporters of the law in general, and particularly supporters of the Eighteenth Amendment, have been able to meet this rally of the wets, and the blockade of the rum-running fleet stationed along the twelve-mile limit gives promise of being effective. And now comes the most despicable chapter in the fight. The power of the law and its enforcers will be nullified unless the courts are able to solve this new problem. The case last brought to attention of the public is the prosecution of Heber Nations, Jefferson City journalist and law enforcement officer, one of the aggressive champions of law enforcement in Missouri. Mr. Nations made a raid on a certain brewery which had been raided before, and after obtaining the evidence of their law-breaking activity, himself has been indicted and is facing trial on a charge of "conspiring to operate" this selfsame brewery.

Regarding this particular case, Doctor A. H. Post, state superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Missouri, says:

Heber Nations is one of the many victims of a well-organized effort to break down law enforcement. The published facts show that the prosecution of Nations was initiated by and based upon the activities of Hank Weeke, and supported by such chronic violators of the laws as the Griesediecks and others, because of personal grievances against Nations as a result of raids on bootleggers in which these individuals were caught or implicated.

Doctor Post in a recent pamphlet entitled "When the law broke down," sets forth these activities and assigns the motives that have prompted them. He closes his writing with these paragraphs:

It is the duty of the public, as well as all-honest officials, to investigate carefully prosecutions instituted and carried on, as the facts indicate that the Nations case is being prosecuted before putting the accused citizens upon trial, otherwise courts will be helpless to protect themselves against imposition and fraud practiced by organized bootleggers upon the courts for the purpose of discrediting and finally destroying every man and woman who dares stand for enforcement. The question of law enforcement and good faith prosecutions is more important to this Government than any question involving property rights. Human rights are involved in the war now being waged against every man and woman who dares stand up and advocate law enforcement.

Another excellent arraignment of methods of the wets is found in an editorial written by Doctor B. A. Abbott, published in The Christian Evangelist, May 21, 1925, under the caption, "Rum's challenge to the churches." It reads:

These are important hours and exciting ones in the life of the Nation and of the church. Of course every hour is important, but there are times of crises when men who care eagerly watch for the runners to come with news of the battle.

The biggest and most important battle in America, if not in the world, to-day is that between the Government and the bootleggers. Organized civilization itself is at stake.

Since the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment and the passage of the Volstead Act, the conflict between the "wets" and the "drys" has been growing more intense, but always, certainly, with growing victory for the drys.

The wets have proceeded by a discernible plan. At first they sought to laugh the law out of existence by making it ridiculous. Then the game was to nullify it. Certain big newspapers and one or two governors joined in that form of rebellion. Next, the effort has been made to overwhelm the Volstead Act by bootlegging on land and on sea. What practically amounts to a war is taking place on the Atlantic Ocean along the American coast at this time. A flaming newspaper headline to-day shrieks, "Rum line holds, blockade effective." This means that bootlegging on an international scale is about to cease.

In connection with all this, wet propaganda, sent out in the most deceptive form, is being steadily instilled into the minds of the people all over the United States. In many instances even good Christian men and whole churches are being deceived by it. There are important pulpits to-day in which no word against the attempt to break down the Eighteenth Amendment is ever uttered. It is suspected that the liquor spies have crept into many of the churches, wherever they could do so, and got places on official boards and that in critical moments they hinder gifts and movements that would aid the dry cause. Anyhow many pulpits have suddenly fallen neutral, or become still or gone to sleep or retreated, though the crisis of the conflict is just being reached.

ently a young girl asked her father what a prohibition sermon was like; remarking, at the same time, that she had never heard one!

A favorite way of fighting the Eighteenth Amendment, at this time, is to attempt to break down those who enforce the law. The wets seek to bribe prohibition officers and, failing in this, they buy false witnesses and, through one technicality or another, trump up embarrassing false charges against men active in enforcing the law. More than one true man has been ruined in this way, the courts themselves having been made helpless by armies of lying witnesses or by the sinister psychologies that, unrecognized by themselves, hypnotize juries into rendering unjust verdicts.

At the present time, in the imperial State of Missouri, these hidden enemies are trying to railroad two fine young Christian men to the penitentiary. They have both been active and effective against the bootleggers. One of them arrested forty-four men at a brewery, having caught them "red handed." There was no doubt whatever of their guilt. But one of the bootleggers swore that they had paid for protection and named an honest man, upright and aggressive for law and order, as the man who accepted the bribe. For this "evidence" all the forty-four culprits at a brewery plant, which was an old offender, were set free. The prosecuting attorney who is about to "retire" (note the word retire) is seeking to send this Christian citizen to the penitentiary on the word of self-confessed lawbreakers. No stone will be left unturned to accomplish this injustice, but it is hoped Missouri will be saved the disgrace of imprisoning one of its best citizens for doing his duty.

We write these words as an appeal to the ministers of America to exert their influence to defeat liquor men who seek to subvert the churches, the courts, and the country in order to nullify, modify, evade, defeat, and finally destroy the Eighteenth Amendment. Let us put fresh power into the arm of the Anti-Saloon League and rise to complete the task of making a dry Nation. Make it possible for the league to be fully militant again. Let us carry forward the work of prohibition until the country is saved from the domination of the wet forces. Too long has the beast had its hoof on the breast of this law. The time has come to destroy the beast. The ministers and the churches have the power to do this, and we fully believe they will rise to the insistent demand of the hour.

It is no time for the drys to rest from their arduous labors; it is now time for all law-abiding citizens to renew their vigilance and activity, and to let the officers of the country and particularly the courts, know of their determination and strength of numbers.

Enjoys New Liberty in Preaching

One of the elders (local) in writing to the Presidency adds a paragraph to say:

I have felt a new liberty in preaching since General Conference and feel that there is an improved condition already noticeable in the members of the church.

This expression is quite similar to many which have been made to us in conversation as well as correspondence, and probably reflects the feelings of many others who have not expressed themselves to us. The expression reflects our own experiences.

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

Development of Young Preachers and Writers

We are interested in the development of a body of preachers of the gospel, for this work will continue to be the principal activity to instill the work of the church and the truths of Holy Writ. No other thing can take its place.

Writers, of course, are necessary to the promulgation of the work, and if we are neglecting the development of a large corps of competent writers, we are retarding our progress in comparison with other peoples. The school of Christian Science, the Unity School of Practical Christianity, and the Salvation Army are not overlooking this point of strategy, and in essay, fiction, and news journalism they are developing writers whose fame will add to the prestige of their cults.

In our own church there has been too little attention given the development of writers and preachers, and we have expected God to direct those who assume these tasks, which he has done to a wonderful degree. We could add much, however, by bending our energies to direct the development of individuals having a talent and a desire to work in these special avenues of church activity which lie so close to the foundation and development of our work.

One of the revelations given to the church through Joseph Smith contains these words:

Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves. And inasmuch as men do good, they shall in nowise lose their reward. But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned.

It is most assuredly a commendable thing for the young men and women to engage in study and training for both writing and speaking, as agents unto themselves; and it is likely that from this army of trained individuals the Lord will choose a large proportion of those whom he will make agents for his work.

Recently there came to the office of the First Presidency a letter from the pastor of the church in Wichita, Kansas. He mentions the work of two very young men who are priests and who are preparing themselves for usefulness as preachers. We hope there are those who are also preparing themselves as authors, news writers, journalists. Here is an extract from the letter mentioned:

I want to tell you of the sermon we listened to last night. Brother Lawrence Brockway, a young man about eighteen years of age and recently ordained a priest, was the speaker. He used for the basis of his remarks the program for the establishment of Zion adopted at the last General Conference. He called our attention to the first command given by God to mankind, "Be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth and subdue it." This program for the establishment of Zion

Summer Versus Winter Radio Reception

Many people who bought radio sets during the past winter wonder why they can't get the many long distance stations they received then. In some instances they have laid the blame to their receiving sets, not knowing seasonal effects on radio.

Nearly everyone knows that the receiving range of any radio is much greater at night than in daytime. This is due to the resistance which light offers to radio waves. As the days lengthen and get warmer, the radio waves become more and more obstructed, greatly decreasing the range of every transmitting station. To overcome these effects to some extent, some broadcasting stations are using much more powerful apparatus than formerly. Several stations are now using 5,000 watts, but they will doubtless reduce power with the coming of the next cold season.

Even with such a high power as 5,000 watts, Pacific coast stations cannot be well received in the Mississippi Valley during the summer seasons. Last winter, with one fifth to one tenth this power, they could be heard very frequently on any good radio receiver.

Listeners who purchased their radio sets last winter should now have their tubes and batteries tested. The average B battery on a multi-tube set has a life of about six months. When the voltage of a 22-volt B battery unit falls much below 20, it should be replaced with a new one; 45-volt units should be discarded when their voltage drops below 40. Storage batteries can, of course, be recharged when their voltage falls below 2 volts per cell. Dry cell A batteries should be replaced when they test under 5 amperes; when purchasing new ones, see that they test at least 25 amperes. Don't accept either dry cell A or B batteries unless the dealer assures you fresh stock. Batteries deteriorate whether they are used or not.

Vacuum tubes of reputable manufacture have an average life of 1,000 hours. Some tubes work well for several years; others, perhaps of the same make, sometimes last only a few days. Apparatus for rejuvenating tubes with lost sensitiveness has recently been perfected. Tubes whose filaments still light can usually be completely restored so far as sensitiveness is concerned. Tubes with broken or burnt-out filaments are worthless.

A single defective vacuum tube may make a receiving set inoperative. A spare tube for the radio, the same as a spare tire for the motor car, should always be "carried."

Remember that the training and experience of the church radio experts are always at your service. Make use of their knowledge. Inquiries accompanied by stamped self-addressed return envelope should be sent to the Radio Department, Independence, Missouri. ARTHUR B. CHURCH.

K L D S Inspected for Class B License

The long-awaited Class B examination and inspection has at last materialized. A former Independence man, George Turner, not a member of the church, made the inspection. He made a very thorough and detailed examination. The requirements for Class B studio are now even more stringent than those in charge of the church radio station were aware. The inspector asked that several minor changes be made before he left. A ventilating fan was removed, and the buzzer signal on a private interphone between instrument room and studio was replaced with a small light. Only one minor change in equipment was suggested, and this was made before the inspector left the city.

Friday evening a very short test program was broadcast on 1,000 watts, 441 meters, so the radio inspector could check up the working of the new broadcaster while operating full power. This consisted merely of a few Duo-Art piano numbers. He would not authorize the use of 441 meters on Sunday, even though here. Upon leaving he stated that he was unable to state whether a Class B license would be granted, because this information must come from the radio supervisor to whom he must make his report.

We are hopeful that K L D S will be on the air next Sunday, June 7, with 1,000 watts, 441 meters. If we are not, an explanation will be made in next week's issue of the HERALD. ARTHUR B. CHURCH.

R. J. L.
To carry out this purpose for American citizenship, the committee in connection with the State Bar Association have organized a state citizenship committee in forty States and expect to organize the remaining eight in the near future. Their aim is to secure the cooperation of all local bar associations and individual members of the bar. Second, to introduce the proper teaching of the letter and spirit of our Constitution to all high school children. Third, to secure the cooperation of the ministers of every church, as well as civic societies everywhere. Fourth, to furnish lawyers to speak on all proper occasions.

The second method is an organization of committees in fifty-one Federal districts under the supervision of the United States district judges. It is expected the remaining twenty-one districts will be organized within a short time. These committees are to work among aliens to give them the right view of the American Constitution and institutions.

It may be noted that the first deals directly with American citizens. The second plan is for the special benefit of the alien. A third method is to ask all service clubs, including Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions, Exchange, and Quota Clubs, to read a portion of the Federal Constitution at each weekly luncheon and to have speakers to discuss it from time to time.

A fourth method is the distribution of 100,000 copies of Mr. Beck's book on the Constitution. This distribution is to the high school and public libraries.

A fifth method will be the broadcasting of a series of addresses at eight o'clock, New York time, beginning with John W. Davis on Tuesday night, June 2. These addresses will be made at the same hour each Tuesday night until July 7, and will include such speakers as Charles E. Hughes, Elihu Root, Nicholas Murray Butler, Bishop Cook of the Episcopal Church, Bishop Wilson of the Methodist Church, and a Cardinal of the Roman Catholic Church to be selected. This broadcasting is being handled by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company.

A sixth method will be the publication of these addresses in book form.

This is a broader program than most of those on Americanization. It includes committees in each Federal District for the benefit of those born outside of the United States, but it also includes the recognition that there has been a departure in recent years from the original plan of the Constitution and a weakening of the checks and counter balances; that the American people themselves are not sufficiently informed. We find this in repeated appeals by those who think everything is and should be done by the Federal Government. At least they should know our Constitution and plan of government and not lightly regard some clear violation of its principles as being the ideal.

A radio vesper sermon by Ralph W. Farrell.

It happened so drearily—so terribly, in a little room down in the State of Maine, that the story may be told here as a preface to our vesper talk.

Eighteen hours of misery, of suspense, of agony. A little coal oil lamp tried to beat back the stifling gloom, while the fierce winds of that December night moaned and whistled about the eaves and shook the naked trees which lifted appealing hands to the black, cloud-scudding sky.

With lips numb and bleeding between set jaws which bit back the tears, while a courageous and skillful physician, a man for the occasion, fitted for the emergency, with ether and instruments struggled to save a mother and her unborn child. Relief came with the gray streaks of the dawn. The child was born.

One hundred and fifty years ago to-day, lovers of God and of liberty fired the shot heard round the world. A nation passed through birth agonies, her baptism of blood and of fire left her naked and bewildered. Everything was in a state of chaos. The country faced bankruptcy. "What can be done?" was on every lip. Some of the best minds met in solemn and secret assembly. For fifteen days they debated in the atmosphere of a heated deadlock. Men became discouraged, and some went home in despair. Then Benjamin Franklin suggested that God be importuned for light. Divinity came to their rescue, and the Constitution of the United States of America was born.

Speaking of this day, in later years, Abraham Lincoln said: "Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal."

To make possible the realization of this sublime statement of Lincoln, the Church of Jesus Christ was reorganized; and in the year 1860, the year Abraham Lincoln came forth to place his all upon the altar of his country, young Joseph Smith dedicated his life to the interests of the church. It was a wonderful year. Two great leaders took up the weapon to make men free, physically and mentally and spiritually.

For over a century the church has been travelling to bring forth her contribution to the world. Men have thrilled with the dream of her Zion. Faithful warriors have laid down their weapons of battle in death, with their eyes fixed on the future realization of their dream. Others have grown weary in the march and have fallen by the wayside; others have pressed on, hoping and working and praying—and at last, after the misery and the heartaches and the countless natural shocks that flesh is heir to, ZION has been born. Some may not see this child, some may not hear its cry—any more than the first century folk heard the voice of John in the wilderness or the cry of the infant Jesus in the manger—but the church of the last days has brought forth her Zion. It is only a little babe, still wrapped in swaddling clothes; but it is alive and the product of the divine mind. We are custodians of this pearl of great price; ours is the program for the solution of the social and industrial ills of the world, if we will have it so; ours is the presentation to this weary, heart-sick generation, a demonstration of practical Christianity, a glorification of the golden rule, a holding up of Christ as he should be held up.

The nation sits in darkness. It is for us to reveal unto it the light of Christ reflected by a body of people who not only cry, "Lord, Lord," but also do the things which he has commanded. Ours is the task to bring to maturity this child Zion, if we will.

Ladies and gentlemen, I wonder if you know of what I speak? It is simply this:

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has for many years been presenting to the world a beautiful theory. It has told of social justice which would enable men to enjoy equal opportunity to bring out the best within them; it has sung of Zion's conditions which provide for the demonstration of Christ's precepts—the application of practical Christianity, in the industrial life, the social life, and every other phase of life. Such is the will of Christ. And in the marks of life, in the hospitals, the business centers, the homes, the churches, he calls with voice that will not be quieted, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"

It is a tremendous task imposed on the church, but if not hindered by foes without and foes within, it is a task that shall soon be accomplished. And men are demanding to see it done. From the business world, the educational world, and the religious world comes the demand to see Jesus. Men are stirred. Infidelity is issuing its challenge. The heathen world is wondering and scorning as well as hoping and praying. "Where is the desire of all nations? the Christ of the Ages?" men of every color are asking. Confused and blood-soaked Europe is calling for him. Asia needs him. America cannot survive without Jesus of Nazareth.

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, with its headquarters at Independence, Missouri, desires to give and to receive a sympathetic attitude. She is grateful for the honest newspapers with their manly editors, for the broad-minded sympathy received from the teaching world, and for the friendship of honorable men in every walk of life.
With this encouragement and the support of consecrated men and women within the ranks, she cannot swerve from her path of duty and will carry on until the purpose of God is accomplished through her.

“The Master Weaver”

BY LYMAN W. FIKE

Though I travel far and in many places, yet there comes to me ever and anon the thought of home and dear ones. Still another thought is in my mind today. It is concerning a picture which has grown dear to me, in a way; one which hangs upon the wall of the best room of that home which I cannot forget.

You might think now that it is a picture of dear ones. No, it is of a far-removed subject; peculiar that such is the case. The theme of this picture may not appear worthy to some, and I dare say that many do not notice it at all.

I trust that you are interested to learn the subject of this picture. I shall endeavor to give you a pen picture of this in part; what it means to me, and the lesson I take from it. The picture is that of a cliff dweller’s hut—the interior. Where it is located we do not know, but we presume it is in a certain region of New Mexico. To some, the place for this peaceful scene would be of little consequence, but in a way it is a very important issue. Notice the concentration, the application to the task at hand. They are engrossed. They have no thought of the busy world of commerce.

Could you imagine this aged Indian quitting the task of the weaving and turning to answer the call of a long-distance telephone? They do not hear the shrill sound of a whistle. Truly they live in a world far removed from our busy activities.

Let us look at this picture. We notice the appearance of the interior, with its antique decorations. Here we see an aged Indian and a youth. The aged man is in the act of weaving a blanket. The youth is standing slightly to the rear and in an unconscious condition is holding a ball of coarsely woven yarn. The old man is sitting before the weaving frame, on a goatskin rug.

Their clothing is very scarce, that worn by the primitive Indian. The muscles of the aged man are well developed. He has seen many days of toil in his time. Though he is ripened in years, yet his usefulness has not ceased. Though his eyes are dim, yet he can see, and with his well-trained hand he weaves a blanket which is free from fault.

The feathers in his hair are hanging, not proudly, but in a careless manner. His days of battle are no more; a more serious task now occupies him. But one feather is in the hair of the youth, yet enough to tell that he is not a warrior. The battles of life are yet for him. Some day we will see him decked, when he has won them, perhaps by faithful service to his tribe.

I see a lesson there; but we must look closer. Let us study the picture. I said this aged man was a blanket weaver. True, he is, and one of fame. His time is not spent in weaving common blankets, but ceremonial blankets for the tribe. He is careful in his work; he must decorate this blanket with many fantastic designs and figures. The warp as well as the woof must be guarded well, for one mistake will mar the entire blanket.

This man is a dexterous workman; a prayer is continually in his mind. He is trying to give expression in that blanket to that prayer, by the dull or gay coloring, which is woven into the coarse yarn. He must go slow and force the woof firmly into place by that quaint method.

It may take him many days to finish his task. But it is a worthy task. The time required to make the blanket does not enter into the question. Carefulness is the supreme thought. His life is measured by faithfulness, not by moons and days. He must do his task well. The young man must learn that one thing; to do his work well.

This master weaver will some day be laid away. Before many moons he will go to the happy hunting ground. But by that time the youth will be qualified to take the place before the rude frame on the goatskin rug on the stone floor of this hut. Time will go on; only another scene, only a second edition to the same story. The youth must learn his lesson well. We trust he will. We are sure he will be able to work more rapidly than the old man; perhaps do more excellent work. A fine youth, he. Would that there were more of them!

The young man is serious; he must be faithful to his apprenticeship. There he stands, motionless, watching every motion of the nimble fingers of his master. Well he knows that his responsibility in the future will be to make these sacred blankets for his tribe. Let him learn his lesson well, for he must preserve the traditions of the tribe in the weave of the sacred folds of the mystic blanket? These traditions are dear to him; then let him discharge well his responsibility.

The cliff dweller’s hut is carved out of solid rock by Mother Nature, but the front is inclosed by a wall, both rude and strong. The walls are of bare stone, a rug here and there on the floor. There dimly upon the wall can be seen the record of some great battle written upon an even surface. Simplicity prevails throughout. And can we not also say comfort? To them it is comfortable.

In this strange world of the mystic, there is need of inspiration. We see it. Does not the glow from the fireplace represent that? Not bright, but the reddish glare upon the copper-colored bodies is emblematical of the dull light of inspiration, which inspires the mind of the workman. His inspiration comes from days of old, gone and forgotten by all but he; also from another world. As that inspiration will be necessary, so also will be the necessity for the light from the fireplace to shine, that he might be able to give expression to the theme by a selection of colors.

The weaver is also skilled in pottery and basket work. There on the floor, near, we see a large earthen vessel, gayly decorated, covered with designs which are simple yet are full of meaning to them. There also we see a basket. In that, too, we see the very life of the master workman. Surely he is a worthy instructor, and one worthy to follow.

We determine that this youth will receive instruction in this art, we believe from his father. He has the destiny of the tribe in a ceremonial way depending upon him. He must be able to transmit a true expression to posterity.

Some day you will see this youth before a ball of well-seasoned clay; you will notice operations similar to those of his master. He will continue in the same certain, steady course, with the thought of perfect workmanship underlying all. Some day you will see this youth in this rude workshop, laboring carefully with a basket which he will construct from well-selected fibers. His designs will be a duplication of the pattern given to him by his master. The coloring, so durable, will represent ideas which should be transmitted to others.

We see very much more in the picture, not visible, but expressed sufficiently for the lesson which I care to impress. I have a lesson for those who are of mature years and bearing responsibilities, especially to those who have passed the meridian of life. Then a lesson for the young, like myself, who have the battles and responsibilities largely before us.

The life we live, the acts we do, and the thoughts we think are far removed from the floor of the cliff dweller's hut. Very true it is, my aged brother, we are not living the life of that "mystic blanket weaver." While we are not called, my young friend, to learn how to collect, sort, and color, as well as weave goat hair into blankets, nor called upon to learn how to make the many-colored earthenware or the basket, yet we have a task; one quite as strange and of far more consequence, for 'tis more real.

But hear a word of reason, worthy senior friend; learn a lesson. Guard well your movements. Make straight the path before you; then it will not be crooked behind. Be careful in your workmanship. Strive to eliminate error from your work, like the Master Weaver. While your work is not on a blanket of goat hair, yet you are weaving a blanket; it should be of a fabric more precious and more durable. The warp as well as the woof must be guarded well, for no poor material or workmanship will be permitted in this task. Would you know the thread of which this fabric is woven? It is that of faithful, loving deeds for the woof, and a warp of righteousness. We trust that you are so occupied.

There is the youth who is watching you. Every motion is noted by him. Motionless, unconscious, he. Yet he watches. So absorbed, he, that he does not realize he is watching you. Who knows but that he is looking upon you and striving to imitate your example! He believes you are worthy. Are you? Are you leading him in the direction of perfection in this sacred art? or are you teaching him that which will result in making an imperfect workman of him?

Remember! The present generation demands of you, my senior laborer, a sacred responsibility—that of transferring a true expression of the religion which is so dear to our hearts. The fabric which will be transferred as a history will be the life which you live. You are weaving. What? That which pertains to your destiny. Are you a careful weaver? Show the young man that it is possible to weave the cloth and embellish it with righteousness, even amid adversities. Put him in the right path. Teach him well. Remember that a slight variation in the compass will cause serious loss to the navigator. Equally true will it be if you cause him to vary from his course.

My aged friend, are you far removed from worldliness? Remember our Master prayed that we might not be worldly. Are you consecrated to the task at hand? Do you receive inspiration to direct you and help you to discharge your duties? If not, why? Is your inspiration from another world? from the spirit world? Have you tried to imitate the great Master Weaver, who is the Christ? Have you received a proper impression? Are you willing to transfer this impression to others? Jesus said he came that we might have light. Have you received it? Happy should you be if these questions may be answered in the proper manner. Then the youth will be able to call you blessed.

My aged brother, discharge well your trust; remember you are responsible to the great God who created you. He is a just Judge. Give a good example to others, "fight a good fight, keep the faith," and we are sure our God will do right and there will be laid up for you a crown of which only the righteous are worthy.

On the other hand, if when this fabric is presented to the Master Weaver for his inspection, there are noticeable the marks of poor workmanship, poor material, and a botchwork where it should be decorated by skilful hands and righteousness. He will never let it abide. Better place the proper material and workmanship now in the fabric than to remove and correct them. Christ gave the pattern he intends we shall duplicate. The youthful Indian was supposed to imitate his sire; so you are to watch the Christ and follow where he leads.

My aged friend, though your hair be gray, though your tread be not as it once was, though your voice may not be heard in the assembly as often as it once was, yet remember, “Old men for wisdom, young men for war.” Your work is of a different kind now, but you are not through, not until you lay aside the mantle of flesh. “He that endures to the end.” May God grant strength to you to accomplish that.

My dear youthful friend, you have the battles of life to fight; you must prepare for the great struggle. You want to be a valiant soldier, able to fight worthily. You may have but one plume in your hair. Some day you will have more if you are worthy. Your voice may not have been heard in the assembly, your actions have not been noted by the earthly historian, but remember that the heavenly historian has been noting carefully all your actions. Your record is had there. Besides simply recording your achievements, he also notices the opportunities which were yours which were permitted to pass by.

May there be few of such entries as the latter. Learn well the parable of the talents and the pounds. Remember that if you use wisely what you have, more will be granted to you.

Remember, my youthful friend, that a sacred responsibility is yours. Do you not know that the youth with the one plume is the chieftain of to-morrow with the many plumes? The boy of to-day is the youth of to-morrow. But there must be something besides plumes to decorate the warrior. He would be a poor one to defend if that were all. What else must he have? He must be fully equipped for the fight. There must be suitable “war paint.” There must be the weapons, of defense and for the offensive; he must have a shield also, and a strong bow, with arrows.

The war paint will not be of vegetable or mineral stain, but it will be the proper decoration, will be a charm against the influences of the enemy. The paint is absolutely necessary, if you fight well. It is known as righteousness. The shield must be that of truth; and the arrows, those of the word of God. Remember, you will be called upon to fight, not against a foe that can be slain in a moment, but it will take a long siege. You are to fight against sin and wickedness. Fight not with the arm of flesh; there is a better way to qualify yourself for the fight.

Will you be ready when the summons comes? Are you in that studious, solemn manner which was noticed with our Indian friend? Is your body clean and strong? Is your mind consecrated for the life before you? Have you withdrawn your affections from the world of sin? Are you in the workshop of the Master Weaver, free from those contaminating influences of the world? If you are in this condition, may God help you to learn your lesson well.

In the ranks of the young men are those who must be leaders; others there are who must be called to fill places in the ranks of those who are faithful soldiers. There are those who will bear, no doubt, greater responsibilities than these in the ranks today. What kind of a soldier will you be? Will you be faithful to your trust? Will you be as Joshua, who was fully qualified to take the place when it was ready for him? Or will you be as David, ready to bear the burden, at first, but in later years because of pride do those things displeasing to the Lord? Let us hope not. Let us rather wish that, when the call comes, you may be as little Samuel of old, who could say from the heart, “Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth,” and not only respond quickly, and faithfully, but continue true until the end. Not with a diminished ability at the end of the race, but an increased efficiency.

Ephraim and Manasseh

BY J. E. VANDERWOOD

Manasseh spread himself upon this land,
And built the cities which to-day are found
Deep buried 'neath the forests and the sand;
Wherein the wealth of knowledge did abound.

While he was favored of his God he built,
And proudly spread himself upon the earth;
But having sinned, he suffered for his guilt,
And with him died the things of greatest worth.

His fame and glory buried with the past
Was lost, and he no longer triumphed here;
His offspring blindly clinging to the last Remaining symbols of their art seemed queer:

Until through favored Ephraim there was brought To light the record of this ancient race,
Which to the nations must be fully taught
Ere paleness shall depart from Jacob's face.

But when Manasseh has again been brought
To know the truth through Ephraim's service here,
When he has come to function as he ought,
While Ephraim helps to dry his bitter tear;

When once again unitedly they stand,
Wherein the horns of Ephraim have prevailed,
And blessed threes, again have made this land,
Whereon Manasseh through his sin had failed;

We will see Zion in her beauty rise,
And spread her glory e'en from pole to pole;
Wherein the humble shall be truly wise,
When love and truth shall make the people whole.

Wants an Elder to Locate Among Them

SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA, May 18.—There are only a few Saints here, but we are striving to hold fast to the Lord’s work. We are without a leader now, and as we have only one of the priesthood among us, a teacher, we are only able to keep up our Sunday school and the Wednesday evening prayer services.

The good Spirit has been with us to comfort and strengthen in our effort to go on. We feel there is a work to be done here and are thankful to God that he is still at the helm guiding us heavenward.

We had a pleasant surprise last Sunday morning on entering the little hall for Sunday school to see a goodly number of Saints from East Los Angeles Branch. They got up early, fixed lunches, and drove up in time to be here for our services. Their choir gave some nice singing, and Brother H. D. Motter occupied at eleven o’clock with an interesting sermon, after which we took our lunches to Oak Park where tables were spread and a bountiful feast enjoyed.

We want to ask if any of the Saints expect to come to California this summer. We would be pleased to have them stop and visit us. We are also anxious to have an elder come here and locate. We are in need of a leader to help us in this city, as there is good opportunity for work here, especially for a man with a trade. This is a wonderful place to live, as the climate and flowers are ideal. We will be glad to hear from anyone wishing to come here. Write us and also come to see us: Brother and Sister I. A. Lytel, 1715 Thomas Avenue; Brother and Sister G. H. Stewart, 809 Pest Pedregosa Street.

Detroit District Conference

Conference convened at Pontiac, Michigan, Saturday, May 17, at 9 a. m. Prayer service was in charge of J. R. Grice and W. M. Grice. A splendid spirit prevailed at this service and continued throughout the sessions.

Business opened at 10.15 a. m., with Elder K. H. Green, counselor to the district president, in the chair. Elder M. W. Liston, district president, was detained by a matter of business and was unable to reach the conference until 10.30.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer gave a short talk on the outlook for the coming year, which was enjoyed by all. The spirit of optimism he injected into the conference was conducive of good.

The district president arrived at 10.30 and, taking the chair, proceeded with the organization of the conference. The presidency and Apostle Gleazer were associated in presiding over the conference.

The “usual” trouble was experienced in getting reports from the various men and departments throughout the district, but notwithstanding these hindering features the outlook is promising, and there is an upward trend in all departments.

Detroit District is blessed with a great many very capable young people, and Apostle Gleazer gave us to understand that the church is expecting great things from the young people of our district, and we believe it will not be disappointed in them.

The district president gave a very comprehensive report of his labors, making a number of recommendations which were acted upon separately.

At the afternoon session the work of the reunion committee, which works in conjunction with the reunion committee of Eastern Michigan District, was taken up and discussed. Brother Leslie Maynard offered his ten-acre tract as a reunion site, which will no doubt be carefully examined by the committee.

A recommendation, coming from the district ministerial conference, had reference to a uniform system of reporting, and was adopted.

The district young people’s organization, known as the Y. P. O., offered a resolution looking to consolidation with the Department of Recreation and Expression. This was adopted, and hereafter the Y. P. O. will carry on its work through the Department of Recreation and Expression. We trust that none of the enthusiasm which has been engendered by this organization may be lost. The Y. P. O. has been a splendid factor in getting the district’s young people to labor in the interests of the church. We believe the standard will still be upheld.

By request from the Orion Branch, the ordination of Bruce Gonyau to the office of teacher was ordered.

On account of the resignation of the district president, Elder M. W. Liston, who has accepted appointment to the pastorate of Port Huron Branch, it was necessary to elect another. Elder W. L. Bennett of Detroit was chosen to fill the vacancy, and A. H. DuRose of Flint and J. Charles Mottashed of Detroit were selected as counselors.

The music department for the coming year will be under the splendid direction of Mrs. Myrtle Holden of Flint.

Saturday evening a splendid program was rendered by the Department of Women. Sunday services were held in the high school auditorium, corner of West Huron and State Streets. The morning prayer service was presided over by Apostle Gleazer and the district presidency. A calm and gentle spirit reigned at this service, cheering the heart and gladdening the soul. The Sunday school session was under the able direction of District Superintendent V. D. Schaar, and Otto Behrendt of the local Pontiac school.

Preaching at 2.30 and 7.30 p. m. was by Apostle Gleazer. Detroit District has wonderful opportunities. May every obligation be fulfilled and unity prevail.

Sioux City, Iowa

May 20.—The Mothers’ Day program was sponsored by the Temple Builders, and much credit is due them for the fine program that we enjoyed. Each mother was given a beautiful red or white carnation. The flowers were passed by four little girls near the close of the exercises.

Stanley Gail Hanson, little son of Mr. and Sister Henry Hanson, and Richard Warren Pace, son of Mr. and Sister Glen Pace, were blessed during the past month. On May 2 a little son came to cheer the hearts of his parents, Mr. and Sister Mark Brady. Brother and Sister James Park and children, Olive and Robert, have come here from Runnells, Iowa. We are glad to welcome them and add their names to ours.

Sister Rebecca Kennedy, known to all the Saints as “Grandma,” left this earthly realm May 3, at the ripe old age of eighty-seven. She was baptized into the church August 6, 1905, by Elder Oscar Case. Her testimony since that time has been that the Lord she worshiped was truly a living God and that many times her prayers were heard and answered.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Brother and Sister Arthur Sherman and son visited with the Sherman family in Chicago the fore part of the month. Sister Ed Lowe of Council Bluffs visited with Brother Lowe May 3. Brother Lowe is manager of one of the city’s up-to-date shoe stores. His family expects to move here soon after school is dismissed for the summer. Sister Benner, of Waite hill, Nebraska, is visiting her son Adron and family. Sister Myrtle Bates has returned after a month’s visit in Kansas City.

Brother and Sister Clement Streeter, sr., entertained over two hundred friends and relatives at their golden wedding anniversary Saturday, May 9. In the evening a bountiful dinner was spread, and together with the congratulations of the hour the event will be one long to be remembered. Through the columns of the Herald we extend the congratulations of the Sioux City Branch.

Waterloo, Iowa

May 19.—The Religion gave a Mothers’ Day program on May 10, occupying the whole evening session. There was a good attendance of both members and nonmembers to enjoy the program.

Our organist, Sister Freda Medley, changed her name to Renslow by marrying F. M., son of Brother and Sister E. G. Renslow.

Sister Myrtle Grapes, of Independence Sanitarium, is visiting her mother, Sister Mary Grapes.

Fall River, Massachusetts

May 18.—The Saints have been busy during the last two months, but the correspondent has been too much occupied to report.

The Temple Builders are rehearsing the play, “The minister’s wife’s new bonnet,” to be given May 28. The money received will be given to the church for branch expenses.

All the societies and individuals have given generously to pay for the shingling of the church and for the fire insurance policy.

May 10 Elder W. A. Sinclair and family were with us again. Brother Sinclair gave a Mothers’ Day sermon, and Sister Sinclair played the organ. Alma Coombs was the soloist. The visitors brought apple blossoms and wild flowers from their place at Sandwich, Massachusetts, to decorate the church.

Elder E. B. Lewis of Dennisport was the speaker May 17. His sermons were well received. The attendance is always smaller than it should be, but those who come out enjoy the exchange of speakers. Joseph Cliff was the soloist.

The local pastor, James W. Heap, visited Plymouth May 17, and Alma Coombs spoke at Brockton March 29. The Saints are busy preparing for the ministerial conference to be held at Fall River May 23 and 24.

Easter Sunday the church was beautifully decorated by the Sunday school. The children had a concert; then the flowers and plants were sent to the sick. Eunice Henderson had the most money in her Easter offering and received a church book. Dorothy and Luella Cross had the next largest amounts and received silver Sunday school pins.

On May 2 the Temple Builders had a May basket party at the home of Anna Sherman in Dighton. Anna was given a beautiful May basket and crepe de chine scarf. All the young people were invited.

March 30 the branch was saddened by the death of George Nickerson, husband of Sister Nellie Cockcroft Nickerson. He was but thirty-four years of age and was sick only two weeks. He died from ulcers and perforations in the intestines. Peritonitis set in after the operation. He was a submarine chaser during the World War, and conditions were such that he was never as strong after his return. George was not a member of the church, but he always assisted at the entertainments. He was liked by all and was secretary of the men’s class at the Union Methodist Church. Doctor Colpitts had charge of the services. The flowers were numerous. Sister Myra Cockcroft should have entered the hospital at this time for another operation but was needed to comfort her sister. Myra continues to suffer a great deal. She has just returned from a Boston hospital. The Saints are always thoughtful of her.

Lucasville, Ohio

May 20.—The Spirit of the Lord was present at the sacramental service May 3. Brother and Sister Daugherty, of the First Columbus Branch, were present at the service. Also Brother and Sister Rezrhode and Brother Rezrhode’s mother, who live nearly twenty-five miles away and are members of the Hiland Branch, were visitors the same day. The Saints here are always strengthened when other members attend our services. There were also many Saints from McDermott Branch. The gift of prophecy was enjoyed, the Lord speaking to several individually.

On May 10 Elder Roy Beatty, of Richmondale, Ohio, was at Sunday school and prayer service, confirming three at the beginning of the service. These new members were baptized recently by Brother Mark Crabtree, our priest.

We have a good attendance at Sunday school considering the heavy fall of rain and bad roads.

We wish the Saints good luck and a prosperous time, and that the Spirit of the heavenly Father will be in their midst at all times. We need his help. May every Saint do his work as the Father would have him do.

New Pastor for Des Moines

Des Moines, Iowa, May 21.—Since our last letter appeared, many things have happened. The Des Moines Branch is, however, continuing in the faith. Since General Conference we have had the misfortune to lose our pastor, David E. Dowker, who is being transferred to Lamoni, where he is to act as counselor to the stake president. We have had the honor of welcoming as our new pastor Brother H. A. Higgins, who comes from Saint Louis. No doubt we will learn to love Brother and Sister Higgins as we did Brother and Sister Dowker and their family. The Des Moines Branch will continue to grow.

On April 2 and 3 the Panedelphia Chapter of Temple Builders gave a Chinese operetta at the church. An admission of twenty-five cents was charged to help raise money for the erection of the new church. Since then the girls have presented the play at Runnels and Boone, and the interest shown has been gratifying. Some new talent has been discovered among our young people, and their efforts are appreciated.

Our delegates to General Conference have reported that the Spirit of God was manifested there in great power, and we are now ready to continue to support the general body to the fullest degree. No doubt we will sail Zionward this year.

The evening of May 11 a business meeting was held, at which time it was voted to have plans drawn for a new church. It is hoped we will soon see work progressing on our new home.

Perry, Iowa

May 19.—We are pleased to report that the work here is moving along nicely. Mothers’ Day was fittingly observed, the theme of “Mother” being carried through all the services of the day. District President Henry Castings was the speaker both morning and evening, and brought with him that feeling of brotherly love which is always present when he is in our midst. It was a day long to be remembered by the Saints.

The Sunday school is planning a Children’s Day program to be given some time in June.

The Relief Society has been putting on some good programs. The young people seem to be ready and willing to take hold of the work, and we are looking for some good workers among the young people in the near future.

The Department of Women is meeting for study every two weeks.

Branch President Kibby attended General Conference and returned feeling this year would be a banner year for the church.

The local priesthood is occupying in the different services, striving to bring the Saints to a higher plane.

Coal Hill Branch

ELDORADO SPRINGS, MISSOURI, May 18.—Bishop C. J. Hunt visited Coal Hill Branch May 6 to 8. The Saints appreciated his talks and wished he could stay longer.

Sister Rosa returned from a visit among relatives and friends Saturday morning.

Brother John Andes and son Hollis made a short visit with home folks from Saturday morning until Sunday morning. They returned to their work in Independence Sunday.

Sister Nellie Williams and daughter Merla went to Independence Saturday in search of employment.

Three of our young ladies are working in Eldorado Springs, namely Inez Blystone, Leola Andes, and Pauline Wood. They are missed in church services, and we were happy to have them with us Sunday night.

Sister Elaine Blystone went to Independence Sunday to work for the summer. We are sorry to have so many of our young people absent, but hope they will make good wherever they go.

Sister Mary Messick, the aged mother of Brother John Rittenhour, and for many years a member of this branch, died of heart trouble early in the morning of May 17. She has three living daughters and one son. When Sister Messick was a babe she fell into a fireplace, burning both hands so badly that all of her fingers were lost, and thus handicapped she has gone through life, learning to do many things that we who are fortunate enough to have the use of our fingers would think impossible.

The branch is looking forward to and planning for a tent meeting in Cedar Springs this summer. The little town is about three miles from our church, and they have a beautiful little park in which to hold services.

Our correspondent from Elberta, Michigan, writes that at present they are not having any church services as so many of the members have moved away. Also the road that goes past the church is being paved, and the road has been closed all spring. Services will be continued as soon as roads permit.

Burlington, Iowa

May 19.—The Saints in Burlington feel very much encouraged over the new church. For years we have felt the need of a better and larger building, and at last our hopes are being realized. We expect to have a pretty place by the last of June. Everyone is working hard to pay for the church, every member—children and all—contributing to the fund. A large part of the money has been raised under the supervision of the Department of Women.

We are still holding cottage prayer meetings and feel that we are gaining much good from them. They are well attended by both young and old. The young people’s prayer meetings have been dispensed with until we have the new church to meet in.

Sisters Margaret Finkle and Ed Kunz gave a musucale the last of April for the benefit of the building fund. We had a very fine program furnished by different members and the Temple Builders. Readings, vocal solos, duets, and choruses constituted the program. Later refreshments were served and a collection taken. Everyone seemed to have an enjoyable time.

London, Ontario

The weather here Sunday left nothing to be desired. Indeed, it seemed a benediction on Mothers’ Day, and enabled us to realize to the full the meaning of the term.

The morning prayer service was well attended, as usual. Elder Hardy, our pastor, read a scripture lesson from Psalms 23, commenting briefly on this passage. The preaching service at eleven o’clock was in charge of Brother Inspell. At this service Sister Koehler, of the Department of Women, read a beautiful poem, “Mother.” The evening service was occupied by Elder Frank Gray, who based his remarks on “Honor thy father and mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.” It was a very appropriate sermon for the occasion.

The choir, which is becoming quite proficient under the leadership of Brother Fred Heddington, provided special music for Mothers’ Day, which was highly appreciated by all. Efforts are being made to organize a juvenile choir, which will render the music for the morning service. We are hopeful of excellent results from the young songsters.

The Department of Recreation and Expression is making a move forward under the direction of “Uncle” John Basbinder. Various activities are in the making for the summer months. The dramatic club, working under this department, is practicing every week and will put on a play in the near future.

The Sunday school is progressing nicely under the supervision of Elder Louis Barning and assistants.

Sister Mamie Duesling, who has been very ill for a long time, was able to be out to services Mothers’ Day.

Brother and Sister Clifton of Toronto recently visited here on their way home from a visit to Sarnia.

Brother Ira C. Wolfe, of Kearney, Nebraska, writes that they have been enjoying some good sermons from Brother E. E. Long. Brother Long is in Kearney after his car, which has been tied up there since the snow blockade last winter. He has been delayed here on account of rain, and the Saints are hoping to hear from him again before he leaves. His talks have brought about twenty visitors to the church. The Saints there now number forty-six, with five baptisms recently. Harmony exists not only in the ten-piece orchestra, but reigns in the hearts of all.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Senlac, Saskatchewan

May 14.—Mothers’ Day was observed last Sunday by a very nice program of readings and music, and a large crowd was present.

Elder J. J. Cornish has returned from General Conference and has promised to tell us about it next Sunday morning. It was to have been last Sunday, but had to be postponed on account of Elders J. J. Cornish and W. J. Cornish being called ten miles away to administer to the sick.

The Sunday school is ably presided over by Priest E. Leslie Mogg. The senior class voted to take up the study of the Book of Mormon as outlined in the Book of Mormon quarterly.

The infant son of Brother and Sister Cecil Ihrke was laid to rest May 13. The funeral services were held at the home, Elder W. J. Cornish officiating and Elder W. J. Levitt assisting. Much sympathy was expressed for the mourners, who have suffered a loss indeed.

Mr. and Sister Charles McCallum are leaving this week to make their home in British Columbia. Our best wishes go with them.

The families of Elders A. J. and W. J. Cornish have been quarantined with scarlet fever for several weeks. They were released last week and appeared at church Sunday, where they greeted the friends from whom they had been separated so long. They felt they had come out of the ordeal very well

During the absence of these elders from their posts, the pulpit was ably filled by Priest E. Leslie Mogg, Elder John Tomlinson, Joseph and Thomas Bates.

The district conference which will convene in this branch in July is being eagerly anticipated and looked forward to. Already we are devising ways and means, but we have not yet held a meeting to appoint the different committees. This will come later.

The midweek prayer meetings are very pleasant in character. On account of the busy season, the Saints do not meet until eight o’clock Wednesday evenings. No lights are lit, and we sit in the gloaming and tell of our experiences in the gospel, and sing only well-remembered songs.

Owen Sound, Ontario

May 18.—The services in our branch in the near past have indeed been outstanding.

Sunday, May 3, Elder J. H. Yager was with us. He led the sacramental service with some well-chosen words of exhortation, giving as a theme for the service, “Those things which have proved anchors to our souls.” A short talk to the boys and girls during the Sunday school by him was enjoyed by all. Again in the evening the Saints heard a very interesting sermon, as he sought to defend our claim for a restoration of the gospel of Christ.

A play by the Dramatic Society of the Saint Thomas Anglican Church was put on May 6, in our church, which was comfortably filled with Saints and friends, all of whom expressed themselves as well pleased with the entertainment. An admission fee was charged, which increased the treasury of the Department of Women $17.

Elder Percy Farrow spent the week-end of May 10 with us, giving a verbal report of the General Conference Friday evening. He occupied the pulpit for the Sunday evening service, his effort being greatly enjoyed by his hearers. He used as his theme, “Unto whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life.” Elder Farrow also leaves our district for other fields. We assure him of our best wishes.

Group 2 of the Owen Sound District Elders’ Quorum met in our branch last Sunday, which naturally made the day interesting and profitable. A fine representation of the priesthood of this district was present, much to the encouragement of those in charge. Elder Cooper of Guelph occupied for the evening service.

Sister J. L. Mortimer is gaining strength after her operation, and her complete recovery is hoped for.

Bradner, Ohio

May 14.—Affairs of this branch are in splendid condition. This summer we expect to be able to meet all our indebtedness, and some time in the fall the new church will be dedicated, possibly during district conference.

Easter was celebrated in a fitting manner, as was Mothers’ Day. The mothers were recipients of white carnations.

On March 13 the library committee of the Department of Women formally presented to the branch and the public what they had spent months in gathering together and getting into shape for a library. There are on the shelves some one hundred and twenty-five volumes, among which are the leading books of the church.

A contest is being staged to encourage more reading, as we not only aim to add more books to our collection, but have the people use and study what we already have.

The women gave a play, “Sewing for the heathen,” the night of the opening, and a collection was taken for the purchase of more books. At each meeting a few coins are collected, which soon amounts to the price of a book, and so we expect to continue the work.

Several of our families have become residents of near-by towns, but most of them are regular attendants at meetings.

Elder F. W. Cadow, a traveling salesman, and Franklin Sly, district president, deliver some very stirring Latter Day Saint sermons when they are privileged to be with us.

We have a fine class of young people who, under the superintendence of Sister F. W. Cadow, are doing a good work for God and the church. The superintendent of the Religio is a fine young man still in his teens, Brandon Smith. He is also deacon of the church. The young folks are preparing themselves to take up the work when it becomes necessary for them to do so.

Fairview, Montana

May 15.—The Fairview Branch is still in the race trying to throw aside the hindering weights on the way.

Weekly services have been maintained. The Sunday school grows slowly, a large percentage of those attending being nonmembers. A few programs have been given by the young people. The last, an observance of Mothers’ Day, was enjoyed by a nice number of Saints and nearly the whole membership of a near-by and recently established congregation of Holiness people. They have borrowed our organ, which we were not using, for their meetings. We share the hall we occupy with the Christian denomination. Perhaps cooperation and neighborliness will help some.

Brother Oren Wilcox, formerly of Independence, now living near Savage, Montana, delivered the morning sermon. This was Brother Wilcox’s first visit here. The thoughtful attention of the largest crowd for many months witnesses to the worth of his message. This brother and his family will leave soon for a vacation trip by automobile through the Ozarks.
New Philadelphia, Ohio

May 19.—Our Sunday school is the largest in its history, and we feel that Brother James Carlisle should be given a large amount of the credit. He is a real Scotchman on the job.

Branch President William Goudy delivered a very fine sermon at the funeral of Brother John Harney, who was taken from us a short time ago. Brother Harney was firm in the faith and took the last sacrament on May 3.

Everything looks very favorable in this part of the Lord's vineyard, and we hope that this will be one of the best years in the history of the church. It is a puzzle to us why the Herald is not found in every home. A campaign of education and special effort should be made, for many times it is only carelessness on the part of the Saints.

Conference is on record, and we think our branch will go forward with greater determination than ever. A few members did not approve of the conference action, but in time there will be no trouble, as there is no dispute on church doctrine.

It is hard to make a full and complete surrender to Christ. I am sure if we will uphold the Presidency they will never lead the church astray. Prophecy after prophecy has revealed the fact that our President will lead this church to victory. Let us all put our shoulder to the wheel, and if we move together we are bound to advance. God being with us, what power can stop this church?

The branch presidents should make a special effort to have the Saints work together to swell the Christmas offering. Let us give Brother Carmichael a surprise.

We were much surprised to hear that some of the Saints refused to pay tithing while the alteration was in progress. Every Saint should bear in mind that he owes Christ his tithing and should never allow the acts of another man to come between him and God. Have faith in God. You cannot do this if you do not have faith in the ministry.

A. B. KLAR.

Alexander, Kansas

Alexander, Kansas, May 19.—We come this time with encouraging news of the work here. Attendance at church has increased from around six to thirteen, to forty, some from sixteen miles away attending regularly. If a few more young people come, a young people's class will be established.

The young are taking more interest in singing, which helps out very much. Sister Nevila Schaben composed a song for Mothers' Day, and she and Sister Wanda, her sister, sang it as a duet May 10.

We have five young lady-school-teachers in our branch, namely, Dove Stull, who teaches domestic science and art in La Cross high school; Sister Clara Donecker, primary teacher at Utica, Kansas; Sister Inez Teeters, teaching a country school at Ness City; and Wanda and Odessa Schaben, who also taught country schools in Ness County. We are proud of all these young women. One more sister is ready to teach, Sister Chrystal Teeters, who graduates May 22 from the Alexander high school.

Brother Harold Teeters has been quite poorly this week, having had his tonsils and adenoids removed May 14. He is a little improved at this time.

Branch business meeting was held May 5, at which time John A. Teeters was chosen president of the branch. He is determined to help the work along as best he can.

The Saints are busy this week repairing the church, and it will be painted in a few days. Sister John Teeters solicited about $80 for insuring the church, as it has been without insurance for two or three years.

The Saints are invited to participate with the United Brethren in a memorial service. Brother Teeters is to make an address, and our singers are to help with the singing. May God bless us in our effort to be friendly.

Missionaries should notice that Alexander wants missionary help, and anyone who can visit us will be welcome. Write Brother John A. Teeters, Alexander, Kansas, if you can come.

We ask the prayers of the Saints that this congregation may arise and shine and be approved of God.

A Branch Makes Its Meetings Missionary

Goltry, Oklahoma, May 20.—The little group here is getting along fine considering the circumstances under which they are laboring.

One of our steady local men, who is a traveling salesman, comes every two weeks and preaches for us. When we know he is coming, we try to have a houseful of neighbors and friends to greet him. There are quite a few interested.

The Sunday school is doing well under the leadership of Brother Claud Wicker. We also have Religio on Sunday evening, and the prayer meeting on Thursday night is well attended.

Since conference all feel renewed courage to push on, that God's work may be accomplished. We all may know we have a work to perform. We are looking toward Zion. Let us march.

J. L. CONVYERS.

Report Typical Mothers' Day Program

Spearfish, South Dakota, May 18.—The work here is moving along in the usual manner. Regular services are being maintained with the exception of Sunday evening services, which were omitted during the winter months.

Brother Erwin Dickey and wife, and their daughter and son-in-law, Brother and Sister Sackfield, gave us a pleasant surprise by dropping in on us Sunday, May 10. Brother and Sister Dickey left here about four years ago and during that time have resided in Colorado, California, and Illinois. They returned this spring to their ranch near Vale, South Dakota.

Mothers' Day services were delayed one week on account of the week shift of our tenor, Brother A. O. Plumb, which prevented his being able to take part in the services Mothers' Day. The numbers were well given to a small but appreciative audience. A vocal duet and chorus by Fanchon Cohrt and Hazel Willard, assisted by a mixed quartet, was especially well rendered. Another pleasing number was a short address by a friend to the cause, Lawrence Jackson, in which he paid a warm tribute to his mother, who went to her rest last fall. He pleaded for greater consideration of mother's comforts and wishes on the part of young people while they still have them with them. Lawrence is only seventeen, and this was his first attempt along that line, but by the way he handled his subject there was born in the writer's mind the thought that some day even he might stand in defense of this great latter-day work.

A few of the Saints visited Brother and Sister George Hill, of Belle Fourche, since our last items were written. They moved to that place from Lamoni about five years ago. They are still stanch in the faith and are rejoicing in the blessings the gospel has brought to them.

Sister Hammond of Sturgis has been very ill with appendicitis, but at last report was convalescing.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Our ranks will again be depleted by the removal of J. C. Mabott and family. They have sold their Spearfish home and dairy business and will soon travel towards the land of Zion, where they will look for a location.

Pleasantview Branch

TRYON, NEBRASKA, May 18.—The Saints here are pressing onward and upward. The Sunday school is well attended, also the prayer services. An enjoyable time was had at the last sacrament meeting, and the Spirit was present to bless and cheer the Saints to go forward.

The Saints here feel that they need to practice the hymns so that they may have a better song service.

Brother and Sister Peter Burk expect to leave here this week. They expect to go to Independence soon to live. We will miss them, especially Sister Burk, as she has been an influence for good in the song service for many years.

We are glad the work here in the branch is progressing to the high plane that God wishes his Saints to reach.

Promising Musical Talent Reported

PORTLAND, OREGON, May 1.—The hopes and ambitions of Portland Saints are stronger, we believe, than ever before, and though there are many duties for the one who will carry them, yet we are blessed with a goodly number who are willing to take upon themselves even more than their share, because they, too, find that the workers are few compared to the opportunities to harvest.

On April 3 the Department of Recreation and Expression enjoyed an entire evening of music by an orchestra composed of students of the Ted Bacon Studio under the direction of Brother Henry L. Livingston. The numbers were excellent and well rendered, and the Saints are grateful to Mr. Bacon and his students for the high grade entertainment made possible by their assistance. We feel that we have in Brother Livingston a young musician who will be valuable to the church because of his ability and his desire to consecrate his talent to the church.

The Easter cantata given the evening of May 12 was enjoyed, and much credit for its success falls to Sister Buchanan and her singers for overcoming the distressing conditions which hampered them, due to the fact that there was much illness among the members of the choir at the last moment.

The branch is progressing along musical lines. At the present time over sixty per cent of the choir members are studying voice culture, while one or two are studying piano. Sister Buchanan conducts a class one evening a week in voice work for those who wish to learn more of the value and use of their voices.

The Saints are sorry to learn that they are to lose Brother A. C. Martin as missionary, but are reminded that what is our loss is Seattle's gain, which has been the case before when we lost Brother and Sister C. E. Jones to Seattle two or three years ago.

We are making more room for the children of the Sunday school, having recently finished excavating and sealing another room in the basement of the church. The Department of Women is active here, having aided financially, as well as in many other ways, in several of the undertakings of the building committee to improve the church building.

We are happy in the fact that we are permitted to live and work in these latter days, even though we realize the requirements are great. With the help and encouragement of our branch president, Brother W. H. Barker, and his assistants, we are striving to do our bit, and trust that we shall be able to stand at all times, unafraid and unashamed of our ambitions, our desires, and at last our achievements. We hope that we may develop spiritually, that the trials and disappointments that may come in the future will only serve to bind us closer together in and for the church.

Oklahoma Saints Anxious to Try Stewardship Plan

SEILING, OKLAHOMA, May 22, 1925.—I wish to say to your readers that the sentiment seems to be general for a grand forward move of the church. The sentiment is strong for a general compliance with the tithing law. They want to see the stewardship plan given a fair trial. They want to see Zion. So I feel more than ever encouraged in my work. I go to the field of the Lord's harvest for another ingathering and harvest of souls.

The splendid spirit of the Herald is so good, the Saints are enjoying it, and I feel we can increase the subscription this year.

We have a splendid band of young people at Davidson, Oklahoma, and they seem to be willing to work with a hearty good will. This section of land comprises a strip about fifteen miles wide and over fifty miles long. This is the best cotton belt in the State. Brother Zenos Renfroe, a young Saint there, raised 146 bales of cotton last year and has the same acreage this year. There are so many families in that rich belt of land, it does one good to see them prosperous and willing to do their part in the service of the Lord. We need more such producers for Zion's weal.

Your coworker and brother,

HUBERT CASE.

Modesto, California

May 11.—The Saints here are going on as usual. There has been some sickness, but all are improving, for which we are thankful.

The Orioles are doing fine under the leadership of Sister Lottie B. Rose. They entertained the mothers, grandmothers, and aunts, on their birthday celebration to a lovely luncheon in the basement of the church. A short program was given, and the afternoon was pleasantly spent. Last Saturday they all went into the country by the river in the foothills where they enjoyed a picnic lunch. They stopped to see a pea huller shelling peas for the cannery, and a little farther along watched some prospectors digging for gold. All this was both entertaining and instructive to the girls. After gathering some wild flowers, they started home, arriving about five o'clock.

The Department of Recreation and Expression is doing fine. The lessons are studied and enjoyed. The programs of late have been given by classes. Next Sunday evening the men and boys are to furnish the program, along with a continued story which is being written by different members. This story has proved to be very interesting.

The Department of Women is holding regular sessions. Last week a circus came to town, and this department had a concession where they sold fried chicken and homemade cakes, pies, and strawberry shortcake to the circus people. The chicken and shortcake were especially appreciated. About thirty dollars was cleared. The department is making an ef—fort to raise sufficient to make a payment on their church. They are sparing no effort to accomplish their goal.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

There is a good attendance at all meetings, and a good spirit is felt. All are striving to live right and to accomplish all the good they can. The Saints are interested in the welfare of Zion and hope to see progress this year.

Cherokee, Iowa

May 25.—We are striving to keep our lights burning here, and we feel the Spirit of the Master is with us to bless as long as we try to improve our lives and work for the upbuilding of his glorious work. We are always blessed in our church services, and the prayer meetings are spiritual, even with small attendance of the Saints. If we would spend only one hour with Jesus every day, how much greater would our blessings be.

On May 1 the Sunday school held a get-together meeting in the church, and a social time was much enjoyed by all present. Short talks and songs were a feature of the evening, after which refreshments were served. The Sunday school is very active under the leadership of Brother Vernon Spence, and the attendance is growing every Sunday.

The Department of Recreation and Expression held a box social in Tourist Park May 22.

Special services were held in honor of the mothers on May 10. Cars were sent after mothers who had no way to come to services. All classes in Sunday school were taught by the men, and mothers were guests. A program was given by the school, and a men's choir furnished special songs. Elder E. L. Edwards was the speaker in the morning and W. W. Reeder in the evening. Both gave sermons in honor of mother. The attendance on this day was the best so far this season.

The local Sunday school will give a special program Friday evening, June 5, as the opening service for district conference which convenes here June 6. We are expecting a large attendance.

Pastor A. R. Crippen preached for the Saints at Storm Lake May 24. Services were held in the home of Brother and Sister Halberg, who have offered their home for services every two weeks. The priesthood from here will supply the speakers for these appointments.

Sister Eva Wedlock and son, formerly of Cameron, Missouri, were visitors at the morning services May 24, and Brother and Sister Calhoun and family and Brother and Sister Green and Sister Rick of Sioux City were here May 17.

Sister Crippen, wife of our pastor, had the misfortune to fall and injure her spine quite severely. She is unable to get out of the house at present. Grandma Bruce, who has been ill for some time, is in a critical condition at this time. Also Sister Frank Sheldon is quite ill, but she shows some improvement the past two days.

Brother and Sister Halberg, of Storm Lake, and Elder Moreni Traxler, of Lamoni, Iowa, attended sacramental service May 3. There was a large attendance, and the presence of the Spirit was much in evidence.

Sister Reeder entertained her Sunday school class May 18 in honor of Dorothy Reeder's fifth birthday. The little folks left Dorothy some nice gifts and wished her many happy birthdays. All report a splendid time.

Mallard Branch

Our services have been very good, especially the prayer service, which has been a source of strength to us.

On April 30 the Department of Women gave a surprise party in honor of Brother and Sister Cockefair. The evening was spent in singing and playing games, after which refreshments were served. Brother and Sister Cockefair were presented with a gift of remembrance. Brother Cockefair has been superintendent of the district Sunday schools and will be greatly missed by this department. They left for Albert Lea, Minnesota, May 5, where he will assist in farm work this summer. In the fall they will make their home in Independence, Missouri.

The Saints feel keenly the loss of Brother and Sister Cockefair, as they have always been active workers in the church. We pray God will bless them wherever they may be and that His Spirit will bless their new home.

Brother and Sister E. L. Edwards and son, of Pomeroy, Iowa, were guests at this party.

Brother and Sister Peterson and Sister Larson and their families were visitors here the morning of May 3. They often drive down from Albert City to worship with us.

On May 17 Sister Hill and family, of Ayrshire, and Brother and Sister Smith, niece and nephew of Sister Hill, of Independence, Missouri, were with us.

We had a fine parents' day program May 10, consisting of readings, solos, duets, and instrumental music, and a good sermon on "Parents" by Pastor Robert Fish.

Fanning, Kansas

The work here is moving along slowly but surely. The members are mostly farmers who are very busy putting in the crops, working long hours.

The Department of Recreation and Expression is slow in organizing.

Though the weather is rainy so much lately, there is good attendance at most of the meetings.

Brother Webbe, of Saint Joseph, Missouri, has filled Sunday appointments at Troy several Sundays lately.

District President Samuel Twombly attended the conference at Centralia May 2 and 3.

Brother R. L. Tilden is home from the hospital. He is much improved and feels grateful to our heavenly Father for his mercy and healing power. He was in the hospital six weeks.

Tulare, California

On Thursday, April 9, Elder A. J. Damron was called to Bakersfield to conduct the funeral service of Sister Ebenezer Burton.

The Temple Builders held a bazaar and food sale Friday and Saturday, April 10 and 11. On April 10 they held the bazaar which consisted of hand-painted bread boards, knives, and salt and pepper shakers to match, fancy aprons, book ends, fancy powder boxes, etc. On April 11 they held the food sale. We never have any trouble in selling our goods, as the people patronize us very well. On Saturday evening, when it was time to close the door everything had been sold, and a sum of $96 was realized. The girls worked very hard to make this bazaar the prettiest that was ever held in town, and it proved to be so.

A very beautiful Easter program was given Easter Sunday under the direction of Gertrude Damron.

The junior class of boys entertained the Religio with an Indian program, Sunday, April 19. They sat around their wigwam, telling stories and singing songs.

The Sunday school held a picnic Saturday, May 2, at the County Park. Boat riding was enjoyed on the lake. The most exciting feature of the day was a baseball game played by both old and young. A most tempting lunch was spread at noon. A social good time was enjoyed by all.

The primary class entertained the Religio with a Maypole drill May 3.

The Department of Women held a food sale Saturday, May 9. They had a good display of cakes, pies, dressed and fried chicken. The day proved very successful, and a sum of $35.27 was realized.

A very pretty Mothers' Day program was rendered by young people of the Sunday school arranged by Iva Powell and Cora Smith. An impressive sermon was preached at the eleven o'clock service by Elder H. C. Snively. His theme was, "What is home without a mother?"

Seven States Report Reception Early Morning K L D S Test

K L D S took the air on 441 meters at half past five the morning of May 26. During the program the power was gradually increased from 500 to about 900 watts. At first the transmission was not as good as it should have been, and about half past six the big modulator power tube was replaced with a new one which gave much better results. During the last five minutes the transmission was as good as could possibly be desired. New power tubes seem to require "seasoning in" before they give best results.

The seven States that reported favorably on the test were: Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri, and Illinois. The daylight range of the 1000-watt station on 441 meters is thus quite sure to include these States. The night range has been indicated to include both coasts, under favorable seasonal and atmospheric conditions.

An interesting result of the test was the request by quite a large number of listeners for a regular early morning broadcast schedule. This matter will be taken into consideration, and a report will be made in an early issue of the HERALD.

The test program was broadcast both from the new radio studio and from the Stone Church. Brother Robert Miller played a number of very fine selections on the Stone Church organ, and Brother George Anway, our star radio tenor, sang several groups of old-time songs. The Duo-Art furnished a number of piano selections.

It is practicable to publish only a small portion of the reports received on the early morning test. A great number of letters and cards were received, giving much valuable information to those in charge of K L D S. Listeners do a real service for the church radio by reporting occasionally. Most of the reports received are from nonmembers. Latter Day Saints should write more often.

Some of the Reports

Cape Junction, Missouri.—We wish to thank you for your early 6 to 7 test program. It came in fine on loud speaker while we were at breakfast. Have not been able to get K L D S on the low wave length, but the new 441 meters came in fine. Hope the Government will allow you 441 meters, 1,000 watts.—W. B. Cushman and Family.

Ramona, Oklahoma.—We picked you up this morning, and the test program was just fine. Hope you will continue to give us the early morning programs. Let the good work go on.—G. E. Red.

Nebraska City.—I am pleased to inform you that your early morning test program was a success. I got tuned in at ten minutes of six, and from that time until six it came in fair to good. Later it came in fine and dandy. At times I believe it came in as loud and clear as K O A W, Omaha.—O. W. Sanatt, 1213 Third Avenue.

Logan, Iowa.—Just a note this morning to tell you we enjoyed the morning program very much. It came through very clear and strong. From our kitchen with a dining room between, it sounded as though the singer were seated at our own piano in our living room. We really are very much in favor of a breakfast program, for I'm sure it has started a wash day right here!—Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Hanneman.

Princeville, Illinois.—I did not receive the first part of the program very well, but it seemed to get better as the time went by, and at the last was coming in very well.—W. M. Keck.

Ramoni, Iowa.—I listened in this morning before going to work, and I was surprised to notice how clear your program came in. I could hear you nearly as loud as I often get Des Moines, using a one-tube Crosley. Wish to congratulate Mr. Miller on his fine organ solos.—E. Dewey White.

Ravenwood, Missouri.—Your test program on Tuesday morning came in loud and clear, just as if you were in the same room. It is 100 per cent better than your old wave length.—Ben Hawley.

Council Bluffs, Iowa.—Your test program coming in very fine this morning on 441 meters. Two of our B batteries are dead on our 5-tube set, but you are coming in better than ever before. We do not experience any of the fading this morning [Note: On 265 meters this fading is mostly due to interfering waves from other stations on similar wave length. ]—A. R. C.] that has always troubled us before.—Mr. and Mrs. Ed. F. Anderson and daughter Velma, R. 2, Box 80A.

Great Bend, Kansas.—Picked you up this morning about half past six, and wish to congratulate you on your program of old-time songs. It suited our mood exactly. The program came in fine without a flaw, even better than Kansas City.—Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Brough.

Stroud, Oklahoma.—I will drop you a line to let you know your six o'clock program is coming in as clear as a bell on loudspeaker with plenty of volume. Congratulations to Robert Miller and George Anway. We hope you will be on the air quite often with a breakfast program, for you surely come in loud and clear.—W. B. Cooper and Family.

Canton, Illinois.—Program came in fairly good but not quite as strong as K S D (Saint Louis).—John Hardin.

Prescott, Iowa.—As I was waiting this morning for the men folks to come to breakfast, I thought I would tune in K Y W. Your station came in fine and clear, and I waited to see what was going on, as I never heard your station mentioned before. Thought I would tell you we heard you good. Will tune in on Tuesday and Thursday evening programs. Give best regards to Doctor Messenger and family; they are old residents of Prescott.—Mrs. N. J. Kline.

Alva, Oklahoma.—Your test program coming in good, but not as loud and clear as the midnight test. Am sorry I haven't time to stay for the whole program which will last about an hour yet, and it may clear up considerably in that time. You just announced you were not on full power; however, it is clearing up fine.—Robert Huda.

Stone Church

Independence, Missouri, June 2.—The Sunday school attendance was 1,130. At the eleven o'clock hour Doctor F. Scott McBride, general superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of America, discoursed powerfully and convincingly on the greatness of the Eighteenth Amendment. Prohibition is the will of the people, and there can be no successful reaction against it. Public opinion must be organized in order to maintain its position. The churches must ever be ready and willing to meet the challenge of the wet element.

The afternoon prayer meeting carried on in its usual way.

The Religious at six o'clock had an attendance of 440. The question was discussed as to where and when it should be conducted during the summer months. It was decided to continue the matter until next Friday night at eight o'clock. A large class of probably one hundred eighty greeted Bishop Carmichael in an earnest desire to learn about stewardships. Some of the thoughts gleaned are that in working out stewardships there are two motivations—one for profit and one for service to the church. We cannot afford to lose either of them. Everyone should work for profit with a view to the ultimate good of all. The church is divided into two great parts, the Order of Melchisedec and the Order of Enoch—the one the spiritual, the other the temporal group. Both are in existence under the great “law of need” and are equally important in their mission. The gap should be bridged, and they should work shoulder to shoulder. There is no aristocracy of the priesthood above the aristocracy of the earnest and consecrated toiler. This separation is the cause of darkness in the church. The same principles actuate each group: 1, need; 2, gifts and calling; 3, wisdom and revelation; 4, vote of the people; 5, laying on of hands or setting apart. The two groups must be dovetailed in all their activities. Section 70 of Doctrine and Covenants should be studied.

The high school graduates were addressed in the evening by President F. M. Smith. They occupied the choir loft and were a fine-looking group of young people. There were fifty-six of our graduates, which is about sixty-eight per cent of those graduated in Independence. Two of the young men made creditable speeches on the outlook of youth and the redemption of Zion: “Show us what to do, and we will do it.” If interested, youth can accomplish anything. President Smith's remarks were inspiring. We compel our youth to great tasks. Through their high school work they learn to study and prepare for higher achievement in college and university work. “If it lay within my power, I would enable all the boys and girls in the church to go as far as their ambition would lead them in education—to develop their latent capacities and talents—all for the good of the church. Let this thought ever be in your heart, How can I take back to Zion what I have learned?” Lay broad foundations. Learn to control yourselves—self-control is a great thing. Learn your limitations. Become expert. Go to the markets of learning in all the world and bring in treasures for Zion. Where is there a goal so attractive to youth, so free from sordidness, as the church offers? What in all the world can so appeal to them as the romanticism of an iridescent Zion! The accomplishment of this goal to the glory of God is the redemption of Zion.

The Presidency has been widely separated this week. President F. M. Smith has been at headquarters but was called to Omaha the latter part of the week to preach the funeral sermon of Mrs. Roland W. Scott. He left Tuesday morning for the opening of the Young People's Convention at Lamoni.

Brother Elbert has passed the last ten days at various points in the eastern States and Canada.

Brother McDowell is busy in Lamoni preparing for the opening of the Young People's Convention June 4.

The Department of Women will hold their regular monthly meeting Friday afternoon June 5, at half past two, in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church. Mrs. Bertha Donaldson Mader, superintendent of the home economics department of the Department of Women, will talk on the practical things a mother may teach her girls during vacation. Mrs. R. D. Ettenhouser will give a similar talk about the boys. A discussion in which all are invited to take part will follow each talk. Come and make this a real live meeting. At four o'clock the local W. C. T. U. will hold its regular monthly business meeting.

Second Independence

Elder T. W. Williams was the speaker Sunday at eleven o'clock. He gave the large audience a splendid Memorial Day sermon.

The evening sermon was by Bishop J. A. Becker. At this service a vote was taken on the question of abandoning the Sunday evening service during the summer season. The sentiment was divided, but not very strong, and the matter will receive further consideration at the hands of the priesthood and membership.

Monday evening the choir members and some friends spent the evening with Brother and Sister Lawrence Nave on Washington Street, enjoying a splendid season of social intercourse.

Brother and Sister Frank Veenstra, on their way to Holland, were last heard from at New York City, well and happy, looking forward with joy to their gospel missionary work in the land of their nativity.

Brother W. A. Welton has been chosen custodian of properties, to succeed Brother Clarence Martin, who was compelled to resign because of his recent removal to a place some distance southeast of Independence.

Liberty Street

The usual services were held at this church on Sunday. In the morning Elder C. B. Hartshorn spoke, using for his subject, “Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?”

In the evening Brother Frank B. Almond, missionary, and recently chosen as editor of the Autumn Leaves, used for his subject, “What is religion, anyway?” Both sermons were very fine.

On May 27 the funeral service for the infant son of Brother and Sister Harold Bowman was held at half past ten in charge of J. M. Baker, with sermon by Elder N. Carmichael. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. The sympathy of the Saints goes with the bereaved father and mother.

Enoch Hill

Last Sunday we were glad to have with us Bishop A. Carmichael, who occupied the morning hour. His sermon was very impressive and we hope to have him with us again soon. Bishop C. J. Hunt was the speaker at seven o'clock and in his own inimitable way preached an instructive sermon.

Last Saturday the Saints of this community and many friends gathered on the church lawn and enjoyed a strawberry festival. Many games were indulged in and the spirit of comradeship was very apparent. The proceeds go to the local church building debt. This event, along with a similar one held earlier in the week, netted a substantial amount for this purpose. Social functions are to be held each month during the summer to further help in this project.

Our Children's Day exercises are to be held the third Sunday in June. The committees are busy organizing, and much enthusiasm is being shown on the part of the children. They surely love this day when an opportunity is given for them to display their talents and portray in their simple way their ideals and hopes. Several are to be baptized on this day.

A band of our young people have arranged to go out to Blue Springs next Sunday to the sacramental service there. They will go fasting and praying. Brother Amos E. Allen, who has charge of the Blue Springs Mission, will be glad to welcome them. These young people are being led by Brother Joseph Martin.

Englewood

Services at Englewood church have been about as usual. Recent speakers have been J. E. Warne, R. S. Salyards, John Ely, and Frank Mussell.

The evening of June 27 the Department of Women will open a country store of 1880 at the home of Lyman W. Fike, Fourteenth and Hardy Streets. The store will open at six o'clock, and everything one could wish for will be there for sale, wearing apparel, notions, baked goods, groceries, canned and fresh vegetables, fireworks, candy, and ice cream. Later in the evening a program that would be suitable for the opening of a store in 1880 will be given, and a collection will be taken to be applied on the building fund.

The Englewood Saints are very much in need of a church building, so everyone who can should cooperate by buying their supplies from the Englewood sisters on that Saturday evening.

Graceland commencement occupies the thoughts of Lamoni just at present. The baccalaureate sermon was preached Sunday evening, May 31, to the Graceland graduates. Apostle Paul M. Hanson delivered this address. Brother Hanson also preached at the eleven o'clock hour, in which he beautifully pictured the background for many of the teachings of Christ. His recent visit to the Holy Land enabled Brother Hanson to make his listeners vividly picture that which was presented.

Two children were blessed at this meeting, the little son of Brother and Sister Harry Lorance, and the baby daughter of Brother and Sister Louis Miller. The little son of Sister Wayve Monroe Frye was also blessed, this ceremony taking place at the home of her parents.

All the Sunday school classes, which had been arranged especially to meet the needs of the college students, were summing up the year's work in the morning classes. A new adult class of fifty or sixty members has been recently organized in the Sunday school. This class is for parents, both fathers and mothers, in which they study along the line of their children's work. In the evening a program was given by the Holy Land enabled Brother Hanson to make his listeners vividly picture that which was presented.

Religio Meetings at Chariton

From the Lamoni Chronicle is taken the following clipping concerning the Religio convention held at Chariton recently:

"The locals of the northern part of the Lamoni Stake, including Centerville, Lucas, Hiteman, Creston, and Chariton, joined in holding a Religio convention at Chariton Friday, Saturday, and Sunday. They were assisted by several members of the Lamoni local and others from Lamoni. The convention was under the supervision of the stake president, Fred Condit.

"On Friday evening a mixed program was given by the northern locals, assisted by Misses Dorothy Gunsolley and Dorothy Prall of Lamoni in a piano duet. The music of the convention was under the direction of Mrs. O. O. Brown of Chariton.

"The program Saturday consisted of prayer meeting in the morning followed by class work. At this hour Mrs. L. S. Wight talked on 'Recreation in the home' and Mrs. Ward L. Christy on 'Recreation in the church.' The afternoon was devoted to a round table on 'The function of the Religio,' led by Mrs. Wight, and a recreational hour. In the evening the Chariton Saints tendered a reception to visitors.

"Sunday was a big day, the attendance being the largest of any day, though all meetings were well attended.

"Prayer service at 8:15, Sunday school at 9:45, preaching at eleven by L. G. Holloway. Evan Fry and Frances Norris assisted the choir in the rendition of a duet.

"At noon a big dinner was served in the basement by the Chariton people, as also at the evening hour. In the afternoon Mrs. Christy talked on 'The growth of the Religio.' In the evening at 7:30 a musical concert was given by the combined northern stake choirs under the direction of Mrs. O. O. Brown. 'Looking forward to Zion' was the subject of the sermon of the evening by W. E. Prall. Besides those mentioned on the program, Apostles J. F. Garver and D. T. Williams and Miss Erlene Holloway of Lamoni were in attendance."
Holms Stake

Holden

Our high school graduated forty-two this year, five of whom were from Latter Day Saint families. They were Chilton K. Ross, son of Brother and Sister I. M. Ross; Gladys Beebe, daughter of Brother and Sister G. W. Beebe; Daisy Spence, daughter of Brother and Sister James Spence; Arlene Weir, daughter of Brother and Sister D. K. Weir; and Ruby Turnbow, who is the daughter of our departed and highly esteemed brother and sister, Doctor W. B. Turnbow and wife. Chilton Ross was among the seven. All of our young people have done good work. Sickness and other matters interfered with the work of some. The superintendent, W. H. Ryle, and his corps of teachers have rendered very acceptable service.

Miss Pauline Millender, of Independence, Missouri, who taught in our schools the past year, was reelected and also elected as one of the teachers at Independence. She has accepted the latter. In addition to the increase in salary, she will have the privilege of living with “mother.”

Apostle Clyde F. Ellis was with us on the 24th, occupying both morning and evening. The evening sermon was illustrated with slides, most of which were from pictures taken by Brother Ellis during his eight years of missionary work in the Society Islands. In the afternoon he spoke at the home chapel, using the slides. His visit and sermons were enjoyed by the Saints very much.

Sister Lucile Burroughs received her degree of Bachelor of Arts from the State Teachers’ College at Warrensburg Thursday night.

Knobnoster

Elder Frank Goode, who has acted as pastor for the past two years, resigned recently, and Elder R. E. Burgess was selected by the stake presidency to take temporary charge until an election can be arranged. A number of our members went to Warrensburg on the 17th. Special services were held there on that date, it being the ninth anniversary of the organization of the church there. A good time was reported.

Elder I. M. Ross worshiped with us the 24th. Elder W. S. Macrae was with us also and occupied the pulpit at both morning and evening services. Lola and Flossie Henderson, daughters of Brother and Sister R. B. Henderson, were among the graduates from our high school. Knobnoster has a special first-class high school, and we are gratified to see our young people taking advantage of their opportunities.

Marshall

Brother C. L. House and family were with us on the 24th. Brother House spoke to a full house at eleven o’clock. He baptized Brother Streeter Owsley in the afternoon. A very spiritual prayer service was experienced in the evening. The word of prophecy was manifest. Brother House spoke again at eight o’clock. Two were baptized last Sunday by Brother Levi Phelps. Brother William Mitchell was the speaker at eleven o’clock. All seem to be striving to do their best to make the work progress. Brother H. G. Thayer is not very strong yet but is some better.

Bates City

Brethren Walter and E. A. Curtis have purchased a farm near our little town and will become members of our group. We are pleased to welcome them and their families. Brother E. A. Curtis is one of our stake missionaries.

Brother Frank E. Ford has been away from us for two years, being superintendent of schools of Lamoni, Iowa, during that time. The Saints are happy to have Brother Ford and family with them again. Brother Ford has business interests here which require his attention. The pastor, Brother G. W. Hancock, reports, “We are at peace one with another and, I believe, doing the best we can under the circumstances.”

Buckner

Our attendance at Sunday school and Religio is very good, with fine interest. Our Department of Music is improving. The pastor ventures to state that he thinks Buckner has as good attendance and interest as any group, if not better. What do the other pastors think?

Charles W. Scofield has located between Atherton and Courtney. We are in hopes that Brother Scofield can arrange to be with and give encouragement to the Saints at Sibley. They have no resident member of the priesthood there. Brother Scofield is a priest, Elder George Jenkins was the speaker at Buckner on the 24th.

Sedalia

We were glad to have Brother J. E. Bozarth of Warrensburg with us May 24. He occupied at the morning hour. Brother James King spoke in the evening, giving a splendid talk. We are having an increased attendance at Sunday school, and there is good interest in Religio. Our choir has been reorganized and is doing good work. The Department of Women is studying church history.

The Saints were made glad Sunday afternoon to see five more souls led into the waters of baptism by our pastor, Brother Rodger. They were Mrs. Napier, wife of Brother Roy Napier, and Bernice, May, Leona, and Jack Kirkhart. These were confirmed at the evening service under the hands of Brethren A. A. Weaver, J. E. Bozarth, and R. F. Moorman.

The Saints are looking forward with happy anticipation to the coming stake conference, which is to be held here June 20 and 21.

Nauvoo, Illinois

May 29.—Our oldest member, Sister Tamzie Newcomb, passed away on Sunday, May 3, at the age of eighty-five years. She was well known throughout the church, having held membership in Nova Scotia, Boston, Independence, Philadelphia, Kirtland, and Nauvoo. She was the mother of ten children, eight of whom are living, all but two being active workers in the church. Her home was always open to the missionaries. Her favorite pastime was piecing quilts and holders, which she presented to her relatives and friends, the Old Folks’ Home, and the missionary bed in the Mansion House. Hers was a life well spent, and her counsels will long be remembered.

Mothers’ Day was observed with special music and talks by various ones. At the Religio hour, several were called upon to tell of some special impression left upon their minds by their mother. It was found that the greatest desire of the majority of these mothers had been realized, that their children might be actively engaged in carrying on this work.

On Sunday evening, May 17, the baccalaureate sermon for the graduating class of the Nauvoo high school was preached at the Presbyterian church by our pastor, Elder Berve. Brother Berve used as his text, “Know thyself, oh man,” and the class motto, “Be on the square.” His message received much favorable comment. Two of our girls were among the graduates, Inez and Gayle Sherman of Rock Creek, who have been attending the Nauvoo high school the past term.
On May 28 the graduating exercises of the grade school were held in the new school building. Of the three graduates, one was Mary Lee, adopted daughter of Brother and Sister Lee; and Floyd Henderson, adopted son of Brother and Sister Henderson.

Our prayer meetings continue to be of a high order, and all are abundantly blessed by the outpouring of God's Spirit. At a recent meeting, Brother Berve, under the direction of the Spirit, appointed Florence Ada Sanford historian of the Nauvoo District. Sister Florence has just completed this summer a special course in successful teaching at the Columbia School and has been elected teacher of the primary grade in the town school for the coming year. She will take a special course in primary work at the western Illinois State Teachers' College this summer.

Among the recent visitors to Nauvoo were Sister E. L. Traver of Boston; Brother Gunn and wife of Clinton; Elder H. A. Higgins and wife of Saint Louis; and Brother Ohlert, missionary to Germany. Brother Ohlert gave a very interesting talk at the Wednesday night prayer meeting, on the subject of the work in Germany, and he also met with the young people of the town at their regular meeting of the Young People's Christian Association, and gave a lecture on his travels which was greatly enjoyed.

Bevier, Missouri

May 27.—Priest Carl Weeks and Benny Hepple, superintendent and assistant superintendent of the Sunday school, have gone to Glen Ellyn, Illinois, also Brother George Davis. They are employed there.

Priest Ivor Surridge is located at Independence, Kansas. This leaves the branch with only one elder, one priest, one teacher, and one deacon.

Sister Ellen Tanner of Des Moines came here to attend the school commencement exercises last week. Three active members of the Sunday school were among the high school graduates in the class of 1925. Josephine Muncey was the valedictorian of the class, and she and Opal Riley were among the honor graduates; Edna Dixon was also a member of the class.

The junior choir, under the leadership of Sister Fred Thomas, gave a fine musical program on Mother's Day. The church was filled to capacity, and all who heard the program highly commended it.

Sister Elizabeth Morgan of Kansas City was a recent visitor.

Brothers and Sister Joseph B. Thomas left here May 26 for Independence, Missouri, to visit their daughter, Sister Marvin L. Landers.

Sister Archie F. Smith and two daughters, Annalee and Marybeth, left for their home at Oakland, California, after a two months' visit in Bevier. Her sister, Mrs. L. O. Mason, accompanied her and will visit in California for several months. They left May 28.

Brothers Sam and Arthur Perry have returned from Glen Ellyn, Illinois, where they were employed for some time.

Bevier mines have been closed down for fourteen months, and there is a general exodus from Bevier.

Elder C. E. Harpe, of Lamoni, Iowa, has spent the past weeks nursing an eye that was quite seriously injured when one of the many bugs of the season collided with it. The care of a specialist and many hours of suffering have followed the accident, not to mention an interrupted program of missionary activity. The eye is improving, however.

Appointment of Bishop's Agents

In the death of Bishop George P. Lambert the church lost an excellent representative and counselor, and his family a noble father.

His demise makes the appointment of an agent necessary. Elder A. L. Sanford, of Nauvoo, Illinois, is hereby appointed as Bishop's agent for the Nauvoo District, the appointment to take effect at once, subject to the ratification of the next district conference. We solicit for Brother Sanford the hearty support of the membership of the district, feeling assured they can have full confidence in his integrity and his consecration to the work assigned to him.

PASTORAL NOTICES

To the Saints of West Virginia: Having been again appointed by General Conference to local work in West Virginia, and realizing the weight of responsibility resting upon me and the necessity of close cooperation among all the workers of the church, I make this appeal to all, and especially to the priesthood, to take advantage of every opportunity to build up the cause of God as far as possible, teaching the gospel to every creature.

To those who are isolated and have not the privilege of meeting with branches, I extend an invitation to write me so we may get closer together and have the benefit of correspondence that we cannot get by personal contact.

I am hoping this year to see West Virginia come to the front as never before and would urge everyone to reconstitute himself to this glorious work and make a greater effort for its advancement in the future than ever before.

Thomas Newton, District President.

CLARKE'S, WEST VIRGINIA, 416 Stealey Avenue.

To Saints and Friends in Spokane District; Greeting: Having been appointed to labor in Spokane District, I take this method of inviting the cooperation of all who will assist in the advancing of the cause of the Master among those who have not yet heard the angel message; also in building up the work among the people of God. We have been informed through Doctrine and Covenants in sections 132, 154, and 185, that the hastening time is upon us, and I feel that with the assistance of the Spirit of the Lord and the Spirit of the Saints, things are looking so bright in the work of God in the future that there is no time like the present to help the world to see the glory of the kingdom of heaven.

W. P. Bootman.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, General Delivery.

To the Members of the Arkansas and Louisiana District: Greeting: Having been appointed to labor in your district this year, I take this means of getting acquainted with you and letting you know I am in the field and at work. We are no doubt all profoundly interested in the work of the church, and I am sure all are willing and anxious to do something for its advancement. I hope to be able to cooperate with you to this end, and if possible aid in advancing the interests of the work here.

The work is ours; no one man can do it by himself, but if we learn to work together and trust that we can become successful in the work that is intrusted to us. Our task is one that requires the best there is in us, and we ought to avail ourselves of every opportunity afforded us to advance the work that is intrusted to us.

We learn by doing things, and we become strong as a result of exercise, so I trust we will be able to do all that the work demands of us and exercise ourselves so as to become strong and robust in the work of the church. The members of the church, in turn, must work so that those who sit in darkness may be brought to the light of the glorious gospel of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

I am going to give you the best there is in me, and I trust that you will use the means within your reach for the good of the work, and let him that is called into the ministry do his best to advance the cause of truth among men. If each does his part, the burden will be made light, and the work will be accomplished. May God bless and prosper us in our work here this year.

Very truly,

Graceland Commencement and the Young People’s Convention

It is always a pleasure for a former citizen of Lamoni to revisit the little city; and this pleasure is enhanced when the visitor is a Graceland alumnus and the time of the visit is at commencement season.

On the 2d, the undersigned went to Lamoni, and on reaching there went out to the College Campus, where in the “Old Building” we had “conferences,” board meeting, etc.

In the evening, in the basement of the new “gym” and Convention Hall the annual college banquet was held, a time when “old grads” enjoy renewing old acquaintances and forming new ones. As the first graduate of Graceland, I occupied a place on the program as a speaker.

On Wednesday, the 3d, I was glad to participate in the closing exercises of the school for the year, the chapel exercises from ten to half past twelve, an occasion made interesting by conferring of honor awards, the amenities contingent upon the retiring of faculty members, etc., news of which will doubtless appear elsewhere.

In the evening, at the commencement exercises, I had the pleasurable task assigned me of introducing the orator of the occasion, Doctor E. W. Starbuck, of the State University of Iowa, a man well known in educational circles, especially in the field of philosophy. His able address carried a valuable message to the audience.

On Thursday morning the convention opened, and in its first meeting, held in the “gym,” a spirit of happiness prevailed, and I found pleasure in greeting in the name of the church. A fine tone was given to the meeting by the splendid address of Doctor Starbuck on “Thrice born souls.”

At noon on Thursday I left Lamoni to return to Kansas City, and after a few hours at the office in Independence Friday morning, left by motor car for Kansas City, and with four young people left my home in Kansas City about half past one en route to Lamoni, going via Cameron, Winston, Pattonsburg, and Bethany. We entered Lamoni a little after eight in the evening and found the convention program well under way, with delegates coming in from every direction.

A fine forward-looking spirit prevails among those attending, and the plainly apparent deep-seated desire to know more about the program of the church cheers us in the hope that soon the corps of workers will be greatly fortified.

“Brother Floyd,” busy as a bee, is happy with this group of splendid young people around him to teach.

“LAMONI, IOWA, June 6. F. M. S.

Reorganization of Lamoni Stake Presidency and Bishopric

It was my privilege to be associated with President Floyd M. McDowell and three members of the Quorum of Twelve in presiding over a special conference of the Lamoni Stake, Sunday, May 17, held for the purpose of reorganizing the stake presidency and bishopric. These changes were made necessary by various events that had disturbed the official routine of the stake. We sometimes in our more lugubrious moments sing, “Change and decay in all around I see,” and if we are particularly lugubrious we put the emphasis on decay. However, change is quite as much an accompaniment of life and growth as it is of decay. When I visit Lamoni the impression I get is that of life and growth.

There are two institutions represented in Lamoni which in their very nature distinguish Lamoni from any other comparatively small midwestern village. The first of these is the ecclesiastical institution—the church with all of its religious ideals and doctrine, together with her traditions which go back to the time when the committee on location drove out on the wild western prairies of Iowa, put a spade down in the soil, and having turned the virgin sod, said, The soil is good; we will plant the church here! And they planted the church there, and it grew and thrived, and from there as church headquarters radiated out many influences for good to the church through the world. From there missionaries went to all parts of the world. From there the church periodicals went to many homes. From there has gone a steady stream of consecrated and devoted men and women to build up the kingdom of God in various places.

The second institution to which I refer is Graceland College. This institution furnishes an intellectual stimulus which, properly balanced with spiritual ideals and influences, renders the atmosphere of Lamoni dynamic both intellectually and spiritually. One has but to spend a very short time in Lamoni to feel and sense that evidence of life and growth. So we may as well sing, "Change and growth in all around I see."

President Joseph Smith himself presided at the organization of the Lamoni Stake. The people at that time were blessed with the presence of that good and revered man. It has been my lot to be present at each change in the presidency that has succeeded since the day of organization. On looking back over the history of Lamoni Stake I am impressed with the thought that as a whole the stake has been well organized. It has been well officered. The standing of the church in Iowa is most excellent. Her standing is good in financial quarters. It is enviable in educational circles throughout the State. It is excellent in church circles. There may still be some narrow-minded bigotry in various localities, but as a rule the church stands high in the estimation of the people throughout Iowa. That fact is in harmony with the prediction made by Joseph Smith, that if the Saints were wise and careful God would give them grace and favor in the eyes of the people. This grace and favor have been won by adherence to the true ideals of citizenship laid down by Joseph Smith and exemplified by him when he lived in Lamoni as one of her citizens. These ideals have been carried forward largely by the official force as well as membership of the stake.

There may have been fiascos in various places, where some trusted man has either gone into apostasy or perhaps had a moral lapse or even become involved in questionable financial procedure, but the record of the stake officials in Lamoni, both presidency and bishopric, has been above reproach. The people of the stake have not found it necessary to lie awake nights for fear their representative men would betray their confidence. This is not to say that those men have not had their personal faults and made various mistakes. That probably would be true, going back to the day when Captain John Smith came to Lamoni and was installed as president of the stake. When he began to issue instructions many thought that there was one sea captain who was giving orders in the wrong place, and the sooner he got off the boat the better. But after he had been with us for a little while no one wished him to leave the boat. And so all down through the line, without doubt there have been times when there was opportunity for criticism. But those men succeeded because the great majority of the members have been willing to overlook their faults, and recognizing their excellent qualities have gotten behind them with their moral and financial support and helped them to succeed. On that basis only can stake and district and branch officers win out in their work.

Brother Cyril E. Wight, president of the stake, found it necessary to resign and take up secular work in order to relieve himself of certain financial burdens which he felt in honor bound to meet and which he would not ask the church to assume. He makes this move with the intention of returning to active church work as soon as the burden is relieved, and in the meantime will give all the time that he can to helping the work locally in Kansas City where he has employment.

Brother Albert Carmichael, bishop of Lamoni Stake, was called to the Presiding Bishopric at the late conference, hence found it necessary to leave Lamoni. At the special conference Sunday morning, May 17, the resignations of these two men were accepted by the congregation.

Brother W. E. Prall was nominated for the office of president of the stake. The nomination was approved, and he in turn stated as his selection for counselors David E. Dowker, formerly of Des Moines, and Roy Cheville, connected with Graceland College. These nominations also were approved. Brother Prall has been a member of the stake presidency for a number of years, knows the needs of the stake, knows the various branches, and understands the routine work of the stake presidency. He is well qualified as an executive and administrator and stands high in the estimation of the people of Lamoni. Brother Dowker comes to them as a new man, but brings to them special talent as a pastor, as a personal worker in the homes of the Saints. Brother Cheville is a young man, and his contribution probably will be to the young people in Graceland College, to whom he will be in a sense a student pastor. He has really occupied that position in an informal way for some time and is loved and respected by them, and will thus in an official way join the stake presidency with the important work to be done at Graceland College.

Bishop A. B. Phillips was nominated as stake bishop, and having been sustained by the vote of the people he chose A. J. Yarrington as counselor. Brother Yarrington for some time has been counselor to Bishop Carmichael, and so understands the financial work of the stake and will be of great help to Brother Phillips in his new and important post.

The special conference was very pleasant and ha-monious and spiritual, and it is pleasing to be able to report that the vote in the case of each one of the five men above mentioned was unanimous. There was not a dissenting vote in any instance. Not only was there no dissenting vote, but the vote was representative and enthusiastic, very few indeed refraining from voting.

At the afternoon session an ordination meeting was held. This was made impressive, as should be in such an important work. A short ordination sermon was delivered by Apostle J. A. Gillen. Prayer was offered by President Floyd M. McDowell, and the Saints joined in singing, "Jesus, I my cross have taken." It fell to my lot to deliver to these men the charge on behalf of the church and admonish them that it would be their province to keep unsullied the banner of Christ and maintain the trust that had so ably been kept by others; in kindness and humility but with firmness to administer the affairs of their charge; to reveal God to the people from the printed text betimes, but also in harmony with the statement that "the Word became flesh and dwelt among men" to endeavor to reveal the word of God in their own persons and lives.

The men were ordained under the hands of Brethren F. M. McDowell, J. A. Gillen, J. F. Garver, D. T. Williams, and the undersigned.

The people of Lamoni seemed to feel happy in their conference, and the general sentiment throughout the stake seemed to be that they had secured a well-balanced, well-organized working force in both the presidency and bishopric. The selections met with universal approval, and the stake looks forward to active and progressive work.

KLDS Passes Class B Inspection

A telegram received June 6 from the radio supervisor's office advised that KLDS passed the Class B inspection. A letter received the following Monday stated that the supervisor's report and recommendation must go through the department channels at Washington, and that this would likely consume ten days to two weeks.

The telegram was construed to give authority to proceed on 441 meters, 1,000 watts, for which the station was inspected, and KLDS broadcast Sunday, June 7, on the new wave length. Since receiving the radio supervisor's letter the broadcaster has again been adjusted to 500 watts, 268 meters. It will be necessary to wait another week or two until the Government's red tape has run its course. Probably this will be before Sunday, June 21, and by that date KLDS should be permanently on the air, using 1,000 watts on 441 meters.

ARTHUR B. CHURCH.

What Some Are Doing

Apostles Garver, Edwards, and D. T. Williams are working at the Young People's Convention.

All of the First Presidency are helping conduct the Young People's Convention, Brother McDowell being the director of activities, while Brothers Frederick M. and Elbert A. Smith are lecturing and preaching, and assisting in various ways.

Bishop Israel A. Smith is finishing some legal work for the church, and is also engaged largely in personal business affairs. At present he has offices in the Battery Building.

Pastor Roy V. Hopkins writes from Dahinda, Illinois, June 2, stating that he is still improving; that because of plenty of exercise, fresh air, and sunshine, he rests quite well. He is impatient to be at work; remembers his friends and coworkers; asks an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

Bishop James F. Keir is engaged in the hotel business at Pleasant Hill, southeast of Independence, about half way to Holden. He has purchased the Tucker Inn and is enjoying a good patronage.

Elder B. F. Creel and Sister Creel are working hard among the Indians on the Omaha Reservation, having come into possession of a team of wonderful farm horses with which to do their work. They are happy and fully occupied.

Pastor C. Ed. Miller is trying some new methods in conducting the office work of the city of Zion, and finds a heavy demand on his time from the Graphic Arts Bureau. This bureau is furnishing lantern slides to many of the pastors and missionaries of the church.

Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire has been at home quite continuously since General Conference, but was in Saint Louis a few days of last week, returning to Independence Tuesday morning. He expects to leave for New Jersey in the near future, where he will take a vacation of a couple months before engaging in active business.

Bishop A. Carmichael is in Lamoni lecturing in convention and preparing to move his household effects to Independence. He will likely be at his desk early next week.

Apostles Gillen and Ellis left last week for the West, Brother Gillen going to Los Angeles, California, Brother Ellis stopping in Utah and afterward proceeding to Berkeley and points in northern California.

Evangelist Frederick G. Pitt is in the Battle Creek Sanitarium building up for a second operation. A setback after the former operation occurred some two weeks ago, and from this the doctors think he will soon recover, especially if cooler weather continues. His friends are hopeful and ask for the prayers of the Saints.
Young People in Convention

The young people of the church are solidly behind the proposition of redeeming Zion.

This is the plain declaration of youthful representatives from all parts of the church, as in convention assembled they adopted as their slogan, "This year we sail Zionward, which is our course."

For two days and nights the rain had poured down incessantly. Roads had become impassable, washouts along the railroad lines held up the trains, around the campus of Graceland the mud and drenching rain presented a discouraging picture to President F. M. McDowell and the others who had worked night and day for weeks to make the convention a success.

Yet on Thursday morning, June 4, the large crowd that waited in the Convention Hall for the opening message, gave evidence that nothing could daunt the daring spirits of our young people in their determination to go on to Zion. J. Pluvius gave up the fight. The clouds dispersed, the sky cleared, the sun shone out in all its splendor, and the Third International Young People's Convention began under a most auspicious promise.

At ten o'clock the convention opened, Apostle John F. Garver offering the opening prayer. Following this, President Frederick M. Smith, in a few well-chosen words, formally welcomed the young people in the name of the church. He said he welcomed them to the convention for the vision it would give them of the task that lies before us, for the mutual encouragement that their presence would be to each other, and for the purpose that they might find here their responsibility as future leaders of the church and take up the work with fresh vigor and nobler aspirations. The response his address received from the young people gave evidence of their loyalty to the ideals of which President Smith is the church's spokesman.

Then followed a solo, "Thanks be to God," sung with deep feeling by Sister Aliene Brackenbury Walden. As soon as the applause had died away, President McDowell, as chairman of the convention, called upon Elder Lonzo Jones, dean of men at Graceland, to introduce the principal speaker of the day, Doctor E. D. Starbuck of Iowa University.

Doctor Starbuck is one of the Nation's distinguished educators. A tall, gray-haired man of masterly appearance, he held the close attention of the audience for one hour, presenting in quiet, simple language the subject of, "Thrice-born souls."

It was a splendid address, and sounded the keynote of the convention. "To lose one's self in one's job." "To find the vision of your task as it relates to the universal forces of God." This was the central thought of an address that fully repaid the efforts of the young people who heard it.

Announcements of the different study courses were then made, arrangements for the day's work followed, and with the benediction of Apostle Garver, the convention took on its various activities.

The Young People's Convention is more like a summer school than a conference. Church leaders are scarce, and a convention of training in the problems and ideals of the church is the method devised to increase the supply. The program includes the following courses of study, under the best qualified instructors in the church:

Department of Home Economics: Blanche Edwards, Director

Department of Women: Blanche Edwards, Director Instructors: Mrs. Lenore Christy, Mrs. Anne Friend Roberts, Mrs. Ida Etzenhouser, Mrs. Lydia Wight.

Department of Religious Education: A. Max Carmichael, Director Instructors: Olive Elefson, Verna Brackenbury, Ethel Brooner.

Department of Church Problems: F. Henry Edwards, Director

Department of Social Service: M. A. Etzenhouser, Director Instructor: Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser.

Department of Musical Leadership: Mabel Carlile, Director and Instructor

Department of Recreation and Expression: A. R. Gilbert, Director

Class studies closed at four o'clock, and were followed by two hours of lively recreation. In the evening the A Cappella Chorus and Orchestra presented a delightful program at the Brick Church.

Friday morning, at half past seven, the young people's prayer meeting gathered under the leadership of Brother Garver. This feature is perhaps the most important of the whole convention. The unity and singleness of aim of our young people from every part of the church here finds definite expression. About three hundred attended this first meeting.

The apparent need of the General Conference Auditorium is as great to-day as it was several years ago when the body voted so enthusiastically for its erection. Our largest auditorium, which is in Independence, seats approximately eleven hundred people and has been too small for General Conference sessions for years. At present it will not hold a fourth of the members in Independence. We can all see the possibility of using this building between conferences for various local needs. This would be a benefit and would do much toward unifying our ideals and purposes in this, the central place. Besides the membership in the Independence Stake convenient to the building, we have many more who will find it to advantage to make a special effort to meet with us on many special occasions.

Our committee has worked as rapidly as possible in following out the instructions. The problem of building the Auditorium at once brings up our larger problem of the Temple Building. The relation of the two buildings to each other and the surroundings seemed of first importance. Considerable time and thought have been given to five locations. The committee selected one location to be considered tentatively.

The next consideration was the size. Among our people you will hear ideas freely expressed, covering an extremely wide range, as to the seating capacity we require. These were all considered by the committee, who had no wide range of ideas of their own, and they easily agreed, at the conclusion of their discussion, on an average, which was sixty-five hundred.

This building is essentially a convention building, where people expect to be seated so as to be able to see the greatest number of delegates possible as well as to be able to hear well and see clearly what is going on at the forum. We have, all of us, been in auditoriums where people were seated one tier upon another, and it was only possible to see the platform and a small percentage of the people seated—those directly around. The other extreme would be the bowl-shaped stadium. The solution of our problem we thought would be the large main floor with one balcony with reasonable overhang over the main floor, the main floor dished so that everyone would have a good view of the speaker. This type of building has been most favorably considered among all those studied. Just recently the construction of a building quite similar has been started in Washington, District of Columbia. This building is similar in plan and size, but much grander in its appointments and richer in its finish than we have ever considered possible for us to have.

In determining the shape, we have chosen the ellipse, for it has been found that sound travels from the speaker stationed at the focus out in all directions with equal intensity on the perimeter of an ellipse of certain proportions of the major and minor axis. These proportions, determined by one of the leading authorities on acoustics, have been very closely approximated in the solution of our problem. Among many other points in favor of the form adopted, is, the greatest possible number of the auditors are within the visual angle of the speaker, which makes for better attention. Those who are not within the visual angle are closer to the speaker and are relatively in a good position.

The building is planned with broad entrances on the four sides. Each entrance opens directly into a wide foyer. From there direct entrance into the auditorium is had on various levels without the use of steps. A wide corridor, connecting these entrances, entirely surrounds the auditorium, inclosing it in a rectangular form. The triangular corners between the elliptical auditorium and the rectangular corridor provide space for eight wide ramps, making an easy entrance over these inclined planes to the upper or lower levels.

A building of this size and character should be finished on all sides. This we expect to do, with the finish on one, the main front, slightly more elaborate. Above and on each side of the foyer we expect to provide space for auxiliary auditoriums, quorum rooms, classrooms, departmental space, local and general church offices, choir rooms, etc. These will in time entirely surround the building when it is finished on all four fronts. It is hoped, at this time, to build one of the fronts and provide plenty of office space and one auxiliary auditorium. As every style of architecture is entirely dependent upon the character of our principal building, the Temple, it seems the classic, slightly modified, will be most suitable for our purpose.

Preliminary estimates have been made at various times, and we have some idea as to what the cost of this work will figure. Before the work is undertaken, definite estimation will have to be made. In the recent past some changes have been made, all tending to reduce the cubage, so we feel that the parts planned can be built for the amount pledged. There is also a wide range among the suggestions that have been given on the Auditorium regarding the quality and character of the material to be used. The committee has considered every suggestion and thinks it best to build a first-class structure in the most permanent and substantial manner.

We all know that a building can be hurried along—put up seemingly overnight. We also know that such buildings often cost an unnecessary sacrifice of life and money, as well as a serious waste in workmanship. Our work should be pushed forward with reasonable speed, undertaking some of the first steps that are necessary. All the while we should be assembling our talents and collecting our funds in preparation for a time when they can be used to advantage in this work and the greater work which we all expect will be ordered to follow this up.

The Cure for Poverty

The cure of poverty is not charity. Nothing that you give a man will do him much good. You may relieve for the moment his temporary care, but he will drift back again. What is best for the man who needs help is to give him the chance to help himself. If you can make him self-supporting, you will also make him self-respecting. A chance to work his way is much better for him than a chance to shirk his way.—Henry Ford.

Individual Priesthood Responsibility

BY WILLIAM I. FLIGG

The Savior has said, “Occupy till I come.” With many the question is, How shall I? or, How may I? There are many called, but few are chosen. The reason may be ventured. Can we properly measure the source of our commission? “The rights of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven, and can be controlled or handled only upon the principles of righteousness.” Our commission, then, comes from God. It is he who worketh in us to will and do his good pleasure, and so long as we are engaged in the work of life we should try to act in accordance with the nature and character of him who sent us, to our full capacity.

It is a wonderful responsibility to stand between God and man, as a priest, as a light bearer, pointing men the way to a world of light where there is no darkness, for God is the light thereof. In this respect we are workers together with God. “Ye are the light of the world; a city set upon a hill that cannot be hid,” is as true of us and as far-reaching as he who said, “I am the light of the world,” though we treat this immortal term sometimes as very commonplace.

It is an individual responsibility to interpret God to our brother man. The things of God are understood by the Spirit of God, rings very true when viewing the acts and works of man in the past and present, regarding man’s future estate. The prophet well said, speaking as a mouthpiece for God, “My ways and thoughts are not your ways and thoughts,” and it should grow upon each of us as we interpret and apply those teachings in our lives and the lives of those with whom we minister, to grow like him who has promised by his truth to advance and finish our faith.

Our responsibility gives us the right to represent the church. How can I properly play my part? A mason employed on the building of a house may be quite ignorant of its general design, or may not keep it constantly in mind. Then through the hours and days of this life our part may be a very small part of the whole, but very essential. And our present joys of results may not be the true measurements of the eternal joys of completed results.

One has said that limitations always make for happiness. We are happy in proportion to the range of vision we have of our task, representing the church. Then as we try to represent its doctrines, its teachings, its ideals of life and morality, what should be our attitude of mind and general deportment? To live at random in business, in pleasure, without ever reflecting or having clear ideas of what we are about will bring chaos to our emotions and confusion to our thoughts. How significant the attitude of Paul, "I fight not as one that beats the air, nor run with uncertainty." He was sure of his premise and saw a hopeful conclusion to his mission.

So we, in arranging to represent the doctrine and ideals of this great organization should by a process of trained and intelligent thinking and living truly represent God and his church among men where we should shine as lights to the world.

Discipline and training govern in large centers and determine harmony and results. Untrained discipline and thinking breed anarchism and hate among men and nations. How essential, then, we learn to train our thinking to the possibilities of an enlarged consciousness of our responsibilities to God and the people, and in this enjoy greater liberty. You shall know the truth, and it shall make you free.

Our Savior was manifested to destroy the works of Satan. As a priesthood we have delegated to us authority from God and Jesus Christ, and being called joint heirs with him, we should be true in our association with Jesus Christ and one another in the purpose and accomplishment of the great task, the conversion of the world.

The world contains many things that are bad, but who among us can measure the terrible conditions of society? Thus let us be true to one another and in the association authorized of God help save society.

Two thoughts stand out very clearly in the nature of the work to be done: First, Woe is me if I preach not the gospel; and in latter-day revelation, He that is warned must warn his neighbor. So, primarily, our work is missionary and to teach. Christ's first work was missionary, and how fitting the language, "We know thou art a teacher come from God." As a church our business is in all the world, and to abide till the world is affected thereby. This surely is a great task. None can measure the uncharted field by human wisdom or sight, and if we neglect our part, who can measure the woe or suffering?

As a summary of our work, abroad it is missionary, and at home it is to warn our neighbor. Then who among us can escape if we neglect so great salvation? The pastoral part of our work is to feed the flock. This includes conditions of care and education for those converted, to bring them to the fullness and measure of Jesus Christ.

Organizing groups, branches, districts, then stakes, and by missionary and pastoral work systematically organizing our forces for man and society, both temporally and spiritually, will bring us to that great climax, Zion.

In all this, our individual responsibility as priests and priesthood is to be ensamples; first to the church, to be diligent in service, cheerful in our warfare. We exist physically because our organism is the seat of constant motion, and if we are to exist intellectually and spiritually, it can only be by continual occupation. Thus, as a natural and spiritual result, we shall be joyous in our triumph.

Second, to the world, to live as Christ lived in it. It was said by him of those who would work with him: To them he gave power to become the sons of God. And he, the Son, dwelling among men, the Word became flesh and dwelt among us. How great is our individual priesthood responsibility.

Traits for Leadership
BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON

It was our recent privilege to spend a number of days in the Congressional Library at Washington, District of Columbia, a place almost bewilderingly fascinating to the reader and student. Our object was a search into some past history, a task which the breadth and scope of eastern libraries render particularly attractive.

One day, while browsing hopefully among some bound magazines published a quarter of a century ago, we stumbled upon an article written by a man prominent in state affairs, in which he discussed the contribution to national life and character made by a certain family. In this treatise were a few paragraphs upon leadership which were so clear-cut, so thoughtfully developed, and so sound and well-rounded-out in conclusions, that we copied them, and here offer them to the HERALD readers, with the hope that they may be pondered and analyzed carefully, and their application to some of our present and recently past problems fairly and justly made.

Honorable Josiah Meigs Hubbard, of Middletown, Connecticut, secretary of the Connecticut State Board of Mediation and Arbitration, in 1906 published in the Connecticut Magazine an article relative to the influence of the Meigs family in America. This family is descended from John Meigs, who came from Dorsetshire, England, as early as 1639, and settled in Connecticut, and took an active part in the settlement of various towns of that period, including New Haven, Guilford, and Killingworth.

This John Meigs is the one who was made famous in history by a wild ride on horseback, during the night of May 12, 1661, when he went from Guilford to New Haven, a distance of eighteen miles, to warn the fleeing regicides, Whalley and Goffe, then in hiding at the Reverend Mr. Davenport's, that agents of the king were on their way to arrest them. He succeeded in reaching New Haven ahead of the king's officers, and the judges, warned in time, hurried away to another of their mysterious hiding places. John Meigs is considered to have saved their lives at that time, and is said to have carried food to them later while they lived in the cave in which they found refuge.

Incidentally, it may be of interest to know that our church President, Frederick M. Smith, is a descendant of this same John Meigs, who was a representative to the general court at Hartford in his time, and held many other offices of public trust and honor.

Mr. Hubbard, in the article from which we quote, prefaced his observation by the statement, "Certain distinctive characteristics abide through the generations, and it is in the privacy of the home that real history is made." This ancestor, whom he mentions, Return Jonathan Meigs, was a colonel in the Revolutionary War; through him, Mr. Hubbard's line is traced to John Meigs, the original emigrant to New England. The "Mysterious, Dark Day" to which reference is made, was caused by one of those total eclipses which, so little understood in those days, struck terror to the hearts of many. Mr. Hubbard's comments follow:

I quote from the poet Whittier the speech of Abraham Davenport, who, when the Mysterious, Dark Day came, and alarm and apprehension were so general that a proposition to adjourn was made in the legislature of which he was a member, met the question thus:

"This well may be
The day of judgment which the world awaits.
But, be it so or not, I only know
My present duty, and my Lord's command
To occupy until he come. So, at the post
Where he has set me in his providence,
I choose, for one, to meet him face to face,—
No faithless servant, frightened from my task,
But ready, when the Lord of the harvest calls!
And, therefore, with all reverence I would say,
'Let God do his work. We will see to ours!'"

In the same group with this Abraham Davenport and John Stark and others of like character, I place the first Return Jonathan Meigs, contemporary with them in time, tried by the same severe tests, and found abundantly worthy of like high honor.

It is not claimed in behalf of these men that they were faultless. Doubtless those who lived neighbors to them could point out in them faults in abundance, but we are not called upon to dwell upon those, whatever they may have been.

The work is not done by faultless men, but rather by those whose virtues overbalance and outrun, and finally master and subdue, their faults. When this is true of any man, it is so, in the wise providence of God, that his faults fade away and are forgotten, while his work remains to bless succeeding generations. If God could only use faultless men for good work, the hope of the world would be faint indeed.

If men would work together, and work effectually in the performance of the tasks of civilized society, there must be those who lead and direct, and those who follow and execute. As the potter in Longfellow's poem said, while his wheel turns round and round, and the plastic clay follows the motion of his hand:

"For some must follow, and some command,
Though all are made of clay."

What is it that determines as between two men, seemingly of equal ability, that one should be a leader and the other a follower? Sometimes it seems to be mere accident—Opportunity opening for one a door which remains closed for the other; sometimes it is a willingness on the part of one to take risks from which the other shrinks. Many times it is faith—a strong confidence either in one's self, or in the cause or enterprise in which one may be engaged, or, in an overruling Power which can be depended upon for guidance and for strength to meet one's every need.

One may possess this faith in larger measure, or in more active exercise, than another. Very slight indeed may be the distinctions which determine the relative position of men in respect to this matter, and it is therefore happily true, that capacity for leadership is largely possessed by those who are content to be followers!

It was said of our regiments in the Civil War, and my own was one of them, that if every officer were to be suddenly removed, his place could be instantly and capably filled from the ranks.Happy the cause for which such soldiers fight—fortunate the enterprise for which such men work!

And now, in taking leave of the Meigs family, I only wish to claim for its members, that whether in high or low station, as leaders or as followers, we may say of them that they have done well their part in the building of national life and character. May their descendants and all who inherit the blood and traditions of the early settlers of Connecticut, realize their legacy, and prove themselves worthy of it.

It is true, science to-day places great emphasis upon environment in the formation of character. However, we feel confident that the greater our knowledge of the ancestral forces and influences back of us, the more successful we may be in strengthening our heritage of good and eliminating whatever of wrong tendencies may have come to us. We wish to close with the following poem by John Kells Ingram, which he calls "Social heredity."

Man is no mushroom growth of yesterday;
His roots strike deep into the hallow'd mold
Of the dead centuries; ordinances old
Govern us, whether gladly we obey
Or vainly struggle to resist their sway.
Our thoughts by ancient thinkers are control'd,
And many a word in which our thoughts are told
Was coined long since, in regions far away.
The strong-souled nations, destined to be great,
Honor their sires and reverence the past;
They cherish and improve their heritage;
The weak, in blind self-trust or headlong rage,
The olden times' transmitted treasures cast
Behind them,—and bemoan their loss too late!
A Word in Season on the Word of Wisdom

BY EARNEST A. WEBBE

On page 279, volume 1 of History of the Church you will find the following brief paragraph and yet more brief comment:

On Wednesday, February 27, 1833, the revelation familiarly known as the Word of Wisdom was given. This is a peculiar and unique document, but it will bear the closest investigation; and though it is now (1897) over sixty-three years old, and the subjects treated of have been investigated and discussed by men of learning, it will be found in harmony with or in advance of the best minds of the age.

Text of the revelation as found in Doctrine and Covenants 86th section then follows as a footnote.

The writer, who, some twenty-five years ago was impressed with the divinity of the latter-day work through the counsel contained in the Word of Wisdom, wishes to call the attention of all who are or can be called Saints, to a companion treatise published in 1924 by the National Health Council of America; a copy should be in the hands of everyone interested in the welfare of Zion and the dawning era of stewardships; it may be studied with much profit in connection and comparison with the 86th section of our present-day, third-part, of the standard books of the church. Listen to a sentence of the introduction to the Word of Wisdom: “showing forth the order and will of God in the temporal salvation of the saints in the last days,” and pass by lightly, if you can, the import of its relation to the coming to pass of Zion through our stewardships.

As to this newest book that so thoroughly supports and amplifies the above, it is called, Food for Health’s Sake, and costs but thirty cents—less than the cost of a meal, and will save the earnest reader a thousand times that sum and increase you in the faith.

While the Word of Wisdom makes straight and clean-cut statements, the latter book goes into detail and gives you the “why for” of the same; there are very readable chapters on the physical “Needs of everyone”; what our bodies require and how best obtained; “The best chance for the children”; and “Needs of the family”; something for mothers and fathers to consider if they would leave it to the next generation to redeem Zion; if you would stay and participate, the chapter to “Increase the length of your life” should interest. A chapter on “Food information” analyzes the values and properties of our common foods, as milk, grain products, vegetables, fruits, eggs, fats, meat, fish, and sweets. Then a final chapter on “True economy on health.”

I would like to present a few quotations that you may compare with your reading of the 86th section of Doctrine and Covenants and as the summer season is now upon us, you may be encouraged to put the matter to a practical test. We read: “It is often possible to save a considerable amount without lowering the food value.” Again: “One mother who had been very anxious about her seven underweight boys, whose father had died of tuberculosis, was much surprised when she found she could save twenty dollars a month on her food bills by rearranging her diet to include more vegetables and less meat. She was more surprised when she found her children gaining for the first time in months on the changed diet. The expensive diet in this case was undermining health and leading to disease!” How does that compare with the promise in the concluding paragraph of the Word of Wisdom?

Under “Meat” we read: “A committee of prominent scientists which met during the war to determine how much of each food should be included in the day’s rations, decided that since meat is not a physiological necessity they could set no minimum”; in another place, it “is incorrectly thought of as the essential strength giver,” whereas it is rather a “stimulant” and “a most expensive article of diet.” In the Word of Wisdom it is designated for the use of man under certain conditions, but “all wholesome herbs” are spoken of as for the constitution, nature, and use of man—a threefold value—and we learn why by an examination of the table of values and their vitamin content. The leafy vegetables are enumerated and classed as “natural tonics with the very phosphates, calcium, and iron often contained in the doctors prescription” and are “in their quiet way just as much strength givers as meat,” and that is according to Genesis 1:29 also. How familiar is the average housewife with this list of “all wholesome herbs”?

Here in little old Kirtland, where the 86th section came before the minds of men nearly a hundred years ago, one of our Doctrine and Covenants classes has put in five months of this term with an intensive study of the Word of Wisdom, and the interest is unabated; has in fact nearly doubled our numbers. We have a benevolent fund forming the nucleus of some good movement in harmony with the principles involved, and as we are distributing copies of this valuable treatise it adds to this treasury. Three dimes and a red stamp bring it.

Latter Day Saints everywhere will soon be gathering to the various reunions, those training camps of Zion. Where shall we look for a better place to see this revelation, that has to do with our temporal salvation, put to the test? “Try me,” saith the Lord. Cannot we step, even in this instance, Zionward? Or must our gatherings of the kind be commissaried on the plane of the county fair with “hot dogs” of stale meat and “pop”—things of mystic origin and

The second Annual Girls' Gym Show gave the new gymnasium its first experience with anything approaching the theatrical on Friday evening, May 1. The girls were assisted in their program by the Lamoni-Graceland Orchestra and Miss Marguerite Jeffries, soprano.

The gym was carefully and tastefully arranged for the occasion. The unfinished stage was hidden by curtains and screens, whose monotony was relieved by foliage and shrubbery. The major part of the gym floor was used in the performance, the audience of about fifty being seated in the balconies and on the west section of the main floor.

The opening number was a marching drill, in which all girls participated. To many of the boys at least, this was the most appreciated number on the program. It was a pretty and a rhythmically stirring sight to see so many participants, all in regulation gym dress, going through their intricate and lengthy drill patterns which might have done credit to a squad of soldiers or a crack drill team from some lodge.

The next number was a demonstration of work with Indian clubs, and was also well done. The rhythm and precision were beautiful to look upon, with the easy, yet forceful vigor displayed. This number was followed by a catchy stunt, the "Jumping Jacks," who performed their antics in acceptable mechanical doll style, and a demonstration of the "daily dozen" used by the girls' gym classes, which left some of the spectators wondering how some of the girls managed to keep so heavy after going through with anything so strenuous every day.

A series of pyramid building stunts was then given. But the climax of the evening was of course the crowning of the May Queen by Prince Charming, and the winding of the May-pole in the presence of the queen and her court. It seemed particularly fitting that Dora Dexter, who was the director and guiding genius of most of that which had gone before, should be thus honored by Tom Franklin as Prince Charming, who was in a way the representative of the whole student body.

Officers of Student Body

The election to fill the major offices of the student body for the coming year of 1925-26 was held Wednesday from the hours of eleven in the forenoon to three in the afternoon. In several offices the competition was quite keen. The final count of votes resulted in the election of Leslie Flowers as editor in chief of the Record and William Collins as businessman. For the Acacia, Stella Brockway was elected editor and Wallace Nelson business manager. Other people elected to offices are Tess Morgan as Athenian president and Jack Gardner as financial manager for athletics.

Extemporaneous Speaking

In the final contest the Alpha Pi Society was represented by Frank Holmes, who spoke on the subject, "The meaning of the recent German election." The Niketes Society was represented by three speakers. Mildred Turner, the first speaker on the program, also spoke on the meaning of the recent German election. Katherine Clancy spoke on the subject, "Specialization versus generalization in our public schools." Ruth Lewis, the third speaker for the Niketes, discussed the subject of the opium conference.

Paul Goodrich, representing the Victorians, disclosed the evils and benefits of prohibition in America.

The final decision of the judges awarded first place to Frank Holmes, second place to Mildred Turner, and third place to Ruth Lewis.

As a result of the contest, the present standing of the four literary societies in competition for the forensic banner is as follows:

- Alpha Pi Sigma ............................................ 203
- Niketes .................................................... 153
- Victorians ............................................... 142
- Kappa Deltas ............................................. 140

Lambda Delta Sigma Meeting

The Alpha Chapter of the Lambda Delta Sigma Society held its regular meeting on Tuesday evening in Room 112. The program was in charge of Max Carmichael, who had called to his assistance four able workers in the persons of Peter Muceus, Olive Elefson, Lonzo Jones, and Roy Roberts.

The meeting was highly educational and had a very broadening effect on all the members present.

College Players

Friday night, May 8, was the occasion for the College Players' presentation of three one-act plays: "Tickless time," by Susan Glaspell; "Aria da Capo," by Edna Saint Vincent Millay; and "What they think," by Rachel Carruthers. The three plays made an ideal combination for an evening's entertainment, and since each one was individually enjoyable, interest was held at a high pitch throughout the evening. All the players were well chosen and eminently suited to their parts, and working in combination with some most excellent stage settings they produced about the most finished dramatic production which has been seen here for some time.

The stage settings, scenery, and lighting were far above the usual average on all three plays; in fact, nothing quite so elaborate has been seen here for at least the last two years. Credit for this phase of the production's success be-

WILLOUGHBY, OHIO, Kirtland Route.
At commencement time the college student loses the last knot of the "apron strings" that hold him tied to the fostering care of the educational institution which graduates him, and stands on his own feet to "commence" his career as a responsible benefactor of society. In that last hour before his degrees and certificates are awarded and the "rights and obligations belonging thereto" are vested in him, it is fitting that he should have all the threads of his past experience and of society's expectations woven together into a personal and social ideal that may be a guiding star in all his public service. To weave such an ideal and to vitalize it with his own personality is the task of the commencement speaker.

Graceland has always been fortunate in her selection of commencement speaker. Such men as Professor Blackmar of Kansas University and Ex-governor Kendall of Iowa have inspired our graduating classes. But never have we been more fortunate than in the promise of Professor Edwin Diller Starbuck to be our speaker for this year's commencement. Doctor Starbuck is a master in the art of good living. Reared in the spiritual environment of the Society of Friends; educated in the University of Indiana, Harvard, and Clark University in America, and in Zurich University abroad; professor of philosophy and ethics at Stanford and University of Iowa; author of the first systematic work on Psychology of Religion, and of The Iowa Plan of Character Education in the Public Schools, Doctor Starbuck has gleaned and organized the rich fruits of life's best experiences. With clear spiritual insight, with broad and cosmopolitan experiences, and with an understanding love of human folk, Doctor Starbuck will bring a message to Graceland graduates that will be of lasting worth.

Commencement Program

With graduation time close at hand, the various committees have arranged the following program for commencement:

Friday, May 29, Commencement Concert.
Saturday, May 30, Final Athenian.
Sunday, May 31, Baccalaureate Sermon by Apostle Paul M. Hanson.
Monday, June 1, The Elijah.
Monday, June 1, Lambda Delta Sigma Initiation.
Tuesday, June 2, College Banquet.
Wednesday, June 3, Final Assembly at ten o'clock.
Wednesday afternoon, Class Day and Campus Festival.
Wednesday evening, Commencement Address by Doctor Edwin Starbuck, of Iowa State University.

Religio Class Party

Anyone who thinks religion and fun cannot be mixed should have been at south woods last Tuesday evening. Mr. Cheville's Religio class decided to express their gratitude to their instructor for his leadership throughout the year, so they planned a surprise picnic. The class went down first and then had Lester Phelps bring "Uncle Roy" down in his car. As he neared the camp everyone greeted him with a song, "For he's a jolly good fellow." Then with appropriate ceremonies he was presented with a baby owl in remembrance of all the wise cracks he had made.

Everyone felt in fine spirits and gladly joined in building a fire and then in playing around it. Everything from "Pig in the parlor" to Indian war dances was indulged in, but the climax of the evening came after supper when each little boy and girl took his or her part in playing "Old witch." Tired, happy, and a little damped from transient clouds, the joyous crowd finally made its way back to the college, singing old-time songs as they went along.

Leading Men of Church Welcomed in Western Iowa

MOOREHEAD, IOWA, May 27.—The Saints of Moorhead have been highly favored during the last few weeks by being permitted to listen to some of the leading men of the church. About twenty of the Saints from here attended the baccalaureate service at Pisgah the evening of May 10, and listened to President F. M. Smith's sermon, which was well delivered. He stood firmly for true education and proved that God should be recognized therein in order for man to prove successful. A large audience greeted him, and his discourse was well received.

The evening of May 17 regular services were dismissed, and our congregation attended the baccalaureate service at the Christian church, where Apostle Paul M. Hanson delivered a splendid sermon on "A symmetrical mind." Brother Hanson handled his subject in a forceful way and made a good impression on the large audience in attendance. He also referred to some of the things he had seen in Egypt and Palestine which confirmed the wonderful works God had performed in the different lands. We also had an interesting discourse from Brother Hanson in the morning. Quite a number of years had elapsed since this brother had been with us, but the Saints had not forgotten him and would gladly welcome him back in the near future.

The commencement address was delivered by President Floyd M. McDowell, his subject being, "At the crossroads." It was a wonderful address and contained much warning to the class as to the choice they should make as they stood at the crossroads. All were made to feel that they were made better by being present and listening to his address. Both Moorhead and Pisgah schools are to be congratulated for being fortunate enough to secure the services of these men. We would welcome them again.

Our pulpit was filled the morning of May 24 by Brother C. B. Woodstock of Mondamin, who, in company with his family, spent the remainder of his stay visiting in the home of his nephew, C. R. Hield, and family.

Brother and Sister George Vandel and three sons of Sioux City attended services Sunday morning, May 10, and in company with Brother P. M. Hanson and his nephew from Magnolia were dinner guests of Brother and Sister Hield. Brother Vandel is the uncle of Sister Hield.

Brothers Bert and Perry Mann and their wives were visitors at the Claude Mann home in Missouri Valley Sunday, May 24.

Sister Clara McDonald underwent an operation at the Jennie Edmundson Hospital in Council Bluffs about two weeks ago. The report is that she is getting along nicely, which is good news to her many friends.

Brother Harold Mann and Brother and Sister Mark Jensen and daughter Alice motored to Decatur, Nebraska, on May 24, where they attended the morning services, Brother Jensen being the speaker. The afternoon was spent visiting relatives and friends. They especially enjoyed their visit with Sister Ethel Butts who has been a patient sufferer for many years. She is cheerful under her affliction, and it is an inspiration to visit her.
Sisters Fae Emerson and Aurilce and Alerta Jensen motored to Lamoni last Saturday, where they will visit until time for Young People's Convention. Twelve or fifteen from this branch expect to be in attendance at the convention.

Brother Ellis Davis graduated last week from the high school, and we understand he expects to attend summer school at Cedar Falls to prepare for teaching. A new baby girl has taken up her abode during the last month with Brother and Sister Charles Davis.

Most of the children of Brother and Sister LaSeur arrived the first of the week to help them celebrate their golden wedding May 25. While Brother LaSeur has been poorly the last few years, he is feeling quite well at present.

Des Moines District

The work is progressing nicely in this part of the vineyard, and there are more appointments than preachers, although all local men are busy every Sunday.

Newton

The Newton group have preaching every two weeks, with regular sacramental services each month.

Brother Ed Wilman has returned to Moline, Illinois, which leaves the group without a member of the priesthood. G. C. DuVall, who was baptized recently, is superintendent and is doing an excellent work in this place, which is the largest shipper of washing machines, that are home built, in the entire world. Men come from all parts of the United States to Newton to work in one of the five big factories that are located here.

Dunreath

Dunreath is making progress since a series of meetings was held last winter by J. R. Lentell. It is a difficult matter to supply them with a preacher every Sunday, and there is no member of the priesthood residing there. The Saints have a study class every Sunday night, however, and their Sunday school is in a good condition.

Sandyville

Sandyville had an all-day service May 17, with H. Castings, J. L. Parker, and N. V. Anderson in attendance.

Des Moines

Des Moines was the meeting place of the district priesthood April 26, with District President H. Castings as speaker upon the subject, “What shall be the attitude of the priesthood toward the offender?” The meeting was a success from every standpoint, and much good will be derived from that which was presented.

Runnells

Runnells has been so crippled in the past six years by Saints moving away that our numbers are small, although their faith is large. We still have a noble band of young people who are preparing to assist in the building of Zion. Four of the sisters are teaching and are very successful in their school work. A young man, Ralph Freol, who is a nonmember, is successfully leading the Religio, being very much interested in the work.

The Temple Builders from Des Moines gave an operetta at the school building, which was excellent, though only a small crowd came because of so much work incidental to the close of the school year being carried out. All who came spoke in highest praise of the entertainment. The proceeds were applied on the new church building which will be built in Des Moines.

Brother Everett Tingle and Miss Grace Wallace were married by the pastor on May 24. The wedding was at Brother Tingle’s home in the presence of a few invited guests.

Brother Milo Burnett, of Saint Joseph, Missouri, visited his old home at Runnels and preached at Dunreath and Runnels on May 24. This visit was very much enjoyed by the Saints. Brother Burnett began his ministry here and is always at home when he comes.

Perry

Perry is making progress, and the young people are rallying to the support of the work. Ralph and Anna Wicker are recent additions to the branch.

Rhodes

Rhodes has lost three by death recently, the last one being Brother George Luing, who died of cancer. He will be missed greatly by the Saints, as he was always present at the services and acted as solicitor for the Bishop.

We are fortunate in having in the district a unified priesthood, and everyone is doing his utmost to teach to the Saints the law that will prepare them for Zion.

Brentwood Branch

WEBSTER GROVES, MISSOURI.—We have been putting over a local missionary program during the past six months, and while no large numbers have been added to the flock, there seems to be a better feeling of spirituality and union prevailing in the branch.

Our communion service of the third was marked with a freedom of testimony and song and a very good evidence of the cultivation of the attitude of prayer. There were forty-eight communicants present, and the time was very well occupied.

Likewise our prayer services have been built up, the average attendance formerly being from eight to fifteen, while the average now reaches twenty. Though the number is small, it is to be appreciated when one is acquainted with the facts concerning the surroundings as to working conditions, hours, etc.

Our Mothers' Day program at the Sunday school was given by the primary and junior departments. The evening hour was given over to the Temple Builders, who furnished us with a tableau entitled the "Seven ages of woman." This was enjoyed by a representative attendance, and the Temple Builders were given hearty invitation to return.

The local priesthood have occupied the pulpit for the most part during May to good advantage, showing some advancement in their work.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey, our new district missionary, came to the branch May 24 and started a "get-acquainted series" of lectures, to last five evenings, preceding our district conference. He gave us two real gospel lectures on the 24th and will continue during the week to and including Thursday night.

His subject for the day was, "The mission of the gospel of Christ," in which he introduced some of the things that are sacred to all Latter Day Saints, relative to the Christ life and plan. His discourses were filled with the confirmation of the Spirit and carried the word deep into the hearts of the listeners. We will tell you more about this.

The Temple Builders are to have charge of the Department of Recreation and Expression on the 29th. They have promised us some entertainment in the form of an "apron and overall feed,” the entrance fee being determined by the waist measure of the attendant. The price set is one cent an inch. There will be aprons and overalls to match, and this is the novel method by which partners will be chosen for the evening.

We are informed that the largest waisted lady and man in attendance will be awarded a “bulk prize.” We have asked Brother Bailey to take this in, as he will give some of the local men a run.

The Temple Builders as a body will be in attendance at the Young People’s Convention in June, according to reports from their circle. We hope they will not be hindered from this, as they can, we feel, gather much of benefit by attending this convention.

“Carry On” is the watchword; “Pray” is the guide; and “Spiritual Growth” is the goal set by our branch for this season. We are working to this end and promise you more news of our venture.

Kansas City Stake Purchases Church Property

A number of years ago the Saints of Kansas City, with the help of the general church, found it advisable to purchase what is known as Central Church, corner Ninth and Lydia Streets. This church was quite a neat, commodious building and was very convenient for our work during the years that have passed. However, like all old buildings, it has greatly deteriorated in the past few years, and of necessity a large expense would be required to place it in proper condition again.

After due consideration by the stake authorities, it was thought inadvisable to make the repairs and changes that were necessary, because of the large amount of money that it would take, and we concluded that it would be far better to take the same amount of money and invest it in securing another church building that would suit our purpose and would be far more congenial from the standpoint of location.

The matter was presented at our late stake conference, May 18, and after considerable discussion and explanation, the matter was referred to the stake high council and bishopric, with power to act. This body of men took the matter up at a meeting later and concluded that it would be advisable to dispense with our present property and secure a property referred to in the preceding paragraph of this article for our future church home.

After considerable parleying and exchanging of propositions with the real estate firm which was representing the Episcopal Church, an agreement was finally reached, and on the 26th day of May a contract was drawn up by Bishop F. B. Blair upon our part, and Mr. B. C. Howard, chairman of the committee of the Saint George Episcopal Church, and signed by Mr. B. C. Howard and Presiding Bishop Albert Carmichael. Central Church was taken into the consideration and a cash payment in connection with the church making the first payment of $25,000 on the Episcopal Church, leaving a balance of $25,000 first mortgage secured by deed of trust upon the property, payable on or before the expiration of five years, with accrued interest at the rate of six per cent per annum.

Kansas City Church Parsonage

This property has a frontage of 250 feet facing Troost Park and 160 feet on Tracy Avenue. In connection with the church building, there is a splendid parsonage of thirteen rooms. The church is erected on the west side of the property and the house upon the east side, leaving a vacancy of ground between the two buildings of about 170 by 169 feet, which can be utilized for various outdoor purposes and interests in connection with the church. Possession of this place will be given August 1.

The Saints of the stake keenly feel the responsibility placed upon them and are now arranging in various ways to meet their obligation and make good in the purchase of this property. We feel that it will be to the advantage of the work and no doubt will be a credit to our people. There is a little sentiment that surrounds this location touching the early history of our work. Abstracts of property in this locality show that some of the neted and leading men of the church organized in 1830 owned property in this locality, and the first school started by our people in Jackson County, Missouri, was right in this vicinity. More detailed history of this character will be given in an article that will be written for Autumn Leaves.

We are extending this information for the benefit of all who may be interested. We are hoping that your moral support will stimulate us to accomplish the thing we have set out to do.

Very sincerely,

J. A. Tanner, Stake President.

Berkeley, California, is moving forward in a most commendable way under the direction of Pastor V. B. Etzenhouser. Their Religion has established an institute and classes in economics, Book of Mormon, Young People’s Church History, millinery, lampshade work, sign writing, and paper work. Wise Religionists, take the hint.

East Los Angeles Branch

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, May 18.—Our services continue to be well attended, with the exception of one Sunday, May 17, when the choir went to Santa Barbara, taking away five auto loads of our younger members. We were glad to have them go, however, knowing they would bring pleasure and cheer to the few earnest Saints in that city who are trying to build up the church there.

Visiting elders who have been with us of late were Brother Jack Damron of Tulare, Brother Levi Hemenway of San Gabriel, and J. I. Spencer of Los Angeles.

A new name has been placed on the cradle roll, that of little Shirley Edwin Johnson, who came to the home of Brother and Sister Austin Johnson about four weeks ago.

On Mothers' Day a fitting program was given by the mothers and children of the Sunday school, after which Brother Harold Motter read a paper on the subject, "Mothers' Day," and Brother V. L. Lum gave a short address.

The ladies' aid served supper on the evening of May 12, from which a substantial fund was raised to help in paying off the debt on the piano. After the supper the choir gave a musical program.

This branch was organized March 4, 1925, with forty-eight members. The church is located at 3457 East Fourth Street.

We have midweek prayer services; Sunday school every Sunday at a quarter of ten; preaching at eleven except the first Sunday in the month when sacramental service is held; and preaching in the evening. Attendance is good. The Saints are preparing to buy a lot and build a chapel.

This is a nice group of Saints, all of one accord. God has surely blessed us in our efforts since the branch has been organized. We have had some good preaching and spiritual prayer meetings, our sick have been healed, and we are made to rejoice together.

Brother V. L. Lum was chosen pastor, and the Lord has blessed his efforts.

This is a wonderful place to live. The climate is wonderful, and if ever a city needed the gospel it is Los Angeles. Sodom and Gomorrah were destroyed; where does this city stand? There are people here from every country and every class. Not all are bad, but there is much wickedness. We are surely living in the hastening time, and God will surely cut short his work in righteousness.

May God bless the human family in its mad rush and strengthen the effort that is put forth to establish the gospel.

Santa Ana, California

The Santa Ana Branch has an exceptionally fine bunch of young people. On April 26 the Sunday school elected Sisters Phyllis Carmichael and Mildred Calkins superintendent and assistant to succeed Sisters Clapp and Thurston. These two energetic young sisters are well qualified for this responsibility. Sister Laura Burton will be pleased to learn that they, assisted by Sister C. I. Calkins, are organizing a normal class. Santa Ana is stepping forward.

On the evening of May 6, a group of young people attended the prayer meeting in a body. This was the result of a suggestion made at a meeting of the Temple Builders. God bless the Temple Builders! They said they thought it would please Brother Rhodes; and indeed he was pleased, and the heavenly Father more so. The young people promised to keep on attending till it becomes a habit.

Santa Ana has been visited with seemingly more than her share of sickness lately. A month ago young Sister Margaret Thurston was taken seriously ill with a sickness concerning which no two doctors of the six or seven called seem able to agree. She is unable to take food or water, and vomits frequently; her blood pressure is very high, and her pulse rate is more than twice as rapid as it should be. The doctors have given her up, and as usual some of them want to operate. We have administered to her frequently, and last Sunday evening we omitted the preaching service to hold a special prayer meeting for her. Monday evening Brother Chapman was called from Long Beach, and we administered to her. She now is slowly improving but is still in danger. She is a girl who wins the love of everyone; and will the Saints whose hearts are touched by this letter pray for her?

Sister Nellie Inman was operated on the 29th and is now recovering. On the 8th we were called to Corona to administer to Brother H. E. Houts, who is very ill, and his mother-in-law, Sister Rebecca Roe. Brother Houts is recently from Alaska and is a member of the branch at Holden, Missouri.

Acting on information from Brother L. S. Carter, we recently found three families of Latter Day Saints near Anaheim, Cy, Robert, and Eli Sparks, the latter two of whom we met. No doubt there are other families of Saints we should seek for and find.

We hope before long to have the privilege of welcoming Elders Gillen, Ellis, and Burton to our branch.

Leonard S. Rhodes.

Union Branch at ClitheraLL

BATTLE LAKE, MINNESOTA, May 25.—On account of the small number and the scattered condition of the members here, it has been decided to hold services only the first and third Sundays of each month.

Two meetings have been held, with good interest on the part of those attending, and a desire is manifested to advance the cause in spite of the indifference of a few.

A two-day meeting has been planned for the last two days of May. District President George Day, and possibly Brothers William Sparling and W. E. Shakespeare, will be in attendance. Distant members have been notified, and it is hoped that some from Duluth and McGrath who were formerly associated with this branch may be able to come.

On May 17 Branch President Lester Whiting officiated at a home wedding at Brother and Sister Joseph Elliott's, when their youngest daughter, Eva L., was married to Mr. Robert A. Denniston, of Wadena County.

Toronto Religio Puts On a Play in Grand Valley

The Toronto Religio put on a play entitled "Anne What's Her Name," at the Soho Street church on May 1, 1925. For the first time in years benches had to be brought down from the upper auditorium to accommodate the large crowd, which was a little too large to be comfortable.

This was made possible by the hard work of all the players and especially our leader of dramatics, Sister Lois Bryan, who is an artist in this kind of work.

We then received a request from Grand Valley to put the same play on in that town, which was done on Friday, May 22, and according to all reports was a success. They have made a request for a return engagement for Saturday, June 6.

The Toronto young people were accompanied by their pastor, J. L. Prentice, who made the trip of sixty-one miles each way in one day, just to help the Religio along. The fact that most of the crowd at Grand Valley were nonmembers and enjoyed it so well that they want a return engagement, makes it encouraging for all concerned. Some who are unfriendly to the work there came out to the play, and for that reason alone we feel some good has been accomplished.

Next Friday the Religio is having a concert put on by the Toronto Public School Boys' Symphony Orchestra, composed of thirty-five members, which will be a real treat.

The Religio in Toronto is not doing all the work here, but unfortunately the publicity agent and the Religio superintendent are the same party, and as a result when news is going to the HERALD some of the other departments are liable to be sidetracked.

The Department of Women under the leadership of Sister
A. F. McLean, is a live organization, working hard and long for the good of the branch. This applies also to the Sunday school, with Elder B. H. Hewitt in charge.

Sister Archie McArthur is doing a good work with the Temple Builders and the Oriole Girls. As a matter of fact, the whole branch is doing well.

We have just had a great asset added to our branch by having Elder Weaver and family move here from Cornwall, Ontario. We were sorry to lose our hard-working Hebrew elder, Michael Crowley, and family, who went to Detroit, but that seems to be the way in this old world. When one drops out, another takes the place.

Wishes Saints to Call

AUSTIN, TEXAS, May 21.—We just received the HERALD and enjoyed reading it, especially the letters of some of the Saints whom we have met. It seems like hearing from home, as we have been isolated since coming here from El Reno, Oklahoma, last summer. We have indeed missed the association of the Saints.

We thought that by writing to the HERALD some of the Saints in this part of the country might see our letter, and any passing through could call to see us, for we would be glad to have them come.

We miss the privilege of the gospel as enjoyed by Saints who can assemble, as only Saints who have had that privilege can miss them, but we believe the Lord has had a hand and purpose in leading us here, and we hope in our weak way to be able to fill that purpose and see the time when the gospel is established here in this place.

There are two other families of Saints here besides us, one my husband's brother, and the other a family baptized by Brother Case in Oklahoma nearly two years ago.

The gospel grows dearer to me each day, and I hope always to be worthy to be called a Saint.

MRS. W. A. MILLNER.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON

Brother Jot Bronson, who was elected branch president, has started a clean-up program, and from the looks of things he intends to finish the job. The church is being redecorated inside, and is getting a general going over outside.

There appears to be a spirit of going forward and getting things in a condition for some real constructive and instructive work. We welcome the new order of things. Brother Bronson is planning a real constructive program, and the big thing is, it is meeting the approval of the people. Under such conditions we are looking forward to a new growth in Spokane Branch.

The Religio is still on the climb—good crowds and good programs. Most all have a desire to help, and quite a number of outsiders are in evidence each meeting. These things are very encouraging, especially to those who are in charge.

We are glad to see the spirit of service manifested in the church. We are more than pleased to see the young ready to do something for the Master's cause and the advancement of service in a spiritual way.

Our baseball team has not lost a game so far in the Inter-Church League. And that isn't all. Will tell you more about that next time.

Everything looks lovely in sunny old Spokane.

TAWAS CITY, MICHIGAN

May 26.—How glad we were upon receiving the HERALD to see Blue Pencil Notes again. They were most interesting.

We were also glad to note that Elder J. J. Cornish was able to attend General Conference and do some preaching. He baptized the writer some forty-six years ago.

Elder George A. Pringle was one of the speakers at the junior-senior banquet given by the Tawas City high school last Friday evening.

One-day meetings have been held recently at Whittemore and Oscoda, and another will be held June 14 with the Iosco Branch. Reports of good meetings have been received. These meetings are in charge of Elder M. A. Somerfield.

Brother Will Robinson and family drove up from Bay City and spent the week-end with Sister Robinson. They also attended the one-day meeting at Osceoda.

Sister E. L. Pringle is slowly recovering from after effects of the influenza.

MRS. GEORGE PRINGLE.

WIARTON, ONTARIO

May 24.—Since our last report, church doings had been about as usual. With the noise of battle over and the smoke rolled away, we are able to see results.

As one of our missionaries, Brother Joseph Yager, has been changed to Alberta, a social evening was held in his honor at the home of Brother Buford Rydolls. The young and older ones gathered, including Brother and Sister P.
Farrow, who also have been changed to southern Michigan, and all enjoyed the games and amusements that were provided. As they leave us for their new fields of labor, we wish them Godspeed.

May 24 was our "Special Sunday." Quite a large number were present at the morning prayer service, some being present from Owen Sound, Port Elgin, Harriston, and other points. We also had the pleasure of having our new mis­ ionary present, Elder J. W. Peterson, of Independence, Missouri, who assisted Elder Fred Gregory in the morning services.

At half past two Brother George Furness, of Port Owen, Harriston, and other points. We also had the pleasure of having our new mis­
ionary present, Elder J. W. Peterson, of Independence, Missouri, who assisted Elder Fred Gregory in the morning services.

At half past two Brother George Furness, of Owen Sound, our district chorister, put on a cantata by singers from Wiarton, Owen Sound, and Port Elgin Sunday schools. The music, drills, etc., were worthy of favorable comment. We trust this will not be the last program of this kind.

The evening service was Brother Yager's farewell service.
He was greeted by a large audience, which marked the esteem in which he is held here.

Word has been received from Spearfish, South Dakota, that drought is threatening that country. In some places spring small grains have been so injured that the fields are being replowed and planted to corn.

May 24.—Since the closing of General Conference we have been favored with a series of sermons by Elder Ward L. Christy, covering about one week. In these services the Saints were given some wholesome instruction in a very straightforward and fearless manner. As many of the membership as found it possible to attend were well repaid for the effort made.

We find it extremely difficult to hold a series of services to continue for any length of time, owing to the scattered condition of the members in this city and adjoining suburbs.

Our membership in this branch is more or less of a transient nature. "In the past fifteen years we have seen many members come and go, and during that time we have seen members leave us whose presence here was sorely needed. We are of the opinion that at this time there are many members and friends of the church whom we have been unable to reach owing to the lack of proper information as to their whereabouts.

Any Saints knowing of Saints or friends in this city, please mail the names and addresses to Fred V. Dreyer, 836 Mineral Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. An effort will be made to reach them.

Onset Reunion

What about the Southern New England Reunion July 25 to August 10? If you have never been to the reunion in this district, you have missed something that will be hard to supply in any other way.

The camp is situated on an arm of Onset Bay, where the blue waters of the Atlantic furnish the bathing facilities and water sports for the campers. The grounds are spacious, for which proper provision and equipment have been furnished by the management. A silver loving cup is the trophy of contention which gives vim to the contestants. All are eligible.

There are about eighty cottages on the grounds, and a spacious tabernacle which accommodate the large crowds that annually attend the reunion. Special buildings are set apart for the different classifications of study and worship, and special leaders are appointed to care for the wants of each group.

If you are contemplating a vacation and want a good time, together with educational, spiritual, and recreational interchange, you can do no better than cast in your lot with the Eastern Saints, absorb and contribute to the general exercises, and taste the good fellowship of kindred spirits which marks our reunion as one of the foremost in the church.

The reunion opens the evening of July 24, at half past seven, for organization, after which the meeting will be dismissed for the celebration in the town of Onset which is adjacent to the camp grounds, that all might attend the display of fireworks and general jubilation of our glorious anniversary of independence.

For two weeks before the special reunion meetings, July 11 to 25, and including the special two weeks, there will be a summer camp conducted by specially trained instructors, which will embrace all children from three to seventeen. This camp will be supervised by A. Max Carmichael, Eugene Closson, and some six or eight young ladies from Lamoni, Iowa. The Boy Scouts will be looked after by a master scout, and all the ages included will have their recreational, social, spiritual, and instructional periods under these instructors.

July 11 and 12 special services will be conducted at Dennisport Branch down on the cape. Sunday, July 12, can be made a big feature in advertising our work by a general exodus to the Dennisport Branch, where we will be in the midst of summer vacationists from all over the United States. The many autos can add greatly to the advertisement as well as carry the campers to the place of worship.

It is reported that there is a possibility of a local conference of the bishopric and possibly the ministry of the East during the reunion, to inaugurate the campaign of the church program. We understand this is to be under the supervision of President P. M. Smith and Presiding Bishop Albert Carmichael.

We expect Apostle Paul M. Hanson, and possibly Apostle Roy S. Budd; Bishop Mark H. Siegfried, together with the aforesaid dignitaries, with Patriarch Richard Baldwin and the local ministry, will supply the spiritual food for the enrichment of the minds of all.

We feel that we will have the big attraction of the season. Come and be one with us.

W. A. SINCLAIR,
For Publicity Committee.

Davidson, Oklahoma

The Sunday school put on a nice Easter program and had an Easter egg hunt and a picnic.

About two weeks ago the Temple Builders met on the lawn at the home of Brother and Sister John Parker and had an interesting game of volley ball. At twilight they gathered around the fire and roasted wieners and marshmallows.

The Department of Recreation and Expression is holding its own, young and old taking part.

The ladies of the Department of Women have finished the study of the New Testament and now have taken up the study of the Old Testament. They entertained their husbands with a social at the home of Brother and Sister Tom Skinner recently. Old and new games were played, and at a late hour refreshments were served. Some of the Temple Builders cared for the children at the home of Brother and Sister Homer Qualls.

Elmer Hubert Case was called here to preach the baccalaureate sermon for the high school graduates. His sermon was highly complimented. He preached three times at the church, and all felt that his stay was too short.

Look Forward to an Ingathering

MINDEN CITY, MICHIGAN, May 27.—Everything is moving along slowly in this part of the Lord's vineyard.

Elder Parks, our branch president, has started to hold meetings every Sunday afternoon in Ubly, trying to revive interest both among members and nonmembers. They have a beautiful church building there, but many of the Saints have moved away, so they closed the church for a time.

We enjoyed the gift of prophecy in our Sunday morning prayer service and were counseled to come up higher. The Saints were admonished along different lines, and we were also told that if faithful there would be those from the east, north, and west who would be gathered in. We are told that by the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established, and this is the third time we have been told through prophecy that there are some to be gathered in here.

Our hope is that we may all live to do our bit in bringing in the sheaves that are to be gathered.

A three-week series of meetings was held recently at Crosswell, Michigan, by John R. Grice. The series was opened by an all-day meeting May 3. The sermons were an inspiration to all, and there were six more added by baptism.
Independence

Stone Church

Some weather changableness on Sunday's program—sunny this morning and through the day, but warm coats were needed at night. Many of our people are away attending the great convention of young people at Lamoni.

President Elbert A. Smith in the stand at the morning sacramental services spoke interestingly of his recent visit and work in the East. He said the zeal, enthusiasm, and joy he had felt in the beginning of his twenty-five years in the ministry were greater than ever, and he found it so with the Saints in many places; a bright and joyful looking-forwardness, a fervent determination to carry on the program.

President Elbert A. Smith was in charge at the priesthood meeting held in the Institute Building Sunday afternoon at half past two. Brothers C. Ed Miller, R. T. Cooper, and B. J. Scott, were ordained by President E. A. Smith and Bishop Mark H. Siegfried as members of the Standing High Council. The meeting was well attended. Brother Charles Keelcher presented the object of the Harvest Festival Association and asked that preparation be made for carrying out the object of the organization by putting up fruit and donating it to the poor. A further object of the association is to make Zion beautiful by planting flowers, trees, etc.

The Religious services are transferred to the Campus, which will be soon.

The adult class in stewardships was addressed by Bishop Mark H. Siegfried in his terse, clear-cut way. Bishops Carmichael and Becker were out of town. Some of the thoughts gleaned: The fundamental of stewardships is not property, but the attitude of mind. The motive of worker and man is determined by the use that is made of it. No one has a right to use property to the detriment of others. The question of title is the state's recognition of man's right to control. The church will not go into business, that is, take over the property. A further object of the association is to make Zion beautiful by planting flowers, trees, etc.

The adult class in stewardships was addressed by Bishop Mark H. Siegfried in his terse, clear-cut way. Bishops Carmichael and Becker were out of town. Some of the thoughts gleaned: The fundamental of stewardships is not property, but the attitude of mind. The motive of worker and manager must be the same—an unselfish one. Value of property is determined by the use that is made of it. No one has a right to use property to the detriment of others. The question of title is the state's recognition of man's right to control. The church will not go into business, that is, take over the property. A further object of the association is to make Zion beautiful by planting flowers, trees, etc.

The Campus was again a scene of activity Saturday afternoon and evening. The photo play, “Captain January,” was given, and many saw it and admired the playing of Baby Peggy.

Second Church

Brother Harold Hattey has moved over on Enoch Hill and has for this reason resigned his work as assistant president of Religious. It is likely Brother Glen Davies will be asked to assume the duties left by Brother Hattey. This will be presented Friday evening at the regular session.

Sunday's services were well attended. Activity marked both prayer meetings, and the Better Babies meeting in the evening at which Doctor Brickhouse Wilson made a pleasing address was well organized and executed by the direction of Sister Lawrence Nave. The children gave a large part of this program, and the closing number was a splendid bunch of baby pictures thrown on the screen, the subjects being the babies of Second Church.

Walnut Park

Elder Glaud Smith was the speaker Sunday evening, speaking on the subject, “What programs may properly be held in our church building?” this question having been brought to his attention from several sources and various angles. Brother Smith favors programs of a religious nature and believes they can be made a source of great good where a worthwhile lesson is taught. He believes the education of the Saints should be such that none would desire to see anything given on the platform that would not be wholesome to imitate in real life. He gave this rule for our conducting our entertainments, as well as any other activities: “Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and establish his righteousness.”

An ice cream and strawberry social, given by Group 28 on J. Walter Adams’ lawn the evening of June 2, netted them $32 for local church expenses.

Brothers Glaud Smith and R. J. Scott called a meeting in the Cooper-Short Addition southeast of town Wednesday evening and arranged for regular Wednesday evening prayer meetings, with Elder P. A. Sherman in charge. About twenty families will attend here that are not convenient to any other group meetings.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
The committee having in charge the purchase of a new church finally decided on the Saint George Episcopal Church described in this HERALD. Necessary changes will be made, so it can be occupied by the first of August. It is in a beautiful location in the residence district, bordered on one side by a little city park with great forest trees. It is far enough from the car line that services will not be disturbed by the noise.

Fourth Church

The speakers May 31 were Brothers J. O. Worden and W. R. O'Dell.

These Saints report the recent baptism of Miss Anna Luten, a young lady who has made splendid preparation in study of the doctrine. She is one of four who graduated from the normal course. The others were Sisters Worden, Lucking, and Wickham.

The service June 7 was in the interest of the little folks, which was the annual Children's Day festival.

Grandview

May 29.—The Temple Builders, with their leader, Sister Jellings, hiked to City Park Sunday morning for breakfast. After a feast of good eats and a social time, they hiked back to the city in time for Sunday school. They are planning an initiation service soon after Young People's Convention.

A strawberry social was given on Tuesday evening in the basement of the church by the Department of Women. The berries were furnished by Brother E. E. Kinney, formerly of Grandview, now living on a farm near Lansing, Kansas.

The same evening a volley ball game was played between the Rock Island and Grandview boys, Rock Island being the winner.

Bennington Heights repeated their pageant, "The questioner," for us on Thursday evening. Although the rain was the cause of many not being able to attend, it was very much appreciated by those present.

Malvern Hill

Apostle Myron A. McConley was the speaker at eleven o'clock Sunday, and all were much pleased with his effort. Friday night, the 22d, was recreation session at Religio. Games, with good social features, were indulged in, and all enjoyed themselves.

Fourth Church

The speakers the 24th were Brethren R. L. Fulk and E. W. Lloyd at eleven o'clock and a quarter of eight respectively.

At the recent Mothers' Day program, a good attendance was had, there being 172 at Sunday school and 160 at the morning preaching service. The memory of this event will be lasting and beautiful one.

Argentine

Brother W. I. Fligg was the speaker recently both morning and evening to well-filled houses. He continued the series of meetings till the evening of the 27th. A splendid interest was had during the nearly three weeks' effort.

Quite recently the opera "Aida" was produced by the combined effort of eighteen trained choirs in the vicinity of Boston. Among those taking solo parts in the opera we find the name of Brother James R. Houghton, who played the role of the king. This opera was given as the climax to Boston's Second Civic Music Festival, and was put on under the direction of John Dunham. The chorus and ensemble were made up of choral groups from seven or eight nationalities from different cities and villages of Massachusetts. It was a community production including at least five hundred persons.

Kansas City Stake Items

The first real outing of the year in this stake was a picnic Memorial Day at Swope Park. Each church was well represented, and the day was spent in volley ball games between the different churches, visiting with old friends, etc. A large number of Saints were in attendance.

Central Church

The Plus Ultra Class held a most successful home-coming May 24. Invitations had been issued to all former teachers and members of the class, to which a large number responded. The regular lesson was dispensed with, and the class listened to several interesting talks by those who formerly occupied as teachers. A program consisting of musical numbers and talks was presented by members of the class at eleven o'clock, and a very clever history of the class was read by Roy Thrutchley as a feature of the program.

Immediately following the morning service, the class members with their guests drove to Swope Park, where a basket dinner was served. The enjoyment of the occasion, however, was somewhat chilled by the arctic breezes. At the conclusion of the dinner, a picture was taken to serve as a future reminder of the occasion. Soon afterward some of the group heard the crackle of home fires, but quite a number remained to participate in the social festivities. Finally, even these decided that discretion was the better part of valor and adjourned to the home of Brother and Sister R. A. Wight for the balance of the afternoon.

As a prelude to the evening service, an unusually good concert, under the direction of Mrs. Howard Harder, was given by the K L D S Radio Orchestra of Independence. Mrs. Elizabeth Hitchcock also sang in her usual pleasing manner. The program of the day concluded with a most inspiring sermon by President F. M. McDowell, who chose "Keeping the faith" as his subject. He offered a challenge to the young people of the stake to exemplify the slogan, "This year we sail Zionward, which is our course."
Central Chicago

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—On Mothers’ Day we had with us Brother John L. Cooper, who gave a very practical Mothers’ Day sermon, the choir furnishing special music. The little son of Brother and Sister Chester Seering was blessed.

On the 18th Brother J. W. Pettersson preached two interesting sermons against evolution. We had with us Brother and Sister W. C. Carl and Brother and Sister Prosper Carl from the Lansdowne Branch.

This morning Brother Romer favored us with some interesting and much needed information on spiritualism. Brother McDonald will be the speaker this evening.

The entertainment given by Sisters June Whiting and Belle Reese Simons under the auspices of the Department of Women was a splendid success, and forty dollars was added to the building fund. Yesterday’s bake sale netted us $22, which was also added to the building fund.

We are looking forward to an apron social June 18, and hope for a large attendance.

Southern Wisconsin

On Sunday, May 17, I had the pleasure of baptizing five in this part of the Lord’s vineyard. I am reminded of what William Harwood once wrote me from Soldiers Grove after some had been baptized: “Brother Dutton, we baptized seven, and there were eleven left over.” In this case there were five baptized and twelve left over. Some day in June we hope to return to Bell Center and lead the remaining twelve or more into the narrow way. Should it please God to thus have it, we hope that in due time a branch will be organized there.

At Petersburg, near by, we have also an interesting opening. The first Sunday in January, we organized a Sunday school of over fifty with Brother Elmer Anderson as superintendent. Not over seven of the number were members of the church. They have been using the International Quarterly, but beginning next quarter the school will be equipped with our quarterly.

About sixteen years ago I did some preaching in company with Elder E. J. Goodrich at these two places, and baptized three. Very little preaching has been done there since that time, until I began last September. Elder Philip Davenport of Soldiers Grove Branch has done some preaching on Sundays at Petersburg. He and his father, Elder Arthur Davenport, were present at the confirmation and assisted in the ceremony.

May the good Lord prosper his work and make it grow in all the earth.

J. O. DUTTON.

East Los Angeles

3467 East Fourth Street

May 18.—Our services continue to be well attended with the exception of one Sunday, May 17, when the choir went to Santa Barbara, taking away five auto loads of our younger members. We were glad to have them go, however, knowing that they would bring pleasure and cheer to the few earnest Saints in that city who are trying to build up the church there.

Visiting elders who have been with us of late were Brother Jack Damron of Tulare; Brother Levi Hemenway of San Gabriel; and J. I. Spencer of Los Angeles.

A new name has been placed on the cradle roll, that of little Shirley Edwin Johnson, who came to the home of Brother and Sister Austin Johnson about four weeks ago.

On Mothers’ Day a fitting program was given by the mothers and children of the Sunday school, after which Brother Harold Motter read a paper on the subject, “Mothers’ Day,” and Brother V. L. Lum gave a short address.

The Ladies’ Aid served a supper on the evening of May 12, from which a substantial fund was raised to help in paying off the debt on the piano. After the supper the choir gave a musical program.

Selden, Kansas

May 26.—Mothers’ Day was observed by the Lone Star Sunday School, the children giving many songs and readings, followed by a short sermon by Elder John Nutt, in which he presented beautiful and inspiring thoughts long to be remembered.

On May 10 Missionary A. C. Silvers arrived and held meetings the ensuing week. His sermons were food for the Saints, and Christ’s gospel was beautifully presented to nonmembers. We regretted to see him leave on May 25, but are looking forward to his being with us again. District President J. T. Nutt accompanied him to Kanorado, Kansas.

A Children’s Day program is being planned, and we have been invited by a union Sunday school to assist them, after which they have requested a sermon by Brother Nutt.

Special Missionary Services Started

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLAHOMA, June 4.—Some months ago this branch took action to get a missionary to come here to hold meetings after conference. Last Friday Brother Hubert Case came to hold meetings. Brother Jack Koshiway, another of the missionaries of the district, is due to arrive tomorrow night. There is hope of much good being accomplished. Brother Case had to go to Independence but expects to return in a few days.

At a business meeting held last night the branch voted to procure a tent.

Brother S. W. Simmons preached a very fine sermon the night of June 2, and on May 24 the Saints were privileged to hear two excellent sermons from our beloved apostle, Roy S. Budd.

The Sunday school gave a picnic at the lake on May 29, and an enjoyable time was had.

Ottumwa, Iowa

June 2.—The attendance at the services here has increased during May, and the interest and attention have been fine. We have been made happy by the visits of Apostles J. F. Garver and D. T. Williams. Brother Garver preached two wonderful sermons, which gave confidence to the Saints. He presented the ideals of the church toward the redemption of Zion, and also gave a constructive talk to the priesthood.

Sunday, May 31, Brother G. Scott Daniel of Burlington paid us a visit, preaching twice during the day and gave some wonderful food for thought. His gentle but firm way of presenting the gospel made for him many admirers. His sermon in the morning was especially enjoyed. He told of the services rendered by our forefathers in bringing about the freedom of this Nation and of those who have died in order to make this church what it is to-day, thus pointing out the need of our living right and doing our duty.

Two babies have been blessed. The Department of Women had a bake sale, and the sisters fasted one Thursday from mid-day meal and gave the price of it to their fund.
The Sunday school is being kept alive by our superintendent, and many boys and girls are making progress. We hope to see them stand as loyal soldiers of Christ before the world.
A beautiful solo was rendered by Jean Santee and a very fine duet by John Baker and daughter during the month.
We have many good singers here, which is a big asset to the work.

Activity at Woodbine and Dunlap

WOODBINE, IOWA, June 2.—Mothers' Day was appropriately observed. The program was furnished by the brothers and the young people principally, and consisted of musical num­bers, readings, and an address by Elder Fred A. Fry. The mothers were guests of honor and occupied the north half of the church. It was suggested that the men get the dinner in the various homes, but as yet we have failed to get favorable reports along that line.
Marked activity is reported in the young people's weekly prayer meetings. The Spirit has accompanied the ministra­ tions of the local priesthood the past month.
Elder Charles Putnam has gone, with the prayers of the Saints, to his field of labor in Nauvoo. May the Father of all direct his servants that much good may be accomplished and many be gathered into the fold.
Dunlap mission, in charge of Elder D. A. Holcomb, is holding regular preaching services on Sundays at eleven o'clock.
The Sunday school is growing in numbers, and a Religio-has been organized. On May 24 special services were held.
Brother Joseph Lane and Fred A. Fry did the speaking to appreciative auditors. A common statement by the priesthood is, "I enjoy preaching in Dunlap, because I feel the support of every Saint."

Successful Ministerial Conference Reported

FALL RIVER, MASSACHUSETTS, May 29.—The ministerial conference of the Southern New England District met at Fall River May 28 and 24. There was a short business sesion on Saturday evening at seven o'clock, with the district presidency, W. A. Sinclair and E. L. Traver, in charge.
Elder Calvin Rich, on the way to his mission, heard of the conference, and all were glad to welcome him. The Saturday evening time was given over to him, and all agreed that the meeting was very inspiring.
Brother Rich felt that the membership were more united than ever before in the history of the church. Last year was his most successful, but he expects his work to be even more successful this year. Doubtless he will be separated from his family the whole year.
There was a heavy thunder storm Saturday evening, and when the meeting was adjourned the Saints had to leave with their guests in a heavy downpour of rain.
Sunday morning the first service was at eight o'clock, for the quorum of elders to meet, with places assigned to the priests, teachers, and deacons.
The prayer service was at half past nine and was largely attended. There were special prayers for the sick, of whom there are several in the district. All present felt the Spirit to a marked degree and were encouraged to go on. One sister gave a song through the Spirit.
At eleven o'clock three fifteen-minute talks were given by Elder T. J. Elliott of Providence, and E. L. Traver and M. C.
Fisher of Somerville. They gave news from General Conference and spoke of the future outlook for the church. All the speakers of the conference spoke of the unity that did and would exist in the church, and look forward to a prosperous year.
Dinner was served in the church by the Fall River Department of Women, assisted by the young men in Alma Coombs's class. Lunch was served also.
The afternoon speaker was Patriarch Richard Baldwin, and in the evening Elder George W. Robley, sr., occupied.
Three offerings were taken, two for the district and one for Fall River.
Brother Baldwin and his wife remained in Fall River a few days as the guests of Elder John E. Rogerson and family.

On May 28 the Temple Builders gave their play, "The minister's wife's new bonnet." The church was well filled with more nonmembers than Saints. It was greatly enjoyed. Cake and ice cream were offered for sale, the proceeds to be app lied on the church debt.
The pastor is selling Ready-Jell to help the church along financially.
George D. Sinclair of Somerville was the speaker May 31.
There were very few out, as quite a number had gone to Onset over the holidays. In the evening Alma M. Coombs was the speaker, as Brother Sinclair and Pastor James W. Heap were summoned to Little Compton to administer to Sister Alice Whalley Simmons who was very ill.
From now on the attendance will be small, as so many will be going to Onset. Some in the city could come but do not when they know others will be absent. A few will be faithful and come all summer.

Hutchinson, Kansas

June 4.—Missionary Harvey V. Minton has just closed a series of meetings here. The services were well attended by the Saints and a few nonmembers. Brother Minton is a good speaker, and his sermons were very much enjoyed. They contained much spiritual food, and all were greatly edified.
We feel that a greater stimulation to action will be the future of the Hutchinson Branch. The Saints are few in number, but we hope in the near future to see our numbers increased.
On Sunday Brothers Bishop Pooler and Thomas S. Williams, district president and pastor of Wichita Branch, were with us. Brother Williams was the speaker in the morning at eleven, bringing an affirmative message that was much enjoyed. Brother Charles Pooler spoke at three in the afternoon and gave a broader vision of the field which God's people should occupy.
At the close of the afternoon meeting two were baptized, Virgil Lee Thompson, eldest son of Brother A. H. Thompson, and Everet Taylor, the eldest son of Brother Taylor. Brother Minton officiated in the baptism. We look forward to the time when he may be with us again.

A. H. THOMPSON.

Good Convention of Young People

GIRARD, MONTANA, June 2.—Owing to the drought and other conditions existing, interest has been somewhat at a low ebb, but we wish to report renewed interest at this time.
It was decided to hold a young people's convention May 30 and 31, but because of the short notice Missionary George Thorburn was unable to be present, and District President J. C. Page wrote that he would not be able to attend. However, all possible arrangements were made, and Brother Arthur Ritter, counselor to the district president, was in attend­ ce.

By noon the trains which had been held up by washouts at Saint Joseph and other points, began to unload their crowds for the convention, and with the promise of clear fine weather the gathering grew until yesterday, Sunday, there was a crowd on the campus of about nine hundred, of which 450 were registered visitors.

From nine until four of each day was spent in class study, and from four to six in recreation. Friday evening, the convention held its big social, when the Lamoni people and the visitors enjoyed themselves in games and song.

The outstanding feature of Saturday, outside of the regular class program, was the play, "Mary Magdalene," presented by the College Players. Brother George Mesley of Australia played the part of Lucius Verus, and Sister Blanche Edwards the part of Mary Magdalene. Besides these there was a cast of twenty-eight.

This three-act drama is a remarkable presentation of the text: "He that loveth father and mother more than me is not worthy of me." In the closing scene Mary has to make her choice between permitting her dearly loved Master to suffer the agony of crucifixion or having him set free by Lucius Verus through her renunciation of Jesus and his message.

At the sacramental service Sunday morning, there was an estimated congregation of nine hundred. The spirit of consecration was with the meeting, and the testimonies of the young people revealed their desire to be of service for Christ in the redemption of Zion.

At eleven o'clock Apostle D. T. Williams preached on "The undiscovered continent." Comparing the experience of Columbus in his voyage over the uncharted Atlantic to America, with that of the church in its onward progress toward Zion, the speaker eloquently pleaded for us to keep our course, holding before us the convention motto: "This year we sail Zionward, which is our course."

At half past two a problems meeting was held. Addresses were made by President Frederick M. Smith on "The outstanding problem of Zion"; Elder A. Max Carmichael on "The problems of our religious education"; Apostle F. H. Edwards on "Our missionary problems"; and Elder Frank B. Almond on "The problem of church literature for our young people." At this time Brother McDowell urged that the young people give him and Brother Almond a fair trial in editing the Autumn Leaves, and that they back it up with subscriptions. As a result over one hundred subscriptions to the paper were taken that afternoon. It shows that when the young people are asked to do something definite, they will see that it is done.

In the evening Convention Hall was crowded to capacity to hear President Smith's sermon. It was a clear-cut appeal to the young people to envisage the needs of Zion in their preparation for life work. He stated that we were nearer Zion than we were some time ago; that while the road was harder, yet it was always steepest as one drew closer to the peak of a hill. We are hoping to be able to report this sermon in the near future.

The convention thus far breathes a spirit of optimism and determination to carry on the program of the church. It should be encouraging to Herald readers everywhere to know that we are indeed going forward, and that the young people are pledged to the redemption of Zion.

The opening session was a young people's prayer service at half past nine Saturday morning in charge of Brother Ritter. At noon all partook of a feast of good things to eat at the church, and at half past two a ball game was played on the diamond near the church, between the Andes and community teams. Honors fell to the Andes boys. There was a good attendance at the game.

At eight o'clock a program of readings; solos, some with guitar accompaniment; and a duet, was enjoyed. Following the program the young people gathered in the hills near Andes and roasted wiener, which were served with pickles and buns. We were entertained while gathered round two large fires, by telling jokes and singing songs. All report a good time.

Sunday morning at half past nine another young people's prayer service was held, in charge of Elders Page and Andes. Sunday school convened at half past ten, followed by preaching at half past eleven by Brother Page. Dinner was served again at the church, after which the Saints gathered at the water's edge while the little daughter of Brother Andes was baptized. A business meeting was held in the afternoon, when it was decided to hold another such meeting next year. Some were discouraged at the opening of the meeting, but as time went on, and upon the unexpected arrival of Brother Page, all were in a better humor.

Brother Page drove down, bringing a carload of Glasgow Saints. Others in attendance were from Fairview, Montana, and Alamo and Williston, North Dakota. We feel that good was accomplished, for a renewed interest was aroused, and all are looking forward to the coming reunion and district conference to be held at Glasgow July 8 to 12. Several have expressed themselves as being pleased with the Saints' Herald since conference.

Brother and Sister Andes, with their three children, left this morning for the East to visit relatives and friends near Plano, Illinois.

May God prosper the work, and may all hold to the rod of iron, laboring together for greater things in the future.

Brother and Sister J. H. Beaudin wish to express through the columns of the Herald their thanks to the Owen Sound Saints for kindness to their daughter Elsie during her long affliction with rheumatism. They sincerely appreciate this kindness and untiring efforts to make her comfortable and happy.

Our Departed Ones

SWENSON.—Cecilia, wife of Elder Swen Swenson, was born in Helsingborg, Sweden, December 18, 1888. Moved to America about fifty years ago and resided on a farm near Coal City, Missouri, where she and her husband heard the gospel and were baptized by I. N. White February 9, 1906. Shortly afterwards the whole cabin was called and ordained elders and she urged him to take the mission field and give their lives to the work thereby being made a missionary, so marvellous indeed, that her husband came home from Japan in the course of time they moved to Far West and purchased half of what is called "The Old Far West Farm." About four years ago Sister Swenson commenced to feel a tinge of pain in the region of the stomach, which developed a cancer and caused her death May 21. Died at the home of her daughter, Minnie Anes, in Independence, in the presence of her husband and children, passing away peacefully, leaving husband and three daughters. Funeral service at the Stone Church May 24 in charge of J. N. and Ammon White. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery, near Independence, Missouri.

Vineyard Gleanings

A Visit to Kirtland and Cleveland, Ohio

By diligent inquiry of passers-by, one can soon acquire an astonishing fund of information and misinformation. If from this he is able to select the truth, he has extracted the golden nugget from the drifting sand.

Arriving in Willoughby, Ohio, I was only a few miles from Kirtland. To ask questions is easier than to walk, so I began to interrogate the populace of Willoughby. The first man questioned informed me that a bus could be had at a certain corner at ten minutes to twelve. The next man told me that the bus would be found at another corner at ten minutes after twelve. The third said emphatically that no bus ran to Kirtland. But the fourth assured me that I could get a street car to Kirtland. To this I demurred, saying that to my certain knowledge no street cars ran to Kirtland. But he insisted that he had been to Kirtland very recently and had seen street car rails through the center of the town.

Argument was cut short by the arrival of a bus from Cleveland bound to Kirtland; and at the time and place named by the second deponent. I secured a seat for the left half of my person in the already crowded vehicle, and when the door was closed very politely but firmly upon my right half, by process of compressing of us all, I was entirely seated.

To relieve the pressure, a very nice young gentleman volunteered to hold a very presentable young lady on his lap. To this she consented without too much show of reluctance and soon seemed to feel quite at home; but that is no reason why the bus lines of America should continue to impose upon the self-sacrificing spirit of the young gentlemen of today. Yet it must be said for the young man that he behaved very well indeed and did not permit the least trace of displeasure to appear on his face.

Arriving in Kirtland I was soon at the pleasant home of Brother and Sister Eben Curry. Brother Curry has lived in Kirtland for many years. He is now pastor of the local branch and is well loved by the Saints, and justly so.

Elder T. G. Neville is president of the Kirtland District and lives in Kirtland in the hotel building. Bishop Charles Fry is bishop of the district and plans to locate his family in Kirtland. So the branch has the benefit of an able resident force of branch and district officers, and in addition Evangelists A. E. Stone and John F. Martin have residence there, as well as former missionary F. J. Ebeling.

Evangelist F. G. Pitt and wife have been Temple attendants during summer months, to wait upon, guide, and instruct tourist visitors to the Temple, of whom as our readers know, there are very many. In this work these two have been very successful; but this year Brother Pitt found it necessary to go to Battle Creek for an operation, and the Saints are speculating anxiously as to whether he will be able to be with them in that work this season. Temporarily Brother Martin is attending to that duty.

One spiritually minded could hardly enter the Temple without sensing the kindly, beneficent, comforting presence of the Spirit. This time as I knelt alone in the upper court before the altar a presence seemed to brood there with love and benediction, and I wished that sometime the priesthood as a body might meet there again and all feel a sense of sonship and undivided brotherhood. Then indeed could the endowment of spiritual power come.

There is no question in my mind that the atmosphere of the Temple meets a soul need. God may not need it to help him meet us; we need it to help us meet him.

A very good attendance greeted me at the Tuesday evening service (May 26), and the liberty and blessing enjoyed in speaking was the occasion or thanksgiving. I can easily believe that Joseph and Sidney actually saw the Master in that holy edifice.

Wednesday at half past five we met at the Chagrin River below the Temple. A very worthy man and wife were baptized by Brother A. E. Stone. They are largely the fruits of Brother Curry’s personal labor, as he first met them in a business way and gradually unfolded to them the gospel. Several very fine and intelligent people have been added to the Kirtland Branch in the past year or so. Time was when only a handful of faithful people met in the Temple, and at that time a prophecy was given that... the time would come when it would not hold the local congregation; the prophecy is near to fulfillment. We may hope to see a decided and permanent growth of the work in this historic and beautiful place; and in time, let us hope, we may see the Kirtland Stake.

The annual reunion now embraces several districts and seems destined to be one of the biggest and best in the church. This year the committee has asked the First Presidency to take personal charge. In all probability Brother Floyd M. McDowell will be present to represent the Presidency.

The following evening, Friday, the Religio, as ordered by the late General Conference, and those baptized were confirmed.

A visitor is struck by the custom of the local congregation in one matter—at the close of the service the orchestra plays a quite air, and the people immediately march out. They visit and chat in the vestibule, not in the Temple proper. This custom helps to preserve a proper reverence for the place. It is a wholesome custom—how much more should we respect the sanctity of our own souls, for we are told that we, too, are his temple, and our persons the place of the abode of his Spirit.

 Truly, I love the Kirtland Temple, and with regret left it and the good Saints who commune there; but duty called to another part of the field.

In Cleveland

From Kirtland my route led to Cleveland, Ohio. Here Brother J. H. Talbot, president of the branch, met me and took me to his home, where the visiting minister is soon made at home indeed. In the evening I spoke at the East Side Church, to a good sized audience with good interest and liberty.

The following evening, Friday, the Religio, through its president, Brother Henry Campbell, invited me to address the young people. The address was preceded and followed by a very interesting program of music and recitations. The fine social spirit of the Saints was a noticeable feature of the group at Cleveland. I was pleased to meet various young people formerly from Lamoni or Independence—Ira Stubbart, Vernon Lee, Brother Kelsey, and others.

The work in Cleveland is decidedly on the upgrade of late. The Sunday school is an active feature of growth, having an attendance of about one hundred.

The Saints are negotiating for a new church home—the Cleveland Heights Methodist Church. It is in a very desirable location, well equipped with excellent pipe organ, good auditorium, and ample rooms for class work in the Sunday school and Religio, and for social gatherings. If secured it will be a decided gain over the present location.

As I left Cleveland to attend the New York district conference at Nagara Falls, the young people were gathering to go on a picnic outing to Kirtland to meet at the home and in the woods of Brother and Sister Earnest Webbe, the day being a holiday. I thought how excellent that they should be thus together on a holiday, under church influence, rather than scattered through the pleasure resorts and parks of Cleveland, God knows where or under what influence and environment. I favor the movement of the church to interest herself in the recreation of her youth. Their play life is as much a part of our concern as any part of their life. A very wise physician, Doctor Richard Cabot, says that men “live by work, play, love, and worship.” Religion need not to confine its attention exclusively to worship, but should interest itself in every legitimate function and interest of life, and our social life is a very important part of our existence. May Latter Day Saints Go Into Politics?

It is a common thing to hear the remark that there is no place in politics for Latter Day Saints. Clearly this is a mistake. Politics and party organization are conceded to be necessary for the carrying on of our municipal, State, and Federal governments, and men and women who are Latter Day Saints and who possess qualities of mind and soul which fit them for use to the public in any of these governments should not shirk their just share of the duties to be borne.

Indeed, there is here presented a chance to do honor to the church organization and the gospel principles which we desire to see considered and honored and generally adopted; but of course it is no place for men who have not a determination and a confidence in their ability to adhere to the principles of their faith, even though there may be times when this is difficult and demands courage and judgment.

We believe it to be the duty of a Latter Day Saint to serve his community, his State or country in office, but we do not believe he should obtain his election by questionable methods or permit his honor to be compromised either before election or while exercising the powers or prerogatives of his official position.

In western Iowa it is not unusual for our people to be found occupying positions of political trust. Several are found there right now. Among these is Brother Jack Harding, mayor of Council Bluffs. The Council Bluffs Nonpareil recently devoted a large part of its editorial space to an act of Mayor Harding, and we are going to reproduce it as an example of what may be achieved.

It says:

During the week Mayor Jack Harding appointed J. Chris Jensen to membership on the municipal water board. This action will stand in the records as one of the outstanding features of this administration. In making this appointment, the mayor exemplified the highest and best ideals in municipal administration. He gave the people of the city as a whole in this appointment the best service it was possible for him to render. To do this he broke away from precedents, away from politics and from personalities and selected a man for this job concededly better qualified than any other in the city for service on this board.

It will be more than worth while to briefly examine this record. The water board in this city handles annually $350,000. This is a big and an important business—the biggest in the city municipality. It requires a high degree of integrity and business ability to manage this business successfully. Consider the volume of supplies purchased every year by this board. Labor must be employed to operate the plant and to take care of repairs, extensions, and all other details. Technical knowledge of mechanical problems is very helpful to a water commissioner.

It has been insisted that in view of the magnitude of this business that the plant would stand an administration expense ranging from six to ten or fifteen thousand dollars per year. If we had started off on this line we probably never would have discovered that this big overhead expense is unnecessary. Hundreds of municipal plants of this kind in the country are carrying overhead expenses where these managerial places carrying good-sized salaries are held generally by local politicians rather than real business executives. Our plant makes a lot of money. It is paying for itself. It takes care of bond interest and bond principal, it takes care of repairs and improvements and of depreciation and then registers a fine surplus. It would be easily possible to add a big bill to our plant for administration expense and still leave a handsome profit to the city.

Mayor Harding has a broad understanding of this problem in this city. He knows that the danger involved in the municipal ownership of public utilities is political administration. When a big utility such as a water plant gets into the hands of politicians, a large part of its efficiency record is generally lost in the shuffle. There are hundreds of examples of this sort in the country. As a matter of fact, only a few municipally operated plants in the country are counted successes. The plant in Council Bluffs is an outstanding example of successfully operated municipal institutions of this type.

How does it happen that we got off on the right foot on this efficiency line in this city? The answer is J. Chris Jensen. The finest thing Tom Maloney did as mayor was to appoint Jensen on this water board. His intent was to give the people the best service in this matter that it was possible to give. Now Mayor Harding comes across with a reappointment of Jensen because he is determined that the good record flowing from this first appointment shall not be broken.

Jack Harding is not seeking control of this splendid plant for himself. If he had contemplated such control, he would have appointed a close political friend which he was entitled to do. He put all such thought behind him. He crossed the Rubicon in defiance of political practice and selected a member of another political party. Indeed, he cast politics aside entirely and selected a man on merit. The thought of Mayor Harding in this connection was after all simple honesty. I must use my official station in this matter to protect the interests of the people of Council Bluffs.

People may criticize Mr. Harding on matters of petty detail, but it will have to be conceded that when he was confronted with the most important matter which he will face in his administration he didn't fail to measure up to the expectation of the soundest thinking people in the city. He did not use his office to feather his own nest or to reward political friends. He used it to protect and promote the interests of the people of the city. You cannot find in the records anywhere a higher or better type of municipal administration. In this appointment, the mayor rang the bell at the top of the pole which marks the limit to which any man or woman can go in the service of the people.

Expect Class B License for K L D S This Week

A letter received by the radio department June 8, from Radio Supervisor E. A. Beane, advised that ten days or two weeks would be required to get his inspection report and recommendations through the departmental channels at Washington. The Department of Commerce, of which Secretary Hoover is head, issues all broadcasting licenses. The department maintains nine district radio inspection offices in the United States, each of which is directed by a supervisor of radio.

Another letter from the radio supervisor's office, dated June 11, states that every effort is being made to expedite the issuing of the Class B license which will enable K L D S to go permanently on 441 meters, with a power output of 1,000 watts.

If the license is received at Independence within the two weeks mentioned by Supervisor Beane, K L D S will be on the air Sunday, the 21st, using full power on 441 meters.

Young People in Convention

Closes Sunday Under Splendid Conditions

The keen interest shown at the beginning of the Convention continued unabated until the closing benediction. Every day brought more visitors from near and distant points, until on the last day a total of five hundred had registered. This was not quite as many as the Convention of last year, but what it lacked in numbers it made up in the spirit of consecration and determination to see the program of Zion carried out.

After Sunday night, when President Smith made a stirring appeal to the young people to study the problems of the church and be prepared to make the ideals of Zion a reality, the gathering began more seriously to take up the study work, as outlined in last week’s HERALD. The class in Eugenics and Heredity grew from fifty-six to a hundred thirty-four, while the other classes also showed a similar growth.

Monday evening Elder Frank Almond occupied the pulpit, preaching on the subject of “Singleness of purpose.” He showed that the achievement of every ideal was at the expense of lesser goals, and that Zion to be redeemed demanded men and women who were willing to spend and be spent for the realization of their vision. He portrayed the sacrifices of the pioneers of the faith, and pleaded with the young people to take up the torch and hold it high, and carry forward their work.

On Tuesday evening, after a busy day of study, the convention gathered in cars for a visit to the various spots of historic interest in Lamoni. Forty-seven cars carried the crowd of smiling happy youth, first to the Saints’ Home, where in the hush of even- tide they sang the songs of Zion for the old folks. To have seen the shining faces of those aged Saints, as they listened to these youthful voices singing such hymns as, “In the light,” “We thank thee, O God, for a prophet,” “How firm a foundation,” closing with “God be with you till we meet again”—to have seen this must have made even the angels in heaven rejoice.

From the Saints’ Home they went to Liberty Home, then to Sister Callie B. Stebbins and Sister Marietta Walker. The latter was ninety-one years old, and with all the mother love which she has spent unstintingly for the young people in her incomparable years of service in the church, she told the singers, “Another commandment give I unto you, that ye love one another.” With her beautiful words in their hearts, the serenaders then went on to the home of Brother F. M. McDowell, where they had the pleasure of an introduction to the youngest mem-ber of the convention, Miss Maxine Fae McDowell, just four days old. The last visit was to the Children’s Home, and from there to the South Woods, where in the light of a blazing bonfire the party broke up with a final song.

On Wednesday evening the hall was packed as Doctor D. W. Moorehouse, president of Drake University, presented an illustrated lecture on “The depths of the universe.” He depicted the entrancing majesties of astronomy, and his audience sat spellbound under his masterly address.

No young people’s convention is complete without the kindly presence and sound counsel of President Elbert A. Smith. And so on the next evening, and on the following three days, Brother Elbert spoke on the following subjects: “Voltaire, why do you laugh?” “Jesus grew;” “This year we sail Zionward,” “Workers together with God.” These sermons were reported, and will appear in early issues of the HERALD.

The weather, which had been ideal throughout the convention, began to show foreboding signs, and on the last two days some heavy showers fell. Yet it was a thing to be thankful for that for nine days out of the ten, the convention could enjoy the recreation out of doors.

The convention closed Sunday night with a powerful address by President F. M. McDowell, in which he gathered into one the message of each activity of the meetings. “The spirit of the convention” was his theme. He said that this year’s convention would stand out by itself as one in which the young people had definitely committed themselves to carry out the program of the church, that the spirit of devotion, of determination, and of perseverance characterized in the prayer meetings, in the sermons, and in the steady attendance at the classes, was an assurance to him that the redemption of Zion could be and would be realized.

And so the Young People’s Convention came to a close. It revealed at least one thing, and that is that the church need not fear the future. She has behind her a host of aggressive forward-looking young people. From the convention that has just ended there has been born the high resolve of our youth to go forward. Not to orate, but to demonstrate; not to sulk, but to work; no more indifference, but enthusiasm; no more fearing, but daring. The Lord God of Hosts is with us yet!

The Saints in Burlington, Iowa, are rejoicing in the use of their new church. Brother G. Scott Daniel writes that the first services were held in its basement June 7. A splendid spirit was attendant. Services will be continued here until the upper part of the building is finished.

A Chosen People

BY S. A. BURGESS

Many times has the question been directly raised whether God has a chosen people in the sense that they were the only people for whom he cares, a people who would establish a city strongly walled and withdraw themselves from the world, for they are chosen and foreordained to be saved.

This idea of Zion as a place to which we will retreat and then pull up the stakes and withdraw ourselves, arose in Ancient Israel, if not earlier, and even in this age comes up occasionally at different times. But is that the true idea of the Spirit of God, for is not really the purposes of Jesus better explained in that wonderful prayer in John 17, "I pray not that you take them out of the world, but keep them from the evil that is in the world," that we may go in and out and fine pasture, that those of the celestial glory shall in eternity minister to those of the terrestrial glory, and the terrestrial to the celestial? The ministers of God are called to see, know, and minister to the sufferings of the people. They are ministers, those who serve.

On this question of foreordination and predestination, the following was written ten to twelve years ago in reply:

They are chosen because there is work to do, and they are fitted to do it. If they are not, it is a cause for condemnation. Foreordained, because he has ordained that those who comply with the divine law, by sacrifice may enter the celestial glory and dwell in his presence. Predestined, because chosen for service. He is willing to offer to us this opportunity, but never as paganism or sectarianism have had it, and as it has been carried into the church in part; that upon an arbitrary basis, for his infinite glory he has chosen some to be burned and some to be saved, and this without regard to works, conduct, or fitness. Never that his decision is partial, is purely arbitrary or without reason, but always based on his law, in intelligence of the best sort in justice and in mercy. It is strange to note that the books do not teach this doctrine of fore election, but it is one of the things we as individuals have not yet outgrown from sectarianism. How amusing it is then that sectarianism should bring this accusation against the church.

On the other hand, is it, or is it not reasonable for a man by an overt act to bind his conscience and that conscious act help him to keep his covenant? Is it reasonable or unreasonable that there is a right way, and that those who enter into a covenant with God, if they keep that covenant have a claim, that is superior to those who refuse to have a covenant, and to those who do not believe in immediate communication?

When we go further and find some new and wonderful truth, perhaps one of our first feelings is one of dread. Surely now the temple of our fathers has fallen, for here is a truth without the temple, and we fear to approach and make comparison least our early faith be undermined.

Our personal experience has been at times to concede some new truth with fear and trembling, yet feeling that truth could not be inconsistent with the Divine, we have tried and finally found a place in which this new truth would set; only the hole appeared too small, but at last we make a trial and wonderful to relate, we find that the new stone not only fits in the place, but it fits so smoothly that it fits without scar, and shows us that in fact it belongs.

But it is not only the joy we feel in finding that every truth fits into its proper place in this temple of our God, but as we look, how wonderful the reality, it begins to glow with a new beauty and becomes more wonderful by far to behold than it ever was in the past. This temple was not made with hands.

At last there may come a day when we worship not only in the natural temple of the Christ, but spiritually we stand in the heavens with the earth beneath our feet, the marvelous works of God before us. We see the stars evolving in space, and we behold this glory of God and worship with a fullness we have never known before. But now we realize, we no longer believe, we know past controversy that all truth is eternal with God and belongs in his holy temple.

Then returning, we see in a new light, all this ritualism, mechanism, church service, and outward form; but realize still, in the will of God, it is an absolute necessity; that the statement of the divine plan, first made is still true, though in a fuller, greater sense, than we had ever supposed. Which is to say, we must profess that the truth is far beyond our concept, not beneath.

Those who are willing to sacrifice; those who are willing to bear the scoffing of the world; those who are willing to prepare themselves by study and by prayer; those who will give their services to humanity and also will seek the face of God, believe him to be not only omnipotent, but also a loving Father who will hear and answer; those who are fit, in other words, are chosen as a people to bear his message to the sinful world and strive to turn the hearts of people to God, and to better economic conditions.

The first sermons we ever preached were to warn... that while we had done well in being baptized, the books plainly teach that baptism alone will not save, and if we rely on membership alone we are blind and deceiving ourselves.

Baptism of water has its place. It is as large, if not larger than we have supposed; but it is relatively smaller, simply because the wonderful work of God is far greater than we supposed.

The Law of Temporalities

BY BISHOP C. J. HUNT

A sermon delivered at Enoch Hill in Independence, Missouri.

The subject is a very important one. Without a full compliance with the law pertaining to temporalities, the church cannot attain to the spirituality and prosperity that is expected of it. I have chosen three texts. The first is recorded in 1 Chronicles 20: 20: “Believe in the Lord your God, so shall ye be established; believe his prophets, so shall ye prosper.” These words were directed to former-day Israel and can well be applied to us. The second text is found in the Hebrew letter, 7th chapter: “And here men that die receive tithes; but there he receiveth them of whom it is witnessed that he liveth.” The third is that familiar verse which is one of the signs spoken of by the Master that should be fulfilled before his glorious coming: “And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.” —Matthew 24: 14.

Our Three Standard Books Compared to Three Electric Lights

Before making comment upon these texts I wish to emphasize the fact that the word of God is as a light to our feet and a lamp to our pathway. I have before me the three standard books of the church; namely, the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. To impress your minds more strongly as to the real worth of these books to us as a church, I will try to make an illustration, or comparison. Before me are three electric lights which are quite sufficient to light this little chapel. If I request the deacon to give us the light from only one, you would notice that the room would be much darker than it is. I place the Bible first. It contains the word of God, which is indeed light to us. But many great and important questions are not fully defined in it, hence we need more light. Even the law of tithes and offerings is not fully explained, especially that of surplus and consecration. This is equally true of church organization, duties of officers, doctrine, etc., held so dear by all of us. In order to make many of these subjects plainer, I place the Book of Mormon containing the words of God, giving more light to us. I now request the deacon to give us two of the three lights which light this room. You discover at once how much pleasanter everything appears in the room when we have this additional light. This is equally true to those who are desirous to have more of the word of God that they might see the road they shall travel, not being so apt to stumble and fall. We are still blessed with another book containing the words of the Lord direct to latter-day Israel—the Doctrine and Covenants; and placing this book with the two former records, we increase the light and hence can see our way more clearly along all lines of church work. Not only as to church organization, not only as to the general principles of the doctrine of Christ, but many pages in this last book define our duty in plainness on the law of temporalities. The request to the deacon to give us the benefit of the three lights in the chapel will help to impress upon the minds of all the need of all three books, and ought to emphasize the fact that Latter Day Saints should have much charity for their religious neighbors who have only the one book, the one light telling of the great and good things of the Master.

The law of tithes is very old. Under this law the church, even before the days of Moses, prospered. During his ministration the Saints were blessed. A failure on the part of Israel to observe the temporal law preceding and during the life work of the Prophet Malachi is in evidence, for great loss came to that people. Let us change the scene for a moment and pass over to this land, and we will note that the Nephite record tells us that they observed this law even until the Master made his glorious appearance to them. Contrast the difference between the hearty welcome he received by the multitude here, and the unwelcome in the land of Judea. One kept the law of tithing, the other failed; hence the difference in the perpetuation of missionary work and the reception accorded the world’s Savior. It will also be noted that following the great day of Pentecost the members gave more liberally of their temporalities, hence the statement that they had all things common. We do not have the full definition of what this meant until we get the account of how such blessed conditions may be obtained in our own day. Now we can better understand their motive, their willingness to sacrifice, and the amount of their gifts at that time. The failure of the church to believe in the Lord caused them to be scattered. A belief in him established them. Adhering to the requirements of the prophets caused the people to prosper. This ought to be a lesson to us. The language of Saint Paul should be our motto to-day, “Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of
I desire to impress upon your minds that Jesus the Christ is the bishop of this great church, and that he has appointed those who may act in the name of bishops, who are but agents for him. The statement in the text, "Here men that die receive tithes," is very significant. At the beginning of the reorganization of this church our good brother, Bishop I. L. Rogers, received tithes from the members, and I presume Brother W. H. Deam, who has charge of this service, remembers him well and may have paid tithes to him. This brother has passed to his reward. He was succeeded by Bishop George A. Blakeslee, who labored faithfully and well, receiving tithes for a number of years. He also finished his work and has gone to his reward. Bishop E. L. Kelley occupied in this office for many years, as you well know, and was honorably released from the arduous labors of that office. And now the Lord has placed Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire as presiding bishop of the church. Let us not forget the latter part of the verse, "Here men that die receive tithes, but there he (Christ) receiveth them of whom it is witnessed that he liveth." It will be observed from these statements that record is made of our giving here, also in heaven; and when called to judgment upon the other side there will be our record of tithes paid. Have you paid yours? It is only fair to presume that in the expending of the funds collected by the church there would be some mistakes made. However, this should not in any way discourage us from doing our whole duty. The Lord said to the church, "Be of good cheer"; the statement has not been revoked, and while these words of assurance are still for us, we should not be discouraged in the least, but do as the Apostle Paul advised the saints in his day: "Forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before." If we will do this the progress we have hoped for will be realized sooner than if we encourage a spirit of discouragement which hinders us doing our whole duty.

As a church we are custodians of the three standard books before me, of fulfilled and unfulfilled prophecies. Of the former we will do well to heed the counsel of Saint Paul, "Whatever things are written aforetime are written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope." There will be found in them lessons caused by failure to keep the commands, as well as blessings through obedience. Every member should be encouraged in the fact that our church in some respects is a continuation of the New Testament church. Continued in this way, John the Baptist, who was a true representative of the New Testament church, was directed to come and begin the church work in this dispensation; by direction of the Lord ordained those young men May 15, 1829, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, to the office of priest in the Aaronic order; directing them to baptize each other, and the promise was that this priesthood should not be taken from the earth until the sons of Levi offer an offering unto God in righteousness. We should feel grateful to the Master at all times that he also directed Peter, James, and John the Revelator to authorize the conferring of the Melchisedec priesthood as a special gift to the church in 1830; which really means that the representatives of the church of New Testament period had been authorized to come and begin our church, delegating to it all the rights and privileges formerly enjoyed by the church at Jerusalem. A blessed heritage, a sacred gift. Jesus Christ was the finished product of the gospel. He did not come to do his will, but the will of God. Are we submissive to his will in paying tithes, offerings, etc., as we know to be our duty?

The Church Holds the Key That Unlocks the Cemeteries

Jesus says that this gospel—not another—the same gospel taught then is to be preached in all the world for a witness before the end shall come. This will require labor on the part of the church. One of the great means that will help bring this glorious work to a consummation is full compliance to the law of temporalities by the Saints. When all respond to the urgent call of the Presiding Bishop, paying their tithes and offerings, then will the church make greater strides. And when the work of the church in this regard is done, fulfilling the requirements in Zion and out of Zion or in the great mission field widening before us, we may expect the glorious time will soon be here when the Savior will come and the resurrection be realized.

Am I placing our work too strong or making it too great before you when I say that this great church holds within its power the possibility of bringing to pass the resurrection from the dead? That within its grasp the destiny of the nations is largely held? For it must be remembered that the resurrection will not be until this gospel is preached in all the world by this church. I do not mean that every creature will hear it, but there will be those in every nation that will, and some will accept it; hence every nation will have living witnesses to the angel's message. It is a solemn thought, a sacred trust, which has been reposed in us, that we should accomplish this work.

I have often wished that I might be able to so present myself to the Lord that he would withdraw the curtains and let me have a vision of the nine and a half tribes of Israel, who I believe are daily petitioning the Lord to know how long before they shall be privileged to return to the home of their fathers, or this land, and bring their record and place it with the record of the Jews and the Nephites. Also that untold thousands upon the other side are waiting the time of the resurrection with this understanding, that that event will not be until this church has accomplished under God what it has covenanted to do; namely, to fulfill the mission outlined in the sacred records intrusted to us as a church.

Permit me to emphasize to you if I can do so, in a way that will carry conviction to every heart, that we are the custodians of the revelations to this church contained in the three books and we should fully sense the sacredness of this trust. Every heart ought to beat with love to our heavenly Father for this sacred gift so lovingly bestowed upon us, accepting us as members of his great family, heirs of his and joint heirs with Christ the Lord. It would be well for us as a "faith tonic" to memorize the words of Mosiah, "Believe in God, believe that he is, and that he created all things both in heaven and in earth; believe that man doth not comprehend all the things which the Lord can comprehend." Book of Mormon, Mosiah, second chapter.

In taking a view of the work during the ministration of Joseph the Seer we are able to discern that when the church observed the temporal law most perfectly they prospered the most. The church was admonished early in its history to teach the principles of the gospel found in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and to observe the covenants and church articles, directing a full compliance of the law therein stated. In these records we find the law of tithes and offerings plainly outlined. After the "dark and cloudy day" the church was reorganized.
The first words of counsel given to it by the Lord were, "In order to place the church in a position to carry on the promulgation of the gospel and as a means of fulfilling the law, the Twelve will take measures in connection with the bishop, to execute the law of tithing," etc. For over fifty years this counsel, together with the larger giving as noted in later revelations, has been enjoined upon us. The church has prospered by reason of fulfillment of the requirements, and it will continue to grow.

Imitation of Noah's Ark Did Not Bring Flood

Permit your speaker to place before you a word picture of conditions which might have been the experience of the people in the days just prior to Noah's flood. We see a number of church organizations, possibly ten. These societies are very energetic, wishing to please their people, grasping at all that comes to them of interest. They are churches organized by themselves and for themselves, but are preaching much that Noah the prophet of God was directed to preach. They learn of the revelations given to Noah that he is to build an ark, gather animals and seeds of all kinds, place them in the ark;
then the floods would come and destroy the unbeli­ ving from off the face of the earth. We see some of these ten churches eagerly copy in part the instruction, build arks, gather animals, make selection of seeds, even accomplishing their work before Noah had finished his preaching. Now, my hearers, do you think that the building of arks, the gathering of animals and seeds by those not spoken to by the Lord to perform this work would ever have caused the clouds to gather, the rain to descend, and thus in time cause the earth to be covered with the waters of which the Bible speaks? You answer, No. The Lord by revelation intrusted that work to Noah. The arks built by others would not affect the Lord's decree to his own appointed prophet and people.

It is equally true with our church work to-day.
God has intrusted a certain work to be done by this church; namely, the preaching of his gospel in all the world for a witness unto all nations; also the performing of many other well-defined requirements which are to precede the Majesty's coming, the ushering in of the millennial reign which we love to contemplate. The world's churches cannot do that work. They may help to provide a way for it to be done, but to God's chosen people, this church, he will look for the fulfillment of that intrusted to it. I am pleased to report that the law of surplus and consecration is better understood by the church to-day and is just as willingly complied with by hundreds as was the law of tithing twenty years ago, when I first began the work of looking after the temporalit­	ies in Gallands Grove District of Iowa. During those years I have enjoyed many blessings in anticipation and realization of service, and the Saints rejoiced in giving.

In regard to the organization of stakes and their work, the more I contemplate the possibilities outlined, the more I am convinced that it was the wisdom of the Lord directing in the division of the old Independence Stake. I can see a growth in these stakes, an increased spirituality also, that is gratifying. I have confidence in the administrators appointed of the Lord who have general charge of the work. If we do our part as members, the church will make greater progress than it has before.

A Vision. Frederick M. Smith Our Joshua

At the risk of intruding upon your good nature I will relate a vision that was given me on December 9, 1903—over fourteen years ago. By request of Bishop E. L. Kelley and Elder A. M. Fyrando I spent two months in the Little Sioux District, visiting the several branches and presenting the law of temporalities to the Saints in that splendid field. I spent December 8, 9, and 10 in Bigler's Grove Branch, about six miles west of Woodbine. During the afternoon of December 9, in the home of Brother and Sister Bert Fry, I was greatly blessed while arranging texts from the Bible for the evening service. While reading in the 31st chapter of Deuteronomy, I experienced what was to me a wonderful blessing. When my eyes fell upon verses 7 and 8 they read to me as follows: "And Joseph called unto Frederick, and said to him in the general conference, Be strong and of good courage; for thou must go with this people into the land which the Lord hath sworn unto their fathers to give them; and thou shalt cause them to inherit it. And the Lord, he it is that doth go before thee; he will be with thee, he will not fail thee, neither forsake thee; fear not, neither be dismayed." When I looked up from the book, tears of joy were coursing my cheeks. I rejoiced greatly and felt that there was nothing in this world that could and would bring the joy to the hearts of the Saints like service, consecrated service, to the church. Presently I began reading, and the verses read as they are in the book: "And Moses called unto Joshua and said to him in the sight of all Israel," etc. I was so pleased with this experience that I wrote a letter to Brother Fyrando, telling him of what had been given me. I felt perfectly satisfied then that President Joseph Smith's son Frederick would succeed him as president of the church; and that as truly as Joshua succeeded Moses by direct appointment of God, so Brother Frederick Madison Smith would be the Joshua to lead latter-day Israel back to promised land; and would, if they would be willing to hear and heed the words of the Lord to the church, cause them to inherit it. At the time I had no thought of the responsibility was placed upon me. You will observe that when President Smith was ordained to the office he now holds by Apostle Griffiths, that he was mentioned as the Joshua to lead latter-day Israel, and would cause them to receive great and lasting blessings if they would heed the counsel given.

Retrospective—Prospective

As a church we have much to encourage us; in fact, all should renew their efforts in the work, helping to move it forward. During the history of the Reorganization there have been many lessons of great faith in God emphasized. I will mention one. In the early history of the Reorganization Elder E. C. Briggs, then a beardless young man, was, I believe, the only General Conference appointee for a number of months. Others labored locally. But he took the mission to go out and present this wonderful gospel—the angel's message—to a frowning world. Think of the courage, think of the faith that must have been resident in his heart when asked to preach the closing sermon at a General Conference between the years 1852 and 1860, and in all probability took for his text one of the verses I have used, namely: "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come"—this brave Brother Briggs, the only traveling General Conference missionary. At that time the church did not have a complete organization; Brother Joseph Smith had not as yet taken his father's place; no church paper was published in the interests of the church; they did not have a church treasury of any note; did not have a chapel that it could claim as its own. At that time there were many factions of the church, including the one in the West which was known as a great cloud of darkness and very hard to penetrate.

When Brother Briggs and others at that early time had such courage, faith, and hope, what ought to be the attitude of all the members regarding the church to-day? They gave more than a tenth—a tithe of their time and talents. Are you doing as much? Our watchword should be, Onward and upward, appreciating the words to us of the recent past, "So be ye encouraged and press on to the consummation designed of God for his people—unity, honor, sanctification, and glory."

KLDS Helps Locate Missing Boy

Recently a twelve-year-old boy in Independence decided to leave home and see the world. Instead of going to Sunday school he started out on his journey of adventure. The following Tuesday night KLDS broadcast a description of the missing boy. A deputy constable listening to the program from KLDS heard the announcement, had seen a boy tallying with the description. He telephoned the boy's parents, and within a few hours the adventurer, wiser by experience, was enjoying the luxuries of his bed and home.

KLDS Makes Another Change in Schedule

Beginning Sunday, June 21, KLDS will take the air at 9.15 instead of 9 o'clock. This change is made at the request of WOS, the directors of which so kindly agreed to divide time with KLDS on their wave length of 441 meters. During the hot summer months the churches of Jefferson City are holding union services in front of the new State Capitol Building. As these services begin at 8 o'clock they may run past the 9 o'clock hour somewhat.
NEWS AND LETTERS

Graceland's Last Chapel Service of 1924-25

Wednesday morning, June 3, the final chapel service of Graceland College was held in the new gymnasium assembly room. The meeting was opened with the singing of a Graceland song, and prayer by Apostle J. F. Garver. President Briggs spoke briefly of the purpose of the gathering and introduced as the first speaker Mr. Forest Roberts, director of forensics. Mr. Roberts briefly outlined the forensic work of the year, speaking highly of the work and good feeling of competitive sportsmanship achieved by the Athenian Federation. An enumeration of the various events and the winner of each was followed by the presentation of the championship banner to Mr. Francis Leeka, president of the Alpha Pi Sigma Society.

Miss Mabel Carlile was then introduced, and she summed up the musical work of the year, recounting the accomplishments of the Oratorio Society, the orchestra, and the A Cappella Chorus. Mention was also made of the music contest sponsored by the Athenian Federation, which proved so successful in this its initial year. Miss Carlile estimated that better than sixty per cent of the student body have participated in musical activities this year, and the results of this have shown in the high standard of musical tastes and musical appreciation in the institution.

Mr. Roy Mortimore, as member of the Athletic Council, then presented the athletic interests in a short summary, and followed with the presentation of letters and sweaters to the football, basket ball, and track men who have earned these honors the past year. Miss Dora Dexter then did likewise for the girl's athletics, thus closing a most successful athletic year.

Miss Christine Roberts presented the assembly with a brief statement of the history, purpose, and ideals of the Crescent Club. The names of the newly elected Crescent girls were announced, and the new girls were duly installed by means of a pretty ceremony. The old girls each pinned the insignia of the club on a new candidate and then stepped behind her, to indicate continued support even though the new girl must now take the lead. The Crescents are elected by all the girls of the institution, and are supposed to typify the highest ideals of godly and serviceable womanhood.

Roy Cheville, president of the Lambda Delta Sigma Society, then presented the new members of his organization, and installed them by pinning the insignia of the order on each in turn. The Lambda Delta Sigma is an honor organization, membership in which is based on scholarship and active participation in other activities. Twenty-two new members were received.

Dean Lonzo Jones announced the ranking of scholarship for the year, naming the ten highest in the College and Academy. Leslie Flowers heads the college list, and Jim Briggs the academy. The ten highest in each department were called to the front and given a hearty applause by all present. Mr. Jones then presented the president's cup to Mr. Byron Roberts, president of the Niketes Society. This cup represents combined achievements in scholarship and athletics, and goes permanently to the Niketes this year by reason of their winning it three successive years.

J. F. Garver stated in a few brief but powerful words the love, confidence, respect, and trust which the college and the church at large have for Brother J. A. Gunsolley, or "Uncle Jerry," as he is known to all the college students. He outlined the vision and faith which has made it possible for Brother Gunsolley to bring the college through some most trying situations, and then announced it as the unanimous decision of the Board of Trustees that Brother Gunsolley be made treasurer emeritus of Graceland College. As a fitting conclusion he presented a traveling bag and a brief case which would serve to remind Brother Gunsolley of the Graceland faculty as he traveled about in his new work. Tears were in many eyes at the thought of parting with Uncle Jerry, but some consolation was afforded by the exercise of some supreme directional control by President F. M. Smith, who arose to state that Brother Gunsolley's appointment had been changed to read, "Lamoni and Far West Stakes, Graceland College objective." Brother Gunsolley, in his speech of acceptance, expressed his continued faith and pleasure at the prospect of further service in new fields and his joy at the continued association with the college.

Taken all in all, the occasion was one long to be remembered, and was a fitting conclusion to the biggest and best year Graceland has yet known.

Big Two-Day Meeting at Irvington

It will be remembered by HERALD readers that the last district conference of the Northern California District voted to discontinue the spring conference and in its stead to hold rally days in the branches. The wisdom of this legislation is generally acknowledged, as the rally days in the branches and the two-day meetings at Irvington have been a source of inspiration to all who have availed themselves of the opportunity. Since last reunion some of the most successful meetings ever held in the district have been enjoyed in different parts.

May 30 and 31 will be long remembered by the Saints. At the call of District President J. D. White, the Saints met at Irvington to enjoy a week-end of wholesome sport and spiritual uplift. The 30th was spent in outdoor sports, with an old-fashioned party in the big dining hall at night. The grounds are large enough to permit a variety of games to be played at the same time, and both young and old entered actively into the sports. Baseball, volley ball, curtain ball, other ball games, and horse shoes seemed to be the most popular. Our tennis courts were moved in order to make some improvements and had not been replaced, but by reunion time the tennis fans will find a splendid court ready for their enjoyment. As night fell the dining hall was crowded, and a jollier party was never held. After the singing of patriotic songs a grand march was led by Sister Charles Clark and Brother Etzenhouser followed by the priesthood and members. The long procession winding through the buildings and around the spacious grounds made a very imposing sight. It was greatly enjoyed by all. In playing the games the crowd was divided into three groups, thus allowing three different games to be played at once. This kept everyone busy and the entire crowd interested. A splendid program was rendered, followed by an abundance of ice cream. The program of the day was under the direction of a committee composed of V. B. Etzenhouser, Ches Severy, Mrs. Irma Otis, Mrs. Charles Clark, and Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Bradley.

The Sunday services were in charge of the district president. The prayer service at half past nine was long remembered. The Spirit was present from the very beginning, and after a number of fervent prayers and inspiring testimonies President J. D. White spoke under its influence to the priesthood admonishing them to come up higher and be more diligent. He was directed to speak to Brother Etzenhouser, delivering a word of encouragement and cheer for his efforts among the young. Sister Christiana Waller, well known for her musical ability, was encouraged to redouble her efforts along such lines. At the conclusion of the message our venerable ex-president, C. W. Hawkins, arose and testified that the message was genuine. Thus was a season of inspiration brought to a fitting close.

Brother E. B. Hull delivered his farewell sermon to the Saints of this district, as he with his good companion have been assigned by the late conference to the important charge of representing the church in Salt Lake City. Brother Hull had an attentive and appreciative audience which taxed the capacity of the large hall. His sermon was based on Nehemiah 6:3: "I am doing a great work so that I cannot come down." He so emphasized his points that all were impressed and felt their responsibility to God and his church. He strengthened all by his splendid message.

The kitchen and dining room are well equipped, and while no meals were served during reunion time, the Saints were allowed to cook their own. Knowing that people like to get away from home duties, the San Francisco Religio took advantage of the situation and served light lunch, thus making a neat sum to apply on their recreation building. Ben F. Parks was chef, and those waffles were delicious.

The reunion committee has plenty of good box mattresses, and these were placed in the upper rooms, making dormitories for the men and women. No charges were made for the use of these, but people had to bring their own bedding.

The Saints were greatly pleased at the good work which Brother and Sister E. L. Shores had done in the beautification of the reunion grounds. A number of people were heard to say it looked like a garden of Eden. The Saints have been very liberal in supplying plants, shrubs, seeds, etc. Irvington promises to become a common meeting place for all district activities—reunions, two-day meetings, week-end parties, and picnics. With the new pavilion and swimming pool, which the committee have under advisement, completed, no better equipped reunion ground can be found in the church.

Far West Stake

June 9.—All departments of church work are moving steadily along, in most instances with a gain in attendance and interest.

At First Church, Saint Joseph, quite a number of young people meet early Wednesday evening on the church lawn, and play volleyball until nearly time for prayer service, when they gather in the church and take part in the service of the evening. This is one reason, with many others, that our midweek prayer service is gaining in interest and numbers.

Sunday evening, June 7, the Latter Day Saint Choral Society, under the direction of Paul N. Craig, gave a musical, which was appreciated and enjoyed by all. The society is made up of members from each church in the city. The girls' chorus of the First Church gave a number on the program. We certainly feel proud of the success of their efforts. The church was filled, and on every hand were heard words of praise.

On Sunday morning quite a number of Saints from the Second Church went to Troy, Kansas, to help the Saints at that place. The Saints from Fanning, Kansas, met with them also, and at noon everyone enjoyed a basket lunch on the lawn. In the afternoon the young people from the Second Church gave a program of musical numbers and readings. It was much appreciated by the Saints of Troy, and they are anxious for them to come again.

The Alma Branch had a two-day meeting on May 23 and 24, at King Hill Church. All departmental work was represented. Archie Constance, stake superintendent of Recreation and Expression, directed the activities of that department. Clifford Constance, stake superintendent of Sunday schools, saw that the religious education department was not neglected. Some fine round-table work was conducted by Herbert L. Barto and Alma Booker. Sister Liggett, stake superintendent of the Department of Women did fine work in charge of their meetings. Everyone felt it was one of the most profitable two-day meetings held in the stake.

Maple Grove Saints were made sad by the loss of Sister Dora Hinderks. The funeral was held at Maple Grove Church, with Elder Z. J. Lewis in charge. Stake President O. Salisbury preached the sermon.

Mothers' Day was observed at this place with Brother Milo Burnett of Saint Joseph as the speaker. There was also a short program by the mothers. Brother and Sister Howard Timm were in attendance, and at the close of the services Sister Timm organized a girls' chorus, composed of girls from Pleasant Grove and Maple Grove.

Cameron Saints were very much pleased Sunday morning, May 31, to have Apostle Roy S. Budd and family there for the day. Brother Budd was in charge of the young people's prayer service, and preached at the eleven o'clock hour. Sister Budd gave a delightful talk during the Sunday school hour. Some young people of the Stewartsville Branch entertained the Cameron Religio Sunday evening with a fine program. All departments are very active here, and the average attendance high.

At Guilford the Saints are working hard to do the Master's will. Some of the recent speakers there have been Howard Timm, Coventry Archibald, and J. L. Bear, all of Saint Joseph.

The first Saturday and Sunday in May the Saints from Maple Grove and Pleasant Grove met with the Stewartsville Saints in a two-day young people's meeting. They had fine services and good programs. At the departmental services, there were short talks by stake officers.

The sermons were extra fine, being delivered by Apostle E. J. Glenzer. Elder John Sheehy was in charge of many of the activities, assisting very much in the success of the meetings.

Stake President O. Salisbury is very active, preaching at Maple Grove, Stewartsville, and several churches in Saint Joseph in the last month, besides his many other duties.

Successful Home-Coming Meetings

ORION, MICHIGAN, June 8.—A home-coming was held here June 7, and many who worshiped with us in bygone days were present and enjoyed talking over old times. The sacramental service was truly a spiritual feast to all, and every moment of time was taken with prayer, testimony, and song.

The Sunday school service was very interesting, the lesson being illustrated on the blackboard by District Superintendent V. D. Scharn.

At half past twelve all repaired to the room above and partook of a bounteous lunch.

In the afternoon at half past two a very interesting program was held, in which several made speeches, that were interspersed with music by the junior choir. Following the program Brother John R. Grice gave a sermon on the home and its relation to the church and society. We hope all will remember this beautiful sermon and put it into practice.

The evening sermon was by Brother Silas Parker of Pontiac. "The signs of the times" were clearly portrayed by the brother, and the sermon was much appreciated by those present. The day was greatly enjoyed by all.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Orion Branch has gained in a spiritual way during the past year, although our numbers have been decreased by removal of members. The prayer services are truly uplifting, and the Sunday school and preaching services are well attended and much enjoyed.

Many of the young people are active in the work, and a fine junior choir has been organized under the leadership of Sister Mona Schaar.

Our Aim

Orion; bright constellation in the sky,
Fixed and unmovable throughout the changing year,
Guiding the weary mariner o'er trackless wave
Safe to his home at last, through doubts and fears.

So we, who bear thy name, would guide
The wanderer to that heavenly home,
Our chart the gospel, our lives the stars,
Bright, shining lights which beckon all to come.

Our faith in Him who placed the stars and rules supreme.
Our hope, to spread his truth o'er all earth's domain.
Our motto, Love toward all, e'en friend or foe.
Our aim, celestial glory to attain.

JULIA HAMMOND, Secretary.

Duluth, Minnesota

June 1.—District President George W. Day and Missionary W. E. Shakespeare were with us May 3 at the sacramental service, with Brother Day in charge, assisted by Brother Shakespeare and Pastor C. B. Freeman. Many inspiring prayers and testimonies were offered, especially regarding the goodness of God in answer to prayer. Brother Day spoke of the conference and of the desire to go forward in the establishment of Zion and stewardships, which is the key, along with willing hearts and pure souls, and the determination to consecrate our lives and talents to the gospel, to our redemption. We must demonstrate in our lives the plan that Christ instituted, living in unity and love, rising higher and higher on the gospel ladder. In the evening Brother Day preached, assisted by Brother Shakespeare. Brother Shakespeare went from here to Two Harbors to hold meetings. Out of town visitors were Brother and Sister A. S. Davis and part of their family, from Wenshall, Minnesota; Brother and Sister Jay Walters and daughter Ruth of Carlton.

On May 10 Brother Shakespeare spoke both morning and evening, bringing a clearer understanding of God's written word.

Cottage meetings were held the evenings of May 11, 12, and 14, with fair attendance, which shows there is a need of more missionary endeavor in this part of the vineyard. This city is not very wide, but is about twenty-one miles long, and we have touched only a small portion. The local priesthood has been occupying when no outside members were in attendance.

Brothers Samuel Sloan and Grant Byrne of Two Harbors heard the evening sermon by Brother Shakespeare May 10. We hope they will come again and bring more of the Saints to worship with us. The same invitation is extended to all the Saints who might have an opportunity to attend. The church is located at 302-304 North Sixtieth Avenue West. Take the East Fourth Gary New Duluth or the Morgan Park Car going west to Sixtieth Avenue and go one block to the right.

Sister Annie Sylvester, of Lansing, Michigan, met with us May 17 and visited the homes of the Saints for a few days. Her testimony at the midweek prayer service was an inspiration to qualify and remain in a condition to meet the Lord when he comes to claim his own.

All the departments are striving to go forward. The Sunday school is having a contest in the different classes for greater attendance. The winning class will be allowed to keep a banner for the coming quarter.

A Children's Day program will be given at ten o'clock Sunday, June 14. It is expected that Brother W. E. Shakespeare will be present to give an address to the children.

Troop 23, Wolf Patrol of the Boy Scouts, took part in the Memorial Day parade. The evening of May 8 they gave a program during the Department of Recreation and Expression hour, showing some of the skill they possess in being prepared for emergencies.

Our steps are Zionward, our aims are to become one in the hand of God. May the last commandment of our Savior—Love one another as he loved us—be prominent in the lives of his people, that unity may be demonstrated in the lives and actions of the Saints of the church of the living God, that the world may look to us for spiritual light and truth. Thus may we all be instruments in his hands for accomplishing the work that is ours to perform.

Topeka, Kansas

June 1.—The district conference at Scranton, Kansas, which is about twenty-eight miles south of here, was attended by many of the Topeka Saints. Our local Sunday school superintendent, Brother B. F. Deller, was elected district Sunday school superintendent because, as he said, he was not there to defend himself. Sister Deller, who is head of the primary department, was elected district Sunday school secretary, and Sister H. S. Pitsenberger, also of Topeka, was elected clerk.

Brother Frank B. Almond, with his wife and son, stopped off and visited in Topeka two days after General Conference. They were on their way to Denver preparatory to moving to Chicago, where he will be in city missionary service. The Wednesday evening prayer meeting was changed to a preaching service with Brother Almond as the speaker. His sermon was greatly enjoyed.

Those of our membership who attended General Conference feel repaid for the time and effort spent, feeling the work can go forward in a more united manner henceforth. It was gratifying to see the manner in which matters were handled at conference and to see the HERALD columns again full of edifying and instructive matter. It is much more encouraging to see the good articles that have recently been printed.

Among visitors attending morning services May 24 were Sister Mary Nunamaker, of Manhattan, Kansas, with her son and daughter-in-law who are members of the Twin Creek Branch at Osborn, Kansas.

Several of the young people intend to attend Young People's Convention at Lamoni and are very enthusiastic over the prospect. It is encouraging to all to see such an attitude displayed in this cause, as it seems more and more evident that the young are interested and will be of great power in the future in the upbuilding of Zion.

We are pleased to announce the birth of a son to Mr. and Mrs. Sam Morris, of Lawrence, Kansas. Sister Morris is the daughter of our branch president, A. P. Crooker, and was one of the popular young members. She was one of the most regular attendants at church until her marriage and removal to Lawrence.

Brother and Sister Charles J. Sheets, whom we number among our members, although they now live in Manila, Iowa, were unfolded to us by Brother Gleazer. His deep earnestness have been stirred to do what is fit and proper him wonderful words of light and grandeur.

The children in the primary department are being drilled by the program committee for the program to be given at eleven o'clock on Children's Day.

Mrs. Iris Williams and Miss Vergie Smith, mother and niece of Worth Williams of Topeka, have returned to Wheatland, Missouri. Sister Williams was visiting her son and family here and met with the Saints several times. Sister Smith attended high school here last year and was a regular attendant at Sunday School. She will be greatly missed. Mr. Williams is also one of our most regular Sunday school attendants.

Pastor A. P. Crooker preached an interesting memorial sermon the morning of May 31. No services were held in the evening because many wished to attend the baccalaureate sermon for the graduating class of the Topeka high school.

Gray's Harbor

ABEROON, WASHINGTON, June 3.—The Lord's work in this part of his vineyard is still progressing, although with smaller attendance. Many have been kept away on account of sickness, while distance keeps others away. Our pastor lives at a distance of forty-five miles. Some of the members feel the lure of spring and on nice Sundays motor to the ocean beach which is only twenty miles away. It rains so much through the winter that some of the Saints who work all week feel justified in taking a Sunday now and then for an outing.

A mistake appeared in our last letter to the HERALD. Brother Essex, of Independence, Missouri, is visiting his son, George Essex, has favored us with some fine sermons. Brother S. P. Cox of Centralia, who was a delegate to General Conference, has also preached for us. These brothers are no relation, except in gospel bonds.

A number of our young people are graduating from high school this year. The baccalaureate service was held last Sunday night.

Brother E. E. Fishel preached a funeral sermon Sunday, May 31, for one who was a friend to the cause. The service was held at the White Side Funeral Parlors in Aberdeen.

Saints Are Earnest and United

SAINT THOMAS, ONTARIO.—This branch was recently visited by Apostle E. J. Gleazer, and the Saints received from him wonderful words of light and grandeur. Our hearts have been stirred to do what is fit and proper for the children of God to perform.

We know the church must go Zionward with its present program carried out efficiently, and it is and should be the duty of us all to make this project our life's work. Surely we were made to realize what a grand and glorious work this church is engaged in, as the problems and probable solutions were unfolded to us by Brother Gleazer. His deep earnestness compelled us to resolve: As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord.

Many of the Saints from Saint Thomas made the journey to London for the ministerial conference there, where uplifting experiences were enjoyed during the day.

The Department of Women is very busy. The sisters have worked with a will, and the fruits of their labors have been reaped financially to the extent that $35 was netted recently on a food and apron sale. At the jumble sale Saturday they raised $23.

The branch is in fair condition and seems to be progressing spiritually, for at this time we seem to be working for the welfare of each other. What can be more beautiful than to see the children of God united and pressing forward in the most sacred cause on earth, that of spreading the gospel effectively?

With earnest desire let us cry to God:

Lord, in the fullness of my might,
I would for thee be strong;
While runneth o'er each dear delight,
To thee shall soar my song.

Accept me in my golden time,
In my dear joys have part;
For thee the glory of my prime,
The fulness of my heart.

I cannot, Lord, too early take
The covenant divine.
Oh, ne'er the happy heart may break,
Whose earliest love was thine.

MODESTO, CALIFORNIA

June 1.—During the past month the Saints of this place have been moving along as usual. The attendance has been average. One family is missed while they are on an automobile trip to Michigan and other eastern States. They are Elder W. C. Griffin, his wife, and little son Ralph. They are regular church attendants.

All the Saints are glad to be associated with a church that can call on God and receive his answer. If all will live up to their privileges, they will be blessed.

There has been some sickness among the Saints. One sister is still very ill, but she is improving.

All of the departments are moving along nicely and are holding their own. The prayer meetings held every Wednesday evening are generally fairly well attended, and a good spirit is present.

PENSACOLA, FLORIDA

Attendance here is very good, and there are those who are nonmembers that have attended and have been given tracts, church papers, and books to read, as such as The Call at Evening, The Two Story Book, etc. Even when there is a calm, we can be steadily and earnestly working. We visit the sick and do neighborly deeds. All are worth our time, and each seed sown shall surely bring forth fruit. One neighbor recently remarked, "One thing I can surely say, those Latter Day Saint neighbors of ours at least show by their kind deeds that they have a good religion." This is only one example of the "little things" that count.

Brother N. L. Booker has promised to come within a few days to teach singing lessons. This will be of great benefit to our choir.

After church Sunday night a few of the Saints motored to Cottage Hill and enjoyed a sumptuous dinner and a pleasant evening at the home of Brother and Sister J. C. Duncan.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Brother Willis was tendered a surprise party Tuesday night in honor of his birthday. Cake and lemonade were served. All enjoyed the affair and wished him many more happy birthdays.

Friday evening, May 22, Brother and Sister Roe, Brother and Sister McBridge, Brother Raley, and Mr. Bovie went to Fort Macace on a fishing trip, returning Saturday morning. This is one of the oldest military forts in America and is situated on an island between the Gulf of Mexico and Pensacola Bay, twelve miles from the city. This trip was indeed a pleasure long to be remembered, and only one of the many things we are privileged to enjoy here.

There are those of us here diligently seeking first to do our duty, working in the Lord's vineyard, sowing the seed of truth, then when the right time comes we are expecting to be numbered among those who reside in Zion. It is indeed good to read the soul-inspiring news of the way conference has outlined the program for the coming year. Many are the hearts made glad, and we feel that there are prospects and advancements ahead, that we surely have cause to stop and take notice of God's power among his people.

New Canton, Illinois

June 8.—The Lord has blessed his people here many times in Sunday school work, and our numbers have held out very good, even though it has been warm. We are sorry to report the death of our aged Sister Bennie Johnston Smith, who died very suddenly after returning home from Sunday school. Her smiling face is missed in our gatherings, and it behoves us to live so that we may be prepared to meet her in the great beyond. Elder E. L. Ulrich, of Brannon, Ohio, preached the funeral sermon to a large number of people. Many said they wanted to hear more of that kind of gospel.

Brother Ulrich held several meetings for us, which all enjoyed. Brother E. J. Lenox also was here for a service, at which time he told of the reunion which is to convene at Springfield July 10.

Sister Harvey Minton visited us before joining her husband in his new field in Kansas.

We are glad to hear of the fine spirit demonstrated in the Herald since conference and pray that the Lord will so lead and guide all that the work he has given each one may be accomplished.

Elder Tilford Phillips has again returned from Chicago and expects to be with us permanently. We are hoping we will have more sermons, as well as other services, now, as we were deprived of them during his absence.

Ever praying for the redemption of Zion and that God will be with the leaders of the work, I am your sister in the gospel,

ALMEDIA COLLIER.

Winnipeg Branch

June 7.—The work is still maintaining its own. Winnipeg is not quite asleep, though many have been ill. Pastor C. S. Case and Sunday School Superintendent William Hadath have been sick for some time. Both are now on the road to recovery.

The weather here has been very backward, windy, and cold. Our membership is dwindling, some of our people leaving for the States. Brother Batsford and his family have gone to reside in Detroit. Others probably will leave if things do not brighten here soon. We are so few that we can hardly afford to part with any of our Saints. We wish them success and Godspeed in their endeavors. We have no missionary here as yet, though we expect Brother F. Gregory and his family to be with us some time in July.

On April 6 Sister Emma Panting presented Brother Tom with a lovely baby boy. Baby Panting has already been out to Religio and some of our meetings with his parents.

We expect Brother William Pratt to be with us again soon. We have missed him and his practical talks.

We miss also Brother G. W. Robley. It is owing to his perseverance, help, and encouragement that some of us have been able to learn and to love this work. God bless his efforts in his new field of labor.

The ladies' aid had a pie social some time ago, at which $5.50 was made. A sale of work at Sister Ruth Hadath's brought $18, which was added to the treasury.

Glasgow, Montana

May 26.—Branch Priest Joseph Sandidge has gone to Browning, Montana, to work with the Reclamation Service. He is a most ardent and faithful worker and will be very much missed in the branch.

Elder James C. Page went Sunday, May 17, to Vandalia, some twenty-five miles west of Glasgow, and preached in the afternoon to a nice crowd of interested listeners.

A young people's convention is to be held May 30 and 31 at the Andes Branch. One or two carloads will go from here. A falling off in the attendance at nearly all the services is noticed. It is a time when the faithful ones have to be just a little more faithful.

The starting of the sugar beet industry in this Milk River Valley is bringing in a number of families who are members of the Utah Church.

Omaha, Nebraska

June 10.—Three young sisters of our branch are among the city's high school graduates this spring. Vivian Wrenn and Rogene Anderson completing the course of study at Central High, and Nancy Bryant at Technical High. Of these, Vivian and Rogene will likely enter Graceland College in the fall, being joined by Sister Muriel Self, a graduate from Benson High a year ago. Brother Duane Anderson has completed his course in business administration at the University of Nebraska, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Science June 6. He will enter the business world at once, planning to spend the summer in the Allied Paper Mills of Kalamazoo, Michigan.

On the morning of May 26 the sad news of the passing of Sister Roland W. Scott was telephoned from member to member. She had been ill just a short time, and it was thought she was improving, until a sudden turn for the worse caused her removal to a local hospital where she died in a few hours. Active in the affairs of the branch, a worker in Sunday school and Department of Women, faithful in prayer and testimony and in service to the sick or afflicted, her going has left a great void in our branch life. The last rites over her body were held on Friday afternoon, our little church being filled to capacity with friends, both members and nonmembers. President Frederick M. Smith preached a wonderfully comforting and inspiring sermon, Pastor Whalley having charge of the service, and Sister Harlow G. Frederick singing "The prayer perfect." She was laid to rest in beautiful Forest Lawn, beneath a multitude of flowers—mute, fragrant tokens of the love and esteem which she had inspired in those about her. The sympathies of all are with Brother Scott, who with the daughters, Lois and Virginia, and the son, Thomas, had ever found in the tender and devoted life of the beloved wife and mother, an unfailing tower of strength, encouragement, and consecration.

Sister Frederick M. Smith, who accompanied President Smith to our city on the sad occasion of the funeral of her cousin, stayed over the week end with Brother and Sister B. M. Anderson. She left on the 3d for Lamoni, joining her daughters and others of her family, in attendance at the Young People’s Convention. Sister Lois, youngest daughter of President Smith, plans to enter Graceland College this fall, as also does Sister Carol, daughter of Brother and Sister Hale W. Smith. This will form a quartet of cousins at Graceland next year, all of whom are granddaughters of the late President Joseph Smith—Lois and Carol Smith, Rogene Anderson, and Rae Lysinger, daughter of Brother and Sister J. M. Lysinger of Lamoni.

The Department of Women held their May meeting at the home of Sister Edward Edwards on May 28, luncheon being served by the hostess, assisted by her “calendar weeks.” This little “calendar” plan of saving and giving money for our building fund, is proving a very popular and successful one. Our “year,” Sister Rose Beards, “keeps the books” with twelve “months” who, in their turn, collect the stated sums monthly from their “weeks,” four or more in number. In this way every enrolled sister of the branch is contributing regularly to the steadily growing fund for the completion of our church building. Sister May Wellman is president.

On Sunday, June 7, we were favored by visits from two well-known missionaries, Presiding Patriarch Frederick A. Smith, who assisted in presiding over the morning sacrament meeting, and Elder W. M. Self (father of our Brother Carl T.), who preached for us Sunday evening. Brother Smith also addressed Sister Anderson’s Sunday school class of young men, who had carried their chairs out on the church lawn for the lesson hour, and found the cool shade of the great trees very acceptable at that time. This class, by the way, is to be host for the next “teachers’ and officers’ dinner,” which will be given July 1, proceeds to go into the building fund, to which the boys have pledged $100.

Brother and Sister Whalley started to Lamoni on Wednesday morning, June 3, to attend the Young People’s Convention. A card received from them later said: “Well! We did get to Lamoni—but how? We will leave you to guess!” From which dark message we would infer that they and their little Ford roadster had had a few interesting experiences in negotiating some of the rich, black soil for which Iowa is so famous. They will enjoy the convention, and the brief respite from branch labors. They are like angels of mercy, always ready to heed the call of distress, difficulty, or loneliness. Sister Whalley was with Sister Scott for two weeks before her passing, and stayed on with the family through the sad days of adjustment which followed. Brother Whalley, too, lending the comfort and strength of his presence and unwavering faith and trust.

Branch President B. M. Anderson, with son Duane, and daughter, Sister Doris Fredrick, drove down to Lamoni Sunday morning, the 7th. The roads were “perfect,” with no traffic to hinder them at that early hour, and they “sailed right along,” reaching their destination in time to worship with the young people at the sacramental service in the forenoon. Brother Anderson returned Tuesday morning, leaving Duane and his sister to enjoy the convention to its close.

Sister Thelma Leddy of Kansas City, daughter of Brother and Sister Minor N. Perkins, is visiting her parents. Brother Perkins has been suffering from a degree of ill health of late, but is on the mend. He is a brother of Sister Mina Perkins Kearney, so well and favorably known to readers of our church literature.

Sister Lorena Leeka made her Omaha friends and relatives a brief visit last week, on her way home from visiting her sister, Sister Paul M. Hanson of Independence. She told us of the passing away, recently, of the aged uncle for whom she and her mother have cared, for so long a time, in their home near Thurman, Iowa. He was past ninety years of age, and was, for many years, an invalid. Thus the sheaves are gathered, one by one, in the Lord’s great harvest, and we, who tarry but a moment more behind, may well concern ourselves with the question, Are we ready, when he shall call us home?”

Department of Recreation and Expression in Northeastern Illinois

DEKALB, ILLINOIS, June 3.—Almost one year ago I was chosen to direct the work of the Department of Recreation and Expression for the Northeastern Illinois District. We have an enrollment of over three hundred in the department, and there are many young people not enrolled as members. Think of the hundreds of young lives which this church, your church, must direct and interest and develop into future leaders and workers right here in one district! What is it going to mean to the future of the church to maintain the interest of this army of youthful, enthusiastic workers? From these groups must come our future ministry, departmental leaders, Sunday school and Religio teachers, local, district, and general officers, to say nothing of the value of right development to each individual life that will fit each to take his place in and out of the church.

We truly believe the youth, as well as many older ones of this district, have caught a vision of the importance of the work of this department. It can no longer be looked upon as a side issue having no connection with the real work of the church. Each pastor is awakening to the value to him and his work of the force and enthusiasm of youth, as well as sensing his responsibilities toward the youth of his pastorate. Gradually he is sensing the necessity of considering the rights of every soul of his branch and the need of all services, that the development of each individual may come in a way and manner that will bring effective results.

It was our privilege to have thirty young people from Chicago South Side Branch visit DeKalb two weeks ago Saturday afternoon. They were members of Brother Roy Helsey’s Sunday school class. That evening we had a joyous time, and you should have been present at the wonderful prayer service held at half past eight the next morning. Throughout the services of the day these young people ably assisted, staying until after the evening service. It was a delightful day we spent together! At this time plans were laid for the coming convention at reunion July 11 and 12.

A week ago we were with the Saints of Rockford and Belvidere in a rally service, and sung and felt, “Sweet the time, exceeding sweet, when the Saints together met.” Last Sunday we met with the young people of Mission, Aurora, Sandwich, and Plano, at the “old stone church” in Plano, a splendid group of about sixty enthusiastic people. After a program put on by members of the different groups, we entered into a discussion of the real purposes of the department and held a round table discussion of the convention.

As we saw a vision of this group, together with the one the Sunday before in Rockford, the Sunday before that in DeKalb, and the other young people of the district, we went in mind to the big tent on the reunion ground where we saw at least three hundred happy, enthusiastic young men and women gathered in anticipation of the joys and benefits of the convention. Then we saw them leaving for their homes.
again, better fitted for their work, consecrated, encouraged, and purposeful.

We expect to meet with the Saints of Deselm, West Pullman, Chicago, and Hammond soon in a young people's rally. In this way we are reaching the membership of the department before the coming reunion and convention. The young people of this district must remember that the first real convention they have ever put on is going to be held at the reunion grounds beginning Friday evening, July 10, to continue over Saturday and Sunday. The reunion committee has set aside this time for them. Let us show them our appreciation by making this the biggest affair ever attempted—big in spiritual and physical results.

From time to time, as I look into the faces of these young people and see there the intense desire of youth to be actively engaged in the work for the Lord, as I hear the inspiring songs so enthusiastically sung, and hear the testimony of consecration, and associate with them in various ways, an intense interest in their development and present problems, as well as their future welfare, comes to me. The young people can be assured of my sympathy and desire to help as their leader.

It was my happy lot on June 2 to perform the marriage ceremony for Brother Willis Thorsen and Sister Winifred Huyer. These splendid young people are of Mission Branch where their lives are a great contribution. The bride is the superintendent of the Belgrade there and is doing splendid work. All join in wishing the young couple much joy.

Let us all meet at the reunion grounds July 2 to 12.

Sees Good Results Coming From Recreation

BROCKTON, MASSACHUSETTS, May 31.—We are glad to see reports from this branch in the HERALD, reporting the progress of the work here.

Just now part of the membership is away for the summer, yet we feel at home, for the same Spirit that God has given us in the past has been present.

The recreation grounds are now open for the season, and every Tuesday evening the group meets to play all kinds of games. One thing especially worthy of notice is the fine spirit in which the games are played. We sincerely believe if we continue to play together successfully we shall be able in the days to come to work together better than ever before.

Many inspiring speakers have visited us in the past month. Brother and Sister Richard Baldwin have been with us about a week and have encouraged the Saints to go on in this noble work.

We know of a surety that the special endowment of the Spirit that has been promised the church has been felt here. Truly this is the greatest work on the face of the earth. May the Lord help us to prepare, that we may continue.

New London, Connecticut

June 3.—A miscellaneous shower was given Mr. and Mrs. Willard M. Blodgett, Friday evening, May 8, when the Department of Recreation and Expression met for a social evening. It was indeed a surprise to the recently wedded couple. Songs were sung and readings rendered, after which a huge basket containing many useful and pretty gifts was brought in and presented to Brother and Sister Blodgett.

Mothers' Day was well remembered here. A beautiful and impressive sermon, "Mothers," was given by the pastor, Elder Alma T. Whipple. A vocal duet, "That wonderful mother of mine," was rendered by two sisters, followed by an appropriate reading. At the close of the sermon, "Ave Maria," a piano solo, was played by a sister. This was followed by a vocal selection, "The beautiful garden of prayer," sung by two sisters.

Sister Blanche L. Crandall has recently been operated on for ruptured appendix and has been in a very critical condition. She is slowly improving, and with the blessing of God the Saints look forward to her recovery in the near future.

Will Build Parsonage

STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA, May 25.—At the last business meeting a motion was carried to build a parsonage on the church lot. A committee was appointed to take the matter in charge. This project has long been contemplated, as so many times the need of such a house has been felt; so, if it can be accomplished, it will be the fulfillment of long-cherished hopes.

On May 13 the district organizer of the Department of Women paid a visit to this local in the interest of the work. Her words of encouragement and advice were much appreciated by all. In the afternoon she was given a reception at the church. Ice cream and cake were served to the nineteen present.

Brother Phelps, president of the Modesto Branch, with his family, was a visitor at church Sunday evening, May 17, and he was the speaker of the evening.

Brother Hull has been transferred to Salt Lake City to do missionary work. We are all regretting his loss from this branch.

The Christmas offering to date is $76.84, the goal being $120. There are still seven months before the year closes.

The morning of May 24 Mrs. C. C. Goodrich passed to a well-earned rest. She was a devoted and faithful Saint who endeared herself to all who knew her. For two years she was not able to walk, but through it all was patient and sweet. We shall indeed miss her. The past few years she made her home with her daughter, Mrs. Stuckenbrock, who was devoted to her mother.

Birmingham, Alabama

May 31.—A few Saints are endeavoring to float King Emmanuel's banner and make a permanent stand in the Iron City of the South.

We have an attendance of twelve or fourteen usually, counting children, and occasionally some nonmembers come in.

Last Sunday Brother Davis, of Independence, Missouri, who was on his way to Florida where he has two boys, stopped and attended Sunday services. He said some encouraging words in the sacramental service and preached in the evening. Five nonmembers were out. One lady told him at the close he could preach in her house, where he could have a crowd without going out of the house.

Occasionally we all drive out to the mountains and have lunch on Sunday after meeting.

We expect Brother T. C. Kelley to stop on his way to Flat Rock conference. We hope he will come back after the conference.

Anyone knowing of Saints in Birmingham will do us a favor by sending their address to Edward J. Yoder, in care of Brother Ray Chandler, 419 Fulton Avenue, Birmingham, Alabama. We will be glad to look them up and renew their diligence in this great latter-day work.

Independence
Stone Church

"Independence has never looked so beautiful" is an expression frequently heard. Much rain has kept the foliage green and fresh. The people seem to take more interest in caring for their lawns than they have some years in the past. Sunday was Children's Day. The Sunday school attendance ran over 1,200. At two thirty over thirty candidates were baptized in the font on the beautiful Temple grounds. As the names were called out by the Sunday school secretary, sturdy little lads and dainty little lassies walked bravely to the sunken font, and were buried in the watery grave by men having authority from God.

The confirmation services were held in four different parts of the church at four o'clock.

The eleven o'clock service was also occupied by the young people, and a splendid program was presented. The young people's choir was in evidence, to their credit.

At seven thirty Amy Winning of Central Church, Kansas City, assisted by Norma E. Bunsen and Mrs. Grace Doxsee, presented a splendid program. This was followed by an illustrated lecture by Pastor C. E. Miller, showing slides of children and child life in foreign lands.

During the summer months, the Religio will meet Friday evening in the Stone Church.

Elder A. M. Chase and wife left Independence June 9, for Hilo, Hawaii, their mission field. They expected to spend one day in Salt Lake City, with old friends, as they labored in Utah for many years; then spend Sunday in Oakland and San Francisco. They sail June 17 on S. S. Manoa.

Three young people, Nellie Halsted, Pearl Halsted, and Marguerite Thomas were baptized and confirmed, June 6, at Stone Church. (In font in dining hall.)

Next Monday night, June 22, the voice students of Paul N. Craig will give a public recital at the Stone Church, to which all are cordially invited. Mrs. Neal Thomason will give a group of piano numbers. Others participating are: Mrs. Lulu Lentell, Mrs. George Willis, Miss Helen White, Mrs. Arthur Riddolls, Mrs. Aileen Reick, Mrs. Marion Campbell, Mrs. E. C. Harrington, Mrs. George Davidson, Miss Lilly Belle Allen, Mrs. Alice Burgess, Mrs. Bertha Burgess, Miss Ina Hattey, and Mr. Verlyn Webb. The accompanists will be Mrs. Paul M. Hansan, Miss Harriette Grossbeck, and Mrs. Paul N. Craig. A small studio recital was given last Tuesday night, June 16, in the Harrington Building, which only a small number were able to attend.

Second Church

Brother Glen Davies was chosen as assistant to the president of the Religio Society at the regular meeting Friday night. These two bright and energetic young men, Brothers Rawlings and Davies, should have the consistent support of the Saints in their work.

Sunday morning the young people were more than fifty in number at the eight o'clock prayer meeting, and Sunday school held a successful session. Elder John A. Dowker preached the morning sermon and was well received.

Attendance at afternoon prayer service was light, and the priesthood meeting was not fully attended.

It has been decided to continue for the present the Sunday evening service, because of the desire of a number who wish to attend. A special effort will be made to make the service of value, and of short duration. The young men of the priesthood and the best talent we have in song will likely be in evidence.

Elder William H. Kelley was the speaker in the evening. He was supported by the ladies' quartet. They sang "Trusting." Brother Kelley was at his best in one of his conversational sermons.

Brother William Knussman and family returned to Independence last week, after having made a good visit to their former home city of Saint Louis. The family expects to again make Independence their home, though Brother Knussman contemplates seeking employment elsewhere for the present.

Several new families are seen among our people.

Walnut Park

Elder Birch Whiting, wife, and son Ralph moved on June 11 from this place to Marshall, Missouri, where Brother Whiting has been appointed pastor.

Agnes Adams returned last week from Lamon, where she attended Gracefland the past year.

The Children's Day exercises, on June 14, were simplified somewhat in order to facilitate practicing and to promote good order at the services. At the eleven o'clock hour the beginner department occupied, followed by a talk to the children by B. J. Scott. In the evening, classes from the primary room appeared in numbers arranged by their teachers or superintendents. The entire junior department, under Sister Ethel Moorman's training, presented an original number amid a profusion of flowers and green boughs provided to represent a woodland where children grouped in conversation and song on the subject of Christ's blessings to children. Intermediate pupils concluded the program with songs, readings, and a pantomime.

In the afternoon the following children were baptized in the font and confirmed in a service immediately following the baptizing: Frances Bryant, Bethene Barnhardt, Ester Frisy, Arthur Frisy, Anna Virginia Garrett, Sarah Merle Hoening, Joyce Emily Tucker, Margaret H. Lowrey, Robert N. Lowrey, Clara Reed, and Cecil Schroepser.

A Sunday school picnic is planned for Thursday, the 18th. Children and parents are asked to meet at the church at one o'clock to be taken into the country.

Liberty Street

The Children's Day program Sunday evening, under the direction of Sister Rhoda Bowen, assisted by Sister Victoria Blackburn, was most pleasing. The younger children were dressed to represent different flowers, who sought entrance to the garden of the Lord. At the end the babies of the cradle roll were presented as the fairest buds in the Lord's garden. The junior department presented the "Arch of character," which was constructed of blocks bearing the names of the various virtues: love, faith, patience, kindness, hope, etc.

Following the morning preaching service, at which Brother E. E. Long gave a splendid sermon, the candidates for baptism were taken to the Temple Lot to have their baptismal ceremony. The confirmation of the four children from Liberty Street took place at the afternoon prayer service.

An error occurred in the report last week of the funeral of Brother Charles Bailey, which said the service was in charge of Pastor J. M. Baker. Elder William I. Flagg had charge, assisted by C. B. Hartshorn.

East Independence

Children's Day was observed here Sunday, June 14. The day was as pleasant as one could wish for the occasion. The church was nicely decorated with flowers, and the children were ready to do their best.

Two of the young men, Brothers Ora Thatcher and Orrin Teeter, were asked to take charge of the Sunday school and did their part well.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
At eleven o'clock a program was given, representing many hours of hard work on the part of the children and their instructors, which fact was appreciated by the hearers. While the program was all good, we would notice especially the drills. There was a flag drill by the boys, a wand drill by the girls, and a drill by the Boy Scouts. The training the children receive in these drills is of great value to them, as it will help to develop and strengthen them in many ways.

A wide field of service is opening for our young people, and while it is Children's Day we cannot help suggesting that the parents awake to a realization of their duty and responsibility in preparing their young for future service. May God help us to be true to our trust.

After the program, according to previous announcement, a basket dinner was served in the church, and a pleasant time was enjoyed.

Brother M. F. Gowell was the speaker in the evening. His sermon dealt with Bible history and prophecy concerning Israel, especially God's promises to the fathers to be realized in the latter days.

Kansas City Stake Items

Central Church

The morning speaker was the pastor, J. A. Tanner, and in the evening the discourse was by Cyril E. Wight, recently from Lamoni Stake.

Fourth Church

Usual activity has been manifested by this church during the past few weeks. All of the departments are functioning very satisfactorily. Mothers' Day was beautifully observed. The decorations were of ferns and other flowers, the program by the children very nice, the musical numbers fine, and the address by the pastor, J. O. Worden, very appropriate. There was a record breaking audience to enjoy the exercises of the morning. At 6.30 the Religio program continued the theme of mother, and the sermon following most impressively closed a very enjoyable day.

Recently the Women's Progressive Club presented a playlet, entitled, "Sewing for the heathen." Unfortunately the evening was extremely rainy, which lessened the attendance. However, quite a number braved the elements and seemed to enjoy the performance and refreshments following it. The receipts were over $20. The Progressive Club meets Fridays and is doing profitable work. At half past two they have a church history lesson, which is interesting, as is also the social aspect of the meetings.

On Friday evening, members of the Bennington Church rendered their Easter play, entitled, "The questioner." This was much enjoyed. Our prayer meetings are blessed by the presence of the divine Comforter which heartens, encourages, and strengthens the many who come, to carry on. A number of our young people are attending the Young People's Convention at Lamoni, so we will have to hold up their end of the work as well as our own for the next few Sundays.

Sunday, June 7, was a day of two-fold interest, the morning being devoted to the observance of the Lord's supper and the evenings to Children's Day exercises. The former was comfortably spiritual, and the latter a nice program rendered happily and sweetly. Four precious little souls were baptized. Our Sunday school is active, and we note new faces from time to time.

Bennington Heights

For several weeks Brother Frederick J. Cleveland gave slide lectures on Sunday evenings, which were very much enjoyed. He, on account of sickness, has discontinued them, but will probably resume them in the near future. Following the General Conference Brethren Charles May, T. J. Elliott, and W. H. Kelley have been speakers for us, the remainder of the time being taken up by the local men.

Brethren Williams and Beaman have been holding meetings on Blue Ridge Boulevard, with an attendance of fifteen the first night, of whom seven were nonmembers.

The Department of Women gave a social last Tuesday night, the proceeds of which will be applied to the building fund.

May 26 the funeral of Sister Shader was held from the church. Her trouble was apoplexy. Less than three months prior to this her son Neale died from the effect of carbon monoxide gas. They are both missed very much, as they were active in the work of the church.

The leader of Orioles is having success in her work with the girls of the church. We gave the pageant, "The questioner," for the last time at Bennington: $85.60 was made.

The Church History Class met recently and served ice cream and cake. They will meet the 18th to give an ice cream social, the proceeds to be applied to the Christmas offering.

Argentine Church

To-night the Sunday school rendered the pageant, "The challenge of the children," to a capacity house, being well received as a Children's Day program. It is adapted for a wide range in ages of the participants, from the wee tots to the adult members.

Three children were baptized during the afternoon and confirmed at a meeting just before the children's exercises.

Holden Stake

Holden

The churches of Holden joined in a union memorial service at the Presbyterian church, Elder D. J. Krail taking part.

Out of town speakers occupying recently were Elder J. F. Curtis, Bishop J. A. Koehler, and Evangelist I. M. Smith. The Saints-appreciated the timely sermons of these brethren. Brother Krail is at the Sanitarium for a few days, but expects to attend the stake conference at Sedalia Saturday and Sunday, June 20, 21. The church is located on the corner of Ninth and Montgomery, in the east part of town. Those coming by auto go to Eighth and Broadway, east on Broadway to 1 block east of Katy Hospital; one block south to church. Take street car at Third and Ohio, go east to Sixth and Montgomery. Three blocks south to church.

Brother C. F. Scarcliff, stake superintendent Department of Sunday School and member of the stake high council, conducts a hardware business week days and finds time for church work on Sundays. Recently he visited Buckner at eleven o'clock, Courtney in the afternoon, and Lees Summit in the evening. The return route takes him to Clinton, Missouri, home for the summer.

Lexington

Sunday, May 31, was a red letter day for Lexington. Elder R. D. Weaver had been holding a series of special services here for four weeks, and we had an all-day service, including a very fine dinner, which was served in the church dining room. Invitations were sent to all the branches in the stake and many attended, and the day was enjoyed very much.
Bishop J. A. Kochler, who has been appointed bishop of the Holden Stake, was with us and gave us two very fine sermons, the one at eleven o'clock being especially good. He told what it means to be a real Christian; a one hundred per cent Latter Day Saint. At half past two he gave us a splendid talk on some of his experiences as a minister for the church. He made a fine impression on both Saints and nonmembers. We believe he will accomplish a good work in the stake.

At half past seven Brother Weaver delivered a splendid sermon on authority, which was well received. His services will continue over another week. Some are deeply interested, with prospects of obedience. The pastor, J. A. Brendel, and the members have given Brother Weaver good support, and the services have been a success. The expressions at the prayer service indicated many had profited by the series of services. The branch is in fine spiritual condition, and much of the Spirit is present in our services. Our faces are Zionward; our hope strong in the Lord.

Grandview

May 17 Elder George Jenkins occupied both morning and evening hours, and as usual gave a splendid testimony of the work. Notwithstanding the cold, disagreeable weather on May 24, a good audience greeted Brethren Hopkins and Charles Martin, who occupied the pulpit.

May 31 Brother and Sister Chase and Brother and Sister A. Burgess and two daughters were present. Brother Burgess occupied at eleven o'clock on “Individual responsibility”; Brother Chase speaking at the evening hour. Sister Burgess sang two beautiful solos which were much enjoyed. Brother Hopkins spoke at Lees Summit at night and Brother Charles Martin at Stanley, Kansas, in the afternoon.

Lee’s Summit

Elder D. J. Kruhl, accompanied by Brother and Sister Gault of Independence, were present at the business meeting May 31. Brother Gault was chosen pastor and assumed his duties at once. Several from Independence have occupied the pulpit since the General Conference. The recent visit of Brother Hopkins was appreciated.

Warrensburg

Brother and Sister Chester Constance and little girls of Independence have located here and will profit by the excellent school privileges. Sister Constance formerly lived here. We are also glad to welcome Brother George W. Hancock and family, who are moving here from Bates City. Brother George is a willing worker.

The following Saints are in attendance at the college: Ruth Bryant, Glenna Clow, Hazel Constance, Bessie Constance, Dorothy Etzenhouzer, Ruth Lanpher, Pauline Millender, Ruth Mike, Avis Smith, Agnes Thomas, Vada Trask, Iva Robertson, of Independence. Blanche Christianson, Holden; James and Edith Curtis, Independence; Dean Gough, Butler, Missouri; Lillian Curtis Johnson, Edna Johnson, Bertha Johnson, Bertha and Elsie Bray, Helen Myers, ElMarie MacRae, Novel Raschke, Ruth Woolsey, Edna States, Warrensburg; Lucia Larsen, Lees Summit.

The home-coming and rally day, held recently in celebration of the 16th anniversary of the organization of the Warrensburg Branch, was a success, and many have expressed the hope that it will be made an annual affair. Elder Ammon White preached two splendid sermons, and the service at eight o'clock was much appreciated, Elders R. May and J. W. A. Bailey speaking interestingly on missionary activities. Sister Mary Fields sang “The Holy City,” illustrated with slides from the Graphic Arts Bureau. Elder George W. Beebe, of the stake high council, occupied very acceptably in our pulpit recently. Elder James Duffy, also of the council, accompanied by his family worshiped with us on the first Sunday.

Marshall

Elder C. L. House and wife of Houstonia were visitors at Marshall recently, Brother House occupying morning and evening. The prayer and sacramental service June 7 was spiritual and uplifting.

Brother Birch Whiting and wife were here last week looking for a location, preparatory to locating here. Brother Whiting has been chosen pastor and has made a good impression on the Saints. Brother H. G. Thayer, who has been in poor health for some time, was able to attend the sacramental service. We were glad to know his health is improving.

Atherton

Brother C. F. Scarcliff was with us May 24 and visited the Sunday school and spoke encouragingly of our progress. He preached a very helpful and encouraging sermon at eleven o'clock. Brother J. L. Blackmore preached a good sermon from the parable of Zenos in the evening. May 31 Elder W. D. Bullard spoke in the morning and Brother W. Sef in the evening. We have in our midst two veterans in the gospel over eighty years of age. At a recent prayer meeting these brethren, John Hedlin and C. Edwards, presided. The service was much enjoyed, and the younger members were encouraged to continue to the end.

Cleveland, Ohio

June 6.—Under the leadership of Pastor J. Herbert Talbot, the branch is progressing gradually, and our spiritual condition is much improved. Our aim is to be of real service to the church. The early Sunday morning prayer meetings are well attended, with an abundance of the Spirit. The other branch meetings are also well attended, and this fact indicates progress.

The Sunday school, our leading department, is in a thriving condition, with a splendid average attendance of eighty or ninety. We had set a goal of one hundred for each Sunday, but Superintendent F. H. Kelsey suggests that we change it to one hundred fifty. Our primary department is showing an increase, and fills a real need in the branch. Sister Anna McNeil is in charge and is performing a high quality of work.

The Sunday school enjoyed a fine Easter program. The committee, under the direction of Sister Bessie Talbot, is now planning to give a Children’s Day program.

It is encouraging to see the new class of young people, averaging in attendance from twelve to seventeen. This class enjoys studying its lessons separately from the young married folks, and both classes have doubled their attendance and interest. The two classes meet jointly one evening a week in the form of a club, where they enjoy programs and lectures of an interesting and varied nature. Early in the year the combined classes enjoyed a clam bake, at which time a great many new members, including those not of our faith, were taken in. Recently Signor G. Muscat lectured to the club on astrology and astronomy. The club spent Memorial Day at Brother Webbe’s “Temple View” in historic Kirtland, chartering a special bus for the occasion. Old and young had a delightful time.

The Department of Recreation and Expression holds forth on Friday evening, the Book of Mormon being the theme of the lesson study in the larger classes. The young people show a marked interest. Discussion is not confined to the past, but application is made to present-day problems, which stimulates lively discussions. The lesson study usually occupies about forty-five minutes, after which we have a short program, consisting generally of recitations, readings, and musical numbers. Once a month we have a social in the basement for the purpose of promoting sociability and getting acquainted with new members. Superintendent H. Campbell has a movement under way to buy a moving picture machine. He is also striving to assist the young people of the Religio to understand the gospel in its fullness.

The choir is progressing nicely, and we hope to maintain the interest of the Saints in this line of endeavor. The music in general is of a high nature, and the Saints in this locality appreciate good music.

The Department of Women is holding its lesson study regularly each Thursday afternoon. It has held a sale of home cooking and will hold another soon, the proceeds of which are used to purchase silverware and other articles for the kitchen and dining room. They are planning to hold a bazaar soon, as in former years.

We were recently pleased to have our young brother, William F. Webbe, talk to us of the recent General Conference, and if all who had the opportunity to attend the conference as did our brother and were as enthused over the results as he is, we are sure our young people will help to lead us on to Zion.

Council Bluffs, Iowa

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, June 3.—Council Bluffs Branch has been enjoying a number of good speakers the last two months. On April 26 Apostle J. F. Curtis occupied the pulpit both morning and evening. Brother Curtis has many friends in Council Bluffs, as he held a series of meetings here a few years ago and baptized a number of people. We were glad to welcome him again.

On the evening of May 8 a Mothers' and Daughters' Social was held in the basement of Central Church with Sister Blanche Edwards as the guest of honor. A pleasing program of songs, toasts, and a speech by Sister Edwards was especially worthy of note.

On the Sunday following, Sister Edwards occupied the morning preaching hour and gave a short talk in Sunday school. As it was Mothers' day, her talk, as well as the music, were appropriate to the day. The Girls' Chorus occupied the choir seats and gave a special number. Members of the Department of Women were in charge of the meetings, and four young ladies acted as ushers, so for once the ladies had it all their own way. Sister Edwards' talk was very inspiring, as her talks always are, and she is a very welcome visitor in Council Bluffs. On Sunday evening at half past six she talked at the Belmont Church, and again at eight o'clock at the Riverside Church. At the evening service at Central Church, Brother William Bath, the new missionary to Pottawattamie District, occupied the pulpit and gave a sermon of a very high order. We hope we may hear him often.

Sunday, May 17, Bishop Mark H. Siegfried was the speaker both morning and evening, giving a number of things to think about. We were glad of an opportunity to become acquainted with him and hope he may find time to visit us again very soon.

On Sunday morning, May 24, President F. M. Smith was the speaker, and his sermon was a general explanation of the Zionist program. We were impressed anew with the wonderful vision of Zion that he has, and with the realization that now, and not at some distant time, we must make that vision a reality. The evening preaching hour was taken by Brother Hale W. Smith, and we were very happy to hear that he is to be with us during the next school year as he has accepted a position as teacher in the Abraham Lincoln High School of this city.

Sunday evening, May 30, we were very much pleased to have Apostle J. F. Garver with us again. He gave one of his characteristic sermons, which was very inspiring.

Council Bluffs Branch is one of the most progressive branches in the church, and notwithstanding the general slump in attendance of the departments that always takes place at this season of the year, there is much improvement along various lines. We feel we have much to encourage us, and that in Brother George Betsy, we have a pastor who is indeed a "shepherd of the flock."

The orchestra has been doing commendable work, as was evidenced by the concert given at Central Church, on May 7. The program was given entirely by the orchestra, with two cornet solos by Leslie Epperson and Donald Fiori. The orchestra consists of about eighteen instruments and is directed by Brother Jean Turpin who has had considerable experience in band and orchestra work, and who is giving unrestrained of his talent for the good of the orchestra.

The departments of the branch are meeting regularly and at the present time are struggling with the usual problem of slackening attendance that always occurs at this time of year.

The visiting committee of the Department of Women requests that if those who are planning to enter any of the hospitals in this city will get in touch with the committee by calling the chairman, Sister H. H. Hand, telephone 2535, they will be glad to visit and help them in any way they can during their stay.

Fargo, North Dakota

May 26.—The Saints were saddened on Sunday morning, May 24, when a message came announcing the death of Elder John Thompson, of Clifford, North Dakota. He died suddenly of heart failure after having enjoyed fine health all his life. He was seventy-one years old at time of death. His brother, W. D. Thompson, paid his reward last fall.

We regret the loss of our brother, and his sudden death arouses the thought of how uncertain life is. Preparation should be made each day to meet our dear Savior. Elder Thomas Leitch officiated at the funeral services held Tuesday, May 26.

Sister Elsie Brown underwent an operation for removing tonsils recently and feels that the heavenly Father was very merciful to her in her hour of need.

Saints all have employment. Most of our young Saints have fine positions in business places in our city, for which we are thankful.

On Sunday, May 24, Elder Thomas Leitch gave a fine discourse, the subject being, "Saul's conversion." He had selected another subject, but three times during the day his Bible opened to the chapter of Saul's conversion, so he decided he should choose that for his text, which proved very successful. He also gave us a good talk on Mothers' Day, giving fine advice to parents, even if he is a bachelor.

Sister Barbara Thompson, of Clifford attended services here Sunday, May 24.

Sister Ferne Shackow, superintendent of the Religio, is keeping this department alive.
We are glad our young people are studying the Book of Mormon and feel sure they will never regret it. It means much if we can keep the young interested in church work.

The prayer services are a source of strength and cheer, and we feel like singing, "Let us go to the house of the Lord." It is good to meet with those of like faith and listen to their prayers and testimonies.

The weather has been very cool here this spring, but crops are looking fine.

Many Opportunities for Gospel Work

(From letter of James A. Thomas, Tulsa, Oklahoma, June 1, 1925.)

I have but two serious regrets: that I cannot do at least three times as much as I do, and that some who have ability are so slow to heed the call of the church. I recently had an urgent call from two different men either to go or send men second from each. A visiting elder from southern Missouri east of here, reports what he believes an excellent opening are looking fine. He preached to a large crowd while there.

There is peace and good fellowship in the branch, and all are working harmoniously. Prayer meeting is held Wednesday evening at the church, and group meeting is held at the home of Sister C. A. Parkin, where the Saints are studying the Book of Mormon. The selection is read and discussed, questions are asked, and proofs are presented in favor of the various views held. The object is to become better informed concerning the book and its doctrine.

The Saints are upholding Zion's banner here and are strong in the faith.

San Francisco, California

May 29.—The work here is going along about as usual. All regular services are being held, with average attendance, and occasionally an addition is made to our numbers. One was recently baptized by Elder Emery S. Parks, which is encouraging.

Priesthood meeting is held once a month, where the affairs of the branch, also doctrinal questions, are considered.

Elder Virgil Etchenhouse, president of Oakland Branch, preached here May 17. His remarks were well received and much appreciated. He is much liked by the Saints here. District President J. D. White preached the 10th, his theme being appropriate to Mothers' Day. Other speakers have been J. A. Saxe, Emery Parks, and George S. Lincoln, all speaking on subjects suitable to the times, and enjoying good liberty in doing so.

Vineyard Gleanings

A Visit to New York District Conference and Toronto

Niagara! One who listens for a time to Niagara's voice finds his own voice very thin. It is better to write. This is written at a point on Goat Island overlooking the Canadian Falls.

Man is never quite satisfied. There is no limit to his ambitions. The height, the breadth, the foam, the roar, the rainbow at the foot of the Falls are not enough. It is not enough to see the Falls by sunlight and moonlight and starlight. Man must add a glory and set the aurora borealis on the brow of Niagara.

Niagara Falls, Canada, and Niagara Falls, New York, have combined to erect a battery of twenty-four great searchlights of an aggregate of one billion, three hundred and twenty million candle power on the Canadian side with which the Falls are illuminated at night on special occasions. Each light is thirty-six inches in diameter and contains a 125-ampere arc.

Their light may be colored, and then the display is still more beautiful, red, blue, yellow, orange, lavender, and variegated colors as the individual lights move about and blend, ranging clear across the American and Canadian Falls, through the high-flung, white spray. The spectacle is as of another world; so vast, so lovely, so unearthly, that language already impoverished by Niagara is still more bankrupt. And when these great beams were directed vertically and probed the heavens, whirling, dancing, embracing each other, falling apart, in a riot of color and light, it seemed to me that archangels might come to the battlements of heaven to witness the dance of light and beauty. It reminded me of Kipling's dream of painting during the millennium with the heavens for a canvas and comets' tails for brushes.

But I remembered that God had flung the rays of Saturn and Mars and Venus and Canopus and thousands of other suns and stars of varied color into infinite space, and the angels of light beholding it sang his glory and the "Sons of God shouted for joy." Our display after all was small, yet in a way it reached up to heaven and our appreciation of light and beauty was humanity's confession of kinship to God. How very fine when that confession is consciously and intelligently made.

I came from Cleveland to Niagara Falls May 30 to attend the conference of the New York District. Brother A. E. Stone met me at the depot, and presently we were in the afternoon business session. The routine business included the election of officers. Doctor Weegar was the only nominee for district president and was elected by unanimous vote. He seems to be generally loved throughout the district.

In the evening there was a young people's program under the auspices of the Religio, our young brother, Howard Miller, in charge. It was my great pleasure to address the gathering for a short time and to enjoy the splendid musical numbers.

After the entertainment Brother and Sister Sanford Mordon kindly invited me to join them with a party of young people, and we drove to the Falls to watch the illumination. This was particularly enjoyable, since Brother Mordon was personally engaged in promoting the enterprise and through his labors brought the Chambers of Commerce of the two cities together and finally "put the project over," as the saying goes. The scene witnessed that night will long be remembered. The Literary Digest for May 30 had a description from which I quote:

"It is planned to have the Falls illuminated four hours nightly. On special occasions or, if desired, as often as once a week, trained manipulators will execute light-and-color drills with the searchlights. Varicolored beams may be radiated in all directions, making a veritable aurora borealis. Or, the beams may be concentrated on one Fall; distributed over both; or shot into the heavens to be visible seventy-five miles or more.

Sunday was a busy and profitable day. Prayer meeting at half past eight with Brother Stone and the writer in charge. Preaching by the writer at eleven in the morning and half past seven in the evening. In the afternoon a round table devoted to district and general church problems, followed by a priesthood meeting."
A splendid spirit of unity and peace prevailed. Certain local troubles were adjusted, and it was felt that the district had received an impetus for great good and would move out on a year of constructive work.

Visitors were present from distant points in the district, including Syracuse, and from various points in Canada, including Toronto, Hamilton, and Niagara Falls, Ontario.

Two Lamanite sisters of the Oneidas were with us. One of them, Elsie Elms, is a cultured singer, and it was inspirational to hear her sing our old-time Latter Day Saint hymn, “Israel is free.” These sisters are educated, high-grade Lamanites, brought in I understand largely through the labors of Brother and Sister Frank Mesle of Sherrill. Others are interested. Truly they are of the “remnants of the land” of the once proud Oneidas. Well organized and intelligent in their day, they have left good stock to represent Laman in the latter times.

Man is a curious creature, and woman is beyond explanation. Niagara Falls is the proverbial mecca of honeymooners, perhaps because of the rainbow at the foot of the Bridal Veil Falls. Indeed, there is a nest of rainbows at the foot of each fall, as seen from various angles—enough for every bride to carry one away in her heart. Yet from the hospitable home where I stayed, the sister of my hostess, Sister Harry Vaughn, had just gone forth to other parts on her honeymoon. The brides of Niagara go elsewhere for their rainbows. How human! Just over the hill, just around the corner, lies the thing we seek.

Monday I improved as a day of rest. And slipped away alone to the Falls to write this editorial. One standing by the brink of the American Falls turned to me and exerting his piping vocal chords said, “Can you see any God in this?” Why reply? The same God who met with us Sunday in the church was here at the Falls on Monday. To my ears the great voice of Niagara sang:

Jehovah! Lord God Almighty!
Forever shall our great choir
Sing with the voice of many waters,
All glory, and all honor,
And all power be thine,
For ever, and ever, and ever, Amen.

Toronto

June 2, Brother Spillsbury, president of the Niagara Falls Branch, drove me down the Niagara River to catch the Toronto boat. Brother Elliott, our young missionary from Owen Sound, accompanied us. We paused at various advantageous points to view the gorge, whirlpool, and also various points of interest.

Standing on an immense flat rock ("Council Rock") perhaps a hundred feet across and nearly as smooth as a floor, projecting out over the gorge with a sheer drop of three hundred feet on three sides, we admired the peaceful beauty of the scene until reminded that in the turbulent days of the past, September 14, 1763, ninety British soldiers were suddenly attacked upon this very rock by Seneca warriors. Only three of the party escaped. Men, horses, and provision wagons were flung hurtling over the precipice. One of those who escaped was a drummer boy, who fell into a tree top, and his belt caught a limb and held fast. That day the great rock ran red with blood.

At the mouth of the river stands old Fort Niagara, reminder of the days when English-speaking people foolishly fought each other, though they had many common enemies and the earth was wide.

Returning to Lewiston I caught the Corona, bound for Toronto. Across the river on Queenstown Heights stood the monument to General Brock, commemorating the battle of Queenstown Heights, 1813, to remind me that it was not always so easy to cross the border as it is now. To-day about the only reminder that there is indeed a border is the custom officer who looks into your traveling bag with a bored air. No doubt inspecting international soiled linen does become monotonous. The only man among us who had any trouble was one who had two Bibles (new ones). Having only one Bible, and it showing some signs of use, I had no trouble.

At the boat landing I was met by Brother J. L. Prentice, president of the branch. We had not previously met, but were soon well acquainted.

From the home of Brother Prentice we drove to the Bishop McLean’s to spend a few minutes with the family and especially to call upon Sister Clarke, aged mother of the former Sister Ada Clarke, who became the wife of President Joseph Smith. Sister Clarke is now eighty-six years old and has been ill, but expressed the belief that she is “on the mend.”

At eight o’clock we met with the Saints at the Soho Street Church. A good-sized audience was present, including visitors from four or five outlying branches as far distant as Guelph.

I had been warned by some one that Toronto might be a difficult place in which to speak. I did not find it so. I have not enjoyed preaching anywhere of late more than thère. And the audience seemed to respond with a vital and stimulating interest. The Saints were very friendly and whole hearted in their welcome and generous both in their good wishes and financial aid to the traveler. Many inquired after C. Ed. Miller, T. W. Williams, and others who have labored in Toronto in years past.

As I had other engagements to meet I was obliged to leave Toronto that night at half past eleven, but after the service found time to visit the home of...
Doctor Charles McLean and his wife, formerly Sister Fay Gould, one of our Independence girls. The most important member of this family is the international baby, grandson of Bishop McLean of Toronto and George Gould of Independence.

Toronto was the last stop on this itinerary. I have found the Saints responsive and the good Spirit present in their meetings to a very marked degree at every place visited. The meetings have partaken somewhat of the nature of revival services. There is much, very much, to be thankful for, and many things to encourage and give hope. Let us press forward with faith, hope, and charity.

There were present the following: Of the Presidency, Frederick M. Smith; of the Bishopric, Albert Carmichael, J. A. Becker, and M. H. Siegfried; of the Lamoni Stake, Wilber E. Prall, David E. Dowker, A. B. Phillips, and A. J. Yarrington; of the Far West Stake, Orman Salisbury and Herbert Barto; of the Kansas City Stake, J. A. Tanner and Fred B. Blair; of the Holden Stake, J. A. Koehler; of Independence, C. E. Miller and Ellis Short.

The first two sessions were devoted largely to the question of uniform system of accounting. It is pleasing to note that general agreement was reached on this question, and it is quite likely that this agreement will result in a better system of accounting as well as a saving in the matter of costs of accounting. This uniformity of accounting was discussed in its application to institutions as well.

A number of questions were discussed informally, and it is believed that an impetus has been given to the work as a whole, because of a better understanding among these officers.

In a general way only, the social program as adopted by the General Conference was discussed, with the wider dissemination of knowledge on this important matter in view.

Immediately following this council the First Presidency and the presidents of stakes met and considered their problems, resulting in better understanding and organization for the prosecution of their work.

On Wednesday evening the Standing High Council convened in response to call from the Presidency, and the sessions were presided over by Presidents Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, one or both being present at the five sessions held, closing on Friday evening.

In addition to the consideration of some matters of business and the hearing of cases, of which there are a number waiting, several recommendations for ordination to the office of high priest and one to the office of bishop were considered and the ordinations ordered provided.

Future sessions of the Standing High Council will likely be of much more frequent occurrence than have been. The next meeting will occur September 29, just after the close of the reunion season.

The men chosen for ordination are: Milo Burnett, Far West Stake, bishop; for high priests, Roy Cheville and H. H. Gold, Lamoni Stake; P. L. Weegar, Buffalo, New York; Robert Brown, Chatham, Ontario; Arthur H. DuRose, Flint, Michigan; D. B. Perkins, Owen Sound District.

What to Look for in the July “Autumn Leaves”

The Convention Number of Autumn Leaves will be off the press this week. Its new editors, Elders F. M. McDowell and Frank B. Almond, have spared no pains to make it a good sample of what the young people’s magazine should be. In the first place, the frontispiece is a splendid half-tone reproduction of President F. M. Smith’s latest photograph. Those who have seen it have said that it is the best likeness ever taken of “F. M.” With it comes a stirring message to the young people from our church leader—a clear call to loyal service.

All that was inspirational and valuable from the late Young People’s Convention has been gathered into a few pages. Those who attended will live again in memory those ten days of spiritual life and social happiness; while those who were unfortunate enough to be absent will be hungry for the chance to attend the next one. Illustrations and cullings from the various activities will make this number worth preserving.

In connection with the Short Story Contest, the announcement of which will be found on another page of this week’s HERALD, Sister Alice Edwards starts the first of a series of helpful articles on how to write a short story. Sister Edwards is an instructor in short story writing, and those who expect to write for this contest will find much assistance here.

Now that reunion time is upon us, the leaders of young people’s activities will find an article worth reading by Brother Alva R. Gilbert, on “Reunion leaders—have you a program?” Brother Gilbert is in charge of Graceland’s sports and physical training department, and his contribution this month is (Continued on page 668.)

A Good Radio Ground Essential

All radios employing the conventional outside aerial also require a good ground connection. This fact is well illustrated by the following letter, recently addressed to K L D S:

We didn’t hear the Thursday, April 30, program; could hear the station, but not loud enough to do any good; so got new batteries but could do no better Saturday night; then quit, feeling badly to think we would miss K L D S on Sunday. About 11 a. m. Sunday, Mr. Walker had an inspiration. He went out and dug a basin around the ground connection, and soaked the ground with water. Lo and behold! The radio worked good and loud. We heard Doctor Harrington and thought his talk a fine one, so we rejoiced. We also enjoyed the vespers services, which are always good. Doctor Farrell’s talks are wonderful.—Mrs. Etha R. Walker, Cameron, Missouri.

A cold water pipe ground connection is generally to be preferred. A metal pipe or rod driven five or six feet in the ground will usually give good results, but care should be taken that the surrounding earth is kept moist. Connection should be made by means of a copper ground clamp, the pipe and wire first being scraped bright. Good results cannot be expected from a set whose ground connection is to a rusty or oxidized pipe. Soldered connections to rod or pipe are preferable, but difficult to make. Sometimes it is advisable to try out several different grounds, and use the one that gives best results.

Infrequently a satisfactory ground connection cannot be obtained. In this event a counterpoise, or capacity ground, as it is sometimes called, may be used. This, in effect, is simply another aerial, usuurally placed eight or ten feet above the ground. Preferably it is placed beneath the aerial, but this isn’t absolutely necessary. The counterpoise should have several wires to give best results, and the total length should be at least seventy-five feet. Insulators should be placed at each end of the counterpoise, to insulate it from the ground, the same as the aerial.

Give your radio a good aerial and a good ground. Then see that the batteries and tubes test O. K. You will be pleased with the results.

K L D S 101st Station to Get Class B License

Our new broadcasting station has finally received its long-awaited and hard-worked-for Class B license. The power was increased Sunday from 500 to 1,000 watts, and the wave length raised from 268 meters to 441 meters. Even before those in charge of the big station received official notification that the Class B license had been issued, the Kansas City Journal-Post published several articles to this effect in its afternoon and evening editions, June 19. Following are a few excerpts from these articles:

The number of Class B radiocasting stations in the United States this week passed the century mark and now stands for the time being at 101, it is announced by the department of commerce to-day. The 100th B license was awarded to station WBBM of the Atlas Investment Company, Chicago, which will operate on the 226 meter wave length, using power of 1,500 watts. The 101st B license was awarded to K L D S, the station recently erected by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, at Independence, Missouri. . . . This station . . . will use a 440-meter wave length and 1,000 watts power. It will be twice as powerful as any other station in Kansas City.

The new radiocasting plant (K L D S) will divide time with station WOS at Jefferson City, Missouri. K L D S will be on the air at 8 o’clock Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday (later) nights and Sundays at 11 o’clock in the morning, at 6.30 in the evening and at 9.15 o’clock Sunday nights. The new plant and studio, valued at $20,000, was planned and constructed by members of the church in Independence. . . . Among the special features of the elaborate equipment is the supplying of power by storage batteries alone and the use of water-cooled vacuum tubes. The studio is considered one of the best equipped and most artistic west of the Mississippi.

The Reorganized Church has used radio (broadcasting) since 1921, when a small plant operating on five watts was installed. The 250-watt plant replaced by the new one has been increased to 500-watt power and given to the Latter Day Saint college in Lamoni, Iowa. [Note: The latter statement is in error. The 250-watt set has not yet been dismantled.—A. B. C.]

Officially there are forty-seven wave bands set aside for the Class B stations. All of them are filled, with many radio-casters splitting time, and in some cases three stations sharing a single wave length. Since the reallocation of the transmitting plants was decided upon last year and the rearrangement made, there has been a slow but sure increase in the number of the higher powered plants. On March 1 the total one of the best we have read on reunion work for young people.

Fiction lovers will enjoy an Indian story, “Adjusting the pattern,” by Cora Miley. Miss Miley herself is a Lamanite, and her portrayal of one of the real difficulties of Indian life makes a story that is both thrilling and human.

Autumn Leaves has not forgotten the girls this month. There is a wonderful little play called “Service,” by Sister Anne Friend Roberts, which can be played by any of the Oriole Bands. It was given during the General Conference, and elicited many commendatory remarks. This, with other articles for the girls, should not be missed by the Orioles.

We like the July issue of Autumn Leaves—what we have seen of it—and we know that you are going to vote it as one of your favorites. Send in your subscription to-day.

The Elements of Stewardships and Our Social Program

By Albert Carmichael

[The Presidency are pleased to present this article on stewardships and our program from the pen of Bishop Albert Carmichael. We commend it to the careful reading and study of the priesthood, and all members who are interested in acquainting themselves with a subject which has a prominent place in the minds of Latter Day Saints.—Frederick M. Smith.]

Foreword

Fear, with its blighting influence, is gripping the world. From the crowned monarch to the lowliest peasant, its curse is felt. Right and wrong are embraced in a grip of death, and the inhabitants of the world are waiting with dazed minds, wondering what the final outcome shall be.

To the Saints comes the voice of the Master, prophetically, "Fear not, little flock; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

The time has come when peace shall be taken from the earth. It is a time that will test the souls of men—a time clamoring for loyalty of all men to our government and to our church. No true Saint can give less. Loyalty is not defined in words alone; such allegiance is cheap. "If ye love me, keep my commandments," is the true index of our loyalty, both to church and state.

For generations men have defiantly, and in a great many cases blatantly, been traitors to the ideals of the Master. They have sown to the world and are now reaping the whirlwind. They have scattered recklessly the seed of selfishness and have learned that "every seed [produces] after its own kind." Well did Dante in his Inferno assign those guilty of this crime of selfishness to the lowest hell. From it springs every crime in the calendar. "The love of money [selfishness] is the root of all evil."

To-day—right now—man, made in the image of his Father, God; made a little lower than the angels, has so stultified and degraded himself that class is arrayed against class—hated rules. The golden rule is almost forgotten, and every man's hand is against his neighbor. The end of it all! What must it be! "Watchman, what of the night?" Thank God for the answer: "The night cometh, also the morning."

To the unregenerated it is truly "the night"—"the night and darkness"—but to those who have followed the Master in the waters of regeneration, it is morning.

The morning breaks, the shadows flee,
Lo! Zion's standard is unfurled,
The dawning of a better day
Majestic rises on the world.

The rays of the eastern skies are radiant with the signs of the near approach of the Master. He cannot delay his coming much longer.

We come to you with a message surcharged with hope. Every indication points unerringly to the imminent coming of our Lord and Savior.

Lift up your heads, ye heirs of glory,
Cast aside your doubts and fears!
He who called you to his kingdom
Soon will reign a thousand years.

Out of the gloom shines the light of revelation, telling us just what to do to be ready for the emergency. Our safety, our progress, is depending upon our reception of the instruction given us by God. Let us "take heed how we hear." The Lord has solemnly promised that the wicked shall be destroyed; that famine, pestilence, plague, earthquake, fire, war, etc., shall continue until mankind gives heed to his commands.

There is a divinity within us that shapes our ends, rough hew them as we may, and that infinite within us cries out for its right of development. That which has been involved must be evolved. The pious hand of man vainly tries to prevent those who are fashioned after the image of God from obtaining their divine birthright—as well try to change the law of gravity! "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh; the Lord shall have them in destruction." The philosophy of history is comprehended in the word growth, and growth spells development, and development means to be godlike.

The two mighty attributes involved in every member of the human family are those of worship and gregariousness. On these two fundamentals, the unity prayed for by the Son of God is made possible. The Master prayed with an intelligent faith. He knew that within the ego of his brother were divinely planted those potential forces, which when transmuted into kinetic energy would evolve until the fruitage would be man in the image of God—perfected.

The question propounded by the legally learned Pharisee, while reflecting the littleness of his hypocritical soul, served the Teacher of men the occasion for enunciating these two mighty forces for the unification of the race—the "common denominator" which would enable Him to add together all the good in humanity into one compact whole and at last

present the finished product to his Lord. “Thou shalt love the Lord with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment, and the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.” Briefly, the love of God and the love of humanity, one incomplete without the other. “What God hath joined together, let no man put asunder.”

Theologians have thundered from the pulpit their crippled exegetical conception of the love of God. The cry for centuries has been, “Come to Jesus,” forgetting that the “coming” to Jesus was absolutely necessary via the route that passed through the crowded thoroughfare where humanity touched elbow to elbow—that he who loved the God of Israel could not fertilize that love unless it was transmuted into the “love of his brother.”

To-day the Christian world stands aghast at the little progress made in the past centuries, and in their final analysis of the cause of their stupendous failure they are shocked to find that they have flagrantly violated the ethical command and have separated the two great cardinal principles from each other and have vainly tried to teach man the same truth. They sowed to the wind and have reaped the whirlwind. “Be not deceived, whatsoever a man soweth that shall he reap.” Cause and effect forever continue their sway.

To love God means for us individually to place ourselves in proper correspondence with God; to know how to approach him; to “worship him [correctly, intelligently] that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.” The Master puts this needed relationship first. Hence the necessity of our missionary efforts—Go teach men how to worship me; tell them that it is vain for them to cry, Lord, Lord, and do not the things I command them.

“The second is like unto it.” When they have learned how to worship me properly, then teach them of Zion; that the instinct planted in them by me to gather must find its true expression in the social state, or Zion—the love of our fellow man; the brotherhood of man.

On these two common inheritances the unity of the race will be accomplished, for “my word shall not return unto me void until it shall accomplish the thing whereunto I sent it.” “On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.” From Genesis to Revelation, whenever and wherever and no matter through whom God has spoken or will yet speak, his revelations will be but an enlargement, an explanation, a more detailed account of how and why and when these two laws were made basic.

History is but the recording of the unfolding of God’s purpose among the sons of men. The infinite within man seeks its fountain source, its home— heaven. This struggle for his rights, his liberty to come back to God, is what the world calls “social evolution.” Man has not yet reached his goal because he has not been free to do so.

Only in broken gleams and partial light has the sun of liberty yet beamed among men, but all progress hath she called forth. Liberty came to a race of slaves crouching under Egyptian whips, and led them forth from the house of bondage. She hardened them in the desert and made of them a race of conquerors. The free spirit of the Mosaic law took their thinkers up to heights where they beheld the unity of God, and inspired their poets with strains that yet phrase the highest exaltations of thought. Liberty dawned on the Phoenician coast, and ships passed the Pillars of Hercules to plow the unknown seas. She shed a partial light on Greece, and marble grew to shapes of ideal beauty, words became the instruments of subtlest thought, and against the scanty militia of free cities the countless hosts of the Great King broke like surges against a rock. She cast her beams on the four-acre farms of Italian husbandmen, and born of her strength a power came forth that conquered the world. They glinted from shields of German warriors, and Augustus wept his tears for the heroes of his legions. Out of the night that followed her eclipse, her slanting rays fell again on free cities, and a lost learning revived, modern civilization began, a new world was unveiled; and as liberty grew, so grew art, wealth, power, knowledge, and refinement. In the history of every nation we may read the same truth.

This spirit of progress, traversing the whole course of history, social or profane, constantly battling westward and upward, presents a mighty drama in which the “whole world is the stage.”

“Amidst the confusion of rising and falling of states, of battle, siege, and slaughter, of victory and defeat; through varying fortunes and ultimate extinction of monarchies, republics and empires, through barbaric eruption and desolation, feudal isolation, spiritual supremacy; the heroic age of cross and crescent; amid the busy hum of industry; through marts of trade; behind gleaming keels of commerce; through blood and conflict of commons and lords; all are irresistibly moving toward the land reserved of God for the final consummation of his will. Here all meet as equals, free to speak, to think, to act. The common ground on which all civilization meets, so it is the point from which return currents hasten by lightning and steam to every quarter of the earth.” As the heart receives blood from every part of the body and having revitalized it sends it back laden with life, so Joseph’s land has adapted all important movements of onward civilization, the children of all lands, and this improved civilization, this ennobled manhood, has been lavishly handed back to the children of the donors. Economic freedom then becomes the nursing mother of social development.

So manifest is this order of social phenomena whereby social improvement follows advances in economic freedom, and not only with reference to past times but also in our own day, that social progress seems to be generated by economic modes; and from that inference, materialistic evolutionists draw far-reaching conclusions. Economics becomes to them a sort of social proteoplasm, out of which the higher institutions and even the ideals of society are progressively evolved.

The plausibility of this theory is greatly enhanced by the
The undeniable fact that institutions of higher degree are affected in character and direction by existing economic conditions. The economic struggle taints our politics with corruption, rests our morals on the shifting sands of utilitarianism, degrades our art to the commonplace or the sensational, and turns the high ideals of our religion into empty metaphors behind which lurk a loathsome dollar worship.

All this is because existing economic conditions force everybody into an all-absorbing devotion to the problem of securing a living. The higher qualities of human nature have consequently but little opportunity to develop freely. It by no means follows, however, that economic systems naturally determine the character and direction of those qualities. Nothing has been proved than that economic systems which force men to become absorbed in the problem of securing a living, hold the higher qualities of human nature down to their own low levels.

We may still infer, then, when changes in economic systems are followed by improvement on the higher planes of social life, that this result is due to another cause than materialistic evolution. So far from being limited to the theory that improved conditions on the higher planes are generated by economic change, we may fairly conclude that those conditions are attributable to the fact that the economic change has freed the higher qualities of man from thralldom of bread winning. Instead of affording proof of materialistic evolution, such changes are instances of spiritual emancipation.

It is true, of course, that men must eat and drink and be glad before they can think effectively about art or morals, politics or religion, or in any other manner give free play to their higher faculties. They must, moreover, not only have all the bodily comforts that food and drink and clothing symbolize, but must also be reasonably assured of always having them, before their thoughts can soar very far above economic levels.

So long as economic necessities are forced into the foreground, higher impulses will be driven into the background. While the mind is worried with economic thoughts, moral and spiritual thoughts will be clouded. Any economic system, therefore, which perpetually stimulates a universal and obtrusive fear of want, must give direction and character to every other social institution. It does this, however, not by processes of generation or materialistic evolution, but by holding the higher functions of the mind in check.

Emancipate the higher human qualities by banishing want and fear of want, and social development will no longer be determined by economic adjustments. The higher human faculties, freed from the enthrallment of bodily needs, will rise toward their source—which is not material, but spiritual.

The theory that all social movement is generated and determined by economic adjustments, assumes that an effect can be greater than its original cause. It attributes the origin of the higher characteristics and possibilities of social life to the lower. And this extraordinary method of accounting for moral and spiritual qualities in man, is, heaven save the mark, sometimes called “scientific.” It would be as scientific to assume that water naturally rises above its source, or that machinery naturally gives out more power than has been put into it.

Economic systems cannot be the original cause of institutions that rise above the economic. If morality, for instance, is evolved from economic conditions, an equal moral force must have been first involved into economic conditions. So, also, with art, politics, religion, and all the rest. Nothing superior to economics can be got out of economics without having first been injected into economics. But that implies what materialistic evolutionists deny—a first cause or force, a force which descends from highest spirituality to lowest materiality and then returns. It is a force that in this respect may be likened to rays of sunlight which upon striking the face of a mirror are reflected back. The mirror does not generate the light it projects. Neither does the material generate the spiritual.

The manifestations of this force through the higher faculties of the human mind and heart may, indeed, be checked by obstructions along the lower levels through which it rises. But in no other sense can it be truly said to be directed or determined by those levels. They support and may be made to check it; but they have no vitality of their own to give. Remove the obstructions, and the higher faculties are no more determined by the lower functions than the volume of water in a reservoir is determined by the shape of the pipe through which it is received from its source in the mountain lake.

Given an economic condition from which the fear of want had been banished, and the higher functions of society would be determined, not by economic modes, but by moral ideals, unobstructed and unpolluted by sordid anxieties and hopes and fears.

Nor need we think of such an economic condition as fanciful. On the contrary, it is entirely natural in the social state. It would be a reality to-day, under the existing economic system, but for immoral political interferences with the natural distribution of wealth. The possibilities of satisfying the material wants of mankind are practically unlimited. If all men who are willing to work for their living were allowed to work, and each who worked were freed to demand effectively the share which his work adds to current production, there would be neither want nor fear of want, but more than enough for all.—Ethics of Democracy.

Private ownership, unrestricted, has been the curse of the race. Every person should have his needs supplied. God so intended it. Man’s perversity has so far frustrated, but Jehovah has not forgotten, neither is he asleep. This economic principle will ride its time and ride triumphant, eventually, and the specter of want and fear, which has so far been perpetuated by this crass violation of a basic economical law, will be banished forever.

Fundamentals

In our interpretation of the law of inheritances and stewardships, we should be careful that such interpretation is in accord with the following fundamental characteristics:

1. Universal in its application.
2. Does not violate a man’s agency.
3. Is in harmony with the laws as reflected in the three standard books of the church.
4. It must be in harmony with the laws of the land.
5. Is in harmony with the economic principle that every man must earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, or its equivalent.
6. Any system which stifles initiative in any direction and does not furnish incentive or arouse effort in another direction of equal or more value to the individual and society, is to be deprecated—disapproved.

7. A plan which protects private interests to the detriment of the group interests is wrong, and vice versa.

8. The higher the degree of civilization the more complex the social group. As the social group becomes the more complex, commensurately, the rights of the individual become less, and the rights of the group increase.

9. Zionic conditions must necessarily reflect the highest possible degree of civilization, therefore it follows that the social rights of the Zionic group will constantly increase as fast as the rights of the individual decrease.

10. Every law given by God is spiritual.

11. Man's blessings or responsibilities are measured to him according to his needs and just wants.

The Nursery Department in the Church School

BY MRS. BETHIA BLACK

Until the last few years, a child had to be four years old before he might enter the Sunday school. Until the child reached this age, the mother was compelled either to stay at home or take the little child into the adult class; and after one or two attempts at attending the adult class with the child the mother usually decided it wise to stay at home, as it is physically impossible for a little child to remain quiet or not cause confusion in an adult class. So, in justice to the mother as well as the child, there has come into existence the cradle roll class in the Sunday school, known in most churches as the nursery department.

Personally, I like the name of nursery department rather than cradle roll class, as this department has no affiliation with the cradle roll department under the supervision of the Department of Women. It is a class or department in Sunday school and functions as any other class or department would.

However, the superintendent of cradle roll, coming in contact as she does with the mother in the home and at the mothers' meetings, could assist greatly in building up this department by encouraging the mother to attend Sunday school, assuring her there is a department where her tiny one will be cared for. Frequently parents who have rather lost interest will once again become workers in the Sunday school, for a parent is not apt to send a tiny tot of one and one half years to Sunday school, but will bring him.

This department deals with children under four years, dividing them into two groups; one group under two and one half years, the other group from two and one half to four years of age.

The ideal department would have its own organization, as the primary and beginner departments. They should have a separate room, where they can be taught their songs and exercises and not be compelled to take part in exercises and songs they cannot comprehend—such being the case where they meet with the primary department.

This room would be equipped with paraphernalia necessary to meet needs. It should be divided so the two groups may be separate. This division may be by screens or curtains.

In the part of room reserved for the little tots under two and one half years would be one or two cribs, tiny chairs, table, toys such as rattles, empty spoons, blocks, pasteboard boxes, wooden beads to string, rag dolls, rubber dolls, etc. There need not be expensive toys; however, they must be toys that the children can handle themselves. They should not hear, "Oh, no; you must not touch that!" The person in charge must be one in whom the mothers can have absolute confidence.

In the part of the room for the children over two and one half years would be chairs, table, pictures, sand table, toys, books, and if possible a piano. In substitution for a piano, if that be out of the question, the teacher or one of the assistants should be able to sing. She need not be the soloist of the choir, but she should be able to sing the little nursery songs. In selecting pictures, do not get the cheap, highly colored ones, but choose a few good pictures done in harmonizing colors; they need not be large. This also applies to books. Of course a book that does not have colored pictures would not have a very strong appeal to the child; but in choosing both pictures and books, keep uppermost the idea of the education of the child in the artistic and harmonizing colors.

The ideal condition does not prevail in Denver. Under the handicap of lack of room the department cannot be conducted as we would wish, but we have proved that the child under four can be taught about God. Of course a child under two and one half cannot be reached to any great extent along that line, but he can be taught the habit of attending Sunday school. What is most desired in the man must be put in the environment of early childhood. If a child attends Sunday school from infancy, nine times out of ten when he reaches the junior or intermediate age he does not question whether or not he shall attend Sunday school. There is no recollection of a time when he remained at home with mother.

The children in the department are forming the habit of attending Sunday school, and that of self-control. They are taught there is a time to talk and a time when they are to keep quiet; a time to walk around and a time to remain seated.

They are taught the spirit of reverence and devotion in their songs and prayers.

They are taught the spirit of fair play and community interest; and they are taught about God, the loving, heavenly Father, not so much through Bible stories, because there are so few Bible stories within the comprehension of the children of this age, but through appeals to them in their own language and understanding.

There are any number of nature stories of the heavenly Father's love and care which may be told them, and that is the principal method of teaching the tiny child about God. As a kind Father he watches over us, cares for us, and provides for our needs—not only for us, but for the animals, birds, flowers, etc.

The normal individual with good training is more valuable to the world than is the richly endowed individual with faulty training. So is it justice to the child to wait until he is four years old before he may enter Sunday school?

When Jesus gathered the children around him and said, "Suffer little children to come unto me," I believe there was room for those under four years. What, then, is more fitting than that the Sunday school should function in this department and have all the little children gather where they may learn of the loving heavenly Father?

Loyalty

BY J. E. VANDERWOOD

Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you.—Bible.

I the Lord am bound when you do what I say, but when you do not what I say ye have no promise.—Doctrine and Covenants.

To me it seems that few of us appreciate as we should the virtue there is in loyalty; we are inclined to pass over the weighty things and concern ourselves with the ordinary and commonplace things about us. What does loyalty mean to us? Can it be that we have not thought as carefully about it as we should? No doubt it is our intention to be loyal, but we err in our understanding and hence in our ability to carry into effect this principle as fully as we might.

What is loyalty, anyhow? It is the practice of being loyal. But what is loyal? Webster defines it thus: "Faithful to one's sovereign or to an established government; true to a trust; obedient; true to a lover."

In the church, then, loyalty is the exercise of the highest and noblest principles; for to be loyal is to be faithful to one's sovereign, and Christ is our Sovereign. It also demands that we shall be true to our trust, and we have been placed in trust with the gospel. We must therefore be true to the gospel.

It provides for obedience, therefore we must be obedient to the laws that govern in that institution, the church; for in the first definition it is stated that it requires one to be true to an established government, and Christ has established the government of the church.

Last of all, it provides that we must be true to a lover, and if we truly love Christ we must be true to him in every sense of the word. This principle, then, provides that we shall be true to the highest Sovereign, the highest laws, the highest ideals, and the highest virtue in the universe. Loyalty then requires the highest and the best there is in us.

Personally I cannot conceive of a man in his right mind accepting a trust and then betraying that trust. I cannot believe that any true man will make a covenant with Christ, and then be found going about and undermining by his conduct and conversation the institution that Christ established. No one who is in his right mind will accept a commission to represent Christ and his church, and then go about and destroy men’s confidence in both Christ and the church by sowing seeds of distrust and confusion. No man can receive funds for his support from any organization or institution, and then work against the interests of that organization or institution without being disloyal to the trust that is imposed in him. “Disloyalty,” says Professor James Samuel Knox, “is a form of dishonesty of the meanest sort.” To be disloyal is to be a traitor; disloyalty is a prolific means of spreading anarchy and individual and class license to trample upon the sacred principles of law and order.

A friend is always loyal; and if we desire to be the friends of God, we must learn to be loyal to his teachings; we must protect the high name and the honor that belongs to him. Christ is always loyal, both to God and man, and if we do whatsoever he has commanded us we will be assured of his constant friendship; and if we do not this we will shut ourselves out from his love and friendship.

If I am loyal to Christ I will not only hear his words, but I will also learn to do them; I will make his law a part of my life and reflect it in my attitude towards men and things about me. Loyalty is one of the highest laws of the universe, for he who practices this principle will surely grow into the likeness of the divine character.

The good old man Job was giving expression to the principle of loyalty when he said, “Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him.” Christ exhibited this principle when he said, “Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit.” Stephen expressed it when he prayed, “Let not this sin be laid to their charge.” David reveals the spirit of loyalty when Saul, the melancholy king, was pursuing him, and David said: “God forbid that I should lift my hand against the Lord’s anointed.” It is loyalty to Christ that brings out expressions like these. Loyalty produces heroes. Socrates was loyal to the highest law of the universe when he drank the poison hemlock rather than to forsake the high principles for which he had given his life. Paul was loyal to the Prince of Peace when he sat in the dark and damp prison cell in Rome and penned these words to Timothy: “For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.” It was loyalty that caused the latter-day Seer to say: “I go as a lamb to the slaughter, but I have a conscience void of offense before God and all men; I shall die innocent, and it shall yet be said of me; he was murdered in cold blood.” It is the loyal soul that shall long live in the lives of his fellow men.

Loyalty, Webster says, is obedience; or, to be obedient. Let us get a fuller understanding of the word obedient. It simply means willingness on our part to do our duty. The man who is willing to do his duty is loyal; the man who is unwilling to do his duty is disloyal. The Lord has said that all things shall be done by common consent in the church, so that when the church speaks it is in that sense the law of God, and he who faithfully carries into effect the program thus outlined is loyal, and he who will not support it is disloyal. This is true of all governments. Loyalty builds great nations, produces wealth, establishes laws, promotes thrift, insures tranquillity, and purifies the social atmosphere; while disloyalty produces anarchy, spreads confusion, destroys peace, and poisons the social atmosphere. Loyalty strengthens the individual as well as the cause he is supporting, while disloyalty is suicidal to the individual who is afflicted therewith. The loyal man is always a cheerful, happy man, while the disloyal man always has a grouch.

What, then, does loyalty mean for any people? It spells success for them; for to be loyal is not only to admire but to acquire and enhance that which is highest and best. It will cause us to develop in every sense of the word, for Christ is our great leader, and when we do what he says we are his friends, and when we are friends of the Divine One we are enjoying the best there is for us; and the only way in the world for us to make it better is to increase our capacity. This will require study and application, therefore no loyal person can either be idle or ignorant, for the high principle of loyalty will cause him to grow into the higher realms and purer laws that he is loyally adhering to and supporting.

The loyal person does not find fault; he encourages all to go forward until they have reached the goal; he insures progress while the disloyalist retards it.

It is evident, therefore, that nothing but loyalty can build Zion, for disloyalty will only produce chaos. It is only as we are true to the laws of Christ and willing to be obedient to his instructions that we may be counted worthy, or be found competent to build up Zion and to execute her holy laws. I feel sure that this loyalty exists among us.

Ministerial Conference at London, Ontario

London, Ontario, Canada, June 3.—The ministerial conference of the London District held services May 24.

This is one of the few conferences for the priesthood that has taken place in this district for a long time. Noting the need of a greater cooperation and a decided policy among our men, the president of the district, Elder George C. Tomlinson, jr., suggested the imperative need of our getting together to study the problems confronting us.

Being advised that Apostle E. J. Gleazer could be present at the date specified, we decided to use him in every way possible so as to get the best results obtainable.

Over forty holding the priesthood in the different branches of the district were present, not excluding any of the laity from the services, but soliciting opportunity to discuss all of the topics proposed.

At the nine o'clock Sunday service a very spiritual meeting was had, with many admissions of willingness to aid in the redemption of Zion.

The ten forty-five preaching service was occupied by Apostle E. J. Gleazer who clearly outlined the possibilities of the work, urging all to a better alignment with the purposes in view, and a greater consecration to the church at large.

During the one thirty problem meeting, a decided interest was taken in the financial status of the church, Brother Gleazer outlining the way in which it could be met successfully.

At three o'clock, in the main auditorium, the subject of coordination was broached with fifteen-minute speeches by Elders Gleazer, George C. Tomlinson, jr., and H. Arthur Koehler. Many inquiries were made in regard to some of its functional elements. To say the least, the branches of this district have suffered from the lack of coordination, but there seems to be a greater disposition to adhere to its principles.

Several reporters for the daily papers were kind enough to call us up and inquire more particularly about our conference, suggesting that we give them better information prior to the conference taking place, and that they would be pleased to write up a clear historical narrative of its proceedings.

Elder D. A. Withrow, chorister of the district, had charge of the music, while H. Arthur Koehler, presided at the organ.

We are looking forward to another booster meeting ere this year will have passed.

H. ARTHUR KOEHLER.

Three Baptized; More Will Follow

CHEROYGAN, MICHIGAN, June 9.—The work here is progressing. Elder W. H. Sheffer baptized three Sunday morning, with more to follow soon. When Brother Sheffer came here in January, 1923, there were only two families of Saints, those of Irving Sheffer and George S. Wilson. Elder Sheffer never tires of giving counsel and administering to the Saints, and through his efforts, and by several families moving here, we now have a branch of over forty members, while almost fifty are enrolled in the Sunday school. We also have a Religion and the Department of Women. Unity prevails.

Sister Sayers, who has been very ill, has been out to services several times lately. Sister Nina Lyntz is also better after her severe illness.

Elders W. H. and Irving Sheffer, their wives, Sisters Pearl and Minnie Sheffer, Nina Lyntz, and Mr. William Armstrong, visited at the home of Elder Roy Kleckler at Alanson and enjoyed an evening of fishing recently.

Sister Lyntz has returned from Detroit where she spent the winter with relatives.

Elders W. H. and Irving Sheffer were called to Mackinaw City to administer to Oscar Dancer who was very sick. At this time he is much improved.

Mr. William Armstrong of Detroit spent a week in the home of Brother W. H. Sheffer, returning to Detroit last Sunday.

Elder E. N. Burt called on some of the Saints here on his way to Gladstone. Also Brother and Sister William Martin of Levering have been with us several times lately, Brother Martin assisting at several services.

Elder W. H. Sheffer has been going to Monroe on Sunday afternoons where he has been wonderfully blessed in telling the gospel story.

Two of our young sisters will receive diplomas June 17, Sister Irene Wilson from the county normal, and Sister Etta Wilson from the high school.

Special DaysObserved at San Jose

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA, June 8.—On April 12 the San Jose Branch had Easter programs in all of its departments. First, the Sunday school had a nice program, appropriate for the occasion, which was enjoyed by all present. Second in order was a cantata entitled "Thorn-crowned King" by the branch choir under the direction of Sister Ruth Bradley, which was well rendered. We never felt a greater degree of the Holy Spirit's presence in a cantata. Inspiration was felt from start to finish, making us feel as though the angels must be very near. At the close of the cantata the branch president made some very appropriate remarks.

Easter was still the theme of the literary program at the Religio in the evening. The day was joyously spent and will be long remembered by the Saints.

May 10, Mothers' Day, was honored by the Saints of the branch. Elder C. J. Cady preached the Mothers' Day sermon, which was well received by the congregation. The Sunday school also gave a program in honor of the day.

May 24 was Rally Day, beginning with a prayer meeting at nine o'clock. At a quarter of ten Sunday school was held, following by preaching at eleven o'clock, Elder G. H. Wixom being the speaker. Free lunch was served in the basement of the church, and about seventy-five or eighty people availed themselves of the opportunity of satiating their appetites. Still there was food to spare.

At two thirty Elder W. H. Dawson, one of the vice presidents of the district, was the preacher. The sermons both morning and afternoon were very forceful, and were well received by those who heard. A very enjoyable time was had.

On May 30 and 31 the San Jose Saints dispensed with the usual services in church here, giving the Saints an opportunity to attend a two-day meeting being held at Irvington, in which all the Saints of the district were invited to participate. This was a very profitable meeting. The prayer meeting and preaching service Sunday morning was a spiritual feast, and will not soon be forgotten.

Brentwood Branch

WEBSTER GROVES, MISSOURI.—Brother J. W. A. Bailey, in continuing his lectures to and including May 28, delivered again unto the Saints the very pulsations of the cause of Christ, with the purpose of awakening once more the depth of thought that puts one in tune with the pure gospel of Christ, and paves the way for the active revelation of the church through the activities of her membership.

Without a doubt, this purpose of Brother Bailey has not been in vain, for while all the personality has not been as yet removed from the work here, there is a marked advancement shown on the part of the active membership of the branch.

All services, with the exception of the Sunday school, were dispensed with on the 31st, in respect to the district conference at Saint Louis where a number of the local membership availed themselves of the opportunities of listening to the wonderful counsels of Apostle F. Henry Edwards and Missionary J. W. A. Bailey, who delivered lectures in the morning and evening hours. Also, at the various departmental activities there was some good counsel dispensed by those in charge, both the district officers and the visiting ministry.

Saint Louis's new pastor, Elder J. W. Rushton, was invited to take active assistance in presiding over the conference, which seemed to add to the spirit of sociability prevailing there, to say nothing of the spiritual uplift which those in attendance must acknowledge.

Our communion service on June 7 was another one of those quiet, helpful ones, where one could relax from the cares of the world and the strenuous duties of branch activities, and under the influence of the blessed Spirit truly enjoy a foretaste of the joys to come. There were an extraordinary number of prayers during that portion of the service, and for the most part bespoke sincere desires for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, that we might as a unit press on with the church for the establishment of Zion, One of the priesthood, speaking under direction of the Spirit of God, stated that the Lord was well pleased with the humility of the prayers, and that if their lives were in accord with their petitions, the petitions would not be made in vain.

The evening hour of the 7th was occupied by Priest Roy Remington, using as the basis of his remarks the first three paragraphs of Doctrine and Covenants 102, Fishing River revelation.

Elder C. J. Peat, one of the old warriors, was the speaker the morning of the 14th, giving us one of those thrilling talks that remind one of the sermons we heard long ago, when the men not known for their flowery language, but rather for their zeal, stood up and fearlessly declared the gospel as they understood it. Brother Peat has been in the work for over fifty years and can give some interesting talks.

Our new district president, Elder R. Archibald of Saint Louis, was the speaker at the evening hour and gave one of his brilliant lessons on the gospel plan and the necessity of living this life each day in the week.

The branch business meeting of the 16th was filled with a lively spirit of action. Elder C. J. Remington was reelected branch president. In fact, the personnel of the branch officers was practically unchanged save for the office of teacher, which was delegated to Brother Ira S. Day, he succeeding James M. Scott.

The following resolution was presented, and after much discussion was adopted:

"Whereas, we, the Brentwood Branch, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints have declared ourselves in harmony with the policy on church government adopted by the recent General Conference of said church; and

"Whereas, we have accepted our lot in the program for the active construction of Zion and her environs, in accord with the program for the church, also adopted at the last General Conference; and,

"Whereas, we believe that paragraph 10 of section 98 of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants is the revealed will of God, through inspiration, and applies to the church material to-day; now,

"Therefore be it resolved, that we, the Brentwood Branch, of the said Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, proceed in harmony with this aforementioned paragraph and select a committee who shall visit the home of each member of the branch and ascertain the needs of this branch as to territory in the group purchase in Zion, and they to report to the executive committee of the branch, who, when they have received this report, shall call a special business meeting of the branch for the formulation of a plan for the purchase of an inheritance in the land of Zion, for this group."

The priesthood was ordered to make the appointment of the committee at their meeting later this week.

A desk lamp was ordered provided at once and also a number of electric fans for the purpose of adding to the comfort of our gathering place for meetings.

Brother and Sister Noah N. Cooke are in a very pitiable condition, as the result of old age and bodily affliction, which have been spending themselves on these two souls for a number of years now.

It is apparent that the end is near, and we join them in asking the readers of this article to join us in their prayers, that the Lord will be merciful to them and take them home from the misery of this worn-out bodily condition.

Also Sister Maude Dickens, one of our comparatively young sisters and the mother of quite a family, is almost blind, and all efforts of medical science to relieve the condition seem failing. Pray for her, too.

Saints and Other Churches Combine in Service

MAPLETON, KANSAS, June 14.—Our services have continued to be well attended, with the exception of Sunday, June 7, when some attended the Clinton district conference at Nevada, Missouri, where a very enjoyable time was had until the return home through a hard rain, although one would think even that was enjoyed by the driver, judging from his pleasant smile and conversation.

Visitors who have been with us of late are Bishop C. J. Hunt and District President T. W. Walters.

The sermons and talks given by Brother Hunt were much enjoyed by the Saints, and we feel that there is a better understanding of the temporal law of the church, and a greater desire on the part of some to keep the law.

The Saints voted to have memorial services May 30, and invite the other churches of the town to unite with us. The invitation was gladly received by all. The result was they placed seats in the park, and Honorable John L. Comolly, of Fort Scott, Kansas, delivered the address.

Teachers and children are busy preparing the program for Children's Day, to be observed June 21.

Elder Lee Quick was to have met with the Saints at Nokata, Oklahoma, Sunday, June 14, but we were made sad to learn of his being taken suddenly ill June 11. The doctor says it is appendicitis, and he may have to undergo an operation. We are praying and trusting in a higher power to overrule, that his health may speedily return to him.
Shidler, Oklahoma

The Saints of Foraker Branch were much surprised as well as pleased to have with them a few weeks since Brother Dillon, district president, and Apostle R. S. Budd. They remained only one night, Brother Budd doing the preaching. Although far apart, the local brethren went from home to home until almost the entire branch had been apprised of their coming, and almost the entire membership was present.

Brother A. Christensen and family were with us May 24, preaching Sunday morning and evening. They remained a day or two longer visiting the Saints prior to their going to Enid to make their home. Brother Christensen brought the gospel message to the Foraker people, and they hold him in high esteem.

Sunday, May 31, Brother Earl D. Bailey was in town, preaching Saturday night and Sunday morning and evening.

Sunday afternoon Brother Edward Workman baptized two of Brother and Sister Woolson’s children, Brother Bailey confirming.

Sister Lucile Sheffer, from the Jenks group, and sons, were also with us at that time.

Brother Arthur Slover is now holding forth the second and fourth Sundays at a schoolhouse north of Lymna. We understand there is good interest. An elderly Brother and Sister Gooden and their son and family from Apperson have been attending services quite regularly at Foraker Branch lately. The Saints are glad to welcome them.

A peaceful sacramental service was held the first Sunday in June, with Brother George Swain in charge. Brother Workman administered the sacrament. Although no great manifestation of the Spirit was given, many could testify to having felt the sweet and comforting spirit of unity and peace as soon as they entered the room.

Sister Storms, an aged lady from near Webb City, Missouri, is visiting the family of her son, George Storms, at present.

As our district reunion is to be held at Skiatook this year, we hear the Saints already making their plans to attend as they enjoyed the Washunga reunion so much last year.

Brother George Storms and sons Paul and Wayne were in the vicinity of Webb City, Missouri, about the first of June, visiting Saints and relatives.

Eastern Iowa Enjoys Conference

MUSCATINE, IOWA, June 10.—The district conference held at Muscatine June 6 and 7 enjoyed a fine spirit of unity in all the meetings. All who attended enjoyed the time there. Some of the Saints from Oelwein drove in automobiles about one hundred and thirty miles.

Brothers George McFarland and H. R. Echright were ordained elders during the conference. We look for these brothers to become very useful in their calling, as each is devoted to the work of the church.

There is quite a large number of young men in this district who promise to become useful in the work. There is a wide field for gospel work in this district, and we are anxious to see the Lord raise up those who may in due time become efficient workers.

During the conference the importance of missionary work by the local brethren was emphasized by Brother E. A. Davis, district president. Surely all can see the importance of such efforts. “Let him that is warned warn his neighbor,” is the divine invitation.

We are looking forward to the reunion at Maquoketa August 7 to 17 as a time of inspiration and encouragement to the Saints. It is quite centrally located, and we hope for good attendance.

The work seems to be on the upward trend in most places, with many good people anxious to see the work hasten. A number are seriously investigating in different places, and it is likely that some will be baptized before many months. Some good meetings have been held in different places the past few months.

LEONARD HUGHTON.

E. A. Erwin Writes of California

LOS ANGELES, June 9.—After attending the most momentous conference I ever had the pleasure of attending, I reached this land of flowers the first day of May. Los Angeles is a great city, with about one and a quarter million people, situated near the great waters of the Pacific Ocean, surrounded by beautiful orange and lemon groves and with every kind of fruit known to man. The whole land looks like a beautiful bouquet of flowers. It is in one of the finest climates ever enjoyed by man.

Best of all, we have here a magnificent church, with about five hundred members. Brother Walter W. Smith is caring for the work well.

Last Sunday we enjoyed a fine prayer meeting. We had Apostle J. A. Gillen with us, who made a talk at the opening of the prayer meeting that filled our souls with peace and joy.

The second Sunday in May, I visited a fine little branch six miles out from the city. Brother Virgil Lum has charge of the work out there. Indeed he is doing a fine work. I preached the gospel to Brother Lum twenty-five years ago in northeastern Texas. At that time he was very much opposed to the work, but he was too honest to stay out of the beautiful gospel after hearing it. He is now doing his part to build up the work in this country.

I feel as though the prospects are very bright for a great year’s work.

To my friends I will say that by the blessing of the Lord I am improving in health and will soon be out telling the beautiful angel’s message again.

Your devoted brother in the redemption of Zion,

E. A. ERWIN.

Runnells, Iowa

We had the pleasure of listening to Elder H. A. Higgins the night of June 7, also of meeting Sister Higgins, who accompanied him. Miss Alice Boyer, secretary of the Anti-Saloon League, spoke at the church to our group, and the members of the Church of Christ on the morning of the 14th. She presented many interesting facts that told of what is being accomplished towards suppressing the liquor traffic.

At noon the two churches enjoyed a basket dinner, and Reverend Cole from Des Moines preached at three o’clock to a well-filled house. He is conducting a revival service here and is preaching some very interesting sermons in their church.

Representatives of the Boone Biblical College are also conducting meetings here in a tent. Perhaps the way is being paved for the reunion which will convene here on August 14. Then the restored gospel will ring through the hills and valleys and find lodgment in the hearts of honest souls who are seeking the truth.

Thursday the district tent was taken to Knoxville where Brother Tordoff will conduct a series of meetings, assisted by the Saints of that place and Pershing.

Brother Tordoff has held a very successful series of meetings at Pershing since coming into our district.
Both Brethren Higgins and Tordoff are on the job and have shown their unwillingness to be idle in the Master's service, in their particular fields of labor.

A much-needed rain has quenched the thirst of the land and benefited the growing crops. Drouth has continued here for several months, only recently having been broken. Hay and small grain have been injured greatly, and pastures were as brown as they usually are in late summer.

Conference at Mount Vernon

Mount Vernon, Illinois, June 15.—Our district conference convened last Friday, Saturday, and Sunday. A very splendid response from most of the district gave evidence of a desire on the part of the membership to move onward in the work of the district.

An entertainment on Friday night drew a very large audience.

Business session was on Saturday, and much interest was manifested. Brother J. W. Paxton, district missionary, occupied the pulpit Saturday night, also Sunday at eleven, half past two, and at eight. Very large and interested audiences greeted the speaker at every service.

Brother Paxton emphasized at the Sunday service the necessity of a unified effort on the part of the membership of the district, in pushing the program outlined by the council for the onward progress of the work throughout the year.

He enjoyed splendid liberty in his sermons. The Saints were highly pleased over the effort, as was indicated by a splendid collection which was taken up after the eleven o'clock service for the speaker.

At the present time Brother Paxton is holding open-air meetings on the school ground on Perkins Avenue. About three hundred and fifty people are in attendance every night. We contemplate continuing these services till the time for the laying of the cornerstone of our new church building, which will take place June 28, here in Mount Vernon, Illinois. We contemplate speeches from the mayor of the city, John W. Rushton of Saint Louis, and J. W. Paxton on this occasion. A basket dinner will be served.

R. H. Hinson, District President.

Anaconda, Montana

June 9.—The second Sunday of each month being the regular day for sacrament, we can truly say that on May 10 we enjoyed a really spiritual, refreshing time. The Spirit was present in abundance, and many strong testimonies were given. As it was also Mother's Day, mother's love was not forgotten in the testimonies, and we were made to feel the comfort that Jesus promised in sending the Comforter. We felt to rejoice in the kingdom of God.

We had the pleasure of having with us District President E. E. Ellisson, and Elder George W. Thorburn who had just returned from General Conference. He could not remain long enough to tell us all he could about conference, so promised to come again soon.

Elder W. F. Bootman paid us a visit on the way to his new field, his home being only eighteen miles from Anaconda. He came up May 24 in company with Sister Bootman and Brother Eysti Smelser, Bishop's agent, and his wife. Brother Bootman gave a fine sermon on repentance. We felt the theme was appropriate as there is always room for repentance.

On May 25 Brother and Sister Erickson celebrated their silver wedding. A number of the Saints met with them, and an enjoyable evening was spent in playing games and singing songs. Brother Bootman was able to be there and gave a comforting and appropriate talk. It was midnight before the guests returned to their homes, so Brother Bootman was invited to remain over night. The next day he visited the Saints and told them there would be a meeting that night, at which time he preached an encouraging and strengthening sermon on "Why I am a Latter-day Saint." It was full of strong testimony of the rich experiences he has had during his twenty-seven years as a soldier of the cross.

We believe the thousands of earnest prayers offered from honest-hearted Saints for the church and the building of Zion were answered in what was done at General Conference and what will follow. Brethren Thordburn and Bootman, just returning from conference, seem to be filled with a revived zeal for the harvest of souls, and we feel to say with the poet, "Let Zion in her beauty arise, her lights begin to shine." Our prayers are that her lights may soon shine forth in such power and influence that the world must see her rays.

Radio Flashes

Lamoni, Iowa.—K L D S came in fine this morning, clear and strong, on two tubes. Also very fine and clear with but one tube.—C. G. Lewis.

Conway Springs, Kansas.—Your early morning test program received at first rather fuzzy, but with good strength. About the last you were coming in clear and loud. I would suggest that this early morning program be your regular feature, but please do not put it out on K P R U's time. Have tuned you in scores of times before.—T. B. Shinn.

Des Moines, Iowa.—Your concert this morning was coming in fine at seven o'clock on a four-tube Zenith, loud and clear. Do not usually tune in at that time of day, but will listen for you hereafter.—G. A. Young, 729 Thirty-seventh Street.

Macomb, Illinois.—Reception good on test program this morning.—J. A. Purdum, 302 East Franklin Street.

Only wish we might have more of these early programs. Success to A. B. C. announcer, and our K L D S station.—Mr. and Mrs. George Meggers.

Uniontown, Kansas.—We very much enjoy your programs, and especially the test this morning. It came in fine, and we sent it out on the telephone to our friends who have no receiving sets. Your tenor and organ numbers were fine. It would be splendid if people could hear sacred music at six o'clock in the morning; seems to me it would be an inspiration. I have been confined to my bed for several weeks with nephritis, which perhaps makes me appreciate more than.
ever good music given to us through such stations as yours.
—L. E. Holt.

Austin, Minnesota.—Test program came in good. Organ selections by Robert Miller and singing by George Anway fine. Time to go to work.—L. B. Hanna.

Taloga, Oklahoma.—You came in simply fine here on your

Tulare, California

June 11.—The Temple Builders met at the home of Brother and Sister H. C. Powell on the evening of May 21 for a painting lesson, and at a later hour many of the Saints came to give a surprise party and miscellaneous shower in honor of Neva Walker who was recently married to Edgar Douglas.
Many beautiful and useful gifts were presented the young couple. Outdoor games were indulged in by the young people.
Refreshments of ice cream and cake were served. The girls are making lampshades now and will soon begin making things for their bazaar to be held at the reunion at Irvington.
Many of the Saints went to Irvington to attend the rally held May 30 and 31.

The Department of Women held a food sale, Saturday, June 6. They had a fine display of cakes, pies, candy, dough nuts, dressed chicken, Spanish beans, and salad. The day proved very successful. At the close of the day everything had been sold, and a sum of $30.07 was netted.

Anticipate a New Church

CENTRAL PARK, BRITISH COLUMBIA, June 2.—New West minster Branch is busy, especially since the Saints have begun raising funds to build a new church. The broth ers gave a program last month for this purpose, and those who attended had a very enjoyable evening. Some of the younger men dressed as women and gave their idea of a wom en’s sewing circle. Professor Cowan, a nonmember and a musical instructor of the town, came with his string orchestra and gave several numbers.

Sunday is a busy day. Sunday school meets at one o’clock and is well attended. The little ones are now preparing for Children’s Day, when those who are old enough are baptized.
The children also give a nice program in the evening. After Sunday school prayer service is held, then the meeting of the Department of Recreation and Expression is held at a quar ter after six. Here the study of the Book of Mormon is taken up, and a short program follows. At half past seven preach ing service is held. The midweek prayer service is on Thurs day night.

While there are only a few in the Department of Women, the sisters have been busy. They served a Valentine supper, had a May-day booth, and a spring bazaar, all to raise funds for the work. The brothers have the church lot cleared and as soon as there are sufficient funds on hand hope to start the building. We look for better attendance after we get the new church finished.

The Saints are looking forward to meeting Missionary Martin soon. It is the hope of the Saints here that the church will prosper wherever it is established. If we love God, all will work to this end.

Rhodes, Iowa

June 9.—Mrs. Bessie Laughlin and daughter Aleta, and son Harold, spent the week-end, May 29 to 31, in Rhodes with friends and relatives. They were en route to their new home in Colfax, where Aleta will teach next year. They worshiped with the Saints in the old home branch Sunday.

Also young Brother John White attended the Sunday morn ing service. He is attending Iowa University and was called home to deliver the Memorial addresses at Melbourne and Rhodes. Both addresses were largely attended and much ap preciated.

A heavy rain prevented the services which were to be held at the cemetery. The Saints were well represented in the program of the day, there being four in the band, two in the double quartet, one on the flower committee, besides the chair man and the speaker. We were glad to see this, because it speaks well for the influence and ability of the Saints.

A good spirit prevailed at the sacramental service June 7, and the Saints were edified and blessed. In the evening C. M.
Richeson gave a good talk on the signs of the times and the great need for preparation, taking for the foundation of his remarks Matthew 24.

The local men here are doing well. Brother Charles Leh man of Nevada spoke once for us during the past month.

The Sunday school is preparing a Children’s Day program to be given sometime in June.

Our young brother, Raymond Freeland, is in Des Moines attending a barber school. We hope some of the Des Moines Saints will get in touch with him and make him welcome at their services.

Mrs. Fern Richeson Roush and her two children are spend ing a few days at the convention in Lamoni.

Twin Cities Branch

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA, June 17.—Preparations are be ing completed for the regular Minnesota district reunion, to be held this year in Minneapolis, from July 3 to 12. Several prominent church workers and able speakers are expected, including Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Patriarch F. A. Smith, Bishop A. B. Phillips, and Sister Field representing the De partment of Women. The meetings are to be held in the new church building, and meals are to be served in the basement, as was done last year with so much satisfaction to all. Ef forts are being made to have the different families donate foodstuffs of various kinds, canned goods, etc., so as to cut down the cost of the meals as much as possible.

A big picnic is planned for Saturday, July 4, so that the reunion should start off with a jump. There are ample op portunities for recreation, as Glenwood Park is near at hand, and swimming is a favorite pastime in hot weather in Lake Glenwood. Provision will be made for events of special in terest to the young people as well as the old, and all have high hopes of a very successful gathering. Visitors will be accommodated in the homes of neighboring Saints free of charge. All the Minnesota Saints are cordially invited, as well as those outside the State who may be passing through the city.

The new church is now finished; the lawns are ready; a yard in the rear of the church is to be used for recreational purposes,
The different departments are going well. On Children’s Day the Sunday school put on a special program which was much enjoyed. The Department of Recreation and Expression, meeting on Sunday evenings at half past six, is being well supported in spite of the warm weather, which usually causes a considerable falling off in attendance on Sunday evenings. The Department of Women is meeting every two weeks at the church and is now getting ready for the reunion, especially the work connected with serving meals.

The Temple Builders are giving an ice cream social at the church Thursday, June 18, the proceeds for the building fund.

Several young people from Minneapolis were in attendance at the Young People’s Convention at Lamoni, including Leslie DeLapp, Carl Smith, Wesley Elvin, and Leon Judson. They all enjoyed the gathering immensely, and the rest of the Minneapolis young people regret very much that the city schools and colleges were not out in time for them to attend.

The sacramental service on June 7 was remarkable for the degree of participation, and the way the meeting moved along without the slightest lagging or interruption in the spirit of prayer and testimony.

On May 24, Brother Leslie DeLapp spoke on the subject, “Our heritage as Latter Day Saints.” This was his first attempt to preach, and his discourse was appreciated and enjoyed by all. On the following Sunday, another young brother, Carroll Olson, continued the theme of Brother DeLapp, speaking about “Our opportunities and the work before us.” On June 14, Elder E. H. Bennett gave an interesting sermon appropriate to Children’s Day.

Wichita, Kansas

June 17.—The work in Wichita is still moving forward despite the fact that several are away for the summer.

Pastor T. S. Williams is assisting in the work at the Young People’s Convention in Lamoni, and Sister Williams is visiting relatives in Iowa. Brother and Sister Buschow and family are vacationing in California for the summer. All of these are missed very much, and we will welcome their return home.

Sister Stella Brockway has just recently returned home from Lamoni where she has been attending Graceland College the past term. We have missed her very much while she was away and consequently welcome her home again for the summer.

Quite a large number attended the sacramental service on June 7.

June 14 the eleven o’clock hour was given over for a Children’s Day program, which seemed to be enjoyed by all. At the close of the program two girls of the junior department were baptized, E. L. Bedwell officiating. Other children had planned to be baptized at that time, but were prevented on account of sickness and other causes. We are glad to see the children interested and hope the work will continue to grow in this place.

New Zealand Reunion

The readers of the Herald know that for some time the church has been doing missionary work in New Zealand; yet up to date there has been no district organization effected in that country, and there has not, as a rule, been one branch, and at most but three groups. Notwithstanding this lack of organic development, it was quite feasible to have a reunion, hence Apostle M. A. McConley made a move in that direction, and the Easter season of 1925 was fixed upon as the time.

The writer was informed by the apostle of his wish that I be present.

Since my home is in Sydney, Australia, and most of my work is done in that country, it was necessary that I make a trip of twelve hundred miles by sea, involving four days, in order to reach the scene of the projected reunion, which was to be held at Auckland, in the North Island of the Dominion of New Zealand. I left Sydney per S. S. Maheno, Saturday, April 4, and arrived in Auckland April 8. The first day out was a bit rough, yet, in the main, the voyage was comparatively smooth.

We have a church and mission house combined which is located in an Auckland suburb, the exact spot being 42 Leslie Avenue, Morningside. Here the reunion convened, being the first for New Zealand, at 2 p. m., Friday, April 10. The first meeting was for prayer. Organization was effected at 3:15 by the selection of Elders Jones, Barmore, Piesker, and Loving for the presidency; Elder Alfred Lobherz acting as secretary; Elders Piesker, Murdoch, and Lobherz as administration committee; and Elders Jones and Barmore as press committee.

At night the writer gave an illustrated lecture on the life of Christ, which dealt largely with that part relating to the day, Good Friday.

Saturday, the 11th, the following services were held: 2 p. m., business meeting, the presidency in charge; 3:15 p. m., departmental program. At 7 p. m. a most excellent sermon was delivered by Elder Piesker, Elder Lobherz in charge.

The services of Sunday were as follows: 12:30 p. m., sacramental service, the presidency in charge. At this service the following were ordained to the offices indicated: Cyrus Loving, elder; Harry Johnson, priest; Ernest Potter, teacher; and William Doran, deacon. This meeting was intensely spiritual, there being particularly a large measure of the Spirit present in the ordination. At 4 p. m. the usual open-air service was held in Quay Street, Elders Loving, Piesker, and Lobherz being the preachers. The crowd was large, and there was some heckling, though not as much as formerly. On the previous Sunday the police had removed one disturber, hence the crowd was on its good behavior. At 7 p. m. Elder Barmore spoke; Elder Jones was in charge.

The following items of business were transacted: A motion was passed recommending to the mission president and mission historian the appointment of a church historian for New Zealand. It was decided to meet again in reunion in Auckland, Easter, 1926, subject to the approval of the mission in charge. The following resolutions were also passed: (1) We favor the National Prohibition Movement, and pledge our votes for candidates for Parliament who will support it. (2) We extend our sympathy to the children and people who have suffered from the epidemic of infantile paralysis. (3) We believe the Christian doctrines of personal regeneration and social equality furnish the remedy for the present civil, industrial, and religious unrest.

A fair number of Saints were present from various parts of the country, and the usual number of nonmembers were also in attendance. Last, but not least, the Auckland press treated us fairly.

New Zealand had just had an epidemic of infantile paralysis which had caused a ban to be placed upon both the public and Sunday schools. This ban, which had lasted six months, was lifted the week following the reunion, hence the former reopened Wednesday, the 15th, and our Sunday school resumed in full force Sunday, the 19th. This epidemic was a handicap to our reunion, for children under sixteen were not allowed to attend public meetings.

A. C. BARMORE, for Press Committee.

Independence
Stone Church

Saturday evening the Department of Women furnished a picnic supper on the Campus lawn to the Temple Builders and Oriole Girls of Zion. President and Mrs. F. M. Smith were guests. A nice program was given just before the moving pictures started. Mrs. F. M. Smith delivered a splendid greeting to the girls, and President F. M. Smith, the last on the program, gave a "Message to our young girls." He complimented them on being so well organized and working together in unity of purpose for the betterment of Zion. Two of the circles were in neat uniform. They made a nice appearance and were awarded pennants.

The moving pictures on the Campus Saturday nights draw a crowd of around fifty-five hundred, and it is estimated there are five hundred automobiles parked on the grounds and in the surrounding streets. The pictures shown are as good as opportunity to select can make them. The committee spares nothing to procure the best suitable pictures.

Margaret Vera Miller, daughter of Elder and Mrs. C. Ed. Miller, was married in the Liberty Street Church Thursday evening by Bishop J. A. Becker, to Mr. Frederick Edward Wendelburg of Saint Louis.

A meeting has been called for Tuesday evening in the dining hall, the object being the organization of a band for Campus work, etc.

The funeral service of Elder L. E. Hills, who was killed by an automobile near his home, was held at the Stone Church Sunday afternoon. The sermon was delivered by Elder E. E. Long. There was a large attendance of friends to pay their respects to the memory of our departed brother.

The harvest festival committee, composed of some of the brethren with a vision, are trying to arouse interest among our people to help beautify the city, grow more food, and preserve and can products to help the bishops provide for the needy.

The Campus services for the summer will commence next Sunday evening, June 28, at 7.30. President F. M. Smith will be the speaker. Loud speakers will carry the message so everyone can hear.

At the eleven o'clock hour Doctor G. Leonard Harrington had fine liberty in his discourse on "Health, physical and spiritual," in which "Lose thy worrying self!" seemed to name itself as the text. He who is constantly aware of himself cannot be at ease, and the organs of his body cannot function properly. The genius of simplicity must be released. Fear is a great obstruction to genius. Jesus was not talking to the ancient saints alone when he said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of heaven." The only way to get happiness is to melt our hearts into a whole with a cause, a purpose, a goal that binds us forever. We must give our life to gain it.

No Religious service was held Sunday evening, and the time for meeting has been transferred to Friday evening for the summer months.

Elder Charles Edward Guinand lost his health during the winter in an attack of influenza, and from mourning over the death of a beloved daughter. Since General Conference he had been confined to his home, gradually losing strength and vitality. He passed away June 15, at the age of sixty-six years, leaving wife, son, and daughter of his immediate family. Brother Guinand's work as an elder of the church has been widely known and admired by many. He was an effective street preacher and worker, having done much in Kansas City. We are giving "Herald" readers a poem composed a short time before her death by Brother Guinand's daughter, Mabel Irene Guinand Joe. It will be found on another page.

Funeral services were held in the Stone Church June 17, at three o'clock, Elder George Harrington preaching, assisted by Elder W. D. Bullard, and his body was laid to rest in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Brother and Sister M. A. Etzenhouser leave this week on reunion work. They will both conduct class work at each of the following reunions on their schedule: North Dakota, Eastern Montana, Portland, Spokane, Seattle and British Columbia, Idaho, and Western Montana. They expect to return to their office about September 1.

Beginning next Sunday morning at 9.30, Doctor John R. Green will give a short series of lectures to Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser's class of young parents, during her absence this summer. Mrs. Etzenhouser, during the winter months, has emphasized to the class the importance of right thinking in relation to mental and physical health, and Doctor Green will present the physiological view, emphasizing the effects of physical ills on mental and physical health. The class meets in the library building on the corner of River Boulevard and Lexington Street. An electric fan has been installed, and the class president says the room is now one of the coolest in the Sunday school. He reports there is still room for others who wish to attend the class, and all are welcome, particularly parents and young married people. Mrs. Etzenhouser will be away on reunion work until the fore part of September.

Apostle J. F. Garver spent the week-end in Independence on his way to Lamoni from Sedalia, where he had been attending the Holden stake conference.

President F. M. McDowell came Monday from Lamoni for a few days.

Second Church

Sunday morning the young people met at 7.45 and journeyed from the church to the home of Elder P. A. Sherman and family, southeast of Independence. There they spent an hour in prayer and testimony in the open air of a pleasant grove of forest trees, returning to the church for Sunday school at 9.30, refreshed and strengthened.

Elder Samuel A. Burgess preached a unique sermon at eleven o'clock, giving as his text the combined scriptures, "The race is not to the swift, and the battle to the strong, but he that endureth to the end shall receive a crown of eternal life." The theme could not have been more consistently arranged if the speakers had together planned their work, as was remarked by some after they heard Elder Frank B. Almond's evening sermon from the text, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." Notwithstanding the heat, a good congregation of attentive Saints greeted each speaker.

A baptismal service took place preceding the afternoon meeting, five children being baptized by Elder H. E. Winegar, and they were confirmed at the prayer meeting.

Next Sunday will be Children's Day at Second Church, and baptismal service will be held in the church at half past one in the afternoon. Several are to be conducted into the church at that time.

Liberty Street

Brother Frank B. Almond was the speaker Sunday morning on "Can we still believe?" in the evening Pastor C. Ed. Miller spoke on "The restoration of the things of Eden." Saturday evening, at eight o'clock, Sister Mamie Rothwell and William Fann were married at the home of the bride's parents, Elder Bert Barrett officiating.

Sunday morning the junior department of the Stone Church Sunday school, which meets at the Campus, invited the other junior departments of the churches in Zion to attend a special program which they had prepared. Most of the Liberty

Street juniors and part of the intermediates took advantage of the invitation and attended the program at the Campus, which was very good.

Sister Mabel Sollars, who has had charge of the junior choir, is ill in the Sanitarium, so the work of the junior choir has been discontinued until her recovery. The orchestra has been reorganized under the direction of Brother Philip Turner.

The Liberty Street Saints wish to express their sympathy to the family of Brother L. E. Hills in their bereavement.

Walnut Park

The services Sunday were not so well attended as usual, due partially to a goodly number of the Saints' having gone to help in a missionary effort at Milton Farm. Those who remained enjoyed two speakers from the Stone Church congregation, Elder D. O. Cato in the morning on the subject, "The Christian's hope," and Bishop J. A. Becker in the evening on stewardships.

In the afternoon at one o'clock the funeral of Sister Rua Hedrick, aged seventy-six, mother of Brother Will Christie, was held at the church, B. J. Scott preaching the sermon. Sister Hedrick has been an invalid for seven years, paralysis making her entirely helpless the past six weeks. A neighbor, Sister S. W. Farrow, has been a true friend and faithful nurse during all of her long illness.

Mrs. Sarah Bryant, grandmother of Brother A. B. Handy, in whose home she has lived for a number of years, died at the Sanitarium at the age of ninety-six and was buried Friday from the Walnut Park Church, J. A. Dowker preaching the sermon.

Through the kindness of some nonmembers, Walnut Park has been granted, at least temporarily, a fine location for a community playground, just northeast of the intersection of Main Street and Alton. It is greatly desired to preserve this as one of the public beauty spots of Zion. These shady, grassy lots have been cleared up in ideal shape and playground equipment is being furnished. The opening on the evening of June 22 was hindered by showers but over $20 was taken in.

Enoch Hill

Sunday we enjoyed our Children's Day exercises. The morning program given by the beginner and primary departments demonstrated that patience had been the dominant factor in the training of those bright young minds.

At seven o'clock the junior and intermediate departments had their turn, and, thanks to the cooperation of committee, teachers, and scholars, one of the best programs of recent years was produced.

At the eleven o'clock hour Elder J. W. Davis and wife occupied, delighting the large audience with their experiences in Hawaii and Australia. They had many souvenirs from these countries, also from Samoa, which were on display after the service.

We are soon to have a "trip around the world" on "the Hill"—the proceeds to go to our local church building debt. We are again in full swing, with the hope that our local encumbrance will be liquidated by October 1.

The Religio here is making steady progress under the competent leadership of Brother Harold Hattey who has returned with his family to reside on Enoch Hill.

Efforts are being made here to encourage the young of our local district in athletics. The Religio officers, supported by Brother Charles Warren, are busy organizing volley ball teams. Baseball and basket ball are also provided. Teams representing Religio, Sunday school, and choir are being organized, and all are looking forward to the success of the venture.

Englewood

The Children's Day program was given June 14 at eleven o'clock, which consisted of a cantata by the children. Both the children and those in charge of the program deserve high commendation for putting on such a splendid program under the handicap of small quarters. These Saints constantly feel the need of better housing conditions.

The Department of Women hope to make a material addition to the building fund Saturday night at their country store which will be held at 1401 Hardy, beginning at six o'clock. A program will be given at eight o'clock. All are cordially invited to come and help make the evening a success. The study classes in the Department of Women have been discontinued for the summer.

The speakers Sunday were C. J. Hunt in the morning and J. R. McClain in the evening.

A splendid program was given at Religio a week from Friday night by visitors from Liberty Street Church. Attendance at Religio is not large.

East Independence

The hearts of the Saints were made sad on last Thursday, June 18, by the sudden death of Brother Joseph Stowell. He was drowned while out swimming in the Little Blue River, about a mile from his home. A constant search was made for the body, but it was not found until early Sunday morning. The body was taken to Carson's Undertaking Parlors and was buried in Mount Grove Cemetery in the afternoon. In the evening at eight o'clock, at the East Independence church, memorial services were held in charge of Brother M. F. Gowell, with the sermon by Brother J. J. Teeter. A quartet sang, "Shall we gather home to Zion," "The Lord knows why," and "Asleep in Jesus." The church was again beautifully decorated with flowers, but under greatly different conditions than on the Sunday before.

Joe, as he was always called, was nearly eighteen and was loved and respected by all. He had a winning way with the children and was faithful in attendance at all church services, ready to do what he could. He will be missed in the prayer services, where he was ever ready to bear his testimony. Several of his boy friends were faithful during the hours of searching, and six of them helped to carry his body to its last resting place.

May his life be a constant reminder of the need of being faithful to duty, and may that peace that only God can give come to his family.

Sunday morning a few gathered for Sunday school and church. Brother Ralph W. Farrell was the morning speaker and gave some good food for thought. We hope he may come again when there is a better attendance and give us the same food with an additional supply.

Holden Stake

Lees Summit

Special attention is called to the home-coming June 28 at Lees Summit. All Saints who have ever lived in Lees Summit are especially invited, and a general invitation is extended to the Saints in the stake. The Missouri Pacific Railroad is running a special excursion train from Jefferson City to Kansas City and intermediate points on this date at less than one fare for the round trip. See your local agent. Also special rates of one fare plus twenty-five cents applies on all regular Sunday trains.

We trust the Saints in the stake will join the Lees Summit Saints in their home-coming celebration to the extent that they are able.

D. J. Krahl, Stake President.
Lamoni Stake Items

Services at the Brick Church were renewed with a union prayer meeting on Wednesday evening, after a two weeks' sojourn that all might attend the convention on the college hill.

The convention gave new life and determination to many here as well as to those isolated ones who came to gain strength. Some of those who hungered for the advantages here could little realize how much strength they brought to Lamoni young people. We hope to long remember the first motto which decorated Zimmermann Hall, "This year we sail Zionward, which is our course."

If the college people did not feel that Lamoni appreciated them while here, they should know how much they are now missed. The ranks at the first summer service were sadly depleted with the exodus of our college friends, and the departure of our own people to schools and vacations. However, summer also brings home others who are busy during the school year in other fields, and many once familiar faces are welcomed who choose this quiet place for vacation. On the whole Lamoni gets its breath between convention and reunion, and then moves forward into life again.

The big choir of which we have been so proud during the school year was another thing which came into appreciation quite sensibly when the audience faced the empty choir seats at this first summer service.

The Sunday school was readjusted for the summer as follows: Beginners now meet in the southwest room of the church under the supervision of Mrs. Silas Middendorf; Emma Anderson is in charge of the kindergarten age in the northwest room; in Herald Hall are the primaries with Nellie Anderson, and the juniors with Walter E. Hayer; while the intermediates are in the basement of the church in the large room occupied this winter by two classes of college people. Adults are in the upper auditorium as usual.

Bishop Carmichael spoke in his frank way to the Lamoni Saints at the eleven o'clock hour of June 21. A farewell sermon? Bishop Carmichael will always belong to Lamoni wherever he may dwell, so—it couldn't be that.

President Floyd M. McDowell talked to the priesthood at half past two.

Preaching this evening will be by J. A. Gunsoley at the church, J. M. Stubbart at the Saints' Home, and T. J. Bell at Liberty Home.

Children's Day will be observed next Sunday.

Andes, Montana

On May 30 and 31 the young people's convention for Eastern Montana District was held at Andes. A number of active young people came from Glasgow in care of Sister Gordon and Brother J. C. Page. Visitors came also from Williston and Alamo, North Dakota; and Fairview, Montana, sent several young ladies in care of Brother Ditton. Also Brother Ritter, Brother and Sister Hillman and son Chester came to do their part in making the convention a success.

The meetings were opened with a young people's prayer meeting Saturday morning at eleven o'clock. Out of eighteen present there were eight prayers and four testimonies. A basket dinner was enjoyed following the prayer service.

In the afternoon the people of Andes community gathered with the Saints for a baseball game, and all joined, for a good social afternoon.

A program in charge of Sister Mary Pennell and the "I Can" Class was given at eight o'clock. The program consisted of readings; a selection, "Thy people shall be my people," written by Elbert A. Smith; solos, and a duet. It was well rendered and was enjoyed by all.

After the program, all the young people, even those of fifty and sixty considering themselves young, went up to Bronson Hill for a wiener roast.

Sunday morning at half past nine all gathered at the church for prayer service, which was followed by the usual Sunday school, in charge of Superintendent George E. Phay. District President J. C. Page occupied at the morning preaching hour, and his words of encouragement to stand fast and press on to Zion's conditions were much appreciated.

Sister Valley of Williston, accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. E. C. Whiteaker, of Alamo, North Dakota, came in for early prayer service; also Mr. and Mrs. Eld of Corinth. These people were glad to hear once more the voice of their old-time missionary, J. C. Pugs.

After service nearly all went to the Palmer Dam to witness the baptism of Mabel Lois Andes, and after lunch the afternoon was taken up with a round table which proved to be one of the most interesting meetings of the convention.

The visiting Saints started early for home. During the evening the Lord's blessing descended in the form of a much needed rain, reminding us that he still is mindful of our temporal needs. The Saints felt encouraged to press on with more diligence to help in the redemption of Zion.

CLARA M. WHEELER.

Denver, Colorado

The weather is still very dry. We have had a few small showers but not near enough to wet the ground as deep as it is dry. Much of the seed planted is still dry in the ground; even if it should rain at this late date the sugar beet crop will be a complete failure.

Church work is moving steadily forward. At the business meeting June 1, Elder E. J. Williams was again elected pastor. A certain sister agreed to donate $700 toward an addition to the church, which is needed very badly, and it was voted to accept her offer and take steps to get together sufficient means to proceed with the new addition. Our seating capacity is only about one hundred fifty at the limit, and quite often we have to put extra chairs in the aisles.

Robert Kemp's lost their son recently after a short illness with influenza.

Sister Kennedy, sister of Patriarch Frederick A. Smith, met with a very serious accident Wednesday, June 10, as she was slighting from a street car. The car gave a lurch and threw her to the pavement, breaking her leg in two places. One break is in the ankle joint, which makes it very painful. She has been suffering severe pain ever since the accident.

Sister Edna Walling of Fort Lupton has been in the hospital for several weeks. She had a very serious operation, but her strong faith, with the prayers of the Saints, has brought her well along the road to recovery.

Bishop Carmichael made a short call recently on Sunday and gave us one of his characteristic sermons. He was away again as soon as the service closed.

R. S. Salyards was a caller June 7. He attended the sacramental service and left the same day. These preachers seem to be in a big hurry. We would like them to stay longer, but I suppose their dates are fixed ahead.

Sunday, June 14, was Children's Day at the church, as well as Flag Day for the Nation. A program was rendered by the children after the Sunday school session. Two were baptized in the font after the service by Elder Clarence Bruno. He also baptized three boys the 13th in Sloan's Lake.

The social ideals of the church contain many valuable story ideas. And sometimes a short story has done more good than a sermon. With this thought in mind, Autumn Leaves is searching for a good story—the best short story on Zion it is possible to find.

Everybody can take part in this contest. You do not have to be an experienced writer to compete. All you have to do is to tell in a short story your most interesting idea about Zion. The rules of the contest are printed below.

Read them. Then start right away on your story. The prize winners will be published in Autumn Leaves.

Here Are the Rules

1. The story must be centered around the social ideals of the church.
2. You may use any number of words over 1,500 and up to 5,000.
3. Sign your story with a pseudonym; and inclose with your manuscript a sealed envelope containing your name and address, the title of your story, and the pseudonym.
4. All manuscripts must be mailed before October 31, 1925.
5. Autumn Leaves reserves the right to publish the prize-winning stories; but no other story will be used without permission of the author.

Remember the Closing Date—October 31
When I Pass On

BY MABEL IRENE GUINAND JOE

(Copyright applied for.)

The stars will sparkle at night just as brightly,
The world will rush just as madly on;
And hearts will flutter and beat as lightly
After the time that I have gone.

The birds will sing, every one, as sweetly,
And lighten the hearts of the passing throng;
And time may erase my name, completely,
And few will remember that I have gone.

There may be those who will greatly miss me
And deeply lament it when I pass on;
How few they will be compared to the many
Who cease to remember that I am gone.

But what does it matter can I but pass quickly,
And death be accomplished without great pain?
Better that, than to linger sickly;
Through years of suffering to remain.

If, only, my life has been a psalm,
Revealed to the world like a hymn to God,
Then worldly applause will be as nothing,
When my form is placed beneath the sod.

For many the heroes, who are unmentioned,
And cowards often the ranks applaud;
But there will be no unworthy pensioned
When the world is weighed in the balance of God.

September 15, 1925.

Vinal Haven, Maine

The Saints here are active. Elder Archie Beggs has been preaching every Sunday afternoon and evening since the last missionary was here in the early spring. The attendance has been fairly good, but the Saints are desirous that the Lord will bless them and soon send a missionary, that more worldly people may attend the services. The Department of Recreation and Expression is still very much alive under the leadership of Brother Ralph Candage.

Burlington, Iowa

June 16.—On Sunday, June 7, we held our sacramental service in the basement of the new church, the main auditorium not yet being ready for use. This was our first meeting in the new building. The Spirit of God was there in abundance, and the Lord spoke to the branch in general through Pastor G. Scott Daniel, giving words of encouragement and advice. More of the young people took part in this service than usual. After such an outpouring of the Lord's blessings, we felt greater strength and determination to press onward in the work.

Monday evening, June 8, the Temple Builders gave a surprise shower on Sister Alma Bauer, a bride of June 23. She was presented with a lovely table lamp. The evening was spent in a social way.

Our Children's Day program on June 14 was beautiful, and it was inspiring to see the little tots take part in the speaking and singing. We held junior church services in the morning and had the program in the evening.

The Nauvoo District conference will convene at Rock Creek, Illinois, next Saturday and Sunday, June 20 and 21. Sister Ruth Greene, of Independence, Missouri, is in Burlington. She was a bridesmaid at the Bauer-Burman wedding.

was 98, and since that time an average of almost one new B radiocaster has been added every week.

The most interesting feature of the week's newcomers was the fact that of the total of seven new stations (including class A), three are church stations. In addition to K L D S, church stations licensed were W I B F of the First Presbyterian Church, Meridian, Mississippi, and K F V Z of the Glad Tidings Tabernacle, San Francisco. W I B F will use the 209.7-meter wave with 5 watts of power and K F V Z has been assigned 234 meters and licensed to use 50 watts.

In announcing these new radiocasting stations, officials of the department of commerce made it clear that only in very rare cases would there be further additions to the B band. Practically the only cities which will have a chance at one of the high wave lengths are those on the Pacific Coast, where the congestion has not been as great as on the Atlantic and where one or two wave lengths used by eastern radiocasters are not shared by a Pacific plant.

Other B licenses may be expected from time to time, but nearly all of them, it was said, will be plants which will continue to use their class A wave length but will be entitled to increase their power to as high as 2,000 watts or more.

Experiments in radio-vision are being rushed along feverishly at the Washington laboratories where the first public demonstration of inventors took place last week. The laboratory force is now developing a new hookup for the transmitter of the photographs with which it is hoped to obtain more practical results. In addition to the work being done in the laboratories, Doctor Jenkins has offered prizes to the radio amateurs who can furnish him with suggestions as to how the "radio vision" can be bettered.

It is interesting to note in one of the above paragraphs the statement, "only in very rare cases would there be further additions to the B band." With all the Class B channels occupied, K L D S is fortunate in getting the Class B wave length, and is particularly indebted to Mr. Jewell Mayes, secretary of the Missouri State Board of Agriculture, and to Commissioner Arthur T. Nelson, director of W O S.

The new wave length of 441 meters (actually 440.9 meters) is a most favorable one. It will be picked up in "the middle of the dial" on most receiving sets. Very few listeners have not heard W O S, on the dial settings for which K L D S may also be received.
Under the agreement with WOS, KLDS will have the air Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday nights, and Sundays at 11 a.m., 6.30 p.m., and 9 p.m. (9.15 p.m. during summer months). This schedule is subject to such changes as may be agreed upon by the two stations from time to time. KLDS is not yet broadcasting on Saturday nights, but will probably make arrangements for Saturday night programs.

The management of the new station is desirous of hearing from all friends and listeners of KLDS. Advise concerning quality of transmission and volume compared with the old wave length, also send probably make arrangements for Saturday night programs.

Reunion Notices

North Dakota, June 26 to July 5, at the M. D. Graham grove, seven miles north of Burlington. An effort has been made to furnish meals free, which means we must have the hearty cooperation of all. We want to make the reunion something for everyone, and we feel that by all cooperating it can be a success. If we cannot all attend, we may be the means of helping some one else to go. We need you there, but let us hear from you if we do not see you there. Bring your tents and all you can to help make the reunion all it should be. Any having dishes, knives, forks, and spoons to spare, bring them with you, for we will need them. All who have attended reunion here know it is a beautiful spot. It is even more beautiful now, so come and enjoy the associations of Saints once more. Send all contributions to M. D. Graham, Burlington, North Dakota. W. E. Shakespeare, for the committee.

Northeastern Illinois reunion, at Elmhurst, has been called off, owing to an insufficient number of orders for tents, which must be a determining factor in preparatory plans. Several factors have entered in which prevent many of the regular campers from camping this year. This also automatically precludes the holding of district conference at Elmhurst, as per recent notice in the HERALD. A later notice will advise as to conference date. John L. Cooper, for the committee and the district presidency.

Central Oklahoma, at Skistook, eighteen miles north of Tulsa, July 25 to August 2, the greatest reunion in the history of the work in Oklahoma. All are urged to attend. Bring a consecrated pocketbook and a contrite spirit, that we may have ten days of real joy, when there shall be no better among us, all of our needs and just wants being supplied from one common bag. The promised speakers are specialists in their line. They are Roy S. Budd, J. A. Koehler, and James A. Thomas. We are also expecting Patriarch John A. Smith. Special talks on church ideals, titles, surplus, stewardships. Bring along your unanswered theories or problems; they will be considered. Meals will be furnished as cheaply as possible; also tents and cots. Write your wants to James A. Thomas, 819 South Rockford, Tulsa, Oklahoma. The priesthood is especially urged to attend. Ed Dillon, district president, 300’s East Grand Avenue, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Central Michigan, at Midland, August 14 to 23 inclusive. Conditions point to an even better time this year than last, if that is possible. Come and spend the ten days with us. All the meals will be free. Tents can be rented at the following prices: 7 by 9, $3.75; 9 by 9, $4.25; 12 by 14, $4.25; 12 by 16, $7.10. All orders must be in not later than July 31. Please send money with order, or make arrangements with me. We hope every member of the district will make preparation to be present. Otto Bartlett, reunion secretary.

Kirtland, August 18 to 28, at Kirtland, will have place as leading ministers F. M. McDowell of the Presidency, J. F. Curtis of the Twelve, and M. H. Siegfried of the Presiding Bishopric, besides others of the General Authority. The committee is making every effort to meet the needs of the large number of Saints and friends who will attend, and to add to their convenience. Meals will be served cafeteria style at the auditorium at prices as low as possible, which the committee anticipates will be lower than last year. Regular meals will also be served at the hotel, and a refreshment tent will be maintained on the ground, where light lunches, sandwiches, etc., may be obtained. On account of the reduced prices, free meals will not be served except to such ministers as may be appointed or invited to attend. For further particulars as to meals address F. J. Ebeling, Route 2, Willoughby, Ohio. Tents may be rented: 10 by 12, $4.50; 12 by 14, $5.25; 12 by 16, $7.10. All orders must be in not later than July 31. Please send money with order, or make arrangements with me. We hope every member of the district will make preparation to be present. Otto Bartlett, reunion secretary.

EDITORIAL

Interchange of Membership With Church of Christ

A Misunderstanding Corrected

Zion's Advocate of recent date, published by our Hedrickite or Church of Christ brethren, has the following:

The following report was duly received by the Reorganized Church in General Conference at Lamoni, Iowa, April 17, 1919:

"To the General Conference; Greeting: The committee of Church of Christ beg leave to report that during the year amicable relations have been maintained between the brethren of the Church of Christ and Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. A number of joint meetings of the priesthood of both organizations have been held. The joint committee held one session on November 14 at which the following members were in attendance: Of the Church of Christ, Elders C. L. Wheaton, Almo O. Frisbey, A. E. Himes, and T. J. Sheldon; of the Reorganized Church, Elders F. M. Sheehy, M. H. Siegfried, and W. W. Smith. The following agreements were unanimously adopted:

"'Agreed, that persons who are, or have been connected with the church, desiring to unite with either branch of the church shall not be received to fellowship until the elders of the branch of the church to which they apply shall have opportunity to decide upon their standing; each organization to furnish the other with evidence in their possession with reference to the person in question."

"'Agreed,' that when ministers of the Church of Christ and the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints are laboring together, the persons baptized shall have the right of choice as to which organization they will unite with."

"Some unfavorable criticisms have been offered by a few of the brethren of the Reorganization, but this is largely due to lack of understanding what the agreements mean. These, in time, we believe, will be eliminated.

"Trust that harmony may still prevail, we are, "Respectfully yours," "FREDERICK M. SMITH, Chairman.
"WALTER W. SMITH, Secretary.

"INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, March 25, 1919."

The foregoing report clearly sets forth the following items of interest:

1. Directions for the transfer of membership from one church to the other.
2. Mutual missionary work of the two churches is encouraged.

3. The priesthood authority of the Church of Christ to baptize is clearly stated.

The foregoing from our Hedrickite brethren states some of the facts in the case, but omits other vital facts without which their editorial cannot lead to a correct conclusion. It is true that the conference of 1919 "received" the committee report which they reproduce. It was by vote "received" and subsequently spread upon the minutes. Reports, papers, and documents of various kinds are thus received and spread upon the minutes, either by formal vote or upon announcement of the chairman that unless there be objections the matter presented will be "received." Such matters always await formal action to approve or disapprove or to amend, or in the absence of any further action, remain without indorsement.

But in this case the act of receiving was not all that happened. At the same session at which the report was by vote "received" it was moved to "approve." The motion to approve was voted down, denied. (General Conference Minutes of 1919, page 2813.) This vital point our Hedrickite brethren have overlooked or forgotten. The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints not only did not commit herself to any system of transfer of membership from the one body to the other and to engage in mutual missionary enterprises; she instead deliberately and by vote refused to commit herself to any such system of membership transfer and missionary enterprise in common, and so stands not for but against such an arrangement, if judged by the conference action of 1919, to which the Advocate has called attention.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Our Missionaries Go to Honolulu and Holland

Just before Elder A. M. Chase and Sister Chase left Independence in preparation for their foreign mission to Hilo, Hawaii Territory, Elder Chase met with the body of the priesthood of Independence on Sunday afternoon. President Elbert A. Smith called Brother Chase to the front, where he was blessed for his work, and by request addressed the gathering, disclosing a trustful and humble spirit.
which has been the secret of his successful work as a missionary for about thirty years.

Under date of June 17 Brother Chase wrote the First Presidency from the port, San Francisco, just prior to their embarking. Here is the principal part of the letter:

To the First Presidency, Greeting: We are sending you a line to tell you that we are this far on our journey, and that all goes well with us. In many ways we have had a wonderful experience on this stage of our journey.

Leaving Independence Tuesday evening, we reached Salt Lake City Thursday about one o'clock in the afternoon and were met at the depot by Elder Davey, who took us by auto to the home of William Winkworth, sr. The pleasure in that meeting was mutual, and when Brother Charles Smurthwaite phoned from the depot, where he was en route to some business appointment, that he was canceling that appointment and coming up to have a visit with us, the pleasure was multiplied, especially in our visit, as we relived some of our experiences in the work there.

Next, there was supper with the family of Sister George Kinghorn, jr., and an evening gathering at the parsonage, where the Saints were gathering for a farewell party with Brother and Sister Davey; but between these two events we made a call upon our old Sister Pettett and son Ezra. In all of these experiences we were made to feel that it is a wonderful thing to hold the love and friendship of those among whom we have labored in former years.

Brother and Sister Davey made us feel at home at the parsonage (which we had helped to secure for the branch just before we left Salt Lake City for our mission in New York, and in the chapel of which we had preached our farewell sermon to the Saints some thirteen years ago), and the next morning we were privileged to meet with Sister Virgil Etzenhouser, who was en route to Independence. She with her brother arrived about six o'clock in the morning and were met at the depot by Brother Davey, so we all had breakfast together. After a short visit with them there, Sister Chase and I took the interurban for Ogden, where we visited with friends and relatives until eleven o'clock. Here Brother Levitt met us with his Ford and was very kind in every way, the last but not the least of which was taking us for a drive through Ogden Canyon, then back to the city, where we had the pleasure of a few more renewals of friendship with those with whom we used to commune and work, and we were finally off for our final lap to the Pacific coast.

Reached this city Saturday afternoon about six o'clock and were met at the ferry by Brother J. A. Saxe, who piloted us to his sedan and deposited us at the home of Brother and Sister H. S. Lawton, where we have been made to feel at home for our stay here. Here again we have had the pleasure of renewing old acquaintances, not the least of which was our joy when we heard the voice of our former colaborer, Elder H. L. Holt, who, with his wife, had come up from the Pacific Grove to greet us again.

We met with the Saints here Sunday morning, assisting in the Sunday school and speaking for them at eleven, and in the evening were with the Saints of Oakland, where we spoke again. In all of these renewals of acquaintance and the forming of new ones, the Saints have been most kind, and the Master has given of his Spirit in a most liberal degree to assist us in our efforts to tell the story of life and hope.

Of course wife and I have had the pleasure of visiting some of the places of interest here. Sister Lawton took us for a ride on the "Switch-back," then a walk through the Golden Gate Park, piloting us to the home of Sister C. A. Parkin, where Brother Saxe called for us soon after lunch, taking Brother and Sister Holt with us for a ride over some of the wonderful boulevards of the park and beach, and ending with a visit at the Memorial erected to the Legion of Honor, located at the end of the Lincoln Highway, and overlooking the Golden Gate. Here we had the pleasure of listening to a wonderful organ recital, as well as viewing many of the objects of interest placed in that building.

We are now about ready to embark for Honolulu. Brother Saxe is to call for us here (at the home of Brother Lawton) soon. We go on the rest of our trip with good courage and hope for a pleasant and profitable year's work ahead.

Sincerely yours,

A. M. CHASE.

Elder and Sister Frank Veenstra were given a large reception in their home church, Second Church of Independence, on Monday evening preceding their departure for the East and their mission field in Holland. Besides the good fellowship and the spirit of sympathy displayed by their friends at this time, a purse was collected and presented, intended by the donors to be used in providing comforts on their trip and voyage.

Brother and Sister Veenstra were full of energy and possessed a great desire to get into their field and at work, and they left Independence the evening of May 26 for Hoboken, New Jersey, their point of embarkation. May 30 they took passage on the Ryndam, arrived in Liverpool June 8, having experienced considerable stormy weather during the voyage, but no sickness whatever. They arrived in Amsterdam June 10, but since their arrival had not yet begun their work, but were well and happy.

Just prior to their embarking, Brother and Sister Veenstra received letters and cards numbering twenty-one from fellow church workers and their friends in Independence, and these cheered and heartened them.

Change in Ontario Marriage Law

Bishop John C. Dent writes from Bothwell, Ontario, calling attention of HERALD editors to a change in the marriage laws of the province, which came into effect June 13 as an amendment to the Marriage Act. It provides:

Both parties to the marriage contract must furnish proof of age.

No marriage may be performed until three days have elapsed after issue of the marriage license.

The penalty for a violation of either provision is not more than one hundred dollars. Brother Dent adds: "Make such use of this information as you wish to protect our ministers, as I do not know whether or not the official supplying the license will of necessity give out this information to the applicant."

Questions and Answers

From time to time questions come to the editors which may have arisen in the minds of more than the one person who writes to the office. The answers to a few of these questions may from time to time be worth publishing in order to prevent misunderstanding if nothing more. Here is one from this week's mail:

Question: "President F. M. Smith, it is reported that the church is going to finance your son through some great university. Is this true?"

Answer: In one way the answer is obvious. President Smith has no son. The rumor may have sprung from the fact that President Smith's son-in-law, Apostle F. Henry Edwards, is attending summer school at the University of Kansas. Rumor starts with few facts in her bag and generally loses them all before she turns the first corner. Brother Edwards has not quit the mission field. The arrangement is for the summer months only. He is conducting his correspondence and quorum work as quorum secretary as usual. Each week-end is spent in church work, ordinarily in the field. The added expense is slight, the time lost from field work not great, the purpose to better equip himself for church service. The kind of field work that he is enabled to do even while carrying his studies is indicated by the following report from the pen of Brother Gomer T. Griffiths:

Yesterday we attended district conference at Rock Creek [Illinois], ten miles from here. It was a very fine conference. Brother Edwards of the Twelve was present, and he gave the best talk on equality that I have ever heard in this church, and I have heard a great many men talk on that subject in my time. He makes very fine points and is a good mixer with the people. He is a very able minister and a good-living man. He will make his mark in the church in the near future. The Lord did not make a mistake when he placed him in the Quorum of Twelve.

Bishop Albert Carmichael is moving to Independence from his former home in Lamoni. Lamoni Stake news letter gives an account of community farewell given in their honor. The family is to arrive in Independence Tuesday evening, June 30.

President Frederick M. Smith opened the season of outdoor preaching services at the Campus Sunday evening. After the service he left for the East and will attend the Owen Sound conference, which convenes July 4 and 5.

Pastor Roy V. Hopkins has returned from a visit to his old home in Illinois, much improved in general health. He made a call at his office Monday and greeted many friends there and on the streets.

OFFICIAL

Sunday School Workers of the Church

Greeting: On July 1 I am asked to assume the executive administration of the general Sunday school, or the Department of Religious Education, to succeed Brother A. Max Carmichael who has served the church for several years. We assume the responsibility with much hesitancy, realizing something of the vast importance of the religious education of our people, and especially of the young, in the years just before us. We recognize also the great work accomplished by Sunday school officers and editors in the past. Their work will stand as monuments to their memory, the objects of respect and undying gratitude among a God-fearing people. It is upon the foundation and the walls thus far laid that we must continue to rear the superstructure and carry forward our part in Zion's building.

Our twenty-five years of public-school teaching and supervision have given us a vision of the method, scope, and purpose of secular education. We are convinced that religious education is subject to the same general laws and yet of even greater importance, for, if effective, it must most surely reach and motivate life's activities and mold our characters in harmony with the great divine ideal. Our teaching, then, in subject matter, in theory, and practice must be sound pedagogically, true scientifically, and have the divine sanction of the spirit of the latter-day work, which is the Spirit of God. The great beauty, harmony, and truth of the gospel is effectively revealed to those who seek it both "by study and by faith."

It shall be our pleasure, then, in the Sunday school and related movements in the church, to seek that enlightenment for ourselves and for others which shall give us the vision of inspiration, the poise of conviction, and the stability of purpose which may make us laborers together, with God, to the accomplishment of divine purposes. Thus there should come a unity of comprehension of the gospel as revealed through Christ, and there should be developed in us a love for each other and a devotion to the cause which should enable us effectively to work together and with God.

Outstanding problems in the Sunday school undoubtedly are these:

1. The revision of the subject matter of our present quarterlies in harmony with the recent findings of child psychology and the demands of present-day life.

2. The preparation of additional subject matter for class use in other fields than those covered by our present quarterlies; especially should there be prepared a series of adult lessons setting forth the social and economic phases of the gospel as contemplated in our Zionic ideal. Our church history, Doctrine and Covenants, and the Book of Mormon should be more adequately treated and quarterlies or textbooks prepared for class or individual use.

3. The persistent and painstaking effort made by the retiring superintendent and his corps of editors in the past months has resulted in some profound developments in the field of experimental investigation undertaken. Their work under the problem method, while experimental in religious education, is undoubtedly sound pedagogically, and its use in our church schools in an increasing proportion shall surely mean advancement.

4. The widespread interest in class work at our conferences, institutes, and conventions clearly indicates a desire for constructive study and development on the part of many which cannot fail to permeate the entire membership of the church and to bring us all to a higher plane of enlightenment, appreciation, and efficiency in the gospel life.

5. With the preparation of more adequate subject matter in our quarterlies and the growing comprehension among our people, there must come a more consistent preparation of our teachers to qualify for intelligent and efficient service in their calling. To fail to qualify and thus to fail to measure up to the size of our job is unpardonable in this day of our opportunity.

Other problems, both general and local in character, must be given consideration in their time and place. We trust our office may serve the interests of the church in the preparation of a people fitted to receive the endowment necessary unto the accomplishment of the Lord's purposes in our day.

Our course is set Zionward. The call is to immediate preparation for the service that is now before us; indeed, to enter service now, to begin to do the things that await our doing. The measure of the gospel is its function in our lives. As we perform the humble task at hand, we shall gain confidence and ability to undertake the greater tasks which lie ahead. The spirit of the recent Young People's Convention was one of optimistic consecration. This is the spirit of the gospel. With a profound confidence in the ultimate triumph of the latter-day work, with faith in God and in the army of our coworkers who also love him, let us press with vigor toward our goal. Let us bring the gift of our truest, humblest, noblest selves to be consecrated and made ready for the Master's use. So shall our offering be acceptable, doors of opportunity shall be opened to us, and the Master's blessing attend our efforts.

We shall try to keep in touch with Sunday school work in every district and branch in the church. We are mindful of the needs of the smallest school where we have worked as well as the complicated problems of the central places. We shall hope to help serve faithfully him who said to Peter, "Feed my lambs; feed my sheep."

Your coworker,

CHARLES B. WOODSTOCK,
General Superintendent.

Saint Joseph Prisoners Regularly Hear K L D S Services

According to Captain of Police H. A. Rensch, Saint Joseph, Missouri, prisoners of their city police station regularly hear the religious services and programs broadcast from K L D S. A portion of his letter to K L D S, dated June 11, follows:

"I have always enjoyed your programs and I have also noted that your modulation was just about as near perfect as one would want. . . . Your talent is fine. . . . We enjoy it very much at my home, and I have a set here at the police station that we use not only for police pick-ups but also for entertainment.

"We send the prisoners to church every Sunday, and cut in on your evening programs both Sundays and week days. . . . I use an extension wire and take the loud speaker downstairs to the point where everybody can hear, and the singing of your quartet and solos come in so smoothly."

(Signed) "H. A. RENSCHE.

"I am pleased to report much improvement in the Victoria District, more interest shown in all departments of the work. Last reunion held April 10 was a great success. All agree it was the best reunion held for many years, and as a result all branches are in a good spiritual condition."—S. L. Harvey, Melbourne, Victoria, Australia, in a letter to the First Presidency under date of May 7.

Brother W. D. Tordoff is holding an interesting and profitable series of services at Knoxville, Iowa. Attendance is good, he reports, among nonmembers, even at social services. One sermon he is to preach to the Ku Klux Klan of that place, who have agreed to gather in a body to hear him.

The Elements of Stewardships and Our Social Program

Terminology

Precision in the use of terminology is a positive necessity in the study of the financial law of the church; especially is this so when the controversial aspect is taken into consideration. Not only is it essential that we have the same conception as to what a word denotes, but also what the word connotes.

To the end that this effort may contribute to a better understanding, thus bringing a much desired unity of opinion, herewith is submitted a list of terms with the meaning of each. When these words are used in the subject text, it is to be understood that they are used with the meaning as defined elsewhere.

Tithe or Tithes. The word tithe or tithes when used as a noun means the tenth of the increase; when used as any other part of speech, it denotes the act of giving or taking rather than the specific amount required under the law.

Examples where the word means a tenth: "And it was to this same Melchisedec to whom Abraham paid tithes: yea, even our father Abraham paid tithes of one tenth part of all that he possessed."—Book of Mormon, Alma 10:8. "And all the tithe of the land . . . is holy unto the Lord."—Leviticus 27:50. (See also Leviticus 27:31; Numbers 18:26, 28; Deuteronomy 12:17; Nehemiah 10:38; and many other places.)

Examples of where the word means the act of giving and not specifying the tenth: "For he that is tithed shall not be burned."— Doctrine and Covenants 64:5. "Those who have been tithed."— Doctrine and Covenants 106:1. (Also Doctrine and Covenants 106:2; Deuteronomy 14:22; Luke 11:14, etc.)

Surplus. Used in its broadest way, this word stands for the whole financial law. (See Doctrine and Covenants 129:8.) We find it used in its restricted sense in Doctrine and Covenants 106:1, 2. It has been defined officially as follows: "Surplus is that part of a man's possessions, whether moneys or properties, of which he has no present or immediate need; the word need being determined by the man's position, sphere of action, his business, and his dependents." See another column for a brief but interesting statement, giving the history that led up to this action of the Joint Council of the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric.

Offering (Free-will). The term offering refers more specifically to what is placed in the hands of the church by the steward after he has paid his tithe and surplus. Used in a general sense the term offering is a blanket word covering all or any payments to the bishopric or church. Thus the tithe is properly an offering, as is also the surplus. The meaning of the word is to be understood by its context. Doctrine and Covenants 107:15 is an example when used with its broad meaning. Also 102:5.

Tithing. The word tithing is a term meaning several things:

a. It may mean the tenth.
b. It may mean the surplus.
c. It may mean an offering.
d. It may mean any two or three or all of these things or the whole financial law.

The meaning of the word tithing when used in the standard works of the church is to be determined by the context.

Example of the word tithing used to mean the surplus: "O Lord, show . . . how much thou requirest of the properties of thy people for a tithing. Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus properties."— Doctrine and Covenants 106:1.

Example of the word tithing used to indicate the whole financial law: "Verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people."— Doctrine and Covenants 64:5. "The Twelve will take measures . . . to execute the law of tithing."— Doctrine and Covenants 114:1. (See also Doctrine and Covenants 126:10; 129:8; 94:3; 122:5; 106:1.)

Consecration. The use of this word always carries with it the idea of sacredness. Whatever is placed at the disposal of the Lord, whether abilities or means, is done in a sacred manner. It is set apart for a holy purpose. The word may be used to express, in addition to the character of its use, the law of temporalities or a certain part of the law. In such uses the meaning is to be known by the contexts. Doctrine and Covenants 102:8 is an example of the word being used to indicate a holy purpose, as well as the whole financial law. (Also see 42:9,10; 129:8.) The tithe is a consecration; also the surplus; also any offering, either material or immaterial. Any material thing: Proverbs 19:14; Joshua 24:32.

Inheritance. We do not believe a better definition of the word inheritance could be given than that given in Bouvier's Law Dictionary: "The term inheritance includes not only lands and tenements which have been acquired by descent, but any fee simple or fee tail which a person has acquired by purchase may be said to be an inheritance because the purchaser’s heirs may inherit it.”

This means that the term inheritance may mean (a) a home only; (b) a business only; (c) a home and business combined; (d) land (Genesis 15: 7, 8; Leviticus 16: 20); etc.; (e) any material thing (Proverbs 19: 14; Joshua 24: 32). A right such as a pension, a life lease, a franchise; the tithe which is the inheritance of the Levite, a right that inures in those occupying in office. This term also is to be understood in connection with its contexts.

Stewardship primarily means the attitude of one’s mind toward all his possessions. This attitude being one of trusteeship—that everything in one’s possession is held in trust for the benefit of his fellow man. Stewardship also means the material thing, as in Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4; 101: 3, 4, 5, 16, etc., and examples of the word being used to mean the responsibility attached to the use of the thing. (Also see Doctrine and Covenants 70: 1; 118: 4; 42: 19.)

Steward. A steward is one in whom is placed the responsibility of using and managing a stewardship. (See Doctrine and Covenants 72: 4; 101: 13.)

As the question of ownership is one in which everyone is vitally interested and one in which much confusion may be had, we herewith give the meanings of the several terms used by us relating to ownership.

Ownership. This term will be used to designate that the absolute title is in God, in whom all ownership rests.

Owner. This term will be used to designate God. He alone is the absolute owner of all things.

Legal Owner. This term will be used to express the thought that the title (fee simple or fee tail) of all things is given by the authority of our Government and is lodged in the person or the group.

Legal Ownership. We mean by this that the person or group hold the legal title for the thing, granted by the State, this title being not absolute but limited.

Moral Owner. This term will be applied to the person or group holding the legal title. By it is meant that the person or group holding the legal title is under certain moral obligations to the owner (God), i.e., holding the property in trust, recognizing himself as a steward.

Moral Ownership. Any person or group holding a legal title to property is also holding a moral ownership. This moral ownership is equivalent to a stewardship.

The question of who holds the title is not fully settled. The consensus of opinions seems to be, so far as the writer can judge, that it is immaterial as to who holds the title to the property if the steward is really converted to God’s financial plan. He who has fully and completely consecrated all he has, his life, his talents, and his means, will not let the question of who is to hold the title interfere with doing his duty.

In this text the following words will be used, each with its specific meaning. The student will have no doubt as to just how the term is to be understood.

1. When we use the word tithe as a noun, we mean the tenth.

2. When the word tithe is used as any other part of speech, we use it to mean the temporal law—its meaning not restricted.

3. The word tithing will always be used to mean the law of temporalities or the financial law as a whole.

4. The term offering will be used in its restricted sense, meaning that which is paid to the church after the tithe and the surplus have been paid. If the offering is paid for any special purpose, such as the College, Children’s Home, etc., we will call it a “special offering.”

5. The term surplus will be used to designate that which is paid after the tithe. It will always be used in its restricted sense, as defined above.

6. The term consecration will represent anything either material or immaterial, being set apart for a sacred purpose, representing the character of the act rather than the amount.

Inheritance. We shall use this term to mean any material thing. When speaking of a material inheritance, such as land, etc., the word will be used with the thought that the title, both legal and moral, either in fee simple or in trust, is resident in the person, and that the inheritance so held in fee simple will be large enough to “amply supply the person’s needs and just wants.”

The Plan in Brief

If there ever was a necessity for an excuse for presenting Jehovah’s plan for “the divine sonship of man,” that necessity surely does not now exist.

From every progressive pulpit, the message of eternal life is enriched as never before with the dynamic proposition of the “brotherhood of man.”

The “fatherhood of God” must still retain its exalted position in the telling of the “old, old story,” but added thereto the divine relationship of the great human family must take its God-given position and prominence.

The current press is finding space to devote to this all-absorbing topic. The editorial columns of all our great daily journals are pulsating with problems, the solution of which makes mankind “touch elbow to elbow.”

The, if possible, more mature and academic discussions found in all our magazines, devoted to the review of the onward march of the twentieth century civilization, are laden with discussions, suggestions, and recommendations that bespeak a careful consideration of this interesting theme.

The staid and conservative courts of all civilized nations are straining the bonds of their conservation with the best of prospects of removing the same. In their judicial findings the golden thread of “equality” is found to predominate more and more, giving assurance that in the near future “equity” will regenerate the cold “letter of the law.”

And last, but not least, the mighty political upheaval among the peoples on every part of the surface of our old Mother Earth emphasized, in a manner not to be misunderstood, the sublime fact that the day of the real emancipation of the race of mankind has been ushered in.

In the exalted language of the Prophet Habakkuk:

“For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie; though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry.”

Anticipating all this, the Lord over eighty years ago gave to the world, in renewal of what He had already given centuries before, the only true economic program which would fully bring to pass the long-hoped-for “golden age”; the “federation of the world.”

The Plan in Brief as Outlined in Doctrine and Covenants 101:2

The law of temporalities, as God intends it to be performed, with the penalty attached for disobedience thereto.

God’s Supremacy

1. “I, the Lord, stretched out the heavens, and builded the earth as a very handy work; and all things therein are mine; ... yea, I prepared all things ... for my creatures.”

2. What God purposed to do: “IT IS MY PURPOSE TO PROVIDE FOR MY SAINTS.”

3. HOW God purposed to provide for his saints:
   - (a) “This is the way, that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my saints.”
   - (b) “It is expedient that I, the Lord, should make every man accountable, as stewards over earthly blessings. ... Therefore, ye shall organize yourselves, and appoint every man his stewardship, that every man may give an account unto me of the stewardship which is appointed unto him.”
   - (c) “That the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low.”

4. The guarantee of the means with which to do this: “For the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare.”

5. Our right to accept or reject this program. “I ... have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves.”

6. The penalty for disobedience. “Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.”

The plan then—God’s plan—is briefly couched in the word “stewardship.” We are to be active stewards for God.

The Order of Fulfilling the Law

The fulfillment of the financial law of the church by its stewards includes the following steps to be taken in the order given:

1. Payment of the tithe, if any.
2. Payment of the surplus, if any.
3. Giving of offerings, either special or general.

To illustrate the above steps to be taken, let us give Mr. A as an example. Mr. A finds that he has $5,000 increase. To comply with the law Mr. A first pays 1-10 of the $5,000, or $500 as a tithe. Second, Mr. A then determines if he has any surplus, and if he has, say $1,000, Mr. A pays the $1,000 as surplus. Mr. A now has $3,500 left. He desires to make a sacrifice for some worthy purpose. He has no tithe (tenth) to pay, for that is paid. He has no surplus to pay, for that is paid. Then, third, Mr. A can make an offering if he desires, out of the remaining $3,500, say an offering of $500. If Mr. A hands this $500 to the church as an offering without stipulating as to how it shall be used, it will be called a general offering. If Mr. A stipulates that the $500 is to be used for a special purpose, it will be called a special offering; the offering in this case being that amount which the steward might be willing to deny himself of his needs and just wants.

First, the Tithe.

Genesis 14:39: “Wherefore Abraham paid unto him tithes of all that he had, of all the riches which he possessed, which God had given him more than that which he had need.” (His net worth or increase.)

Leviticus 27:30: “And all the tithes of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord’s.”

Doctrine and Covenants 106:1: “I require all of their surplus property ... and after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them forever, for my holy priesthood.” (That is, the tenth of the increase is the Lord’s and is to be used in caring for the priesthood.)

Numbers 18:21: “I have given the children of Levi all the tenth in Israel for an inheritance, for their service ...”

Numbers 18:24: “But the tithes of the children of Israel ... I have given to the Levites to inherit; therefore I have said unto them, Among the children of Israel they shall have no inheritance.”

That if the Lord will prosper us in our business, and open the way before us, that we may obtain means to pay our debts, that we be not troubled nor brought into disrepute before the world, nor his people; after that, of all that he shall give us, we will give a tenth, to be bestowed upon the poor in his church, or as he shall command; and that we will be faithful over that which he has intrusted to our care, that we may obtain much; and that our children after us, shall remember to observe this sacred and holy covenant; and that our children, and our children's children, may know of the same, we have subscribed our names with our own hands.

JOSPH SMITH, JR.
OLIVER COWDERY.

This same pledge was made centuries ago by the Patriarch Jacob:

And Jacob vowed a vow, saying, If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, ... and of all that thou shalt give me, I will surely give the tenth unto thee.—

The reason for the payment of the tithe as the "first" step in complying with the law of God is very evident from these facts:

(a) God does not need anything. He is perfect. His demand on us for compliance with a certain law is solely for the good of humanity.

(b) When he demands as his just share of the gain or net increase of our business, he does so for our good and the good of humanity in

(1) Being obliged to keep an account of our annual receipts and expenditures. No man can make a real success financially unless he knows how his business is going. He must keep a tab on himself; balance his books at least once a year so as to be able to tell what his gain or loss is. Having these facts, he can intelligently analyze his business and make it more successful. He will thus be able to render a just account unto his God and by paying the tenth of his gain "render unto God the things that are God's."

(2) It teaches us to constantly acknowledge, through the annual payment of the tithe, that God is our landlord and that it is our duty to "first seek to establish the kingdom of heaven" by providing for the kingdom's representatives (the ministry).
The salvation of lost souls is our paramount duty.
The Lord is jealous for the fallen race and has seen it to that a provision for the means of carrying the gospel to them is the first thing in his financial program—the payment of the tithe of the increase for the support of the minister and his family, thus releasing the servant of God, allowing him to "go into all the world and preach the gospel," having no worry or concern as to whether his family is being cared for, thus being able to give the best there is in him to his arduous and holy task. Need we wonder why God called all those "robbers" who would not comply with this law? (Malachi 3: 8.)

The families of the ministry should be equal with all the other families of the household of God, each family getting its needs, these needs to be "ample" —enough to enable every member of the family to develop his physical, mental, and spiritual "abilities" to their greatest capacity. (Matthew 25.)

God is not the author of "class legislation." He knows no such thing as "special privileges." The payment of the tithe is part of God's program to develop character, as well as to bring that unalloyed joy to his children. "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Just as the priesthood of former-day Israel was allowed enough from the tithes so that they in turn could pay their tithe, so it should be with latter-day Israel. Every member of the kingdom of God should be able to pay his tithe.

The Mosaic economy was a "schoolmaster" to evaluate the Hebrews up to the gospel plan. Part of this Mosaic program was:

1. The people should pay to the Levites one tenth as a tithe.
2. Then the Levites were to tithe what they had received for the benefit of the priests of the tribe of Levi.
3. Then the priests of the tribe of Levi were to tithe what they had received for the benefit of the high priesthood.

Here we have the tithe of the tithe of the tithe. Every one had the "joy of giving." Everyone had the lessons of frugality and saving to observe, so as to enable them to give a "tithe." So it should be to-day. None should be deprived of the opportunity of learning to be frugal—saving—wisely spending and honorably paying his just debt, the tithe. These things measure the man.

Second, the Surplus.

The payment of the surplus is the means provided by God to bring "equality." The payment of the tithe (tenth of the increase) will not alone do this.
The awful charge against the rich men by the servant of God, James, is based on the fact that "ye have heaped treasure together for the last days."
How expressive this indictment is at the present time! Having kept more than their "needs and just wants," they are not faithful stewards. Sorrow and suffering is then their portion. Such riches become corrupted. Gold was made to use, not to be hoarded. The writer significantly exhorts the brethren, "Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned; behold the judge standeth before the door."

The placing of the surplus in a common treasury, to be used for the benefit of those who are worthy, is clearly set forth by Paul in the eighth and ninth chapters of 2 Corinthians:

Now, brothers, I have to tell you about the grace God has given to the churches of Macedonia. Amid a severe ordeal of trouble their overflowing joy and their deep poverty together have poured out a flood of rich generosity; I can testify that up to their means, aye and beyond their means, they have given—begging me of their own accord, most ungently, for the favor of contributing to the support of the saints. They have done more than I expected; they gave themselves to the Lord, to begin with, and then (for so God willed it) they put themselves to my disposal. This has led me to ask Titus to complete the arrangements for the same gracious contribution among yourselves, as it was he who started it. Now

www.LatterDayTruth.org
then, you are to the front in everything, in faith, in utterance, in knowledge, in all zeal, and in love for us—do come to the front in this gracious enterprise as well. I am not issuing any to prove how sterling your own love is. (You know how gracious our Lord Jesus Christ was; rich though he was, he became poor for the sake of you, that by his poverty you might be rich.) But I will tell you what I think about it; it is to your interest to go on with this enterprise, for you started it last year, you were the first not merely to do anything but to want to do anything. Now, carry it through, so that your readiness to take it up may be equalized by the way you carry it through—so far as your means allow. If only one is ready to give, according to his means, it is acceptable; he is not asked to give what he has not got. This does not mean that other people are to be relieved and you to suffer; it is a matter of give and take; at the present moment your surplus goes to make up what they lack, in order that their surplus may go to make up what you lack. Thus it is to be give and take—as it is written, He who got much had nothing wrong out of you. Mark this: he who sows sparingly will reap sparingly, and he who sows generously will reap a generous harvest. Everyone is to give what he has made up his mind to give; there is to be no grudging or compulsion about it, for God loves the giver who gives cheerfully. God is able to bless you with ample means, so that you may always have quite enough for any emergency of your own and amply besides for any kind not to others; as it is written, He scatters his gifts to the poor widespread, his charity lasts forever. He who furnishes the sower with seed and with bread to eat will supply seed for you and multiply it; he will increase the crop of your charities—you will be enriched on all hands, so that you can be generous on all occasions, and your generosity, of which I am the agent, will make men give thanks to God; for the service rendered by this fund does more than supply the wants of the saints, it overflows with many a cry of thanks to God. This service shows what you are, it makes men praise God for the way you have come under the gospel of Christ which you confess, and for the generosity of your contributions to themselves and to all; they are drawn to you and pray for you, on account of the surpassing grace which God has shown to you. Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift!—Moffatt's Translation of the New Testament.

This giving of our surplus for the benefit of the group challenges the generally accepted idea of current economics, that every person has the right to the product of his labor. This placement of a man's productivity is seriously called in question by some of our most intelligent thinkers, for the following reasons:

(a) The impossibility of equitably determining the amount to be distributed to the laborer as his percentage of the earnings.

(b) The principle is not altruistic. It is individualistic—extremely so. The rights of the group (society) are not recognized. The three factors necessary to create value to any productivity are: the laws of nature (God); the individual; the society. Any partitioning of any productivity that does not fully consider the right of these cannot be correct. The divine plan provides for society (the group) to have all of a man's surplus. God does not need any of this product for himself. He does ask that the individual should divide his earnings in a certain definite manner, so as to provide for the needs and just wants of every worthy child of his. "Having food and shelter therewith, let us be content."—Paul.

The whole literature of social democracy goes to prove one thing only, that it is possible for the share allotted to labor to be driven down to starvation wage, and that it is but a fair and justifiable demand that this share should not be allowed to fall below the level of the absolute needs of life. It is not only not proved, it is absolutely unprovable, that a distribution measured by the quantum of social labor-time given by each would represent distribution in proportion to the measure of product value contributed by each. We must have the courage to call the child by its right name; to effect a fair distribution of the product among the laborers we must not attempt an exact individual agreement between the income of each and the product value of his work, but we must rather endeavor that all in proportion to their efforts should receive enough not merely to exist in poverty and need, but to live and work as strong and well-equipped members in the service of the community, and to be able to lead a contented life without mercenary aims or idea. This would not be assured to him by giving him the product of his social labor-time, not even nearly so much assured as it is in the capitalistic industrial system by competition of prices, wages, and rents, or as it may in the future still more effectually be secured by carrying on the conflict respecting wage-agreements between adequate class organizations. Not that unstrained capitalism would allow of a perfect system of distribution: but neither would a democratic organization of collective production be at all likely to effect a fair distribution according to labor-time without discouraging the industrious and favoring the lazy. The use-value of labor, its social meritiveness, would in a system of reward according to a mere theory of cost, be entirely overlooked.—Impossibility of Social Democracy, by Schaffle.

There appears to be no means of equitably apportioning the returns from industrial production among the members of the community—owing to the impossibility of determining the share to which each is entitled—on any use of definite merit or effort. An equal division of products, therefore, appears to be demanded on ethical grounds.—Strength and Weakness of Socialism, by Ely. (To be continued.)

Brother James A. Thomas writes most encouragingly of the progress of the work in Tulsa, Oklahoma. Brother Thomas is accomplishing a work for which he will be long and lovingly remembered.

From word recently received it would seem our missionary force is on the increase. A letter from Elder Prescott Foo, in Honolulu, informs us that a baby girl, named Gertrude En Oi took up her permanent residence in his home on May 8.

The Orient is a world of latent possibilities. We may have good reason to feel gratified that it is gradually accepting the gospel. Brother Foo writes that in the past few weeks he has baptized five more Chinese girls.
Reaping the Result of Choice

BY J. E. VANDERWOOD

He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much: and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much. If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches? —Luke 16:10, 11.

It is somewhere recorded that “there must needs be an opposition in all things,” and I am also convinced that there must also be a choice in all things. Every individual has the privilege to choose between two or more things, and the uses that a man makes of this sacred privilege shall determine for him either his happiness or misery. It will also determine his efficiency or lack of efficiency; his influence for good or evil. It is a strange thing that mankind has not given this matter more serious thought and used the right of choice to a far greater advantage for good than they have. It is man’s failure to think right that leads him into error and causes him to fail of the higher purpose. He is what he is by reason of the choices he has made, and if he would be something else, he must choose to be something else. “For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he.”

If man would reach the highest and best, he must learn to be absolutely true to the highest and best there is in him; for no one can be untrue to the trust that is imposed in him and ever succeed in rising to a higher condition in life. But he who is true and faithful to the trust that is imposed in him will also be true to higher trusts and will therefore be raised to higher positions. The further statement of our Lord: “Unto him that hath, to him it shall be given; and from him that hath not shall be taken that which he hath,” is suggestive of the same idea. To what extent we have discovered the truths that are embodied in these texts remains yet to be determined, but I urge that we are not fitted for life, either here or hereafter, until we come to see that our entire destiny is largely if not wholly determined by our choices. If we would gain that which is of greater value, we must use well that which we now have. He that does this will surely gain more until he shall have an abundance; but he who does not use that which has been committed to his keeping shall lose what has been committed to him. As nature will not permit living organisms to retain members that they do not use, but takes them away, so God will not permit us to long possess that which we do not use properly. Come to think of it, I am not entitled to that which I do not use; but if I have increased and enlarged my capacity by using well the things that have been intrusted to me, I am worthy of more. Surely we have food for thought here, and I trust we will meditate upon it until it stirs within us the higher ideals of our manhood.

The history of the past contains many valuable lessons for us; but too frequently we read them and receive nothing because we fail to give them the attention they rightly deserve. One of these lessons that comes to me is the story of the sons of Isaac and Rebekah. Many people I find who have read this story, but few I find who have grasped the lesson it contains. May we not with profit consider it for a few minutes?

It was Saint Paul who said: “Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our profit and learning.” Have we profited by much of this history as we should have done? These two sons, it is true, were born of common parents and ought to have been endowed with the same natural conditions, but under the then prevailing customs Esau had every natural advantage. Being the first-born, he was entitled to a double portion of his father’s goods, and also to be the ruler of the patriarchal family. The natural conditions were all in his favor, and he had every reason in the world to make good.

Jacob, on the other hand, had the natural conditions against him. Being the younger, he was cut off from the right of the firstborn. No possible chance for him to possess a double portion of the goods, nor yet to become ruler of the patriarchal family unless by sheer determination he raised himself to this worthy rank by using wisely the things that were within his reach. These two sons represent for us two types of character that we may see in the earth; they represent the people we mingle with; yes, more than that they represent ourselves. What uses are we making of our opportunities? Suppose we study the lives of these two brothers a little, and it may aid us in better understanding what we are doing with our opportunities; what uses we are making of them.

Esau was one of the type who cared but little how things went so long as his physical appetites were satisfied; he made no effort to develop his powers or usefulness. He was fond of sport and delighted himself in hunting. When hunting was good, he lived on the fat of the land, but he made no effort to organize his efforts, hence had no plan or program for life. It was just a hit and miss proposition with him. He lacked in strength of character, because he lacked in system and organization. His physical appetites dominated him; he was, therefore, a moral weakling. His type is still extant in the world and is to be reckoned with.

Jacob, on the other hand, was a wide-awake man who realized that the natural conditions were against him and that it was necessary to exert the best there was in him if he ever conquered the handicap that was placed upon him. He was, however, a man of faith, and he realized that if he ever

triumphed in life he must utilize every latent power and never know such a thing as defeat. He was of the type of courageous men who say: "I will find a way or make one." He therefore organized and systematized his plans; he studied well the forces about him; he said within his heart, I will be what I will to be. He knew that thoughts are forces, so he began to think. It is true that obstacles and difficulties confronted him, but he was one of the determined men who say, I will not permit such things as these to impede my progress; I shall not yield to such things. While his brother was hunting, that is, pursuing a game of chance, Jacob was busily engaged with the pursuits of life; he was studying the peculiar characteristics of other men. He said in his soul, If I had the privileges that are my brother's, I would use them to a much better advantage than he does; I would enlarge my opportunities and enlarge my soul. He then reasoned in his heart, There is no one but self who can hinder, and there is no one but self who can insure the victory. It is to those who try that God gives the blessing. I will therefore never cease trying until I have gained the victory; I will not slacken my effort until I have conquered and subdued every obstacle that is in my way. He then reasoned, My brother does not appreciate the heritage that is his, so some day, when he is especially inappreciative of that which he fails to properly evaluate, I will purchase from him at my own price the thing that would mean everything to me; so he further organized his plans. He not only used the things within his reach, but he planned for the future. He said in his heart, I will not wait for the opportunity to come; I will make ready for it. Yes, I will create opportunity. He knew that Esau was a slave to his physical appetite, and somehow he seemed to have a premonition that Esau would come home from his hunting discouraged and impatient because he had failed to have a good find. He did not wait, therefore, for his brother to come home; he got the pottage ready, for he somehow felt that his hour had come. You see he anticipated the attitude of Esau.

Sure enough, when Esau came in he was hungry and weary of his fruitless chase and, inhaling the savory odor of his brother's pottage, said, "I am about to perish; give me of your pottage or I will die." Now he wasn't so near death as he thought he was; he was just anxious to gratify his physical appetite. Jacob then reasoned with him on this wise: Is it right for me to toil and labor and provide food and then give it to you for nothing? You seem to care little about your heritage; will you give me your birthright for food? Esau answers, I will die if I don't get it, and therefore the birthright is of no value to me. Bring on the pottage, and the birthright is yours. Whereupon Jacob said, Will you give me an oath to that effect? and Esau gave him an oath. The pottage was brought on, and Esau satisfied his natural appetite.

It was only a few hours until he was hungry again and had need that some one provide him again with pottage, but he was bereft of the most sacred thing, his God-given heritage—he had sold his birthright for one mess of pottage. This is what the Esau type have been doing ever since. Saint Paul says of him that afterwards when he would have received it he could not obtain it. He further says that he found no place for repentance, though he sought it bitterly through tears. The moral is simply this: There are many things that the Esau's sacrifice which cannot be regained, however bitterly they pass through the valley of repentance. Esau had a privilege to start where he was and to profit by his mistake and make the best possible out of himself, but he had forever forfeited the birthright.

Jacob did not say, I have arrived; I am the possessor of the birthright now; and will, therefore, take it easy. Verily no; he continued to fight the battles of life with system and with undaunted courage. When Laban changed his wages, Jacob simply said, I will master the situation; I shall not know defeat, for I am determined to triumph. It was the undaunted courage and the untiring efforts of Jacob that caused him to triumph, and he returned from the land of Haran with great substance. One other thing that was in his favor: he had made a covenant with God that, if God would be with him and bless the work of his hands and give him food to eat and raiment to put on, he would give the tithe unto him. (See Genesis 28: 20, 22.) His achievements were not merely for the gratifying of his natural appetites; he was acquiring wealth that he might be able to do good with it, and he was willing to honor the Lord with his substance. Is there not a worthy lesson here for us also?

Later, when he came to Peniel, he grappled with the problems that confronted him alone. He there said to the angel of energy, I will not let you go until you bless me; and it was there that his name was changed from Jacob, which means supplanted, to that of Israel, which means, a prince of God. This name was given to him because as a prince he had prevailed with God and man. Let us therefore hold on to the angel of energy and determination until we also receive the blessing and are able to prevail with God and man. Surely there is a noble heritage for those who will keep on struggling for the right until they triumph.

Esau, we are told in the New Testament, despised his birthright. It is evident that he did not appreciate it; neither did he evaluate it, for he parted with it for one mess of pottage. He did not use that which he possessed, therefore it was taken from him. He was not faithful to his high calling, therefore he could not be expected to retain the precious gift. Jacob, on the other hand, applied himself, and though he labored against odds he forged ahead with untiring and undaunted courage. He had faith that somehow God would bless his labor if he did his level best. With this idea in mind he moved out, and the Lord blessed his labors.

It is well for us to here remember that if we would gain the best we must be willing to pay the price that is necessary to enable us to obtain it. The only reason in the world why we are in possession of the inferior, is because we are unwilling to pay the price that must be paid before we can possess the superior things of life. He who surrenders to the messenger of doubt or complaint will never be able to be of assistance in the redemption of Zion. The program of the church requires the best there is in us. We can reach the goal in no other way.

What Is Gospel Stewardship?

by Bishop Ellis Short

Gospel stewardship is not primarily the making of wealth, but is rather the right disbursement of that which has already been and may yet be made. It may be designated as a means to an end, designed to apply to humanity at large, but especially to gospel believers.

God began his preparatory work by the setting up of divine government and authority. The doctrine and necessity of stewardship was revealed in no uncertain sound. It provided for the welfare of man. The whole social philosophy of the church is resident therein, and its elimination in part, or altogether, would bring moral decay and spiritual disaster upon the church. The Lord has said to the people, referring to the law of stewardship: “None are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God.”—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3. And also Doctrine and Covenants 118 states: “Let no one deceive himself that he shall not account for his stewardship unto me.”

The Saints generally have confidence in this very important gospel fundamental, which is so abundantly given in the revealed word. A further citation of the law may not now be necessary, but we would rather view the manner by which the law may become operative in harmony with divine purposes. The Lord has said to his people that he desired the heart and a willing mind, and the willing and obedient should inherit the land of Zion.

No one can intelligently hope for Zion’s redemption except by the appointed way; that is, through the process of faithful adherence to the law by which this very important Zionic condition is to be obtained. From the earliest dawn of our organization, stewardship is that which inspired and cheered the onward march of the true votaries of this church, although their hope has not met with that success longed for.

With the onward rush of the momentous conditions that surround us, the concentration of wealth and the tendency toward oppression, is not the wisdom of God observed in establishing a means through which heavenly cooperation and divine affiliation as to our social destiny may be realized?

The gathering, building Zion, consecration of surplus, tithing, the storehouse, and stewardship are God given and so closely interrelated as to be inseparable in establishing Zionic conditions.

An evasion of the establishment of stewardship complicates the designs and intents of our work, causing frustration, and causing the church to become fragmentary and to fail to function as designed by the Giver of the law. The apostle says where one member of the body suffers, all will suffer; hence if this strong link in the gospel chain is not honored, confusion and disappointment will result.

The Lord has said to his people, Doctrine and Covenants 101, that he has set his hand to provide for his Saints in these, the last days, but that it must be done in his own way, and the way referred to is through the channel of solidarity of the laws given to the church, touching the procedure of the people; our safety, peace, and salvation are to be enjoyed only by a godly continuance therein. The hastening time is upon us. Earnest inquiry is now being made as to the making of our work operative, as provided in the law. Some are contending that our social system can only fail as vagaries, and it has not and cannot be demonstrated successfully to the people.

Now it may be well to refer briefly to like opposition in the past. Patrick Henry gave it as a truism that in no way could the future be so well determined as by the past. The old world said that Noah could not build an ark; that Abraham would fail if he moved out from the land of the Chaldeans; that the Abrahamic covenant which God made with him would fail; that Nehemiah would never be successful in rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem. Nephi's brethren said he could not build a ship with which to cross the great waters; that their going out from Jerusalem was folly and would fail. The spies sent from the camp of Israel to the land of Canaan said in their majority report that the land was great, but that there were walled cities, and great giants that made the spies look like grasshoppers in their...
The organizing of groups devolves upon the administrative and executive departments, or the Presidency and Presiding Bishopric. “What is to be gained by the appointment of stewardship?” This important inquiry is often made. In answer will say, The keeping of the law, which has been and is highly essential to spiritual development and progress, and brings the people where they become collaborators with God, so that his purposes may be accomplished in them; that the prosperous and the worthy poor, of whom it is said they will never be destitute, may receive stewardship appointments.

This heaven-given law makes provision that the surplus of the more fortunate should be transferred from the columns of prosperity to those of adversity, and God be honored, and his people found in the path of those who keep his counsel. A people which will hesitate and not move further than led by the natural man, is cultivating in a field of uncertainty.

It is written, “When you do what I say, I am bound.” The Lord has also said to his people, the law as given in section 42 of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants is the same as if it were given to-day.

The storehouse, tithing, consecration, and stewardship are Zionic, and Zion’s redemption will await their being made effectual. How long, O Lord, holy and true?

Michigan has again shown herself to be progressive and conservative by passing “House Act No. 51” which reads: “Whenever, in the opinion of the State Administrative Board, the safety of the public demands the stopping of every vehicle, whether motor, horse drawn, or otherwise, upon approaching and before passing over any crossing at grade of railroads, interurban, and suburban railways with public streets, highways, alleys, private roads, private ways and crossings, the said State Administrative Board shall designate such crossing a ‘Stop Crossing.’”

The Milwaukee Railroad has stated that its records show that more than one third of the auto accidents on railway crossings are due to drivers running into trains. Surely the proper administration of the new law will eliminate many other accidents. Let us congratulate Michigan for crystallizing into law the sentiment of a large number of people everywhere.
NEWS AND LETTERS

Two Young Men Ordained Priests

ORCHARDVILLE, ILLINOIS, June 14.—Our district conference that was held at the Skillet Fork Branch is over and is now history. We had an entertainment on Friday evening at which the Spirit was present all the way through. A splendid sermon was given by Brother Jesse Paxton.

At the Sunday morning prayer service two promising young men, Brethren Johnnie Simmons and Arthur Henson, were ordained to the office of priest. We know they will help to carry on this work to its final consummation if they remain faithful.

The next district conference will convene at the Dry Fork Branch the first Sunday in December. All are invited to attend. Brother Paxton went from here to Mount Vernon, Illinois, to hold meetings, where he is having good attendance and attention.

We are looking forward to the district reunion which will convene at Brush Creek August 21 to 26. It had been set for an earlier date, but as the farmers could not attend at that time the date has been changed. We hope to gain strength at this reunion which will help us in the work here and in the redemption of Zion.

Good Work by Young People and Women

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA, June 10.—The Saints here are still trying to push ahead. Pastor O. J. Hawn has a new Star coach and last Sunday made good use of it, driving to a point some thirty-seven miles distant to hold special services in the afternoon.

The Department of Women is doing good work, especially along the line of raising money for the new church. There is a friendly contest on between this department and the Gleaner Club, as to which shall raise the most money for the branch in a given time.

"The Young People's Club" was organized in November, 1924, by a dozen young people of the branch, hoping to earn some extra money to assist in building the new church, which has just been completed. They sold candy, had parties, and assisted in any way they could. In January, 1925, death called the business manager and adviser of the club, Sister Jessie Mast, and these young people were like a ship without a rudder, and in their grief and loneliness they became inactive for a few weeks. They then reorganized under the name "The Gleaners' Club," a name she always favored, and all have been doing their utmost since that time. The district conference on May 10 voted to have the following "Resolutions of condolence" printed in the HERALD:

"Whereas, In the wisdom and providence of almighty God, our beloved sister, Jessie B. Mast, was called to depart this life January 26, 1925; and

"Whereas, In the death of our beloved sister this district has lost a faithful, efficient officer and worker; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we, the Southern Indiana District, in conference assembled, do hereby bow our heads in sorrow at the loss of our collaborer in the Lord's work; and be it further

"Resolved, That we extend to the family of our sister, our sincere sympathy in this our mutual loss, praying that our heavenly Father will console their grief and sustain them in their loss; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread on our minutes; a copy presented to the family, and a copy published in the SAINTS' HERALD."

The Gleaners' first venture in earning money was selling candy, and about $25 was cleared. This work was so hard on the business manager that this project was discontinued. Two box socials were then given, the first bringing $25.70 and the second $15. Then a group of young men from another church who had given a minstrel show several times agreed to give the show if we would sell the tickets, the proceeds to be equally divided. This brought $35. A few parties have netted $7 to $10. One of the members makes origandie flowers, for which there has proved to be a ready sale.

The club meets on Monday evenings at the same house, where they sew and plan. There is a good attendance, and all are enthusiastic over their work. The club colors are rose and green, and they have pins bearing the word Gleaners. Their motto is: "Do all the good you can, to all the people you can, in every way you can, as often as you can, and as long as you can." They are doing their best to live up to their motto.

The Sunday school also has a contest on between the girls and the boys as to which shall bring the most visitors to the school before June 30. The members are working with a will and determination that is commendable.

As we view the labors of our members we realize it is good to be zealously engaged in a good cause. May their labors continue to be wisely and effectively directed.

Pittsburg, Kansas

June 1.—The branch is progressing. Four services are held on Sunday, and mid-week prayer meeting. The Department of Women meets in a study class every Thursday afternoon, and the "Gleaners," also of the Department of Women, meet once a month to arrange for plays, socials, etc., which are put on to increase the local church fund. So far they have been successful in their endeavors. We are anxiously looking forward to the time when we may realize our ambition for a church. We have about two hundred members and believe the membership would increase if we had a more suitable place in which to worship.

Some changes were made at a recent business meeting. Brother Blackmore resigned his pastorate and the branch presidency as he is leaving this vicinity, and Brother E. E. Gilbert was elected in his stead. Brother Gilbert was for years the president of the branch, and we feel sure it will prosper under his administration. Sister Blackmore resigned her work in the junior department for the same reason, and Sister Wilson was chosen to act in her place. We are sure the junior department will progress under her supervision, as she is an experienced teacher and has always been successful in her work with young people and children. Sister Cheese­man resigned as head of the local Department of Women as school studies have again claimed her attention. Sister Boone was elected to fill that office. She has acted in this office before and is fully competent. As Brother Luke has left us, it was necessary to elect some one to act as superintendent of the Department of Recreation and Expression, and Brother Cheseman was chosen to that office.

Brother and Sister Blackmore are leaving this day. They have done a great deal of fine work, and they will be missed. We hope that wherever they may labor God's Spirit will attend and bless them. While here they attended the Kansas State Teachers' College, graduating this year and receiving their B. S. degrees. Being thus equipped, they are prepared for long lives of useful service to God and humanity. There are others of our young people graduating this year from the same school: Brother and Sister W. W. Manning, Raymond Booker, and Ruby Motti. These young people will soon be going out into the world, where we hope to hear good reports from them. Several of our young people are still attending the college, and more are entering this year who will in time graduate and take up the great latter-day work.

A few of our young people are planning to attend Young People's Convention. We hope they will have a pleasant and profitable time. Sister Booker, on her way to the convention, stopped off to see Raymond. She gave a talk on some of her missionary experiences, which was very much enjoyed. We were glad to have her with us and hope she may come again.

At the district conference held the second week in May, Brother Higdon was elected to fill the office of district president. He has been missionary in this district for several years, and we are glad to have him as our president. We hope he will come to visit us soon and often. Brother S. Farrington was ordained an elder at the conference. This leaves only two priests, Brothers Manning and Cheeseman, and with Brother Manning's near departure it will leave us one. We hope the Lord's voice will soon be heard calling some one to assist, as there is much work that should be done by the priests, and we believe there is good material in the branch for that office. Brother Fairington will be missed from the priests' quorum, but we hope the elders will find him helpful in his new office. We wish him success.

Increased Christmas Offering Apparent

BLOOMSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, June 14.—This spring, Mr. Paul Barger, the owner of the Bloomsburg Hosiery Mill, donated a privet hedge to go all around the church lot.

The church has increased in value and looks by work on the basement, painting the outside, and a new pavement. A good deal of the work was done by the brethren and sisters.

We did not do so very well last year with our Christmas offering on account of so many local expenses. I believe our last year's Christmas offering was ten dollars. This year our treasurer tells us that already we have in the neighborhood of twenty dollars. It is hoped that the membership in general can and will do more in respect to offerings and tithes.

Sunday, the 14th, we had our Children's Day festivities in the morning. The Sunday school furnished a nice program, the choir rendered a Children's Day number entitled, "Our loving Father." We had in all twenty-four songs, choruses and recitations. Brother Isaac T. Jones and wife were in charge of the musical side. We truly had an encouraging hour.

Two-Day Meeting a Success

GLADSTONE, MICHIGAN.—Although the three automobile loads that drove up from Lower Peninsula had a rainy day for it, Saturday's and Sunday's weather couldn't have been more pleasant. The local Saints' cordial hospitality, together with such fine weather, provided a splendid setting for the meetings held.

The program for the two days was full, which makes it impossible to give an account of each service in detail, although each was flavored with a marked degree of spirituality, which made them profitable indeed.

We were surely fortunate in having with us Apostle E. J. Gleazer. His sermons on "What good things shall I do in order that I may have eternal life?" "The ensign set up in latter days," and "Why the gathering?" will prove of great value to the listeners, providing they put the teachings into practice.

Other speakers were Elders Allen and Dirk Schreur of Gaylord; Elder Hector McKinnon of East Jordan; Elder R. D. Davis of the Soo; and Elder E. N. Burt of Onaway.

We spent an enjoyable Saturday evening listening to a Children's Day program directed by Sister Marie Kimber. She is a young sister who has only recently come into the church, which fact made it still more appreciated.

The Northern Michigan district orchestra was well represented. Their music contributed to the success of the services and seemed very much appreciated.

Gladstone proved to be a very convenient place for meetings, being so centrally located that Saints drove from Munising, Manistique, Whitehead, Grand Marais, Sault Sainte Marie and Iron Mountain to attend. Elder Burt baptized two Sunday afternoon.

We certainly had an enjoyable two days with the Gladstone and Wells Saints, and all look forward to meeting them again.

Pleasantview Branch

TRYON, NEBRASKA, June 16—The branch elected officers the first Sunday in the month.

The publicity department is still moving, with better prospects for the future.

The Sunday school is doing fine. A picnic is to be held July 4, and a program is being provided. Neighbors and friends, and the North Platte Sunday school, have been invited. We wish Elder C. W. Prettyman could be present also. He may be here by that time.

The work is moving on slowly. We have advertisements in our county paper each week announcing the Sunday school work.

Fanning, Kansas

On May 31, Elder T. E. Hale and family visited relatives in this vicinity. Brother Hale occupied the morning hour with a very edifying talk which was enjoyed by all. His daughters, Oma and Alma, played a piano duet.

A rally day was held at Troy June 7, followed by a basket dinner. Saint Joseph Second Branch came over in cars, and the young people, assisted by some not so young, put on a musical and mixed program which was greatly appreciated. Fanning also joined in this gathering.

Miss Vera Twombly, who has been attending the University of Kansas for the last year, was present at the rally. She expects to return for the summer term.

The weather in this vicinity has been very rainy this spring, and in some instances floods have been experienced.

Sunday, June 14, Children's Day exercises were held at Fanning. In the forenoon a nice program was given, the church being beautifully decorated with flowers and ferns. In the evening stereopticon slides were shown by Branch President F. G. Hedrick. The theme was the rise of the church and the finding of the Book of Mormon plates. The pictures, as well as the lecture, were very instructive.

On Thursday, June 11, the ladies of Fanning group met and cleaned the church, and the lawn was mowed by the brethren.

Brother R. L. Tilden was in attendance Sunday night, after a long absence caused by sickness. We were glad to see him able to be out again.

Brother George Hopkins is afflicted at this time with his leg and foot. We hope for his speedy recovery.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
San Antonio, Texas
June 10.—A nice program was given on Mothers' Day by the Sunday school, after a recital of lessons, which was enjoyed by all. Pastor T. J. Jett was the speaker at seven o'clock.

May 26 a musical program was given at the church under the management of Miss Eva Richardson and Miss Mary Barber, which netted $30 for the building fund. We have some splendid talent among our young people and are glad to note their willingness to use it to the benefit of the church.

At a recent business meeting, a locating committee of four sisters was appointed with the pastor as chairman. The committee immediately located a beautiful building site in the southeastern part of the city which could be purchased at a bargain. They reported to the branch, and the body authorized them to purchase. The same committee was then appointed to solicit funds with which to finance the project. The Saints are responding as liberally as their circumstances permit, and some nonmembers have contributed liberally. The Saints feel greatly encouraged at the prospect of having a new church building in the near future. Any contributions toward this fund will be thankfully received.

The financial outlook for the farmers in this part of the State is not very encouraging on account of the drouth. Some have cut their corn down for feed, as there was not enough moisture in the ground to cause it to mature.

There has been quite a bit of illness among the members here recently, and some are still ill. Brother George Galbraith, who fell from a building some time ago, is still suffering from the effects of his fall. Grandmother Jett is still bedfast, but is improving some. Sister Joseph Smith is in the hospital, and they expect to have to operate on her. Brother J. P. Neal, who had a stroke several years ago, is still helpless. We ask the prayers of the Saints for these afflicted ones.

Notwithstanding the fact that some have been sorely afflicted, the Lord is blessing us in a spiritual way. At the last sacramental service, a splendid degree of the Spirit was felt in the prayers and testimonies, which caused our hearts to rejoice. Brother L. L. Henson was the speaker at the evening service, using for his theme, "The signs of Christ's second coming." The branch is fortunate in having such efficient help as Brothers Henson and R. E. Miller are able to render. The latter is only with us occasionally, being called from the city a great deal on account of business. However the Saints appreciate his efforts when he is able to be present.

Wagner, South Dakota
June 16.—The Saints here are wide awake. Brother Stanley Benner and I came here last winter and have felt the necessity of doing our part. By the labor of men in past years, we can see the great work grow.

We were blessed Sunday, June 14, with a very spiritual day, there being a well-prepared program arranged by a young people's committee, after which the visiting Saints were invited to different homes for dinner. In the afternoon a number of automobiles and a truck load drove thirteen miles to Lake Andes, where a spiritual baptismal service was held. Ten fine young people were led into the water. There were many nonmembers to witness the ordinance.

There is a great work to be done here, and we look for a gathering in which will surely be the fruit of the labor of such men as Brothers George M. Vandel and C. J. Smith.

We hope to have a number of young people attend the young people's convention at Missouri Valley.

The Saints are hoping to be organized into a branch in the near future. We are made to rejoice by the promise of God has made to the priesthood, that nothing shall stay his hand. May we all feel to move forward as one great family and redeem Zion.

AMOS LAMSON.

Sioux City, Iowa
June 18.—Patriarch Frederick A. Smith and Elder Joseph Lane, president of the Little Sioux District, are with us at present, visiting and instructing us. They are here to arouse interest in the district's young people's convention, which will be held in Missouri Valley July 9 to 12. The convention will follow a plan similar to that used at Lamoni.

Out-of-town guests the past month were: Mr. and Mrs. Verne Newberry and daughter June of Independence; Mrs. Bernard Case, Walthill, Nebraska; Archie Walker, Leslie and Lynn White, Cherokee, Iowa; Mr. and Mrs. L. O. Myers, Hornick, Iowa; Mrs. Mertie Edmonson and son Rollie, Mrs. I.uce and daughters, Mabel and Ethel, of Anthon, Iowa; and Elder W. A. Smith, missionary supervisor of the Gallands Grove District. Elder Smith preached for us at the evening service on Children's Day.

Sister Al Johnson and children, Marie and Lester, visited in Missouri Valley May 30 and 31. Sister C. Boulten visited in Council Bluffs these dates. Decoration Day was spent in Little Sioux, Iowa, by the D. Morgareidge, Sam Rains, Wayne Dickey, Milo Hall, A. Sherman, and Lou Frost families, and Mrs. Charles J. Smith and children.

Sister May Wilson, of Moorhead, Iowa, has been ill in one of the local hospitals. Sister Mary Rich visited relatives in Cherokee the latter part of May. Brother and Sister Oran J. Barr of Des Moines have come to our city. We are glad to welcome them. Sister Rook and daughter Ocie, of Fort Scott, Kansas, are visiting in the O. B. Rook home. Sister May Wood and daughter Winifred leave for Council Bluffs Saturday. The intermediate class of the Religio gave a farewell party in Winifred's honor.

The young men's training class have swelled their Christmas offering by ten dollars as a result of an ice cream social held at Brother T. Beauchenne's home, near Stevens, South Dakota. The Sunday school has twenty "blue button" boosters, sixteen "red," and thirty-two "green." A number are working for the gold pins.

The Sunday school has eighteen beginnings, fifteen primaries, seventeen juniors, and twelve intermediates, according to a special number of the Saint's Pilot, which was dedicated to them on Children's Day.

Children's Day was an eventful one here and will long be remembered by a goodly number. The program was enjoyed by nearly two hundred. Eight little children were blessed by the elders during the program hour: Goldie Lucille Kearines, George Weddle, J. Ronald Brady, Carl Arthur Leckland, Neoma Lucille Connell, Margarette Elizabeth Connell, Lloyd Nelson Fox, and Myrle Louise Ryder. At three o'clock seven precious souls were added to God's kingdom by baptism in beautiful McCook Lake, Elder Charles J. Smith officiating. Those taking this important step are: Dewey Weddle and wife, Minnie; Mrs. Clifford Welch, Norman Newkirk, Juanita and Hazel Bower, and Dorothy DeHarty. The Sioux City Branch welcomes them with the hand of fellowship.
Independence

Stone Church

Sunday was rather warm, but the attendance throughout the day was good. Over one thousand were present at Sunday school, and the orchestra rendered pleasing numbers. At eleven o'clock the choir gave its farewell songs, for it takes a vacation of two months during July and August. There was also a clarinet solo by Charles Church, Jr., of Lamoni, Iowa. Brother Ralph W. Farrell was the preacher of the hour and gave a fervent and scholarly address. His message was: Work while it is called to-day, for the night cometh when no man can work. The church's great program today is one of action. We should cease quibbling over trifles and minor things.

The afternoon prayer meeting was well attended and spiritual. Patriarch I. N. White presided and addressed the Saints with all the fire and vigor of youth. He said in all his fifty-seven years in this work he had never seen a time so propitious for good as the present. The church is in shape for a glorious work, and there have never been at its head more humble and capable men than at present.

The campus services convened Sunday evening with President F. M. Smith as the speaker. In spite of the threatening weather an audience conservatively estimated at 2,500 was present. The new loud speakers made it possible for everyone in the audience to hear the sweet strains from the orchestra under the direction of Brother R. T. Cooper, and every word uttered by President Smith was carried to those in the audience.

President Smith quoted Acts 2:42-47 and 3:21-33, and took up the account in Acts where the saints sold their possessions and had things common, showing how the doctrine had been grossly misunderstood and misrepresented by people who attempted to emulate it. He showed also that the property which the Saints disposed of was their surplus wealth with which the Lord had blessed them, and the poor among them who received it were needy, and no doubt worthy, "for they did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, and great grace was upon them all." So distribution was according to their just wants, and the sellings of their surplus was an accounting of their stewardships. No man considered what he possessed as his own—only his to use. The last General Conference put over one great thing at least—it voted to carry out the doctrine of stewardship and the great social program. If they fail in this they voted condemnation to their souls. Following are some of the high lights in the sermon:

The grace of God was the cause which moved the Saints to adopt the principle of stewardship.

A religion of ritualism only is simply lip service. The Saints referred to in the text were moved upon by the grace of God, and it reached deep into their lives and affected all their activities.

Christian, scientific equality is equality of opportunity, of service, and of distribution.

When we understand the custom of the eastern countries referred to in the text we can readily understand what was sold and placed before the church authorities was the surplus. Distribution was on the basis of just needs. Proper distribution of wealth will raise the standard of living as a whole.

As this church is the one in succession of the one Christ established, it must also be filled with the grace of God, and precisely the same results will follow.

We must spiritually prepare a landing place as it were for the New Jerusalem. Team work of the group will do it.

Will anyone dare say the social program adopted by the General Conference is premature?

The spirit of stewardship is to Christianize industry, make it spiritual and sublime. Let this be our slogan for the times: "We dedicate anew our services to God, to the church, to humanity."

Group 17 felt so well over their various achievements, spiritual and financial, that they concluded to celebrate Wednesday evening. They met on the lawn of Bishop Charles Fry on Hayward Street. Elder A. K. Dillee, in charge of the group for a number of years, gave a short historical sketch of the group since it was organized in 1918. The outstanding features of the group are: Old and young attend the meetings, and the priesthood work together in unity and are to be found in attendance at the services. Elder R. J. Lambert, pastor of the Second Church, Bishop J. A. Becker, and C. Ed Miller were among the visitors present.

Second Church

Sunday was Children's Day at the brick church, and it was filled with activities by and for the children. The children were in evidence at the morning prayer service, several under teen age taking active part in the meeting. This was followed by the regular session of Sunday school, but a new touch was given to it because of the beautiful and bountiful floral decorations of the various parts of the building. The work was artistically done and brought a welcome sensation of peace and beauty.

At eleven o'clock several children appeared with short numbers, and Elders P. A. Sherman and R. J. Lambert addressed the good audience.

Half past one saw a large number congregated to witness the baptism of eight candidates. Their confirmation and reception into the church followed at the 2:30 service, and all were interested and delighted by this service which was under the direction of Elder A. K. Dillee.

The children's program was rendered in the evening, closing promptly at nine o'clock, and was practically all by the children of tender years, including the opening prayer, directing of the singing, announcing of the numbers of the program, and the pronouncing of the benediction, besides the singing, declaiming, reading, and instrumental musical numbers.

Last Wednesday evening Group 17 held a social on the lawn back of the home of Bishop Charles Fry, planned and executed by the group officers, who gave an hour's program which included an interesting history of the doings of the group since its organization in 1918.

More than one hundred Saints were in attendance at the group prayer meetings of Section 2 on Wednesday evening, and a good interest is reported.

Walnut Park

This community was truly shocked on the morning of the 26th, when it was learned that good old Sister Elizabeth Victory was dead. She and her husband were among the first Saints to locate at Walnut Park, and their faithfulness to their church duties is well known. Brother Victory having died some years ago, Sister Victory has shared her home with two of her aged brothers, one of whom is blind and has received her devoted attention. Though Sister Victory was eighty-six years old, she was very active and seemingly in good health, rising at her usually early hour on Friday morning but was suddenly stricken with a severe pain in her chest and at half past eight had passed away. The funeral was held at the church on Sunday at three o'clock, Brother J. A. Dowker preaching the sermon.
At the eleven o'clock hour Brother Glaud Smith preached an impromptu sermon, in the absence of the expected speaker. He had splendid liberty in teaching the Saints their duties as homemakers, his observations as pastor making him vitally conscious of the importance of his subject.

East Independence

Brother Harvey Minton was home the last week. He returned from his mission field in Kansas preparatory to moving his family there.

Brother M. F. Gowell was the speaker Sunday morning. His sermon was an appeal to all to be faithful in working out our salvation. At this service, it was decided to dispense with the evening service, that all who can may attend the service at the Campus. This change was not permanent, but was only for the one day.

Vivian, the infant daughter of Brother and Sister Fred Bailey, was blessed Sunday by Brothers Harvey Minton and M. F. Gowell.

At three o'clock Sunday afternoon, Sister Sampson met with the Saints and spoke in regard to the work of the Orioles and Temple Builders. Several Temple Builders from Independence were present, dressed in their uniforms, and as they engaged in their chorus singing and one of them gave a reading, we hoped it might be an inspiration to our girls to do all they can in developing along the lines of service. Brother Charles Koehler gave an interesting and instructive talk in regard to the work of the Harvest Festival. The work of redeeming Zion consists of so many activities we must all be workers together with God. Each line of activity is needed, and we trust all will be ready to donate to the Harvest Festival.

Holden Stake

The Saints were pleased to have Brother J. M. Terry with them recently and enjoyed his fine sermon.

Brother John Lovell, who has been quite sick from blood poison, is much better. The condition of Sister William Lycan, who has been confined to her bed for months, remains about the same.

The stake presidency and bishopric held a meeting June 26 and canvassed matters pertaining to the work of the church in the stake. The spirit of consultation, coordination, and unanimity prevailed to a degree which was indeed gratifying.

The officers of the stake are united in endeavoring to carry out the church program as adopted at the last General Conference. They ask the cooperation and support of the Saints. We are "workers together" and "all are called" to take part. Let each Saint read the article on "Stewardships" beginning in the Herald of last week, which is being presented by Bishop A. Carmichael.

The activities of the officers of the stake will be limited for the present, owing to Bishop Koehler's being busy in moving his family from Saint Joseph, Missouri, and his appointment to work at a number of the reunions. Also on account of the illness of Brother Kruhl and illness in the family of Brother Macrae.

A call was sent out from the stake office for offerings from the congregations in the stake to assist in the effort to properly establish the work in Jefferson City. These offerings should be turned in to the local solicitor and sent at once to Bishop J. A. Koehler, at Holden, Missouri, so that the work may not be held back. Scattered Saints in the stake may send their offerings direct to Bishop Koehler.

Elder E. A. Curtis, one of our missionaries appointed to the stake, is in charge and is on the ground with the stake tent. Elder F. A. Rowe, who is working in the stake, self-sustaining, under arrangements with the First Presidency and stake presidency, is laboring with Brother Curtis. They have secured desirable location for the tent in one of the beautiful parks. Jefferson City is the capital of Missouri. The "land of Missouri" means something to the Latter Day Saints. May we all work together in helping these brethren establish the work at this important point.

Blue Springs

Sunday, June 14, was observed as Children's Day. At the close of the regular morning services, the entire congregation went by auto to the farm of Brother W. P. Mayes where Brother A. E. Campbell, superintendent of the Sunday school, administered the ordinance of baptism to two little girls, daughters of Brother and Sister W. E. Oglevie. A basket lunch was then enjoyed. The children's program was held at the hall at eight o'clock, confirmation of those baptized being a part of the service, Elders F. Nadin and F. J. Lewis officiating. Readings and musical numbers were well rendered and thoroughly enjoyed.

Attendance at the services has been excellent, and the outlook is encouraging.

Lee's Summit

Elder R. D. Weaver was the speaker at both services June 14, and his efforts were enjoyed.

Our young people who attended the convention at Lamoni have returned, much enthused and encouraged.

Warrensburg

The summer students in attendance at the college are annually given a reception by their respective churches soon after the opening of the term. Our entertainment consisted of a motor trip to the Holden Home. A long table on the beautiful lawn was supplied with sandwiches, salads, ice cream, and cookies, and a social good time was enjoyed. We gratefully acknowledge assistance from the matron, Sister Edith Carr, and daughters Gladys and Myrtle; also Sisters Ruth McPherson, Grace Daugherty, Gladys Beebe, Winnie Merrick, Daisy Spence, Jess Merrick and Brother Bouchet. A short program was rendered for the old people in the Home chapel.

Sister W. S. Macrae entered the Sanitarium as a patient last week. Brethren C. L. House and C. F. Scarcliff were the speakers here June 28, and their efforts were appreciated.

Study Outline for Stewardships

There has been printed at the Herald Publishing House within the past week a pamphlet containing a "suggestive outline for the study of the social program of the church," of which President Floyd M. McDowell is the author and compiler, President Frederick M. Smith writing a brief foreword.

President Smith states this work has been produced in response to an insistent demand for an outline for study of the subject of stewardships and other social questions, and that the purpose is to place these in the hands of individuals and bodies who desire to introduce the study into various organizations, such as priesthood meetings, study classes, Sunday school classes. His foreword also says: "It is hoped and desired that this suggested outline will be used constructively; not that it is either complete or all that can be desired in arrangement, but it is a start in the right direction. We shall welcome criticisms and suggestions."

The pamphlets are being handled by the office of the First Presidency.
Lamoni Stake

“Summer messengers” was the name of the pageant given in Lamoni at eleven o’clock, June 28, which day was the Children’s Day. This pageant was written by Sister Mabel A. Sanford, of Nauvoo, Illinois. The costumes were pretty, and the program showed that much work had been put upon it both by the children and the committee. The decorating the choir loft was hidden with green boughs, and the flowers were white that they might not detract from the children’s costumes. A great many helpers made this program a success; certain individuals were given special numbers as a responsibility, and then the last week these helpers, with Sister Louella Wight directing and Sister Lena Prall as pianist, assembled the program.

Baptismal services were held in the lower auditorium at half past two, and thirteen children were baptized and confirmed. They were: Dorothy Arlene Turpen, Vernon Classon, Frederick Brown, George Howard, Rosalie Blair, Eva Braby, Mary Briggs, Loren Howard, Wayvee Derry, Bogene Lewis, Rogene Lysinger, June Newcomer, and Hazel Tousley.

Each large baptismal service brings the thought that a new font in some place where all could see would be a pleas- unspeakable.

This evening the Children’s Day services are to be contin- ued when the intermediates and the orchestra will participate and Brother Floyd McDowell will deliver a sermon.

A farewell picnic for Brother and Sister Albert Carmichael was given in Central Park Friday evening. The general church officers, general church appointees, stake officers, including the stake high council, presidents of the branches in the southern part of the stake, and the companions of all these, enjoyed the picnic supper. President McDowell was master of ceremonies. G. W. Blair, mayor of Lamoni, spoke of the civic work of the Carmichaels; Brother Oscar Anderson brought them to light as business people; Brother J. F. Garver spoke of their church work, and President George N. Briggs dwelt upon the work of Brother Carmichael as a member of the college board. A cut glass water set was presented to the departing ones. W. E. Prall, president of Lamoni Stake, offered the prayer.

Brother Stephen Robinson, of Des Moines, one of the at- torneys in the State Railway Commission office, was in La­ moni Tuesday of last week consulting with church authorities on some contemplated projects.

Sister Paul Gruver died rather suddenly early Thursday morning. The funeral was from the residence on Saturday afternoon.

Brothers Mifflin and Yarrington are to occupy at the Homes for the aged this evening.

The sacramental services will be held next Sunday, and Brother D. E. Dowker of the Lamoni stake presidency is expected to occupy in the evening.

The choir will begin its work on the reunion music this coming week under the supervision of Brother Evan Fry.

Mrs. Byrdie Magargue, of Howell, Michigan, Route 2, writes that if there are any Saints near there she would like to get in touch with them. The only answer she gets to her inquiries regarding Saints is, “They have all moved to Lansing.” She has been used to the association of Saints and feels very lonely in her new home, but feels that if the Lord had a purpose in leading them there they want to do all they can to fulfill their duty.

Nauvoo, Illinois

June 25.—At a recent business meeting, a ways and means committee was appointed to raise funds for a new furnace for the church by fall. Brother August Lee was made chairman of this committee with Sister Clara Lewis and Brother Titus Henderson as assistants. The committee announced that a strawberry and ice cream social would be held on the church lawn, and all worked hard to make this a success. Long tables and seats were erected and a booth where ice cream, strawberries, and homemade candy were dispensed. The church lawn was an ideal place for such an affair; the tables presented an attractive appearance with their white cloths and bouquets of flowers. The Fort Madison band was an added attraction and kindly assisted by rendering some fine music. The townspersons patronized liberally, and $31 was cleared.

The Young People’s Christian Association held their regular meeting at the Saints’ church. A goodly number were present, and after a short program they retired to the lawn where a very enjoyable time was spent in playing games.

The high school and alumni held a farewell party for Sister Irene Layton, surprising her one evening at her home. She sailed for Europe the 19th of June and will visit England, Scotland, Holland, Switzerland, Belgium, Italy, and France, returning in time to take up her teaching again at Graceland.

Sanford Fisher, of Boston, Massachusetts, visited Nauvoo on his way home from Graceland. Brother Gomer T. Griffiths and his bride are also visiting Nauvoo and the Saints are hoping they can to be persuaded to make this their permanent home. Brother Griffiths has many wonderful experiences to relate, and these things are very strengthening to the faith of the Saints. We marvel at the miraculous experiences of the apostles in the early days, and yet our men of to-day are having just as wonderful experiences, and if a record was kept would be amazing to read. Brother Griffiths is writing his autobiography, and we feel sure it will prove very interesting to the Saints, as well as strengthening to their faith.

Children’s Day was appropriately observed. Brother Griffiths talked to the children at the morning hour, relating some of the remarkable experiences of his boyhood. Brother and Sister Fisher presented their baby girl to be blessed. A song of welcome was sung, and an original poem given by Sister Lewis. In the evening a concert in charge of A. L. Sanford was given by the children of the Sunday school, which everyone declared was the best yet.

The district conference was held at Rock Creek and was a time of spiritual uplift. We had with us Patriarch Gomer T. Griffiths, Apostle F. Henry Edwards, Elder Amos Berve, Charles F. Putnam, and G. S. Daniel. Brother Putnam gave an illustrated lecture on the Book of Mormon, Brother Daniel spoke on church policy, Brother Edwards on equality, and Brother Berve on discipline in the home and church. These topics were handled in a way that was enjoyed by all present. At the ordination meeting held Sunday afternoon, the Spirit was present to a marked degree while the following were ordained to office: Those of Rock Creek were Brother Elmer Sherman to the office of elder; Elbert Lambert, priest; and William Thomas, teacher. Of Fort Madison, Edwin Wright and Harold Smith to the office of priest, and Robert Brown, deacon. These three boys are still in high school.

At the noon hour a bountiful feast, for which Rock Creek is famous, was spread on the lawn, and all formed in line and passed around the long table, plates in hand, and helped Evangelist F. G. Pitt Improves

From a letter to the First Presidency

Dear Brother Smith: Elder Pitt continues to improve, the doctor saying he is making good progress. It will, of course, require some time to gain strength, but all being well we plan leaving by July 4, proceeding to Kirtland. We had thought it possible that I could care for the Temple work, with the assistance of local help such as we have had in the past, until he would be sufficiently strong to assist. We are only anxious to do what we can to help. If you have other plans or desire other arrangements, please do not hesitate in telling us, for we realize the necessity of the occasion and want to do that which is best. We are going to Kirtland anyhow, as some of our belongings are there, and we will remain there a month or six weeks regardless of what other arrangements may be made, and shall be happy to do our bit in the work of the Temple, if desired. It is a great disappointment to us, as you realize I am sure, in not being able for once to be at the post of duty. We are happy though in the thought that Elder Pitt will soon be well again and ready for service. With this understanding we shall be glad to hear from you as to what you desire and think best in the matter. Rosa P. Pitt.

Battle Creek, Michigan, June 23.

Successful Three-Week Meeting Ends With Baptisms

VALS MILLS, OHIO.—A three-week meeting closed at this place Tuesday evening, June 16. The last week of May Elders Bishop and May, from Southern Ohio District, arrived here for a series of meetings. Brother Bishop was here a few days and was then called to Columbus. However, he returned for June 7 when an all-day meeting was held, including Sunday school, preaching, picnic dinner on the lawn, baptizing of eight people, confirmation, sacrament service, and preaching again in the evening.

Those who have been here know of the beautiful location of the church. It is surrounded by trees, and is on the bank of a stream, an ideal place for baptizing. Just above where they baptize is a long bridge, also a mill dam all together giving ample room for all to see the service.

Later in the week two more were baptized, and the last evening four more, making a total of fourteen—four married people and ten young people. We feel that our forces have been strengthened and that the meetings have been a great benefit. Sometimes the attendance at Sunday school and prayer meetings has been very small, yet we only pray more earnestly that our labors will yet bear fruit.

On June 21 we had thirty-one at Sunday school, twenty-one of them being members. About the same number were present at Religio in the evening.

The evening of July 3 an ice cream social will be given on the church lawn. Proceeds will be given to buy a bookcase for the library. The general library is financed by the birthday offering. Also those who wish to donate books for the library.

We are hoping that the work may grow and this year prove successful in other places as well as here.

Flint, Michigan

June 20.—The late General Conference took one of our able workers from our midst and planted him in Port Huron, with that city as his pastorate and the Eastern Michigan District as his field of labor in the capacity of district president. A farewell party was held in honor of Brother Matthew Liston, and while we in this district shall miss him, yet all join in wishing him success in his new sphere of activity.

On May 16 and 17 the Detroit district conference was held at Pontiac, at which time Brother Liston tendered his resignation as district president. Elder W. L. Bennett, of Detroit, was chosen as his successor, with Elders J. Charles Mottashed and Arthur H. DuRose as his counselors.

Brother E. J. Gleazer addressed a representative body of the local priesthood on May 19, giving a very inspiring address.

A mother and daughter banquet was held May 12 with about one hundred and forty in attendance. The men were the chief cooks and dishwashers for the occasion.

Children's Day, June 14, a pleasing program was presented by the children of the Newall Church Sunday school. A large crowd was in attendance, many of them nonmembers. Pastor B. F. Anspaugh gave a talk on the scriptural foundation for the blessing of children and its significance, after which six babies were blessed. Brother Silas C. Roberson, the father of one of the babies, left the next day for Miami, Florida, where he will go into dentistry.

Elder James D. Duncan, of this city, passed to his reward at the home of his daughter June 7, aged seventy-five years.

Burial was at West Branch, Michigan, Elder Anspaugh officiating.

We are looking forward to a great field day and convention July 4 and 5, to be sponsored by the young people of the Detroit District. One of the local parks has been secured for the sports on Saturday, and the auditorium of the new high school is the meeting place for Sunday. It is expected that Mayor Transus will deliver the opening address on Saturday. The speakers Sunday will be J. Charles Mottashed and John F. Martin.

Sioux City, Iowa

June 24.—Seven of those interested in the branch's welfare met at the church last evening and enjoyed a spiritual occasion, it being the regular mid-monthly priesthood meeting postponed from last Tuesday. It seemed to be the opinion of all that the membership should be visited often. In fact, requests come daily for visitations from the priesthood, not alone for those who look after the spiritual affairs, but for those who are caring for the temporal or monetary considerations.

It is felt that the preconvention services here have been very instructive and inspiring. The Sunday services were very well attended and the instructions received kindly. A number received their patriarchal blessings under the hands of Patriarch F. A. Smith. The Sioux City Branch wishes Brethren Smith and Lane Godspeed on their mission of love. A purse of over twenty dollars was given them Sunday evening which partly showed the Saints appreciation.

Last Sunday morning at eleven o'clock a new Sunday school was organized at the home of Sister Mary Boulden, 1302 Plymouth Street. For the present it will be known as the Kelly Park Sunday School. Twenty-one persons were present for the organization meeting. Officers were elected, and teachers appointed for three classes as follows: Superintendent, Mrs. Laura Case; assistant superintendent, Mrs. Mary Boulden; secretary-treasurer, Lucinda Baber; librarian, Mrs. Chlorina Kirby; teacher of primaries, Alma Bryant; teacher of juniors, Mrs. Hazel KeaIrnes. For the present Sister Boulden will be chorister and pianist, and Sister Case will teach the seniors. The offering was ninety-two cents. Next Sunday this Sunday school will meet at the same time and place.—From The Saints' Pilot.

Children's Day at Logan, Iowa

June 27.—We had set June 14 for our Children's Day program, but it was a stormy day, raining almost all the forenoon, and as a number of our Saints live in the country it was thought best to postpone the meeting until June 21.

This was a beautiful day, and a houseful enjoyed a nice program at the eleven o'clock hour. One splendid feature of the day was the baptismal service in the afternoon in the font at the chapel. Five of our Sunday school boys and girls took the sacred step and bravely entered the watery grave, dedicating their little lives to the service of God.

At the opening of this service, the junior choir sang, and prayer was offered by a thirteen-year-old lad, Carl McDonald, of Rummells, Iowa, who is visiting here. The names of the brave little soldiers who have enlisted are, Ralph Laughunn, Earl Carlile, Helen Niles, Maxene Mann, and Dorothy Carlile. During the baptizing the junior choir led in singing the songs of Zion.

In the evening they were confirmed, and a goodly portion of the spirit of the Master was present, witnessing that it was a blessed hour in the service of the Master. We earnestly pray that God may truly care for and bless these boys and girls, that in his own due time they may be helpers in his great kingdom.

At the following week's prayer service we were glad to hear mingled with those of the older ones the voice of one of these little ones in testimony, thanking God for the many good things he does for us all, and that he was truly glad he had been baptized. It does us all good to see the earnestness manifested by the young.

We are trying to keep the banner afloat in this part of the Master's vineyard, and we are looking forward with pleasure to the young people's convention to be held at Missouri Valley, Iowa, July 8 to 12, inclusive. A cordial invitation is extended to all the young of our neighboring districts to come and meet with us.

We hope and pray for a spiritual feast to all who come.

Elder A. H. Parsons writes from New Port Richy, Pasco County, Florida, that this place will be his post office address. He will be glad to answer letters of those who will inclose postage for reply, for he has no resource but the church funds, and he thinks he should not write for the information or profit of others while the church stands the expense. He needs prayers of the Saints that he may be enabled to do his work. In concluding he says, "May peace come to the Zion of God as a fountain of fresh water filling the souls of God's children with undying love that makes for the ensign of God to a dying world."

Mallard, Iowa

June 28.—The Saints here are still striving to move forward. No services were held June 7 because of the conference being held at Cherokee. The Saints all enjoyed the conference and were blessed by going.

Brother and Sister Edwards and son were with us May 24, and Brother Edwards preached both morning and evening. The morning subject was "Life," and was to the young people, being full of good thoughts for all. We feel that Brother Edwards is indeed trying to do all he can for the Lord's work.

Brother and Sister Smith of Independence, Missouri, were present at the evening service and favored us with a vocal duet which was very much enjoyed.

On June 14 only an hour was given to the Sunday school, after which each one gave reports on what they learned at conference. All gained some knowledge, and we want to improve in the Lord's work.

The prayer meeting last Wednesday was good. The children always bear their testimonies, and we are much pleased with their efforts. Truly a little child shall lead, and they are an inspiration to us with their example.

The evening of June 19 the children gave a dramatization of Joseph, showing how his cruel brothers treated him. The older ones enjoyed the entertainment very much.

Alexander, Kansas

June 22.—The Saints here are busy at present harvesting the "golden grain." The crop here is much lighter than last year, due to insufficient rain and so much hot wind, but the farmers are thankful for what crop there is.

The gospel work is brightening. Attendance has increased from thirty to nearly fifty, and we are praying that all will put oil in their lamps and let their light shine so that Alexander and vicinity may know of the restored gospel.

June 21 was a happy day for those attending services. We had a lively Sunday school, followed by preaching by Brother John Teeters, who had good liberty, and at the close of the service little Archie Stephens was baptized by Brother Teeters and confirmed by Brothers Reed and Teeters. We had with us at this service Brother and Sister Francis, who are working for the Farmers Union in Kansas. These Saints love the work and drove from Wakeeny, a distance of fifty-five miles, to enjoy the worship of God here. Brother and Sister Francis and Brother and Sister Teeters and family then went home with Brother and Sister Alva Reed, who had prepared a bounteous repast. The rest of the time was filled with talking and singing the songs of Zion. The crowd broke up in the evening feeling it is good to be Saints of latter days.

Sister Chrystal Teeters and Wanda Schaben are attending Hays City College, a branch of the Emporia State Normal School. They spend each week-end with home folks. They are enjoying their work very much.

A cyclone struck eleven miles south of Alexander the evening of June 16, destroying all the property except the house of Sister Gladys Schadel. As she was shutting the door of the henhouse, the storm took it "out of her hands" and smashed it to pieces. She went to the house and found the windmill blown down, and feels lucky that no life was lost.

Let us all strive to live so that we may be approved of God. Some of the Saints are not very well. Pray for the work here.

The Spirit of the Young People's Convention

Is it too late to comment on the Young People's Convention? I trust not. As has been reported, the attendance was not so great as last year. Various factors contributed to this. In other ways the convention was one of the biggest and best ever held.

Others have reported in either Herald or Autumn Leaves the various features, class work, recreation, preaching and prayer services. I will comment only on the spirit of the convention. I was privileged to deliver four sermons in which I endeavored to set forth the old-time spiritual inheritance of the church: her doctrines, organization, gifts and blessings, and her program, both missionary and Zionic. I was also privileged to attend the regular morning prayer services. The spirit of those meetings was exactly the spirit that was with the fathers and grandfathers of these young people in years gone by.

Naturally, as men grow older they begin to inquire, Are the young people who are springing up around me, and who with such astonishing rapidity grow to manhood and womanhood and begin to express their own ideas and take over the work of life, are they true to the old ideals of the church? Have they the true spirit of the church? Judged by the atmosphere of the convention, both of these questions may and should be answered in the affirmative.

At the convention one hears much about the spirit of Graceland. This because so many students and former students are in attendance, President Briggs speaking for the college summed up this phrase in a testimony at one prayer service when he said:

"The spirit of Graceland is the spirit of the church, the spirit of Zion, the Spirit of Christ. Graceland has no reason to exist except as it has with it the Spirit of Christ."

As exemplifying the spirit of Graceland students he related how one college president visited Graceland and after going through the various buildings, meeting with the students, etc., remarked, "Professor Briggs, you have no problems of discipline."

This may have been an exaggerated statement, because there are some problems of discipline; there were, even in heaven. But he recognized that the great majority of Graceland students are imbued with gospel principles and are trying to conform thereto; hence Graceland's problems of discipline are reduced almost to a minimum.

One instructor who is not a church member has continued in the college for several years despite better financial offers from other places, and she remarked that she considered the midweek prayer meeting as part of her pay check. This spirit, intensified, was carried over into the convention. The gospel has actually worked out in the lives of the young people at school, and so naturally it worked at the convention. Our young Brother Mesley of Australia bore a typical testimony: "The thing I have learned here is to stand on my own feet; to be sure of my grounds, and then go ahead, trusting in God and exercising charity toward others." Another young man testified, "The lessons I have learned here are not especially the lessons from the textbooks. They are lessons in life—lessons in right living."

It was especially interesting to me to note the reaction of some of the elderly men who attended the convention prayer services. The veteran missionary, M. M. Turpen, testified: "The Spirit I feel here makes me young again. If I cannot do anything more, I will stand back of these young men and women and say, Go forward; God speed you. I believe the work will grow more rapidly than ever before." Another aged missionary, J. M. Stubbart, testified, "The same spirit and zeal which you young people now have I had away back in the 80's. I am glad to see the work moving more rapidly, as it has done of late years."

Years ago when I was a young missionary I preached a sermon at one of our reunions which for some reason was favorably received. After the sermon I was in my tent and could not fail to overhear the remarks of some older men who gathered in the neighborhood. One of them "jollied" Brother James Moler, remarking, "You old men will have to step lively or these young ones will be getting ahead of..."
How Man May Reach God

This problem of how to get in touch with the living, ruling Power of the universe comes into every man's life at some period and demands solution. Every man strikes a time when his powers are puny in the presence of a task which he regards as of transcendant importance, and one of the most convincing evidences of the existence of God is the fact that at such moments men turn to him and try to make the contact which they deem necessary.

It is interesting to note the different methods of approach in these times of crises, for they bare the nature and training of those who try to find the connecting point. A susceptible and tractable man gets lessons at such times which direct the remainder of mortal life, or at least greatly influence it. Willful and selfish and dishonest men often break at this point—they are not able to abandon the habits which they have taken to themselves, the nature of which form a barrier to communion with God.

An interesting account of how one man met this hour is given in the American Magazine for July under the burning title, "I believe in shooting square with man and God," which is an account of an interview with the successful oil operator and businessman of Tulsa and Sand Springs, Oklahoma, Mr. Charles Page, which emphasizes some of the fundamentals.

He had been reared in a Christian home. His parents had believed in the payment of a tithe to the Lord, and one seems to sense clearly that they also believed in the power and willingness of God to heal the human body. He came to the time when the wife he dearly loved and cherished lay at the point of death in a hospital, and he tried to pray God that she be spared to him. He sensed the fact that his petition had not reached its objective, and immediately there came to him the self-accusation, What have I done for God, that he should hear my voice?

"I couldn't expect God to help me. I ain't been shootin' square with him." But he didn't mark himself with littleness, or lack of courage or integrity by asking forgiveness and making promises of loyalty and service. He went to work that very night to keep the laws he recognized but had not been keeping. He began paying his titheing, as he comprehended it, bestowing a tenth of all that came into his hands upon the poor and the needy. Then he again tried to pray for the desire of his heart.

Here is a significant and fundamental thought which brought the contact: "I ain't makin' a bargain with you, God. I'm doin' this because it's the right thing for me to do." He had found the desired connection, and he tells that contrary to expectations of others, his wife improved in health and was soon well. Striking a bargain with God is a very common method which grows out of wrong training and littleness of men—they measure God by men and judge that he is to be purchased at a paltry price. God's terms are stated and specific, and they read after this manner: "When ye do what I say, then I am bound; but if ye do not what I say ye have no promise."

But the contact made that night when Charles Page began to keep the laws he recognized as the laws of God was made closer and more strong year by year as he kept the laws scrupulously, instituting a set of books for the purpose of checking up on himself. This first contact was not his life's work, but through it he finally found his work.

Since that time he has been privileged to give much to needy people, chief among them being orphaned children, and has established and endowed bountifully a home for them at Sand Springs, of which he is the head, it being conducted by a board of directors of which he is chairman.

The members of this home are taught the simple rules of honorable family life—good habits and prayer and devotion and virtue, but no set code of rules. And the system gives returns. Unruly children and discouraged and possibly rebellious adults are renewed again in the faith of God.

The fact that since his income became large he has increased his works of love marks him as one of the men who have an understanding of the laws of stewardship. First, he increased the proportion of his gifts to twenty-five per cent of his income, later to fifty per cent, and now he reserves for himself only what he needs for living expenses, and he says that since he began this system he has been happier than ever before.

One more rule this honorable man of the world recognizes and keeps is that what he does for his wards is done forever. He cannot reclaim any of the property which has been set aside for the support of the homes, though the aggregate reaches a possible value of twenty million dollars. He has arranged his affairs so as to dispose of his entire estate at death in the line of his work during life, and if his wife survives him, she will retain only their residence and a proper maintenance during her life.

Charles Page has sought God, not alone when he had need for his power, but when he wanted to find joy and peace in his activities, and he has found him just where men always find him. Man may reach him there to-day, to-morrow, evermore. His rules are fixed, but they are just and without respect of person.

Brother and Sister Chase in Honolulu

A letter from Brother A. M. Chase dated at Honolulu, Hawaii, June 24, states that he and Sister Chase were permitted to disembark about nine o'clock that morning. They were met at the wharf by Brothers Gilbert J. Waller and Prescott Foo, the appearance of those friendly faces being very welcome to them. He further says: "We are domiciled at the Mission House for the few days we shall spend in Honolulu. We expect Brother and Sister Williams [D. J.] in from Hilo Friday morning, and think we shall go on to that place some time next week. We were not troubled with much seasickness, and are glad to report that this leaves us in quite good health. I believe our mission address will be: Hilo, Hawaii, Box 922.”

Norwegian Missionary at Work

Word from Elder V. D. Ruch, written June 18 at Porsgrund, Norway, is full of good cheer and Christian courage. He says, "I have never enjoyed so much light and liberty in my preaching as I have thus far during 1925. This, in connection with other things, indicates to me that God is still at the helm, directing and blessing his church.” He describes the activities of himself and Brother E. Y. Hunker, and speaks of the visit to Norway of Brother Peter Andersen, our missionary to Denmark, and the good he accomplished in the two weeks of his stay. Other baptisms are reported at Grimstad.

He reports the probable embarkation of Brother Hunker for America, who comes because of failing health, expecting to undergo surgical treatment at

"Journal of History" Discontinued

On May 21, 1925, the Board of Publication decided to discontinue the publication of the Journal of History at the end of the present volume. The reasons assigned are the expense of publication. They also suggested that much of the material which ordinarily would appear in the Journal could well be published in the Herald.

If the subscriptions of any extend beyond the end of the present calendar year, 1925, the business manager of the Herald Office, O. W. Parker, will make proper adjustment to apply on other periodicals, or as the subscriber may desire.

Brother Amos Berve writes that the number of visitors to points of historical interest in Nauvoo are increasing from month to month.

Original Powers and Social Factors in the Creation of Personality

BY JAMES E. BISHOP

Personality includes those factors which make a person; such as a conscious separate existence as an intelligent voluntary being. The term personality is usually applied to one who has won renown in a given field of activity. According to some estimates which are based on intelligence tests conducted by the United States Army, only 15 per cent of the population of the United States are exceptionally bright, while about 40 per cent possess the intelligence of children fourteen years old, and 45 per cent are hopelessly dull. This would restrict personality to very few. However, there are those that believe every normal individual is born with a margin of difference and that the development of this margin would mean the expression of personality. One of the elements of our social philosophy is the belief that every person has the power to excel in some one thing, and that society is responsible to give the opportunity for the development of that power. This makes personality accessible to all normal beings.

This subject indicates that the two great molding factors in the formation of personality are heredity and experience. Heredity is what we start off with in life, and while we will not attempt any detailed discussion of this question, it is well known that some modifications, physical and mental, result from our ancestors. However, it seems to be the law of nature to hold specie to the normal. We cannot alter what has been done in the past. We have to take things as they are. We can, however, apply the lesson of eugenics and make less handicaps and greater possibilities for future generations. Experience is what happens to us and what we do in reaction. The roots of character are heredity, the general social environment, and personal education.

Exactly what we start off with in life is a problem. The attempts to solve this problem may be classed as religious and mystical, philosophic and psychological. The psychological field has offered two main ideas; first, that consciousness is built up of sensational elements; and second, the rudiments of life are the instincts.

The school that has claimed that consciousness and mind are a synthesis of sensational elements is called structuralist. They attempt an analysis of consciousness, and finding certain elements, just as the chemist finds such elements as hydrogen and oxygen in water, conclude that consciousness is the result. Following Mary Whiton Calkins, who says the first business of a psychologist is the accurate analysis of consciousness. For the purpose of such introspection any experience may be seized upon. I am looking from my window on Gloucester harbor and the open sea beyond, conscious of the wooded shore, rippling blue waves, cloudy horizon, white sails, and salty breeze. In this experience I at once recognize blueness, grayness, greenness, brownness, saltiness, and rippling sounds. Closer scrutiny will add to the list, distance and form. But the analysis is far from complete and is simply preliminary to the accurate analysis of the psychologist. These are only apparent elements, and each has to be studied experimentally with the hope of discovering a further analysis.

While there is not strict agreement on the number of sensational qualities, the following will illustrate the great amount of work that has been done in this direction:

Qualities of sensation:
From the skin, 4: heat, cold, pressure, pain.
From taste, 4: sweet, sour, salt, bitter.
From smell, 9: ethereal, aromatic, fragrant, ambrosiacal, allaceous, empyreumatic, hircine, virulent, nauseating.
From hearing, 11,000 (?).
From sight, 6 (?): red, green, blue, yellow, black, white.
Kinesthetic, 1 or 2.
Organic, 10 or 12.

Here we have a list of some 11,047 qualities of sensation. Others have listed 42,000. These elements, together with the feeling of pleasantness and unpleasantness, is the complete story of consciousness from the structuralist point of view and gives the coup de grace to immortality. While it is evident that the structural doctrine shows a drift in the direction of unbelief, it does not speak the final word. From such doctrine has come the glib saying: "Nothing in the senses, nothing in the mind." It is at least equally true to say the obverse: Nothing in the mind, nothing in the senses. Mind existed before the discovery of the numerous and rich sensational elements. It was mind that used them intuitively. It was mind that made the analysis. If there is nothing but these elements, there would have been no mind. When we speak of the fusing of these elements, or their synthesis, we bring in a notion that may be used to cloud the issue.

Exactly what do we mean by the fusing or synthesis of sensational elements?

It is well to say that this doctrine of the structuralists has made a contribution to child life, for it has insisted that the development of personality demands a rich environment. Rich in personal example, in color, and in sound, etc. It was thought that by making the life of the child as rich as possible...
The philosophy of learning has been unduly dominated by a false psychology. It is frequently stated that a person learns by merely having the qualities of things impressed upon his mind through the gateway of the senses. Having received a store of sensory impressions, association or some mental synthesis is supposed to fuse them into ideas, into things with a meaning. An object, stone, tree, chair, is supposed to convey different impressions of color, shape, size, hardness, smell, taste, etc., which aggregated together constitute the characteristic meaning of each thing. But as a matter of fact, it is the characteristic use to which the thing is put, because of its specific qualities, which supplies the meaning with which it is identified.—Democracy and Education, pp. 34, 35.

Wiggam, in his The New Decalogue of Science, pp. 247, 248, touches upon the structuralists' idea and has the following to offer:

First, philosophy has changed as to its theory of knowledge—the very nature of the knowing processes of the mind. Biology has made this contribution. From the old notion that knowledge was built up out of independent sensations, that is, that the senses were the gateways to knowledge, biology has contributed the new conception that knowledge is behavior, the reaction, the “hitting back” of a living organism upon its environment. Knowledge thus becomes the active, operative experience of an organism carrying out the rich possibilities of its inherent structure. Not to go into technical jargon, all the old psychology that underlay both the rationalism of the rationalist and the empiricism of the empiricist is thus so completely exploded that we can hardly realize what has become of it.

Both these statements are strong against the structuralists' notion, but there is another feature equally interesting and quite logical, and that is, that the analysis of the structuralists is incomplete: that there are some things they have overlooked. This matter that they overlooked was presented by William James, and his view was supported by Miss Calkins in her Introduction to Psychology. The factor that this brilliant psychologist directed attention to is called by Miss Calkins “Relation elements of consciousness.”

What James calls the feelings of “and” and of “but,” that is, the consciousness of connection and of opposition, and the feelings of “like” and of “different” and of “more” and of “less” are certainly relational experiences and are probably also elemental.

Any experience has these relational elements. One winter I picked up a little book, The Ways of the Planets. I read about Jupiter and found him in that part of the sky mapped out in the book. Read also about Mercury, that he was rarely seen with the naked eye and was only visible for a few minutes when the atmosphere was clear. After watching Jupiter for some time, I looked in the west, and just above the horizon I saw a small, dark-red object which I concluded corresponded to the description of Mercury. In this experience, besides the sensational and affective elements, relational elements appear. The feeling of “and,” the combination of the description in the book with what I saw; the feeling of expectancy—“if” the conditions are right, I will see Mercury. The feeling of “clearness” and “familiarity” developed with each view.

Many workers have felt that the great amount of time and energy that was spent in the analysis of structural elements and in endeavoring to find arguments to support the theory was leading to a blind alley, and so the viewpoint that behavior was the significant thing to study was adopted. From this point of departure, instinct, habit, and volition were the significant factors in human life.

The number of instincts have been listed variously from two to over one hundred in number, and they have been classified variously. The exact number and classification of instincts is not exceedingly important. The fact is that we are born with native tendencies, which have a driving power, and are modifiable into habits. Chief among these instincts may be listed sex, fear, religious, social, feeding, fighting, collecting, manipulating, play, imitation, migratory, curiosity. These are the main strains of character, and it is the work of education to take these instincts and help the owner to bring about right habits. Truly man is richly endowed. The richness of his native endowment makes it possible for him to reach high, and that very richness makes it possible to have such fearful wrecks. Speaking of the child, some one said “Heaven and hell are there potentially, waiting to be called forth.”

The study of instinct shows there are excesses, defects, and perversions. One born with excess of appetite needs to be disciplined to control it. One born with defect needs to be encouraged to increase and strengthen the defective quality. Both defects and excesses may result from learning wrongly and may not have been born with the native equipment. But perversions are always learned. A perverse use of energy or instincts is called sin in Bible language. And all of the figures of speech used in the Bible referring to the awful consequences of sin are fully sustained in the science of psychology in its study of the perversions of instincts. The writer will never forget his experience in Fort Porter, Buffalo, when Doctor G. L. Harrington took him through the mentally sick wards and we saw the different types. He was interested because of hearing lectures and having read along that line. He saw one where the social disease was attacking the brain fibers. Hell in its very bottoms could not offer a more horrible sight. And all this because of the perversion of the sex instinct.
The attempt to account for the origin of these instincts is beset with difficulties. James Harvey Robinson speaks of four historical layers of mind: the animal mind, the child mind, the savage mind, and the traditional mind. It is from this point of view that he argues against the importance of the moral factor in man.

Herbert Spencer and others have made famous the theory that human instincts are built up from the reflexes used in simple forms of life and having no connection with intelligence. This theory cannot be sustained and is swept aside by the statement of James Ward, who says, “Starting from mechanism, it is impossible to account for mind, but starting from mind it is easy to account for mechanism.”

Professor Baldwin realized this difficulty and maintained that intelligence was connected in some way with instinct. This theory is known as organic selection, and it maintains that consciousness is probably present and significant even in very low organisms. This theory does not set forth the idea of acquired characteristics being transmitted. It urges that only spontaneous variations are ever preserved and transmitted by heredity.

The theory of lapsed intelligence was set forth by Wundt. This means that organisms were guided by intelligence in working out activities that had survival value. Some of these acts were found to be extremely useful and were repeated frequently and were established firmly as habits. These habits were transmitted to offspring and so appear in the younger generation as innate.

Each of these theories is based upon the theory of a biological evolution. Two of them do suggest the guidance of intelligence in formulating the ground work of personality and would therefore be consistent with the view of a Great Personality as cause and guidance in the development of other personality. The notion that instincts are developed out of reflexes being mechanistic, rules out the idea of intelligence or personality having anything to do with origins. Psychology does not speak with authority on this problem, and some tell us that this is not a purely psychological problem. It is a question to some whether or not such a problem is susceptible of scientific research. It seems, however, that Mr. Myers made a heroic attempt on the general question of immortality in his work, Human Personality and Its Survival of Bodily Death.

Poets have touched on this question and have indicated faith in personality as an enduring quality, and also skepticism.

It seems to me that Robert Southey comes near the teaching of the standard books of the church on this question in the following words:

Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting,
The soul that rises with us our life's star,
Hath had elsewhere its setting
And cometh from afar.
Not in entire forgetfulness and not in utter nakedness,
But trailing clouds of glory, from God
Who is our home.

Some philosophers have suggested a need of post-existence to fulfill the demands of justice and also to give opportunity to fulfill human aspiration. It would seem to me just as logical to assert that pre-existence can account for the various conditions, within certain limits, under which people have lived. Each of the books teaches preexistence. Alma, in the Book of Mormon, pages 348, 349, teaches that in the beginning all were on an equal footing, that some stood for the right and others did otherwise, and that such activity has had a modifying effect on the future existence. The Book of Doctrine and Covenants teaches the uncreatability of intelligence—that man is spirit and the embodiment of intelligence. Even though we may not be able to say with precision exactly what a child starts off with in life, so far as mind is concerned we can at least say that birth means a wonderful opportunity and that there are great potentialities that were intended to be nurtured and molded by social contacts.

There are forces in operation which destroy confidence in personality. We might mention religions that are Christian in name but Pagan in content. The chief trouble in such religions would be the perpetuation of the institution as such, without any reference to the well-being of the individual. Jesus said that man was not made for the Sabbath but that the Sabbath was made for man. Shall we not say that all organizations are made for man and, further, that a perfect organization is the result of a perfect understanding of the nature of man? The highest appreciation ever expressed of man is expressed by Jesus. Is it too much to say that he made personality and its development the chief end of all of his activities? And we have in mind the thought that personality involves the complete development of the social nature of man. The fact is, personality cannot be developed without the influence of other persons. Another factor that is destroying confidence in personality is the low estimate of marriage and family life. No other institution is suffering so greatly as the family. The family is the foundation of society. It is the greatest nurturing and molding influence of personality. If inequity is ripening in one institution more than another, it is in family life. The marriage covenant is treated lightly in present times, and we are told that if the increasing divorce rate continues in 1950 one fourth of all marriages will be terminated in divorce and in 1990 one half of all marriages. Charles A. Ellwood, commenting on this, says:

Thus we are apparently within measurable distance of a time when, if present tendencies continue, the family, as a permanent union between husband and wife, lasting until death, shall cease to be. . . . We cannot imagine such a state of affairs without the existence alongside of it of widespread promiscuity, neglect of childhood, and general social demoralization.

The forces that are tending to destroy faith in monogamy and the teachings of Christ on the family are among the most sinister and destructive that have ever operated in the world, and one of the big jobs of this church is to teach by precept and example the law of God on the question of monogamy and ideal family life, and also to control all of the factors that influence family life. Modern industry tends to destroy faith in personality. There are some few concerns that seem to have respect for soul qualities, but, generally speaking, modern industry is more concerned with produce and production than with soul qualities. Men are so many tools and machines. Before the industrial revolutions, men made complete shoes. To-day a man stands before a machine and makes the lift that goes into the heel of the shoe. Such a job is evaporating and impersonal. One of the tasks of Zion will be to revolutionize modern industry so that tasks shall give the joy of life and conserve the personal element.

Modern politics, insofar as they consider a given group or community a bundle of votes, tend to destroy faith in personality.

Thinkers have always been trying to discover the great molding principle of life. The thing that makes for success and the thing that destroys has always been sought. Buckle tells that the greatest molding principles are geographic and climatic conditions. Marx tells us that the most significant things in life are the economic activities by which a people get their living. Tarde asserts that the principle of imitation is the most potent molding factor. Giddings tell us that psycho-physical similarities which lead to similarity of response to stimulus is the controlling factor in social life. Simmel sets forth leadership, superiority, and subordination. Ross speaks of the molding of individuals by the gradually developing activities of the mass. Ward emphasizes the inborn traits of human nature. Gumpowicg speaks of conflicts within groups. Hayes emphasizes association, and Dewey speaks of a sharing of purposes and a communication of interests as the greatest principle of control.

Without attempting to be critical, we may say that there is some truth in all of these ideas, and they are all more or less involved in the scheme of life. Perhaps the fullest statement is made by Professors Hayes and Dewey, which seems to be based on the similarity, in fundamentals, in persons, and that personality is the product of a sharing of life or of mutualism.

The most important social factors in the creation of personality are the religion of Jesus, the monogamic family, industrial conditions, and educational systems. The fundamentals of family life and industrial conditions are clearly taught in the revelation of the religion of Jesus, and when these institutions are acted by the revealed truth and the Spirit of Jesus we shall have in operation the ideal social factors that will give equal opportunity to every man for the development of his original or native powers into personality. Such personality in turn will enrich social conditions.

Professor Ellwood tells us that the heart of the social problem is individual character, and then raises the question, What kind of a character do we need? He refers to Comte's notion that if we should have character in which reason and altruism prevail, we should have the solution of the social problem. He also tells us that Novicow found the solution of the social problem in mutualism-rendering each other mutual service. Then Ellwood tells us that the character we shall aim at will be one in which intelligence prevails over impulse, or instinct and the predominance of altruistic impulses over egoistic impulses. He further tells us that, in order to make possible the development of such character, we need a transformation of our mores. We are told that slavery has gone, as also fixed social classes and political autocracy, but that we still have militarism, class exploitation, national and racial egoism, and predatoriness in business, politics, and personal relations. The question is then raised, How can our mores be transformed? The answer is, through learning. To make this learning possible, he tells us we need a sufficient number of trained social leaders.

Each of the social scientists in proclaiming the need of altruism, mutualism, reason, and intelligence is only repeating a part of the program set forth by Jesus. Ellwood goes a little further in saying that we need a transformation of our mores and reminds us of the statement of Paul, "And be ye not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed. . . ." Again Ellwood tells us that this transformation must be established by a group of trained social workers.

So far as the statement of Ellwood is concerned, the group is the source of the power. Now this is the great question, Is there any source of intelligence.
prior to and greater than the group? Jesus proclaimed that there is, and invited men to partake thereof. And Paul tells us that the transformation is possible by the renewing of your mind. This touches on the principle of redemption; that is, of some power doing something for us that we cannot do for ourselves. The fact that individuals and groups have gone to the extremes on this as well as on other questions does not disprove the principle. It has become a custom with us to open our General Conferences with a hymn that has for its first word, "Re-deemer." We must also insist that there is in the religion of Jesus the principle of attainment—of a man doing for himself what he can and ought. The principles of redemption and attainment are spoken of together in the following:

For behold, it is not meet that I should command in all things, for he that is compelled in all things, the same is a slothful and not a wise servant; wherefore he receiveth no reward. Verily I say, men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 6.

The world is in bondage, and the only salvation lies in the gospel of redemption that will initiate freedom and make possible that attainment that will be successful and eternal.

The Elements of Stewardships and Our Social Program

BY ALBERT CARMICHAEL

These ethical grounds are without a doubt a man's needs and just wants; no more, no less.

True equality consists in giving to everyone the right and the possibility of developing his individuality to its full measure. In this recognition and development of each lies the true and only possible equality. This involves the equal right of all to develop their own individuality in that particular line of service for the community which suits them best. The accessibility of all posts to those who show peculiar adaptabilities for each, the avoidance so far as is possible of exploitation of the part of employers and of systems of service which specially lend themselves to exploitation,—these conditions carried out with all and on behalf of all, make up the essence of true capacity in so far as this is obtainable. Not that all should have everything (which would soon lead to no one's having anything), nor yet that all should rule and none should serve; this does not constitute an equality conducive to happiness. But that each should be able to develop in the service of the community the talents that are peculiar to him, and that he should be apportioned so much outside of the general share as is necessary for this purpose. This does not preclude great differences of property and income, nor even the contrast between those who have and those who have not a share in the instruments of production. It is only necessary that those who are preeminent even in the lowest grades may be able to find their way upwards, to the high levels of place and power."—The Impossibility of Social Democracy, by Schaffle.

That every person may have the opportunities herein mentioned, society must be so reformed as to allow each his opportunity to make good. This will take means, and these means come through the common use of the surplus, to be apportioned to every man according to his needs—not given, but loaned. No self-respecting person asks for a gift. He does desire to be given a fair opportunity to make good.

The great nation is again the nation in which the man of great natural or financial ability finds contentment in a small amount of possession for himself, and the larger contentment and satisfaction and joy in using unusual ability in the service of, for the benefit of, his city, his state, the nation.

The wonder is that more are not doing this already. What an influence a few such men could have, what results they could accomplish, what real riches they could bring into their lives through the riches they would bring into the lives of multitudes—what gratitude would go to them! What names! What memories!

As men continue to see the small satisfaction there is in the possession of great ability of this nature, and in the possession of great wealth, when divorced from adequate or even from an abundant connection with the interests and welfare of their fellow men, and as they catch the unifying truth of the great law of life as enunciated by One who though he had not even where to lay his head was greater than them all: He that is greatest among you shall be your servant—then they in company with all men will be the gainers. Think what could be accomplished in the nation along the lines we have been considering in this little volume by a company of such men devoted to such ends. A change is coming and very rapidly. The time has already arrived when we will no longer look upon the possession of mere wealth or the ability to get it as deserving of any special distinction, and especially when the means adopted in its acquirement are other than those of absolute honor and rectitude.

How significant are the following observations from the New York Outlook:

"Those who have fallen most completely under the spell of fortune-hunting, and have been consumed by the fever of a pursuit which dries up the very sources of spiritual life, can no longer be blind to the fact that when great wealth ceases to be associated with character, honor, genius, or public respect, it is a very shabby substitute for the thing men once held it to be. There are hosts of honorable men of wealth, and there are large fortunes which have been honorably made; but so much brutal indifference to the rights of others, so much arbitrary employment of privilege without a touch of genius, so much cynical indifference to human ties of all kinds, so much vulgar greed, have come to light... that the luster has very largely gone, and wealth as a supreme price of life, has immensely lost in attractive power. There are hosts of young men who are ambitious to be rich, but who are not willing to accept wealth on such terms; the price is too great, the bargain too hard."

Men of exceptional executive and financial ability, raise yourselves to the standing point of real great men and use these abilities to noble purposes and to undying ends instead of piling heaps of things together that you'll soon have to leave and that will do those to whom they will go more harm than good.
The times are changing, mankind is advancing and ascending to higher standing places, and it will be but a short time when your position if maintained as at present will be a very ordinary one, or even a very low one in the public esteem—and so will be your memories.—The Land of Living Men, by R. W. True.

That the reader may more clearly grasp this wonderful basic economic law of the commonalty of the surplus, we represent the factors of production as a triangle.

!Diagram of Triangle

The result of B's effort in individual production is clearly dependent on the cooperation of both A and C. This is so of the productivity of C. Even A is dependent on B and C for certain results.

A's share, as stated above, is the tenth of the increase, not to be used by himself, but as a guarantee that the human family may be properly enlightened through the efforts of a group of society whose responsibility will be to "teach all nations." Having enlightened the individual by preaching the word, the said individual is now more fully ready to do his part intelligently as a member of the group (society).

The individual B, having recognized his responsibility to A for what A has done for him by cooperation with him, furnishing B the land, heat, moisture, etc., now must also recognize his responsibility—his debt—towards C, or society. Here is where the "brotherhood of man" is recognized. Here is where God intends to operate so as to produce true equality. The divine rule of a man having or retaining his "needs and just wants" only out of his production, places all on an equality. All above a man's "needs and just wants" by divine decree goes into the "common treasury" for the good of all. If B, the individual, should place his surplus in the common treasury, so should two or more individuals working together as an association. One of the accusations the Lord had against old Israel was that "ye... exact all your labors." (Isaiah 58: 3.) This, with other wrongs, drove Israel away from God.

Let us remember that the group C is divided into two groups, that of the priesthood and the secular group; or in other words, the group engaged in spiritual matters and the group engaged in temporal affairs. Every individual comprising each group is supposed to have his inheritance, or enough for his needs and just wants. The spiritual group, the priesthood, have for their inheritance the tithe or tenth; the temporal group have for their inheritance their "needs and just wants" provided for out of their own property or from the "surplus" which has been placed in the hands of the group.

Third, the Offering.

The payment of a debt is not an offering. The Pharisee prayed, "I give tithes of all I possess." (Luke 18: 12.) But the Master thought differently. Listen to him: "Ye pay tithes." There are too many people like the Pharisee. They think that when they "pay" the tithe it is a gift. "The tithe is the Lord's." We may ease our conscience by saying we make an "offering" of our tithe, but strictly speaking it is not so. We are but paying our just obligation. The tithe belongs to our fellow man of the priesthood.

The same is true of the "surplus"; that portion of which we have no "need." It is not ours, but belongs to our fellow man who has need.

After we have paid our God-given obligations, then we may have something to "offer"; a present if you please, a real sacrifice, a part of our needs and just wants.

First. The tithe (tenth of our increase) is clearly a debt which must be paid. We have no say about the amount. God has told us that the tenth of the interest (increase) (Doctrine and Covenants 106: 1) is his. We should pay the tithe the same as we pay any other just debt. The amount of this debt is determined by the Lord. It is always the tenth of the increase.

Second. The payment of the surplus, which comes after our tithe or tenth is paid, is a fuller compliance with the financial law of God. It is in a sense a higher as well as a fuller compliance. We now have a say as to the amount to be paid. The law requires us to take the initiative in determining the amount to be paid by us as surplus. This initiative responsibility rests upon the individual. God has told us to pay our surplus, but has not told us the exact amount. He leaves this for us to determine, each for himself. "Let each one of you lay by him in store as he may prosper." (The surplus.) (1 Corinthians 16: 2.) Then God, through his representative, the church, meets us half way and confers with us as to the correctness of our individual judgment.

Third. The offering comes after the tithe and the surplus are paid. This is the logical, as well as the ethical, step to take. Note this: The amount of the offering is to be wholly determined by the individual paying. Here the initiative responsibility falls wholly on the steward. Neither the tithe nor the surplus comes out of our "needs and just wants." The offering should come out of our needs and just wants. It is the real sacrifice. The widow paying her mite gave an offering—a real sacrifice. The rest paid out of their abundance (surplus); she out of her dire needs. No wonder the Master commended her the most. She was living in a higher ethical atmosphere than the others. She gave of her deficiency, proving her love for God was full to overflowing. “Speak unto the children of Israel... If any man of you bring an offering unto the Lord... he shall offer it of his own voluntary will.”—Leviticus 1:2, 3.

How These Funds Are to Be Used

The Order of Bishops has interpreted the law relating to the use of these various funds as follows:

The Tithe—Tenth.—The tithe or tenth should be used primarily for the support of the families of the church appointees and also the needy. By the “needy” is meant those directly dependent upon the church for support. Secondarily, the tithe is to be used for carrying on any other legitimate church work. (Doctrine and Covenants 42:19.)

Surplus.—The surplus is to be used for the establishment of Zionistic conditions. (Doctrine and Covenants 42:10.)

If only one is ready to give, according to his means, it is acceptable; he is not asked to give what he has not got. This does not mean that other people are to be relieved and you are to suffer; it is a matter of give and take; at the present moment your surplus goes to make up what they lack, in order that their surplus may go to make up what you lack.

—Doctor Moffatt’s Translation of the New Testament from the Greek, 2 Corinthians 8.

The Tithe—How Used.

And the Lord spake unto Aaron, Thou shalt have no inheritance in their land, neither shalt thou have any part among them; I am thy part and thine inheritance among the children of Israel. And, behold, I have given the children of Levi all the tenth in Israel for an inheritance, for their service which they serve, even the service of the tabernacle of the congregation... the Levite shall do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation... it shall be a statute forever throughout your generations, that among the children of Israel they have no inheritance. But the tithes of the children of Israel, which they offer as a peace offering unto the Lord, I have given to the Levites to inherit; therefore I have said unto them, Among the children of Israel they shall have no inheritance.”—Numbers 18:20-24, I. T. (See also Nehemiah 10:37, 38, and Hebrews 7:9; all these citations sustaining the thought that the tithe is to be used for the priesthood [Levites].)

The Lord in latter-day revelation says the same thing:

And this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that, those who have been thus tithed shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them forever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 106:1.

It may be used to aid the needy.

Thou shalt truly tithe all the increase of thy seed... and the Levite (because he hath no part nor inheritance with thee), and the stranger and the fatherless, and the widow, which are within thy gate shall come and eat and be satisfied,—Deuteronomy 14:22-23.

Ownership

God Owns Everything

1. TIME: God set apart certain of our time for rest and also for work. This recognizes the fact that all time is God’s.

2. SILVER AND GOLD: “The silver is mine and the gold is mine, saith the Lord.”—Haggai 2:8.

3. ALL LIVING CREATURES: “For every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle on a thousand hills... all the fowls of the mountains; and the wild beasts of the fields are mine... the world is mine and the fullness thereof.”—Psalms 50:10-12.

4. SOULS: “Behold, all souls are mine.”—Ezekiel 18:4.

5. BODIES AND SPIRITS: “Ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God’s.”—1 Corinthians 6:20.

6. LAND: “The land shall not be sold forever: for the land is mine; for ye are strangers and sojourners with me.”—Leviticus 25:23.

7. ALL THINGS IN HEAVEN AND EARTH: “I, the Lord, stretched out the heavens and built the earth as a very handy work; and ALL THINGS THEREIN ARE MINE; and it is my purpose to provide for my saints, FOR ALL THINGS ARE MINE.”—Doctrine and Covenants 101:2.

“Behold, all these properties are mine.”—Doctrine and Covenants 101:10.

“It must NEEDS be that the riches of the earth are mine to give.”—Doctrine and Covenants 38:9.

“Let not any man among you say that it is his own.”—Doctrine and Covenants 101:12.

These texts prove beyond controversy that ownership of everything resides in God. While under the enlightening influence of the Holy Ghost, the saints understood who was the real owner. We find the record reading as follows:

Neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was HIS OWN.—Acts 4:32.

WHAT then is our relationship to things and values?

What has God committed to us?

Nowhere does he say that we “own” anything. He has time after time stated that he has given the land unto us to possess it.

Possession Without Ownership Makes Us Stewards

Ye shall inherit the land, and I will give it unto you to possess it.—Leviticus 20:24.

And ye shall dispossess the inhabitants of the land, and dwell therein; for I have given you the land to possess it.—Numbers 33:53.

The fullness of the earth is yours: the beasts of the fields, and the fowls of the air, and that which climbeth upon the trees, and walketh upon the earth; yea, and the herb, and the good things which cometh of the earth, whether for food or for raiment, or for houses, or for barns, or for orchards, or for gardens, or for vineyards; yea, all things which cometh of the earth, in the season thereof, are made for the benefit and the use of man, both to please the eye and to gladden the heart; yea, for food and for raiment, for taste and for smell, to strengthen the body and to enliven the soul. And it pleaseth God that he hath given all these things unto man; for unto this end were they made, to be used with judgment, not to excess, neither by extortion; and in nothing doth man offend God, or against none is his wrath kindled, save those who confess not his hand in all things and obey not his commandments. Behold, this is according to the law and the prophets.—Doctrine and Covenants 59:4, 5.

Behold, the Lord hath created the earth that it should be inhabited; and he hath created his children, that they should possess it.—1 Nephi 5:126, 127.

By hearkening to observe all the words which I, the Lord their God, shall speak unto them, they shall never cease to prevail until the kingdoms of the world are subdued under my feet; and the earth is given unto the saints, to possess it forever and ever.—Doctrine and Covenants 100:2.

Inheritances

The inheritance consists of property in our possession and for which we hold a title or deed.

Inheritances are divided into two classes:

(a) Real estate.
(b) Personal property.

The investment of the title to this real estate and personal property depends upon

(a) Its service.
(b) The needs.

(a) The Service.

If the service of the property is such that the welfare of the group (the public) depends directly upon its proper use, the public or group should hold the title, or at least should regulate and control. We cite water works, telephones, etc., as examples. The person who assumes the responsibility of managing these utilities will have a managerial stewardship.

If the welfare of the public or group does not directly, but only remotely depend upon the service of the thing, then the title may be held by the individual. Among such we may mention houses, lands, various kinds of businesses, etc. This class includes by far the greater number of inheritances. Such an inheritance will be a private inheritance.

While an inheritance is always part of our stewardship, our stewardship always includes our inheritance and may include more. There necessarily will be some that are what may be determined as quasi-public. Such inheritances may be held "in trust" for the group. Holding "in trust" means that the title or deed to the property may be held and managed by the individual or individuals. The group is to be the beneficiary of the net profits.

As the social group evolves, that is, becomes more compact and thus more complex, it follows that what has heretofore been considered individual rights will cease to be so and will become the rights of the group; consequently in the growth of our Zionic ideal the rights of the group will more and more predominate. Consummate wisdom will be needed in making this transition. The conservative element will seek to hold on to the old form of holding property, while the radical element will be over-anxious to adopt new forms before the group is really prepared to govern.

The Needs.—The "needs and just wants" of an individual are also a factor in determining just who shall hold the title to property. Every person who is not mentally incapacitated to manage the same, may have property enough to provide for his "needs and just wants," and generally the best welfare of the group (society) places the title to this amount of property in the individual. Every inheritance carried with it a stewardship or responsibility.

Inheritance.—The Thing Over Which We Exercise a Stewardship.

The inheritance is of secondary importance. Stewardship is the big thing. Doctrine and Covenants 101:3: Let my servant, Sidney Rigdon, have appointed unto him the place where he now resides, and the lot of the tannery for his stewardship for his support.

Responsibility of managing, ABCD, equals stewardship.

n o p q equals his residence (home).

w x y z equals tannery (the business property).

Here the "stewardship" included the management of both the home property and the business property, for which Sidney Rigdon was to account.

Doctrine and Covenants 101:6: Let my servant, John Johnson, have the house in which he lives and the inheritance... and this is the beginning of the stewardship which I have appointed unto him.

n o p j equals house (home).

w x y z equals inheritance (land).

xx and xxx equal other lots.

Therefore A B C D equals stewardship.

Doctrine and Covenants 101:7: Let my servant Newel K. Whitney have appointed unto him, the houses and lot where he now resides, and the lot and building on which the storehouse stands; and also the lot which is on the corner south of the storehouse; and also the lot on which the Shule is situated; and all this I have appointed unto my servant Newel K. Whitney, for his stewardship.

1 equals houses and lot—residence.
2 equals lot and store (ozondah).
3 equals lot south of ozondah.
4 equals lot and shule (school.)
A B C D equals Whitney's stewardship.

These included Bishop Whitney's stewardship; that is, the responsibility of managing—taking care of—property, using and accounting for the same.

Numbers 33: 53, 54: For I have given you the land to possess it. And ye shall divide the land by lot for an inheritance among your families; and to the more ye shall give the more inheritance; and to the fewer ye shall give the less inheritance; every man's inheritance shall be in the place where his lot falleth; according to the tribe of your fathers ye shall inherit. (See also Deuteronomy 15: 4; Joshua 24: 32 [a burial lot], Proverbs 19: 14 [houses and riches].)

We submit herewith a brief statement as to how the early church interpreted the law of inheritances and stewardships by their acts. This does not necessarily mean that they were right in their method of so doing. They lived in a time when society was simple compared to what it is now. Changing social status may require a change in manner of procedure.

In Doctrine and Covenants 101: 6, John Johnson was to have a house and "the inheritance." This "inheritance" was a farm. Doctrine and Covenants 101: 8 gives Joseph Smith certain things which were designated as "the beginning of the stewardship which I have appointed unto him." Among these things are mentioned "the lot which is laid off for the building of my house [Kirtland Temple] . . . and also the inheritance upon which his father now resides." The Lord further says, "Behold I have reserved an inheritance for his father, for his support." Note that here an inheritance is called a stewardship and also an inheritance is given as a support. The following citations show what was considered by the leading authorities of the church in the 30's to be an inheritance.

Church History, volume 1, page 308 (land); Doctrine and Covenants 57 (land); Doctrine and Covenants 63: 13 (land); inheritances not to be given but purchased.

Church History, volume 1, page 308, we read, "The disciples of Christ blessed with immediate revelations from him, should be wise and not take the way of the world nor build air castles, but consider that when they have been gathered to Zion, means will be needed to purchase their 'inheritance.'"

Doctrine and Covenants 63: 13: He that sendeth up treasures unto the land of Zion, shall receive an inheritance in this world, and his works shall follow him; . . .

Doctrine and Covenants 45: 12: Gather up your riches that ye may purchase an inheritance which shall hereafter be appointed unto you.

Doctrine and Covenants 48: 2: It must needs be necessary, that ye save all the money that ye can, and that ye obtain all that ye can in righteousness, that in time ye may be enabled to purchase lands for an inheritance, . . .

Time after time the Lord has told us that we should pay for what we get. (See Doctrine and Covenants 101: 13; 72: 3; 87: 6; 125: 16; 18: 5; etc.) This payment does not necessarily have to be in cash; it may be paid in service, labor. (Doctrine and Covenants 72: 3.)

Jeremiah 32: 6-11: The word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Behold, Hanameel . . . shall come unto thee, saying, Buy thee my field . . . for the right of redemption is thine to buy it . . . for the right of inheritance is thine, . . . buy it for thyself. Then I knew that this was the word of the Lord.

Stewards to hold title to individual stewardship. (Church History, vol. 2, p. 116.)

The same day, August 5, the Presidency, High Council, and all the authorities of the church in Missouri, assembled in council at Far West, and unanimously resolved to go on moderately and build a house unto the name of the Lord in Far West, as they had means, and appointed Edward Partridge treasurer, to receive all the donations and subscriptions for the erection of the house of the Lord; Isaac Morley to be his secretary. Also voted that the committee; viz, Jacob Whitmer, Elias H. Groves, and George M. Hinkle, stand until President David Whitmer goes to and returns from Kirtland; also that the building committee of the house of the Lord have no store connected with building the house but that every firm or individual that embarks in that business, have, own, and claim such property as their own private individual property and stewardship.—Millennial Star, vol. 16, pp. 54, 55.

(To be continued.)

Nothing stops the advance of truth and righteousness. Brother J. T. Riley, preaching near Des Gloise, Louisiana, in the swamp country, writes of going to services nightly in a rowboat. The schoolhouse where his services are held is built on piling over the water. The audience comes in boats, hears the message, and departs likewise. The Spirit has been with Brother Riley, so what does he care for a little inconvenience like swamps and rowboats, and perhaps rubber boots?
“Let Your Light Shine”

BY MRS. GARD KIRKENDALL

In Romans 12: 1 we find these words:
I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service.

How can we present holy bodies if we do not learn how to care for them from a physical standpoint? Again in 1 Corinthians 6: 19 we are told:
What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?

When we have been made to realize this wonderful discovery, which is our innermost true self, we have started a new growth, and we are on our way to a radiant personality. Sincerity—a great, deep, genuine sincerity—is the keynote to self-discovery; an honest facing of ourselves as we are, and a determined effort to shine out into what we ought to be, is the starting point. Do we not owe it to ourselves and to the future generation to seek the best possible way to care for our physical beings? Why be satisfied with half health when we can have whole health? What we want is to radiate light and life and a contagious cheerfulness wherever we go. If we are not doing this, we are not getting the best out of life, and the reason is that we are not putting in our whole selves.

Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.—Matthew 5: 16.

Positive health, happiness, and beauty can be had at any age. There are God-implanted personal qualities which we have within ourselves, that can be drawn out and put to use by individual effort and responsibility. Our whole self is an energy made up of joyous activities which we may bring out into beautiful living.

One of the most important and inspiring principles of life is the power of the inner spirit to respond absolutely to every need, desire, or demand of the outer life. Does this mean anything to you? Let the body be an aid, not a handicap, to the spirit. This blazing power is the mystery of growth, and where we poke the hardest is where the growth begins.

Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day; we are not of the night, nor of darkness.—1 Thessaloniens 5: 5.

We each have a nature—physical, intellectual, social, moral, religious, and business proclivities; these make up personality. They must function through an instrument, and that instrument is the body. What is your body doing for you? Is it telling the truth about you? You feel yourself to be a wholesome, well-intentioned, neighborly, right-loving sort of person; but what impression is your body giving out? Perhaps the very opposite, because you never thought to lift up your chest, breathe deeply, and let your true self expand at the center; flow and shine through your face and carriage, your walk and manners—you have never let your real self out. We are made up of inward, joyous activities, the health and beauty that belong to any age; but possibly we have fallen into the old-age rut and have settled into an unyielding sort of a whalebone-looking person, nerve racking to ourselves and repellent to others. We wonder why we are relegated to the chimney corner, for we are really quite gentle inside, but no one in this busy world has time to dig out the gold hidden in other people, and we must learn to wear our attractiveness on the outside as well as on the inside. We have everything that is needed to give and are not called upon to run into debt, but we can draw on what we have stored up, and by the exercise of giving, we expand our lives, and make of ourselves more powerful instruments of expression and influence in expanding the lives of others, and of beautifying ourselves. Zion Builders: do we realize what is required of a Zion Builder? We talk of the “more abundant life”; we pray about it and preach about it, and we seem to know little about it or how to acquire it.

The body is the most willing, responsive, and teachable servant in the world; but it will talk back and be stubborn and make us uncomfortable if we do not treat it naturally and honestly.

The law of the physical life is replenishment. We must put back in what we take out or lose balance; and to be wholesome, we must put our whole selves in. The disease of worry is destructive to the body. It is like a cider press, squeezing out all the sweet and nourishing juice and leaving only the pulp; and constant emotional strain mars the beauty of expression, saps the nerve food, and leaves the nerves jangling and irritable from starvation.

There are certain essentials to the building of physical health: the right use of air, water, food, muscular exercise, sleep, relaxation, and cleanliness. “Cleanliness is next to godliness,” says one writer. The cells are the body builders; they build wholesomely or unwholesomely, according to the quality of nourishment supplied. The mind is the architect and makes the pattern of the building; exercise is the hod carrier, and takes the material where it is needed.

We cannot “let our lights shine” unless we have a healthy, well-developed, graceful, and responsive body, and to do this we must put joy into our physical habits; joy in standing erect and poised; joy in our muscles, in putting them into right action; joy in cleanliness, inside and out, that keeps our eyes shining and ourcomplexions clear; joy in the food that will get the best of fatigue and keep us young; joy in the rest and relaxation that is inspiring and recreative; and above all, the feeling of deep reverence for the body as a temple of the Holy Spirit.

When we realize that we contain in our bodies all the elements which go to make up earth, and in our spirits the likeness of God, and we recognize the perfect physical instrument we have for expression, then we begin to understand the meaning of the words, “Ye are the light of the world.”

The body beautiful is one that expresses health, intelligence, and grace; we must think of these qualities, not as something that must be made, but something we already have within ourselves.

We all have bodies, but most of us wear them as masks, or as shutters to conceal or to lock in our real abilities.

A healthy, happy spirit will not be content to drag a complaining awkward body around for long, but will cure it by making it behave itself—righteously.

The first step towards good bodily behavior is to get good bodily poise; and the way to do this is to straighten up the spine with the thought of strength and courage, lift the head with the thought that there is no reason why you should be afraid to look out upon the world fearlessly, and put down your feet firmly, determined to do your best.

Lean forward, with the thought that this is a friendly world that will give you back what you give to it, and after you have adjusted your muscles to these thoughts, look in your mirror and see if you have not already made an improvement in your personal appearance. But how much light do you suppose you are shedding; how much of your real, innermost, God-made selves are you letting shine and radiate into expression?

We may well remember for example such men as Lincoln, Roosevelt, Edison, Steinmetz, and their wonderful personalities, the last being a cripple from birth but not failing to let his light shine. And above all, Jesus, the Christ, who is our perfect example, and, finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, if there be any praise, think on these things.

Brother Bruce E. Brown is carrying the banner forward in a most commendable way in his field of activity around La Junta, Colorado. He reports June 21 to have been a most successful day spiritually.

NEWS AND LETTERS

Little Journeys With the Editor

(A letter from President Frederick M. Smith to HERALD readers.)

It has been suggested to me that news of my movements as a general officer of the church would be of interest. Perhaps I have been delinquent in writing such letters to the HERALD, but I have never cared to parade my “doings” or to appear much in print. I have, however, been criticized for not writing more “news,” so I’ll try to tell the HERALD family somewhat of the movements of the editor in chief while he is away from his desk.

Next July (the beginning of a new fiscal year) as I pencil these items, and I’m in a Grand Trunk train speeding towards Canada, but neither ascending nor looking for Canadian 2.75 per cent brew. What I’m going for, I’ll tell later.

A Call at Council Bluffs

Last Friday, June 26, after an extraordinarily busy week at the desk, I boarded a Burlington train near midnight, bound for Council Bluffs, weary in mind and body, feeling not at all like going to fulfill a promise made some days before, to meet district and branch officers to discuss church affairs and problems. An hour’s reading of light literature got my mind off “problems,” and I slept soundly till the porter shook me with the words, “Council Bluffs next stop.”

Fifteen minutes of seven is a bit early to reach a station, but it was not too early for Brother M. A. Smith to meet me smilingly, and in his car take me to his hospitable home, where by the skilled hands of his companion we were served a breakfast. Shortly afterwards Brother John A. Hanson, the district president, came in, and the time till noon was spent in consultation. Then, joined by “Jack” Harding, we were most efficiently entertained for lunch by Sister Smith.

Following lunch, in Brother Smith’s car, Brother Hanson, Brother Smith, and I visited the various church properties in Council Bluffs and saw several points of interest, among others being the new radio station K O I L being erected there. At about three o’clock I was “dropped down” at the city hall, where I was taken in hand by Mayor “Jack” Harding and Superintendent of Waterworks Mr. Ettneier, and, starting at the intake on the Missouri River, was shown and had explained to me the entire waterworks system, one of the most efficiently managed municipally owned waterworks in the country. This interesting inspection tour ended when Mayor “Jack” and his efficient superintendent left me at Brother Smith’s home.

After supper a number of Saints, in response to invitations, came, perhaps twenty or twenty-five, and till a late hour some of the problems of the work in Council Bluffs were discussed.

At midnight I left Council Bluffs, not so weary as I had been on leaving Kansas City, despite the busy day, and feeling that a better understanding exists between the general officers and the local officers at Council Bluffs and of the Pottawattamie District. May it persist!

Arriving home early Sunday morning, the 28th, another busy day was passed, as Mrs. Smith was leaving at six o’clock for Chicago and I had a sermon to prepare for evening on the Campus.

Sermon Delivered at Campus

Mrs. Smith and her sister, Mrs. Johnson, off for Chicago, the girls, Alice and Lois, and I drove our aged Columbia Six to Independence and went to the Campus. I was delighted to see "Bob" Cooper and his band of musicians on the re-strum, for with this band-orchestra combination and Paul Craig's baton I felt sure the music was safe.

Despite the lowering and threatening skies, a splendid audigence greeted me, and with voice in good condition, and two new amplifiers (installed by the radio boys) working fine, I found no difficulty in making the estimated twenty-five hundred hear; and the splendid attention given me throughout as I spoke on "Zion" and "stewardships" testified of the deep interest the Saints have in this part of our belief.

The Campus meeting over, a drive home for my baggage was followed by a trip to the Union Station, where I left the girls to get the decrepit "Columbia Six" home, while I boarded a midnight C. & A. train for Saint Louis.

On time (7.55 a.m.) at Saint Louis Monday, I had opportunity to secure transportation to Chicago, eat a light breakfast, and board another C. & A. train for Chicago.
Good-bye to the latest from the driver. I was to work, and until about four in the afternoon worked steadily at my mail and papers, mailing several large packages of manuscript and letters at Springfield, and more at Chicago.

Arriving at the Union Station, Chicago, at half past four, a suburban train soon landed me in LaGrange, where at the home of Brother and Sister J. H. Johnson I rejoined Mrs. Smith. A pleasant evening ride into the country rested me from the day's work and journey.

A good night's rest was followed by a forenoon's work on the mail, and at one o'clock, with Brother Fred Johnson at the wheel of his new Jewett "coach," and Mrs. Johnson, Mrs.
Smith, and Byron in the rear seat, I beside the driver, we began one of the most pleasant drives I have had. It was neatly one hundred and twenty miles through one of the finest agricultural countries in the world, and one abounding in industries as well. West from LaGrange, through Naperville and Aurora, over a new concrete road as smooth as a floor, past hundreds of well-improved farms on which splendid crops abounded, we reached Plano.

A Drive to Plano in Memory

Plano! What memories it arouses! Headquarters of the church for many years, and home of its president. The Joseph Smith home is pointed out to tourists. Plano is the town of my birth. The house in which I was born has long ago disappeared, and the spot on which it stood is known only approximately to me, but the folks seemed interested in having me point it out. And the house where the family lived for several years just before we left for Lamoni in 1881! How “runned down” it looks! But what a flood of memories it aroused! Of brothers and sisters, and mother, and father, deo and grandfather, of boyish pranks and the playmates I recalled. Of the barn, which in memory was very large but which in fact is small. Yet it housed (or harmed) "Tottie," the famous mare father drove for so many years; and it was also a part of our playground. A drive to the old swimming hole aroused other memories, and we recalled the names of playmates we had forgotten. A visit to the "stone church" brught still other memories and recalled still other names.

Then we came back to the present and looked for the home of Brother Eli Wildermuth. He had gone, but the home was occupied by Brother and Sister Moore, and Sister Barnes and daughter were visiting there.

A call at the home of Brother F. M. Cooper found it unoccupied, and on inquiry we found he was at DeKalb at the home of his daughter, Sister Carter, very ill, and we regretted that we could not see him.

A short visit with Doctor Lord, an old citizen of Plano, recalled other playmate names.

Our visit to Plano was over, but memory ran riot for a while, till once more the beauty of the changing scenery captured our attention and held us to the present as we journeyed to Jollet, thence via Lockport and Lemont back to La-Grange for a late supper, leaving behind us a journey which will live long in memory.

Visits Harry Passman Home and Elmhurst

To-day, July 1, has been a busy one. Up early, writing demanded attention till about nine o'clock, when Brother Harry Passman called, and we talked till about eleven. He took Sister Smith and me to the Grand Central Station, where we placed Sister Smith on the train for Grand Rapids and then drove to the home of Brother Passman, where Sister Passman had a lunch awaiting us. What memories were again aroused, for the last time we had eaten together was in the Floyd House in Jerusalem, Palestine! Do you imagine we lacked for topics of conversation?

After lunch we three enjoyed a drive around the newer points of Chicago, and to the Northeastern Illinois District's reunion grounds, though I fear the "points of interest" were frequently overlooked while we earnestly discussed church problems.

At Elmhurst Reunion Grounds, thirty-three miles from Chicago, with ticket in my pocket for Owen Sound, five minutes past four, and the train due out of the Dearborn Street Station at half past five, and the big city of Chicago to traverse! But Harry made it, and with fourteen minutes to spare.

It is bedtime, and the train is due at London at five in the morning (it is now four by my watch). From there by two changes I go to Owen Sound, due at five minutes after one to-morrow afternoon. I stop, to drop this letter off at Battle Creek to start its journey back to the Herald Office.

Good Conference in Gallands Grove District

CHEROKEE, IOWA, June 28.—Two of our members, Elsie Chiles and Mary Yarrington, were graduated from the high school this year. The evening service was dismissed the evening of May 24 so that all might attend the union services in the high school auditorium.

The district conference met here June 6 and 7 and will be remembered as a conference of progress and good fellowship.

The evening of June 5 the Sunday school here, assisted by the Mallard, Denison, and Gallands Grove schools, gave a fine program to a church full of people. "Row us over the tide," a beautiful song, was sung by Lois and Fern Hahn, eight and ten years of age, and was much appreciated by the audience. The men's trio from Gallands Grove and the children's choir from Cherokee assisted greatly with the program.

All sessions of the conference were in charge of the district presidency and passed pleasantly. The social services were a great help and blessing to all who attended. The gift of prophecy was with us both Saturday and Sunday mornings.
One boy sixteen years of age was exorted to prepare for the priesthood and told that he would be called to an important work in the church. Brothers Vernon Spence and Fred Baber, who were ordained priests, were also given instructions in regard to their work and calling.

Sermons were by C. E. Butterworth, W. A. Smith, and
P. T. Mussell, and were full of instruction for the Saints.

At the business session it was decided to see about the purchase of a car for missionary work, also to proceed to

www.LatterDayTruth.org
wards the holding of reunion next year. All district officers were reelected with the exception of Vernon Spence, who will be the new Sunday school superintendent, and Sister Guy Johnson, district chorister.

A storm on Sunday afternoon hurried some in their start for home, while others were detained until Monday morning. We are glad the Saints met with us and will welcome them again.

Albert Haynes, teacher, has returned from Young People's Convention and reports a wonderful meeting. He gave a fine talk Sunday morning and told about the convention.

Brother and Sister Frank Sheldon and Sister Eleanor Sheldon and son Willard will start July 1 for Long Beach, California. They are planning to drive overland and expect to be gone at least one year. The Saints here will miss them, but we realize that our loss will be the gain of Long Beach Saints.

Brother and Sister Sheets and family, of Sioux City, came to hear Brother W. A. Smith and Brother Mussell in their meetings held following the conference. Brother Smith went home with them for a short visit.

Brother Vernon Spence expects to spend every other Sunday visiting the schools of the district. Brother A. R. Crippen filled the appointment at Storm Lake May 24.

Sister Elsie Chiles and Brother Theodore Webb were married June 1 at the home of the presiding minister, Brother A. R. Crippen. A reception was given for them at the home of the groom's mother, Sister Evans, the evening of June 9.

A large number of Saints and friends were present to extend best wishes to the young couple. Ice cream and cake were served by the hostess. The guests left many useful gifts as an expression of their good will.

Sister Celia Jones died June 10 after a short illness. She was baptized by Brother Pendleton about four years ago.

Harold Reeder will succeed Sister Eleanor Sheldon as secretary of the Department of Recreation and Expression, and E. M. Chiles as treasurer will succeed Brother Frank Sheldon in both Sunday school and the Department of Recreation and Expression.

London Saints Interested in Their Work

LONDON, ENGLAND, June 16.—A few of the Saints here are endeavoring to keep interested by carrying on the work of the Religio. We do not yet have a place for meetings, so we are thankful to be able to carry on the Religio work in the home of our branch president, Brother J. W. Worth. This is the only means we have of meeting together. We meet every Friday evening and have an average attendance of nine. Other members do not attend because of the distance.

Every first Friday in the month, sacramental service is held instead of the usual class work, so the members are given the opportunity to partake. We have all been asked to attend Enfield Branch at least once a month, for it is the nearest meeting place while the branch is unorganized. It is not always possible for all to attend, so it was thought best to drop class work once a month and give all an opportunity to partake of the sacrament.

We desire an interest in the prayers of all the Saints, that our heavenly Father will hasten the day when we will be privileged to meet together once more. It is hard to keep interested when one has not the opportunity of meeting with the Saints, for when you mingle with people who do not want to know anything about religion and feel you are alone, you are apt to lose faith.

We look forward to meeting with the Saints, people who understand and desire to serve God. In this way we are helped along. We are in sympathy with the isolated Saints and remember them in our prayers, asking God to bless and help them day by day. Our prayers are for God's people everywhere, and especially for those responsible for the directing of the church; also the missionaries, that God will help them in performing their duties.

We started a Christmas offering three weeks ago. God has surely blessed us in the effort we have put forward. We hope to have a nice little amount to send in by the end of the year.

May God bless and help one and all.

Two-Day Meeting on Irvington Reunion Grounds

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, June 24.—Quite a number of the San Francisco Saints attended the two-day meeting held at Irvington, the Northern California reunion grounds, on May 30 and 31. This was the second two-day meeting held, and the attendance and interest was all that could be desired. Everyone was agreeably surprised and pleased at the wonderful improvements to the grounds.

Our Sunday school rendered a pleasing program on Children's Day. We were indeed favored on this day, for in the morning Elders A. M. Chase and Hiram Holt addressed us, and in the evening Elder H. W. Savage. We enjoyed having these brothers with us, though there was a feeling of sorrow when we thought of the fact that we would not see them for a little while. Brother Chase left during the week for his field at Hilo, Hawaii, while Brother Savage left for Tahiti.

During this week Brother and Sister Hall left for Salt Lake City, their new field. These good people have been with us for a year and a half, and it was with a feeling of regret that we were obliged to let them go, though the comforting thought is that our loss is Salt Lake City's gain.

We have been favored with sermons by Elders George S. Lincoln, V. B. Etzenhouser, L. B. Shippy, and John A. Saxe.

Our committee on building the assembly hall is actively engaged in preparing plans to start building in the very near future. We are much in need of this assembly hall, as, heretofore, we have been obliged to rely on the hospitality of our good sisters or go to the expense of renting a hall for our social activities. A suitable hall available at all times will be an incentive for frequent gatherings, and also will give us more room for Sunday school and Religio.

J. W. Peterson's Presence a Welcome Feature

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO, June 17.—June 7 marked a day of special activities in this branch. Visiting Saints were present from Wiarton, Port Elgin, Southampton, and Grand Valley. Patriarch John Shields, District President D. B. Perkins, and Missionary J. W. Peterson were among those present. Brother Shields had charge of the sacramental service at ten in the morning, and Elder Peterson gave an interesting discourse at two o'clock. "Uncle John" had charge of the evening service.

At the opening of Brother Peterson's talk he sang a number in the Hawaiian tongue. A kindly expressed desire of his was that we might retain its words in memory. We are sorry he had to leave immediately after the service for Grand Valley, where he was to open a series of meetings that evening.

One of the pleasant events of the day was the ordination of Brother W. C. Elliott to the office of elder. Brother Shields and Brother Peterson officiated, the former being spokesman. Brother Elliott expects to leave for his field in New York District about June 26. He will be greatly missed in the branch, as he has always been an earnest and energetic worker. As he leaves us, we wish him Godspeed and every success in his missionary activities.

It seemed like old times to note Sister J. L. Mortimer’s pleasant smile last Sunday. She has been confined to her home for some months, and we are glad to report her condition as somewhat improved. She left for Toronto this morning, where she intends to take treatment for a few days. All join in wishing her speedy and complete recovery.

District conference convenes at Providence Bay, Manitoulin Island, July 4 and 5. We leave for that place by boat July 2, returning to Owen Sound July 6. All are awaiting with anticipation the meeting with President F. M. Smith, who is expecting to be present.

Brothers D. B. Perkins and G. C. Tomlinson, sr., leave for Providence Bay on Friday this week.

Little Compton Loses a Devoted Saint

FALL RIVER, MASSACHUSETTS, June 22.—The attendance at the June sacramental service was fair. After the service Pastor James W. Heap and Elder John Rogerson went to Little Compton to administer to Sister Alice Simmons. She passed away June 9 in the early evening. She leaves a husband and three children. Funeral services were held Friday afternoon in charge of Elder Rogerson, with prayer by Alma M. Combs and singing by Margaret Henderson and Alma M. Combs. All who are familiar with this district know what a good work Sister Simmons has done at Little Compton.

Children’s Day was observed June 21. Charles H. Pillsbury, eight years old, was baptized by Elder James W. Heap, and confirmed by Elder John E. Rogerson and Elder Heap. The children gave their recitations and songs, then listened to a sermon by the pastor. Preaching in the evening was by Alma M. Combs. Elder Rogerson was the speaker last Sunday evening.

Elder Frederick Roberts, of Hope, Rhode Island, was the speaker the morning of June 14. His subject was “Obedience.” He recalled how there were in the beginning twelve members in Fall River, and judging by the empty seats, the number has not increased much. Of course the membership has increased, but some have moved to other branches or are indifferent, while others have been lost through death. There are over one hundred members in the branch, but the attendance is always small.

There will be no Fourth of July picnic as so many will be at Onset. The Rogerson family leaves soon for the summer.

The Temple Builders will have a boat ride to Rocky Point July 11.

The Temple Builders and their friends had a ride by automobile June 13 to the home of Margaret Henderson’s brother in the country. A good time was had around the bonfire, roasting wiener, singing, and telling stories.

Elder Jasper O. Dutton reports an interesting clash while doing missionary work at Petersburg, in southern Wisconsin. Twelve have been baptized by him there, and prospects are that more will follow. He writes an interesting letter to the Ensign, giving a full account of the experience.

Independence

Independence celebrated the Fourth on the Campus. The Chamber of Commerce sponsored the program, which was a sufficient guaranty that it would be done right. Mayor Roger G. Sermon appointed Colonel E. M. Stayton to head the committee and selected the speaker for the evening, Honorable George H. Combs, jr. He also arranged with the American Legion Band to give a concert in the evening. The secretary of the Chamber of Commerce and two other prominent members had complete charge of the purchasing and setting off of the fireworks.

The Campus Committee took charge of the policing of the grounds, the parking of cars, concession stands, etc. The Laurel Club did their bit with a “fish pond” for the children—one of the most popular attractions on the ground.

The day opened cloudy and delightfully cool. In fact, the weather looked much like rain. However, the baseball game between the Knights of Pythias and the Standard Oil teams was played as scheduled and resulted in a score of 14 to 10 in favor of the Standard Oil team.

There were so few people on the grounds at one o’clock, when the games and races were scheduled, that this feature was omitted from the program.

At half past two our Bar-Gar Sunday school team met the National Lead Battery team of Kansas City in one of the best baseball games ever played on the Campus diamond. The two teams were about as evenly matched as two teams could be, and it took ten innings to decide which was best. The Bar-Gars finally tallied the winning run, and the game was over, the score being 5 to 4. Both teams played with gameness, and the visitors especially are to be congratulated on the manner in which they took the usual “kidding” incident to playing on a hostile ground. A feature of the play of our boys was the pitching of Curtis, who was in great form.

The band, under the leadership of Earl Cox, rendered a pleasing program at six o’clock, followed immediately by the address of the evening by Honorable Mr. Combs. Mr. Combs has spoken a number of times from the Campus platform and always has something worth while to say. He has a very pleasing personality and is well liked.

At eight o’clock the fireworks committee began to get busy with their end of the program, and fulfilled the fondest expectations of both children and grown-ups. The display this year was one of the best ever seen in this vicinity.

Immediately after the fireworks, a Harold Lloyd picture, “Girl shy,” was shown on the big screen, which held the vast audience until 10.45 o’clock.

The concession stand, in charge of Mansel T. Williams, was the busiest place on the grounds all day, and especially in the late afternoon and evening. The people seemed to realize that all profit went to the upkeep of the grounds, and spent their money accordingly.

No serious accidents were reported, and only a few slight injuries were sustained. Perhaps one reason for this was that an attempt was made to segregate those who wished to celebrate with noise-makers. These were asked to fire explosives within an area marked out by posts.

At night the parking places on the Campus overflowed early, and some two hundred automobiles were parked on the open space just west of the ball diamond. It has been estimated that between ten and twelve thousand people were on the grounds during the shooting of the fireworks and the showing of the picture.

It was an occasion of which we may be proud. We are glad that we can offer to the people of Independence such an

www.LatterDayTruth.org
ideal place for holiday recreation, and we are also glad that the people of Independence have been made to feel that our interests are theirs, and that they are willing to share with us the burden of maintenance.

President Elbert A. Smith left Friday for the West. His first stop was to be at Ogden, where he was to spend the day with the Saints of the Utah District. A special program and rally had been arranged for the day.

President Frederick M. Smith was with the Owen Sound Saints over the week-end, attending a district conference. The district authorities had made some interesting plans for the occasion which no doubt will be reported later.

Group 19, presided over by Elder S. O. Smith, had an unusual experience Wednesday evening. There were 14 present, 14 praying and 14 testifying, a 100 per cent affair.

Superintendent of the Sunday school, C. B. Hartshorn, and family have left Independence on an extended auto trip, going west to Montana, through Yellowstone and the wildwoods of Minnesota, the prairies of Dakota, and indicates the future usefulness of the new members.

The spirit of encouragement, light, peace, and prophecy pervaded the assembly in a wholesome way, to their edification.

Another social will be held Friday afternoon at the Stone Church, at half past two. Patriarch Ammon White will be the speaker.

Second Church

Sunday morning a company of young people assembled at the church very early, led by Elder John Miller. The baptismal font had been filled, and one young man and six young women were brought into the church, Elder Miller baptizing and Elders Dillee, Miller, Andes, and D. A. Whiting confirming, which occupied a portion of the prayer meeting time. The spirit of encouragement, light, peace, and prophecy prevailed the ordinances and indicates the future usefulness of the new members.

The church was filled at eleven o'clock to partake of the Lord’s Supper, and Elder William H. Kelley took a leading part in the testimony time, directing the thought of the assembly in a wholesome way, to their edification.

Sunday evening the pastor made the first of the warm weather short talks, or sermonets. Next Sunday evening Brother Glen Davies will be the speaker.

Brother and Sister John T. Curtis, Alfred, Clara, and their sons Kenneth and Chester Roy left this morning on an auto trip to their old Illinois home, and possibly further into the East, to be gone two weeks or more.

Walnut Park

The new community playground at the corner of Main and Alton seems to have changed hands on the Fourth of July. While the young people went elsewhere, a congregation of the older Saints from throughout Zion gathered there for an old-fashioned picnic and sociable time. A long table held an abundance of food, but nobody “served.” Each one took a plate and helped himself to anything and everything he liked. A goodly number of speakers were chosen from the crowd, who gave patriotic addresses or told tales of missionary life or other church experiences. Did they sing? They surely did. Only one book was on hand, but one was enough. They sang from their hearts—the old songs their fathers sang, while they recalled the good old days “away back in Michigan,” in the wildwoods of Minnesota, the prairies of Canada, etc.

Recent marriages among the young people of the community are Mildred Griffin to Joseph Shupe and Orpha Parrish to Lawrence Wolfe.

The Sunday school picnic promised to the children on Children’s Day was held June 26 on the Crackerneck Road, a fine, shady location being granted for the day by a good Catholic family, the Jacobsons, who ate dinner with the picnickers. A hundred or more were there, and everything went off pleasantly.

Little Jessie Anderson was baptized at the close of Sunday school Sunday by her grand-uncle, B. J. Scott. The font being in the primary room, the little folks were invited to gather about it to watch one of their number inducted into the kingdom. Brother Scott and Brother C. K. Green confirmed her at the sacrament meeting following.

Liberty Street

Monday night was the party night for the Temple Builders, and they entertained for Mrs. V. W. Gunsolley and her daughter Bertha. Sister Gunsolley told the girls, all of whom had considered Brother Gunsolley as a very dear friend, of his peaceful passing and of a very comforting dream he had two nights before his death. Later Sister Loretta Wiggins, who recently took her master’s degree at Columbia University, New York City, gave quite an extensive talk on what she had learned about New York, illustrating her talk with newspaper pictures and railroad guides. Ice cream, cake, and punch were served.

Tuesday night a mass meeting was held to determine whether the Liberty Street Saints cared to join in the union services at the Campus Sunday evenings. They voted by a large majority to go to the Campus for the summer.

The Temple Builders had a home-coming gathering at the Campus for supper the evening of July 4, which included the Temple Builders of this congregation and their families.

A little son was born to Kenneth and Mabel Paschal June 24, named Kenneth, jr.

Enoch Hill

Last Sunday the Saints of this congregation had the pleasure of having Bishop M. H. Siegfried with them. He occupied the evening preaching hour, and his sermon was well received.

Tuesday, June 20, we held a “trip around the world,” in which about two hundred and fifty took part. The proceeds went to the local church building fund, a substantial amount being collected. The thermometer which registers how much has been paid went up perceptibly, and it is hoped it will continue to climb.

Another social will be arranged this month to further reduce the encumbrance locally. We have a membership of approximately three hundred and twenty-five in this district, but the seating capacity of the church building is only about two hundred and twenty-five. We need a larger building and are working to that end.

Earnest E. Crownover writes from Calumet, Oklahoma, under date of July 1 giving an account of a Book of Mormon student organization. It has been operating a little less than one year, has trebled its membership, and is numbering among its members those who are not of the faith. Besides the study of the Book of Mormon, they are giving some attention to programs and find that these create interest also among the people of other denominations. The organization is controlled almost altogether by the young people of the church.

Kansas City Stake
Central Church

The members of the stake were called together Monday evening to a special business meeting, called by the stake presidency and bishopric, to give their consent by vote to release the Central Church property in the sale recently consummated, proceeds to apply on the new church just purchased at Thirty-tieth and Tracy Avenue. This was to satisfy title companies through whose hands all legal papers pass in the transaction. This probably finishes the detail in the transfer. We hope to occupy by the first of August.

The speakers announced for to-day are the pastor, J. A. Tanner, at eleven and Elder A. R. White at a quarter of eight.

Malvern Church

Several of our young folks who attended the Young People's Convention at Lamoni have returned with their notebooks full of information, truths concerning the splendid affair. Those who had to stay at home are looking forward to a series of talks from those who were privileged to be present there.

Stake Missionary W. I. Fligg was speaker the 21st at eleven o'clock and was welcomed and his message appreciated. Stake chorister Bernice Griffith sang, supported by their newly developed choir. The same evening the pastor, Elder W. O. Hands, with the help of the local church put on a father's day program, in which a number of our young people participated. It was successful, as it "broke the ice" for several who had never taken active part before.

Lamoni Stake

The local Religios in and near Lamoni decided to join in an all-day celebration on the reunion camp grounds a mile south of Lamoni on July 4. For this occasion each Religio was to prepare a patriotic program number. A drenching rain on the night of July 3 put a damper on everything, for country roads were almost impassable, and the rural Religios were having a hard time to reach town.

Besides this, the South Woods were too wet for picnic purposes, and the clouds hung heavy most of the morning. Finally the gloom gave way enough to allow the program to be presented at Central Park about eleven o'clock. Picnic parties feasted in various groups, the Religios treated the crowd with lemonade; then recreational games, races, etc., made the afternoon happy. The splendid playground apparatus with which Central Park is provided amused the smaller children throughout the day. Everyone reports an excellent time.

Two auto loads of young people departed for Onset, Massachusetts, this last week. In this party were: Olive and Fern Elefson, Tessa Morgan, Ethel Brooner, Alice Kendall, Mrs. Verna Brackenbury and son Robert, Eugene Closson, Kelley Anderson, and George Lewis. A. M. Carmichael will join them later. Their work at Onset will be experimental along the study of child nature to aid them in literature which they are preparing for Sunday school and reunion work.

These same young people have been holding an experimental observation camp in the woods west of Lamoni, taking certain groups of children to study, first beginners, then primaries, juniors, and intermediates.

Forest Roberts, one of the Graceland instructors, was married June 27, to Sister Esther Salter, in DuPere, Wisconsin. They will make their home in Lamoni next school year.

Brother Charles Church, jr., of Lamoni, is to be married July 10 to Frances Van Fleet in Cucamonga, California.

The sacramental services took place at the usual time Sunday morning. Brother Wilber Prall and his new assistant, Brother David E. Dowker, with Brother A. J. Yarrington, were in charge. The meeting was of high order.

Brother Dowker preached in the evening, and the summer choir, under the direction of Evan Fry, gave the monthly concert preceding the sermon.

The young people who attend the midweek prayer services are invited to a lawn party at the home of Brother and Sister Wilber Prall on Friday evening, July 10. This is the beginning of a planned series of get-acquainted meetings for the prayer-meeting attendants among the young.

Central Chicago

Sixty-sixth and Honore Streets

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—If, as is sometimes said, the prayer meeting indicates the general condition of the branch, ours is on the upward trend, for the attendance at these meetings has materially increased.

We had Brother Gomer T. Griffiths with us the 14th, and his influence was deeply felt. In the morning we had three baptisms, Dorothy Kimball, Robert Roehm, and James Space. The little son of Brother and Sister Arthur Pement, and the little daughters of Brother and Sister Lillis and Brother and Sister Willet were blessed.

A few days ago Sister Willet was hit by a street car and is in a very critical condition. The Saints have been asked to pray for her.

The Religio has had several special programs, one at Ogden Park, and one last Thursday under the direction of Miss Veral Smith and Miss Zena Walborn.

About twenty-seven dollars was added to the building fund as a result of the apron social given by the Department of Women recently. The fund is slowly but steadily increasing, and we are looking forward to the future.

Saints Aroused as From Deep Sleep

LUCASVILLE, OHIO, June 16.—We were very glad to have with us on June 8 and the week following Elder E. D. Finken, of Valley Center. He left the 16th for Hiland Branch, where he will preach two nights. From there he expects to go to the vicinity of Columbus to begin tent meetings.

Prayer and sacramental services have been well attended, and the spirit of the Master has been present to a marked degree.

There was a good crowd at Sunday school on the 14th, and the Spirit of the Master was in our midst at the prayer service.

We are thankful that the Saints in this branch are aroused as from a deep sleep to activity in the work of the master. Priest Mark Crabtree preaches every Saturday and Sunday night, and some are likely to join the church soon.

The Saints have been busy raising money to insure the church building for three years.

Quite a number of the Saints from McDermott came to attend the meetings Brother Finken held here.

We feel that the Lord has blessed us, for his Holy Spirit has made itself felt in our midst. We feel that if we live the way the Lord would have us he will bless us more than ever before. May the Saints everywhere be faithful in the service of the Lord.

Elder Williams Leaves Hilo

(A letter from Hilo, Hawaii, dated June 4, 1925, written by Elder D. J. Williams to the First Presidency.)

Dear Brethren: This will, perhaps, be our last report from Hilo, especially so if Sister Williams is strong enough to make the trip to Honolulu ere long. The doctor advised from Hilo, especially so if Sister Williams is strong enough her yesterday to be very careful lest overexertion cause further trouble.

We are glad to say that the Hilo Branch is in the best spiritual condition it has been since our coming here. Though it is not all we have desired, we recognize that they are only in their infancy as a people in the knowledge of Christ. And when compared with other religious bodies we are happy to say that our people stand much higher in spirituality than any other. Reports coming from outsiders of late have confirmed this opinion.

A system of visiting has been arranged for the priesthood which seems to be satisfactory to them, as well as effectual in its purpose.

The attendance as well as interest is increasing in branch and also services of the departments. Just recently one of the brethren, noticing this, remarked that we would soon need a new church. We are very sorry, however, that Sister Williams's work among the sisters has been hindered by her illness during the past three months. The first meeting of the Department of Women in that time will be held to-morrow.

The Hilo Branch will enjoy the services of another elder soon. The ordination of Brother Henry Mahi will take place next Sunday at our sacramental service, and we are sure his work will be greatly beneficial to the Saints and enjoyed by them.

Elder and Sister D. Blair Jensen have been spending the last two weeks with his home folks. Blair has taught in the Lamoni High School for the last three years, and his wife was one of the recent Graceland graduates. They departed for Gaylord, Michigan, the home of Sister Jensen's parents, on June 30.

At eight o'clock Sunday morning, June 21, a quiet wedding was solemnized at the home of Brother and Sister Mark Jensen, when their eldest daughter, Aurilee, was united in marriage to the eldest son of Brother and Sister John Adams. Elder Jensen, father of the bride, officiated. Only the immediate families were present. Following the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served, after which the young people departed for an auto trip in the northern part of the State. Their first stop was to be at the home of Doctor Minthorn, in Castana, where a two o'clock dinner had been prepared in their honor. A reception was prepared by the parents of the young people and held at the John Adams home on Thursday evening, which was attended by about two hundred relatives and friends. They will make their home near Moorhead on the Adams farm.

The home of Brother and Sister Fred Pellisier was also the scene of a home wedding June 24, when their only daughter, Pauline, became the wife of Jennings Coffman of Omaha. Elder William Wilson, uncle of the bride, officiated. The ceremony was attended by several near relatives of the bride. A bountiful wedding dinner was provided by the parents of the bride, and a few days later the young people left for Omaha, where Brother Jennings is private secretary for a furnace company and where they will make their home. Moorhead Branch is sorry to lose Pauline, as she has been a faithful worker. We hope for frequent visits and trust that the lives of all these young people may be full of happiness and crowned with success.

Sends Large Delegation to Young People's Convention

MOORHEAD, IOWA, June 30.—This branch was fairly well represented at the Young People's Convention at Lamoni. Those attending all or part of the time were: Misses Fern Wilson and Frances Strand, Arnold Adams, Lloyd McIntyre, C. R. Field and wife, Harold and Laton Mann, and Mrs. Mark Jensen and daughters Aurilee, Alice, and Aleita.

Sister Audrie Strand returned recently from Denver, Colorado, where she has been employed as instructor of physical education in the schools of that city. We understand she will fill the same position next year.

Evangelist F. A. Smith of Independence has been holding a series of meetings in our branch the past week. His sermons have been edifying, and those who were permitted to attend regularly have appreciated their opportunity. Owing to the funeral service of Mrs. Fred Pomeroy, an old-time resident of this community, being held in the Christian Church Sunday morning, our service was dismissed. Brother Smith again occupied in the afternoon and evening. Moorhead Saints are always glad to welcome Brother Smith, and we hope his next visit will not be far in the future.

Brother and Sister Lena Wells of Lamoni were in attendance at the weekly prayer service June 18.

Saints of this territory were made sad to learn of the death of Brother L. E. Hilt, as he had made many friends among us during his visits in past years.

District President Joseph Lane was called away from the series of meetings in which he was assisting Brother F. A. Smith, to the bedside of an afflicted sister at Independence.

Sisters Clara McDonald and May Wilson, who have recently been patients in hospitals, are both able to attend services again. All the Saints were pleased to welcome them.

Brother and Sister D. Blair Jensen have been spending the last two weeks with his home folks. Blair has taught in the Lamoni High School for the last three years, and his wife was one of the recent Graceland graduates. They departed for Gaylord, Michigan, the home of Sister Jensen's parents, on June 30.

We hope for frequent visits and trust that the lives of all these young people may be full of happiness and crowned with success.

The annual Sunday school picnic which was to have been held on May 30 was postponed, owing to a call from District President J. D. White to all in the district to assemble on the reunion grounds at Irvington to participate in planting a memorial plot. These grounds are fast growing more beautiful. In all, thirty-two went from Stockton and enjoyed the two-day gathering, partaking of the Spirit which was manifest throughout.

Sunday, May 31, Elder L. W. Hayes and wife, of Kansas City, Kansas, were visitors at church. He was prevailed upon to remain over and preach on Monday night. All enjoyed the splendid sermon he gave.

The matter of building a parsonage has been postponed. The committee found the cost of material high, and the lowest estimate was thought to be too great an undertaking for the present.

Children's Day was observed June 14. Part of the Sunday school hour was given over to a program by the children, and Brother W. H. Dawson of Sacramento preached a sermon to the children, which was enjoyed by all. Other visitors of the day were Brother A. E. Frazier and family, of Modesto. One pretty feature was the blessing of the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Chiss Nicols. This is the first grandchild of Brother and Sister L. J. Searcy, and Grandpa Searcy is so proud of his new title he wears a smile that will not wear off.

We are experiencing the warmest weather of the season, but since it is needful to bring about better crops we do not mind it.

Stockton, California

The Saints' Herald for July 8, 1925
Woodbine, Iowa

July 1.—Patriarch F. A. Smith visited us recently, occupying the pulpit four evenings and dispensing the word to the edification of many.

We miss some of our young people who are away attending summer school, and they strongly testify that they miss the church privileges and association with the Saints at home. This is as it should be, and we can say from the heart, “Blest be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love.”

The Children’s Day program, which included children from three years old to high school age, was well rendered, and as we observe the many childlike, unwise things we do daily, we are sensibly reminded that all are but “children of a larger growth.”

The Department of Women planned a picnic on June 25 in the city park in which both Woodbine and Dunlap Saints participated. Many expressed themselves as having had an enjoyable afternoon. Supper was in no way slighted, for in reality the crowd pressed it so closely that it was actually swallowed up, after which the Orioles presented a “peppy” program. These girls can always be depended on for extra-temporaneous entertainment.

We very much regret the ill health that has befallen the companion of Brother Joseph Seddon. She is now in the hospital at Rochester, Minnesota. For months past she has faithfully performed the part of a true wife to her afflicted husband, and we trust she may soon be permitted to return to her home and friends.

Union church services will be held next Sunday in the Chautauqua tent that is in our city. Elder Fred A. Fry will be the speaker at eleven o’clock.

Ottumwa, Iowa

July 5.—The Saints here are still endeavoring to hold their own. We were privileged to have with us at the sacramental service in June District President Amos Berve and his assistant, Elder W. H. Gunn, pastor of Fort Madison Branch. The Spirit of the Master was present, and our district president addressed us under the inspiration of the Spirit, giving words of instruction and advice. The evening of the same day Brother Berve preached a wonderful sermon. All remarked on the wonderful way it was presented.

We also had with us on June 29 Bishop M. H. Siegfried, who was here on church business. He preached two sermons which were noted for their plain and pointed presentation. His ability for handling church business is to be admired. Success is bound to be ours with such men as our leaders are.

Brother Berve ordained Brother Oris LaPointe to the office of deacon, in whom we feel we have a live-wire man among the local force, Brother Baker has preached some good sermons.

The Department of Women spent a half day with our aged Sister Shockley, who has been unable to meet with the Saints for years. She is in her eighty-eighth year and is still firm in the faith. She makes rugs for her livelihood on an old-fashioned weaving machine. A happy time was spent and refreshments served, after which they left the sister feeling happy. The sisters also had a party at the home of Sister H. Howells, and a good time was spent.

Brother D. T. Williams, sr., is back at work for a while, and his faithful wife is doing all she can to keep the home fires burning.

The tithing is coming in fairly good, according to the report of Bishop Agent E. H. Lewis.

The pastor has been to Minneapolis, where he enjoyed a visit with Saints and relatives.

The Care of Our Youth

"Train a child up in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it."

Brother G. J. Waller recently sent us a copy of the Honolulu Advertiser, issue of May 31, from which we quote the following editorial:

Where Is It Leading To?

Respectability in debauch! Twentieth century jazz. Young girls drinking—and smoking—and swearing!

"Well, I don't believe it," says a so-called oldtimer.

It's because he doesn't attend masque balls and things like that, that he doesn't believe it.

If seeing is believing, then one must believe that something is radically different in this day and age from what it was a decade or a score of years ago, for one has only to look and then see.

Ultra social events are frequently given in Honolulu that end in a riot of drunkenness, with the town's most respectable people the participants.

And the sad part of it—if there is sadness in it—is that such parties reach out and engulf young girls.

If there is anything more pitiable or miserable or disgusting than to see a young girl intoxicated, smoking, and swearing, we would like for you to produce it. Even the hardened zenly! How do they get away with it?

Just a few observations anent what is happening daily before our own eyes. All of us see it, unless we are blind. Where is it leading to? Is it a new code of moral conduct, a new regime in social sanctity, a new standard in what constitutes respectability?

Whatever it is, it is tolerated—even welcomed, apparently. Probably the modern-age father and mother believe it is a distinct social asset and advantage for their daughters to drink promiscuously and carry on flamboyantly. One can only stand by and wonder.

The editor of the Advertiser thus gives evidence that he is alert to some of the undesirable conditions existing, and at the risk of being termed pessimistic, or sour, has expressed warning of some social dangers threatening us.

The remedy for these things lies in education in morals, education of the youth. Who will stand for and foster this education if the church does not? What society needs now is to be thoroughly inoculated with religion.

"Democracy" in Government

In much of our discussions of government, the words republic, democracy, monarchy appear with more or less frequency, and the connotation is sometimes indefinite. From an article in a recent number of The Forum on "Constitution versus declaration," A. Washington Pezet says:

A moment's consideration will reveal the fact that there are, at least two quite distinct forms which democracy may take. There is that form of government, by the people and for the people, in which the sovereign power is vested directly in the people, retained at all times by them, and exercised by them either directly or indirectly through the agency of elected delegates subservient to their will. And there is the form of government in which the sovereign powers of the people are diffused among the several organs of the government in accordance with the provisions of a constitution, and in which these powers are exercised by representatives, executives, and judges who are by temperament, intelligence, and training especially fitted to carry on the business of government so that the government may be more efficient and the people more free to follow their own pursuits.

This succinct and expressive paragraph is food for thought for those who are studying the forms of government. In fact, the whole of Mr. Pezet's article can be read with profit.

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

Truly the gospel story is carried forth under varying conditions, and sometimes extreme circumstances. While S. S. Smith is preaching in the vicinity of Marlin, Texas, where the temperature has gone as high as 111 during the past few days, Apostles Paul M. Hanson and R. S. Budd, in Jonesport, Maine, have been wishing for overcoats and rubbers.
Vineyard Gleanings

Services at Ogden and Salt Lake City

There was a time when to spend the Fourth of July on an overland train would have appealed to me as a wild adventure. The experience came too late to thrill. But a small boy across the aisle from me made the most of it. Tossing lighted fire crackers from the window, he left a popping trail across the plains and mountains of Colorado and Wyoming; and the Negro porter was of great help to him.

The boy might have typified young America, with the aid of a great locomotive and a modern express train taking his joyous way over the mountains far beyond the uttermost barrier that the fathers set for the new republic. In a vague way he may have known that a great war had been waged to guarantee his freedom. And the Negro may have been conscious in an equally vague way that another great war had been fought to set him free so that he might travel on the Union Pacific, make up the white man's bed, take his tip, and say, "Yes, sir! Thank you, sir." But probably neither boy nor Negro had much conception of "this citizenship," like that of the Roman captain who said, "With a great sum obtained I this citizenship." How many who celebrated that day thought more than the Negro and the boy about the thing celebrated?

At Ogden I was met by Brother G. P. Levitt, missionary and president of the Utah District. It was Sunday, and at eleven o'clock we celebrated another independence day at the sacramental service. Jesus said, "If the Son of Man shall set any man free, he shall be free indeed."

A young man said to me, "I know what I ought to do, but I can't do it. And I know what I ought not to do, but I cannot refrain from doing it." He was young, an athlete, wealthy, cultured after worldly standards, had traveled far and wide; he lived in America, the land of the free and the home of the brave, the Army and Navy guaranteed his freedom, yet he was not free. His bonds were invisible, yet real—their scars quite visible. "If the Son of Man shall set any man free he shall be free indeed." He will have the substance; the other had but the shadow of liberty.

At half past two in the afternoon I was privileged to speak to the Saints. The church was well filled, it being necessary to bring in chairs from the parsonage. Numbers of Saints drove from Malad, Idaho, to join the Ogden Saints for the occasion, the distance being about seventy-five miles. And there was present a good representation of Mormon friends who listened very attentively. Ogden is decidedly Mormon (though Congregationalists and other denominations are gaining a stronger foothold) and there one hears the old-time terms, "Josephite" and "Brighamite," or "Mormon." One little boy being called a "Josephite" thought he had been dubbed a "Joseph-fight" and prepared to act accordingly.

At Ogden we have a church which is a frame structure, with parsonage attached at the rear. Brother and Sister Levitt occupy the parsonage. Brother Levitt endeavors to cover the district with his ministrations; but there is some rivalry among the branches, as he is very well liked throughout the district.

Fifty years or more ago my father was a missionary to Utah, one of the pioneer missionaries. On Sunday a brother gave to me a Book of Mormon which he had left in Ogden at the time. As I turned to the flyleaf and read, in the familiar handwriting, "David H. Smith," strange feelings stirred my soul. As a little boy I received a spiritual impression, clear and abiding, that when I grew up I should preach the same gospel and do the same work that had been my father's. And now, silently, out of the dim and tragic past, came this memento, which seemed to say, "Son, witness, now, that your boyish revelation was true. Where I planted fifty years ago you now come to water and to cultivate."

After the preaching service Brother Levitt drove me to Salt Lake City, thirty-nine miles distant. Here it is said Gentile influences are more pronounced than in Ogden; though the church controls the daily secular press.

I spoke in our church building at half past seven. Here, as at Ogden, there was a good attendance, among those in attendance being a number of Mormons. They were friendly and courteous and seemed interested listeners. Also our Provo Saints were present with a surprisingly large delegation.

In Salt Lake City we have a very presentable brick church building, with a large parsonage in the rear. Brother E. B. Hull is pastor, having recently moved there, pursuant to his appointment. He was duly elected by the branch, and he and Sister Hull are comfortably installed in the parsonage. They have labored in Philadelphia, Brooklyn, Attleboro, and Honolulu, and more recently in the Northern California District. They enter with a great deal of enthusiasm upon this new task, and we trust may be successful in building up the branch at that place.

In some ways Utah is a hard field, and great honor belongs to the brave pioneer missionaries and the stanch members who planted and have nurtured the work in that field.

Francis M. Cooper Passes

Elder Francis Marion Cooper, of Plano, Illinois, died at the home of his daughter, Sister C. D. Carter, in DeKalb, Illinois, July 9, thus ending a life which began on October 10, 1859, and the active years of which had been largely spent in preaching the doctrines of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

He was baptized July 19, 1869, and was ordained an elder January 31, 1870, just a little over six months after baptism. At the General Conference of 1890 he was ordained to the office of seventy, and for many years was known as a powerful preacher of the gospel and exemplary missionary.

For some time he has been under the affliction which caused his death, and spent many weeks in Independence this spring trying to regain his health and strength.

The funeral service was at Plano, Illinois, Sunday, July 12, at 2:30 in the afternoon, Elder T. W. Williams speaking, being assisted by the Methodist minister. The Methodist people proffered the use of their commodious church for the occasion, and it was gratefully accepted, being needed for the accommodation of the very large attendance.

We noted the passing of Elder Louis E. Hills, of Independence, which occurred June 19, as the result of an automobile skidding on a wet street and striking him down upon the pavement. These veteran missionaries go under widely differing circumstances, but both leave much work to cause their being remembered by the church. Each leaves a companion, and the church mourns with the bereaved families.

The family of Brother Cooper consists of wife, son, two daughters, foster son and foster daughter; that of Brother Hills of wife and daughter.

Deeds Given for an Inheritance

Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1: Appoint unto this people their portion, ... when he shall appoint unto a man his portion, give unto him a writing that shall secure unto him that portion, that he shall hold it, even this right and this inheritance ... but shall only have claim on that portion that is sealed unto him. And thus all things shall be made sure according to the laws of the land.

Jeremiah 32: 18: For the right of inheritance is thine ... and I subscribed the evidence and sealed it, and took witnesses, and weighed him the money. ... So I took the evidence of the purchase, both that which was sealed according to the law and custom.

Church History, volume 1, page 281 (letter of Joseph Smith to Edward Partridge): As respects giving deeds; I would advise you to give deeds as far as the brethren have legal and just claims for them, and then let every man answer to God for the disposal of them.

Church History, volume 1, page 593, Joseph Smith writes: Mr. Francis Porter, from Jefferson County, New York, a member of the Methodist Church, called to make some inquiry about lands in this place [Kirtland], whether there were any valuable farms for sale, and whether a member of our church could move into this vicinity and purchase lands, and enjoy his own possessions and property, without making them common stock. He had been requested to do so by some brethren who live in the town of Leroy, New York. I replied that I had a valuable farm joining the Temple Lot I would sell, ... and that we had no common stock business among us; that every man enjoys his own property, or can, if he is disposed, consecrate liberally or illiberally to the support of the poor and needy, or the building up of Zion.

Doctrine and Covenants 101 was given to those who had entered into the stewardship relationship and contains instruction giving “counsel and commandment, concerning all the properties which belong to the order.” (Paragraph 1.) The legal records of Cayuga County, New York, show that when this “counsel and commandment” to “organize yourselves and appoint every man his stewardship” was obeyed the property divided was paid for by the steward receiving, and the title for the same was in the name of the steward. The records of Jackson County, Missouri, show the same facts—that all the land held by the stewards was held legally by them and was paid for by the one that received the property.

So far as the records go, nowhere have we been able to find property held except in fee simple, or the legal title being held by the steward, with the exception of the lots at Kirtland and Independence; these were held in trust for the church.

Doctrine and Covenants 64: 4: Frederick G. Williams had a farm and received instructions what to do with it. “I will not here that my servant Frederick G. Williams shall sell his farm, for I, the Lord, will retain a stronghold in the land of Kirtland for the space of five years.”

Also of Newel K. Whitney the Lord said (Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5), “And it is not meet that my servants, Newel K. Whitney and Sidney Rigdon, should sell their store, and their possessions here. ...” This was the church storehouse, and these two brethren held the title to this property.

Doctrine and Covenants 107: 19 shows that the Lord approves of (a) paying for what we get, and (b) holding title to the same, and (c) if needs be this property may descend to our heirs. Note: This stock was for the building of the Nauvoo House, which was to be the home of Joseph Smith and his family, and not the homes of these men buying stock; hence, they were to hold title to something more than their “houses in which they lived.”

Inheritance—The Size or Amount

Doctrine and Covenants 18: 5; revelation given to Martin Harris: “Impart a portion of thy property; yea, even part of thy lands, and all save the support of thy family [inheritance].

This is an example to all.

Doctrine and Covenants 58: 7: My servant Martin Harris should be an example unto the church, in laying his moneys before the bishop of the church. And, also, this is a law unto every man that cometh unto this land, to receive an inheritance.

Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9: ... every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, [inheritance] ... inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family.

Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1: Appoint unto this people their portion [inheritance], every man equal according to their families, according to their circumstances, and their wants and needs; ... even this inheritance.

Deuteronomy 15: 7, 8: If there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren within any of thy gates in thy land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother; but thou shalt open thine hand wide unto him, and shalt surely lend him sufficient for his need, in that which he wanteth.

Inheritances—The Purchase and Management of Necessary to Accomplish the Redemption of Zion

Church History, volume 2, pages 502, 503: Having been instrumental in the hands of our heavenly Father in laying a foundation for the gathering of Zion, we would say, Let all those who appreciate the blessings of the gospel and realize the importance of obeying the commandments of heaven, who have been blessed of heaven with the possession of this world’s goods, first prepare for the general gathering. Let them dispose of their effects as fast as circumstances will possibly admit, without making too great sacrifices, and remove to our city and county—establish and build up manufacturesthe in the city, purchase and cultivate farms in the county. This will secure our permanent inheritance, and prepare the way for the gathering of the poor. This is agreeable to the order of heaven, and the only principle on which the gathering can be effected. Let the rich, then, and all who can assist in establishing this place, make every preparation to come on without delay, and strengthen our hands, and assist in promoting the happiness of the saints. This cannot be too forcibly impressed on the minds of all; and the elders are hereby instructed to proclaim this word in all places where the saints reside, in their public administrations, for this is according to the instructions we have received from the Lord.

Inheritances—How Long to Hold

Doctrine and Covenants 107: 19: And if any pay stock into their hands, it shall be for stock in that house, for himself, and for his generation after him, from generation to generation, so long as he and his heirs shall hold that stock, and do not sell or convey the stock away out of their hands by their own free will and act. (See also paragraphs 22, and 27.

Doctrine and Covenants 38: 4: And I have made the earth rich, . . . and I hold forth and deign to give unto you and your children forever, the land of your inheritance, . . . Ye shall have it for the land of your inheritance, and for the inheritance of your children forever, while the earth shall stand; and ye shall possess it again in eternity, no more to pass away.

Stewards

God calls us stewards.
The Lord of the vineyard saith unto his steward.—Matthew 20: 8. This is a committed trust.

Who then is that faithful and wise steward.—Luke 12: 42. Let a man so account of us, as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God. Moreover it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful.—1 Corinthians 4: 1, 2.

A bishop must be blameless, as the steward.—Titus 1: 7. Behold, all these properties are mine, . . . then ye are stewards.—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 10.

For it is expedient that I, the Lord, should make every man accountable, as stewards over earthly blessings, which I have made and prepared for my creatures.—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

A steward then is one on whom is placed responsibility of using, managing, and accounting for any gift or blessing in his possession.

Steps to Be Taken to Become an Active Steward

Every person who enters formally into the condition known as an active steward must comply with the law governing. It makes no difference whether the person is to be made an active steward over “his own property,” or over property “consecrated to the church.” The leveling process of the gospel of Christ requires that every person, rich or poor, give full compliance to the law of temporalities.

Behold, this is the way, that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my saints: that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low; for the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare.—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

Stewardships

We shall now very briefly discuss stewardship, with the meaning of the same as given before.
The attitude of one’s mind in which he assumes the responsibility incurred in the proper use, management, and accounting to the church authorities of any material or immaterial thing in his possession.

This responsibility follows the steward no matter how his possessions are held, whether in fee simple, in fee tail, in trust, or as an agent. If the steward has certain abilities, or there come to him certain opportunities, he should be held for an accounting of these, both “in time” (annually) and “in eternity” (at the judgment bar of God).

Classified

The steward must catch the significance of the following statement, given by God to us, to enable him to properly evaluate his stewardship—to lift it from the sordid things of earth and put it on the spiritual plain, where God put it.

Wherefore, verily I say unto you, that all things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal, neither any man, nor the children of men; neither Adam your father, whom I created; behold, I gave unto him that he should be an agent unto himself; and I gave unto him commandment, but no temporal commandment gave I unto him; for my commandments are spiritual; they are not natural, nor temporal, neither carnal nor sensual.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 9.

In the preceding paragraph the Lord tells us why he uses such terms as temporal and spiritual, “speaking unto you that you may naturally understand, . . . it is given unto you that ye may understand.”

When we speak of the law of temporalities, we do so with the thought always in our mind that it is a spiritual law and as such has its necessary part to play in the formation of character, the same as any other law. Keeping in mind, we classify stewardships as follows:

A. Material

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>“Men of work”</th>
<th>Miners</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Doe and Covenants 119: 8.</td>
<td>Farmers, etc.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

B. Spiritual-Ministerial

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Professional</th>
<th>Editors</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>“Men of business”</td>
<td>Lawyers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Doe and Covenants 119: 8.</td>
<td>Doctors</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Managerial</th>
<th>Teachers</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>“Men of business”</td>
<td>Artists, etc., etc.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Doe and Covenants 119: 8.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

All of these, excepting the spiritual class, may be classified as “temporal.” (Doctrine and Covenants 28: 8, 9.) Temporal stewardships are again divided into two classes: (a) men of business and (b) men of work.
(a) Spiritual.

Behold, this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, ... And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God; yea, neither the bishop, neither the agent, who keepeth the Lord's storehouse; ... he who is appointed to administer spiritual things, the same is worthy of his hire.—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.

All are called according to the gift of God unto them ... let him that laboreth in the ministry ... labor together with God.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

(b) Temporal.

None are exempt from this law ... neither he who is appointed in a stewardship over temporal things; ... even as those who are appointed to a stewardship, to administer in temporal things.—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; ... let him that ... toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

The Creation of Stewardships

Who to allot.

But the liberal deviseth liberal things; and by liberal things shall he stand—Isaiah 32: 8.

We now come directly to one of the most perplexing, as well as vexing problems of the whole economic program, that of the distribution of wealth. Who shall do it and how, so as to produce the so much desired state of equality or equal opportunity.

The proper distribution of wealth is essential to bring humanity to that state of perfection intended by his Creator for him to attain. It is a means, not an end, the end being character.

We cannot wait until perfection or the end to be attained comes, before we use the means. To do so spells failure. We must use imperfect man as the active agent to bring about the consummation—perfection.

From the dawn of history mankind has longingly and inspirationally looked forward to the Golden age, whose light is of the dawn

And not of the sunset, forward, not behind.

The wreckage of failure after failure marks the stream of time, but “the divinity within us,” though faltering, has never slept; and though the “light of morning” has been almost eclipsed and “darkness has covered the earth, and gross darkness the people,” we have still potentially believed the story that

Seer has told of when in trance and dream
They saw the happy Isles of Prophecy.

The ringing challenge of the Psalmist, still pregnant with its virility, is about to be answered:

But thou, O Lord, shalt endure forever; and thy remembrance unto all generations. Thou shalt arise and have mercy upon Zion; for the time to favor her, yea, the set time has come.

Human agents must do this work for the Master and mistakes may occur, for humanity is fallible. Yet we may expect to find this very important work of the allotment of stewardships surrounded by as many safeguards as possible.

This power and grave responsibility to distribute wealth so as to aid in the creation of stewardships must necessarily be lodged in somebody. Who is it?

We find the Lord declaring that he is the one who will do this work.

I, the Lord, have appointed them, and ordained them to be stewards over the revelations and commandments.—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 1.

The Lord then may appoint stewardships directly by revelation, naming the persons who are to receive their stewardship, also designating what shall comprise said stewardship. This has been done in several cases, as found in Doctrine and Covenants 101; also Matthew 25, etc.

If then the necessity occurs, if there should needs be the appointment of a steward or stewards in temporal affairs requiring wisdom beyond the human ken, the Lord, as always in the past, can speak and make this allotment in temporal affairs as well as he does in spiritual matters. In this the Lord works in harmony with himself and delegates authority to his servants to do this work.

The word has been already given in agreement with revelations long since delivered to the church, that the temporalities of the church were to be under the charge and care of the bishopric, men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head acting for the church in the gathering, caring for, and disbursing the contributions gathered from the saints of moneys and properties under the terms of tithing, surplus, free will offerings, and consecrations.—Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8.

The constitutional law as reflected in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, as well as General Conference enactments makes the First Presidency of our social group (the church) the quorum to see that the laws governing the body are properly executed. We may then properly look to this quorum for direction to allot stewardships.

The Order of Bishops have been named as the body of men upon whom rests directly the responsibility to perform this work, under the direction of the First Presidency.

Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9 provides for the allotment of two distinct classes of property:

First; of property belonging to the person; and Second; of property belonging to the church.

Property Belonging to the Church

Every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over ... that which he has received by consecration.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9.

Verily I say unto you, that it is meet in mine eyes that

www.LatterDayTruth.org
... and receive an inheritance from the hand of the bishop.
—Doctrine and Covenants 87:7.

Wherefore let my servant Edward Partridge, and those whom he has chosen [the presiding bishop and his counselors], in whom I am well pleased, appoint unto this people their portion.—Doctrine and Covenants 51:1. (See also 57:3, 6.)

And let my servant Edward Partridge, stand in the office which I have appointed him, to divide the saints their inheritances, even as I have commanded; and also those whom he has appointed to assist him.—Doctrine and Covenants 87:3.

Here the Lord states plainly the work of the office of the Presiding Bishop. It is "to divide the saints their inheritances." This responsibility is also placed on "those whom he has appointed to assist him." The Saints are to receive their inheritance from the "hand of the bishop."

When we keep in mind that all the directional or executive forces of our church are under the First Presidency, we can readily comprehend that the above quotations have to do with the Presiding Bishop in the performance of his duty as the legal custodian of the church.

Wherefore the office of a bishop is not equal unto it [Presidency of the high priesthood], for the office of a bishop is in administering all temporal things: ... and also to be a judge in Israel, to do the business of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 104:32.

The First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric are the ones to allot stewardships formally from property consecrated to the church. The assigning of stewardships out of church property may mean the passing of the title of the property in fee simple, as soon as paid for, or it may be held in trust either by the individual or group, this legal title having been held by the Presiding Bishop as trustee in trust under our present corporate laws as found in our Articles of Incorporation.

Let the reader remember that "the formal allotment of stewardships" has a twofold aspect, i.e., the moral and the legal. Just so long as the Presiding Bishop is the legal custodian of the properties of the church, he is the one to legally allot stewardships from property over which he has been made trustee.

The spiritual allotment is directly under the Presidency of the church, and this part of the giving of stewardships is the most important.

Before any bishop attempts to function in his office in any case in which the placing of stewardships is involved, he should know that the candidate for a stewardship is of the right attitude of mind—is spiritually born—for without this absolutely needed prerequisite, no person can become a successful steward. This task falls on those at the head of the spiritual activities of our church—the First Presidency and those directly under him, such as stake presidents, district presidents, and branch presidents.

This means then that every candidate for a stewardship should first be certified to as to his spiritual condition by these spiritual authorities and this knowledge be given the Bishop, and then the person so certified takes the second step, i.e., comes to the Bishop for counsel and direction as to his financial or temporal affairs.

If the final result of these two activities is satisfactory, then the person makes a solemn obligation publicly to fulfill his part as a steward, this part of the ceremony to be directly under the spiritual and temporal authorities.

To be in accord with the laws of the land, then, every steward receiving a stewardship from church property must receive it legally (formally) through the Bishop, either in fee simple, in fee tail, in trust, or as an agent.

It will simplify matters if we call the attention of the reader to this fact that all property received by the church must be so received through the bishop, and that all property disbursed by the church must be through the bishop, because the bishop is the legal representative of the church—the trustee in trust.

Property Belonging to the Individual

Stewardships may be recognized and entered into by saints using property which belongs to themselves.

Every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property.—Doctrine and Covenants 42:9.

In this case the title does not have to pass from the church to the steward, the title being lodged already in the steward.

The individual should as stated above, be certified to as to the state of his spiritual life by those directly over him in his spiritual activities. This certification should be made known to the bishop concerned and then the bishop should know the financial standing of the individual. If both spiritual and financial conditions are satisfactory, then the individual should enter into his stewardship over his own property in a formal way by publicly making a solemn covenant to do his part faithfully.

The reason for this formal recognition of the "right" of the steward is to emphasize the importance and sacredness of the union between the steward and the church, or between the individual and the group. Further, this action of the authorities having this work to do will no doubt be recognized in the future by the Master, and will be the equivalent of a possessory right. (Isaiah 61:5; Malachi 4:4; Doctrine and Covenants 38:4.)

We are told that the saints shall retain the posses-
